Christian University, Canton, Mo., permits its students to enter the class for theory of preaching or the preparation and delivery of sermons earlier than formerly, finding that as they go out to preach more or less they form habits of sermonizing that are erroneous and hard to overcome. Ministerial students are encouraged to hold revival meetings during the year and the meetings have resulted in the conversion of about 1,000 persons every year.

Eugene Divinity School, in Oregon, is endeavoring to develop a special interest in missions and practical methods of church work.

President Aylsworth says: "The department of Sacred Literature in Cotner University would better be termed biblical rather than theological. It deals little as yet with the speculative phases of theology and much more in the specific study of the Bible. An English Bible course of two years is offered without a degree, which deals mainly with this work. These studies, incorporated as electives in the classical course, with four terms of Hebrew added, constitute the course in sacred literature leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. It is well adapted to the needs of young men preparing for the ministry and a good basis for more advanced seminary work. It has been decided to add to the sacred literature work this year a course in the life of Christ, consisting of lectures with collateral readings, covering important phases of Christology. Special training in homiletics and pastoral theology, including lectures on mission work, is maintained. Additional lectures will also be given this year on the history or doctrine.

Omaha Theological Seminary reports a substantial increase in its funds during the past year. The prospect of a new building in the future has awakened an increased interest. The execution of plans already adopted only waits the favorable sale of present property. The Rev. Daniel E. Jenkins, Ph. D., will be inaugurated as professor of theology at the opening of the term. Arrangements have been made by which Bohemian students can have instruction in Bohemian history and language by the Rev. Jaroslav Dobias, pastor of the Omaha Bohemian church.

A SONG PROGRAMME.

The Congregational ministers' meeting of Cleveland, Ohio, very sensibly meets on the first Monday of each month. This year they have mapped out a programme which seems to us of such unusual excellence that we print it in full as a guide and encouragement to other executive committees to go and do likewise. The Rev. A. M. Ingraham is secretary.

Subjects and Speakers.

Sept. 3.—The Church Music—1. Sacred Music, Prof. Charles C. Clemens; 2.

The Choir, What shall it be? Rev. Paul H. Metcalf; 3. The Pastor's Relations to Organist and Choir, Rev. C. W. Carroll.

Oct. 7.—Church and Parish Amusements and Benefactions—1. Building Churches with Reference to Amusements, Rev. C. S. Mills, D. D.; 2. What may Church Amusements be? Rev. R. A. George; 3. Church Benefactions, What may they be? Rev. C. W. Hiatt, D. D.; 4. The Pledge System, Rev. H. E. Brown.

Nov. 4.—The Preacher and His Sermon—1. The Preacher's Use of Theology, Prof. H. C. King, D. D.; 2. The Preacher's Use of Current Events, Rev. Morgan Wood, D. D.; 3. The Preacher's Use of the Bible (Rev. A. E. Thomson).

Dec. 2.—Evangelism and the Churches—1. Evangelistic preaching, When? How? Rev. E. T. MacMahon; 2. How to Evangelize the Cultured? Rev. J. W. Bradshaw, D. D.; 3. How to Utilize the Laity? Chalmers' Plan, Rev. H. S. Wannamaker.

Jan. 6.—The Progress of the Kingdom—1. The State Work, Rev. J. G. Fraser; 2. The City Work, Rev. H. F. Swartz; 3. Reports from the Churches.

Feb. 3.—The Christian World Day—1. The Methodist Church Government, Rev. Morrison, D. D.; 2. The Church Creed, Rev. Paul Sutphen, D. D.; 3. The Baptist Church and Baptism, Rev. Ea-

COFFEE FOR MOTHER'S

The Kind That Nourishes and Supplies Food for Mother and Child.

"My husband has been unable to drink coffee for several years, so we were very glad to give Postum Food Coffee a trial and when we understood that by long boiling it would bring out the delicious flavor, we have been highly pleased with it.

It is one of the finest things for nursing mothers that I have ever seen. It keeps up the mother's strength and increases the supply of nourishment for the child if partaken of freely. I drank it between meals instead of water and found it most beneficial.

Our five year old boy has been very delicate since birth and has developed slowly. He was white and bloodless. I began to give him Postum freely and you would be surprised at the change. When any person remarks about the great improvement, we never fail to tell them that we attribute his gain in strength and general health, to the free use of Postum Food Coffee, and this has led many friends to use it for themselves and children.

I have always cautioned friends to whom I have spoken about Postum, to follow directions in making it, for unless it is boiled fifteen or twenty minutes, it is quite tasteless. On the other hand, when properly made, it is very delicious. I want to thank you for the benefits we have derived from the use of your Postum Coffee." Mrs. W. W. Earnest, 727 9th Ave., Helena, Mont.

ton, D. D.; 4. The Christian Communion, Rev. Goldner.

March 3.—Layman's Day. (Pastors please announce to their congregations.)

1. What I want my Minister to be, Mrs. Ellen J. Phinney; 2. What I want my Minister to Preach, Mr. H. Clark Ford; 3. How the Layman aids the Minister, Mr. J. G. W. Cowles; 4. The Minister's Wife, by one of them, Mrs. G. W. Carroll.

April 7.—A Day With Great Evangelists—1. Finney, Rev. H. M. Tenney, D. D.; 2. Moody, Rev. H. A. Schaffler; 3. Drummond, Rev. J. W. Malcolm.

May 5.—The Church Officers.—1. The trustees; 2. The Deacons, Deacon L. F. Mellen; 3. The S. S. Supt., Mr. A. D. Hatfield; 4. The Treasurer; 5. The Clerk, R. O. Beswick; 6. The work of Pastor's Assistant, Rev. E. S. Rothrock.

June 2.—The Minister's Relations to the Other Professions—1. The Minister and the Physician, Dr. Dudley Allen; 2. The Minister and the Lawyer, Hon. C. E. Burton; 3. The Minister and the Business man, Mr. Theo. M. Bates.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Rev. George A. Fair has resigned the pastorate of the church at Chicago Heights. He will engage for the present in evangelistic work. He has recently completed a series of meetings at New Berlin, Ill., assisting the pastor, Rev. C. M. Murphey. There were about twenty conversions.

Mr. F. C. W. Parker, assistant pastor of the First Baptist church, Chicago, was married September 12 to Miss Grace E. Reed of New York City.

Rev. C. H. Holden of Freeport, Ill., has accepted the pastorate of the Humboldt Park Baptist church and has entered on his new work.

McCormick Theological Seminary opened on the evening of Thursday, September 19. Professor J. Ross Stevenson delivered the introductory lecture, his theme being "Spiritual Growth an Object of Primary Importance in a Theological Seminary." By the rule of rotation Professor Stevenson becomes chairman of the faculty for the ensuing year.

The Baptist Minister's Association has elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, Professor Shailer Mathews of the University of Chicago; vice-president, Rev. A. K. De Blois; secretary, Rev. C. H. Sushall; treasurer, Rev. G. J. Pope.

Millard Avenue Presbyterian Church is anticipating a home of its own, centrally located and conveniently arranged. It is located at the corner of Millard and Ogden avenues. It will cost about $3,250 and it will be ready, it is hoped, by the close of the year. The seating capacity will be 250. It will ultimately be the chapel of the church of the future. Rev. Granville R. Pike is pastor.

A reunion of former students will be held at the Moody Institute, October 1 to 6, at which there will be lectures on Biblical and missionary themes. The speakers will be Rev. Dr. Pierson, William E. Blackstone, George C. Needham, Major Cole, Rev. R. A. Torrey and others. This will be followed by a conference of the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union for the Northwest. Bishop Thoburn, Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor, of China, and other well-known speakers will take part.

The foundations are being laid for the new Sunday school room, 50x95 feet, adjoining the basement of the Central Park Presbyterian church, Rev. W. H. Matthews, pastor. The building will be two stories and a gallery, and will cost between $10,000 and $12,000, all of which is pledged. It will be ready for use about the beginning of the new year. In the future a tower will be erected covering and bringing the group of buildings into an architectural unity.

Rev. T. S. Tinsley has resigned the pastorate of the North Side Church of the Disciples.

The Presbyterian Association at its Monday meeting, September 23, discussed the topic, "How to Stimulate the Evangelistic Spirit in Our Churches."

There has just been placed in the cathedral clergy house a framed photographic group of the five bishops and eighty-six clergy of the diocese in 1890, the former including the bishops, Edsall, of North Dakota; Morrison, of Iowa; Williams, of Nebraska, and Anderson, coadjutor of Chicago, who, within two years, were chosen from the clerical ranks of Chicago—one by the House of Bishops in 1898, the others by election of the dioceses named. Of the eighty-six presbyters and deacons, two have died, Dr. Delafield, of Transfiguration, and H. A. Duboc, of St. John's mission. Twelve have since left the diocese. And yet the ninety-seven now in the diocese keep up the average of ten years' connection with Chicago.

The Monroe Street Church of the Disciples will be dedicated about November 1. Its cost is about $20,000.

A vote was taken September 22 on the question of uniting the West Side and Union churches of the Disciples. It resulted in 159 favoring the union and 107 opposing. Rev. Roland A. Nichols, pastor of the Union church, becomes pastor of the united churches. A new name will be selected. Those opposing the union have arranged to hold services in the People's Institute.

At the Second Congregational church, Oak Park, President Harper of Chicago University will deliver a course of six lectures on Old Testament prophecy, beginning October 4. This church dedicated a building September 22 for its branch Sunday school on Iowa street.

An interesting feature of the coming of Rev. Andrew M. Brodie, D. D., to Hinsdale as pastor of the Congregational church was the communion vesper service in that church, participated in by the Methodist and Presbyterian church people.

The Rev. H. C. Stone, in charge of Park Ridge and Norwood Park, announces the gift by an individual of entire reseating of one of his two Episcopal mission churches.

The quarterly meeting of the Northeastern Deanery was held September 17 at the Church of the Atonement, Edgewater. Forty of the clergy were present. The canons of marriage and divorce were discussed, the subject being introduced in three papers, "The History of the Subject" being ably handled by the Rev. S. B. Pond; "The Theological View," by the Rev. E. A. Larrabee, and "The Practical View," by the Rev. E. V. Shayler.

Chicago Theological Seminary opened with an address by Prof. H. M. Scott, D. D., in Carpenter chapel on September 26. Professor Caspar Rene Gregory, D. Th., LL. D., began a course of six lectures September 27.

Rev. Wm. C. Gray, D. D., editor of "The Interior," and one of the strong forces in religious journalism in Chicago, entered into rest Sunday, September 29, in a ripe old age.

The North Congregational Church, Englewood, was dedicated Sunday, September 22. Rev. Dr. James Tompkins preached the morning sermon and secured an offering of $3,946. An interdenominational fellowship service was conducted by Rev. F. E. Hopkins, D. D., pastor of Pilgrim church, in the afternoon, at which $554 was pledged. In the evening Rev. C. H. Taintor of the Church Building Society spoke and $607 more was contributed, making a total for the day of $5,107. The new building cost $30,000. Rev. Charles Reynolds has been the pastor of the church since 1889, and under his leadership it has grown steadily. The membership is 300, and the Sunday school numbers more than 500. Special evangelistic services were commenced September 29 to continue two weeks.

Two corner stones were laid in Oak Park last Sunday, September 29. The Presbyterian new house of worship was described in these columns a few weeks ago. Rev. D. C. Marquis, D. D., LL. D., was the principal speaker, and the stone was laid by the pastor, Rev. Chas. S. Hoyt, D. D. At the Third Congregational church addresses were made by Professors W. D. Mackenzie, Wm. B. Chamberlain and O. C. Grauer. Rev. Henry W. Stough, the retiring pastor, laid the stone. Good-sized congregations attended both ceremonies.

Dr. N. I. Rubinkam of the extension department of the University of Chicago returned this week after a two years' trip in Europe.

A course of six lectures on "Studies in the Wisdom Literature of the Bible" will be given by Dr. Herbert L. Willett of the University of Chicago in the Kenwood Evangelical church, Greenwood avenue and Forty-sixth street, Monday evenings, except Oct. 14. They began last Monday evening.

Dr. Polemus H. Swift, pastor of Wesley church, has just returned to the city after a two and one-half months' vacation in Europe, where he went as a delegate to the ecumenical conference.

Anniversary exercises were held on the first three days of this week by the Wesley Bible class of the Western Avenue church, this being the twenty-first year since its organization and the fifth year since its reorganization. The exercises began with a sermon by the pastor of the church, Rev. M. E. Cady. On the evening of the last day there was a banquet.

The South Side Union of Epworth Leagues, in connection with the Oakland local chapter, held a social rally at the Oakland M. E. church, Oakwood boulevard and Langley avenue, last Monday evening. Rev. W. O. Shepard, of Emanuel Church, Evanston, delivered the address, his subject being "The Joy of Life."

The Church of the Ascension, LaSalle avenue and Elm street, commemorated last Sunday its forty-fourth anniversary. Rev. F. A. Sanborn of the Milwaukee Cathedral and Rev. H. B. Smith of Whitewater, Wis., preached the sermons.

Rev. W. J. Petrie has accepted the rectorship of Holy Trinity, Benton Harbor, with St. Paul's, St. Joseph, Michigan.

T. B. Bryan of Elmhurst has presented the Episcopalian chapel there with a chime of twelve bells.

Rock River conference of the Methodist Episcopal church will hold its sixty-second conference at Evanston, beginning Oct. 9th and lasting for a week. It will be presided over by Bishop Charles C. McCabe of Omaha, Neb. The conference is composed of 327 members, and has within its limits 50,531 church members. The main interest of the body is centered in the pastoral changes which are to be made. It is generally conceded that too much time is consumed in routine business. A larger time ought to be given to the discussion of the living questions of the hour.

Baptist.

The First church of Council Bluffs, Iowa, in accepting the resignation of the pastor, Rev. Richard Venting, expressed its love and esteem and emphasized the results of his work there. During the three and a half years of his pastorate the membership has increased from 245 to 500 and the finances have been strengthened.

Reports given at the twelfth annual session of the Central Association of Oklahoma show considerable progress. The enrollment in the Sunday schools has increased 500. Six years ago there were 514 in them, now there are over 1,600. In the same period the membership of the churches has grown from 526 to 1,033. Less than seventy cents per member is the record for benevolence for the last year—ten cents per member for foreign missions, five cents for education and two cents for Bible and Sunday school work. It was resolved to employ a missionary within the Association bounds, and $455 was pledged for this purpose.

A morning service for deaf mutes is held every first Sunday in the month in the lecture room of the First Baptist church, Peoria, Ill. The services of Mr. H. M. Cook of the University of Chicago have been secured by the First church, for the mutes. A permanent class has also been formed for them in the Sunday school. Fourteen of the deaf mutes have joined the church during the past year, nine of them by baptism. On the Sunday that Mr. Cook holds the morning service for them, he also interprets the evening sermon of Dr. Simmons, pastor of the church.

Professor Richard Burton's class in "The Bible as Literature" is so large this year at the state university, in Minneapolis, that there is no room large enough to accommodate it.

The Twin City Baptist Ministers' Conference met at the First church, Minneapolis, and elected as officers for the year Rev. Henry B. Steelman of St. Paul, Rev. F. H. Cooper of Minneapolis, vice-president, and Rev. G. H. Gamble of Minneapolis, secretary and treasurer. The topic for September 16 and 23 was "The Minister's Relations to Civic Reforms and Movements."

Prof. B. P. Stout of Philadelphia, a song evangelist, becomes assistant pastor of the First church, St. Paul, October 1.

The Central church, Minneapolis, held an "at home week," with services each day except Saturday, beginning September 23.

Rev. Bowley Green, of the First church, Portland, Maine, reports for the First year of his pastorate sixty-four baptisms and ninety-six additions.

Rev. R. S. Walker has been pastor at Rocky Ford, Colo., for eighteen months; he has received 110 new members into the church, and the church finances have been doubled.

Central Association of Indiana held a good meeting recently. The question was discussed, "Whether Evangelists Can Be of Any Help to Us." A conservative view was taken by the two speakers. They favored, however, the calling in of brother pastors when needed, but were emphatic that the pastor should never surrender the control of the meeting to another.

The First Church, Indianapolis, Ind., has engaged Miss Maud Gates of the Gordon Training School in Boston as church missionary.

Congregational.

Rev. Ernest Bourne Allen, who has resigned the pastorate of Pilgrim church, Lansing, Mich., to accept that of the Washington Street church, Toledo, Ohio, has built up since 1895 a strong church at Lansing. A discouraged mission with less than fifty members has become a church of 315 members most of whom have been received on confession of faith. A new edifice has twice been built, the first being de-

IS IT AN EPIDEMIC?

Vital Statistics Show an Alarming Increase in an Already Prevailing Disease—Are Any Exempt?

At no time in the history of disease has there been such an alarming increase in the number of cases of any particular malady as in that of kidney and bladder troubles now preying upon the people of this country.

Today we see a relative, a friend or an acquaintance apparently well, and in a few days we may be grieved to learn of their serious illness or sudden death, caused by that fatal type of kidney trouble—Bright's disease.

Kidney trouble often becomes advanced into acute stages before the afflicted is aware of its presence; that is why we read of so many sudden deaths of prominent business and professional men, physicians and others. They have neglected to stop the leak in time.

While scientists are puzzling their brains to find out the cause, each individual can, by a little precaution, avoid the chances of contracting dreaded and dangerous kidney trouble, or eradicate it completely from their system if already afflicted. Many precious lives might have been, and many more can yet be saved, by paying attention to the kidneys.

It is the mission of the Christian Century to benefit its readers at every opportunity and therefore we advise all who have any symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble to write today to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the celebrated specific which is having such a great demand and remarkable success in the cure of the most distressing kidney and bladder troubles. With the sample bottle of Swamp-Root will also be sent free a pamphlet and treatise of valuable information.

destroyed by fire just as it was completed. A large Sunday school is also among the fruits of Mr. Allen's work.

Routt county, in Colorado, though 120 by eighty miles in dimensions, has as yet no railroad running through it, but it has four Congregational churches with a total membership of over 200. Nine Sunday schools are connected with these churches. Recently the four churches were recognized by council, and a new association of churches and ministers, known as the Northwestern Association of Colorado, was organized.

Rev. George E. Brown, resident pastor at Oacoma, S. D., holds services at eight different points in the county, which is over 100 miles long by fifty wide. He has a mid-week Bible study club for young people.

At the dedicatory services of the new church at Makanda, Ill., September 15, Home Missionary Superintendent Tompkins preached and the people responded generously by giving $1,000, $100 over the amount needed to clear the edifice of debt.

At Brodhead, Wis., a Friday night interdenominational Bible class and an annual missionary tea, with opening of barrels, division of missionary money between home and foreign missions, election of officers and supper, has been a success for ten years. Mrs. Unger, the pastor's wife, has a social missionary club, with readings and refreshments, for all persons over 12 years of age.

Miss Minnie Dougherty, a graduate of the Bible Normal College, has been appointed parish visitor of the Fourth church, Hartford. She has done some post-graduate work also at Clark University. The former visitor of this church resigned to enter evangelistic work.

At Brattleboro, Vt., the Congregational, Baptist and Methodist churches have joined in securing the services of Rev. E. E. Davidson of Massachusetts for a series of evangelistic meetings, to be held during the last days of the year and through the Week of Prayer.

The Disciples.

Rev. L. E. Crouch has organized a congregation at Garden, Logan county, Oklahoma, with fifty-two members. They will build a house of worship at once.

At Columbia, Mo., a twelve days' meeting, led by J. G. Creason, was continued eleven days more as a union meeting, the Presbyterian and Baptist ministers alternating with Mr. Creason in the preaching. There were seven confessions of faith, four of whom united with the Christian church, two with the Methodist and one with the Baptist.

Rev. L. D. Powers recently celebrated his twenty-sixth anniversary as pastor of the Vermont Avenue church, Washington. During this period and mainly through his efforts the Ninth Street, H Street and Whitney Avenue churches were planted.

Four years ago $2,000 was raised to build a college building for the Southern Christian Institute. The money was used to purchase materials. A class in carpentry was formed and under an instructor this class erected the building, which will accommodate 300 students. Erected by contract it would have cost $10,000.

The sixty-fourth annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Missouri was held at Mexico. It was so largely attended that overflow meetings were held in the Baptist church on two evenings. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions had the first session. Their receipts for the year showed nearly $1,000 increase. The address of Mrs. A. M. Harrison of Kentucky, on "Woman's Debt to Missions," was effective. The convention sermon was delivered in the Presbyterian church by Rev. J. B. Briney of Moberly. It dealt with doctrinal questions rather than practical missionary problems. "Talks by the Field Men"—E. J. Lampton, Joseph Gaylor, Horace Siberell—were full of interest. "Real Problems in State Missions," upon which there was a conference, was considered in able papers upon the subjects of "The Problem of Foreign Populations;" "The County and Village Church;" "The Home," and "The Negro Problem, His Past, Present and Future." W. J. Lhamon gave an address on American missions and A. McLean on foreign missions. The Disciples now number about 175,000 in the state of Missouri. They have 800 preachers.

There have been thirty-five additions to the Christian congregation at Watseka, Ill., during the last thirty-four weeks. The Junior and Intermediate Endeavorers there support an orphan girl in India and the Senior Society now agrees to care for a boy at Damoh.

Rev. J. H. Smart reports ninety-three additions to the church during his first year's pastorate at Winchester, Ill.

There are some eighty-six congregations of Disciples in the Indian Territory, with a membership of 5,500. These have about thirty-five Bible schools, with an attendance of 2,000, and twenty-eight houses of worship, valued at $37,000. At the convention held September 18-20, the reports showed 165 baptisms and 644 other additions, and eighteen new churches organized during the year. For state missions $781 was raised and the American Christian Missionary Society appropriated $396 to aid the work.

President J. W. McGarvey of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry, Sunday, September 15.

Rev. Howard T. Cree closed his work at Maysville, Ky., September 22 and will begin with Central church, St. Louis, October 6. Rev. R. E. Moss will succeed him at Maysville.

The inauguration of Burriss A. Jenkins as president of Kentucky University took place September 26. The exercises began with a sermon by Rev. E. L. Powell, which was thoughtful and effective. Acting President Milligan gave a luncheon to the distinguished guests, among whom were President Charles F. Thwing of Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio; President Roberts of Center College, Danville, Ky.; President Weber of Kentucky Wesleyan University, Prof. W. D. McClintock of the University of Chicago, A. McLean and others. At 3 p. m. an address was made by James H. Hazelrigg, ex-Chief Justice

A CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Asthma sufferers need no longer leave home and business in order to be cured. Nature has produced a vegetable remedy that will permanently cure Asthma and all diseases of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases (with a record of 90 per cent. permanently cured) and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Asthma, Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis and nervous diseases, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail. Address with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

GOD'S BOOKS

An inquiry respecting

The Books of Judgment

WHAT THEY ARE

WHERE THEY ARE

WHAT THEY CONTAIN

By John Williams, with an introduction by I. N. McCash, LL. D.

This is an interesting and attractive little book and contains many valuable thoughts. All book readers will want it. Paper binding only. Sent postpaid for 35 cents. Address,

The Christian Century Company
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

The Pioneer
Limited.

Famous
Train
of
the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service
Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information
furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent,
Chicago, Ill.

ILLINOIS DAY AT THE PAN-AMERICAN EX- POSITION

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets for that occasion at rate as low as $1.50 for the round trip, good going September 14th and 15th, returning to and including September 22d. For particulars regarding tickets at specially low rates, with longer limits, available in sleeping cars, on same dates, call on or address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago.

Parson Rousegood's Experiences

his ups and downs, are being printed in each issue of

"Daily Bible Reading"

a religious paper packed full of good things for all Bible lovers. It goes to 45 states, Canada, England and Scotland, and has 6,000 circulation. Send 25c for it one year. Sample copy free. Write of the Supreme Court of Kentucky, graduate of the Kentucky University and a member of the Board of Curators. A scholarly address by President Thwing was next given. His subject was "The University in the Prosperous Democracy." The new president's inaugural followed, and he was greeted with an enthusiastic ovation, both before and after its delivery. A reception in the evening with speeches closed this auspicious event. President Jenkins was the first president of the University of Indianapolis, which under his guidance brought the several colleges of Indianapolis into one organization. He was offered the presidency of Bethany (W. Va.) college, one of the leading schools of the Disciples, but declined, to accept the pastorate of one of the large Christian churches in Buffalo. After a course in Chicago University he attended both Yale and Harvard, where he received marked attention from the leading educators for his Greek translations.

CHAS. J. BURTON, Editor, Canton, Mo.

Rev. A. C. Smither on September 8 entered on the twelfth year of his pastorate of the First church, Los Angeles, Cal., his being the longest pastorate in the city. During the past eleven years there has been an average of ninety accessions per year.

The church at South Bend, Ind., celebrated its fiftieth anniversary September 21 and 22. An address was delivered by Dr. H. L. Willett of Chicago. Letters were read from pastors and evangelists who had served the church, and a choir, composed of the older members of the church, led the music in the fashion of the earlier days.

The Rev. W. J. Lhamon has resigned as pastor of First Christian church, Allegheny, Pa., to become Dean of the Christian Bible School, an institution affiliated with the University of Missouri at Columbia, Mo. Mr. Lhamon is well known as the author of several religious books.

Episcopal.

Christ's Hospital, Topeka, is to have another addition to cost about $12,000. Last year the hospital gave 4,000 days of full charity.

Rev. C. L. Arnold, rector of St. Peter's church, Detroit, Mich., is interested in opening a boys' hotel. Mr. J. L. Hudson, one of the prominent merchants of Detroit, has become interested in the undertaking and an option on the Biddle House, a large and formerly popular hotel, has been secured. Mr. Arnold's idea is to open a hotel for boys between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one, where for a reasonable price, board, lodging, reading rooms, bath, gymnasium, etc., will be supplied under good moral surroundings and careful supervision. Mr. Arnold hopes to make the institution self-supporting and pay a dividend over. Mr. Arnold has recently opened a second home for the aged and incurable. The first one has been running two years successfully, and the second is full. Mr. Arnold and his daughter personally manage these homes, which now shelter over forty inmates.

During the heat of the summer months the night service of St. Matthew's Cathedral in Dallas, Texas, has been held on the lawn adjoining. The full vested choir attended as usual and the service was not changed in any way.

The Bishop of Milwaukee at the fifty-fifth annual council, September 17, reported 703 confirmations and four-teen ordinations. The endowment fund of the diocese is working well by means of the insurance plan.

The Rev. H. B. St. George, Canon of the Cathedral in Milwaukee, has been elected as instructor in Church History at Nashotah, the Rev. Charles H. Schultz of Cleveland, Ohio, as instructor in New Testament Exegesis; while the chair of Biblical Literature and Liturgics, recently created as a separate chair at a meeting of the trustees, has been offered to the Rev. Joseph W. Hyde of Danvers, Mass.

Methodist.

The Northwestern Conference of Indiana, which held a week's session at Brazil, reported a decrease in membership, a slight increase in benevolences, an increase in offerings for De Pauw University and of nearly $200,000 in church property.

Rev. G. H. Bradford, pastor of Wesley M. E. Church, St. Joseph, Mo., has accepted a call to the Oakley Church, Kansas City. Under his leadership a new church has been built for the Wesley congregation, which cost about $11,000. Mr. Bradford has gained a reputation for oratory and has been in forwarding the interests of the people of St. Joseph in municipal affairs.

The East Ohio Conference by a vote of 145 for and only twenty-nine against, has put itself on record as favoring the admission of women as delegates to the general conference. It was decided to raise $70,000 as an annuity fund, equal to $1 per member, for superannuated preachers.

The time for the dedication of the Gary Memorial M. E. Church at Wheaton, one of the most beautiful edifices in Methodism, the gift of Judge E. H. Gary, owing to inability to secure finishing material work has been postponed until after the session of the Rock River Conference. The church is in a prosperous condition, congregations are large and membership constantly increasing. There has been a net gain in membership during the present pastorate of seventy-three—about 44 per cent. At the fourth quarterly conference Pastor G. K. Flack was invited to return for the third year.

Dr. D. L. Raeder of Denver, Colo., will become pastor of the First M. E. Church in St. Paul, Minn.

D. M. Smith, assistant book agent of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has sailed for China for the purpose of establishing a branch publishing house in Shanghai.

Presbyterian.

The King's Daughters of the First Church, Oakland, Cal., have raised $1,800 with which a cottage ward for the Presbyterian orphanage at San Anselmo has been built. It contains twelve beds, six given by the society of the First Church, two by Brooklyn Church and the other four by individuals.

A great loss has befallen the Presbyterian Church and also Evangelical

A DESIRABLE OPENING

We are in need of field workers and can give a few excellent positions to men or women of good business capacity. The work is of a desirable character and terms most liberal. If your present occupation is not satisfactory or if you wish to increase your income write us at once. We can give you steady, permanent and profitable employment. Address

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
358 Dearborn Street    $ $ $ $ $    Chicago, Ill.

Christianity in the sudden death of Rev. George T. Purves, D. D., LL D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church, New York city, and an active member of the Evangelistic committee, appointed by the General Assembly.

During the pastorate of Rev. William McFarland at the Ann Carmichael Memorial Church, Philadelphia, not a single communion season has passed without accessions to the church, and the whole number of additions during the past four years is now about 186.

General.

A union revival meeting was held during August at Stewartville, Mo. Rev. Robert L. Layfield of Kansas City, preaching. Fifty-one confessed their faith in Christ and gave their names for church membership in the various denominational churches. Services were held morning and evening at Unity church, and at the Baptist church every morning. At Sunset street services were held near the postoffice. People came from miles around, some, twenty or thirty miles. All the churches were greatly revived and received additions to their membership.

The religious forces of Indiana are to be united in what is called "Sunday-school Week." The program consists of popular mass meetings in every village, town and city of the state during the evenings of that week, a house-to-house visitation of the whole state on Friday, and special evangelistic services on Sunday. There will be at least a million people assembled in these mass meetings to discuss the moral and religious needs of the boys and girls of Indiana, and the Sunday school as an agency to meet those needs. W. C. Pearce of Chicago; J. E. Bolles of Detroit; Prof. E. A. Fox of Louisville, and other International Sunday-school men will assist the Indiana speakers. The week selected is October 21-27.

Final plans have been perfected for the state Christian Endeavor convention at Danville, Ill., Oct. 3 to 6. Among the speakers will be Rev. W. S. Ament of China, Professor H. L. Willett of the University of Chicago Divinity school, Rev. Charles Ransom of Africa, brother of E. S. Ransom of Chicago, and John Willis Bacr, secretary of the United Society, Boston.

At Fall River, Mass., the corner stone of an $80,000 Y. M. C. A. building was laid in September. President Faunce Brown made an address. A $17,000 gymnasium recently completed stands next to this companion building.

Foreign Missionary Items.

Rev. W. M. Morrison of Luebo, Congo Free State, Africa, says: "The good work of grace is still going on. One hundred and thirty-five have been added to Luebo alone this year. This does not include those at Ibanj and Bakua Mbuya. We have communion every month, and there are always baptisms: Yesterday there were eleven. We have six hundred and eighty members, and many others are continually coming, inquiring the way. How shall these babes be fed, and how shall the inquirers be taught, and how shall we reach the great untouched mass about us without help?

Rev. Fung Chak, formerly in charge of the Chinese mission in Portland, Ore., has been chosen pastor of the First church, Canton, China, which numbers 1,000 members.

The gifted and heroic Dr. Griffith John of the London Missionary Society writes home as follows: "As to my coming home, I have not fully made up my mind not to come. My dreams—the dreams of years—are being fulfilled one by one. My dream of seeing a strong mission in Central China has been fulfilled. My dream of carrying the Gospel from Hankow through Hanan to the borders of Canton has been fulfilled. My dream of seeing an educational institution established in connection with the mission in Central China has been fulfilled. In three years hence the Hanan mission will be on its feet, and so will the educational institution, and I shall be seventy years of age then. It strikes me that I might come home then with a good conscience. Don't you think so yourself?"

C. E. Randall writes from Jamaica, as follows: "Sunday evening was bright and favorable. At the appointed time we proceeded to 'Bethel.' The house, which accommodates about one hundred and sixty people, was filled before service began, and, afterward, a large booth, of bamboo and cocoanut branches, which had been made for the occasion, was more than filled. It was a most encouraging gathering, and the service was lively and earnest. A good number of young people were there, who had prepared special hymns under Bro. Thomas' teaching, and they sang them well. The older people appeared much interested. Other people of the district were present who are being drawn to the work and are helping in it. The service seemed to stir them all. It was the anniversary of Bro. Thomas' taking up this work in connection with Bro. Morris. He has made a good beginning. More than thirty additions have been made to the church and others are coming in. The Sunday school has made a fresh start, and other work has been done, besides that at the other station, Airy Mount, of which I saw nothing. A special collection was taken in aid of the fund for the building of the Mission Cottage, which realized twenty-nine dollars. Afternoon and evening services were arranged for, which it was confidently expected would be even better attended than that in the morning, but we had scarcely got home when "the rain descended and the floods came." Fortunately the winds did not blow severely. For about three hours the rain fell in torrents, and afterwards slightly. Some of the people from a distance had to get home as best they could and could not have been there till night had closed in. Rain having ceased we went back to the chapel for evening service, though it was hardly reasonable to expect any one there. About forty people gathered, and we had a service which I trust was not in vain.

THE FIRST BOTTLE

will convince you that it is the very medicine you need. If you are troubled with dyspepsia, rheumatism liver complaint, or any ailment arising from impure blood, use Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. Not for sale in drug stores. Write for particulars to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 S. Hoyne ave., Chicago, Ill.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY, of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities. Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

RHEUMATISM

Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia and Kidney Troubles are instantly relieved and quickly cured by EASINE. Acute Rheumatism cannot exist 48 hours when Easine is faithfully taken. Chronic Rheumatism and old cases that do not yield to other remedies always give way to the magic power of Easine. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send a brief description of your case when you write. Complete treatment mailed, prepaid, on receipt of one dollar. Easine Chemical Co., 101 Bell Block, Cincinnati, O.

Bethany College.

Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,

J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty

MICHIGAN CENTRAL
The Niagara Falls R. Co.
Pan-American Special
A Magnificent New Train.
Lv. CHICAGO 6.00 p. m., daily.
Ar. BUFFALO 7.45 a. m.
Send 4c. postage for "Pan-American Souvenir" and other beautifully illustrated publications.
O. W. Ruggles, Gen'l. Pass'r & Tkt. Agt., Chicago.

BOOKS

The Holy Bible, newly edited by the American Revision Committee, 1901. Standard edition. New York: Thomas Nelson & Sons. $1.50 to $9.00.

The promise of the committee of revision, which began the publication of its work in 1881, has come to full realization, so far as American readers are concerned, in this volume. The original committee was made up of two sub-committees, one English and one American. It was, of course, appropriate, in view of the priority of the English labors in the biblical field, and the historic surroundings amid which the work took its final form at Westminster, that the readings of the English committee should have the preference. This leaning to the English side was further emphasized by the proprietorship exercised over the labors of the combined committee by the Oxford and Cambridge presses, which reserved the exclusive right of publication during a period of fourteen years. It was agreed that until the expiration of this term the readings of the American committee, where they differed from the English, should be confined to an appendix, and the English readings be incorporated in the text. At the end of the fourteen years the English committee put forth an edition which gave for the first time the American readings in the text. This was in 1898, and the book bore the title "American Revised Bible." But this work was far from satisfactory to the American committee, which had retained its organization and continued its labors. Naturally much valuable work had been done during these years which found no embodiment in the so-called "American Revised Bible." In the task of bringing out a work fully up-to-date there were naturally many delays, and it is only a few weeks since the "American Standard Edition" was ready. This work brings the enterprise of biblical revision up to date in a far more satisfactory manner than do either the Victorian Revision or the English-American work.

The conservatism of English sentiment, which preferred many old and well-nigh obsolete renderings rather than such changes as would illuminate the text, has not been permitted to interfere with such alterations as were needed.

The Revised Version of 1881-5 had done much good work in this direction. The present volume goes much further. The divine name Jehovah appears in every case where it is found in the original, rather than the word LORD, which the English revisers preferred. The value of being able to use the names of Deity as they were employed in the Hebrew Scriptures will at once commend itself, even if it necessitates changes in such familiar passages as "The Lord is my Shepherd," where "Jehovah" is henceforth to be read instead. "Sheol," the Hebrew word for the underworld, is consistently employed rather than the various renderings "the pit," "the grave," and "hell." The more grammatical use of "who" and "that" rather than "which" as relating to persons will be appreciated by all readers, and the substitution of "are" for "be" in indicative clauses, the omission of "for" before infinitives, and the change of "an" to "a" before "h" aspirated will give satisfaction.

The attempt has been made, as in all the revisions, to retain as far as possible, the style of the authorized version, which has been long recognized as a masterpiece of literary form. The present book shares this tendency, in some instances, even returning to the readings of the authorized version after changes had been made in the English revision. At the same time it is wisely held that many improvements can be made, and it has been the effort of the scholars employed to secure this end. A gratifying change has been made in many passages where the Hebrew Scriptures referred various emotions to organs of the body, such as the reins, the bowels, etc. Such psychical action is in English tropical speech limited almost entirely to the heart and brain, and the new version conforms to this usage.

The references to the manuscripts and versions are specified, instead of being given in such meaningless generalizations as "many ancient versions." The marginal references are more numerous than hitherto, and at the top of the page there appear the subjects treated below somewhat in the manner of the authorized version. These headings are for the most part satisfactory, though occasionally they leave much to be desired, as in the Song of Solomon, where an obsolete theory of interpretation is incorporated in the headings in a manner only less offensive than that displayed in the King James text. The verse numbers are run in, rather than being allowed to stand upon the margin, and the paragraphs are somewhat shorter and more satisfactory than in the former revision, discarding equally with that the arbitrary verse divisions. In the titles of the Gospels the word "Saint" is rightly omitted. "The Acts" is the simple heading of the Gospel history, and "The Epistle of Paul to the Romans," stands as the norm of all the Pauline headings; while "The Epistle to the Hebrews" rightly leaves open the question of authorship, as neither of the former revisions has done. Full introductions set forth the principles upon which the work has been projected, and appendices show its divergences from the former works of the kind.

In this book we have at last the instrument of biblical study for which we have waited since revision first began to be considered. It comes at an opportune time. The prejudice which met the revised version on its first appearance is disappearing. It is winning its way to popular use. This volume comes at the moment when that question is largely settled and people are only asking "Which revised Bible is the best?" Fresh impetus has also been given to scholarly translation of the Scriptures by the recent revised versions of the German, French, Dutch, Danish, Norwegian and Swedish Bibles. The world wishes the Word of God in the best language of today. This we have apparently in this work. That it may find speedy recognition in the pulpits, pews, Sunday schools, and homes of our land is to be hoped. No cheapness of prices set upon copies of the King James Bible should longer tempt those who want the best from its possession.

Freedom's Next War for Humanity. By Charles Edward Locke, D. D. Jennings & Pye, Cincinnati; Eaton and Mains, New York. 299 pages. Price, $1.25.

This is a good book. There is in it the throb of vigorous, healthy life. Perhaps it would have been better if the title had been reversed so as to have read "Humanity's Next War for Freedom." But that is a small matter, and anyway it does not affect the substance of the book. There is no suggestion in these pages of the student's midnight lamp. They have evidently been written in the intervals of a busy life. Every sentence flies like an arrow to the mark. There is no waste of words. Dr. Locke believes that humanity's next great battle for freedom will be found upon sociological grounds. In this he is manifestly right. But he sometimes gives the impression that the battle is to be easily won, that the saloon is to be "stamped out" by some summary process and that poverty is to be abolished by some sudden and concerted application of the golden rule. The spirit of the book is warmly optimistic, and while the forces for evil that have to be faced in the coming war are not under-rated there is a jubilant confidence that the forces of good are well able to overcome them. The book is a good spiritual tonic and is to be heartily recommended.

$13.00 TO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN, $13.00

via the Nickel Plate Road, daily, with limit of 15 days; 20-day tickets at $16.00 and 30-day tickets at $21.00 for the round trip. Through service to New York and Boston and lowest available rates. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago.

THE HOME

My Little Man.

Kathleen Watson.

I remember thinking how such a picturesque setting suited well that most pathetic story as he told it me one Sunday evening by the shore and the sound of the incoming tide, with the church bells ringing in the distance, and the barley fields and the heather hills all glorified in the tender glow of the twilight time.

Just as he told it me, so I shall endeavor to tell it you. But all the shades of earnestness and hopelessness—the gleams of fun and contractions of pain that passed at intervals across his face and made the story so human and so fascinating—I greatly fear you must miss entirely. I can but hope that it will not seem disjointed or disconnected. When people talk, they do not always talk as books read; and just as he told it me, so I must tell it you, or I could not tell it at all.

* * * * *

Allan L'Estrange and I were friends, as I make bold to say not many men have been or are. Of the inestimable value of his influence over me as a boy I cannot speak. The best of words that I could summon to my aid would be too miserably poor were I to put them by the side of what he was to me. We were together at Rugby and at Oxford. After that we went for an extended tour of several months' duration in Southern Europe. At Athens we parted—Allan accepting there a tutorship to the son of a Russian prince, and I returning home to attend to the things of my estate. It was arranged that Allan was to travel with the prince direct from Athens to his Russian home, where the two children of the latter, a son and a daughter, lived the whole year round. They were to take the steamer from the Piræus to Constantinople and Odessa. The vessel was timed to leave at midnight. Well I remember that dusky evening, when for the last time Allan and I drove together along the broad smooth road, bordered on either side with pleasant vineyards and grand old trees, and leading in a straight white line from the city to the port.

"I should like to ask you one thing still," I said to him as we went. "Seeing that the unforeseen mostly happens, if you are ever in any difficulty or danger, will you promise to send for me? You know that I would stick at nothing for your sake."

Very slowly he answered: "There was no need to have asked that, Nell." And I can hear him now.

Seven long years after, across the dreary breadths of two wide continents, the sorry summons reached me. Briefly let me tell you of what led up to it.

When Allan had been for nearly two years in his Russian home, dark days, famine, and fever, fell upon the forsaken land where it had been his lot to live. The prince, who had wasted all his immense substance in riotous living, was brought back to his ruined home to die—from the result of a duel. His only son, always a sickly lad, fell an easy prey to the fever raging round, and died also.

Now Allan long had loved the only daughter of this princely house, a strange, enigmatic, beautiful girl—one in whom the soul was sleeping, so to speak. Yet Allan loved her as men love perhaps but once in their lives. Her father, the prince who had conceived a strong and sincere affection for Allan, on his death-bed committed this fair lonely daughter to Allan's faithful keeping.

"I am married, Nell. And life and the world seem very beautiful to me because I love her so." So he wrote to me at that time, away at the other end of the world as I was, serving at a post in the diplomatic service. "Nell," you must know, was the nickname given me at Rugby, because of my blue eyes and yellow hair, and I never remember Allan calling me by any other name.

After his marriage with the Princess Gabrielle, he accepted a post at Kiev University, and gave up all his spare hours to private teaching, leaving no margin for rest or the studious research which was a passion with him, in order that his wife might have every possible comfort within his power to give her. At Kiev a son was born to them, little Waldo, the delight and joy of his father's heart.

A few months after his birth, the Princess Gabrielle was sent for to St. Petersburg by Imperial command. There her extraordinary beauty and distinction won for her the favor of the highest in the land. She accepted a court appointment to the Empress, and never went back to Allan and little Waldo. You must understand clearly that she never deserted Allan for any other man. She came of a race too high for that. Only it was that, after the pomp and glitter of a court, she could not face again the life of insignificance and poverty with him.

I may not speak harshly of her—Allan loved her, and his gentle spirit seems somehow always near me.

Burying his heart-agony, that gallant friend of mine lived on in that dreary Russian town with his little boy, nobly devoting himself to the service of the wretched, persecuted, Russian Jews around, whose lot he deemed even wearier than his own. And the love between him and his little child grew daily more and more into the thing so marvelously sweet and strong which I tell you of. For the rest, no bitterness or complaint came to touch him; only a simple determination to show a brave front, and live, as far as in him lay, for those around him.

When the prevailing reign of terror was at its height, spies of the government misconstrued his ideal yet practical philanthropy. He was torn from the side of his tiny, idolized darling, and sent to the dread Siberian death-in-life.

I did not know all this as quickly as and in the order that I have told it you. I had been traveling in the uttermost ends of the world, and had wondered greatly at never hearing from my friend. Soon after my return to England, scenting danger for him, I was on the point of starting for Kiev to make personal inquiries, when there was handed to me at my club a mangled, blood-stained, grime-coated envelope, containing a scrap of paper which was dated five months back from a Siberian prison, and which said in Allan's dear familiar fist—

"Come to me, Nell. Come at once. They tell me I am dying. But I cannot die until you come. You will get this some time, I am sure. It is all I can send you. I am giving it to one whom I trust. He will post it for you over the border. You must secure a passport. You must come, Nell, at once, at once."

How I thereupon charged down on the Foreign Office, and, failing the letter of introduction I sought, got another to an influential Russian magnate; how I sat up all night despatching letters and telegrams, and with the help of my friends getting one or two things in order for the long journey; how by noon the next day I had landed at Calais pier and was stepping into the train for Brussels and the Eastern Continent; how late on the evening of the next day, I arrived in St. Petersburg, and so concluded the first stage of my journey, are things which seem to me now to have been effected almost as quickly as I tell you of them.

But at St. Petersburg I had to possess my soul in patience for three weeks, when, after giving every assurance that my visit had nothing of a political nature about it, I received at last my passport, with permission to travel across Siberia to Yakoutsk, and, thanks to my influential credentials, every assurance of the assistance and protection of the government officials at the various stations on the route.

Without delay I started. In those days the railroad stopped at Perm, and there I engaged a sledge and guide, and set off on the weary journey across the frozen, unknown land—The Quiver.

(To be continued.)

FOR GENERAL DEBILITY Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. L. Severance, Greenfield, Mass., says: "For years I have prescribed it in general debility, nervous exhaustion and insomnia, with the happiest results."

A Peacemaker.

Fred Gould had been bound out to Mr. Hartwell for two years, and in all that time there had been nothing like a doll anywhere on the farm. But about a week before a little granddaughter had appeared from the city, with her arms full of them, and since then they were always cropping up, first in one place and then in another. With his lack of experience, it was hardly to be wondered that Fred, when he came in for dinner one day, should have flung his strap of books on the sofa and snapped off the entire foot of Melissa Eugenia, who lay there, smiling in her sleep.

Alice, the granddaughter, snatched her baby to her heart and grieved sadly, while Fred stood looking on, feeling like a murderer.

Late in the afternoon, as he was creeping back to the house, he came upon Alice sitting on the side porch.

"Don't make any noise, please, Fred," she whispered, lifting a warning finger. "Melissa Eugenia has just got to sleep, at last."

"I say," blurted out Fred, determined to be over with the speech he had been diligently preparing during the day, "I'm awfully sorry I broke your doll. I didn't mean to do it."

"Oh, well, never mind. It was just accidental. She's been in the hospital ever since, and taken all kinds of different medicines, and now she feels easier."

Fred felt easier, too. He ventured to sit down on the edge of the porch. "I thought you'd be mad," he said. "I thought girls always got mad every chance they had."

"They do not," said Alice, with dignity. Then, her round face flushing, she confessed: "I guess maybe I was a little mad just at first, but I didn't stay so."

"Why?"
"Because I knew it wasn't your fault; you didn't mean to do it. Crossness is a horrid feeling, I think; don't you? Anyway, it's generally silly."

"Silly?"
"Yes; grandmother says it is, because there's generally a mistake about it. She says that the real things to be cross with are only a few, and she thinks everybody ought to be patient even with those. Grandmother believes in a lot of patience."

When supper was over and the chores were done, and Alice had gone to bed, Fred came back to the side porch and sat there by himself. He looked doubtfully across the tree tops to the chimneys of the next farmhouse.

"Of course," he said to himself, "grandmothers believe in patience, but boys don't, very much. Perhaps if they did, they wouldn't be in so many scrapes," he acknowledged, with a sigh.

For some minutes longer Fred sat with his chin propped on his hands, staring at the chimneys. Then he jumped up and started through the garden gate and along the narrow path to the Hartwell farmhouse. In the yard was a boy of about Fred's age. When this boy saw Fred he lifted his head, straightened himself, and began to whistle carelessly, as though to prove to all the world that he had nothing on his mind.

Fred opened the gate and went straight in as though afraid to stop. "I say, Jack," he began—making his second speech of the day—"I guess perhaps you didn't mean to tip up my boat that time, did you?"

Jack's face changed. "No, I didn't—honest," he said eagerly. "I was just in fun, and somebody pushed me or something, and she went all the way over. It—was too bad!"

"Oh, that's all right! I say, let's go nutting, Saturday."

It was starlight when Fred went back through the meadow. "I'll know enough not to look for mistakes sooner, another time," he was thinking. "It saves trouble. Even if he had upset the old boat on purpose it wasn't worth making a fuss about. I guess grandmothers know more about such things than boys do."—Morning Star.

The Little Shop.

A little east side stationery and newspaper shop in New York City is the pulpit from which four young men have been preaching an excellent sermon.

The proprietor of the shop is a veteran of the civil war. The four young men were regular customers, and so had become his friends. One of them was an electrician, one worked in a hotel, another was a draftsman, and the fourth a law clerk.

One day last summer the electrician found the little shop closed when he called for his morning paper. It was still closed when the draftsman and his brother, the law clerk, called, a little later. Inquiry of the family who lived overhead brought out the fact that the old man had not been feeling well the day before, and had complained of pain in his chest.

That night the four young men made further inquiries. They found that the old soldier was down with typhoid pneumonia, and had been taken to St. Luke's Hospital. They knew he was poor and wholly dependent on his little business. If the shop remained closed, not only would he have no income while he was away, but his regular customers would go elsewhere, and their trade might never be regained.

So the young men determined to carry on the business themselves. They were all poor and had plenty to do, but they arranged their own work as conveniently as they could, and divided the day into periods. Then each gave a part of his time, and so the shop was kept open all the day.

The task was not accomplished without self-sacrifice. It meant longer hours and harder work for all of the four, and for two of them the giving up of a vacation for which much had been planned, and from which much was anticipated. Nevertheless, each of them did his part without complaining.

It is one of the beautiful things in life that a deed of this kind seldom passes unnoticed. The young men said nothing about it, but the story of what they were doing got noised about. Everybody in the neighborhood became interested, and everybody wanted to help. People who had never traded at the little shop before brought their custom there now to encourage the young men, and some of them were always in too much of a hurry for a down town car to bother with change for a nickel; so the receipts, instead of falling off, increased.

The old soldier had a long siege of it. When he was finally discharged, instead of finding his little shop closed and his business gone, he found it open, and with a bigger trade than he had ever had.

How would it have been if the four young men had merely contented themselves with wishing that they were rich enough, or had time enough, to help the old man?—The Catholic News.

Hamilton College

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

The Leading College of the Christian Brotherhood for the education of young women. Its record, buildings, equipment, faculty, the best. Opens thirty-third session second Tuesday in September. Very reasonable rates. For particulars and catalogue apply to

B. C. HAGERMAN, PRESIDENT.

A Monthly Magazine

Devoted to the upbuilding of Christian character and earnest church work. Rev. Charles Warwick, Editor, Pastor Diamond Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia.

Asks for support—on its merits—in the way of subscriptions and advertisements. Price 50c per year, 12 issues, post-paid. Publication office 200 South 10th Street, Philadelphia.

Eureka College.

Quiet City, Beautiful Grounds, Convenient Buildings, Athletic Park, Gymnasium, Physical Director, Location Healthful, Influences Good, Expenses Low.

COURSES:

Full Collegiate Training, Music and Art, Bible School, Preparatory and Commercial Department.

Next Session Begins September 17, 1901.

For full information, address the President,

ROBERT E. HIERONYMUS, Eureka, Illinois.

The Otherself Sure Cure.

An annihilator of pain and worry that beats Christian Science and Dow-ism, and is indeed the true Christian Science, was practiced by a wise auntie on a street-car the other day.

She and little Howard were enjoying immensely their outing in the open car when an aggressive cinder blew into Howard's eye and set him to howling with pain. He made matters worse by his attempts to rub it out with his knuckles, and was wearing out himself, his auntie, and everyone else, when she said: "Howard, there's an awfully tired mother with a cross baby just in front of us. Get out your whistle and show the baby how beautifully you can blow."

Out came the forgotten whistle, and the next minute the baby was crowing over the back of the seat. The tired mother smiled gratefully at Howard, and declared that he was a famous baby-charmer. This made him feel so proud, and the baby's funny capers amused him so, that he kept up the performance to the end of the line.

As soon as the baby left the car he remembered his smarting eye, and up went his knuckles again, and his face began to wrinkle for a whimper. But suddenly he turned to his auntie with a look of surprise and said, "Why, auntie, the cinder has gone away of itself."

And so would a great many of our troubles go away if we would try the otherself cure.—John F. Cowan, D. D., in The Christian Endeavor World.

FLORIDA*WINTER TOURIST TICKETS

go on sale about

OCT. 15, 1901.

In making arrangements to go

to

FLORIDA*CUBA or NASSAU

CALL OR WRITE (it costs only two cents.)

GEO. B. ALLEN, A. G. P. A. Southern Railway,

ST. LOUIS, MO.

or

J. C. BEAM, N. W. P. A. 225 Dearborn Street,

CHICAGO, ILL.

and they will furnish you rates, send literature and give any information desired.

A MOST LIBERAL OFFER

All of our readers who are sick or in poor health will be interested in the announcement in this issue from the Theo. Noel Company, headed "Personal to Subscribers." This company is the proprietor of Vitae-Ore, a remarkable mineral remedy, which they offer to send on thirty days' trial to every reader of this paper. Many have used this medicine and are familiar with its merits, but those who have not should not fail to avail themselves of this most liberal offer. The company is reliable, have what they claim and will do as they agree.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co. Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women and girls, and for abdominal weakness, backache, lung troubles or general weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

EXTENSION OF LIMIT

on Buffalo Pan-American tickets via Nickel Plate Road; $13.00 for round trip, tickets good 15 days; $16.00 for round-trip tickets, good 20 days. Three daily trains with vestibuled sleeping cars and first-class dining-car service on American Club plan. Meals ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago.

PERSONAL TO SUBSCRIBERS.

WE will send to every subscriber or reader of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY a full sized ONE DOLLAR package of VITAE-ORE, sufficient for one month's treatment, to be paid for within one month's time after receipt, if the receiver can truthfully say that its use has done him or her more good than all the drugs and dopes of quacks or good doctors or patent medicines he or she has ever used. READ this over again carefully, and understand that we ask our pay only when it has done you good, and not before. We take all the risk; you have nothing to lose. If it does not benefit you, you pay us nothing. Vitae-Ore is a natural, hard, adamantite, rock-like substance—mineral—ORE—mined from the ground like gold and silver, and requires about twenty years for oxidation. It contains free iron, free sulphur and magnesium, and one package will equal in medicinal strength and curative value 800 gallons of the most powerful, efficacious mineral water, drank fresh at the springs. It is a geological discovery, to which there is nothing added or taken from. It is the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Blood Poisoning, Heart Trouble, Diphtheria, Catarrh and Throat Affections, Liver, Kidney and Bladder Affections, Stomach and Female Disorders, La Grippe, Malarial Fever, Nervous Prostration and General Debility, as thousands testify, and as no one, answering this, writing for a package, will deny after using.

This offer will challenge the attention and consideration, and afterwards the gratitude of every living person who desires better health, or who suffers pains, ills and diseases, which have defied the medical world and grown worse with age. We care not for your skepticism, but ask only your investigation, and at our expense, regardless of what ills you may have, by sending to us for a package. You must not write on a postal card.

In answer to this, address
THEO. NOEL COMPANY, 527, 529, 531 W. North Ave., Chicago, Ill.

This Watch, Chain & Charm
GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

Ott "A GOOD MAN WANTED"

To Advance for First Class

LECTURES AND ENTERTAINMENTS

ED. AMHERST OTT, Dean Drake University College of Oratory, Des Moines, Ia

20,000 CHURCHES

Lighted by the FRINK System of Reflectors with Electric, Gas, Welsbach, Acetylene or C

INCORPORATED to manufacture electric and combination gas and electric fixtures. Send dimensions for estimate. I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., NEW YORK.

TO ST. LOUIS

ILLINOIS CENTRAL
CENTRAL
MISSISSIPPI VALLEY
ROUTE
RAILROAD

DAYLIGHT SPECIAL
FAST-DAY TRAIN
THE
DIAMOND SPECIAL
POPULAR NIGHT TRAIN

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis Reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.
A. H. HANSON, G. F. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

Largest Foundry on Earth making
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

$11.50 Round Trip
St. Paul-
Minneapolis

Tickets on sale October 9, 10, 11, 12 and 14; return limit October 19, 1901, via

CHICAGO & NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY

ACCOUNT the National Convention of the Christian Church. Rates open to everybody. Four fast trains daily through picturesque Wisconsin—9.00 a. m., 6.30 p. m. (Electric Lighted), 10.00 p. m. and 10.15 p. m. Ask any agent for tickets or apply

Ticket Offices } 212 Clark Street and Wells Street Station

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

CURES
Female Troubles, Stooling Posture, Inflammations, Internal Pains, Tired Feeling, Backache, Weak Lungs, Nervousness.

TRIAL FREE.
It will make you comfortable, buoyant, happy—give you ability to work and enjoy life. It is simple, wholly external, adjustable to any figure. Worn with or without corset.

We have over 15,000 letters like this:
Chandler, Okla., July 27, 1899.
Your Brace did all you said about it and more for me. It has saved me a big doctor's bill and brought me good health, which I had not had before in 25 years. My troubles were drowsy, headache, lung disease, stomach and other ills to which women are subject.
MRS. L. B. DICKINSON.

Write today for particulars and illustrated book mailed free in plain sealed envelope. Address: The Natural Body Brace Co., Box 744, Salina, Kansas. Every woman should have this brace.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
The leading musical institution of America. Founded 1853. Unpassed advantages in pronunciation, vocal and instrumental music, and elocution.
George W. Chadwick, Musical Director.
Papers received at any time. For prospectus address: FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

PILES TRIAL TREATMENT FREE.
We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ Pile Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once. Germ Medical Co., 215 E. 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul
Minneapolis
Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Con'l Pass'r Agor. C. B. & Q. R. & S.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE
CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco
FOR THE
Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists

OCEAN EXCURSION TO NEW YORK
BIG FOUR CHESAPEAKE
& OHIO ROUTE
The Rhine, Alps and Battlefield Line.

Stop-over Privileges at Old Point Comfort going; Buffalo—Returning.

Route No. 1, $35.00.
Going via Big Four Route to Cincinnati; Chesapeake & Ohio Railway to Old Point or Norfolk; Old Dominion Line (meals and berths included on steamer) to New York. Returning via Pennsylvania Railroad and Pennsylvania Lines, or via New York Central to Buffalo and Lake Shore or Michigan Central to Chicago.

Route No. 2, $33.00.
Going, same as Route No. 1. Returning via West Shore, Lehigh Valley or D. L. & W. Rys. to Buffalo; New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad or Grand Trunk to Chicago.

Tickets will be on sale July 1 to October 20, limited to return within ten days, except on return trip, if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent at Buffalo or agents at Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, within original ten-day limit, stop-over of ten days additional is allowed at any one of those points. Stop-over at Old Point Comfort is allowed in either direction within limit of ticket.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Route through the Allegheny and Blue Ridge mountains, Shenandoah and Mount Vernon and the historic region of Virginia, in connection with the ocean trip of eighteen hours from Norfolk or Old Point Comfort to New York, offers the most beautiful, varied and interesting trip in America.

For further particulars address
J. C. TUCKER, G. N. A., C. C. & St. L. Ry.,
234 Clark Street, Chicago.
W. E. CONKLYN, N. W. P. A., C. & O. Ry.,
234 Clark Street, Chicago.

Extraordinary Propositions

*The Christian
Century Till
Jan. 1, 1902,
FOR ONLY
25 CENTS*

Does This Interest You?

The Christian Century is a new un denominational religious weekly published to meet a wide and growing demand for a paper that is thoroughly evangelical and abreast of the ripest scholarship, an authority on pure literature, and a medium of communication between the different denominations. Its aim will be to give a record and an interpretation of the leading events in the religious world. It will seek at once to mirror and to mould religious thought and life. In the sweep of its vision and the breadth of its sympathies it will endeavor to be as wide as Christianity itself. In a word, it will stand for essential and universal Christianity.

Promoters and Contributors

Behind this undertaking are men of the highest financial standing. The Editorial management is in the hands of Professor W. Douglas Mackenzie, D. D., of the Chicago Theological Seminary, Rev. James M. Campbell, D. D., well known through his numerous books, and Prof. Herbert L. Willett, Ph. D., of the University of Chicago. These men are known as leaders in modern thought and scholarship. Some of the ablest scholars and writers of America and Europe will contribute to its columns. On the list are such names as Dr. Marcus Dods of Scotland, Dr. Washington Gladden, Dr. Amory H. Bradford, Dr. Josiah Strong, Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, Professor Graham Taylor, etc. Dr. Wm. Adamson, editor of The Christian News, Glasgow, Scotland, will furnish an occasional British letter, and an original story by Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, of Galesburg, Ill., will appear in the early fall numbers. During the fall and winter months a series of special numbers will be issued giving Symposiums on the practical aspects of Christian work. These will be followed by a series on the Fad Religions of the day, and these in turn by a series on such vital questions as The Second Coming of Christ. These are but suggestive hints of special features which will combine to make The Christian Century an interesting and timely religious journal.

How You May Aid the Enterprise

In order to secure a wide and speedy introduction of the paper it will be sent as a trial subscription to names not now on the list from the time the order is received till January 1, 1902, for 25 Cents. The management asks the active co-operation of all who are interested in the furtherance of such an enterprise. You can be of valuable service by securing among your friends as large a number as possible of these trial subscriptions. May we not depend upon you to act promptly in this matter? You will certainly not miss this opportunity to supply yourself with this valuable paper for the balance of the year at such a nominal price. Let us hear from you at once with your own subscription and as many more as possible. The regular subscription price is $1.50 per year.

*The Christian Century Company,
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois.*

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Vol. I.

Chicago, October 10, 1901.

No. 21.

MISSIONARY NUMBER

LEADING FEATURES.

Why Support Foreign Missions

A Hero of the Hebrides

A Wholesome Movement

Import of Christian Missions

President McKinley on Missions

Missionary Sermon

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arreage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

A New Book on a most important & timely subjects

“Our Plea for Union And The Present Crisis”

By Professor
Herbert L. Willett

A HISTORIC review of the religious position and the present opportunities and perils of the Disciples of Christ. A series of editorial articles from the pen of Dr. Willett, which appeared recently in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY, dealing with the subject of Christian Unity, called forth so many expressions of appreciation and demands for their appearance in more permanent form that The Christian Century Company has secured their thorough revision and enlargement by Dr. Willett and now presents them under the above title, in the form for which so strong a demand has been made.

The following table of contents will give an idea of the scope and motive of the book.

Introduction—The Task of the New Century.

1. Are the Disciples a Denomination?
2. Have we the Sect Spirit?
3. Do the Disciples Desire Christian Union?
4. Do We Wish Apostolic Christianity Restored?
5. What do We More than Others?
6. What Constitutes a Sectarian Attitude?
7. A Historic Instance.
8. The Two Paths.
9. Denominational Sentiment.
10. Apostolic Christianity—The Sources.
11. Apostolic Christianity—The Doctrine.
12. Apostolic Christianity—The Ordinances.
13. Apostolic Christianity—The Spirit.
14. The Form of Christian Union.
15. The Church of the Future.
16. Christian Unity—An Appeal.

Dr. Willett needs no introduction to our readers. Every Disciple is familiar with his name and the prominence of his work. He is not only a leader amongst our own people, but is generally recognized as one of the best known and most popular Biblical lecturers on the American platform. The fact that he is the author of Our Plea for Union and The Present Crisis is ample assurance of its surpassing interest and value.

This book ought to be read by every Disciple. No one can afford to be without it. It is handsomely bound in cloth and retails for 75 cents.

Attractive Premium Offers

It is the desire of The Christian Century Company to place Our Plea for Union and The Present Crisis in every home in the brotherhood and in order to place it within easy reach of all the following exceedingly liberal offers will be made for a limited time:

1st. For two new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY for one year at the regular rate, one copy of Our Plea for Union and The Present Crisis will be sent postpaid.

2nd. We will send one copy of Our Plea for Union and The Present Crisis and THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY for one year (either old or new subscription) for $1.75. The regular price of the two is $2.25.

The Christian Century Company, Chicago, Ill.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago
Indianapolis
Cincinnati
Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake
and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

CHURCH BELLS SWEET TONED, FAR SOUNDING, DURABLE. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY, NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN. CATALOGUE FREE.

OLYMYER CHURCH BELLS UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

25c. THE LADIES' FRIEND Hopkins' Bleaching Gloves

Made from the Best Glove-Kid in Black, Wine, Tan, and Chocolate. Just the thing for Housecleaning, Gardening, Driving, Wheeling, Outing, Golf, etc. Sizes, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Write for terms to agents.

Hopkins Glove Co., B Apollo, Cincinnati, O.

RHEUMATISM...

Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies.

The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, drawn cords, and hardened muscles. If your druggist has not these remedies in stock, do not take anything else. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., October 10, 1901.

Number 21.

EDITORIAL

Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, some time, we'll understand.

We'll catch the broken thread again,
And finish what we here began;
Heav'n will mysteries explain,
And then, ah, then, we'll understand.

We'll know why clouds instead of sun
Were over many a cherished plan;
Why song has ceased when scarce begun;
'Tis there, some time, we'll understand.

Why what we longed for most of all,
Eludes so oft, our eager hand;
Why hopes are crushed and castles fall,
Up there, some time, we'll understand.

God knows the way, he holds the key.
He guides us with unerring hand.
Some time with tearless eyes we'll see;
Yes, there, up there, we'll understand.

WHY SHOULD OUR CHURCHES SUPPORT FOREIGN MISSIONS?

BECAUSE (1) Foreign Missions are embraced in the scope of the Master's unrepealed commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation." (Mark xvi: 15. See also Matt. xxviii: 19, 20.) This reason is all-inclusive. It is also all-conclusive. The command of the Master lays upon the Church a divine imperative which she dare not disobey. (1) She is summoned to action. She is to "Go"—to keep in motion; to maintain "the strenuous mood"; to overcome the natural tendency to inertia by plunging the spurs into the side of her flagging resolution—keeping herself moving in the path of obedience. (2) With unabated urgency she is summoned to aggressive action. Without hesitating or questioning she is to go forth at the word of her divine Captain to subjugate a rebel world to his rightful sway. It is not enough for her to "hold the fort." She must storm the fort, and keep on storming it until it capitulates. (3) Her evangelistic activities are to be world-wide in their sweep. She is to go "into all the world," putting no geographical limit upon her sympathies and activities, leaving no corner of the world untouched by her saving ministries. Her "field is the world." Her mission like the Master's is wide as humanity. She is to disciple "the nations," bringing them into avowed discipleship by baptism, and instructing them in all the things which Christ has commanded. (4) In this work of world-wide evangelization she is to depend upon the all-sufficient grace of her divine Leader who has promised to be with her "all the days."

With such clear and explicit instruction before her, with such efficient help within her reach, she will be recreant to her supreme duty if she does not with unflagging zeal and ever-enlarging wisdom address herself to the work of bringing to every soul the Gospel of salvation. In her manifold ministries to a needy world this work stands first. As the work which lay most heavily on the Savior's heart at the hour of his departure from the earth; as the work which he has specially and distinctly committed into the hands of his Church, it is the work upon which all the converging lines of her activity ought to center.

2. Because the world needs the Gospel. Whether we look upon this world as a sunken world that needs to be raised, or as a lost world that must be saved, its case is utterly helpless and hopeless apart from the intervention of a higher power. It needs a deliverer.

Now, the distinguishing glory of Christianity is that it alone of all religions of the world provides a Savior for the sinful. A superficial study of comparative religions produces the impression that all religions are very much alike, and that Christianity merely brings out with greater clearness the ethical teaching common to all religions. A deeper study brings into view one important point of difference, namely, that Christianity alone has an evangel of hope for the fallen and the lost. To disabled man it promises enabling power. The Spartan prince who tried to make a corpse stand upright at a state function, and gave up the attempt, saying, "It needs something within," described man's case. He needs something within. Not only does he need to have the guilty past forgiven, he needs also power within to enable him to stand upright and to walk firmly in the path of righteousness.

The reason given by Paul for his eagerness to proclaim to the people of Rome the Gospel with which he was intrusted was, "for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." It is divine power, and hence can never lose its efficacy; it is divine power unto salvation, and hence fits into man's need as a sinner. In it is lodged sufficiency of moral power to save the world. It has power to vanquish sin; power to save man from his own undoing; power to save him to God and to righteousness; power to save him for the noble ends for which his life was given. The desire to preach to sinful men the good news of deliverance through Christ is the deepest missionary motive.

Where there is decay of faith in missions it will generally be found to have its root in the decay of faith in the saving power of the Gospel. Times of Gospel faith have always been times of missionary enterprise. When the Church has ceased to be evangelical it has ceased to be evangelistic. The measure of its missionary power is always determined by the firmness of its grip upon the living verities which form the core of evangelical faith.

3. Because the movement of the Holy Spirit in the Church is towards a world-wide evangelization. When upon the day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit was poured out upon all flesh, there was born within the heart of the Church a burning enthusiasm to carry the Gospel to earth's remotest bounds. Since then there have come times of reaction when the spirit of conquest has burned low, but never has it been altogether quenched. Every revival of religion has been a revival of the original missionary impulse.

Indeed, the missionary spirit is but another name for Christian spirit. "The spirit of missions," says David Livingstone, "is the spirit of Christ, our Master; the very genius of true religion." If any church has not the self-denying spirit of Christ—it is none of his. A church which expends all its effort upon itself is not a true church of Christ. The Church of Christ is a ministering body. It does not live for itself alone. It is an instrumentality rather than an end. It exists for the kingdom. When the Holy Spirit has his way with a church he invariably leads it to consecrate its energy to the world's uplifting. The work for which the Master trained the Twelve is the work for which the Holy Spirit is training the whole Church. Upon the Church he depends for the establishing of the kingdom of Christ on the earth. For the Church to fail of mission is for the Spirit to fail of his purpose. With strong insistence he is ever calling upon the Church to gird herself to aggressive work. The voice that calls in every opportunity for advance is his; the demands which the hour is making are the demands which he is making. Any church which remains inactive resists his pleading.

4. Because of the evident marks of divine favor upon the work. Nowhere has the work of the Church been more richly blessed; nowhere have brighter triumphs of the Gospel been witnessed, than in foreign fields. A favorable vantage ground has been secured. The material and spiritual capital put into the work have brought back good returns. For the Church to draw back now would be to render nugatory all her toils and to cast despite upon her Lord, in whose name the work was wrought.

A brilliant Oxford student was speaking of giving himself to missionary labor in Africa when his tutor remonstrated, saying, "It is madness; you will die in a year or two." The brave young fellow who did die after being on the field only a year, answered, "It is with the African missions as it is with building a great bridge, you know how many stones have to be buried in the earth, all unseen, to be a foundation for the bridge. If Christ wants me to be one of these unseen stones lying in an African grave I am content, certain as I am that the final result will be a Christian Africa." Because of the foundation work already done at such costly sacrifice there must be no relaxing of effort. The Church must go on with the work so heroically begun. It must be her meat and drink to do the will of him whose representative she is, and "to finish his work." Undeterred by the difficulties in the way she must not fail nor be discouraged till her Lord Immanuel has "set judgment in the earth, and the isles wait for his law."

"Here's a work of God undone,
Here's the kingdom of his Son,
With its triumph just begun;
Push it through."

THOUGHTS ON MISSIONS.

THE Church requires to engage in missionary work for her own enrichment and enlargement. There is an Arab proverb to the effect that the water poured on the roots of the cocoanut tree comes back sweetened in the milk of the cocoanut which falls from the top. All altruistic labor has a reflex influence for good. We gain by losing; we live by giving; we grow by serving. "There is that scattereth and increaseth yet more, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth only to want." It is with the Church as with the individual Christian. To attain fulness of life a hold must be taken upon outside interests. To save her life the Church must lose it in the life of the world.

In another way missionary work reacts for good. Active participation in missionary work tends, as nothing else does, to the promotion of unity and harmony. When the stream of Christian thought and activity is turned into profitable channels, attention is drawn away from decisive questions. Never does the Church enjoy greater prosperity and peace within her own borders than when she throws herself most ardently into missionary work.

Missionary work calls for the highest expression of disinterested benevolence. The money given for the support of the local church may be given from motives of self-interest; the bulk of the money given for missions, home or foreign, must, from the very nature of the case, be given from disinterested motives. Those who give for the spiritual enlightenment of their brothers and sisters in distant places can hope for nothing again in the way of personal advantage.

As affording an outlet for the sacrificial spirit; as supplying a check upon the present-day drift towards materialism, the value of missionary work to the Church can hardly be over-estimated. The call to the sacrificial life which comes from mission fields is on which the Church cannot afford to miss. Without such calls she would die of the dry rot of selfishness.

The evidential value of missions can hardly be overemphasized. By this is meant their value as affording the early Fathers of the Church were wont to lay at the feet of kings their eloquently written apologies for Christianity. The most powerful apologetic which the Church of today can furnish is found in the fruits of Christian missions. As the result of missionary labors lives have been transformed; nations have been born in a day; albeit, they have taken centuries to reach maturity. Results have been attained which are out of all proportion to the means expended, and evidence of the supernatural power of Christianity, which can be satisfactorily explained only upon the hypothesis that they have been wrought of God.

Not less valuable is the lofty ideal of heroism and self-abnegation furnished by the missionary workers themselves. There are many missionaries who like Henry Martyn desire "to burn out for God"; and lay themselves without ostentation upon the altar of consecration to be consumed as willing sacrifices in the service of their fellowmen. But let us not forget that the life of the missionary plodder no less than the blood of the missionary martyr is the seed of the Church.

The sociological value of mission work has too often been lost sight of. The modern settlement idea is simply the application of foreign mission methods to home mission work. Foreign missions have always given strong emphasis to the world-side of religion. The mission station is an oasis in the desert of social life, the nucleus of a new social order. From it go forth humanizing, moralizing, and civilizing influences, which entitle it to the sympathies and support of every lover of his race. Its work, which is exceedingly broad, embraces the whole range of human interests. The schools, colleges, and hospitals which it establishes and maintains, and above all the spiritual forces which it sets in operation, help to create a new society.

Never was the work in missionary fields more auspicious; never did the command, "Speak unto the children of God that they go forward," ring out with greater urgency. The lands of darkness that are stretching out their hands imploringly to God, are lifting up to Christian nations the importunate cry, "Come over and help us." We are entering upon a new era of expansion. We are waiting with serene optimism for the establishment of a new imperialism of righteousness and love. We hail the enthronement of the thorn-crowned King, exclaiming with Milton, "Come forth out of thy royal chambers, O Prince of all the kings of the earth; put on the visible robes of thy imperial majesty; take up that unlimited scepter which thy Almighty Father hath bequeathed thee; for now the voice of thy bride calls thee; and all creatures sigh to be renewed."

How to secure the federation of forces within the Church in support of its missionary work is one of the great problems before the Church today. This problem is sometimes put in this concrete form: "How can we secure an offering from every church, and from every member in every church?" Before reaching this ideal we have still a long way to travel. There is no doubt that in the past altogether too much use has been made of artificial methods in raising money for missionary purposes. The appeal has too often been made to surface motives; we have not always dug down to the ever-flowing springs; we have not done enough sub-soil ploughing; we have been satisfied with temporary returns. What is needed is a more direct and constant appeal to what Dr. Storrs called "the permanent motives in missions." We must depend less upon rallies and more upon the cultivation of the missionary spirit; less upon fervid appeals and more upon the development of a missionary conscience. "A campaign of education" may do to begin with, but it must be followed by a thorough-going system of education begun in the Christian home; continued in the Sunday school, and carried out in the church under the leadership of the pastor. And along with instruction must go a deepened sense of stewardship. Christians must be trained to give from principle rather than from impulse and to give proportionately, systematically, and in the fear of the Lord.

Mission work affords a broad ground upon which churches can unite in the work of the world's redemption. Any church standing alone can do but little in this great work. Only by the union of forces in well-equipped organization can separate churches make their influence felt. Missionary Boards are simply the distributing agencies of the church, the reservoirs into which the life of the church is to be poured that it may flow out into the desert places of the earth. The Missionary Boards are simply the church at work. The church created them and the church must sustain them. They can do nothing more than what the church enables them to do.

THE HERO OF THE HEBRIDES.

BY THE VISITOR.

It is only a few weeks since a great meeting was held in one of the largest halls in London to bid farewell—probably for the last time—to one of the most remarkable men of this generation—John G. Paton, the missionary to the New Hebrides.

Probably no work of missionary annals has been so widely read as the autobiography of this hero of the South Seas. Published in 1889, its sale was enormous, and its influence was far reaching not only in awakening interest in Mr. Paton's own work, but in all missionary enterprises, wheresoever located. The interest attaching to this particular narrative lay in the peculiar hazards accepted by the company of which the most prominent was this man. In 1858 and the following year seven missionaries were placed on the island of Tanna, in the New Hebrides, where already the work had been begun. This group of islands, about thirty in number, lies along a line running southeast and northwest over some four hundred miles of the Pacific ocean, two hundred miles southeast of the Solomon group, two hundred miles northeast of New Caledonia, four hundred miles west of the Fiji islands, a thousand north from Auckland, and fourteen hundred northeast of Sydney, Australia. In 1839 John Williams and J. Harris of the London Missionary Society had landed on the island of Erromanga to begin mission work, but both were murdered by the natives, who feasted on their bodies. In 1843 Drs. Turner and Nisbet were settled on Tanna, but after six months they were fortunate to be able to escape on a passing ship. Later on native teachers from Samoa and Raratonga were frequently located on the group, but they were cut down either by the hand of the natives or by sickness in the unhealthy climate. In 1848 Dr. John Geddie, in many regards the father of missionary labor in these islands, arrived on Aneityum, and in 1852 he was joined by Dr. John Inglis. By their labors 3,500 cannibals on that island were converted and the Bible, with other books, was translated and put through the press. In 1857 Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Gordon were placed on Erromanga, already marked by the martyr blood of Williams and his friend. After many labors and successes, they, too, met death at the hands of the savage inhabitants, and a brother, the Rev. J. D. Gordon, going out later, to convert if possible the murderers, met the same fate, but not until eight years of seed-sowing. This was in 1872.

Meantime the Patons, husband and wife, had begun their work on Tanna. The story of the forty years and more of missionary labors reads like a romance, though few works of fiction could so allure the reader as do the pages of the autobiography, with their simple record of facts. Mr. Paton writes of the conditions then and the results of the work:

I went to New Hebrides in 1858, he says, when the entire population of the islands were cannibals. No white men were there then. The London Missionary Society had tried to Christianize the islands as early as 1839, but the famous John Williams and Mr. Harris, who were sent to the island of Erromanga, were murdered, cooked and eaten, and the native teachers either died from fever and ague or were killed and eaten. Nothing more was attempted until our society, the Presbyterian Missionary Society of Victoria, Australia, took up the work. There were 150,000 people on the islands then, all in the lowest depths of barbarism. Every widow was strangled to death the moment her husband died that she might continue to be his slave. Infanticide was common, and children destroyed their parents when the latter became sick or aged. Neighboring tribes were continually at war, and the dead afforded feasts to the victors, as did the shipwrecked sailors and venturesome traders. Within fifteen years after the first mission was planted on the island of Aneityum the whole population of the island, then over 3,500, had been led to embrace Christianity. Heathen practices were abolished, churches and schools were built, family worship was established morning and evening and God's blessing was asked upon meals.

But these results were not accomplished without encountering dangers which are sufficiently harrowing in their narration to cause one to marvel that their reality could be survived. Not infrequently the mission was menaced by hostile natives, against whose attacks the courage of the missionaries and even the aid of the native converts seemed impotent. The modest buildings reared at so much cost of labor and sacrifice were more than once destroyed. Mr. Paton recalls one of these times of terror. Stirred up by a white trader, who feared and hated the missionaries for their influence, the natives came to attack the mission.

"A chief, in apparent friendliness, called me to the window and as soon as I appeared he hurled a tomahawk at my head. I pointed a revolver at him, whereat the savages all threw themselves on the ground and made no more hostile moves. They went away, however, with threats to return the next day and kill us. The next morning a chief stationed on the beach just beyond the reach of my pistol blew a great conch shell whistle, and almost immediately a horde of savages, all armed with clubs, tomahawks and spears rushed down the hill towards the beach. Some headed for the mission house and some for the house of a chief who was friendly to us. I saw that ordinary methods of defense were useless and left the mission house to go out and face the savages. One sprang from behind a bread-fruit tree and lifted his tomahawk to hurl at my head. I lifted my hand and cried: 'If you strike me, my Jehovah, God, will punish you! He protects us and will punish you. He is here now to defend me!' The savage slunk away.

"I immediately took my wife and the little party of teachers who were at the mission house and hastened down to the village, which was inhabited almost exclusively by converted natives. We found the villagers in a frenzy of terror. I enjoined them to fell trees and throw up breastworks, which would help us to protect ourselves against an attack. They worked vigorously at this for a time, and then fear overwhelmed them. They threw their tools and even their weapons away and cast themselves on the ground. By this time the savages had completed the looting of the mission house and were gathered about 300 yards away.

"Having in mind my success in awing them a few minutes before, and knowing that, with our native friends so paralyzed by fright we could make no human defense, I went out again to meet the savages, taking a friendly chief along with me. We were soon surrounded, but the savages, while very threatening, hesitated to kill us. The chief and I stood with our backs against a tree, parleying with the savages, and all the while they were urging each other to kill us. Every moment we expected some one, bolder than the rest, to hurl a tomahawk which would be the signal for our immediate slaughter, and we could almost smell our own flesh roasting over the coals of a fire that was already burning. When we could stand the suspense no longer we turned and fled. Instantly a hundred tomahawks and 'killing stones' were hurled at us. The chief was hit, but I escaped injury. For some inexplicable reason the savages did not pursue me, nor did they attack the village again."

In 1892 Mr. Paton made a tour of the world in the interest of the mission in the New Hebrides, and more particularly to secure international agreement to forbid the sale of intoxicants and firearms to the natives of these islands, a traffic carried on extensively by traders, to the demoralization of the native people. The story of this journey is told in the third volume of Mr. Paton's autobiography, and while less thrilling as dealing with work in civilized and not in savage lands, it is no less interesting as revealing the character of the man who is justly known as "the Apostle of the South Seas." His travels across the Pacific to San Francisco, then to Chicago and on to Toronto, New York and Washington are told in a graphic style, which reveals fully the stern adherence to the ideals of what a Christian should be. He would not ride on street cars, railroad trains or omnibuses on Sundays, and often walked many miles to fill his many appointments. He refused to visit the World's Fair in Chicago, though most anxious to do so, for the reason that it had opened its gates on the Lord's Day. It is a satisfaction to remember that this experiment of the officials was a failure, and that the attempt to keep it open in spite of public sentiment was given up.

At Washington Mr. Paton secured favorable action by the government on the subject of his mission, but this was rendered abortive by the refusal of the other powers, notably France, to enter the alliance against the vicious trade in the colonies. From this country the missionary went to England, where a series of almost unparalleled triumphs awaited him, through all of which he appears to have thought only of his work, and not of himself. His return to Australia and the islands after an absence of more than two years, was the occasion of rich gifts for the work, including funds for the mission ship "Day Spring."

It is a tonic to read such a book. It reminds the average man of the self-centered and selfish life he leads, and is likely to kindle in his heart some desire to share in those marvelous enterprises of missions which are today slowly transforming the world, and bringing surely to pass the accomplishment of the universal prayer, "Thy Kingdom come."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Sunday Newspaper.

The Sunday newspaper is very generally accepted in this country as a permanent institution. It is not so in other countries. The Belgian government is preparing a bill to prevent the publication of Sunday newspapers. Lively opposition to it is threatened and exciting debates in the national assembly are anticipated.

Fresh Outbreak of Persecution in Armenia.

The reports of the massacre of Armenian Christians by the Turks have been confirmed. There are evidently dark days ahead for the poor Armenians. The Pan-Islam party is active. The fire of persecution which has broken out threatens to become a universal conflagration. Unless the powers interfere in a prompt and positive manner the heart-sickening carnage of former years is sure to be repeated. International jealousy is the main cause of inaction. It is high time that the powers recognized their responsibility and duty, and delivered themselves from bloodguiltiness in this matter.

Abduction of a Missionary.

The abduction of Miss Ellen M. Stone, one of the missionaries of the American Board, by Bulgarian brigands adds another chapter to the romance of missions. Miss Stone has been held in captivity since Sept. 30; and the sum of $121,250 has been demanded for her ransom. The capture was made while Miss Stone and Mrs. Tsilka, the wife of an Albanian preacher, were traveling with friends from Bansko to Djumao. There were fifteen to eighteen in the party. The bandits confronted them in a narrow valley, surrounded them and compelled them to wade a river and ascend a wooded mountain side for about an hour. There appeared to be about forty brigands dressed like Turks, but speaking good Bulgarian. Action has been taken by the American Board looking to Miss Stone's liberation.

Lynching and Anarchy.

Booker T. Washington of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute has given out a statement in reference to the assassination of President McKinley, in which he says:

In all sincerity, I want to ask, Is Czolgosz alone guilty? Has not the entire nation had a part in this greatest crime of the century? What is anarchy but a defiance of law, and has not the nation reaped what it has been sowing? According to records 2,516 persons have been lynched in the United States during the last sixteen years. There are or have been engaged in this anarchy of lynching nearly 125,800 persons. To check the present tendency it seems to me there are two duties that face us:

First, for all classes to unite in an earnest effort to create such a public sentiment as will make crime disappear, and especially is it needful that we see that there is no idle, dissolute, purposeless class permitted in our midst.

Second, for all to unite in a brave effort to bring criminals to justice, and where a supposed criminal is found to see that he has a fair, patient, legal trial.

The Conscience Fund.

An unusually large conscience contribution, amounting to $6,500, was received at the Treasury Department recently in an envelope postmarked New York, with a note explaining that it was made to cover a shortage in customs duties of several years' standing. Secretary Gage expressed gratification at this evidence of a desire to make good former evasions of the law, "There are others," said he, "who would no doubt find it morally healthful to follow this contributor's example. A friend of mine recently landed from a trip abroad. 'I paid a thousand dollars duties on my goods,' he said. 'I never paid so much before. This time it was an "honest count" with me. It cost money, but I feel a good deal more respectable.'"

Apropos to the above the story is told of a man who, having cheated the Inland Revenue, sent back part of the money with the accompanying note: "I send you the enclosed because my conscience has been gnawing. If it gnaws any worse, I will send the balance."

Professor Harnack on the Fundamentals of Christianity.

No person is doing more to freshen the religious thought of the present day than Professor Harnack of Berlin. He is filled with a passionate purpose to strip Christianity of all its traditional accretions, and to reduce it to its primitive and essential elements. On the iconoclastic side of his work he has been pushing things too far to suit some of the German theologians. A loud protest has been raised, and has found voice in the following resolution offered by Dr. Stocker to the Berlin Pastor's Conference, and passed without a dissenting vote.

"The Pastors' Conference does not wish to ignore the intention of Professor Harnack in his lectures on 'The Fundamentals of Christianity' to bring again the blessings of Christianity near to our people so estranged from it. But they must give voice to their conviction that the contents of these lectures, by falling back to the superficial point of view of obsolete rationalism, and by thrusting aside the essentials of Christianity, proven by both Scripture and history, satisfy neither the demands of history, the true Gospel, nor the needs of humanity. They confess with reformers and believers of all ages, who spoke in the power of the Holy Ghost, that Christ, the Son of God, inseparable from the Gospel in the Word of God, must continue to be the very heart of Christianity, and they testify 'I believe in Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, our Lord.'"

The Methodist Ecumenical Conference.

Prominent Methodists from all over the world gathered recently in Wesley Chapel, City road, London, to attend the ecumenical conference. The meeting continued twelve days, and resulted in great good to the church. There were 500 delegates—200 representing British Methodism and affiliated conferences and mission fields, and 300 representing Methodist conferences in the United States and Canada and their foreign work. Among the weighty questions which came up for discussion were the following: Is Methodism retaining its spiritual vitality? Biblical criticism and the Christian faith; Christianity and modern unbelief; Principles of Protestantism versus modern Sacerdotalism; The neglect of family religion and worship; Perils of increasing wealth and luxury. The question of the influence of Methodism in the promotion of international peace very naturally suggested the Boer war. On this subject feeling ran high, and although there was a sharply defined division of sentiment, the conviction seemed to prevail that the time for arbitration had come. But the most burning question was that of Temperance. Upon this question the American delegates took more advanced ground than their British brethren. The interest of the conference reached its climax in the three last themes which were, How to Mobilize the Whole Church; The Work before us; and, Our resources for the Work. This great gathering furnished abundant evidence that Methodism is not a spent force, but is still one of the more vital and aggressive agencies at work for the spread of the kingdom.

Millenary of the Death of Alfred the Great.

The recent celebration of the thousandth anniversary of the death of England's greatest monarch has revived popular interest in the remarkable career of this ideal ruler, who has been characterized as "the most perfect character in history." His life, from its beginning to its close, was a continuous romance. With some of its more or less legendary incidents every school boy is familiar. His early life was one of almost ceaseless warfare with the Danes, the hereditary enemies of his people. After vanquishing them in many a well-fought fight he enjoyed years of peace which were devoted to the development of his country. He reconstructed his army and navy, built fortresses, encouraged manufacture, promoted education. He is said to have founded the University of Oxford, although that has been questioned. But what is not so well known is that he was a man of letters, and made valuable contributions to the literature of his time. He translated Esop's Fables, the Psalms of David and other writings of value for the benefit of his people. He also wrote upon a variety of subjects. The following are a few quotations from Alfred's pen. Paraphrasing the words of Boethius, he wrote:

"If there be any good in nobility (noble birth) I think it is this alone—that a necessity seems to be imposed on the noble that they should not degenerate from the virtue of their ancestors.

"But all are equally noble, if you will think of your beginning. Creation and the Creator, and afterwards of your own nativity; yet the right nobility is in the mind. Every man that is at all subjected to his vices forsakes his Creator, and his first creation, and his nobility; and thence becomes more ignoble than if he were not nobly born.

"Our Creator is beyond any doubt and he is also the governor of heaven and earth, and all creatures, visible and invisible. This is God Almighty.

"This blessedness is then God. He is the beginning and the end of every good and he is the highest happiness.

"Wisdom is the highest virtue, and he hath in him four other virtues—prudence, moderation, courage and righteousness.

"Therefore I direct that you do, as I believe that you will, that you who have leisure for the things of the world, as often as you can, impart that wisdom which God has given you, whenever you can impart it."

"Some day, we venture to predict, a man will be able to go to sleep in Chicago and wake up in New York." "Do you really suppose Chicago will ever get to be as quiet as that?" faltered the Chicago man, in evident concern.

CHICAGO NOTES.

It is proposed to make a new public park and name it after President McKinley. The suggestion is a good one. We have already a Lincoln park, and a Garfield park. It is altogether appropriate that another park should be named after our third martyred President.

The Poles of the city, who feel deeply the disgrace of having their nationality responsible for the assassination of the President, are petitioning the Board of Education to have the next public high school named the McKinley High School. They declare their intention of urging the plan until it is adopted.

The Chief of Police was somewhat surprised the other day by having a request presented to him for permission to conduct bull-fights in the Coliseum. The plan was to bring to Chicago the bulls which have been exhibited in fights in Buffalo, at the Pan-American Exposition. The request was promptly refused. We have enough to carry already without having that relic of barbarism foisted upon us.

"The Church of the Silent Demand" is the latest outgrowth of our fruitful religious life. In this new church or temple the voice of praise, or prayer, or preaching will never be heard. Silent prayer, praise and aspiration will ascend continually from within its stately walls. Its members, who now number over a hundred, believe in the power and potency of concentrated thought-energy. The temple about to be built will be magnificent and stately and will be copied from one of the famous temples of East India.

In response to an urgent and widespread demand, the officials of the University of Chicago have decided to add "A College of Commerce and Administration" to the curriculum of that institution. This action is in harmony with the present-day tendency to specialized education. The rapid growth of manufacturing and industrial interests has made such a step inevitable. We are living in an industrial age and the kind of education required by multitudes of young men is one which will fit them for a business career.

The Young Women's Christian Association, which has its headquarters at 288 Michigan avenue, is putting special emphasis this year upon the educational department of its work. One of its special features is a class in physical and vocal expression, arranged especially for public school and kindergarten teachers. There will also be a children's class in the gymnasium on Saturdays for boys and girls. With the added improvements in the class rooms, gymnasium and dressing rooms, there is every reason to expect a large increase in attendance.

Mr. Edward A. Kimball, lecturer of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, at a recent meeting in the Third Church of Christ, Scientist, reviewed the principles and work of Christian Science. He claimed for Christian Science the power to abolish sickness and sin. But here is a wonderful thing, Christian Scientists claim the power to abolish sickness and sin, while at the same time they deny the existence of either. That is to say they claim the power to abolish what, according to their philosophy, does not exist.

CONTRIBUTED

IF MEN WERE WISE.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

What might be done if men were wise —
 What glorious deeds, my suffering brother,
 Would they unite
 In love and right,
 And cease their scorn of one another?

Oppression's heart might be imbued
 With kindling drops of loving-kindness;
 And knowledge pour,
 From shore to shore,
 Light on the eyes of mental blindness.

All slavery, warfare, lies, and wrongs,
 All vice and crime might die together;
 And wine and corn,
 To each man born,
 Be free as warmth in summer weather.

The meanest wretch that ever trod,
 The deepest sunk in guilt and sorrow,
 Might stand erect
 In self respect,
 And share the teeming world tomorrow.

What might be done? This might be done,
 And more than this, my suffering brother—
 More than the tongue
 E'er said or sung,
 If men were wise and loved each other.

—Selected.

A WHOLESOME MOVEMENT IN MODERN MISSIONS.

SYDNEY STRONG, D. D.

VITAL problem with an advancing army is how to maintain an adequate base of supplies. The same problem confronts every missionary agency. It is an advancing force, and if it is to be a conquering force, it must preserve a vital relation with an adequate base of supplies.

The story of every missionary movement reads something like this: a few individuals agree to go, a company of individuals agree, by prayers, sympathy and gifts to stand behind the movement. Thus, every mission resolves into two parties: the missionaries who form the advance line and the church that supports. Where either of these parties fails, the movement begins to weaken and finally to disappear.

How to maintain a proper and adequate relation between these two parties in the missionary movement must therefore ever be a vital problem.

The best relation is a personal and therefore spiritual one. We are constantly learning and constantly forgetting that there can be no real religion without a person. The God of religion is a Person. No religion ever comes to earth save through a person. All religious conquests are made through persons. All support of the missionaries is inadequate, in so far as it is not personal.

The personal relation between the missionary and the church has always been strong when the movement has been strong. Witness the going forth of Paul and Barnabas. They were sent forth by a church of which they were members. The sympathies and prayers of that church followed them. To this church they reported when they returned. The beginning of foreign missions in America was of a like kind. Mills and Judson were set apart by a church in Salem, and went forth supported by personal friends. How to maintain the personal element is of vital importance.

A movement set in some years ago which threatened this personal relation and in proportion has weakened the missionary movement. No one has been to blame, for no one could foresee the great growth of missions. It grew out of conditions almost necessarily appearing in a world-wide organization,—viz., the administration, i. e., the secretaries and Prudential committees have become more and more separated from their missionaries. Personal relations always receive a severe test by separation. In course of time, the management of a Missionary Board, if not carefully watched, will become formal and mechanical. There have not been many warm friends of missions, in all churches, who have declared the "Board to be a mere machine." This is a real danger, and, largely so, because the welfare of the personal relation has been involved.

Of late, however, a wholesome reaction has occurred. It consists in individual churches adopting individual missionaries as their own; the churches, as it were, coming between the Boards and the missionaries, and furnishing that personal element, without which there are no sympathies, no prayers, and, by and by, no money. The supporters thus become interested in a man, who embodies their ideal. They get letters from him; his trials and afflictions enter into their hearts; he spends a part of his furlough in their homes, preaches in their pulpit, becomes "their missionary."

This is the heart of the "Forward movement" in the Congregational and Presbyterian churches in which Mr. Luther D. Wishard has had a large part. It is chiefly a laymen's movement. The various Boards have been a trifle suspicious in reference to it, but realize that the people have a demand for it. The machinery is liable to need readjustment and the personal equation is always liable to be a little frisky; but there is no salvation apart from a person.

We have observed in several churches the workings of the new relation between the churches and the missionaries. There has been an immediate increase in gifts, but, more valuable, there has been increase in interest, sympathy and knowledge in missions, as well as more confidence in the Boards through which the gifts go. We are therefore led to regard the plan of individual churches adopting individual missionaries as the most wholesome movement in missions, in recent years. The introduction of the personal element is bound to revitalize the work.

Oak Park, Ill.

Mrs. Browning, the poetess, once asked a friend whom she admired, "What is the secret of your life? Tell me, because I wish my life to be beautiful like yours," and the answer was, "I have had a friend." True friendship is one of the most valuable of blessings, and when a true friend is found he should be prized.

INDIA LETTER.

GEORGE W. BROWN.

THE rains which are now falling in India seem to be quite general, and farmers are, as usual at this time of the year, busy with their crops. India is essentially an agricultural country, and a failure of crops always means famine. Let us thank God that this year there is promise of abundant rainfall.

The lot of the farmer in India is quite different from that of the American agriculturalist. On looking over some of the broad fields of India, the mind involuntarily expects some stately farm house surrounded with its windmill and outbuildings, such as we are accustomed to at home. But the Indian farm is nothing like this.

Except in a few large cities, all the people live in villages. Sometimes a half dozen houses are grouped together, sometimes fifty, sometimes several hundred. The houses are always small one-storied structures, with low roofs. The material of which they are built varies in different localities, but it is usually of one of two things very common in India, mud or bamboo. Mud walls a foot thick are raised to the proper height, a thatched roof is spread over the top and a door is left just low enough to make one stoop in entering. The cowsheds are about as imposing as the human habitations. Two miles or so away there is another similar village, but no habitations in between. The intervening land is cultivated by the people of the two villages.

Fences, such as we know them, are unknown in India. Fields are nearly always separated, if at all, by a low hedge of a species of thorny acacia—rather by a row of acacia brush, for the bushes are usually cut in the jungle and piled in lines to make the fences. If the crop be rice the fields are further subdivided in irregular-shaped patches from a half acre to several acres in size, by mud walls a foot high, so as to prevent the water from flowing off, in order that a swamp may be formed for the young rice to grow in.

The one agricultural implement of the Hindu is the plow. It consists of point, beam and handle, without share, landside or mouldboard. Frequently the point is tipped with iron; the rest is all wood. Two small weak oxen are yoked to this primitive instrument, and the plowing begins. After going over the field in one direction the farmer plows it again at right angles, his plow scratching little furrows in the soil about eight inches apart. Then he plows the field diagonally in both directions, and then starts to plow it in the same direction as at first. After five or six plowings the field is ready for sowing, and the grain is dropped in the furrow immediately behind the plow so as to be covered by the falling earth.

Efforts have been made to introduce occidental plows, but never with success. It takes several yokes of oxen and several men to manage one. It is a tool their ancestors never used, and they do not care to meddle with it. With such a plow five or six Hindu plowmen and sufficient oxen can plow from one to three acres a week. Then the cost of the plow is such that the Hindu farmer cannot afford to buy it. Probably until they improve in some other ways it is best for the Hindu to stick to his own plow. Were the ground thoroughly plowed there is no doubt that much better crops would be grown. But the soil would soon be exhausted. There is plenty of manure, which might be used for fertilizer, for the people keep a great deal of cattle and buffaloes. But this is all gathered up, even from the pasture fields, and dried in the sun for fuel. So until the farmer learns better perhaps he had better keep on scratching away and raising half crops every year, just as his ancestors always did.

From the time the grain is sown the farmers' troubles begin. Crows—no country on earth has as many crows as India—are at hand to pick up the seed or even to pull the young plants up by the roots. As soon as the grain gets fairly above ground, in many parts of India, deer and wild hogs come upon it for pasture. So the farmer builds a little watch tower in his field, commonly of bamboos, with a place six or eight feet high and eight feet square for him to squat upon. In the middle of the day he can sleep beneath this shelter or cook and eat his food there. In the afternoon he must climb up and be on the lookout for prowling animals. As the crop grows older he must watch it day and night. Birds steal the grain by day and wild pigs by night. Jackals are very fond of some kinds of grain and very expert in getting it. All night long the farmer yells and shouts to drive away these robbers. And human thieves, too, have to be guarded against. By day the farmer wanders through the field, occasionally pulling up a weed or grubbing out a thorn bush.

Of course the grain is cut by hand, with sickles and knives, and then taken to the village to be threshed. Some may be rubbed out by hand, but, as in scriptural time, most of it is trodden out by the ox. Several, sometimes a dozen, of these animals, tied side by side, are driven round and round over the grain until it is threshed, and then men, women and children separate the grain from the chaff by tossing it up in the air on a shovel-shaped instrument about two feet square made of woven bamboo.

It is always a wonder to me that with its imperfect cultivation the land can support as many as it does. Perhaps the explanation is that their standard of living is not so high as ours and they are contented with much less. Surely millions of them are always underfed.

THE IMPORT OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

A. N. HITCHCOCK.

SAINT PAUL once declared that "blindness in part hath happened to Israel." Had he foreseen the attitude of some modern Gentile Christians toward missionary enterprises he might not have thus limited the application of his remark. A man says—"I believe in Christianity but am not interested in missions." Now what is "missions"—Christian missions? Simply the extension of Christianity. As soon as Christianity sets itself to accomplish anything in the world we have missions. The question of place, whether "home" or "foreign," is only a trifle of geography. To ignore the obligation of all Christians to work for the spread of Christianity throughout the world is in effect a denial of the Christian faith itself.

By what surpassing consideration is the mighty enterprise of missions sustained? Its ideal is the establishment of a universal spiritual empire on earth—an ideal never dreamed of by ancient philosopher or military genius. But it was God's plan from the beginning. The very conception of it marks its divinity and discloses its unconquerable energies. The command of the risen Christ whose is the throne of this spiritual empire stands unrecalled. Around that command swing the destinies of our race. No Christian can dispute its authority for an hour.

The centuries have fully verified the seemingly astounding claims of Christianity. Paul faced the dominant world-power of his time unashamed because, as he said, the Gospel is the power of God. There is no getting beyond that. This was an unintentional but remarkable echo of Christ's last words—"All power in heaven and on earth is given unto Me; therefore go into all the world." There has never been any danger to the Church save that of parting company with the power of God. Girded with that power the apostles and their successors with bloodless weapons turned to flight the armies of the aliens. They carried the Gospel to every province of Rome and brought even the empire itself to bow at the feet of him before whose tomb her haughty soldiers had once stood guard. But what could possibly be done with the vast hordes of Northern Europe? Strange to say, while they were strong enough to overturn the empire, they afforded the first example known to history of a conquering people accepting the religion of those whom it had vanquished. Here was something their arms could not overthrow. The Emperor Julian said that our Saxon ancestors were the fiercest of all the tribes which dwelt on the shores of the Western Ocean. Yet among those and kindred people a Christendom was born whose institutions of faith, and culture, and liberty, and humanity have shone around the world.

And we are only in the dawning. The prophets of evil are simply taking snap-shots of passing history. The far-reaching and permanent tendencies of the world are upward because they are in the hand of God. The century just closed surpasses all that went before. For the first time the Bible, with its authoritative Christian records, has gone into nearly all the languages of mankind; great missionary agencies have been organized throughout Christendom; modern appliances for intercommunication have opened almost every land to the Christian forces of occupation; while the actual evangelization of pagan peoples has gone on at a rate never before attained.

I know not what days of storm and cataclysm and judgment may intervene; but this I know that the messengers of him whose right it is shall at last "gather out of his Kingdom all things that offend and them which do iniquity; and then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father."

Chicago.

There is something discouraging in the indifference manifested by so many churches and individuals to the great cause of world-wide evangelism. Professor Christlieb said that "the darkest clouds in the missionary sky are to be found in the atmosphere of the churches at home. The chief hindrance among us to an earnest prosecution of missions lies not in the savage attacks of the hostile world; it lies in those circles which appear friendly." There are churches and there are believers whose prayer should be that they might be delivered from bloodguiltiness.

FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A. McLEAN.

Survey of the Fields.

INDIA.—In India much time was given to famine relief. The missionaries were entrusted with the distribution of funds by the government, by the English Baptist society, by the Christian Herald, and by the brethren in Australia and America. As the end of the famine approached, they gave out seed corn, clothing, money and animals. They sought to help the people to begin life anew. Hundreds of boys were gathered into the orphanages. These are being trained for lives of usefulness and nobleness. The sick were healed. The Gospel was preached in the stations and out-stations and in hundreds of towns and villages in the regions beyond. As a result of the relief given in the time of famine great numbers are inquiring concerning the Gospel. The number added is larger than in any previous year.

China.—During the Boxer excitement the workers in China deemed it prudent to retire to Shanghai or to Japan. In their absence the viceroy of Nankin protected the property. In their enforced absence they were not idle. They preached much to the soldiers and sailors and natives. They translated a number of books into Chinese. They have all been back at work for several months. All departments of work have been resumed. The officials and people are unusually cordial, and the outlook is brighter than ever before.

Japan.—In Japan the work has proceeded without any interruption. There are open doors on all sides. There are more invitations than the workers can accept. Japan is now enjoying a season of revival. Thousands are turning to the Lord. One of the missionaries has spent most of the year in evangelistic work. He has traveled all over the empire. The other members of the mission have preached and taught in their own fields and in the adjacent country.

Africa.—Frank T. Lea and wife have removed from Angola to Bolengi, on the Congo. They are now associated with Dr. and Mrs. Dye. Dr. and Mrs. Edwin A. Layton were sent out early in the year. At Bolengi the Gospel has been preached. Medical work has been carried on among the natives, the state officials, traders and other missionaries. A school has been opened and children have been brought in and taught.

Scandinavia.—The church in Copenhagen has celebrated its silver jubilee. It is now twenty-five years since Dr. Holck began his work in that city. In Sweden work is carried on at two points. "Our Position" has been translated into Swedish and has been instrumental in winning souls. In Norway E. W. Pease reports that Plymouthism has made serious inroads into the churches. Some of the members have been drawn away by it. He is doing all in his power to instruct the members in all that pertains to life and godliness. At the same time he has sought to set in order the things that are wanting.

Turkey.—For some time the work in Turkey has not been satisfactory. One of two courses seems to be open to the society; either to send a number of Americans to take the oversight of the churches and to spend many thousands for the support of the schools, or to withdraw entirely. As there are no men ready to go to Turkey, and as the treasury does not warrant the necessary increase of funds for that field, and as the Turkish field is limited and preoccupied, the executive-committee has decided to recommend that the Foreign society withdraw from that field as soon as it can do so consistently with all the interests and rights at present involved.

Our New Possessions.—In Cuba the Gospel has been preached in English and Spanish. Sunday schools and day schools have been taught. Much work has been done among the American soldiers. The missionaries have devoted much time to the study of the language. Havana is an expensive field. Prices are much higher there than they are in America. Havana is a cosmopolitan city. At the services in the chapel are seen English, Germans, Americans, Swiss, Russians, Italians, Mexicans, Boers, Cubans and Spaniards. A. E. Cory and wife have been busy in Honolulu. In one section of that city a new work has been begun. That station bears the honored name of Lathrop Cooley. It was through his munificence that the work was inaugurated and has been sustained in the Hawaiian Islands. Our missionaries have come in contact with Hawaiians, Portuguese, Chinese, Japanese, Americans and families of mixed blood. Sunday schools and night schools have been taught. Work has been begun in the Philippines. The last report showed that Lathrop Cooley had given $5,000 for that field. Later on a friend of the society offered to give $1,500 a year for five years and $500 for traveling expenses in case a family was sent to Manila without delay. Within a month W. H. Hanna and wife were on their way to that field. Chaplain Hermon P. Williams and wife are under appointment and will leave for Manila within a few days.

The Work of the Missionaries.

The missionaries have made it their chief business to preach the Gospel far and near. They sow beside all waters. In addition to the preaching, 50,000 patients have been treated in the hospitals and dispensaries. Every patient hears the Gospel preached. He receives a Gospel or a tract. He carries back to his own home some of the knowledge that he receives while a patient. The medical work does much to open the hearts and homes of the people. It paves the way for the acceptance of the truth. Thousands of children are taught in the day schools and in the Sunday schools. In these schools many will be trained who will serve in after years as evangelists, teachers, colporteurs and Bible women. The government inspector says that the school in Damoh is the best he has seen in forty years. Many thousands of copies of the Scriptures or portions of the same have been distributed. Some of these have been carried for hundreds of miles. The Word of God is the incorruptible seed of the Kingdom, and only God can foretell what a harvest it will yield in after years.

Buildings and Lands.

In Damoh, India, a bungalow is being built for John G. McGavran and family. This will cost when completed about $2,500. Money has been granted for various school buildings near Damoh. One school building has been erected at Handia, on the Narbada river. Another has been erected near Bilaspur. M. D. Adams reports a chapel built in Bilaspur that cost $5,000. This building was erected with money sent for famine relief, and did not cost the society anything. It is a beautiful building and a great addition to the mission. It is the first church erected in Bilaspur. The government commissioner says it would be an ornament to any place. A home is in course of erection for James Ware at Shanghai, China. This will cost, when completed, about $3,000. A building and lot were bought in Luhoh, China, for $1,500. This will be a home for Frank Garrett and family. A hospital is in course of construction at Lu Cheo fu, China. On this building $1,500 has been paid. The building will cost, when completed, about $5,000. Six hundred dollars was granted to repair the house in Hongo, Tokio, Japan. Land was bought in Tokio upon which the house occupied by Miss Oldham and Miss Rioch stands. For this land $3,000 was paid. Six hundred dollars has been granted to finish the house occupied by R. L. Pruett and family in Osaka, Japan.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY ON MISSIONS.

I'M glad of the opportunity to offer without stint my tribute of praise and respect to the missionary effort which has wrought such wonderful triumphs for civilization. The story of the Christian missions is one of thrilling interest and marvelous results. The services and the sacrifices of the missionaries for their fellow-men constitute one of the most glorious pages of the world's history. The missionary, of whatever church or ecclesiastical body, who devotes his life to the service of the Master and of men, carrying the torch of truth and enlightenment, deserves the gratitude, the support and the homage of mankind. The noble, self-effacing, willing ministers of peace and good-will should be classed with the world's heroes.

They count their labor no sacrifice. "Away with the word in such a view and with such a thought," says David Livingstone: "it is emphatically no sacrifice; say, rather, it is a privilege." They furnish us examples of forbearance, fortitude, of patience and unyielding purpose, and of spirit which triumphs not by the force of might, but by the persuasive majesty of right.

Who can estimate their value to the progress of nations? Their contribution to the onward and upward march of humanity is beyond all calculation. They have inculcated industry and taught the various trades. They have promoted concord and amity, and brought nations and races closer together. They have made men better. They have increased the regard for home; have strengthened the sacred ties of family; have made the community well ordered, and their work has been a potent influence in the development of law and the establishment of government.—At the Ecumenical Conference, 1900.

When Francis Xavier stood before the Walled Kingdom, and felt the power of its adamantine exclusiveness and proud self-sufficiency, he exclaimed, "O rock! rock! when wilt thou open to my Master?" Could that heroic Jesuit of Navarre, whose grave was made at Goa in 1552, after these nearly three hundred and fifty years, see that "rock" opened to his Master, and the whole world now flinging wide the long-shut doors; and then see the comparative idleness and indifference of the Church, so slow to enter and possess the land, he would turn to the Church itself and cry again, "O rock! rock! when wilt thou open to my Master?"—A. T. Pierson, D. D.

A STUDY IN CHARACTER.

HOW JOHN WELLMAN COMMENCED THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

CLARENCE A. VINCENT, D. D.

Chapter iv.—A Life:

IT was the evening of John Wellman's return to the city. After dinner, instead of going out as usual, he remained with his family. At first, when he attempted to play with the children, they were surprised and amazed. Soon they were in an ecstasy of delight because papa was romping with them. Mrs. Wellman said nothing but was in as deep a mystery. When bedtime came the father gathered his family about him. He told them of his father and mother and his early home life. He rehearsed the story of his home-leaving, of his father's parting prayer for him, and of the mother's farewell words. He showed them the Bible with the verse upon the fly-leaf. He confessed his neglect of them and the terrible sin he had committed in living a selfish life. "I cannot tell," said he, "what changes my new purpose will lead me to make, but of this I am determined, my life shall be governed by the Spirit of Christ and the principles of his teachings. I shall try to be a better husband and father to you, and I need so much of your help." He had spoken quietly, but there was something in the tone of his voice that moved even the youngest children to awe. Without another word he opened the little Bible and read: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; looking to thyself, lest thou be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. For if any man thinketh himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. But let each man prove his own work, and then shall he have his glorying in regard of himself alone, and not of his neighbor. For each man shall bear his own burden. But let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things. Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life. And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. So, then, as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men." Closing the book he knelt with his family about him and a scene of his early home was repeated in his own.

The next morning saw him at his office. As he entered, he was greeted respectfully by the men. It was the day when the heads of all departments met for consultation with him. After the work of each department was gone over carefully and suggestions made, Mr. Wellman said: "Gentlemen, there is one other suggestion to which I ask attention. Each one of you is to examine carefully into his own building and to find how the conditions for the men may be improved, especially having in mind the better lighting, ventilating, and heating of the rooms. That is all." They retired without any indications of surprise, though a thunderclap from a clear sky would not have been more startling to them. At the noon-day hour Mr. Wellman walked through the various buildings and noticed the men as they ate their luncheons in the dusty, gloomy workshops. It seemed to suggest a thought to him. He walked out into the open air and examined the arrangement of the buildings. That night he spoke to his wife of his new ideas. He would erect a building in which the men could eat their dinners in comfort and he would furnish it with the best papers and magazines. Mrs. Wellman expressed her delight in his plan and made some important suggestions. She remembered reading that somewhere in Ohio there was something similar, and that in addition there was a large auditorium for concerts and lectures and other gatherings. "A capital idea," was the way Mr. Wellman gave his judgment of his wife's suggestion.

In the morning Mr. Wellman sent for an architect and went over the matter with him. It was decided that plans should be drawn at once and the building pushed to completion. The purpose of the building was to be kept secret until its opening. As the weeks passed by Mr. Wellman did not rest. He was still the same energetic, far-seeing business man of former years, but a larger thought controlled him. The improvements in the work rooms were made. A room for a library had been added to the architect's plans for the new building.

Early in the year a mechanic was taken ill and Mr. Wellman went with him in his own carriage to his home. He was struck with the unsanitary and unkept condition of the house and surroundings. He learned that most of these unhealthy, half-tumbled-down hovels were inhabited by his men. He told his family that evening of what he had seen. As they knelt in worship he prayed for his men and their families. He dreamed that night that he was living in one of those shanties and awoke with a sense of suffocation. Something must be done: but what amidst the multitude? He would look into the subject carefully.

The mysterious building was at last completed. He invited the men to come one evening to see it opened and hear the purpose for which it was erected. There were three thousand employed in the home mills and the auditorium would seat that number by crowding. Interest ran high and the room was filled when the hour of beginning arrived. Mr. Wellman stepped upon the platform and, advancing, spoke as follows: "It gives me more satisfaction than you yet know to welcome you here. I have had no thought in the past years for anything except business. It matters not what has brought me to see differently, but I have decided to shape my business life according to the spirit and teachings of Christ, as far as I am able to understand and interpret them. This building has been erected with that aim. The rooms below are yours at the noon hour and at night, and your families can enjoy the privileges of the reading room and library. This room is for instructive entertainments and for any meetings which you wish to hold. I know I can trust you. I have decided, also, that, at the close of each business year, I will divide among my men the profits above a fair interest on the money invested. I hope you will invest this added income where it will be safe and will make you more independent when sickness or old age comes on. Any suggestions which any one can make to improve the business will be gladly considered and, if best, will be carried out for the profit of all. I have secured a choir to sing for us and then I ask you all to join in the Lord's prayer, after which you are to inspect the building."

As Mr. Wellman had proceeded with his simple speech the silence had become oppressive, but, as he finished, the applause broke forth, not such as shouts and forgets, but from men in whose eyes were tears. Some were thinking of this bit of love for them who had not known for years what love or interest is. Others were thinking of the added comforts which the divided profits would give sick ones at home, and still others, of the opening this made for them to send their children to school. To many it was the first voice of God that had reached them and the first sermon that had summoned them for years. They passed here and there in the bright, cheerful rooms, enjoying the beauty and talking of Mr. Wellman. In the lunch-room each man was served, Mr. Wellman himself watching that no one was overlooked. It would have melted a heart of stone to hear the words spoken to the millionaire that night. Rough men would respectfully take his hand, men who were noted among their fellows as devoid of sympathy, and with an emotion they could not hide, thank him for his deed. Mrs. Wellman and the children were there and were greeted with that courtesy which by nature is in every man and which can never be entirely lost.

The weeks went by and the influence of the building became more and more evident. Lectures on house-keeping, cooking, the rearing of children, temperance, economy, and many other themes were given. On Sunday a service of song with a sermon by one who would bring the comfort and the summons of the Gospel, was held. A Sunday school and an Endeavor Society were organized and grew rapidly. Prizes were offered to those who could bake the best loaf of bread and to those whose houses were neatest. Mr. Wellman had put up a new row of apartment houses, well ventilated and lighted, which were rented at a moderate price. This compelled others to improve the houses they rented, and the change in the appearance and in the death rate of that part of the city was marked. Mr. Wellman had every case of sickness looked into and often went himself to inquire of the sick and to take a flower or some necessity. One winter's day, as he left the home of Patrick Doyle, to which he had brought coal and food and into which he had gone with cheerful words and gentle manner, Mary, the little sick, half-starved sufferer, asked in awe of her mother, "Is it the Jesus Man?"

A new spirit dominated the whole institution. At once the men took a real interest in the business and the quality of the work was better. An improvement in the habits of the men was noticeable, and the boys in that neighborhood became less impudent and vicious. This community had been considered a dangerous place for persons to visit at night, but in these few months a transformation had come. The problems of poverty, of capital and labor, and of private and public character, seemed to be far on the road to solution by these thorough applications of the Gospel by this man of wealth.

Mr. Wellman did not stop with his men. To his own surprise he was all at once shocked by the corruption of the city. Robberies were committed daily, vice flaunted itself, politics stank, and, from what he could learn, the police were paid to keep silent. Mr. Wellman asked some of the leading business men, teachers and preachers of the city to meet him at the Union League Club. He spoke of the threatening dangers of the city, to which all assented. As the discussion went on he was asked what he thought could be done. He outlined his plan: that a committee of one hundred be organized. He would have the leading men of character—merchants, bankers, financiers, lawyers, laboring men, teachers and preachers on the committee. He would force the city matters out of national politics and see that proper men were nominated for mayor and chief of police, and to fill other places. He would find out the real condition of every department of the city government, and give the information to the public. He would have, whenever necessary, meetings throughout the city for the awakening of public sentiment. A careful study should be made by this committee of the privileges granted to great corporations and the recompense received by the city.

(To be continued.)

PLEASANTRIES.

Bingo: "Bobbie, have you been fighting again with that little boy next door?" Bobbie: "No, sir. It's the same old fight."—Life.

New Office Boy—A man called here to thrash you a few minutes ago. Editor—What did you say to him? Office Boy—I told him I was sorry you weren't in.

"I declare now," said an enthusiastic worshiper, as he came out of church, "that was a finished sermon." "Yes," responded his more cold-blooded companion, "but I thought for a while it would never be."

Little Nina went to church with her grandmother, and for the first time put two pennies in the contribution plate. Leaning over, she whispered very audibly: "That's all right, grandma. I paid for two!"—Junior Herald.

They came to a sidewalk where the ice was well covered with ashes. Said the young lady, in grateful accents: "Thank goodness! there's one Christian on this street." "Yes," said her escort, abstractedly, "Mr. Solomon Isaacstein lives here."—Boston Transcript.

At a club meeting in Washington, William Elroy Curtis introduced Thomas F. Walsh, the great Colorado mine owner, with the following pretended slip of the tongue. He said, "I wish to present to you a 'mining shark'—I beg your pardon, I mean a 'shining mark'."

Johnny, a Sunday school boy, having arrived at his eighth birthday, thought it would be real nice to write a letter to his papa, and this is the way he began: "Dear Papa—Whenever I am tempted to do wrong, I think of you and say: 'Get thee behind me, Satan!'"—Christian Leader.

Last summer, when our admirable Secretary of the Navy was visiting his native village of Buckfield, in Maine, he sent some clothes to the village washer-woman, and driving by the next week in company with a representative to congress stopped to ask for them. The woman turned to her assistant. "May," said she, "is Johnny's washing done yet?"

During General White's sortie from Ladysmith, the British battery mules on the left were stampeded. The captain of one of the batteries, seeing his first sergeant flying by with the first gun, shouted angrily: "Hi, sir! Where are you going?" To which the gunner curtly replied: "Hanged if I know! Ask the mules!"—Collier's Weekly.

OUR PULPIT.

THE INCOMPLETENESS OF CHRIST'S SUFFERINGS.

A Missionary Sermon.

BY W. DOUGLAS MACKENZIE, D. D.

TEXT: Colossians 1:24. "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church."

FILL up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ." The Apostle Paul was fearless enough, oftentimes, to say startling things, fearless enough to put ideas which struck him freshly and forcibly into a very bold form. It is a sign of the intensity of his inward life, the reality of his Christian experience, that he was able so often to utter words which seemed out of line with what people had come to imagine, even then, to be the characteristic lines of his teaching, and to say things which superficially seemed to contradict his main methods of teaching, and yet, in fact, were in deeper alliance therewith. And surely among the startling words the Apostle Paul uttered this would seem to many, perhaps, the most startling of all. Probably no expression, taken in connection with the whole of his teaching, would seem to be more surprising than this, "I fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ."

It will not do, of course, to simply accuse him of an overweening conceit. It will not help us to understand the matter in the very least to imagine that he is trifling with a great and solemn truth. Rather, we must seriously try to understand that which he means by this phrase, that which he was looking at as a fact of his experience and the interpretation which he was able to put upon it.

I. The Unique Redeemer Through Suffering.

We must remember that the Apostle Paul had a very complete faith in the redemptive power of Christ's sufferings. The fundamental fact for the Apostle Paul is that for the whole world of human beings one Being has consented to die and the death of that one Being has had the virtue in it, given to it of God, belonging to it as the death of Christ, the Son of God, to redeem the whole world. The Apostle Paul does not mean to say that his sufferings count along with Christ's as the ground of forgiveness of any man. He cannot possibly mean that; for, indeed, the words are startling just because they seem to contradict his real and permanent belief.

We shall get at the truth by looking a little more closely at the connection of the words. He says, "I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake." He has been suffering in some way because he is a preacher to the Colossians. So, also, in that wonderful chapter, the first chapter of II Corinthians, he indicates that he has been made to suffer greatly for the Corinthians. It is as the Apostle to Corinth, as the Apostle to Colossae, as the Apostle to any other city that he has been made to suffer. It is when he considers the sufferings which he has been compelled to meet when acting as the Apostle of Jesus Christ, that he is bold enough and brave enough to use this startling phrase. Now, evidently, in these afflictions he cannot mean any sufferings that come upon man. He cannot mean the sufferings that came upon him in his bodily history, the diseases that would afflict him as any other son of man; nor can he mean sufferings which he met for his own private discipline, or as a consequence, if he had any, of his own sin. If you were suffering from toothache, if you had a prolonged siege of bodily pain, you would not dare to account this in line with the martyr who suffered at the stake. You would not dare to say you are suffering so as to supply the afflictions of Christ. That would be almost blasphemy. We perceive at once that there is a deep distinction between this private kind of affliction and the kind of suffering or affliction to which the Apostle refers in this passage of his letter. Let us go back a little and build up for ourselves the facts as they present themselves to the mind of Paul that we may, if possible, understand the deeper meaning of his words.

First of all, we must begin with the fact to which I have already referred, that for the Apostle Paul the sufferings of Jesus Christ were the redemptive sufferings through which alone the world has forgiveness; and those sufferings were in themselves and for their purpose absolutely complete. No man can add a pang to what Christ endured. Christ suffered once for all, the just for the unjust, is the doctrine of all the Epistles of the New Testament.

But then, in the next place, observe this, that while the redemptive sufferings of Christ were endured by him as being appointed to him by the Father, they were encountered by him as he met the opposition of the hearts of men. The sufferings of Christ came from and were in connection with the hatred of the world for his spirit. We cannot, however highly we want to think of humanity, however much we want to praise the dignity of our human nature—and there is much to praise in it as God made it—we cannot hide this unpalatable, this almost intolerable fact that when Jesus Christ stood among men, the powers of the earth hated his spirit and put him to death. That, then, is a fact we must remember, that these sufferings of Christ were encountered by him as he manifested his own power and divine spirit in the whole beauty and perfectness of his life; that he awoke the hatred of men and they put him to death.

The Unique Sufferer and the Many Sufferers

And now we come in sight of our explanation. We must remember that the ultimate purpose which Christ had, in coming to the world and in suffering for the world, was to bring all men throughout all generations to God. It was his purpose that this fact, that he had lived and died, should become a force in history; that it should take its place there amongst the great forces which are working in the hearts of men.

Now, as this great new power, the love of God in Jesus Christ, took its place in history, how was it to become effective? It could not become effective simply by being made the law of any nation. It could not become effective by simply being written, although it had been written on tablets of gold, for every shrine on earth. It could not become effective in any formal, in any mechanical fashion whatsoever. This great, new power of God amongst men, this great new force, ultimately the most powerful in human history, was to take its place in the hearts of men, through the witness of those very hearts, by laying hold of this one and that one, by forcing itself into the speech of this one and that one, and through speech getting at the hearts of still others. Imagine these men, whose hearts had been brought into this fellowship of Christ, under this redemptive power of his spirit and his cross, as they go out into history. How did the afflictions of Christ become redemptive in the Roman empire? Through the Apostles. Through whom was it that they took possession of the great strategic points in the Roman empire? As Prof. Raney has recently so splendidly pointed out, it was through the Apostle Paul. He and all these other Apostles themselves became attuned to the spirit of Christ, themselves passed under the spell and power of his cross. That was absolutely essential. There could be no redemption of the world effected unless Paul and the Apostles and the other Christians were subdued by the power of that redemptive love. The cross might be kept up there on Calvary forever and draw the wondering gaze of multitudes. It would not be effective as the redemptive power of God until this had taken place, until the Apostles and other Christians had gone forth as its heralds, upon whose own lives and characters it had made its marks.

Christ's sufferings on the cross must then be supplemented somehow, if they are to take their place in history. There must be more than his teaching. Other men must take that teaching and teach it. There must be more than his sufferings. Other men must go forth to declare those sufferings, and suffer for it. Hence it is very true, is it not, that if Christ suffered and died and rose again and, as we say, the world was redeemed, something more had yet to be done. Those men must go and make it known; and they can never make it known without paying in their own persons another heavy price for it. So the Apostle Paul is bold enough to say, that which is lacking in the afflictions of Christ, that which needs to be added to them in order that they may become effective in the history of the world, I supply; and when he says "I supply" he means every Apostle and every true martyr and every witness who pays the price of his witness bearing.

Can we illustrate that for ourselves? Is it true only of that first generation that that which was lacking of the afflictions of Christ, that is, that which was needed in order to make them effective in history, was to be endured by the disciples? Are we dealing only with antiquity? Or, if the Gospel is of permanent and at last the most potent force of God in human history, is all this true of our own life and the history of men today?

The Sufferers of Today.

This text leapt to my mind in New York at the great missionary conference there. As I sat and listened to those men and women from all over the world I was conscious that two great and distinct kinds of suffering and of sorrow were being presented to my mind. First, there was the sorrow of mankind. There is nothing that intelligent missionaries feel so oppressive when they first go out into the heathen world as the sadness of the heathen world in comparison to the brightness of the Christian homes from which they were drawn. They hear the soft laughter of personal triumph or of sensuousness; but the pure, happy laughter of joyous, happy hearts ringing out into the air is very, very seldom heard in a heathen land. There, what strikes the men and women who go from Christian lands, is the amount of wrongdoing, the bitterness and jealousy and sensuality, the ease with which life can be sacrificed, the ease with which the dead can be laid aside. The whole of society wears for the intelligent scrutiny of the Christian heart an aspect of sadness and joylessness. What is that? It is the permanent sorrow of man's heart as the result of man's sin. It is the permanent joylessness of his life because he is away from God and away from the law of God. It is because the world is away from God and without hope that you have that great, dead, dullness of heathendom. There is one great, all-pervading sorrow of the heathen world; and all the descriptions of the heathen world that missionaries give and that all observers give, whether missionaries or not, where they touch upon the inward life of the people, always brings that before one's mind.

And now I see another sorrow. The missionaries were happy people. The missionaries had often a smile, and the light of love and joy in their hearts shone through their eyes. They knew what it was to say with the Apostle Paul, "I rejoice;" but whenever the Apostle Paul says, "I rejoice," he almost always adds at the same time, "I have suffered." It seems as if it is over against his suffering that he speaks with enthusiasm of his rejoicing and his joy.

Here was a missionary from China who was speaking of the vast Chinese empire. The great sorrow of that empire was on his own heart. Upon his heart had fallen that Chinese darkness, that Chinese dullness and that Chinese despair. Here was another from a more savage land, and as he speaks of it you see that the burden of that degradation has been many years on his heart. There they were, men and women who had once taken their lives in their hands and said, I go out to sorrow the rest of my days for the salvation of the world. They were carrying with them everywhere the sorrow of the Gospel.

My dear friends, when you talk about taking up the cross do you mean anything like that? When a missionary shows the cross of Christ to the heathen or when a native Christian in a community that hates him because he is a Christian, shows the cross of Christ to the heathen, it does not mean merely the superficial fact that they speak of the cross. The cross is in their heart, the cross is deep in their souls, and they are being crucified upon it in reality day by day. They are suffering over again with Christ in order that Christ's own sufferings may have their full power and influence upon that heathen world.

It is not given to us all to suffer in this way. Do not go home and torture yourself because you cannot remember anytime when you yourself suffered actually. As family circles and wider communities become pervaded with the Christian spirit, this kind of suffering in these circles must become less and less. But my brother and my sister, you and I know little of the world, little of our Christ, if we have not time and heart to feel deeply for, to love mightily, those who are yonder bearing the cross, being crucified for Christ. "supplying that which was lacking of his afflictions for the world's sake." You and I have little of the warmth of the divine love, little of the reality of the divine faith, little of sincere consecration to him, unless that sorrow of the Christian Church comes home to us in some measure. Pray for China, where that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ is being made up today. Do not blame God, do not pity them; but pray for China that this may be her glorious day and that this blood may wash away all the impediments and obstacles she has presented to the incoming of the Gospel upon her life. I say, Do not blame God. A great many people very easily become impatient with God; and there are people who, when you ask them about their faith in God, are very quick to say that they cannot believe in God because he allows so much suffering in his world and that even his own best people suffer. As I read the other day, when the martyrs themselves do not complain of God, but rejoice, it is surely gratuitous for the spectator to become a skeptic on their behalf. Wait until a martyr comes to tell you it is not worth while to suffer for Christ's sake. Then you may begin to wonder and doubt and deny. But as long as the martyr world for nineteen hundred years confronts me with its songs of rejoicing and its notes of triumph in the very midst of their afflictions, believe that they have found the secret of it in their hearts and that they both suffer and are glad in the very love of God himself. Amen.

Chicago.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

JOSEPH EXALTED.

Lesson for Oct. 20, 1901. Gen. 41:38-49.

Golden text: Them that honor me I will honor. I Sam. 2:30.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Time and Location.

The time of Joseph's exaltation is computed as B. C. 1716. It was followed by a period of seven years of amazing harvests and that by famine. The place, Egypt.

Pharaoh's Discovery of Joseph.

Joseph now was brought to see, what since has passed into a saying, that there is room at the top of the ladder, however great the crowd at the base. Pharaoh is seeking a man of competency to undertake a work of great national importance. He says to his advisers, "Can we find such an one as this is?" V. 38. Here the signal fitness of the young Hebrew dawns upon his mind and Joseph at once is advanced to the exalted distinction of ruler over Egypt. This was because Joseph was the man best fitted for the place. His school had been an inexpressibly hard one, but, with God a constant companion, he could at no time give up in despair. Had he yielded to the temptation in Potiphar's house it is not probable that he would ever have become ruler over Egypt. All things truly worked together for good, because Joseph loved the Lord. Even the heartless forgetfulness of the chief butler, to whom Joseph appealed for assistance to the end of his release, seems to have been a benefit rather than otherwise. Earlier freedom from prison might have led Joseph to be sent with other slaves to the quarries, or he might have returned to Palestine, and thus been far away when the time came for interpreting Pharaoh's dreams.

V. 38. Wanted—A Great Leader. "And Pharaoh said." Pharaoh accepts Joseph's interpretation of the former's dreams (vs. 1-7) as most fitting. There was that in the young Hebrew that gave Pharaoh great confidence in him. This is shown by the vast work at once undertaken in accordance with Joseph's interpretation of the dreams. * * * "Can we find such an one as this?" It is not to be assumed that Joseph had the remotest idea that he would be thus greatly honored by the favor of God. Ch. 50:20. Even so now, "eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." I Cor. 2:9. * * * "A man in whom the Spirit of God is." We do not know whether Pharaoh believed in the one true God. To-day thousands acknowledge the existence of God who do not regard his will. Joseph triumphed as later Daniel did in the court of Darius. Dan. 6:3. It was because he possessed a divine spirit which animated his mind and which gave him extraordinary capacity for interpretation.

V. 39. Fitness Recognized. "And Pharaoh said unto Joseph." As with the apostles ages later of whom rulers took note that they had been with Jesus, so Pharaoh realizes that this man had been in touch with the divine. Acts 4:13. * * * "For as much as God hath shewed you." It may be that there was no clear distinction in Pharaoh's mind between the worship of God and idols. In later times idolatry became more gross, hence more widely separated from the true religion. Every one may know of the true God, if he will seek for him with the best light he has. John 1:9, Rom. 1:19; 39:1, 2. * * * "None so discreet as thou art." Non-worshippers of God often have made choice of men of godly character for high positions. In America no avowed infidel could be elected President of the United States. True religion imparts true character, and character receives honor. See Golden text.

V. 40. High Appointment. "Over my house." Step by step Joseph was advanced from a Hebrew slave to the keeper first of common prisoners, then of state prisoners, and later to be interpreter of the king's dreams, at last reaching the highest position in Egypt, save that of Pharaoh. His remarkable promotion was celebrated in later ages. We hear the Psalmist sing, "He made him * * * ruler over all his subjects, to bind his princes at his pleasure; and teach his senators wisdom." Ps. 105:21, 22. See also Acts 7:10. * * * "According unto thy word." The mere word of Joseph was to be absolute. Men may be brought to have greater regard for the word of human rulers than to the Word of God. * * * "Only in the throne greater." Pharaoh reserves only this prerogative to himself. Some have assumed that Joseph might only have had a department. Thus did the godly merit of Joseph win the highest confidence of the king.

V. 41. Duties Defined. "See, I have set thee." The language is exultant as if the king himself could rejoice in the promotion, as well he might. In proportion as we are faithful over a few things, God has designed that we shall be made rulers over many things. Matt. 25:21. * * * "Over all the land of Egypt." Bringing him, as it would, into contact first with the grain producers and traders and then with all classes of people; a great trust requiring a high measure of wisdom and executive ability.

V. 42. Tokens of Authority. "Pharaoh took off his ring." This was the king's signet or seal. It is not stated that it was a finger ring; it may have been a larger one worn on the wrist. The seal was a stamp of personal authority equivalent to a modern signature. * * * "Put it on Joseph's hand." It conveyed to Joseph the power of signing for the king. It was an act nearly equivalent to "power of attorney" in America, by which one is authorized to sign documents and transact business for another. * * * "Vestures of fine linen," of costly fabric, said to be worth its weight in gold. Egyptian linen is known to be as fine as 140 threads to the inch. * * * "Gold chain about neck." A badge of high office. To-day in England mayors have jeweled chains as a mark of their office.

V. 43. The Great Procession. "Made him ride in second chariot." A public demonstration now took place, in which the new ruler was given due prominence before the people over whom he was to have authority. * * * "They cried before him, Bow the knee." The heralds that went before him so cried to the populace. * * * "And he made him ruler over all Egypt." In the demonstration public announcement was given that Joseph was to be ruler in the capital and in all the land.

V. 44. Formal Inauguration. "And Pharaoh said." In formal words he now declares the new relation. * * * "I am Pharaoh." As king he indicates his power to appoint Joseph to authority. Pharaoh's will was absolute. What he said was law. * * * "Without thee shall no man lift hand." Joseph's authority likewise was to be absolute and universal.

V. 45. Overcoming Caste. "Called Joseph's name Zaphnath-paaneah." This new name was to effect Joseph's naturalization. The meaning of the name is not settled. * * * "Gave him to wife Asenath, daughter of the priest." This was to enable Joseph to take position among the highest nobles of the land. Pharaoh thus carries out his purpose of overcoming the rigid caste lines which prevailed in Egypt as in India to-day. Those of the priestly caste, the highest in the land, besides being ministers of religion, were the conservators of knowledge, the framers of laws and were physicians and geometricians. As the interpreter of the king's dreams, Joseph had entered into the province of this caste. Pharaoh, therefore, in addition to changing his name, marries him into the priestly line, thus to remove all jealousy towards one so wise, so gracious and indispensable. That Joseph did not compromise his faith in God is shown by his dealings with his brothers, also by his dying words. Ch. 50:24, 25; Heb. 11:22.

V. 46. Duties Begun. "Joseph was thirty years old." His age was seventeen when he became a slave. Ch. 37:2. For thirteen years since he had lived in Egypt. Of this period at least two years had been spent in prison. V. 1. * * * "Stood before Pharaoh." Was admitted into his presence. Joseph, with a mind always bent on doing good, found in his advancement the greatest opportunity of his life. Whenever a person is advanced by Providence to any station in life or fortune, it is that he may do increased good. The more a man receives, the larger his responsibility. Luke 12:48. * * * "Went throughout all the land." As a discreet ruler he personally visits every part of the national domain, to estimate its crop prospects and to arrange for grain storage against the coming dearth. With wonderful grace Joseph had withstood his adversity; how will he now stand the greater trial of prosperity? God, who had enabled him to resist temptation in Potiphar's home, will give him grace to bear the glory of exaltation in humility.

V. 47. Bounteous Crops. "Seven plenteous years." Foreshadowed by seven good years and seven fat cattle in Pharaoh's dreams. Vs. 2-7. To us the years of this life are years of God's bounteous grace. He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap nothing less than life everlasting, but he that neglects the Spirit's bounty shall reap corruption. Gal. 6:8. * * * "Earth brought forth by handfuls." An unusually heavy yield, a handful from a kernel planted.

V. 48. Royal Granaries. "Gathered up the food." Carrying out his suggestion of v. 34 by saving out the fifth of the enormous yields of these years. Whether this was bought at such low prices as would prevail in a year of plenty, or whether it was levied as a government tax, is unknown. * * * "Round about their city." Many local storage places were established; an arrangement that would give better satisfaction. Doubtless the people did some hoarding of grain on their own account. Let us take advantage of the present to provide against eternal future need.

V. 49. Superabundant Stores. "Gathered corn as the sands of the sea." The corn was God's gift. Joseph's forced coming to Egypt was overruled by God to the good of that and other lands. Let us not forget that there are other storehouses which God points out for us. They are those where neither moth nor rust do corrupt, nor thieves break through to steal. Matt. 6:20. * * * "Left numbering." We know from the sculptures how carefully the Egyptian scribes registered the crops of the harvest. But here was a period when, because of the enormous yield, they left off numbering. When we think of all our blessings in Christ under Christian civilization we cannot begin to count their numbers.

We are always in danger of underrating ordinances and means of grace when we have them in abundance. Let us take heed to our own spirit in the use of sacred things. Often as we read the Bible, let us never read it without deep reverence. Often as we hear the name of Christ, let us never forget the one Mediator in whom is life. Even the manna that came down from heaven was at length scorned by Israel, as "light bread." It is an evil day with our souls when Christ is in the midst of us and yet, because of our familiarity with his name, is lightly esteemed.—J. C. Ryle.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

BY PETER AINSLIE.

AR in the past there were two temples built in the city of Rome by Marellus. The first was the temple of Virtue, which served as a passageway to the temple of Honor. What a lesson! Poets sang, orators spoke, but architects were spelling out wholesome lessons in the simplest language to all ages. Carpenters and stone masons were the everyday teachers, and children playing around the doors of the temple were able to read its lessons, and men and women, looking across the hills of Rome to the blazing dome of the temples, were reminded that there is no real honor without virtue. This word is derived from vir and means "strength." It is a manly ornament. We sometimes think that virtue is confined in its meaning to moral conduct, but Ruskin has rightly declared it to be "strength," vital energy in the heart. It is not so much something done but something is. This, then, is the pathway. Real strength, real life, really God in us and we have honor. It is not a concern of the world's honors. They are too cheap and too changeable. The cardinal's cap was sent to Roffensis, but his head fell off the beheading block before the cap ever touched it. Andronicus crowned his admiral in the morning, but took off both crown and head in the evening. These honors are not the honors of my text. Here time and eternity compare. Most people want this world's honors; few will throw away this world for the world to come, yet God calls men to seek for his honors. He directs the pilgrim. He lays down the requirements. He gives the crown. The first step is a call to godly honor. God must be recognized. He must be honored, and here is where virtue is established. Virtue depends upon God, virtue is sustained by God, virtue is the life of God in men. It means honesty, uprightness, fidelity, liberality, a constant recognition of the eternal keeper of us all. "Honor the Lord with thy substance," is the call of Solomon. "Honor the Son," is the call of Jesus. "Honor all," is the call of Paul. We live in days of irreverence. This is against God. We must submit to the ordinances of all in authority. We must recognize the God, who every day gives us life and hope. He is ours. In this recognition we receive his honors. "Them that honor me I will honor." The Lord is faithful and not slack regarding his promises. He is able to do unto the uttermost and he will do.

Our Lord, forgive our lack of reverence. We want to do and we want to be. Bless us for Jesus' sake. Amen.

GENTLE ACCENTS.

A kindly word and a tender tone—
To only God is their virtue unknown;
They can lift from the dust the abject head;
They can turn a foe to a friend instead;
The heart close barred with passion and pride
Will fling at their knock its portal wide;
And the hate that blights, and the scorn that sears,
Will melt in the fountain of childlike tears.
What ice-bound barriers have been broken,
What rivers of love been stirred,
By a single word in kindness spoken,
By only a gentle word.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

A BAD BARGAIN.

Topic—Oct. 20; Ref. Gen. 25: 29-34.

THERE are few stories more interesting as a revelation of character than this story of Esau and Jacob. It has the characteristics of Bible narratives. It is true to human nature as we know it. In ten short sentences we have a perfect picture of the characters of these two Bible boys. And they are just such boys as we can find all about us. They are in our homes. They are still driving bargains, and selling their birthrights for a mess of pottage. What a characteristic history is summed up in this single verse: "And the boys grew; and Esau was a cunning hunter, a man of the fields; and Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents." The picture of these brothers, so different in disposition, is a living portrait of boys found often still in the same family.

"The Plain Man"

now, as then, often comes out ahead. He isn't always scrupulous about the methods he uses to "win out," as we say in modern phrase. What we call the genius is usually just one of these plain men, with a purpose and plan, and a determination to come out on top, no matter what hinders, or who stands in the way. And if he has his mother to help him, his career will be what the world calls successful. The Jacobs are still very much in evidence in our modern society. This is not said in commendation of the characters of men who succeed, for character is often quite apart from success. The Bible does not offer any apology for Jacob's deception, or for Rebekah's conniving or contriving. Jacob got into difficulties, and paid the penalty of his selfishness and shrewdness in exile—which he turned to account; and by God's providence was finally led into the better life of prayer and consecration of self and his possessions to the Lord. After all, men differ, chiefly, in being thus able to profit by their misfortunes and their misdeeds, and by the circumstances of life, seeing in the hard experiences the leading of the Divine Love, to whom is given the vision of the ladder of the loftier life, and who make an altar of praise out of the stones whereon they pillowed their heads in perplexity and pain. Such a man was Jacob—and so he succeeded, not in his own way, or because of his smartness, but through the providential workings of his career.

A Bad Bargain.

Esau made a bad bargain, not because he was essentially a bad boy, but because he was careless and shiftless. And the same things account for much of the ill success and misfortune of multitudes to-day.

The Bible narratives are not preachy—not a bit. But the moral of this story lies on the very surface. The real character of Esau is brought out, not alone in the foolish, half jest, half earnest transaction of selling his birthright for a pottage of lentiles, but in this language: "And he did eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way: thus Esau despised his birthright."

Spiritual Shiftlessness.

The whole thing is told in this—shiftlessness. It is the real cause of our failures, in most undertakings, in business or professional career. And spiritual shiftlessness has lost more birthrights to the brothers of Esau and Jacob than all other causes. To be spiritually shiftless is to practically despise our birthright—and to surely fail. Remember Esau's failure and bitter wail.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

"The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children."—Psalm 103, 17.

Monday—Genesis 1.

GOD made me. I am no product of force or chance or law. I am a child of God.

Therefore let me rejoice in my powers. They are his gift. It is he who has lifted me above the flocks of the field. It is he who has placed me "a little lower than the angels." I am sometimes reminded how small and weak I am, but I rather think how great I am. I am a son, a daughter, of the Father; and it is because I am such that Christ has come to save me.

And let me hate everything which is out of keeping with my heavenly parentage. All that is base, false, cowardly; it should have no place in the heart or the history of one into whom God has breathed the breath of life. Alas, I have already forsaken my "Fountain of living waters," but I can be made a new creation in Christ Jesus. If I am such, I must be holy.

And let me definitely and heartily dedicate myself to the Fashioner of my body and the Author of my spirit. My chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him for ever.

Tuesday—Genesis 3, 1-15.

Sin has entered my world and my heart.

I describe "man's first disobedience" as "the Fall." Never was there a truer word. It is the melancholy Fall of falls, an unnatural movement, a descent to the saddest depths. I was made upright, but I sought out many inventions. I was meant to look to the skies, but I permitted Satan to bind me with a spirit of infirmity, and now my gaze is fastened on the ground. God desired me to walk with him in a Paradise of holiness and service and fruitfulness, but I spurned so high a sphere and so sublime a companionship, and I turned my face to what is lower and worse.

It is not the popular idea of sin. Imagination gilds the wicked thing, till it appears gay and brilliant and free. On the Amazon a great naturalist found a spider which spread itself out as a flower, but the insects that lighted on it gained death instead of sweetness. So my sin transforms itself into an angel of goodness and light.

But I will give it its true name. For then I shall be eager to turn to the Good Physician.

Wednesday—Genesis 8, 1-22.

God repairs the ruin which sin has caused.

I see it in the world of nature. Across the clouds big with storm he throws the arch of the rainbow. After the deluge he gives the promise that seed-time and harvest will never cease. On the battlefield, where blood has flowed like water, he plants the richest grain and the most brilliant flowers. Everywhere he is busy undoing the evil effects of sin.

I see it in the world of history. How often he has compelled the wickedness and the wrath of man to praise him! How often he has changed the devices which the enemy meant for evil into means of helping his Church and cause! Roman amphitheatres, Smithfield fires, Spanish Armadas, executions in the Grassmarket; they have been a blessing and not a curse.

Thursday—Genesis 12, 1-9.

Wherever Abram went, the first thing he did was to build the altar of God. It is a lesson to me. It says, Wherever you pitch your tent, wherever you have your home, see that God is worshipped there.

I recollect that, a few years ago, when Mr. Bayard was American ambassador to this country, he told his kinsfolk across the sea that he had seldom been a guest in an English home where the family did not gather daily to the Throne of God. I would fain hope that his experience was not an exceptionally happy one, though I sometimes fear that it must have been. Surely the seemly and wholesome practice of family worship is not so common as it used to be.

In my home, at least, let God's name always be hallowed, God's face perpetually be sought, God's altar be raised, and resorted to day by day. Thus my own spirit will be kept calm, trustful, holy. Thus my work will prosper, and I shall "carry music in my heart through dusky lane and wrangling mart." Thus children, servants, visitors, will be touched and impressed and lifted up to the things which are unearthly and divine. Thus on my doors the inscription may be written, "Jehoval Shammah, the Lord is there."

Friday—Genesis 15, 1-18.

When the sun was going down, when the horror of great darkness fell on Abram, then God drew near. "Behold a smoking furnace and a flaming torch." Is it not his habit still to come to me through the thick darkness?

For instance, there is the darkness of ignorance. How much mystery besets his procedure! How impossible it is for me to unravel and interpret his ways! But this makes him loftier and greater in my thought. This forces me to lean on him with a more child-like trust. This intensifies my longing for the better country where there will be no more night. Through ignorance God blesses me.

And there is the darkness of sin. But then it is sin which brings the Saviour. There had been no Calvary, no revelation of uttermost and strangest and sweetest love, without human transgression.

And there is the darkness of death. But what is death, if Christ is mine, but God's shadowy way into the Palace of the King, the Father's House of many mansions?

Saturday—Genesis 18, 16-23.

My prayers should be explicit—Abraham's were so that day when he pleaded for Sodom; there was a target in front of him to which the arrow of prayer was winged swift and straight. Many of my entreaties are not definite and unmistakable askings. I lose myself in a labyrinth of vague and pious phrases which mean little. Let me be more particular, more specific, and I shall prosper better at the Lord's footstool.

My prayers should be importunate. What a fervency there is in these cries of Abraham! Again and again he returns to his supplication. He clings about the feet of God. Mine ought to be this passionate pleading of a man, violent, earnest, resolved to prevail.

My prayers should be unselfish. It is not for himself but for Sodom that Abraham beseeches God. I am overmuch concerned with my own needs and sorrows when I am before the Throne. I should lift up heart and voice on behalf of saints and sufferers and sinners. Intercession for others, William Law says, is "the di-vinest exercise" in which a man can engage. More than I have done let me give myself to so good a work.

Sunday—Genesis 28, 10-22.

This is the hour of Jacob's conversion. God comes to him at Bethel in grace, and makes him a new man. Cheat and supplanter as he was, fugitive from his father's house, God sees his value and enrolls him among the children of his family.

The whole history of his Church is filled with similar instances of his clear-sightedness and mercy.

In the midsummer of 1648, a Royalist soldier, who had been captured by the men of the Parliament after a fierce fight in the streets of Maidstone, was doomed to die on the gallows. By a kind of miracle he succeeded in making his escape. But "he abode still very vile and debauched in life, being a great drinker and gamester and swearer." Yet John Gifford, for that was his name, having had first himself and then his Saviour revealed to him, became by-and-by a preacher of the Gospel in the town of Bedford. He it is who lives in the literature of the world as the Evangelist of "The Pilgrim's Progress." He it was who pointed Bunyan himself, when he was weeping and breaking out with a lamentable cry, to the Interpreter's House and the place where the Cross of Jesus stands.

The Love which saved Jacob and John Gifford is eager to seek and save me. Has it broken down my rebellion? Has it scattered my suspicious thoughts? Has it kindled in me an answering response of love?

VICARIOUS LIVES.

If now we descend from the mountains to explore the secrets of the sea, Maury and Guyot show us the isles where palm trees wave and man builds his homes and cities midst rich tropic fruits. There scientists find that the coral islands were reared above the waves by myriads of living creatures that died vicariously that man might live. And everywhere nature exhibits the same sacrificial principle. Our treasures of coal mean that vast forests have risen and fallen again for our factories and furnaces. Nobody is richer until somebody is poorer. Evermore the vicarious exchange is going on. The rock decays and feeds the moss and lichen. The moss decays to feed the shrub, the shrub perishes that the tree may have food and growth. The leaves of the tree fall that its boughs may blossom and bear fruit. The seeds ripen to serve the birds singing in all the boughs. The fruit falls to be food for man. The harvests lend man strength for his commerce, his government, his culture and conscience. The lower dies vicariously that the higher may live. Thus nature achieves her gifts only through vast expenditures.—From "The Investment of Influence," by N. D. Hillis.

THE GROWTH OF THE WORD.

"So mightily grew the Word of the Lord" (Acts 24:20). The Word of the Lord originally was a spoken word. It was not written in a book as now, but uttered by living men to their fellow men, from heart to heart. As such it was a seed having life in it. When preached it was scattered abroad and entered into souls as into soil. It was apprehended by the thought, hid in the heart, took root and then grew. This is a process which is accelerated or resisted according to the attention given to the Word of God. The first condition is, it must be received as the Word of God, not of man, and the second is, it must be thought over. The Word of the Lord is as powerful to-day as ever, and it grows still.

General Church News

SOME METHODIST CONFERENCES.

The fifty-eighth session of the Iowa conference which met at Newton, was presided over by Bishop Merrill, who also preached an eloquent sermon to a very large congregation. Methodist preachers occupied all the pulpits of Newton on Sunday, September 22—Congregational, Christian, Baptist, Presbyterian, Lutheran and United Presbyterian. A men's mass meeting was held in the evening in a corner of the public square. Dr. David Thompson, LL. D., of Chicago, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, made one of the most earnest addresses delivered to the conference, on the Need of Greater Evangelism in the Church. The reports from the presiding elders of the various districts showed considerable activity in the local churches. Rev. J. C. W. Coxe of the Muscatine district reported 600 converts, 460 accessions and 298 received into full connection. Over $10,000 was expended on church extension. Rev. J. W. Lambert stated that there had been 1,341 conversions and acclamations in the Ottumwa district and 800 received on probation. Keokuk district reported 700 added to the church. The Iowa Wesleyan university has now 325 students enrolled, forty-four more than last year. An apportionment to each charge of 25 cents per member was made and any charge raising the full amount is entitled to name a worthy and needy student for the preparatory or academic department, who shall thus have the benefit of the money given. Dr. J. W. Hancher, D. D., is the new president of the university. The number of full members in these churches of the conference is 31,658, and of Sunday school scholars, 25,928. Converted during the year in the Sunday schools, 1,854. The vote on the adoption of the revised constitution of the M. E. church stood, 97 ayes; 25 nays. The opponents object to the admission of women as delegates to the general conference. As a preliminary to the conference Rev. D. A. Hayes of Chicago gave a lecture on "The Ministry and the Reform Movement." He took the position that permanent reforms cannot be accomplished by legislation, but only by the perfect law of love as practiced by Christ.

At the Michigan conference meeting in Muskegon, Rev. James Hamilton, secretary of the Twentieth Century fund, reported that his work had resulted in raising about $40,000. One of the leading manufacturers of the state has offered to build ten or twelve cottages to be used for superannuated ministers. The cost will probably be $20,000. A full-blooded Indian, a grandson of old Chief Petosky, was ordained as a local elder. The report of the committee on Sabbath observance threatened to raise a storm. After strongly urging the maintenance of the quiet and thoughtful Sabbath of the fathers, it referred to the "degradation of the Christian's marriage by making it simply an episode of a Sunday excursion." The report was adopted. Rev. J. M. Hurd, of Minneapolis, gave a brilliant talk on the training function of the ministry, showing the need of the early religious training of the child. He said in true church activities he preferred a kindergarten to a paid choir. He urged preachers to pass over the trivialities of life and choose great subjects for their sermons touching on duty and destiny.

At the northwest Indiana conference held in Brazil, Bishop Fitzgerald presiding, a summary of the reports shows that the benevolences were about the same as last year. It has been a great year for church building and improvements and also for new parsonages. An aggregate of over $200,000 has been spent in this way. There was a total of 3,030 conversions and probably there will be a good net increase in membership, although not large. The new Methodist hospital at South Bend has been completed. It has cost $70,000. There is a training school for nurses in connection with it. Dr. Pye, of the Western Methodist Book concern, addressed the conference. The reports showed that the profits accruing for worn-out ministers aggregated $60,000, and may soon reach the old mark of $100,000. The book concern, he stated, would go into the publication of fiction, as the people want fiction, and will not read theological works. The Rev. Dr. McIntyre, recently of St. James church, Chicago, will bring out a novel in October, and the book concern expects to sell 100,000 copies.

The Indiana conference held at Rising Sun, Ind., has had a year of prosperity, the increase of membership being 500, making the total membership now 89,000. Over $1,000 has been given to missions, and the salaries of pastors, presiding elders and bishops amounted to nearly $200,000.

The Ohio conference which met at Gallipolis the last week in September, received some very encouraging reports. Rev. John W. Dixon, presiding elder of the Portsmouth district, stated that over 800 conversions had resulted from the revival last winter, 300 being in the city of Portsmouth. There was a large increase in benevolences. Rev. Willies V. Dick reported the London district, of which he is presiding elder, showing a large advancement along all lines. Only $500 indebtedness remains on church property. The Ohio Wesleyan university is gaining in students and endowment, while successful revivals occurred almost everywhere. R. F. Bishop reported 800 conversions and other gains in proportion to the Marietta district. Presiding Elder F. J. Arbuckle's report stated that the work of the year over the Columbus district had been very encouraging. He gave an outline of the results of the revival campaign which added to the churches 1,156 probationers. There are thirty-nine Epworth leagues in the district with a membership of 3,000. He spoke of the substantial aid given to Columbus Methodist churches and last, but not least, the creation of the Protestant hospital by the local church and church extension societies. The Methodism of Columbus is having a marvelous growth and Dr. Arbuckle predicts that in the next five or six years there will be at least fifteen churches in Columbus that are financially strong and paying adequate salaries.

The central Ohio conference meeting at Ada, by a very strong vote adopted

DOUBTERS.

Can Be Changed by Knowledge.

If there is any doubt about making brain power by the use of certain food, the doubter should make the following experiment.

Helen Frances Huntington of Gainesville, Ga., says: "Just a word of commendation concerning Grape-Nuts, which I have found to be the most wholesome, nourishing and appetizing food that has ever come to my knowledge.

"I am not a dyspeptic, but being constantly engaged in severe brain work I found that I did not thrive on ordinary diet; even a moderate dinner dulled my brain so as to be practically incapable of critical work. I tried meat-juice, peptonoids, the two-meal system of light breakfast and no supper, which brought on nervous depletion and sleeplessness, so I resorted to one and another of the various health-foods, which all seemed alike tasteless and valueless as a brain food, until, quite by chance, I had a dish of Grape-Nuts food served as a dessert. I liked it so well that I began to use it daily, for supper four teaspoons in a saucer of hot milk, eaten before it dissolves to mushiness.

"This point should be remembered, as, after a certain time, evaporation seems to affect the sweet nutty flavor of the food as in the case of certain fine-flavored fruits.

"The result in my case was simply astonishing. I had no desire whatever for sweet pastries, meats, or in fact anything else; and my brain was as clear and active at night as on awaking from a long, refreshing sleep.

"The peculiar advantage about Grape-Nuts food is that it supplies the nutritive qualities of a varied diet without the bad results of heavy eating. I cheerfully recommend its use to all brain workers, if not as an exclusive diet, certainly for the last meal of the day. I always take it with me when traveling, which saves a deal of annoyance and discomfort."

a resolution urging against continuing any presiding elder longer than six years and against the transference of any elder to another district, also against reducing the number of districts.

The Minnesota conference in session at Chatfield, adopted the following plan for the support of superannuated ministers, their widows and children: Every member of the conference is to pay at once into the fund the sum of $100 and $10 each year thereafter while he remains a member. The superannuates are to share pro rata in the funds on hand at the end of each year, at the rate of $10 for each year's service as a member of the conference. A widow will receive $5 for each year's work performed by her husband, and a child under 16 years $2.50 for each year that its father was in the active ministry.

WISCONSIN CONGREGATIONALISM.

The sixty-first annual convention of the Congregational churches of Wisconsin was held in Plymouth church, Milwaukee, October 1, 2 and 3. The attendance was good and the interest, if not at white heat, was as intelligent as it was decorous. The program was skillfully arranged so as to be climatic in its effect. It began with a discussion of the family, the unit of social life. Under this head two papers were given, one on "The Family Basic of Civilization," by Rev. F. V. Stevens of Whitewater, and one on "The Scriptural Doctrine of Divorce," by Rev. Charles Caverno of Lombard, Ill. Dr. Caverno said that the Episcopal convention at San Francisco would make a mistake if it adopted the newly proposed canon on divorce. The present canon of the Episcopal church which permits ministers to unite in marriage the innocent party to a statutory divorce, is based on scriptural grounds. Speaking on "Our Foreign Population," President R. C. Hughes of Ripon said that the hope of the solution of the immigration problem is in the public schools. Rev. H. A. Schauffler of Cleveland, O., said that the duty of the churches to the foreign population is to evangelize and educate them. Only through Christian teaching can outbreaks of anarchy and such tragic occurrences as the one that has just thrown the nation into mourning, be prevented. The address of Dr. W. S. Ament of the North China mission was a memorable one. It cleared away many misconceptions regarding the situation in China. Dr. Ament held that China is coming out of its baptism of blood to advance to glory. Peking is today the political capital of the world. You can feel the pulse of the world in Peking as you can in no other city. China is shaking off the lethargy of ages and will soon take her place among the progressive nations of the world. One session was devoted to the Bible school, and the addresses which were given by Sunday school superintendents were practical, pointed and suggestive. The following were the themes and speakers:

"Public School Methods in Sunday School Work," F. J. Harwood, Appleton; "Substitutes for the International Lessons," H. J. Cunningham, Janesville; "What to Do With Old Testament Criticism," J. J. Maple, Milwaukee; "The Best Way to Fill and Keep Full the Teachers' Ranks," Amos P. Wilder, Madison; "The Relation of the Pastor to the Sunday School," W. E. Starr, Fond du Lac; "The Relation of the Church and Community to the Sunday School," J. M. Hawley, La Crosse. Discussion led by Rev. G. C. Haun, state superintendent.

After an interesting discussion of Christian education the subject of science and religion was taken up. The following papers were read: "Some Contributions of Religion to Science," by Prof. E. G. Smith, Beloit; "Effect of the Scientific Spirit and Method upon Religious Problems," by Dean G. E. Collie, Beloit; "Religion Considered as Experience," by Prof. G. E. Coe, Northwestern university.

The proceedings of the convention culminated on Thursday evening in a meeting given up to the consideration of Christian missions. "The Missionary Spirit Organic in Christianity," was the topic treated by Rev. G. R. Leavitt, Beloit. The convention sermon was preached by Dr. E. G. Updike of Madison, and Dr. Henry Faville of La Crosse was chosen moderator.

Dr. Miner presented a most interesting report covering the growth of the Congregationalism in Wisconsin. The total church membership is at present 25,274, the net gain for the last year being 418. There are 254 churches. The Sunday school attendance is 24,798. The amount given for benevolences during the year was $240,098, an increase of $35,709.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

The missionary work of the American Sunday School Union in the year closing February 28, 1901, exhibited two most gratifying features. While 1,874 new Sunday schools were organized in destitute places, only six less than in the previous year, there were 594 reorganized, against 515 in the year before, and 3,523 schools visited or otherwise aided, against 2,687 of the previous year; and, better than all, 9,123 cases of visit and aid to old schools, against 7,485 in the year before. From this it appears that while as great an advance as usual was made in the planting of new schools, there was a very great advance made in the important work of reviving and strengthening and confirming schools already in existence. Thus the inspired command given in Isaiah 54:2 to the Church has been literally obeyed in the work of the society for the year just ended: "Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." The work of the past has been made permanent and strong.

During the year there were 222 men employed, of whom 113 were at work during the whole year, and 109 during a portion of it; 2,468 schools were set in operation that were not in existence one year ago, reaching 90,663 members; in addition to this, in the 3,523 schools aided for the first time there were 270,783 members, while 9,123 visits were also made and aid given to old schools. Great enlargement and success have also marked the home department work.

The evangelistic labors of the missionaries have been abundant and fruitful. Because of the difficulty in obtaining reports from the schools, the returns received are inadequate. Yet in addition to many general statements which give no figures, definite reports have been made of 7,882 hopeful conversions as having occurred in connection with the work of devoted men.

A NEW DEPARTURE IN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

The First Unitarian society of Minneapolis has made a new departure in its Sunday school. It meets at the regular hour, 12:10, but is divided into a Bible study section and a group of secular classes. The first named section

ABANDONED IT.

For the Old Fashioned Coffee Was Killing.

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Sometimes it would beat fast and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill, it gave me a severe pain.

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be caused by coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Postum Cereal Food Coffee. The change came quickly. I am now glad to say that I am entirely well of the heart trouble and attribute the cure to leaving off coffee and the use of Postum Cereal Food Coffee.

"A number of my friends have abandoned the old-fashioned coffee and have taken up with Postum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Postum very weak and tasteless, but if it is boiled long enough, according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage. We have never used any of the old-fashioned coffee since it was first started in our house." Mrs. L. A. Smith, Blodgett Mills, Cortland Co., N. Y.

is under the care of Professor W. M. West of the State university. A six years' graded course of study has been mapped out—in Old and New Testament history and literature, early church history and literature, early church history (with the making of the creeds of Christendom) and some later religious movements. This course is designed for students of grammar grade and high school age, and will contain elementary and advanced classes. This fall the classes all begin upon Old Testament history. The aim will be to give a comprehensive view of Hebrew life, its manifestations in literature, and its wonderful significance in the religious development of the race.

At the same Sunday hour the secular classes will be held for those who prefer them. It has been arranged to organize on Sunday, September 23, such classes in Spanish, German, botany and American authors. The instructors all belong to the faculties of the university, or the city high schools. Here also of course there is to be no charge, and it is promised that more subjects will be given if there proves to be a demand for them. Classes in these secular subjects are provided, of course, mainly in the interest of those young people in stores and factories who have no chance at the better opportunities of the city high schools.

THE BAPTISTS IN CHICAGO.

The sixty-sixth annual meeting of the Chicago Baptist association was held in the new edifice of the Memorial church, Chicago, September 26 and 27. The attendance, especially the first day, was excellent. Dr. J. W. Conley presided as moderator. The meetings opened on Thursday morning with a devotional service and some routine business, after which Rev. A. K. de Blois, of Elgin, preached the annual sermon from the text "God With Us."

In the reports from the churches, eighty-four were represented, showing an enrollment of 19,248 members. These have made contributions for home work, $280,628.54, and for foreign work, $52,855.56. Three new churches were received into the association—Chicago Heights, Bethesda and Immanuel Bohemian. Sunday school and young people's work received attention. The more active promotion of Christian culture classes was strongly urged. The guiding principles of this movement were set forth by Dr. Conley—edification, education, evangelization. "Spirituality the Main Need of the Church," was the topic of an address by Rev. Dr. Kittredge Wheeler. At the close of the business session, Dr. T. M. Powell spoke on "New Testament Methods of Evangelizing." Friday afternoon was devoted to "Societies and Institutions," home and foreign missionary interests being included. In the evening Drs. Lawrence and Henson gave two able addresses on "What Is Religion," and "How Is It Cultivated?" Dr. Henson was at his best. For the cultivation of religion, he insisted, "there are some things we must let go of. There are some things we must take hold of." "They tell us these worldly amusements are good 'per se.' So is grass good per se. But if you are growing corn you want to get rid of the grass between the rows; that corn needs the juices that are flowing to grass."

It was altogether a successful meeting. The statistics show 1,322 baptisms for the year, as compared with 941 last year, and 1,404 other additions as compared with 1,215 last year. Rev. H. Francis Perry was elected moderator.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY.

Rev. Arthur T. Fowler began his pastorate at Centennial Baptist church, Jackson boulevard and Lincoln street, last Sunday. Dr. Fowler comes to Chicago from Muscatine, Ia., where he occupied the pulpit of the First church several years.

The corner stone of the Neighborhood church, Maywood, was laid last Saturday afternoon. N. S. Bouton spoke on "Union Movements," Rev. Dr. Crosser spoke on "The Influence of the Church Building" and short addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Barton, Professor Chamberlain, Rev. S. M. Johnson, Rev. C. M. Morton, Rev. G. C. Williams, and the pastor.

The Baptist Social union met last Thursday evening and discussed the present and future of the Baptist paper, The Standard. The only speaker from outside the denomination was Dr. Herbert S. Willett who spoke on "The Church of the Present Century." Adjustment was his point of emphasis in the five divisions of the theme: 1. The New Science; 2. The New Criticism; 3. The New Psychology; 4. New Social Service; and 5. The New Spirit of unity.

The Christian Church Extension society has granted a loan of $1,100 to Humboldt Park church to cover the amount due on their lot. Their building will now be pushed to completion. They have also granted a loan of $3,500 to the Irving Park church for the purpose of completing their auditorium.

The "Guiding Star mission," 34 West Madison street, was opened again last Saturday night for the winter's work of rescue and restoration. Members from all sides of the city were present. Prof. W. F. Black of the Central Christian church, their orchestra and workers conducted the opening meeting. After a "powerful gospel sermon" four men came forward and made the good confession.

St. Andrew's Methodist Episcopal church (formerly State Street church) dedicated its new building at Wabash avenue and Fifteenth street, September 8, Rev. A. D. Traveller preaching the sermon in the morning and Rev. Dr. H. G. Jackson in the evening. The building has a seating capacity of 410. The cost was $17,000, the last $3,000 of which was raised on the day of dedication. Rev. E. B. Crawford is the present pastor, and he rejoices in this result of his labors.

Cuyler Methodist Episcopal church is to be rebuilt and renamed, Bowen taking the place of Cuyler in its cognomen, in memory of Charles Bowen, one of the Methodist pioneers. The church is too small to accommodate the congregation growing under the leadership of Rev. F. W. Barnum.

The Presbyterian churches of Chicago have pledged themselves to raise within the next five years, $100,000 for city church extension purposes.

Grace Baptist church is rejoicing in an encouraging outlook. There are few vacant seats at the Sunday evening services and the interest in all departments of the work has never been surpassed.

The amalgamation of the Union Christian and the West Side Christian churches has been consummated, which now makes one of the largest and most aggressive churches on the West side, hereafter to be known as the Jackson Boulevard Church of Christ. The vote of the Union church was a three-fifths vote in favor of the amalgamation, but there was a large number who declared in advance of the vote that they could not conscientiously give up the work at the People's Institute. These have made arrangements to continue their Sunday school and morning services there, ices will be held in Bishop Falices there will be held in Bishop Falow's church. Charles Reign Scoville, whose recent meeting with three of the Des Moines churches resulted in over 1,100 additions, has been called to preach for the new church.

The new St. Paul's Episcopal church in Kenwood is so far completed, at a cost of over $60,000, that the dedication is announced for Thanksgiving day.

A meeting of Englewood Sunday school teachers and workers was held October 4, in the Englewood First Methodist Episcopal church, to organize a normal training class and weekly teachers' meeting. Two hundred Sunday school workers were present. The class was organized for the purpose of training teachers and those who are preparing for that work. The course of study for the normal work will be the Legion of Honor course adopted by the State Sunday School association. Upon the completion of the prescribed course and passing an examination the state association will award diplomas of graduation. No fee will be charged students for either membership or graduation. Meetings will be held every Friday evening at 8 o'clock in the Englewood First Methodist Episcopal church. The executive committee of the organization includes C. L. Weaver, Orin Stanford, John W. Hopkins, Rev. S. H. Campbell, Ira W. Broughton and Dr. F. C. Warne.

The ninth annual conference of the officers and missionaries of the American Sunday School Union for the northwestern district, comprising the states of Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, northern Michigan and Montana, will be held in the Chicago Bible Institute, 80 Institute place, Chicago, October 8-14.

J. S. Hughes, of the Christian church, author of "The Golden Cloth," has rented a hall and begun a new work in Woodlawn with good prospects. He has moved into the community and proposes to throw all his powers into this new enterprise.

The installation of Rev. Cleland B. McAfee, D. D., as pastor of the Forty-first Street Presbyterian church was a very interesting occasion. A large congregation was present. The sermon was preached by Rev. Howard Agnew Johnston, D. D., pastor of the Madison Avenue church, New York City. Rev. J. A. Vance, D. D., of the Hyde Park church, gave the charge to the pastor, and that to the people was delivered by Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, D. D., of McCormick seminary.

The Washingtonian Home, of which Rev. William Morrow, of Chicago Presbytery, was superintendent at the time of his death, has recently called to its management Mr. Eugene W. Chafin, of Waukesha, Wis., who is widely known as a temperance advocate, and was a candidate for governor on the prohibition ticket in the campaign of 1900. He has accepted the appointment and will enter upon the superintendency at once.

Ravenswood Fifth United Presbyterian church Sabbath school reports attendance of 600 and an offering of $507 on Rallying day. Prizes were offered the scholars for floral decorations.

Baptist.

A Bible workers' training school has been established in Kalamazoo. The school is to be conducted in connection with the work of the Rev. E. G. Hamley, pastor of the Douglas Avenue Baptist church. The mornings are to be given up to study and recitations and in the afternoon practical Christian work of the nature of house-to-house visitations, personal work, etc., is to be undertaken. A two years' course has been laid out for study of the Bible, particularly the New Testament. A course in music is also to be included. The corps of regular teachers will at present consist of three: the Rev. W. E. Wright, A. B., D. B.; Pastor E. G. Hamley and Miss Emma J. Moore, B. S. Mr. Wright is a graduate of Kalamazoo college, and later of the Divinity school of the University of Chicago.

Madison Avenue Baptist church, New York City, has called Dr. George C. Lorimer of Tremont Temple, Boston. It is not yet known whether he will accept.

The Bloomington association met at Pontiac, Ill., and the reports caused a feeling that there was need of more evangelistic work in the churches. Only 133 baptisms were reported from twenty-nine churches. Dr. S. A. McKay, president of Shurtleff college, gave an address on "Ideals of Education," which was much appreciated. At the Baptist Young People's union session Dr. G. H. Simmons of Peoria, gave a strong address on "Civic Righteousness" and Rev. E. S. Stucker of South Bend, Ind., one on "Soul Winning."

A jubilee was held at Green Bay, Wis., September 20-22, in the celebration of the semi-centennial anniversary of the church there. Rev. Adam Fawcett of Wausau preached the sermon, and a history of the church was read by the pastor, Rev. Henry H. Bawden. Four addresses were made on "The Church's Future."

At the dedication of the church at Omro, Wis., the Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopal churches were closed and their pastors and congregations united with the Baptists on this glad occasion, the pastors taking part in the services. Hon. E. R. Hicks, attorney-general, gave an address on "Influence." The new edifice cost $4,606.41, including furnishing. In securing the funds not one objectionable method was used.

The St. Louis Baptist association shows a net gain of 338 in the membership of its churches; 726 were received during the year. The total amount raised for all purposes was $77,138, but foreign, home and district missions all received less than last year. Fifty-eight children were received into the Orphans' home.

Congregational.

The Trinitarian church of Lowell, Mass., takes good care of its Sunday school. Every child who enters is immediately enrolled and closely followed to his home by church visitors. Careful birthday lists are kept, and the pastor never allows one to pass without sending at least an attractive card. Tasteful souvenirs are given to those baptized and to such as join the church, these being prepared at the church's expense. In the basement is a special playroom, where the children hold frequent and merry gatherings, the pastor himself is leader of the Junior Y. P. S. C. E., and with his large heart overflowing with health and heartiness he has had large success among the young. Since January 1 forty-five members have been added to the church.

Rev. Henry Hopkins, D. D., of Kansas City, has been pastor of the First church for over twenty years. The membership numbers more than 500 and the fine stone building in which they worship was completed seventeen years ago at a cost of $85,000. Under Dr. Hopkins' leadership the church has been foremost in promoting plans for the good of the people of Kansas City.

The Men's Union of the First church organized last winter, not only discusses practical topics in city life, but was active in securing needed legislation.

The First church, Cortland, N. Y., has undertaken the support of a foreign missionary. The church edifice has just been renovated at an expense of over $3,000. Rev. Robert Yost is pastor.

Rev. J. H. Whitaker has been pastor of the First church, Savannah, Ga., for about three years. Nearly $5,000 has been raised for all purposes and 107 have been united with the church.

At Imlay City, Mich., the church was rededicated September 22, after renovations and additions. The

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 547 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York.

The Pioneer
Limited.

Famous
Train
of
the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service
Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information
furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent,
Chicago, Ill.

$13.00 GO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $13.00

via the Nickel Plate Road daily, with limit of 15 days; 20-day tickets at $16.00 for the round trip; 5-day tickets at $6.00 for the round trip, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Through service to New York and Boston and lowest available rates. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

amount expended, $1,392, was all paid. Neighboring ministers assisted the pastor, Rev. F. A. Dungan, in the services, Rev. James Hyslop, a former pastor, preaching in the evening.

Congregationalists at Bloomfield, Neb., under the leadership of Rev. Edwin Booth, Jr., have practically built a new church, using the old one as a nucleus. The old parsonage has been sold and a new one built adjoining the church. This is a growing community and the influence of the church will be large. Neighboring Congregational churches and the Methodist church of the town omitted their services on the day of the dedication.

Mr. Lewis Hodous, a Bohemian, educated in the Cleveland public schools, Adelbert college and Hartford Theological seminary, was ordained in Bethlehem church, Cleveland, September 18. The right hand of fellowship was given in the Bohemian language by Rev. Vaclay Prucha, pastor of the Bethlehem church, Chicago. The charge to the candidate was given by Rev. Dr. H. A. Schauffler in Bohemian: Mr. Hodous expects to labor in Foo Chow, China. He takes with him as his wife, Miss Anna Jelinek, also of Bethlehem Bohemian church, and a graduate of Oberlin.

Rev. Andrew B. Chalmers leaves the First church of Saginaw, Mich., in good condition, there being $200 in the treasury above all liabilities. When he went to it, it was burdened with debt. During his pastorate 407 new members have been brought into the church. Mr. Chalmers goes to New Haven, Conn.

The American Congregational Deaconess association has been incorporated, and Mr. John K. Allen of Chicago, elected its treasurer. The committee having the movement in charge was elected by the state association. The Deaconess Training home is established at 513 Washington boulevard, Chicago, and Miss M. Emerett Colman is the superintendent. She has special training for this work. Through the co-operation of the Chicago Theological seminary, a strong force of able instructors will constitute the faculty of the school and the Chicago Commons will furnish opportunity for industrial training. The offer of a brick building at Dover, Ill., in the center of two and a half acres of land has been accepted as a home for philanthropic uses in connection with the deaconess work.

The Disciples.

The Berkeley Bible seminary began its fifth annual session August 27 at Berkeley, Cal., with ten regular ministerial students enrolled, besides a special class for university students, enrolling twenty-five in all. The seminary does not attempt to do the work of a strictly post-graduate theological seminary, but offers Bible courses which run co-ordinate with the college courses proper. In this way it co-operates with the University of California and with the Pacific Theological seminary, and makes its particular contribution to the educational facilities represented by the grouping of institutions at Berkeley. Dr. Hiram Van Kirk, who is at present the sole instructor, conducts courses in the Beginner's Greek New Testament, in the History of the Apostolic Age, on the Theology of Paul, and on Old Testament history. The seminary meets at present in the Y. M. C. A. building of the university, but hopes to begin this year the erection of its own permanent home. In addition to these regular courses the seminary conducted a summer school at Santa Cruz, one of the most popular summer resorts in California, and convention headquarters for the Disciples of Christ. The session lasted one month and enrolled 100 students. The outlook of the seminary is very bright, its friends and supporters predict for it a career of eminent usefulness.

The reports of the Illinois Christian Missionary convention showed the number of churches in the state to be 797, with 83,681 members. During the last year $8,795 was expended in state missions.

A great loss has been sustained in Texas by the death of Rev. James B. Sweeney of Gainesville. His first pastorate was at Leavenworth Kan., whence he went to Taylor, Tex., where he remained seven years, building up a fine congregation and erecting a new building. For three years he occupied the Bible chair at Add Ran university. At Gainesville he was pastor for two and a half years. Five hundred were added to the church during this short pastorate. His benevolent deeds were many.

The annual convention of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, had a preachers day program consisting of papers on leading preachers as Paul; Origen—form and substance of preaching; Athanasius—doctrinal preaching; Basil—ethical preaching; Augustine—consciousness of God a source of power; Peter the Hermit—earnestness in preaching; Bernard—goodness in the preacher; Savonarola—the preacher and politics; Carey—the preacher and heathen missions; Finney—the revivalist; Alexander Campbell—the reformer of reformers. The reports showed 576 additions to the membership of the churches in the whole district, making the present membership 4,628. Total amount raised for all purposes $37,694.92, of which $1,195.96 was for foreign missions.

The First church, Akron, O., has just had a most successful Sunday school rally. The attendance was 1,198 with a collection of $43.

Rev. J. P. Pinkerton has resigned his pastorate at Jefferson City to accept a call to the Forest Avenue church, Kansas City.

Through the energetic work of Rev.

T. E. Cramblet, whose resignation of the pastorate we recently announced, the East End Christian church, Pittsburg, now owns property valued at $40,000. It has started two new congregations, one on Lincoln avenue and another in Wilkinsburg. The outstanding indebtedness of $3,250 has been met and at the farewell reception the mortgage was burned. Mr. Cramblet will enter at once on his new duties as president of Bethany college, Bethany, W. Va.

The New York Christian Ministerial Association was an interesting and profitable gathering. "The Field" was discussed by several speakers, after which Rev. E. O. Irwin spoke on "How It Looks to an Evangelist," and Rev. M. E. Harlan read a stirring paper on "New York State—a Field for City Evangelization." In the afternoon "The Place of the Disciple in the Twentieth Century" was considered. The chief feature of the whole session was the address of Lowell C. MacPherson of Havana, on "Cuba for Christ."

Episcopal.

At the annual convention of the diocese of Kansas it was unanimously decided to divide the diocese.

Prior to the departure of Rev. Thos. W. MacLean, rector of St. Mark's church, Minneapolis, as a deputy to the general convention, he was presented with a draft on San Francisco for $740 as an evidence of esteem from his parishioners.

The funeral of Bishop Whipple was very impressive. The Holy communion was twice celebrated in the morning and the burial service commenced at 2 o'clock. Bishops Grafton, Mills-paugh, Hare, Morrison, Edsall and Tuttle took part in the services. Some forty Indians sang "Asleep in Jesus" in the Dakota language, and the girls of St. Mary's school sang the bishop's favorite, "My Ain Countree," after the committal and the choir's rendering of "I heard a voice from heaven." The remains were placed in a grave beneath the altar. When the recessional hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," died away, the Indians out of doors sang a hymn in Chippewa. Then Bishop Tuttle, standing in the door, led in saying the Lord's Prayer, which was taken up by the congregation in the cathedral and by the great throng of people filling the cathedral grounds and the streets beyond; he then offered a prayer out of the fulness of his great heart, largely in his own words. The hymn "For all Thy saints" was then sung without accompaniment by the congregations within and without.

Methodist.

Some of the results of the Central Illinois conference are the transfer of Rev. C. O. McCulloch from the First church, Rock Island, to Macomb, and of Rev. R. B. Williams from Abingdon to the church just vacated by Mr. Mc-Culloch. The First church, Moline, is to be in charge of Rev. M. V. Crumbaker.

The sudden death of Rev. William A. Spencer, secretary of the Church Extension society, removes from Methodist activities a most energetic and well known man. He was born in Rock Island in 1840. From 1875 to 1878 he was connected with the State street and with the First church of Chicago. In 1878 he was in charge of the Rockford Centennial church. In 1881 he was presiding elder of the Dixon district and in 1885 was again appointed to the First church, Chicago. To his high qualities as secretary of the Church Extension society, he added those of an evangelist.

At the Kansas-Nebraska conference of the African M. E. church, Bishop Shaffer said that this branch of the Methodist church has 700,000 members and 375,000 Sunday school scholars, with thirteen bishops, 5,500 itinerant preachers and 900 local preachers. It has ten well organized departments for general church work, and twenty-six institutions of learning in the United States.

Rev. Dr. P. A. Cool who has been pastor of the First church, Spokane, for four years, during which time the membership has grown until nearly 1,200 names are now on the rolls, took charge of the Fowler Memorial church, Minneapolis, last week. He is noted as a lecturer.

Rev. F. B. Cowgill who leaves the pastorate of the First Methodist church of St. Paul, after a four years' charge, was presented with a purse containing $500 in gold. He has succeeded in wiping out the church debt and adding to the membership.

Rev. W. H. Selleck who has been pastor of Grace church, Seattle has left for Juneau, Alaska, to take charge of the work of the M. E. church in that territory.

Presbyterian.

The Fort Dodge (Ia.) Presbytery includes fifty-five churches with a membership of about 5,000. During the past year more than 500 new members were added to these churches.

Revision of the English metrical version of the Psalms, carried on by a committee representing eight Presbyterian denominations of the United States and Canada, was advanced at a recent meeting of the committee in Toronto. At this session the work of recasting was completed as far as Psalm lxxxix, and the schedule of meters was agreed upon in advance to include Psalm cvi. The United Reformed Presbyterian churches initiated this movement in 1896, and Dr. E. R. Craven and Dr. S. T. Lowrie represent northern Presbyterians among the revisers.

At the Indiana synod of the Cumberland Presbyterian church the Committee on Education reported that James Milliken, of Decatur, has pledged over $500,000 for the establishment of Milliken university of Decatur, which is to be an industrial institute, Christian, but nonsectarian, that will give complete instruction in any trade or profession. The endowment will be over $1,000,000, and will be increased by the annual income of $65,000 from the Milliken estate. The Indiana synod will give $30,000 from Indiana Presbyterians. The university is to be completed by September, 1902. Professor S. R. Taylor, late president of Kansas state normal, will be president. Lincoln university will be under the same management and both will be superintended by the Indiana, Illinois and Iowa synods.

President Stewart of Auburn Theological seminary will undertake an itinerary of some six months in which he will endeavor to get the clergy, the eldership and the laity together in effectual united work along evangelistic lines. The holding of prayer conferences or retreats will be encouraged.

The Los Angeles Bible institute, under the direction of Rev. A. B. Prichard, has begun work. The attendance is encouraging. The work of issuing the marked Spanish New Testament is about complete.

In nine months Rev. R. B. Taylor has received 112 into the First church, San Diego, Cal.; forty-one of these were on confession.

The New Hope Presbyterian church at Coal City, Ill., was reopened Sunday, September 22. The sermon was preached by Rev. Willis G. Craig, D.D., of McCormick seminary, and an address was made by Rev. George P. Williams, superintendent of home missions. A lecture room has been added, with folding doors opening into the main audience room, thus increasing the seating capacity to about 300. Stained glass windows replace the old, and a corner tower gives character to the outer appearance. The total cost was $1,600, which has all been raised, the offering that day bringing an excess of $180 over the amount required. A pleasant feature of this occasion was the adjournment of services at the M. E. church and the coming of the whole congregation to join in the rededication. The pastor, Rev. A. J. Van Page, has done excellent work. He has accepted a call to the church at Marengo, Ill.

General.

A handsome steamship to be used on the Mississippi river is being constructed at Clinton, Ia. It is for mission work by the church of the Christian Brethren. More than 100 people will make their homes on the boat. Wherever a landing is made, a big tent will be pitched for religious work. A fine band will be constantly on the boat. All of the principal towns along the river will be visited.

Since March 1 the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union in the Northwestern district have organized 443 Sunday schools, having 1,475 teachers and 14,025 scholars. They have reorganized 287 schools, having 8,885 scholars. They distributed 3,025 Bibles and Testaments and made 65,749 visits to families.

The state convention of the Christian Endeavor society, which met at Danville, Ill., October 3-6, was well attended and had a good program. The sessions were held in the Christian and Presbyterian churches. The reports showed excellent work done during the year. The secretary of the United society, John Willis Baer, was among the speakers, also Rev. Chas. Ransom, missionary in Africa, and Rev. W. S. Ament of China. Dr. H. L. Willett of the University of Chicago spoke on "The Place of the Bible in Modern Thought." One of the best addresses was that on "The Joy of Service" by Rev. Cleland B. McAfee.

Foreign Missionary Notes.

The seventeenth annual report of the work of the Disciples in Japan shows 697 communicants; baptisms, 83; Sunday school scholars, 912; churches and chapels, 10.

The United Presbyterians have five large girls' schools in Cairo, Egypt, with an enrollment of over 1,500 pupils and over 750 women taking lessons in their homes. At Assyuet there is the largest day school for girls in Egypt, with an attendance of more than 300 girls. It is supported by a rich native family, but is under the care of the mission. At Damanhour, in the Alexandria district, the girls' school has just been closed for lack of money to carry it on. The town contains 40,000 people and this was the only evangelistic agency for women in the neighborhood.

In the Punjab, India, according to returns from the last census, the Christian population has increased nearly four and a half times as fast as the population, during the last decade. The population has increased 7.6 per cent, while "the Christians show the remarkable increase of 32.6 per cent, in spite of the absence of many British troops at the time of the census." The total number of Christians is very small as compared with the total, only 71,084 out of 22,455,519, but the movement is in a direction which should be very encouraging to faith, as to the ultimate result.

"Another boy, living still further The annual report of the Congregational mission to Austria announces a gain of $340 over last year in the contributions by the people, the total, $3,800. There have been 1,871 Bibles circulated; 5,582 Testaments, and 9,568 portions of the Bible distributed among the people; in other books the number reaches to 15,000, and tracts, papers, etc., to 140,000. One hundred and eighty-nine have been received into the churches during the year, and the average congregations in the thirteen churches are 2,332.

BOOKS

The Blessed Life, by William A. Quayle. Jennings & Pye, Cincinnati, O., publishers; price, $1.00.

This is an unusually good book. While it is a series of sermons by a prince among preachers, the thought of the entire book is so related as to give system and solidarity to it. A glimpse at the "Contents" will whet the appetite of any thoughtful student. "Christianity's Point of Power," "Christianity's Increment of Power," "Christianity and Law," "The Centrality of God," are a few of the subjects treated. The thought is scholarly, but warm and fresh; the style is clear; the language chaste and vigorous; the Christian conception throughout the book is evangelical and vital. The author says: "My object has been to help Christians, especially young Christians, to lift up their eyes and behold both terrestrial and celestial aspects of a holy life, and to enforce the solidarity of Christian experience, so as to make the heart beat high in sane exultancy at what we are and are to be, 'whose life is hid with Christ in God.'"

He finds Christianity's point of power in the individual, but treats of the religio-social instinct as clearly as he states the responsibility of the individual. The last two chapters, on "The Blessed Life" and "The Immortal Society," are classics. Here is a book warmly evangelical, vitally spiritual, broad in its scholarship, and, while severely scientific in its conclusions, deeply poetical in its thought and language. The preacher will profit by reading it, the layman by studying it.

There are a number of brief original poems in the book of a fine quality. As the author says: "Poems are necessary when one talks of heaven, because the poets, being seers of visions and dreamers of dreams, will say the greatest things in the noblest fashion, and see the noblest truths in their right relation."

Now—The Missionary Watchword for Each Generation; or, The Principle of Immediacy in Mission Work. By Rev. Henry C. Mabie, D. D. Fleming H. Revell Co.

This booklet of thirty-two pages is one of Revell's popular religious series. It is an earnest plea for an advance movement in mission work. The following extract will give a good idea of the spirit and style of the book:

Some one will ask: "Is not your plea for the immediacy and universality of duty respecting the missionary enterprise just as valid for near-by home interests as it is for foreign?" I answer, undoubtedly; although the functions are different, yet there is no proper antithesis between home and foreign missions. The same God is over all; obligation to one involves duty to the other; both classes of service are to be performed in the same spirit, and, in a profound sense, at the same moment. But it is this matter of simultaneity and immediacy of claim with respect especially to work abroad that is commonly challenged.

Miss Belle M. Brain is becoming well known as an author of books for missionary workers. Her latest and, it is thought, her best work, entitled "Fifty Missionary Evenings," is soon to be published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. The book devotes considerable space to ideal missionary meetings and to material for missionary programs, but the most important part is that devoted to outlines for fifty missionary programs. Here are found complete programs for meetings upon nearly all mission fields and upon all phases of the missionary subject, together with suggestions, facts, and information that will help to make the meetings more instructive and helpful. A book of this nature has long been wanted, and all missionary workers will hail it with delight.

Missionary Readings for Missionary Programs, compiled and arranged by Belle M. Brain. Fleming H. Revell Co. 235 pages. Price, 60 cents net.

This is an excellent idea excellently wrought out. The twenty-five selections in this little volume cover a wide range of subjects. Some of them have been condensed to bring them within the time limit of an ordinary missionary meeting. They are of varied interest, but all of them are suited to the purpose for which they were chosen.

The test of the real value of a book descriptive of a country or a people is the reception accorded it by them. Judged by this standard "Latin America," by the Rev. Hubert W. Brown, published by the Revells, is a decided success. The public press in Mexico, even papers in no way identified with missionary operations, commend it in the warmest terms for its accuracy and fairness. It should do much to bring the two countries closer together.

Charles Ferguson, whose recent book, "The Religion of Democracy," has been discussed with so much enthusiasm by critics, and reviewed more extensively, probably, than any book during the last decade, has just finished his new book, "The Affirmative Intellect." It will be published in October by Funk & Wagnalls Company.

The third volume of "The Encyclopedia Biblica" will be published by The Macmillan Company in October. The work on the fourth volume is also well under way for publication early in the spring of 1902.

The title of Gorky's now famous novel, "Foma Gordyeeff," means "Thomas the Proud," Foma being the Russian form of the English name Thomas, and Gordyeeff signifying proud.

NO PERSON SHOULD DIE

of any kidney disease or be distressed by stomach troubles or tortured and poisoned by constipation. Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine will be sent free and prepaid to any reader of this publication who needs it and writes for it. One dose a day of this remedy does the work and cures perfectly, to stay cured. If you care to be cured of indigestion, dyspepsia, flatulence, catarrh of stomach and bowels, constipation or torpid and congested liver; if you wish to be sure that your kidneys are free from disease and are doing their necessary work thoroughly; if you expect to be free from bladder and prostrate inflammation and from catarrh, rheumatism and backache; if you desire a full supply of pure, rich blood, a healthy tissue and a perfect skin, write at once for a free bottle of this remedy and prove for yourself, without expense to you, that these ailments are cured quickly, thoroughly and permanently with only one dose a day of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine.

Any reader of Christian Century may have a sample bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine sent free and prepaid by writing to Vernal Remedy Company, Buffalo, N. Y. It cures catarrh, indigestion, constipation of the bowels, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of bladder, and enlargement of the prostate gland.

There is no trouble and but a trifle of expense to cure the most stubborn case. Write for a free bottle.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY,

of FLUSHING, MICH. :

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities, Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degrees. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

RHEUMATISM

Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia and Kidney Troubles are instantly relieved and quickly cured by EASINE. Acute Rheumatism cannot exist 48 hours when Easine is faithfully taken. Chronic Rheumatism and old cases that do not yield to other remedies always give way to the magic power of Easine. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send a brief description of your case when you write. Complete treatment mailed, prepaid, on receipt of one dollar. Easine Chemical Co., 101 Bell Block, Cincinnati, O.

TRIAL TREATMENT FREE.
PILES We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ File Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once. Germ Medical Co., 215 E. 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

THE HOME

A Prayer.

"Send me good speed this day!"
 Sacred revealings;
 Earnests of life to come,
 Tender stealings;
 Calm 'mid the rush of life,
 Peace 'mid afflictions,
 Storm-voices tuned to breathe
 Low benedictions.
 E'en though to me denied
 Joy's effervescence,
 Stillness of joy in Thee
 Grant with Thy presence!
 So dark and cloudy days,
 If Thy smile speed me,
 Best shall show forth Thy praise.
 Father, thus lead me!

"Then, when the night is nigh,
 The rough march over,
 Lights in the Father's house
 Let me discover;
 Hope into visions fair
 Fond mem'ries wreathing;
 Voices of paradise
 Hymn-welcomes breathing;
 And sweet and low and clear
 One 'Voice from Heaven'
 Whisp'ring, 'Forever Mine!—
 Ransomed!—Forgiven!'
 His who through life's long day
 Loved, guarded, fed me,
 Unseen was in the way
 While the Lord led me!"
 —Selected.

My Little Man.

It was the month of January, the very worst time of the year for intercourse or travel between the different parts of the great Siberian continent. In the spring and the early summer it appears that the air is balmy and delightful, and the country quite picturesque in places, with its wealth of verdure, its pleasant plains, its huge quietly rolling river; but words will not come that can adequately describe the utter desolation of the winter time, the wail of the piercing frost-laden winds, the gloom of the heavy hostile skies, in which, as I toiled along beneath them, I rarely saw either the sun by day, or the moon and stars by night.

There is a part of the route which leads through the steppe. Whether it still does so I cannot say. But there was absolutely no level track, and the sledges had to cross it on the snow, and with difficulty make out their way by means of signposts erected at intervals between the relay stations, which are placed at about every twenty or forty versts from each other, according to the state of the ground. Once, as we were midway between two stations, a fearful snow-storm came on, and almost blinded us. We had to make our path as we went, and the sharp pins of ice cut our faces till they bled. My guide, a splendid fellow, with nerves of steel and muscles of iron, almost lost heart for this the only time on that difficult, impossible journey, when telega, steeds, and driver sank into a drift, and our plucky little horses, their fetlocks galled and bleeding, tried with all their might to break through the ice-crust formed on top of the snow.

However, through this and trials indescribable, we came out in the end victorious. Everywhere, my passport and credentials obtained for me the utmost politeness and consideration. But I will not tell you now any more of the details of that journey. It suffices to say that, sometimes having to stop traveling for a week at a time, yet on and on through tempest, storm, and snow, we went, till, almost at the farthest limits of the habitable land over which the Russian Eagle spreads his mighty claws, at last we saw Yakoutsks.

Late in the dusk of a March afternoon, as with infinite pains we had reached the top of a stiff ascent, below us in a plain with mountains all around, lay a grim, grey, snowbound place, which when Ivan saw, he shouted in extremest joy:

"It is there, there! Yakoutsks! Yakoutsks!"

Not till then, I think, did I realize the full horror of the fact that he, my friend, an Englishman of birth and learning, who, at Rugby, Oxford, in court and county society, at home and abroad, among simple and great alike, had everywhere been loved and honored, was lying in that far-off frozen spot, sick unto death in the cruelty and ignominy of prison. And for no other cause than having sheltered a man supposed to be a Nihilist, and of having, as they called it, stimulated discontent against the government by helping the destitute. At least, this much I had gathered from Count Orloff in St. Petersburg.

It was late when we arrived. I was ushered into a long, low room. The walls were bare and whitewashed. There were a few wooden stools, a table, some glasses, and the well-known samovar, or teakettle, the most important article in eastern Russia. This was the private room of the officer in command; yet of books, pictures, magazines, papers, and of such simple things as lend grace to the meanest apartments, I saw no sign. As a matter of fact, the few educated officers whom a harsh destiny has placed in these inhospitable regions, become in time so deadened, from the eternal sameness and solitude, that they have scarcely any interest left for what goes on in the great outer world. I noticed, too, a curious mixture of apathy and severity in the way they perform their duties. They seemed to specially cultivate the latter in order to balance their natural and increasing propensities for the former.

Captain Romstroff received me graciously enough; my potent passport was sufficient voucher for that; but to my eager request to be taken to Allan at once, he replied that he was afraid it would be too late to make a visit that night. However, he said he would think the matter over, and ordered food to be brought. Together we discussed it, each seated on one side of the samovar, which was bubbling and steaming cheerfully. Perhaps the monotonous uniformity of his own dull lot, and the daily contact with those whose keynote of life was despair, had so blunted his perceptions as to make it appear impossible to him that anyone in the world could be possessed by such a thing as an overwhelming impatience. For there he sat smoking, asking me trivial questions about my journey, pressing his hospitality down my unwilling throat, and pouring climatic statistics of the country round into my unlistening ears. The only remark of his that I caught on to, was to the effect that Yokoutsks ranked as the coldest town in the world, the ground being frozen to a depth of 400 feet.

"A place indeed to live in!" he muttered.

Thinking of Allan, I replied, "A place indeed to die in!"

"Tell me," I continued, "is it true that my friend is dying? Surely, if it is so, I may see him at once?"

"There are sixty-five political prisoners at present under my supervision. Of these at least twenty are dying—possibly more. It is the journey that knocks them over. You have traveled with comparative speed and comfort, and yet the hardships have seemed enormous to you. Imagine, then, what they must be to those compelled to march for month after month, often with bare and bleeding feet, for their shoes drop off and they have no means of replacing them. Then, at nights they must either camp on the ground or they are huddled together en masse in a small space of the ostrog, or prison-house, for the use of convicts en route. Of the last batch forty died on the way. It was a wonder your friend was not of the number."

"Why?" I asked, as he stopped indefinitely and puffed away at his pipe. He spoke in a light cold way; and yet I fancy humanity was not a dead-letter in his book of life.

"Oh, well!" he answered, "each man for himself, if ever it is a justifiable motto, is more than so for Siberian prisoners en route. Your friend appeared to think otherwise. I chanced to hear some account of him from the officer in charge. One day a halt was made, and the wretched exiles flung themselves on the ground for half an hour's rest. There were three women in the batch, and one had a baby with her. By the way, the women are usually provided with seats in the carts. It was chill and damp, and your friend, noticing that the child was shivering and sobbing with cold, took off his coat and gave it to the mother to wrap around her baby. Then, overcome with fatigue and half-clothed, he lay down on the wet ground and slept. The rest speaks for itself. Such fanatic conduct is its own reward. He has been in the hospital ever since his arrival here. A week's working in the mines would have done for him. Only his immense vitality has enabled him to linger on like this. It seems absurd to talk about being attached to a prisoner, but this Englishman inspires all who come near him with the feeling that any service done him confers an honor on the doer; and the hard conditions inseparable from the life to which he had been condemned, have been mitigated considerably, I can assure you. Lately he has been sinking rapidly, and the doctor gives him now another month at the outside, so perhaps it is well that you have arrived. You greatly care to see him tonight? Ah, then I will see what can be done."

So saying, he left the room.

Half an hour later an official came to me and informed me that I might follow him. He led the way down the grey, silent corridors, across a courtyard, by paths cut at angles through the snow, and by a low iron door at the far end of the quadrangle we entered into another part of the building which I learnt afterwards, was the hospital ward. My heart beat with a quick and painful dread, as I followed my guide through the low, dismal doorway. "What wonder if those who enter here scarcely cling closely to life?" I thought. "Beyond them lies, perhaps, a world of pain—but still of laughter and of loveliness as well, of charms and dearest joys, of labors and ambitions, of hopes and passions. But here, inside these cold thick walls, where there is nothing left to fight for, to conquer, or to win, the warm red life-blood freezes slowly, surely, drop by drop, a hideous gloom sinks into every life, and in dim, bleared, washed-out eyes those who run may only read a stony hopelessness, a dumb defiance, a perpetual plaint, most pitiful, most awful."

—The Quiver.

(To be continued.)

Husband Study vs. Child Study.

This is an age when motherhood is extolled extravagantly and when "child study" classes rival the Browning classes as "fads." The education, physical, mental and moral, of our children is the constant theme of both preacher and teacher, and the whole alcoves of books in our public libraries are devoted to this interesting and absorbing branch of science. Mothers' clubs are almost too numerous in our large cities, and even in our country villages the youthful son and heir may be discovered learning "swear words" at the village store while his devoted mother discusses learnedly on Saturday mornings at her mothers' club the various stages of child development. But if the baby does fall down stairs and break her arm while her fond mamma is taking a course in "child study" at Clark university or attending the mothers' congress at Washington, her mother's journey nevertheless is considered absolutely necessary if it be in the interest of "child study," for never in the history of the race has so much thought of a serious nature been given to the training of our children.

There is, however, one indirect and unfortunate result of overmuch "child study," which injures our home life and which therefore it does seem wise to point out. Is not motherhood in the present day being exalted at the expense of wifehood? and are not the needs and ambitions and tastes of the father of the family too often neglected and deemed of little consequence?

Marriage, if it is to be permanently happy, must mean a growing friendship, and a friendship cannot be maintained without a relation of mutual dependence and companionship. A woman cannot live absorbed in her children for twenty years and then re-assume her old relations with her husband. If she has developed intellectually and grown away from him it is quite as much her fault as it is his. If he has degenerated and now cares for little but his dinner and his club, could she have prevented it? Many a self-sacrificing mother finds when her sons and daughters come to the age when they leave her to go out into the world that she has lost the power to charm and interest the one human being whose duty it is to stay by her side until "death do us part."—Mrs. Bradley Gilman in Good House-keeping.

$6.00 GO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $6.00

via the Nickel Plate Road, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with limit of 5 days from date of sale, good in coaches only; 15-day tickets at $13.00 for the round trip, and 20-day tickets at $16.00 for round trip, good in sleeping cars. Three through daily trains. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

Backsliders' Railroad to Ruin

Fast Line Express
CIGARETTEBURG TO MURDERVILLE.
Via Lagerton, Rowdytown, Topersville, Moonshine Hollow, Beerboro, Sipington, Gamblers' Den, Saloon Siding and Devil's Curve. Other lines are illustrated with 250 etchings, showing the dangerous places in life. A new and popular book, just off the press. Send 25c for a copy, or send a $1 bill for six copies and circulate them. Circulars free. Write CILAS. J. BURTON, Christian University, Canton, Mo.

Ott "A GOOD MAN WANTED"
To Advance for First Class
LECTURES AND ENTERTAINMENTS
ED. AMHERST OTT, Dean Drake University College of

"Number One."

"He is a number one boy," said grandmother, proudly, "a great boy for his books; indeed, he would rather read than play, and this is saying a good deal for a boy of seven."

"It is, certainly," returned Uncle John, "but what a pity it is that he is blind."

"Blind!" exclaimed grandmother, and the number one boy looked up, too, in wonder.

"Yes, blind, and a little deaf, also, I fear," answered Uncle John.

"Why, John! what put that into your head?" asked grandmother, looking perplexed.

"Why, the number one boy himself," said Uncle John. "He has been occupying the one easy chair in the room all the afternoon, never seeing you, nor his mother when she came in for a few minutes' rest. Then when your glasses were mislaid, and you had to climb upstairs two or three times to look for them, he neither saw nor heard anything that was going on."

"Oh, he is so busy reading," apologized grandmother.

"That is not a very good excuse, mother," replied Uncle John, smiling. "If 'Number One' is not blind nor deaf, he must be very selfish indeed to occupy the best seat in the room, and let older people run up and down stairs while he takes his ease."

"Nobody asked me to give up my seat nor to run on errands," said "No. One."

"That should not have been necessary," urged Uncle John. "What are a boy's eyes and ears for, if not to keep him posted on what is going on around him? I am glad to see you fond of books, but if a pretty story makes you forget all things except amusing 'Number One,' better run out and play with the other seven-year-old boys, and let grandmother enjoy the comfort of her rocker in quiet."—Youth's Evangelist.

If You Feel Depressed
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. E. Pitman, Lynchburg, Va., says: "I have used it in nervous depression and dyspeptic troubles, with good result."

OIL CURE FOR CANCER.

Dr. Bye has discovered a combination of Oils that readily cure cancer, catarrh, tumors and malignant skin diseases. He has cured thousands of persons within the last six years, over one hundred of whom were physicians. Readers having friends afflicted should cut this out and send it to them. Book sent free, giving particulars and prices of Oils. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo.

THE KEY TO HEALTH

Lies in the use of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. It strengthens the body, cleanses the blood and builds up the system. If you are a skeptic in regard to proprietary medicines, but open to conviction when the proof is overwhelming, write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 So. Hoynes ave., Chicago, Ill.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD

will sell tickets each Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday during October to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition and return, at $6.00, good in coaches; return limit five days from date of sale.

Tickets with longer limit at slightly increased rates. Three through daily trains. Chicago Passenger Station, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue. City ticket office, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN TICKETS

via the Nickel Plate Road, $13.00 for the round trip, good 15 days; $16.00 for the round trip good 20 days. Three daily trains with vestibuled sleeping-cars. Meals in dining cars, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

TO ST. LOUIS

ILLINOIS CENTRAL
CENTRAL
MISSISSIPPI VALLEY
ROUTE
RAILROAD

DAYLIGHT SPECIAL
FAST-DAY TRAIN

DIAMOND SPECIAL
POPULAR NIGHT TRAIN

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.
A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

Burlington
Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul
Minneapolis
Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, C. B. & Q. R. R.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

Largest Foundry on Earth making
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

FAST TRAINS
Chicago & North-Western Ry.

The Overland Limited
California in 3 days

The Colorado Special
One night to Denver
3 days to San Francisco

The Chicago-Portland Special
Oregon and Washington in 3 days

The North-Western Limited
Electric Lighted—Chicago,
St. Paul and Minneapolis

Duluth and St. Paul Fast Mail
Fast train to head of lakes

The Peninsula Express
Fast time to Marquette
and Copper Country

NO change of cars. Everything in connection with its service is modern and progressive.

TICKET OFFICES
212 Clark St. and Wells St. Station.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE
CHICAGO &
ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE
Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

PARKER'S
HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair.
Promotes a luxuriant growth.
Never Fails to Restore Gray
Hair to its Youthful Color.
Cures scalp diseases & hair falling.
50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

MICHIGAN CENTRAL
The Niagara Falls R. Co.

Pan-American Special
A Magnificent New Train.
Lv. CHICAGO 6.00 p. m., daily.
Ar. BUFFALO 7.45 a. m.

Send 4c. postage for "Pan-American Souvenir" and other beautifully illustrated publications.
O. W. Ruggles, Gen'l Pass'r & Tkt. Agt., Chicago.

Bethany College.
Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,
J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty.

OCEAN EXCURSION TO NEW YORK

BIG FOUR CHESAPEAKE
& OHIO ROUTE
The Rhine, Alps and Battlefield Line.

Stop-over Privileges at Old Point Comfort going; Buffalo—Returning.

Route No. 1, $35.00.
Going via Big Four Route to Cincinnati; Chesapeake & Ohio Railway to Old Point or Norfolk; Old Dominion Line (meals and berths included on steamer) to New York, Returning via Pennsylvania Railroad and Pennsylvania Lines, or via New York Central to Buffalo and Lake Shore or Michigan Central to Chicago.

Route No. 2, $33.00.
Going, same as Route No. 1. Returning via West Shore, Lehigh Valley or D. L. & W. Rys. to Buffalo; New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad or Grand Trunk to Chicago.

Tickets will be on sale July 1 to October 20, limited to return within ten days, except on return trip, if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent at Buffalo or agents at Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, within original ten-day limit, stop-over of ten days additional is allowed at any one of those points. Stop-over at Old Point Comfort is allowed in either direction within limit of ticket.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Route through the Allegheny and Blue Ridge mountains, Shenandoah and Mount Vernon and the historic region of Virginia, in connection with the ocean trip of eighteen hours from Norfolk or Old Point Comfort to New York, offers the most beautiful, varied and interesting trip in America.

For further particulars address
J. C. TUCKER, G. N. A., C. C. C. & St. L. Ry.,
234 Clark Street, Chicago.
W. E. CONKLYN, N. W. P. A., C. & O. Ry.,
234 Clark Street, Chicago.

MISSIONARY BOOKS of INTENSE INTEREST

With the Tibetans in Tent and Temple

By DR. SUSIE C. RIJNHART. The Narrative of the Events of a Journey Into the Closed Land. Fully illustrated from original drawings and photos never before published. 12mo, decorated cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

"A book of extraordinary and thrilling interest. . . . It is a tale of rare bravery and devotion from the lips of this intrepid woman."—Springfield Republican.

"Worth More than 5,000 Books."

Village Life in China

By ARTHUR H. SMITH, D.D. A Study in Sociology. 8vo, fully Illustrated, $2.00.

"Arthur H. Smith has added a second to those extraordinary studies of China Life, of which he is so easily master. No book like this has been written on China, except one, and that is Dr. Smith's 'Chinese Characteristics.' The two books together may fairly be said to give a clearer idea of China as it is than any or all of the 5,000 or 6,000 works published on the Empire during the last century."

—Philadelphia Press.

"A Brilliant Portrayal."

Korea and Her Neighbors

By ISABELLA BIRD BISHOP, F.R.G.S. A Narrative of Travel, with an Account of the recent Vicissitudes and Present Position of the Country. With thirty-four Illustrations from photographs by the Author. Two Colored Maps, Four Appendices and an Index. 8vo., cloth, $2.00.

"We all know her practiced pen and signal abilities, her amazing courage, and her fine art in the making of books, so that one opens with anticipatory pleasure the comely volume in which she pictures the Korean people and country. We imagine few readers will be disappointed in reading of her adventures, her comments upon them, and her lively but carefully worded descriptions."

—The Critic.

"Reads Like Fiction."

John G. Paton

Missionary to the New Hebrides. An Autobiography. Revised and enlarged edition edited by his brother. With an Introductory Note by Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D. Illustrated. Vols. I., II. and III., in one volume. 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

A new, complete, authorized edition of this thrilling work, giving an account of Dr. Paton's life and adventures from 1824 to 1888, embracing all that is contained in Vols. I., II. and III.

"In Missionary Literature the Fleming H. Revell Co. easily takes the lead. A glance at their catalogue 'Around the World with Missionary Guides and Interpreters' is sufficient to show how wide is the field covered, and how important are the contributions which have been made to Missionary Literature."—The Christian Century.

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY

CHICAGO: 63 Washington St. NEW YORK: 158 Fifth Ave.

TORONTO: 27 Richmond St. West.

Verbeck of Japan

A Citizen of No Country

By WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS. A life story of foundation work inaugurated by Guido Fridolin Verbeck. Illustrated, 12mo., cloth, $1.50.

"As a biography the work is excellent; reverential, candid, with subordination of detail and impressive massing of essentials. Aside, however, from the interest as a biography which attaches to the book, the invaluable and permanent addition which it makes to our literature on Japan adds further consequence to other important features of the volume."—Public Opinion.

"A Mirror of Chinese Traits."

Chinese Characteristics

By ARTHUR H. SMITH, D.D. New Edition. With 20 full-page Illustrations and Index, and characteristic decoration for each chapter. 8vo., cloth, $2.00.

"'Village Life' and 'Chinese Characteristics' are not only two of the very best books on China, but two of the very best books which have ever been published by any author on any country at any time."—Dr. Talcott Williams.

"The Throbbing Heart of Turkey."

Constantinople

And its Problems. Its Peoples, Customs, Religions and Progress. By HENRY OTIS DWIGHT, LL.D. Illustrated. 12mo. cloth, $1.25 net. (Postage 12 cents.)

It depicts the inner life of the city of Constantinople. It deals with the habits of a heterogeneous and picturesque population; with their hopes and fears, their joys and amusements, their thoughts, motives and environment, and also with those social and religious ideas and national and commercial currents which make the greater part of the inhabitants of the city mere sojourners there. It is largely this ebb and flow of population which gives to Constantinople its characteristic quality as arbiter in morals and religion for the Empire, making it in fact the great throbbing heart of Turkey.

"The Neglected Peninsula."

Arabia, the Cradle of Islam

By Rev. S. M. ZWEMER, F.R.G.S. Studies in the Geography, People, and Politics of the Peninsula; with an account of Islam and Missionary Work. With Maps, Diagrams, and numerous Illustrations. 8vo., cloth, $2.00.

"It comes at once into the vacant place of an up-to-date authority upon 'the neglected peninsula.' The comprehensive scope of the volume covers a wide range of interest, scientific and commercial, historical and literary, sociological and religious."—The Outlook.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Vol. I.

Chicago, October 17, 1901.

No. 22.

LEADING FEATURES.

The New Life in Christ

The Real Assassin

One-Sided Prosperity

Property in Chapters

British Correspondence

A Study in Character

Too Late for Recognition

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company, 358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arrearage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM....

Chicago Indianapolis Cincinnati Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C., And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent, 234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

AN UP-TO-DATE SUNDAY SCHOOL

A WORKER'S MANUAL.

A TREATISE ON SUNDAY SCHOOL MANAGEMENT BY A SKILLED WORKMAN—A CHRISTIAN EDUCATOR OF RIPE EXPERIENCE,

E. A. FOX,

General Secretary the Kentucky Sunday School Association.

This bright little book had an interesting origin. The author realizing the need for an authoritative treatise on the subject, outlined what he considered to be a model, up-to-date Sunday School. This outline was sent to the leading Sunday School workers of the United States for criticism. Almost without exception, the author was highly complimented, and few changes were suggested. This outline, improved by the valuable ideas thus secured forms the basis of the book. It furnishes an epitome of with well developed plans for inaugurating and using them, adapting it to the use of the busy superintendent and teacher. No Sunday School worker can study this manual without catching new angles of light on the problem of successful Sunday School management. Get this valuable little volume, follow its suggestions and your Sunday School is certain to be attractive and successful.

The Very Latest and Best Methods in Sunday School Work.

Single Copy, 25 Cents, Postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY,

358 Dearborn Street,

CHICAGO.

BELLS all kinds, big and little—for Church & School, for Fire, Factory and Farm. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY CO., Northville, Mich. Catalogue FREE.

BLMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BELLS Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

25c. THE LADIES' FRIEND Hopkins' Bleaching Gloves Made from the Best Glove-kid in Black, Wine Tan, and Chocolate. Just the thing for Housecleaning, Gardening, Driving, Wheeling, Outing, Golf, etc. Sizes, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Write for terms to agents. Hopkins Glove Co., B Apollo, Cincinnati, O.

RHEUMATISM... Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, drawn cords, and hardened muscles. If your druggist has not these remedies in stock, do not take anything else. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., October 17, 1901.

Number 22.

EDITORIAL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

THE NEW LIFE IN CHRIST.

IT has been said, and needs repeating, that the call of the Master is not to acceptance of a creed, obedience to an outward form of service, or identification with an external organization. It is far more imperious than this. It is a call to himself. He is greater than creed or ordinance or church. If the call of Christ was merely to these it would be far less compelling and alluring than it is. This is the reason why its true significance is likely to be lost by three sorts of people. One is the dogmatist, who reduces religion to a formula. The correct definition of truth is of first importance to him. His articles of belief are logically impregnable. He is prepared to define and defend the faith with precision and courage. Yet his may be but an intellectual and barren nature, in which light indeed is present, but is only half itself because it has never wedded with love, and is forever deprived of that paternity which begets the gentle graces of the Christian life.

The second is the formalist, who defines religion as compliance with a form of worship or obedience to a commandment. This form may be an order of service, or a method of work, or an ordinance of the church. It matters little in which field it lies. If the chief emphasis is placed here, then life exhausts itself in one limited channel, and fails to find its true enrichment. Let it be freely granted that the order of service is beautiful and has proved its value through generations of worshipping and rejoicing saints; that the method of work has produced the happiest results, or that the ordinance is of divine origin and finds explicit sanction in the Word of God, yet the issue is the same. The man who gives his supreme thought to the advocacy of the form, whatever it may be, and however approved of the Bible, is essentially a formalist, as certainly as the one who devotes himself chiefly to the defense of a doctrine (no matter how true it may be, and capable of Scriptural proof) is a dogmatist.

The third is the builder of an organization, the promoter of a plan of getting people into a visible body with a definite and fixed method of procedure. The man with this passion is a mechanic, even though the mechanism he is constructing should bear the name of a church. Wherever the creed, the form or the organization becomes in the thought of its advocates an end instead of means to the greater end of Christian life, it is but the apparatus of a dogmatic, formal or mechanical religion. It was not to such things that Jesus called men, but to himself, the Creed of creeds, the divine Substance of which all forms are shadows, the ever-living Head of the church. Every Christian will have a creed. It may have many articles or only one. It may be held as a test or as a testimony. But when the creed performs its perfect function, it points always to Christ, and obscures him never. It has value only as it links the soul with its Lord. Every Christian will have methods of worship and work. They may be simple or elaborate. In worship, public or private, the essential thing is not time, place or manner, but the spirit which impels. The words of Jesus at the Samaritan well reveal the one necessary element of worship, whether it is as simple as the Quaker service of silence, or as elaborate as the most gorgeous ceremonial of the Roman Catholic—"they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." The form is nothing in itself. It is the ladder up which the soul climbs to God. But if it lead no whither, and be only a means of satisfying a sense of duty, or of gratifying an æsthetic taste, it is worthless and hollow, sounding brass and clanging cymbal. Similarly every Christian will desire to observe the ordinances prescribed by our Lord. These he finds very few—only two, baptism and the Holy Supper—and very simple in character, directly related to the most vital experiences of the soul, birth into the kingdom and nourishment upon the Living Bread. He will wish to give these ordinances their true place in his program of obedience, and his only thought will be to conform as nearly as possible both in outward act and in spiritual attitude, to the will of Jesus and the customs of the apostles. When thus observed the ordinances possess their true value and become not only tokens of obedience but means of grace, the consecrating acts in which the believer meets his Lord in loving submission and fellowship, and claims the full redemptive virtue of the Master's life. Yet even these deeply significant rites may be wholly devitalized by a disregard of their purpose, and an absorbed attention to their mere performance. In such an atmosphere they wholly lose their significance. For a disregard of their informing spirit and purpose, no correctness of outward procedure can atone. Both must be observed in like degree, for even the form here has meaning, as an appointment and observance of our Lord. But it is himself of which they evermore speak, as the source and sustainer of the true life of the soul.

Once more, every Christian will wish to associate himself with those of like precious faith, and thus the worshiping and working community, the church, becomes the normal expression of the new life in the world. While it is true that Jesus but once mentioned the church, and spoke constantly of the kingdom, yet it was of a kingdom that should become, in part at least, visible in the church, and should, through the church as a means, come to its full realization in the world. Thus it was that the apostles gave unremitting attention to the growth and culture of the church, through which the kingdom was manifesting itself, and thus the church is to-day and evermore a divine organism, the visible embodiment of redemptive forces among men, through the power of the indwelling Christ. Yet it not infrequently appears that the church itself becomes the end rather than the instrument in the thought of some earnest and devoted people. The development of the local church becomes a passion, with no thought of the true service it was intended to render. It becomes a close corporation, into which there is an enthusiastic effort to bring new members, not so much because they need or will thereby become possessed of the regenerate life, or that by this means the church may render the community in which it is set the service it owes, or that it may contribute more adequately to the evangelization of the world. The problem is rather that of enabling the church to "succeed," and this success is interpreted in terms of material equipment and popularity. Such a church has never heard the call of the Master. It has never set him in the midst. It is saving itself and not the world, and is doing that in the most material and commercial sense.

Jesus called men to none of these things as objects and ends. Neither a belief, a ritual, an ordinance nor an organization is the essential thing, but a new life in Christ. Possessed of this life one believes in him with an unwavering faith which scarcely knows that it has a creed; worships him with a loving reverence which is never conscious of a formal service, runs to him with the happy cry, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" and regards the ordinances of his appointment as delightful expressions of loyalty to him, never reckoning them as hard or unnecessary; finds in his church the fellowship of kindred spirits and the opportunity of redemptive effort for the world, hardly aware that there is a formal organization for the very joy he feels in the fellowship of the people of God. In such an atmosphere, belief, ordinances and organization are overshadowed completely by the consciousness of the new life in Christ. They are never absent or neglected, but are like the unconscious functions of the body in normal and active health. They have no speech or language; their voice is not heard. But silently and persistently they perform their duties in the well-ordered life, and leave the man free to render in full and happy activity his service to the world. Man does not live to breathe, nor eat, nor have red blood in full ebb and flow; these are the silent aids to a life left free for higher purposes. The soul does not exist in order to believe, or observe ordinances, or enter an institution; its end is the possession and highest use of the divine life. And these are the ceaseless helpers, the unsleeping warders, that nourish that life and guard the fair domain where the soul keeps tryst with God.

THE REAL ASSASSIN.

BY THE VISITOR.

THE events of the past few weeks have served to illustrate strikingly the rapidity with which great emotions subside. The assassination of the President was the signal for an uprising of popular feeling such as has had no parallel in our national experience. The scene on the grounds of the Pan-American Exposition immediately after the tragedy occurred could hardly be put into words. The fierceness with which men, who a moment before had been dignified and leisurely individuals, fought for an opportunity to tear in fragments the wretched creature who had fired the shots, was a forcible reminder, if not a convincing proof, of the brute survivals in the human race. The Visitor has never seen so appalling a sight as he witnessed when the mad crowd about the Temple of Music caught sight of the assassin, brought out by a group of detectives and guards, in a wild dash to get him away in safety. He hopes never to see the like again. Few perhaps realized the awful danger, not to the man, but to the republic. If in a land believing in law and its upholding, within sight of the greatest mechanical and artistic triumphs of the western world, the law-abiding and orderly instincts of an enlightened people could not be trusted to leave the execution of justice to the authorized tribunals, how could any one expect lynch-law to be stayed in the remote and unpoliced regions of the land? But we were saved that calamity at least, and for that we ought to be grateful.

Yet how soon has that frenzy of indignation died away! Perhaps the passion of resentment and grief was too fierce to last. One instinctively thinks back to the destruction of the "Maine," and recalls the wild blaze of anger, and the rapid obliteration of the whole incident from the minds of all save a few whose dead did not come back. But there are some things which ought not to be allowed to pass from mind. One is that the President, whoever he may be, ought not to be exposed in needless ways. Democracy demands and appreciates a suitable accessibility on the part of the chief magistrate of the land. Yet who that has ever attended a public reception of the President, even in the White House, where reasonable provisions can be made for his safety and comfort, did not feel that it was a purposeless infliction upon human nature to compel a President to shake hands with a seemingly endless line of people whose only motive is curiosity. One needs only watch the face of the victim toward the close of the ordeal to see how unnecessary and wasteful of vital energy is the practice. But when the scene is changed for a public gathering like that at Buffalo, the excuse for the infliction is reduced to the minimum. The President had done his work on the previous day. His address had been delivered, the grounds and buildings visited, and that should have sufficed. One of our party said on the forenoon of that fatal Friday, without thought of the coming tragedy, "How strange that the President should be brought back for a public reception after so full a day here as was yesterday." But we learn by experience. Such a mistake will hardly be made again.

It is fortunate that the assassin himself has so quickly fallen from public notice. With the exception of the anarchistic press and the sensational yellow journals, no notice is being taken of him, and the oblivion of forgetfulness is already settling over him, even before the last scene is played. This is right. No one wishes any mock heroics. The danger lies, however, in forgetting the spirit that sent him to his work. It is of small moment whether or not he was deliberately chosen to perform his wretched part in the President's taking-off. It remains true that his act was applauded by those who do not shun declarations of sympathy. These people and their utterances should be watched. They need not be persecuted. That only makes martyrs of them. But they need watching and care. Not the sort of watching and care which the police give, for that goes but a short way. Rather they must have the watch care which the church alone can give, for their worst possession is not anarchy, but atheism. No anarchist was ever yet a believer in God. When you put Christian faith in the heart of a man, you remove the very foundation and soil of anarchy. And there is no other way to do it. Neither force, persecution, denunciation nor half-reforms can do it. A regenerate life alone can solve the dark problem.

But a factor little thought of, yet more responsible than all others, was the sensational journalism which curses our cities, and Chicago as much as any. The particular example of yellow journal which disgraces Chicago is perhaps little regarded by respectable people. You are not surprised when you see it in the hands of a certain class, those who want sporting news chiefly, or scandal, or even ordinary events served up with a sauce of sensationalism which gratifies a perverted taste. But you always form your estimate of any one who is seen with that paper in his hand. It is noticeable how rarely a woman is seen with a copy. The reason is not far to seek. She avoids it as she would familiarity with a depraved creature of her own sex or the other, or as she would a smirch upon her reputation. When a respectable-looking man has a copy in hand, you look at him with a certain shock of surprise, as you would if you discovered by his unkempt hands or disreputable linen that he was only pretending to be a gentleman.

This is the journal that persistently taught the doctrine, through articles and cartoons, that the President was the foe of the poor and was committed, now as master, now as servant, to organizations whose function it was to oppress and defraud the artisan and small tradesman. Intelligent people smile at the caricatures and even slanders of public men, but the ignorant, among whom such journals have a large and eager reading, take them with a seriousness which poverty and misfortune turn to hate. We should be appalled if we knew how many readers of the yellow press applauded secretly the act of the assassin, feeling that at last their wrongs were avenged. Yet we denounce anarchy, and allow the far more dangerous and less sincere yellow journal to go on undisturbed.

If such a paper was consistent with itself, it might claim some mitigation of criticism. But this is never its way. After months of uninterrupted persiflage, slander, falsehood and ridicule directed at Mr. McKinley, the assassination was the signal for a complete somersault, and such fulsome, lavish and flamboyant eulogies of the dead statesman were not to be found in any other section of the public press. This cheap, chameleon-hued journalism is the most serious menace to the republic today, and no number of contributions from so-called popular writers who have sunk to this level, or ex-congressmen who report pugilism and other sporting events, or professors, or poetesses, or preachers who for reward link their names with the list of contributors to such a sheet, can make it respectable, or relieve its readers, when discovered, from the odium which must attach to them. Fanaticism is dangerous, and may lead a man to the most fearful crime; anarchy is to be dreaded and watched and eradicated as the natural offspring of atheism, and likely to lead to fanaticism and assassination; but more to be feared and loathed than either is the yellow journal, posing as a friend of the poor, yet building up fortunes as colossal as any trust could produce; claiming to search out the truth at all costs, yet dealing in slander and defamation in every issue; professing interest in religion and the higher ministries of life, yet using these only as a cloak of respectability to cover a foul and conscienceless career; and though lifting its hands in well-feigned astonishment and indignation at the fall of a President, and covering his grave with a profusion of pious and laudatory phrases, yet in reality the malign cause of distrust, hatred, plotting, anarchy and murder; in a word, the real assassin of the President.

ONE-SIDED PROSPERITY.

MOST people are engaged in the mad pursuit of material things. Carlyle's bitter words were never truer than now, "The hell of these days is the infinite terror of not getting on, especially of not making money." We are now having prosperous times, the wealth of the country is rolling up with wonderful rapidity. In this general prosperity we all in some degree share. It becomes us to pause and take an inventory; asking ourselves on what side we are prospering. Is our prosperity one-sided, or does it include the higher as well as the lower, the inner as well as the outer side of things?

These two kinds of prosperity are not incompatible. There is no reason why the man should sink when the merchant rises; there is no reason why outward prosperity should produce leanness of soul. But there is a danger in this direction, and hence the warnings of Scripture. Matthew Arnold told us with characteristic frankness that as a people "we were too beastly prosperous." He thought that we were in danger of moral deterioration and that we needed a taste of adversity to toughen our moral fiber. Prosperity has its dangers as truly as adversity. Many a man has passed through deep trial, coming out of it purified and strengthened, but when prosperity has come his religious life has wilted. But there have also been those who have withstood the peculiar temptations of prosperity. They have not become top-heavy, and lost their balance; they have not grown earthly-minded or dull in soul; they have not become purse-proud or self-sufficient. They have made friends of the unrighteous mammon so as to make it minister to their highest welfare; they have made wealth their servant instead of being its slave; they have carefully cultivated the habit of liberality so as to increase their giving in proportion to their gains; they have looked upon the increase of wealth as the increase of opportunity in the service of humanity.

The accumulation of wealth is not an end in itself, but is merely a means to an end. Material prosperity is bought too dear when it is bought at the expense of spiritual prosperity. "A man's life"—his true life—"consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesses." A full mind is better than a full purse; big hearts are better than big crops. Better have less in the larder and more in the library; better put less on the body and more on the soul. Not that it is wrong to seek wealth or the things that wealth brings; but it is wrong to be absorbed in money getting; to toil and strive for money as the summum bonum of human life, saying:

"Get money, money, still
And then let virtue follow if she will."

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, but lay up," that is, lay up now, "treasures in heaven." Accumulate the coin of the spiritual realm. Cultivate spiritual aspiration. Give some part of your labor for higher things. Provide for the soul.

Nothing is surer than this, that a life lived upon the material plane is unsatisfactory. "All the labor of man is for his mouth and yet his appetite is not filled." Happiness and unhappiness are subjective qualities. Some people are worried because they have too much property, others because they have too little. We see how much a man has and we envy him; did we see how little he enjoys we should rather pity him. The main cause of the unrest and dissatisfaction of the present day is found in the undue absorption in material things. Never was there so much outward comfort, and never was there so much discontent. Men are spending their money for that which is not bread and their labor for that which satisfieth not. They are laboring for the meat which perisheth while they leave untasted the meat which endureth. We need a revaluation of things. We need to see that material prosperity is but an empty shell unless it be accompanied by spiritual prosperity.

The wisdom of life is to do a thing and have done with it. Try to do the best, rightest thing you can—but then leave it. It may not be the very wisest thing possible. Probably it will not be; you are not infallible. Why should you expect to make no blunders? But if you have honestly tried to make out, in the time given you, what was the best to do, and have done it, that is all you have to do. Go on to the next.—Rev. Brooke Herford.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Religious War in France.

THE three months of grace given by the new French law of associations having expired, all religious confraternities which have not applied for, or have failed to receive, authorization, have been dispersed. The Jesuits, Assumptionists and other orders which knew they had not the slightest chance of obtaining authorization, did not apply for it, and they have already left French territory. But a large number of orders which have not applied for authorization intend to resist the law on the ground that they are associations and not religious orders. Many religious orders declare that "authorization"—entailing as it would the right of government officials to enter monasteries, examine the accounts, inquire into the sources of income and the disposition thereof, and even to interfere in acts of the chapters—would make it impossible for them to live according to their vows. A large number of these orders have taken refuge in England. Some of the scenes, as they left their native land, were pathetic in the extreme. The Romish church is a strong and subtle foe; and it is the general conviction that France has entered upon a long and bitter struggle, the end of which it is impossible to foresee.

The Episcopal Convention.

The Episcopal triennial convention at San Francisco has had before it many subjects of interest. The proposal to change the name of the body from the Protestant Episcopal church to "the American church" did not meet with general favor, the main objection to the proposed change being that it would give offense to other religious bodies, implying as it would that the Episcopal church is the only American church. The tendency of certain religious bodies to assert that they are "the whole thing" does not, to say the least of it, savor of modesty. The burning question has been that of divorce. The position which has finally been reached that no man or woman divorced for any cause whatever shall be married again by an Episcopal clergyman, notwithstanding that the person desiring such remarriage shall have been the innocent party, is one from which the Episcopal church will have to withdraw, for there is nothing in reason, and certainly there is nothing in Scripture, to forbid the innocent party to a divorce granted on the ground of infidelity, marrying again.

Union of Methodist Bodies.

One of the first stages in the union movement will be union of separate bodies who have the same general policy or doctrinal position. All the different varieties of Presbyterians, or Baptists, or Methodists ought to have little difficulty in coming together. Considerable advance in this direction has already been made among the Methodists. The various divisions in Canada and Australia have effected a complete union. In these countries there is but one Methodist church. In England the movement toward organic union has been greatly accelerated by the recent ecumenical conference. In this country also there is similar tendency toward the union of the many branches of the Methodist family, and although in the south the race problem stands in the way, that must finally be surmounted, for nothing can hinder the ultimate union of all God's people.

Should the Public Schools Teach Religion?

This ever-recurring question has recently been brought before the people of Cleveland by the action of the school council in passing a resolution providing that the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments and the twenty-third Psalm should be taught in the public schools of the city. No question that has come before the people of Cleveland for a long time has aroused so much interest or provoked so much discussion. One of the fallacies to which some disputants cling is that the Bible is a sectarian book. It may be interpreted after a sectarian fashion, it is true, but it is the universally accepted authority in things moral. Besides, it is surely worthy of a place in the curriculum of every school and college as the greatest classic of all time. But the questions involved in this discussion are too wide for a brief note.

The Pan-American Congress.

On Oct. 21 the international conference of American republics begins its sessions in the City of Mexico. All but Honduras and the Dominican republic have selected their representatives to this Pan-American congress, and it is expected these will be appointed before the sessions begin. The conference will thus represent nineteen republics, including that of the United States. The significance of this gathering is found not alone in the knitting together of the American countries in closer commercial relations, but in the impetus which it will give toward the larger ideal of "the federation of the world." In ways we little dream of commerce is the handmaid of religion and reciprocity in trade means reciprocity in higher things.

CHICAGO NOTES.

There has been a falling out among local politicians, and startling revelations have been made regarding the peculations of city officials. It looks as if the Augean stable was about to be cleansed.

The perplexing problem in Chicago, says the Philadelphia Record, is how to keep up municipal appearances on the valuation which property owners put upon their holdings for taxing purposes. The motto of Chicago seems to be: "Millions for speculation; mills for assessment."

There is prospect that the John Crerar public library will soon be erected on the lake front. The building is to cost a million dollars. Steps are being taken to secure the consent of the property owners fronting the lake, and legislation granting control of the park property to the city.

Rigorous measures are to be adopted to keep tramps out of the city the coming winter. The heads of the organized charities are urging the authorities to provide a municipal lodging house; and Miss Jane Addams of Hull House utters the warning that care must be taken to separate the sheep from the goats even among the "hobos."

The grand lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars is now in session at the Washingtonian

Home in West Madison street. This society, which did excellent service in the cause of temperance, seems to have become moribund. It needs to be born again. At the present session the grand chief templar recommends that the gospel temperance work of the order be especially extended among Scandinavians and negroes. It is to be hoped that the recommendation will be carried out, and that the work will not be confined within these prescribed limits.

At the meeting of the Marquette Club on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of the Chicago fire, Mr. Booker T. Washington uttered these wise words:

"The central idea that I wish to impress this evening is that this nation will be strong in its citizenship just in proportion as in its growth it lifts up the nearly ten millions of black people. It will grow weak in proportion as it yields to the temptation of neglecting or degrading these people of African descent."

One of the forthcoming events which is being looked forward to with special interest is the meeting of the American Missionary Association at the First Congregational Church of Oak Park, Oct. 22d. This society is doing more than any other organization in the country for the uplifting of the despised races. Its work is principally among the colored people, the Chinese, and the Indians.

At the Christian convention held in the Chicago Avenue church, a distinctly revival spirit was manifested. Among the subjects discussed were: The need of a general revival, the revival in the days of Jonathan Edwards, the great revival in Ireland in 1857-8, the revival in the days of Whitfield and Wesley, and the need of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the United States. The desire for a revival grows more intense, and of that we are glad, but instead of waiting for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit the churches ought to receive the spirit already given, and work in the fullness of his power.

The National Purity Convention was in session last week in the First M. E. Church. One of the main objects of this society is the abolition of the state regulation of vice. Maurice Gregory of London, who represents the English societies engaged in this movement, said that the most effective way of suppressing the evil was by attacking the landlord who rented his property for immoral purposes. Mrs. E. M. Whittemore of New York, founder of the "Door of Hope" rescue homes, recited a number of her experiences in the rescue field. She declared that preventive work was as necessary as the labor in which she is engaged. She deplored the conditions which made it necessary for young girls to work at what she termed starvation wages in the big cities.

Mr. Drummond has a fine figure which puts his conception of the New Testament, and of apostolic teaching in its relation to that of Christ, very suggestively. Development, he says, is "a spiral round Christ, and mounts higher by returning upon him." If this figure could be reduced to prose—if it could be demonstrated by exhibiting in their places the facts which trace this curve—if it could be put beyond doubt that the return is really to him, a great service would be done to the Church and to theology.

CONTRIBUTED

NOT AS I WILL

Blindfolded and alone I stand
 With unknown thresholds on each hand;
 The darkness deepens as I grope,
 Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
 Yet this one thing I learn to know
 Each day more surely as I go,
 That doors are opened, ways are made,
 Burdens are lifted or are laid by some great law unseen and still Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
 "Not as I will."

Blindfolded and alone I wait,
 Loss seems too bitter, gain too late;
 Too heavy burdens in the load,
 And too few helpers on the road,
 And joy is weak and grief is strong,
 And years and days so long, so long;
 Yet this one thing I learn to know
 Each day more surely as I go,
 That I am glad the good and ill
 By changeless law are ordered still,
 "Not as I will."

"Not as I will," the sound grows sweet
 Each time my lips the words repeat.
 "Not as I will," the darkness feels
 More safe than light when this thought steals
 Like whispered voice to calm and bless
 All unrest and all loneliness.
 "Not as I will," because the One
 Who loved me first and best has gone
 Before us on the road, and still
 For us must all his love fulfill.
 "Not as we will."

—Helen Hunt Jackson.

THE PROPERTY OF CHAPTERS.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE later portions of the Old Testament reveal the growth of an astonishing enthusiasm on the part of the Jewish community for the written Word of God. When the national experience had passed into the ecclesiastical phase; when the exile had wrought the dissolution of all political independence and the Hebrew nation was giving place to the Jewish church, there began to appear this element of reverence for the Temple and the Torah, the Building and the Book, which colors all the subsequent life of Judaism. The law-givers emphasized the necessity of brooding over the Word of God. The wise men reflected upon its contents. The prophets urged the people to its study and the psalmists portrayed in elaborate richness of phrase the satisfaction of losing oneself in the mysteries of that Word, which was "a lamp unto the feet and a light to the path." There can be no question that life under the law was in many respects happy and rewarding, and that the Word of God as it was gradually taking form proved the delight of many Jewish lives. Whatever may have been the pedantries into which Scriptural study fell in the days just preceding the Christian era, and which tended to make all Jewish use of the Old Testament formal and mechanical, certain it is that the Jewish family of the late Old Testament time found in the study of the Scriptures a satisfaction which nothing else could yield. The honored precept commending the statutes of God to the attention of parents was literally and lovingly obeyed, and children and parents became alike versed in the lore of the sacred writings. That great text needs still to be pondered: "These words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates."

The same diligent study of the Word of God is found in the early Christian communities. The Old Testament was the norm of instruction, among the churches, for the reason primarily that all the first Christians were Jews, and that as the church spread the Scriptures which had become sacred to believers of the inner circle became also the welcomed companions of even Gentile converts to the new faith. Family life was enriched by the study of the Old Testament. Timothy and other children were taught the Holy Scriptures. The Psalms were the hymnbook of the early church. Christian thought was saturated with quotations from the Old Testament. The proofs of Christian doctrines were found in these older writings. It is not strange, therefore, that as the Holy Scriptures reached completion toward the close of the first and in the beginning of the second century, the Old Testament handed over to the Christian church however reluctantly by the Jewish people who had thrown themselves around it like a protecting wall of fire, and the New Testament coming into being, part by part and book by book in the different places where Christianity had its being, this library of sacred books, this biblia or Bible, became a treasured possession of the church, to be held in hand, in head and in heart as the Word of God, "which liveth and abideth forever."

The place of the Bible in the church through the centuries has been most conspicuous. Everywhere it has been regarded as the source of appeal, even in those sections of the church which did not permit its popular perusal. It has been the basis of every reformation and revival. Its preservation has been no less wonderful than that of the church, and its vitality is like the ever-unfolding life of its Master. Where the Bible has been prized, there life and liberty, scholarship and progress have appeared. Where the Bible has been suppressed, numberless evils have beset the pathway of the race. The Bible is a pillar of fire before the advancing host of Christ.

One need not urge the importance of the Bible in Christian circles, nor its beauty where those who read it have the slightest acquaintance with literary form. Nor need one refer to the successful issue of the Bible out of whatever dangers have threatened its life; dangers of persecution, of suppression, of ridicule, of rationalism. There is one danger, however, which it cannot complacently face, and that is the danger of neglect. Its foes are of its own household. There is no power from without that can do it harm, but it is subjected to the bitterest of all discredit when it is neglected; and this is the crying sin of the present age. For this sin parents in Christian families are largely responsible. An earlier generation promoted the study of the Bible in the home and in the common schools. Children were taught to learn from day to day verses from the Holy Word and to lay them up in store as literary and religious treasures ministering to a furnished and resourceful life. Children were unconsciously given the formative principles of character through the committing to memory of Holy Scripture. The Psalmist exclaimed, "Thy word I have hid in my heart that I might not sin against thee," and the safeguard of multitudes of lives has lain in the possession of paragraphs, the property of chapters, which this practice of learning the words of Scripture has promoted.

Today the Bible suffers from neglect of this very custom. The family life is too hurried to permit of the morning worship, and the parents are too busy with other things or too indifferent to provide their children with that knowledge of the Scriptures which the public school does not even undertake. And yet no book makes stronger appeal to children than the Bible. Its stories are their constant delight, and if left to their own choice they would prefer these to the most interesting narratives provided by children's papers. There is great need of the revival of the practice of memorizing Scripture in Christian homes. The Scripture reading of John Ruskin and his mother is a story that needs to be recalled by Christian people. Daily that mother and son gave time to the study of the Bible, going straight through from Genesis to Revelation. The result was that the child was furnished with the thoughts and words of Holy Scripture until he became not only the master of English prose style, but the possessor of an enthusiasm for social service which resulted in the whole social settlement movement of the present time. Such an experience is worth keeping in mind. Every child ought to have the privilege of being taught consistently and continuously such parts of the Bible as have approved themselves to the generations as most beautiful, suggestive and inspiring. A child who has come to years of discernment without a property of chapters, which includes such psalms as the eighth, nineteenth, twenty-third, seventy-second; such prophecies as Isaiah fifty-third, and such portions of the New Testament as the Sermon on the Mount, many of the parables, the Psalm of Love in First Corinthians thirteenth, and other parts of the Bible which experience will suggest, has been defrauded of an inalienable right, and will scarcely be able to recompense himself by whatever diligence he may show in future years. The imperative duty of Christian parents in this period is the teaching of the Bible to their children in the home.

Missionary work is essential to the working out of the eternal purpose of redemption which has been developing throughout the ages. To bring to fulfillment the predictions of the past concerning the kingdom is the end of all the varied activities of the Church. The Holy Spirit is now moving upon the Church to bring her into step with the march of God's advancing purpose of redemption. In the progress of the kingdom there is no stopping place. Every forward movement is preparatory to a still larger one. The times are pregnant with destiny. Faith in the old religions is fading out; walls of separation are crumbling; barriers of race prejudice are breaking down; sealed empires are being opened up; the ends of the earth are being brought together that "the door of faith may be opened to the nations." All things seem to be preparing the way for the coming of the kingdom. The air is tremulous with the approach of a mighty spiritual movement in which the glories of the kingdom are to culminate.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

WILLIAM ADAMSON, D. D.

THE sad blow which has fallen on the people of the United States in the foul murder of its Chief Magistrate has been keenly and sympathetically felt by the inhabitants of Great Britain. They have been shocked—for a while stunned—and made to mourn with a genuine sorrow. Never before, perhaps, was it so manifest that blood is thicker than water, and that the two Anglo-Saxon nations are one in the common feeling which has surged through the great heart of the British and American people at this time—a feeling which has deepened the consciousness that both are united in the bundle of a common life. The unspeakably sad and lamented death of President McKinley will be overruled for good and one of its fruits will be the making one of the two Christian nations, whose mission is to add to the religious, moral and civilizing forces of the world as well as to promote its material advancement.

All classes have joined in the universal mourning, from the king on the throne to the arab on the street. All churches have held memorial services where prayers have been offered for the bereaved wife, the relatives and the republic. Nor have the new President and his associates in office been forgotten. The meetings were large and solemn and in many places the scene was of the most impressive description. The were particularly striking. I have been in the great city on days memorable in connection with the death of great men. I was there when Tennyson was buried in the grey Abbey of Westminster and the whole city was called upon to mourn the passing of the nation's poet. I was there when the news of the departure of the honored and beloved Gladstone was announced, and it was a privilege to be in the city on the day when President McKinley's body was laid in its last resting place. At each event there were signs that the inhabitants felt the solemnity of the occasion, and no less on the last occasion than on the previous ones. An American said, "When I walk through the streets I am led to think, by the many signs of grief, that I am in New York." The numerous flags were half-mast. The innumerable omnibuses had either their little flags half-mast, or the drivers had their whips draped. Many shops were shut, others had one shutter on, and while the services were being held the bells tolled their solemn dirge. Westminster Abbey was crowded with the elite of the nation, statesmen, ambassadors and representatives of royalty. St. Paul's was packed with upwards of eight thousand people and thousands could not gain admittance. The City Temple was crowded by representatives of the Free churches, whose leading ministers took part in the service.

Memorial Services in London.

The address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Parker, who had broken his holiday for the purpose of being present. After touching in a tender and eloquent manner on the murder of the President, his virtues and ability, and how closely the common sorrow had bound the two peoples, he considered the genesis of anarchism and the relation and duty of the Church thereto. The President was not struck down as an individual, but as representing society. In his person law, order, and government were aimed at, and the attempt made to produce social chaos and universal confusion. This spirit was abroad in many relations and manifested itself in many forms. It might be traced back to the nursery where disobedience to parents was laughed at and irreverence treated as a mere joke. The want of reverence is itself anarchy and dethrones God, seeking to put the devil in his place. This state of mind is more common than many imagine, and when fully developed brings forth murder, no respect being given to goodness, patriotism or religion. The better the ruler the more likely would the anarchist seek to destroy his life. It had been so in this instance. President McKinley was a man who feared God, loved his country and sought to secure the interests and the advancement of the race and he was struck down as if he had been the veriest tyrant who ever lived. The Church of Christ had a mission in the direction of destroying the spirit of anarchy and this could only be done by the preaching of Jesus Christ and holding forth the glad tidings which tell the sinner and the lost of his love and cross.

As the discourse proceeded, many were deeply affected and a solemn stillness pervaded the vast assembly as it stood while the grand organ sent forth the impressive notes of the "Dead March in Saul." The reading and prayers were chosen as suitable for the occasion. Altogether it was a service which will not be soon forgotten by those who took part in it as speakers or hearers.

The readers of "The Christian Century," I think, will forgive this brief notice of how the death of the American President touched the hearts of the British people. In the good providence of God it has already made those on this side of the great sea realize that the well-being of their brethren on the other side is the well-being of both, and the sorrow of one enters into the heart of the other. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." One touch of sorrow unites hearts which have been attuned to the heart of God our Father and his blessed Son.

Windermere, England.

THE OKLAHOMA STUDENT.

WM. H. MATLOCK.

IN denominational circles there exists a certain prejudice against state educational institutions. There is a popular belief that such schools are given over to evil influences. Religious partisans denounce them even as irreligious. There is doubtless much exaggeration in these statements. It is hardly probable that infidelity and immorality are as common in schools under state control as over-zealous friends of the Church would have Christian people believe. That a certain element is in attendance at state universities that would never be found in a denominational school is easily understood. On the other hand, that a bad element should give character to any institution of learning under the patronage of the state, is plainly the fault of the good people living in that commonwealth; for they might easily change the conditions by sending the hundreds of Christian young people kept isolated in church seminaries and Bible colleges to the state school. Are they not the property of the people? Why should they be abandoned by the Church? especially the Protestant church? To this interesting question I wish to contribute some observations of the past year in the Territorial University of Oklahoma.

The example is a good one. The case is extreme. The conditions politically and socially in a country so recently settled were, and may yet be, considered unfavorable. Who could expect a high standard of morality to prevail on the Indian frontier? Who could expect public schools to equip in a single decade young men and women for the freshman class of a university? Who could expect a university to exist at all in a country as new as Oklahoma and where the settlers of ten years ago met financial distresses season after season? But as early as 1892 the Legislature passed an act founding the University of Oklahoma and provided for its maintenance by a general tax of one-half mill on each dollar of valuation on the assessment roll of the territory. Section 13 of every township in the Cherokee Outlet was reserved and is now leased to furnish additional resources for the higher institutions of learning in the territory. Not only a territorial university but an agricultural college and several normal schools have been founded and are prosperous. The material equipments have been increased. The Board of Regents has been authorized to expend the present year $90,000 in new buildings for the territorial university at Norman. In spite of drouth the enrollment for the current semester is greatly increased.

The young people who present themselves to the Committee on Freshman Studies come mainly from within the territory. They have received their training in its public and high schools, or in its normal colleges. Some bring their credits from the states. The native student does not suffer in comparison. Many receive their training for college work in a three years' preparatory course conducted at the Territorial University.

The intellectual capacity of these young people, who in very many cases have not had good advantages, is certainly surprising. One might almost conclude that their minds are clearer for not having been overschooled. No matter, they do work worthy of the classes in more settled communities where the regular courses have been pursued the usual term of years for college entrance. And they do it enthusiastically and easily; they do it willingly. It so happens that the entire faculty is in favor of extensive library research in all the courses. The amount of this done here by the students, especially the college students, is truly remarkable and gratifying. To speak only of the students who have come directly under my control, their fidelity throughout the year has convinced me of their character and of their ability. Drones there are, but they fail. The bees abound.

Moral worth is a strange virtue. What is the most favorable environment for its growth? Why should one expect to meet with it at the centers of civilization sooner than on the border? We do. Should we? Is the educated, cultured man, or community, more likely to be morally worthy than the uneducated man or community? Are they? Always? Everywhere? Moral worth is older than culture. The history of the world reveals on every page a moral character in the human race independent of culture; but to be sure not opposed to it in any way. In every case, this splendid quality shines resplendent on the border as well as at the hub of the universe. The border hero is about as common as the border ruffian. They may both be strangers to the rule of three.

Perhaps this may be allowed to account for the fact that only twenty-nine out of 400 students enrolled last year have no church preference. Careful investigation shows that seventy-five are Northern Methodists, always zealous in the evangelization of new countries; sixty-one are Baptists, fifty-eight are Disciples, fifty-six are Southern Methodists, forty belong to the Presbyterian church, ten are Cumberland Presbyterians, eleven are Catholics; while several other churches are represented by one or two each. Church membership means a great deal. A daily voluntary chapel service brings seventy-five per cent of these students regularly to worship God. This formal expression of religious conviction would count for much by itself; but after a year in the midst of these young people I do not hesitate to vouch for the sincerity of their lives. They compare favorably with any company of young people I have ever known. Fifty young men attended the Y. M. C. A. meeting last Sunday afternoon in spite of the heat. There was no special meeting to attract them. Sterling worth was never more plainly to be seen on human faces than right here on the Indian border.

College practices are good indicators. New students are never hazed. They are met at the train, rooms are found for them, every kindness is shown them. While all kinds of athletics are in vogue yet the college "scrap" is unknown. Rowdysim is absent from all student gatherings. In general, a quiet, joyous, industrious life prevails throughout the college year. The students stay in the homes of the people and are respected by them. The faculty is Christian. Nearly every teacher, instructor and tutor is a member of some church. There is not one who is not morally and religiously qualified to occupy a chair in any denominational college. The Territorial University of Oklahoma is a Christian institution. President Boyd is a Christian, the professors are Christian gentlemen, the students are Christians, the life of the school is Christian. Why should the churches ever abandon it by withdrawing their sons and daughters? Why should it ever fall under the influence of irreligious men and students? Who would be to blame if it did? It is Christian now. Why should it ever become atheistic?
Norman, Okla.

FORMATIVE INFLUENCES.

G. B. VAN ARSDALL.

THE problem of the young people and their relation to the church is one for which the church has not as yet obtained a satisfactory solution. The fact that a considerable proportion of the young people, who receive the influence of the training and culture which the church offers, are still lost to any large usefulness in the church would seem to indicate inadequacy in the work and influence of the church. By this it is not meant to imply that these young people receive no practical benefits from the church. On the contrary, they are immeasurably better because of their contact with the church, although the final result in character may be far from satisfactory. But still I think the majority of pastors feel sensibly the loss which the church sustains because of her inability to carry more of the young people over from the period of adolescence to Christian manhood and womanhood. It is unquestionably true that the church does her best work at this very period, but here she also often misses her greatest opportunity. This is only the statement of the problem; its explanation and solution are more serious questions.

The unquestionable explanation of the indifference which so often manifests itself in young people at this time is that it is the period of most rapid change and development, and other formative influences become more effective than the church. Wherever the fault may be, no one can deny that this is just what transpires.

It would seem, too, that this very explanation of the fact suggests also at least one element of the solution of the problem. If it is true that the developing process of this period makes it easily possible for formative influences to become effective, is not the church missing her great opportunity in her failure to give to the young people lines of study and work that will serve their actual development? There are many illustrations of this. In their high school and college work the young people grow because they receive training which develops their mental powers. Are not the unpedagogical methods of our Sunday schools largely responsible for the lack of interest on the part of those boys and girls whom the church most needs? We cannot solve this problem by simply prating about the follies of young people. The church must study the problem of their development and give them food for growth at each time of need.

The first and most important business of the church is to teach the Word of God. A thorough acquaintance with the Word of God is a chief safeguard of character. With the education which the youth receive in present-day schools and colleges has come the imperative demand that our biblical instruction should be thoroughly systematic, a genuine process of development. Nothing less will hold the young people. Do you say this is taking hold of the very roots of the problem? I grant it. But nothing less will give us a permanent solution. The fruits will justify the labor. This reference to the importance of systematic Bible study is only one illustration of the need that the church should make her influence upon and use of the young people an actual process of their development. But it is primary and fundamental. May the Lord help us to face the whole problem with earnest hearts and guide us in its solution.

Peoria, Ill.

NOT A FAILURE.

W. J. LEWIS.

Was John the Baptist's life a failure? No—if character means anything, a thousand times No! It was not a failure any more than Christ's life was a failure. Yet that life ended on the cross.

In the memory of a bold and courageous witness for truth and righteousness in the world in his fearlessness and unshrinking devotion to duty, he is a standing example to each of us, an ever-living incitement to truer living.

He was the forerunner of thousands of whom the world was not worthy, who would rather lose their heads than their consciences. His spiritual progeny, who can tell? We see the martyr spirit of this same John the Baptist in Chrysostom and Huss and Jerome of Prague and Luther and Wickliffe and Latimer and Ridley. No life can be called a failure if it is lived for God, Truth and Duty.

Let us go forward to the duties of the hour with inspiration gained from this man's life, strengthened in some degree by entering into his spirit, less enamored of the world's pleasures and foibles, with a truer insight into its sin and its folly, above all with a firmer determination to do the right, to trust in God, and to be fearless in performing our duty.

A STUDY IN CHARACTER.

HOW JOHN WELLMAN COMMENCED THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

CLARENCE A. VINCENT, D. D.

Chapter iv Continued—A Life.

At a subsequent meeting the committee was organized, with Mr. Wellman as chairman and with the leading merchant as vice-chairman. As soon as it was known who constituted the committee the whole city was stirred. Politicians were frightened. The mayor had a spasm of virtue. Good citizens were interested, for they said that a new day had dawned. It is not necessary to give in detail the struggles and work of this company. It would require a volume to rehearse the many things that a few weeks brought forth through the purer tone of public sentiment and the wider activities of good citizens. Two million dollars a year, in one contract, was saved to the city through the influence of the committee. Saloons were closed at 10 o'clock. The police suddenly discovered that gambling dens and other places of vice were in existence, and these were closed. Already the press of the city, with few exceptions, were friendly to the new force. It was generally understood by the politicians that as long as men of such character and influence were actively interested in public matters, only good men could hope for election. Already one of the most forceful and public-spirited citizens is mentioned for mayor. The public is beginning to see that when men of large capacity, following the Golden Rule, give to the public good the same ability and attention they give to their daily business, the cities will be purified and become to America a strong defense and not a menace.

The influence of this movement in Chicago was soon felt throughout the nation. In Cleveland, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Minneapolis, Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, and in numberless smaller places, the men of executive force were impressed with their responsibility to the public and took up the work with wisdom and determination. The young men and women in the schools and colleges began to discuss the moral civic problems with a new interest. The women of influence began to give their club meetings a practical bearing and dead intellectualism became a living ministry. Commercialism was glorified by taking its place as secondary to the public good. Men of brains and character were elected to the city councils to take the places of low foreheads and lower hearts. State legislatures heard the murmur of the rising tide, and jobbery and trickery wore frightened aspects. Governors were taught that appointments are to be made in view of the public need and not upon the demands of political greed. The moral awakening started in Chicago by John Wellman, like the fires that once started on the prairies where the city stands, has swept on until much that is vicious and destructive in national life is burned up and new moral and spiritual growths are springing up to bless the people.

Early in the year Mr. Wellman's mind had turned to the church which he attended and where his wife was a member. It seemed to him that something ought to be done. It was made up of members of wealth. They paid large salaries to the pastor and to the different singers and always gathered something for the benevolences of the denomination. About the church lived many others of common means, but they were never seen at the services. They were not wanted. The pew rents were high and the pride was higher. Mr. Wellman had heard the pastor say one day, a year or two before, that thousands lived within a few blocks who never set foot within a church. The saying came back to him now. "Our church is only half full in the morning and less than that in the evening; is it good business, to say nothing of religion, not to reach those that in God's providence are in our field?" thought he. He discovered that with all the machinery, the money expended, and hundreds of members, the additions on confession of faith during the past five years had been one, seven, three, eight, five. When would Christ's command be realized at that rate? What will become of America if its people grow up without the purpose and ideals for which our churches stand? Such thoughts as these led him, at last, to the pastor. He told him frankly all he had in mind. He felt it was his need and duty to join a church and to help make it an aggressive force in its neighborhood. As Mr. Wellman went on, the pastor's eyes filled with tears. He had longed to see the church enter into such a broad ministry. He had urged the matter often, but none of the leading members gave him support, but frowned upon it. Thus they went over the matter. At the next communion Mr. Wellman came into fellowship. He had been a trustee for some years and all had a profound respect for the man who could make millions.

One day all the official members of the church and its different societies received a written invitation from the pastor to meet him the next evening in the parlors of the church for a luncheon. No one could imagine what it meant, but nearly all were there. After a pleasant hour the pastor arose and said that he had called them together to consider the interests of the church, and to receive suggestions for its wider usefulness. He would ask Mr. Wellman, who had recently joined, to say a word. He arose and spoke with his natural simplicity of what his recent step meant to him, and gave just a hint of what had changed his life. All were moved by his words. Then he spoke of the numbers and strength of the church, the needs about them, and what he would like to see done. He would have the men and women of the church unite in a wise and determined effort to reach the people about them. He would have an evening service that would be a blessing to the many who should come. Rooms for reading, social gatherings, classes in the study of the Bible, social problems, cooking, and other things as they found need. Entertaining and instructive lectures and concerts should be given. Kindergarten teachers should train the neglected little ones. Healthy games should be furnished the older boys and girls. Debating clubs should be organized. A bank might encourage the young and those older to save their earnings. Some thought it could not be done, but the majority were pleased, and heartily said so.

Another meeting was called, to which all interested in the larger usefulness of the church were invited. Committees were appointed to welcome the people, to get addresses, to plan ways of ministering to the children, the young people, and the mothers. A neat invitation was prepared to be put in the homes within a few blocks, inviting all to the church and to a people's gospel service. A chorus choir of the young people was organized. The first Sunday night saw the church half filled with people, many of whom were strangers. The pastor preached with a strange, new power. The congregation sang the old hymns of the church with animation. A new spirit filled everything. Sunday night after Sunday night saw the congregation increase until the great auditorium was crowded. An after-meeting was held. It filled the pastor's heart with joy to see men like Mr. Wellman quietly inviting some attendant to remain. The rooms of the church were busy places during the week. The people came in numbers and with glad hearts.

In two months after the first meeting was held came the May communion. It was a great day for the church; thirty-one who came by profession and twenty who came by letter were given the hand of fellowship. Thias Cliff, the old drunken shoemaker on the corner, was with them, clothed and in his right mind. Tom Hall, who graduated first in his class at the university last year and who was thought to be an infidel, came. He told the standing committee that "if this transformation which I see in John Wellman and in this old church is Christianity, then I want it." John Williams, a man of wealth and the only trustee who opposed at the beginning the change in the church, with two of his sons, received with the rest the hand of fellowship, and was giving his money like water for the work. Women and children from every walk of life, with illuminated faces, stood before the altar that May morning. With great simplicity and power the pastor gave a personal word to each one and appealed for a larger ministry on the part of the church. Every department of the church felt the quickening of the new purpose, and all, except a half dozen whose pride and selfishness could not discern the coming of the Lord, were happy.

But what of the influence of these few months upon Mr. Wellman? The face, 'tis said, expresses the man within. The hard, stern expression of that fateful day when Mr. Wellman gloated over his profits has softened down. The lines of strength are there, but love has touched them with a living radiance. Several times this year he has visited his early home and talked over his plans with the dear old mother.

During the last weeks, when Mr. Wellman has been close to death's door, it would have done you untold good to watch the strange, strange things that happened. He has realized his danger, but his thought has been of his loved ones, of his men, of his beloved church and city. "My only regret in leaving, if God wills it so, is the laying down of the work he has given me here. But if he has work for me elsewhere, it is well." It touched him very much to know that in his mills and in the church the people had gathered of their own accord to pray for his recovery. Slowly he is coming back to health, and a few more weeks, his physicians say, will see him well again.

This is only a glimpse of what one man, with the love of God in his heart, has wrought in a few months; what he shall do in the years to come, we can only imagine. The great need of our Nation and our churches to-day is men who, having received the kingdom into their own hearts, go forth to put their first strength and ability to bring the world into the kingdom. The fields are already white for the harvest, but the laborers are few.

[THE END.]

The courts of our God are the place where the trees of righteousness flourish. The waters of the sanctuary are the means appointed of God to cause his people to grow as willows by the water courses. Come to these wells of salvation, not to look at them only, but to draw water out of them.—Thomas Boston.

PLEASANTRIES.

Charley Bragg: "Yes, Miss Brightly, it costs me ten thousand a year to live." Miss Brightly: "Oh, Mr. Bragg, do you think it's worth it?"—Boston Traveler.

When little Ada, aged three, had been told the story of Lot's wife being turned into a pillar of salt, she asked her mother anxiously, "Is all salt made of ladies?"—Children's Sayings.

Eric had said his text, "But now I am a man I have put away childish things," and remarked, "I think it was too bad of Paul to put away his childish things, auntie; he might have given them to another little boy."—William Canton.

A burglar who had entered a minister's house at night was disturbed by the awakening of the occupant of the room he was in. Drawing his knife he said: "If you stir, you're a dead man. I am hunting for money." "Let me get up and strike a light," said the minister, "and I'll hunt with you."

An eminent Scotch divine was once asked how long he would require to prepare a speech. "That depends," said he, "upon how much time I am to occupy in its delivery. If I am to speak for a quarter of an hour, I should like a week to prepare; if I am to speak for half an hour, three days will do; if I am to go on as long as I like, I am ready now."

The professor, according to a London newspaper, had taken a few of his pupils to the Zoo. While the lions were being fed he remarked to the keeper, with a view to his pupils' instruction at first hand: "If one of these gigantic and ferocious carnivora should contrive to emancipate itself and should hurl its prodigious strength into our midst, what steps would you take?" "Bloomin' long uns, sir," said the man, whereat the boys tittered.

An English clergyman once preached a sermon on the eternal fate of the wicked. Meeting soon after an old woman well known for her gossiping propensities, he said: "I hope my sermon has borne fruit. You heard what I said about the place where there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth?" "Well, as to that," answered the dame, "if I 'as anythink to say, it be this: Let them gnash their teeth as has 'em—I ain't!"

When pastor of a church in one of our mining towns where there were a large number of Cornish miners, says a writer in the Homiletic Review, I was called upon to baptize an infant at the close of our Sunday school session one afternoon. That there might be no misunderstanding I carefully inquired the name of the child, and was assured that it was Anna Belle. Thus fortified, when the subject for baptism was presented I proceeded with all confidence to perform the ceremony. When I said, "Name this child," the father responded quite clearly "Anna Belle," and everything passed off smoothly. But after dismissal an American neighbor came to me and inquired why I used the pronouns she and her in baptizing that child, and informed me it was a boy. "A boy!" I gasped; "impossible! Its name was Anna Belle." "Oh, no, it wasn't; it was Hannibal." That fatal "H" had betrayed me.

AT THE CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

THE TOO LATE RECOGNITION.

GERALD H. BEARD, PH. D.

Matt. 27:54—Truly This Was the Son of God.

HE place was the mountain of Calvary, just outside Jerusalem. The time immediately after the death of Jesus. The speaker the Roman centurion, or military captain, who had charge of the crucifixion. In the mouth of this Roman soldier, accustomed to the heroes of mythology, the giant sons of the gods, it has been thought that the exclamation must have been, Truly this was a son of a god. Perhaps so. The Greek does not decide. And Luke's phrase, Certainly this was a righteous man, gives color to the supposition. But the charge against Jesus had been that he claimed to be the Son of God, in the higher Jewish sense; and the Roman centurion very likely was familiar with that charge, and now was convinced of the truth of the claim on which it was based. In either case, the meaning put into the phrase would not be the full spiritual meaning of our own thought. In either case, the words were a recognition of the divine character and significance of Jesus the Messiah.

All through Jesus' life men had been blind to his divine personality; or they had hated it and refused to acknowledge it, because of their own deviltry. Daring to assault him on the very threshold of his conscious holiness and power, it is with malign hatred of that holiness and power that the spirit of evil, in the temptation of the wilderness, tempts Jesus with the selfishness of the senses: If thou art the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread; tempts him with the selfishness of fame: If thou art the Son of God, cast thyself down. Encased in their churchly traditions, and stung to resentment by his divinely disturbing message, the Jews take up stones to stone him, and justify their conduct with the countercharge of blasphemy: Because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God. Defeated at every point of truth and right, at last they press this charge before the courts: We have a law, and by that law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God. And now, by means of mob arguments, they have won their case. Now they are exulting and jeering at the foot of the cross: He trusted on God; let him deliver him now; for he said: I am the Son of God. But now, too, before more than a brief hour had sped by, one of their representative worldlings, embodiment of the cruel theory that might is right; impersonation, by reason of his office, of the great Roman empire, is forced to the utterance of a truth beyond his own understanding of it: Truly this was the Son of God. Because of the earthquake, says Matthew; because of his masterful spirit in death, says Mark; because of all that was done, the gloom of nature and the peace of the Crucified, says Luke; because of all this, perhaps, the veil of selfish hatred was dashed aside; truth and right became conquerors even on Calvary; and, too late, the world said: Truly this was the Son of God.

Too late! Too late, very often, is our recognition of God in the glories of the present age. God is coming to us, interpreted by Christ, in the truths of our times and in persons of our times. What if too late comes the soul's awakening that is necessary to receive the revelation?

Our poets and prophets and national heroes and best friends, we fancy, belong to the hallowed past. The good times are gone. Things are growing worse and worse. Oh, this is the most hurtful heresy, the most blighting blasphemy, the most fatal infidelity—this disbelief, let us not say in God, but in goodness; in the genuineness of purity and honesty and all the unselfishness of love; this pessimism which, when men are living and at work, sees, as so many newspapers see, only the fraud, the intrigue, the corruption, the filth of daily life, and leave unmarked, unreported—because so common, so unsensational—nearly all the truth so fearlessly and fully told; nearly all the generous gifts not given by millionaires, nearly all the kindly words not spoken by dying lips, nearly all the noble, self-denying deeds, which are to the bad as a thousand to one. Distrust, skepticism, detraction—not only our newspapers, but our practical men of affairs pride themselves on their shrewdness in judging men, until in some hurricane of national calamity or private loss, our selfish suspicion, our partisan blindness, are swept away, and, in the flashlight of death and the after-hush of the night of grief, we become ashamed that we had ungenerously assumed all unselfishness to be at heart selfish, all purity surface propriety, all goodness politic profession.

Men and brothers, this moral skepticism is the one sort of skepticism that every man ought to be ashamed of. The intellectual skepticism that questions the current theological creed does not compare with it. It is base enough, and mean enough, to detect a sinister motive in the splendid achievements of every hero in our army and navy, in the candidature and service of every civic official, in the devotion of every church member. It sneered at William McKinley last autumn, when he was living and grappling with mighty responsibilities, and labeled him openly hireling, weakling, sordid materialist, would-be imperial tyrant. It honors him and laments over him this autumn, with all the phrasings and the trappings of woe—since he is dead. Thirty-seven years ago the same spirit of suspicion and detraction sneered at Abraham Lincoln as despot and buffoon, and today joins in his praises. It called Washington, Napoleon and Cromwell madmen and traitors, and then built monuments and mausoleums to their memory. It crushed and crucified Jesus of Nazareth, and then, when his body hung dead on the cross, cried out, Truly this was the Son of God.

Hallowing be the memories of the past, mighty and mightier ought to be the inspirations of the eternal future; but truth for us is truth here and now, or it is empty; righteousness is the righteousness that lives today, or it does not exist. He who was the Son of God is with us still the Son of God, or he was not. And faith, responsiveness, sympathy, co-operation, are for us matters of present duty, or they are nothing.

The Recognition of God Today.

Let us look at that more closely. The beginning of the too late recognition of God is in moral blindness to present truth. Knowledge is not wholly a matter of fate, or of circumstances over which we have no control. The recent awful events have been teaching us what some of us have in times past scorned the Church for insisting on—the close, and sometimes tragic, connection between belief and act. To a degree men are responsible for the truth they accept or reject. The pity-born prayer of Jesus on the cross—Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do—has back of it that piercing lament of his, as he stood face to face with the Pharisaism and hypocrisy that afterward slew him—"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets and stoneth them that are sent unto her! How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings; and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Paul's comment on that is the true one: "Had they known"—with that wisdom that comes to the man that chooses God—"had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." And with what depth of regret the sympathetic heart of the Great Teacher himself sees this too late recognition, we see, we feel, as, drawing near to the city of his nation's pride, he weeps over it saying, "O that thou hadst known—O that thou hadst known, in this day, even thou, the things which belong unto peace! But now these are hid from thine eyes." And then he speaks of that defeat and destruction which was to come, and did come—"Because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." Because thou knewest not!

The student of life and history sees that this pitiable conflict, in which truth has had to first fight its way against the hosts of ignorance, prejudice and fear, mars all the centuries. It is only afterwards, and for both truth teller and truth hearer, often too late, that it has received the recognition and reverence which, as truth, it deserved and might have had. Alas! the nineteenth century did not escape from this wretched wrong. The murderers of Jesus have had their descendants. Charles Edwards and Harrison Thornton preach the gospel of righteousness in Alaska; Pitkin and Clapp do the same in China; and in both countries, under utterly diverse civilizations, these men are murdered. The sense-bound passion of the West, the custom-bound prejudice of the East, will not hear them. George Haddock fights illegal saloons in lawful ways in Sioux City, Iowa; and the saloon power, enraged that the truth about itself should be told, shoots him dead in the dark. Go a little further back. Lovejoy, Garrison, Beecher and the rest of the anti-slavery heroes, speak and write and work for the freedom of men, and thousands of men, supposed to be free, will not hear them. Instead, they hoot at them, slander them, sling missiles at them, and, so far as they dare, kill them. Now the deeds of these warriors for the truth are enshrined in the nation's history.

And still the truth is being told, and money interests and fashion and appetite and theological prejudice and stupid mimicry of ancestors and petty personalities, and worldly selfishness, worst of all, are either dull and dead to it, or else infuriated against it. And still the call comes to every soul to recognize the heavenly guide before it is too late—before it is too late to yield the discipleship and obedience of reason and love to him who said, "I am the truth," and who proved himself, even to the Roman executioner, truly the Son of God.

The Personality of Truth.

Truth is not to be detached from personality. Truth is truth only when it is believed by some one, and to be vitalized must be lived. What has been said, then, with emphasis on the truth, repeats itself with even deeper significance in respect of persons. Friendship, with its kindliness of heart and loving deeds, is pleading against a too late recognition. How it must have grieved the mother-heart of Mary, in after years, to remember that she at first misunderstood her divine Son, and that his brothers did not believe in him. How regretfully Peter and John must have looked back in thought to that night in Gethsemane's garden, when, in answer to the gentle request of friendship, "Watch ye here, while I go yonder and pray," they had been so dull as not to sense the precious privilege, and instead had fallen asleep. "Sleep on now and take your rest." It is too late for watching now. "Behold, he is at hand that betrayeth me!"

Yes, all through his life there were those who believed on him, but not fully; those who revered him, but not openly. Nicodemus was one of these; he who came to Jesus by night and wondered at the teaching of the new life; then spoke a cautious word in his defense; and then, at last, brought the personal care of loving hands to the dead body of the "Teacher come from God." Joseph of Arimathea was another; he who was "a disciple of Jesus, but secretly, for fear of the Jews," "boldly" begged possession of the lifeless corpse—when his friend and Lord was gone. And there were many others. "Upon the murdered man," says one of the historians of the life of Jesus, "was poured a swift tenderness—offered to him, as it is to many a sensitive and deserted soul, too late." All of these who did this and who might have been so much to Jesus when he was teaching his truth, pleading for self-denying love, fighting his hard, almost overwhelming fight against wickedness high and low—all these, with a pang of remorse they could never quite forget, shared in the miserably untimely conviction of the centurion: Truly this was the Son of God.

We had been talking of ideal womanhood in a company of school teachers, and a friend said to me: "I had two years to teach here in this school. This is the end. I've enjoyed it all. But, oh, I do wish I could live these two years over again. I see so much now that I might have done differently." But it was too late.

One after another got up and spoke words of heartfelt praise and gratitude, as the many friends he had loved and served gathered in the church about his coffin. It seemed that they could not say enough. But the widowed woman who sat by the utterly worn-out and now silent form could hold back the piercing question no longer, and cried out: "Oh, if you thought all this of Edward, why didn't you tell him so when he was living?" Then it was too late.

His mother was on her death-bed—almost gone—and the rough and thoughtless boy, now grown to manhood, bent over her thin, pale face and kissed her lips and said: "You've been a good mother to us." The dying lips had little strength left, but they whispered, "You never said that before, John." It seemed too late.

O friends, now, while we live and are strong; now, while the day lasts and we can work; a present welcome for the truth; a present recognition of divine and loving souls; a present sympathy and co-operation; our own soul's awakening; a response to God now!

He—this Christ of God, who is coming to us in these daily ways—was not known, understood and then rejected. He was not loved with the soul's devotion and rejected. He was not lived with in thought and deed and rejected. He was despised—overlooked, estimated of no account—he was despised and rejected of men. And still, in every golden opportunity of truth and service and all personal consecration, the old announcement reaches our ears: Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

"You will know him, when he comes,
Not by anv din of drums,
Nor the vantage of his airs;
Neither by his crown,
Nor his gown.
Nor by anything he wears;
He shall only well-known be
By the holy harmony
That his coming makes in thee."

Do you recognize him, friend? Do you know him? Even if you do not now, you will then. "Behold he cometh . . . and every eye shall see him; and they who pierced him." And they who pierced him.
Burlington, Vt.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

JOSEPH AND HIS BRETHREN.

Lesson for Oct. 27, 1901, Gen. 45: 1-15.

Golden Text:—Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good—Rom. 12:21.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Time and Intervening History.

THE time is reckoned at B. C. 1707. It is twenty-two years since Joseph had been sold by his brethren as a slave. The intervening history since the last lesson in Chapter 41 may be divided as follows: First—The seven years of plenty ending with Ch. 41: 53. Second—The two years of famine in Egypt and including Canaan. Ch. 41: 54; 42: 1, 2. Third—Jacob's sons' first trip to Egypt to buy corn. Ch. 42: 5. Fourth—The first return to Canaan with corn, Simeon remaining behind. Ch. 42: 26. Fifth—Second trip to Egypt, Benjamin in the company. Ch. 43: 15. Sixth—The disclosure of Joseph to his brethren.

The Lesson on Forgiveness.

Pharaoh was right in estimating Joseph as "a man in whom the spirit of God is." Ch. 41: 38. Nothing more clearly indicated the divine nature in Joseph than his spirit of true forgiveness. As Christ, while we were yet sinners, died for us (Rom. 4: 8), so Joseph while his brethren were wicked and with murder in their hearts, yet loved them and sought their good. This is seen, first in his loving act of reproof (Ch. 37: 2); then in the long journey as a lad bearing them goodwill (Ch. 37: 17); and at last by the events in Egypt in part recited in to-day's lesson. Did ever man have better grounds for ill-will against brethren? Yet Joseph's history shows that naught but forgiving love, and that in return for the most monstrous evils against him, was entertained. He truly overcame evil with good. Even when needfully testing his brethren through feigning roughness of manner, it was from a tender heart and for their good. Today's lesson is most helpful to the end that we may lay aside all feeling of ill-will against those who have harmed us.

V. 1. Joseph's Love Prevails. "Then." After hearing Judah's unselfish, eloquent appeal in his brother's behalf. Ch. 44:16-34. That time had wrought changes in the hearts of the brethren is shown in Ch. 42:21-23. * * * "Joseph." Joseph now had been Egypt's ruler for nine years, the seven of plenty and the two of famine. * * * "Could not refrain himself." Ch. 43:31. His tender heart (Ch. 42:24; 43:30; 46:29; 50:17) is so moved by Judah's painting of the home conditions, and by the father's sorrow, that he throws off the mask of the inflexible ruler and gives way to natural emotions. He had held out only until the proof of the brothers' repentance was complete. * * * "He cried, Cause every man to go out." From an occasion of state the scene changes to one of family affairs, hence all attendants are dismissed. * * * "Made himself known." Joseph's words which here follow, together with Judah's appeal, form one of the most thrilling narratives of family affection in all history.

V. 2. Paroxysm of Grief. "Wept aloud." An excessive manifestation of grief such as is not uncommon to people in Asia. See Acts 20:37. * * * "And the Egyptians." Joseph's emotions were manifest even to those outside. * * * "And the house of Pharaoh." Doubtless the report of the weeping ruler, whom all loved, had been carried to Pharaoh's house. V. 16. Pharaoh personally became much interested in Joseph's family. Ch. 47:5-10.

V. 3. The Great Disclosure. "Joseph said: I am Joseph." He said this in the Hebrew tongue to the intense amazement of all present. The words fell with stunning effect, as the brethren vividly recalled Joseph, the victim of their wickedness many years before. So Jesus spake when he came to Saul. Acts 9:5, Matt. 14:27. * * * "Does my father yet live?" His words, kindly now, referring to that which lies closest to his own heart and to the hearts of his brothers, showing his tender remembrance. * * * "Brethren could not answer." The first shock was overpowering. They were dumb-founded at the strangeness of the situation. Like the guest at the wedding feast, they were unprepared, hence were speechless. The exalted position of Joseph amazed them, while their own guilt cut them to the quick. It was some time before they could utter a word. V. 15. * * * "Were troubled." They found that the way of the transgressor is hard. Their sins had found them out. They were like Peter when he said to Jesus "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man." Luke 5:8.

V. 4. Love's Reconciliation. "Come near to me, I pray you." This is the voice of love and in strange contrast with Joseph's previous language as he was testing them. Chapt. 42:7. It was the voice of forgiveness, showing that he was reconciled to them. * * * "And they came near." Drawn by that loving command which could not but beget trust in him. * * * "I am Joseph, your brother." Like our Joseph of the Gospel, he was not ashamed to call them brethren. Hebrew 2:11. Here begins a speech extending to V. 14 that very nearly matches in pathos and interest that of Reuben's in the preceding chapter. * * * "Whom you sold into Egypt." To establish his identity, he brings to mind the wicked occurrence on those plains of Dothan when the brothers sold him as a slave for twenty pieces of silver. Ch. 37:28. The words cut to the quick, yet Joseph upbraids them not beyond stating a fact to make clear that he was their brother. By realizing the greatness of their sin, they could the better realize the greatness of the forgiveness. It is a duty to tell others of their faults under right circumstances. Matt. 18:15.

V. 5. Forgiveness. "Be not grieved." The words imply the manifestation of marked grief by the brothers. When Jesus reminded Peter of his great sin he was grieved. John 21:15-17. Sin is the source of endless grief, but Christ has come to take away the grief of sin by taking away the guilt. * * * "God did send me." Instead of Joseph being left in the desert pit to die (Ch. 37:18), a caravan providentially appeared that way to prompt the idea of profit to the brothers by selling Joseph, and thus he was saved alive and came to Egypt. This made their guilt none the less. God makes even the wrath of men to praise him. Ps. 76:10. Men plot evil, but God makes it turn out "for good." * * * "To preserve life." Not only did he send Joseph, but according to the Psalmist's poetical expression, "He called for a famine in the land." Ps. 105:16. In their case the preservation was to the end of procuring national life.

V. 6. The Prediction. "There were yet five years." The brothers were painfully aware of two years of famine just passed through, but of five years yet to come as predicted to Pharaoh they doubtless were ignorant. * * *

"Shall neither be earing nor ploughing." "Earing" is an old English word which means ploughing or seed time. Deut. 21:4.

V. 7. "A Great Nation." "God sent me to preserve you a posterity." As God had called Abram out of Haran to make "a great nation," so he continued to shape events by not permitting Joseph to perish in Canaan, but designs him to become an initial link in that great nation whose formation now was to take place in Egypt. * * * "To save your lives." To save them, as fathers of the new nation, from famine. Had Joseph perished in the pit, his brethren doubtless would have perished from famine, for it was Joseph the saver of grain that saved the life of men. * * * "By a great deliverance." Thus the chosen family was delivered, that it might increase into a vast multitude. But it was Christ's mission, as it is that of each one of us, to proclaim an even greater "deliverance from the bondage of sin." Luke 4:18.

V. 8. Giving God Praise. "Not you that sent me hither, but God." Their design was selfishly wicked. God turned it to a great salvation. Often that which seems an evil is turned by God to the best practical good. To boastful Pilate Jesus declared that he could have no power "except it were given him from above." John 19:11. * * * "A father to Pharaoh." He was as a father in giving counsel. Pharaoh had said, "There is none so discreet and wise as thou art." Ch. 41:39.

V. 9. Speed the Gospel. "Haste ye." The first and last word of this verse speak of haste. Good news cannot too soon be told to sorrowing hearts. Gospel means good news. Thousands now wait with unhappy hearts for the good news of Christ's salvation from sin. * * * "And go and say." A command from Joseph the ruler. They quickly obey. When the Ruler who has all power in heaven and earth commands us to do and proclaim the Gospel to every creature, do we promptly obey? * * * "God hath made me." Joseph in every way gives praise to God for his elevation and usefulness. See V. 5, 7, 8. The brothers in their wicked conduct, the Ishmaelites, Potiphar and his wicked wife, Pharaoh, the famine, all good and bad were only agents used of God. Job 12:16-25.

V. 10. Settlement in Egypt. "Dwelt in the land of Goshen. In the land of Rameses. Ch. 47:11. It lay between the eastern part of the ancient delta and Canaan. It would seem from the next verse that this was to be a temporary home. * * * "Near unto him," showing the keen family affection. * * * "All that thou hast." The removal was to be complete. It was to be permanent as effecting their own lives. All that remained of the connection with Canaan was summed up in a prediction of their ultimate return. Ch. 50:24.

V. 11. "The Fatted Calf." "I will nourish thee." Why should Joseph provide for those who had so despitely used him? Because the love of God was in his heart. Like the parable of Luke 15, nothing was too good for the restored prodigals. Joseph had compassion on his brethren, pitying them for their past wickedness. He was ready to overcome evil with good. Had he returned evil for evil, that would have added to, instead of lessening, the evil of this world. What is our attitude towards those who may misuse us, be it ever so little as compared with that which Joseph endured? * * * "Lest thou, and thy household." In verse 18 reference is made to their "households," showing the separate camps of Jacob's sons. * * * "Come to poverty." How thoughtful Joseph is of their comfort. Notice the continued contrast between the goodness of Joseph in return for the evil of his brethren. He did not say "well they deserve poverty."

V. 12. Recognition Confirmed. "Behold, your eyes see." You see for yourself all I have told you and this will amply convince father. * * * "Eyes of my brother Benjamin." Benjamin was the full brother of Joseph, the others were but half brothers. Jacob would the more readily be convinced by Benjamin's eye witness. * * * "It is my mouth that speaketh." In the Hebrew tongue. In earlier interviews Joseph avoided his native tongue and interpreters were employed.

V. 13. Glorious Story. "Tell my father of all my glory." It would greatly delight and encourage the parent who, through all these years, had been mourning for Joseph. When he would first give glory to God, there could be little danger in his stating the truth regarding his own advancement.

V. 14. The Two Brothers. "Fell upon Benjamin's neck." Benjamin his only full brother. When Joseph first saw him, he could not resist making a great feast, yet hiding his identity. Ch. 43:16. Now that he revealed himself, the signs of affection were very touching. Benjamin was younger than Joseph. He had had no part in the sale of Joseph as a slave.

V. 15. The Silence Broken. "Kissed all his brethren." Instead of rebuke for past wrongs, there are kisses of love and forgiveness. Where sin abounded, grace, in Joseph's heart, did much more abound. Rom. 5:20. The same spirit was shown by Joseph that Christ revealed when he forgave his tormentors. Luke 23:34. The brethren were punished by darts of anguish in their consciences; "but if ye do not forgive, neither will your father in Heaven forgive your trespasses." Mark 11:26. * * * "Wept upon them." He could not but observe the continued confusion and shame of his brethren, yet the forgiving spirit will go still further in expressing love and emotion. * * * "After that his brethren talked." At last their silence is broken. Joseph's loving spirit completely won them. Now they could answer his many inquiries about the father and the old home.

FIVE MINUTE SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

HERE is a divine recipe that everybody knows is right: "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" This is perfectly clear—the basest will tell you that this is right. All classes will rise up and say that that is the way to do. This heavenly maxim needs no argument to prove that it is true. Heathen sages have taught this and philosophers of all ages unite on it as true philosophy. All this is true, and further, I might call up the world's worthies and ask them to testify of its beauty in practical application. A thousand pages could be filled with names and volumes could be filled with illustrations. You will say all that is true—you do not doubt for once that this maxim of my text is both heavenly truth and heavenly beauty, but what are you doing with it is the chief question? Has it become a part of your life? Are you really putting it into practice? Tell me now, what are you doing with this heavenly teaching? No, do not tell me, but go to your closet and tell your heavenly Father what you are doing with this chief principle in Christian living. To fight evil with evil is not wise, for then the very thing we are fighting gets the mastery over ourselves. Our position in life is to be a conqueror. We are crying for freedom like a caged bird. We must have freedom and victory belongs to us by all the God-given rights. For this condition not to exist declares on its face that we are not using the privileges given to us by God. Evil must be overcome. It is our enemy always and everywhere. The weapon we must use is goodness. We do not stop to inquire the where or the how or the why. Here is the fact. Evil must be overcome and the order is "overcome evil with good." Then it is to practice doing good, practice it freely and from the heart. It is not that we do not know, for we know better than we do. It is a matter of doing, and doing with all our might. The rule has no exception, but there may sometimes be a question as to what is always goodness, but in the light of your own knowledge insist on doing good—just that goodness that Jesus practiced, and do it in the fear of the Lord. He will guide you.

Our Father, we bless thee for all the knowledge that thou hast given us, and we ask for grace to do as much as we know. Amen.

The perseverance of the saints is made up of ever new beginnings.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

READING THE BIBLE EVERY DAY.

Topic Oct. 27; Ref. 2 Tim. 3: 1-17.

If the Endeavor movement did nothing more than put emphasis upon the reading of the Bible every day it would deserve well of every lover of the old Book and the old way. It is true, doubtless, that many of us read the Bible in a perfunctory way with little gain in knowledge or growth in spiritual life. Yet there is always a real gain in any sort of systematic work. The poorest student of God's Word, who will really be at pains to read, ever so little or listlessly, can hardly help getting some information and inspiration. The Gospel is like the good seed. It falls into the heart in the silences, and brings forth fruit in quietness and peace. This is the blessed thing about the "Quiet Hour." And the great number who cannot from the press of household or business cares, keep thus the quiet hour of devotion, but who snatch a bit of Bible truth in the pauses, while they wait in the whirl of the world's restless energy, may still find strength and assurance, and catch a breath of that "Peace beginning but to be." For this I thank thee, dear Master, while my life is hedged about with the narrowing bounds of daily toil, with all its hustle and bustle, with scarcely a breathing spell during the long burdened day.

The great apostle gives a strong reason for daily Bible reading in the first part of this chapter: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." And thereafter follows an awful list of the sins that harbor in the hearts of men who are "ever leaving and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." The thought of this language is that we need to get

Anchored in the Word of God.

This is the sore need of the age. This is the especial need of young men. It is an appalling fact that the vast majority of our young men in this goodly land, with all our opportunities, religiously, are terribly ignorant of the Bible, its history and its deeper spiritual truths.

"President Thwing selected from the poems of Tennyson twenty-three allusions to well-known passages in the Old and New Testaments and asked thirty-four freshmen of Western Reserve College to explain them. Later he submitted the same questions with one exception to a class of fifty-one at a woman's college in the East. One young woman answered every question correctly, one missed but one, and a third missed but two. Yet the percentage of correct answers was only 49 for the women and less than 43 for the men. None of the allusions would be considered recondite by any one even fairly versed in the English Bible and English literature, and most of them, it would seem, ought to be answered correctly by any average Sunday school scholar of 12.

"Out of the eighty-five students examined one-fourth knew nothing of Christ's crown of thorns or of the manna provided for the Israelites in the wilderness. About thirty could not explain Jacob's ladder, his wrestling with the angel, or Moses' striking of the rock. About forty were ignorant of the brand of Cain, of Esau's rough hands, of Ruth in the cornfield, and even of the angel which was seated in the risen Savior's tomb. Sixty could not tell of the sheet let down from heaven in Peter's vision nor of Joshua's moon on Ajalon. Seventy-five failed on Hezekiah's shadow, which was one of the hardest questions. But sixty-six were stumped by Jonah's gourd, although several of these thought the allusion was to Jonah and the whale."

Atheism and anarchy go together. And ignorance, especially of the Word of God, is the mark of these twin brothers of the evil heart. The description given by Paul in this chapter is just as true to-day as when he wrote to the young man Timothy, warning him of the perils of the last days. Whether we have fallen upon these times, I know not; but this I do know, that with the general neglect of the Bible, perilous times will come.

"Thoroughly Furnished."

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Here we have the chief reason for daily Bible study. To get anchored in God's Word; to be rooted and grounded in the truth; built up in love; thoroughly furnished unto all good works, these are the glorious privileges of Christian Endeavorers.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

JOSEPH SOLD INTO EGYPT.

And the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt; but God was with him.—Acts 7. 9.

Monday, Genesis: 37. 1-11.

In the sweetness and saintliness of his whole character, Joseph suggests Jesus, holy and harmless and undefiled and separate from sinners. I see him; a boy at home, in communion with God. I see him visited in the night-time by dreams which have their birth in heaven. I see him extorting the wonder and admiration of his father. Other Old Testament figures have a sublimer grandeur; Moses unquestionably has. But about Joseph, from first to last there is a singular beauty, a pre-eminent charm.

But my Master, in the "whiteness most white," of his human character, stands peerless, unapproachable, alone. All high and heavenly qualities mingle in him. And I shall be most sinful, if I set him habitually before me, morning by morning, and minute by minute; if I seek from him the gift of his sanctification, as well as the gift of his pardon; if I throw open my nature unreservedly to the inflow and energy of the Spirit, whom he possesses without measure, and gives without stint.

It would be a desirable attainment to be like Joseph. It is a better blessedness, and a possible one, too, to be like Christ.

Tuesday, Genesis: 37. 12-22.

Joseph is a remembrancer of my Lord in this, too, that he was perfected through suffering. The archers sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him. What tempests, what troubles, what tears, there were in the course of his day, as well as what sunshine and warmth! But the hard discipline ennobled him marvelously. It taught him faith and courage and sympathy and prayer and hope in God. It educated him for the kingly part he had to play. "The arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the Mighty One of Jacob."

And Jesus suffered. He was the very Captain in the vast army of sufferers. There never has been, and there never will be, sorrow like his sorrow. But it is the teaching of the New Testament that, as my Kinsman and Savior, he was benefited by his griefs. They were wholesome, if they were keen. His distresses acquainted him with my distresses, and qualified him to sympathize with me, and trained him to lean and plead as I must do, and prepared him for his reign as my Brother on the Throne.

I have the same thorny road to travel. I must drink of his cup and be baptized with his baptism. And it comforts me to know that, by the fellowship of his sufferings, I am ripened and matured in grace.

Wednesday, Genesis: 37, 23-36.

Joseph found soon that the path to the fulfilment of his dreams was not a smooth and easy path.

No more is mine, to the holiness of which I dream and for which I pray. There are fears within and fightings without. There are turbulent temptations. There are fierce besetments of the enemy. There are heavy bereavements. There are storms of trial.

It is strange, is it not? It is by no means the spiritual history which I should have chosen for myself. But it is my wisdom and my safety to leave myself in the hands of my God. He brings clean things out of unclean. He gains his sapphires and pearls from the depths of the earth and the caves of the sea. He will transfigure even me into a townsman of his New Jerusalem, who shall not be out of harmony with the stainless city where I dwell. It will need much education, much patience on his part and on mine, perhaps not a little chastisement. But let me trust him.

In due time "all the golden fancies of all my golden dreams" shall have their realization. At length I shall be perfect even as my Father in heaven is perfect.

Thursday, Genesis: 39, 1-6.

The Christian, like Joseph, is a source of blessing to those who are strangers to his God and Savior.

He is so negatively. Is it not true that society is spared and the world continues, because in an evil generation the Father has his seed, the Redeemer has his disciples, the Holy Spirit has those who are his temples and homes? Take away the believing men and women from the earth, and it would soon be ripe for destruction. Often its citizens look with disparagement, sometimes with contempt, on God's sons and daughters; but they owe the saints an immense debt nevertheless.

But he should be so positively, too. I would do something, distinct, unmistakable, helpful, and saving, to benefit those about me. I would live a life high, chivalrous, kindly, spiritual, which will teach them that God can sanctify and sustain. I would speak to them, whenever opportunity offers, of the needs of their hearts and of the divine supply for them. I would lift up holy hands on their behalf day and night.

"Let your light so shine before men," says Jesus to me. "that others, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father in heaven." Let me not forget my Master's commission.

Friday, Genesis: 42, 14-22.

Sin always finds the sinner out. Let me look the humbling and momentous truth in the face. I am inclined to refuse to do this. I am disposed to prophesy smooth things to my heart.

But that is foolish, ruinous, suicidal. It prevents me taking home the consolations of God. I cannot know the comfort till I know the sadness. I am not meant to abide in the gloom for ever, but to pass out of its shadows into the sunshine. But I cannot enter the region of light and peace, until I have become acquainted with that of darkness and pain. Only then "the morning will awaken, the shadows will decay." Only then the weeping will yield place to shouting and joy.

If I wish to estimate the value of a remedy, I must contemplate the ravages of the disease which it cures. And I must walk through the hospital of my heart, I must unwind the bandages, I must view the ugly wounds; or I shall never feel the power of God's antidote and turn to God's physician. When I learn that I am sick unto death, the Healer interposes. When I discover like Sir Percivale, that I am out in a land of sand and thorns, the Good Shepherd comes and leads me into the green pastures.

Saturday, Job: 5, 6-17.

Affliction cometh not forth of the dust. Nay, happy is the man whom God correcteth. For the trial which comes from him enlarges and deepens my knowledge of truth. In these dark periods of my life I gain a special interest in the Word of God. I acquire a clearer vision of many a doctrine, about Father and Son and Spirit, about my work and calling, about immortality and the better country. I grasp with a firmer hand the precious promises. "On the one side," it has been said, "there is a darkening world; on the other side there is a brightening Bible." And I should welcome the gloom that leads to such an issue.

And the trial which has God for Author refines and purifies my character. Many a Christian has grown more Christlike in the school of suffering; may this upward growth be mine.

Ruben's picture of the Crucifixion has been criticized, because the painter has made Calvary a garden where you cannot see skulls for flowers. But that is true for every one that belongs to Christ who died and lives. His Calvary blossoms into flower and fruit.

Sunday, Psalm: 31, 1-15.

How great is the goodness which God has laid up! I make a foolish mistake if I imagine that he has given my soul all that it is to receive from him, when he has pardoned its iniquities for Jesus' sake. That is but the first chapter in the book of his tender dealing and nurture. That is but the threshold of his palace. That is but the opening day of my heart's springtime, and summer is all to follow—bright June, warm July, golden August.

What I should believe is that there is no limit to the gifts he will bestow, the deliverances he will accomplish, the victories he will achieve in me and through me. Every morning mine should be the expectation that his mercies will be new to me through the day; that some fresh revelation of his truth and love will be imparted; that increased holiness and purity will be given; that opportunities for active service or patient waiting will be multiplied; that the evening will find me singing a song of which I am ignorant now.

Some years ago Roman workmen, digging in the Forum, unearthed an old fountain, the Aqua Virgo, imprisoned for ages. And lo, the water burst forth into a sudden lake, strong as in the days of Consuls and Cæsars. Just as impossible is it to exhaust the fountain of health and vigor and progress which God lays up for them that fear him.

General Church News

THE ITALIAN EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

In September last the Italian missionaries of different Protestant denominations in America were united into one grand organization and assumed the name of the Italian Evangelical Alliance. The objects of this alliance are declared to be as follows:

1. To secure spiritual, practical union among ourselves, and fraternal co-operation with the laborers of the different Protestant denominations.

2. To take counsel with each other respecting the needs of the evangelizing work among the Italians of the United States, and to devise the best means of meeting those needs.

3. To unite in our membership all Italian ministers of the Protestant faith in the United States, and to aid in finding suitable fields of labor for such of them as are unemployed.

4. To secure an annual reunion in the hope that such a reunion may not only be of practical value in itself, but may also be the means of promoting a revival of true religion among our countrymen in the city and vicinity where the reunion is held.

5. To do all in our power to promote good citizenship among the Italians of the United States, for the honor of Christ, the welfare of our adopted country and the good name of Italy whence we came. We hope also to have an Italian religious paper which shall be the organ of this Alliance. We pray that God will aid us in securing the necessary means.

A UNIQUE EXPERIMENT.

At Sunnyside, Wash., a Congregational church, a Methodist, a Presbyterian, a Disciples and a Progressive Dunkard, have all united in a local federation for the erection of a church building and the maintenance of public worship. This contract is to continue for a period of five years, at the end of which time any party to the contract has the privilege of selling its own or buying the interest of others. The financial interest of each denomination in the building and property determines its share of the time in the use of the pulpit. An advisory committee consisting of one from each of the six denominations controls the conduct of worship during the period of the contract. Each church expects to retain its own organization within the federated body, but each has united in choosing a president, secretary and treasurer of the larger body, from among the Congregationalists. It is a unique experiment, but in a population of about 1,000 within three miles, promises to work well. There is certainly economy in the arrangement and an avoidance of almost certain failure for some of the churches if continued in separate existence at what would necessarily be "a poor, dying rate."

SOUTH DAKOTA BAPTISTS.

Aberdeen welcomed this year the various Baptist representatives. The women had the first chance. Missionary interest was shown to have been well sustained in the several associations and local churches. The importance of missionary junior societies was emphasized. It was unanimously voted that the young women's societies for foreign and home mission work be consolidated, so far as agreeable to the local churches, under a single name, either "Light Bearers" or "Young Woman's Missionary Society." The former names have been "Farther Lights" and "What Can." That problem of the women's societies: "How to secure the quarterly or semi-annual payments of the apportionment?" was met with the suggestion of greater liberality of spirit, greater economy in personal expenditures and weekly rather than annual payments.

The Ministerial Union came next on the program. Practical and definite topics were chosen for discussion, such as, "Is the Change from Personal Testimony to the Discussion of a Topic in the Prayer Meeting a Good One?" Pastoral Visitation; Christianity and Social Problems. On the last topic a practical instance of co-operation of the churches with municipal struggles was given when a city caucus being called for Wednesday evening by corrupt politicians in order to shut out the "church crowd," the Baptist and Methodist pastors dismissed their prayer meetings, sending the women to the Presbyterian church and the men to the caucus. The liquor men found their scheme balked. Rev. C. S. Thoms preached the annual sermon, taking for his text the first eleven chapters of Genesis. "Severing Pastoral Ties" and "Current Heresies and How to Deal With Them" were the subjects of two papers that brought out valuable discussion.

The state convention was not largely attended. Colportage and Sunday school work received considerable attention. An effort is to be made to support a colportage wagon like the one just given to North Dakota by Mrs. Modahl. Mrs. C. Malley, Rev. A. J. Finch, F. D. Hall, Rev. E. E. Duley and Rev. E. M. Stephenson were the speakers on Sunday school topics. Rev. W. W. Dawley, D. D., of Minneapolis, gave three fine addresses, the first being on "The Mission and Methods of a Modern Church." "State Mission Opportunities and Obligations" occupied an hour on Friday afternoon, followed by a session of the Young People's Union.

At the business meeting the proposed legislation against anarchy was endorsed. The state appropriation of $2,400 was raised, as it usually is in South Dakota. Missionary and educational addresses closed the convention, Dr. H. C. Mabie's being specially uplifting spiritually. The convention was one of the best South Dakota has had.

BOXES OF GOLD.

Sent for Letters About Grape-Nuts.

330 boxes of gold and greenbacks will be sent to persons writing interesting and truthful letters about the good that has been done them by the use of Grape-Nuts food.

10 little boxes, each containing a $10 gold piece, will be sent the 10 writers of the most interesting letters.

20 boxes each containing a $5 gold piece to the 20 next most interesting writers, and a $1 greenback will go to each of the 300 next best. A committee of three not members of the Postum Co., will make decision between Dec. 1st and 10th, 1901.

Write plain, sensible letters, giving detailed facts of ill-health caused from improper food and explain the improvement, the gain in strength, in weight, or in brain power after using Grape-Nuts food.

It is a profound fact that most ills of humanity come from improper and non-nourishing food, such as white bread, hot biscuit, starchy and uncooked cereals, etc.

A change to perfectly cooked, pre-digested food like Grape-Nuts, scientifically made and containing exactly the elements that nature requires for building the delicate and wonderful cells of brain and body, will quickly change a half sick person to a well person. Food, good food, is Nature's strongest weapon of defense.

Include in letter the true names and addresses, carefully written, of 20 persons, not very well, to whom we can write regarding the food cure by Grape-Nuts.

Almost every one interested in pure food is willing to have his or her name appear in the papers for such help as they may offer the human race. A request, however, to omit name will be respected. Try for one of the 330 prizes. Everyone has an equal show. Don't write poetry, but just honest and interesting facts about the good you have obtained from the pure food Grape-Nuts. If a man or woman has found a true way to get well and keep well, it should be a pleasure to stretch a helping hand to humanity, by telling the facts.

Write your name and address plainly on letter and mail promptly to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

TWENTY YEARS OF CONGREGATIONAL WORK IN NORTH DAKOTA.

At the twentieth annual meeting of the North Dakota State Association, in Wahpeton, a review of the situation showed results of heroic endurance, self-sacrifice and wise statesmanship in nearly 100 churches established and a well-equipped college. About 160 men have had share in the making of Congregationalism in those parts during the past twenty years. The Home Missionary Society has put over $150,000 into the work, besides as much more in work for the Indians, church and parsonage building, Sunday school missionary work and the support of Fargo college. Nine churches have been organized since January 1—seven English and two German. The increase in the offerings to the Home Missionary work have increased ten per cent over those of last year. Twenty-five new Sunday schools have been started during the past twelve months and five schools have grown into churches. There is great and growing opportunity for work among the Norwegians; fifty Scandinavian churches might be organized if missionary aid could be slightly increased.

Steps were taken looking to the organization of a state Home Missionary Society. The women's societies reported over $600 contributed for the year. "Some Present-Day Aspects of the Sunday Problem" were presented strongly in a paper by Rev. H. S. Wiley of Hillsboro. "The Relation of the New Testament Teaching to Sociology" was shown by Rev. G. B. Denison of Cando. Rev. V. H. Ruring considered "The Relation of the Church to the Young People," and Rev. W. H. Gimblett of Hankinson spoke of "The Church for the Times." The presence of Dr. J. E. Roy and Dr. W. S. Ament gave enrichment to the meeting, the former spoke of congregational work in the West Indies. Dr. Washington Choate was also there, and was gladly welcomed as one known by his handwriting, but now seen face to face. He spoke of New England as the missionary field, $60,000 being expended there for missions against less than $8,000 for Dakota. Some pastors were missed, but spoken of with appreciation; many new ones were welcomed for the first time. President Morley told of good progress made by Fargo college, with the largest freshman class in its history, current expenses paid and new pledges towards endowment.

For Nervous Women

Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. B. Alexander, Charlotte, N. C., says: "It is pleasant to taste, and ranks among the best of nerve tonics for nervous females"

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

The Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago has opened with a class of forty or fifty new pupils, who are about the best prepared of any class which ever entered this institution.

Seventeen were welcomed to membership Sunday, October 6, in the Woodlawn Park Presbyterian church, of which Rev. Dr. E. H. Curtis is pastor.

The Presbyterian pastors are preparing for the work of the autumn and winter with great energy. At an early date a meeting will be held somewhat of the nature of a spiritual retreat and similar to that held in the Church of the Covenant last winter. The Austin church is holding a series of meetings in which the pastor, Rev. S. M. Johnson, is assisted by Revs. G. W. Wright, S. M. Campbell and W. W. Johnstone.

St Mark's Episcopal church has been much improved and beautified. Rev. Dr. W. W. Wilson has been rector for twelve years and the future growth of the church is very promising.

Special preachers at the University of Chicago for the quarter will be Rev. Principal Salmon of the Free Church College, Aberdeen, Scotland, and Rev. Simon J. McPherson, D. D., formerly of Chicago and now principal of the Lawrenceville school, Princeton, N. J. Each preacher will act for three weeks. The services are held in Cobb Hall chapel at 10:45 Sunday mornings.

The chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, for some time suspended in St. Andrew's Episcopal parish, has been revived and is doing excellent work. Some of its members assist in the city mission service at the county hospital, together with members of the Epiphany chapter, and also teach on Sunday afternoons at the Chinese mission.

The Rev. W. E. Toll celebrated his twentieth anniversary as rector of Christ church, Waukegan, on Sunday, Oct. 6. A very handsome new stone church was erected ten years ago at a cost of about $42,000. The parish has taken a prominent place in the diocese and has ever held a foremost position as a leader in good works.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Theological Union, which has in charge the Divinity school of the University of Chicago, was held October 2. The report showed 372 students enrolled, nearly every state in the union being represented and more than thirty denominations. Mr. Jesse A. Baldwin was chosen president.

Memorial Baptist church is entering on the winter with enthusiasm and earnestness. Nineteen were received into the membership October 6.

The total membership of the eighty-six churches in the Chicago Baptist Association is 20,955. There are 1,334 baptisms reported for the year, 343 more than last year. The figures reported in our last issue were incorrect.

Twenty-four were received into fellowship, sixteen on confession of faith, at the Evanston Avenue Congregational church Sunday, October 6. A very successful rummage sale the previous week put about $200 into the new church building fund.

James Mullenbach has been called by a unanimous vote to the associate pastorate of Tabernacle church, assisting Professor Graham Taylor. Mr. Mullenbach recently returned from two years of post-graduate study at the University of Berlin upon the Chicago Seminary fellowship awarded him upon his graduation in 1899.

Rev. Lloyd E. Newcomer has accepted a call to the Garfield Boulevard Christian church and the City Missionary society will augment his salary. His work at Humboldt Park and Garfield Park churches has been helpful.

Rev. H. H. Guy has closed his ministry at the Ashland Christian church. During the time of his stay they have grown in attendance and interest, secured and paid for a good corner lot, and expect to have their own house before the close of the year.

GOOD COFFEE MAKER.

Experience with the Berry.

"I have gained twenty-five pounds since I left off coffee and began drinking Postum Food Coffee in its place.

"I had become very thin in flesh and suffered tortures with heartburn, was a nervous wreck with headache practically all the time until one dreadful day when the good doctor told me I must quit drinking coffee, as he had nothing left to try, to relieve me.

"I could not drink tea and had tried everything else, even Postum, but put it by at the first trial, because it was tasteless.

Forced to it again, I determined to see if it could not be made palatable and found at once that when I followed directions and boiled it long enough, that I not only liked it but gave it to my husband for several days without his finding it out. I have the name of making splendid coffee, and we always used the best, but of late I have given Postum to guests many times in place of coffee and have never been detected yet.

Our four children have not drank coffee for three years, and all have gained health and flesh since using Postum. One son, who was always sick, has been greatly benefited by its use, and as above stated, I have gained twenty-five pounds since taking up Postum. I am healthier to-day than I have been for years and give Postum all the credit. Please do not use my name in public."

This lady lives in Burlington, Iowa, and the name will be furnished by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., to those interested.

Baptist.

The German Baptist conference, comprising five central states, met in Detroit September 20-24. Forty-one churches with a membership of 4,718 reported a total expenditure of $69,783, of which about $60,000 was spent for home purposes, and $10,000 for benevolent purposes, about $14.67 per capita. There were reported 326 baptisms—one for every 14½ members; forty-three dismissals to English-speaking churches and a net gain of 213 members. Eight churches are without pastors. The Holy Spirit's presence was felt not only in prayer-meetings and preaching services, but through all the sessions. Rev. R. Janzen read an essay on "The New Testament Idea of True Discipleship." Rev. George Klipfel showed some dangers of the spiritual life of our times. Rev. J. Meier read a paper on the cultivation of family workshop. Rev. J. H. Merkel answered the question what is the highest success of a church? and Rev. R. Blaudau read an essay on the theme: "The Position of a Christian Toward the Temperance Movement."

The Women's Home Mission Society is about to open a mission among the Hopi Indians, or, as they are usually called, the Moquis. This mission will be planted upon two of the large mesas in New Mexico and appropriately called Sunlight Mission, as it is to be situated in a land of sunshine and is the direct result of contributions given by the Baptist Indians of Rainy and Saddle Mountains, Okla., whose title for their mission is "God's Light Upon the Mountain."

Congregational.

A spiritual forward movement was the thought that dominated the diamond anniversary of the Maine conference, which met in Bangor. The membership of the churches of the state was reduced during the year by a loss of 404, the gain was 386. The benevolences were $56,881 for the year; the home expenses were increased $26,000 over the previous year. "What can be done to deepen the spiritual life and power of our churches?" was the question for which an answer was sought. "The Point of View of the Twentieth Century Ministry" was the topic of an address by Dr. A. E. Winship. Four addresses considered "The Need of Recovering and Emphasizing the Distinctive Message, Mission, Aim and Work of the Church."

Plymouth church, Seattle, has a church missionary society of which the pastor, Rev. W. H. G. Temple, D. D., is president. It meets once a month in place of the prayer meeting and displaces entirely the Women's Missionary Society. No special offerings are taken for the missionary societies, the pledge and percentage plan being followed. Plymouth church has also a successful men's club of about 100 members, who dine together once a month. A paper on some practical home topic is followed by an address on some solid subject and at eight o'clock the meeting breaks up.

The pastor of the Congregational church at Oswego, Ill., Frederick W. Long, recently issued over a hundred invitations to the men of the parish to a "Reception to Men," as a fitting close to his fourth year of work here. The Ladies' Guild served the banquet in the Woodman hall. Toasts were responded to, Mr. Long acting as toastmaster. After singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the company was dismissed with a short prayer and benediction, all delighted and pleased, as well as stimulated to higher living, in the memory of an evening pleasantly and profitably spent.

Rev. C. A. Jones of Kane, Pa., issued an autumnal message to his people, calling them to a ten days' devotional service held September 26-October 6, "to promote deeper spirituality among members, effectual yearning for divine love in the congregation and consecrated Christian citizenship throughout the village."

The German Congregational church at Minden, Iowa, has received more than 100 into its membership during the year that Rev. Eugene Osthoff has been pastor. He preaches in both English and German.

One church in Illinois has arranged with great acceptability a family vesper service for two summer months. A part was assigned to every member of the family. Personal invitations were sent to the factories, inviting the men to come after a Sunday afternoon walk with the whole family to the church for one hour. Mothers left their babies with some of the ladies in the lecture-room; children under ten after thirty minutes received a Perry picture illustrating the sermon subject, and marched off for their story from one of the lay members. Boys and girls above the fourth grade in school gathered at the pulpit and read the psalm responsively; the elder ones sang and prayed and listened to a short sermon. Special choruses and orchestra assisted, making a helpful service.

Pastors' classes are frequently heard of. The Ottawa church secures best results through four week-day classes for a part of each year conducted by the pastor. These are divided among grade school boys, grade school girls, high school boys and high school girls, and meet immediately after school.

The old first church, Rockford, Ill.,

Parson Rousegood's Experiences

his ups and downs, are being printed in each issue of
"Daily Bible Reading"

a religious paper packed full of good things for all Bible lovers. It goes to 45 states, Canada, England and Scotland, and has 6,000 circulation. Send 25c for 4 one year. Sample copy free. Write under the pastorate of Rev. F. H. Bodman, has some marked features. In the prayer meeting a half-hour of devotional service is followed by a paper by some member on a subject connected with church history, such as the lives of missionaries, hymn writers, reformers. This has done much to add variety and interest to the services.

CHAS. J. BURTON, Editor, Canton, Mo.

In Spring Valley, Ill., the Congregational church stands as the only Protestant force among the 7,000 people, and it is a force under the

Hamilton College

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

The Leading College of the Christian Brotherhood for the education of young women. Its record, buildings, equipment, faculty, the best. Opens thirty-third session second Tuesday in September. Very reasonable rates. For particulars and catalogue apply to
B. C. HAGERMAN, PRESIDENT.

A Monthly Magazine

Devoted to the upbuilding of Christian character and earnest church work. Rev. Charles Warwick, Editor, Pastor Diamond Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia. Asks for support—on its merits—in the way of subscriptions and advertisements. Price 50c per year, 12 issues, postpaid. Publication office 200 South 10th Street, Philadelphia.

HIRAM COLLEGE

A school for both sexes, located at Hiram, Portage County, Ohio, 35 miles southeast of Cleveland.

A SPLENDID LOCATION.

Beautiful scenery, pure air, excellent water. An ideal college town, modern, up-to-date, lighted by electricity and having a fine system of water-works.

GOOD BUILDINGS.

The buildings are comparatively new. Main building commodious and convenient in all its appointments. A large and beautiful Christian Association building, erected five years ago at a cost of $30,000. Two excellent ladies' halls well furnished and supplied with modern conveniences. Music building for the accommodation of our large and growing music department. A library and observatory building just completed, the gift of Abram Teachout, and a Warner & Swazey's nine inch telescope, costing approximately $5000, the gift of Lathrop Cooley.

LIBRARIES AND APPARATUS.

A large and well equipped chemical laboratory. Two other laboratories, Physiological and Physical. A well selected library; large additions to this library will soon be made. A good museum. A large and well furnished gymnasium.

COURSES OF STUDY.

Four Classical Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Four Scientific Courses—Regular, Philosophical, Legal and Medical. Four Literary Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Five Special Courses—Music, Oratorical, Business, Art, Teachers. Special elective courses in any variety.

CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS.

We have a strong body of Professors and Instructors, twenty-four in number. They are for the most part specialists of large attainments and are thoroughly abreast of the times.

Literary Societies and Religious Organizations. Hiram has five literary societies of unusual strength and vigor; two Christian associations that contribute much to the religious life of the school. Several departmental and social organizations of special interest and value.

EXPENSES.

Expenses are very moderate. Good table board can be had for $2.00 per week, club board for $1.25 to $1.75. Room rent for 50 cents to $1.00 per week. Tuition for four to five dollars per term for each study. The three leading items of board, tuition and room rent may be reduced to about $125.00 for the college year of $8 weeks.

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

Under the auspices of the T. W. Phillips' Loan fund an industrial department is being established that will assist about fifty young people. It is believed that students admitted to this department may reduce the entire expense of the year, including tuition, to about $50.00, and those who do considerable work may reduce expenses to sixty or seventy dollars. Send for catalogue to skilled hand of Rev. R. W. Perdue. It is one of the few churches in the state that has a fully equipped gymnasium, with social rooms, library and baths. It is the ideal combination of church and Y. M. C. A. for a small city.
E. V. ZOLLARS, Hiram, Ohio

Since Rev. G. R. Wallace took charge of Westminster church, Spokane, the membership has been steadily growing, the income has nearly doubled and the small debt cared for. There is a large and enthusiastic men's club.

Rev. R. L. Marsh of Burlington, Iowa, has organized a Bible Study club, which aims to include the entire congregation. More than 100 names were enrolled prior to September 25. The course is that offered by the American Institute of Sacred Literature, which also serves as a basis for the midweek meeting.

The Montana association at its eighteenth annual session considered some very practical questions: How to raise money; how to get people to church; how to conduct revivals so as to win men to Christ. "What Constitutes a Holy Observance of the Sabbath Day?" was treated in one paper; "Christian Apologetics for the Present Time" in another. Several speakers took various phases of the topic. "The Congregational Church of the Twentieth Century;" its ministry, its terms of admission to membership, etc.

Pilgrim church, Cleveland, during the last ten years of effort along institutional lines, has increased its membership from 310 to 857. The expenditures, including benevolences, have amounted to $300,000.

The Disciples.

The American Christian Missionary society during the past year has assisted through the state and national boards in the support of 640 missionaries. These missionaries have organized or re-organized 277 churches. The number of additions to the churches by missionary effort is 24,535; 3,660 were by confession of faith in Christ and baptism into his name. Twenty-eight church buildings have been erected. The total receipts for the year were $213,921.50. The annual report says: "The amount of money entrusted to us for home missions is not in any measure a test of our ability as a people; it is the measure of our interest in home missions. Of our more than 1,000,000 members not more than 300,000 are giving as much as ten cents a year for the preaching of the gospel in this land."

The Kentucky Christian Missionary convention met at Cynthiana, October 3. Four speeches were made on the educational interests by President Burris and Professors Jefferson, Fairhurst and Hageman. A strong temperance address was given by George Gowen of Louisville. The total amount of money raised for state work was $16,395.04 and for foreign missions $12,951.88; church extension, $15,682.06.

The University Place Sunday school at Des Moines had its annual rally on September 29, with an attendance of 1,293.

The High Street church, Akron, Ohio, held a rally with 1,198 present and 326 in the pastor's class.

The Main Street church, Mason City, Iowa, has had a phenomenal growth. Less than ten years ago a church was organized there, with a little group of Disciples. Every year large accessions have been made until now the membership is 1,100. The church edifice has just been made over at an expense of $13,000. It contains thirty rooms. Its auditorium seats 1,000 people. The building was dedicated October 6. Enough money was raised to build a $500 parsonage, besides paying in full for the church.

At the Colorado Christian Missionary convention it was emphasized that earnestness and aggressiveness must particularly mark the church of the twentieth century.

Episcopal.

The Rt. Rev. Alexander Burgess, D. D. LL. D., bishop of Quincy, Ill., died in St. Albans, Vt., October 8. He had long been failing from old age. He was born in 1819.

All Saints' Hospital at South McAlester, Okla., has done a good year's work, having cared for 809 patients, with 11,369 days of hospital care. Of these eighty-two were free cases.

Miss Stockdell has begun work among the Lemhi Indians in Idaho, the first regularly appointed missionary among them.

The Cathedral Schools of Art opened in Cincinnati October 12.

HOW TO GET A JOB IN CHICAGO

New book will be issued in a few days. Orders will be filled in the order they are received. If you are not interested hand it to a friend.

Price 25c, Postage Paid. Send Stamps.
TIMES PUBLISHING CO.
65 Plymouth Pl., CHICAGO, ILL.

Individual Communion Outfits.

Send for free catalogue and list of users.
SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO.
Box 54 Rochester, N. Y.

Effective March 10th, 1901,
the

Announces the Opening of its * Red River Division
...To...

Denison and Sherman, Texas. * *

Through Train Service will shortly be established from St. Louis and Kansas City over the * * *

Shortest Line to Texas

The Teachings of the Books

Or THE LITERARY STRUCTURE AND SPIRITUAL INTERPRETATION OF THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The work of collaboration by Herbert L. Willett and James M. Campbell. It has been widely and favorably reviewed in the religious journals of this country and Great Britain and is now in use in many classes organized in colleges, seminaries, churches and other groups of Bible students. Several pastors have written that they are using it in classes on the study of the New Testament. Others that they are following their work in their prayer-meeting services. While from many quarters have come reports of the helpful use made of the book in family and private devotion and study. Price, postpaid, $1.25. Given free as a premium for four new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

Many new departments have been added since last year, such as millinery, dressmaking, cooking, languages, basket-weaving, chair-caning and a department for mending clothing. There will also be started a "savings department." Altogether there are twenty-one departments in the school.

For a number of years the Church of the Holy Communion, at Sixth avenue and Twentieth street, Manhattan, in the heart of the retail dry goods district, has been open all day every day in the year. Entrance was secured through a small tower door, bearing an invitation to enter and rest. A fairly accurate record has been kept of those who accepted the invitation and seldom have more than twenty-five done so in a day. Last week, however, the main doors on Sixth avenue were kept wide open from morning till night each day; the increase in the number of visitors is remarkable. Instead of twenty-five, fully 200 has been the daily average, the interest thus shown having prompted the holding of a noon-time service every day.

Methodist.

The benevolences raised by First Methodist Episcopal church of Colorado Springs, Colo., for the conference year just closed, amounted to $7,498.

The Epworth League in the Methodist church is planning to concentrate its energy the coming fall and winter to advance the Forward Movement, which was favored with such success last season. Mr. W. W. Cooper, first vice-president of the league in America, says that the organization has been very active in the past summer, sending out student volunteers to visit the churches and interest them in the cause of missions. They have placed 1,000 missionary libraries, a new library having to be made up this year to supplement the one previously left in the churches. The general subject emphasized in league work this year is to be "Benevolences," and leaders aim, first, to increase information concerning missions; second to exploit and register Christian stewards, those who give one-tenth of their incomes to Christian causes, and third, to increase the number of those who make a daily systematic study of the Bible. The number of these systematic students is rapidly increasing in the league, fully two thousand being now engaged in the work. The Life of Christ is to be studied this winter.

The Milwaukee district made a good showing at the fifty-fifth annual conference of Wisconsin. In 1896 the churches had an indebtedness of $57,000 on real estate besides a considerable floating indebtedness. The $57,000 has been paid off with the exception of about $1,000 on the Park place church. Besides $15,000 has been expended on improvements to the churches. Since 1898, when the twentieth century movement began, the district has raised $42,000 on its indebtedness and about $12,000 for educational and other benevolent purposes.

Presbyterian.

There is still plenty of room for ministers and missionaries in this country. Recently a lady came from a remote district, ninety miles away, to Burns, Oregon, met the Presbyterian missionary and besought him to visit her section. She said she had lived there fourteen years and had never heard a sermon in all that time. A gentleman came to the parsonage from a district fifty miles away. He said he was not a church member, but his community needed a preacher, and he wanted to know how they could get one.

At the United Presbyterian synod of Illinois which met at Aledo, October 1, a practical address was delivered by Rev. William S. Owens, D. D., on "Some Present Day Problems for the Christian Church." He presented the problem of pastoral oversight in its relations to family religious instruction, pointing out the cessation of the old time pastoral visiting and the fact that nothing is taking its place that reaches the same ends; the problem of the rural church; the problem of reaching the masses, not of slum dwellers, but of self-respecting wage-workers, who are so sadly drifting away from the church.

General.

In the reports made to the Massachusetts Sunday School Association it was shown that forty-one per cent of those in attendance at 1,020 schools are under thirteen years of age; twenty-six per cent are between thirteen and nineteen, and thirty-three per cent of the entire enrollment are above the age of nineteen. A special effort has been made to enlist the interest and service of college-trained men and women in local Sunday school work. In 669 schools there are 1,185 college alumni engaged as teachers. Besides these a force of nearly 900 are graduates of normal schools or have enjoyed other special teacher-training. The International lessons are used by 980 schools out of 1,284.

Rev. R. T. Stivers, missionary of the American Sunday School Union in Iowa, says that from his ten years' work more than 1,100 hopeful conversions have resulted and forty-five churches have been organized, thereby giving strength to eight of the leading Protestant denominations of this country.

Berea college, in Kentucky, is pushing its extension work among the mountain people. A large number of teachers' institutes have been conducted the past summer. This fall four parties in wagons will traverse the re-

A THING WORTH KNOWING.

No need of cutting off a woman's breast or a man's cheek or nose in a vain attempt to cure cancer. No use of applying burning plasters to the flesh and torturing those already weak from suffering. Soothing, balmy, aromatic Oils give safe, speedy and certain cure. The most horrible forms of cancer of the face, breast, womb, mouth and stomach; large tumors, ugly ulcers, fistula, catarrh; terrible skin diseases, etc., are all successfully treated by the application of various forms of soothing oils. Send for a book mailed free, giving particulars and prices of Oils. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Kansas City, Mo. ((Cut this out and send to some suffering one).)

CATARRH CAN BE CURED.

Catarrh is a kindred ailment of consumption, long considered incurable; and yet there is one remedy that will positively cure catarrh in any of its stages. For many years this remedy was used by the late Dr. Stevens, a widely noted authority on all diseases of the throat and lungs. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption, and nervous diseases, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train of the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

$13.00 GO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $13.00

via the Nickel Plate Road daily, with limit of 15 days; 20-day tickets at $16.00 for the round trip; 5-day tickets at $6.00 for the round trip, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Through service to New York and Boston and lowest available rates. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

mote counties, holding a "three days' meeting" in a place, with stereopticon, attention to agricultural, domestic science, good citizenship, and the building up of the public schools. Through the generosity of author and publishers, 1,000 copies of Dole's "Young Citizen" will be distributed. These gatherings are an adaptation of the Chautauqua idea, and have proved very popular and useful. The extension work includes traveling libraries, and touches the Virginias and Tennessee as well as the mountain portion of Kentucky.

The Iowa Congress of Religious Education which met October 5 and 6 discussed such themes as the following:

"The Influence of Journalism on the Development of Character."

"The Agents in Character Building—What Are They and What are Their Relations?"

"The Value of the Present Family Methods in Building Character."

"The Value of Present Sunday School Methods in Building Character," followed by a symposium by three speakers.

"Social Conditions in Building Character."

"Political Influence in Building Character."

"Business Influence in Building Character."

"The Odds and Ends Gathered Up."

"The Needed Elevation in American Type of Character."

Foreign Missionary Items.

Among the conversions recorded in one of the city churches of Madura, India, during this year is that of an old woman aged eighty. She worshiped the Hindu gods Veerabudran and Mariamman, and while her husband and sons were anxious to know the Word of God, she proved a bitter enemy and cursed all who visited her house. Suddenly her husband and four grandchildren were attacked by cholera. Her husband died, though the children escaped, and the constant medical attendance of the missionary physician and earnest prayer for the lives of the children, opened the stony heart of this woman as that of Lydia in apostolic times and she volunteered to become the child of God. She and the two grown-up grandchildren were baptized under the names of Lydia, John and Grace. She handed over to the missionary all the vessels she had formerly used in her worship of idols. She is very firm in her belief and bold enough to preach the Savior whom she found, to her son and the people living close by.

A communion service in one of the stations in the Madura mission, India, the past year, presented a very unique sight; five persons from five different castes, high and low, stood in a row, their elbows touching each other, offering themselves as candidates to be admitted to the church. In recording this the writer says, "It actually seemed that the prophecy that the cow and the bear shall feed together had been fulfilled."

A trip made by Mr. Wagner through the out-stations of the Hermosillo field in Mexico, in company with the native colporteur, showed him as never before how eager and hungry the people are for the Word of God. He cites many cases of persistent study of the Bible and adds, "The carrying of a pocket Testament is so general among the believers in Sahuaripta that one may say it is the fashion, and there has been such an increase in the number of Protestants in this district that two mail carriers, instead of one, are now required to bring the literature to that distributing point. Through the spreading of literature and the faithful work of the Bible agent and the scattering of believers, this field has been extended by the addition of three new circuits, and already Sunday schools have been organized in these places."

A school for girls, just completed in Samoa, costing $10,000, has been paid for entirely by the contributions of Samoan Christians connected with the churches founded by the London Missionary Society.

Mr. Moffett reports considerable progress in Pyeng Yang, Korea. The boys' school of the city has been divided and a new school started at some distance away, with 26 boys under a new teacher who gives good promise. Mr. Moffett visited a growing group about eight miles from the city, holding with them the first service in their new building recently purchased. Here fifteen were received by baptism and twelve as catechumens. During the trip of seven days with Mr. Bernheisel five groups were visited, 10 people baptized and 15 catechumens received. The groups in this section are growing, but are in need of more attention, while in counties just beyond are a number of groups calling loudly for a visit, which other work will not permit. In four distinct groups two new schools and two new church buildings have a place in this month's report.

The Rio Grande Training school was removed last March from El Paso, Texas, to Guadalupe, Mexico. Rev. John Howland says: "As soon as the opening of the school was announced, applications began to be made. From the extreme northwestern corner of the country several youths applied for admission. They were told that it would be impossible for the mission to transport pupils, but that a limited number of such as had satisfactory recommendations would be cared for if they could find a way to come. Two boys from the Fuerte district, in northern Sinaloa, having seen both of the directors when the latter visited that field, determined to get to Guadalupe in some way. By working, selling their tools, etc., they got a little money together and decided to start on foot on the journey of about 1,200 miles. A long and interesting tale might be written of their experiences during more than a month. Two days they accompanied the stage, riding most of the way by paying a little money and doing a great deal of work in whipping the mules, carrying the torches (the stages in that hot country make their trips by night), and aiding in other ways. Later they saved about two hundred miles by an agreement with the captain of a steamer. One of the two is a full-blooded Mayo Indian, and knows the language of his people. He is much interested in trying to put Gospel words and truths into that tongue, which has never been reduced to writing.

Christian Melodies

By Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick

This popular new song book has been pronounced by leading musicians an ideal book for all church purposes. The author is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world and has put the best productions of his life time into this book. It also contains the choicest selections from a large number of the principal song writers of the country. This insures

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems.

Wherever it has been introduced it has given excellent satisfaction. All responses from those using it are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs. If you want the best all-purpose church song book get CHRISTIAN MELODIES.

PRICES—Boards $20, Limp Cloth $17.50 per hundred, not prepaid. Single copy 25c postpaid. The Christian Century Co., - Chicago, Ill.

Madison Institute

RICHMOND, KY.

J. W. McGarvey, Jr., Principal

A First Class Boarding School for Girls

With an exceptionally strong force of teachers who were educated at the leading institutions of America and Europe, and have made high records as instructors—every one a specialist in her department, and with an admirably equipped building, we are prepared to do work that is unequalled this side the great institutions of the east. Music department especially strong. Frequent illustrated lectures (free) by the principal on his recent visit to Egypt, Palestine and Europe. Beautiful and healthful location; only one serious case of sickness in 12 years. Good table fare. No fussy teachers. Prices no higher than other first-class schools. Send for catalog.

Eureka College.

Quiet City, Beautiful Grounds. Convenient Buildings, Athletic Park, Gymnasium, Physical Director, Location Healthful, Influences Good, Expenses Low.

COURSES:

Full Collegiate Training, Music and Art, Bible School, Preparatory and Commercial Department.

Next Session Begins September 17, 1901.

For full information, address the President,

ROBERT E. HIERONYMUS,
Eureka, Illinois.

BOOKS

The Witness of Jesus and Other Sermons, by Alexander Proctor, with a biographical sketch by T. P. Haley, edited by J. H. Garrison.

It was the pleasure of the writer of this review to listen to these splendid sermons more than twenty years ago. They made a profound impression on him at the time, giving him an intellectual and spiritual uplift, and the reading of them has been a great delight. Alexander Proctor was a great preacher. He was a giant intellectually and a little child in the sweetness and teachableness of his spirit. He had the mind of the Master. His great love for Christ and his appreciation of him thrilled through all his sermons. To have listened to his sermons through a protracted meeting and to have been associated with him and heard him talk at the fireside was almost an education. No review can do these sermons justice. They must be read, and reread. They must be studied. Alexander Proctor was a thinker. His sermons were not made, they grew. He was not a firstly, secondly, and thirdly preacher. He took a great thought and opened it up. You could see it grow, expand. It crowded out other things from the mind and took possession of you. Your horizon was pushed back, the heavens above you were lifted up and you seemed to be living in a larger world than you had ever dreamed of before. He dealt with great themes. The small had no place in his mind. The nineteen sermons in this volume are all on great subjects—The Witness of Jesus, Creation—Old and New, The Coming One, The Transfiguration of Man, Salvation and Retribution, The Three Rivers of Revelation, etc. They are modern sermons, and are alive with the brightest, freshest thought of the day. Alexander Proctor kept up with the procession. There were about his mind no signs of decay. He delighted in life, and these sermons pulse with life. I have said that I listened to them twenty years ago. But they are not old sermons. Alexander Proctor never preached an old sermon. He couldn't. Every sermon was "born again." The best, the newest, he had in him. He was not a man of one book, but of two. The Bible and nature were the two books he studied and loved. He never feared any conflict between them. The author of one was the author of the other. To him the Darwins, Tyndalls and Huxleys were God's prophets and interpreters and he welcomed every new truth they brought from nature's storehouse. He was in love with truth and he never discarded a truth because it was old or feared one because it was new.

The charm of these sermons is the Christ they hold. They are not theological, but Christological. It will be found that in every sermon Christ is central. All his lines of thought converge in Christ. This is the thread of gold on which all these pearls of thought are strung. No man was ever more fearless in presence of assaults against the Bible, or criticisms of it, than was Mr. Proctor. The secret of it was his boundless trust in the Christ. Upon this Rock he stood, and all the waves that rolled in from the stormy sea broke harmless at his feet. He was the confidence of the Psalmist when he said, "I will not fear, though the earth do change and though the mountains be moved in the heart of the seas, though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."

It was a happy thought that put into this volume the "Remarks at the Communion Table." How tender and beautiful are these "Table Talks!" Mr. Proctor was not only a great thinker, but a boundless lover of the Christ, and in these "Remarks at the Communion Table" we see the great thinker aglow with love. Take this at the close of the sermon on "The Witness of Jesus." He had just been speaking of "the new creation, the new heaven and the new earth," and then at the Table he says: "The greatest power of which we can have any knowledge in this world in the making of things new is love. It is the vast, infinite renewer, like the sunlight, which is a symbol of love, renewing the heavens and the earth, as the old Psalmist, looking upon the earth, said, 'All nature changes and becomes new.' Now, all the new homes in the world, and the new lives, and the new joys that spring out of them, come from love; and when God wants to give us a taste of the new home, the new heaven, the new Jerusalem, he shows us his love. When he wants to fill the human heart with some anticipation of that which overflows, that new inspiration, he shows us his infinite love in Christ. And that is what this ordinance means. It comes to us once more, always in harmony with God's greatest thoughts toward us, renewing the soul from week to week, making it diviner, stronger, filling it with hope and light. And this is the effect of love, by which his own great heart comes into ours, his thought into our thought, as it is shown to us in Christ. This renewing is going on always, and this is what this institution means, that looking at this great, divine, infinite force in God's heart, this is to make you new in your hopes, joys, religious life, aspirations, energies, from week to week, through the pilgrimage here, with regard to a life to come." The volume of sermons concludes with an admirable biographical sketch of the great preacher by T. P. Haley, who knew, appreciated and loved him as a brother. The editor, J. H. Garrison, has done his work well. He is entitled to our gratitude. He has given us an invaluable treasure. The book is more than a gem. It is a seed. It is destined to bear much fruit. Here Alexander Proctor, though dead, yet speaketh, and his speech shall be a fruitful seed.

Thou must be true thyself
If thou the truth wouldst teach;
It is the overflowing heart
That gives the lips full speech.
Think truly and thy words
Shall the world's famine feed;
Live truly and thy life
Shall be a great and noble creed.
John W. Allen.

LITERARY NOTES.

McClurg & Co. have announced a book of verse called "At the Sign of the Ginger Jar." The author is Ray Clarke Rose. A very large proportion of the poems constituting the volume were written and appeared in The Record-Herald's editorial department, "Out of the Ginger Jar."

The third edition of Gen. J. H. Wilson's "China," recently issued by the Appletons, continues to attract attention. Charles Stewart Smith says, in a letter to the author: "I have visited China, and I consider that you have told us more concisely about that strangely complex country than all the other books I have read on this subject."

A. C. McClurg & Co. make the announcement that their publishing department will hereafter be under the full management of F. G. Browne, for the last twelve years business manager of the Dial. The department was from its beginning and up to the date of his death in April last under the immediate personal charge of General McClurg, and the high standards which he set will be zealously guarded and maintained.

D. Appleton and Company announce a new book by Garrett P. Serviss on "Other Worlds," in which the latest discoveries concerning the planets are presented from the point of view of human interest. It is many years since a book treating of other worlds than ours in a manner at once scientific and popular has appeared, and, in the meantime, there has been an immense advance in astronomical knowledge, so that Mr. Serviss' book seems calculated to meet a genuine and very wide demand.

The W. B. Conkey Company will issue this fall a new volume of verses by Ella Wheeler Wilcox under the title of "Poems of Power." In a prefatory note the author says: "The final word in the title of the volume refers to the divine power in every human being, the recognition of which is the secret of all success and happiness. It is this idea which many of the verses endeavor to illustrate." The work, which will be brought out in handsome style, will contain Mrs. Wilcox's latest productions.

A new book of fiction, promising much in point of freshness and interest, is announced by the Scribners from the pen of William Allen White, the Kansas editor who leaped into continental fame a few years ago by the writing of a single editorial. Since his "What's the matter with Kansas?" Mr. White, has, with painstaking effort, won his way to literary repute of a high order, and thousands of readers of his "Boyville" stories will warmly welcome his new book, embodying, as it does, the most important writing of his life.

Charles Scribner's Sons are preparing to issue, in conjunction with Constable & Co. of London, a new edition of the novels of George Meredith. The books, in the form known as "pott octavo," will have no other ornamentation than the author's autograph on the side. In view of the increasing popularity which Meredith's works have obtained after many years, and the fact that the old edition has long been out of print, this pocket edition is likely to be popular. The shorter pieces—"The Tale of Chloe," "Farina," "The Case of General Opie," and, in fact, all the short stories which Meredith has written—will be included.

A new book by Dr. Chapman is an event in the lives of multitudes of earnest Christians, and his latest book is sure of an eager welcome. It is entitled "Day by Day, or Meditations for the Morning Watch," and is published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. The general theme of the book, as of all Dr. Chapman's works, is the winning of the higher life, the deeper communion with God, a putting away of the hindrances of the flesh, and a putting on of the freedom of the spirit. Dr. Chapman is especially strong in his use of anecdotes, but he is supreme in his suggestive and spiritual interpretations of Scripture, and his entire book is based upon a multitude of Scripture references.

George Kennan's unceremonious expulsion from the Russian empire has directed public attention to his book, "Siberia and the Exile System," which startled the world ten years ago by its revelation of the way political offenders were treated by the czar. As a serial in the Century the same material has caused a veritable sensation. Copies of the magazine circulated in the czar's dominions reached their destination with whole pages blocked out by the censor. The book has not lost its interest in the past decade, and even before Mr. Kennan's summary ejection from St. Petersburg it had been selling better than for several years. It is understood that certain reforms have been effected in the Siberian penal system, the necessity of which was pointed out in this work.

Last spring the Scribners announced a new and enlarged edition of John Rae's "Contemporary Socialism," but it became necessary to postpone publication until fall. It is now practically ready. This new edition is the famous old edition brought up to date by adding a chapter recording the enormous strides socialism has made in Europe during the last decade, and the most interesting compromise on the part of the leaders by which the cause itself has been conserved at the sacrifice of many of the ideas that lay at the very foundation of their philosophy. Social reform has now become the immediate object of the party, ungraciously enough, but of necessity. Grudgingly accepted, at first as a mere bait for votes, it is becoming a substantial instalment of the amelioration that it is hoped the movement will ultimately bring forth.

"The Roentgen Rays in Medicine and Surgery. As an Aid in Diagnosis and as a Therapeutic Agent" is the title of a book to be published immediately by The Macmillan Company. The author, Francis H. Williams, M. D., is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; visiting physician at the Boston City Hospital; Fellow of the Massachusetts Medical Society; member of the Association of American Physicians, and a member of the American Climatological Association. There are about 300 illustrations in the book which embodies the results of the original work that has been carried on by the author during nearly five years, together with a careful study of the already considerable literature of the subject, chiefly that of Germany, France, England and America. The writer has had exceptional opportunity to study and test this latest addition to methods of diagnosis by the daily examination of patients chosen from the wards of a large hospital. Illustrative cases are cited and numerous tracings and photographs are reproduced.

A PLAIN QUESTION.

Do you need a renovator after the hot days of the past season? Do you feel that you ought to brace up your constitution, strengthen and cleanse your system? Buy a bottle of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. It has benefited thousands, why should it not benefit you also? Special agents sell it. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 S. Hoyne ave., Chicago, Ill.

$6.00 TO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $6.00!

via the Nickel Plate Road, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with limit coaches only; 15-day tickets at $13.00 of 5 days from date of sale, good in for the round trip, and 20-day tickets at $16.00 for round trip, good in sleeping cars. Three through daily trains. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women and girls, and for abdominal weakness, backache, lung troubles or general weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY, of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident student's exceptional facilities, Undergraduate and Post-Graduate, studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

RHEUMATISM

Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia and Kidney Troubles are instantly relieved and quickly cured by EASINE. Acute Rheumatism cannot exist 48 hours when Easine is faithfully taken. Chronic Rheumatism and old cases that do not yield to other remedies always give way to the magic power of Easine. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send a brief description of your case when you write. Complete treatment mailed, prepaid, on receipt of one dollar. Easine Chemical Co., 101 Bell Block, Cincinnati, O.

PILES TRIAL TREATMENT FREE. We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ Pile Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once, Germ Medical Co., 215 E. 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

HYACINTHS. TULIPS. 25 Different Bulbs all for 25c.

By mail with cultural directions, for garden or pots.
 1 Belgian Hyacinth. 1 Cilla Fragrans, superb New Sweet-Scented.
 1 Cockade Hyacinth. 1 Bermuda Freesia.
 1 Grape Hyacinth. 1 Golden Sacred Lily.
 1 Double Tulip. 1 Poet's Baffoil.
 1 Single Tulip. 1 Star of Bethlehem.
 1 Narcissus, Stella. 1 St. Bridge Anemone
 1 Narcissus, Leeds. 1 Winter Kammenius
 1 Winter Aconite. 1 Giant Crocus.
 1 Glory of the Snow. 1 Oxalis.
 1 Iris. 1 Camassia. 1 Brodiaea.
 1 Allium. 1 Snowdrop. 1 Ixia. 1 Sparaxis.
 Also Free to all who apply, our elegant Fall Catalogue of Bulbs, Plants and Seeds, for fall planting and winter blooming. Crocuses, Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, Crocus, Lilies, Plants, Shrubs and Fruits.
 John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y.

THE HOME

Wish and Work.

The boy who's always wishing
That this or that might be,
But never tries his mettle,
Is the boy that's bound to see
His plans all come to failure,
His hopes end in defeat,
For that's what comes when wishing
And working fail to meet.

The boy who wishes this thing
Or that thing, with a will
That spurs him on to action,
And keeps him trying still
When effort meets with failure,
Will some day surely win,
For he works out what he wishes,
And that's where "luck" comes in.

The "luck" that I believe in
Is that which comes with work,
And no one ever finds it
Who's content to wish and shirk;
The men the world call "lucky"
Will tell you, every one,
That success comes, not by wishing,
But by hard work, bravely done.
—Eben E. Rexford.

MY LITTLE MAN.

CHAPTER II.

By Kathleen Watson.

In two minutes I was at his bedside—at the goal of the journey that had seemed as though it would never end at all. I grasped his hands, but could not look at him at once, or speak.

"Dear old Nell! I knew you would come. I knew you would," he smiled and said again.

Just the same old voice, with the same old ring in it; the voice that had more power and influence over me than any other voice on earth. In eyes, and words, and ways, just the same dear earnestness, the same dear carelessness; the same old charm of manliness, and now of perfect heroism; the same simplicity and the same quaint humor—noting of good was lost in him; the waves of sorrow that had passed over his soul had swept no sweetness from him; torture had not paralyzed him; cruelty had not crushed him; nor the deprivation of the dearest things in life driven him to despair.

His face and forehead were scored and furrowed with lines so many and so deep that it seemed as though a red-hot tool had traced and burnt them in. His thick dark hair had turned to iron-grey. Behind the smiles there was a sorrow in the eyes—a sorrow that must have struck the coldest of those who saw. The face of a man who has gone down to the things of daily life with pluck and denial undreamt of, smiling bravely with the best of them, hiding deep at his heart the deadliest hurt of all.

Very far back into the past we went, I think. When he said, "Dear old Nell!" I was no longer in that distant prison sickward, I was back in the old school room at Rugby. It was the afternoon when the sunbeams came dancing and quivering through the high elms right on to my desk, to the distraction and destruction of Euclid and myself; when my head was hot and heavy with effort and rebellious thoughts; when some one came to me and set me right and helped me afterwards to keep my boyhood straight and clean—some one whose love had ever since been more to me than any other loves on earth. "And I can do nothing for you, nothing?" I asked him, frantic with the hopelessness of the thought of what might have been. "Now, is it likely, Nell," he smiled, "that I should have so implored you to come across this awful distance, solely for the bliss of seeing at the end of it an old crock like myself?"

His eyes were strangely bright, he caught his breath at intervals when he spoke, and then a distressing cough seized and shook his wasted frame. His face, though thin, was not in any way distorted by illness; and, whether it was the influence of the old gay charm of manner or not, I could not bring myself to see in it the dread approach of death, or to believe that he was in the last ravages of consumption.

A great clock near struck ten, and we both knew that our interview for that night at least would very shortly cease.

Then our hearts beat quickly, and we laughed no longer merely to relieve each other.

"I believe," he said, "I really believe that I have kept myself alive by sheer force of will until you came; for I have to ask of you a thing, or even two things, which I never could have trusted to a letter, and to the mere chance of your getting it or not. For the last six months I have lived for this day. My continual prayer has been, God speed you here; and somehow I have always known that you would come, Nell."

Great beads of perspiration rose on his forehead; the veins on his temple swelled and started; he spoke eagerly and in agony, like one who realizes suddenly that he has so much to say, and so little time to say it in. He told me all the story of his arrest, the cause of it, and just how and when it happened. He was sitting in his study window, with his little boy on his knees, telling him one of the stories which, at the leisure hour of sunset, it was his wont to do, when the pitiless officials of the Czar came in and tore them asunder.

Slowly, in gasps, it might have been in sobs, as in one whose soul remembrance reads in twain, and whose grief is too great for utterance, he told me of that parting.

"He clung to me and I to him. We understood nothing but that we were to be parted from each other. Oh,

Nell! I always see that small, white, agonized face as I saw it last—his dear blue eyes wide with terror, his arms outstretched to mine, when they had bound. Night and day there rings in my ears his last anguished cry, "Father, father, take me, too!"—"Listen, darling," I said; "you must be very brave. Father has to go away, perhaps for a long time. He cannot take you with him. It is too far and too cold. But he will write to Nell. And when Nell comes back from across the seas, he will fetch you and love you always. But you must be so very, very brave, that Nell, when he comes, shall find that father's darling has been the best and bravest boy in all the world. Tell nurse not to leave you. I will think what can be done." But he only cried, "Father, father, take me too," till I thought I should go mad—mad—mad in my powerlessness and pain. Then for the last time I kissed him. "Listen, listen, darling! If you are not brave, you will kill father," I said, throwing out in my despair the sheet-anchor which I knew would never fail me. The gendarmes bade me imperiously come at once. I did not want my darling to see me dragged from him. We did not speak again. I left him in his seat in the deep recess of the window. Ah, to see his little face! When we got down to the street, I looked up. He was there. He had unlatched the window, and had pushed his head through the bars which I had put up for his sake, because he used to sit in his corner there and watch for me when I returned from the colleges. It was snowing, and the white flakes settled on his curls. Hours afterwards I remember wondering if he had stayed there. My sheet-anchor had not failed me. I saw his lips move as though they tried to say something; he waved a tiny pocket-handkerchief through the bars; and, Nell, he smiled—he positively smiled! Oh! that smile—that smile! To think that my darling should have gone through his Gethsemane when he was but five years old."

After that he could speak no more for the torture of recollection, and I sat silently, with bowed head, by his side, trying to comprehend something of the awful strain that it had been his lot to bear through all those lonely months, comparing it with the even flow of my own careless, untroubled years; and in that distant, dismal sick ward, strange thoughts struck me concerning the changes and chances of this mortal life. Then they came and told us that our interview for that night must cease. I was lodged, not badly, in the governor's house. To pave the way for as unrestricted an intercourse as possible with Allan, I gave Romstroff a considerable sum to be expended in every possible comfort for Allan, feeling that if the dear boy got the benefit of half of it, it would be something.

The next morning before noon I was with him again. The March sun was shining bravely on the white land around; it streamed through a window at one end of the ward right on to his bed. He had passed a sleepless night of pain; and by the hard light of day, I saw clearly what in the hope and excitement of the night before I had not chosen to see—I saw that the prison walls of Yakoutsk would very soon hold him captive no more for ever.

Then I learnt why he had kept the promise made to me in the shadowy twilight way of Athens, why he had called me to him across the breadth of the desolate Siberian land:—

That he might leave in my keeping the most sacred charge on earth, so sacred that he could trust the message to no paper, post, or servant, so sacred that into my ears alone it needed to be told.

(To be continued.)

Woman's function in the world is not so much to be admired as to admire, to praise, to encourage, and to comfort. The woman who makes her life a search for admiration is abdication her finest power over mankind. She is by right, as Ruskin put it, "the arbiter of praise and of blame." She sets the standard of her men folk high or low, as she chooses. What she shows a hearty contempt for is sure to lose ground as a social usage or opinion. Whatever laxity of manners or of morals she tolerates is equally sure to gain ground. If she lends her countenance to the lascivious theater, a low-pitched literature, a paganized art, men will never reform these evils. If she sanctions the living of an empty, idle, and frivolous life, then that will be the life of her male friends. But if she sets herself against these things, they will be disused and despised. Not childhood only, but the world at large, is plastic under her hands. If the bomb-shells of war were all to explode in her china-closets, Ruskin suggests, wars would soon cease out of the earth.—Sunday School Times.

How Bessie's Light Shone.

It was a very dismal day. The sun was hidden by clouds, and every now and then little gusts of wind blew the rain against the windows, and moaned and sighed through the pine trees.

Bessie Dean stood at the window of the old farm-house drumming on the pane. She looked disconsolate—yes, actually cross—and once in a while a tear stole down her cheek and fell on the glass, as if in sympathy with the storm without.

"I never saw such a dark, lonesome, gloomy day in all my life, never," she said. "Papa gone, mamma sick with a headache, baby cross, and here I am all alone. There isn't a single thing bright and pleasant, and I just think it is too bad!"

The tears fell very fast now, and the brown curls bobbed expressively up and down among the curtains.

After she had cried a long time, she became thoughtful, and began looking out of the window again. Presently she began to speak her thoughts.

"Grandma says when I cry and think that everything is awful lonesome, it is because I have forgotten something. She says if I would read my verses in the morning, and try to practice them all day I shouldn't have time to be lonesome. I did forget this morning, and I believe I'll go and read my verses now, just to pass away the time."

She quickly ran and got her verses, and sat down in the big easy chair to read them. As she read on, her face grew very sober, and she again indulged in her habit of thinking aloud:

"They're all about our being 'the light of the world,' and 'letting our light shine.' I wonder whether the lights are all gone out that makes this such a dismal day. I remember when the teacher gave us those verses she said: 'Now, children, remember, if the day is very dark without, you can make it very bright and sunshiny all day long.' I don't believe my light has shone a bit all day, and this day needs it more than most others. I'm going to try, right away, and see what I can do."

The little girl jumped up with a face far more cheerful than it had been a half hour before. Indeed, Bessie was like an April day, so full of changes was she, but after a little shower the sun often shone the brightest.

She didn't have to wait long to find something to do, for baby was crying pitifully in the sitting room. She went in and took baby in her arms, and sang to her until the tired little one had fallen asleep; then Bessie went into mamma's room.

Mamma was wide awake, and suffering severely with her head, but her first words made Bessie glad:

"It was so thoughtful of my little girl to stop baby's crying when mamma's head ached so."

Bessie said nothing, but began bathing the aching head. Her little hands grew very tired, but she would not stop until she thought mamma was asleep; then, after pulling down the shades, she stole softly out of the room and down stairs.

The clock struck five just as she entered the kitchen, and, remembering that it was nearly tea time, she began setting the table for papa's supper.

When papa came home that night, and called her "Little Sunshine," and mamma awoke much refreshed, and baby laughed and crowed after her

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

Ott "A GOOD MAN WANTED"

To Advance for First Class

LECTURES AND ENTERTAINMENTS

ED. AMHERST OTT, Dean Drake University College of Oratory, Des Moines

nap, Bessie thought the world seemed different from what it was a few hours before, and she could hardly believe it when she looked out of the window and saw the rain pouring down as steadily as it had in the early part of the afternoon.

"I guess it's because the lights are shining again inside that makes it so bright," she softly said.

"Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. . . . Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:14-16.)—The Myrtle.

ANOTHER SOLUTION OF THE PUZZLE.

The following puzzle was given and solved in The Christian Century of September 5:

There was a groceryman who had an eight-quart jug full of vinegar. The grocer had an order for four quarts, but had only a three-quart and a five-quart measure in his store. He told his boy to get four quarts of vinegar for his customer and he was not allowed to pour out and waste any of his vinegar, and he had no other vessel to help him out but the two measures. How did he do it?

Here is another solution: Fill the five-quart measure from the eight-quart jug. Fill the three-quart measure from the five-quart measure. Empty the three-quart measure into the eight-quart jug. Empty the two-quarts left in the five-quart measure into the three-quart measure. Fill the five-quart measure from the eight-quart jug. Fill the three-quart measure from the five-quart measure. Remain, four quarts in the five-quart measure.

Here is a good puzzle from the Bible: Whose daughter was Noah?

How many boys and girls will send the answer to The Christian Century? Harry Marschner.

Good for the Lungs.

Mr. Joseph B. Dunkie, Box 100, Loveland, O., says if any sufferer from wasting coughs, bronchitis, weak lungs, catarrh or consumption will write to him, he will gladly tell them how he was cured by a home treatment at very moderate cost. He says the simplicity of the method will surprise you, but best of all, it actually cures.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD

will sell tickets each Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday during October to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition and return, at $6.00, good in coaches; return limit five days from date of sale.

Tickets with longer limit at slightly increased rates. Three through daily trains. Chicago Passenger Station, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, City ticket office, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN TICKETS

via the Nickel Plate Road, $13.00 for the round trip, good 15 days; $16.00 for the round trip good 20 days. Three daily trains with vestibuled sleeping-cars. Meals in dining cars, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

CURES
Female Troubles, Stooping Posture, Inflammations, Internal Pains, Tired Feeling, Backache, Weak Lungs, Nervousness.

TRIAL FREE.
 It will make you comfortable, buoyant, happy—give you ability to work and enjoy life. It is simple, wholly external, adjustable to any figure. Worn with or without corset.

We have over 15,000 letters like this:
 Chandler, Okla., July 27, 1899.
 Your Brace did all you said about it and more for me. It has saved me a big doctor's bill and brought me good health, which I had not had before in 25 years. My troubles were dizziness, headache, lung disease, stomach and other ills to which women are subject.
 MRS. L. B. DICKINSON.

Write today for particulars and illustrated book mailed free in plain sealed envelope. Address
 The Natural Body Brace Co., Box 744, Salina, Kansas.
 Every woman should have this Brace.

TO ST. LOUIS

ILLINOIS CENTRAL

CENTRAL

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY

ROUTE

RAILROAD

DAYLIGHT SPECIAL

FAST-DAY TRAIN

THE

DIAMOND SPECIAL

POPULAR NIGHT TRAIN

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.

A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

Largest Foundry on Earth making
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
 Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

FAST TRAINS
 Chicago & North-Western Ry.

The Overland Limited
California in 3 days

The Colorado Special
*One night to Denver
 3 days to San Francisco*

The Chicago-Portland Special
Oregon and Washington in 3 days

The North-Western Limited
*Electric Lighted—Chicago,
 St. Paul and Minneapolis*

Duluth and St. Paul Fast Mail
Fast train to head of lakes

The Peninsula Express
*Fast time to Marquette
 and Copper Country*

NO change of cars. Everything in connection with its service is modern and progressive.

TICKET OFFICES
 212 Clark St. and Wells St. Station.

MICHIGAN CENTRAL
The Niagara Falls R. Co.

Pan-American Special
 A Magnificent New Train.
 Lv. CHICAGO 6.00 p. m., daily.
 Ar. BUFFALO 7.45 a. m.

Send 4c. postage for "Pan-American Souvenir" and other beautifully illustrated publications.
 O. W. Ruggles, Gen'l Pass'r & Tkt. Agt., Chicago.

Bethany College.
 Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.
 Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,
J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty.

Burlington
Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul
Minneapolis
Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Con'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R.
 209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
 Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
 CHICAGO, ILL.

PARKER'S
HAIR BALM
 Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

OCEAN EXCURSION TO NEW YORK

BIG FOUR
CHESAPEAKE & OHIO ROUTE
The Rhine, Alps and Battlefield Line.

Stop-over Privileges at Old Point Comfort going; Buffalo—Returning.

Route No. 1, $35.00.
 Going via Big Four Route to Cincinnati; Chesapeake & Ohio Railway to Old Point or Norfolk; Old Dominion Line (meals and berths included on steamer) to New York. Returning via Pennsylvania Railroad and Pennsylvania Lines, or via New York Central to Buffalo and Lake Shore or Michigan Central to Chicago.

Route No. 2, $33.00.
 Going, same as Route No. 1. Returning via West Shore, Lehigh Valley or D. L. & W. Rys. to Buffalo; New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad or Grand Trunk to Chicago.

Tickets will be on sale July 1 to October 20, limited to return within ten days, except on return trip, if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent at Buffalo or agents at Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, within original ten-day limit, stop-over often days additional is allowed at any one of those points. Stop-over at Old Point Comfort is allowed in either direction within limit of ticket.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Route through the Allegheny and Blue Ridge mountains, Shenandoah and Mount Vernon and the historic region of Virginia, in connection with the ocean trip of eighteen hours from Norfolk or Old Point Comfort to New York, offers the most beautiful, varied and interesting trip in America.

For further particulars address

J. C. TUCKER, G. N. A., C. C. C. & St. L. Ry.,
 234 Clark Street, Chicago.

W. E. CONKLYN, N. W. P. A., C. & O. Ry.,
 234 Clark Street, Chicago.

Your "MAGAZINE MONEY"

and How Best to Spend It

THE Publishers of SUCCESS take pleasure in announcing that they have entered into exclusive contracts with ten American periodicals—each a leader in its own distinctive field—by which extremely low prices have been secured, based on heavy subscription guarantees. The benefit of these prices is now given to the public in the following extraordinary clubbing offers, by which you may obtain

Four Magazines for the Price of One.

GREAT FAMILY OFFER

(For Father, Mother, Boys and Girls.)

Success, - - - - - $1.00
Review of Reviews (new), { 2.50
 Current Literature (new), or New England Magazine may be substituted. { 3.00
Frank Leslie's Pop. Monthly 1.00
 The Cosmopolitan may be substituted.
Good Housekeeping, - 1.00

Regular Price TOTAL VALUE,

$ 6
 Our Price Only $ 3

The Household, or The Designer may be substituted.

ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE FOR A FULL YEAR AND MAY BE SENT TO ONE OR SEVERAL ADDRESSES.

SUCCESS is the brightest, most up-to-date and most profusely illustrated monthly published. The inspiration of a lifetime has come to thousands of SUCCESS readers through their investment of $1.00, its yearly subscription price. Review of Reviews is the "indispensable" magazine, presenting a brilliant record in print and picture of the world's thought and work.—monthly, $2.50 a year. The Cosmopolitan has been for years without a superior as a magazine of general and varied attractions.—monthly, $1.00 a year. The Household is a supreme authority in home-work and decoration, table-equipment, nursery-lore, etiquette, pyrography, photography, and offers a very high class of poetry and fiction.—monthly, $1.00 a year. Leslie's is one of the great modern monthlies whose articles and illustrations are the highest expression of magazine art.—monthly, $1.00 a year. Current Literature is the leading literary monthly of America; it keeps you in complete touch with the world of letters.—$5.00 a year.

OTHER ATTRACTIVE OFFERS:

	Regular Price.	Our Price.
SUCCESS, and any one of our dollar magazines,	$2.00	$1.50
SUCCESS, and any two of our dollar magazines,	3.00	2.00
SUCCESS, Rev. of Rev. (new), and any one of our dollar magazines,	4.50	2.50
SUCCESS, and Leslie's Weekly,	5.00	2.75
SUCCESS, Review of Reviews (new), (or Current Literature new), and any two of our dollar magazines,	6.00	3.00
SUCCESS, Review of Reviews (new), and Current Literature, (new),	6.50	3.00
SUCCESS, Current Literature (new), and New England Magazine,	7.00	3.00
SUCCESS, Rev. of Rev. (new), and Leslie's Weekly,	7.50	3.75
SUCCESS, Review of Reviews (new), Current Literature (new), and New England Magazine,	9.50	4.00

New subscriptions only will be accepted at the above prices for the Review of Reviews, Current Literature, and North American Review, but present subscribers may renew their subscriptions by adding One Dollar for each renewal subscription, to the combination prices named. Either new or renewal subscriptions will be accepted for all other magazines named.

OUR GREAT EDUCATIONAL OFFER

Success, - - - - - $1.00
Review of Reviews (new), { 2.50
 New England Magazine may be substituted. { 3.00
Current Literature, (new), 3.00
 Any two of our $1.00 magazines may be substituted.
North Am. Review (new), - 5.00

$12 In Value
 For Only $5

(These four magazines will keep you in constant touch with all the burning questions of the day.)

North American Review presents a most brilliant galaxy of articles by the greatest writers on world-problems.—monthly, $5.00 a year. The Designer pictures in colors the latest Parisian and New York fashions, describing costumes, millinery, designs and fabrics for women and children.—monthly, $1.00 a year. The New England Magazine paints with loving touch the landmarks of New England; tells of her history and tradition and of the achievements of her sons throughout the world.—monthly, $3.00 per annum. Good Housekeeping is the acknowledged arbiter regarding the little "kinks" which make the home a place of delight.—monthly, $1 a year. Leslie's Weekly is the popular, up-to-date, literary and pictorial record of moving events at home and abroad—now in its ninety-third volume.—weekly, $1.00 a year.

SUBSTITUTIONS: A new subscription to the Review of Reviews, a new or renewal subscription to Current Literature, and a new or renewal subscription to the New England Magazine may be substituted each for the other. The Cosmopolitan, Leslie's Monthly, Good Housekeeping, The Designer and the Household may be substituted each for any other except SUCCESS.

Subscriptions will commence with issues requested wherever possible to furnish copies; otherwise with issues of the month following that in which the subscription is received. Orders may be left with any reliable newsdealer.

THE SUCCESS COMPANY,
 72 University Bldg., Washington Square, New York.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE to represent SUCCESS and to present these popular clubbing offers. Write to us for full particulars.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, October 24, 1901.

Number 22.

LEADING FEATURES.

The Unifying of Mankind

An Evening Trip Across Siberia

Christological Tendencies of the Times

Sacred Music

Letters to the Book Lover

European Letter

Review of Books

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arreage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago
Indianapolis
Cincinnati
Louisville

and all points South & Southeast
THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake
and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

AN UP-TO-DATE SUNDAY SCHOOL

A WORKER'S MANUAL.

A TREATISE ON SUNDAY SCHOOL MANAGEMENT BY A SKILLED WORKMAN—A CHRISTIAN EDUCATOR OF RIPE EXPERIENCE,

E. A. FOX,

General Secretary the Kentucky Sunday School Association.

This bright little book had an interesting origin. The author realizing the need for an authoritative treatise on the subject, outlined what he considered to be a model, up-to-date Sunday School. This outline was sent to the leading Sunday School workers of the United States for criticism. Almost without exception, the author was highly complimented, and few changes were suggested. This outline, improved by the valuable ideas thus secured forms the basis of the book. It furnishes an epitome of with well developed plans for inaugurating and using them, adapting it to the use of the busy superintendent and teacher. No Sunday School worker can study this manual without catching new angles of light on the problem of successful Sunday School management. Get this valuable little volume, follow its suggestions and your Sunday School is certain to be attractive and successful.

The Very Latest and Best Methods in Sunday School Work.

Single Copy, 25 Cents, Postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY,

358 Dearborn Street, . . . . . CHICAGO.

BELLS all kinds, big and little—for Church & School, for Fire, Factory and Farm. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY CO., Northville, Mich. Catalogue FREE.

BLMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BELLS Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

25c. THE LADIES' FRIEND Hopkins' Bleaching Gloves Made from the Best Glove-Kid in Black, Wine, Tan, and Chocolate. Just the thing for Housecleaning, Gardening, Driving, Wheeling, Outing, Golf, etc. Sizes, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Write for terms to agents. Hopkins Glove Co., B Apollo, Cincinnati, O.

RHEUMATISM... Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, loosens cords, and hardened muscles. If your druggist does not these remedies in stock, do not take anything else. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., October 24, 1901.

Number 23.

EDITORIAL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

THE UNIFYING OF MANKIND.

DURING the last decade we have thought more definitely of the unity of the race than was possible in any previous generation. There is rapidly growing up that which we must call a world consciousness, which, if not entirely new, is assuming new proportions and powers. When Queen Victoria died the whole world united, scarcely one government being omitted, in the celebration of her praises. When the Chinese war broke out, the minds of men throughout the world were once more stirred to sympathetic anxiety and the feeling that all were related to each other. And just the other day we in this country were thrilled with the discovery that practically the whole world had heard the assassin's shot which laid President McKinley on his death-bed, and that the eyes of all the nations were watching his demise. Such events bring to the surface of our every-day thought the progress of a movement which has been for long ages spreading itself over the earth, but which has been identified only in these last days as its speed has increased and its glorious significance has begun to appear.

The unifying of the race of mankind began away back in history with the abolition of the tribal life and the creation of nations. During the nineteenth century we not only saw this older process go on, but a new one set in, in the binding of many nations into vast empires. All the great countries of Europe are really empires, for they have their colonies, and comprise therefore within their life the interests of various races and widely separated territories. Among these empires of the world we must not only reckon China, but now also the United States of America. As in private business the union of single firms into groups and groups into great trusts has been found to simplify business, abolishing much friction and saving much energy, so in the political world the creation of empires has made the relations of numerous peoples to one another less complex. And now we see growing up before us the problem of the relations of these empires to one another. They of course watch each other, oftentimes with bitter hostility, but always with mutual fear, and yet their existence is making war less frequent and peace more secure.

The forces which at present make for peace, and therefore the ultimate union of empires, may be summed up as follows: First, we have the influence produced by the kinship of European dynasties. It is true that the German chancellor not long ago declared that he would resign if he thought that his emperor's conduct in international relations was ever molded by family considerations; but no human being can in his heart believe that this kinship has no influence. The crowned heads of Europe cannot possibly meet as close relatives or correspond on imperial matters with one another, even through their chief ministers, without being influenced by that kinship. In the second place, we must reckon the influence of an ever-widening public education. If education cannot be said to create righteousness before God, it does at least exercise a negative force which holds men back from conduct whose folly or weakness it enables them to see. Yet another fact of enormous importance is the commercial interdependence of the great empires. It may be true that some of these are self-sufficient, in the sense that if they were for a time cut off from foreign trade they would yet find all means of livelihood within their own borders. But this is not true of all; and in any case the standard of prosperity in every land is much more severe than that of a bare livelihood, and in every country what the people desire is prosperity. No government can in our day dare to enter upon a great war without facing the question as to whether its people will make the inevitable sacrifices of comfort and luxury for the end proposed.

Yet further, it must be recognized that the average conscience of the world is becoming confirmed in its condemnation of war, and its approval of every means that can avert it and maintain peace. It is the Christian conscience which has given rise to the slow-growing and indefinite but supremely potent system of international law. Such law can be argued before no judiciary and enforced by no executive save at the cost of international war; nevertheless, it is receiving the ever-widening approval of mankind and a constant homage from the leading governments of the world.

There is another side to consider. The main forces which, in addition to the vague ideas included in patriotism, help at present to separate the empires and make war possible, are of three kinds. First, there is the difference of language. No countries which use separate languages can ever understand each other so thoroughly or sympathize with each other so deeply as those which use the same language. We need not go far afield to discover the destructive force exercised upon the relations of the races to one another by their use of different languages. The second force is greed. The hearts of the nations are being centered upon the possession of wealth in a way altogether new in our world. The passion is being suffused through all classes. Their education is enabling them to cherish it by studying the means by which wealth can be attained, and watching all the social and political means which may prevent it. Undoubtedly it is in this direction that we must look for many of the events which in the future may bring even the greatest and most closely related empires to the verge of war. The third great force which helps to keep nations apart is religion. One is appalled to realize how much of the territorial ambition of Russia is caused by the undying claim of the Greek church to universal authority. It is notorious that one of the main causes of the age-long difficulty between Ireland and England is rooted in the attitude of the Roman Catholic church toward the British government. It is obvious, of course, that, while the Chinese war may not have been directly occasioned by the determination to exterminate Christianity, yet the religious spirit of the Chinese lies behind all other causes as the fundamental source of the Chinese policy. China cannot turn her eyes to the future without turning her back upon her gods, for the gods worshiped are the ancestors of every family. It is the past that is sacred; out of the past that the vital blessings come; in the past that their ideals live for the Chinese. Any invitation, whether by a missionary, an electrical engineer or a railroad surveyor, to take a step which would open the future to the Chinaman is an invitation to break with that attitude of supreme reverence for the past which informs all his worship and almost constitutes his religion.

Nevertheless, the great unifier is religion, and of all religions that one which will ultimately prove itself the light of the world, breaking down all middle walls of partition, is the religion of the New Testament. It is those upon whom the Spirit of Christ has come, and who look out upon the movements of the world in his name, who know, with that faith which is the highest knowledge, that the kingdoms of this world are destined yet to melt into one vast empire, to become "the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ."

AN EVENING TRIP ACROSS SIBERIA.

BY THE VISITOR.

IN days of rapid transit like these it should not be surprising that a journey should be made across that apparently interminable stretch of land with which we associate the horrors of the Russian exile system, and that it should take but a few hours. It was not made in a convict caravan, however, nor with the new airship, nor by means of Aladdin's lamp or Solomon's magic carpet, with their wonderful powers of transportation. The only vehicle needed was my easy chair, the only headlight my study lamp, and my only companions Dr. Francis E. Clark and the little party who recently went "A New Way Around an Old World" (Harpers, 1901). One who has only listened to Dr. Clark in conventions of Christian Endeavor might not imagine he would be especially interested in the small incidents of a trans-continental journey. But I had traveled with him to California once, not in the library fashion, but in reality, and knew him for a most delightful companion. So it was with pleasure that I started overland with him from Vladivostock, on the shores of the Sea of Japan, to make the long trip by rail and river across Siberia to St. Petersburg and London. I had the great advantage of Dr. Clark and his party, that I had to encounter none of the delays or inconveniences to which they were subjected, and landed at Moscow in no sort wearied with the way. I started with them at seven in the evening, and by ten was back home again, which shows how easily one can circumnavigate the world in this vicarious fashion.

The new Trans-Siberian Railway was only completed a few months since, just on the eve of the outbreak of the disturbances in China. Dr. Clark had attended conventions in both China and Japan, and as he was hastening to be in London for the international convention there, he chose the new route by land as offering promise of a more speedy journey. This great railroad is one of the latest means Russia has constructed for the realization of her enormous projects in the East. Nothing presents a more interesting study than the far-sighted plans of Peter the Great, and the marvelous persistency and steadiness with which ministry after ministry at St. Petersburg has adhered to them as the polar star of the national policy. Peter had two points in his mind toward which he affirmed it to be the sole business of his country to find approach—Constantinople and Peking. Russia's plans have never wavered from that day. Step by step this purpose has been furthered. In the Russo-Turkish war the first of these objects was really gained, but Russia was deprived of her advantage by European diplomacy, and her officers rode into the capital of Turkey without their side arms. But she has never retreated, and in the East every contest with China has pushed the border southward. The construction of the Trans-Siberian railway is another step toward her final purpose, enabling her, as it does, to accomplish the double object of rapidly transporting her troops to the distant Chinese frontier, and of filling Eastern Siberia with peasant emigrants from her European provinces who will presently oppose to the teeming millions of China, on the Manchurian border, a population as dense as her own and far more powerful and effective.

The first stage of the trip was made from Vladivostock to Khabaroffsk, on the Amour River, a distance of some five hundred miles. One traces with interest the itinerary of this journey on the maps, most of which now show the route of the great Asiatic railway. The governor of the province, on whom Dr. Clark had called, made special efforts to secure favorable accommodations along the line of travel which had only recently been opened and where much was not to be expected in the way of luxury. The train was drawn by a Baldwin locomotive, with the flaring stack once used on American railroads in the days when wood was burned. The cars, of which there were about a dozen, were of the sort better known in Europe than this country, smaller in size, and divided into compartments, and ranged in the order of first, second and third class according to the price of tickets. Along the side of the coach runs an aisle which serves for the porters or conductors. As the distances are long and the rate of travel rather slow, the seats are so arranged as to afford room to lie down at night. The toilet arrangements are of the poorest, as is affirmed to be the case in most of the hotels, where a single small and filthy closet serves all the purposes of washing for all alike. Towels and linen appear to be rare and elusive articles. Water for washing is scarce, and for drinking purposes not to be thought of. The remark of a Siberian writer is quoted to the effect that "Englishmen have the bad habit of washing themselves all over every day. As a consequence of this habit their bodies emit an unpleasant odor." Apparently no such "bad habits" prevail among many of the emigrants Russia has sent to this country, as observation in the steerage quarters of ocean vessels and on emigrant trains proves. Of the dining car, Dr. Clark's own words are the best description: "Pullman would scarcely own the diner as an offspring of his invention. A long table down the middle, at which perhaps twenty people can sit at one time, and a bar at the end, at which all kinds of drinks, light and strong, are served, and toothsome delicacies dear to the Russian heart, like caviare, sardines and other little fishes "biled in ile," are eaten. At the long table, table d'hote meals are served, consisting of three or four courses, and one can also order what he chooses at a fixed price."

At Khabaroffsk the river steamer was taken for the trip up the Amour, and as the stream was ascended it became necessary to change to a shallower and less comfortable boat, and then to one still smaller and meaner, till the limit of endurance was nearly reached. At the beginning the first, second and third class passengers were provided for separately, and though the semblance of this arrangement was still preserved, the lines were less and less drawn as the lower levels of comfort were reached. To these inconveniences were added those of sand bars, on which the boats became lodged, till patience was an almost expiring virtue. At last, after twenty days of this wearisome river travel, the city of Stretinsk was reached, and the rail trip resumed.

Here, however, a worse fate was in store. On the train, which consisted of cars somewhat resembling the fourth-class coaches on German trains, and were about like box cars with windows, the forethought of the kindly governor had provided by wire a car of comparatively comfortable character for the Clark party, in which there were two ladies. Unfortunately many miles had not been traversed before the train was stopped by a burned bridge, and after long delay it was announced that all would have to take a train that was waiting beyond the river. This train proved to be precisely like the one left, save, of course, that all the coaches were of the cheap class already mentioned, and the situation of the travelers may be imagined, or rather cannot be imagined, in a car whose natural inconvenience and discomfort were augmented many-fold by its filth and occupants. The days spent on that train ought to be a vivid memory in the minds of that group. I found it much pleasanter to let Dr. Clark tell the story than to venture to take it myself. At last Irkutsk was reached, and after crossing the beautiful Lake Baikal and spending a day in the town, the comparatively comfortable train de luxe for Moscow was taken and a week more of constant travel brought the tourists to the home-like atmosphere of Europe. The trip from the Chinese frontier had taken thirty-eight days, and, as it turned out, it was the last that could have been made for many weeks, for the government was roused to instant action by events in China, and every mile of the road was pressed to its utmost capacity in the transportation of troops.

If one wishes to know something of the new Siberia and the methods now employed to develop it, of the prison barges and cars, and of the pleasures and perplexities of a journey from sea to sea, let him read Dr. Clark's most entertaining book.

---

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Improvement in Literary Taste.

At the annual convention of the American Library Association the gratifying testimony was borne that the demand for better books is increasing, there being a growing preference for books of history, travel, science and other solid forms of literature. This is a good sign. It is true that the reading of fiction is enormous, many of the people purchasing the newer and more popular novels because of the inability of the libraries to supply them, yet the improvement noted by the librarians is something in which we ought to rejoice, inasmuch as the life of a people is largely molded by what they read.

---

President Roosevelt's Liking for a Literary Life.

Some years ago when President Roosevelt was being thrust into public service, writing to a friend he expressed his preference for a literary life. What he wrote then is doubtless true of him today. He said: "My career is that of a literary man, and as soon as I am out of my present position I shall go back to my books. I may never be called to take another public position, or I may be; in any event, I shall try to do decent work while I am in office. I shall probably enjoy the life greatly while I am taking part in it, and I shall certainly be ready at any time to go out of it with a perfectly light heart."

---

The Feminine and Masculine Ideals in Religion.

At a recent religious gathering the question was discussed whether the Church is not emphasizing too much the feminine ideal of religion and too little the masculine. This was taken as equivalent to enquiring whether the emotional and passive sides of religion are not being emphasized rather than the virile and aggressive. One thing which lends support to the affirmative side of this question is the fact that of the membership of the ordinary church seventy per cent are women, and only ten per cent are men. One reason for this preponderance of women in the church undoubtedly is that adequate efforts have not been made to win men. Too little demand has been made upon the vigorous powers of manhood. One of the speakers at the meeting referred to advanced the idea that even in the Sunday school there comes a time when women teachers cannot hold the boys. After a certain age they will not submit to the feminine ideal; and need to be placed under men teachers. When the perfect condition is reached the feminine and masculine ideals will be united; heart and head, tenderness and strength, being blended into one.

The Federation of Churches.

The Federation of Churches and Christian Organizations has just completed a canvass of the west side of New York, examining into the religious and sociological condition of its half a million of population. Some important results have been obtained. Twenty thousand families have been turned over to the care of the churches in the district. It was found that a very small proportion of Roman Catholics are unattached to any church, while the number of Hebrews who have broken away from the synagogue is very large. The unchurched Protestants are not as numerous as the Hebrews, but they are more in number than the Roman Catholics. The foreign Catholics especially seem to have a local root; they live in colonies, and are somewhat stationary; but the native American is a nomad. His unsettled, wandering habits often keep him from connecting himself with any particular church, even when he is religiously inclined. These strayed and scattered sheep need shepherding; and that is what the church is for.

Death of the Head of the Mormon Church.

The presidents of the Mormon church die, but the church itself lives on. Lorenzo Snow, the fifth president of this strange institution, has just passed away. He is spoken of as a broad-minded man who possessed many statesmanlike qualities. He was born in Mantua, Portage County, Ohio, on April 3, 1814. He came from good Puritan stock and received part of his education at Oberlin College. Coming into contact with Joseph Smith, when on a visit to Kirtland, Ohio, he became a convert to his teachings, and threw himself with apostolic zeal into the new cause. His missionary labors were abundant, and the privations and persecutions which he endured were worthy of a better cause. He went through the troubles at Nauvoo; and had a hand in building up Salt Lake City. He was elected president of the church on Sept. 13, 1898. He was a believer in polygamy, for which he suffered a year's imprisonment. He is said to have left a large family, the members of which are scattered throughout the world.

Harm Done If Not Meant.

Johann Most, an incendiary anarchist, has been sentenced in New York to a year in the penitentiary for publishing in his paper, Freiheit, an article entitled "Murder versus Murder," in which he advocated the right to kill political tyrants of all sorts, "through blood and iron, poison and dynamite." When his sentence was pronounced all his former bravado left him, and he whimperingly said that "he meant no harm." But whether he meant to do harm or not, he did it; and hence his sentence, which, according to the London Times, is "entirely inadequate for so gross an outrage upon public feeling." We have no defence to make of Herr Most, yet there is one incident in his early life which throws some light upon his hostility to existing institutions. When a young man he showed his independence by refusing to go to confession. The priest, believing that he could compel him to confess, tried to overcome his obstinacy by a free use of his riding whip. Since then he has never entered a church. Anarchy is often bred of a rankling sense of wrong and injustice.

Bi-Centennial of Yale University.

During the present week Yale University is celebrating her two-hundredth anniversary with religious services, addresses, torchlight processions and historical representations. The event is one of national interest. Seventy-five years before the independence of America was declared Yale was founded; and since then she has exercised an influence which is simply incalculable in molding the thought and life of the nation. Little did the ten ministers of Connecticut who met at Brandford, each bringing a number of books and laying them on a table for a foundation of a college in the colony, or Elihu Yale, whose first gift of a few hundred pounds gave to the enterprise a local habitation and a name, know whereunto this little matter would grow. During the last twenty years the growth of Yale has been remarkable, exceeding that of the one hundred and eighty previous years. During the present celebration new structures representing an outlay of $2,000,000, are to be dedicated. President Roosevelt, Secretaries Hay and Root, Chief Justice Fuller, Justice Brewer, William Deans Howell, Edward Everett Hale, George W. Cable, and numerous public and literary men, are among the guests of honor. A large number of college presidents are also present. Indeed, seldom has such a gathering of distinguished men been seen in this country. Old Yale has recently taken on new life, and this celebration will give to her added momentum as she enters upon the third century of her existence.

Bible Study Department of the Chicago Y. M. C. A.

Interest in Bible study is increasing. On every hand is seen a desire for more thorough courses after more intelligent methods. Nowhere has this desire been more marked than in the Young Men's Christian Association, and in no quarter has more encouraging progress been made. The International committee has outlined a plan for systematic courses in progressive study, which has been pursued by many of the associations in the United States and Canada. Following along this line the Chicago Y. M. C. A. has arranged three courses for systematic and consecutive study of both the New and Old Testaments and the history of the world's great religions. It is also the purpose of these lecture courses to provide in a popular form, studies which shall emphasize the great evangelical truths of the Scriptures, in the hope of not only increasing the knowledge and love of the Bible, but of deepening the spiritual life. These lectures will be given on Fridays from 7 to 7:45 p. m. The following is the list of speakers and subjects:

1. Fall Term—October 4th to December 20th (12 weeks). "New Testament Book Studies," Prof. H. L. Willett, University of Chicago.

2. Winter Term—January 10th to March 28th (12 weeks). "Old Testament Book Studies," Prof. G. L. Robinson, McCormick Seminary.

3. Spring Term—April 4th to June 20th (12 weeks). "The History of Religion," Prof. Amos W. Patten, Northwestern University.

CHICAGO NOTES.

Rev. Robert McIntyre, D. D., of the St. James M. E. Church, has resigned his pastorate to devote himself for a season to literary work. He sees an inviting field of usefulness in the religious novel. His first venture, "The Modern Apollos," has just been sent out by the publishers.

When asked to address the students of the Northwestern University the other day, Bishop McCabe seized the opportunity to speak a few pointed and wholesome words on the subject of hazing. He said: "A hazer is a coward, and his acts should be amenable to law. Hazing is a brutal custom; and I sincerely hope that the authorities of the university will place upon it their stamp of disapproval."

At the Purity Convention Dr. J. H. Kellogg of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, spoke on the subject, "The Influence of Diet upon Character." He maintained that next to religion diet was the most powerful factor in the making of character. Dr. Kellogg, like all reformers, is an extremist, yet there is a great deal of truth in what he says; and while we would not go the length of those materialistic philosophers who regard thought as a secretion of the brain, and who say that "as a man eateth so he thinketh," still we believe that there is a great deal to be found out touching the relation of food to our mental and moral states.

The Rock River Conference of the M. E. Church, which has just closed its sessions at Evanston, had in it, as was to be expected, several occasions on which Methodist fervor boiled over. One of these was when Governor Yates was introduced to the convention. He said:

"Day after day men like myself stand where they hear, not, perhaps, the songs of the siren, but something as bad, and when I come into such a gathering as this it gives me the greatest pleasure. I am proud to say I have a good Methodist mother and was converted at the age of thirteen, and I have always had the greatest love and reverence for the ministers of this church.

"There is a blow for every one of us to strike. I want to say this especially to the young men. I shall try to strike my blow, and I am here to tell you that I shall endeavor to do so with Christian courage."

These are manly words. They are discounted a little, however, in the way the young governor has yielded to the pressure of political leaders, and has appointed unworthy men to office. But he will have plenty of opportunities to redeem the past in the three years of office still before him; and if he endeavors to do his duty with Christian courage good men will bless him.

The Citizens' Association has been inaugurated to do in state politics what the Municipal Voters' League has been doing in city politics. A movement "in behalf of purity, probity and correct methods," which will raise the standard of nominations for the state legislature, by breaking the power of the party machines, is very much needed. The war with the corrupt political leaders who have held in their hands the reins of power, and who have controlled the distribution of the spoils of office, will be fierce and long; but if the committee receive the support of all decent law-respecting citizens the issue will be in no wise uncertain. This is one of the movements in which the churches of the city ought to put the whole weight of their influence.

At the Congregational Ministers' Union last Monday plans were outlined for the inauguration of a new movement in the form of a training school for deaconesses, and other women workers. The training school will be in connection with the Theological Seminary, and the Deaconesses' Home, which is situated at 513 Washington avenue, will provide accommodation for all who are under training for every form of Christian work. The home will be opened and the classes will begin Nov. 1st. A large building at Dover, Illinois, has been donated to the committee who has this work in charge, for whatever object they may see fit to use it. To the Rev. George H. Wilson of De Kalb, the energetic secretary of the committee, is due the credit of bringing the work to practical realization. Miss Coleman, matron of the Home, will be pleased to answer inquiries, or to receive the gifts of those who may be interested in this good work.

Duke M. Farson, Chicago's banker-evangelist, is a breezy, interesting character. He has cut loose from the Methodist church that he may have more elbow room to work. He says that "the Methodism of today is too hide-bound and listless" to suit him. His specialty is "every-day holiness," a thing which we supposed all Christians were seeking to realize. He affirms that he has no difficulty in mixing business and religion and that his evangelistic work does not interfere with business success. He says, "Of course, if I devoted more time to thinking about bonds and less about the Bible I might make a few more dollars, but the credit account above beats all the bank surpluses you ever heard of. My creed," he says, "is John Wesley's teachings, Charles Wesley's hymns and the Bible." We would have liked his creed better if he had put the Bible first; we would have liked it still better if he had left the first and second articles out altogether, and kept to the Bible alone.

"Forenoon and afternoon and night;
Forenoon and afternoon and night;
Forenoon and afternoon—the empty rhyme
Repeats itself. No more? Yes: this is life.
Make this forenoon sublime, this afternoon.
A psalm, this night a prayer, and life
Is conquered and thy crown is won."

CONTRIBUTED

Books.

By John Hall Ingham.

O silent volumes on my shelves,
That hold the deathless and divine,
Ye have but to reveal yourselves,
And I am yours, as ye are mine!

Mere ink and paper though ye be,
As shells wherein no life appears,—
If hand but touch and eye but see,
Then mind meets mind across the years.

Dante and Shakespeare speak once more,
Beethoven sings his soulful strain;
And in the unsealed tombs of yore
Wake all the passion, all the pain.

They are not dead, these silent ones,
Nor dumb, but eloquent with light,
And sparkle like the infinite suns
Beyond our reach, though in our sight.

Like melodies that once have thrilled,
And in the memory never die,
Those calm, majestic voices stilled
Come echoing from eternity.

CHRISTOLOGICAL TENDENCIES OF THE TIMES.

W. J. LHAMON.

No. VI. Representative Books.

WE mean of course representative books as related to Christian thought. We select three only, believing that they may be taken quite fairly as indices of the current thought about Christ, and therefore also about God and man. We forewarn the reader that the nature of our theme calls for liberal quotation from the chosen books, and the essayist makes little claim to originality in this paper beyond the general thought of it, and the appositeness and fairness of the selections.

I. Here is Dr. A. J. Gordon's book, entitled, "The Christ of To-day." This book is inductive in method, masterly in style, and perfectly unfettered in its presentation of thought. Some of its suggestions are far in advance of us yet, and it might be well for us if we never came up to them. But taken as a whole the book is an index, and as such it is highly significant. There is a passionate earnestness about it with which the live reader falls in love, and on the full current of the author's vivid and impulsive eloquence he feels himself all but irresistibly swept along.

Speaking of the new and enlarged ideas of the world that have come to us by the way of modern sciences, Dr. Gordon says: "The escape of our human world into the new spaces and the new times, the expansion of the material order to infinity and the extension of history to eonian periods, the gathering of the nations into the consciousness of a contemporaneous humanity, and the mighty growth of the kingdom of the spirit, are blessings for which it is impossible to be too thankful. Mankind have been brought out into a large place, and the daily vision is of broad rivers and streams. But unless Christ shall be installed over this new world, it will simply be a larger and more splendid corpse than the old. Over the total worlds of space and time and present humanity and the spirit he must be recognized as supreme; and these kingdoms with all their glory, if that glory is not to fade into a dream, and the highest hope of mankind is not to be blasted, must become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

In a quite similar vein Dr. Gordon tells us that there is a consciousness in the world that Christ cannot be transcended * * * "that, as the form of religious thought, the inspiration to religious feeling, the ideal of religious character, and the mold in which the ultimate philosophy of the universe must be run, he is absolute for humanity."

And again: "Three great advances have been made in the intellectual appreciation of the Person of Christ. He is the acknowledged representative of humanity, the accepted revelation of the essential kinship of the divine and the human, and the guide to the ultimate meaning of nature."

But Christ must be more even than all this. This he might be and still appear to us as the Unitarian Christ. His identity with us must have its complement in his difference from us. We must be masters of his thought about God before we can know the richness of his nature and the fullness of his revelation. "Unless we obtain from Christ, in addition to a clue to the meaning of nature, an immutable morality and a conception of the divineness of man, a doctrine of God, we cannot be said to have mastered the secret of his character. His idea of an eternal Fatherhood in the Infinite is the heart of the matter. If we can retain that as the deepest reality in the universe, we have our guide to the remaining mystery in the life of Jesus."

Thus the thought of the Savior about God, and about man, and morals, and nature, and the kinship of the human with the divine—Christ's thought about these—is made by Dr. Gordon the norm of all thought upon such high themes. In other words, this representative book is thoroughly Christological in its view-point and method. Christ is its Alpha and Omega.

And now, dropping this work all too quickly, we take up one, a very recent one, from a bonny Scotchman. It is entitled "The Fact of Christ," and its author is P. Carnegie Simpson, M. A., minister of Renfield church, Glasgow. Even as a piece of flotsam this book would be indicative, we think, of the current of Scotch thought. But it is more than that; it is really a whole cargo of fresh and vigorous Christological thought steering straight to port. Mr. Simpson starts out upon "The Data of Christianity" in a point-blank, New Testament way. He goes directly to the 16th chapter of Matthew, and to the 16th verse of it. He says:

"When the greatest religious Master whom the world has ever known put one day to his first disciples a certain question, and, on receiving an answer to it, declared that on the strength of this he could build his Church, it is evident that here is to be found what he regarded as the critical issue for religion, and its proper point of departure. * * * It surprises us, however, when we look at what this question was. The occasion referred to is, of course, the scene near Caesarea Philippi, when Jesus asked his disciples, 'Whom say ye that I am?' The question is a notable one, but it astonishes us that it should be treated as a fundamental one. The inherent truth of the teacher's message would always appear to be a more important matter than anything, however interesting, about the teacher himself. * * * But the question was not of this kind. It was not about God or about morals. It was a question simply about Jesus himself. It was neither theological nor ethical, but personal. And this was the question upon an answer to which Jesus declared, with energy and enthusiasm, that his Church would be built. This fact is a very remarkable one, and we cannot too carefully impress its significance upon our minds. This greatest of religious teachers forms his religion—for the building of his Church cannot be less than that—from his followers' convictions regarding himself. What appears to be an irrelevancy to religion—the personality of the preacher—he makes its very proof. * * * Jesus directed men to find the data for Christianity primarily and essentially in the phenomenon of himself."

Following this Mr. Simpson reminds us that no other teacher ever so put himself into the fore-front of his teaching. "Not Moses so spake, nor the prophets; not Plato nor the Buddha nor Mohammed, but Jesus spake thus. He did so habitually, deliberately, pronouncedly. * * * To the seeker after eternal life he said, 'Follow me.' Of one who would see the Father he asked, 'Hast thou not known me?'"

And so the author proceeds, finding in Christ himself meanings for "The Christian Character," "The Moral Motive Power," "The Foundation of Faith," "The Word of God," "The Reality of Sin," "The Problem of Forgiveness," and "The Principles of the Atonement." These are the headings of his chapters, and they are all fundamental. One may boldly hold up this book among others in vindication of the claim that Jesus is conquering theology.

3. The last book to be named here is that masterly work of Principal Fairbairn's entitled, "The Place of Christ in Modern Theology." To this work the author has brought a glowing enthusiasm for Christ, powers of mind that are rarely excelled, and an immense wealth of learning. Its Christological tendency will not be long doubted by any who will take the pains to turn over its pages even in the most cursory way. The first sentences of his opening chapter are decisive. The doctor claims that "the most distinctive and determinative element in modern theology is what we may term a new feeling for Christ." He insists that we "have recovered the historic Christ," and that "we feel him more in our theology because we know him better in history."

But he carries the thought back of the incarnate, historic Christ even to the consciousness of Christ as it is revealed in his life and teachings, and makes that the formative principle in theology. In one of his concluding chapters Dr. Fairbairn says: "The theology which starts from the consciousness of Christ finds that the determinative element in his idea of God is the paternal, and in his idea of man the filial. But this conclusion is only the premiss of a constructive or interpretative science, and all the positions evolved in the science are involved in the premiss." Throughout his work Dr. Fairbairn makes the formal source of his teaching the consciousness of Christ. He finds the primary fact in this consciousness to be the Fatherhood of God. "In the consciousness of Christ the Father is at once primary and ultimate, the normative and necessary principle; the filial feeling is dependent and normated. All he does is done because of the Father and for him. The Father sends the Son, works through him, abides in him, raises him up, and glorifies him. The Father is first and last, the cause and end of the Son's appearance and achievements."

"And so," he says, "the conclusion is inevitable; if we attempt to construct a theology which shall be faithful to the consciousness of Christ, the Fatherhood of God must be the determinative principle of our thought. It is the architectonic idea; out of it the whole system must grow."

But such theology is what we have all along been calling Christology. It begins with Christ, the consciousness of Christ; it proceeds on the one hand from Christ to God, and on the other from Christ to man. Ultimately, if we are to be Christian, Christ must dominate all our thought upon these high themes, and we must see both ourselves and our Father as revealed in his theanthropic person. Surely Christ is conquering this mighty realm of thought.

"SACRED MUSIC."

PROFESSOR CHARLES C. CLEMENS.

THE chief function of sacred music is not very difficult to define. Music in itself is not only a subtle form of speech; but, united with intelligent words, it transforms, intensifies and idealizes, and gives the power to vibrate human chords that might not be reached by speech alone.

The active agencies in the rendition of sacred music in public worship are: the solo voice, the quartette, the choir or chorus, and the congregation. We shall have ample opportunity to understand that I do not place the congregation last because I esteem its agency in any degree least in importance, in fact after some consideration I have felt a strong impulse to limit this address to matters directly or indirectly connected with the people's part in divine worship.

If we ask the question, "What type of music is worthy of association with sacred words in divine worship, or, what kind will have the happiest results in inspiring an atmosphere of devotion and praise in an assembled congregation?" the answer is not a very easy one.

There have been attacks recently in the press in different parts of the states on the hymns and tunes of the Moody and Sankey type, and many uncomfortable epithets have been flung at them. Much of this is probably due to the recent announcement, possibly an unauthorized announcement, that Mr. Sankey was contemplating the organization of some institution for the development of mission music of the type of which he himself has written so many well known examples. While I do not quite sympathize with the violence of some of these attacks, I do feel that anything in the shape of a perpetuation and development of this type of music for the church, mission or Sunday school would be deplorable, and ought to be altogether unnecessary.

Looking somewhat critically at the tunes of this type, what do we find? A grade of music hopelessly below the level of what would be expected in almost any other sphere of musical association. Must we accept this? Shall we encourage a grade of musical composition for the church and Sunday school which would not be tolerated elsewhere? All this is a matter of education. Shall we educate onwards or backwards? We cannot remain stationary.

Congregations in church or Sunday school must be taught something, and I am sure that the musical taste cultivated by association with the best of the old tunes, and by the full harmonies and intrinsically beautiful melodies of many of our modern composers, will not exchange this heritage for the mawkish insipidity of many of these gospel hymns which are unfortunately supposed to be American. When a good type of tune has been learned, the people will not want to sing a lesser grade. But how do we determine the desired quality in good hymn tunes? What do we find in the tunes of the Sankey type? A musical structure of the very flimsiest character, weak melody, childish rather than childlike, monotonous rhythm, and a harmonic movement of the lowest grade. This indicates one of two things: either a mistaken pandering to a needlessly low estimate of the national musical development; or else, a lack of musical knowledge and originality on the part of the composers. Look at the picture on the other side: Intrinsic beauty of melody; freedom and grace of movement, not only in the treble but in the other parts; fulness of harmony, fine modulation and variety of rhythm. These are features we look for in tunes of the better type.

Next to the minister there is no official of a church whose duties place him in a more constant or in a more direct light than the organist, especially if he also happens to be the choirmaster. In the performance of his weekly round he may succeed in becoming a joy and a help to the minister in his spiritual duties, or it may be quite otherwise. Other things being equal, it is very certain that the organist and choirmaster who is ambitious to raise constantly the standard of efficiency both for himself and his choir, and who can keep in touch with what is progressing outside of the sphere of his immediate influence, will be likely to do a more useful work than one who has no such ambitions.

But what is the aim of all this? Is it merely that the people shall have the opportunity of listening to fine music when they go to church? If the efforts of the choir do not ultimately result in leading the congregation to an inspired performance of their own function in the service then there is something wrong. A choir is, or should be, a selected body; and their mission is to lead, educate, and inspire the congregation.

We sometimes hear a remark that the average congregation sings so badly that it would be better if it did not sing at all. I remember one especial case. A gentleman complained that certain would-be altos in his congregation would insist on making their part instead of singing the right notes; also that some men would sing a kind of "farmer's bass." I do not quite understand all that this means or what the farmers had done to deserve the association, but probably it means that they sing the treble part one octave or perhaps two octaves below.

A little inquiry developed the information that this gentleman who complained possessed a bass voice of considerable compass, but that he never sang in church, he always listened. The conversation ended at this point, but I could not avoid the thought that there was something to learn from this. Here was a gentleman with a useful voice, with an ear sufficiently developed to detect the impromptu alto and the "farmer's bass"—he was delegating his reasonable duties and privileges to some one else; in fact, to anyone. There is a part allotted to every one in divine worship. That the minister has his part goes without saying. The choir, too, have their part. An old English rubric quaintly reads: "In choirs and places where they sing, here followeth the anthem." The anthem is the function of the choir and the congregation is not expected to take part in it. The congregation worships silently while the choir voice their praise and supplication, in the same spirit in which the minister voices them in his public prayer. The anthem is an available source of musical expression of great value. In the ranks of the choir we have, or should have, specially trained solo voices giving us another resource of somewhat more direct and personal emotional expression.

Sometimes the minister says, "Let us sing to the praise and glory of God" a certain hymn or Psalm. This is surely an invitation to all—not the solo voice or even the chorus. I have no records, but I cannot think that the Giver of all good things has withheld from more than three per cent of us the power to give a reasonably musical vocal utterance. If the remainder would all sing, there would be room for the "farmer's bass," and even for the irrepressible alto, in the resultant diapason of sound.

As I view it, the congregation rightly has the ultimate and chiefest place in divine worship and nothing should usurp its function. Let the choir and solo voices be of the very best and let their training go on until it is easier for them to sing tunefully and well than it is to sing any other way. But let the congregation be encouraged and expected to take their full share in their own particular parts of the service and let the organist and choir gradually lead them on to a more intelligent and expression-like effort.

LETTERS TO THE BOOK LOVER.

THE LATE BISHOP WESTCOTT.

MY Dear Friend: The world of Christian literature has recently lost one of its brightest lights in the death of Brooke Foss Westcott. His name stands in the front rank of those theological and religious writers who helped to create the modern scholarship of England and to keep it warm with religious purpose and the religious spirit. For fifty years Westcott's name has commanded the attention of all thoughtful theologians. His outward life has not been without change, although it was always passed amid surroundings and in occupations congenial to the scholar. After serving for a period as Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, he became a Master at Harrow School, one of the great schools of England. He returned to Cambridge and entered upon the brilliant period of his life, as professor of theology. He stood beside two other great scholars and most earnest Christian men, Lightfoot and Hort. This famous triumvirate made Cambridge the brightest center of theological life and work in Great Britain. When Lightfoot became Bishop of Durham, to the grief of many, including Dean Church, few could have expected that he would occupy the great position only a few years, and would be succeeded, as he was, by his most intimate friend and fellow-worker at Cambridge.

Westcott and his companions were remarkable for their accurate scholarship, which did not disdain attention to the most minute particulars, as well as by the enormous mass of their learning, which counted no phase of church life or religious thought beyond their interest. One has only to run over the list of books produced by Westcott to stand amazed at the extraordinary diligence and self-sacrificing labor involved in their production. No less remarkable is the warm human interest which pervades them, and which at times found more definite expression in books of quiet meditation or inspiring public appeal. Those were no dry-as-dust accumulators of antique lore. They knew and felt the pressure of great religious problems upon the conduct and the destiny of human beings. Passion could be put into the prolonged search for historical truth, if it could be seen that this truth had some relation to the religious life of man today. Thus it is that the same man wrote a history of the Canon of Christianity when less than thirty years of age, who with his friend Hort spent about thirty years in producing the famous edition of the Greek New Testament, which will forever stand as a monument of patience, diligence and breadth of judgment; and produced also in his last years the book entitled "The Social Aspects of Christianity." Thus it is that the same man who wrote the famous Introduction to the Four Gospels, one of the first books in the English language to deal with that problem in a scientific spirit, also produced a volume of most tender meditations upon "The Appearances of Christ after the Resurrection." And thus it is that he who wrote the remarkable essay on "The Relations of Christianity to Art" also produced the earnest and original argument for miracles and the historicity of the Resurrection of Christ in his book entitled "The Gospel of the Resurrection."

It is of course in his Commentaries that we find these varied elements of Westcott's mind working together to perfect their finest fruits. His three commentaries on the Four Gospels, the Epistles of John, and Hebrews, stand in the front rank of commentaries in the English language. They were all the result of many years of closest study, labored reading of commentaries and expositions in various languages and throughout the course of Christian history; but they were also the result of that which many commentaries seem never to have come from nor lead to, namely, a devout, personal, religious interest in the book under discussion. Westcott's Commentaries deal much more than Lightfoot's did with theological questions, while they were no less full in their learning. They lack at important points the crystal clearness with which Lightfoot was always able to put his thought, for as we shall see Westcott's mind had a certain curious limitation of its own; but they lead us into the very shrine of religious experience. They are never characterized by a superficial tampering with fundamental questions, nor do they ever manifest a foolish eagerness for originality, even at the price of eccentricity. Original they are in the deeper sense of leading us frankly to the origins of Christian experience.

Westcott's cast of mind was, I suppose, what we vulgarly term "mystical." He would rather expound John than Paul, and would fain get behind all legal terminology, to find some underlying relationship between the Infinite and finite, which it only partially illustrated. Hence, as with all writers who partake of the mystical temperament, the reader is apt to feel at times as if he were moving in a haze, as if the light were shining through a mist. Once Westcott tried with great earnestness to construct a scientific Philosophy, when he wrote his defense of miracles in his book on the Resurrection. But that argument only illustrates the truth of what I am saying, for its attempt at systematic discussion is labored and its really powerful features appear rather in sudden bursts of light than as the result of logical processes. This tendency of mind also appears in his beautiful little book entitled "The Victory of the Cross," in which Westcott deals with the problem of the Atonement. The reader is at once charmed and disappointed. He is charmed by the suggestiveness of an argument, which would seek the ground of atonement, rightly, in the organic relations of Christ to the human race, but disappointment awaits him at the crucial part of the problem. Westcott simply shies off from all Pauline terminology or constructive Pauline thought on this doctrine and presents us with a doctrine which is not even Johannine, although in its mysticism it has affinities therewith. Hence, why forgiveness should reach me as a judicial act is never explained. As long as there is law and judgment, condemnation and acquittal, to think of, so long will mysticism fail to explain forgiveness.

It is delightful to remember that as Bishop of Durham, Westcott sought to be of use not only to the vast church system at whose head he was placed, but especially to the numerous population of northern England, especially to the miners in their struggles. His was not the heart of a mere recluse or a mere theorizer concerning Christianity. He had the courageous soul of one who would seek to apply the social aspects of the Christian religion to the social problems which for many thousands of his neighbors created a daily agony.

I lovingly lay this little tribute of gratitude to one with whom I seemed at times through his books to live in a speechless but real intimacy. Yours faithfully,

A BOOKMAN.

EUROPEAN LETTER.

QUINCY L. DOWD.

ACCORDING to tourist tradition, the season in Switzerland ends with September, but the indications are that one race of tourists will be succeeded by another, who may be styled "the long-timers." These make the biting, frosty mornings and dazzling days of October their favored period on this "playground of Europe." It is plain that America is felt here in Switzerland economically, not to say socially. What a transfer of wealth must be going on to warrant the erection of so many large, fine family hotels or pensions, as one sees them here in Luzern! Many new ones are in the early stages of building in preparation for next year's increased crowds of visitors. The Americans are coming; that is certain, whatever may be the course of the English and Russians. It is astonishing the number of fellow-citizens one falls in with at every place, many of them more than casual tourists, being here as business agents or for study and prolonged residence. And what of them, as individuals or a class? One is glad to see them, to hear them speak, and to observe their usual ways. Almost without exception it may be said of them, that in bearing and behavior among other people they do credit to their home land, not showing themselves the loud-voiced and obtrusive ones in any company, so far as the writer has had the chance to observe. It must be that a generation has arisen that knows not Henry James, nor the dramatis personae of fiction after his American type.

But what can account for the new era of building in the large towns all over western Europe, even as far east as Old Prague, but noticeable especially in Antwerp and Brussels, in Amsterdam and Copenhagen, while such cities as Berlin, Dresden and Munich share richly in the same building furor? Some of the new commercial houses are of exquisite architectural design, and their exterior embellishment most artistic. It seems that a period has arrived similar to that when the old Dutch and German masters held sway, their genius allowed full expression by munificent burger or princely patrons. It is hard to give credence to prevalent reports of business depression in Germany in the face of such display of magnificence and enterprise as the cities everywhere show. Nor is this disposition to build larger and finer edifices confined to the secular sphere. It is also a period of renovation and restoration of churches in all the countries one visits. The religious feeling is lively enough in these ancient places to undertake even the building of splendid new churches like the great Dom at Berlin now nearing completion. The general effect of the Dom is that of St. Paul's, London. It holds a most commanding site on the left bank of the Spree opposite to the Royal Schloss or town palace of the Kaiser. What strikes one's notice even more than the lofty, refulgent dome of gold and the imposing statues surrounding it below, is the prominence of Scripture texts emblazoned on its front where all can read. These texts are from the German of Luther's Bible. One of them reads: "Our faith is the victory which overcomes the world." There are signs on every side that both Catholic and Protestant adherents are awake and alert in their devotion to their respective forms of worship. If anything it is the Catholic population who manifest the stronger, more genuine and faithful attention to their religious services. Not only are their churches open at all hours during the day, but they are also frequented by the people for prayer and the quiet hour, while the Protestant churches are as invariably closed at almost all hours, even on Sundays. Should a chance visitor wish to look at the place where Martin Luther and Philip Melancthon lie buried in the Schloss church at Wittenberg, he must first discover where the scroto-lan lives in an adjoining street, ring him up, wait for him and then fee him in order to get admission to what comes nearest to being our universal Protestant shrine or mausoleum.

It is good, however, to note how numerous and splendid are the monuments raised to the protagonists of the Reformation Evangel and the world's new era of religious progress. It is sufficiently plain that Christianity in its vital message and essence is among the regnant factors in modern Europe. Take it in small Denmark. Here is a land where the state church system is still predominant. Up to the present time the control of ecclesiastical affairs has been entirely in the hands of the government through the bishops and ministers. The laity has no voice nor management in church matters. The writer learned by conversation with prominent people in Denmark that the generality of educated men take little or no interest in religion as at present regarded in connection with worship and state confessionality. While on a visit to Herlufsholm an opportunity occurred to converse with two gentlemen of exceptional ability to know and speak on this subject, the one, Baron Rudtz-Thott, the new minister of the interior in the king's cabinet; the other

Hr. Prof. Bache, both of whom stated very emphatically that one of the first questions demanding attention by the present assembly and ministry of state is reform in the methods of handling ecclesiastical matters in the direction of more popular control and voluntary support. Outside of this circle also were heard the warmest expressions of praise and approval regarding the manner in which educational work is conducted in America. On all sides are the painful evidences that as yet religion and education are far from being popularized, either in England or on the continent; popularized I mean in the sense of being by the people and of the people, though ostensibly for the people to the fullest extent. The outstanding fact is that the people as such are not trusted, are not relied on, are not allowed to have the care of those very concerns and businesses which most of all are theirs, if anybody's, viz., the church and school. Possibly the people are not fit to do so; but why? Let them try or be tried, and see what comes of it! Churches and schools are beggarly or police institutions if the people do not value them enough to keep them up well. The real mischief over here is that a particular church and a particular system of government wish to control and use church and school for their own purposes, hence dare not let the people have and manage what is theirs, and what they would know how to treat to their best advantage. The great problem here and everywhere is to secure the democratization of knowledge and faith and rulership. Protestantism has doubtless in some respects made farther advance in this inevitable divine movement than has Catholicism, but there is painful lagging behind wherever king and bishop are still in the ascendant, and a large mass of the social extremes would have it so. Go into Catholic churches in the most enlightened towns of Germany, Belgium and Switzerland, one will see popular native shrines to Mary and the saints hung about with grateful testimonials or prayerful requests such as make special Faith Cure, Dowieism and Christian Science wholly superfluous in faithful circles of Catholics. Rome allows for all temperaments and provides for all psychological vagaries.

(To be continued.)

"OLE DADDY DU-FUNNY."

"Ole Daddy Do-Funny,
How you come on?"
"Po'ly, thank God, honey,
Po'ly this morn.
My ole spine, it's sort o' stiff,
An' my arms, dey 'fuse to liff',
An' de miz'ry in my breas',
An' I got de heart-distress,
An' de growin' pains dey lingers,
In my knee j'int's an' my fingers,
But I'm well, praise God, dis mornin'."

"Ole Daddy Do-Funny,
What cuyus talk!
How is you well, when you Can't even walk!"
"Hush, you foolish chillen, hush!
"What's dat singin' in de brush?
'Aint dat dat yonder blue de sky?
Feel de cool breeze passin' by!
Dis ole painful back an' knee,
Laws-a-massy, dey ain't me,
An' I'm well, praise God, dis mornin'."

Ruth McEnergy Stuart.

REVIEW OF BOOKS.

The Ascent Through Christ. By E. Griffith-Jones, B. A. New York, Edwin S. Gorham. Pp. 456; $1.50.

The sub-title states the purpose of this volume to be "a study of the Doctrine of Redemption in the light of the theory of evolution." The author confesses that the time has not yet come to make a statement that even approaches completeness. This is not his purpose. Rather the effort is made to give some reasonable explanation of the great truths of Christianity in terms chosen as far as possible from the scientific, especially the biological vocabulary, now so generally understood and employed. The question which devout minds are raising in these days appears, to be this: We have been assured by a certain type of preaching and religious teaching that if evolution be accepted as a reasonable explanation of God's method in creation, then faith in the Bible must be given up. But we are to-day confronted by the practically complete circle of scientific authorities who maintain that evolution is an established principle of all scientific study, indeed the very foundation on which the structure of modern scholarship rests. Is Christianity then disproved, or is there yet a word to be spoken? Mr. Griffith-Jones undertakes to answer in behalf of both science and Christianity, not on the old platform of reconciliation, but with the confident assurance that the best possible approach to the problems of revelation is from the side of exact science. No one will accuse him of devitalizing the great truths of the faith. The rather does he appear to lay the strongest possible stress on the Incarnation, the Atonement, and the Resurrection. It is a satisfaction to find these great phases of the work of our Lord treated not only with fulness, but with an enthusiasm which, as it seems to us, no other method of approach could generate. The book is not solitary in the field of discussion regarding the evolution of man, and the relation of this fact to biblical teaching. Many others have traversed this ground in recent years. At this point the author adds little to current thought, beyond a fresh and vivid statement of an ever interesting theme, and the citation and classification of the greatest authorities upon the subject, from Darwin to Weisman, John Fiske and Alfred Russell Wallace. It is in the chapters on the Fall and the Incarnation that he is at his best, as we think. The adjustment of these truths to the thought of an age accustomed to think in terms of evolutionary science, so that they seem not only reasonable but an essential factor of human experience is happily and forcibly accomplished and in a manner that places thoughtful readers in debt to the author. The last division of the book, while duly following a line which may be traced by every student of the question, is, we think, less convincing and clear. At any rate, the interest is less sustained at the very point at which the climax might be expected. Perhaps other readers might find this the most rewarding portion of the volume, with its outline of Christ's redemptive program in the light and by the power of the Resurrection. At all events the book is worthy to be considered one of the notable publications of recent months, and we are glad to note that it is being widely read.

Great Religions of the World, by Eminent Authorities. Harper & Brothers, N. Y.; 301 pages. Price, $2.00 net.

Since the publication of Dr. James Freeman Clarke's epoch-making book on the "Ten Great Religions," about thirty years ago, no more important contribution has been made to the study of comparative religion than that contained in this volume. But whereas Dr. Clarke's book presented the standpoint of a single writer, this book is the work of a group of representative men, all of whom are qualified to interpret the religions which they describe. Moreover, the several writers have wisely aimed at giving not merely a history of the world's great religions, but also an estimate as to their present value as forces in the world's life. The subjects treated are: Confucianism in the Nineteenth Century, by Herbert A. Giles, LL. D.; Buddhism, by T. W. Rhys Davids, LL. D.; Mohammedanism in the Nineteenth Century, by Oskar Mann; Brahminism, by Sir A. C. Lyall; Zoroastrianism and the Parsis, by D. Menant; Sikhism and the Sikhs, by Sir Lepel Griffin; Positivism, its Position, Aims and Ideals, by Frederic Harrison; Babism, by E. Denison Ross; Jews and Judaism in the Nineteenth Century, by Rev. M. Garter, Ph. D.; The Outlook for Christianity, by Rev. Washington Gladden, D. D.; and Catholic Christianity, by His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons. Upon the general scheme of the book we have two criticisms to offer. In the first place, it seems somewhat absurd to elevate Positivism to the place of a religion. It is a philosophy, and not a religion. "Its creed," says Mr. Harrison, "is a synthetic philosophy resting on the general body of positive science; and its worship the expression of loyalty to humanity." To call the worship of the great god humanity a religion is a misuse of language. Our other criticism is that in such a work as this Christianity ought to have been looked at in its Catholic or universal aspects by a single writer, instead of being treated by different writers from the Protestant and Roman Catholic standpoints. There is something, however, pleasantly suggestive of the improved condition of things in the fair-minded and good-tempered way in which Dr. Gladden and Cardinal Gibbons deal with their subjects. We cannot, however, agree with Cardinal Gibbons in the position that "the avowedly anti-Christian forces of the past two centuries could never have scored their triumphs were it not for the mighty cleft that divided Protestant from Catholic Christendom." From the Protestant schism the quickening, liberalizing and progressive influences of the past two centuries have come. But these are minor matters; the book as a whole is a noble contribution to the study of the religions that dominate the thought and life of the world.

Constantinople and Its Problems—Its Peoples, Customs, Religions and Progress. By Henry Otis Dwight, LL. D. Illustrated. Fleming H. Revell Co.; 298 pages. Price, $1.25 net.

This is the work of a man who sees things, and has the faculty of telling what he sees. His subject is a fascinating one. Constantinople is one of the great world centers. It is a place where the two streams of oriental and occidental life meet and mingle. Ever since the time, 1,500 years ago, when the Emperor Constantine made it the capital of the Roman world, it has been a place of destiny. For 448 years it has been the capital of the Turkish empire. As the goal of Russian ambition it is sure to play an important part in the great struggle for empire for which the nations of the world are preparing. Dr. Dwight has had exceptional opportunities to become acquainted with the complex problem of Constantinoplean life. He has lived in the city for upwards of thirty years. As the correspondent of the New York Tribune during the war between Russia and Turkey he won golden opinions for his luminous exposition of events. He knows the forces of good and evil which are at work, and the inside view which he gives of the social, moral and political changes which are slowly taking place is full of suggestiveness as to the future. The crescent is evidently on the wane, and the cross on the ascendency. Such an event even as the kidnapping of Miss Ellen Stone, a missionary of the American Board, by Bulgarian brigands, has light thrown upon it incidentally by this book, which clears up the whole situation with regard to the place of Turkey in European politics.

Deborah, A Tale of the Times of Judas Maccabaeus, by James M. Ludlow. Fleming H. Revell Co. 400 pages. Price, $1.50.

This is, in our judgment, the most notable book of the season. We had the pleasure of reading it in manuscript and the impression made then as to its great merit has been deepened since reading it in printed form. Dr. Ludlow had already won his spurs as author of "The Captain of the Janizaries," and this book puts him in foremost rank of authorship. If the book gets the recognition which it deserves it will be immensely popular. Its chief characteristics are its historic accuracy, the faithfulness of its local coloring, its dramatic interest, its climatic movement, and its high ethical and spiritual tone. The story has for its historical background one of the most interesting periods in Jewish history—the times of the Maccabees. Antiochus Epiphanes had tried in every way in his power to impose Greek customs upon the Jews. When they resisted, persecution was resorted to. Some of the more timid and ease-loving Jews conformed to the new order, but the strict advocates of ancestral religion were driven to open revolt. These brave, fanatical patriots found in Judas-Maccabi, "the hammerer," a fit leader. They kept up a sort of guerilla warfare which greatly harassed the Greeks; but sometimes the conflict arose almost to the dignity of war. Some of their battles are described with wonderful power. But the master-stroke of the book is the creation of Deborah, a character at once essentially feminine and yet sublimely heroic. Deborah will henceforth stand as one of the highest and noblest types of womanly love, patriotic devotion, and self-effacing sacrifice.

D'ri and I, by Irving Bacheller, author of Eben Holden. Lothrop Publishing Co., Boston. Red silk cloth. Illustrated cover. Price, $1.50.

This is one of the leading books of fiction of the year. It is attractive to the eye; and it makes interesting reading. It is difficult to say what there is about it which constitutes its charm. It has a certain illusive quality which defies analysis. The story is without plot or purpose, but it is full of incident and action. It has the smell of the woods, and abounds in dry humor and home-spun philosophy. The likeness of D'ri and I to the author's former work, "Eben Holden," is very marked. The D'ri who goes out to fight the soldiers of King George in the war of 1812 is simply Eben Holden dressed in the uniform of a soldier. The book is crammed with thrilling adventures, hair-breadth escapes, and strange coincidences. It also contains a piquant love story, which, after sundry amusing situations, has a happy ending. The scene of the story is laid mainly in Northern New York, but it moves from there to Canada; and three distinct types of character are introduced, namely, American, English and French. Its human interest is hardly less marked than its faithful delineation of the times which it describes.

Lazarre, by Mary Hartwell Catherwood, with illustrations by André Castaigne. The Bowen-Merrill Company, Indianapolis, 436 pages. Price, $1.50.

Mrs. Catherwood has the art of story-telling. She knows how to put color and atmosphere into her picture. She knows also how to sustain interest by rapid movement from incident to incident. Indeed, she moves with such wonderful celerity that it is difficult to keep up with her. Her story is founded upon a legend to the effect that the Dauphin Louis XVII. of France did not die in the temple as was commonly believed, but that he was taken clandestinely to America, where he grew up among the Indians under the name of Eleazar Williams, which got shortened to the more euphonious name of Lazarre. Out of this legend Miss Catherwood weaves a wonderful story. She lets her imagination run riot. There are in her story too many strained and improbable situations, too many lucky coincidences. Her character study is not strong. There is nothing even about the hero of the book that is particularly interesting, except his eventful career. But for those who want a blood-tlingling romance crowded full of thrilling incidents, told in an easy, flowing style, this book will meet the demand.

J. Devlin—Boss, A Romance of American Politics, by Francis Churchill Williams. Lothrop Publishing Company, Boston. 520 pages. Price, $1.00; by mail, $1.12.

This is a book of undoubted merit. It reminds one of Paul Leicester Ford's "The Hon. Peter Stirling"; but it is a stronger and more original piece of work. J. Devlin—Boss is a type, an abnormal growth, but a legitimate product of our corrupt political life. J. Devlin—Boss is not the kind of man whose personal acquaintance a self-respecting citizen would court; but inasmuch as he is a very potent factor in the community life, we want to know about him all that is possible. His development from newsboy to political dictator is traced by the author with a skilful hand. His shrewdness, his ready mother wit, his low cunning, his utter unscrupulousness as to the use of methods to gain his end, together with his natural kindness of heart, his sense of personal honor, and his readiness to help the unfortunate, present the picture of a dual character which is altogether unique. While we detest the boss, we are drawn to the man. This story gives an appalling revelation of practical politics in a great city, but so long as politics is a trade which men follow for what there is in it, will society produce such moral monstrosities as J. Devlin—Boss.

The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, a series of historical sketches, edited by J. H. Garrison. St. Louis, Christian Publishing Co., 1901. Pp. 514; $1.50.

A series of papers contributed to the columns of The Christian Evangelist on the successive periods in the growth of the Disciples of Christ, has been gathered into a convenient form, and given permanency. The articles were written by men well qualified to speak on the themes selected, and among them appear the names of ex-President Charles L. Loos of Kentucky University, Dr. B. B. Tyler of Denver, Dr. W. T. Moore of Columbia, Mo.; T. W. Grafton and Secretaries Smith, McLean and White of the missionary societies. Dr. Garrison gives an admirable summary in the closing chapter. This book is not a history of the Disciples and yet it contributes much to a knowledge of their origin and growth. It should have an index.

A Year Book of Famous Lyrics, Selections from the British and American Poets, arranged for daily reading or memorizing, edited by Frederic Lawrence Knowles. Illustrated with portraits. Dana Estes & Company, Boston; 391 pages. Price, $1.50.

The collection of poems in this dainty gift-book of green and gold is altogether meritorious; yet it is difficult to see upon what principle the selection has been made. The lyrical quality predominates and gives a flavor to the book. There are many poetical gems, some of which are old favorites, and others which are less known are claimants for public favor. The original feature in the book is the providing of a daily poetical portion for the entire year.

Geoffery Strong, by Laura E. Richards, Dana Estes & Company, Boston; 217 pages. Price, 75 cents.

We take up Miss Richards' books with a feeling of anticipation. Her stories are thoroughly wholesome. She introduces us to a class of people that it is a pleasure to get acquainted with. "Geoffery Strong" is a simple, attractive love story. It is written with a firm, light hand. It is thoroughly unconventional, and thoroughly enjoyable.

LITERARY NOTES.

A new volume of fiction from the pen of A. T. Quiller-Couch (under the familiar "Q," of course) is announced by the Scribners. The title will be "Laird's Luck, and other fireside tales," and the very many admirers of this author's work will know about what to expect.

"A Maid of Venice" will be the title of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's new novel. The period of the story is the end of the fifteenth century when the Queen of the Adriatic was nearing the time of her greatest splendor. The romantic episode with which the story deals is historically true, being taken from one of the old Venetian chronicles.

The librarian of Congress is supervising the compilation of an exhaustive history of journalism in America. This will comprise more than 2,000 pages, and will contain information about all the newspapers and periodicals published in this country since 1700, as far as state, county, and municipal records can guide the librarian in the facts. Extinct publications will be included in this compilation, as well as those still flourishing.

Josephine Dodge Daskam, author of "Smith College Stories," will soon bring out, through the Scribners, a dainty volume entitled "Fables for the Fair." In these fables, which are about women, Miss Daskam develops a vein of satirical humor of most amusing quality. The different feminine types treated are familiar to every one, and their foibles are laughably as well as shrewdly exhibited, while the moral of each fable is the ludicrous inversion of some commonplace, made particularly absurd in caricature.

An unusually important book for young people, entitled "First Across the Continent," is announced for immediate publication by the Scribners. The sub-title "A Concise Story of the Lewis and Clark Expedition in 1802-3-4," gives a hint of its scope and purpose, and its publication is regarded as exceedingly timely, coming as it does so closely in advance of the expositions to be held at St. Louis and Portland, Oregon, commemorative, respectively, of the Louisiana Purchase and of the Lewis and Clark Expedition.

"Glass and Gold," the symbolical title of the novel by James O. G. Duffy, which the J. B. Lippincott Company will soon issue, is derived from a stanza in Browning's poems, "The Worst of It," which summarizes the main theme of the book:

Better commit a fault and have done—

As you, dear—forever, and choose the pure,
And look where the healing waters run.

And strive and strain to be good again,

And a place in the other world insure,

All Glass and Gold, with God for its sun.

In the preparation of the new edition of George Eliot's novels, which the Lippincotts are bringing out, it has been the effort to present such a library, in point of artistic dress and illustration, as shall be especially acceptable to those who appreciate good taste in combination with the best of materials in book-making. The edition, which is published in conjunction with Messrs. William Blackwood & Son, of London, numbers ten volumes, each complete in itself. A particular feature of the edition is the photogravure frontispieces by such artists as Hatherell, Bundy, Shaw, Sapperson, Sullivan, van Anrooy and Greiffenhagen. One volume will be issued each month.

"The Control of Trusts" is the effective title of Professor John Bates Clark's latest work which is now on the press with the Macmillan Company for immediate publication. In his last book Professor Clark dealt with "The Natural Distribution of Wealth," while in this one he aims to show that a certain definite policy will draw the fangs of the trust and transform it from a public enemy into a public servant. It aims to avoid duplicating work that has been done by Professor Jenks, Professor Ely, Professor Von Halle and others. It gives no statistics, no description of the various forms which trusts take in America and elsewhere and no history of the development of those organizations in America.

In October J. B. Lippincott Company will have ready the first two volumes of a new and highly important undertaking. This is the "Temple Bible," a series of volumes uniform with the familiar "Temple Shakespeare." The books of the Bible will be issued in twenty-four volumes—the Old Testament being in seventeen and the New Testament in seven—and the text "will in the main be presented in all the grand simplicity of that sterling English prose which we have in the Authorized Version"; that is to say, it will be printed consecutively, and not divided up into verses. Each volume will be edited by a scholar who has made close and special study of the book or books assigned to him, and each volume will contain a full, though condensed introduction, elucidatory notes, and other aids to the student. The publishers desire to make the "Temple Bible" a vade mecum for Scripture students of all shades of belief, but the special mouthpiece of no one of them in particular. The volumes will have as frontispieces photo-gravures of emblematic subjects by the great English artists or the old masters. A separate volume will be specially written, as an "Introduction to the Study of Holy Scripture," by the Bishop of Ripon.

WIT AND WISDOM FROM NEW BOOKS.

Yo' can't cuss yo' way to glory. No, sah, yo' can't do it.—The Petrel.

The devil possesses no one who does not desire him.—Sister Teresa.

Men are born to hardship. It is the alloy which gives firmness to their metal.—When the Land Was Young.

He is governed by two things—his stomach and his pocketbook. He can satisfy the first if the second is well supplied.—J. Devlin—Boss.

Professional saints are very tiresome people. Amateur sinners are much more interesting.—Casting of Nets.

To learn the worth of a man's religion, do business with him.—Aphorisms and Reflections.

Rules of grammar cannot give us a mastery of language, rules of rhetoric cannot make us eloquent, rules of conduct cannot make us good.—Aphorisms and Reflections.

A poet may be a good companion, but, so far as I know, he is even the worst of fathers.—D'ri and I.

Heaven and hell are very real, but they are states of mind.—The Symphony of Life.

When the law sets out to punish, it doesn't stop with the guilty only.—The Manager of the B. & A.

One who spends his life ferreting out crime is apt to have the soul of a criminal.—The Eternal City.

Uncertainty is the only certain element in the life of a man whose brain is not petrified.—Elder Boise.

There is something that is much more scarce, something finer far, something rarer than ability. It is the ability to recognize ability.—The Philistine.

Let by-gones be by-gones—that's my motto, but they're so ornery they won't ever give me the chance.—The Manager of the B. & A.

I have never known a dead earnest and honest man or woman to be a dead failure.—A Summer Hymnal.

Letters without the personal element are like history without events, poetry without invention, or novels without love.—Men and Books.

All women have their ideals, more or less, an' the average life of a first-class, bouncin' ideal is just about six months; after that they die for lack o' nourishment.—A Drone and A Dreamer.

It is well to return and test the materials of the bridge which has just carried thee over the flood in safety?—She Stands Alone.

It is a fine standard—that of perfection, which the worldling sets up for the Christian, but it is a very false one.—She Stands Alone.

Love and a cough cannot be hidden.—The Eternal City.

Miss Twombly was taking herself very seriously, which, perhaps, was due in part to her extreme youth, and in part to a lack of the saving grace of humor.—Tales of the Cloister.

—The Literary Era.

ANECDOTES OF AUTHORS.

Thackeray tells of an Irishwoman begging alms from him who, seeing him put his hands in his pocket, said: "May the blessing of God follow you," but when he only pulled out his snuff box, she immediately added: "And never overtake you."

Walter Scott, when a boy, was asked by his teacher: "What part of speech is the word with?" "A noun," said Walter. "You young blockhead," said the pedagogue, "what example can you give of such a thing?" "There's a verse, sir, in the Bible which says, 'They bound Sampson with withs.'"

Dr. Franklin's mother-in-law hesitated at letting her daughter marry a printer, as there were then already two printing offices in the United States, and she was uncertain whether the country would support a third.

Sheridan excused himself from walking with an elderly lady on account of the bad weather. Soon afterward she met him alone. "So, Mr. Sheridan," said she, "it has cleared up." "Just a little, ma'am, enough for one, but not enough for two."

Macaulay spent every Sunday alone at dinner at a London coffee house. After dinner he would build a pyramid of tumblers and wine glasses, topping it off with a decanter. The edifice usually toppled over. Macaulay then paid for the broken glass and left.

Elizabeth, enraged against Haywood for publishing the life of Henry IV., inquired of Bacon if there was not treason in the book. "No, madam," he replied, "but I am certain it contains much felony, for I find many passages which he has stolen from Tacitus."

The Critic tells of a lady who uses the postcards which frequently accompany advertisements. Wishing to use one from a well-known publishing house, she substituted her dairyman's name. On the reverse she wrote, "Please send me one dozen fresh-laid eggs." The postoffice paid no attention to the address, but forwarded the card to the publishers whose imprint it bore. The next day it was returned with this indorsement signed by one of the firm: "Very sorry we can't fill your order. Out of print and scarce." Not to be outdone, she wrote back, "If none fresh on hand, the lays of Ancient Rome will do."

The late William M. Evarts, sometime leader of the American bar, had a farm in Vermont where swine are bred with especial care. He once sent a barrel of pickled pork to the historian, George Bancroft, with this letter: "I am glad to send you two products of my pen to-day—a barrel of pickled pork and my eulogy on Chief Justice Chase."

"Have you got your volume of poems finished?" "Yes." "What are you going to do with it?" "I am going to hire some Boston author to stand for it."

To stretch my hand and touch Him,
 Though He be far away;
 To raise my eyes and see Him
 Through darkness as through day;
 To lift my voice and call Him—
 This is to pray!

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

JOSEPH IN PRISON.

"But the Lord was with Joseph and showed him mercy."— Genesis 39: 21.

Monday—Genesis 39: 20-40: 11.

O real evil, no unrelieved sorrow, overwhelms the soul that leans on God. In prison, Joseph feels his Lord draw specially near, and learns the lesson of sympathy with others.

So God comes to me in my trials, to strengthen and sustain and cheer. Sometimes he finds it hard to get a quiet season of communion with me. I have so much work to do in the world, and so many engagements to keep. I live in such a whirl and hurry. God has little opportunity to reveal to me the mysteries of his truth and the secrets of his love. But, when trouble sweeps down on me, he takes me apart that I may rest under the shadow of his wings; he shuts me in.

And these are the hours when I understand him best. He is the strong and tender Friend. He protects me. He whispers courage to me. He keeps me from losing heart. He brings me manifold blessing. Surely it is worth while having the grief and loneliness, if his presence go with me through it all.

Tuesday—Genesis 40: 12-23.

How various are the destinies of men! One goes to honor and life, another to disgrace and death.

There are two lakes high up in the Alps, which lie so near that the bystander may throw a stone from the one to the other. Lago Bianco the one is named, or the White Loch, because it is of a light green color; while its neighbor is Lago Nero, or the Black Loch, because it is dark and gloomy looking. But, though they are so close, they are on different inclines of the watershed. Lago Bianco sends its overflow down to the Adriatic, but Lago Nero is connected with the Black Sea. I look at the one, and I think about Venice and sunny Italy; I look at the other, and I think about Sebastopol and the wintry Crimea.

So I may be side by side in one home, in one business, in one Christian congregation, with a man, who is yet on the different slope of the watershed. We receive the same messages of warning and of salvation. We enjoy much the same opportunities. But one of us believes God, and the other does not. One of us passes into glorious liberty, and the other into darkness and despair. Ah, let me watch in which direction I turn.

Wednesday—Psalm 43.

I daresay that, if I had the shaping of my own history, the path would never be anything but smooth; the load would be a light one, if there were any load to carry at all; the sky would be as clear and cloudless as on a day in midsummer. Health would be always good; business would be always prosperous; dear friends, whom God has taken, would be kept far longer at my side; the cares and griefs of life would be reduced to a minimum.

But such unbroken sweetness would not be good for me. In "The Voyage of Maeldune" Tennyson describes how the old sailors touched at the Isle of Flowers. Everywhere there were flowers; their breath met the travelers out on the seas. But the fragrance palled on them; they grew weary of it; they hated it. And by and by they found themselves in the Isle of Fruits. Grapes hung from its headlands; the fig rioted over the land; countless berries hung on every side. But the passion of wine enflamed them, and each drew his sword on his fellow.

It is a parable of how evil it would be, if my life were all sunshine and happiness. It is best that sometimes I have to mourn because of the oppression of the enemy. Then I hope in God, the health of my countenance and my God.

Thursday—Psalm 118: 5-17.

These are the words of a man in sorrow, but then he is a child of God; and that blessed fact alters the whole complexion of things.

If God has forgiven my iniquities, he has healed my worst disease. No other trouble he may allot me can equal the trouble he has cured, not the sharpest thorn nor the most distasteful draught. How light is my distress, compared with the sorrows of one who is far from him! I am sure that it is a Father's hand which smites. I am confident that he who spared not his own Son for me will never do me harm. Mine is the conviction that he can only send me difficulty and trial for wise and holy and gracious ends.

A traveler in Africa relates that, one day, overcome by the intense heat, he fell asleep on the parched and burning earth. But on awaking he had the sensation of freshness and rest. He found that it was caused by the thoughtfulness of his attendants. They were standing round him; they received on themselves the fierce glare; they sheltered him from the rays of a vertical sun. Because Christ has come and has stood between me and the death I deserve, a multitude of refreshments are mine even in the dry place and the weary land.

Friday—I. Peter 3: 8-17.

"Who is he that will harm you?"

What, then, shall I do with my cares and afflictions? Exactly what, I trust, I have already done with my sins. I am to commit them to Christ, one by one, just as they arise. I am to carry them to him in faith and in prayer. I am to "put them into his bag," to quote one of George Herbert's quaint phrases. I am to look to him and say, "This, my Lord, and this, and this I cannot bear; I lay them on thee; I leave thee to deal with them. I will trust and not be afraid."

He will take what I give. It will become a matter of honor with him to do his best for me. He will mature and ripen my grace. He will deepen and strengthen my life. He will carry me and every one of my loads.

Let me follow the advice which good Bishop Leighton gives me: "When thou art either to do or to suffer anything, when thou art about any purpose of business, go, tell God of it, and acquaint him with it—yea, burden him with it; and thou hast done for matter of caring. No more care, but sweet, quiet diligence in thy duty, and dependence on him for the carriage of thy matters. Roll over on God; make one bundle of all; roll thy cares and thyself with them, as one bundle, all on thy God."

Saturday—Matthew 10: 21-33.

Let me learn a lesson, as Martin Luther used to do, from Doctor Sparrow.

His home is in the house of God. Does not a psalmist say—"Yea, the sparrow hath found an house, even thine altars, O Lord of hosts. There let me dwell all the days of my life, in the presence of the Father, in the grace of the Son, in the communion of the Holy Ghost. Wherever I am, I would feel myself the inhabitant of a temple, a sanctuary, a shrine.

His food is on the table of God. "Behold," said Jesus, "the fowls of the air; they sow not, nor reap, nor gather into barns, yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." A happy carelessness marks the sparrow, a blessed freedom from anxiety. So let me live the untroubled and trustful life, fearing no evil, well-assured that my Lord will provide for me.

And his death is under the eyes of God. "Not one of them falls to the ground without your Father." Thus even at the last, his "little feathers all a-stare," the bird is "in high grace." If God watch over my exodus from this world and my entrance into the next, if Christ stand beside my dying bed, what better can I ask?

Yes, let me sit at Doctor Sparrow's feet.

Sunday—Psalm 37: 7-17.

Why should I fret myself because of evildoers? Sin, when it is mightiest and most successful, is transitory.

Lord Rosebery has been telling us the story of Napoleon the Great. His energy, his intellect, his genius were such that he "enlarges the scope of human achievement." Once he "fought the Austrians for five consecutive days, without taking off his boots or closing his eyes." "He was as much the first ruler as the first captain in the world." "Ordinary measures do not apply to him; we seem to be trying to span a mountain with a tape." Napoleon was the largest personal force that has come into the modern European world.

But his career ended in defeat and exile. At forty-six the man who had dreamed of governing a continent was a captive. His conquests left no mark. The kings whom he made lost their thrones. France was beggared and exhausted by him. Why? Because God was not his God. "I am not a man like other men," he asserted himself; "the laws of morality could not be intended to apply to me."

Therefore I will fear nothing, though wickedness seems to prosper for a time. Such prosperity has no permanence about it. It is better to walk humbly with God than to stand alone on the proudest eminence in the world.

Observances have two uses for every soul. If the Lord is absent, it is by them that we seek him. If the Lord is present, it is by them that we meet him.—Frederick Temple.

After you have confessed Christ with your mouth, then everything you do confesses him. Here is Smith and Brown's sewing machine, with no name on it. Does it confess Smith and Brown, though it turn out a thousand fine garments? No. But stamp upon it the firm's name, and every seam it sews thenceforth is a credit—or a discredit—to Smith and Brown.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

DEATH OF JOSEPH.

Lesson for Nov. 3rd, 1901. Gen. 50: 15-26.

GOLDEN TEXT:—So Teach Us to Number Our Days That We May Apply Our Hearts Unto Wisdom. Ps. 90:12.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Time and Place.

Bishop Usher places the date from verse 14 to verse 21 at B. C. 1689, the death of Joseph fifty-four years later at B. C. 1635. The place is the land of Goshen or Rameses. Ch. 47: 11.

Some Lessons from Joseph and His Brethren.

Joseph's life is an object lesson on the great fundamental principles of salvation. It shows that the way leads (Kurtz) through abasement to exaltation, through serving to ruling, through sacrifice to possession, through suffering to glory. Joseph's trials and sufferings for righteousness sake were greater than those of any other of the patriarchs. His was a free, manly spirit that came more nearly "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. 4: 13) than any Old Testament character of whom we have details. A practical lesson from Joseph's life is, that nothing pays so well as to live in harmony with God's designs. The lives of his brethren show that no way is so unprofitable and so hard as that of the transgressor. Prov. 13: 15. Sin always brings men into trouble and fear. V. 19, 21. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

V. 15. Frightened Brothers. "Their father was dead." They may have feared that their exalted brother's action towards them had been chiefly influenced by love for his father; now that he is gone their prospects might be more serious. * * * "It may be Joseph will hate us." The loss of their parent, the reflections on the strange situation of Joseph so far above them, and they Egyptian subjects in his power, would cause the thoughts of all their sinful acts against Joseph to press with great force. Once before when they were with Joseph alone, their father being absent, they had been imprisoned for three days. Ch. 42: 17. * * * "Will fully require us all the evil we did." Why ought they not to fear evil in return for evil? The brothers now were as fully in Joseph's power as he had been in their's at Dothan. That they were conscious of and now confess their evil was a favorable sign for them.

V. 16. Message to Throne. "They sent a messenger." Fear lead them to frame a formal message to their exalted brother. The Hebrew for "sent" is equivalent to "gave charge", viz., they would seek favor by communicating the charge of their father, counting upon his love and influence in their behalf. * * * "Thy father did command." The brothers, in the dilemma of their earlier confession, may have consulted with their father as to the better manner of approaching Joseph regarding their sin, now that his identity had become clear. Always the words and requests of those who have entered the portals of death, have new value and meaning.

V. 17. Tears of Love. "So shall ye say unto Joseph, forgive." This is an intercessory request and coming from the father whom Joseph loved, it might serve, they argue, to make him more merciful. It was a case of their father teaching them a lesson on how to pray. Jesus taught his disciples to pray almost in the same words. The brethren were urged to make a clear confession of their sins. As we stand before God as sinners, how consoling is the promise that, if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins. 1 John 1: 9. * * * "And now we pray you forgive." They fully cast themselves upon his mercy by asking forgiveness. They sought not to make excuses, a matter so common with the erring. Luke 14: 18. * * * "The servants of the God of their father." They would show themselves to be brethren by higher than natural ties and thus advance additional ground for reconciliation. * * * "Joseph wept." Grieved that suspicion could exist regarding his love for them. It is not the first time he is brought to sorrow and tears over this transaction. Ch. 42:24; 43:30. Tender-hearted Joseph is more ready to forgive than were his brothers to acknowledge their old offense. As Joseph wept over his brethren, so Jesus wept over his brethren. Luke 19:41.

V. 18. The Bowing Sheaves. "Brethren fell down before his face." The tears of a strong man are always touching. Those of Joseph brought his brethren prostrate to his feet and thus again are the dreams of his boyhood fulfilled. Ch. 37:7, 8; 42:6; 44:14. * * * "Behold we be thy servants." Once they had wickedly forced him into slavery; now voluntarily they offer themselves to him as slaves.

V. 19. Vengeance Is God's. "And Joseph said, fear not." Before this he had said, "be not grieved." Ch. 45:5. They might submit themselves as slaves, but the exalted one would show them that he was their loving brother. It was the God-spirit speaking through Joseph, the same assuring "fear not" that God has in so many ways sought to impress upon the race. Fear not me, but fear God, fear to do wrong. * * * "For am I in the place of God?" It is man's place to forgive, not to punish. To God alone belongs the executing of vengeance. While the words convey the idea of vengeance against sin, yet judgment is in the hands of a Higher One.

V. 20. Salvation from Famine. "Ye thought evil against me." Their evil is no less evil because God had directed it into a channel for good. It is our motives, not results, by which we are judged. * * * "But God." He seeks to turn their thoughts away from self to God. * * * "Meant it for good." Man in his puny wisdom may mean one thing, but God in his infinite wisdom quite another. His councils shall stand. Is. 10:7. His overruling power will cause all things to work together for good. Rom. 8:28. The design, as later history shows, was to preserve, educate and unify the children of Israel into a nation capable of taking possession of the Land of Promise. * * * "To save much people alive." In the end how wise and good appear the designs of Providence. While, in the beginning, all was gloom to Joseph; the darkness of the pit; the hardship of slavery; the false accusation; the lingering prison days; all trials most severe to Joseph's faith, yet in the end personal glory to himself and a chosen nation saved to live and work out the purposes of God.

V. 21. Fruit of the Spirit. "Now, therefore, fear ye not." Love delights to repeat its assurances of good. V. 19. Love shrinks from giving pain. Love is a fruit of the Spirit. Joseph with the dim light he had brought forth this and all fruits of the Spirit. Gal. 5:22-23. Do we in the clear light of Christ's life do as well? * * * "I will nourish thee." His position enabled him to do this. We recall that the Hebrew people did not suffer at the hands of the Egyptians until after Joseph died. * * * "And your little ones." Your households, your dependants. The thoughts of parents always go out to their children. * * * "He comforted and spake kindly unto them." There may be a form of forgiveness which is not forgiveness. True forgiveness is to be followed by helpful, comforting words; these show its sincerity. Love always speaks kindly. I Cor. 13:4. Joseph's wisdom was from above, pure, peaceful, gentle, full of mercy. Jas. 3:17. Guided by this wisdom he did good to those who hated him. Matt. 5:44. He overcame evil with good. Rom. 12:20-21.

V. 22-23. Prosperity Prolonged. "Dwelt in Egypt." Egypt was Joseph's home until his death, which occurred fifty-four years after his father died. The only reference we have to this lengthy period is found in Vs. 14-26. * * * "Joseph lived one hundred and ten years." His life was the shortest of all the great patriarchs. Full eighty years had been spent in great prosperity. For thirteen years previous to that he had been a slave and in prison. The fact of his being placed in a coffin (V. 26) was a mark accorded only to persons of eminence, and indicates that he occupied his lofty position down to the time of his death. * * * "Ephraim's children of the third generation." Ephraim and Manassah were born before Joseph came to Egypt. The grandsons of Ephraim's grandsons are here spoken of.

V. 24. Kept the Faith. "And Joseph said, I die." He could say with Paul "The time of my departure is at hand, I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith." 2 Tim. 4:6, 7. * * * "But God will surely visit you." An expression of Joseph's strong faith in God's designs towards his covenant family. * * * "Bring you unto the land." The land of promise. In the midst of their Egyptian prosperity they are not to set their hearts thereon, they are but pilgrims and strangers. So, we have the promise of a prepared place; like Joseph let us, in prosperity and in poverty, set our affections upon God and the things he has promised. Col. 3:1, 2.

V. 25. Last Words of Faith. "Joseph took an oath." Thus his last deed was one emphasizing his faith. It involved a promise from his brethren on sacred oath that they would bury him in Canaan. * * * "Carry up my bones." Keep them with you in your journeys to the promised land. The remains of their great brother Joseph would be a constant reminder of God's presence with him in his Egyptian trials and thus a constant inspiration to them in meeting their own trials. Joseph's strong faith is shown in the desire to have his bones repose at last in the land God gave to his ancestors. * * * "From hence." The huge pyramids built as tombs show the honors paid to Egyptian rulers after death. Yet in such there was no attraction to this man of God. Joseph's request was granted. Amid all the hurry of leaving Egypt in that memorable passover many years later, regard was had to this command. Ex. 13:19. That the cherished remains were carried through all the forty years' wanderings is shown by Joshua 24:32.

V. 26. Last Will Recorded. "So Joseph died." His faith was as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. * * * "They embalmed him." After the Egyptian method of drying the body by the use of bituminous material, converting it into what later became known as a mummy. * * * "In a coffin." A mummy case, probably made of cedar and in shape somewhat conforming to that of the body. Ancient Egyptian coffins of this kind may be seen in our museums. Study the secret of Joseph's character and power. It is found in a single expression: The presence of God in his life. John 14:23.

FIVE MINUTE SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

HIS is just the passage of Scripture that you, I, all of us need—"Teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." O that some great teacher would break into our careless lives, upset our thoughts, plans, everything, if thereby we might live as though to-day were our last day on earth! When we look back upon our sins, we sigh for the great Teacher. O, my Father, teach me, even me. If I had known that to-day was my last day in human flesh, I would have lived the last twenty-four hours very differently and you would, too. We say that we are trying to live right all the time, but there is a lack of earnestness in our efforts. We fool ourselves with the delusion that we are going to be here a long time. My neighbor, on one side of me, dies to-day and a few days ago the one on the other side passed away. For a moment I think death is getting pretty close to me, but in a few hours I have forgotten the solemn lesson and am living as though there had not been a death in ten miles of me in ten years. Now is that not your experience? Is that not the experience of all men? After all is not the very experience itself a sad thought in our memories—to think how stupid we are? My text says "teach us to number our days," teach us to know that we have only to-day. Then the number of my days is one—but I may have many thousand ahead of me; however the sure number is one—just one day. What an ideal state of life! How many wrongs would be settled before sunset? How much ill-gotten gain would be returned to the rightful owner? How much kinder the human heart would be? Mankind would then be wise. Some day we shall die and that day is unknown. It may be fifty years hence, but it is just as likely to be fifty days hence and not unlikely to be tomorrow. To-day is what God has given to us. It is daily service and with it comes his daily care for us. God sets me in a room with a sunrise on one side and a sunset on the other. I cannot look backward nor can I look forward. I can only look around me, within me and above me. There is my post of duty, your's, everybody's. God sets us in a new room each day, but the principles controlling our lives are as old as those that kept Abraham faithful and made Joseph's life so wonderfully sweet.

Our Father, have mercy upon us and save us for Jesus' sake. Amen.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

GOD LEADING OUR LIVES.

Topic Nov. 3: Ref. 23d Psalm.

HIS Twenty-third Psalm is the idyl of the shepherd life, and of the saints of God in all the centuries since David, the shepherd king, touched his instrument of seven strings, and thereby touched a responsive strain in human hearts, wherever the Bible is loved and remembered.

Let not your heart be bothered about the Bible losing its hold on the affections of mankind. It is forever sacred to the sincere souls who struggle and suffer and sing above the shadows, and who still dare, like David, to dream of quietness and peace and plenty as the portion of God's people. Yes, the Bible is still, and will forever be, accounted precious to the great throbbing heart of our common humanity, because the Twenty-third Psalm, the Beatitudes, and the Lord's Prayer, are a part of the heritage of the Christian centuries, and of the country in which we live. And these familiar portions of Scripture have been translated into almost every language of earth, and have thereby become, or will become, the universal heritage and hope of all the nations. Rest in this assurance. The "Shepherd Psalm" has in it the strain of universal harmony. It touches all hearts, thrills with its music the minstrels of all lands. It is the first favorite of childhood, among the few passages, perhaps, recalled in the o'erburdened years of smiting strife, when the anxieties of life make stony pillows for our heads; it is the pilgrim's staff, and the final comfort of the aged servants and saints, underlaid and overlaid with the promises of Christ, in the passing of the earthly into the heavenly.

But how empty are all our words! God has set his seal of inspiration upon this Twenty-third Psalm, and all eulogy is but emptiness of speech. To make this Psalm our own is to possess ourselves of the most priceless heritage of the Hebrew scrolls of praise. To be able to say, truly, though tremblingly, "The Lord is my shepherd," is to stay our souls for the sternest conflict. Therein is safety, plenty, rest, the green pastures of promise, the still waters of quietness, restoration, guidance, comfort, triumph without regret or bitterness, fulness of blessing, and assurance forever! All this is put in the six short verses of this Psalm.

Hard to Realize.

Yet some things are easier said than realized. It is easier to say, "The Lord is my shepherd" than to really realize this. And it is easier for us to say, with some confidence, "The Lord is my shepherd" than to say "I shall not want." I don't know but our faith fails us right here more than in any other thing. In this materialistic age, with greatly multiplied wants, and ever-increasing expenditures, it puts a severe strain upon our trust to say "I shall not want." While we may need, as President Roosevelt pleads, the "strenuous life," I dare to ask, for myself, and for you, dear young people, and fellow-servants of the Master of men, the simpler, sincerer and the unselfish life. Such was the shepherd life. It had its cares, its anxieties, its losses, as all our lives have; but it had its recompense of quietness and peace beyond all price. We may not have this again in this electric age, perhaps, and more the pity. But against all the noise and chatter and sizz and sputter and spatter, I set this Psalm of the shepherd life, and plead for more of its quiet, its simpler spirit of content, its confident trustfulness, its over-flowing cup of gladness, its overshadowing, controlling sense of the divine presence, leading, guidance and abounding grace in all our lives.

PLEASANTRIES.

A priest preached a sermon on "Grace." "An', me brethren," he said, in conclusion, "if ye have wan spark av heavenly grace, wather it, wather it continually."—Exchange.

A papal bull was once described as "giving you the choice of obedience or of being excommunicated from the church. So called bull from reference to the horns of a dilemma."

Waterman (shaking his fountain pen): "You have no idea how easily these pens run!" His neighbor (applying a blotter to his trousers): "Oh, I have an inking!"—Harvard Lampoon.

Three Protestant men took a drive in Dublin on a Corpus Christi day, and observed a religious procession outside a Catholic church. They directed the driver to stop to obtain a full view. "Well, that beats the devil," said one of them. The carman touched his hat, and replied, "Yes, your honor, that's what it's for."—The Pilot.

Overheard on Railway Train: "Why, the time was," said a passenger with a gorgeous watch-chain, "when we had our county so well in hand that we could elect a brindle pup to any office we chose to nominate him for." "And you can't do it now?" queried the other. "I should say not. The other fellows have beat us three to one in the last two elections." "To what do you attribute the change?" "Well, I am inclined to think that, when we had the power, we elected too many brindle pups."—Youth's Companion.

In college there is a constant combat of wits between the tutor and his pupils. The students who attended the lectures on biology planned a little joke on their professor. They removed a stuffed baboon from the natural history museum, dressed it up in a student's gown, and set it in the professor's chair upon the lecture platform. When he entered the room, they greeted his evident surprise with a suppressed giggle of merriment. "Well, gentlemen," said the professor, blandly, "I'm glad to see that you have found at last a professor who is suited to your capacities."

General Church News

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

The city of Minneapolis was the center of interest during the past week among the Disciples throughout the world, and some three thousand of them gathered there for their first twentieth century convention. When last year at Kansas City the question of place of the next convention was discussed it was felt by many that the twin cities were too far from the center, especially for a year that was to have a Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. But the enthusiastic labors of the committee of arrangements resulted in a much larger attendance than was expected by any but the most sanguine, and not only in that regard but in most others, the gathering was a great success. The Exposition hall was used for the meetings, and in spite of its unusual proportions, it was well filled at all the principal sessions. It was tastefully decorated and amply provided with rest and refreshment rooms, while the lobby was used by the newspapers, colleges, state delegations and other interests as headquarters.

The opening reception was held on Thursday evening. The sessions of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions occupied Friday and Saturday until evening. Prominent on this section of the program were the names of Mrs. David Owen Thomas of Minneapolis, Prof. L. W. Fairfield of Angola, Ind., Prof. Ernest Wiles and Miss Rose Wood Allen of Ann Arbor, Mich., Miss Rebel Withers of Florida, Mrs. Ann Haggard of Des Moines, Secretary C. C. Smith of Cincinnati, Mrs. Anna Atwater of Ohio, Prof. W. C. Payne of Lawrence, Kan., and Prof. C. A. Young of Chicago.

Saturday evening was devoted to the interests of Christian Endeavor, with addresses by Secretary John Willis Baer of Boston and Dr. J. H. Garrison of St. Louis. On Sunday the convention scattered over the two cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul to hear the different men who occupied the pulpits at the invitation of the various pastors. It was a great day, and not less than seventy-five ministers representing the Disciples preached in the churches of the two cities, some speaking both morning and evening. Such opportunities for cultivating the grace as well as advocating the principle of Christianity cannot fail of result. The Northwest will know much more of the Disciples, their history, their purposes and their spirit from the experiences of Sunday. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock the crowning feature of the week occurred. This was the celebration of the Lord's Supper by probably the largest audience of the convention. The services were conducted by Pastors Tanner and Harmon of the local churches, assisted by some fifty helpers. An impressive address was delivered by A. B. Philpott of Indianapolis. Those who attend these great conventions have come to regard the communion service on Sunday afternoon as quite the most impressive and uplifting feature of the entire program. The services at the Portland Avenue Church of Christ, the host of the convention, were especially enjoyable and were attended by audiences that thronged the building. W. J. Lhamon, formerly pastor of the church, during whose labors with the congregation the handsome edifice was erected, spoke in the morning and in the evening Prof. Jabez Hall of Butler college occupied the pulpit.

Monday was given up to the work of the Foreign Christian Missionary society, and reports were read from its twenty-six missionaries in India, the same number in China, twenty in Japan, seven in Turkey, eight in Scandinavia, seven in Africa, four in Cuba, and two each in Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, together with the 150 native helpers, evangelists and teachers scattered through these fields. Addresses were delivered by C. L. Lockhart, W. R. Warren, W. E. Ellis and Prof. Herbert L. Willett, and interesting narratives of missionary work were given by E. E. Faris of Africa, and M. D. Adams of India. Much disappointment was felt that Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart, whose book of travels in Tibet has been eagerly read, and who is soon to go to that mysterious land under the direction of the Foreign society, was detained from the convention by illness.

On Tuesday the sessions of the American Christian Missionary society began, with the president's address by I. J. Spencer of Lexington, Ky. Reports of the society were presented, together with those of the boards under its direction—church extension and ministerial relief. The statistical department was full of interest and showed marked gains in many features of the work of the Disciples, and was followed by the report of the superintendent of Christian Endeavor. Addresses were delivered by J. A. Lord of Cincinnati, Roland A. Nichols of Chicago, and in the evening by P. Y. Pendleton of Cincinnati and President Burriss A. Jenkins of Kentucky university. On Wednesday the claims of various American missionary fields were presented in short addresses by B. F. Clay, J. H. Hughes, W. J. Lhamon of Allegheny, J. H. Mohorter of Boston and W. J. Wright of Washington, D. C. The afternoon was devoted to receptions, college reunions, excursions and similar features. The college reunions are always an important and interesting part of the conventions. The alumni of Bethany, Hiram, Drake, Butler, Kentucky university, Eureka college, Cotner and other institutions met either informally or for banquets. Parties of sightseers could be met in all sections of the city and surrounding places. The mills, the falls, the lakes, St. Paul, Fort Snelling and other points of interest were visited. In the evening the convention listened to addresses by A. B. Phillips of Augusta, Ga., and Dr. F. D. Power of Washington.

Thursday was devoted to interests closely related to the missionary objects that had called the convention together. Among these are to be numbered the Benevolent association with its homes for orphans and aged people, the Education society and the meeting of pastors and evangelists. These were partly held in the general session of the morning, and partly in the section meetings in the afternoon. The closing consecration service of the

A SCIENTIFIC BREAKFAST

Rightly selected food will cure more than half the diseases. Try a scientific and healthy breakfast:—Fruit of some kind, preferably cooked; a dish of Grape-Nuts, with cream; two soft-boiled eggs. Put two eggs in a tin pint cup of boiling water, cover and set off for nine minutes. Whites will then be the consistency of cream, and most easily digested. One slice of bread with butter; cup of Postum Cereal Food Coffee.

On that breakfast you can work like a horse and be perfectly nourished until noon. Your nervous troubles, heart palpitation, stomach and bowel troubles, kidney complaints and various other disorders will gradually disappear and firm, solid health will set in.

Why? You have probably been living on poorly selected food, that is food that does not contain the required elements the body needs. That sort of food, and coffee, is the direct or indirect cause of more than half the ills the human body acquires.

Grape-Nuts is a perfectly cooked food and both that and the Postum Food Coffee contain fine microscopic particles of phosphate of potash obtained in a natural way from the grains of the field and by scientific food experts incorporated into food and drink. That element joins with the albumen in food to make gray matter, which is the filling of the brain cells and the nerve centers all over the human body.

A man or woman thus fed is scientifically fed and rapidly grows in vigor and vitality and becomes capable of conducting successfully the affairs of life. To produce a perfect body and a money-making brain, the body must have the right kind of food and the expert food specialist knows how to make it. That is Grape-Nuts and Postum Cereal Food Coffee, produced at the pure food factories of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich.

convention was held on Thursday evening, and the leading feature was an address by J. H. O. Smith of Valparaiso, Ind.

The music throughout was spirited and uplifting, the general leader, J. Walter Wilson, being assisted by several quartets and soloists. The total registration of those from outside of Minneapolis exceeded 3,000.

The officers of the various societies were retained as far as that practice is customary, A. McLean, long the specialist on missionary matters among the Disciples, being kept in the presidency of the Foreign society, and F. M. Rains, the secretary, now on a journey among the Asiatic missions, retained in his position. B. L. Smith will continue as corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary society, while Dr. H. O. Breeden of Des Moines was honored with the presidency. A spirited contest between Omaha and Pittsburg for the next convention was decided in favor of the former after the committee had reported in favor of the latter. It was determined, contrary to the practice of the convention, to fix the location of the gathering two years in advance, in view of the World's fair at St. Louis, and that city was selected for 1903. The convention closed with the fullest recognition of the labors of the local committee in making admirable and adequate preparations for the occasion, and with only the pleasantest memories of "Minneapolis, 1901."

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

The ninth annual conference of the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union in the Northwestern District, comprising Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, the northern peninsula of Michigan, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska and Montana, was held at the Bible Institute, Chicago, October 8 to 14. About 100 missionaries were present. The first conference was held in St. Paul sixteen years ago. The entire force in this district then was only twenty. This year it has numbered 130 all told.

The subjects for discussion, addresses and papers covered the whole range of Sunday school missionary work, Sunday school evangelism and modern Sunday school management. The opening address by the superintendent of the district, Mr. F. G. Ensign, reviewed the work for the year just past and set forth plans for a forward movement in the year to come. The work among the 40,000 Indians of Montana was presented by Mr. C. H. Frady of Billings, Mont., and the discussion of the work among the foreign population was one of the most practical and spirited. The evening addresses in the Chicago Avenue church were a peculiar feature of this conference, beginning with an address by Dr. A. T. Pierson, D. D., of New York, followed by Rev. W. R.

Kings, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., who spoke on the Sunday school as a Bible institution; Rev. J. C. Kinison of Mt. Vernon, Ill., who gave a vivid picture of the Sunday school missionary work in southern Illinois, and E. B. Stevenson of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who discussed the need for enlarging the work of the society, both for the English-speaking and the foreign-speaking people. Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, D. D., delivered a powerful address on the relation of Bible knowledge to the safety and life of the nation. Mr. W. A. Hillis of Cleveland, Ohio, spoke on the destitution in the older states, and the imperative demand for immediate effort to gather in the neglected children. He showed that there were more children unreached by Sunday schools in one of the states of the central district than in all the states on the Pacific slope. Rev. Sydney Strong, D. D., of Oak Park, gave a very instructive address, showing the importance of leading the children to Christ before the age of fourteen or fifteen, as the probability of conversion later than fifteen decreased with each year. Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D., also spoke on the same theme, urging effort to lead children to Christ very early in life. Rev. John R. Crosser of the Kenwood Evangelical church addressed the conference on Friday afternoon, stirring every heart with a new purpose to do more than ever before to save the boys and girls. Miss Emma Wilson gave a very instructive paper on "Written Examinations," and Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner spoke on "Ways of Working." She was followed by Rev. Henry Moser on "The Sunday School of the New Century." The keynote of the conference was preparation for work by the baptism of the Holy Spirit for soul winning this coming winter.

These missionaries and their superintendents lived at the Bible Institute for a week and went carefully over every phase of their work and examined every branch of the service, with the view of making it more efficient. Then showed their faith in the work by subscribing nearly $1,000 towards its support. This was without question the largest gathering of paid Sunday school missionaries ever assembled on this continent. Mr. E. Augustus Miller, from the Board of Managers, Philadelphia, was present, and Mr. John Knox Marshall, also a member of the board, from Boston, Mass. As has been the latter's custom for a number of years, he gave a banquet to the missionaries at the Union League Club on the closing evening. About 130 missionaries and their friends were present. The after-dinner speeches are always a most interesting feature of this occasion.

Thus ended one of the most remarkable, practical and successful Home Mission Sunday School Missionary conferences ever held in this city. One hundred consecrated, capable and trained Sunday school missionaries are certain to make themselves felt in the rural Sunday schools this winter and in the great Northwest during the entire year. The headquarters for this district are at Room 1009, 153 La Salle street, Chicago, Ill. F. G. E.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD OF MICHIGAN.

The sixty-seventh annual meeting of the Synod of Michigan convened at Niles, October 8-10. As usual the ministers far outnumbered the elders, there being but fifteen of the latter. The Rev. L. H. Davis of Grand Rapids was elected moderator. This Synod was remarkable for the unusual number of distinguished speakers from

COFFEE DID IT.

Would Have Been Fatal if Kept Up.

"Coffee! Oh, how I did want it after the nervous strain of public work. Something warm to brace me up was all the breakfast I craved, but every time I drank it, I suffered the dying sensation that follows it with heart fluttering and throbbing of the throat and ears.

I had no strength to throw away in that way, so decided that hot water must do for me.

One morning I came to breakfast in the home of some friends in Pueblo, Colo., just in time to see the mother pouring some rich deep yellow coffee into mugs for the two little boys. One little chap had thrust his fingers in the mug and was licking them with such approving smacks. This opened the way for me to say, "Are you not afraid of the effects of coffee on the little folks?" The mother explained that it was Postum Food Coffee made at Battle Creek, Michigan, and remarked, "We think there is nothing like it." Then she explained how the new coffee had weaned them away from the use of the old-fashioned coffee and tea because "it is so wholesome." I drank it there for the first time, and was delighted, not only with the delicious flavor, but the after satisfaction it gives. One day I was speaking with our family physician's wife about Postum, when her daughter remarked, "Yes, mamma, we are out of Postum, and I have used coffee for the last two mornings and it always brings the tired feelings and troubles my stomach and bowels, but Postum makes me feel all right."

In one home they served Postum in such a way that it was tasteless. I have found that Postum boiled sometimes five minutes, and sometimes ten, is nothing more than spoiled water, but when it is made with two heaping teaspoonsful for each cup, and boiled fifteen or twenty minutes, it becomes a tried and proven breakfast favorite, and for refreshment and wholesome nourishment has no equal.—M. M. Yates, Goshen, Ind.

abroad. There were present to address the body in the interests of various lines of benevolent work, Rev. Dr. B. L. Agnew, secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief; Rev. Dr. Pearson, a representative of the Bible Society; Rev. H. C. Minton, D. D., Moderator of the General Assembly; Rev. James A. Worden, D. D., superintendent of Sunday school work; Rev. Geo. B. Stewart, D. D., president of Auburn Theological Seminary, representing the Evangelistic Committee of the General Assembly; Rev. B. C. Haworth of Japan; Rev. C. H. Fenn of China, who was present in the siege at Peking; Rev. N. E. Clemenson, a convert from Mormonism, now a Presbyterian home missionary, and last in point of time, but by no means least on the program, Rev. Willis G. Craig, D. D., LL. D., of McCormick Theological Seminary, who was Moderator of the General Assembly at Washington in 1893. This fine array of prominent speakers added much to the attractiveness of the synod. The attendance of the community was large and the interest at many points deepened into enthusiasm.

The reports of the various committees on Education, Church Election, Sabbath School Work, Freedmen, Aid for Colleges, Ministerial Relief, Temperance, Home Missions and Foreign Missions, had each some special feature of interest. The reports of the Ladies' Home and Foreign Mission Societies, in the absence of Mrs. Cooper of Detroit, were presented by Mrs. J. G. Lowrie of Niles, and the thanks of the synod presented by a rising vote. The report of the Standing Committee on Foreign Missions, presented by Rev. J. G. Lowrie, D. D., of Niles, revealed the fact that the synod had more than doubled its gifts to foreign missions for the past year. This was owing largely to the legacies, but special emphasis was laid upon the good resulting from missionary conferences.

Home missions received a larger share of attention than usual from the fact that the question of self-support was to be taken up. The reports of the synodical superintendent, Rev. David Howell, and of the chairman of Synod's Home Mission Committee, Rev. J. M. Rodgers, made a gratifying showing, revealing the fact that fifty-three churches had reported pledges for synodical self-support, amounting to $6,000. These same churches gave to Home Missions last year $2,300. At the same time no shrinkage is apparent in gifts to other boards. The vote to assume self-support was practically unanimous. This is perhaps the most important matter decided by this synod. While it imposes a heavy burden of responsibility upon the churches of Michigan it relieves the Home Board of the more than $8,000 annual contribution over receipts it has been making to the support of Home Missions in Michigan. It was voted as the sense of synod that the minimum Home Mission salary be $700.

WONDERFUL CURES BY SWAMP-ROOT.

To Prove what the World-famous Discovery, Swamp-Root, will do for YOU, all Our Readers may have a Sample Bottle Free by Mail.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, and if permitted to continue fatal results are sure to follow

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys most, because they do most and need attention first.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or 'feel badly,' begin taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince any one.

Among the many cures of this wonderful medicine, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, investigated by the CHRISTIAN CENTURY, the ones which we publish this week for the benefit of our readers speak in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great remedy:

DES MOINES, Ia., Oct. 20, 1900.
 "I had been out of health for a long time, and I was taking medicine from a doctor's prescription when I received your sample bottle. I stopped taking the doctor's medicine and used the sample bottle of Swamp-Root. I afterwards took two of your large bottles, bought at my drug store, and they cured me entirely, and I have not been so well for years. I thank you very much for sending me the sample bottle."
 D. W. SMITH, 1821 Center St.

D. W. SMITH.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 117 High Rock St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Nov. 2, 1900: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe spell of sickness. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very much like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, and while I

Did Not Know I Had Kidney Troubles,

I some how felt certain my kidney were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle, and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser, I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is, therefore, all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me."
 MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

Swamp-Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak to perform her necessary work, who is always tired and overwrought, who feels that the cares of life are more than she can stand. It is a boon to the weak and ailing.

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

Sample Bottle Free.

The mild and immediate effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Swamp-Root will set your whole system right, and the best proof of this is a trial.

You may have a sample bottle of this famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, sent free by mail, postpaid, by which you may test its wonderful curative properties for such disorders as kidney, bladder and uric acid diseases, poor digestion, heart disturbance due to bad kidney trouble, skin eruptions from bad blood, neuralgia, rheumatism, diabetes, bloating, irritability, worn out feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion, or Bright's disease.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment on settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evident that your kidney and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is for sale the world over at druggists in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty cents and one dollar. Remember the name, Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghampton, N. Y.

EDITORIAL NOTICE.—If you have the slightest symptoms of kidney, liver or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y., who will gladly send you by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured by Swamp-Root. In writing, be sure to say that you read this generous offer in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

The report on Kalamazoo Female Seminary showed receipts of $12,000, being double those of last year. The number of pupils is about seventy. The Rev. Dr. Gray, the successful president, was heartily applauded as he concluded his address. Alma College has also made gratifying progress during President Bruske's ten-years' administration. It is now one of the best equipped Christian colleges of Michigan. Its location is unsurpassed. The plans of the president for the next ten years include four new college buildings, 400 students and a million dollars endowment.

The closing address of synod was made by Rev. Dr. Willis G. Craig. It was a masterly and eloquent presentation of Home Missions in broad outlines and fittingly closed a memorable gathering. J. G. L.

WISCONSIN BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES.

These were celebrated this year at LaCrosse, October 7-10. The Ministerial Union held its session first. Rev. G. E. Farr of Portage, who delivered the annual sermon, sought to find the causes for the present low tide of religious interest. His theme was "A Form of Godliness Without Power." He considered sin in the church from the large number of unregenerated members a cause of spiritual decline. The historical secretary showed that there had been a Baptist gain in the state of 40.36 per cent, making a net gain in ten years of 5,345 members. "Twentieth Century Methods" was the subject of a symposium greatly enjoyed by all. There were three appointed speakers and an open discussion. The last address of the morning was by Dr. Galusha Anderson of the University of Chicago.

Twelve new pastors were welcomed by Rev. Adam Fawcett, who pointed out the grand opportunities before Wisconsin pastors. Twenty-seven new men have come into the state during the year.

The afternoon was devoted to "Work Among Young People."

Dr. Galusha Anderson preached the sermon for the State Convention. The work of the women for foreign missions occupied a part of the Wednesday morning session. Mrs. Openshaw of Western China and Miss Tschirch of Burma brought inspiration from the work abroad. During the year the women of Wisconsin have contributed $2,709.11 to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the West and $108.56 for the contingent fund. It was stated that the contributions have fallen short of those of the previous year by over $550, enough to support a missionary and two Bible women. It is felt that care must be taken in the change from the women's societies to the new Church Missionary Department, that there be no decrease in contributions for women's work for missions. Miss Julia L. Austin of Chicago spoke of "Woman's Opportunity."

The report of Secretary D. W. Hurlbert states that there are in the state 212 churches, to which there have been 658 additions by baptism and 794 by letter and experience during the year, their total membership being 18,603, a gain of fifteen members. One new church has been organized—Lady-smith. Thirty-eight pastors have resigned and forty-seven have been settled. The wheel plan has been adopted by more than half the churches of the state. Thirty-nine churches have appointed committees on systematic beneficence. Five missionary churches, most of which have received missionary aid for years, one of them more or less for half a century, have become self-supporting during the year. The work of the district missionaries has saved churches from extinction, only seven churches having died in the five years following 1895, whereas nineteen died in the preceding five years.

There was animated discussion as to Wisconsin's present greatest need, and the most important subordinate needs. The annual report answered that the first was the Holy Spirit's power, and the second, evangelistic work, lay preaching and more money. A wide-awake address was given by Dr. J. B. Thomas of Chicago, district secretary of the Home Mission Society. It was voted to recommend the establishment of a perpetual church edifice loan fund which should be used to assist struggling churches, the loan to be repaid in installments without interest.

Wednesday evening was devoted to the young people. Thursday morning the home mission work of the women had right of way. Receipts were $2,636.92, besides $235.75 in goods for missionaries. Mrs. J. H. Chapman of Chicago was among the speakers at this meeting. In the afternoon Rev. Howland Hanson spoke with earnestness and force upon "The Art of Spiritual Husbandry." He pointed out that the old-time revival methods are passing, but there has come a greater interest in child conversions. The Sunday school is the department of the church where the natural new birth is to be expected. Competent teachers are a necessity in order to judge when the fullness of time for baptism has come. Graded lessons and graded classes are necessary whereby a given class shall be given the same treatment at a given time and lessons may be suited to differing ages and dispositions.

Mrs. Margaret Jaeger, of Portage, state secretary of the Primary Union, spoke in interested advocacy of the importance of primary Sunday school, which is fundamental to all Christian endeavor, urging better organization.

If You Feel "All Played Out" Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It repairs broken nerve force, clears the brain and strengthens the stomach.

better methods, better appointments for Sunday school rooms, better teachers.

The work of the American Baptist Publication Society was presented by Dr. A. J. Rowland and the chapel car work by Boston W. Smith.

THE ILLINOIS BAPTIST STATE ASSOCIATION.

The General Association of Illinois Baptists convened in Champaign, October 14-17. This beautiful university town is always attractive and is a central place for such meetings. Many Baptists made the pilgrimage thitherward from all parts of the state. The Baptist church edifice at Champaign is one of the most beautiful in that part of the country. It is a costly structure and well adapted for such gatherings.

A CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Asthma sufferers need no longer leave home and business in order to be cured. Nature has produced a vegetable remedy that will permanently cure Asthma and all diseases of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases (with a record of 90 per cent. permanently cured) and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Asthma, Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis and nervous diseases, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail. Address with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train of the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent. Chicago, Ill.

$13.00 GO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $13.00

via the Nickel Plate Road daily, with limit of 15 days; 20-day tickets at $16.00 for the round trip; 5-day tickets at $6.00 for the round trip, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Through service to New York and Boston and lowest available rates. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

There are nearly 120,000 Baptists in Illinois. Rev. E. P. Brand is the wise and successful superintendent of the aggressive missionary work now being carried on. Myron W. Haynes, D. D., of Chicago, was elected, for the third time, moderator. Rev. Clarence N. Patterson was elected clerk, and H. N. Carr of Alton, treasurer.

During the past year there have been nearly 6,000 received into the churches of the state through baptism, and a number of new churches have been formed; eleven ministers of the gospel have been ordained, and forty-six have been licensed to preach. There is a large student ministry in the state because of the Baptist Theological Seminary.

The sessions this year were marked by strong addresses. Dr. P. S. Henson of Chicago preached a powerful sermon on Monday evening, and Dr. Wm. M. Lawrence on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday evening Dr. Kittredge Wheeler and Johnston Myers gave addresses. The climacteric session of the entire convention was on Tuesday afternoon when the zenith of platform and spiritual power was reached in the address of Dr. Rogers on Christian patriotism, and the address of Rev. Chas. S. Morris of Africa on foreign missionary work. Seldom does the inspiration and enthusiasm of an audience excel that which was manifested at this session. The meetings were all united and harmonious and full of hope for the Baptists of Illinois.

J. B. T.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The annual meeting of the American Board is an historic event in Congregational annals. The distinguishing feature of this year's gathering at Hartford, Conn., October 8-11, was the raising of the debt of $102,341.38 within an hour. It was a thrilling occasion when, as the hour neared ten o'clock, after an evening of inspiring addresses, the proposal to raise the money then and there was put before an audience of 1,800 persons in Parson's Theater, a motion seconded by Rev. Howard Bliss in ringing words. E. H. Pitkin of Chicago endorses the proposition by offering to be one of fifty to clear off the debt. Next a missionary of forty years' standing, Dr. J. F. Clarke, of Bulgaria, says: "I have lived in Bulgaria on four cents a day. I have been giving twenty dollars a year, but if the debt is paid I will give fifty." Tumultuous applause follows, and the ball goes on rolling until some one announces that a friend of the board will give the last $25,000. Things grow lively then and bits of white paper are passed to the platform, and the sums promised are read faster than the tellers can record them. Finally 462 separate gifts have been made and the deed is done, the amounts varying from twenty-five cents to $1,000, outside of the one gift of $25,000. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" is the spontaneous outflow of thankful hearts, while many eyes are dim.

This glorious outcome did not, however, solve the problem why there should have been a debt in these times of prosperity, and the way to avoid it in the future was earnestly discussed. The Forward Movement was shown to be one of the most successful plans towards arousing a larger interest in giving. It has increased the gifts of fifty-four churches by 147 per cent; 105 salaries have been assumed by eighty-two churches and three individuals. The fear that this movement would interfere with the gifts through the women's boards has not been realized.

The treasurer's report is always of interest in such gatherings. The receipts from all sources were $697,370.90, a decrease from last year of $40,586.40. The bulk of the deficit was in shrinkage of legacies. It was shown that there are about 2,000 non-contributing churches, but it is believed there are more givers to foreign missions than ever before.

The attendance was so large that at some sessions it was necessary to hold overflow meetings. Samuel B. Capen of Boston, the president of the Board, was in the chair. Rev. Dr. E. P. Parker, for over thirty years pastor of the South Congregational church, Hartford, gave the address of welcome. In reply the president recalled the first meeting ninety-one years ago, when five commissioners and an audience of one sat round a table in a country parsonage. The total receipts that year were $999.52. Truly the work has grown! The annual sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. E. D. Eaton, president of Beloit college. It was scholarly and convincing. It closed with these words:

"The missionary enterprise is the most noteworthy, as it is the noblest, expression of the highest life of the modern world. Out in the open is our place, where God is on the field, and the conquering Savior leads ever onward."

Prayer meetings were held each morning at 8:30, Dr. Lyman Abbott of Brooklyn and Dr. F. A. Noble of Chicago leading. They gave inspiration and uplift for the day.

The annual survey of the field was inspiring as given by Dr. Judson Smith. In twenty missions, at strategic centers, amid a population exceeding sixty million souls, using twenty-seven different languages, 544 missionaries, assisted by 3,483 native laborers, are engaged in preaching the gospel, directing schools, translating the Bible and creating a Christian literature, and healing the sick. In these missions are 505 churches, having 50,892 members, 4,551 having been received on confession of their faith this year, 929 Sunday schools, with 66,601 pupils, and giving $147,879 annually to the support of the Christian work around them; thirteen colleges, with 2,132 students; seventeen theological seminaries, with 228 students in direct training for the ministry; 103 boarding and high schools, for girls and boys, with 10,225 students, besides 1,135 day schools with 49,375 pupils.

The report from the home department given by Secretary Daniels had a disappointed but not discouraged note.

During the year twenty-three new missionaries have been sent out. There are some fourteen others under appointment, who will go to their several fields before the close of this calendar year. During the last year sixty-one have returned to their missions. One thing is clearly demonstrated: There is no lack of workers, but there is lack of commensurate support from the churches in America. Dr. A. H. Plumb spoke with force as to the great possibilities and opportunities.

The missionaries themselves were, of course, in evidence on the platform, and several were heard from. Rev. Edward Fairbanks spoke for the Marathi mission in India. During 1900 1,653 persons had been baptized in this one mission. In the last five years the gain had almost doubled the results of the previous eighty years. Thirty villages actually begged for Christian schools. Seventy villages have sent complaints that the gospel is not preached among them.

Rev. W. P. Clarke of European Turkey reported fifty-three churches with an average attendance of over 3,000, and eighty-five teachers in Bulgaria. Forty years ago there were no Christians in the country. The organization of the Bulgarian Evangelical Society is a significant feature.

Rev. George A. Wilder, after ten years in Africa, was received with enthusiasm. He told of the industrial schools started in the wilds of Africa. The work has proved successful by its breadth — evangelistic, educational, medical and industrial. Rev. Wm. E. Fay reported similar triumphs for West Africa. Rev. George Allchin rejoiced to bring the inspiring news of the revival in Japan. Rev. Messrs. F. R. Bunker, C. N. Ransom, Charles and Henry Ewing, H. T. Perry and George H. Hubbard were also among the missionary speakers.

On Wednesday evening two more missionaries were heard. Dr. J. P. Jones said the keynote of the message from India was Opportunity. In particular he instanced a change of attitude toward Christ among the educated Brahmins, which amounts to a revolution. Books like Thomas a Kempis' "Imitation of Christ" and Shel-

Backsliders' Railroad to Ruin

Fast Line Express
CIGARETTEBU TO MURDERVILLE.
Via Lagerton, Rowdytown, Toperville, Moonshine Hollow, Beerboro, Spington, Gamblers' Den, Saloon Siding and Devil's Curve. Other lines are illustrated with 21 etchings, showing the dangerous places in life. A new and popular book, just off the press. Send 25c for a copy, or send a $1 bill for six copies and circulate them. Circulars free. Write CHAS. J. BURTON, Christian University, Canton, Mo.

don's "In His Steps" are largely bought. Dr. Ament of China, as one of the heroes of the siege of Peking, was greeted with the waving of handkerchiefs and the clapping of hands. He looks towards the future with great hope, for China has broken with her past.

But the missionaries were not the only eloquent and inspiring speakers during the sessions. President Capen spoke on the vital problem with business sagacity and practicality. "Yet one more revival, the consecration of the money power," was his opening quotation from Bushnell. He specified six reasons for the lack of resources: (1) The present disposition to give largely to educational institutions; (2) the false ideal of many business men in considering accumulation, not benevolence, the measure of success; (3) the absence of missionary enthusiasm on the part of some pastors; (4) the passing away of the old guard of missions; (5) the emergence of the city, and (6) the country problem. He had examined the figures of sixty life insurance companies whose expenses of administration average fourteen per cent, while the Board's expenses are only six per cent.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan defended missions against the apathy and indifference of the Church of Christ. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman of Brooklyn dwelt upon the hopefulness of the outlook, with great enthusiasm. Dr. S. E. Herrick of Boston took for his topic "The Function of Tragedy in Missions." "The Alpha and Omega of the missionary movement is the cross."

An unusual feature of this annual meeting was the children's gathering on Thursday afternoon. The body of the house was filled with children, who listened eagerly to the stories the missionaries told them.

It is noteworthy that at all sessions not one speaker was allowed to exceed the time limit. With great courtesy this was enforced by President Capen.

The communion service was held in two of the churches on Thursday afternoon, and, as always, was a deeply impressive event. So also was the introduction of the young missionaries about to go to the field for the first time—ten in number.

This closed the initial meeting of the twentieth century, with an outlook full of hope in the entrance of ever-widening possibilities for the extension of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

BAPTIST WORK IN NEBRASKA.

The annual meeting was at Blair, October 7. There are twenty-seven missionary pastors in Nebraska, but not many of them were present. Those who were there had encouraging reports to give. The district missionaries brought word of half-dead churches restored to life, for both north and south of the Platte there are many sick and dying churches, and scores of pastorless ones in the southern district. Many good church buildings stand idle, others are neglected and dilapidated. But in many cases the missionaries have altered the face of things. The Swedish and Danish churches are making good American Baptists. Forty-seven missionaries have been employed for all or part of the time during the year. By reason of the help given by the state convention and Home Mission Society, $11,050 has been raised by the churches for the support of pastors, $16,615 for permanent improvements and $4,450.55 for missions, total $32,115.55. Special efforts have been put forth in the organizing of self-supporting circuits. The churches are gradually coming to see that part time service is better than none at all. Four new churches have been organized. Two new church edifices have been erected. Many churches aided for years by the state convention have become self-supporting. The convention reported a deficit in the treasury, due to several causes, of which the drouth is one. Offerings from Sundays schools, young people's societies and mission circles have largely decreased, the Sunday schools through the abolishing of chapel day, the young people's societies through their efforts for the raising of the debt for the national society, and the women's circles through the abolishing of the plans of co-operation between the women's societies and the state convention. The board realizes that there is abundant opportunity for an exten-

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

sive forward work in Nebraska, but cannot undertake it for lack of men, sixty of its mission churches being still without pastors.

The speeches and addresses all bore reference to this need, endeavoring to stimulate interest and sense of responsibility. "Co-operation in State Missions" was the topic of some. "Churches and Their Responsibilities," "Personal Obligations," "Our Heritage and Our Obligation," the subjects of others. Dr. O. A. Williams, Rev. H. E. Ryder, Rev. S. C. Green, Dr. N. B. Rairden were among the speakers

At the Wednesday morning session, Rev. A. H. Ballard told what the Home Mission Society had done for Nebraska: The labor of 1,412 missionaries at a cost of $200,000, during the beginning of work there in 1856. The society is still putting into that work $1,800 more than the churches are contributing to its treasury. Women's work in missions and education received attention. Dr. Mabie made an address on missions. "Special Needs in Sunday School Work" and Sunday school aims and methods were considered; also educational interests. The raising of the $20,000 endowment for Grand Island College is cause for congratulation, and the progress towards its more complete equipment. Prof. J. W. Moncrieff of the Divinity School, Chicago, spoke on "Secularism in Education" and Dr. J. W. Conley of Oak Park on "Character Building."

At the Pastors' Conference, the problem of the Sunday night service was treated by Dr. E. L. Jordan, and the mid-week prayer meeting by Rev. S. C. Green. Prof. Moncrieff spoke on "Present Day Problems and Their Solution." Rev. A. W. Clark spoke of "Making and Unmaking of the Pastor." At the closing meeting, systematic beneficence was emphasized by Mr. E. E. Bennett of Lincoln, followed by an address by Mr. J. Frank Carpenter, of Omaha, upon the topic "Have Nebraska Baptists Money Enough and Moral Power Enough to Evangelize the State?" His conclusion was that with good crops and large herds and material prosperity on every hand, there was sufficient means if God's children will only devote God's share to the work; but the trouble is that too many are like the young men that said they wanted to give something to the poor, and accordingly they gave "three cheers."

CHICAGO AND VICINITY.

The Bethlehem German Lutheran church, Chicago, has the largest communicant membership of any Lutheran church in America. It has 5,300 members, and is thirty years old. It has a parochial school attended by 929 children, taught by nine teachers. The congregation belongs to the Missouri Synod and has two pastors.

The Chicago Theological Seminary gave the first of its series of organ recitals last Thursday evening. The organist was Mr. James Watson, assisted by Mr. Arthur W. Porter, basso. Among the artists who will give the forthcoming recitals are Dr. Louis Falk, Prof. Geo. W. Andrews of the Oberlin Conservatory, Mr. Middel-schulte, Harrison, M. Wild and Prof. Thompson of the Knox Conservatory of Galesburg. The interpretative lectures in music, of which we have already spoken in these columns, are by Felix Borowski of Chicago Musical College. The first of these was given Tuesday, October 22.

At the Second Baptist church the winter's work is in full operation. After meetings have begun the lecture room is filled. In the church prayer meeting Dr. Lawrence is conducting a study in the Book of Acts. The attendance is large.

At Memorial Baptist church a week's services for boys and girls was commenced last Sunday by Boston W. Smith.

Rev. F. R. Van Tassel, pastor of the Baptist church at Evergreen Park, has recently been appointed postmaster on the petition of almost the entire population of the place. This office was tendered him to prevent his going away and so as to give him better support.

Forty members of the First Bohemian Baptist church, having been dismissed for the purpose of organizing an independent church, did so under the name of the Immanuel Bohemian Baptist church of Chicago. This action was taken August 8, 1901. This church has just been formally recognized by council.

Ground was broken October 8 for the new Baptist church at Austin Rev. C. E. Lapp, the pastor, removed the first shovelful and was followed by 126 other persons. Addresses were made by Mr. E. S. Osgood, chairman of the building committee; Dr. J. W. Conley, of Oak Park; Rev. A. M. White, pastor Austin Methodist church; Dr. R. E. Manning, of Chicago Baptist City Mission Society, and the architect, W. R. Brown. The building, while not large—the auditorium proper seating, exclusive of galleries and choir alcove, only 320—when "expanded" will accommodate a congregation of 1,200 people. The house is to be of gray pressed brick, with blue Bedford cut stone up to the water table, and buff

Christian Melodies

By Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick

This popular new song book has been pronounced by leading musicians an ideal book for all church purposes. The author is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world and has put the best productions of his life time into this book. It also contains the choicest selections from a large number of the principal song writers of the country. This insures

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems.

Wherever it has been introduced it has given excellent satisfaction. All responses from those using it are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs. If you want the best all-purpose church song book get CHRISTIAN MELODIES.

PRICES—Boards $20. Limp Cloth $17.50 per hundred, not prepaid. Single copy 25c postpaid. The Christian Century Co., - Chicago, Ill.

Indispensable to Every WIDE-AWAKE Bible Student

THE BIBLICAL WORLD, the only popular illustrated monthly magazine devoted exclusively to Bible study, edited by PRESIDENT WILLIAM R. HARPER.

$2.00 a year; single copies, 20 cents. Size, 6 3/4 x 9 1/2 inches; 80 pages a month.

SPECIAL TRIAL OFFER to new readers, three months for 25 cents

Address THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

TRIAL TREATMENT FREE. We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ Pile Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once. Germ Medical Co., 215 E. 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

FLORIDA WINTER TOURIST TICKETS

go on sale about

OCT. 15, 1901.

In making arrangements to go

to

FLORIDA CUBA or NASSAU

CALL OR WRITE (It costs only two cents.)

GEO. B. ALLEN, A. G. P. A. Southern Railway,

ST. LOUIS, MO.

or

J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A. 225 Dearborn St.

CHICAGO, ILL.

and they will furnish you rates, send literature and give any information desired.

A Monthly Magazine

Devoted to the upbuilding of Christian character and earnest church work. Rev. Charles Warwick, Editor, Pastor Diamond Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia.

Asks for support—on its merits—in the way of subscriptions and advertisements. Price 50c per year, 12 issues, postpaid. Publication office 200 South 10th Street, Philadelphia.

trimmings. The cost will be about $25,000. The second anniversary of Rev. C. E. Lapp's pastorate was observed Sunday, Oct. 13. The two years have been marked by harmony and aggressive endeavor. Current expenses have been met. About $2,000 has been raised for benevolence, and $8,000 for the new building, making a total for all purposes of over $17,000. There have been ninety-nine additions to the membership, thirty-six of which were by baptism. There has been a net gain of sixty-four.

The registration at the Divinity School at the University of Chicago for the present quarter is 127. Nearly all of these are college graduates.

The Hyde Park Presbyterian church received twenty-three members at its recent communion service.

The Chicago Presbytery has expressed itself as in hearty sympathy with the General Assembly's action in regard to evangelistic work and has appointed a committee of four ministers and three elders to co-operate in such work. An all-day conference for the deepening of the spiritual life of the members of the Presbytery was held October in the First Presbyterian church; the communion service was held at the close of the meeting.

The Captain Inside.

"Mother," asked Freddie the other day, "did you know there was a little captain inside of me? Grandfather asked me what I meant to be when I grew to be a man, and I told him a soldier. I meant to stand up straight, hold my head up, and look right ahead. Then he said I was two boys, one outside and one inside; and unless the inside boy stood straight, held up his head, and looked the right way, I never could be a true soldier at all. The inside boy has to drill the outside one, and be the captain."—Sunbeam.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD

will sell tickets each Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday during October to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition and return, at $6.00, good in coaches; return limit five days from date of sale. Tickets with longer limit at slightly increased rates. Three through daily trains. Chicago Passenger Station. Van Buren street and Pacific avenue. City ticket office, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

THE COMBINATION OIL CURE FOR CANCER.

Has the endorsement of the highest medical authority in the world. It would seem strange indeed if persons afflicted with cancers and tumors, after knowing the facts, would resort to the dreaded knife and burning plaster, which have heretofore been attended with such fatal results. The fact that in the last six years over one hundred doctors have put themselves under this mild treatment shows their confidence in the new method of treating those horrible diseases. Persons afflicted will do well to send for free book giving particulars and prices of Oil. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo.

BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN TICKETS

via the Nickel Plate Road, $13.00 for the round trip, good 15 days; $16.00 for the round trip good 20 days. Three daily trains with vestibuled sleeping-cars. Meals in dining cars, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

A LIVER THAT SHIRKS

And refuses to perform its proper functions makes aches of the very worst kind—headache, backache, sideache, boneache—dulls the brain and weakens the Body. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is what is needed. Not a drug store medicine. Sold to the people direct through special agents by the proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 So. Hoyne ave., Chicago, Ill.

$6.00 GO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $6.00

via the Nickel Plate Road, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with limit coaches only; 15-day tickets at $13.00 of 5 days from date of sale, good in for the round trip, and 20-day tickets at $16.00 for round trip, good in sleeping cars. Three through daily trains. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

GOD'S BOOKS

An Inquiry respecting

The Books of Judgment

WHAT THEY ARE
WHERE THEY ARE
WHAT THEY CONTAIN

By John Williams, with an introduction by I. N. McCash. LL. D.

This is an interesting and attractive little book and contains many valuable thoughts. All book readers will want it. Paper binding only. Sent postpaid for 35 cents. Address,

The Christian Century Company
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

HOW TO GET A JOB IN CHICAGO

New book will be issued in a few days. Orders will filled in the order they are received. If you are not interested hand it to a friend.

Price 25c, Postage Paid. Send Stamps.
TIMES PUBLISHING CO.
65 Plymouth Pl., CHICAGO, ILL.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY, of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities. Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

RHEUMATISM

Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia and Kidney Troubles are instantly relieved and quickly cured by EASINE. Acute Rheumatism cannot exist 48 hours when Easine is faithfully taken. Chronic Rheumatism and old cases that do not yield to other remedies always give way to the magic power of Easine. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send a brief description of your case when you write. Complete treatment mailed, prepaid, on receipt of one dollar. Easine Chemical Co., 101 Bell Block, Cincinnati, O.

Ott "A GOOD MAN WANTED"

To Advance for First Class

LECTURES AND ENTERTAINMENTS

ED. AMHERST OTT, Dean Drake University College of Oratory, Des Moines, Ia.

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

THE HOME

A Prayer for a Day.

O Lord, I pray
That for this day
I may not swerve
By foot or hand
From thy command,
Not to be served, but to serve.

This too, I pray:
That from this day
No love of ease
Nor pride prevent
My good intent,
Not to be pleased, but to please.

And if I may,
I'd have this day
Strength from above,
To set my heart
In heavenly art,
Not to be loved, but to love.
—Maltbie D. Babcock, D. D.

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

"I knew that you had time, health, money, and a changeless feeling for me, Nell, and I have had the shamelessness to trade on my knowledge after this fashion," he said to me, with the smile of old, as he gave into my keeping his little boy—the little boy who had had the pluck and strength to strangle his tears, wave his father a last good-bye, and smile as the sword tore his childish soul in twain.

Then I learnt, too, that the only comfort in his last dying days that I could give to the friend I loved was the peace of the knowledge that I was hastening with all speed to where his darling was, to take him from loneliness and possible neglect, to load his little life with that joy and kindness which should color the life of every child on earth.

In a measure the thought of such a departure was a shock to me, for I had decided that in case I should find Allan dying, I would overcome every obstacle and stay with him until the end. After years of separation, to have found him again for a day only, and then to leave him, knowing well that on earth I should see his face no more, this seemed to me not the least tangled part of that dark mysterious web which had woven itself around his brave, denying life. Then we talked of the past in detail. He told me of one of the former librarians of Kiev University, a spare, cold, studious man of more than middle age. Of how this man had been accorded permission to visit him in his prison before his trial; of how he had offered to take care of the child on condition that he might step into possession of Allan's splendid library and priceless collection of old editions; of how he, Allan, while promising him his demand, had explained to him that all he would require of him would be to take care of his boy, sparing no considerations, until I could be found; of how the bargain, so to speak, was effected; of how Dr. Vorstrovna had moved to Wilna, and to the best of Allan's belief was there still with his darling; of how the authorities had peremptorily and barbarously refused to let him send me word of any sort or to let him see his child again; of his trial and sentence; of the agony of mind which at one time made him think he should take leave of his senses altogether—and so on.

"Oh, go to him at once, Nell. What manner of man this Dr. Vorstrovna is I cannot say. But I know that my darling's heart is asking for something that he has not. I see him always in loneliness, and, Nell, I fear, in pain. There was something wrong, I used to fancy, latterly—something wrong about his back. Perhaps it was only weakness, but he used to complain about its aching so."

I wiped the great damp beads from his brow over and over again as he spoke. Now that he had found me and that the necessity for life was over, he seemed to be going down into death with rapid strides. I had no fear, but tried through all my bitterness to feel glad, knowing that for him no pain of dying could ever touch what the pain of life had been. And at the sight and thought of the anguish that was his I said, on the impulse of the moment:

"Did it never occur to you, dear old man, to think that at St. Petersburg there must have been an influence which could have prevented all this—that for the sake of—" I hesitated, it was a little difficult.

He looked puzzled for a minute, then my meaning dawned on him. A flush, not the hectic flush of his disease, overspread his face, and I can never forget the dauntless simplicity with which he made answer:—

"Oh, Nell! I must always love her. But no favor could come to me through her. You understand?"

I understood, and understood beyond, that in all the hardness he had endured, one deathless devotion had possessed him ever. So rarely it is we whose lives are so loaded with small meet them as we wander up and down the land of life, these who shine out like guiding lights amidst the hostile gloom, that when we do, what wonder if we cannot comprehend them? We who flit from one love to another, wearing each one more gracefully than the last, as to the manor born; we frivolous cares and plans, that the old-world flowers of faith and constancy are crowded out—can we, indeed, understand the motive which inspires them to be loyal through treachery, never doubting in dishonor, unflinching, unwavering, unmoved, in a lifelong love for one? Must we ever call them by strange names, and ever entertain them as angels unawares?

But I must hasten on and leave such questions for wiser heads than mine, or even yours perhaps, to answer! It suffices now to say, passing over details, that for three whole days I did not move from his side, that we talked as those who talk who bid each other everlasting farewell, that on the morning of the fourth day, sore against my will, but so that he might have peace at the end, I left him. Left him to search for the little boy, solitary and sick, perhaps, somewhere on the other side of that great snowbound continent.

Just before I went he caught my hands in his, and whispered in a choking voice—

"Dying men have strange fancies, Nell, dear old man, you know! And I have one. If ever—in the world—you meet her—tell her—let little Waldo tell her—that I loved her—always—always."

CHAPTER III.

Then back across the desolate frozen wastes I traveled. Behind me was the friend of my life—dying. Dying in a dismal prison-hospital, with no gentle hand or sympathetic voice beside him. Passing into the dark, unknown country, with no one near to say a word of cheer or comfort at the last. He, the quondam captain of Rugby School, the most gifted and popular fellow of his college, stricken down in the prime of strength and manhood, bearing bravely in his dying agony the memory of a faithless wife, and the ceaseless, aching longing for the presence of a little child whom he knew that he could never see or touch again.

Behind me—this.

Before me—beyond the sombre plains and the grim inhospitable towns and the dull gray line of the Ural mountains—that child, my little boy.

And the cold and bitter blasts, the fatigues of the journey, the thousands of miles across the barren steppes, the continual changes from tarantass to sledge, according to the state of the roads, the endless catalogue of misfortunes and stoppages, seemed trifles to me, because at the end of all there was—my little boy.

When life seemed least worth living, since he I loved lay fettered and dying, and I could do nothing to help him, I grew strong again at the thought of my little boy.

Behind me—Allan dying.

Before me—his child, my little boy.

Somewhere, out there in the world—she—she who had forsaken them both.

At night, when the moon shone over the icy solitudes, and the stunted trees were defined in its clear, cold light, and the stars glowed in the wide black sky, I thought of them and of her. Of him, so strong, and patient, and heroic; of my little boy, so lonely and so lost; of her—oh, God, forgive me for my thoughts of her!

Just as we had crossed the frontier and arrived at Jaitinsk, a telegram, forwarded from Tobolsk, was put into my hands. It said curtly but sufficiently: "The Englishman, Allan L'Estrange, died this morning.—Romstroff."

I would have given everything I possessed to have been able to have sent him word before he died, saying: "Have no fear, your little boy is safe with me." Otherwise, the news was no shock to me. Indeed, it was with something of relief, of triumph even, that I thought that they could never hurt or harm him more, although I knew that now, in all the world, I only had my little boy.

About dusk one evening towards the end of April, I arrived at Vilna. I hired a droscke and bade the man drive with all speed to the house of Dr. Vorstrovna.

Would he be in? Would he have left? Would he have resigned the child to the authorities or have turned his adrift? Should I, perhaps, not see my little boy after all? Together with my fatigue I was so agitated by anxious thoughts like these that when at last we arrived at the narrow, ill-kept street where my destination was, I trembled from head to foot.

I was informed that Dr. Vorstrovna lived on the fourth etage. I wondered would they ever end, those weary flights; and when at last they did, I found the entrance door standing slightly open. I rang the bell, but no one answered, and a complete silence prevailed within. Unable to restrain my impatience, I walked in and knocked at the first door I came to. Receiving still no answer, I opened it and discovered that it led to the kitchen. Beyond it there was a room with a bed, one or two old chairs, and a box. On the floor I noticed a torn coat and a pair of ragged boots, both the property of a grown-up man apparently. But nothing living. Everywhere silence, untidiness, conspicuous poverty, and chill neglect. In the midst of all this was I to find my little boy?

I turned into another room. A room full of books, old, and fusty, and dusty. I took up some and turned them over. They were on abstruse sciences, and seemed as melancholy inside as outside. There were a high-backed chair, a desk, a table covered with papers, and across it lay a long thin cane. That was all. Through the filthy window, opaque with dirt, the last dim light of the dying day struggled in with an effort, but still it did not show me my little boy.—The Quiver.

Robin Hood and His Merry Men.

"Come along, Joan. I've such a lovely plan!" cried Joe, scampering down the little path leading to the wood.

"What is it?" said Joan, as she followed him, swinging her sunbonnet by the strings.

"Let us pretend we are Robin Hood and one of his men, and we'll help all the people who come along here."

"Yes, that will be lovely," said Joan, clapping her hands. She did not know who Robin Hood was, for she was only a little girl; but everything that Joe proposed she thought very grand.

"Well, we'll go to the stile and wait," cried Joe; and they raced away to their favorite perch.

The road was dreadfully dusty and hot, although the sun was beginning to go down; but the trees of the little wood shaded them nicely. They were just cooling down after their run when along the road came an old woman. She was very, very old, and could hardly carry the heavy basket she had on her arm.

In a minute Joe had slipped from his perch and ran to her side.

"Can I carry that basket for you?" he said, politely.

"Why, what would your mother say?" she answered, looking pleased.

"I'm sure she wouldn't mind," replied Joe, as he took the basket. "She likes us to help people." And he trotted trotted along by her side.

It seemed a long way to her cottage, but Joe would not give up the basket, although it was really heavy; and he felt quite repaid when she took it from him at the door. He knew she was pleased by the way she smiled at him and he ran gayly back to the stile.

Joan was dancing up and down in high spirits.

"Oh, I've been so busy," she cried. "Just after you had gone, a little boy came along. He fell over that big stone and it took me quite a long time to make him stop crying. I gave him half my apple."

"That's two good things Robin Hood and his men have done already." Joe was beginning, when—

"Children, where are you?" called a voice and mother came in sight.

"What have you been doing all the evening?" she asked.

When they had explained, she smiled and kissed them.

"Do you think that it was a good play, mother?" asked Joan.

"Yes, dear, I think any play is good that teaches you to be kind and helpful. But suppose you come indoors now, and I will tell you something about Robin Hood, how he lived in the forest and how brave and kind he really was."—Cassell's Little Folks.

Two women sit in a comfortable room, which just now bears evidences of one of these times of transition, confusion and a season's care.

"I wonder," says the home matron, "how many times I have put away and taken out a season's furnishings. I was thinking just now how much of hard work, responsibility and toil all these cares of the family bring to my head and hands. It is a wonder I am not completely worn out by them."

"I was thinking," says the other woman, "of your blessed privileges. What would I give to have your home, your family, your comfortable, dear routine of home and family occupations! The handling of the accustomed furnishings, the inspiring planning for the season to come, all so full of dear home life and one's own familiar surroundings and belongings. Hard work? Toil? Cares of the head and hands? And worn out by them? Rather say they preserve your heart and hands, and are grand motives for living and feeling that life is full of God-given interest and privilege!"

Put the grateful and willing heart back of each duty and the brightness of a glad and willing spirit will make all household duties light. Something to be thankful for! Is it not the solemn duty of every home-maker thus to put a cheerful, willing heart into every family duty, and so regard it also in the light of a privilege?

Hamilton College

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

The Leading College of the Christian Brotherhood for the education of young women. Its record, buildings, equipment, faculty, the best. Opens thirty third session second Tuesday in September. Very reasonable rates. For particulars and catalogue apply to
B. C. HAGERMAN, PRESIDENT.

20,000 CHURCHES

Lighted by the FRINK System of Reflectors with Electric, Gas, Welsbach, Acetylene or C. I. gas and electric fixtures. Send dimensions for estimate. I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., NEW YORK.

ST. LOUIS

ILLINOIS CENTRAL

CENTRAL

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY

ROUTE

RAILROAD

DAYLIGHT SPECIAL

FAST DAY TRAIN

THE

DIAMOND SPECIAL

POPULAR NIGHT TRAIN

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.

A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass'r Agt., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

Largest Foundry on Earth making
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
 Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

FAST TRAINS
 Chicago & North-Western Ry.

The Overland Limited
 California in 3 days

The Colorado Special
 One night to Denver
 3 days to San Francisco

The Chicago-Portland Special
 Oregon and Washington in 3 days

The North-Western Limited
 Electric Lighted—Chicago,
 St. Paul and Minneapolis

Duluth and St. Paul Fast Mail
 Fast train to head of lakes

The Peninsula Express
 Fast time to Marquette
 and Copper Country

NO change of cars. Everything in connection with its service is modern and progressive.

TICKET OFFICES
 212 Clark St. and Wells St. Station.

MICHIGAN CENTRAL
 The Niagara Falls R. R.

Pan-American Special
 A Magnificent New Train.
 Lv. CHICAGO 6.00 p. m., daily.
 Ar. BUFFALO 7.45 a. m.

Send 4c. postage for "Pan-American Souvenir" and other beautifully illustrated publications.
 O. W. Ruggles, Gen'l Pass'r & Tkt. Agt., Chicago.

Bethany College.
 Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.
 Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,
J. G. KEITH, Chairman Faculty.

Burlington
Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul
Minneapolis
Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agt.—C. & Q. R. R.
 209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
 Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
 CHICAGO, ILL.

PARKER'S
HAIR BALSAM
 Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists

OCEAN EXCURSION TO
NEW YORK

BIG FOUR
CHESAPEAKE
& OHIO ROUTE
 The Rhine, Alps and Battlefield Line.

Stop-over Privileges at Old Point Comfort going; Buffalo—Returning.

Route No. 1, $35.00.
 Going via Big Four Route to Cincinnati; Chesapeake & Ohio Railway to Old Point or Norfolk; Old Dominion Line (meals and berths included on steamer) to New York. Returning via Pennsylvania Railroad and Pennsylvania Lines, or via New York Central to Buffalo and Lake Shore or Michigan Central to Chicago.

Route No. 2, $33.00.
 Going, same as Route No. 1. Returning via West Shore, Lehigh Valley or D. L. & W. Rys. to Buffalo; New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad or Grand Trunk to Chicago.

Tickets will be on sale July 1 to October 20, limited to return within ten days, except on return trip, if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent at Buffalo or agents at Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, within original ten-day limit, stop-over of ten days additional is allowed at any one of those points. Stop-over at Old Point Comfort is allowed in either direction within limit of ticket.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Route through the Allegheny and Blue Ridge mountains, Shenandoah and Potomac Valley and the historic region of Virginia, in connection with the ocean trip of eighteen hours from Norfolk or Old Point Comfort to New York, offers the most beautiful, varied and interesting trip in America.

For further particulars address

J. C. TUCKER, G. N. A., C. C. C. & St. L. Ry.,
 234 Clark Street, Chicago.

W. E. CONKLYN, N. W. P. A., C. & O. Ry.,
 234 Clark Street, Chicago.

Fleming H. Revell Company's New Books

RALPH CONNOR'S NEW NOVEL,

The Man From Glengarry

12mo, Cloth. Decorated $1.50.

The half million or more admirers of Ralph Connor's inimitable miners of "Black Rock" and cowboys of "The Sky Pilot" will give a cordial welcome to his lumbermen in "The Man from Glengarry." The hero stands out in bold relief. He fights the great fight that strong men must put up if they would retain their manhood. The control of self develops the boyhood charm into a maturity of character which once known can never be forgotten.

By the Author of "Captain of the Janizaries"

James M. Ludlow,

DEBORAH

A TALE OF THE TIMES OF JUDAS MACCABÆUS.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Bishop Hurst says: "Dr. Ludlow has achieved a notable success in his new historical romance. .... His chief creation, the heroine, will take her place high among the women of fiction. .... It is absolutely refreshing in these times of many so-called historical novels, to find a story that really embodies in a living and fascinating robe of pure imagination, the great events of actual history."

By W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL D.,

THE LORE OF CATHAY

In Five Parts:

Arts and Sciences, Literature, Philosophy and Religion, Education, History.

Illustrated, $2.50 net.

"President Martin of the Chinese Imperial University, is well qualified by long residence and unusually varied experience as a missionary, diplomatist, and educator, to tell us of the real life and thought of China."—
"The Congregationalist."

HUGH BLACK (author "Friendship")

CULTURE AND RESTRAINT.

12mo, cloth. Elegant. Net. $1.50.

Mr. Black ranks among the leading essayists of to-day. The field he has chosen, or rather the field that has chosen him—for "Friendship" and "Culture" are impelling forces—is one that calls for rare combination of heart and mind.

HENRY OTIS DWIGHT,

CONSTANTINOPLE AND ITS PROBLEMS,

Its Peoples, Customs, Religion and Progress

Fully illustrated, 12mo, cloth, net $1.25.

"Authoritative, free from amateur sentimentalism, sane, straightforward and up-to-date. He is a keen observer of the intricacies of its political and social life."—James S. Dennis.

By FREDERIC ROWLAND MARVIN,

LA GUSHED MEN AND WOMEN.

8vo, cloth, $1.50 net.

"Also considerable additional matter pertaining to the circumstances in which they died. Montaigne said: Teach men to die and you will teach men how to live."—N.Y. Times.

CHARLES H. PARKHURST,

SUNNY SIDE OF CHRISTIANITY.

16mo, cloth, net, 60c.

As God's heart is Love, so the author sets forth the various phases and relations of Love in the practical daily life, as theory and experience, as a lubricant, as a means of knowing. It has all of Dr. Parkhurst's peculiarly vivid style, with a sweetness and every-day sunniness that are wonderfully attractive.

NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS,

DAVID THE POET AND KING.

The Romance and Tragedy of His Career and Fall, and the Glory of His Recovery. Illustrated by Louis Rhead.

16mo, cloth, 75c. net.

"An essay giving the result of careful and intelligent study of the career of David. All the romance, tragedy and pathos of his career are graphically related in clear-cut, narrative style."—New York Times Saturday Review.

WALDO SELDEN PRATT.

MUSICAL MINISTRIES IN THE CHURCH.

Cloth, net, $1.00.

Professor Pratt's experience both as church musician and instructor of ministerial candidates, gives him peculiar facilities. This will undoubtedly be a standard work of reference.

GEORGE MATHESON,

TIMES OF RETIREMENT.

12mo, cloth, $1.25 net.

Devotional meditations by the author of "Moments on the Mount," written in the author's most helpful and inspiring style.

H. C. G. MOULE,

THE OLD GOSPEL FOR THE NEW AGE.

12mo. cloth, net, $1.00.

Dr. Moule is a many-sided man, with wide interests in literature and life. He has breadth of culture and sympathy.

SEND FOR OUR NEW ILLUSTRATED LIST OF FALL BOOKS.

NEW YORK, 158 Fifth Avenue.

CHICAGO, 63 Washington Street.

TORONTO, 27 Richmond Street, W.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, October 31, 1901.

Number 24.

LEADING FEATURES.

The Unity of the Church

The Visitor

The Word in the Church

Christological Tendencies of the Times

Sacred Music

Letters to the Book Lover

European Letter

The Indestructible Elements in the Bible.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company, 358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arreage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

AN UP-TO-DATE SUNDAY SCHOOL

A WORKER'S MANUAL.

A TREATISE ON SUNDAY SCHOOL MANAGEMENT BY A SKILLED WORKMAN—A CHRISTIAN EDUCATOR OF RIPE EXPERIENCE,

E. A. FOX,

General Secretary the Kentucky Sunday School Association.

This bright little book had an interesting origin. The author realizing the need for an authoritative treatise on the subject, outlined what he considered to be a model, up-to-date Sunday School. This outline was sent to the leading Sunday School workers of the United States for criticism. Almost without exception, the author was highly complimented, and few changes were suggested. This outline, improved by the valuable ideas thus secured forms the basis of the book. It furnishes an epitome of

The Very Latest and Best Methods in Sunday School Work.

with well developed plans for inaugurating and using them, adapting it to the use of the busy superintendent and teacher. No Sunday School worker can study this manual without catching new angles of light on the problem of successful Sunday School management. Get this valuable little volume, follow its suggestions and your Sunday School is certain to be attractive and successful.

Single Copy, 25 Cents, Postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY,

358 Dearborn Street,

CHICAGO.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago
Indianapolis
Cincinnati
Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake
and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on our address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

B BELLS all kinds, big and little—for Church & School, for Fire, Factory and Farm. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY CO., Northville, Mich. Catalogue FREE.

BLMYER B CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

B BELLS Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

25c. THE LADIES' FRIEND Hopkins' Bleaching Gloves Made from the Best Glove-Kid in Black, Wine, Tan, and Chocolate. Just the thing for Housecleaning, Gardening, Driving, Wheeling, Outing, Golf, etc. Sizes, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Write for terms to agents. Hopkins Glove Co., B Apollo, Cincinnati, O.

RHEUMATISM... Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws cords, and hardens muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take anything else. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., October 31, 1901.

Number 24.

EDITORIAL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

THE UNITY OF THE CHURCH.

ONE of the problems presented to the Church for its consideration in these times is that of a possible unification of sentiment and interest among the various communions, such as will prove an effective means of advancing the cause of Christ in the communities where it has representation. It is apparent that such a unity as would be both convincing to the outside observer and economical in the work of the Church does not now exist. The question of an incorporating or organic unity may be set on one side for the present as beyond the field of discussion. The fact remains that among the churches now occupying the field, there prevails no such spirit of harmony and brotherhood as might be expected from those who bear the common name of Christian. It does not take long observation to convince anyone that the churches give evidence of an interest rather in their own denominational enterprises than in the advancement of the cause of Christ as a whole. This may be only an apparent state of affairs. It certainly is not a true judgment regarding many of the people of God; nevertheless it appeals to the man outside as one of the striking features of present-day Christianity; that it seeks rather its own things than the things of others; and that each church, viewed denominationally, is jealous of its own rights and privileges, and is eager to take advantage of the rest wherever opportunity offers, whether in the local communities or in the broader missionary fields of the world.

Doubtless much of this apparent attitude of rivalry is accounted for in some degree by an unconscious effort to push forward the only enterprises in which the particular church is interested, namely: those of its own denominational sort. Probably the question of the work of the Church as a whole does not appeal so strongly to any one of the different bodies of Christians as does its own work, and thus the appearance of rivalry is in some measure explained. Nevertheless it cannot be denied that those rivalries do exist, especially in smaller places and country districts, and are of such a character as to disquiet the heart of a believer in the progress of Christianity, and in the early redemption of the world. In towns where the church-going population is limited, the rivalry between the churches is keen and sometimes, unhappily, unscrupulous. The outside world looks on with a half tolerant and half contemptuous surprise which plainly reveals a perception of the underlying differences which divide these people claiming fellowship with each other and with a common Lord.

Turning to the picture of the apostolic churches, presented in the New Testament, it must be observed that the conditions were those of congregations living in harmony one with another, in so far as their interests touched, or if they manifested tokens of faction and strife these were visited with severe censure by their apostolic leaders. Our Lord himself expressed the keenest anxiety for a unity of heart and life among his followers, such as would convince the world of the verity of his claims and the reality of Christian experience among his followers. The great intercessory prayer has as one of its outstanding features the petition that those who should believe on him through the word of the apostles might be one with a unity which characterizes the relations of Father and Son, and this to the end that the world might believe that he was sent of the Father. In the church at Corinth foolish admiration for different leaders had led to strife among the members so that a Pauline party, an Apollos party, a Petrine party, and a Christ party had grown up, mutually antagonistic and destructive to the interests of the cause of Christ in that city. It was with the sternest rebukes that the apostle met this state of strife. He demanded instant abandonment of the party names and factional attitude, challenging them to show why they should bear the badges of those who were simply teachers of the common faith.

It is apparent, therefore, that while perfect liberty was permitted among the early churches, and their affairs were ordered with such wisdom as men open to the leading of the divine Spirit might manifest, without any rigid rules of organization or plans of government, yet these churches, for the most part, lived in unity one with another and owed allegiance only to the common Master in whose name they had received pardon of their sins. This condition of unity, not formal and ecclesiastical, but spiritual and vital, must ever remain the ideal of the Church; and wherever it is destroyed by sectarian jealousies and failure so to cooperate as to manifest before the world the inward unity of the Church, the effect can be nothing less than disastrous to the progress of the Kingdom of God, and illustrative of the sin and scandal of divisions such as those which too frequently appear in our churches today.

The denominational situation is anomalous. It may be frankly admitted that the divisions which have appeared in the Church are preferable to the old uniformity of stagnation which characterized the pre-Reformation period. But this argument itself is not sufficient to vindicate the continuance of sectarian rivalries such as prevail today. One may confess that the divisions into which the Church has been rent were necessitated by the spirit of independence and inquiry which arose with the Reformation. Still the question forces itself upon the attention of a careful thinker,—Has not this divisive tendency run sufficiently its course, and ought not the spirit of unity to begin to prevail among the people of God?

Perhaps the chief difficulty in regaining that lost unity lies in the constant tendency to regard its restoration as bound up with some plan of ecclesiastical or mechanical union of an incorporating and formal sort. The problem is really much simpler than this, whatever its ultimate terms may be. The present question is not one of finding a church into which our communions can be merged, but of cultivating the unity of spirit in the bond of peace which the apostle emphasized as one of the essentials of the Christian life. The spirit of unity once admitted freely will form for itself such a body as is suited to its life. The first duty is that of kindling in the hearts of all the people of God the consciousness of brotherhood and common service under the direction of the divine Spirit.

THE VISITOR.

THE events of the past week at Yale University have been of unusual interest to the entire circle of educators in America and throughout the world. The bi-centennial of any institution is a moment of historic interest, and gives an indication of the interests of the men of two centuries back. The character of the founders of the Republic is illustrated in the fact that within twenty years after the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth the foundation of the first American university had been laid. To be sure, the little school to which John Harvard gave his fortune, his library and his name at Cambridge, a few miles out from Boston, gave but faint promise of developing into the Harvard University of our day. But it was a beginning, and one that has been nobly followed up. The Connecticut colony began its formal life many years later, but one of its earliest ambitions was possession of a school, which like that at Cambridge, should be a Christian foundation and competent to send out ministers of the gospel. It was because the colonists, both in Virginia and in New England, feared what they termed "an illiterate ministry" that they gave such early attention to education. Not only were the purposes and mottoes of the early schools religious, but from Harvard alone during its first century of life three hundred and seventeen men went out as preachers of Christianity.

Yale began its work in 1701, and other schools came into being as rapidly as the developing country could produce them—Columbia and Princeton in 1746; Brown in 1764; Dartmouth in 1769; Burlington in 1791, and Bowdoin in 1795. The reason for this early interest in education lay in the intellectual character of the colonists. Both in Virginia and the north the founders of the colonies were devoted to literary pursuits, and were keenly alive to the importance of culture for the well-being of the people. Most of their troubles in the motherland had arisen from their fearless advocacy of the doctrines of liberty both by speech and press. It was the authorship of the "Pilgrims" which caused their exile in Holland. The name most revered among these emigrants to the new world was that of John Robinson, their honored pastor, whom they had left behind at Leyden, where he not only preached the gospel, but taught in the university, and disputed against Episcopius. His writings were almost a law for the rising colony in New England. Many of the leaders of the new state were well known as writers. Brewster was publisher and author. The record of Winthrop and Morton show them to have been men skilled in the use of the pen. Many of the leaders were graduates of Oxford and Cambridge. Such preachers as Cotton, Hooker and Roger Williams were intellectual giants. It has been most fortunate for the Republic that the shaping of its future life was in the hands of men who saw that all the best elements of national prosperity wait upon education, and who accordingly infused into the growing nation the reverence for religion and the love of learning. The services rendered by such schools as Yale and Harvard can be neither recompensed nor estimated, and now Yale, after two centuries of splendid service, is celebrating the anniversary of her birth. If Eli Yale could come back once more he would be almost as much a stranger to the scene as the newest arrival among the freshmen. Nothing is the same, save the fine old forms of East Rock and West Rock, standing like sentinels, and the far-stretching curve of the bay, as it winds about toward Savin Rock. All else is changed, but the change has come so gradually and silently that it is interwoven with some of the fairest intellectual achievements of the nation. The names that have made Yale illustrious are not only hers but belong to the Republic. President Roosevelt well expressed this fact when, as the culminating event of the celebration, in receiving his degree at the hands of President Hadley, he said: "I have never had a hard task to perform, in promoting civic righteousness and public welfare, that I did not find a Yale man working shoulder to shoulder with me." It is in such services as advance the well-being of the nation that a school, large or small, finds its highest mission. No amount of endowment, numbers of faculty and students, or value of equipment can exhaust the ideal of an institution of this kind. It is set as a guarantor of public intelligence and virtue.

President Hadley is the representative of Yale's new policy. The tradition of the historic school was a ministerial president, who fulfilled the older idea of a college president as a teacher of moral philosophy and a commanding personality at chapel and other functions. But the new college president is an executive. He may be a teacher still, in many instances he is, but his primary work is that of an organizer and administrator. This President Hadley is proving himself, and it is fair to believe that the future of Yale, in his hands and those of men of similar type, will not be less illustrious than the administrations of the Woolseys, the Porters, and the Dwights have made it in the past.

"Here's to good, old Yale!"

THE WORLD IN THE CHURCH.

THIS is the season for great ecclesiastical councils. From Maine to California the hosts of the Lord have been meeting to review their forces, survey the enemy and plan for further developments of the great war. All the sections of Protestantism in America have been, or are thus engaged, and the daily papers have given considerable space to certain of their proceedings.

On the surface and from a casual reading of newspaper reports—which is all that the average man would think of giving—it would appear that a good deal of the spirit commonly called "worldly" had crept into and possessed the church of Jesus Christ. Can the public who do not attend these gatherings feel convinced that those who lead them are profoundly and supremely filled and controlled by the spirit of religion? Alas! the ordinary reports almost never reflect whatever of true religious value may be in any of the gatherings. These reports are mainly concerned with three matters, finance, organization, and personal success. A treasurer's annual statement is always sure of being summarized, even when the most inspiring spiritual message is ignored. The speeches which deal with the financial will tend to confirm the feeling that this is the real heart of the council, that money is the chief end of the church as it is of the stock exchange.

The problems of organization are also supposed to be of public interest, and the warm discussions which arise over them, the element of personality which is certain to creep in, go out as if they also reflected the true spirit and highest interest of the Church of Christ. And closely connected with organization and with the conduct of the program of such gatherings, the question of personal success, the passion of personal ambition, must be considered. When the Rev. Jeremiah Stickler, who has occupied a certain office for a number of years, is subjected to criticism, or has the existence of his office threatened, the temperature, not only of his own language, but of the entire council is raised far above the "normal." Then the pencils of reporters become busy, and the world has an opportunity for spicy comments. Or, when the Rev. Dr. Contius Eloquent makes an oration or preaches the annual sermon does he not occupy a place which is the envy of other Christian men, and is not much of the criticism of his effort in public and in private devoted to the question of his personal success? And the world has heard and vaguely remembers the word of Jesus about those who receive the honor of men, and therefore cannot receive the honor of God. If the memory of his word is faint, the perception of the principle is more distinct; men feel the incongruousness of the situation when followers of him who was crucified are seen aspiring to petty throws of human praise, and hurrying to exalted seats.

All this we have mentioned in order to show that there is much to be said for the accusation that these yearly meetings reveal in too obvious a manner that the "world" has invaded and conquered the Church. The superficial reader of reports is led astray indeed, if he thinks there is nothing divine in the Church, nothing of Christ's own spirit in its assemblies; but the policy of some church leaders, and the atmosphere of some committee rooms, and the self-seeking worldliness of many ministers lend some confirmation to that false conclusion.

There is in all these assemblies evidence which points in another direction. Who can read the brief and yet, we believe, valuable accounts of the various denominational gatherings in The Christian Century without being impressed anew by this solid mass of work which the churches of Christ are doing in this land and abroad? The discussions at the great gathering of Episcopalians in the far West have concentrated attention upon the marriage laws of this country as nothing for many years has done. The annual convention of the Disciples at Minneapolis should open the eyes of the entire nation to the almost unparalleled evangelistic success of that body of earnest preachers and servants of Christ. The meeting of the American Board at Hartford was remarkable for a scene where, through the effort to remove a debt of one hundred thousand dollars, the enthusiasm of Christian hearts for Christ and his gospel and the peoples of the earth flashed out in generous gift, in glowing speech, and triumphant song. The American Missionary Association has moreover borne witness to the world that it stands for the unity of man, meeting under its venerable and thrilling motto, "Of one blood—all nations," and resolving anew to unite religion and patriotism in the work of preaching Christ to all the colored races within the wide bounds of the American Republic.

The deeper souls who read about ecclesiastical gatherings will always strive, in the honor of Christ's name, to see between the lines of the hasty summary the consecration of true Christian hearts to his kingdom. Too much of the world is in the Church; but the Church is in the world. It is here, the bride of Christ; this living and energetic body of which he is the living omnipotent head. After all our criticism, and even with its many faults before our minds, we recall the fact that it contains a multitude of those who are being saved, who are joined unto the Lord, who have been washed from their sins, who are, not perfect, but being perfected against "that day." The Church is in the world and our whole and only hope for this world springs undying from that fact.

The German proverb, "If I rest I rust," applies to many things besides the key. If water rests it stagnates. If the tree rests it dies, for its winter state is only a half-rest. If the eye rests, it grows dim and blind. If the lungs rest, we cease to breathe. If the heart rests we die. What is true living but loving? And what is loving but growth in the likeness of God? Work is the mission of mankind on this earth. A day is ever struggling forward, a day will arrive, in some approximate degree, when he who has no work to do, by whatever name he may be called, will not find it good to show himself in any quarter of the solar system; but may go and look out elsewhere, if there be any idle planet discoverable. Let all honest workers rejoice that such law, the first of nature, has been made good on them.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

It is said that Edwards county is the only county in Illinois in which over one half of the children are in Sunday school. And there the county jail is empty a good part of the time.

A prominent Sunday school worker says that the only audiences he has addressed in the state of Illinois in which fifty-four per cent of the men present were under twenty-one years of age were in the penitentiaries.

The Russian peasant, besides being a fatalist—perhaps because he is a fatalist—is passively contented with his hard lot. He knows nothing of that divine discontent which is the spring of change and progress. When he suffers injury he bows his head in stolid submission, saying: "The Czar is busy and God is afar off." Wait till he finds out that, however busy the Czar may be, God is near! His social awakening will then come.

When Sunday is transformed from a holy day to a holiday, it sooner or later becomes a day of toil. Even the French people are beginning to realize that they need a rest day. On a recent Sunday a procession of employes from the shops and stores marched through the streets of Paris carrying banners with the motto, "Buy nothing on Sundays." Sunday is the laboring man's best friend. To deprive him of a day of rest is to deprive him of one of his inalienable rights.

One of the cases in which the eighth commandment is often unwittingly broken is where public speakers intrench upon the time of those who are to follow them on the program. The following instance of regard for the rights of others is given as if it were something extraordinary: "Few evidences of practical Christianity and the unselfishness it breeds are more striking than the fact that at the recent missionary day at Northfield, when over fifty men and women spoke from the auditorium platform, no speaker occupied more than his allotted time."

A Blow to Spiritualism.

More than ordinary interest attaches to the voluntary severance of Mrs. Piper from connection with the work of the Society for Psychical Research. Her spirit messages, given while in a state of trance, were regarded by the members of that society as establishing the claim that communication might be held with the unseen world. She now makes the extraordinary statement that while in the trance state she acted simply as an automaton and that she herself has no explanation to offer of the experiences of which she was the subject. She more than questions the theory that the phenomena had anything whatever to do with the intervention of disembodied spirits, and is inclined to search for their explanation in telepathy. She quotes the remark of Phillips Brooks, who, when present at one of her seances, said: "This may be the back door into heaven, but I want to go in by the front door." This frank avowal on the part of Mrs. Piper of the conviction that the spirits of the dead did not speak through her will be a heavy blow to spiritualism.

A Forward Movement at Yale.

A great deal that has been said of late against the eleemosynary feature in the education of theological students would be equally pertinent if directed against the free training of our military cadets at West Point. It is well, however, to do all that can be done to preserve in the young men who are under training for the ministry of the Gospel independence and self-respect. Hence we hail with satisfaction the movement in Yale Divinity School to inaugurate a system of religious work by the students under the direction of local pastors and mission workers. No financial aid is now given to the students, but such as they earn by work actually done. Other seminaries have adopted this system and are satisfied with its results. It seems to be the true solution of a perplexing problem.

Christianity Not Dying Out.

Those who imagine that Christianity is dying out have merely to glance at the most recent religious statistics to be disabused of that idea. While, in the past hundred years, the population of the United States has increased thirteenfold, church members have increased four times as much. A hundred years ago half a million dollars would probably cover everything raised for these purposes; now the churches of this country spend annually over twenty-eight millions on hospitals, orphanages and other benevolence, five and a half millions for foreign missions and an equal or greater sum for home missions. The annual expenditure for the churches and benevolent work of the world is estimated at $1,009,369,494.

The Color Line at the White House.

It was to be expected that President Roosevelt would do unconventional things. His action in entertaining Booker T. Washington, the president of Tuskegee Institute, at dinner has produced something of a sensation—especially in the South. This is the first instance on record in which a negro has received such a mark of presidential favor. With but few exceptions the press of the country commend the action of the president in giving recognition to one who has broken through the invidious bars of circumstance and has taken a foremost place among the educational leaders of our time. Booker T. Washington has devoted his life to the uplifting of his people; his success has been phenomenal, and for his work's sake he deserves the nation's gratitude.

College Men Increasing.

Our prosperity as a nation is not altogether on the material side. With hardly an exception the colleges of the land report a large increase in the enrollment of students. Last year the graduating lists showed an increase of twenty-five per cent upon the previous year. This year the ratio of increase is probably greater. The demand for college-bred men in all branches of business continues to grow. The educational ideals of the present day are intensely practical—too practical, perhaps—and the trained mind has the best chances of success.

IN STORM AND STRIFE.

In storm and strife
The bells of life
Forever keep a-ringing;
In dark and dawn
The heart sings on—
Forevermore a-singing.
Still in the night
The soul sees light
A brighter future bringing,
Dim grief in flight,
And rainbows bright,
And even the storms a-singing!

—Atlanta Constitution.

CONTRIBUTED

TAKE HEART.

I think we are too ready with complaint
 In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope Indeed, beyond the zenith and the slope
 Of yon grey blank of sky, we might grow faint
 To muse upon eternity's constraint
 Round our aspirant souls: but since the scope
 Must widen early, is it well to droop,
 For a few days consumed in loss and taint?
 O pusillanimous heart be comforted,
 And, like a cheerful traveler, take the road,
 Singing beside the hedge. What if the bread
 Be bitter in thine inn, and thou unshod
 To meet the flints? At least it may be said,
 "Because the way is short, I thank Thee, God," —E. B. Browning.

CHRISTOLOGICAL TENDENCIES OF THE TIME.

W. J. LHAMON.

No. VII. Missions.

WHEN Dr. John E. Clough of the famous Ongole Mission was in America some years ago it is reported that he was asked the following question: "Do you preach the law first or the Gospel?" and that he gave the following reply: "I used to talk Moses to them, did so for years; I have changed now. I leave Moses till later. I preach Christ and him crucified first, last and all the time. They say amen to the law; they have what they believe is the law of God already; what they need is Christ."

This incident may be taken as an indication of the inevitable tendency of all missionary enterprise. It is the universal experience of missionaries that heathen and barbarous peoples do not respond to civilized speculations, or to ancient laws and cults, or to modern ceremonialism, as they do to the simple story and sublime person of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Jesus is the universal man, and about him there is something that wins the heart of man as man. He holds a key that is more than magic, and doors open to him that are forever closed to art and science and philosophy and law. There are many wonderful effects springing from the story of Jesus, and among them this is not the least—namely, that it has proved itself by actual experiment through nineteen centuries a conquering power over people of every kindred and tongue and tribe and nation. Over the most cultured the Savior has thrown the spell of his holier culture, and over the most barbarous he has thrown the charm of his personal affection.

Many times the story has been told of the first convert from among the fierce inhabitants of Tahiti. It is worth telling again in this Christological argument. During sixteen years of faithful work the missionaries had not the encouragement of a single conversion to Christ. But in prayer they continued teaching and preaching. One day the missionary, standing amidst a group of islanders, was reading to them portions of the Gospel according to John. When he read, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have eternal life," the chief stopped him and asked that it be read again. Then he said, "That means that your God loves you, but your God does not love us." The missionary read it again, emphasizing the word "world" and the word "whosoever," and explained that the Father of Jesus loves all his earthly children, and wants them all to be like Jesus, that they may be his true children. Convinced of this the chieftain said, "Since your God loves, your God shall be my God, for our gods do not love." This was the beginning of conversions in Tahiti, and the work spread with amazing rapidity. Idols were destroyed, cannibal ovens were demolished, churches and schools sprang up, and a whole new civilization appeared as the fruits of that teaching of God's Fatherhood revealed in the Brotherhood of Jesus.

But all this is Christological. The change was wrought by the story of Christ's love as manifested in his life and death, and by the story of his victory as shown in his resurrection. To this the savage islanders have responded, not once nor twice, but in cases that are all but countless. Out from Jewish sources goes the story of this love into all Gentile lands, conquering and to conquer. It is the marvel of history and the miracle of providence. With Jew and Gentile, barbarian, Scythian, bond and free, Christ becomes all and in all. It is he who breaks down "the middle wall of partition" and makes of the twain or the twenty one new man.

We cannot imagine such effects following any other line of teaching, and in point of historic fact such effects have never sprung from any other cause. Suppose that our missionaries, instead of insisting upon the simple story of the Savior of men, should persist in bandying about the ears of savage or half-civilized peoples the conflicting five points of Calvinism and Arminianism; or that they should go more deeply into theological matters and talk learnedly about sublapsarianism and supralapsarianism; or that they should enter into the old discussions of the seventh century about monophysitism and monotheletism; or that they should attempt to solve effectually the metaphysical problems involved in the kenosis or the krypsis, or in the homo-ousia, or the hetero-ousia, or the homoi-ousia!!!! The very thought of such a procedure suggests an incongruity. Such discussions have no appeal to any sort of human being except perverted schoolmen. To the child of nature and of God they are as foreign and cold and useless as the icebergs of our hypothetical open polar sea. But the Christ—simply, seriously, sweetly presented—how he "finds" the hearts of men! It is Coleridge's expression, "The Savior finds me." And it is this finding power of Christ that has transformed the islands and the continents wherever his missionaries have gone and his church has run her normal course in the history of any people.

The following beautiful incident may serve in further illustration of the theme: On Christmas day in the year 1800 William Carey baptized in the Ganges his first convert, Krishna Pal. This man, turned from the devil worship of India, celebrated his joy in the Savior by the composition of a sweet little Christological poem, the first stanza of which is this:

"O thou, my soul, forget no more
 The Friend who all thy misery bore;
 Let every idol be forgot,
 But, O my soul, forget him not."

Another and a very clear indication of the Christological tendency of missions is the use they make of the Bible. In a previous essay we sought to show that the Bible is distinctively Christological, and that it is entirely innocent of our denominational names and doctrines, and of our sectarian isms. If this is true it must follow that the use of the Bible in all Protestant mission fields must tend to eliminate doctrines that are foreign to it, and to fix the minds of missionaries and their native converts more and more upon the Christ, who fills its pages from first to last.

No other movement in the world's history has done so much to make the Bible a universal power among men as modern missions. The translation of the Bible into the tongues of their various peoples has been among the first and most beneficent works of our great foreign missionaries. The impetus they have thus given to the publication and circulation of it is all but incredible. In the beginning of the nineteenth century the Bible existed in fewer than fifty of the tongues of earth; now more than 400 languages are bearing its message to ninety per cent of the people of all the earth. Above 6,000,000 copies, more than were in the world at the beginning of the nineteenth century, are printed and distributed annually. This majestic enterprise of translation and distribution, together with the work of teachers and preachers in many lands, must tend mightily toward a consensus of thought about Christ, and a common, world-wide loyalty to him.

A last reflection. The very effort on the part of Christians to do simply what Christ commanded must have Christological effects. When his disciples do really go and teach all nations, such going must be a world-wide Christological movement, for the reason that his disciples have nothing to teach but Christ himself and what he taught. When he is presented as he presented himself, and when the Father is presented as revealed in him, and when repentance and forgiveness and baptism and life and death and resurrection and heaven are all made known after the fashion of his own teaching of them, then his commission has its perfect work in the world. And all the content of the commission is Christological. Read it anew and see if there is anything in it other than Christ himself and what he taught. Behold him in the giving of it! He stands among his disciples with uplifted, pierced hands, saying, "All authority in heaven and on earth is given to me; go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This is our warrant, given by Christ, for the teaching of Christ far as the race of man is found.

The church of the last century began to see it so, and to the church of the century at hand there will surely come the full revelation of it, and with that a mighty Christological work, such as in kind has not been seen since the days of Peter and Paul, and in extent—never.

Columbia, Mo.

But let it not be forgotten that much as money is needed, it is not the greatest need. Money may furnish the machinery, but it cannot furnish the power to drive it. What boots it if we have the best equipment, the most complete organization, the fullest treasury, and have not spiritual power? The gift of the hand will count for little if it be not accompanied with the prayer of the heart. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

"SACRED MUSIC."

HYMN TUNES AVAILABLE AT THE PRESENT DAY.

PROF. CHARLES C. CLEMENS.

A great interest today is the question, What kind of an heritage have we from the various early publications and others from different European sources? What is there available in hymnody at the present day for use in divine worship?

Let us take firstly those tunes written somewhat in the spirit of the German choral. In these we have one note for every syllable—strong, dignified and in every way forceful. The German choral and tunes of a similar syllabic order might well be heard oftener in our churches. There is, for example, the majestic choral, "Now thank we all our God." Of the same syllabic type, but not usually written in the form of a choral, is the old tune "St. Anne's." Tunes of this type are a glorious means of a somewhat sturdy emotional expression—dignified, almost statuesque, in its aspect.

But we do not want to be always having those sledgehammer blows of the mighty choral; and next, we have tunes in which occasional syllables are sung to two notes, giving greater fluency. Some of these are almost as stately as the tunes of the choral type, but there is with them a sense of movement and ease which is very acceptable.

Then we have the type of tune that is more florid, where it is the rule rather than an exception to have two notes to a syllable, and sometimes even more. This was carried to great excess in earlier days and the style has been very widely modified.

A type of tune of which very few specimens survive at this day is that known as the Fuguing tune. Here a portion of the last line of a verse is first taken by one part, then another, then another, and finally all repeat the line together. This gave opportunity for the frequent exercise of some especial skill on the part of the singer, a privilege which was highly prized. I cannot find that many of these tunes are included in present-day hymnals, but I have a feeling that a few more might profitably survive. Possibly the excess to which this style was carried and the occasional vain-glorious way in which the tunes were sung, led to a reaction.

When the sense of the repeated portion of the line was complete in itself, and especially when the repetition led on to an important central thought, the effect was not only good but positively impressive, provided the music was of a dignified order. Unfortunately, this was not always by any means the case. In fact, this style of tune is remembered mostly owing to its laughable situations than for any other reason. To illustrate this it is only necessary to quote "And love thee bet—and love thee bet—and love thee better than before." Or, "Oh, for a man—oh, for a man—oh, for a mansion in the skies." Here the sense is not only spoiled, but a double meaning is given that is very undignified.

Of this kind two tunes are quite familiar to congregations of the present day. Miles Lane is one. Here we have the last line, "Crown him—crown him—crown him—crown him, Lord of all." The other is the "Adeste Fideles," with the refrain, "O come, let us adore him—O come, let us adore him, Christ the Lord." This is impressive.

Then there are the modern tunes, mostly of the fluent order, but practically covering every variety and type. In these we have much that is good and some that is weak and poor. The compilation of a hymnal for the people is one of the most difficult of enterprises. There is the important question of association. We are too grateful to the old tunes to let them go needlessly. If an old tune has its good points, let the little ones learn it and carry on the tradition. If a tune is simply old without any other qualification, away with it. Because it was the only thing available for our grandfathers, it does not follow that it is the best thing for our children. This is a restless age and the demand for new things is sometimes bewildering, but if some composers and compilers insist on giving us a grade of music only suitable to a low state of musical development, we are not compelled to sing it.

A good hymn tune, whether ancient or modern, will have clearly marked rhythm both in melody and harmony. Well-marked rhythm in melody will explain itself, but a decisive harmonic movement is equally important for congregational purposes. This is illustrated in the very simplest way in the first lines of "My faith looks up to thee." There are two printed arrangements of the harmony of these lines—one where the harmony is stationary for two whole measures, and the other where the harmony makes an effective change at the commencement of the second measure. I do not know which the composer intended, but there is no comparison between the two in effectiveness. The arrangement with the change in harmony is strong and vigorous, and with the other weak and feeble. An organist cannot control a congregation unless there be good harmonic movement.

If a congregation is singing a tune of the choral type—one syllable to each note—then a sense of solidity and even slowness may well be encouraged. But this is not the right way to sing tunes of the other type and here, while there should always be a certain stateliness, there should also be a feeling cultivated of movement and fluency. The congregation should be taught to feel and appreciate this. What is more dreary than the slow slurring of many congregations in those tunes which should be of the fluent order?

I am sure it would be of great value if congregational rehearsals were more frequently held—the congregation should be rehearsed occasionally, much in the same manner as the choir is rehearsed. The chief musical weakness of the congregation lies in the attack. As we frequently hear it, the organist plays over the tune, then holds the first soprano note a more or less definite time and then begins the tempo of the hymn, the congregation coming in gradually as they gain confidence. This process is generally repeated at each verse. This is certainly not ideal. I recently heard a hymn sung in a church not far from Cleveland. The tune was a good one, and the concluding portion of the third verse was sung with much expression. The beginning of the fourth verse was the crowning point of the hymn, and had it been attacked with vigor the effect would have been electrifying, but the point was lost owing to the hesitancy and lack of unanimity at the beginning of the verse.

The playing over of the hymn tune is merely a prelude, and its purpose is two-fold. It indicates the tune and the tempo in which the tune is to be sung. Let there be always a definite duration between the end of the prelude and the beginning of the hymn—say two beats—and let the choir and congregation understand this and be constantly on the alert. If this is understood and rehearsed it will be just as effective for purposes of attack as if we had a conductor, and perhaps more so. The expression of a preference does not imply a condemnation of those who prefer otherwise, but personally I dislike the use of a baton in a church service. An intelligent understanding between organist, choir and congregation is of greater value than the baton, and this can best be promoted by the occasional congregational rehearsal. A minister is naturally anxious that the congregation should sing heartily and is almost unconsciously tempted to use a limited selection of well-known tunes and to hesitate to introduce new ones. To my knowledge this often results in the neglect of some of the finest tunes in the hymnal. The learning of new tunes and chants and the relearning of familiar tunes with fine attack and without dragging might be made useful features of the congregational rehearsal.

Chanting.

I sometimes wonder why chanting is so rarely done in the churches of the different denominations. I am convinced that if ministers and organists could see what an important resource they might have in chanting, we should have it oftener than we do. Chanting is undoubtedly a little difficult at the outset, especially to those who have not been accustomed to hearing chanting regularly, and many choirmasters feel that the time spent in rehearsal of chanting could be more profitably applied in some other direction. This would be assuredly true at times, but I think we may sometimes look a little further ahead. A choir and congregation who can chant well will have a greater fluency in singing the more ordinary music. Use only a few psalms at first and sing them often, and let choir and congregation always sing from pointed words, and when a little familiarity has been attained, both choir and congregation will have an added pleasure and inspiration. I do not mean that psalms should never be used unless they can be sung—not by any means—but I feel there might reasonably be a more definite place in public worship for the chanted psalm. I often have the feeling that when a congregation is reading a psalm that it is, as it were, being read at sight. When a psalm is fluently sung it represents something more than this—it has of necessity had study and attention, and its utterance becomes a more intensely personal equation. That it is possible for a congregation to acquire this I know, but at the same time I also know its initial difficulties, and I do not wish to assert that it can always be successfully done. If it is to be attempted, above all things let the choir-master have a very clear idea of the effect he desires to produce, and it will be helpful if he train a small body of voices first, so that the congregation may hear a pattern before they commence to sing. I hope it may be of interest to relate one little experience connected with a first attempt in congregational chanting.

In a Congregational church in England the minister decided to try if the congregation would not like occasionally to chant a psalm. A very short psalm was selected—the twenty-third—"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." A sufficient number of cards were printed with the words of the psalm pointed for chanting and the music of the chant clearly printed above. The choir first rehearsed it at one of their rehearsals and the following Sunday evening the minister talked a little about chanting and invited those of the congregation who would like to do so to remain for a short rehearsal. Almost everybody accepted the invitation. The detail of the rehearsal had been carefully planned in advance so as to combine economy of time with efficiency. The organist played over the chant, then the whole choir sang the treble part of the chant in unison, humming the notes without using the words, then the congregation were invited to do exactly the same with the choir, and this was repeated two or three times, the organ playing the complete harmony as a general support. Then the choir sang the first two verses of the psalm, the congregation watching the pointed words on their cards, then the congregation sang these verses with the choir, and so on with the other verses until the whole psalm had been rehearsed. At the next rehearsal those of the congregation who were capable of singing the parts forming the harmony were invited to sing over the bass, tenor or alto parts, as the case might be, with the choir. On the third Sunday the psalm was sung in the service and was sufficiently inspiring to induce the congregation to express a desire to learn more. This work, as I understand, has been carried on successfully ever since, and the chanting of the psalms has now become as much a part of the regular service in that church as the singing of hymns. There is something in the quiet chanting of a contemplative psalm that is almost unique. There is no great energy of accent, just enough rhythmic force to keep the musical structure moving together, producing a musical atmosphere which is delightful to those accustomed to it.

Cleveland, Ohio.

EUROPEAN LETTER.

QUINCY L. DOWD.

(Continued from last week.)

Travel abroad should be purposeful as well as pleasurable, and to what better purpose could a week be spent than in visiting Prague, Bohemia? The town itself is one of the most interesting in Europe, both historically and for its remaining medieval appearance and customs. Let any one read "The Witch of Prague," by Marion Crawford, and then judge whether there is not abundant local color and charm to draw a person hither. But none of these things had the drawing power equal to one other fact, viz., that in Prague is centered a new, strong evangelical work of the nature of that originated by John Huss five centuries ago, then only to be stamped out and crushed by the all-powerful Papacy and hierarchy. Just twenty-nine years ago the Rev. Drs. E. A. Adams and A. W. Clark, then neighboring pastors in Connecticut, were sent out by the American Board on a Gospel mission to the peoples of Bohemia. The story is a thrillingly heroic one of their wise, patient efforts to gain the least sufferance or concession from a bitterly hostile government and church. Even more heart-moving is the account of their steady success and growth in the face of that overwhelming opposition. In Prague alone to-day are three effective churches having crowded congregations largely made up still of those who are nominally Catholics, either dissatisfied with what their priests are or desirous to know what there is in the new preaching of Christ and his grace to men. Besides, there are three flourishing Young Men's Christian Associations and as many temperance bands, also a home or retreat for the rescue or protection of young girls, since corruption is fearfully rife in this city. About eighteen years ago Dr. Adams retired from this Prague field, and took up a like work among the Bohemians of Chicago. Recently Rev. John S. Porter has resumed service in co-operation with Dr. Clark. Already their operations have extended out to many important places throughout Austria. The Gospel work in Vienna among the 150,000 Bohemians there, as well as for the German population, bids fair to assume even larger proportions and to show more rapid growth than in Prague and other parts of Bohemia. As in all other mission fields the need of helpers and of financial support far exceeds all that the funds provided can meet. Can it be that Christian people in America know and realize that just now over wide districts of Austria there is a remarkable agitation on foot, whose rallying cry is, "Away from Rome!" in other words, "Independence, freedom from the galling bondage and repression so long endured under papal dominion." True, it is now largely a patriotic and political sentiment, not so much due to intelligent religious conviction. But it means a vast opportunity, a restlessness and a seeking for the real good such as signalized the Reformation period of Luther's day, and that earlier blaze of light when Huss and Jerome held up the grace of God. It would be a pitiful failure in Christian faith just now to withhold from these modern apostles to Bohemia that full, generous support their cause deserves, for right there on their battle front is the strategic frontier of Christendom at present.

On coming into Switzerland, the small neutral spot of our warring world, one takes a long breath of freedom. Here, if anywhere, the truce of God is a reality. People can come hither to adjust all their knotty relations unmolested, marriage included. It is glorious autumn, too. The season of recent heavy rains has ended. The tourist army has nearly melted away. October, with its many-tinted hues on gardens and woods, its abounding fruit and nut harvest, its bracing out-of-door life, its busy work getting ready for the shut-in winter, belongs to the few stragglers who wait for this aftermath of pleasure and mountaineering. Luzern is the focus of about all the going and coming, probably 300,000 visitors each summer passing this way. Fortunately the weather still admits of excursions to the tops of Rigi Kulm and Pilatus. For a few days past the sunshine has made the air on these summits even balmy. What could be more invigorating than a half day spent on Rigi viewing the snow range panorama followed by a two and a half hours' walk down to Weggis on the lake! The enjoyment also of a cycle ride along the shore of the Vierwaldstätter See, through Kreuz to Küsnacht, thence across the narrow strip of land to Immensee, on Lake Zug, following its shore up to Arth, is quite as highly keyed up as any climb can be. Along the roadside men and women were gathering the phenomenal crop of pears from trees as large as a good-sized elm. Very long ladders are a necessity for this work. This whole valley shows itself remarkably rich, in fact reeks with 2,000 years of dairying and intensive cultivation. While stopping to look at the tiny hill-top shrine called Tell's Chapel, scene of one of that doughty patriot's mythical exploits, a look down into a field revealed a real fight of fisticuffs going on between two Swiss lads, their brave mates standing up in the road somewhat aloof to see that the combatants had an equal chance and no favor. The rough and tumble was soon over; then all got into a cluster to argue the merits of the result. In this same vicinity is an immense Catholic mission house, to which a large addition is being made, another evidence that this historic church is still to be reckoned with as having a mission among men, probably to the end of time. The ride on to Arth, sometimes within a dozen feet of the green waters of Lake Zug, with the long, frowning, rocky face of Rigi Kulm casting its dark shadow across the way, the road bordered by the picturesque chalets, rather too fragrant of their long use for animal life of many domesticated kinds, ending with a visit to the interior of the parish church in Arth, made up a half-day of wheeling far beyond any mortal's deserts. A reviving pot of tea with bread and blackberry preserves served in the low-ceiled refreshment room of Hotel du Rigi put one into metal for the late spin back to Luzern.

Yesterday, in company with an English doctor from Shrewsbury, the climb up to the top of Pilatus was made in the forenoon from the little village of Hergiswyl. Prof. George H. Gilbert had written urging a look from this height on his account. Never was a friendly request obeyed better repaid. That splendid broadside of the highest Alps with their many mighty glaciers fronting this point of view from Glärnisch on the east to the Monk and Jungfrau peaks, all looming up at times clear and free, then surrounded by a surging sea of white mottled with dark clouds, was a sight worthy of the heavenly host. But having the reader in mind one does well to consider what Mark Twain said when doing the sights at Jerusalem, "One can gorge sights to repletion as well as sweetmeats."

LETTERS TO THE BOOK LOVER.

BISHOP H. C. G. MOULE.

My Dear Friend: Last week I said something about the work of the late Bishop Westcott. I wish this week to recall a few facts concerning the man who has been appointed his successor as Bishop of Durham. Probably no appointment in recent years in the English church has given such wide satisfaction as this. Lord Salisbury has been suspected of something more than sympathy with the High Church party, and during the earlier portion of his period of responsibility his appointments seemed in harmony with that suspicion. Several of his more recent nominations of bishops and other dignitaries have suggested that either his breadth of mind has been increased or other influences are at work compelling him to recognize the claims of other sections of the Established Church of England.

Dr. Moule has been for some years recognized as the leader of the Evangelical party. He has inherited the strong Low Church traditions of Cambridge, and has given them, it is not too much to say, a new power and a new glory in English life. With that fervent devotion to the fundamental features of evangelical theology he combines great breadth and accuracy of scholarship and a sensitive insight into human nature. From the year 1881 and until 1899 he was principal of Ridley Hall, which he made famous as a training school for Anglican clergymen at Cambridge. So powerful was the influence which he exerted over men that those who had studied under him became objects of envy amongst their brethren throughout the country. While his book on "The Outlines of Christian Doctrine" shows the thoroughness with which he has studied all sides of the evangelical system, the sympathetic reader of his other works will discover easily that three of these doctrines have exercised a special fascination for the mind of Dr. Moule. These are: The union with Christ; atonement through his death; and the possession of the Holy Spirit by those who are in union with him on the ground of his death by personal faith. It is an important feature of Dr. Moule's teaching that these doctrines are no less matters of experience than of theory; and no less Christian doctrines to be studied, described, defended, and preached than they are deep spiritual experiences to be passionately desired, wrestled for and triumphantly possessed.

The great power with which Dr. Moule sees life as doctrine and doctrine as life gives to his expositions of evangelical truth what I must describe as their supreme quality, namely, their penetrating force. In a style made exquisite by long and ripe culture, he so sets forth these truths as to make them speak directly to the conscience and the heart of his student reader. All of these doctrines have received at his hands simple and yet fervent treatment in a series of little books, which are much read as aids to devotional life. Among these I will name: "Union with Christ," "Secret Prayer" and "In Christ, for Christ." Dr. Moule has also published a work on the Spirit which he has entitled "Veni Creator," where his true strength hardly appears, although the subject is one which, as other works show, he has made his own. The best studies which he has given to us on this profound and most vital subject are to be found in his commentaries on Romans and Ephesians, and, above all, in the volume on Romans, which he contributed to the Expositor's Bible. Here, as it seems to me, Dr. Moule appears at his strongest and ripest. This epistle is ever the dearest to evangelical Christians, and into its depths Dr. Moule has plunged with whole-hearted delight; and the spoils he has brought to shore and spread out for us are rich indeed. No one can read this consecutive exposition without being moved to a deeper apprehension of the true nature of Christian experience and without being made to feel that in the life of faith towards Jesus Christ there are possibilities he has hardly measured and joys he has hardly tasted. Early this year Dr. Moule published a volume of sermons entitled "The Old Gospel for the New World," of which I shall not attempt a review at present.

It is worthy of remark that Dr. Moule has for a long time been recognized as one of the leaders of what is known as the Keswick Movement. He and one or two other men are mainly responsible for the wonderful history associated with that name. They have saved it from the dangerous vagaries into which lesser men would undoubtedly have led it, and they have given to it a dignity and power which makes it unique among recent developments of the Christian spirit in Great Britain.

I understand that Dr. Moule has in hand a work of utmost importance to the religious and theological world. I trust that his elevation to the great See of Durham will not be allowed by him to interrupt that wider service of the Church of Christ to which he has beyond doubt been called and which, as it seems to many of us, must have a prior claim upon his energies.

I am, yours faithfully,

A Bookman.

We may have the form of godliness without the power; but it is impossible to have the power without the form.—Edward Payson.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

BY DAVID LYALL.

HE Rev. Gavin Hamilton sat before his study table on a May morning, and his face betrayed some sadness and perplexity, and he evidently found it difficult to fix his attention on his morning's work. It may be that the views from the bay window commanding the noble expanse of the Firth of Tay allured him more than was common; at least, his eyes never roamed from it, but his thoughts were far away. He was a man in the youthful prime of life, and he had a goodly presence and a face disposed to win trust and approbation. The only sign of weakness, perhaps, lay in the mouth, which was soft and mobile as a woman's. Yet the jaw had a massive squareness which betokened a man's strength of mind and will. It was a Friday morning, and his work for the following Sunday was sadly in arrears. He had but recently come to the flourishing seaside resort of Lowden Bay, and had not yet been tempted to give to his work anything but his best. But a mind distracted by personal concerns is difficult to give to abstract ideas. Finally he gave up, and taking a letter from his pocket, read it through for the fourth or fifth time that morning. Its perusal was disturbed by his housekeeper's knock at the door.

"If you please, sir, that's the page laddie from Blyth House, and Miss Blyth would be much obliged if you would go up this morning. The laird is waur, and is askin' to see you."

"Very well, Mrs. Kippen; tell the lad I'll be up within an hour," he answered, and there was a curious look on his face as he refolded the letter and returned it to his pocket-book. Then he shut up his desk and began to put on his boots. He was inwardly glad of the diversion, only it seemed strange that it should come from the very quarter which had been in his thoughts.

"It may help me to a decision," he said to himself, adding, with a sigh, "And yet, after all, there can only be one decision; none know it better than I."

The road to Blyth House led him pleasantly by the seashore, and he entered the grounds by a small wicket-gate, opening directly on the rough bents which skirted the shore. It was only a small property, and though Mr. Blyth was called the laird, it was a mere courtesy title. He was simply a wealthy Creetown merchant, who had built himself a goodly dwelling-place near the village of his youth, and who, by reason of his good deeds and kindly disposition, was much beloved therein.

It was a beautiful house, planned with artistic taste and skill, set like a gem in its pleasant woods near the ripple of a wimpling burn, which poured its waters into a miniature loch in the park. Hamilton looked round him with a passing sigh of envy. Here, surely, life might flow peacefully in its appointed groove. But here also hearts could ache and disappointments lurk, it being ordered that we shall have no continuing city or abiding-place. The servant who admitted him—a middle-aged butler of sober, respectable appearance—bore traces of agitation and distress on his face.

"Your master is not worse, I hope, Bennet," said the minister, as he gave him good morning. The man only shook his head, making no attempt to speak.

"The doctor's just been, sir," he said, finding his voice as they ascended the wide, richly-carpeted stairs. "He says it's but a question of days—maybe hours." He opened wide the door of the sick-chamber, and having shown the minister in, at once withdrew. A professional nurse by the bedside stepped back as Hamilton advanced, and the patient welcomed him warmly. To Hamilton's untrained eye there was nothing alarming in his appearance, though the face was certainly haggard and worn; but it had looked so for many weeks, since the dread disease which baffles medical skill had obtained the mastery, and set the limit to his days.

"You have lost no time, my friend," said the merchant, in a calm, clear voice. "You can go into the next room, nurse, within call. I want a private word with Mr. Hamilton."

The nurse withdrew. Hamilton took a chair by the bedside, and for a moment laid his strong young hand with tenderness on the wasted fingers lying outside the white bed-cover. For this man had been a pillar of strength, an abiding friend to him in the first trying days of his ministry in the place, aiding him by his counsel, guiding him by his wisdom and, above all, by the ripeness of his spiritual experience, keeping him ever in the upward way. And Hamilton, having no father of his own, and a heart gratefully responsive to the smallest kindness, now felt to him as a son. For the moment the poignancy of a personal anguish, born of the knowledge that soon he would be bereft, shut out all else.

"I am a good deal worse. Baxter admitted it this morning, Gavin, and so long as I am suffering less, and have a clear mind I want to speak to you about Kirsteen."

The minister started, and in the shadow of the curtain the red dyed his cheek.

"You have not seen her this morning? Poor child, she was up with me the greater part of the night, and has gone to rest now, I daresay. My greatest concern—nay, my only one, as you may easily believe—is leaving my one ewe lamb alone in the world."

"She will not be alone; she has troops of friends," said Hamilton, and his voice was thick in his throat.

The dying man smiled, but drearily. "She wants more than friends; she wants one strong arm to lean on. Perhaps you can guess what I mean. You know how dear every hair of her head is to me—what she has been, and is, and will be all her days, in whatever home she is placed. Yet I would give her to you, Gavin. I could die happy if I knew you would be man and wife."

Hamilton rose to his feet, and the veins stood out on his brow, and his hands clenched themselves at his side.

"You know what she is. She needs no praise from gentle or simple. There are few like her; and I believe she could pick where she chose. But my heart cleaves to you, lad, as if you were my own son. I have proved you in the last year, and I know what you are. And I say I would rather give her to you than to any man, poor in this world though you be, and I believe the bairn is of one mind with me."

Hamilton turned away, so that his face might not be seen. It was almost more than he could bear—the joy and the pain of it, and the terrible ordeal through which his soul must pass to victory.

"Well, what do you say? You are taken by surprise; but at your age it ought to be a pleasant surprise. I have watched you close, you and her together, in the last weeks, and I have hoped that perhaps the thing might come about without any word from me. Look round, and tell me what is in your heart, and if it should be that it does not move you this way, I know you will forget what I have said. For you have that tenderness to womankind which the Lord taught us in his own life, but which we so often forget in our dealings with them."

"Mr. Blyth, I love Kirsteen as my own soul. God bless you for your faith in me. Will you give me till tomorrow to think it over—not an hour longer?"

"Certainly; there needna be that haste," said the merchant, and immediately began to speak of something else. Within an hour the minister left the house, and he only called in at the Manse to tell his house-keeper he was going to Glasgow by the midday train, and would not return until very late at night. Three o'clock of the afternoon beheld him seeking admittance at a handsome house in one of the western terraces, where abode one of the spiritual leaders and teachers of men, a man of God, whose name was revered through the length and breadth of Scotland, and beyond it among those who concern themselves with spiritual things. To this man it had been Hamilton's privilege to be assistant for two years, before his call to work in Lowden Bay. He was fortunate; he remembered, as he waited admittance, this was one of the afternoons he was at home in his study from two o'clock until four to all who might wish to see him. He was still more fortunate in finding him at home and disengaged, and the warmth of his welcome filled his heart with joy.

"Curiously enough, I was speaking of you to my wife at lunch, and saying we should meet you at the Aberdeen Conference next week. Well, and how are you getting on? We hear glowing accounts from various sources. But it is always satisfactory to have firsthand accounts."

"I'm getting on all right in my work, sir, but I'm in personal trouble, and I've come to you for advice," said Hamilton, and forthwith told his old chief the experience of the morning.

"Well, to an unattached person like yourself, it is a great temptation, and the father's trust in you is a precious thing. Where, then, does the trouble come in?"

"I am pledged to some one else."

"Tell me all about it; it will be better for you; I see your heart is burdened," said the elder man, with that peculiar touch of sympathy which set him apart from men of commoner clay. "And remember that there is nothing a man need really fear in this world except dishonor."

"It was when I was a student," began Hamilton, not shamefacedly, but with the honest courage of a man who wishes and means to do right. "She was the daughter of the house where I lodged."

The old minister nodded understandingly, but said nothing. He could have groaned aloud. It was so common a story, the basis of many a disappointed life and many a fruitless ministry. Often he had said that it would be better for the young men to be gathered together during their student days in a common hostel where they were free from the temptations of sex.

"They were very kind to me. I was a lonely country lad—perhaps more susceptible to kindness than most. And I admired her from the first moment I saw her, an admiration which increased when I saw her unselfishness and devotion to her mother. She was engaged all day at a millinery establishment in the city, but she was up every morning by six o'clock, helping with the housework."

"And so you felt as most men feel at some period of their lives, that you were the knight to relieve the damsel in distress?" said the old man, with the gentlest touch of irony, which left no sting. "In other words, you asked her to be the mistress of the Manse when it should be yours. Am I right?"

"Yes," answered Hamilton, with a sigh. "And until I went to Lowden Bay the thought filled me with happiness."

"And now?"

"Now I know that of the real love of life I had no idea. I could lay down my life for the woman of whom I told you first. Tell me what to do?"

The old man rose, and with his thumbs in the arm-pits of his coats, took three contemplative strides across the floor.

"I am not surprised at what you have told me, Gavin. I could wish it a less common story. What does your conscience bid you do?"

"My conscience bids me marry the woman who has been faithful to me for seven long years. She is alone now. Her mother died five months ago."

"It was a pity you did not take her to Lowden at the beginning. Why did not you?"

Hamilton shook his head.

"I don't know. I had some idea of getting settled first. She has been very patient, never questioning any decision of mine. In some respects she is far too good for me."

The old man paused by the desk, and looked straightly into his young colleague's face. He was old, but the understanding of youth had not departed from him, and he could follow the workings of Hamilton's mind as if it had been an open book. He knew what war the natural man was waging there, and how youth and beauty and wealth were luring him from the way of honor.

"I have seen, as you have doubtless seen also, many ill-assorted marriages, among our brethren, arising out of circumstances somewhat similar. The one partner grows mentally, the other stands still, and there is not between them that unity which alone makes marriage the sacrament it ought to be. But another thing have I seen also, a man go back on the pledged word of his youth, and marry where he thought it would be for his social and professional advancement, and——"

"Well," said Hamilton, and his tongue was dry in his mouth.

"I have never seen blessing follow it; nay, I have such an one in my mind's eye now, whose marriage has set the seal upon his spiritual death. I know nothing of the two women of whom you have told me, but this is what I say. Go to the woman who has been faithful to you all these years. Marry her without delay, and if you faithfully do your duty by her, God will do the rest."

About seven o'clock that evening a pale, slim girl, with a somewhat weary look in her sweet face, came out by the private door of a fashionable milliner's establishment in the west end. When she saw and recognized a tall, ministerial figure waiting on the curb, the paleness and weariness left her face, and she became beautiful, glorified by the halo cast by love.

"Oh, Gavin! I was thinking of you as I came downstairs, not dreaming you were so near! Why are you here to-day?"

He drew her hand within his arm, and for a full minute did not speak. An unspeakable tenderness overflowed in his heart, touched by a quick remorse.

"I am here to see you, Mary. I have been long enough alone in Lowden Manse. Let us be married quietly without any delay. It can be no disrespect to your mother's memory now. She knew all about it, and was not afraid of me. When will you come?"

Her hand trembled on his arm, and upon her face there was a look impossible to describe.

"I am waiting, Mary," he said, quickly.

"If you are so anxious, I think I could come now. But only this morning I was calculating that if I had another winter at my music and French I should be surprisingly proficient. I have worked very hard, Gavin. I will never shame you, dear, in Lowden Manse."

"My darling," he said, and the words were sincere enough. Under his breath he added, "God forgive me."

Before they parted that night everything was arranged, and their next meeting would be the final one before their lives were joined.

Very late that night Gavin Hamilton alighted at Lowden Bay station, and the porter touched his hat.

"The laird de'ed this afternoon, sir, quite sudden an' peaceful in his sleep."

"So he need never know," said Hamilton to himself as he turned away. "I am spared one painful task. God has been better to me than I deserve."

And in the years which followed that grateful acknowledgment was often in his heart. His wife sometimes wonders what quality it is in her husband's love which makes it different from others, and why his pride in her should be so high. And though she has never found any answer to these wonderings, she counts herself the most blessed among women.—The British Weekly.

PLEASANTRIES.

Lawyer—Have you ever seen the prisoner at the bar? Witness—No, sir; but I have seen him many times when I strongly suspected he had been at it.—Chicago News.

Sexton (to a divine, who has been spending his holidays in the country, and who, on the sudden illness of the village parson, volunteered to take the duties)—A worse preacher would have done for us, sir, but we couldn't get one.

Absent-minded Professor—Delighted to meet you again after so many years, miss.

Elderly Lady—No longer miss, professor—I am married.

Professor—Married! Well, well, who would have thought that?

Willie had swallowed a penny, and his mother was in a state of much alarm. "Helen," she called to her sister in the next room, "send for a doctor; Willie has swallowed a penny!" The terrified and frightened boy looked up imploringly. "No, mamma," he interposed, "send for the minister." "The minister?" asked the mother, incredulously, "send for the minister?" "Yes. Because papa says our minister can get money out of anybody."

"The study of the occult sciences interests me very much," remarked the new boarder. "I love to explore the dark depths of the mysterious, to delve into the regions of the unknown, to fathom the unfathomable, as it were, and to——" "May I help you to some of the hash, professor?" interrupted the landlady. And the good woman never knew why the other boarders smiled audibly.—Chicago News.

A little girl had sent back her plate for turkey two or three times, and had been helped bountifully to all the good things. Finally, she was observed looking rather disconsolately at the unfinished part of her dinner. "What's the matter, Ethel?" asked Uncle John. "You look so mournful." "That's just the matter," said Ethel. "I am mor'n full." And then she wondered why everybody laughed.

The virtues of a keen business man are often negative rather than positive. It is said that a great broker once told his son that only two things were necessary to make a great financier. "And what are those, papa?" the son asked. "Honesty and sagacity." "But what do you consider the mark of honesty to be?" "Always to keep your word." "And the mark of sagacity?" "Never to give your word."

Canon Wilberforce was giving a lesson on Jacob's ladder and the angels in a village school. He then invited any child present to ask a question. Whereupon an ingenious lad asked how it was the angels wanted a ladder when they had wings. The questioner was a little nonplussed; but, wanting to know what was floating in the children's brains, he called up a little chap and said, "Tommy, can you explain that?" "I suppose," said the urchin, "cos they was a-moultin'."

Blomfield, Bishop of London, was once asked to preside at a meeting of the debating society of a certain theological college, where the students were all young men deadly in earnest. One of these gentlemen, in the course of debate, with strong indignation evident in his voice, addressing the chair, inquired oratorically, "What, sir, would the Apostle Paul have said could he have seen the life of luxury led by our present race of prelates and church dignitaries, riding about in their carriages and living in their palaces? What, sir, I repeat, would he have said?" "I think," said the bishop, interrupting the speaker in a meek and mild voice, "that he would have said, 'Things in the Church must be looking up!'"

Abraham Lincoln said a great many wise things, but perhaps he never gave better advice than at one time to Secretary Stanton. Mr. Stanton, it seems, was greatly vexed because an army officer had refused to understand an order, or, at all events, had not obeyed. "I believe I'll sit down," said Stanton, "and give that man a piece of my mind." "Do so," said Mr. Lincoln, "write it now while you have it on your mind. Make it sharp; cut him all up." Stanton did not need another invitation. It was a bone-crusher that he read to the president. "That's right," said Abe, "that's a good one." "Who can I get to send it by?" mused the secretary. "Send it?" replied Lincoln, "send it! Why, don't send it at all. Tear it up. You have freed your mind on the subject, and that is all that is necessary. Tear it up. You never want to send such letters; I never do!"

AT
THE

CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

THE INDESTRUCTIBLE ELEMENTS IN THE BIBLE.

JAMES M. CAMPBELL, D. D.

"The sum of thy word is truth." Ps. 119, 160.

MUCH of the criticism of today is destructive rather than constructive. It pulls down instead of building up. The path of the destructive critic is like the track of the cyclone.

In olden time "a man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon thick trees." Today a theologian has no surer way to notoriety than to ply his axe upon the cherished doctrines of the Christian faith. The justification of the woodman in his work of destruction is that he provides timber for useful purposes. The iconoclastic critic ought to be able to give a like justification for his work. If he tears down the old, decaying edifice, and clears away the rubbish of the centuries, it ought to be for the purpose of finding foundation points for a new building.

Signs abound in earth and air and sky that the winter time of destruction through which the Church has been passing is at length giving way to a spring time of reconstruction. Nor has the change come too soon. In the present period of transition, the truth which stands in need of special emphasis is that there are things in the revelation of God and his Word which the flight of time can never change or destroy; in other words, that there are in the Bible indestructible elements. Of what do these indestructible elements consist? We answer, they consist of the ethical and the spiritual.

The Bible contains and develops a system of unchangeable moral truth. There is at the heart of it an ethical lore which is imperishable. Go back to the Old Testament, and there you will find a code of laws which is accepted as the standard of morality to-day. The existence of such a moral code is a marvel when we consider the state of the world when it was written. How can its existence be explained, save on the ground of supernatural illumination and revelation?

It would be absurd to claim that all parts of the Bible are of equal ethical value; and it would be equally absurd to claim that none of the teachings of the Old Testament shock our moral sentiments. We pity the man who could endorse the spirit of revenge and cruelty which breathes in the words, "O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed, happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us. Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones" (Psalm cxxxvii.). What a long step there is between these words of revenge and the words of forgiveness taught by the gentle Christ: "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, bless them that curse you, pray for them that despitefully use you." Yet alongside these inhumane things, which must be set down to the influence of a dark and barbarous age, we find the revelation of a purer morality than the world had yet known—a morality which man unaided could never have discovered. This moral system was far beyond the people to whom it was given. It presented to them an ideal which was ever above them, an ideal which was a constant rebuke to their carnal and sinful lives; an ideal by which they were educated and molded; an ideal which was to them a pillar of fire, guiding them from the bondage of sin into the liberty of holiness.

It is this moral element in the law which the Apostle Paul says "hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth." Whatever is moral is of everlasting obligation, it can never be annulled. Hence the decalogue of Moses is reinforced by Christ: "Think not," says the Master, "that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill."

The spiritual also is indestructible. Spiritual truth is eternal truth; it possesses something of the very life of the Eternal God from whom it came. St. Peter speaks of the incorruptible seed of the Word, by which we are born again. The imperishable seed of the Word is the living thought of the living God. The Bible is not a last year's almanac. It is a message coming to every age and to every soul, fresh from the heart of God. "The Word of God is quick and powerful"—that is, living and powerful, and hence "sharper than a two-edged sword." "The Bible," said Napoleon, "is more than a book, it is a living thing." And because living it is life-giving; through it God's life enters into human souls and makes them live.

All parts of the Bible, it is true, are not charged with the same measure of spiritual power. One spirit pervades the human body, but some parts of the body have more vitality than others. The heart, for example, has more vitality than the hands or feet—a man can live without hands or feet, but he cannot live without a heart. So, while the Holy Spirit pervades the whole Bible, some parts possess more of his quickening power than others. The living heart of the Bible is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The life of the world is Jesus; and the life of the Bible is Jesus. The Bible is a supernatural revelation, which has Jesus Christ for its sum and substance. As another has beautifully said: "What a babe's clothes are when the babe has slipped out of them into death, and the mother's arms clasp only raiment, would be the Bible if the Babe of Bethlehem and the truths of deep-heartedness that clothed his life should slip out of it.

It is clear, therefore, that the spirit and not the letter is the essential thing in Scripture. "What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." And yet it is the chaff upon which so many feed! Luther has well said that in our study of God's Truth it ought ever to be our aim to get through the shell to the kernel; through the bone to the marrow; through the letter to the spirit. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth"; "The letter killeth, the Spirit giveth life."

Beware of all idolatry of the mere letter! There is a literalism that strangles the life of the Bible. The Bible does not stand or fall by the infallibility of the letter. The gold of truth is there, even if man has mixed into it a few atoms of dross. The discovery of a few verbal errors of transcribers and translators does not remove the foundation of this divinely built structure. It has firmer ground to stand upon than the inerrancy of the letter. No good reason is there why there should be any shrinkage, much less any collapse of faith in God's Word. Let the winnowing work of the literary critic be welcomed; his is a providential mission. Of one thing we may be assured, no cardinal truth of Scripture ever has been, or ever can be, changed or destroyed. As England's foremost statesman has said, our faith rests on "the impregnable Rock of the Word of God."

The Bible is indeed a revelation of heavenly truth, but it is a revelation of heavenly truth in human life and history. God speaks to men in the language of men. The thought is divine; the word is human. God did not drop the Bible ready-made from heaven. He employed a fallible agent, when he might have employed an infallible instrument like the phonograph. He committed the heavenly treasure of his truth to the earthen vessels of human minds and human speech for the evident purpose that the excellency of the power might be seen to be of God and not of men.

When the skies are cleared, one result of the present discussions touching the subject of inspiration will be the clear out-shining of the almost forgotten truth that inspiration is a perpetual fact and experience; that God keeps in unbroken connection with man; that no age has a monopoly of his Spirit; that the operations of his Spirit, instead of being confined to apostles and prophets, are given to every man who is willing to be divinely led and taught.

The final revelation of God to man is that which is now being given to us by the Spirit. This is in accordance with the promise, "When he, the Spirit of Truth is come, he shall guide you into all truth." We are not to look for a new Bible, but we are to look for new light from the old Bible; we are not to look for a new Christ, but we are to look for larger visions of the Christ of the Gospels; we may not hope for something better than the Christianity of Christ, but we are to hope for fresh interpretations and applications of Christianity to meet the peculiar conditions and needs of the present age. The spiritual education of the race is not yet ended. God has not grown dumb. He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit is now saying to the churches, and to the world.

That the Bible should contain difficulties which none of us can solve is nothing more than might have been expected. There are difficulties in Nature and Providence, and why not in the Bible? A book that we could fathom with our little sounding-line of reason would be something less than a divine book. But what, meanwhile, are we to do with these difficulties? Leave them alone, and take that which is evident and clear. An old man once said: "Reading the Bible is like eating a fish. When I find a difficulty I lay it aside, and call it a bone. Why should I choke on the bones when there is so much nutritious meat for me?"

We must get to the meat—we must get to the spiritual element in the Bible, that our hungry hearts may feed upon that. It is the spiritual that satisfies, it is the spiritual that saves. In the transmission of his truth Christ seems to have been as careless of the form as he was careful of the spirit. "The words that I speak unto you," he says, "they are spirit and they are life." Just as some men are more soul than body, so the words of Christ are more spirit than letter; they are bursting with life; the divine glory is constantly breaking through them. There is not only more light to come from them there is also more life to come from them, "They are spirit and they are life."

The knowledge of these spiritual truths does not lie in grammar and lexicon; they are spiritually discerned. To know them we must live into them. To believe them we must prove them. We ought to be able to say with Thomas Erskine, "I do not believe the things contained in the Bible because I know it to be inspired; but I believe in its inspiration because I have proved the truth of the great things contained in it."

The correspondence between the words of revelation and our own experience is the best evidence that the Bible is a divine book. Concerning a book out of which God has spoken to our hearts; concerning a book which has brought to us a message of love and hope; concerning a book which has solved our darkest problems and met our deepest needs, we do not require to ask, Is it true? for we have the witness in ourselves that it is to us a word from heaven.

With this evidence to stand upon, questions touching the incidental things of revelation can no longer disturb our faith. What of it, if the chronological order of the books of the Old Testament has to be changed? What of it, if the Book of Genesis contains much that is legendary and traditionary? What of it, if Moses did not write the Pentateuch? What of it, if the Book of Jonah be an allegory and the Book of Job a drama? What of it, if Balaam's ass did not speak, or if Elisha's axe did not swim? Our faith in the Bible does not rest upon these things. When we can get, from any source, a higher morality than that which the Bible teaches; when we can get clearer light upon life and destiny than that which the Bible affords; when we can get a better Christ than the one whom the Bible reveals, we will give the old book up—but not before. Meanwhile, fighting down all rising doubts and fears, let us hold on to this precious book, which is the only revelation given to man of "God manifest in flesh"; the only satisfactory guide to present duty; the only certain light shining in this dark world, lighting up our path to the life beyond, and cheering us through our midnight hours, until the day dawns and the shadows flee away.

There are two ways of dealing with the evils in the world which we justly deplore, and wish to abolish; one is to attack and try to break them down forcibly; the other to dissolve or exhale them by the active presence of good. The former of these methods appears so much the most direct and obvious that it generally gains the first place in our attention. We see a wrong, and our impulse is to crush it; we see injustice, and we long to exterminate it; we observe an unrighteous institution, and we desire to overthrow it. The slower and less direct method of overcoming evil with good, of substituting a better way for that which is bad, of devoting the same energy to building up that we would have given to the work of tearing down, only obtains a gradual hold over us, with time and experience.

In the physical world, it is true, we have learned that this is the better method. Is our room filled with foul air? We do not weary ourselves with fruitless attempts to drive it out, we open our windows and let in the pure air and the warm sunbeams and presently the room is fresh and sweet again. So disease in the human body was once thought to be something tangible, that must be forcibly ejected from the system by the most stringent measures. Now it is regarded rather as an irregularity or defect of function than a positive existence, and the wise physician applies himself to strengthen the vital powers, and to enable the body to outgrow morbid tendencies by fullness of life.

BIBLE SCHOOL.*THE BOOK OF EXODUS.Lesson for Nov. 10, 1901. Ex. 1:1-14.Golden Text:—God Heard Their Groaning and God Remembered His Covenant. Ex. 2:24.A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

WHILE Genesis is a record of the Church as it existed in private families, Exodus gives an account of the growth of the people of God into a nation. Genesis appears in the form of an orderly, historical narrative. Exodus, together with the three books that follow, are different in this regard. The form of these is less simple; there is a blending of records which pertain (1) to the establishment of a new and peculiar system of religion; (2) to the delivery of the civil and religious law; (3) to national history, but in no well-defined order. Egyptian monuments furnish striking proofs of the veracity of the sacred narratives respecting the bondage in Egypt. The moral lessons of Exodus are of far-reaching significance. Referring to the experience of Israel in Egypt and subsequently, it is distinctly stated by the apostle Paul that "all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come." 1 Cor. 10: 11. Thus the Egyptian bondage and deliverance vividly suggest the bondage to and deliverance from sin. Luke 4: 18; Rom. 8: 15, 21; 2 Cor. 11: 20; Gal. 2: 4; 4: 3. Passing through the Red Sea foreshadows the passing into the newness of spiritual life. 1 Cor. 10: 1, 2. The manna of which the Israelites ate (Ex. 16: 14, 15) and the rock from which they drank (Ex. 17: 6) teach of Christ, the spiritual Bread and the spiritual Rock. 1 Cor. 10: 3, 4. The pass-over lamb was a type of the Lamb of God. John 1: 29; 1 Cor. 5: 7. The brazen serpent (Num. 21: 9) foreshadowed the lifted Son of Man (John 3: 14, 15) and so forth, all to the end that we may become wise unto salvation. 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.

Setting of the Lesson.

Exodus means departure. The place of the lesson was Goshen in Egypt. The sojourn in Egypt extends from Jacob's descent to that land B. C. 1706 to the exodus B. C. 1491, a period of two hundred and fifteen years. From Galatians 3: 17 it would appear that "the four hundred and thirty-six years" (Gen. 15: 13; Ex. 12: 40) included the entire period from the covenant call of Abraham out of Haran into Canaan, "a strange country" (Heb. 11: 9), to the giving of the law, which took place within a year after the exodus.

V. 1-4. Family Roll. "Now these are the names." This marks a connecting link with the preceding account in Genesis. The design is to show the literal fulfillment of the promise to Abraham that his seed should be multiplied exceedingly. Gen. 12: 2; 18: 18. * * * "Every man." The heads of the families or clans only were given. * * * "And his household came." That the households of the patriarchs may have included many persons is shown by that of Abraham's household in which there were at least three hundred and eighteen servants who could bear arms. Gen. 14: 14. Again Isaac's camp consisted of "a great store of servants," which made him mightier than some neighboring kings. Gen. 26: 14, 16.

V. 5. Small Beginnings. "Were seventy souls." The number is repeated from Gen. 46: 8-26, where the names of the persons are given. Jacob himself (Gen. 46: 27), his sons, grandsons, his daughter Dinah, his granddaughter Serah, a daughter of Asher, are there mentioned. Gen. 46: 17. The number seventy made prominent at this crisis was perpetuated in the seventy elders (Ex. 24: 1; Num. 11: 16), and later in the seventy apostles. Luke 10: 1. The twelve brethren (Gen. 42: 13) correspond with the twelve chief apostles. Luke 9: 1. * * * "For Joseph was in Egypt already." At first when the Hebrew shepherds had a friend at court, their migration was attended by happy results, but in time a distressing change came.

V. 6. "Dust Thou Art." "And Joseph died." This fact is repeated to add completeness to the record. God takes away the workman but carries on the work. Joseph had saved many lives (Gen. 43: 8; 50: 20), but there came a time when he must pass away. He died at the age of one hundred and ten years. His burial place was Shechem. Ex. 13: 19. * * * "And all his brethren." The briefest possible obituary of Jacob's sons. Little appears about them apart from Joseph. * * * "And all that generation." Including the Egyptians and Pharaoh. V. 8. The verse forcibly shows that there is no escape from the law laid down when sin entered the world. Gen. 2: 17; 3: 19. It is a sober fact that within a few generations every one of the millions in our land will have died.

V. 7. Unprecedented Increase. "And the children of Israel were fruitful." God had variously promised Abraham that he would make him a great nation and exceedingly fruitful. Gen. 12: 2; 17: 6. Later it was specified that this would take place in Egypt. Gen. 46: 3. This was "the time of promise," which became historical. Acts 7: 17, 18; Ps. 105: 24. * * * "Increased abundantly." Swarmed as fishes. The ordinary increase of families in Egypt, according to historians, was remarkable, to which must be added the fulfillment of God's special promise to Abraham. * * * "And multiplied." All the expressions in this brief statement are designed to emphasize the surprising increase of this people from family to clan, to nation. * * * "Waxed exceedingly mighty." They were strong in numbers, and being of hardy stock they collectively represented great power. * * * "Land filled with them." The land of Goshen allotted to Jacob's family. The original number that "multiplied" (V. 7) unto two million or more souls that left Egypt (for warriors alone see Num. 1: 46), was not merely the seventy named in V. 5, but "households" (Gen. 45: 11) of herdsmen and retainers, probably numbering hundreds each and including men, women and children (Gen. 46: 7), a total, likely, of two thousand or three thousand persons. Deut. 10: 22.

V. 8. Political Revolution. "There rose up a new king." Not in the ordinary succession, but a king of a new dynasty. It was about sixty years after the death of Joseph that Egypt was convulsed by political revolution, in which the old dynasty of the shepherd kings was overthrown and upper and lower Egypt became one kingdom. The new king, it is believed, was either Thotmes III. or Rameses II., the Sesostris of Greek history, the dynasty being the 19th of Egypt. In July, 1881, the actual body of this Ramesis II., known as the Pharaoh of the oppression, was discovered near Thebes. The identity is unquestionable. The remains are in the museum of Bulaq, near Cairo, Egypt. * * * "Which knew not Joseph." As the butler, whom Joseph had befriended, forgot his friend, so the new ruler, whose people had been helped through years of famine, soon forgot the nation's Savior. Forgetfulness easily becomes a great sin. The object of the ordinance of the Lord's Supper is that we may not forget the death of our Savior.

V. 9. Exciting Race Prejudices. "Behold." Investigation of this people and their amazing prolificacy on the part of the king called forth great astonishment. So the word "Behold" indicates. * * * "Children of Israel are more and mightier than we." Egypt's experience with the Hyksos, or Shepherd Kings, who, as invaders, had gained and held the supremacy over that nation for many years, would set the new king to strengthen himself as against these shepherds from Canaan.

V. 10. Exaggerated Alarm. "Deal wisely." Their policy must be shrewd, for the circumstances of the people's increase were extraordinary. But the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. 1 Cor. 3: 18-20. This was only one of innumerable times that men "have taken crafty counsel against God's counsel," only to fail. Ps. 83: 3, 4; Acts 12: 24; 23: 12; Phil. 1: 12. * * * "Lest they join also unto our enemies." Egypt's greatest enemies had always been peoples to the east and north beyond Goshen, hence approach would be from that direction. The danger was greater because of the recent political revolution which marked the new king's incoming. But perhaps the true reason was the desire for cheap, servile labor to build great national works. * * * "And get them up out of the land." The policy decided upon was to retain this prolific people as forced laborers for prospective, stupendous national works, instead of permitting them to unite their strength with enemies and thus be lost to Egypt, while weakening the nation.

V. 11. Cold-Blooded Measures. "Did set over them taskmasters." The Egyptians possibly at first imposed a ruinous rent. The measure under the taskmasters was that of forced labor for the king, not the reducing of them to slavery in the ordinary sense of private ownership. Such was a common course with ancient rulers when carrying out their ambitious ideas. Solomon resorted to it in a way that brought discredit on his reign. Compare 1 Kings 5: 13, 14 with 12: 11, 14. * * * "To afflict them with their burdens." Tristram reveals the cruelty practiced when he says, "The peasantry were ground down to the lowest state of degradation compelled by the Kurbash, a weapon worse than the whips of Solomon (1 Kings 12: 11), until recently abolished by English occupation." The heartless expenditure of human life on so great yet useless a work as the Egyptian pyramids, although probably built earlier, show the small value placed by that nation's rulers on men's lives and strength. As a modern lecturer has said, "Up from the sands arise those huge blocks of stone, a testimony to the greatness of Pharaoh and to the abundance and cheapness of human life. In the quarries and on the roads, on the machinery and on the walls, for a score of years toiled every day a hundred thousand men, wageless, underfed, scourged, overworked, sick, dizzy, exhausted, their only hospital the taskmaster's whip, which stimulated into one last agonizing effort the exhausted muscles of the used-up body." The ancient monuments picture Egyptian severity, in the form of heavy burdens borne by naked backs under savage whips wielded by taskmasters. But this servitude is a lively image of man's bondage to the sins of intemperance and other vices * * * "And they built for Pharaoh treasure cities." Store cities. R. V. They were cities designed to strengthen the kingdom by means of storing arms and provisions, necessary for troops and caravans about to cross the desert. * * * "Pithom and Rameses." These cities were located between the Nile and the site of the present Suez canal at Ismailia. In 1883-84 Pithom was discovered about twelve miles west of Ismailia. Here were found enormous ruins, the bricks of which bear the inscription of Pi Tum (Pithom). Specimens of these bricks can be found in some modern museums. Pithom was the religious name. Its civil name was Succoth, the place, according to Prof. Sayce, from which the Israelites started on their march. Ex. 13: 20. Rameses has not been found.

V. 12. Fruitless Opposition. "The more they afflicted them." They afflicted them, not alone by oppression, but they ordered the male children to be killed. V. 16, 22. * * * "The more they multiplied." The more God blessed them in the way of becoming a great nation. It was he who, as the Psalmist sings, "increased his people greatly." Ps. 105: 24. So affliction of Christ's church has resulted in a multiplied church. Within a few months of our Savior's crucifixion his followers had increased many fold over their earlier numbers. * * * "Were grieved." The meaning is more than our understanding of the expression. It indicated a mixture of loathing and alarm.

V. 13. Symbol of Sin Service. "To serve with rigor." The word rigor is derived from a root which means to break into pieces, to crush. So sin imposes the "works of the flesh." Gal. 5: 19-21. These form a bondage stronger than chains, the bondage of bad habits, with attending disease, remorse and fear of future punishment. Augustine said that "a wicked man, though he were a king, is yet enslaved."

V. 14. Fellowship and Suffering. "Made their lives bitter with hard bondage." The bitter bondage did not achieve the end sought, while it did solidify the Israelites. More than this, it prepared them to accept the Word from the God of Abraham, and to long for the land of promise. How much bitterness is caused in families and among friends by the acts of those who should be the bearers of the sorrow and care of others. Do I cause any one's life to be bitter? * * * "In mortar and in brick." On ancient monuments parties of these brick makers are shown depicted with taskmasters beside them having uplifted sticks. Ruins of great brick structures are found in all parts of Egypt. One consequence of this severe treatment would be that it would develop in the Israelites an honest regard for the feelings of their fellows. Another, that the experience of Egyptian bondage became an inheritance which bound the Hebrews together, and in spite of their tribal differences made them a nation. In addition, the rescue of the Israelites was so clearly a work of Divine power that they were the more fully trained to trust in God. The apostle Paul testified to the helpfulness of the fellowship of suffering with Christ. Phil. 3: 10.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

OD hears everything. Not only our words, but the unspoken thoughts fall upon his ear. The Indian bends to the earth to catch the sound and his sensitive hearing is able to locate movements at considerable distance. The ear of the Almighty is turned toward the earth, and no sound passes by him unnoticed. Amid all our sufferings God listens to our groanings. Perhaps it is in the midnight and every person in the house is asleep, but you are suffering and you may be thinking that no one hears your groaning, but the Lord's ear is not deaf. God does hear. His ear is always open unto our prayer—pressed close up to the lips of his children. Perhaps there is trouble on your heart, such a trouble that you feel that you cannot mention it to your most trusted friend. You suffer alone and yet you are not alone, for God hears your sadness, for even sadness can be heard by the Almighty. You have been helped sometimes by simply having some one listen to your trouble. May be they cannot help you—just listen and no more, but when you finished telling the story you closed it by saying, "It has been a great relief to me just to tell somebody about this," and so you were helped. Sympathy is more valuable than gold. Now God hears you and you are helped in telling him your troubles, but more, God is able to help and does help. He may not help as you expect, but he helps as his infinite wisdom directs and there is joy in the simple thought that God hears our groaning. And, too, he remembers his covenant. It is said elsewhere, "The word of God cannot be broken." What he promises he is always able to perform, and God delights in doing for us. His promises are based upon his love. The whole Bible is simply a book of promises over-arched with God's everlasting covenant. He forgets our sins, but he does not forget his love for us. It is a joyful thought that God remembers. He remembers his covenant with us, and whatever we may think as to God's keeping of that covenant, he is going to keep it. God's part is always all right. There is no place for worry there. You need not give it a thought except it be a thought of gratitude and joy. That covenant is everlasting, and while our part of it is marred and broken, God's part remains in perfect beauty and can never be marred. Things may go wrong from our way of thinking, but God will make all things right to that degree that we give ourselves into his keeping. He is the Lord.

Our Father, since thou are hearing always, help us that we shall not complain of thy dealings with us or that a murmur shall escape our lips. Amen.

A man who has good judgment has the same advantage over men of any other qualifications whatsoever as one that can see would have over a blind man of ten times the strength.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

OUR NATIONAL BONDAGE.

Topics Nov. 10.—Ref., Hab. 1:13-17; Amos 6:1-6.

HIS topic is striking in its wording. The liquor traffic has become our national bondage. There is no question but the saloon power is a mighty factor in our national, state and municipal government. We may say with the Pharisees of Jesus' time, "We are free! We have not been in bondage to any man!" Yet, like these, we are bound by our own sins, or by the customs and laws which we have established. The liquor traffic is entrenched behind the social customs of centuries; the business habits of this abnormally business age; and, more than all, in the political complexity and perplexity of our very institutions and constitutions of freedom. The children of this world, who run the breweries and distilleries and grogshops and gilded palaces of infamy and intemperance, also manage the machine-politics of our states and municipalities. The children of light seem strangely unconscious or surprisingly indifferent to this dominant policy of the organized liquor business.

The Devil's "Drag-Net."

"They take up all of them with the angle, they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag; therefore they rejoice and are glad. Therefore they sacrifice unto their net, and burn incense unto their drag; because by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous. Shall they therefore empty their net, and not spare continually to slay the nations?"

Whatever may have been the "burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see," this language certainly well describes the conditions in our own land and age. The whole abominable liquor traffic is the devil's drag-net. It is dragging us all down by its enticing power of alcohol; by its insinuating appeal to the commercialism of the age; by its debasing influences in controlling the policies of political parties and the management of municipal affairs. This is not poetical or prophetic imagination, but stern and awful fact.

"At Ease in Zion."

"Woe to them that are at ease in Zion!" This is the message for the hour in the conflict with the saloon power. The vast majority of Christians and temperate, upright citizens, are dwelling in a fancied security. We are trusting in the mountain of Samaria—in the poetical ideals of freedom; in the sublimely ridiculous notions that Providence or "manifest destiny" will somehow work out good from all this corrupting commercialism and Tammany and con-Tamminating influences of the rum power in our industrial, social and political life.

The blame for the perpetuation of the liquor traffic, and for every form of license law, must rest on the Christian citizens and voters of this country. We cannot shirk the responsibility. We must create public sentiment. We must outlaw the devil in politics. We must destroy his drag-net or it will destroy us.

Putting Away the Evil Day.

To put away the evil day by indifference, or for policy's sake; for commercial interests, or for party politics, is to "cause the seat of violence to come near,"

and to bind upon our social and industrial and civil life the ever-increasing burdens and unspeakable infamies of the liquor traffic.

Wapello, Ia.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

JOSEPH EXALGED.

"Them that honour Me I will honour, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed."—1 Samuel 2. 30.

Monday—Genesis 41: 1-13.

IT is better when gratitude comes late than when it never reveals itself at all. But it is best when it flows forth at once, spontaneously, irresistibly, victoriously.

Thus let it be with my gratitude to my human friend. I have many a counsellor, helper, comrade, to whom I am indebted for untold benefits. Do I thank these succourers of my heart as quickly and as cordially as I might? I fear that, like the Egyptian butler, I am much to blame for my forgetfulness. And thus let it be, even more undeniably, with my gratitude to my divine Friend. In the prison Jesus came to me. He dispelled my forebodings, he changed my terrors into peace, my midnight into noonday. He opened the door for me out of the dungeon into the palace. But have I not repaid him with coldness and indifference and neglect? Ah, God, kindle the fires in my wintry soul. May Jesus fill my whole horizon. May he lead me, a willing captive, behind his chariot wheels.

Tuesday—Genesis 41: 13-32.

God discloses his hidden thoughts to those who are scholars in his school. Scholars in the school of meditation. I must sit down with the Book of books open before me. I must make a silence in my soul, that my Lord and his message may have freedom to speak to me. I must receive his Word with attention. I must apply it to myself. And scholars in the school of prayer. Ah, but let me be sure that the prayer is earnest, simple, true. It must be an aitema, the asking of a suppliant heart. It must be a deesis, the cry of a broken heart. It must be a proseuche, the vow of an adoring heart. It must be an enteuxis, the familiar speech of a childlike heart. It must be a eucharistia, the thanksgiving of a grateful heart. And scholars in the school of sorrow. Sometimes my blessed Master cannot get an opportunity to talk with me, until he has withdrawn me into the garden of agony, into the wilderness of bereavement, into the prisonhouse of persecution. Then he draws near, and in the days of adversity I learn to understand him better and to love him more than in the years of success. Thus I am admitted to his secrets. Thus I am qualified to teach others.

Wednesday—Genesis 41: 33-45.

Joseph is the best Prime Minister of the earthly king, because he is the humble servitor of the heavenly. Do you remember how Andrew Melville talked with King James in Falkland Palace? "Therefore, sir, as divers times before, so now again, I must tell you, there are two kings, and two kingdoms in Scotland. There is Christ Jesus, the King, whose subject James the Sixth is, and of whose kingdom not a king nor a head nor a lord, but a member." There spoke the soldier and the hero—yes, and there spoke the monarch's sagest counsellor and safest friend. Should I not desire and pray that my king—God save King Edward the Seventh!—may have about his throne men of wisdom and men of grace? It is of lesser moment by what party name they call themselves, but it is of infinite moment that they fear God first and honor the king next. Over in Ireland the other day, I lifted a newspaper and read its motto, Pro rege saepe, pro patria semper—"For the sovereign often, for the fatherland always." It is a good motto, but it would be better still if a third clause were added, Pro Christo maxime—"For the Christ most of all." Ever around the royal seat of Britain, "this precious stone set in the silver sea," may Christian men stand.

Thursday—Genesis 41: 46-57.

God not only makes his true children forget all their toil, but makes them fruitful in the land of their affliction. Thus do they win the fruit of knowledge. There is an unscaling of the vision, there is an enlargement of the mind, when sorrow is sanctified and when patience fulfills her perfect work. Some Bible truths, some Divine mysteries, only grow plain and potent to the soul which, like Joseph and like Christ, has trodden the winepress alone. Thus, also, do they win the fruit of sympathy. The tenderest hearts, the hearts most skillful to soothe and comfort and relieve, are the hearts that have passed through the hot crucible of trial. They have a word in season for him who is weary; how weary they have been themselves! They know how to lighten the weight of the burden; how it pressed once on them! And thus, too, do they win the fruit of holiness. Trouble, when God is with the troubled one, cleanses the nature in marvelous ways. Superfluous things are discarded; doubtful things are fore-sworn; sinful things are bidden peremptorily, "Get thee behind me, Satan." And the man comes forth larger, stronger, purer, more fully fashioned into the likeness of Christ. In the land of my affliction may my harvests grow, my orchards thrive, my gardens blossom into beauty.

Friday—Acts 7: 9-16.

Let me overcome evil with good, as Joseph did when he supplied the necessities of the brothers who had sold him into slavery. It is the habit of nature. She takes the slag which has been thrown out of the mine, and over the ugly thing she throws her mosses and lichens, till the violated place has become wondrously beautiful again. From the battlefield where red death has come to brave men, she calls forth in richest measure the corn and the wheat. She is full of living kindness. It is the habit of the angels. "They for me fight, they watch and duly ward. And their bright squadrons round about me plant, And all for love and nothing for reward." Though I am forgetful of them, though I go on my way heedless and unconcerned, they do not cease their regard for me. They are glad to be ministering spirits to every heir of salvation. Best of all, it is the habit of God. The Father gave up his Son for me, so unthankful and unworthy. The Son died for me, wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked. The Spirit is well-content to make his home in my backward and unbelieving and sin-tarnished soul. The transcendent goodness of my God—surely, it is "darkness to my intellect but sunshine to my heart." So I am in the best of company if I forgive and forget.

Saturday—Psalm 105: 7-22.

"He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance." Even so Christ Jesus is my sole and sufficient King. If I am to be fed with the fine wheat of his inexhaustible granaries, if in my hunger for holiness and for comfort and for guidance he is to supply all my need, it will only be if I comply with his commandments and submit to his ruling. Joseph was autocratic, and so is Jesus; in little things and in great he demands my obedience. "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it"—there are my marching orders. But, when I carry them out, I discover that my waterpots are filled with the wine of God. Therefore I would receive him, not only as the Prophet, who teaches me by the leadings of his providence, and by the penetrating light of his Word, and by the inner voices of his Holy Spirit; and not only as the Priest, who long since offered himself in my stead, and to-day for me "pleads his own fulfillment of all laws"; but as the King, the One Good Despot, the blessed Tyrant, the absolute Master of my thought and my speech and my history.

Sunday—Romans 8: 18-28.

If the Apostle is right, and all things in the Christian's life work together for good, how true are George MacDonald's verses! I give them to you this Sabbath morning.

"Every time would have its song,
If the heart were right;
Seeing Love all tender, strong,
Fills the day and night.

"Weary drop the hands of prayer
Calling out for peace;
Love always and everywhere
Sings and does not cease.

"Yea, Love singeth in the vault,
Singeth on the stair;
Ever for sorrow will not halt,
Singeth everywhere.

"For the Great Love everywhere
Over all doth glow,
Draws His birds up through the air,
Tends His birds below.

"Therefore if my heart were right,
I should sing out clear;
Sing aloud both day and night
Every day in the year."

One of the innumerable stories about Bishop Phillips Brooks is that one day, being absorbed with work, he instructed his servant not to admit visitors, but while these orders were being enforced the bishop happened to show himself at the front door, where he recognized an old classmate. The visitor was taken in cordially, much to the chagrin of the servant, who afterward remonstrated with his master at being treated so. "Why," said the servant, "you told me that you would be so busy that you wouldn't see the Angel Gabriel if he called." "Yes," answered the bishop, "I did say that and I meant it. But there's all the difference in the world between Gabriel and my friend. I'm bound to see Gabriel anyway in the next world, but as there is some doubt about my seeing this man there it was only right that I should see him here when he took the trouble to call upon me."

A smart student once asked Dr. Morgan of Oberlin if he could not shorten his course of study into the ministry. His answer was, "When God wishes to make an oak he takes many years to complete his work; if he would make a squash a few weeks would suffice."—Oklahoma Outlook.

General Church News

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL.

Once in three years there is held a representative council of the Congregational churches. It has no legislative power, but it discusses current matters of importance relating to the denomination, and its recommendations to the churches and to the missionary, educational and benevolent societies carry considerable weight. It is always considered an honor to be chosen a member of the council or to be given a place on the program. This year the council met at Portland, Maine, October 12-17. Rev. F. A. Noble, D. D., of Chicago, the retiring Moderator, called the body to order. Prayer was offered by Rev. Moses Smith of Chicago, who, though blind to things outward, has the open spiritual vision, and led the council at the start towards heavenly things. After welcome by Mayor Boothby of Portland and a fine address from Dr. Noble on the question, "How Far Our Preaching Ought to be Modified to Meet the Changed Condition of the Times," officers and committees were elected. Rev. A. H. Bradford of Montclair, N. J., was elected Moderator.

The reports of officials and committees occupied the second session. The National Council Ministerial Relief Fund assets amount now to $125,135. Fifty-eight persons are receiving aid from it. Secretary Anderson's report for the three years shows a net gain in churches of thirty-six, the total now being 5,650. The memberships of these churches is 633,349, a gain of 7,485. The total additions were 137,277, of which number 76,804 were received on confession. The Sunday school membership is 671,743, and that of the young people's societies, 186,448. The benevolences for the three years amount to $6,214,570, a falling off of $547,260.

Rev. Dan F. Bradley of Grand Rapids, Mich., read the first paper. Its topic was "Doctrine as Related to Effective Preaching." "Effective preaching," he said, "is preaching that produces results. Doctrine has everything to do with effective preaching. As a man thinks in his heart so is he, and he thinks in his heart very much as his preacher is able to convince him or fails to convince him. Average men in our time do not care much for doctrine that is strictly denominational. Men greet with pleasure the doctrines of God's love as revealed in Christ, of God's complete Fatherhood, of human brotherhood and Good Samaritanism." Discussion followed. Dr. P. S. Moxom contended that the only preaching of doctrine which could be effective must be that born of experience and phrased in language of today.

In the evening Prof. Williston Parker of Yale University gave a paper on "The Type of Character Favored by Congregationalism," and Rev. James G. Vose of Providence, one on the "Sacraments—Their Function in Personal Life and in Enlargement and Improvement of the Churches." President Slocum of Colorado College emphasized that liberty is the right to obey Christ, and that this truth is the secret of the stalwartism in Congregationalism. In closing the session Moderator Bradford referred to the high level reached on this first day.

On Sunday the council sermon was delivered by President Tucker of Dartmouth College. From the text, "When the Son of Man Cometh, Shall He Find Faith on the Earth?" he gave a challenge fitted to the times, indicating the lack and the need. "The absolute loyalty or faith of a generation must be measured by its intellectual attitude to Christianity, by the depth of its moral passion, and by the timeliness of its action." The pulpits of the city, with the exception of the Episcopal and the Adventist, were filled by council delegates.

After a business session on Monday, welcome was given to foreign delegates. In the afternoon several papers dealt with the relations of the seminaries, and were followed by vigorous debate. Among the speakers were Presidents Fuller of Drury College and Penrose of Whitman, Rev. W. A. Waterman of Terre Haute, Ind., Rev. William A. Bartlett of Lowell, pastor-elect of the First church, Chicago, etc. Rev. A. E. Winship, editor of The Journal of Education, gave an address upon "What Help May the Public Schools Expect from the Churches?" The counterpart was treated by Mr. W. W. Stetson, state superintendent of Maine public schools.

In the evening President Hyde of Bowdoin College read a paper on "The Social Mission of the Country Church." It was eloquent, suggestive and bold. A beautifully illuminated address from the John Robinson Memorial church, Gainsborough, England, framed in oak a century old, was presented by Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon of London. To the building of this church the National council has pledged $5,000 in memory of Rev. John Robinson, a Pilgrim father. "The Christian Man as a Citizen," was treated by Dr. Samuel G. Smith of St. Paul, Minn., in the absence of Dr. Hillis. On Tuesday, "Needful Reform in the Methods and in the Instruction of the Sunday School" was considered by Rev. A. E. Dunning of Boston, "The Spiritual Trend of Young People's Organizations," by Rev. C. M. Southgate of Auburndale, Mass., and "The Spiritual Nurture of Children," by Rev. C. H. Richards of Philadelphia. There was opportunity for debate on all these papers, and many suggestive thoughts were thereby developed. The papers on Wednesday afternoon were by Dr. H. A. Schauffler on "Foreign Elements in American Civilization," and by Rev. J. C. Armstrong of Chicago, on "City Evangelization." Wednesday evening had a varied program of missionary appeal, fraternal greetings, a profound paper by President Buckham of the University of Vermont on "Christianity a World-Wide Movement," and an aggressive speech by Rev. Nehemiah Boynton of Detroit. On Thursday Rev. T. C. McClelland of Newport, R. I., gave a paper on "Woman's Work in Our Churches," and Dr. S. M. Newman of Washington, D. C., spoke on "The Spiritual Mission of Congregationalism."

The business transacted by the council may be summed up as follows, so far as it touches general interests: It recommended several lines of action for furthering the benevolent work of the churches, chief of which is a personal solicitation of every member of every church for a contribution to the work of the six societies, and a partial federation of the work of the societies; it named a committee to report on the enrichment of the worship of the churches; it endorsed the plans of the seminaries to train women as deaconesses; a vigorously worded resolution denounced the evil of lynching, and the lawless treatment of the southern negroes; it commended the project of providing pastoral care, religious instruction and helpful Christian influence for the students at our state universities. A Congregational building has been already established in connection with the University of Michigan and is supported by the State Association. The council urged ministers to withhold sanction of the remarriage of persons divorced on other than scriptural grounds, not applying this, however, to the innocent party. It unanimously endorsed the Anti-Saloon League.

The social side of the council meeting was not neglected. Bowdoin College entertained the more than 350 delegates and the visitors accompanying them, making a goodly company of some 450, which left on special train for Brunswick one afternoon. The Portland people and churches gave a reception to the council, at which there was brief but witty speech-making.

The farewell service fitted the conclusion of a council notable for the spiritual and intellectual strength of its discussions. After the reading of Psalm 19, Rev. G. H. Ide of Milwaukee, read a paper on "The Living Christ, a Vital Force in Pulpit and Pew," and Rev. C. E. Jefferson of New York, made an address on "Consecrated Personality a Supreme Need of the Church Today." "It is the open scandal of Christendom that when the Church gets a man today she gets only a fraction of him. If you ask the cause of this slack allegiance, may we not find it in the decadence of Calvinism as a ruling power in modern life?" With the Moderator's address the eleventh triennial council closed. In his opinion the council made it plain: (1) That the eyes of Congregationalists are toward the future. (2) That they are as loyal as ever to the essential truths of the Christian revelation. (3) That their churches are essentially missionary churches. (4) That they are inclined to emphasize their points of agreement with other Christians more than their points of difference.

THE TRIENNIAL CONVENTION OF THE EPISCOPALIANS.

With impressive ceremonies the first general convention of the Episcopal church ever held on the Pacific coast began its deliberations Oct. 2. Sixty-nine bishops took part in the procession that entered Trinity church for the opening service. The venerable bishop of Oregon, Rt. Rev. Dr. Morris, preached the sermon. It was missionary in character.

Upon organization of the House of Deputies, roll call showed the largest attendance ever had, 374 responding out of a possible 474, and at later sessions this number was increased. Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, who has presided over the house for the last five years, being unable to be present, Rev. John S. Lindsay, D. D., of Massachusetts, was elected president.

The House of Bishops elected as its chairman the Rt. Rev. T. U. Dudley, bishop of Kentucky.

Among the notable things done by this convention was the creation of six new missionary districts; one to comprise the islands of Porto Rico and Vicque, another the Philippines, and a third in China to be known as Hankow. Western Kansas was created into a missionary district with the name of Salina, as was also Honolulu, and Cuba was erected into a foreign missionary district. Consent was given to the change of name of the diocese of Indiana to Indianapolis, and to the division of the diocese of Massachusetts.

A brilliant debate occurred over what is called the Huntington amendment, which reads as follows:

"But provision may be made by canon for the temporary use of other forms and directories of worship by congregations not in union with this church, who are willing to accept the spiritual oversight of the bishop of the diocese or missionary district."

There was warm opposition to it by many because its adoption would permit the disuse of the prayer book by such congregations as preferred other forms of worship. The amendment was finally defeated, but as an expression of opinion on the subject of Christian unity, both houses passed the following resolution:

"That it is the sense of this convention that a bishop of this church has the right to take under his spiritual oversight any congregation of Christian people not in communion with this church that may desire him to do so, and that it is further the sense of this convention that the use of the Book of Common Prayer is not obligatory under such circumstances, provided that such congregation be not admitted to union with the diocesan convention until it has organized as a parish or congregation of that character, in accordance with all canonical requirements and duly certified that the Book of Common Prayer is in use in such congregation."

Both houses agreed to make the presiding bishopric elective instead of by seniority, as heretofore.

The marginal readings of the Scriptures were approved, ordered published and permission given for their use in public worship.

In regard to a change in the name of the church it was decided to refer the matter to a joint committee of five bishops, five presbyters and five laymen, to report to the next convention. The name will therefore remain the Protestant Episcopal church for the next three years.

The new bishops elected are the following: For Olympia, Rev. Frederic W. Keator, rector of St. Paul's church, Dubuque, Iowa; for North Dakota, Rev. Cameron Mann, rector of Grace church, Kansas City; for Porto Rico, the Rev. William Cabell Brown, missionary in Brazil; for Hankow, the Rev. James A. Ingle, missionary at Hankow, China; for the Philippines, the Rev. Charles H. Brent, assistant at St. Stephen's, Boston. A commission was appointed to consider the grouping of dioceses into provinces.

A joint commission was appointed (1) To study carefully the aims and purposes of the labor organizations of our country; (2) In particular, to investigate the cause of industrial disturbances as they arise; and (3) To hold themselves in readiness to act as arbitrators, should their services be desired, between the men and their employers, with a view to bringing about mutual conciliation and harmony in the spirit of the Prince of Peace.

The committee on the state of the church reported a hopeful outlook for finances and growth.

That much-discussed canon on marriage and divorce was finally completely wrecked. It had a large vote in the House of Bishops and passed by a viva voce vote in Committee of the Whole of the House of Deputies, but it failed in the subsequent vote by dioceses and orders. The only salvage was the appointment of a joint commission to confer with other religious bodies to secure uniformity of practice in regard to marriage and divorce.

On the evening of October 8 a missionary mass meeting was held in Mechanics' Pavilion with 6,000 people at it. Just one man in all that crowd had been at the first meeting of churchmen on the Pacific coast in '49. The singing was led by all the vested choirs of the city and the suburban towns of Alameda, Oakland and Berkeley, accompanied by a large military band.

The convention sat as a board of missions during three or four evening sessions and discussed very earnestly the problems connected with the missionary work. The missionary exhibit in the Clark Crocker mansion was very fine.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

This body held its triennial gathering in San Francisco during the first week of the convention. The United Offering presented by the women of the auxiliaries all over the country, amounted to $104,295.53. The treasurer, Miss Julia Emery, reported the regular gifts and contributions of the past three years to be $1,260,940. A missionary mass meeting was held in the Alhambra theater. Great enthusiasm was evinced.

The Daughters of the King, the American Church Sunday School Institute, the Church Association for Advancement of the Interests of Labor, and other societies held individual meetings during the sessions of the general convention.

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

This association, which has the care of all the missionary work of the Congregational churches among the negroes, the southern Highlanders, the Indians and the Chinese in this country, and also the work in Cuba and Porto Rico, held its annual meeting this year under particularly happy conditions. The weather was ideal, the program had many noted speakers, and the well-planned arrangements for the comfort of the visitors made by the First Congregational church of Oak Park, Ill., Dr. William E. Barton, pastor, which entertained the gathering, all combined to make it a successful and enjoyable occasion. The fact that Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Roy, for many years the valued western secretary of the Association, is a member of long standing in this church, added to the interest of the event.

Tuesday afternoon, October 22, the meeting organized with the vice-president, Rev. Washington Gladden, D. D., in the chair. Routine business was transacted, followed by a concert of prayer. The treasurer reported the total of receipts for the year as $351,750.20, of which $49,202.91 was received from tuition fees in the various institutions established by the Association. The society enters the year without debt and with a small balance on hand.

The annual sermon was delivered by Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D. D., of Brooklyn, and was a forceful evangelical presentation of the power of a life lived for Christ and in Christ. The sermon was followed by the communion service, conducted by Rev. Dr. Roy. A resolution of appreciation of the act of President Roosevelt in inviting Booker T. Washington to dinner at the White House was passed by a rising vote.

Wednesday forenoon was devoted to reports from the Chinese, Indian, Alaskan and Porto Rico missions, with addresses from Rev. James Bixler of Connecticut, Rev. David Beaton, D. D., of Chicago, Rev. F. E. Ramsdell of New York, and F. G. Woodworth, D. D., president of Tongaloo University. In the afternoon church and educational work in the South was presented by Rev. Frank S. Fitch of Buffalo, and Rev. George E. Hall of New Hampshire. An increase of twenty-six churches and $16,300 in receipts is most encouraging. A fluctuating population in many localities, due to transient industries, indicated that a definite organization and a permanent building are not always desirable. As the people go elsewhere in quest of labor they must be followed by the preacher and his associates. Difficulties in consequence of political disturbance and the growing unwillingness of organized labor to admit the colored artisan to any of the skilled trades, were noted. The effort of the churches of colored people towards self-support and self-direction is encouraging. President Merrill of Fisk University spoke on the topic, "Cities, the Strategic Center for Our Missionary Work." The financial report was given by General William A. Aiken of Connecticut. In the evening two meetings were held, both having popular programs. Messages from the mission field were given at the First church; from the Porto Ricans, by Miss Jennie Blowers, in charge of the school there; from the Indians, by one of the missionaries, Rev. A. L. Riggs, D. D., of the Cheyenne River Agency; from the negroes, by one of their number, Rev. A. L. Planving, a young pastor and graduate of Straight University, whose enterprise and energy were a fine testimony to the training he had received in that institution; and from the Highlanders by a worker among them, Rev. Gilbert Walton of Tennessee. The program closed with a brief but effective address by Rev. J. W. Bradshaw of Oberlin on "Enlarged Fields and Increased Responsibilities Demand Increased Sympathy and Support."

At the Second Congregational church the meeting was for the young people and Christian Endeavorers. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, Miss Blowers, Miss La Grange and John Willis Baer. At both services the singing of the Fisk Jubilee Singers was a great attraction.

At the business session the Association reaffirmed its conviction that there should be a joint annual meeting of the six societies of the Congregational churches, in October of each year, and directed the executive committee to endeavor to arrange for such united meeting next year. It was also voted to co-operate with the other five societies in the publication of a united magazine, and to recommend that there should be but one joint treasurer in New York for the American Missionary Association, the Congregational Home Missionary Society and the Congregational Church Building Society. An advisory committee composed of representatives from the six societies was also voted for; the duties of said committee being to suggest plans by which there shall be harmony and co-operation in the raising of funds for the work of said societies.

Rev. Frederick A. Noble, D. D., of Chicago, desiring to be relieved of the cares of the presidency of the Association, Rev. Washington Gladden, D. D., LL. D., of Columbus, Ohio, was elected to that office. Arthur T. Hadley, LL. D., president of Yale University, with one other layman and three ministers, was elected vice president.

The woman's meeting was held Thursday afternoon under the direction of the secretary of the Bureau of Woman's Work, Miss D. E. Emerson of New York. The total receipts for the past year from the women's societies are $24,733.79, which amount is included in the report of the treasurer of the Association. This is a slight advance over the contributions of the previous years. Four hundred and fifty-one women have been in this missionary service during the past year; thirty among the Chinese, fifty-five among the Indians and Eskimos, seven in Porto Rico, fifty-one among the mountain people, and three hundred and eight among the colored people of the South. Seventeen of the graded and normal schools have been conducted wholly by women and the principal of one has become the pastor of the church. It is the rule and not the exception that a church results from the missionary work of an A. M. A. school. The entire school enrollment is more than 16,500 pupils. Several lady missionaries made addresses, winning much applause.

The closing session on Thursday evening was a fitting climax. The large church was crowded to hear Rev. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton of Detroit and Rev. R. R. Meredith, D. D., of Brooklyn. Both gave eloquent and stirring addresses, the former on the necessity and beauty of sacrifice, the latter on Americanism—what it is, what it has done, and the need for its revivifying today to combat the commercial spirit of the age and to secure "freedom for man as man; equal, absolute rights before the law for red or white, black or yellow. That is Americanism. Fling this American flag over every man, and stop this lynching!"

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION STATE CONVENTION.

The twenty-ninth annual convention for the state of Illinois was held at Dixon last week. The regular delegates numbered 260 and many visitors accompanied them. Among the speakers were Hon. George E. Foss, chairman of the naval committee of the House of Representatives; Fred B. Smith of the International Committee; Edgar A. Bancroft, vice president of the Chicago & Indiana railroad; Rob-

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in The Christian Century.

ert E. Speer of New York; Robert Weidensall and several state secretaries.

The meeting was notable for a forward movement in various directions: (1) In Dixon, by the promise of $6,000 from Elias Bovey towards a permanent building for the Young Men's Christian Association there. (2) In the work for boys. (3) In country work in the reaching of small communities. (4) In extension of the city and railroad work. (5) In the religious work of the Association, especially in the line of Bible study. (6) In the personal religious life, particularly enforced in the address of Mr. Speer. Forty men declared their intention to serve God hereafter, as a result of the truths set before them by Mr. Fred Smith at the Methodist church on Sunday afternoon. At the meeting in the college in the forenoon thirty others made the same declaration.

As an evidence of the fourth point it may be noted that the railway companies are now spending $230,000 annually to carry on the work among their men.

For the general work in Illinois $3,162 was raised at this convention. The following officers were elected: President, Franklin W. Ganse, Chicago; Vice Presidents, Ira W. Lewis, Dixon; R. J. Bennett, Ravenswood; R. E. Hieronymus, Eureka College; Secretary, J. E. Perkins, Chicago Central Department.

ROCK RIVER METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The sixty-second session of this conference was held in the First Methodist church, Evanston, Ill. Bishop McCabe presided and according to his usual custom, the monotony of business was enlivened by his starting a familiar hymn whenever the occasion demanded an outlet in song. One of the most thrilling of these was in connection with the final report of Rev. Dr. Frank A. Hardin as presiding elder of Freeport district. He is a veteran and recognizing that his life work was nearly over, he gave a retrospect of the work of his life. It stirred him to shout "Hallelujah, Glory to God!" and the pathos of the scene moved the conference so strongly that upon the bishop's starting the hymn, "Palms of Victory," the whole body rose to its feet and pressed forward to grasp Dr. Hardin's hand, singing as they did so, "There is a land of pure delight." On another occasion the bishop interrupted the reading of a report to admonish an aged preacher who was talking very audibly to an elder. The latter defended his friend by saying "He was telling me, bishop, of the time when he heard you sing in Libby prison during the war." Applause greeted the statement and the bishop started the strains of "My country, 'tis of thee," which was sung through to the end.

The Lord's Supper was celebrated at the opening of the session. Among the business transacted was a vote on the new constitution, resulting in 138 ayes and 25 noes.

In his address to the class admitted into full connection Bishop McCabe dwelt upon the success and opportunity of the church and urged the ministers to have clean and honest convictions about Methodist doctrine and to work the polity of the church for whatever it could accomplish.

The reports from the districts were encouraging. Rev. H. G. Jackson, presiding elder of the Chicago district, including the churches of the South side, and suburbs in that direction, said that there had been 850 admissions on probation and 616 persons had been admitted to full membership, while 600 had come by letter. The membership of the Woodlawn church has been nearly doubled by the addition of 250 members, under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. W. H. Burns, formerly presiding elder and later stationed at Oak Park. The Auburn Park church has reduced its debt from $10,000 to $5,000. Fair prosperity was reported by Presiding Elder John M. Caldwell of the Chicago Western district. There have been seven dedications in the last twelve months and three edifices are being erected. Thornburn church, which a year ago had only fourteen members, now has more than 100 and its property is valued at $5,000.

There was a number of changes in for ten or twelve successive weeks will be occupied by reviews by prominent brethren of THE PRAISE HYMNAL. Don't fail to read them. They will interest you.

THIS SPACE

THE PRAISE HYMNAL is a church music book embodying the newer ideas and later good music, at the same time retaining the best of the old. In short, it is designed to meet, on the one hand, the demands of those leading churches who have grown musically, and, on the other, to insure the musical development of all our churches.

We send samples, on approval, to those who wish to examine it.

FILLMORE BROS., - 119 W. Sixth St., CINCINNATI, O.

P. S.—Our Christmas Music is now ready. Send for List.

(1)

ministerial relations. Rev. J. H. Thomas and Rev. W. H. Smith were placed on the superannuate list after years of valued and effective service. Prof. C. F. Bradley and Dr. Robert McIntyre were given a supernumerary relation, both retiring temporarily because of impaired health. Upon the calling of the names of W. A. Spencer and William Fawcett, greatly honored members of the conference who had died during the year, the conference rose and sang with much feeling the hymns, "My heavenly home is bright and fair" and "I would not live away."

The social features of the conference were the two receptions given to its members—one by the citizens of Evanston, at which Mayor Patten presided, with an address of welcome from Mr. Frank P. Crandon and a response by T. R. Strobridge; the other a reception by the schools with addresses by acting President Bonbright and President Little, and a response by Bishop McCabe. Anniversaries of the various societies were held afternoon and evening. In the Sunday school meeting interesting addresses were made by D. M. Tompkins and Professor Robinson of McCormick Theological seminary. Contemporaneous with the session of the conference there was a session of the laymen's association. Judge O. H. Horton was elected its president.

On Sunday Rev. W. H. Smith led the lovefeast and Bishop McCabe gave the morning sermon. In the afternoon the bishop officiated at a baptismal service, at the consecration of deaconesses and at the ordination of elders and deacons. In the evening missionary addresses were given by Rev. Frank Crane and Rev. George W. Davis.

The greater flexibility in the itinerancy of the pastors does not relieve the ministers of a certain amount of anxiety in regard to the disposition that will be made of them by conference. The changes this year doubtless brought disappointment to some while giving pleasure to others.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

In the Westminster church at Jacksonville, Ill., October 15-17, gathered the members of the Illinois synod, Rev. Charles M. Brown, D. D., the pastor, and his congregation giving them most royal welcome and entertainment. An unusually large attendance, a brotherly and harmonious spirit, great hopefulness for the future of the work of the Presbyterian church, and, above all, an earnest desire for a manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power in the churches, signaled this gathering.

The retiring Moderator, Rev. Thomas B. Greenlee, preached the opening sermon, which was followed by the Lord's Supper.

Rev. Charles N. Wilder, D. D., of Champaign, was chosen Moderator for this year. The reports of home missions gave evidence of the efficiency of the synod's plan for work, there being an advance in contributions and a building up of the weaker churches. Elder Griffiths was appointed to secure more liberal gifts for ministerial relief during the coming year.

Rev. Dr. Merrill of Chicago gave a paper on "The Institutional Church," which awakened great interest. The women's home and foreign work, the Freedmen's committee, Sunday school work, church erection, the Anti-Saloon League and the Bible Society were all represented in addresses by various speakers, both men and women. Dr. W. H. Bradley gave the narrative of the state of religion, disclosing the sins which hid God's face and earnestly urging repentance and entreaty for his blessing.

A new permanent committee was established and named "The Committee on Pastorates and Vacancies." It is to urge the installation of pastors over supplied churches and to provide pastors for those vacant.

At a popular meeting on Wednesday evening Dr. Chichester of Chicago presented the purpose of the evangelistic movement, inaugurated by the last general assembly. Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston told of "A Century of Home Missions," and Mrs. I. N. Polhemus of the condition of the mountain whites. On Thursday afternoon four young foreign missionaries delivered addresses. Robert E. Speer of New York in a masterly way closed the meeting with a strong and urgent personal appeal.

MINNESOTA BAPTIST CONVENTION.

The Minnesota Baptist State convention held its forty-second annual meeting with the First Baptist church, St. Paul, beginning Monday evening, October 14th, and closing Friday evening, October 18th. The church with which the meeting was held is the oldest Baptist church in Minnesota, having been organized in 1849. The Baptists of the state now have 255 churches with 20,800 members. The reports for the year showed progress in many ways. The convention has had fifty-two men under appointment, ten of these were district missionaries, the others pastors of the smaller churches. Considerable new work has been undertaken especially in the northern part of the state. The treasurer's report showed that over $10,000 had been raised by gifts from individuals and churches, while with money received from the Home Mission Society and other sources, a little over $15,000 had been expended. There was a deficit of $800, but over $1,000 was secured by the appeal of the secretary.

The reports of some of the missionary pastors and district missionaries showed decided advance and were interesting and inspiring. One afternoon was devoted to a review of the field and the force at work in the state, and thus a very clear conception was secured of the present conditions and needs. There was a military cast to the whole program, the phrasing of the addresses indicating this thought; all through the printed program were texts of Scripture illustrating the various topics presented.

From the opening sermon by Rev. B. R. Patrick of Duluth to the closing address on "Fitness for Service" by Dr. W. M. Lawrence of Chicago, the tone of the meetings was high and true. The mission work outside of the state so far as related to Women's Home Missions and Foreign Missions was presented in a graphic manner. Several returned missionaries, who had gone out from Minnesota, gave messages of cheer. Rev. W. E. Hopkins of India, Mrs. W. Upcraft of China, Miss Thompson of Burma, Mrs. Campbell of India, and Rev. S. A. Perrine of Assam, each spoke of their respective fields.

Educational matters were taken up, especially as connected with Pillsbury academy, the Baptist institution of Minnesota. A report of the institution as seen by the visitors was presented by Rev. G. W. Stone, its financial status was given by E. M. Van Duzee, while addresses by Dean W. P. McKee of Illinois and Principal J. W. Ford of the academy, followed. Plans were put in motion for better work along the line of ministerial education, Dr. C. E. Hewitt of Chicago and Rev. H. F. Stilwell of St. Paul making strong pleas for this work.

Friday was devoted to Sunday school and Young People's work. Reports were given by the workers of the Publication society in the state and by Rev. E. M. Stephenson of Chicago and various lines of Sunday school needs were presented. This part of the program showed that the new Sunday school missionary, E. Fagenstrom, has a wise idea of the present needs of this important work.

The meeting closed with the young people's session; in the afternoon different aspects of the work were presented, reports from societies showed progress. Minnesota has won the Sacred Literature Banner in the Christian Culture courses for four years and many are engaged in the study this fall. The address of Rev. F. E. R. Miller, state president, was stirring and inspiring, he touched some weak spots very decidedly and urged all to greater energy for Christ. The whole was fittingly closed by Dr. Lawrence's address and a service of consecration led by the president of the convention, Carey Emerson. E. R. P.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

On Tuesday, Nov. 5th, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will begin a course of fourteen lectures at the Moody Bible Institute, entitled "The Crises of the Christ." The scheme of these lectures is to treat the life of our Saviour by considering the main events. They will be given daily until Nov. 22d (except Sunday and Monday) at 9 a. m. in the lecture hall of the institute. Mr. Morgan will first develop the need of the world in three lectures: Man fallen, distanced from God by sin, ignorant of God through sin, unlike God in sin. He will devote three lectures to the Incarnation—the mystery and meaning of it, and the signs to mankind. Christ's baptism will next be treated in three lectures, showing that it marked the parting of the ways, what light it threw on the hidden years at Nazareth, and expounding John's vision of the descending dove. The series will conclude with lectures on the three-fold temptation of Christ. An effort is being made to secure Mr. Morgan to finish the life of Christ next April or May. The course is open to all, free of charge. Out-of-town pastors and Christian workers who desire to take the course will be accommodated at reasonable rates at the men's or women's department of the Institute.

The Baptist City Mission Society has expended during the past year $658.31 in giving the Gospel to the Germans, $241.64 in the Scandinavian work, $200 in the Bohemian, $300 among the Poles, $200 for the Hollanders, $240 for the Chinese work, $90 for the colored people and $2,003.84 among the English-speaking peoples. The total of baptisms through all this work is 178.

There have been twenty-four baptisms during the year at the Humboldt Park German Baptist church. The house of worship greatly needs the enlargement which is being planned.

At West Pullman, a lot has been purchased during the year for the Baptist work done there at a cost of $1,000. The societies assisted to the amount of $323. An effort is to be made to erect a house. Number of baptisms ninety-six, and among the foreign speaking, ninety-two. Total number of baptisms, 188.

At the first communion under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. C. B. McAfee at the Forty-first Street Presbyterian church thirty-six were received to membership, of whom thirteen were men.

The Chicago Congregational Club had the largest attendance in the his-

Elegant Wedding, Church and Society Stationery

We make a specialty of Wedding Invitations and Announcements, Folders, Visiting Cards and other polite society stationery. Our work is Guaranteed the finest obtainable at any price. Engraved copper plate and 50 Correct Style, Best Wedding Bristol Visiting Cards, postpaid, 90c. Quire fine correspondence paper with any 2 initial monogram embossed in gold or any color, env. to match, postpaid, 60c. Our new process of printing in imitation of Engraving deceives all but experts. 50 correct form wedding invitations or announcements, 2 sets env., $2.50. 100 visiting or business cards, postpaid, 25c. Write for any information concerning any commercial or society printing, engraving or embossing. We will save you money
The B. W. KINSEY CO., 358 Denaborn St., Chicago

Big Bargain In Railway Travel

Only one fare plus $2 for a round-trip ticket to Kansas, Colorado, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Salt Lake City. November 5 and 19, December 3 and 17. Tourist sleepers and chair cars. See the great Southwest—its irrigated lands, cattle ranches, mines, oil wells and orchards. The place to get a home or make profitable investments.

Santa Fe

Address J. M. Connell, Gen. Agt. A. T. & S. F. R'y., 109 Adams St., Chicago.

PILES TRIAL TREATMENT FREE. We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ Pile Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once. Germ Medical Co., Dept A, 125, 3d st., Cincinnati, O.

tory of the club at its meeting October 21—six hundred guests, some of them being specially notable—Governor Yates, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman of Brooklyn, etc. The Fisk Jubilee Singers sang their sweet melodies. Dr. Cadman's address was fine on "The Puritan in England and America."

Dr. and Mrs. H. W. Thomas have resigned as pastors of the People's church after many years of service. After a period of rest they will devote themselves to the interests of the National People's church movement.

Chapin hall, erected by D. K. Pearsons for the use of young women of Northwestern university at a cost of $30,000, was dedicated in Evanston, Oct. 11. The Woman's Educational association of Evanston will have the care and management of the building. Chapin Hall will accommodate about eighty women.

The Morgan Park Baptist church reports fifty additions for the year and $1,650 given for benevolences. During the six years' pastorate of Rev. A. R. E. Wyant, Ph. D., 327 new members have been received and over $36,000 has been contributed for all purposes.

The part completed of the new Grace church, Oak Park, is to be dedicated November 10.

A promising feature of the Sunday school work in the Episcopal diocese of Chicago is the increased attendance, as indicated by an advance of the offerings from $864 in '97 to $1,323 as given in the annual report of this year.

In Emmanuel church, La Grange, Sunday, 20th, and Monday, 21st, were observed as days of intercession for Sunday schools as planned by the Church Sunday school institutes of England and America. At the afternoon session of the Chicago Sunday school institute an address was delivered by the Rev. Frank Du Moulin, and discussion followed. At the evening session the program included addresses by the Rev. Messrs. Herman Page of St. Paul's, Kenwood, and E. V. Shayler of Grace, Oak Park.

There have been twenty-one additions to the Hyde Park Christian church, where Rev. E. S. Ames is pastor, during the last month.

The Second United Presbyterian church was dedicated Sunday, October 27. The services are being continued through this week. The church has been rebuilt and enlarged.

The Englewood Christian church has the plans for a new building designed especially for institutional methods of work. When completed as designed it will cost about $30,000. The growth of this church is one of the most gratifying features of the work of the Disciples in this city.

Rev. W. D. Ward began his pastorate with the Evanston Christian church, Sunday, October 27, with encouraging prospects for success in his new field.

First Methodist church, Oak Park.

Rev. J. N. Hall, pastor, held an annual church meeting October 8, at which over twenty societies made reports of the year's work. About $2,500 was raised for benevolences. Light refreshments and a short program added to the interest. Both pastor and people begin hopefully a new year.

Dr. H. T. Clendening, pastor of the Union Avenue Methodist church for the past five years, has been appointed to Sacramento Avenue church, this city. Thursday night, October 24, the Union Avenue church gave him a large and interesting farewell reception. Every department of the church was represented and the addresses were of unusual merit.

Rev. T. S. Tinsley has completed a year's work with the North Side Christian church, which has been fruitful and happy in many respects. During the year 83 persons have been added to the congregation. The house has been painted and decorated and $2,800 paid on the indebtedness.

The Monroe Street Christian church has completed their new house of worship, which is one of the most unique buildings in the city. A reception will be held on Friday evening, Nov. 1st, for the inspection of the new church before its dedication. On Sunday morning, Nov. 3, Charles Clayton Morrison, the pastor, will preach the dedicatory sermon. Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m. will be held a fellowship meeting, to which the neighboring pastors are invited. Dr. Gunsaulus will preach the evening sermon.

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

BOOKS

Warwick of the Knobs, a Story of Stringtown County, Kentucky. By John Uri Lloyd, with photographic illustrations. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. 305 pages.

This story takes us into the border land of northern Kentucky—a wild, broken country of volcanic formation—and introduces us to a people of as marked characteristics as the country which they inhabit. Preacher Warwick, an old hard-shell or Bible Baptist, is the central figure in the story. He is the type of a fast vanishing class, a man whose narrow dogmatism was redeemed by his inflexible adherence to principle. The high Calvinism which he implicitly believed made him stern; but it also put iron in the blood and made him a hero. Upon the altar of duty he could lay not only worldly honor and glory, but also a human affection. He could stifle the cry of his human soul and go on unflinchingly in the way which he felt to be marked out by God's decree. The story is connected with the time of the war of the rebellion, and it shows the sore straits into which many people were brought in a community divided in its sympathies between the North and the South, to keep true to their convictions. Every page of the book pulsates with life; and if some of the characters appear to be slightly overdrawn, it may be on account of the difficulty of imagining that such a crude and primitive state of society could have been found in any corner of this land. The writer, however, has the knack of showing that this simple, ignorant and provincial people were not only possessed of the elemental virtues, but were also possessed of qualities which call forth admiration. The book is well written and possesses to the full the element of human interest. It also has the merit of fixing upon the canvas the picture of a strange people who are well worth knowing.

The Conversion of Children, by Rev. Edward Payson Hammond, M. A. Introduction by Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D. Fleming H. Revell Co. Paper covers, 174 pages.

This little book contains in the main a record of Mr. Hammond's thirty years' work among children. Few men have done more in the way of leading young people to make decision for Christ. Child-like himself in his simplicity of soul, and in the freshness and tenderness of his affections, he drew the children irresistibly to him. To say that he was emotional is not to undervalue the nature of the influence which he exerted upon susceptible minds. He did not intentionally use undue pressure. Yet from his very makeup he counted too much upon the results of the moment. His reigning thought was bringing the children to Jesus, rather than that of bringing them up in the Lord's nurture. He set things in motion, leaving the necessary edification to others. His work was partial, as the work of every man is, but it had its place in the general scheme of things, and served its end.

Among the Great Mastery' of Oratory; Scenes in the Lives of Famous Orators; Thirty-two Reproductions of Famous Paintings, with text by Walter Rowlands. Dana, Estes & Co., Boston. Price, $1.50.

Here we have selections from the famous speeches of thirty-two of the world's greatest orators, from Demosthenes to Gladstone. Each selection is introduced by a biographical note showing the historical setting of the words. This part of the work is well done. The orations are also skillfully chosen and arranged, and carefully edited. The letter press is a delight to the eye and the illustrations are of the highest quality. It is a book to be secured and laid aside for a Christmas present.

LITERARY NOTES.

A new series of essays by Augustine Birrell, the accomplished author of "Obiter Dicta," will be published by the Scribners this fall. No details in addition to this interesting announcement can be obtained at present other than the fact that the new book will be uniform with "Obiter Dicta," a volume whose considerable sale attests the secure place Mr. Birrell holds among American readers.

Maurice Hewlett, in his new book, "New Canterbury Tales," published by the Macmillan company, has taken the Canterbury pilgrimage as the scene of his narrative. One of the interesting qualities of his work is his boldness. In each of his recent books he has taken in hand subjects which have already been treated by the masters. He does this without in any way challenging comparison, and indeed in such a different manner and with such an individuality of style that comparison would be impossible.

With the appearance of Edwin Drood the authentic edition of the complete works of Charles Dickens is completed and is now ready for distribution in sets. Messrs. Chapman and Hall, of London, Dickens' original publishers, began the publication of this edition last October in conjunction with Chas. Scribner's Sons, with the issue of "Pickwick Papers." As far as may be judged from the sales of the individual volumes as they have appeared from month to month this should prove the most popular low-priced edition of Dickens ever issued.

Hall Caine's romance, "The Eternal City," has been called a novel which on both its human side and on the side of its intellectual intention is the story of Samson and his lifelong struggle with the lords of the Philistines. The strong man in the story is intended to stand for the great power which during the nineteenth century has, more than any other, asserted its place in the order of the world—that is, the power of the people. It illustrates the fact that the rights of the people are in the people, and that kings and rulers can do no more than curtail them.

"In the Making of an American," published by the Macmillan Co., Jacob A. Riis gives the world the story of his life. It would not be fair to him to say that his life has been typical of that of many foreigners who have become American citizens after the storm and stress of naturalization. His experience has been exceptional. It has been the experience of twenty men in one. He has overcome obstacles which few youths encounter and still fewer can stand against in their efforts to adjust themselves to American life. As a mere boy he left Denmark because he could not have the girl he wanted, began life in America as a day laborer, drifted among the very dregs of humanity until every instinct of self-preservation had taught him the lesson of mere existence, then with his education and home training to back him he began the rapid career and interesting life as an American which he recounts so entertainingly in this book. It is a true romance, full of all the elements of fiction, and a very primer of manful struggle against injustice, ignorance, indifference and his own limitations.

If Your Brain Is Tired Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. T. D. Crothers, Supt. Walnut Lodge Asylum, Hartford, Conn., says: "It is a remedy of great value in building up functional energy and brain force." Invigorates the entire system.

A CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Asthma sufferers need no longer leave home and business in order to be cured. Nature has produced a vegetable remedy that will permanently cure Asthma and all diseases of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases (with a record of 90 per cent. permanently cured) and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Asthma, Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis and nervous diseases, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail. Address with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

$13.00 GO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $13.00

via the Nickel Plate Road daily, with limit of 15 days; 20-day tickets at $16.00 for the round trip; 5-day tickets at $6.00 for the round trip, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Through service to New York and Boston and lowest available rates. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, write John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

THE HOME

The Right Hand of the Most High.

Ps. 77:10.

When the burden is heavy
And weary the way,
When weak is the spirit
And dreary the day,
Let me hearten myself
In the desolate place,
With a prayer to my God,
For the light of his face,
Let me call unto him
Who will list to my cry,
Remembering ever
Though cloudy the sky,
His goodness and grace
That have kept me so long,
And so shall the Lord be
My strength and my song.
—The Christian Intelligencer.

MY LITTLE MAN.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter III.—(Continued.)

But at the further end of the room I saw a low door. I wondered whether it led into a cupboard or another apartment. I do not know what instinct made me do it, but softly, very softly, I turned the handle, and the door opened on to a room so low and dark that at first I could distinguish nothing—but still it was a room. I struck a match and lighted a candle which I found in the room of books beyond. And on a little pallet-bed in the corner, lying with one hand on his breast, I saw him first, my little boy, my darling. In seeing him I thought I saw Allan again so startling was the likeness.

He was asleep. On his small white face were traces of tears, and his other hand was lying on the open page of a French grammar beside him. Now and then his little body moved as if in pain, and he tossed his bright curls on the dingy pillow. Once his lips moved, and I heard him murmur: "Je—je—j'ai—I have."

And he was six years old.

As I knelt beside that pathetic little form I wondered if the souls in Paradise have power to see us as we are; praying that if so, Allan, in mercy, might be spared the pity of this sight.

The candle flickered on; in ten minutes or so it would burn itself out, but I did not stir. By its sickly light I watched my little boy, thinking of the agony of desolation and miscomprehension that must have rent his childish heart for all the long months since they had torn his father from him.

Suddenly, with a final leap of flame, the light failed, and I was alone with him in the darkness.

"Je—je—j'ai, I have," he said again; "tu—tu—as—"

Then I, unable to bear it longer, and thinking that any awakening would be better than that tortured sleep, kissed him and in a whisper spoke his name.

In a moment and with a frightened start, he woke.

"Oh, Dr. Vorstrovna, I shall know it soon—the pain was so bad—and I was tired—but I will learn it—indeed I will—"

"Waldo! Waldo! It is not Dr. Vorstrovna. Do you remember what father used to talk about—who father said would come? Well, dear little one, this is Nell."

For a moment a silence that could be taken hold of, so to speak. Afterwards he told me what he felt. Then in a twinkling his tiny arms were round my neck and in the midst of a passion of tears, yet scarcely able to speak for joy, he said:

"You are Nell? Father's Nell?"

"Yes, dear; and yours, too, now."

"And mine, too, now," he repeated slowly and in an ecstasy, holding me tightly to him with one arm round my neck and one hand firmly closed over a button of my coat.

"And mine, too, now," he said again.

When he had recovered a little and I had dried his tears away, he asked me: "Where is father? Tell me, have you seen him?"

"I have seen him, dearest. But now he is in heaven," I answered, speaking as we speak to children.

"God is very kind," he said then. "I often wonder about him and am not sure. But now I know that he is kind. Because all this time I have asked him only two things, 'Please, God, take father home to heaven and send Nell to me.' And he has done them both."

I was surprised at his calmness.

"Why did you ask God to take father to heaven, dear?" I said.

"Because they told me such dreadful things of the place where he had gone. And just before he went he told me himself that he could never, never come back to me, and he asked me to pray for him that he might die. All day long I have thought of him in those dreadful places, and Dr. Vorstrovna is cross because I cannot do my lessons. Now father is warm and bright with God, and—you have come."

Even so, in the depth and intensity of our love for him, we found room, both of us, to be glad, glad that he had gone.

Then I tried to lift him on my knee, but as I did so a sharp cry of pain was wrung from his little lips.

"Oh! Nell," he said, while he lay back panting on his pillow, and I felt the moist beads of perspiration rise on his forehead, and waited in deadly anxiety for him to speak again. "Oh! Neli, my pain is very bad tonight."

"What pain, and where, my dearest?"

"Here—and here," he said, putting his hands. I could not see where in the dark.

Then the words that Allan had said to me in his prison came to my mind, but for very dread I could not speak.

Easier Work

Pleasanter, quicker, healthier—with PEARLINE.

What worse for throat and lungs than long working over tainted steam from a washtub? Here is the simple, sensible, womanly
PEARLINE way:
Soak the clothes in Pearline;
rinse them out. No heavy rubbing on washboard. Save time, save clothes,—wear. 653

Enter Pearline Exit
Grind

"You know, I cannot walk now I do my lessons. Dr. Vorstrovna says it is good to be clever and know all about books. I always lie here. I wish there was a window in the wall, so that I could see the horses and the people in the street. I can only see the sky from that little pane in the roof. Sometimes it is blue, sometimes it is gray, and sometimes almost black. I like it best when it is blue. The birds fly across it, but I only see them for a moment and they are gone. The other morning, though, a sparrow came and perched on the roof and stayed for quite a minute and I thought he saw me here. Oh, I was happy. And at night sometimes I see a star. I love the stars. Do you?"

My little boy! My little boy! Six years old. All day long to suffer pain, learn lessons, and watch the sky. To see sometimes a star, sometimes a sparrow. I am not ashamed to tell you that, for the first time in my life that I can remember, I wept, and was glad of the darkness that hid my confusion.

As I sat there, wondering if all the love and joy with which I would henceforth encompass his little life could ever atone for the lonely torture of what had been, he said again, "I love the stars. Father did, too. Do you?"

"Darling, I do. And I will take you where you shall see the whole sky bright with them; not only one or two, as here."

In an eager transport of delight he raised himself on his pillow, only to fall back again in pain.

Lying down beside him on his little bed, I said: "Tell me now, dear, how long have you been ill? And who takes care of you?"

"Dr. Vorstrovna takes—care of me. He sent my nurse away when father

Parson Rousegood's Experiences

his ups and downs, are being printed in each issue of
"Daily Bible Reading"

a religious paper packed full of good things for all Bible lovers. It goes to 45 states, Canada, England and Scotland, and has 6,000 circulation. Send 25c for 4 one year. Sample copy free. Write went. He says he is very poor, and often we have scarcely anything to eat, because he buys so many books. He says it is better to buy books than food, because in books there is food that lasts. I do not quite know what he means, but you do, I expect. Before father went I had pain sometimes, but not much. At first when I came here I cried so, and I was often hungry, and my back hurt me and the pain was worse. Now I am never hungry. One day a lot of books came for Dr. Vorstrovna; they came from some rooms where he used to live; the man left them down stairs at the street door and all day long I was bringing them up. I am little and I could only bring two at a time, and when they were very heavy, only one. There are very many steps, you know. At first, for fun, I began to count the times I went up and down. Altogether I went eighty-four times, and there were one hundred and twenty-seven books. I can count very well. Father taught me. We used to count the trees in the avenue, and once we tried to count the stars. On that evening when I had finished the books, I was very ill, and I have never been down the steps since then."

CHAS. J. BURTON, Editor, Canton, Mo.

A burning rage possessed and almost stifled me, but I managed to say:

"What doctor comes to you? Is it a kind one?"

"Oh, no doctor comes at all. They cost such a lot of money, Dr. Vorstrovna says, and order things which cost a lot of money, too. He wants to buy an old—old nerition, I think he calls it, of some book. Then when he has bought his nerition, if he has any money left and I am still no better, perhaps he will ask a doctor to come and see me."

An old "nerition"—an old edition—and for this, for this, my little boy was sacrificed!

"Go on, darling. Tell me more. Tell me everything. Why are you alone like this?" I said, not trusting myself to say more.

"I am nearly always alone in the evenings. But, indeed, I do not mind it. I can think best about father when I am alone. Dr. Vorstrovna goes to lectures, I think. He always has to do things with books. He is very clever. So was father. But father was kind, too. He used to put me on his shoulders and carry me up stairs and play with me and put his arms round me and tell me the beautifullest stories. Sometimes he was too tired to talk at all, and I just used to sit on his knees by the fire, and I was very happy. Father said that our love was the best sort of love in the world. So, though I am only a little boy, I have had the best love in the world, haven't I? Father said so."

Though absolutely and perfectly a child, he was, as we say, old-fashioned in the extreme. Owing to the fact, probably, of having been always amongst grown-up people, he had a trick of using very long words, or rather, misusing them, in the most delightful manner. In his hours of solitude he had reviewed the past, day after day, with such minuteness, fidelity and love, that all his conversation was of the former scenes in which his father was hero, king, and lord of all.

Few things in him charmed me more than the exquisitely grave little way he had of saying "Father said so." Against that "Father said so" the united wisdom of the world would have been powerless to persuade him. It was his tiny life's "Amen."

How I remember once, later on, as I sat at my table writing, and he playing at my side, his saying to me suddenly:

"Nell"—he never, from the very first, called me by any other name—"did you know that you were positively the best fellow in the world?"

"I did not know it, dear," I answered.

"Well, you are. Father said so."

"Oh! but dearest, it is not so," I answered, thinking of the dear dead friend of my life, who had always been so blind to my faults, so lenient to my frailties.

In the silence that ensued, I turned to look at my little boy, and my heart smote me as I saw. Behold! His grave blue eyes wide open with amaze; like two scarlet burning poppies his cheeks; his tiny mouth parted with a surprise and pain too sharp for words! Then I kissed away the poppies and the pain, and made my peace with him; but I never again forgot the lesson taught me by my darling, whose father had "said so."

On that first evening I sat by his side in the cold and gloom, comforting him with thoughts of his father in heaven, beyond all cold and gloom and pain and prison for ever more, until at last I managed to soothe him off into a sweet untroubled sleep.

(To be continued.)

Feb's Revenge.

"I'll thrash him for this; see if I don't," muttered Rob, as he paced the kitchen floor in his rage. "There is a limit even to Christian forbearance, mother."

"Is there?" she said, in her gentle way. "I don't remember seeing that, but I do about forgiving seventy times seven, and overcoming evil with good."

"I think it's pretty hard," went on Rob, "if a boy has to put up with all I do at school because I'm trying to be a Christian. Just think, mother, here I find my skate-straps all cut up, with a note tied on, saying I won't need them now, as I will spend my spare time on my knees. It's in Ralph Moore's hand. No one else writes this way. Some of the other boys said my pants were praying out at the knees."

"You do need new everyday clothes," his mother said sadly.

"Nonsense, mamma. These are good enough. It's enough for you to keep me in school, the same as if father were living. It's just being laughed at over religion that makes my blood boil. Ralph is the leader of it all. But I must hurry, or he will get the start of me in the examinations. You know, Professor White has offered a prize for the best set of papers, and I am determined to get it. You'll allow me that much revenge, won't you, mother?"

Not caring to wait for her answer, he snatched up his things, gave her a hasty kiss, and hurried away.

"Overcome evil with good," kept ringing in Rob's ears. He was wondering what it meant, when he stopped in the hall to leave his old overcoat and cap.

"No need to take the saint's books away. Of course, he won't peep," came from Ralph as Rob passed. But before the laugh that followed his remark had died away Ralph began in a distressed tone: "O boys, what will I do? I've left my paper, pencils, pen and ink and everything at home. Professor said not even a pencil should be sharpened or borrowed after he rang the last bell. O boys, can't you help me? There's only a moment, and I wouldn't lose this examination for anything. Father said this should decide about my going to college. Do some-one divide," and the expression on Ralph's face was pitiful in the extreme.

All the boys expressed sympathy, but

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train of the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent.
Chicago, Ill.

BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN TICKETS

via the Nickel Plate Road, $13.00 for the round trip, good 15 days; $16.00 for the round trip good 20 days. Three daily trains with vestibuled sleeping-cars. Meals in dining cars, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

declared they could not spare a thing for his use.

When Rob heard Ralph's lament he felt a little grim satisfaction. His proud rival would not be in the field. Then a thought of the kind of revenge the old Book taught crossed his mind—that strange command to "overcome evil with good."

Just as the professor was rising to touch the bell, Rob reached over to Ralph, and said: "I'm sorry my paper isn't better, but here's half, and my pen and ink. Please take them."

"No more communications," came from the platform, and the surprised Ralph could only look at the unexpected supplies in amazement.

He saw at a glance Rob had given him the best of his paper, and had taken the risk of a lead pencil himself, and there came a new and strange sensation in the proud boy's heart.

"Rob, old fellow," he said, as they left the room at noon, "you're the kindest boy I ever saw, and I'm the meanest. I'll never forget this undeserved favor."

"Ralph Moore took the highest grade and Rob Wheatley the second," announced the principal a few days later. "I must say, in regard to Wheatley's excellent papers, if he had used his pen and ink, and a little more paper, the few mistakes he made would have been avoided."

I am glad to be able to say Ralph went to the professor and explained the unusual appearance of Rob's papers, and begged the standing to be changed and he given the first place.

Professor White said it was too late for such a change, but he gave an account of Rob's generous action that day before the boys, and they gave a rousing cheer for Rob Wheatley at the close.

"Rob, I don't believe you'll hear anything more about your religion," Ralph said, as they walked home together; "unless," he added, "we come for the recipe."

"Well, Robbie, so you've conquered your enemy and had your revenge," his mother said, when she heard the story. "And so there's a way to do that without blows—is there, my son?"

"Yes, mamma," he answered; "and I guess in that kind of revenge I overcame as much evil in Rob Wheatley as in Ralph Moore."—Christian Observer.

Answer to Puzzle.

In the Christian Century of Oct. 17—Whose daughter was Noah?

The answer is to be found in Numbers 26:33.

HOME TREATMENT FOR CANCER.

Dr. Bye's Balm Oils for cancer is a positive and painless cure. Most cases are treated at home without the service of a physician. Send for a book telling what wonderful things are being done by simply anointing with oils. The combination is a secret; gives instant relief from pains, destroys the cancer microbes and restores the patient to health. Thousands of cancers, tumors, catarrh, ulcers, piles and malignant diseases cured in the last six years. If not afflicted cut this out and send it to some suffering one. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo.

SPLITTING HAIRS.

While the medical profession is splitting hairs over scientific and obscure theories, thousands of people are suffering from the common ailments of the day, headaches and weak digestions. One almost feels that there is too much science, too much theorizing and too little practical work. In the meantime Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer remains the people's remedy. It not only relieves, but it cures. For further particulars address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 S. Hoyne avenue, Chicago, Ill.

WHY DO YOU HESITATE?

The common use of violent cathartics is a habit destructive of health and creates a necessity for larger and more frequent doses.

A trial bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine will be sent free and prepaid to any reader of this publication who needs it and writes for it. One small dose a day quickly cures the most stubborn case of constipation or the most distressing stomach trouble, to stay cured. Its influence upon the liver, kidneys and bladder is gentle and wonderful and restores those organs to a condition of health so that they perform their functions perfectly and painlessly. Perfect health and vigor is soon established by a little of this wonderful curative tonic.

Any reader of Christian Century may prove this remarkable remedy without expense by writing to Vernal Remedy Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

They will send a bottle free to all who write for it. It quickly and permanently cures constipation, catarrh of stomach, bowels and bladder, and all stomach, liver, kidney and bladder troubles caused by inflammation, congestion or catarrh. Why hesitate? Write immediately for one bottle. You will receive it promptly, free and prepaid.

$6.00 TO BUFFALO PAN-AMERICAN AND RETURN $6.00

via the Nickel Plate Road, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with limit coaches only; 15-day tickets at $13.00 of 5 days from date of sale, good in for the round trip, and 20-day tickets at $16.00 for round trip, good in sleeping cars. Three through daily trains. For particulars and Pan-American folder of buildings and grounds, address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women and girls, and for abdominal weakness, backache, lung troubles or general weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

Ott "A GOOD MAN WANTED"

To Advance for First Class

LECTURES AND ENTERTAINMENTS

ED. AMHERST OTT, Dean Drake University College of Oratory, Des Moines, Ia.

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

ST. LOUIS

ILLINOIS CENTRAL
CENTRAL
MISSISSIPPI VALLEY
ROUTE
RAILROAD

DAYLIGHT SPECIAL

FAST DAY TRAIN

DIAMOND SPECIAL

POPULAR NIGHT TRAIN

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent. A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SWEET TONED, FAR SOUNDING, DURABLE. CATALOGUE FREE. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY, NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN.

FAST TRAINS

Chicago & North-Western Ry.

The Overland Limited
California in 3 days

The Colorado Special
One night to Denver
3 days to San Francisco

The Chicago-Portland Special
Oregon and Washington in 3 days

The North-Western Limited
Electric Lighted—Chicago,
St. Paul and Minneapolis

Duluth and St. Paul Fast Mail
Fast train to head of lakes

The Peninsula Express
Fast time to Marquette
and Copper Country

NO change of cars. Everything in connection with its service is modern and progressive.

TICKET OFFICES
212 Clark St. and Wells St. Station.

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

CURES
Female Troubles, Stoopng Posture, Inflammations, Internal Pains, Tired Feeling, Backache, Weak Lungs, Nervousness.

TRIAL FREE.
It will make you comfortable, buoyant, happy—give you ability to work and enjoy life. It is simple, wholly external, adjustable to any figure. Worn with or without corset.

We have over 15,000 letters like this:
Chandler, Okla., July 27, 1899.
Your Brace did all you said about it and more for me. It has saved me a big doctor's bill and brought me good health, which I had not had before in 24 years. My troubles were dropsy, headache, lung disease, stomach and other ills to which women are subject.
MRS. L. B. DICKINSON.

Write today for particulars and illustrated book mailed free in plain sealed envelope. Address The Natural Body Brace Co., Box 744, Salina, Kansas. Every woman should have this Brace.

Bethany College.

Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.
Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,
J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

Special Free Illustrated Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE
Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never fails to restore Gray Hair to its youthful color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

OCEAN EXCURSION TO NEW YORK

BIG FOUR

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO ROUTE

The Rhine, Alps and Battlefield Line.

Stop-over Privileges at Old Point Comfort going; Buffalo—Returning.

Route No. 1, $35.00.

Going via Big Four Route to Cincinnati; Chesapeake & Ohio Railway to Old Point or Norfolk; Old Dominion Line (meals and berths included on steamer) to New York. Returning via Pennsylvania Railroad and Pennsylvania Lines, or via New York Central to Buffalo and Lake Shore or Michigan Central to Chicago.

Route No. 2, $33.00.

Going, same as Route No. 1. Returning via West Shore, Lehigh Valley or D. L. & W. Rys. to Buffalo; New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad or Grand Trunk to Chicago.

Tickets will be on sale July 1 to October 20, limited to return within ten days, except on return trip, if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent at Buffalo or agents at Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, within original ten-day limit, stop-over of ten days additional is allowed at any one of those points. Stop-over at Old Point Comfort is allowed in either direction within limit of ticket.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Route through the Allegheny and Blue Ridge mountains, Shenandoah and Mount Valley and the historic region of Virginia in connection with the ocean trip of eighteen hours from Norfolk or Old Point Comfort to New York, offers the most beautiful, varied and interesting trip in America.

For further particulars address
J. C. TUCKER, G. N. A., C. C. C. & St. L. Ry.,
234 Clark Street, Chicago.
W. E. CONKLYN, N. W. P. A., C. & O. Ry.,
234 Clark Street, Chicago.

Fleming H. Revell Company's New Books

RALPH CONNOR'S NEW NOVEL,

The Man From Glengarry

12mo, Cloth. Decorated $1.50.

The half million or more admirers of Ralph Connor's inimitable miners of "Black Rock" and cowboys of "The Sky Pilot" will give a cordial welcome to his lumbermen in "The Man from Glengarry." The hero stands out in bold relief. He fights the great fight that strong men must put up if they would retain their manhood. The control of self develops the boyhood charm into a maturity of character which once known can never be forgotten.

By the Author of "Captain of the Janizaries"

James M. Ludlow,

DEBORAH

A TALE OF THE TIMES OF JUDAS MACCABÆUS.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Bishop Hurst says: "Dr. Ludlow has achieved a notable success in his new historical romance. ....His chief creation, the heroine, will take her place high among the women of fiction. ....It is absolutely refreshing in these times of many so-called historical novels, to find a story that really embodies in a living and fascinating robe of pure imagination, the great events of actual history."

By W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D.,

THE LORE OF CATHAY

In Five Parts:

Arts and Sciences, Literature, Philosophy and Religion, Education, History.

Illustrated, $2.50 net.

"President Martin of the Chinese Imperial University, is well qualified by long residence and unusually varied experience as a missionary, diplomatist, and educator, to tell us of the real life and thought of China."—
"The Congregationalist."

HUGH BLACK (author "Friendship")

CULTURE AND RESTRAINT.

12mo, cloth. Elegant. Net. $1.50.

Mr. Black ranks among the leading essayists of to-day. The field he has chosen, or rather the field that has chosen him—for "Friendship" and "Culture" are impelling forces—is one that calls for rare combination of heart and mind.

HENRY OTIS DWIGHT,

CONSTANTINOPLE AND ITS PROBLEMS,

Its Peoples, Customs, Religion and Progress

Fully illustrated, 12mo, cloth, net $1.25.

"Authoritative, free from amateur sentimentalism, sane, straightforward and up-to-date. He is a keen observer of the intricacies of its political and social life."—James S. Dennis.

By FREDERIC ROWLAND MARVIN,

LAST WORDS OF DISTINGUISHED MEN AND WOMEN.

8vo, cloth, $1.50 net.

"Also considerable additional matter pertaining to the circumstances in which they died. Montaigne said: Teach men to die and you will teach men how to live."—N.Y. Times.

CHARLES H. PARKHURST,

SUNNY SIDE OF CHRISTIANITY.

16n.o, cloth, net, 60c.

As God's heart is Love, so the author sets forth the various phases and relations of Love in the practical daily life, as theory and experience, as a lubricant, as a means of knowing. It has all of Dr Parkhurst's peculiarly vivid style, with a sweetness and every-day sunniness that are wonderfully attractive.

NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS,

DAVID THE POET AND KING.

The Romance and Tragedy of His Career and Fall, and the Glory of His Recovery. Illustrated by Louis Rhead.

16mo, cloth, 75c. net.

"An essay giving the result of careful and intelligent study of the career of David. All the romance, tragedy and pathos of his career are graphically related in clear-cut, narrative style."—New York Times Saturday Review.

WALDO SELDEN PRATT.

MUSICAL MINISTRIES IN THE CHURCH.

Cloth, net, $1.00.

Professor Pratt's experience both as church musician and instructor of ministerial candidates, gives him peculiar facilities. This will undoubtedly be a standard work of reference.

GEORGE MATHESON,

TIMES OF RETIREMENT.

12mo, cloth, $1.25 net.

Devotional meditations by the author of "Moments on the Mount," written in the author's most helpful and inspiring style.

H. C. G. MOULE,

THE OLD GOSPEL FOR THE NEW AGE.

12mo. cloth, net, $1.00.

Dr. Moule is a many-sided man, with wide interests in literature and life. He has breadth of culture and sympathy.

SEND FOR OUR NEW ILLUSTRATED LIST OF FALL BOOKS.

NEW YORK, 158 Fifth Avenue.

CHICAGO, 63 Washington Street.

TORONTO, 27 Richmond Street, W.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, November 7, 1901.

Number 25.

LEADING FEATURES.

Short Pastorates

Letters to the Book Lover

The Perfect Man

The Malay Race

A Hindu Tailor

Some Present Day Hindrances to Foreign Missions.

Keeping the Faith

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
258 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arrears rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

FIRST PRINTING 60,000 COPIES NOW READY

The MAN FROM GLENGARRY

A TALE OF THE OTTAWA by

RALPH CONNOR

Author of

"BLACK ROCK" and "THE SKY PILOT"

"To have written BLACK ROCK was to demonstrate genius. To have written THE SKY PILOT was an achievement worthy of a great literary master. But THE MAN FROM GLENGARRY — thrilling, inspiring, ennobling — shows the many gifts of this singularly brilliant man in whom are garnered those rich stores of a life strenuous for good and God and humanity."

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS Cloth, $1.50 FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY, Publishers

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago Indianapolis Cincinnati Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C., And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

PLYMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Bethany College. Founded in 1841 by ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address, J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty

BELLS Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Largest Foundry on Earth making CHURCH BELLS & PEALS Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free. McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

BELLS all kinds, big and little—for Church & School, for Fire, Factory and Farm. Catalogue FREE. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY CO., Northville, Mich.

RHEUMATISM... Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws out cords, and hardens muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take any others else. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., November 7, 1901.

Number 25.

EDITORIAL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life! It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

SHORT PASTORATES--THEIR CAUSES AND DISASTERS.

THE other day a well-known minister sent a letter, which was read at the service of installment for a new pastor in his own neighborhood; and this letter contained the striking prayer "that he may abide with you and be a blessing." There seemed to be much significance in the deliberate choice of those words "abide with you"; possibly that church had been suffering from a number of short pastorates, or the minister had arrived there after hurried pastoral experiences in several recent appointments; or perhaps the writer was thinking merely of the fact that so many churches and ministers are today suffering from the disease of constant change. Our Methodist brethren have come—not without painful discussion and considerable uncertainty—to extend the average period of their pastorates. But it is safe to say that the average Methodist pastorate was, before this alteration of law, not much less than the average pastorate in some of the other denominations. There are many churches which hardly know what it is to have the same man for three years, and many ministers who begin to become restless within that time and seek a new field.

What are the causes of this constant moving of pastors from place to place? It is safe to say that they are not to be sought mainly in the attitude of mind of the churches. There are few churches which do not dread a vacancy more even than the retention of an unsatisfactory minister. The main causes, we believe, must be sought in the circumstances, ambitions and attainments of the ministers themselves.

In the first place, we must name, of course, the small salaries which are offered by a considerable number of churches. It is not easy to urge that a young couple with a young family should continue to struggle on at a salary of four or five hundred dollars or less, when there is a chance of an increase by movement to another field; and we suppose that as long as such churches exist they must be content with short pastorates. But this, of course, cannot be taken as really a legitimate reason for premature removals, when the salary has reached the point even of moderate comfort. Other motives come into play then and cause frequent changes.

We believe it is not a mistake to name as a second powerful cause of change the poor education of a large number of those who have been ordained to the Christian ministry. We would not for a moment insist that an elaborate and prolonged college and seminary training is absolutely essential in the sense that exceptional men cannot become great ministers without it; while we do maintain that for the health of the Church as a whole a thorough training for its ministers is essential. The large number of men who have rushed into the ministry with a mere smattering of superficial Bible knowledge, without deep wrestling with doctrinal problems, and almost no reading in the history of the Church, do, we believe, account for a vast proportion of the short pastorates which disgrace and weaken the Church. A man with such meager equipment cannot stand the strain of continual preaching to the same people. His ideas are few, his powers of expression are limited, his scope of illustration narrow, his human interests few and small, his vision of the divine unelastic and unsystematic. His people very soon hear all he has to say; he himself is soon aware that he has said it all. And then there is nothing to do but to ask the Lord to open up the way to a new field. We have heard of such an one, and believe there are many like him, who had obtained a smattering of information on certain Bible topics and who was able in his first church, over which he was ordained, to preach happily and successfully until his list of topics was exhausted—when he collapsed. That man could not possibly do any better in a new field than in his first, for in his first he had studied nothing new and went to his second with a sense of failure and without additional knowledge or wisdom.

The third main cause of frequent changes is to be found in a wrongly directed personal ambition. There is a place for ambition in the ministry. Every man ordained to preach the Gospel ought to wish to do it well and to see large fruits of his labor. It is not wrong for a man to wish that he may have a wide scope for his energies and a wide field for his influence. But at this point the line between ambition as an inspiration from God and ambition as sent out of hell is not always easy to distinguish. Where a man's ambition dwells simply on the hunger for popular applause or for the exercise of personal power or for the gain of money and social distinction, it is a perverted and degraded spirit; and the minister swayed by this can never be aught but superficial in his work and restless in every place whose limitations from those points of view he soon discovers.

This brings us to the fourth cause of restlessness in the pastorate, which must be described as low views of the pastoral relation. That relation is one of the most beautiful, tender and deep within the experience of man. Nothing can exceed the value to a community of the presence in it for many years of a true and diligent man of God. As such an one looks deep and ever deeper into the meaning of his office and the opportunities presented to him of molding human character, his longing to stay with his people in order that he may do more for them will assuredly grow. The idea of leaving will be for him, not first the attainment of what is new, but the loss of what has become as dear to him as his ministry. His thought moves ever around and among the personalities whom he is striving to lead into the Christian life, whom he sees ripening every year for the great harvest day. A man whose heart is given to this divine office, whose imagination is permanently colored by all its glorious possibilities, is not the man who will wish to move from any place that he is in, or be unduly eager for promotion to any harder task and more awful responsibility.

It is impossible to exaggerate the disasters which are coming alike upon the ministry and the churches through the frequency of short pastorates.

In the first place, disaster comes to the minister. The man who leaves his work in a parish where he has a comfortable living and a good field at the end of two or three years, and whose subsequent pastorates are just as short, is making himself a shallower man with every change. That man simply does not understand what it is to be a pastor and teacher to a flock of human beings. It may be that at the end of three years he has begun to feel a little of the strain upon his intellectual resources and his energy as a student, and he thinks it would be a good thing to rest at the very time he ought to begin to work harder. It is when a man begins to feel the strain that his own opportunity for ennoblement and growth is found. To fail at that hour is to choose ease for service, weakness for strength, laxity of intellect for strenuous exertion and victorious acquirement. To remain at that point, to make out new lines of work, new subjects of study, is to have a regeneration of the mind and a reopening of the intellectual and spiritual life. There are men who began well, with good training and something of the student habit, who have gradually lost that habit and lost, therefore, the alertness of mind, the clearness of thought, the depth of spiritual insight which they might have had, because rather than win this at the price of toil they have chosen the lazier method of going from church to church.

And the churches which have the misfortune of getting a succession of short pastorates are the weaker for that experience. It is only after a man has been years in a place that his personality and his teaching begin to tell upon the community. It is only then that he begins to be one of them and not a stranger. Then, when the little children he has baptized are beginning to speak and to grow up under his teaching, when the boys are becoming young men and are beginning to trust in his constant interest and his wise advice, when the households have welcomed him in their days of joy and have begun to associate him and his face and name, his voice and words, with the most sacred memories of their lives—it is only then that the man of God begins to be a true pastor, to have that control and influence over the lives of his people which make him an effective minister of God. This being so, think of the results which flow from constant changes! The name of the minister ceases to be sacred; the flock is being starved and knows not why, or knows only in the persons of its wiser members; the young have no personal attachment to the minister—he is more like a commercial traveler who calls in for a little business and is off again. The whole spirit of the church, even when its organizations are outwardly maintained, is poorer and weaker. It cannot possibly glow with divine blessing. These experiences depend more largely than we know upon the conception which a church forms of that office through which so much of the Spirit of God is interpreted to them and the influence of God reaches them. And no church will ever hold a high conception of that ministry whose ministers have come and gone, leaving, like our morning paper, only a blur of petty sensations behind.

LETTERS TO THE BOOKLOVER.

MR. HALL CAINE'S "THE ETERNAL CITY."

MY Dear Friend: There are certain writers of our day concerning whom the Christian public holds a very uncertain judgment. The rumor that they deal with delicate matters in an indelicate way is sufficient to condemn them in the eyes of many, who yet are not prepared to maintain that the deeper questions of human morality must not be discussed in narrative form. Among the writers who have made a strong impression upon the public and are also regarded with this vague dread by many good people is Mr. Hall Caine. I confess to having suffered, as so many others have, from the disagreeable taste which some of his writings leave in one's mouth. He reminds me in many ways of the effect produced by his more distinguished contemporary, Mr. Thomas Hardy. Both of these writers have written books which deal with narrow phases of a narrow rural life. The one has described a small section of southern England and the other has set his stories amid the beauties of the Isle of Man; and both have confined themselves almost entirely, within those limited scenes, to human beings of the poorest type. Hardly one of their characters is a worthy representative of the higher morality, hardly one has any worthy view, even for a rustic, of religious experience. They are all the creatures of greed and physical appetite, whose very noblenesses are attended by irredeemable moral contaminations.

One could not but acknowledge the great power of Mr. Hall Caine as a creator of exciting plots and a delineator of intense scenes and a vivid setter forth of strong and lurid passions. But one arose after the conclusion of his earlier stories as if released and glad to flee from an evil fascination, glad to go back to the healthfulness of even ordinary society, to meet men who were not ready to murder their brothers and women whose love had something of heaven in its heart. In his last work, "The Eternal City," Mr. Hall Caine continues the happy movement begun in its predecessor, "The Christian." He has left the narrower range of rustic brutalities and lubricities for the vaster problems of society and the religious world. He begins to touch, even with uncertain fingers, the powers of the world to come, and to describe, as seen still through a veil, some of the realities of the Christian experience.

"The Eternal City" is, of course, Rome. The problem is a complex one. It is that of describing Rome as the birthplace of the new social order, for which Mr. Hall Caine with a poetic instinct feels the deep soul-yearning of his generation. In no other city, he says, could he find the conditions that seemed to promise a rapid solution of the imperious problems concerning the relation of the masses to governments and potentates. The central figure of the book from the artistic or literary point of view, is of course "Roma," the beautiful young girl, half English and half Italian, whose fate it is to stand between the contending forces of the past and the future. The evil forces of a selfish, relentless and grinding government are embodied in Baron Bonelli, the powerful minister of the interior, under the Italian king. The hope of the future is summed up in the personality of David Rossi. If Bonelli is really, as it is said, an intentional portrait of Crispi, the great Italian statesman, Rossi is in large measure inspired by the heroic and pathetic figure of Mazzini, the brilliant Italian prophet and dreamer. Rossi is represented as an anarchist of a peculiar type, who proposes to break down governments in order to replace them by a broader government of the people and by the people. But he is no revolutionary of the violent type. He has got his inspiration from Christ, would fain remold society on lines suggested by the spirit and teaching of the Lord's Prayer, and believes firmly that physical force must not be employed, even by a down-trodden generation, to secure its rights. How nobly he clings to this creed, how dreadfully he is tempted to shed blood, how fiercely he fights in his own soul for the ideal, how hopelessly he is entangled—being misunderstood and misrepresented as a bloodthirsty insurrectionary, in the very hours when his whole manhood was concentrated upon the task of preventing bloodshed! His love for Roma becomes at once his glory and his defeat, his comfort and his despair. All this is described with nervous energy, and sometimes thrilling power.

You will find one of the most fascinating elements in this interesting study to be Mr. Hall Caine's daring picture of the Pope. The doctrine is developed through several most interesting and original scenes that the Papal claim to territorial dignity is a great hindrance to the universal authority and influence of the Catholic church, and as a side issue it is somewhat fiercely contended that the use of the confessional is also an abuse of human relations which helps to perpetuate social wrongs. How the Pope in this story becomes convinced that he must lay aside earthly ambitions, even for the church, and lead it out in the simplicity of its faith to bear its direct witness to the eternal Lord, and how extensive and surprising is the religious and social result of this action, you must find out from the book yourself.

Mr. Hall Caine has undoubtedly written a strong book. What is disagreeable in it he may perhaps be able to defend as being part of the whole situation, and as being described as carefully and simply as possible. His hero, David Rossi, is indeed a visionary, and the program which Mr. Hall Caine works out is, of course, unpractical. His descriptions of the Pope will offend his Catholic readers. And yet, after all such criticisms have been frankly made, there remains the significant fact that one more man of independent mind in our day, seeking for the field that interests the largest number of readers, and the direction in which they look for the most powerful teaching, selects the central problems of society for investigation; and there follows after this the further significant fact that such a student of central human problems finds their solution bound up with the history of the church and dependent upon the clearer understanding by man of the mind of Christ. Over all defects of the book these facts stand out and mark it as one more powerful witness to that which we of the evangelical faith seem nowadays to see so strongly, that in the religious life lie those forces which are changing and will yet more profoundly change the face of the world.

I am yours faithfully,

A BOOKMAN.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Exit Czolgosz.

Leon Czolgosz, the assassin of President McKinley, has paid the utmost penalty of the law. He went to his death sullen and defiant, saying, "I am not sorry for my crime." He showed no sign of fear. He refused to see the Polish priest who was in attendance. He had by baptism been made a member of the Roman Catholic church, but it is said that "he never practiced his religion, and as an anarchist denounced all its tenets." There is something very impressive in the swift yet unhasting way in which the law bore the assassin to his doom. There were no sensational accessories; no opportunity to pose as a hero or as a martyr. Fifty-three days after he had committed the foul deed he is placed in the electrical chair; a few seconds and life is extinct; his body is then thrown into an unmarked grave, and within a few hours is dissolved with quicklime. An ignoble end, befitting an ignoble deed. He will now pass out of the thoughts of men. "The memory of the wicked shall rot."

Lynching a Form of Social Anarchy.

Another of those lawless outbreaks which causes the American people to blush for shame has occurred in Washington Parish, Louisiana, where the lynching of a negro ended in a race feud in which three white men and twelve negroes were killed. Lynching always defeats its end; it brutalizes and debases, and excites to deeds of violence. As a form of social anarchy the utmost power of government ought to be invoked to punish it, and to stamp it out. It is gratifying to know from the statistics which have been preserved that, despite appearances to the contrary, lynching is on the decrease. The total number of persons lynched in the last twenty years is 3,130. Of 2,516 persons slain by mob law since 1885, fifty-one were women and 2,465 men; 1,678 were negroes, 801 white, twenty-one Indian, nine Chinese and seven Mexicans; 1892 marked the high water mark, and the total for that year—236—has appreciably decreased during recent years. "Those who seek to uphold lynching in the South," remarks the Philadelphia Public Ledger, "do so on the ground that it is chiefly a punishment on those who commit grave crimes against women; but the figures published do not bear out this contention. Of more than 1,700 lynchings between January 1, 1885, and January 1 of the present year, only 602 illegal executions were for this form of crime. The remainder were for murder, thieving, politics, unpopularity, and generally bad reputation."

Union in Sunday School Work.

Among the agencies which are working in a quiet and effective way for the unification of the people of Christ are the Sunday school county and state associations. At those gatherings divisive questions are kept in the background, and practical questions touching the advancement of Christ's kingdom among the young are considered. The churches that keep aloof from this work suffer inconceivable loss. Dr. Jesse M. Hurlbut, the well known leader in Sunday school work, says: "Show me the county where the schools are in closest touch with the interdenominational work and I will show you the best schools."

Closing of the Buffalo Exposition.

The Pan-American Exposition has come to an end. It marked a stage in the nation's progress, and although its balance sheet shows a deficit of over four million dollars, yet it is pronounced a great artistic and educational success. Its most outstanding feature was its wonderful electrical display; the harnessing of the Niagara Falls and the utilizing of its power for this purpose being one of the great achievements of the century. The Buffalo exposition will always be connected in the public mind with the dark tragedy of the President's death, but as it passes into history its value to the common weal will become more and more apparent. To those who beheld it the memory of the electrical display of the "Rainbow City" will remain a joy forever.

Plans for Social Trusts.

At a lecture under the auspices of the Men's Community Club, given last week at the Chicago Commons, Dr. W. H. Tolman, secretary of the League for Social Service in New York, presented a plea for a closer communication between the organizations which are working for the betterment of the working classes.

He pointed out what the men of the old world and of this country are doing toward the improvement of social conditions. His remarks and the views shown gave a clear conception of the development in the social revolution.

"Great social changes have already taken place," he said, "and others are to follow, attendant on the substitution of the factory system for home industries, the redistribution of population and massing it in cities, the creation and concentration of capital, the organization of labor and the like. Society is gradually gaining self-consciousness, that is, it is becoming aware that its life is one, that its members are members one of another. We need, therefore, a social clearing-house, and to supply this need is one of the chief aims of the League for Social Reform."

By the use of the stereopticon Dr. Tolman showed the development which has been made in recent years in the housing of the working classes and in the improvement of their social condition generally. He also showed the directions in which still further advance can be made through the co-operation of labor and capital.

CHICAGO NOTES.

PROF. EDMUND J. JAMES of the University of Chicago has thrown out a challenge to the citizens of the Seventh Ward by offering himself as a candidate for the City Council. It is to be hoped that the challenge will be accepted. Reform in civic affairs must come largely by displacement, and it is an encouraging sign to see busy men of intelligence and capacity willing to serve as aldermen. Prof. James is a recognized authority on municipal government, and his election to office is, in the present condition of affairs, a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Dr. H. W. Thomas has resigned the pastorate of the People's church in Chicago to devote his remaining days to a new movement called The People's church of America, for the furtherance of which a friend has given a million dollars. The Rev. Frank Crane of the M. E. church of Hyde Park has been chosen as Dr. Thomas' successor, and there is little doubt of his acceptance. The choice is in all respects a happy one. Dr. Crane has elements of popularity which will fit him to minister with acceptance to the mixed and motley audience which assembles for worship in McVicker's theater. He is too excessively individualistic to draw well in denominational harness, and must always have been a thorn in the side of presiding elders and bishops. He is a free lance and fights in light armor. He is not weighted down with theological lore; but he knows men, and is in thorough sympathy with modern thought and life. His strength as a speaker lies in his pungent wit, his gift of epigrammatic utterance, and his wholesome humanitarianism. There is nothing clerical about him. He resembles a man of the street, and his off-hand, debonaire, and sometimes reckless way of saying things is to an average audience very attractive. He will keep up worthily the traditions of the People's church; and will be a power for good in the life of the city.

The retirement of Dr. H. W. Thomas from the leadership of the People's church, to which he has ministered for twenty-one years, removes from the pulpit of Chicago one of its most marked figures. Dr. Thomas was deposed from the Methodist Episcopal church in 1880 for teaching doctrines contrary to the church standards, especially as pertaining to the final destiny of the wicked; he clinging to "the larger hope" for which Tennyson pleads. His friends rallied round him and formed an independent church, which has grown until it has become an important factor in the city's life. His sympathetic nature and catholic spirit have made him a general favorite with the unchurched. Seldom have the bitter experiences of his early years dropped gall into his speech. He has gone on through the years speaking his message and doing his work in his own way. He has been a friend of the newspaper reporters, for whom he had always a kind word, and to this is to be attributed in a large measure the publicity which he has enjoyed. He will now become pastor emeritus and will, as heretofore, interest himself in social and civic reform.

CONTRIBUTED

IT IS ENOUGH.

It is enough, if, at the close of day,
Thou, resting wearied limbs, canst truly say,
"I have walked humbly with my God this day,"—
It is enough.

Though failure, oft-repeated, dim the light
Of high resolve, wherewith thy youth was bright,
If each fresh morn thou gird thee to the fight,
It is enough.

Though hopes which make the world seem half divine
Fade in thy clasp and suffer slow decline,
If thou for others' hopes exchangest thine,
It is enough.

Though thou hast longed in vain to find a friend
Whose glance thy heart's sore loneliness can mend,
If thou hast loved thine own unto the end,
It is enough.

Though death should come ere half the projects vast,
Which seemed thy life's breath, into form are cast,
If without wrath or fear thou breathe thy last,
It is enough.

And when the Dark shall flee before the Day,
And God shall comfort thee in his great way,
Then thou at last in utter peace shall say,
It is enough.

—Dorothea Hollins.

THE PERFECT MAN.*

HE old and stubbornly fought battle between idealism and realism in art and in life is largely due to confusion of meaning about what the two words at their best stand for. De Quincey said he was seldom disposed to meet any sincere affirmation by a blank unmodified denial, since all errors arise in some narrow, partial or angular view of truth; and this is certainly the case in the long quarrel between idealism and realism. They often have to state their side in an extreme form to counterbalance each other's exaggeration. When idealism is looked on as the home of all vagrant visionaries, and sets its seal on every vague romanticism, and every unintelligible speculation, and every vapory mysticism—all with the one essential qualification of being absolutely unhampered by facts and unrelated to life—it is natural to expect the protest, which impatiently pushes aside the nebulous, the occult in all its forms, all traffic with mystery, all that sounds like rhapsody to the cold ear, all "striving to attain by shadowing out the unattainable." The transcendental is dismissed, as either the self-delusion of the dreamer, or the deceit of the charlatan. Realism asks for definiteness of conception, and for precision of statement. It pins us down to the crude, naked fact. It has no sympathy with the inexpressible and the undefinable—if there are such things they can be let alone. Its great virtues are intellectual veracity and lucid, accurate account of facts. Let us see the thing as it is, and if it has to be described or painted, let it be done as it is seen. This appears a very reasonable demand, and seems to settle the question at once on the side of realism, but the demand which looks so simple only brings the difficulty into focus; for two men do not see the same scene alike. Art is more than transcription, as realism declares—it is interpretation; but even if it were only transcription, no two men could make the same transcript. Fusili, painter and art critic, said he only wished he could paint up what he saw. The same thing will appeal differently to different people according to capacity, sensibility, experience. One may look on a flower with the eye of a florist, another of a market-gardener, another of a botanist, another of an artist. William Blake saw angels amid the swaying corn or nestling in a tree. A scene, which is dull and uninteresting to the listless eye, may be transformed by a touch of creative and interpretative imagination, as James Smetham says Gerhard Dow threw a glow over our very pickled cabbage.

Wordsworth in his introduction to his "Ode on Immortality" tells us how impossible it was for him to disbelieve in the spiritual, because of the immediate sense he had of the indomitableness of the spirit within him. So exalted sometimes was his thought that he was often unable to think of external things having an external existence at all, which is ever the pitfall of idealism.

"Many times," he says, "while going to school have I grasped at a wall or tree to recall myself from this abyss of idealism to the reality. At that time I was afraid of such processes. In later periods of life I have deplored, as we have all reason to do, a subjection of an opposite character." The experience is a common one, though not perhaps in the same form, or with the same vividness, yet in some kindred way; and the sceptical mood, which follows in later life and is inclined to limit reality to the material, is also a common one. To the eager soul entranced by the splendor of a great ideal comes a moment of disillusionment, when a cold hand is laid on his pulse, and a curtain seems drawn over his eyes, and sadly he can say—

Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?

We see the tragedy being enacted every day in the young man, who began the world with fresh enthusiasm, being subdued to the level of his environment; and worst of all, unlike Wordsworth who deplored the change, sometimes he looks back with shame or contempt to his first high thoughts. To be sorry that the vision faileth is a nobler state than to deny that there was a vision at all. When the reality seems so different to the vision, and the lack-lustre eye no longer sees the flaming of the advent feet, the temptation comes to deride the past. This stage of something like disillusionment seems almost inevitable, and should be accepted as a part of the discipline of life, as a call not to renounce the ideal but to make it truer and larger. Moral life, the life of tempted beings capable of falling and rising, of doubting and believing, involves this process, which to so many brings disillusionment at least for a time. It is the great test of life, trying of what stuff it is made; and its full purpose is achieved when a man is sent back to his life with a sweeter, more patient humility.

Idealism, in spite of the disasters that overtake it, is indestructible in man, and the high claim made by many today on behalf of culture is but another proof of this. They are attesting to the innate faith of man in his destiny. The ideal, which culture sets before itself of a perfect man—a full-grown, finished, complete man—lies at the heart of the race. A yearning for some unattained perfection is the root of all human progress. Even if it be illusion, even if man be haunted by the dream of a past that has never been, tortured by the vision of a future that will never be, it is only a witness of the truth of the unquenchable thirst of man for the infinite. It is as if he knew that he once dwelt in Eden, and can never quite adjust himself to any other imperfect environment.

*From Culture and Restraint, by Hugh Black, just issued by Fleming H. Revell Co. By permission of publishers.

It is this discontent, born of the sense of weakness, of failure, of imperfection, of sin, which is the spur to all endeavor and the inspiring impulse of life.

"In this broad earth of ours,
Amid the measureless grossness and the slag,
Enclosed and safe within its central heart,
Nestles the seed perfection."

Culture, which aims at complete self-realization and seeks to produce the finest results possible from the human material at its disposal, has as its inciting motive an ideal, however shadowy, of the perfect man. It looks beyond the conflicting details to an end, which will bring into harmony every section of life.

If the spiritual side of a man's nature be undeveloped, he is not truly full-grown. Since the ideal is a complete development, full culture must mean that no part of the being of man will be overlooked, and to leave out the spiritual is like Hamlet with the part of the Prince of Denmark left out. It makes no difference to the argument, whether we call the spiritual qualities only the finer attributes of mind or not. If the ideal implies spiritual communion with the divine (as it does both in St. Paul's thought and in Plato's), a man without it remains a case of arrested development, with shrunken soul, never reaching complete manhood, never attaining the true balance and fulness of life.

Further, there is the region of morals, the need of an enlightened conscience and a disciplined will. This culture of character must take precedence of the finest culture of mind. Not even an exquisite taste for the fine arts and an infallible judgment of literature can make up for a life that is undeveloped in other lines. Such æsthetic attainment cannot save a life from failure, when there is at the back of it a weak character. Charles I. was a man of taste and imagination and even intellect, with great knowledge of art, and a genuine love of literature. His collection of paintings was admired throughout Europe for the fine taste displayed in the selection. When a captive awaiting judgment, he devoted hours daily not only to Bishop Andrewes, and Hooker's great book, but to Tasso, Ariosto, Spenser's "Faerie Queene," and Shakespeare. Yet he was of flighty, and confused, and perverse brain, and was anything but a wise king. He never seemed able to accept facts, signs of the times, and staggered on to his doom blindly and stupidly.

Finally, the perfect man must have a life above sense and time, rising, as in Plato's ideal, from fair forms to fair practices, and from fair practices to fair thoughts, and from fair thoughts till he touches the infinite region of spirit. Without this higher culture, life must remain one-sided and disproportionate, without the depth and richness of a complete nature. Thus step by step we have risen to the insistent demand of religion, which claims to cover all the ground, consecrating every power and capacity, that they may be used for a higher purpose than even their own best perfection. Religion admits the truth and the duty involved in the æsthetic ideal, but transcends that truth with a deeper truth, and includes that duty in a wider duty still. What that is we will seek to discover in the Christian Solution, after we have considered the rival method which opposes self-culture by self-restraint.

THE MALAY RACE.

HERMON P. WILLIAMS.

ESCHEL divides mankind into seven grand families; Blumenbach names five; Latham finds but three. So it seems that types of men and civilizations merge into each other by ill-defined gradations. In the lack of agreement among more scientific ethnologists, we may advert to Paul's one-family theory, for "he made of one every nation of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

But on the basis of physical characteristics, customs, arts, and language, the Malays are worthy to be placed in one grand group by themselves. They are quite distinct from their Papuan neighbors to the south; and with just as little reason ought they to be classed with their Mongolian neighbors to the north. They are a brown-skinned race, of less than average height, with straight, coarse, black hair and scanty beards. They have high cheek bones, and a tendency to flattened noses. Their eyes are set horizontally, though an oblique tendency frequently shows the presence of Chinese blood.

Where the primitive home of these peoples was centered is a matter of some conjecture. Madagascar and southern Asia have both been named as such. Many tribes have traditions that Sumatra was the seat of their ancient dynasties. Certain it is that now we find the race widespread over the eastern seas. Three tribes of the Malays live in Madagascar, Celebes, Sumatra, the Malay Peninsula, the coast land of Borneo, and the Philippines are theirs. They have peopled the Polynesian islands, and have mingled their blood with the Papuans in Micronesia. Many islands whither these Malays came were already inhabited by the more primitive Papuans, the South Sea blacks. Wherever the black and the brown races came into contact, the latter proved the more vigorous, the former gave way. In the Philippines, it is true, the black (Aetas) first dominated the invaders; but were afterwards defeated by them and either enslaved or driven back into the mountains. This Malayan conquest occurred more than four centuries before the Spanish discovery; though about the time of Magellan's voyage the most southern islands of the archipelago had received fresh incursions of Malays from Borneo. The chiefs of these last migratory expeditions became the sultans of Sulu and Mindanao.

The old-time excursions of the brown race, searching out new islands, braving hundreds of leagues of unknown seas in frail open boats and conquering ferocious savages, illustrate the daring of which the race is capable. They could recklessly sport with the cruel breakers on their surf boards; or could maintain the hardy piracies that made the Moluccas and Sunda Straits historic bogies to Oriental trade. Among themselves their relations were far from tame. Until recent years the Gadannes of Luzon annually armed themselves to increase their trophies of war, when the "fire-tree" was in bloom. Traditional history in Celebes distinguishes native princes as "the throat-cutter," or "he whose head was cut off;" or "he who ran amuck;" or by some equally fierce description.

In most of the tribes the brown man was romantically independent and proud. He had his kris or dagger by his side, ready to avenge every insult. But he preferred to fight men of other tribes, and toward his own family was ever kind and affectionate. His village was rather democratic in its social life, but for counsel or war possessed its acknowledged headmen. Greater chieftains united these smaller communities under feudal bonds.

Perhaps the failure of the Malay race to advance in civilization may rather be explained by its geographical distribution than by any theory of its inherent worthlessness. Their lands are marvellously fertile and yield sustenance for man without his labor. This has been the Malay's misfortune, for the need to work is the best spur to progress. His island homes were too far separated one from the other to lend the incentive of domestic competition, and too uniform in abundance to invite the play of commerce. His dominion lay eastward, away from energizing contact with the Mediterranean races, and but little acquainted with the vigorless culture of southern Asia. It is true that Chinese and Indian traders visited his coasts, and their refinement was more or less imitated, and they mingled their blood with his. But neither Oriental art nor trade gave sufficient emotions or lasting ambitions to elevate any considerable community.

The Portuguese followed Da Gama around the Cape of Good Hope, invaded the Malayan islands, and established settlements. The Spaniards came also when Magellan had pierced the region from the eastward. Then the Dutch sent out their ship-loads of merchants and governors; and England entered the arena for her share of the rich East Indian trade. The course of three centuries has seen some considerable improvement in the conditions of those islands most carefully governed. Order has taken the place of barbarous tumults, agriculture has been encouraged, and other industries fostered. European manners and culture have been engrafted quite successfully among a limited class. But even in Java, which some say is ideally governed—for a tropical colony—all that has been done has not incited in the race an independent genius. Commercial civilization has given them some veneer, but no spontaneity.

If we may judge from what little history is available of the Malay people, it is apparent that religious causes have been the most powerful to affect them. This is not a peculiar thing; it is true in noting the life of all peoples. But it appears more solitary in Malay history, and is none the less suggestive that the truest way to civilize them is to Christianize them.

Their primitive religion was spirit worship. They had idols and priests and abundant superstitions, but no elaborate cult. This last fact was quite natural considering their segregation and fierce inter-tribal jealousies, yet the strongest universal sentiment among them, a guaranty of such social order as they had, was religious. Its best known illustration was the tabu—a religious consecration enforced by temporal and eternal pains. Captain Cook on Hawaii and Bishop Patterson on Nukapu, in dying as victims of the tabu, also witness the religious nature of a custom that actuated and controlled the brown peoples of the Pacific islands.

The race has taken kindly to religious teachings advanced in their midst. Nor can they be charged with religious fickleness in this; rather, the contrary is true. Three times in their history have large numbers of the race been transformed by religious propagandism. The first was when the wave of Buddhism swept down from India in some ancient time. The magnificent ruins of Boro-Boedor and Brambanam in Java—once time temples great and beautiful, replete with wonderful carvings—are monuments of this era of order, enterprise and art under the inspiration of a higher order of religion. Then, four centuries ago, the Mohammedan religion, introduced from Arabia, established itself in Java and eastward. Though inspiring no great temples, it certainly gained a tenacious hold upon its adherents. Finally, Roman Catholicism came to the Philippines. It was a far grander religion than the other two. It gained sway over six millions of the people and transformed their customs and ideals. They became peaceful and docile. They were led to build great churches and to join in elaborate forms of worship. Many attended schools and pursued lines of Occidental culture. Best of all, they have been awakened to indigenous and coherent ambitions for the privileges of manhood, and have so caught this spirit of Christianity that they can no longer be repressed by superincrustated theological superstitions or civil despotism. The finger-posts of Malay history indicate the capacity of the race for a self-sufficient civilization. And just as truly does it appear that religion, the true religion, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, must be the efficient cause to accomplish this.

A HINDU TAILOR.

GEO. W. BROWN.

I HAVE just had some more experience with a dirzi, or Hindu tailor. Few beings are calculated to be more exasperating. There is a customary price to be paid for the making of each garment of ordinary wear, but when your dirzi comes, presuming on your ignorance of this fact, he always asks from 50 to 100 per cent more than he expects to get. If you are posted about prices, you do not give in to him, but after an indefinite period of necessary haggling you conclude a bargain with him. Perhaps it is a suit you want made. After diligent inquiry you find out how much goods will be necessary. Then you go out to buy the materials. You do this because you have heard of the ways of dirzis, and have learned that it is necessary to see every piece of goods which goes into your suit. I will pass over the purchasing with few words. Did you ever undertake to buy everything that goes into a suit, just a common black suit to wear on Sundays? There is the cloth, and linings of many kinds, canvas, buttons, padding, thread, silk twist, and other things too difficult to remember. Before you get through you think that the suit, like the wearer, is fearfully and wonderfully made.

At the appointed time your dirzi comes to cut out the suit. First he examines everything you have bought, and, to your dismay, you find that about half the things you have bought won't do. The lining is wrong, and the canvas you bought is the kind used in ladies' dresses, feminine gender, therefore, and you will have to get other. Now he wants a pattern to cut out by, but you do not carry a stock of patterns with you. He knows nothing about measuring, and making the suit from his figures. At length you produce an old suit, and ask if he can make it like that. After a critical survey he says he can, but you must get another yard of goods, you didn't buy enough. You explain that you got just what he directed, but he replies that he was talking about another kind of suit. He makes a motion to wrap up everything to take to his shop, but again you exercise your knowledge of dirzis and tell him he must cut out the goods here. For there is a story afloat that dirzis take tribute of every piece of goods which passes through their hands. So he proceeds to mark out the suit, after much grumbling. Sure enough, when he is about through, you find out that you must get more goods. You are helpless. But your wife (bless the women, what could we do without them) makes him mark out everything over again, and superintends it herself; so the cloth is sufficient. Then he enumerates a lot of things that go into a suit, and which you never heard tell of, and wants to know if they are to be left out of yours. Of course you must depute him to purchase them, although you know he will charge you just double for them. But you are helpless. Your only consolation is that the cost of them will be small any way.

In due time the suit comes and you try it on. Inasmuch as you furnished the goods, he was very liberal in the matter of seams, and consequently every garment hangs limp and loose upon you, being several sizes too big. But he will sew it over again, being a very patient man, and at last being tired of trying it on and weary of seeing the suit, you tell him it will do, and take it, though it does not fit and never will. When you go to pay him he suavely explains how this and that piece of lining was too small and how he had to spend money to buy enough to make up the deficiency. You don't know whether this is true or not, but you must give him the benefit of the doubt, and pay him what he asks, or your conscience may dig you at some future time.

If he makes shirts for you the neckbands are two inches high and the back of the shirt as many inches too narrow. He makes the bosom three inches too short. Any garment light enough in color to show dirt easily looks as if it had been used to dust the tools in a blacksmith shop. No matter how large a piece of goods you give him it is always "cumti," that is, too small.

But he has good qualities. He is very patient, and will take anything to his dirty shop and try again and again to get it to fit, though it may become worse each time. He doesn't charge much for his labor. If you want him to work at your house he will do so for 25 cents, or even less, a day. If he is dishonest and untruthful, he is just like his fellow countrymen. He has been brought up under a false religion, based on lies, and maintained by lies. He and his ancestors have been deceived, often oppressed, for generations, and have come to believe that guile and trickery are necessary to their existence. So we must remember these things and be patient with them, trying to teach them the better way.

Landour, India.

'Tis worth a wise man's best of life,

'Tis worth a thousand years of strife,

If thou canst lessen but by one

The countless ills beneath the sun.—Sterling.

SOME PRESENT DAY HINDRANCES TO FOREIGN MISSIONS.

H. L. MARSH.

THE panic of 1893 and the hard times following will not account for the accumulated debts of mission boards. Revival of business has not brought equal revival of gifts. The intense earnestness in foreign missions which characterized church life earlier in the last century does not affect a large portion of the church now. The few are deeply interested, many are lukewarm, some are bitterly antagonistic. That such is a fair statement of fact we believe few will deny. Some deplore, while they see this condition.

Gifts to educational and eleemosynary institutions have been far larger for some years than those to the church at home or abroad. Does not this imply a changed belief on the part of some as to what is the surest method of benefiting the most people? Some are sorry for this because of what it means; why is it so?

Some one has written lately: "An age of critical research is not an age of great preaching." Research may not shake the foundations, but seems to many to do so. For a time it militates against deep and powerful convictions. Great convictions make great preachers.

One hindrance to the work of missions is the aroused alarm of the adherents of the old religions on mission fields. What a great stir there has been in recent years in Japan, China, India! Buddhist priests are making strenuous efforts to rouse their followers to a sense of the danger to the ancestral faiths. In China, the Boxers are one class of many that are trying to arouse persecution of the Christians. The suppression of the Emperor, the assumption of power by the Dowager Empress, the connival at extermination by those in authority, are all said to be parts of the same movement.

Though the comparison of faiths at the Parliament of Religions was claimed by many Orientalists to show the superiority of their religions to Christianity, it really opened the eyes of all to the world-claims of Christianity. It showed it to be the all-conquering religion. It showed that Christianity is the religion of the nations which are becoming more and more dominant. This knowledge has led to a great revival, or efforts at revival, among the ethnic faiths. They may be expected to make a final struggle. The revival of Catholicism to repel the advance of the Reformation was a similar phenomenon.

It is little wonder that the dissemination of Western ideas should alarm the despotic governments of the East. American schools in Turkey have sent out hosts of young men imbued with the spirit of Gospel liberty. Because of their intelligence, they have taken commanding positions. The Sultan needed them; the small principalities, becoming independent, needed them; places of trust and commanding influence needed them. Their ideas, so subversive of decadent customs, were forgotten or unknown by those who wanted to use them. Robert College has furnished many of these molders of thought and policy in Servia, Bulgaria and elsewhere. No wonder the Sultan is becoming alarmed. What the "Powers" prevented in a craven desire to preserve the balance of power, missions have been accomplishing by the quiet methods of erosion. He has seen bit after bit of his territory taken from his grasp.

No doubt the reactionary policy of China for two years past has been due to the same cause. It is seen that missionary efforts are inimical to tyranny. Western ideas are loosening the bonds of China's conservatism. Non-Christian, or non-missionary, foreigners in China have—by rash, cruel treatment of the Chinese—provoked the outbreaks. Yet the idea that something must be done to keep out aliens has taken strong hold of the Chinese mind. This trend ought to be a source of gratification to Christians, for it is convincing proof of the good results of mission work. But this roused opposition must prove a temporary hindrance. It will call for more heroism in meeting persecution, renewed consecration and increased sacrifice. Those who go will need to meet these changed conditions; those who send will do so only as they hear this new call of God. Whatever an uneducated missionary force, unsupported by systematic giving at home, may have been able to do in the past, it has no place in this new work. Present conditions are not calling for that class of workers. Men thoroughly equipped intellectually, familiar with modern thought, fitted to be real leaders, such only are able to meet the trying demands. They are ready; the Church should send them.

A low ideal of Christian living is another hindrance. It operates at home to stifle the sense of responsibility, to increase love of luxury and ease, to foster commercialism. It operates abroad to lessen desire for a new religion. The standard of living and giving is higher in some foreign mission churches than it is in the home churches. Chinese Christians in California are putting to shame their American fellow believers in their self-denying zeal for the furtherance of the Gospel. Those put in trust with the Gospel all their lives, who have knowledge of what it has done for England and America, seem not to prize it so highly as do those who have just found it the power of God unto salvation.

We do not forget that the greed and vice of the un-Christian in Christian lands have always been an obstacle to mission work. To-day the vicious, cruel and unnecessary permission of evil by the strong Christian nations is a tremendous hindrance to the spread of the Gospel in the weaker nations. American liquor in the Philippines and in Africa, English opium in China, are instances in point—cruelties for which God will surely require blood. The standards of morality among Christians will be known in lands not Christian. The world is all living near neighbors; China can look into our back yard.

A third hindrance to missions lies in some false inferences from the evolution theory. There is not here expressed doubt of the truth of the theory; the contention is that it has been worked too hard. An opportunity to note its effects in the concrete for a few years showed these results: Lessened respect for the Word of God, destruction of interest and faith in evangelistic efforts, loss of sensitiveness to moral considerations. This will suggest some ways in which the unwarranted inferences from the evolution hypothesis have become a hindrance to missionary effort. The upheaval in the long-received foundations of philosophical and theological belief which have followed acceptance of this theory has shaken the faith of some. Some have lost faith in evangelical religion; some have built their faith on a re-built basis. Theological unrest may lead to stronger faith, but its immediate effect is frequently to cut the nerve that reaches the heart and the pocket. So, in some minds, this theory has led to the abandonment of biblical (I use the word advisedly because of lost regard for the Bible) ideas of sin, salvation, and responsibility. It has led to the substitution of culture for the New Birth, minimized the guilt of sin, ignored or denied responsibility for the man on the Jericho road. Instead of growth in grace by feeding upon Christ, it urges cultivation of intellect by scientific and literary study. It has no place for a sudden transition or transformation, but counsels growth by methods of cultivation. It would lift men in the mass rather than lift the mass by transforming the individuals which compose it. It assumes and asserts that debased peoples must have ages in which to grow into civilized nations. It denies the possibility of a "nation being born in a day."

Squarely athwart this inference—for such only can we suppose it—lies the fact of the complete and speedy transformation of some of the islands of the Pacific. Cannibal peoples have in a few decades become Christian men and women, living after the principles of Christ, performing the duties of Sabbath-keeping, family worship, industry, charity, sobriety, as well as those communities long under the influence of civilization. It has to face such facts as Madagascar and Metlakatla, as the New Hebrides and Hawaii.

The failure to fit the facts of mission history does not prevent some from adopting this belief. It were, perhaps, unjust to suppose that it furnishes a sought excuse to ignore Christ's last command; it has had that effect. Those whose beliefs lead them to expect no real or speedy returns from missionary outlay will not give liberally for this work.

The well-known fact that missions have been of great benefit in material ways—that they have stimulated commerce and furnished a market for manufactured products—is well understood. It has been worked honestly and faithfully to secure liberal giving, yet it does not secure the sinews of missionary warfare as does the conviction that those put in trust with the Gospel have a mighty responsibility to give it to those who have it not. "Debtor both to Jew and Gentile" because I have that which is the power of God unto salvation.

Must not a revival of faith in the power of the Gospel to save precede a revival of missionary giving? If the tendency of some modern thinking has been to lessen, for a time, the above conviction, will not that account for the lessened giving? Does that conviction touch the emotions and bend the will as it did forty years ago? Does it move to a burden of prayer? Does it rouse to effort? Does it secure such self-sacrificing giving?

Most of these hindrances will vanish before the increased vigor of a renewed Church, baptized with the Spirit which sent Christ to this world. When more believers are filled with the spirit of John 17:18, then Student Volunteers will not be forced into other lines of effort; but the Captain will lead his hosts to large victories.

Kiowa, Kansas.

In the darkest night, my child,
Canst thou see the Right, my child?
Forward then! God is near.

The Right will be the light to thee,
Armor and might to thee,

Forward! and never fear.—Norman Macleod.

AT THE CHURCH

OUR PULPIT. KEEPING THE FAITH.

BY WM. J. TUCKER, D. D.

"When the Son of Man Cometh, Shall He Find the Faith on the Earth?"—Luke 18: 8.

THE question which I propose for our consideration, as a representative body of Christian believers, is whether we as a generation are keeping or losing the faith—faith, that is, in Christianity.

It will not be easy to answer this question according to its seriousness except as we find the right approach to it.

When our Lord reopened the kingdom of God on earth he laid down two, and only two, conditions of entrance—character and faith. The terms of admission were reduced to the simple formula, repent and believe. The contribution of character was to be in excess of that which was then current among religious people. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." Not more righteousness, however, was demanded, but righteousness of another spirit and of wider action, a righteousness adapted to the new faith and commensurate with it. The contrast came out in perfect clearness when the young ruler offered to Christ the old obedience, but could not follow him. The transfer from the old type to the new was fully made in the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. That excess of righteousness of which Jesus had spoken was found in the difference between the righteousness of Paul the Christian and that of Saul the Pharisee. The character which was to support the new faith was to have all those outgoing qualities which would make a Christian believer worthy of being a follower of Christ.

And the chief characteristic of the new faith called for was belief in the ability of Christ to accomplish the ends for which this advance in character was demanded. Faith took this practical form throughout the ministry of Jesus. He never dealt in abstractions. He never confused the issue of faith. "Believest thou that I am able to do this?" That was all that was necessary to insure a miracle of healing. The training of the twelve both in doctrine and in action was to the same end. Did he wish to make the disciples believe in the new conception of God, he taught them to believe in his capacity to reveal God and to represent him. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Did he wish to make them believe in the new estimate of humanity, he taught them to believe in the possibilities of men, of all men, in him, "the Son of Man." Did he wish to make them believe in the new way to power over men, the way of sacrifice—"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said signifying what death he should die." Did he wish to make them believe in the new assurance of immortality—"I am the resurrection and the life." "Because I live ye shall live also." Everywhere in the teachings of Christ about himself as the object of faith one note is struck—it is the note of power: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." And the Christianity which he left to be believed in and trusted was the embodiment of his glorious personality, quick with the spirit of his teachings and ministry, wide as the sweep of his sacrifice, strong and sure as his resurrection.

Reaching, then, the question before us through this approach, I ask again, Are we, as a generation of Christian believers, keeping or losing the faith—faith in Christianity?

There are three tests through which any generation must pass in making any substantial answer to this question. The absolute loyalty or faith of a generation must be measured by its intellectual attitude to Christianity, by the depth of its moral passion and by the timeliness of its action.

The World the Subject of Redemption.

The intellectual attitude of our generation to Christianity represents in some respects the generation at its best, for its attitude in this regard has been conspicuous for hospitality and courage. But the fact remains that the church has just reached the position, not yet established in the confessions, but a position from which it seems impossible to recede, namely, that of the acknowledgment of the absolute and equal right of every human being in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I do not lay great stress upon the acceptance of this idea as a mark of our intellectual hospitality, for the idea has simply culminated in our time. What is much more clearly in evidence is the fact of the incoming, in our time, of the idea that Christianity is applicable not only to the individual but also to the world, the world of organized institutions and force. It is one thing to believe in the individual as the subject of redemption, even when you multiply him into all men of all races throughout the world, and another thing to believe in the world itself as the subject of redemption. And this is what we are beginning to believe in. The earlier Christianity lost the idea through its misapprehension of prophecy. Mediaeval Christianity could not accept it because of its direful experience in this world. Modern Christianity recognizes its significance, and entertains it, not as a dream, but as a working conception of Christianity. I do not say that the idea has passed as yet out of the intellectual stage. But it is a distinct advance to have reached this stage, for the very idea, as you see, mightily enhances the task laid upon Christianity, of which Christianity is assumed to be capable. And it must also be remembered that it is not possible to entertain an idea seriously without receiving an effect whether we recognize the cause or not. For some cause we are building our substance as never before into institutions, for some cause we are advancing steadily from the evangelistic to educational work in missions, for some cause we are urging consecration to the state as well as to the church, for some cause we are allowing young men of most serious purpose to pass by the ministry on the way to the service of man and of God. Unconsciously, it may be, but actually we are at work upon the world, and not simply upon the individual as the only subject of redemption.

Need of Moral Passion.

The intellectual attitude of a generation to Christianity is but a single, and by no means the most essential, test of its faith. We go deeper in our inquiry when we ask about the force of its moral passion. I use the term moral passion rather than moral power, because moral power is not available for the full use of Christianity until it has become passion. This, as we saw, was the difficulty with the righteousness which Christ found among men. It could not cross the line. It was a safe, careful, calculating righteousness. A righteous man after this type might have value among his own kind, in his own set. He was entirely valueless outside his set. "The value of a truly great man," it has been said, "consists in his increasing the value of all mankind." Such is the value of a truly good man. He increases the moral valuation of other men. I do not underestimate the worth of the ordinary man. I do not despise his attainments in goodness, or belittle his achievements. But he is not saving the world. It is not through him that the kingdom of heaven is brought in. His goodness is no match for the badness around him, organized or unorganized. He does not love goodness as other men love evil. His power is not power because it is not passion. I do not say that moral passion must take any one form. Cardinal Manning once spoke of the Salvation Army as "the only considerable body of Christians who had a passion for sinners as such." That was high praise. But goodness is not shut up to any one object of devotion. There is a passion for truth as well as for men, a passion for justice as well as for mercy, a passion for resistance to evil as well as for the spread of righteousness. One thing only is required for the uses of Christianity—that a man shall come out of the easy commonplace, and satisfy, in some way, the plain terms of the Christian life, loyalty, service, consecration, sacrifice. Christ is very explicit on this point. The greatest unfaith toward Christianity is the unfaith of selfishness. "He that saveth his life shall lose it: he that loseth his life for my sake and the gospel's shall save it."

*Synopsis of a sermon preached before the National Council, Portland, Me., Oct. 13th.

It is very difficult to estimate the moral attitude of a generation toward Christianity as compared with its intellectual attitude, for the reckoning here must be in the terms of service or of sacrifice. What are men doing at cost or risk for the world? What are they giving up for the common good? Is the spirit of sacrifice prevalent? Do the high claims of Christianity find a generous response? The reckoning is not easy in the absence of great exciting causes. The generations which heard the first cry of modern liberty, the generation which heard the first appeal of heathen lands, the generation which heard the groans of the slave, had the mighty advantage. After great conflicts the world grows still. We miss the outward call. Duty becomes less attractive, as it becomes less imperative.

Perhaps it was in anticipation of these long periods of the commonplace that Jesus indicates the possible lapses of faith in Christianity. It is not difficult to believe that Christianity can do great things, convert great sinners, change bad customs, conquer evil when it is very evil. It is not difficult to take part in the crusades and campaigns of Christianity. The strain to faith falls upon that steady, patient, enduring work which calls equally for that excess of righteousness without which there is no progress. We have felt the strain upon our faith at this point. I am not prepared to say that we have altogether kept the faith. I think that we are all conscious of a certain loss of available moral power. The fact that the social well-being, which must rest on the moralities, is on the increase is not decisive. I am more concerned to know where the really strenuous life of the time is to be found, and toward what ends it is set. Does Christianity, in its specific work and for its direct ends, absorb a proper amount of the energy and enthusiasm and sacrifice of our generation? I make due account of the widening of Christian influences and of Christian activities, but I cannot satisfy myself in regard to the result.

Demand of the Church for Men.

For a time it seemed as if the material development of the age would prove a stimulus to moral effort and not a diversion from it. Gradually it has proved more and more absorbing. The present danger from materialism does not seem to me to lie in financial prosperity, even with its attendant evils of social inequality, luxury and gilded vice; but rather in the disproportionate absorption of the force, the thought, the ambition, the mind, heart and will of the better life of our generation. Material prosperity has given us a splendid equipment for moral service, but it is putting the men we want most and need most more and more out of our reach. We are gaining in all the agencies and means of educational and religious development, but we are not gaining in the number of adequate men for influential and commanding positions. We cannot afford to accept the substitution of means for men. It is my firm conviction that the church, at least of our order, can find no equivalent for the pulpit. We must maintain the places which stand for the expression of moral passion. We must keep open the channels which lead from the one man to the many. We must see to it that personal power is utilized to the last degree in the interest of truth and righteousness.

The next revival of religion will stand, I have no doubt, for the recovery of personality.

Religion will call men back to its service, and will accept nothing in place of themselves. One cannot give money or anything else with the same passion with which he gives himself. All other forms of consecration are secondary, valuable, but secondary. No generation, therefore, can show its full faith in Christianity which does not offer its best gifts. Our generation has not been as generous of men as it has been of means, for the direct and indirect uses of Christianity. Lacking in this regard, I do not dare to affirm its full confidence in Christianity as measured by the depth of its moral passion.

God seldom intrusts his work of interference to other souls than those finely tempered to this work. They are the Luthers, the Wesleys, the Lincolns. They know how to execute the wrath of God in the salvation of nations and of races. When once we understand God's method of interference in the affairs of men, then we see how great is the stress which must be laid upon the timeliness of the action of each Christian generation. Accumulations of wrong are not to be wiped off by one stroke of vengeance, but accumulations of wrong are to be prevented by the prompt initiative of faith. That the church of the twentieth century finds itself so largely in arrears in the work of righteousness argues unfaith, at many critical times, in the power of Christianity.

Timeliness of Action.

In subjecting our generation to this test of the timeliness of action, we ought not to overlook the variety or the urgency of the tasks which have fallen to its lot. I recall the remark of Dr. Roswell D. Hitchcock that the problem before Christianity is always a three-fold problem—"to gain, to keep, to recover." This threefold problem forced itself upon us with peculiar urgency. The Christian nations were to be held at their best; ancient peoples and civilizations were to be won; and the backward and disheartened races were to be comforted and quickened. Some of the special tasks, like missions, were the sacred bequests of preceding generations. We could not abandon the responsibilities of which we had been put in trust. But other problems and opportunities were our own. How have we treated these? Have we shown insight, invention, sympathy, or have we been remiss at any one or all of these points?

In respect to timeliness of action, there has been an unfaith in the power of Christianity which has resulted in great loss. The Christian Endeavor movement, originating in Portland, is a happy instance of timely action in getting a hold upon the young people. But we have not shown similar timeliness in getting a hold upon the labor population, and as a result have lost it for at least a generation. The church has not mastered the city. It is in no sense a Christian or a Christianized institution.

It is doubtful if the church of any generation has allowed so large a section of the various Christianized communities to fall out of its grasp and away from its influence as the church of this generation has allowed. The estrangement, if not alienation, of the labor population of the Christian nations is chargeable in no slight degree to the unfaith of the church. Its action in this regard has shown no marks of timeliness, but has been slow, unsympathetic and unbelieving. And the result of it is the transmission to another generation of a work of recovery, to be wrought out only in patience, in sympathy and in an enduring faith.

There is deep need that we know Christ, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings. The call is not merely for the works of "applied Christianity," but for a vital faith as well as works.

May God grant unto us that we be known and remembered for our faith as well as for our works. May he give unto us yet the open vision. May he help us especially in the maintenance of our form of the Christian faith, that we be true to its lofty tradition that they who work must also watch, "watch for more light to break forth out of God's holy Word."

Dartmouth College.

David Livingston's Prayer.

"O Divine Love, I have not loved thee strongly, deeply, warmly enough. . . . I beseech thee, accept me and use me a little for thy glory. I have done nothing for thee yet, and I would like to do something. O do, do, I beseech thee, accept me and my service and take thou all the glory."

There's a knowing little proverb
From the sunny land of Spain;
But in Northland, as in Southland,
Is its meaning clear and plain.
Lock it up within your heart;
Neither lose nor lend it,—
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.—Mary E. Vandyne.

"Curved is the line of beauty;
Straight is the line of duty;
Walk by the last, and thou shalt see
The other ever follow thee."

BIBLE SCHOOL.

CHILDHOOD OF MOSES.

Lesson for Nov. 17th, 1901. Ex. 2:1-10.

Golden Text:—Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. Prov. 22:6.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Setting of the Lesson.

THE birth of Moses is placed at B. C. 1571, sixty-four years after the death of Joseph. The scene of the lesson is the Tanitic branch of the Nile, perhaps at Tanis, the Zoan of the Scriptures. Egypt was then (Beecher) really glorious. Rome had not been thought of. Greece was a den of robbers. Egypt was the one bright spot of the globe in all philosophy, in all art and in all religion.

Lesson in Child Training.

It was natural for the child of Moses, as for all children, to believe in the Divine. That man, created in the image of God, is a religious being, is what distinguishes him from the animals. The child, because he has inherited the taint of sin and is thrown in evil environments, is robbed of his just chance to allow the good within him to develop, unless parents and teachers bring to his aid the best help that is in their power. This is the teacher's high province. As well leave a garden alone to produce naturally as to leave this human garden of the soul, in which there are dormant seeds of weeds scattered from a hundred generations, and expect the good to thrive. To neglect the garden is to give the weeds a free chance. "The only justice to a child," says Dr. Hitchcock, "lies in checking weeds and cultivating flowers and fruit." Never have we had a more instructive lesson on the possibilities of efficient child training than in the case of the little slave boy Moses, who became the world's greatest law-giver.

V. 1. God a Shield. "And." Showing the connection between this lesson and the murderous outrage going on, as the result of Pharaoh's cruel edict of the preceding verse, intended to check the Hebrew race. But God, the shield of his people, (Gen. 15:1) designed otherwise. Already he had shielded Israel from famine. That his chosen race might be rescued from slavery, this child of faithful Levites was to be spared from the wholesale murder. We observe that here one is to come forth from this race of slaves who is to receive the great distinction of being adopted into the royal family of Egypt, to be educated for the responsible position of leader and law giver. Instead of a death blow to the Hebrew people, it meant a deliverer. * * * "There went a man of the house of Levi." Amram, the father of Moses, (Ex. 6:16, 20) the son of Koath who came to Egypt with Jacob. Gen. 46:11. * * * "A daughter of Levi." Her name was Jochebed, pronounced Jok'ebed. Ex. 6:20. She was of the same tribe with her husband. These persons in their sore adversity were yet religious, walking by faith in God and his promises to Abraham. Heb. 11:23. Faith is the key to the present narrative. Like the apostles, these parents placed God's commands above those of the king. Acts 4:19; 5:29.

V. 2. Faith Overcometh the World. "And bare a son." Moses, who, according to Ex. 6:16-20, was the greatgrandson of Levi. But some writers claim that here, as elsewhere, the genealogy of the Scriptures is condensed. Two children, Miriam (Ch. 15:20) now probably eight or ten years old, and Aaron (Ch. 7:12) three years old, had previously been born. Ch. 7:7. The family became noted for their marked devotion; Miriam a prophetess, and Aaron and Moses priests of God. * * * "He was a goodly child." Beautiful to look upon, "exceedingly fair," a fact that became historic. Acts 7:20;

Heb. 11:23. * * * "She hid him three months." This was because of Pharaoh's bloody edict, that every son born of Hebrews should be cast into the river. Ex. 1:22. Apparently love with faith led the mother to do this. The faith of these enslaved Hebrews was the most remarkable thing in their lives; it is mentioned by the apostle and this led him to include them among the glorious catalogue of Old Testament worthies who through faith obtained a good report. Heb. 11.

V. 3. Desperate Measures. "When she could not longer hide him." Our hearts go out to that mother in her distress as she sought to baffle the king's murderous command against her infant. No doubt a search of all houses for male children was to be made by the king's detectives. This was precisely the experience to which Jesus in his childhood was exposed, Matt. 2:13, 16. * * * "Took for him an ark of bulrushes." A small covered basket or box made of papyrus plant. This was a strong, tough reed, the wood of which was used for many purposes, and from the pith of which was derived the paper of Egypt. Egyptian monuments show many such arks and boats. The prophet Isaiah speaks of vessels of bulrushes. Is. 18:2. * * * "Daubed it with slime and with pitch." Made it water tight. The pitch was bitumen or asphaltum well known in the ancient world. Gen. 6:14; 11:3. Mixed with slime it assumed a waxy form that would fill into the crevices and resist water. * * * "Put the child therein." Into the ark after it had been made thoroughly secure against water. * * * "In the flags by the river's brink." Placed so that it might not float away. Her faith would lead her to do all she could for the child and then by prayer she would commit him to the care of God. Her works were a fruit of her faith. But this act was no less an act of God himself because performed by a parent. God works through the willing hands and heart which he has given his children.

V. 4. Wise As Serpent. "His sister." It appears that Moses had but one sister, Miriam. Num. 26:59. Her after life shows that she was not lacking in the genius which her brother showed. Micah 6:4. Later in the stirring national event of the passage of the Red Sea Miriam, then a prophetess, took the leading part in patriotic song. Ch. 15:20. * * * "Stood afar off." As a girl Miriam was tactful, in thus watching the child, to avoid detection and not betray the object of her anxiety; while ready to be of assistance at the opportune moment. * * * "To know and, etc." R. V. The sister would have equal interest with the mother in saving the life of the child. She was there to know at every moment what took place in connection with that precious ark.

V. 5. "Sacred-River Bather." The daughter of Pharaoh. This young Gentile woman's name, with that of Pilate's wife, (Mat. 27:19) goes down the ages honored for her kindness of heart towards the unfortunate. Among all people there are those whose hearts are not devoid of tender feeling. * * * "Came down to bathe." R. V. This was a custom of the princess, possibly on religious grounds, for the Nile was a sacred river. Of this custom doubtless the family of Moses well knew, hence the plot to bring the beautiful child to the attention of the royal daughter. * * * "When she saw the ark." The discovery of the ark was made by the princess, not by her maidens. Surely God was a refuge of his people in time of trouble. Ps. 46:1. * * * "Sent her maid to fetch it." Her handmaid, R. V., her personal serving maid.

V. 6. Gentle Deliverer. "Saw the child." Before Moses can become the deliverer of the Hebrews from the Egyptian Gentiles, this Gentile maiden steps in and delivers him from the king who sought the child's life. We observed in the history of Joseph that the salvation of Israel was effected through the instrumentality of the Gentiles of Egypt. Thus are the Jews debtors greatly to the Gentiles. Rom. 1:14. * * * "Behold the babe wept." The cry of the helpless child, whose life was sought, moves the pity of the woman's heart. * * * "Had compassion." That the mother should have earnestly prayed, as did Solomon later, we cannot doubt. 1 Kings 8:50. That here followed an answer to her prayer also is true. The compassion of this lady of the court is beautiful to behold. Our Master was noted for his compassion. Mat. 9:36. How much more should compassion towards the needy be expected of Christ's followers than of this daughter of the cruel pagan? 1 Pet. 3:8. There are thousands of boys in our land that are in greater danger from him who "as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour," (1 Pet. 5:8) than was little Moses from the king's decree, or from the Nile's crocodiles. We need to have hearts that are moved by the compassion of Christ toward such. * * * "One of the Hebrew children." Perhaps she felt that this was but one specimen in many of the fear that prevailed because of the outrage on Hebrew babes.

V. 7. Fitty-Spoken Word. "Then said his sister." How can this princess dispose of her strange beautiful charge? The bright little watcher Miriam was alert to take advantage of her pitying looks and acts. She boldly comes forth with an appeal to this one woman in Egypt who could help if she would. Miriam was but a child, but her words are truly "Like apples of gold in pitchers of silver." Prov. 25:11. God wants us to be so skillful "in word" (Heb. 5:13), so serpent-wise (Mat. 10:16) that we may have the apt word for all occasions. * * * "Shall I call a nurse of the Hebrew women?" A wise suggestion. The Hebrews were a healthy shepherd race and their women were sought as nurses by the Egyptian upper classes. * * * "Nurse the child for thee." At once recognizing the idea of the child's adoption by the princess.

V. 8. Relieved Hearts. "Pharaoh's daughter said, Go." By this means the mother was to receive her child back again and to be kept with her. For such a gentle, compassionate one to be present in the persecutor's own family shows that we need never despair of finding human kindness everywhere.

V. 9. In Royal Presence. "Pharaoh's daughter said unto her." The care of this child now becomes common ground where the highest and the lowest in the land meet. Here was established the first foundling society. * * * "Take and nurse it for me." Indicating the child's adoption by the princess. That it thus should find full protection in the very home of him against whom it needed protection sounds strangely. * * * "I will give thee thy wages." The mother became the recognized servant of the princess; she received pay for doing that which was the sweetest service to her loving heart. How profitable was faith and godliness in her case! 1 Tim. 4:8. * * * "Took the child and nursed it." But the mother was more than nurse. She became the early guide of him who should be Israel's guide.

V. 10. Soul Culture. "And the child grew." And as he grew the seeds of this world's conquering faith in God must have been dropped into his tender heart. How eagerly his mother would seek to impress, (1) God's love to the fathers of the nation; (2) God's "exceeding great reward," (Gen. 15:1) to his believing people, and (3) the contrast of this reward with the vain "treasures of Egypt." (4) She would teach him that their people had not always been slaves, but strong men, (Gen. 14:14-16; 26:13, 16), and by God's promise they were not always to be slaves. (5) She would instill into his mind the promise that they, indeed, were to become a great nation, a blessing to the world. (6) She would train the child to adore the name of, and to trust in God. * * * "Brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter." At what age we cannot say; it is surmised that Moses is at least seven and not above twelve. But the early impressions of godly training in that home remained with the child and controlled him in the great decisions of his life. Heb. 11:25, 26. * * * "He became her son." Thus with faithful home training, by God's providence, there was combined the training of the royal schools. The adopted son received a princely education, instructed "in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." Acts 7:22. All history shows that those whom God designs for great service he finds out ways to qualify for their duties. * * * "Called his name Moses." Thus one of the most honored names in the world was bestowed by a Gentile princess.

A learned professor who lives in New York has a wife and family, but, professor-like, his thoughts are always upon his books. One evening his wife, who had been out for some hours, returned to find the house remarkably quiet. She had left the children playing about, but now they were nowhere to be seen. She asked what had become of them, and the professor explained that, as they had made a great deal of noise, he had put them to bed without waiting for her or calling a maid. "I hope they gave you no trouble," she said. "No," said the professor, "with the exception of the one in the cot there. He objected a good deal to my undressing him and putting him to bed." The wife went to inspect the cot. "Why," she exclaimed, "that's little Johnny Green from next door!"

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

THE molding of manhood is the most beautiful thing in the world. Here comes a child. You cannot see the possibilities there. You do not know them. They lie hidden far beyond those bright eyes, dimpled cheeks and laughing lips. Perhaps they are for good or may be evil—a man of power for God or against God. Napoleon Bonaparte was once only a child and what a history flowed from that cradle! Martin Luther was once a dirty-faced miner's boy, but what a prince as he stood before the Diet of Worms! The boy you met in the street yesterday and upon whose head you rested your hand may go even beyond the two great names mentioned. He may be something in the world, or he may live unknown and die unwept, but in his life he holds possibilities. Then the child is the material to make something out of. All men were once children, and somewhere in the old home you will find their cradles. Babyhood is a forest out of which manhood is built. The children that play about us on the street are the promise of the men that shall some day do our business and serve our common causes. We cannot bring back old age into youth nor hold youth in its fresh and tender years. Then great responsibilities rest upon those by whose side children are growing up. There is the training and it may be asked for what? That father and mother are making a man—a holy work, but what kind of a man? However well equipped in other respects for life, if he has none of God in him, he is a poor imitation of a man. The first impressions of a child must be of God, the first service of a child must be prayer, the first consciousness of a child must be that God always sees and hears. Set a child in that mold until those great principles have taken positive form, and it may be a pathway of poverty; it may be a lifetime of sorrow, it may be that every day brings what the world calls defeat, but that child will be lifted up because of his conception of God and his life cannot be a failure. Sometimes he may despair, sometimes he may forget, but after the storm and when the calmness of old age settles over him like the sweetness of a summer sunset, he is found clinging to God who is his peace and joy. Somebody's hands, somebody's heart, yes, somebody who may be unknown, except to God, made that man. He is a trained man.

Our Father, bless the children everywhere and those who train them through Christ. Amen.

Look up, not down;
Look out, not in;
Look forward, and not back,
And lend a hand.
—Motto of King's Daughters.

"Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to one's sphere."—Goethe.

Do the work that's nearest,
Though its dull at whiles,
Helping when we meet them,
Lame dogs over stiles.—Kingsley.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

PREACHING AND HEARING.

Topic for Nov. 17, Ref. Rom. 10: 13-17.

HIS is a prosaic theme, yet it is most practical. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." It means salvation. But how can they call upon him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? Here we have the

Logic of Missions.

The preaching of the Gospel is both a divine and a human necessity. Reason affirms its necessity. Duty enjoins its obligation to proclaim this Gospel of our salvation to all the world. Infinite authority in the person of the Christ of God commands. Love constrains. Revelation and reason are in perfect accord. The Gospel is an appeal to reason. The logic of love, of duty, of destiny, is in it. "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel," Paul cried in the midst of the conflict of the Cross. The inexorable logic of duty, of destiny, and of the divine calling, enforced by the constraining love of Christ, impelled him, compelled him, controlled him, conquered him, crowned him! O for something more of this logic of the great Apostle to move us, fill us, thrill us on to triumph!

I believe that what the church needs, what we as preachers, teachers, Christian Endeavorers, members of the churches in Christ in every place, need today, is a more intelligent apprehension of the claims of the Gospel; a more sympathetic appreciation of its gracious influences; a stronger sense of its reasonableness; a stronger sense of duty, mingled with a deeper spiritual insight into its loftier truths.

I feel, and the conviction grows upon me with every passing year, that many of us have been too easily satisfied with a #### Superficial Gospel.

We have preached and heard what is unscripturally called "first principles" so long that some seem to have concluded that all there is to it is simply faith, repentance, confession and baptism. This oft-repeated formula of the "simple Gospel" is good, but it is not the whole beautiful and glorious Gospel of the Blessed. We have sacrificed something of the sublime and spiritual to the simple. We need not less emphasis of the fundamentals of Christian faith, but a larger apprehension and a loftier expression of the profounder spiritual principles of the Gospel of Christ.

The need of intelligent preaching is emphasized by the need of intelligent hearing, that our faith may not rest in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. Yet there are, unhappily, some who make much of what they miscall the power of the Holy Spirit, who practically negative the power of the simple but sublime Gospel, when fully and faithfully proclaimed.

A Fragmentary Gospel.

One of the sources of sectarian strife, the chief, in fact, in times past, has been the ignorant, sometimes foolish and fantastic, and frequently fanatical, preaching of a fragment, not infrequently of a figment, of the truth, for the whole blessed revelation of the mystery kept hidden, during the ages, but now made manifest in the record, as the evangelist and John and Paul and Peter declare it, on the pages of holy light.

THE HOME

"When I Have Time."

"When I have time so many things I'll do
To make life happier and more fair
For those whose lives are crowded now with care;
I'll help to lift them from their low despair—
When I have time!

"When I have time the friend I love so well
Shall know no more these weary toiling days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always,
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise—
When I have time!"

When you have time the friend you hold so dear
May be beyond the reach of your intent;
May never know that you so kindly meant
To fill her life with sweet content—
When you have time!

Now is the time! Ah, friend, no longer wait
To scatter loving smiles and words of cheer
To those around, whose lives are now so dear;
They may not heed you in the coming year—
Now is the time!

—Wellspring.

MY LITTLE MAN.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter IV.

TOWARD midnight the man for whom I waited arrived at last. As I heard his slow, heavy footsteps echoing up the long stone flight of stairs, it was with difficulty that I restrained myself from kicking him down the whole lot of them again, thinking of the times he had made that frail, small boy toil up and down them, laden with heavy books to an extent that would have tired a full-grown man.

I went to meet him in the room beyond and briefly informed him who I was and that I had come to relieve him forever of the charge of Allan's boy. He was a spare, shrunken man, with a cruel, calculating countenance, not, somehow, the countenance one associated with a man of books. He regarded me with silent surprise as I spoke, and seemed to be revolving in his mind how he could turn the denouement of affairs to the most profitable account for himself.

I saw through him at a glance. Indeed, not much discrimination was needed for that. What I did was weak, undoubtedly, but my excuse is that I was very weary and utterly unfit for further argument or strife. I placed a roll of bank-notes before him, and the upshot of it all was that in three days' time I was sitting on the deck of the "Victoria" with my little boy in my arms, showing him the first glimpse of the white coasts of Dover in the distance. It was the 1st of May, I remember. A gentle sun shone on the blue, buoyant breadths of the channel and a fresh wind touched the tips of the waves with foam.

"Oh, Nell," he said to me, a flush coming over his fair little happy face, "I knew England would be very lovely. Father said so."

Arrived in town, I at once sent for an eminent specialist in the diseases of children to see my little boy. After a careful examination the great man expressed his opinion on the case in the guarded terms peculiar to great men of his order—terms which may shield a mass of ignorance or completest knowledge alike, I suppose. He asked if at any time the child had over-exerted or strained himself, as certain aspects of the case pointed to such a supposition. He advised fresh air, an out-door country life, perfect freedom from restraint—and above all from books in general and French verbs in particular. He would not at this early stage of its development say that the disease was incurable—that, however, was the most that he would say. He took a great fancy to Waldo, and on my saying that he was only six years old, appeared almost painfully moved, muttering: "Indeed, indeed! the face and speech of a child ten or twelve"; to which I replied by detailing the circumstances that had forced him into such premature fulfillment.

It happened, I never knew quite how, that Waldo became the lion of the hour during the short time we had to stay in town, waiting till my place in Devonshire was quite ready for our arrival. From the clubs to the leading papers and the society weeklies, the pathetic story of his father's imprisonment and death, and his own childish sufferings, spread like wildfire and was soon in everybody's mouth. I could not help being intensely amused, as well as rather saddened, at the oceans of letters I received from kindly, antiquated spinsters, intimating that they were burning to clasp my little boy to their bosoms and "adopt" him for good and all. I told him one day of these kind creatures and their proposals. He was very puzzled.

"Why do they want me?" he inquired; "always when I look out of the windows or go for a drive, I see so many poor little boys; they look so hungry and often they are crying; I suppose it is because they have no father and no 'Nell.' Tell these kind ladies, Nell, to find out little boys like those and love them."

Then there came an afternoon, bright and beautiful with the presence of spring that was more like summer, when a prince whose name ranks high in the land, having heard and being deeply interested, arrived to see my little boy. For more than an hour he stayed, entertaining Waldo with anecdotes and stories of a sort to charm a child's ear. Not every man who is famed as a bon raconteur amongst his intimate friends has the gift of making himself equally fascinating to a child of six years old. Yet I knew that the delight was not all on my darling's side.

"Is it good to be not—not—half a bad fellow?" he asked of our guest in his dear, grave way, whilst I, listening, shook in my shoes!

"Why do you ask, little man?" returned the prince, smiling broadly.

"Betos, the other day, Nell said you—were that."

I do not think I ever saw a man enjoy a thing more.

"Now listen, Waldo," he said, as soon as he could speak for laughter; "you will have to keep Nell well in order, you know. It is quite clear he wants it badly."

Waldo was puzzled. He took all he heard very literally. He could never understand the wasteful little way so many of us have of saying things merely for the sake of saying them!

"I don't know," he answered, "I really don't know about keeping Nell in order. Betos, you see, I must do everything he tells me. Father said so."

When the time came for our illustrious guest to depart, I escorted him downstairs to his carriage. On the balcony upstairs little Waldo had managed to come forward to speed the parting guest to the very end. Whilst the prince was saying to me: "Dear, plucky little chap! keep me informed of him," a sweet, clear voice rang down to us in the street, compelling the passers-by to stop and smile:

"Good-bye, dear prince, good-bye! I like you so very much!"

As I looked up and saw my darling there, waving his little handkerchief and the May breezes tossing his curls, I could not choose but think, as I hastened back to him, of the bitter farewell he had waved to his father from the barred window of the street in Kiev—only about a year or so before. Then it was snowing thickly, and his father, even amidst the torture that cramped him, had feared lest he should take cold. Now the sun shone gallantly and the air was full of scent and radiance, and I said to myself, in joy of heart: "For Allan's little boy the old order changes and indeed shall be no more again forever."

Right glad was I when the day came for me to take him away to my old home in the fair green apple country. His eyes, so long accustomed to the four low, windowless walls of a garret in the roof, could not quite contain the glory and the wonders of London town, and he would often hide his face on my breast, silent as if from a great oppression.

As with older people who have looked misery so long in the face that when happiness is suddenly brought before them they cannot understand it, and wonder if some one behind the scenes is playing off a practical joke upon them, so with my darling, who, for his father's sake, had endured such hardness and unkindness as, let us trust, few children are called upon to endure—now that the beauty and kindness of life were again presented to him, they seemed at times to exhaust, to prove too many for him, so to speak, and the dear, puzzled look, that sometimes was very, very near to tears, would shine in his eyes until I soothed it away.

So, as I say, I was glad when strange faces, smiled they never so kindly, were left behind us, and the tumult of the town was exchanged for the sweet soberness and silences of the country, and my little boy and I had peace and freedom, and long, happy days in which to go over the old ways that association made so dear to me, and entire newness, so fresh and glad to him.

For me, after my long years of absence and traveling, and the great fatigue of that last sad, difficult journey across two continents and back; and for my little one, after the cane and lesson-books, the dingy garret, and the harsh, forbidding face of Dr. Vortrovna, it was for both of us enough that we could lie under the limes on the lawn and watch the busy bees which sing as they work, and the pigeons fluttering from the dovecot with great clashing and splashing of wings, losing themselves eventually in the orchard delights of the valley far below. Above all, Waldo loved to lie and watch the flight of the larks right into the very heart, as it seemed, of the blue sky overhead. He would pour his dear small confidences into me, and tell me in his winning accents every thought as it entered his curly head.

"If only they could meet, Nell!" he said on one of these occasions. "See how high he flies, that little lark! If I could tie a letter round his neck and father could stretch his arms out from heaven and reach it! If they could only meet for a minute, father and the little lark, Nell!"

(To be continued.)

THOUGHTS FOR FATHERS AND MOTHERS.

THE Christian Century desires to be especially helpful in the homes of those to whom it comes every week. It begins this week a column devoted to fathers and mothers, which will aim to bring to their notice topics of importance in relation to the welfare of their children and their responsibility for their development. Words from those who have had practical experience and who are giving thought and effort to this subject with the intense conviction that the future of the nation depends on the generation now in training, will be given in this column, which will be a monthly feature of this department. The editor will welcome correspondence and helpful suggestions and contributions.

Coming Men and Women.

No more timely or needed lesson has been drawn from the assassination of President McKinley than that pointed out by Dr. Mary Wood-Allen. She well says: "If we are to have law-abiding citizens in the state we must have law-abiding children in the home." She reminds parents that unless habits of obedience are formed in the home at the earliest age, it cannot be expected that obedience to law will be easily inculcated in later years. Parents smile at the perversity and wilfulness of a two-year-old child, forgetting that it is but the beginning of anarchy. "The mother who says laughingly that she cannot govern her six-year-old son may be obliged with tears to see him at sixteen under the control of the state for lawlessness."

The recent celebration of Hallowe'en may well arouse questioning thoughts as to the development of character that is going on in our homes. The wilful destruction of property that is permitted without restraint solely for fun surely indicates a lack of consideration for the rights of others which must have its bearing upon character. Are we not likely to see our sons and daughters developing into men and women who will think only of their own pleasure and advantage without caring for what others may lose thereby? There may be healthy, wholesome fun, even rollicking fun, without damage and expense to others. The principles of liberty upon which this republic was founded are based on the idea that no man has a right to deprive another of that which is his own, be it freedom to think or to worship as he chooses, or to own property. Is it in consonance with such principles that young people should have no regard for that which is another's, but shall be free to destroy or to injure it? Can we wonder if such training develops men and women who are anarchists in spirit, who ignore the Golden Rule in their daily relations with others, and who are not benefactors to the communities in which they live? What blessed results would follow in the years to come if the aim of fathers and mothers should be to lead the boys and girls to feel there is no real enjoyment in fun that brings sorrow or discomfort to another.

There are many who will say in answer to this, "Oh, boys will be boys! The pranks of young people must not be taken too seriously. They must have their fling. They will sober down soon enough." That is very true, and we would not for a moment lessen the brightness and happiness of youth. The shadows come fast enough to all. But there is no need for willful destruction of valuable property in order to have a happy time. If such were the case, it would be a pitiful commentary on the training these young people have had. And we cannot too soon open our eyes to see the outcome of such lawlessness and disregard for the feelings and rights of others. Nothing has called forth more admiration from the world at large than this spirit of consideration for others manifested by the late President, even in his hours of agony. "As the twig is bent, the tree's inclined." The fine spirit of unselfish thought for others that has marked the lives of the men and women who have most blessed the world will never grow out of youthful disregard for the rights of others, even though it be only in fun.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

JOSEPH AND HIS BRETHREN.

"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Romans 12, 21.

Monday—Genesis 42, 1-13.

There may be immeasurable kindness hiding behind a rough exterior. Joseph made himself strange to his brethren; but what truth was in his heart, what tenderness, what love!

So it sometimes is in human relationships. For a little while the father must look gravely on the child who has disobeyed, and must speak seriously and sternly to him; but underneath the surface, his very soul is throbbing over the wrongdoer. A true friend is called, now and then, to reprove and rebuke his friend, rather than suffer sin upon him; but his affection is unchanged all the time.

So it often is in the providence of God. He leads me through dark rooms, along stony paths, up the steep hillsides, down into the waters which are "to the palate bitter, and to the stomach cold." He seems to hide the shining of his face. But he loves me none the less but all the more. He is seeking my richest good. He is consulting my truest welfare.

So it frequently is, too, in the history of the soul. There is conviction of sin before there is the assurance of forgiveness. There is trouble, and afterwards there is peace. Weeping endures for a night, and then joy comes in the morning. My Savior deepens and intensifies in me the sense of my guilt, ere he lifts away my heavy burden and welcomes me into his house of wine.

Tuesday—Genesis 43, 1-14.

"I will be surety for him," said Judah; and so he became, in a faint and far-off way, the forerunner of Jesus.

"I am surety for thee," my Lord whispers to my heart; and then he asks me to remember the flawless perfection of his obedience. I should have kept the holy law of God, but I have broken all its precepts—I have sought out many inventions of my own. But the well-beloved Son takes my place, and fulfills commandment after commandment; and his righteousness is counted mine.

"I am surety for thee," says the Lord again; and he points me to the wonder and the worth of his sacrifice on the Cross. I deserve to die. The sword hangs over my head. The sentence is written against me. But my Savior, "both Victor and Victim," loves me and gives himself for me. The Good Shepherd lays down his life.

"Out of pity, Jesus said, He'd bear the punishment instead."

"I am surety for thee," my Lord tells me once more; and he directs my eyes upward to his priesthood in the heavenly palaces. Day and night there is no pause in his intercessions on my behalf. Day and night he ever liveth to plead for me. O, prevailing and persevering grace of Jesus Christ! It gains for me, unworthy, helpless, every good gift and every perfect boon.

Wednesday—Genesis 45, 1-15.

How blessed is such a moment of revelation as this! Perhaps it comes in connection with one of my fellowmen. I have thought him harsh, unsympathetic, unkind; and lo, one day the flood-gates are opened, and I discover how masterful are the currents of his pent-up affection. I must not judge everybody from the outside. There are natures like the houses in the East, where you have dull walls to the street, but, inside the courtyard, fountains and flowers and beauty and warmth.

Perhaps it comes in connection with the Bible. For a time it seems an uninteresting, uninviting, tiresome book; and it is an irksome task to read it. But, one day, under the enlightenment of the Divine Spirit, the scales fall from my eyes; and then "a glory gilds the sacred page, majestic like the sun." An untold preciousness invests the Bible now. A fragrance, from the Upper Garden of God, breathes from every verse.

Perhaps it comes in connection with God himself. I thought him a hard taskmaster. I saw the thundercloud of his displeasure hanging over me because of my sin. But he dispelled the cloud; he sent the sunshine of that sweet name streaming into my soul—"Jehovah Rophi," I am the Lord that healeth thee. And, since then, I dare not distrust him, even in my darkest experiences. I am sure that he does all things well.

Thursday—Genesis 45, 16-28.

The world exists for the welfare of the Christian, as Egypt gave food to Jacob and his sons.

There is the world of nature. It is a story-book which the Father has written for me. Here are lessons about his power, his wisdom, his goodness, his truth. It is a treasure-house filled with supplies for my need. Autumn after autumn my harvests ripen in the fields. It is a school where I am taught of heavenlier things. Earth and sea and sky contain many a suggestion of what is unseen and eternal.

There is the world of literature. Do not let me regard it as profane and heathen territory. Let me grow in mental and intellectual knowledge. Let me discover in history and philosophy and science and poetry many illustrations of Scripture truth and many footsteps of God. I may be a great reader, and a humble little child in the family of the Father.

There is the world of daily work and business. As I enter it every morning, I should do so with the resolution that its discipline shall only develop my character, and shall only draw me nearer my Lord Jesus Christ. As I pursue my trade and task, I should be growing in humility, in trust, in diligence, in sympathy with others, in communion with heaven.

Friday—Genesis 47, 1-10.

If I am a pilgrim, my pilgrimage need not be "evil." There is many a lesson to be learned as I travel forward. There is many a hand of succor to be stretched out to comrades on the King's highroad. There is many an hour of communion to be enjoyed with the King himself. And, in front of me, rise the gates and towers of the Celestial City, the "lovely city in a lovely land." Matthew Arnold sees only the sad side of the pilgrim's life:

"We are here as on a darkling plain,
Swept by confused alarms of struggle and flight,
Where ignorant armies clash by night."

But Christina Rossetti sees the brighter and hopefuller side:

"Passing away! saith my God, passing away!
Winter passeth after long delay;
New grapes on the vine, new figs on the tender spray;
Turtle calleth turtle in heaven's May."

Therefore, since the peaceable habitation awaits me, and since my Lord is with me meanwhile, and since the path brings me to the Palace Beautiful as well as to the Hill Difficulty, I will go on with a stout heart.

Saturday—Matthew 5, 38-48.

"Be ye perfect," said Jesus, "even as your Father in heaven is perfect." It is a lofty and exacting commandment, but it is a reasonable and attainable one. For God gives me his own fellowship, and puts within me his own energy. He dwells in me himself and conforms me by his love and power into his nature. And then my soul indulges no extravagant and fantastic hope, when it believes that it will yet be conformed to his likeness.

It is said that the finest rose tree in the world is one in Holland, which a few years ago had six thousand flowers in bloom at the same time. The brier in the hedge might well despair of rivalling the marvellous tree. But if a kindly hand transplanted it to the choicest soil, and gave it skillful nurture, and if a bud from the splendid tree could be grafted into its central fibers, the despised growth of the hedgerow might one day bear its thousand blossoms and be the wonder of a nation. I am myself destitute of all high qualities. But, when God breathes his breath into me, there need be no limit to my development. "Ye shall receive power," Christ said, "when the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

Sunday—Romans 12, 14-21.

These are sublime precepts. How can I ever obey them? It seems quixotic and Utopian to think of rising so high.

But I will remember the throne of the Father. When I spread forth my hands toward him, he hears in heaven his dwelling place. I cannot estimate the marvels which are wrought in response to prayer. I cry out of my depths, and God listens. He sees my need. He comes to me, and the time is a time of his pardoning and restoring and transfiguring love.

And I will remember the cross of the Son. It was borne for me, not only that I might be safe, but that I might be holy. It sanctifies as well as justifies. The mere recollection of such exceeding grace should hold me back from every sinful and doubtful way, and should impel me forward to the things which are true and honorable and pure and lovely.

And I will remember the strength of the Holy Ghost. He leads me to soundness and health. Conversion is his work. Saintliness is his endowment. Victory is his gift. Spiritual vigor and usefulness are his creation. Perfection, the unspotted perfection of Christ, is his goal. I cannot lean on him too confidently. I cannot expect from him too much.

The Rest Cure.

Fretfulness is the certain indication of the need of rest. It is the cry of the nerves for repose. Doctors have recognized the need by establishing rest cures where one may gain from silence and repose the strength which can be gained in no other way. Life to-day is strenuous even for those who most crave peace. We live in an atmosphere of noise and bustle, and it leaves its impress upon our minds and bodies even when we are unconscious of it. The strain upon us is never ending, and men, women and children show the tension in irritable speech and gesture. Rest sanitariums, with their attendant expenses, are out of the question for many of us who have duties at home and work that must be done, but it is possible for each of us to have our own rest cure. There is no home so poor that within it is no nook where one may go for an hour and drop the cares that are heavy "as the weight of dreams pressing on us everywhere." The greater the rush, the greater the need of the resting time, and the resulting vigor with which one will attack the tasks which were dropped for a time.

In the so-called idle minutes one pulls one's self together, and can start again almost as fresh as if the day were just beginning. Woman's way of resting by turning from one task to another, from baking to darning stockings or to doing fancy work, is no rest at all. Every thought, every motion, however trifling, uses up a certain amount of force. Change of work simply taxes another set of nerves and muscles, whereas rest allows all nerves and muscles to relax, thereby gaining tone. The rest cure should be part of the system of living. For the woman who is trying to hold back her fleeting youth there is no such aid in this effort as rest. Rest is wisdom; it strengthens the worker and it sweetens life.—The Household.

AN ILLUSTRATION THAT ILLUSTRATES.

A subscriber sends us the following, illustrating the "penny-wise and pound-foolish" proverb:

A Gideonite makes our town quite often. He also makes the prayer meeting when in town. Recently he told of visiting the home of a friend and learned this: They owned a beautiful and expensive vase. It cost a great many dollars. It was purchased abroad and had great added value as a memento of delightful travels. One day, by some process, a small child in the family got its hand in the vase and could not get it out. Its alarm called the mother. She tried without avail to remove the hand. The mother became so anxious that she sent for her husband, who hastened from his place of business. Every effort on his part proved as futile as others. It was solemnly decided that the vase must be broken, a great sacrifice to save the situation. The added fear of cutting the child's hand in breaking the vase led to one more effort to relieve the hand. The father very carefully asked the child to just straighten out every finger very loosely, showing with his own hand how to do, so as to remove all rigidity and relax the muscles. After he had done this so that it was clearly understood by the child, the child exclaimed, "Why, papa, I can't do that; I will lose my penny." All the while the child had been clutching the cent in its clenched fist, and but for the final effort it would have cost the value of the vase to save the cent.

G. H. W.

Concerning Fillers.

It so happens that lately I have been in the house with the proof sheets of a weekly newspaper. Here and there along the columns occur blank spaces of a few inches, across which, written by the printer, are the words, "Filler wanted."

This has started me to wondering whether if we could see the proof sheets of a week of our life, we might not find a number of such bare places for which "fillers" are "wanted." Or, rather, now that I write it down, perhaps the proper question is whether we are putting into our stray few minutes of leisure the valuable accomplishment which might be put there. For, of course, we do fill them in one way or another.

What are our fillers? What are yours? Many a little deed of kindness can be done in two or three minutes; many a little word of love can be said in thirty seconds. And they add handsomely to the worth of the day's work. I have heard of persons making amazing pieces of fancy work by thriftily crocheting or embroidering into them their spare moments. This, however, I would hardly recommend as a first choice in fillers. To my mind the young Virginia girl chose better, who was called to take her mother's place in the affairs of a large plantation. She went about her duties with the key basket hung from her girdle—true sign of the young Virginia housewife—and with an open book over her arm. Into its pages she took frequent dips during intervals of business, the result being a very surprising amount of reading.

Just yesterday, I heard one grippe patient say to another:

"Isn't Bessie Hall willing to take a lot of trouble for other people? Think of her starting out right after her lunch and walking four squares to bring us water ice!"

"Yes," responded the fellow-invalid, "it was very energetic of her. It makes a cheerful diversion to our dull day, doesn't it?"

Then I bethought me that Bessie Hall has a habit of remembering to lend a book to this friend, and to send sponge cake to another, and to drop in and beguile the convalescence of a third. She will even make an impromptu, unaffected speech at a missionary meeting to help matters on. Thus to fill in odd times by showing one's self friendly is to contribute to the world's total of sweetness and light.

I know a little woman who has had deep sorrows, and years of daily responsibility and care. One of her neighbors, speaking of her, said, "For some reason, I never talk to her that I don't come away feeling that it is worth while to live and do my duty." Ah, here is a "filler" beyond price! How better can we lay up treasure than by learning wisdom enough to utter in passing words whereat "Hearts are brave again and arms are strong"?

The whole subject, I am sure, is one that will reward study. And let us not forget that things "little" and things "large" are altogether beyond our powers of calculation. None of us may know what five minutes will bring forth.—Sally Campbell, in Forward.

How Frank Won.

A prize of $100, to be used for educational purposes, was offered in a school for boys. Among the contestants was a boy of seventeen, named Frank Harlow. He did not succeed in winning the prize, and, a day or two later, one of his schoolmates, named Harry Murks, said to him: "Didn't get the prize, did you, Frank?"

"No, I did not," replied Frank cheerfully.

"Feel kind o' cut over it, don't you?"

"No, not particularly."

"Well, I'd hate to make as hard a fight as you made to win that prize, and then fail."

"I don't think that I have failed, Harry."

"Well, I'd like to know why you haven't failed! Didn't George Dayton win the prize?"

"Yes, I know he won the money, but I won just as much as George in that which comes from hard study. But you know, Harry; if you'll excuse me for saying it, your failure has been most marked."

"My failure! Why, what do you mean? I didn't go in for the prize at all. I made no attempt to win it."

"I know it," replied Frank, and then added, "They fail, and they alone, who have not striven."

"Oh! I see what you mean," said Harry, rather soberly. "I suppose there is something in that."

"There is a good deal in it," replied Frank. "It is so true that not one of the eighteen boys who competed for the prize may be said to have failed. All of us won the prize that comes from honest effort. It was a pretty big prize for most of us. I thought at first that I would not compete for the prize, for I felt quite confident that some of the other boys were so much further advanced than I was that I had very little chance of winning in the contest. One day I came across this verse:

"Straight from our mighty bow this truth is driven:

They fail, and they alone, who have not striven."

"That's a fact," I said to myself; and I went straight to work and did my very best."

"You stood next to George Dayton at the examination, too," said Harry. "No, Frank, you did not fail after all."

Harry was right. How could Frank fail to be a winner, after the honest effort he had put forth?—Michigan Christian Advocate.

That the proverbial absent-minded professor is sometimes ably abetted by his wife is illustrated by a story told of Professor Bunsen. One evening, about the usual hour for retiring, he took it into his head to run over to the club, just as he and madam were returning from an evening call.

"But," said the lady, "I must have the front door locked before I retire."

This emergency staggered the professor, and as he looked bewildered at his wife, the lady, seized with an inspiration, continued:

"I'll go in and lock the door and throw you the key from the window."

This program was carried out, and when he reached the club the professor related the incident to a friend as evidence of his wife's unusual sagacity.

The friend greeted the story with a roar of laughter.

"And why, my dear professor," he said, "did you not simply admit your wife, lock the door from the outside, and come away?"

"True," ejaculated the learned man of science; "we never thought of that."

The climax of the incident was reached an hour later when, returning home, the professor discovered that the lady, in her excitement, had thrown out the wrong key.—Youth's Companion.

TAKE THEM OUT.

Or Feed Them on Food They Can Study On.

When a student begins to break down from lack of the right kind of food, there are only two things to do; either take him out of school or feed him properly on food that will rebuild the brain and nerve cells. That food is Grape-Nuts.

A boy writes from Jamestown, N. Y., saying, "A short time ago I got into a bad condition from overstudy, but mother having heard about Grape-Nuts Food began to feed me on it. It satisfied my hunger better than any other food, and the results were marvelous. I got fleshy like a good fellow. My usual morning headaches disappeared, and I found I could study for a long period without feeling the effects of it.

"After I had been using Grape-Nuts Food for about two months I felt like a new boy altogether. My face had been pale and thin, but is now round and has considerable color. I have gained greatly in strength as well as flesh, and it is a pleasure to study now that I am not bothered with my head. I passed all of my examinations with a reasonably good percentage, extra good in some of them, and it was Grape-Nuts that saved me from a year's delay in entering college.

"Father and mother have both been improved by the use of Grape-Nuts Food. Mother was troubled with sleepless nights, and got very thin, and looked care-worn. She has gained her normal strength and looks, and sleeps well nights." Don E. Cooper.

General Church News

SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF METHODIST BISHOPS.

The Methodist bishops at their semi-annual conference in Portland, Maine, announced a gain of 51,000 in the membership of their denomination. They recommend an extension of six months in the time for the raising of the twentieth century fund, which now amounts to $13,000,000. The sum of $20,000,000 is desired. The bishops state that the material progress of the Methodist church is astonishing. Everywhere the people are building and improving their places of worship, and the size and comfort of the parsonages are also increasing.

Realizing the need of more strenuous effort to reach the masses of the people, the bishops in conference assembled gave the following exhortation:

"While not neglecting the spiritual interests of the favored, let us be sure of preaching the Gospel to the poor. On them, as the majority, we must keep our hold. Their numbers, industry, economy, courage, sympathy, enthusiasm, unsophisticated by luxury, make them the chief forces of modern life. They create wealth, even when they do not control it. From them must come those who dare and do great things for Christ. We must not let them come to believe that the church and Christ are separate."

The Northwestern Christian Advocate quotes the following as the testimony of a Chicago daily:

"It is sometimes urged that the Methodist system is suffering from top-heaviness, and that the business of winning converts to Christianity is subordinated to the temporal concerns of a vast and complicated administrative machinery. But we must judge of an ecclesiastical organization by results. The Methodist church has the largest number of communicants of any Protestant church in this country. It has more valuable church property than any other Protestant organization, and its ecclesiastical and charitable enterprises are conducted upon a vast scale and represent an investment of millions."

BAPTISTS IN IOWA.

Monday evening, October 21, the Pastors' Conference opened in Cedar Falls. Rev. E. B. Hulbert of the University of Chicago gave the address on "The Man and the Message for the Twentieth Century." This struck a high intellectual and spiritual keynote for all that was to follow. Dr. Hulbert gave two other lectures later in the convention session, which were very helpful.

A practical topic was taken up next morning by Rev. A. M. Duboc of Osaloosa on "Pastors' Assisting One Another in Evangelistic Work." An interesting discussion followed. Mr. Duboc emphasized this thought:

"No class of men has a monopoly of revivals. Every pastor should be an evangelist. He should not rest satisfied with being a mere teacher and leaving the matter of conversion to others. There should be more of mutual helpfulness on the part of pastors and churches. 'Christianity is enthusiasm or it is nothing.' When the church loses all power to save the lost it ceases to be a church."

"The Best Books Read During the Year" opened a discussion. "Increasing the Efficiency of the Sunday School" was considered by Col. C. E. Baker of Cedar Rapids, who spoke from large experience. He maintained that the visible evidence of unsuccessful Sunday schools is the lack of "snap." The ideal superintendent should be trained for his work and be paid a living salary. The efficient school will have a recruiting officer. Rev. H. C. Leland of Vinton preached the annual sermon before the Iowa Baptist Education Society.

The Young People's Union was addressed by President H. M. Shutts of Monroe and Prof. G. W. Lee of Sac City Institute. Dr. Mabie of Boston was the principal speaker of the evening. His argument for missions was based on the intimate personal relationship of the soul with God, so that it rises to new life in Christ. "Missions are the resurrection errand of the people and Church of God."

The annual report of the state convention showed seventeen missionaries under appointment, nine having given a year's service. Fourteen new churches in the state have recently built houses of worship, eleven have built or are building parsonages. The women's mission circles of the state have contributed $178.60 for state missions, the smallest amount for seven years. This being the first year that the state has been self-supporting, it is a good showing that the collections for missionary purposes were $7,776.78, leaving a deficit of $598.67. The missionaries have been paid promptly at the close of each quarter. Five churches have been organized in nine new fields.

Rev. F. W. Bateson of Denison spoke earnestly on the topic "Progress Necessary to Life." According to custom, a period of devotion, followed by the annual sermon, had a place in the middle of the session. The helpfulness of small and weak churches was the subject of a symposium which pointed out how many valuable men and women have come out of these small churches. Rev. F. B. Palmer said the greater proportion of Iowa's converts come from the churches of less than 100 membership.

"Specimens of Fruit from Our Mission Fields" was the program title of the reports given by the convention missionaries, and the exhibit was an encouraging one. The secretary said that of the 462 Iowa churches, 300 have been aided by the convention; 1,000 missionaries have been appointed during the last twenty-five years and under their ministry 12,000 persons have been added to the churches.

A large attendance filled the building on Wednesday evening, the other churches of the city dismissing their prayer meetings. Hon. J. J. Powell of Cedar Rapids answered the question, "Shall we rest satisfied with past achievements?" and Rev. Arthur T. Fowler of the Centennial church, Chicago, emphasized "The Demand for Enlargement." "We need," he said, "a quickened imagination, a deeper sense of personal responsibility and a recognition of God in our lives."

The convention, after an exciting debate, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we declare ourselves as unalterably opposed to the saloon traffic and pledge our hearty support to every wise effort that is being made to suppress the evil and to break down this stronghold of unrighteousness; and that we denounce the concerted effort to reinstate the army canteen.

Education was the subject under consideration on Thursday afternoon. There are five schools in Iowa—Des Moines, and Central colleges, Burlington and Sac City institutes and Cedar Valley Seminary. All are greatly crippled for want of means, except the last-named, and the continued existence of Burlington Institute is threatened by foreclosure of mortgages. There are 30,000 Baptists in Iowa, but it is a matter of doubt whether they send 100 students to these institutions outside of the counties in which the schools are placed. The problems of poor equipment of these schools and of the conditions on which ministerial

PARALYSIS AND COFFEE.

Symptoms Disappear When Drug Is Abandoned.

"Tea and coffee were forbidden by my physician, for I had symptoms of paralysis and it was plain that the coffee was the cause of the trouble. I began using Postum Food Coffee and am now a steady advertisement for Postum. The old symptoms of paralysis disappeared in a very brief time after I began the use of Postum and quit the use of coffee. Do not use my name publicly, if you please." —Morrow, O. The above name can be given by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Coffee is such a direct poison to the nerve centers of many highly organized people that it produces all sorts of disorders, from stomach and bowel troubles, palpitation of the heart, kidney troubles, etc., etc., up to more intricate nervous diseases, such as paralysis. The way to keep well is to leave off coffee or any nerve destroyer of that sort, and use Postum Food Coffee, which is a direct builder of the nerve centers. Sure and well defined improvement in health will follow this course, as can be proven by any person who will make the trial.

students should be aided, were fully discussed.

Women's work in missions and addresses on missionary work by Rev. Dr. W. M. Laurence of Chicago, Rev. S. A. Perrine of Assam and Judge E. E. Lewis occupied Friday. The women of Iowa have raised $2,701.79 for home missions exclusive of state missions, and $3,355 for foreign missions. Dr. Laurence considered the special need in the churches is "a conviction of values." The last session was occupied by the Publication Society.

CONGREGATIONAL STATE MEETING IN NORTHERN CALI- FORNIA.

The West is growing old, and Congregationalism is growing up with the country, for the forty-fifth annual gathering of the Congregational churches in Northern California was held October 1-4 in the First church, Oakland. It was a valuable and important meeting. The spirit of prayer pervaded it and the subjects discussed were pertinent to the times. Rev. G. B. Hatch gave an effective paper on the present serious situation of the church, claiming that it is well-nigh missing its mission in "a mid-summer madness after the practical," and a surrender to evolution. Dr. Briggs, pastor of the Central Methodist church, San Francisco, gave a clever description of preaching under the new evangelism.

Among the other speakers was Mrs. Farnham, sister of the American consul at Jerusalem. She gave an account of a recent visit there. A Christian Jew born in Bagdad, reared in India, converted when over sixty years of age and now an active member of the First Congregational church, San Francisco, gave a layman's impressions of a prayer meeting. Two instructive papers on church federation led to the appointment of a committee to co-operate in this direction. The need of definite instruction in the essentials of belief was earnestly urged, but the use of catechisms was not favored.

The narrative of the churches showed a fairly prosperous condition. About 850 members have been added during the year, a net gain of less than 300. The Sunday school is the brightest section of the field. The spirit of benevolence is growing. The chief obstacles are the saloon, Sabbath desecration, worldliness of Christians, ignorance of the Bible, rejection of individual responsibility.

The California Home Missionary Society having assumed self-support, its enlarged obligations required an amended constitution. Henceforth the membership consists of forty-five persons, fifteen to be elected each year by the General Association.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect it.

To Prove What the Great Kidney Remedy, Swamp-Root, Will Do or YOU, Every Reader of The Christian Century May have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for many kinds of diseases, and if permitted to continue much suffering with fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Makes you pass water often during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; makes your head ache and back ache, causes indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, makes you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognized in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

EDITORIAL NOTE—If you have the slightest symptoms of kidney or bladder troubles, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton; N. Y., who will gladly send you by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured. In writing, be sure to say that you read this generous offer in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

(Swamp-Root is pleasant to take.)

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

Pacific Seminary, Berkeley, was the goal of a pleasant excursion, after which the visitors were entertained at supper by the First church. Many toasts were given under the leadership of Dr. McLean. President Wheeler of the University of California spoke happily and strongly in favor of a life of religion and service.

The state meeting fitly closed with an address by Professor Foster on "The Person of Christ."

MICHIGAN BAPTIST AN NIVERSARIES.

Preliminary to the meeting of the state convention was held the annual conference of the ministers of the state. Rev. J. A. Herrick of Bay City preached the annual sermon on Monday evening. Papers and discussion on important themes occupied Tuesday forenoon and afternoon. Two of these papers were given by Prof. Shailer Matthews of the University of Chicago, and Dr. H. L. Stetson of Kalamazoo spoke upon "Methods of Bible Study."

The state convention board reported a somewhat increased permanency of pastorates. For the support of missionaries in the state $8,531.01 had been paid. The total amount raised for home missions was over $4,700 and more Michigan churches had contributed this year than last. The same testimony was borne at the session of the Women's Home Mission Society.

At the Sunday school session the colporters spoke first. Rev. G. L. Wittett said Detroit had thirty-five Catholic and 150 evangelical churches and 1,290 saloons. It is estimated that 100,000 people of that city seldom enter church. James Larson told of his work among the foreign population. He had traveled 3,115 miles, visited 1,236 families, thirty-nine of whom he found without Bibles. Rev. R. A. Clint, Swedish minister in Grand Rapids, spoke of the needs among his own people. There are twenty-four Swede churches in the state, with 1,372 members, and thirty Sunday schools, with a membership of 1,262. Rev. J. S. Collins, in charge of wagon No. 1, told of the 1,600 miles traveled in five months and the 1,100 calls made. Rev. Jay Pruden and Rev. Dr. R. G. Seymour spoke in regard to the state Sunday school work and that of the Publication Society. Rev. C. H. Irving reported as to the conditions in the University of Chicago Divinity School. He found the spiritual life among the students of a high order, and among the teachers an honest effort to present the truth, leaving the student to form his own conclusions.

Rev. E. P. Tuller of Detroit gave the address of Wednesday evening. He spoke on Christianity's outlook in America. "Today is the time to give

Three Good Reasons Why The Praise Hymnal Should Be Used in Our Churches.

"I have been deeply interested for many years in the hymnology of our churches, and have at different times examined with some care nearly all the song books of any pretensions that have come from the presses of our own brotherhood. Some of these have been good, a few bad, and many of them indifferent. Desiring new song books for the congregation for which I am now preaching, I made a new examination, and found myself compelled to acknowledge the superiority of THE PRAISE HYMNAL over all its competitors. Among its many points of excellence I note the following:

"First. The happy choice of songs, combining most of the old and best-loved hymns of the Church of God, which can never die, with the choicest of the new songs which have sprung into deserved favor during the last years of evangelistic development in our churches. The gleaming in the latter field has been exceedingly judicious, I think.

"Second. The beautiful, clear and large print, both of words and notes, makes it a delight to the eyes.

"Third. The arrangement of songs and tunes, by which, with few exceptions, each tune has but one hymn written to it. There are so many waste hymns in some of our books, where four or five are on the same page, but scarcely ever more than one used. Then, too, the words are written immediately under the music, which is very gratifying to all singers. The binding is neat, strong, and beautiful. It is a splendid book, worthy of comparison with the best compilations of sacred music of our day."

Kansas City, Mo.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

AS TO PRICES.—The contents of THE PRAISE HYMNAL are of a permanent quality. It is false economy to ask for cheap binding. We make a cloth bound book with leather back that will last ten years with any sort of care. The price is as low as can be made on its superior material and workmanship, $75.00 per 100 copies. Specimen copies sent on approval.

FILLMORE BROS., — 119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O.
40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

P. S.—Our Christmas Music is now ready. Send for List.

(2)

men truth. It is a settled fact that God is. Christian ethical ideas are adopted by the world today. The church receives a respect today that was unknown years ago. This century will make the greatest practical test of truth the world has ever seen. Now is afforded the finest opportunity the world ever had of preaching and spreading the Gospel. The age will demand of us not only money, education, but it will demand life."

Rev. John McGuire of Burma spoke of that mission field.

The state board reported twelve counties without a Baptist church. There have been twelve field workers and thirty-seven missionary pastors at work in the state the past year; 212 churches have been aided and over $13,130 spent for mission work. Baptisms through missionary effort have been 322. The Baptist force in the state consists of 400 churches and 43,372 members. Baptisms for the year, 1,814.

Hon. H. R. Pattengill of Lansing gave a forceful and practical address on state missions from a layman's standpoint. The different lines of work were all reported, and many good addresses made, particularly those by Rev. Johnston Myers and Mr. John H. Chapman of Chicago.

PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD OF NEBRASKA.

The twenty-eighth annual session convened at Pawnee City October 8, with a good attendance. The moderator, Rev. John Gilmore, preached the sermon from the text, "Watchman, what of the night?" The new moderator is Rev. Samuel F. Sharpless of Norfolk. Rev. James M. Campbell, D. D., pastor of the entertaining church, gave an address, also Rev. John Dixon, D. D., assistant secretary of the board of home missions; Rev. C. A. R. Janvier, a returned missionary from India; Rev. S. R. Ferguson of Iowa and Dr. E. R. Craven of the board of publication and Sunday school work, which is doing an important work in opening the way for the church and settled pastor.

Synodical self-support was the matter of great importance before the synod. A plan was adopted for promoting this. A chairman, to be selected annually by the synod, with the several chairmen of the different presbyterial committees, shall constitute the synodical Home Mission committee, which shall have entire supervision of the home mission work and of vacancy and supply. All the churches are urged to make two contributions annually to home missions.

one of which shall be sent to the home board at New York and the other to the synodical committee. This committee shall report to the board of home missions the needs of the synod, and the board is expected to return to it the apportionment of the board's funds to this synod for each year, after which the committee shall apportion to the several presbyteries the funds in its treasury and the amounts granted by the board of home missions. The synod shall yearly elect a superintendent who shall devote himself to the work of increasing the offerings to home missions, and superintending evangelization. A vigorous effort will be made this year to bring more churches to self-support.

The various reports made to the synod indicated healthy advancement and the Holy Spirit's presence was felt as an inspiration throughout the session.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONGREGATIONALISTS.

A rule of the General Association of Southern California, which met in San Diego October 7-9, is "to put devotion first and business afterward, and as much as possible to make devotion its business." Therefore, two hours were set apart for the report on "The Life and Work of the Churches," to be followed by prayer for the churches, pastors, mission work and college. The testimony of the reports was to the effect that "the preaching most in demand is 'dead in earnest spiritual preaching.' Attention is turning more to expository preaching which has been much neglected. Evangelistic meetings have almost universally failed to bring souls to Christ. Personal work has been far more successful. In answer to the question, What do our churches most need? the prominent answers may be summed up in these two: The power of the Holy Spirit and a stronger grip on the essential truths of religion. Interest in missions is increasing."

Rev. J. L. Maile, home missionary superintendent, emphasized the value of prayer to missionary success. A prayer union had been maintained in Los Angeles, meeting each alternate week throughout the year to pray for larger gifts to home missions and many conversions to Christ. A large increase over previous years was noted in receipts for home missions—the last year $7,165, the year preceding only $4,470.

"The Legislative Side of the Liquor Business" was clearly presented by Curtis D. Wilbur, Esq., and discussed by three other attorneys, all agreeing in the conclusion that California is by its constitution and laws a local option state; that the restriction or prohibition of the liquor traffic is in the hands of the people; that they need only to elect such supervisors or councilmen as will do their will in regard to it.

"Our Sunday School Opportunity," "The Secularization of Education," "Religion in Business," "The Responsibility of Our Churches for the Culture of the Whole Man" and "Religion in the Family" were some of the live topics considered. Christian education and Pomona College in particular received much attention in the discussions of the session. Enthusiasm was kindled and every church urged by the association to contribute to Pomona College.

BAPTIST WORK IN KANSAS.

In Kansas City, Kas., was held the forty-second annual meeting of the state convention. Valuable papers were presented before the Ministerial Union by Rev. Messrs. Geo. F. Armington, H. R. Best and W. A. Elliott, which will be published. Rev. L. P. Russell of Lawrence spoke upon "Leadership." Rev. S. S. Hageman of Phillipsburg and the veteran Rev. J. M. Whitehead, followed.

The women had an enjoyable meeting meanwhile, at which good reports were made of work being done. Christian education, of course, had its place on the general program, the new theological seminary to be established in Kansas City being a matter of special interest.

The state board reported fifty-four missionaries employed, having sixty-nine churches and fifty-seven outstations under their care. These missionaries have made 13,521 visits, preached 5,980 sermons and reported 414 baptisms; 3,477 members are in these churches. Various pastors and missionaries spoke of their fields. Among the 60,000 Scandinavians in Kansas there are thirteen Baptist churches with 628 members, while from 2,000 to 3,000 attend the services and Sunday schools. These churches are growing. They raised the past year $11,587.28; of this $700 was for state missions. Rev. Mr. Wilson spoke eloquently of the work among the negro churches, which have 12,000 members in Kansas. The closing address was by Rev. N. B. Rairden, D. D., of Omaha, his theme the value of state mission work. Home and foreign missions were duly considered in various addresses, and an all-round annual gathering closed with satisfaction.

WASHINGTON CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

North Yakima was the place for the thirteenth annual meeting, October 8-10. Spiritual and physical progress are keeping pace. The Yakima valley, once a dreary waste of sage brush and sand, has been made by irrigation and cultivation to bring forth abundantly fruits, vegetables, timothy and alfalfa. So in spiritual things there is great encouragement. Churches already established are steadily reducing the burden of debt under which they have labored. Four churches have just come to self-support and others are planning to do so at an early date. Six new churches in Washington and three in Northern Idaho are reported for the year. The additions to the churches in Washington were 785. The net increase, however, was only 103. Home expenditures increased $6,165, benevolences $10,298, a noteworthy condition. The difference is too often the other way. The Sunday school membership is 13,612, a gain of 691. Nine new church edifices and parsonages mark the material development. Others are in process of erection. Rev. W. W. Scudder, Jr., the new home missionary superintendent, has proved himself a good leader. His address on "The Outlook" was much praised.

The papers and addresses were purposeful and timely. Dr. G. R. Wallace spoke of "The Church as an Integral Part of the Community Life"; Rev. E. T. Ford of "Self-Support—the Demand"; Rev. A. J. Smith took up

Don't Get Married

Until you have seen our strictly correct Wedding Stationery. Samples and prices gladly furnished free.

We make a specialty of Wedding Invitations and Announcements, Folders, Visiting Cards and other polite society stationery. Our work is guaranteed the finest obtainable at any price. Engraved copper plate and 50 Correct Style, Best Wedding, Bristol Visiting Cards, postpaid, 90c. Quire fine correspondence paper with any 2 initial monogram embossed in gold or any color, env. to match, postpaid, 60c. Our new process of printing in imitation of Engraving deceives all but experts, 50 correct form wedding invitations or announcements, 2 sets env., $2.50. 100 visiting or business cards, postpaid, 25c. Write for any information concerning any commercial or society printing, engraving or embossing. We will save you money.

The B. W. KINSEY CO., 358 Denaborn St., Chicago

Cheap-Rate Excursions Southwest

Only one fare plus $2.00.

November 5 and 19,

December 3 and 17.

The Santa Fe most directly reaches the fertile valleys, industrial centers, and noted mining camps of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona.

Go out and see the country for yourself.

Santa Fe

Address J. M. Connel, Gen. Agt. A. T. & S. F. R'y., 109 Adams St., Chicago.

PILES TRIAL TREATMENT FREE. We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ Pile Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once, Germ Medical Co., Dept. A, 13, 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

"The Hindrances"; Rev. Austin Rice discussed "The Local Church and Outlying Fields." "The Theology for Today" was the subject handled by Rev. E. L. Smith and Rev. L. L. Woods of Seattle. "The Preacher's Use of the Bible," "Practical Preaching for the Times" and "What Is a Religious Life?" were discussed. In the evening there were addresses by Rev. R. B. Haskell on "Bringing in the Kingdom"; Miss Luella Miner, who gave her experiences in Pekin during the siege; Dr. Temple on "Our Present Responsibility to Today's Problems," and others too numerous for mention. It was altogether a live gathering that gave impetus to the work of the future.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Dr. Poindexter S. Henson, pastor of the First Baptist church, has been called to Hanson Place church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and it is considered probable that he will accept. With Dr. Lorimer and Dr. Henson to lead the Baptist forces in Greater New York, there ought to be progress.

The Second United Presbyterian church, which held services of dedication for its reconstructed edifice last week, has spent $8,000 on the improvements; $932 of this was raised by the Sunday school Rally Day offering. Rev. J. T. McCrory, D. D., of Pittsburg preached the dedication sermon on Sunday and lectured on Tuesday evening. He also preached the two following evenings. A "Fellowship meeting" was held Monday. Rev. J. A. Duff is the pastor of the Second church. There is a large Sunday school with 564 members.

Inspiration and helpfulness were the results of the day of retirement and prayer held by the Presbyterian ministers October 22. Rev. George B. Stewart, D. D., president of the theological seminary at Auburn, gave two strong addresses, one on "The Evangelistic Movement" and one on "Revival" in a four-fold presentation; in the ministry, in the eldership, in the church and in the world. A deep devotional spirit pervaded the meeting and the day closed with the Lord's Supper.

Christ Presbyterian church, formerly Christ chapel, Rev. David Creighton, pastor, held a noteworthy celebration on Sunday, October 20, being the fifty-eighth anniversary of the organization of its Sabbath school. A great audience present responded to the occasion.

Union evangelistic meetings began in the First Methodist church of Evanston on Sunday, November 3. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is speaking twice every day this week, at 4 o'clock and 8 o'clock p. m.

The Campbell Park Presbyterian church, Rev. P. F. Matzinger, pastor, has invested $1,800 in very useful improvements to its audience room.

trustees' room, pastor's study and halls. The church has many encouragements in the increase of congregation and membership, and in the evident deepening of spiritual interest in the hearts of the people.

At the First Baptist church Dr. Daniel Shepardson has held a two weeks' series of special meetings. In the afternoons he gave expository lectures on the Epistle to the Hebrews, which have given a renewed interest in Bible study. In the evenings Dr. Shepardson conducted meetings which have stimulated Christians to better living and fuller service, and led many persons to decide for Christ.

The Presbyterian Social Union held its first regular meeting for the season at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium October 29. After dinner Hon. Charles G. Neely and Rev. George L. Robinson, Ph. D., of McCormick Seminary, spoke on the topic, "Social Discontent and the Church's Opportunity."

Baptist.

The average duration of Baptist pastorates in South Dakota is less than two years. During the year three new churches have been organized, three new houses of worship built, two others nearly ready for dedication and still two others in process of erection. The total reported membership in the state is 5,882. This is a net gain of 592 over last year. A number of churches have thoroughly revised their church rolls and reduced their membership. In three of the associations five churches have been dropped from their records and their members are not reported this year. The whole number of baptisms in the state during the year is 296. There have been forty-six missionaries working during a part of the whole year. They have supplied forty-nine churches and forty-four outstations. They have received by baptism seventy-eight persons, by letter and experience eighty-six. The total membership on these mission fields is 2,787.

Arrangements are being made to place two or three missionaries among the Navajo Indians. The Women's National Indian Association has been conducting a school and small hospital at a point in the interior of the reservation known as Two Gray Hills. At this point the Indians are accessible and numerous. The association above referred to has kindly tendered to the New Mexico Baptist convention the gift of its property at Two Gray Hills, consisting of a comfortable five-room house, schoolhouse and three acres of ground. The convention has accepted the gift, and arrangements are now being completed for the transfer of the property.

The board of managers of the New Mexico Baptist convention met in Albuquerque, September 17. The reports of the missionaries indicate a prosperous condition in all parts of the field

The financial situation was especially encouraging. New Mexico Baptists gave almost $1 per member for the work of the convention last year. Rev. S. P. Becerra is the newly appointed missionary to the Mexicans in the Pecos valley. There are now two Mexican Baptist churches in that region, making four Mexican churches organized within eighteen months.

The total membership in the Philadelphia Association is over 35,000. The number of baptisms during the year was over 1,000. There are over eighty-six churches in the associational fellowship. The North Philadelphia Association reports 510 baptisms and a total membership of 8,467.

The Indiana Baptist convention had a large attendance at Franklin October 8. The state mission board reported help given to thirteen churches during the year. An effort to add $20,000 to the permanent fund of the convention was successful, making the total of that fund now a little over $32,000. Practical subjects regarding state mission work were discussed. It was urged in the report on Sunday school work that training classes for teachers be conducted, as poor teachers appear to be the great drawback to the best work in the schools. Franklin College has now an endowment of $214,995.81, while the assets are above $400,000. Through the colportage wagon work three Sunday schools have been organized and eight aided; seven conversions were reported; one church saved from extinction and three pastors settled; one meeting house saved from being sold for debt, and another placed in such position as to redeem its building. This work is of incalculable value to the state.

Rev. L. N. Call closed his work at Sac City, Iowa, September 29. His pastorate of five years has been one of much growth and development in the church. As a result of his labor and God's blessing 119 persons have been received into the fellowship of the church, of whom sixty were by baptism.

Rev. R. N. Van Doren closed his work at Port Huron, Mich., September 29. The membership when he took charge in 1897 was 605. Since that time four new churches have been organized from the First church. The additions have been 532.

Dr. George C. Lorimer has decided to accept the call to the Madison Avenue church, New York city. This will leave Tremont Temple, Boston, without its great attraction.

Congregational.

A tablet "in memory of all who in this Cayuga Lake valley have co-worked with God," has been set in the wall of the church edifice at Ithaca, N. Y., and was unveiled October 13. The tablet enumerates among the co-workers it commemorates: The Indians of the Iroquois Confederacy, the First Unknown White Explorers, the French Jesuit Missionaries, the Continentals in Sullivan's expedition, 1779, the Envoys, Travelers and Men of Science, the First Settlers of this place, 1789, and the Pastors, Officers and Members of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church organized April 2d, 1830—eight pastors mentioned by name. It is erected by "the people of the First Congregational Church of Christ of Ithaca, N. Y., organized 1872.

In Washington, D. C., Lincoln Memorial church and University Park Temple church were merged into one organization October 1. The new name is Lincoln Memorial Congregational Temple, and Rev. Sterling N. Brown is pastor. In the new church will be carried on the most extensive institutional plant in the United States by negro Congregationalists.

Rev. G. A. Gates, formerly president of Iowa College, has been called from the pastorate of the First church of Cheyenne to the presidency of Washburn College, Topeka, Kas. He is well fitted for the position.

Rev. E. O. Mead of Park church, Cleveland, Ohio, has organized a Bible Study Club for young people "over fifteen and under 115."

A good illustration of church federation is found at Lone Rock, Wis. The Congregational and Methodist churches occupy the field, planning their work with reference to each other, the Sunday services alternating morning and evening, the Sunday school, prayer meeting and Christian Endeavor, each a united service. This plan of union thus far is working admirably and gives the pastors opportunity to preach in the outlying districts. October 13 Pastor Fehlandt welcomed eleven to membership, three being by confession.

Rev. Fred T. Rouse of Appleton, Wis., has received sixty-five children into church membership in the past year.

The General Association of North Carolina held its twenty-fourth annual meeting September 25 to 29. The Sunday school convention had encouraging reports from the field; ten new schools were added to the roll. The place of the catechism in the Sunday school was discussed and it was voted to urge the use of one. The needful qualifications of the Sunday school teacher aroused much discussion. The reports of the churches showed much spiritual progress throughout the state. The special meeting on temperance drew a large attendance and great interest.

The watchword of the Oregon Association meeting was "Forward"—in personal Christian living, in corporate Christian life, in systematic benevolence, in our new possessions, in the Orient. Strong and bright addresses and papers were given along these lines.

The Ladies' Association of Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, Ohio, is made up of five departments, each having a chairman and secretary; home mission, foreign mission, church, city and young ladies' departments. It considers that this plan results in economy of time and strength, a larger membership, something for everybody to do, true cordiality and lack of all jealousy and envy.

At Marysville, Ohio, a second year's course in Bible study was begun with nineteen scholars. The theme of study is Hebrews. October 6 at a meeting of the men of the church, a Pilgrim Brotherhood was organized. The minister, Rev. E. A. King, is conducting a class in physical culture made up of the young men of the city. At the first session twenty-three men were on the floor.

The Disciples.

A meeting at Trenton, Mo., lasting over three weeks, resulted in 115 additions to the church.

At the close of the present missionary year there was $305,342.26 in the Church Extension Fund. There was an increase of 113 in the number of contributing churches and a gain of $2,358.43 in receipts. Eighty churches were helped to complete their buildings, and loans were promised to sixty-nine others, and this work covered twenty-eight states and two territories. Including the returned loans, the total receipts for use in the work for the year were $103,851.11.

William Woods College has made this year the largest enrollment of boarding pupils in its history. During the summer the benevolence of the widow of Col. D. M. Dulany of Hannibal built and equipped ten music rooms, thereby enlarging the capacity of the school and enabling the management to accommodate 114 boarders, while heretofore ninety-nine is the largest number ever received in the building at any one time.

The quarterly rally of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society will be held in Kimball Hall, Sunday, Nov. 10, at 3 p. m. Marion Stevenson of Irving Park will deliver the principal address. At this meeting the annual report of the society will be presented. The Chicago Christian Missionary Society has increased its income from $2,248.91 in 1900 to over $4,000 in 1901, and purpose to raise twice this amount, or $8,000 for 1902. The general condition of the city missions of the Church of Christ, considered as a whole, was never in a more promising condition.

The mission work done in the state of Missouri the last year shows up well. Sixty churches were organized

For Nervous Headache
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. F. A. Roberts, Waterville, Me., says: "It is of great benefit in nervous headache, nervous dyspepsia and neuralgia."

and 110. Bible schools, 3,596 persons were added to the church, 1,686 of whom were baptized.

Rev. Peter Ainslie celebrated, October 6, his tenth anniversary as minister of the Calhoun Street church, Baltimore. During his ministry the church membership has increased from 100 to 500, and all but $1,000 of the debt has been paid, efforts to raise which amount by December 1 are now on foot. Two missions are connected with the church, both of which are in a prosperous condition.

Drake University began its twenty-first year September 18, and will this year have an enrollment of 1,900. In the past two years the university has assumed the ownership and complete control of the medical and law schools,

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York.

THE VEST Pocket Commentary On the International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1902.

A POCKET COMPANION
For Sunday School
Teachers and Scholars

IT CONTAINS THE

Lessons for the Entire Year in full (reference showing the Revised Version) together with an unusual amount of

STUDY HELPS

such as Comments, Daily Readings, Outline Study and Seed Thoughts.

Original, Fresh, Brainy.

International S. S. Evangel says—"This little book gives on each lesson what would require many hours to acquire, and all better than but very few men in America could prepare. It is at once scholarly, spiritual and practical, and in convenience and serviceability EXCELS OTHER HELPS."

Association Men—"Commends itself at a glance. . . Particularly appropriate for the busy business man."

The Advance—"Condensation as a fine art is exhibited in this book. Remarkably suggestive and helpful."

Sunday School Times—"Vest Pocket Commentary is a unique and reasonably successful attempt to enable busy people to prepare their Sunday School lessons in their 'one spare moment' . . . The 'Reflections' are excellent."

The Baptist Union—"The pith and marrow of the topics are given, the things that must be said to ensure a first grasp of the lesson. It will be of ready value to those who would gain a bird's-eye view of the theme at a glance."

"Up-to-Date," thoroughly Spiritual and Christian.

A SPLENDID PRESENT TO ANY ONE.

Bound in Red Morocco, gold edges	$0.25
Per dozen,	2.50
Interleaved Edition, two blank pages to each lesson for pencil notes, Red Morocco, gold edges, etc.	.35
Per dozen,	3.50

This valuable little volume sent on receipt of price or FREE AS A PREMIUM for one new subscriber to The Christian Century.

The Christian Century Co.,
358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

and other departments hitherto working under a percentage contract. The unity thus secured is essential to fullest and most helpful co-operation. A new pathologic laboratory has been constructed and well equipped under the supervision of Chas. H. Hoffman, M. D., Ph. D. The Bible department has already enrolled more than 100 students.

Last year the Illinois Christian Missionary convention and Chicago Missionary Board handled $8,317.05, by the use of which 1,696 souls were added to the churches—a cost of $4.90 for each addition. This indicates the excellent management of the board in the use of the small funds entrusted to them.

The Christians at Tindall, Mo., have just dedicated a fine little church building, the result of persevering effort. In connection with its dedication a series of meetings was held, resulting in a total of 115 additions. Two-thirds of the entire numbers were men. At one baptismal service thirty-four were baptized, ten of whom were men over forty years of age.

Rev. Charles Reign Scoville has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Gainesville, Texas, recently made vacant by the death of Rev. J. B. Sweeney.

Rev. J. A. Helm of Louisville, Ky., has just closed a ten days' meeting at Martin, Lewis county, Ky., with 103 additions.

At Butler, Pendleton county, Ky., 125 have been added to the church during the two years' ministry of Rev. O. P. McMahon.

The Bible school at Nunda, Ill., where Rev. J. W. Bolton is pastor of the church, has added a home department, cradle roll, teachers' meeting and written examinations to its work. Carrie Crossman is the efficient superintendent.

The School of Pastoral Helpers, Cincinnati, Ohio, has in attendance in this, its second year, young women from three denominations and eight states. Several of them are college graduates. Pastors of any denomination who desire a woman assistant can write to A. M. Harvuot, president, 617 Richmond street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Rev. M. M. Davis has given the Central church, St. Louis, eleven years' service. The summary for this period is 1,506 sermons, 2,029 additions and $142,352 raised by the church.

Methodist.

At the annual meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, Rock River conference, it was stated that 30,000 leaflets had been sent out during the year and 5,400 mite boxes distributed. The treasurer's report showed that Chicago Northern was the banner district, having raised $1,278. Chicago district came next with $1,098; then Chicago Western with $516. Next in order was Rockford district with $713. Total receipts have doubled in the last two years. It was stated that $171 was lacking to make up the $10,000 the conference society had pledged to raise as its twentieth-century offering. Voluntary subscriptions were called and the amount was soon made up.

De Pauw University opens with brighter prospects than for several years. The enrollment will pass 600. The new Minshall laboratory will cost when complete about $75,000 and will rank among the best science schools of the middle west.

At Baker university, Baldwin, Kas., the attendance October 1 was 106 beyond the total enrollment for the fall term last year. The new gymnasium, costing $25,000, will soon be ready. A library building is to be erected next year.

Seven new churches have been erected and paid for during the past six years in the Sioux Falls district of the Dakota conference. Six churches have been purchased from other denominations. Last year showed a marked increase in Sunday-school scholars, being 409. The increase of probationers was 208.

Presbyterian.

The following note has been received from Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church, New York city:

There is evidently an increasing interest in evangelistic work throughout the Church. A profound impression has been made upon the country. This would seem of all times

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, prepaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

by the death of our lamented Presi-God's chosen season for the ingathering of souls. It gives me great pleasure to announce the going forth of another evangelist, the Rev. E. S. Stucker, formerly the pastor of the First Baptist church of South Bend, Indiana. Mr. Stucker has been phenome-nally successful in his pastoral work, has been one constantly sought after as an evangelist, and now has given up his church that he may devote his whole time to this service. He is prepared to conduct union evangelistic services where they may be desired.
He is worthy the fullest confidence of pastors everywhere and I rejoice in his going forth on this special mission. Mr. Stucker may be addressed for the present at LaGrange, Ill.

The Presbyterian Evangelistic Tent committee of St. Louis has just issued its report of work done from July to September of the past summer. Two tents were in use during the summer
—the first called "Glad Tidings" under the management of Rev. Charles Stel-zle, and the second known as "Tent
Evangel" under the direction of Rev.
H. Magill, D. D. In the former were held seventy-five services with a total attendance of about 30,000; 300 professed conversion, and of these forty joined the new Markham Memorial church. In "Tent Evangel," which was located near Grace church, the audiences sometimes included 300 to 400 persons, and eighteen new members were received by Grace church direct from these meetings. Others, it is believed, united with other churches.

Rev. George F. Pentecost, D. D., is to be superintendent of Presbyterian missionary work in the Philippines.
Although on the verge of sixty years, he is still full of energy and believes he can do more work for Christ there than here.

The First church, Davenport, Iowa,
Rev. John B. Donaldson, D. D., pastor, has undertaken the support of a foreign missionary.

Rev. J. Milton Greene, D. D., has just sailed as pioneer missionary in Cuba, for the Home Mission Board.
Rev. A. Waldo Stephenson and his family accompanied him, and also Miss Mabel Bristow, who has already taught for two years in Porto Rico. All these are to be supported by churches in East Orange and Brooklyn and others. Rev. Herbert S. Harris will start in November, the Fourth church of New York, where he is assistant pastor, paying his salary.

GETTING OLD BEFORE THEIR TIME

is the condition of many wives and mothers. In the anxiety and worry attendant on the care of their homes and children, they forget themselves and neglect their own health until they are almost broken down. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is just what they need, testified to its health-giving proper-

Are You Interested in the Study of the Bible

If you are, the most satisfactory results can be secured through systematic reading THE BIBLICAL WORLD, the only popular illustrated monthly magazine devoted exclusively to the study of the Bible. Subscription price, $2.00 a year. Size, 6 3/4 x 9 1/2 inches; 80 pages a month.

SPECIAL OFFER: To NEW READERS a special trial rate is offered of three numbers for 25 cents.
Address THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

Hundreds of wives and mothers have ties. Write for paper and pamphlet.
It is sent gratis by addressing Dr. P.
Fahrney, 112-118 S. Hoyne avenue,
Chicago, Ill.

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train
of
the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service
Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information
furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent,
Chicago, Ill.

Daily and Personally Conducted

Excursions

to

California

and

Oregon

SPECIAL attention given to organizing family parties. Lowest rates;
no change of cars; first scenery; shortest time on the road. Address

S. A. HUTCHISON, Manager,
212 Clark Street,
Chicago, Ill.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO &
ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars,
Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars.
See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad.
It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.
A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

BOOKS

"The Man from Glengarry." A tale of the Ottawa, by Ralph Connor. Fleming H. Revell Co. Price, $1.50.

There is a wide and ever-widening circle of readers to whom a new book from the pen of Ralph Connor is looked forward to with pleasant anticipations. The question which many are asking is will "The Man from Glengarry" touch the high mark of interest reached in "Black Rock" and "The Sky Pilot"? To say that it does is the highest possible praise. While still dealing with pioneer life, our author selects new scenes and new types of character. He takes us into the heart of the backwoods of Canada and introduces us to Scottish Highlanders, French Canadians and native Americans, whose characteristics he depicts with the hand of a master.

In its literary interest the book is somewhat uneven. It starts like a river gushing in full force from a cleft mountain. The opening chapter describes with wonderful realistic power a fight between two rival bands of lumbermen. This chapter is so suggestive of the blood and thunder novel that it may tempt some readers to put the book aside. If they do so they will be the losers, for the story is as varied in its interests as life itself. The only place at which it sags is where doctrinal discussions are lugged in in connection with the revival in the backwoods church. Towards the close the mountain torrent becomes a placid river, flowing through green meadows and fields of waving grain.

But the main interest of the book lies in the striking way in which the struggles of the hardy pioneer with the forces of nature are depicted. There is also a wonderful harmony of tone between the gloom of the primeval forest and the gloomy Celtic nature which the writer knows so well. The religious life of these Scottish Highlanders had in it very little of the sunshine of joy, but in spite of its sternness we are forced to admire its purity, its dignity and its strength. Calvinism put iron into the blood of those people and made them a race of heroes. Ranald, the hero of the tale, is a typical Celt: his turbulent passions, his self-restraint, his development from a boy ruled by impulse to a man strong in all the elements of true manhood, are put upon the canvas with a strong hand. The tragic, the pathetic and the humorous mingle in this story, which is conspicuous for its human interest.

"Culture and Restraint," by Hugh Black. Fleming H. Revell Co. Price,

This is a collection of essays of a very high order. As a form of literature the essay has been out of vogue for the last few years; fiction having usurped its place. But it belongs to the permanent in literature, and is sure to regain its place when good essayists appear. Hugh Black won distinction in his book entitled "Friendship," which was favorably received. To be able to write something fresh and attractive upon that hackneyed theme was in itself no small achievement. This volume, while characterized by all the grace of style, philosophic insight and refinement of thought which characterized the former volume, has the added quality of maturity. It shows that the author is coming to himself, or, if you will, coming to his own. The theme of which the book treats is a fascinating one, and gives full play to the gifts which the writer possesses in such a pre-eminent degree. The problem which he faces is that suggested by the opposing ideals of culture and self-denial. "Should a man obey his nature or thwart it; seek self-limitation or self-expansion?" This book is an attempt to do justice to both sides of this problem, "and to find a great reconciling thought which combines both, while at the same time it saves them from the inevitable failure which awaits them when each is taken by itself." It begins by pitting Zion against Greece, the ethical ideal against the esthetic. It then shows how the Christian ideal, in which these two are blended, became corrupted until the medieval conception of sainthood was reached. The Christian solution of the problem is summed up in the words, "It is religion man needs, not culture in itself. So the birthplace of modern civilization is not Athens but Calvary." In its get-up this book shows the perfection of the printer's art. Paper and letter press are of the best, and the dainty covers of green and gold are good to look upon. We give elsewhere extracts from one of its characteristic chapters.

"Mistress Brent," a story of Lord Baltimore's colony in 1638, by Lucy Meacham Thurston. Illustrated by Charles Grunwald. Little, Brown & Co. Boston. Price, $1.50.

This story deals with the romantic period in colonial history. It takes us back to the founding of Maryland, and shows American society in its formative period. Into these new colonies poured a strange assortment of people—broken-down aristocrats, with their family retainers; adventurers, soldiers of fortune, outlaws, artizans, sturdy yeomen, something of the worst and something of the best of the old world civilizations.

This story describes these times. At its opening it moves slowly, too slowly, perhaps, but as it goes on its pace quickens and its interest deepens. Towards the close it gains cumulative power. It has abundance of incident and portrays the play of passion with a rare gift of analysis. It also gives a faithful picture of the political and social life of the times. We could hardly call it a great book, but it is unquestionably an interesting one. The chief figure gives the title to the book. Mrs. Brent, who was cousin to Lord Baltimore, the lord-protector, came over from England with a brother and sister, having acquired a gift of land in her own name. Governor Calvert, who was also a cousin, did not take kindly to the idea of her setting up a separate establishment and living alone in that wild country. But she had her way. She was prospering in her handsome manor when attacked by the Indians. The governor came to her rescue, saving her life. It seems that she had had a disappointment in love and that she had come to America to hide her sorrow in solitude. The governor fell in love with her; won by his manly life she consented to marry him, when he took sick and died, leaving her as his executer. How she roused herself from her grief and put in shape the tangled affairs of the colony; how she afterward met her early lover, now a widower, and refused to marry him; how she retired to her manor and lived there quietly, happily and usefully are among the things chronicled in this readable volume.

THE OLD MEN AND WOMEN DO BLESS HIM.

Thousands of people come or send every year to Dr. Bye for his Balm Oil to cure them of cancer or other malignant diseases. Out of this number, a great many very old people whose ages range from seventy to one hundred years on account of distance and infirmities of age, they send for home treatment. A free book is sent telling what they say of the treatment. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo. [If not afflicted, cut this out and send to some suffering one.]

A GREAT PREMIUM OFFER

Life of Wm. McKinley

OUR MARTYRED PRESIDENT

With a short Biography of Garfield and Lincoln, containing masterpieces of McKinley's eloquence and the History of Anarchy, its Purposes and Results. Complete authentic Biography of 453 pages. Written by

BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS, LL.D.

Personal friend and comrade of the late President, author of "Life of Samuel Adams," "Synonyms and Antonyms," "Liberty and Unions," etc., etc. Introduction by United States Senator Hon. Wm. E. Mason.

A Standard Authority because written by
BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS.

He was the intimate friend of William McKinley during all the years of his eminent career; the Bishop enjoyed his utmost confidence; under these conditions the manuscript had been in course of preparation for several years. It is a literary work of the highest order, accurate, interesting and truthful. It was almost ready for the press when the horrible tragedy came. Nothing remained to do save the necessity of the Bishop's final revisions and writing the last sad and closing chapters.

A Few of the Half-tone Illustrations

William McKinley, Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. McKinley (Mother), Father of William McKinley, Mark Hanna, Members of McKinley's Cabinet, President Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, President Garfield, President Lincoln, Assassination of President McKinley, Death-bed Scenes of President McKinley, Photograph of Assassin, Capital Building, President McKinley's Residence, Temple of Music, White House, Milburn House, Scenes from McKinley's Early Life, Etc., Etc.

SYNOPSIS OF CONTENTS

The Story of the Assassination. Funeral Procession and Rites. Expressive Tributes from Foreign Lands. Tributes from Eminent Americans. Life of Wm. McKinley. His Last Term in Congress. Governor of Ohio. Financial Troubles. Great Campaign of 1894. Nominated for President. First Presidential Campaign. President of the United States. His Own Story of the Spanish War. Chronological Events of Spanish War. Country Expands and Becomes a World Power. Meets the Crisis in China. Renomination and Re-elected President. Anecdotes and Incidents in his Life. Chronological Record of his Life. Masterpieces from his Pen. Lincoln's Life Described by McKinley. Garfield's Life Described by McKinley.

Theodore Roosevelt.

His Birth, Political History and War Experience. As Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Governor and Vice-President. Marriage and Children. Author—in the Pulpit. Ideas of Honesty. Police Commissioner. Thoughts as a Boy. Qualities as a Rough Rider, etc., etc.

Anarchy

Its Origin, Purposes and Results. Notable Assassinations—Herbert Spencer—Herr Most—Opinions of Eminent Men.

Trial and Condemnation.

The Assassin Leon Czolgosz.

The Nation's Man. Great Speech of Senator J. N. Thurston at the St. Louis Convention 1896, etc.

THE SUBJECT
WM. MCKINLEY

A Grand Character for Biography

Our Martyred President's Life will ever call to mind the greatness of the man, for he was the embodiment of nobleness. It was by his tireless energy and ambition that he rose from amidst the common people to take his place among the great men of the earth, to a place in the hearts of the people.

No president since the time of Washington and Lincoln has endeared himself to the hearts of the people as our late president. He ever showed his interest in their welfare in a political way that went right home to the hearts and consciences of all. His policies were ever those that would benefit his country and with it the great masses of the working people.

He was the one man among men, loved and revered by all.

Recognized experts in the book business estimate the sale of McKinley Biographies during the next six months will exceed 3,000,000 volumes. These astounding figures were had by calculations based upon the sale of over 1,000,000 Biographies of President Garfield. It is an undisputed fact, Biography is of supreme interest to everyone.

THE AUTHOR

Bishop Fallows, before he essayed the present great work, was well prepared for the task, because he had already written, copiously, critically, comprehensively and understandingly of William McKinley and the historical epoch in which he so long played an important part. For forty years American statesmen, measures, politics and history have been as familiar to Bishop Fallows as are his own fingers that handle the pen so deftly, his own mind that produces such lofty thoughts, just judgments and beautiful sentiments. For many years he had personally known William McKinley, had admired, loved and carefully chronicled his splendid achievements, his wise and patriotic utterances. Understanding the motives, principles and lofty aims of our martyred President, familiar with recent American history and fortified with an array of the richest material which he had made peculiarly his own by employing it in the composition of many patriotic and historical works and addresses probably no American was better qualified, nor so matchlessly equipped for this great work as Bishop Samuel Fallows, and none has produced such splendid results—a book that will take its place upon the shelves of public and private libraries as a comprehensive and accurate life of Our Martyred President.

THE BOOK

A Model of MECHANICAL SKILL.

It is printed upon the finest paper, large, clear and new type, forty FINE ART full page photographic portraits of the president's eminent associates, friends and relatives, and has numerous engravings of interesting features of the text.

Bound in fine imported cloth, measuring 7 x 10 inches, 2 1/2 inches thick, gold and black embossed with front cover illuminated by the President's Portrait; in all making a most magnificent library, center table or gift volume. The business man will want it for the wonderful manner in which his policies influenced business; the parent, that his children may gather instruction and inspiration from it. The teacher wants it to enable him to instruct his classes in the duties of citizenship, for he was the ideal citizen. Every statesman will want it for his lessons in political integrity. Every working man throughout the country will want it for he proved himself to be the friend of the working man. Every youth will want it for his sympathy and love of youth. The minister wants it for he exemplified in his daily life the true principles of the Christian citizen. Every wife will want it, for he was a model husband and father.

Extraordinary Offer to Our Readers

Every family will want this book and every one can have it: 1st—Without Money. Send us at once three new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY for one year at the regular rate, $1.50 each, and this magnificent memorial volume will be sent you as a premium.

SECOND, COMBINATION OFFER:

The Price of the Book in cloth is	$1.50
Extra for postage	.20
The Christian Century, six months	.75
Foreign postage extra.
Total value of both	$2.45

Our Price For Both, $1.50
Including Postage.

Good to old or new subscribers alike, all arrearages being paid to date.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, - 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago

Four Magazines for the Price of One

WHAT well-educated American to-day is satisfied with a single magazine in his home? With periodical literature so rich, varied, and attractive as at present, magazines largely take the place of books in keeping one abreast of the times. Each magazine has its specialty, and only with a combination of three or four can all wants be reasonably satisfied. In our magazine combinations we have avoided duplication, and have given the widest variety of reading matter possible. Last season more than 300,000 people took advantage of these remarkable offers

OUR GREAT FAMILY OFFER (For Father, Mother, and the Boys and Girls).

SUCCESS, . . . . . $1.00
REVIEW OF REVIEWS (new), . . . . . 2.50
Current Literature (new), or New England Magazine may be substituted.
COSMOPOLITAN, . . . . . 1.00
Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly may be substituted,
GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, . . . . . 1.00
The Household, or The Designer may be substituted.

$ 6 In Value
$ 3
 Our Price Only

(Personal Checks Accepted)

AN Subscriptions are for a full year and may be sent to one or several addresses. Foreign Postage Extra SUCCESS is the brightest, most up-to-date and the most profusely illustrated monthly magazine published. It reaches 300,000 homes—over a million readers. The inspiration of a lifetime has come to thousands of SUCCESS readers through its columns.—monthly, $1.00 a year. The REVIEW OF REVIEWS is an indispensable magazine for busy men and women, presenting the world's events in print and picture.—monthly, $2.50 a year. The COSMOPOLITAN and FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY are among the greatest of the modern monthlies which have given America the leadership among the countries of the world in magazine-making.—monthly, $1.00 a year, each. The HOUSEHOLD has been known and loved by more than a generation of American women and is to-day at the height of its power and prestige.—monthly, $1.00 a year. GOOD HOUSEKEEPING treats of the ways and means of making home a place of delight, and presents the collected wisdom of housewives and students of domestic science everywhere.—monthly, $1.00 a year. The DESIGNER is one of the leading fashion magazines of the country, picturing in colors the latest Parisian and New York styles and describing costumes, millinery, etc., for women and children.—monthly, $2.00 a year.

OTHER ATTRACTIVE OFFERS

	Reg. Price	Our Price
SUCCESS , and any one of our dollar magazines,	$2.00	$1.50
SUCCESS , and any two of one dollar magazines,	3.00	2.00
SUCCESS , { Review of Reviews (new), } and any one of our dollar magazines,	5.00	2.50
{ or Current Literature (new), }
SUCCESS , and LESLIE'S WEEKLY ,	5.00	2.75
SUCCESS , { Review of Reviews (new), } and any two of our dollar magazines	6.00	3.00
{ or Current Literature (new), }
SUCCESS , Review of Reviews (new), and Current Literature (new),	6.50	3.00
SUCCESS , Current Literature (new), and New England Magazine ,	7.00	3.00
SUCCESS , { Review of Reviews (new), } and LESLIE'S WEEKLY ,	8.00	3.75
{ or Current Literature (new), }
SUCCESS , Review of Reviews (new), Current Literature (new), and New England Magazine	9.50	4.00
SUCCESS , New Eng. Mag. , Current Literature (new), and North American Review (new),	12.00	5.00

All the magazines on our list are controlled exclusively by us for clubbing purposes. None of the periodicals can be secured at these remarkably low clubbing offers except through or in combination with SUCCESS.
RENEWALS: New or renewal subscriptions will be accepted at the above prices for all magazines in our list (including SUCCESS), except Current Literature, the Review of Reviews, and the North American Review, for which all subscriptions must be new, but present subscribers to these three magazines may renew their subscriptions through our offers by adding one dollar for each renewal subscription to the combination prices named. Transfers from one member of a family to another are not new subscriptions.

OUR GREAT EDUCATIONAL OFFER

SUCCESS, . . . . . $1.00
REVIEW OF REVIEWS (new), . . . . . 2.50
Or New England Magazine.
CURRENT LITERATURE (new), . . . . . 3.00
Or any two of our $1.00 magazines.
NO. AMERICAN REVIEW (new), . . . . . 5.00

$ 12 (These four magazines will keep you in constant touch with the world of thought on all the burning questions of the day.)
$ 5 In Value
 For Only

(Personal Checks Accepted)

LESLIE'S WEEKLY may be substituted.

CURRENT LITERATURE is the leading literary magazine of America, giving its readers the cream of the best things published in prose and poetry—whatever is worth knowing and remembering.—monthly, $3.00 a year. The NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE forms a monthly "old home week" for every New Englander, describing with loving touch historic landmarks, customs, and traditions of the "old red schoolhouse days," while giving also a large amount of general literature of the highest order.—monthly, $3.00 a year. LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY—now in its 53rd volume—is the popular up-to-date pictorial and literary record of stirring events at home and abroad.—weekly, $1.00 a year. The NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW has for eighty-seven years guided public opinion in America on all the great political, social and religious questions of the day, and the present editorial management is the most brilliant and successful in its history.—monthly, $5.00 a year.

SUBSTITUTIONS: A new subscription to REVIEW OF REVIEWS, a new subscription to CURRENT LITERATURE, and a new or renewal subscription to the NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE may be substituted each for the other. The COSMOPOLITAN, LESLIE'S MONTHLY, GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, the DESIGNER and the HOUSEHOLD may be substituted each for any other, except SUCCESS. A subscription to SUCCESS, either new or renewal, must be included in every order.

Subscriptions will commence with issues requested wherever possible to furnish copies; otherwise with issues of the month following that in which the subscriptions are received. Copies of all the above periodicals may be obtained of your nearest dealer with whom orders for these combinations may also be left.

To PASTORS and CHURCH MEMBERS You can all make money for your church through these popular clubbing offers. Write to us and we will tell you how. Sunday School Superintendents and Teachers can give their pupils no more admirable or better Christmas Present than a subscription to SUCCESS, which will afford abundant aid, encouragement, and inspiration throughout the year.

The Success Company, 172 University Building, New York

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET, "HOW TO ORGANIZE AND CONDUCT A MAGAZINE CIRCLE."

We want representatives for SUCCESS in every City, Town, and Village,—in every Church, School, and Neighborhood

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, November 14, 1901.

Number 26.

LEADING FEATURES.

Social Sins, and How to Meet Them

The Alliances of the Saloon

The Liquor Problem

My Agent

International Industrial Competition

Substitute for Saloons

Salvation from the Saloon

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arreage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. Lists revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago
Indianapolis
Cincinnati
Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake
and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

BLMYER UNLIKE OTHER BELLS
BCHURCH SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE
BELLS. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Bethany College.

Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,
J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Largest Foundry on Earth making
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

CHURCH BELLS SWEET TONED, FAR SOUNDING, DURABLE AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY, NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN.

RHEUMATISM...

Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by
Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies.

The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws cords, and hardens muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take anything else. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., November 14, 1901.

Number 26.

EDITORIAL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life! It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

SOCIAL SINS, AND HOW TO MEET THEM.

HERE is one sin which has been called "the social evil," and it is rightly named, for to describe its injurious effect upon society is beyond the power of words. It is a sin which saps the life of the nation and honeycombs the beams upon which the social system rests. It was this sin which brought ruin upon the Greek and Roman empires; it was because of this sin that the land of Canaan spued out its inhabitants.

This evil cannot be eradicated by law. It has a deep moral tap-root which law cannot reach. Law can deal with it only when it assumes tangible form as a crime against society, but is utterly powerless to deal with it as a sin against God. Against immorality as such civil law has no power; nor has it any warrant to interfere with private habits, however vile, so long as their indulgence involves no infringement upon the rights of others. All that law can do is to put a hedge of restriction around social sins. For their complete removal dependence must be placed upon moral means. Home life must be made holier; chastity of thought and speech must be developed; the heart must be purified; poor, sin-stricken humanity must receive the healing, cleansing touch of Christ.

For a time it was thought that the cancer of Mormon polygamy could be cut out by a brilliant stroke of legislative surgery. We are now making the discovery that the disease is in the blood, and that the patient needs constitutional treatment. The recent triumph of the Gentiles in the territorial elections shows that the law-respecting elements are gaining the ascendancy. We do not wonder that those who lived and suffered through the dark days of Mormon misrule hail the smallest victory as a happy omen and sing their jubilate. But after law has done its utmost, the Church of Christ, carrying the gospel in one hand and Christian education in the other, will still be needed to complete the work of social and moral reform which law is powerless to accomplish.

Mormon polygamy suggests what Dr. Leonard Bacon designated the continuous polygamy of New England. The Mormon has a number of wives at once; by availing himself of our loose divorce laws the New Englander can have just as many wives as his Mormon brother, only he must restrict himself to one at a time. In no country do the divorce laws stand in greater need of reform than in our enlightened Republic. The danger line has surely been reached when in some states the ratio of divorces to marriages is as one to ten. And it is always found that the more lax the laws relating to divorce the larger the number of divorces. For this alarming evil one part of the remedy must therefore be stricter divorce laws, combined with uniform laws in all the states. The other and more important part of the remedy is a clearer recognition of the sanctity of the marriage union as a Divine ordinance, and not as a contract of convenience—a union founded upon a deep and immutable law of nature; a union holding within itself the future of the race and the well-being of society; a union so close, vital and essentially permanent that its dissolution at the will, or by the authority, of man is expressly forbidden by the words, "What God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

Polygamy and divorce are ancient evils. Abraham, the friend of God, was a polygamist. Divorce was a burning question in the days of Moses. How has God been dealing throughout the centuries with these evils? Take polygamy; although alien to the divine will no direct prohibition of it is found in Scripture, and yet we know that when, by the influence of Christianity, an advanced civilization has been attained, it has always gradually faded out of society. With regard to divorce, the Mosaic law, if judged by the standard of Christian ethics, appears exceedingly lax, but it was all that was practicable at that time. Divorce was permitted, it is said, because of the hardness of the hearts of the people. What Moses could not abolish he restricted. He threw around the marriage relation every possible safeguard. He "suffered a man to put away his wife," but it had to be done in a legal orderly way—a bill of divorcement had to be procured, and thus all hasty, impulsive action was prevented.

The Divine method of dealing with divorce is in principle the same as the Divine method of dealing with slavery, viz., that of restriction or partial prohibition. The ultimate end in both cases was the utter abolition of these evils, and until that could be gained the evils were softened, modified and restricted in every possible way. By fencing slavery and divorce around with legal restrictions did God sanction sin? When he winked at certain palpable wrongs because of the ignorance of the people was he conniving at wrong-doing? And can those reformers be in the wrong who, following the Divine method of reform, seek to restrict the evil which they cannot abolish, surrounding it all the while with influences before which it will gradually disappear, as the snow banks of winter melt away before the vernal sun?

A study of the means and methods adopted by the All-Wise to secure the redemption of the world from the dominion of social evils, indicates the reason why many reformatory movements have signally failed. They have failed because they have tried to eradicate the evils of society by a change in the outward conditions of life, rather than by a change of human hearts; they have failed because they have attempted to regulate the inward life by the outward, rather than the outward by the inward. They have not aimed directly at the seat of life; they have struck the serpent of sin on the tail, instead of striking it on the head, thereby scotching instead of killing it; they have attacked outward forms of evil instead of attacking the hidden principles of evil; in a word, they have depended too much upon outward measures and too little upon the spiritual power of Christianity. If the Sermon on the Mount teaches anything regarding the Divine method of reform it teaches that the thing to be sought after first and foremost is not the destruction of outward forms of sin, but the destruction of the spirit and essence of sin. The head of evil must be bruised by destroying all wrong feelings and dispositions coiled up in the heart. To stop short of this is to stop short of the goal of moral reform. If nothing more has been accomplished than the repression of outward forms of evil the end has not been gained. The waters of iniquity have merely been dammed back, and, time being given, they will cut for themselves an underground channel. Until the fountain of evil is dried up true reform is not attained. With human souls and with human society true reform must always be preceded by regeneration.

---

For the license period ending August 31st, 6,557 licenses to sell liquor were issued in the city of Chicago.

---

The Christian who prays for God to sweep intemperance from the land does not mean it unless he is willing for God to use him as a broom to do the sweeping with.

THE ALLIANCES OF THE SALOON.

RECENT investigations into the workings of the saloon system have brought many surprising facts to light. The report printed by Rev. Royal Melendy of his study of the saloon in its social bearings in Chicago, made it very clear that the saloon fulfills many functions besides that of supplying alcoholic drinks, and some of these functions are undoubtedly healthy and admirable. The city of Chicago has no provision, to its deep disgrace, for public toilet rooms for its inhabitants. The working classes are therefore driven to the provision made in this direction by the saloons. There is also a great demand for rooms which can be used by the committees of all kinds of unions, societies and associations, which are growing every year amongst the working classes. Many of these cannot afford to own buildings or even to rent rooms, and they find that provision made for them by large numbers of saloon-keepers, who are more than willing to have these organizations find their headquarters at their places of business. For the use of these committee rooms there is no charge, and those who use them are not even urged to buy drink, although no doubt they are expected to do so. Still further the profits on the selling of drink are so enormous that it pays to offer a warm lunch, which sometimes means a considerable amount of good food, to the man who will purchase even a 5-cent draught of beer. In these three directions, then, the saloonkeepers are providing abundantly, good-naturedly and energetically for certain great social needs. We cannot wonder that the workingmen who see no other institution and no other class of business men to which they can turn for the supply for these needs, bitterly resent any proposal to remove the saloon. Those who would promote the temperance cause must make up their minds to do a great deal more than abolish the saloons by legislation and police action. Our leaders, in fact, in order to succeed here, must be agitators for the supply of those healthy, normal and permanent needs of the working classes which we have named. The statesmanlike view of the situation is only held by those who maintain that in Chicago the popularity of the saloon must be starved by making other adequate and popular provision for the legitimate demands of the people in these directions. It is not our purpose or function to say here how this can be done. We can only urge with all earnestness that in Chicago at any rate a great lessening of the number of saloons, and still more their complete abolition, could only be justified in the eyes of the masses of the people by the substitution for them of public institutions which can adequately take their place in all their healthy functions, without the sale of liquor.

There is another side to the alliances of the saloon. If on the side already named it subserves certain good ends in the life of the people, it undoubtedly also sustains and nourishes the worst evils that are known. Mayor Harrison recently described in unflinching phrases the deadly work which is being done by the wine rooms and private dining-rooms attached to so many of even the best saloons and restaurants. It is, of course, notorious that saloons are made the nests of robber bands, the haunts of gamblers of every kind. Crime and vice would no doubt exist without them, but no one dreams of maintaining that they would exist in anything like their present luxuriousness of form and vigor if the saloon system were even decently ordered in this city.

How these alliances of the saloon are to be destroyed is simply a problem for the police. If the police will, the thing can be done. The police beyond all doubt know the saloonkeepers who harbor all the various pests of society; and the rank and file of the police force are beyond doubt willing honorably and completely to perform whatever task is assigned to them. The responsibility for inaction or ineffective action rests upon those with whom it lies to give orders to the patrolmen, and to see that they are carried out; and behind the supreme powers of the police force there undoubtedly stand those who have no desire to see the city cleansed, and whose self-interest, political or otherwise, stimulates their opposition.

Mr. Roosevelt proved in New York some years ago that the average policeman is ready to respond to the higher aims of better commanders and leaders than those whom the voters usually give him. When a vigorous chief of police, supported by an honorable and wholesome mayor, is determined that the saloon shall cease to be the haunt of the desperadoes and foul creatures that prey upon the weaknesses and the sin of human nature, the thing can be done. We hope now to see the matter demonstrated afresh in New York. May the disgust of that city at Tammany warn our city magnates all over the land that the American citizen will not endure what Crokerism has wrought in New York!

If the saloon is to remain among us at all, it must cut off its alliances with evil. And reformers must cut off its alliances with good, if they wish to abolish it altogether.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Chinese Question.

ACCORDING to the representations which are believed to have been made by Special Commissioner W. W. Rockhill to the state department, the outlook in China is by no means promising. Those who are on the ground and know the temper of the people believe that within a few years there will be a recurrence of the Boxer outbreaks. The memory of the outrages committed, and the way in which the people are being bled to pay the indemnity demanded by the powers, are intensifying the anti-foreign sentiment among the people. When China's awakening comes things may happen which will stagger the civilized world.

American Anti-Cigarette League.

The prevalence of the cigarette habit is alarming. But there is a bright light in the cloud. An army of three hundred thousand boys and girls have started the stampede by forming the American Anti-Cigarette League, which seeks, by pledging the boys and girls against the use of the cigarette, by publication of facts concerning the evil, and by arousing public sentiment, to kill the habit. Twenty years ago the annual production amounted to only 508,873,783 cigarettes. The year 1898 marked the high tide of production, amounting to 4,153,252,470, a total that is appalling even to one who is not fanatical in the matter of tobacco using. According to the tobacco journals the last year has seen "200,000 less cigarette users, or a greater moderation than before." During the past year the decrease has been at the rate of 2,192,390 per day, and reports show the greater decrease in the districts where the Anti-Cigarette League agitation has been the greatest. The Syracuse, N. Y., Herald has this item: "The Anti-Cigarette crusade which has been waged in this city for the last three weeks appears to be bearing fruit, as the local tobacco dealers report a heavy falling off in the sale of cigarettes."

Change in the Character of Immigration.

The latest census report shows a noteworthy change in the character of immigration. Fewer people are coming from Great Britain and Ireland, Canada, Germany and Scandinavia and many more from Austria-Hungary, Italy and Russia and Poland. The foreign-born population of the United States now constitutes 13.7 per cent and the native-born 86.3 per cent. Ten years ago the figures were 14.8 and 85.2 per cent respectively. Immigration has been smaller during the last ten years than in the preceding decade, and of a wholly different character.

Temperance Crusade in England.

The nonconformist conscience of England is being stirred at present on the temperance question. Aggressive measures are being taken to curtail the power of the liquor traffic. Mr. Chamberlain has unwittingly furnished a whetstone on which temperance reformers are sharpening their weapons. At the opening of a new temperance hall in Birmingham he said:

"I defy anyone to point to an act of parliament during the last seventy years which has had any effect whatever in reducing drunkenness, although I think it would be easy enough to point to several which have had the effect of increasing it—as, for instance, the act which established grocers' licenses."

The truth of this statement is being indignantly denied; the position being taken by many that every act of a restrictive nature during the last seventy years has diminished intemperance.

All Souls' Day.

This festival of the Roman Catholic church falls on Nov. 2d. It is celebrated by burning candles on the graves of dead friends and praying for the repose of their souls. Beginning at dusk and continuing until the early hours of the following morning the devotees kneel in prayer. As the shadows of night creep over the cemeteries the sight is a weird one. This feast was observed in Chicago this year principally by foreign-speaking Catholics. Others observed the occasion by services in the cemetery chapels and by visiting the graves of departed friends. Whatever we may think of the possibility of the destiny of the dead being affected by the prayers of the living, the idea that all souls are to be embraced in the sympathetic interest of Christian hearts is one which it is well to remember.

The Athanasian Creed.

Our readers of the Episcopal church will be interested to know that the Athanasian creed was recently made the subject of a lively debate at a recent diocesan conference in England. The Episcopal church in America is not in the position of requiring its ministers and worshipers to read the Athanasian creed at public service, but the English church has not yet reached that stage of development. Bishop Hamilton Baynes made the proposal that the creed should be read with the omission of the damnatory clauses, but this was very strongly opposed, even by some who would wish the creed omitted altogether from public worship. When the vote was reached it is interesting to know that the clergymen present adopted the previous question while the laymen supported Bishop Baynes.

Temperance Professorships.

With a view to enlightening the public on the issues at stake, English temperance leaders are now bending their energies to the establishment of temperance professorships in the chief universities of Great Britain. Spurred on by the success of the British liquor trade in founding a chair of brewing in Birmingham University, of which institution Joseph Chamberlain is chancellor, the white ribboners now seek to endow lectureships devoted to the gospel of total abstinence. They have already raised funds to establish a "Lady Henry Somerset lectureship" in the University of London and are communicating with temperance leaders in the United States with a view to starting a similar lectureship simultaneously in some leading educational institution here.

The Lion Sermon.

Among the most curious foundations in England, which contains so many odd relics of the past, we must reckon the only Lion sermon which has been delivered in London since the middle of the 17th century. The sermon was established by a certain Sir John Gayer, who was a merchant of the City of London and a great traveler. On a certain occasion while traveling in Arabia he became separated from his companions and was met by a lion. He had no weapon, but being a pious man had recourse to prayer, with the result that the lion walked away. The grateful traveler on his return to London established an endowment for this annual sermon. This year the sermon was preached by a descendant of the founder, who selected for his text the words in I Corinthians, "Be strong! Let all your things be done with charity."

Negro Gain in Population.

The census bureau has made public startling statements touching the increase of the negro race. For whereas in the decade from 1880 to 1890 the negroes increased only 13.5 per cent, and the whites 26.7 per cent; in the decade from 1890 to 1900 the negroes increased 18.1 per cent and the whites 21.4 per cent. That is to say, that while in the first of these two decades the white stock grew twice as fast as the black, in the decade just ended it grew only 3.3 per cent faster. And when we take into account the extent to which the white race has been replenished by immigration we see that the negro has about reached the level of the white in racial virility. He is here to stay, and he is here to multiply. The presence of 8,840,798 people of negro descent in the United States presents a sociological problem as difficult in its nature as it is vast in its proportions.

The Triumph of Decency.

The election of Seth Low as mayor of Greater New York is an event of deep moral significance. It will strengthen the faith of many a faint-hearted reformer in the possibility of civic regeneration; it will show how thoroughly sound the conscience of the people is when they take the trouble to consider moral issues; and it will serve as a warning to corrupt politicians that there is a point beyond which they dare not go in the work of debasing the life of the community. Mr. Edward M. Shepard, the Tammany candidate, is a man of good reputation, who doubtless intended, if elected, to do all in his power to purify his administration; but his hands would have been tied by his supporters. "The people wanted a change," is the way in which Mr. Croker naively puts it. Yes, and they wanted a change for the better. The infamous rule of Crokerism could no longer be endured. But the Tammany tiger, although scotched, is not killed. It will take persistent and heroic effort on the part of the lovers of good government to destroy its power.

A Dearth of Missionaries.

A few years ago the Student Volunteer Movement stirred the heart of the churches. It seemed as if a new era had dawned. Five thousand young people offered themselves for service in foreign mission fields. And now comes the startling intelligence that the Presbyterian Mission Board is finding difficulty in obtaining recruits, and it has sent out a letter to the theological seminaries urging them to use their influence in inducing their students to take up foreign missionary work. Great as is the demand for money; the demand for men is still greater. This change in the situation is accounted for in part by the circumstance that when the churches failed to respond the student volunteers, many of them, stepped aside and began to follow business pursuits, under the conviction that they ought to stay at home and make money so as to render it possible for others to go to foreign fields. But already the cry for more laborers is beginning to be heard. Must the call be made in a timid, halting way, lest there be more volunteers than the Church can enlist?

Duties to the State.

The Reformed Presbyterian church of Boston has expelled from its membership Mr. James Jackson because he has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States. In the eyes of this church the constitution of the United States is an infidel and immoral instrument because it does not recognize the God of nations and ignores the Kingship of Jesus Christ. Hence they decline to identify themselves with this government, at least in the way of exercising citizen rights. They, however, pay taxes cheerfully for the protection and privileges of citizenship. Many of them even fought in the Union army during the war of the rebellion. But they draw the line at voting. They are ready to render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's just as soon as there is outward conformity to their views, but not before. Surely, the government under which we live is nearer the ideal than the government of Cæsar to which Christ enjoined obedience?

Papal Excommunication.

Rome has an arm of marvelous outreach, and when she strikes she strikes with an iron hand. The two things which she demands from her priesthood are silence and submission. These Father Crowley of Oregon, Ill., has refused to give, and now he is made to suffer the severest punishment which the church can mete out to her disobedient sons. His offense is that of bringing grave charges against members of the priesthood, and especially against Bishop Muldoon. When a retraction of the charges made was demanded he answered by offering to furnish proof of their correctness. The choice was given between life-long confinement in a monastery and excommunication. He has virtually chosen the latter, although his attitude is that of defiance, and he proposes to make his appeal to Rome where alone his sentence can be annulled. We pass no judgment upon the merits of the case, but we shall watch its issue with interest. The protest of a single man against abuses in the Church of Rome has generally been like a wave dashing against a rock. But there was a Luther and a reformation, and there may be other Luthers and other reformations.

Chicago's Liquor Bill.

Nearly one-third of the more than $11,000,000 of Chicago's yearly revenue is derived from saloon licenses. Other facts and figures presented by The Chicago Tribune show the size, and consequently the political influence, of the rum business. There are 6,371 saloons in the city, and it is estimated that they sell 1,700,000 barrels of beer in a year, and, of course, large quantities of liquors. It is assumed that the saloons, big and little, take in an average of $25 a day. Virtually all of them keep open on Sunday, and for a year of 365 days this means $58,135,375 a year as the bar bill of Chicago.

College Foundations.

Yale College was established not only on a religious but on an unsectarian foundation. Whereas a modern institution like the Chicago University requires that two-thirds of its trustees be members of the Baptist church, Yale University, although virtually a Congregational institution, has no such restriction. It takes its trustees from any church organization. In welcoming the representatives of other universities to the bicentennial celebration President Hadley said:

"Nor does our brotherhood know any bound of creed. Even those institutions of learning which at some period in their history have had a more or less sectarian character tend to grow as the world grows—making their theology no longer a trammel but an inspiration, and welcoming as friends all who contribute to that inspiration, whether under the same forms or under others. Our common religion, so fundamental that we can all unite therein, teaches us broad lessons of reverence, of tolerance and of earnestness."

Only upon such a broad Christian foundation as this can the great universities of the future be built. To make them subservient in any way and in any degree to denominational ends is to narrow their scope and to stultify their mission.

The Canteen Controversy.

In the midst of the contradictory statements regarding the working of the anti-canteen law it has been somewhat difficult to arrive at the truth. A significant and decisive declaration has been made by General Miles in his report for 1901. He says:

Much has been said concerning the army canteen, which, when first established, was called the "amusement room," and afterwards the "post exchange." It was a place of amusement and recreation for the enlisted men, where they could enjoy reading books and papers, playing games, etc., and could purchase such refreshments, except liquors, as they desired. It was then an eminently successful institution and promoted the contentment and general welfare of the troops. Later, when what was known as the post traders' establishments were abolished, light wines and beers were authorized to be sold in the canteen. The government has now by act of Congress prohibited the sale of intoxicating beverages in the canteen, and it is believed that no injury has resulted thereby and that the law has in the main been beneficial.

The army is composed principally of young men who have not formed the habit of using liquor, and although the majority of the enlistments actually occur in large cities, as the recruiting offices are principally located there, a large percentage of the men come from homes in the country and small towns and villages in every part of the United States. The prediction that the change would prevent enlistments and increase desertions has not been fulfilled. Since the law was approved, namely, on February 2, 1901, the recruiting stations have been thronged with men seeking enlistment for the service, 25,944 men having been enlisted since that date, and the percentage of desertions is now far less than in former years.

A Dangerous Ordinance.

An effort is being made at present by the Chicago city council to repeal the ordinance which requires that all saloons be closed at midnight. To make this obnoxious measure carry there is joined to it a clause providing for the wiping out of the wine room. The two questions ought to be taken up separately, and while the present law forbidding all-night saloons ought to be kept on the statute books, the wine-room abomination should be brought to an end. It is a time for all lovers of social purity and good order to make their influence felt in balking this deep-laid scheme of the saloon men to secure "an open town."

Li Hung Chang.

Li Hung Chang, the famous Chinese statesman, is dead. According to the estimate of General Grant, who knew him somewhat intimately, he is to be ranked with Beaconsfield, Gambetta and Bismarck. But it is difficult to draw a comparison. He was an oriental, and to the westerner was very much of a sphynx. His career from obscurity to that of prime minister of the empire had in it many elements of romance. He was astute and far-seeing and saw clearly the direction in which China ought to go; but he was temperamentally a mediating man, and hence was often misunderstood by both extreme parties. Not a few, while recognizing his great ability, denounce him as a humbug and a trickster. One thing is sure, he was to the core a Chinaman, and died with unshaken faith in his ancestral worship. In the Boxer movement he took no part. For missionaries he had no love and called them "trouble makers." It is too soon justly to estimate his influence. Such a character needs perspective to enable us to see it in its right proportions.

Roman Catholic Church and Temperance.

It has always been a bitter drop in the cup of Roman Catholics that so many of their members are engaged in the saloon business. The cause of temperance is, however, spreading rapidly in that communion. The annual meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, which has just been held in Hartford, Conn., was largely attended, and the reports and addresses were encouraging and inspiring. It appears from the secretary's report that the society now numbers 85,411 members, in 970 branch organizations, and that the increase for the past year had been 4,190 members and ninety-three new societies. Archbishop Ireland, in an address, said that in years past the criticism had been made justly that the proportion of drinkers among Catholics was greater than among persons of other religions, but that now such a statement would be untrue, the change being due to the Catholic Total Abstinence Union and other similar organizations in the church.

CONTRIBUTED

AT LAST.

When on my day of life the night is falling,
And in the winds from unsunned spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown.

Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;
O Love divine, O Helper ever present,
Be thou my strength and stay.

Be near me when all else is from me drifting,
Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to mine own uplifting
The love which answers mine.

I have but thee, O Father! Let thy Spirit
Be with me, then, to comfort and uphold;
No gate of pearl, no branch of palm I merit,
Nor street of shining gold.

Suffice it if—my good and ill unreckoned,
And both forgiven through thy abounding grace—
I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place—

Some humble door among thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,
Where flows for ever through heaven's green expansions,
The river of thy peace.

There, from the music round about me stealing,
I fain would learn the new and holy song,
And find, at last, beneath thy tree of healing,
The life for which I long.

J. Greenleaf Whittier.

THE LIQUOR PROBLEM.

F. D. POWER.

HERE it is. We talk of hard times, when it is estimated that Great Britain's drink bill is $700,000,000 a year, or an annual cost of $90 for every family, and Christian America spends $1,200,000,000, or $85 to every family. Never was there greater need for prayerful consideration of this great living issue. Statesmen, philanthropists, Christians, economists, thinkers and workers of every class must wrestle with this gigantic problem. Whether of the individual or of the nation, we ask, "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contention? who hath babblings? who hath wounds without a cause? who hath redness of eyes?" the answer comes: "They that tarry long at the wine. They that seek mixed wine."

The bureau of statistics of one of our first states—Massachusetts—made important and impartial investigations and tells us of 3,320 paupers cared for during the year in state institutions, sixty-five per cent of the total number were addicted to the use of liquors. Of 26,672 convictions in the state for all crimes, sixty-six per cent were for drunkenness alone; in 22,000 out of 26,000 drinking habits brought about the condition which led to the crime. In 1,836 cases of insanity, thirty-six per cent were users of liquors. There is an awful leprosy upon us. There is a tyranny of one worse than the Turk; a slavery a hundredfold more savage than that which bound the negro, fastened upon our body politic. We have simply licensed hell. We grant the devil, for a consideration, absolute freedom to produce misery and profligacy, cruelty, wickedness, disgrace and social demoralization; to transform the creatures of heaven into the felon, the harlot, the pauper and the madman. We have permitted an organized Satanic despotism to be reared in our midst, which has boundless resources, moves forward with gigantic strides, crushes millions of victims, inflames society with all the passions of the pit. It is the school of anarchy, the breeding ground of criminals, the nursery of woe, the sworn foe of the church. Economically, politically, religiously, this is the problem. To meet it, the conscience of the world must be awakened. Nothing will do but the total extinction of the saloon. We must smash the enemy.

You remember the battle of Manila Bay. It was black night when the American squadron approached its entrance; and Gridley, of the Olympia, signaled from the conning tower to the commodore on the bridge: "We are approaching the entrance of Manila bay." "Steam ahead!" came back the commodore's answer. Again, the signal from the conning tower to the bridge: "We are coming to that part which is supposed to be mined." "Steam ahead!" came back the commodore's order. Then the flash of fire and the boom of a great gun, and again the signal from the conning tower to the bridge: "The forts of Cavite have opened on us." "Steam ahead!" came back the commodore's reply. And on they went under the batteries, over the mines, into the heart of Manila bay; and when that May morning came, there stood the American squadron in battle array, flying the Stars and Stripes, facing the frowning forts and warships, the bands playing "The Star-Spangled Banner," and then came the conflict and the victory.

So must we crush the saloon, smother its guns, pulverize it. This is not the devil's world, and he must know it. This is God's world. The hand pierced on Calvary is on the helm of the universe. The Church of the Crowned Conqueror over death is moving on, conquering and to conquer, and all the foes of Jesus Christ must fall at his feet. The Cross is the solution of the drink problem.

Washington, D. C.

MY AGENT.

CHAS. A. CRANE.

WHAT one does by another he does by himself," is the maxim of law upon which the doctrine of agency rests. This is the underlying, operative principle in our representative and republican form of government. Wherever representatives are used the principles of agency apply. Ours is a representative government. It is administered by the agents of the people. The sovereign people direct their agents, servants, representatives, officers, by constitutional provisions, in which the duties of these officers are named. The people constitute the nation, while the officers selected by the people for the various departments—legislative, judicial and executive—constitute the government.

Mr. Frederick R. Coudert, Jr., in arguing the Porto Rico case before the United States Supreme Court, makes clear this very important distinction between the government and the nation, and it is a distinction which every American citizen who seeks to avoid no responsibility should ever keep in mind. He said:

"The American nation is sovereign. It can go where it pleases and do what it pleases, and its powers are limited only by the force which other nations may use against it. But the government is not sovereign. The people are sovereign, but the government is not. This is the great fact which distinguishes our constitutional law from that of most of the nations of Europe."

This makes it clear that the people rule in this country by their representatives or agents. The doctrine of agency comes in right here and declares that "He who acts through another acts through himself." The deeds of our agents are our deeds. If they frame iniquity by the law, they do so for us, for they are our agents. If they make a covenant with death and an agreement with hell, we stand for them. They are ours. If our agents run saloons, retail and wholesale, so do we. This is rather embarrassing to a minister of the gospel, but it is quite as true as it is embarrassing. To be preaching and running a saloon at the same time makes a common preacher ashamed when it is called to his attention. And that is what I do now, for the fact is that our agent is a saloon-keeper, and, like most saloon-keepers, he is a law breaker. Hold the doctrine of agency with one hand and these facts with the other.

Our agent is running retail saloons. We cleared over $22,000 up yonder in an unlawful saloon last year in East Taugus, Maine. We did almost as well, clearing about $19,000 last year, in a like saloon in Leavenworth, Kan. Both of these saloons of ours are in prohibition states. He sells—our agent does—from bars of our own, in almost all of the old soldiers' homes, violating at once the laws of common gratitude and of God.

Our agent will, for $25, give a brothel-keeper a license, a permit to sell liquor in Brookline, Malden, Quincy, in Maine or Kansas. What I do by my agent I do by myself. My representative, running saloons, thus makes his shame and infamy mine, unless I refuse to endorse that agent's administration of public affairs. And that is just the whole difference between vice and virtue—consent. Consent to this and it is yours, truly. Virtue may be ridiculed, assailed and crucified, but it never changes to vice without consent.

When the administration of public affairs or of the government is committed to a political party we call it a Republican or a Democratic administration, as the case may be. Parties are for the purpose of making the will of the people operative in the administration of affairs. If the history, policy, and practice of these parties warrant me in believing that they will continue the legalized saloon, then and in that case, if I support either of these parties, I share with them the guilt of the infamous business of putting the bottle to my neighbor's lips. I thereby ratify my agent's practice. And this conclusion is not affected by the declaration of any other intent. The case is clear. The reasoning is conclusive. There is no escape. The abomination of legalized vice is not to be laid at the door of the government, but at the feet of the people whose agents administer the government. If this be a hard doctrine, it is not nearly so bad as the facts which sustain it. And instead of distributing responsibility among a vast multitude this doctrine clinches it upon him that votes for those political parties which are "committed to the license policy and refuse to put themselves on record in an attitude of open hostility to the saloon."

Hence the general conference of our Methodist Episcopal church declared in 1892 and in 1900 that such political parties ought not to be supported by Christian men. My agent for the administration of the government is the political party I support. If the practice of this agent of mine perpetuates the license system, can I call myself a Prohibitionist without warping my integrity and seriously fracturing the truth? Can wrong be done and the responsibility for it never be fixed? Nay, verily. The evils of my agent are mine. If his evils may not be cured, I can do nothing to save myself from sharing them except dissolve partnership with such agent.

Since the administration of the government is committed to political parties, I am free to choose between them. If my free choice takes one committed to the license system, then that system is mine.

Turn, now, and see this infamy of licensed evil in full bloom. You men who want to be good must see these facts of your own. Look, then, for an instant, upon the deeds of your agent who is applying the license system to the nameless vice.

Your agent is managing houses of ill-fame. "Qui facit per alium, facit per se." "He that acts through another acts through himself." Stand up, brethren, to the law and the facts, and hear Rev. F. H. Morgan, treasurer of our Methodist Mission in the Straits Settlement, who, after visiting Sulu, writes: "There is a quarter set off by the commanding officer as the recognized resort of prostitutes. They are segregated, and only soldiers are allowed to consort with them; sentries are posted at the entrance to keep peace and order and to prevent the escape of the woman and the entrance of natives, and it is a recognized institution of our military occupation." The same system seems to prevail in Manila. Dr. J. Abells, in the employ of you brethren and of the United States army, has issued certificates of inspection of "fallen" women in Manila, and photographs of these certificates are in my possession, to be given to any inquiring friends. Gentlemen, if the law is to be respected it must be respectable. No law licensing vice can be respectable.

The nameless vice and its twin sister, the dramshop, are yours by every law of agency and of reason. They are protected by your agent, the government, which is administered by your chosen political party. Support such an administration, and you cannot escape its guilt. Praying and religion will not cure this hurt. Righteousness and the ballot are the weapons by which you may protect yourselves from these twin infamies. Yet after all there seems to be a sense of justice here. Men get what they ask for, work for. Russell Sage complains not for the lack of the love of his fellows. He is not working for love. The Pharisees prayed to be seen of men, and they were seen—that's all. You vote with the saloon and you get what you vote for. You are paid in full. You do not complain. Neither will your ghost. To do such things and not to care is the last state in the dream of Dante, of whom the children said, "There is the man who has been in hell."

To say that you do not feel personally responsible for the saloon, when your agent runs it, is to confess that you have divorced your reason and your feelings.

What I do by my party, I do by myself.
Boston, Mass.

"See the capitalists riding along in their fine carriages!" yelled an anarchist at a meeting in a Chicago suburb. "Where are our horses and carriages?" "The saloon-keeper's driving mine round," responded a red-nosed spectator with dejection.—Spectator.

INTERNATIONAL INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION.

ENGLAND and other European countries are anxiously asking for the causes of the commercial supremacy of the United States. A recent number of the English edition of the Review of Reviews says:

"Cassier's Magazine (an English periodical) contains an interesting series of short articles by some of the most prominent engineers and business men in the United States upon the question of American competition. Most of the writers agree in saying that the American workman is the chief agent in enabling American manufacturers to take first place in the world. Mr. Walter MacFarland of Pittsburg gives one important reason for this. He says: 'It appears that the American workmen are much better timekeepers and far less given to dissipation than those in Great Britain. One of the best firms of British shipbuilders, which has had no trouble with its men for years, recently stated that there is a loss of time amounting to nearly twenty per cent, due largely to drunkenness. If anything approaching these figures is true generally, there can be no surprise that (English) firms open to competition from well-managed American works should have a hard time.'"

In inquiring as to the cause of this greater sobriety of the American, the fact appears that twenty years ago business interests in the United States paid no attention to the effect of the beverage use of alcohol or of tobacco on working ability. About that time, the now almost universal study of physiology, which includes with other laws of health those which relate to the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics, began to be a legal requirement for all pupils in the public schools of this country.

During the past ten or fifteen years the children have been carrying from the schools to the homes of the 75,000,000 people of the United States the story of the evil nature and bad effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics. As a result of the diffusion of this knowledge the railroads of the United States now almost universally refuse employment to men who drink whether on or off duty. Hon. Carroll D. Wright's Labor Bureau investigations show that more than seventy-five per cent of the employers of skilled labor in the United States require total abstinence of their employes and fifty per cent of the employers of unskilled labor demand the same. These requirements, the cordial acquiescence in them by the employed, and the commercial supremacy which this knowledge helped to secure to the United States, have been promoted by the truth taught by the school that alcoholic drinks injure working ability.

The different reception given by workmen to the employers' demand for abstinence where scientific temperance is not taught in the public schools is well illustrated by the following incident: The manager of the Borsig factory in Germany recently posted an order forbidding the workmen to bring into the factory beer or other spirituous liquors or to drink the same during working hours. The workmen, numbering over a thousand, held a meeting and objected to the order. The next day they conspicuously carried in their beer. During the excitement caused by the order a pamphlet appeared by an old factory official who affirmed that the use of alcoholic drinks was detrimental to the laborer's own interest. He referred to the cleverness and sobriety of the American workman, which makes them able to do very exact and precise work, which, he says, is not possible in German industry because of the drinking habits of the laboring classes.

The American workman does not resent the employer's demand for abstinence because he has learned, often from his child in the public schools, that alcohol not only dulls the brain, but weakens that nerve control of muscle that is necessary to the precision essential for fine work.

The nomination for knighthood of Sir Hiram Maxim, the American-born inventor, for his work in England, was one of the last official acts of Queen Victoria. In an article in the June number of The World's Work Sir Hiram furnishes indirect testimony to the same point. While describing the results of the English trade unions, he adds: "The English workman spends a great part of his earnings in beer, tobacco and betting; he has no ambition." Of course not, for beer in dulling the brain dulls ambition. "The American workman," he says, "wishes to get on; he accomplishes a great deal more work in a day than any other workman in the world." "He does not drink," says another English writer.

England is beginning to see the difference in results between occasional talks by temperance advocates to school children and the systematic graded public-school study of this topic required by law in the United States.

At a recent meeting in Birmingham, addressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the presiding officer, Mr. Edwin Smith, said: "We are being beaten in skill . . . by America. She has been lavish in spending money in educating the brains of her people while we have been lavish in poisoning them. If we spent per head on alcohol the same as America, our drink bill would be about sixty-six million pounds less than it now is. We can not succeed commercially while we are handicapped in this way to the extent of forty-eight per cent. The great mass of the working people in this country are totally ignorant of the effect of drink." He said that England ought not to leave the education on this subject merely to the temperance societies, but that it "should be undertaken by the state. Surely if the state must encourage the traffic for revenue it should in fairness educate every child in government schools as to the nature and danger of alcohol, and the benefits of total abstinence." He added in closing: "If the state will only educate the children against strong drink . . . England commercially may even yet be saved."

It has been wisely said that "industrial supremacy belongs to that country which enjoys the cheapest materials, the most improved machinery, and the most efficient labor." As clear brains and steady nerves are needed for the preparation of both material and machinery as well as for their use in production, that nation, other things being equal, whose brains are not dulled by alcohol and other narcotics, will win in the world's competitions.

A dignified clergyman had a parishioner addicted to drink, and one night met him coming home in such a condition that he remonstrated with him on the spot. By way of clinching his argument, he asked, "What would you say if you were to see me reeling down the road in a state of hopeless intoxication?" The offender appeared to be deeply impressed and answered fervently, "I wouldn't tell a soul, sir."

SUBSTITUTES FOR SALOONS

LEE L. GRUMBINE.

THE subject of "Substitutes for Saloons" is brought up again by the appearance of the third in a series of books purporting to give the results of certain investigations made for the "Committee of Fifty," in which the "Legislative" and the "Economic Aspects of the Liquor Problem" were set forth in the other two volumes already published.

The worst that can happen in reference to any public evil like the saloon is to have it helplessly taken by society as a matter of course; an evil, but a necessary evil; a thing that must be endured because it can't be cured. It is, therefore, a distinct gain when the evil is discussed, no matter in what light; and Prohibitionists should be familiar with everything that is said and written touching every phase of the subject.

The substitutes favorably recommended in the book under consideration are "Clubs—athletic, social and political; people's institutes; night schools; public recreation parks and play grounds; university extension lectures; open libraries and reading rooms; branch and traveling libraries; free reading and combination smoking rooms; Young Men's Christian Association buildings; missions; dancing halls; gymnasiums; public baths; theaters; art galleries; museums; free musical concerts; picnic grounds. etc., etc.

It does not seem to occur to the writer of the book that we already have all these in reasonable abundance, and still saloons flourish and drinking increases and boys become drunkards, and men, women and children are ruined by the legalized saloon.

What insanity is this that would impose upon philanthropically disposed society the burden of furnishing to the weak and degenerate (largely the product of saloons) all sorts of entertainment to bribe them to do their own duty, so as not to disturb the saloon nabob in the exercise of his legal franchise to pull down, to ruin and to destroy, and not to deprive the two-faced politician of his dual support of professional piety and professional vice? Let the saloon first stand on its own bottom, like every other crime and public wrong; take out from under it the props of the law; then talk to temperance people about their duties. For then it is no longer a political, but a social question—one of morals and philanthropy—while now it is primarily one of politics. It is assumed that the saloon exists on the same plane with other vice, which it doesn't. If only it did, it were comparatively easy to be dealt with. It is deliberately cultivated and fostered by law. It is first and foremost a political question. It is hardly a social question at all while license exists. Abolish license, and the common law will deal with it as a common nuisance.

Nor is it to any considerable degree true that the saloon ministers to the "satisfaction of the social instinct." If the social instinct takes men to the saloon, what is it that takes the sideboard and the beer keg to the social club?

"Substitutes for the saloon" invariably mean competitors with the saloon, which means more saloons. To substitute is to replace one thing with another. To substitute for the saloon you must do away with it; not try to compete with it.

Lebanon, Pa.

PLEASANTRIES.

In Winter's Weekly Mrs. A. Stannard tells the story of a sorely tried girl of tender years who was seen to bury something in a garden. It turned out to be a leaf of a copy-book, upon which this was written: "Dear Devil, please do come and take Aunt Mary away at once."

The Literary Editor—That fellow Scribbler sent in a poem this morning entitled "Why Do I Live?"

The Editor—What did you do with it?

The Literary Editor—Returned it with an inclosed slip, saying: "Because you mailed this instead of bringing it personally."—Indianapolis News.

Auctioneer—This book, gentlemen, is especially valuable, as it contains marginal notes in the handwriting of Alexander von Humboldt. A hundred marks are offered. Going—going—gone. It is yours, sir. (The autograph marginal note by the renowned scholar was as follows: "This book is not worth the paper it is printed on.")—Humor-Bacillen.

Mrs. Carlyle had an accurate knowledge of the effect of bodily ailments upon the pen. Miss Jewsbury, the writer, was once staying with her at Chelsea, when a caller appeared. "Geraldine Jewsbury is here," Mrs. Carlyle explained; "but she is in her room with a bad cold reviewing a novel." She paused, and then added grimly, "I am sorry for the novel that is reviewed by Geraldine when she has a bad cold."—American.

The palm for absent-mindedness is taken by a learned German professor, who one day noticed his wife placing a large bouquet on his desk. "What does that mean?" he asked. "Why," she exclaimed, "don't you know that this is the anniversary of your marriage?" "Ah, indeed, is it?" said the professor, politely. "Kindly let me know when yours comes around, and I will endeavor to reciprocate the favor."—Selected.

Dr. Pitcairn, being in a church in Edinburgh where the preacher was not only emphatic, but shed tears copiously, was moved to inquire of a countryman, who sat by him, what it was all about. "What the mischief makes him greet?" was the inquiry. "Faith," said the man, slowly turning round, "ye had may be greet yoursel', if ye was up there and had as little to say."—Argonaut.

A clergyman was very anxious to introduce hymn books into the church, and arranged with the clerk that the latter was to give out the notice after the sermon. The clerk, however, had a notice of his own to give out with reference to the baptism of infants. Accordingly, at the close of the sermon he arose and announced that "All those who have children whom they wish to have baptized, please send their names at once to the clerk." The clergyman, who was stone deaf, assumed that the clerk was giving out the hymn book notice, and immediately arose and said, "And I should say for the benefit of those who haven't any that they may be obtained at the vestry any day from three to four o'clock, the ordinary little ones at one shilling each, and the special ones with red backs at one shilling and four pence."

AT THE CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

SALVATION FROM THE SALOON.*

BY OLIVER W. STEWART.

Text.—"Prove All Things; Hold Fast That Which Is Good."

THE subject on which I am to speak naturally raises the question, "Salvation for whom and how is it to be obtained?" Perhaps the first one who comes to your mind now as needing salvation from the saloon is the drunkard. The chains of the slavery of drink have been forged upon hundreds of thousands of men. Under the influence of habit they sink lower and lower. All efforts to save them seem unavailing, or nearly so. Yes, drunkards need salvation from the saloon. But it is not my purpose to discuss the question from the standpoint of the drunkard's need, for he is not the only one who is being lost on account of the saloon, nor is he the most important.

Others will say that we need salvation from the waste and extravagance of the liquor traffic. Attention is called to the fact that over one billion dollars are spent annually over the bars of the saloons of the land. To save the country from this fearful waste certainly would be worth while. If we could put into the legitimate channels of trade the money that is wasted for drink, business would have a revival that would be permanent. Such a thing as hard times would be almost unknown. Important as this is, however, I do not consider it the most important salvation.

Others ask, "How can we save the government from the saloon?" and well may that question be considered. Our politics have become corrupted by the presence of the saloon. Politicians court its favor, legislators think of the interests of the liquor traffic and do its bidding. The day is rapidly approaching, if not already here, when no legislation of any kind for the interest or benefit of the people can be passed except by the consent of saloon-keepers through their agents, the public officials. One of the certain results from this must be that conscientious, godly, Christian men will turn away from political service, refusing to attempt to serve their country when in doing so they must first of all serve the liquor traffic. But there is something still more important for you than to save the country, and to save the country would not be unimportant. It would be well worth the sacrifice for all of you to lay down your lives that your country might live and that her government might continue and her institutions be saved; but, the salvation from the saloon about which I wish to speak comes much nearer each of you than anything I have yet mentioned.

As a basis for my argument I submit this, that the salvation from the saloon that is most needed now is the salvation of Christian voters from complicity in the legalization of the liquor business. I intend to make this so clear that I cannot be misunderstood.

Let it be remembered, speaking broadly and generally, that the traffic in alcoholic beverages is a legal traffic. The saloon business is a legal business. It may violate some of our laws. Undoubtedly it does. But the fact remains that there are other laws which relate to the saloon and that it can exist without violating those laws; that the government, state and national, recognizes the traffic to protect it and does protect it. The supreme question confronting the government and the saloon is, "What shall be the attitude of the government toward the liquor traffic?" The supreme question for the individual is, "What shall be my attitude toward the sinful policy which my government pursues with reference to the traffic? Shall I approve that policy and thus become equally guilty not only with the government, but with the saloon itself, or shall I disapprove that traffic, and if I am to disapprove it how may that disapproval be so expressed as to leave me guiltless in the presence of the sinfulness of the saloon and its legalization by the government?"

I need waste no time on the question of the policy of the government toward the saloon, for it certainly is well understood by this intelligent audience. Nor need I take much of your time to point out the fact that prohibition, if it were a failure so far as putting an end to the liquor traffic is concerned, would still be a success so far as freeing the government from its complicity in the business. The government, like the individual, is bound to do right. The question is not whether it will pay most to do right. The question is not so much what is the effect of doing right, but what is right. For example, some people contend that under prohibition we would have many low dives and disgraceful, disorderly saloons in violation of the law, but that under high license these places would give way to orderly, decent saloons that would not be such a disgrace to the community. I do not for a moment believe that this is true, but, assuming it to be true, what has a Christian government accomplished? It has made the temptation greater and it has made sin seemingly respectable, and I have a conviction to the effect that no Christian man, and no group of Christian men and no Christian state have any business attempting to make a bad thing look good. Ours is a fight, not a compromise.

But I must discuss the question which I have announced to be my theme, that is, "How can you save yourself from complicity in the sinful policy of your government?" A discussion of this question, of course, takes us dangerously near the political arena, and there are some people who are never so badly frightened as at the advance of a thought or an argument that has to do with political duty. But an audience of Christian people is certainly brave enough to face anything that has to do with Christian duty, and this question is of that kind.

In this country we have government through political parties. I do not say it is the best kind or the best way, but it is the kind of government we have, or it is the way that we govern. Our voice in government is heard through the medium of our political party. Of course some of us are more independent than others. Some would never think of scratching a ballot, but always vote a party ticket straight. Others would scratch a ticket occasionally, leaving off some particularly bad candidate. Some others would go so far as to stay at home occasionally from an election, and others even to the extent of now and then voting another party ticket. Underneath all this, however, is one law of which we must not lose sight, and that is that when we vote a party ticket, whether we do it once in four years or once in twenty years, we vote for the things that party stands for. You may not believe in the things it stands for. You may vote its ticket because you believe in only one of the things that it stands for, whereas it may stand for nine other things that you do not believe in at all, but when you vote a party ticket you vote for all the things that it stands for, without regard to what your belief in them may be.

*Delivered before the International Christian Endeavor convention, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Nor does the question of your prayers enter into this matter. You may pray for one thing and vote for the opposite, in which event, so far as your citizenship is concerned, it would be your vote that would count. You would lose your prayer.

The saloon policy predominates in this country. The license of the liquor traffic is the plan generally adopted. That mere announcement of itself necessarily means that this country is governed by saloon parties, for the country can have no policy except it gets it from parties that rule. The only question then left for consideration is what is your relationship to the political parties that stand for the license of the liquor business. That brings me to the question of your need of salvation.

Any Christian man who votes the ticket of a political party that stands for the license of the saloon votes for the saloon. The Christian man who votes for the saloon is in need of salvation from the saloon. The fact that the saloon is in power, and that this government is committed to it and to the license of it, proves that there are thousands, I might say millions, of Christian men who need to be saved from the consequences of their own acts in supporting that policy.

It is not necessary that I should point out what you are to do. I feel that the road in that direction is plain, but it does seem very necessary for some one to point out what we ought not to do. We ought not to give our votes and our support to political parties that stand squarely opposed to what the Church and Christian people long ago have declared to be the proper policy for the government to pursue with reference to the saloon.

It is our very lack of independence that defeats us. It is our slavery to party that in turn enslaves us to the saloon. Why should the men engaged in the liquor business have more influence in party councils and more power as to party action than the Christian men of the country? They are not wiser than we. They are not more patriotic than we. They do not control more wealth than Christian men do. They are not better educated. There is not one thing in their favor which we do not possess to a greater degree, except that they have real political independence. No party, no politicians, can control the votes of saloon men except on the basis of doing the bidding of the saloon.

But the disgrace of our Christian civilization today is that we Christian citizens who love God supremely and who would die for the Church and count it a joy to do so, can be chained to the chariot wheels of the saloon business if our political party need seems to demand it. If one-tenth of the Christian voters of America would walk up to one election as independently as the saloon-keepers approach the ballot box, we would have the politicians and parties of this country at our feet begging for the slightest indication as touching what we want, and we would find them quick to do the thing we wanted as soon as they ascertained what it was.

As it is, no politicians of any note in this country, outside of the handful of men who really vote their convictions on the saloon question, concern themselves in the slightest degree as to what Christian men want or what the Church resolves about the saloon. They go on their way giving it license and protecting it. And they do that because they dare to. They understand perfectly well that they can violate the teaching of the Church and spit upon her resolutions and that her people will not resent it.

That would not be specially alarming, certainly would not be worthy discussion before this assembly, were it not for the fact that our support of parties and politicians who serve the saloon first and give the Church the crumbs that are left, is the support that makes us guilty. The question is not what can you absolutely prevent. You, perhaps, cannot prevent any great amount of evil in this world. Certainly you cannot prevent the evil that others do to any large extent. But you can do right yourself, and to do anything else than right is to do wrong, and by the thousands the Christian voters of this country are doing something else than right about this thing.

Salvation from the saloon. Who needs it? The drunkard needs it. Who needs it? The business man needs it from the sinful waste of the liquor traffic. Who needs it? The government needs it from the peril of saloon rule and control of its institutions. Who needs it? More than all others, the Christian man needs it. He needs salvation from his own guilt and complicity in the sinful policy that his government now pursues.

Who can save the Christian man from this guilt? He alone can save himself. He must save himself. He must save himself if it breaks up every party in America. He must save himself if it dethrones every whisky politician in power. He must save himself if it requires him to build a new party. He must save himself though it takes him into a party that he long has ridiculed and has never even dreamed that he would ultimately support. He must save himself or he will be lost and with him will go our institutions, our commerce, our prosperity, all swept away in one tremendous ruin.

Will he save himself? Yes, he will. The gospel of Jesus Christ is yet a motive to hold men true. Faith in God and in the right is yet in the world to inspire men to noble, higher living. Yes, the Christian manhood of the country will save itself and when it does the saloon will die.

Chicago, Ill.

---

General Ludlow says: "The use of intoxicating drinks of any kind in the tropics conduces effectively to attacks from diseases. It is believed by this department that absolute prohibition is imperative. In almost every case of yellow fever among American troops in Cuba it has been found that the patient was in the habit of drinking. It is particularly important, where a large proportion of the troops are recruits, that nothing be officially done to create in them the habit of using intoxicants. To establish canteens in the tropics is to render the temptation of sociability and companionship practically irresistible, and the habit of drinking is readily acquired."

---

A man there was, though some did count him mad;
The more he gave away, the more he had.—Bunyan.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Lesson for Nov. 24, 1901. Is. 5: 8-30. Golden Text:—Woe Unto Them That Are Mighty to Drink Wine. Is. 5: 22.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Isaiah and His Times.

ISAIAH, the statesman-preacher of Judah, the greatest of the writing prophets, began his work in the latter days of Uzziah, B. C. 750, and continued until about the close of Hezekiah's reign, B. C. 698. Of King Uzziah, the sacred historian has said, "His name spread far abroad; for he was marvelously helped, until he was strong" (2 Chron. 26:15). Regarding this prosperity there are many indications. The land was "full of silver and gold" (Is. 2:7). There were great landed estates (Is. 5:8; Mic. 2:2, 9), while the most elaborate palaces and the luxury of summer and winter homes, were numerous (Amos 3:9-15); and there was no end of horses and chariots (Is. 2:7). But as the nation increased in prosperity it sadly declined in morals and religious power. The poor were defrauded, oppressed and evicted through injustice (Is. 1:23; 3:14, 15; Mic. 2:2, 9; Amos 2:6, 7); the social evil and idolatry prevailed (Is. 3:16; Amos 2:7, 8), and drunkenness became rampant (Is. 5:11, 22; Amos 2:8; 4:1; 6:6). It was at such a time that Isaiah appeared. In the opening of the present chapter he, like our Master on occasion, spake by parable against the chosen people. We see him, as it were, going forth into a beautiful, highly favored vineyard, but finding only wild grapes where the choicest clusters should have been borne. This unproductive vineyard, the prophet explains, is the house of Israel (v. 7). The object of the teaching is to arouse his hearers out of their unconcern, to a hearty longing for the righteousness of God.

V. 8-10. The Idol of Self. "Join house to house, field to field." The first woe is pronounced against grasping after property beyond one's needs and associated with the oppression of the poor. It is the sin of covetousness, which is idolatry, common to all ages and reaching, alas, even into the Church. A deception of covetousness is that it may be a respectable sin, calling forth the admiration of many; but it is fatal to true, spiritual life. * * * "Many homes shall be desolate." The prosperity gained in the worship of self, it is implied, shall one day by the death, captivity or degradation of the owners be nothingness.

V. 11. Serving the Appetite. "Woe unto them." This is not a threat, but a plain statement of the natural consequences of reaping as one sows. * * * "Rise up early, follow strong drink." The first thought of the strong drinker is for more intoxicants to "brace up" the nerves injured by previous excess. He is already "gone into captivity," (V. 13) through a habit which can only be broken by the grace of God. Luke 4:18. * * * "Continue until night." The saloon is the first place open in the morning as it is the last to close at night, a sufficient indication of the hold it has on its patrons. * * * "Till wine inflame them." Inflame, poison the brain. The reddened face and eyes of the drinker tell of extra blood drawn to the brain. At first there follows exhilaration with lively thoughts and words, making the drinker jolly. He is deceived by the thought that alcohol is doing him good. It really has a paralyzing effect. A drunken man staggers because his brain and spinal cord become partly paralyzed, so that they cannot do their duty well. (Craig). Alcohol paralyzes or benumbs the nerves also; if a little is held in the mouth for a moment, the tongue and cheeks become numb. This is why, if a tired man takes his grog, he feels rested, because his nerves are benumbed, when in fact he is weaker than before. So when he is cold, if he takes alcohol, his senses become benumbed and he seems to feel warmer, when in truth he is nearer death from freezing. It is this inflaming, benumbing power of alcohol that makes it so deceptive. "Whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20:1. The effects of tobacco are much the same as those of alcohol.

V. 12. God Is Forgotten. "Harp, viol, pipe." Music was common in ancient banquets. Ch. 24:8, 9; Amos 6:5, 6. Designed to elevate the soul to heavenly thoughts, it is misapplied in the serving of the idol of self. Bacchanalian songs which in their impurity poison the soul, go hand in hand with strong drink that poisons the body. * * * "And wine, are in their feasts." Wine is three times mentioned in this lesson. Music and wine are brought together in the vilest drinking dens of to-day. It was so anciently. Is. 24:8, 9. * * * "Regard not the work of the Lord." Because their belly is their god. Phil. 3:19; Job 1:5. No right thought or sense of God can be had amid such revelry. All elaborate feasting and drinking tend to God-forgetfulness. Luke 16:19, 21. Drink sears the conscience as with a hot iron. 1 Tim. 4:2. Where the habit prevails, it is difficult to arouse public opinion; to some extent the conscience of the Church may be in danger.

V. 13. Warning Disregarded. "Therefore." Because of not regarding God's judgment and warnings. * * * "Gone into captivity." The captivity began with the drink habit (V. 7); in time it bound as with a strong rope. V. 18. Their worst captors were not Babylonians or other foreign enemies, but habit acquired by serving self. The former could bind for time, the latter for eternity. Mat. 10:28. * * * "Have no knowledge." They are deceived. Prov. 20:1. Loving darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil, they suffer sin, with terrible power, to darken their understanding and to benumb their perceptive faculties. Drinking men profit neither by their own experience, nor by that of others. Luke 19:44. * * * "Their honorable men are famished." In awful contrast to their luxurious feasts. It is the famine of the soul, of the Word of God, that is spoken of. Hos. 8:11. * * * "Their multitude dried up with thirst." The common people were included. The lamentable effects of strong drink are felt far beyond the immediate participants in dissipation, including innocent ones in the family who are brought to rags and hunger, (Prov. 23:21) and in homes wrecked.

V. 14. Increased Death Rate. "Therefore." Because of wilful ignorance and sin. * * * "Hell has enlarged herself." Sheol, the unseen realm of the spirits. So great has been the slaughter, as the result of sin, that the world of the dead is, in poetical figure, too narrow to accommodate all who would enter therein naturally. Life insurance companies refuse to accept drinking men as risks. * * * "And opened her mouth without measure." Devouring the Jewish people as a ravenous monster or as the earth opened and swallowed humanity. Num. 16:30, 32. * * * "Their glory." Those who are given to strong drink glory in their shame, instead of in God. Phil. 3:19. * * * "Multitude." It is a way so broad and easy, that many go in thereat. Matt. 7:13, 14. In the city of Chicago the saloons and bars number 6,400; tobacco and cigar stores, 1,820; total, 8,220; as against 4,420 stores in which provisions are sold. * * * "Their pomp." The magnificence and pride which are associated with strong drink and banquets and in the revelry of high-class saloons. "He that rejoiceth." All of their drink songs and music and the mirth of their stupefied brains shall not save them from that which at last biteth like a serpent.

V. 15. Sin the Leveller. "The mean, mighty, lofty." From the vilest underground liquor dens to the magnificent gilded palaces of vice and the drinking places shamefully associated with our halls of legislature, all show the work of sin that brings all classes ultimately down to the lowest degradation. * * * "Shall be humbled." Nothing is more humiliating than the poverty, marked by rags, of the persistent drunkard and those depending upon him. Prov. 23:20, 21.

V. 16. Holiness Exalted. "The Lord shall be exalted in judgment." He shall be exalted as the Lord of hosts. His holy judgment shall be endorsed by all mankind as necessary towards righteousness. Though his mighty arm can break the strongest and humble the proudest, yet God is actuated only by judgment and justice. Ps. 89:13, 14. * * * "Shall be sanctified." Shall be regarded as holy by reason of his righteous dealings which all shall acknowledge. Ch. 6:3.

V. 17. Sin's Devastation. "Lambs feed as in their pasture." R. V. The ruins of the desolate towns shall become as feeding places for the flocks. Arab shepherds with their flocks shall roam at large. * * * "Waste places of the fat ones." The few sheep over the large expanse shall grow fat. * * * "Strangers." Wanderers. R. V. This may refer to the invaders who entered to punish the people for their sins.

V. 18. Growth of Habit. "Woe unto them that draw iniquity." Represented not as drawn away by sin, but as laboriously drawing sin and temptation to themselves. * * * "With cords of vanity." The idea seems to be that of foolishly bringing sin and punishment upon themselves. To stand against God and his righteousness with false reasoning and deceptive excuses is vanity of vanities. * * * "With a cart rope." Harnessed to sin and its punishment by nothing less strong than a rope. So sinful habits develop from the smallest beginnings. The drink habit becomes so strong that it breaks through all restraints and insists on being satisfied at any cost.

V. 19. Defiance of God. "Let him make speed." They occupy the seat of the scornful. Ps. 1:1. They profess not to fear the approaching calamity. 1 Pet. 3:3,4. * * * "That we may see it." The devil's common snare; let us realize it by our own experience. * * * "Know it." Run the risk of knowing evil, so-called "good." V. 20. So our first parents were led to transgress by desiring to know evil. Gen. 3:5,6. No human line ever yet fathomed the mysteries and depths of sin madness, and the power of sin to darken the understanding against man's real good.

V. 20. Fatal Imposture. "Woe to them that call evil good." To state that evil is good is satanic. This is done by those who uphold moderate drinking as conducive to sobriety; who claim that the saloon is a public necessity; who advocate beer as a temperance measure; who favor Sunday license and recreation in the name of liberty. * * * "And good evil." Say all manner of evil falsely against God, righteous men, and righteous ways. Matt. 5:11. * * * "That put darkness for light." Being lovers of darkness rather than light they advocate the same. John 3:19. * * * "Who put bitter for sweet." Though it may seem sweet for a time. Prov. 9:17,18. Religion and God's word are sweet. Ps. 119:103.

V. 21. Pride's Blindness. "Wise in their own eyes." Who place their own puny wisdom and reason above that of the infinite God, creator of heaven and earth. * * * "Proud in their own sight." The drunkard boastfully claims that he can drink when he pleases and let it alone when he pleases. He fancies he is in no danger.

V. 22-23. Unbridled License. "Mighty to drink wine." The habit invariably grows by that upon which it feeds. Drinking men are boastful of the amount they can stand. * * * "To mingle strong drink." To produce variety in drinks by adding spices or by mingling different kinds as in the arts of modern bartenders. * * * "Which justify the wicked for reward." The perversion of justice and the acquitting of the guilty for bribes commonly go with the wickedness of intoxication. * * * "Take away righteousness of righteous." Destroy the rights of the righteous. The presence of the drink evil imposes a loss, in taxes and many other things, to the righteous. Nine-tenths of all crime is attributed to drink. Liquor fills our jails and hospitals with large cost to the innocent.

V. 24-30. The Result. "As fire devoureth the stubble." A familiar figure of the chaff and dry grass sinking in flames. This was to follow as a result of despising the word of God. * * * "Nations . . . shall come with speed." (V. 26). Such is the power of the Almighty, that heathen kings are brought to scourge the nation that sinned. As to its fulfillment, many of the points correspond to the captivity of the Hebrews by the Chaldeans; some to the final destruction of the Jewish state by the Romans. Matt. 24. * * * "Their roaring shall be like a lion." (V. 29) A terrible cry shall come from their lips. * * * "Behold darkness and sorrow." A picture of despair as the light and hope of heaven are darkened and gloom and distress overcome the despisers of God.

The following from ex-President Harrison's address, as honorary president of the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, which met in New York last spring:

"The men who, like Paul, have gone to heathen lands with the message, 'we seek not yours, but you,' have been hindered by those who coming after have reversed the message. Rum and other corrupting agencies come in with our boasted civilization, and the feeble races wither before the hot breath of the white man's vices."

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

HIS text sets up a cry against drinking wine and at once sweeps away all wine suppers and declares that the appetite fed by wine is dangerous. The great majority of people believe this. This afternoon I went to the polls and voted straight against the liquor traffic, but my ballot will only be a trifle by the side of a few others when the announcement is made in the morning papers. A great majority of people believe that the saloon is wrong, but this majority is divided into so many conscientious methods of fighting that the minority rules the country. We cannot say that because this man does not approve of my method, he is not opposed to my enemy. Perhaps he is as bitter against the liquor traffic, which is our common enemy, as I am, and may be more so, but his method of attack differs. There is no question regarding the strong current against the saloon. It does exist from one end of our land to the other, but the real question is the combining of the opposition. The methods of attack now are too antagonistic to each other, while the liquor interest remains a solid unit. That a united sentiment would overthrow the liquor traffic is generally acknowledged. It may be that some better method than exists now must be presented. Many have gotten discouraged with playing at battle, but whatever we may think, everywhere you will find myriads of tongues leaping out of prisons, asylums, dens of poverty, broken hearts, and all sending forth one cry, and that cry is: "The wine cup made us." There is not a sadder history and the depth of that sorrow is beyond measurement. It covers the nation like an ocean and smothers our vines of purity and beauty until the blossoms lie stained and buried throughout the land.

Our Father, have mercy upon us and help us to see that which is best in our national problems. Amen.

FOLLOWS THE FLAG.

One thing definitely settled is that beer follows the flag—no matter whether the constitution does or not—and thus we civilize the heathen. Julius Engle, the head of a big St. Louis brewery, says:

"We brewers are mighty friendly to the idea of imperialism. It has opened up a new and excellent field to us, and we have not been slow to take advantage of it. The natives of the Philippines, Cuba and Porto Rico, as well as the Chinese, have taken very kindly to American beer, which is an entirely new beverage to them. Our company is shipping hundreds of casks of bottled beer to Manila right along. Last week we filled an order for 10,000 cases and we have had single orders as high as 20,000 cases. I do not believe that a great deal of this is consumed by the soldiers or other Americans in the island, for I am informed that it is nearly all used by the natives. Our shipments to Cuba and Porto Rico are also very large, and are constantly increasing, but they are not as good markets as the Philippines. We are not kicking at all about expansion."

It will be observed that our export trade is growing.—Illinois State Register.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

SHOWING GRATITUDE.Topic Nov. 24; Ref. Isa. 25: 1-9. (A Thanksgiving Service.)*

THANKSGIVING sounds the anthem of praise all through the prophets and the Psalms. In the midst of the desolations of war and the lamentations over the captivity of Israel, the seers and singers among God's chosen people break forth into exultations of joy and thanksgiving. Nothing is more remarkable than this which marks the Hebrew writings. The inspiration of the Spirit of God can alone account for it. It is one of the distinctive peculiarities of the Bible. Other books there are full of the dramatic interests of human history, but none so full of praise, strangely mingled with pathos, as this. Gratitude and the expression of thanksgiving are matters of habit, as all attributes of human thought and activity. We need to cultivate this faculty, as we cultivate the habits of business, social, political and domestic life. Many professed Christians, conscientious and sincere, fail in the expression of their religious aspirations and experiences for the fear they have of formality. In our modern religious life, with its almost entire absence of ritual, or of the ceremonial, we are in serious danger of going to an extreme, and failing of any worthy expression of our spiritual emotions. This means spiritual starvation in the atrophy of our diviner faculties. For it is true in mental and spiritual things, as in physical well-being, that the unused faculty finally fails absolutely, or becomes so dormant that nothing short of some great personal calamity or overwhelming spiritual revival can shake us out of our lethargy. So it happens that many members of the Church never are known to pray, in public, or around the family altar. Yet some of them are true-hearted and otherwise loyal and devoted disciples of Christ. They simply have not formed the habit of prayer, or, fearful of falling into mere formality, they have gradually ceased to pray openly.

Habit of Thanksgiving.

The Fear of Formality.

is one of the finer instincts of the spiritual life. And yet prayerlessness, the neglect of the Lord's Table, and ingratitude, and failure to give expression to our religious aspirations, are much more to be dreaded. The habit of doing every day the simple duties of the household, or the larger duties of social and business life, is what makes existence possible or endurable, not to say profitable and happy. And this habit of thanksgiving, of prayer, of praise, of spiritual helpfulness and hopefulness, is not less important in our religious life. Without it, development in real spiritual living is hardly possible. Thanksgiving is the leaven of love working out in activity, and speaking and singing out of the abundance of the heart. Let us cultivate the habit of thanksgiving that the comely old fashion of praise may not become another of the lost arts, along with reverence for sacred things and holy days, and regard for age, and due veneration for what is noblest and best in our institutions and constitutions of religious and political freedom. And may the present Thanksgiving season deepen and make tender our regard for the things of supremest worth to all our people.

STRAY THOUGHTS ON TEMPERANCE.

Of our efforts to control the rum power, Judge Pollock says of the prohibition states, "At least public opinion is not debauched."

A liberal brewer once built a church at his sole expense; but the stone-engraver cut the stone which was to immortalize the brewer's name with, "Built by—— at his soul's expense."

Plutarch says, "One drunkard begets another"; and Aristotle, "Drunken women bring forth children like unto themselves." A report was made to the legislature of Massachusetts, I think by Dr. Howe, on idiocy. He had learned the habits of the parents of 300 idiots, and 145, nearly half, are reported as known to be habitual drunkards, showing the enfeebled constitution of the children of drunkards.

The following words are from a recent deliverance of the grand jury of Chicago:

"The members of this body are not Puritans. We recognize the necessities of a large city and the limitations of existing statutes. But the fact that at least ninety per cent of all criminal cases coming before this body have had some saloon connection, direct or indirect, convinces us that the interest of public morals will be subserved by a strict enforcement of existing ordinances governing the conduct of saloons."

Of 700 ten-dollar marked bills paid on a Saturday night by a Massachusetts manufactory to its hands, 400 by the following Tuesday were deposited in the bank by the saloon-keepers. This means that the saloons are robbing the laborer's family of four-sevenths of their living. Remove the drink curse—saloon—and the families of our laboring men would be elevated 400 per cent. The worst enemy labor has is the saloon.

The chief objection to the canteen is that it keeps under a man's very nose the opportunity to drink. If he is a man who drinks seldom it tempts him constantly to become immoderate. The saloon near by (there is no reason why it should be allowed near by under military rule) can be avoided, but the saloon that is in the barrack room or in the same building cannot. To the man who is struggling against temptation and trying to overcome his appetite, the smell of liquor, the presence of the bar, at times separated only by a thin partition from his sleeping room, constitutes an almost insuperable obstacle to a victory.

The late Lord Morris, the witty Irish judge, did not gain a very favorable impression of the House of Lords when he made his first speech there. When asked how he had got on he replied: "Well, I made wan mistake. I should have practiced spakin' to a lot of grave-stones before I addressed their lordships."

"Mamma, Johnny is such a mugwump that I don't want to sleep with him any more." "A mugwump?" "Yes, mamma. Didn't you tell me that a mugwump was some one who would not take either side? And that's the way with Johnny. He wants to sleep in the middle of the bed."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE HOME

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter IV.—Continued.

"What would you tell him, dear?"

"Oh, everything. But he knows how I never cry, how I am always happy now, how I have got you, doesn't he, Nell? God has told him long before this, hasn't he?"

I answered that since God was love, I thought this must be so.

After a short reflection, and rather sadly: "Still, I think father would like the letter, too, you know, because that would come straight from me—myself."

Now, it chanced that in the dear old by-gone days, Allan, being an orphan and absolutely without relations in the world, had been in the habit of spending his holidays with me in this same place, Crown Farm Court, where now his little son was with me in his stead. And nothing pleased that same son better than to listen as I told of the memories with which the air around was laden, and pointed out the various objects to which those memories attached themselves. I watched his blue eyes shine, his white cheeks fire and his hands clap together for joy, when I told of something of his father's doing which had beaten the ordinary record hollow, and—wondered how I had lived so long without him.

I got a pony cart and a wee pony for him, and we used to drive out together for hours at a time. The people on the estate and in the village soon got to look for his daily coming, as I am well sure they would never have looked for mine had I come alone. From his voice, his smile, his little touch, his every movement and gesture, emanated the subtle essence, the spirit of love. Though at five years of age initiated into all the woes of a life in which love was frozen out, yet an entire child of love he had remained.

Of course, I drew round his tiny life a thick, strong hedge of love through which no faint breath of the cold outer winds of unkindness could pierce, and I think there is no doubt that to a great extent our lives catch the colors of their environment and flash them back on the world about us; yet, also, and beyond this, the inward flame, the very heart of love, was my little boy's.

Though the chief adoration of his being was given to his father and to his father's memory, and after that, I think I may say, to me; yet for all the world beside, from prince to peasant downward, from the stars in the sky to the sheep in the meadow, he looked at all through the sunny spectacles of love.

To be able to put any trifling pleasure in the way of those in pain was his idea of supremest happiness. When we discovered that the blacksmith had a little son crippled from his birth, and we managed occasionally to hoist him up into our cart and take him for a long spin through the green, earth-scented lanes, and show him things charming and unknown of the woodland and the moorland; when we saw a small boy by the roadside sobbing his heart out over the bits of a broken slate that another big bully of a boy had dashed out of his hands for sport, and when we brought him a new one, better and brighter than the old one in every way; when we found a lost, lame little Skye dog one day on the highway, and took it home and healed it and kept it with us always—the quiet ecstasy that shone in my darling's face at the delight of doing and originating such simple deeds of love—well, I set it down as one of the best things my eyes have ever looked on.

Now, the housekeeper at Crown Farm Court was a dear old lady of the name of Barbara. She had been in the family from time immemorial—that is to say, at least, that no one remembered a time when she was not there. She had seen my father brought home stark and stiff on a stretcher from the hunting-field; she had nursed me from my birth two months after that sad event; she had tended my mother, day and night, through all her long illness; and ever since, she, alone, of females had held the reins of government at the old home.

Her devotion to Waldo was almost pathetic in its intensity, and he in return had a special love for her, in that she was one of the very elect few who could talk to him of "Father". When I was busy in my study writing or attending to the affairs of my estate, and looking round in the midst of my work for my little boy, found him not, I knew always where to seek him. In Barbara's pleasant sitting-room, whilst she at her spinning-wheel wove the flaxen threads into linen that we only know of now in dreams, there he had his especial couch, and on it he would lie and listen to all her tales of "Master Allan" and the jokes which that young gentleman, together with his chum, had perpetrated. Barbara, too, was saturated with old-world lore and romance, and many a happy tea and strawberry feast did Waldo and I have with her in her cozy room, where the windows looked on to the rose-garden with the ancient fountain and the sundial in its midst, listening as she told the stories of a past which the march of something called Progress is fast crowding out of the remembrance of today.

Moreover, owing to good Barbara's ceaseless care, I was happy in the knowledge that my darling did not want any of those small attentions which it is within the province of a tender woman only to bestow. A black servant whom I had brought with me from the East, and the coachman, Bennett, who, as under groom, had also had the prime distinction of knowing and worshipping "Master Allan" in the old days, all vied with one another as to who could best please and serve his little boy. Accepting, in his sweet patrician way, all their services as his due, he at the same time threw himself gladly into the simple delights of their cheery company, and walked and talked with them as with dearest friends. Whilst as for them—I do not speak extravagantly, for I know them well—they would at any moment have freely given their lives for him had they been called upon to do so.

We got up a cricket eleven among the village boys; we leveled off a smart neat bowling-green from a field at the end of the park; we enrolled ourselves into a club and gave magnificent house-teas and suppers; the utmost good feeling and esprit de corps prevailed—my boy threw all the eagerness of his heart into the thing. And now, how often I see him, lying back in the little cart in which we used to wheel him across the fields, watching the boys at their games, clapping his tiny brown hands ecstatically at any special score that broke the average record, and calling out across the meadow:

"Played, Johnnie Parker! Played indeed!"
(To be continued.)

Wanted--An Answer.

By Liberty Hayward.

HOW can a woman make home happy when she has a drunken husband?" That was the question, and fifty-three mothers were gathered to face it—fifty-three, and nineteen held their babies in their arms. They lived their lives in that one ward of their city, where the "public good requires" the establishment of ninety-six saloons. At least, such is the theory; for be it known that, in regard to the number of saloons in any locality, the statutes of Illinois declare that "so many dram-shops as the public good requires" may be licensed—not more.

In this one crowded ward, where workmen live close to factories and shops and railroads, the official guardians of the "public good" have ordained ninety-six as the beneficent number. One church there is, one little church—the mission. It is a mission always open. By day or by night the minister and the minister's wife are always to be found there, within reach of the people. In faith and hope and love they live Christ in the midst of misery and evil, and from their living the people learn all that is real to them of God.

Neat, shabby Mrs. Morron was the first to speak. She told an old, true story:

"When Jim first took me to the little house his savings had bought, we were so happy! It seemed so sweet to be loved and taken care of—I thought I knew what heaven was like. I had been an orphan, and, before I was married, never knew what 'home' meant. Three rooms we had—our pretty bedroom, with its white curtains, and the shams and spread I pieced myself. Our little kitchen had a shiny stove, and I got up good meals—on time, too. There was always a bright fire and a clean floor, and it was as pleasant a room as any man could want to set down in of an evenin'. Jim wasn't what you'd call a drinkin' man then. He only took it special times—'lections, Fourth o' July, and such times. But it growed on him. I did my honest best, askin' God for help, but—all a woman can be and do ain't no match for the saloon when a man hankers for liquor. He didn't bring his wages home so reg'lar, sometimes not at all. Meals weren't so good then—how could they be? Nothin' to get meals with! Our clothes gave out. Jim's doin's was hard on the furniture. Rent wasn't paid, and we was put out. Over and over we moved, always to a worse place. Babies come fast—four in six years—and I was so busy keepin' 'em out of his way when he was ugly I didn't have much time to think about Jim. Home wasn't a place any more a man'd care to come home to, nor to set down in. I had to take in washin's, and the rooms was thick with steam and suds. The tubs leaked, and the floor was all slop. It was smoky, too. The stove never drewed after the day Jim kicked it down, and I couldn't get another. Do you think I was contented and cheerful and happy? What woman could be? He'd want my money, and, when I wouldn't let him have it, he'd jaw back. There was worse than jawin', too. I could stand a good deal myself, but it was more than I could stand to see the children hurt. When he got into trouble, and was sent up for ten years, I thought I was glad at first. When he was 'round the children always had to hide or stay outdoors till he was asleep.

"If you could see my place now! It looks nice again. I've got three clean rooms and washin's bring enough to feed the children good meals. Often, when we set around the fire, they with their papers and me with my mendin', they say how glad they are he's away! They beg me never to let him come back when he's let out. But I can't help hopin' there's better days ahead for him and me and all of us together some time. He'll be used to doin' without whisky when his time's up, and God knows I'll do my best to help him. He's the children's father yet, and my husband, and you that didn't know Jim don't know how good he was when he didn't have whisky in him."

A thrill of sympathy quivered through the room. Every face there told a story. Yet the stories were not to be spoken. Faith had died out in the hearts of these women, hope had been done to a cruel death, but love still lived, and kept them loyally silent concerning the sins of the husbands who were such "good men when they didn't have whisky in them."

Pretty Mary McFarland had never been known to speaking in meeting, and the room rustled as she rose.

"I want you all to pray that God'll help my John and me. John drank when he was a boy, but, when he wanted to marry me, that couldn't be, I said, unless he would give up the drinking. I've seen all that my mother went through with with my father. So John promised, and he kept his promise. When at last we was married he hadn't touched a drop for two whole years. After that it was two years more and I had no fears. Then he had the shakes, and run down till he was weak as a baby. Two medicines the doctor gave him—a powder and a tonic. The tonic was put up in whisky, but that I didn't know then. Pretty soon I noticed that, while John often forgot his powder, he always remembered to take the tonic. He took it oftener and bigger doses. He got the bottle refilled, and pretty soon filled again—quicker yet. It was soon empty, and then, O Lord!"—Mary's girlish voice broke—"next thing he was at the saloon, and came home—he's been coming home that way often since—and my heart's breaking. Tell me, what can I do?"

The eyes of the mission mothers looked on each other, not at Mary. Their deep experience left them no word of hope to utter.

Joe Edmunds' wife got up. "You all know I had Joe put in the workhouse last week. Some of you blame me. You've stood more'n I have, you think. But I had to do it—on account o' Libbie. Some way, Joe's always had an awful spite against Libbie. From the time she was a little thing I always had to keep her out o' his way. And Libbie never would take nothin' from her father; she hated him. She come from Sunday-school one time and asked me where God lived. 'In heaven,' I told her. 'Then I don't want to go there,' she says, 'cause father'll be there.' She'd learned 'Our Father which are in heaven,' and she thought it meant her father. What he did to Libbie I can't tell you. Some things I can stand, some things I can't. I've carried black eyes for him many a time, and for six weeks, one spell, I couldn't wash; he'd put my shoulder out o' place. When he hurt Libbie, 'You'll go to the workhouse, Joe, for this,' I told him. He laughed in my face, and dared me to do it. It broke my heart, but I sent for the officers. When they took him off he swore he'd kill me when he got out. But he was drunk then. He'll be sober after six months, and I ain't afraid of him when he's sober. Maybe it wasn't right for me to send my husband there; he'd never have done it if he'd been himself."

A stranger was at the mission that day—a shabby, thin woman with a tearing cough. During a lull her weak voice quavered through the room:

"I've never been here before. I haven't been long in the neighborhood, but my trouble's the same as yours, and when I heard about this meeting I wanted to come. He has education, my husband, and had fine positions. But always he lost them, and things have grown worse and worse. I went once round to all the places where he got his drinks and told them he was a drinker and the law forbid their selling him any more. What did they do? They laughed. They told me they'd keep on selling to him just as long as he brought money to pay for his drinks. One man pointed to a paper in a frame on the wall. 'Do you know what that is?' he asked. 'That's my license. This city takes five hundred dollars of my good money for that license every year, and I get a right to sell whisky, and I'd like to see you or any other woman stop me. Get out o' here.' I went to a lawyer or two, but I had no money, and they wouldn't do anything.

"And it's goin' on," the thin voice pierced wailingly through the room. "As long as there's saloons licensed, men'll drink, and women will see their homes ruined. For as long as men drink the devil'll be let loose in 'em and women and children'll live in hell. Frank was a fine man. I used to think the good was stronger than the bad in him, and I believed that things must get better. I used to have hope. Hope's gone. I never look for anything different, not till death takes him or me. If it wasn't for my children I'd die today; but you can't die; you've got to live. You think you can't stand things, but things come, you can't get away from them, and you've got to stand them. My little children are three girls. When I look at them and think what a woman's got to go through with, I pray God I may see them in their little graves before they shall live, and live through what I have."

The ghastly question still loomed unsolved. The experience of the mission mothers gave them no wisdom with which to answer it. The love and sympathy of the minister's wife were dumb before it. "We will sing," she said, "Take it to the Lord in prayer." And afterwards, for their comfort, she read the word of the Lord that endures: "Thus saith the Lord, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears; behold, I will heal thee."

From out the mission doors went the mission mothers to their homes—homes for whose happiness they worked and longed and prayed; homes from which happiness is as remote as heaven; homes in which the misery of mothers, the bruising and starving of babies, are the realities; homes in which helpless wretchedness reigns, and will reign—for how long? how long, O Lord?

The minister's wife says, "Just so long as we name together the public good and the licensed saloon."—The Sunday School Times.

Why linger, turn away, or idly grieve?
Where else is rest—the soul's supremest need?
Grandly He offers; ; meanly we receive.
Yet love that gives us rest is love indeed.

The love that rests—say, shall it not do more?
Make haste, sad soul, thy heritage to claim.
It calms; it heals; it bears what erst ye bore,
And marks thy burdens with His own dear name.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

THE DEATH OF JOSEPH.

"So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."—Psalm 90, 12.

Monday—Genesis 50, 15-26.

HE crowning grace of Joseph is his steadfast and unconquerable love. And thus he adumbrates Jesus. Jesus is Love in its highest and richest personification.

He is Love, making a full end of my sin. He knows nothing about reservations and provisos and abatements. Beyond me in everything, he is especially beyond me in the breadth and length and depth and height of his mercy. "Methought," Rabbi Duncan said, "I heard the song of one to whom much had been forgiven, and who therefore loved much; but it was the song of the chief of sinners, of one to whom most had been forgiven, and who therefore loved most. I would know, O God, what soul that is; O God, let that soul be mine."

And he is Love, bearing and forbearing with me. Too often I treat him no better than Joseph was treated by his brethren. I think harshly of him. I suppose that he is on the outlook for the smallest ground of offense. I fear him when I should trust him. I grope in gloom when I should walk in sunshine. But patiently, perseveringly, untriflingly, he abides with me, until he has his own gracious way at last, and I am molded to his will.

O that today every cloud may be dispelled, and I may know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge.

Tuesday—Exodus 15, 17-22.

In death, as in life, Joseph is strong in faith. He is sure that God, by and by, will visit his people. He is certain that they will be led out of the land of exile into the land of promise. He would go with them, and be carried to rest in the country flowing with milk and honey. Mine be a similar persistence of faith. Let nothing damp my confidence in my Lord. Through darkness and disappointment and delay let me trust in him.

In death, Joseph clings to the companionship of the people of God. He would have his very bones repose in the good land which Jehovah has blessed, and amongst the men and women for whom Jehovah feels a special love. "Bury me in Kirkbride," the old Covenanter said, "for there's much of God's redeemed dust lies there." The longing is not wrong. May mine be a quiet resting place at last among the saints.

In death, Joseph enters the homeland. He had been a banished man for years—a prince, but still a dweller amongst aliens and strangers. Now he comes to his own kith and kin. So, if I am a disciple and a child, I am here in banishment. But, when I die, I too shall come home—home to my Father God, home to my Savior Christ, home to my spiritual sisters and brothers, home to the "country afar beyond the stars."

Wednesday—Joshua 24, 26-35.

One would hope that many of these Israelites not only honored Joseph's bones, but trusted Joseph's God.

The children are indeed blessed for the fathers' sakes, but yet God will not have mercy on me simply because I am the descendant of parents well-beloved by him. I must dig and find for myself the pearl of great price. I must seek for my own soul the heavenly grace. Redemption does not run in the blood. It does not regenerate me to plead, "I have Abraham and Israel and Joseph for my ancestors." Nay, I must myself agonize to enter in at the straight gate.

But there may be an objection of quite a different kind. Why should I follow those who have preceded me? What right have they to bend and influence my conduct? Why should I take their God to be my God? May I not be free to choose my own path? Ah, but it is the noblest life to which they call us. It means peace, prosperity, purity, power, both in this world and in the next. It is better a thousand times to be an imitator of the saints than to be self-willed in the ways of sin.

Therefore let me betake myself, as the fathers did, to the fountain of Christ's blood, and to the word of the Gospel, and to the home and the heart of God.

Thursday—Psalm 37, 27-40.

I look back across the past, and I see everywhere that God keeps his promises and shows himself mighty to save.

Sometimes it is an individual soul, oppressed with a heavy burden, breaking out with a lamentable cry. But it is reminded of one of the Lord's assurances, "I am he that blotteth out thy transgression," "I will give you rest," "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee," "The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." It leans on the comfortable word. It pleads it at the throne. Before long, the forgiveness, the help, the healing come. The heart is at peace.

Sometimes it is a company of believing men, battling against opposition, tossed with tempest. And they remember the great and precious promises, "The enemy whom thou hast seen today thou shalt see no more," "Lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee," "The Lord helpeth them and rescueth them, because they have taken refuge in him." They make mention to God of his own words, and in marvelous ways he discomfits the adversary and girds his Church with strength and beauty.

And what he did yesterday he will do today. His own stipulations and engagements have virtue to bind him still. His arm is not shortened that it cannot save.

Friday—Proverbs 4, 7-18.

"'Tis better being good than bad." The path of the righteous is as the shining light—only the path of the righteous.

Let me take even a congregation of converts just rescued from heathenism. There is the congregation in Corinth, for example, to which St. Paul wrote his Epistles. The awful hieroglyphics of debauchery and crime are everywhere. "That tall, sallow-faced Greek has wallowed in the mire of Circe's swine-pens. That low-browed Scythian slave has been a pickpocket and a jailbird. That thin-nosed, sharp-eyed Jew has been a Shylock, cutting his pound of flesh from the gilded youth of the city." They have been blessedly changed, washed and sanctified and justified. They are monuments of free grace and love. But their very faces are more degraded and sad than the faces of men and women who have been walking with God and abiding in Christ and living in the Spirit.

It is sweet to be restored after wandering. It is blessed to be lifted out of the horrible pit and the miry clay. But it is best to give the Lord heart and life from the outset, and to dwell in his house always. Thus mine will be a sedate calm, a more intelligent religion, a deeper peace, a stronger influence. The path of the just is as a shining light.

Saturday—Psalm 90, 1-12.

God is my dwelling place. I have had a part in his thoughts from all eternity. I have been the object of his love and special care. My case and need have been considered by him.

God is my dwelling place. It is only in a state of reconciliation with him that I can feel perfectly at home. It is not more true that the fish, or the bird or the flower requires the sea and the sky and the soil to which it belongs, than that my complex nature has its true life in none but God. My proper environment is not earth and time, but heaven and eternity.

God is my dwelling-place. My everlasting blessedness lies in the knowledge of him. I have not to go out of time to find an enduring home. Many people imagine that, if they were only somewhere else, anywhere else, they would be more at home. But in the midst of my fleeting days God may be my sure Refuge, my congenial Abode, my strong City. And then death will make no essential difference. It will simply bring my life more fully into his light.

Sunday—2 Peter 1, 1-11.

It is no one grace which makes a Christian. A man may have great knowledge, but if he wants charity it profits nothing. Or, if he is a man of courage, while he is not a man of godliness, he is a hero, but he is not a saint.

Nor will any number of excellencies make a Christian unless they are excellencies which are added to "faith." It is faith which rouses my dead soul into life. It is faith which joins me to the Lord Jesus Christ, and then I am inclined toward all that is good. Whatever graces sing in the choir, faith is the leader of them all.

But, where there is faith, the sole and simple requisite needed is "diligence." If I take the Gospel for my starting point, if I set out in the name and the strength of Christ, there is no ascent of temperance, of patience, of godliness, of brotherly kindness so steep but that, one day, I may find myself on the summit. With half the effort which many expend on growing rich or learned or famous, I may grow holy and devout and Christ-like and heavenly minded.

So let me see that I have vital and vitalizing faith. And let me go on supplying new zones to my spiritual fiber, new cubits to my spiritual stature.

THE MORNING HOUR.

Dean Farrar tells that his mother's habit was, every morning immediately after breakfast, to withdraw for an hour to her own room and to spend the hour in reading the Bible and other devotional books, and in meditation and prayer. From that hour, as from a pure fountain, she drew the strength and sweetness which enabled her to fulfill all her duties and to remain unruffled by the worries and pettishness which are often the intolerable trials of narrow neighborhoods. He says he never saw her temper disturbed, nor heard her speak one word of anger or calumny or idle gossip, nor saw in her any sign or any sentiment, unbecoming to a Christian soul. Her life was very strong, pure, rich and full of blessing and healing. And he says it was all due to the daily morning hour spent with God in the place of prayer.—The Morning Star.

General Church News

THE REVIVAL IN TOKYO JAPAN.

The Japan Evangelical Alliance has issued a pamphlet giving most interesting incidents of the revival in the city of Tokyo. It gives the number of churches co-operating in the union meetings in Tokyo as fifty-one: Five Methodist Episcopal, six Episcopalian, fifteen Presbyterian, six Evangelical (Evangelical Association of America), six Baptist, five Canadian Methodist, four Christian, one Independent Presbyterian, two Congregational, and one Friends. These were represented by seventy-four pastors and evangelists. Surely this is a grand instance of interdenominational comity and co-operation.

Printed matter was largely employed in the furtherance of the work: 31,000 tracts were distributed and 2,800 Testaments and Scripture portions; 27,000 song leaflets. Of this seed sowing, the far-reaching results can never be known. The number of persons reached was very large. At the preaching services and prayer meetings the count showed an attendance of 95,673, while an estimate is made for the way-side services of 10,000. The offerings for the work amounted to 1,357.01 yen. Evidently the grace of giving was not lacking. As to the converts there must always be an uncertainty in regard to the actual number. It is probable that a full enrollment would show a total of not less than 6,000 as the visible result of the meetings in this one city. Of those whose names have been given to the various churches there are 5,207.

The Evangelical Alliance feels that in this co-operative evangelical work an object lesson has been given to the world, of the essential unity of "all who by faith are united to our Lord Jesus Christ." Not Tokyo alone but almost every considerable town in the country has felt the influence of this movement. The work will shortly be renewed, there having been a brief cessation of labor on account of the heated season in Japan.

One of the specially interesting features of this revival has been the fruitage from seed sown by missionaries in years past. A converted gambler and his wife had been for twenty years or more under Christian influences, he having been a cook in the houses of missionaries, but he had given himself up to gambling and drink from morning till night and constantly ill-treated his wife and children. At a preaching service one night the divine message reached his heart. In the midst of a crowd of people he confessed his sins and prayed for forgiveness. That evening he told his wife of what he had done and she said:

"If the Christian doctrine can bring such a man as you to a change of heart, it must be a good doctrine. I think I shall go and hear it, too." She also made up her mind to obey God and harmony now exists in that home. Another convert said he heard the Christian doctrine from Dr. Hepburn forty years ago!

A member of the nobility, connected with the Railroad Bureau, was a Christian but on attending one of the evangelistic prayer meetings, was newly stirred by the love of God. Thereupon he resolved to teach the five thousand men under his control as head of the construction department of railways, the way to serve God. He carried in person to the workshops several hundred printed announcements, and distributed them. He quietly talked to these ignorant, degraded men about God. Some laughed, some reviled. Being a poor talker, he found difficulty in expressing what he wanted to say, but he prayed for help and then read to them a leaflet entitled "The True Way of Salvation." He read it three times over. He spent half of the next day in prayer and then talked again to the men. A Christian who was a good talker, came forward to help him and the two worked together. Many were brought to Christ and the good work is still going on.

Other instances might be given to show how vital is the effect produced by this awakening in Japan. That is what it is in truth, for it has alike aroused Christians and the unsaved and their faith is being daily shown by their works.

Y. M. C. A. WORK IN CLEVELAND.

To interest in Bible study those not usually reached by the usual opportunities for such work has been one of the special lines to which the Cleveland Young Men's Christian Association has devoted itself and for which it has become well known, having originated a plan of shop Bible classes which has been followed by other associations elsewhere. These classes have been particularly successful in Cleveland. In seventeen different factories, railroad shops and car barns, they are held on a fixed day each week at the noon hour, with an average attendance of fifty-six at each meeting. The men everywhere welcome the teachers cordially, though in many places a majority of the employes are Roman Catholics. All shops touched are reported to show good effect in the better faithfulness and discipline of the workmen. This fall a still broader enterprise has been started. Throughout the city an effort is being made to form men's Bible clubs of congenial spirits, meeting weekly in the homes of members. The leaders of these respective clubs are themselves to compose a club under high-grade instruction at the Association building.

Twenty-five such groups were organized at the outset of the work, and this number promises to be largely multiplied.

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERANS.

The biennial session of the general council of the Evangelical Lutheran church in North America which was held last month discussed the pressing work of home missions, the need for it being great in consequence of the continued immigration of foreign Lutherans and the rapid anglicizing of the Lutheran youth. The board reported the $12,000 debt paid and several missions self-sustaining. There are in all twenty-two missions with 2,336 communicants and an enrollment of 2,840 in the Sunday schools. The Evangelical Lutheran church comprises over 2,000 congregations and 360,000 communicants about equally divided between the English, German and Swedish languages. It sustains foreign missionary work in India and Porto Rico. In India there are five missionaries, 100 teachers and two native preachers. A hospital for women is to be erected. The work in India

KEEN COLLEGE MEN.

The Food of Harvard Brain-Workers and Athletes.

Memorial Hall at Harvard where some twelve hundred of the men eat, is particularly interesting. The dining-room is an enormous gothic hall finished in old English oak with wide, stained-glass windows on the sides. The walls are hung with portraits of illustrious graduates and benefactors of past generations.

The students have good food to eat and plenty of it. The hall is run on a co-operative plan so that it costs something less than four dollars a week for board. To this place three times a day come men, whose lives for the time being are given to serious intellectual work, and to accomplish this, they are keen enough to realize that proper food is absolutely necessary.

One is particularly struck by the yellow packages of Grape-Nuts standing on nearly every table, which the men purchase at grocery stores and bring in for their personal use. They quickly find out by practical demonstration that brain work exhausts the phosphates, and that nature demands that this loss be made up, and made up from food.

Grape-Nuts is ready to be used without cooking, it is a scientific food which nourishes and builds up the brain, and is particularly suited to the needs of students.

The Varsity athletes also eat it to keep their digestive organs in perfect working order so that they can stand the great strain of both body and head work when important contests shall come.

is to be entirely reorganized because of recent unsatisfactory conditions. There are three men at work in Porto Rico. A new board of missions is to be located at Pittsburg to have sole charge of the Porto Rican work. In educational institutions the Evangelical Lutherans have three theological seminaries, six colleges and two academies, over 2,000 students being in the colleges and 2,500 in the academies. They have seven hospitals.

"Diversity and Unity in the Christian Church," was the theme of the opening sermon by President Ranseen. He claimed that while there was often lack of uniformity in the church, there was remarkable unity. In view of past experiences owing to racial differences within the Lutheran church, such assertion was gratifying.

A chief point of interest and importance at the council was the discussion of marriage in relation to divorce. It was asserted that divorce is only legitimate when there has been infidelity to the marriage covenant by husband or wife. Only the innocent party may be remarried. A Christian minister cannot perform the ceremony in cases where there is the least doubt.

The report on Sunday school instruction took strong ground against the international lesson series because so many of the lesson helps admit the destructive higher criticism. The graded system in the Lutheran Sunday schools has been very fully developed and its success has been phenomenal. About twenty grade text books for teachers and pupils are issued. Other improvements are to be introduced.

The council considered itself greatly honored by a visit from Bishop von Scheele, a distinguished prelate from the established church of Sweden, who came as the personal representative of King Oscar. A committee of five was appointed to meet a similar committee from the General Synod Lutheran churches in consultation over plans for co-operation between the two wings. It was expressly provided, however, that the committees should not consider organic union.

A PRESBYTERIAN JUBILEE IN WISCONSIN.

The fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Synod of Wisconsin was celebrated at the annual meeting at Hudson in October. When this synod was organized in 1851 there were no less than thirty Presbyterian churches represented and as many mission stations. Twenty-nine ministers and 988 families were in connection with the old school synod. The missionary labors of those days were spoken of in the addresses made by Rev. Samuel Brown, Rev. Bradley Phillips and others. Sketches of the work done in the various presbyteries were given, and of the rise and progress of women's missionary work. The statistics showed that while there has been an immense growth in population, the Presbyterian church, through its missionaries and Christian workers, has reached out into almost every community, and the churches and mission stations have increased and enlarged in larger proportion than the population. Now in a state as large as all of the New England states together and with a population of 2,100,000 there are 174 Presbyterian ministers, licentiates and missionaries, 175 churches and as many mission stations, 16,000 communicants and 21,000 in Sabbath schools.

At the regular session addresses were made urging prosecution of the work among the foreigners in Wisconsin, especially in the large cities. To work for the better observance of Sunday and for temperance was urged on pastors. The report on Sunday school work showed forty-three schools organized during the year, twenty-nine reorganized, seven church edifices built, and two churches organized. About $6,000 is needed for this work.

The women's societies have contributed $1,687.36 for the mission work, the Sabbath schools $98.10, the Christian Endeavor societies $451.08, making a total of $2,236.54. Boxes valued a $570 have been sent to missionaries, $3,363.42 has been sent to the women's board of the Northwest; and $600 pledged for work among the freedmen has been raised and sent.

NEBRASKA CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

The forty-fifth annual session emphasized the subject of benevolences. A constitutional amendment was adopted, providing for a standing committee on this work. Various object lessons presented by Rev. F. F. Lewis showed the good results in this line from denominational rallies. Rev. R. T. Cross, the retiring moderator, gave in an effective way the reasons for enlarging the list of givers and increasing the amounts contributed. Christian educational interests were strongly presented by Rev. A. E. Ricker. Rev. F. W. Leavitt and President H. K. Warren of Yankton college.

The Nebraska Home missionary work is developing well. It has been a year of progress in church organization, church building and other activities. Emphasis was placed on the fact that all the churches organized during the year were in communities unreached by other religious influences. Attention was called to the record of the Nebraska Congregational churches, during the last decade, that whereas the population of the state had only increased about one per cent, the number of churches had increased thirteen per cent, and the membership fifty per cent.

The Sunday school was not overlooked, or the Endeavor society. Helpful addresses were made in the interests of both. The popular evening meetings brought a crowded house to hear Dr. Ament of China, Rev. Geo. F. Clark, a negro, who told of the progress of his people, Miss Prof. Margaret A. Tompson of Doane college, who spoke on "Literature in the Development of Character," and Rev. T. C. Hunt.

PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD OF CALIFORNIA.

This year's session was held at Napa, Cal., in the church which has had Rev. Richard Wylie as its pastor for thirty-three years. A helpful and inspiring sermon from Rev. James Mitchell, the retiring moderator, was a good preface to a good meeting. Judge John K. Law of Merced, was chosen as next moderator.

A source of special satisfaction was the improvement in the financial af-

CLERGYMAN'S CHILDREN.

Coffee Being Replaced by Postum Food Coffee.

"I am the wife of a minister. About three years ago a warm friend, an exemplary mother and the conscientious wife of a minister, asked me if I had ever tried giving up coffee and using the Postum Food Coffee. I had been telling her of my excessive nervousness and ill health. She said: 'We drink nothing else for breakfast but Postum Food Coffee, and it is a delight and a comfort to have something that we do not have to refuse the children when they ask for it.'

"I was surprised that she would permit the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she explained that it was a most healthful beverage and that the children thrived on it. A very little thought convinced me that for brain-work, one should not rely upon a stimulant such as coffee is, but should have food and the very best of food.

"My first trial of Postum was a failure. The maid of all work brought it to the table, lukewarm, weak, and altogether lacking in character. We were in despair, but decided on one more trial. At the second trial, we faithfully followed the directions, used four teaspoonsful to the pint of water, let it boil fifteen minutes after the real boiling began, and served it with rich cream. It was delicious and we were all won.

"I have since sung the praises of Postum Food Coffee on many, many occasions and have induced numbers of friends to abandon coffee and use Postum, with remarkable results. The wife of a college professor said to me a short time ago that nothing had ever produced so marked a change in her husband's health as the leaving off of coffee and the use of Postum Food Coffee." Edith Smith Davis, Appleton, Wis.

fairs of the seminary, largely through the generous spirit of the faculty and also by additional income from invested funds. The singing of the doxology expressed the rejoicing of the synod. Dr. Thos. Marshall, field secretary of the Board of Foreign missions, made an able address and also spoke at the popular missionary meeting Friday evening. Rev. Arthur Hicks, synodical missionary for Sunday school work, is reported to have given the gathering such a recital of pioneer work in the lumber camps and oil fields of California and Nevada as would furnish a good chapter in "Black Rock." Dr. Noble of Redlands and Dr. Walker of Los Angeles, gave effective addresses. Two synodical missionaries are to be appointed for labor in the northern and southern divisions of the state respectively. A memorial service was held for those who have passed beyond, and a sacramental service on Saturday morning, and were both uplifting and helpful. The synod emphasized the practical and devotional elements.

COLORADO CONGREGATIONALISTS.

"The Field is the World," was the large and inspiring topic which gave tone to the thirty-third annual meeting of the General Association of Colorado Congregationalists, which met in the Third church, Denver. Among the speakers were Rev. Henry Fairbank and Mrs. Fairbank of the Marathi mission, India, Rev. L. P. and Mrs. Broad, Home missionary superintendents in Kansas. Rev. R. W. Gammon gave a bright paper on "The Gospel for Our Times," and F. I. Wilsea one on "Why Men Do Not Attend Church."

The work of the year showed up well. Beside revivals in several churches, nine new churches had been organized, sixteen new Sunday schools had made their appearance, two edifices had been repaired, four parsonages built, and two new associations, the Eastern and the Northwestern, had been formed.

The Christian Endeavor society and Colorado college brought out several good speeches, many of which were impromptu. A score or two of students in the college ten years ago has increased to 500 or 600 pupils today.

A symposium on "The Pastor" was of much interest. Dr. Gregg gave a view of Phillips Brooks as a preacher that was inspiring. Mr. L. D. Wishard spoke on "Our Congregational Enterprises," Rev. Geo. V. Clark on the work in the South; "1901 and 1902 in our Colorado Churches," was the last topic and a consecration service led by Evangelist Veazie closed the session.

THANKSGIVING DAY EXCURSIONS

On all trains of the Nickel Plate Road, on November 27th and 28th, to points within 150 miles and good returning November 29th, 1901. Chicago Depot, Van Buren St., near Clark St., on the Elevated Loop. City Ticket Office, 111 Adams St. Also union ticket office, Auditorium Annex. 'Phone 2057 Central.

SOUTH DAKOTA PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

Thirty-seven ministers and twelve elders besides a large company of missionary women increased the attendance fifty per cent over that of last year. Home missions was a prominent topic. The secretary of the board, Dr. Thompson, made an impressive and timely address. He spoke also to the women, the children and the young people in their respective meetings. Home mission work in this synod includes preaching the Gospel in Dakota, German, Bohemian and Holland, as well as in English, and occasionally in the Scandinavian tongue.

Foreign missions was given place at a popular meeting Sunday evening when Rev. Dr. Halsey gave a telling address.

This year has the best annual record the synod has yet made in behalf of Foreign missions. It now has three missionaries in the foreign field, one in Persia and two in Korea. Friday evening was devoted to the interests of Christian education as embodied in the college at Huron, President French presiding. Able and telling addresses were given by Professors Corbett and Gage. The student enrollment at that date was sixty per cent more than ever before at the corresponding date.

Saturday evening was devoted to Sunday school work and the young people. There has been unusual activity in church erection during the year, five new houses of worship and six new manses having been built. Others are in progress of erection. The communion season Sunday afternoon emphasized the spiritual tone of the session.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY.

Bishop McCabe has offered to contribute the first and last $1,000 towards raising the indebtedness of $20,000 on Emmanuel Methodist Episcopal church, Evanston.

Hyde Park Baptist church will soon begin the erection of a new stone church to seat 1,000. The cost will be $65,000. It will be completed according to the full design, as money is in hand for it.

The twenty-first annual council of the Chicago Synod of the Reformed Episcopal church approved of what is called the Peoria plan of raising funds for the maintenance of their mission school in India. Groups of six persons are formed, each of whom pledges ten cents a week, the group thus undertaking the support of a native child in the Bombay institution.

The Monroe Street Church of Christ,

IS IT AN EPIDEMIC?

Vital Statistics Show an Alarming Increase in an Already Prevailing Disease — Are Any Exempt?

At no time in the history of disease has there been such an alarming increase in the number of cases of any particular malady as in that of kidney and bladder troubles now preying upon the people of this country.

Today we see a relative, a friend or an acquaintance apparently well, and in a few days we may be grieved to learn of their serious illness or sudden death, caused by that fatal type of kidney trouble—Bright's disease.

Kidney trouble often becomes advanced into acute stages before the afflicted is aware of its presence; that is why we read of so many sudden deaths of prominent business and professional men, physicians and others. They have neglected to stop the leak in time.

While scientists are puzzling their brains to find out the cause, each individual can, by a little precaution, avoid the chances of contracting dreaded and dangerous kidney trouble, or eradicate it completely from their system if already afflicted. Many precious lives might have been, and many more can yet be saved, by paying attention to the kidneys.

It is the mission of the Christian Century to benefit its readers at every opportunity and therefore we advise all who have any symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble to write today to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the celebrated specific which is having such a great demand and remarkable success in the cure of the most distressing kidney and bladder troubles. With the sample bottle of Swamp-Root will also be sent free a pamphlet and treatise of valuable information.

which dedicated its new building November 7, has made a successful struggle for several years under the pastoral leading of Rev. Chas. Clayton Morrison, who took charge in 1898. At that time the membership was 121, there was a debt on the property of $12,000, a current expense deficit of $600, and a small, ill-arranged basement church building. Now the membership is 240, the debt has been reduced to $3,500, and a new edifice has been built costing $23,000, on which $8,000 has been borrowed. On the day of dedication $7,000 was raised to complete payments. The pastor preached in the morning, and in the evening the service was interdenominational, Rev. Dr. Gunsaulus preaching to a crowded house.

The work and labor of love of Rev. Dr. James Tompkins among the Congregational Home missionary churches of the state was fittingly recognized recently by the presentation from the pastors and churches of the Southern association of an Oxford bag of fine alligator skin.

The Congregational Ministers' Union held an all-day meeting for prayer and conference October 28. "What Manner of Persons Ought We to Be?" was the topic treated by President H. George, D. D., "Communion with the Father," by Rev. J. A. Milburn, D. D.; "Walking in the Spirit," by Rev. Dr. Bushnell, and "The Power of the Word," by President C. A. Blanchard, D. D.

Chicago Theological seminary (Congregational) will open its school for lay workers November 1. Courses are offered in the English Bible, in music and expression, in general church history, missions, evangelism, organization and conduct of Sunday schools, Endeavor and missionary societies, practical methods of Christian work, house-to-house visitation, nursing and physical culture.

Morgan Park (Baptist) academy has an enrollment this year of 159, an increase of twenty-five per cent. Seventeen states and two foreign countries are represented.

Mr. S. B. Lingle, who held large mortgages on the property of the Baptist Bohemian church, has canceled the debt in full and the Baptist city mission holds a clear title to the property.

A farewell gathering for Rev. W. W. Dewey, who has been pastor of Bethany Baptist church since March, 1896, was held October 27. Ten new members were received and seven baptized. Many others have expressed a desire to become Christians. Addresses were made by several ministers and a gift of money was presented to Mr. Dewey. The church has called to the pastorate Rev. S. J. Winegar of Sioux City, Ia.

The West Pullman church of the Disciples has enlarged its facilities by the completion of the basement of the church. The Sunday school has increased until it is one of the most interesting of all the Disciples' mission work in the city.

At Auburn Park Baptist church November 3 was a special evangelistic day. Rev. E. A. Stone preached and conducted meetings. The day was one of great blessing, some fifteen or twenty young people deciding for Christ. Rev. W. A. Waldo, Ph. D., received seven persons into the church and baptized three.

At the Second Baptist church a class for Bible study has been conducted on Sunday afternoons for the last four weeks by Mr. F. J. Gurney of the University of Chicago.

At the meeting of the Presbyterian Social Union referred to in our last issue, Professor Robinson urged the extension and strengthening of the city mission work, $105,000 is immediately needed to put on sound basis the mission enterprises which the Chicago presbytery already has under way. If eight new fields already explored were en-

George Darsie and The Praise Hymnal

"I regard THE PRAISE HYMNAL, just issued by the Fillmore Bros., of Cincinnati, an admirable song book for our churches:

1. "It seems just right in size and shape.
2. "Its type is large, clear and beautiful.
3. "It has many of the old classic hymns and tunes which have stood the test of time.
4. "It has a large number of new and fresh hymns and tunes, representing the most popular that have come into recent use, and others which now see the light for the first time—a considerable proportion of which, in my judgment, are destined to become favorites.
5. "Some of its hymns that are inferior, and the rushing "hippety-hop" tunes coupled with them, I should have omitted, but then I am a little "cranky" on that point, and besides the blemish is small, for there are not many of them.
6. "I am struck by the absence of "useless lumber," so common in hymnals, and believe a larger percentage of these hymns are singable than is usual.
7. "The 60 odd pages of Psalms and other Scriptures at the beginning, designed to promote responsive readings in the worship of our churches, is one of the best features of the book.

GEORGE DARSIE."

Frankfort, Ky.

AS TO PRICES.—The contents of THE PRAISE HYMNAL are of a permanent quality. It is false economy to ask for cheap binding. We make a cloth bound book with leather back that will last ten years with any sort of care. The price is as low as can be made on its superior material and workmanship, $75.00 per 100 copies. Specimen copies sent on approval.

FILLMORE BROS.,

119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O.
40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

P. S.—Our Christmas Music is now ready. Send for List.

(3)

tered $165,000 would be required. Dr. Pleasant Hunter of the Second Presbyterian church did not believe that the ministry of the church would ever reach the masses; the laity must be made an evangelizing force. Dr. Cleland B. McAfee of the Forty-first Street church agreed that the average minister had no practical understanding of real sociology and lamented the fact.

The forty-ninth semi-annual meeting of the Chicago Association of Congregational churches met November 5 in the North Congregational church, Englewood, Mr. Wm. Spooner, of Oak Park, being moderator. The topics discussed were "The Betterment of Chicago Through the Church"—civilly, religiously, socially—Rev. Messrs. De Long, Guild and Beaton were the appointed speakers on this; "The Sunday School—Its Chief Need," treated by Rev. Messrs. G. C. Williams, Burhans and D. M. Lewis; "Does the Twentieth Century Need the Gospel of the First Century?"—Rev. Messrs. R. W. Rogers, Clifton and Bartlett. There were addresses by Prof. Thos. C. Chamberlin of the University of Chicago, Dr. James Tompkins, and Rev. John H. Wilson. The communion service was held in the afternoon.

Evangelistic meetings began last Sunday in the Fifty-second Avenue Presbyterian church. Rev. Dr. Safford will be assisted by Rev. Messrs. S. M. Campbell, S. M. Johnson, A. A. Pfantstiehl and W. W. Johnstone. Everything in the parish work is encouraging, and the time seems ripe for a deep spiritual movement.

The Roseland Presbyterian church has purchased and paid for lots on the corner of State and 112th streets as a site for a new edifice. Work will begin this month. The membership has grown to 185.

Bishop Merrill conducted the service of the corner-stone laying for the Evanston Avenue Methodist Episcopal church, October 28. Supper was afterwards served and several addresses were made.

Baptist.

The First Baptist church, Minneapolis, has disbanded its Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor in order to take up a new mission work downtown in Century hall. A Sunday school of 150 has been organized there.

The Third Baptist church of St. Louis, Mo., has undertaken the support of Rev. E. H. East, M. D., who is under appointment to the work at Haka, Burma.

Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, celebrated its jubilee of fifty years' history, October 16. No one of the original forty-four who organized the church was present at the banquet, but eleven of those who joined before 1860 were guests of honor. Mr. John D. Rockefeller led in the reminiscences. He was a boy of fifteen when baptized in 1854. Receiving only $16 a month and boarding himself, he was taught to pay for his pew and to give stately to missions.

The First church of Los Angeles, Rev. Joseph Smale, pastor, has reached a membership of 970. This is without doubt the strongest Baptist church on the Pacific coast.

The dedication of Calvary church, Omaha, October 20, free of debt, was the outcome of many instances of self-denial. One young lady stenographer has given $225. One man, a day laborer, with a family of ten to support, and a salary of only $50 a month, has given $100. These are typical of many others, indicating the spirit of co-operation under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Thos. Anderson. The church is located among the middle classes of the city, and with this new and commodious edifice will be able to do the most practical work possible.

Open-air meetings were held throughout the summer on Saturday evenings in the heart of the Polish district in Buffalo. Rev. J. H. Miller of Reid Memorial church is assisted by the Polish pastor, Rev. Joseph Antoszewski.

The Eastern Avenue church, Joliet, has received 300 new members by baptism since Dr. O'Dell became pastor in 1897. The church is now free of debt.

The Chinese work in Oakland and San Francisco is being greatly prospered. A beautiful building has been erected in Oakland, well adapted for its use among this people. The Sunday school in San Francisco has an attendance of sixty. The day school numbers ninety.

Two new buildings have been erected for the West side work of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church, New York. One of them is a large settlement house on West Fiftieth street near Tenth avenue. It has five stories and a basement and is as complete in equipment for institutional work as possible. The other building is a new one for Armistage chapel, in the same neighborhood, and while the Fifth Avenue Baptist church conducts the work at both points, they are to be kept distinct. In the Settlement house, says Mr. A. A. Hill, the head worker, "there will be no attempt to thrust religion on those desiring other features. The belief of those in charge is that each person has to settle his religious connections in the light of his own conscience and conviction. However, it is equally their conviction that no life is complete without religion, and consequently they have the chapel, where those desiring to attend religious services can do so. . . . The settlement does not exist as a feeder to the chapel, nor the chapel to the settlement."

At the fourteenth annual convention of Western Washington the reports showed a very encouraging state of affairs. In 1899 twenty-eight missionaries were under appointment, and $8,168.93 expended; in 1900 there were thirty-two missionaries, and $9,583.68; in 1901, there were thirty-nine missionaries, and $10,940.32; making a gain of 40 per cent of missionaries and of 34 per cent increase in money expended, in two years. There were eighty-four churches and outstations regularly supplied with the Gospel, a gain of 15 per cent; baptisms on mission fields, eighty-four, against 154 the year previous; this is the only sad item in all the report. The note of the convention was soul-winning, evangelization; everything converged to that as a central thought.

Baptists have a good start in Oklahoma. There are 133 churches and missions and they have a total membership of 2,704. Twenty-six churches have been organized during the year.

Congregational.

The church at Webster Groves, Mo., has just canvassed the whole community. The membership of the church was divided into thirty committees, each chairman being responsible for every family in a given district. They discovered a number of needy people that the church was able to assist, and about thirty families not attached to any church. Three of these were Congregationalists. The result of the canvass was reported at the prayer meeting and it brought out men who had never attended it before.

The church at Homer, N. Y., celebrated its centennial October 6-8. It has a noble history, for prominent men have come from this church and by its large gifts it has been widely known. During the century it has given to missions at home and abroad not less than $220,000, $140,000 being in legacies. The church has had but twelve pastors in the 100 years, among them Father Keep, a founder of Oberlin college. During its history it has received 2,850 members. Dr. T. T. Munger of New Haven, Conn., a son of this church, preached the historical sermon. Monday and Tuesday were devoted to remniscent addresses which were very interesting.

The Park avenue branch of the Tompkins Avenue church, Brooklyn, has some noteworthy features. A boys' club of over 100 members, one of the largest in Brooklyn, a young men's club, one for girls and others for older men and women are actively at work, as are four circles of King's Daughters and three societies of Christian Endeavor.

About 100 members have been received into Plymouth church, Newark, Ohio, during the more than three years' pastorate of Rev. T. M. Higginbotham.

The First church, Zanesville, Ohio, has Sunday evening congregations which fill the house. The ladies maintain a stand in the Saturday evening public market. Congregational bread, pies, cakes, etc., are in great demand.

Dr. Jas. B. Gregg recently preached an interesting sermon upon the growth of Congregational interests in Colorado Springs and in the state during the nineteen years of his pastorate at the First church. The number of members in Congregational churches has increased six-fold, and in the Sunday schools four-fold, over the state, while his own church has multiplied by three, built an edifice worth $40,000, planted two other churches, both with good houses of worship, and one with a membership of 143 in the city. The First church has voted to assume the support of Rev. Henry Fairbank, now on his field in India, and also to sustain a mission Sunday school in Colorado Springs.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the church at Webster, Mass., has been disbanded by unanimous vote, and an organization, to include all the young people of the church, similar to the Young People's Alliance of First church, Burlington, Vt., has been effected with over forty charter members.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Utah association had many encouraging features. There was reported a growth of eighty-four in membership, a gain of over ten per cent, and in

Don't Get Married

Until you have seen our strictly correct Wedding Stationery. Samples and prices gladly furnished free.

We make a specialty of Wedding Invitations and Announcements, Folders, Visiting Cards and other polite society stationery. Our work is Guaranteed the finest obtainable at any price. Engraved copper plate and 50 Correct Style, Best Wedding Bristol Visiting Cards, postpaid, 90c. Quire fine correspondence paper with any 2 initial monogram embossed in gold or any color, env. to match, postpaid, 60c. Our new process of printing in imitation of Engraving deceives all but experts, 50 correct form wedding invitations or announcements, 2 sets env., $2.50. 100 visiting or business cards, postpaid, 25c. Write for any information concerning any commercial or society printing, engraving or embossing. We will save you money. The B. W. KINSEY CO., 358 Denaborn St., Chicago

Cheap-Rate Excursions Southwest

Only one fare plus $2.00.

November 5 and 19,
December 3 and 17.

The Santa Fe most directly reaches the fertile valleys, industrial centers, and noted mining camps of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona.

Go out and see the country for yourself.

Santa Fe

Address J. M. Connell, Gen. Agt. A. T. & S. F. R'y., 109 Adams St., Chicago.

25c. THE LADIES' FRIEND
Hopkins' Bleaching Gloves
Made from the Best Glove-Kid in Black, Wine Tan, and Chocolate. Just the thing for Housecleaning, Gardening, Driving Wheeling, Outing, Golf, etc. Sizes 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Write for terms to agents.
Hopkins Glove Co., B Apollo, Cincinnati, O.

benevolences of $594, a gain of over fifty per cent.

Rev. E. S. McClure received nineteen persons into the church at Humeston, Iowa, October 6, fifteen being on confession. Seventy-three have been received within the past twenty-two months, largely on confession of faith.

Central church, Philadelphia, in the thirty-seven years of its existence, has had but three pastors. Its membership has held 1,350 persons. Three sons of this church have entered the ministry, and seven of the members are in foreign missionary fields; several are engaged in home missionary work.

Rev. W. W. Hartough of Exira, Iowa, received seventy-five to membership October 20, seventy-one being on confession; October 27 he received fifteen on confession and two by letter. A large majority were adults. Many others have given in their names for membership. The church building must be enlarged or a new one erected in order to accommodate the congregations. The mid-week meetings are well attended.

At Wall Lake, Iowa, a series of evangelistic meetings has aroused great interest. The religious life of the people has been greatly revived. Some thirty or forty will be received into church fellowship as a result.

The church at Morris, Ill., has decided to hold union revival meetings with the Methodists during the winter vacation, to be conducted by a "student band" under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

Shawmut church, Boston, at its last communion service, received forty new members into fellowship. The congregation has been steadily growing during the pastorate of Rev. Dr. McElveen.

The Pilgrim church, Cleveland, Ohio, has grown during the ten years of Rev. Chas. S. Mills' pastorate from a membership of 310 to 857, 1,177 having been members during that period. The growth of the church has been 176 per cent of the population. For benevolences $53,000 has been given, making with expenditures a total of $300,000.

Disciples.

The college building at Wilson, N. C., and $14,000 paid up stock have been donated to the Christian church, provided the Disciples raise at once $9,000. The proposition was accepted and nearly the whole amount was raised on the spot. The building is a fine one.

Christian university at Canton, Mo., opened with about seventy students. A unique feature is the C. U. L. L., which means Christian University Loyal Legion, an organization of the students to promote the interests of the institution in all possible ways.

Rev. J. A. Erwin, missionary of the Disciples in Porto Rico, has been appointed district judge by the governor.

Missouri Valley college, of Marshall, Mo., opened the autumn quarter with an increased attendance of about twenty per cent above that of last year. The library, which last year received more than two thousand volumes of new books, has recently received $2,500 for the purchase of books for the current year.

The church at Barry, Ill., gave more than a dollar per member for missions this year.

During the last four months at Fort Collins, Colo., 130 have been added to the church as a result of the work of Rev. Wm. J. Lockhart.

Central church, Des Moines, Iowa, Rev. H. O. Breeden, pastor, for sixteen years, is a great institutional church. The property cost $100,000. There are twenty-six Sunday school rooms in the building. The active membership of the church is 1,486, and there is also a nominal membership of 470. The institutional features are numerous. There is a very good gymnasium, reading rooms, young men's class, boys' class, travel club, cooking school, lecture courses, etc. Dr. Breeden has two assistants besides keeping a stenographer and typewriter busy. He is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on "Christ All in All." The sub-topics are "Christ in History, in Art, in Agriculture," etc.

The Fort Madison, Iowa, church dedicated its new building October 20. The congregation was organized in 1872, but has had no home of its own till now. Rev. E. E. Lowe is the pastor who has led in this work for a building.

The University church, Des Moines, Iowa, raised $8,100 of indebtedness October 27, a debt it has been carrying for ten years.

The Third church in Indianapolis, Ind., now has 1,085 members, and the Central in the same city 1,099.

At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a series of meetings held in the Second church of Christ led by the evangelists, Wilson and Huston, has resulted in 120 additions.

A seven weeks' meeting at Fairland, Ind., gathered in eighty-nine people.

At Mattoon, Ill., there have been 358 additions to the church in two and a half years.

Methodist.

Rev. J. O. Dobson, D. D., who has been presiding elder of the Sioux Falls district, in the Dakota conference, has been instrumental in the purchase of a beautiful park on the banks of the Big Sioux river at Canton, S. D., which is covered by a fine natural grove and the erection therein of the finest Epworth league assembly auditorium in Methodism, according to the authority of Bishop Joyce. This property, which cost something over $9,000 and is now reasonably valued as worth more than $10,000, is bequeathed to the district by Dr. Dobson, to be used to develop in the Methodist young people of this section of the northwest the highest New Testament standard of Christian experience and life.

The medical dispensary connected with the Epworth league house at the North end, Boston, has developed into a great work because of the need of competent medical service on terms within reach of the poorest. Over 7,000 patients is last year's record. Two-thirds of all who come are Italians, the others are mainly Irish and Jews. Ten cents is the uniform fee for treatment, though this is remitted when need demands. The New England branch of the Woman's Home Missionary society has met the entire cost of the new building being erected for this work, while the Boston Missionary and Church Extension society stands back of the social and educational work of the settlement, contributing annually not less than $2,500 to it.

Presbyterian.

Sunday, October 6, completed fourteen years of the pastorate of the Rev. F. J. Sauber, D. D., in First church, Emporia, Kan. During this period of time 803 members have been received into the church, 166 adults and seventy-four infants have been baptized, $23,828 has been contributed to the beneficences of the church, and $64,046 to local church work, making a grand total of $87,892. During the past year

Terrible Disease Cancer Succumbs to the Application of Simple Oils.

Heretofore thought to be fatal, can now be successfully cured by a combination of soothing, balmy Oils. Cancer, tumor, piles, catarrh, ulcers, fistula and all skin and female diseases readily yield to this wonderful Oil. Write for an illustrated book. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo.

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

CURES

*Female Troubles,
Stooping Posture,
Inflammations,
Internal Pains,
Tired Feeling,
Back-ache,
Weak Lungs, Nervousness.*

TRIAL FREE.

It will make you comfortable, buoyant, happy—give you ability to work and enjoy life. It is simple, wholly external, adjustable to any figure. Worn with or without corset.

We have over 15,000 letters like this:

Chandler, Okla., July 27, 1899.

Your Brace did all you said about it, and more for me. It has saved me a big doctor's bill and brought me good health, which I had not had before in 25 years. My troubles were dropsy, headache, lung disease, stomach and other ills to which women are subject.

MRS. L. B. DICKINSON.

Write today for particulars and illustrated book mailed free in plain sealed envelope. Address
The Natural Body Brace Co., Box 744, Salina, Kansas.
Every woman should have this Brace.

forty-five members have been received, $1,969 contributed to the beneficent work of the church, and $3,680 to congregational purposes.

The Presbyterian Laity association of Los Angeles, Cal., held its sixth semi-annual session, October 8. An interesting discussion followed an address by W. E. McVay on "The Elder and City Evangelization." It was said by one speaker that one of the greatest evils in Los Angeles is the opening of places of amusement on Sunday. He suggested that all Christians refuse to patronize during the week the places that open on Sunday. It would have a good effect. "The Aims and Possibilities of Our Association" were presented by C. E. Walker, and earnestly discussed. After the banquet several toasts were given. "A Layman's Estimate of a Pastor" and "A Pastor's Estimate of a Layman" were among these. Evangelistic work to be done by the association was spoken of, and Rev. R. B. Taylor urged a forward movement.

The evangelistic services have begun in St. Paul, Minn., simultaneously in five different parts of the city, and each week five other churches will begin nightly services until every Presbyterian church in the city has held meetings. These are to be carried on by the pastors, co-operating with one another.

The Central church, Terre Haute, Ind., had twenty-eight additions October 6, making a total of fifty-six received during the past six months. About one-half of this number are young people from the Sunday school. Dr. McCaughey is pastor.

Forty-three new members were received into the Second church, Pittsburg, Pa., October 14. Nine hundred and thirty-three have joined since the Rev. S. Edward Young became pastor in January, 1898. The church has again refused to sell its valuable site and move from the downtown locality to a residential section, basing this determination upon the fact that the church is out of debt for the first time in its century of existence. Besides since thirty-four churches have left this section in the last eighteen years, this one is absolutely needed where it is.

The First church, Denison, Texas, had fifty-five additions October 6, thirty-three on profession of faith. Fifteen came from the country where the pastor, Rev. A. F. Bishop, has held a series of meetings.

The First Cumberland church of Nashville is endeavoring to solve the problem of the "second service" on Sunday by giving up the evening worship. Morning service will be held at the usual hour, the Sunday school will be transferred to the afternoon and every effort made to obtain as complete attendance of adults at the Bible classes as at the morning service.

The Markham Memorial church, St. Louis, which was organized October 17 with a membership of 136, has the largest Sunday school in the city and the largest Christian Endeavor society in the state. It is situated in a workingmen's district, and is conducted along institutional church lines, there being an average of three meetings a day.

The Board of Freedmen's Missions of the United Presbyterian body is embarrassed because the churches instead of providing the $55,000 appropriated to the work, have only given $8,365.17 during the first six months of the fiscal year, while the missions plead for enlargement. New localities are asking to be supplied with schools and preaching. One community, in the Black Belt, is so desirous of having a mission established that the people have made a selection of a plot of ground in the best location, according to their judgment, erected upon it a school house, made a deed of the property to the board and then begged the board to open and establish a mission!

In Whatcom, Wash., there was not a United Presbyterian to be found two years ago; now there is a church of sixty-eight members, a Sabbath school of over 200, fully organized, a woman's missionary society and a young people's, and a property clear of debt, costing nearly $9,000, for which the board of missions gave $4,000.

The Board of Foreign missions has sent a letter to all the theological seminaries stating the need of recruits for the missionary work. There are wide-open doors of opportunity, but men and women are lacking.

General.

Centralia, Ill., has been greatly stirred by union evangelical meetings held by Rev. Milford H. Lyon and Mr. George H. Williams of Wheaton, Ill. Many have accepted Christ.

Evangelist Sunday of Chicago has just closed a most remarkable series of union meetings at Exira, Iowa, in which more than 250 persons, including nearly all the business men of the town, were converted. Business places were closed at 7:30 p. m. that all might have an opportunity to attend the services at the tabernacle in which the meetings were held. A large chorus choir, under the leadership of Prof. Fischer, furnished most inspiring music. Seldom does a town have such a religious awakening as this place has experienced. Drunkards have been led to give up drinking, gamblers to forsake their business, and all to accept Jesus Christ. The Congregational, Christian, and Methodist churches united in this movement and their membership has been nearly doubled.

The Universalist general convention appointed a committee of five to form, with a like committee of the Unitarian body, a joint commission for the purpose of preventing unnecessary multiplication of churches in towns where churches of both denominations cannot be supported. Unitarians and Uni-

If The Washboard could talk how it would urge you to use PEARLINE! "Go easy," it would say: "let up on that rubbing. You're wearing out the clothes, yourself, and even me. Get something that washes your clothes, instead of wearing and tearing them. Soak the things in PEARLINE and water. Follow the directions on package, and you won't need me much." 654 versalists have their greatest strength in New England. Beyond it they have only scattered churches here and there. Both denominations together have not more than 1,200 churches, with a possible membership of 100,000. Both are showing increased life and zeal and becoming less loosely related organizations, with resulting increase of power for self-propagation.

Pearline Saves

Haverford college, the institution supported by the Orthodox Quakers, has recently had a gift of $60,000, to make provision for "the religious study of the Bible and Bible history and literature." This donation followed and grew out of the recent Summer School of Religious History held at Haverford, at which the newer scholarly views of the Bible were set forth. It is a sign of alertness to new conditions on the part of the orthodox Quakers.

At the Bible Teachers' college at Montclair, N. J., Mr. Robert E. Speer will conduct a course of studies on "The Theory of the Christian Life," on Wednesday afternoons. Dr. F. S. Schenk of New Brunswick theological seminary will lead studies in psychology and pedagogy on Thursday afternoons. Dr. Robert W. Rogers of Drew Theological seminary will lecture on psalmody and wisdom literature and

GOD'S BOOKS

An inquiry respecting

The Books of Judgment

WHAT THEY ARE
WHERE THEY ARE
WHAT THEY CONTAIN

By John Williams, with an introduction by I. N. McCash. LL. D.

This is an interesting and attractive little book and contains many valuable thoughts. All book readers will want it. Paper binding only. Sent postpaid for 35 cents. Address,

The Christian Century Company
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

the history and prophecy of the Babylonian period. Dr. Wilbert W. White will conduct courses in the gospels and in prayer, give a series of book studies, and conduct the Sunday school normal class, which meets Friday evenings. Under the auspices of the extension department, all students will do mission work and teach Bible classes in New York Monday afternoons and evenings. A new feature this year is a woman's department, for which a house in Montclair has been leased as a home for the young women students.

Foreign Missionary Items.

The census of 1901 shows that in the Madras presidency the total population increased seven per cent and the Christian population eighteen per cent.

Dr. Doremus Scudder leaves a prosperous and devoted church at Woburn, Mass., to care for the thousands of Japanese in the Hawaiian Islands, under the auspices of the Hawaiian Evangelical board. As a preparation for this work Dr. Scudder will spend several months in Japan, where he formerly did mission work under the American Board.

The native converts of the United Presbyterian missions in Egypt contribute $25,000 a year for the support of evangelistic work, a sum far beyond the giving of the members of the churches in the United States.

Baptist, Congregationalist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Protestant Episcopal missionaries in Hokkaido, Japan, have just had a conference, credit for the inception of which is due to the Episcopal brethren. Spiritual culture and fraternal union were the objects of the conference.

The pastor of the church at Bilbao, Spain, is looked upon by the Catholic community as one of the useful citizens and is freely invited to take part in public meetings of a philanthropic character, where he always takes a high place as patriotic citizen and public speaker. Because of his public-spiritedness his relations to those around him are different from those of any other Protestant pastor in Spain. As he gives considerable time to the day school, which is largely patronized by the Catholics, the hold which the evangelical work has on the people is most noticeable on anniversary occasions when there never fail to be present some friends of note and not infrequently writers for the press who report the occasion for their papers.

The International Institute for Girls which, since the Spanish war, has carried on its work in Biarritz, France, just across the border, looks forward to a not far distant return to Spain, for cable has been received announcing that at last a site has been purchased in Madrid for the school. It will be remembered that it has been the fond hope of those interested in this school to establish it permanently in the nation's capital where are the State Institute and the University of Madrid, both of which schools admit the girls of this mission school to their examinations, and already nineteen have taken the B. A. degree and four the degrees of the university, with honor, the first time in the history of Spain that woman's work has received such recognition. If the committee of ways and means in this country succeed in their plan, a building will be erected on this site as an offering from the women and girls of the United States to the girls of Spain to be called "College Hall," the rooms of which shall be named for those schools and colleges that raise $300 each.

The direct personal appeals made by the preacher to any member of his flock at a negro camp meeting are often very edifying. The following is an incident related by Ella Middleton Tybout, whose story, "The Intervention of Gran'pap," has just been published by J. B. Lippincott Company. In the midst of the sermon the speaker turned suddenly to a young mulatto and said: "Maybe yo' thinks caze yo' got dat silk hat on yo' haid an' a raid necktie wrop aroun' yo' neck dat yo' g'wine to glory, but yo' ain't. Dem fixins was sent yo' by old Satan hisself; Bro. Moses nevah wore no silk hat; Uncle Abraham nevah had no raid necktie." Whereupon the youth cast the condemned articles from him and threw himself upon the mourner's bench to repent, while one of the principal pillars of the church stole off into the woods and rescued the hat. When asked why he could wear an article which was too wicked for the young man he replied: "Why, yo' sees, Mistis, I'se got 'ligion all right, so I kin wa'ar Bro' Johnson's hat fuh him and sanctify it t'well he's ready fuh it. Restin' on meh haid's g'wine tuh drive ole Satan outen de hat band, caze I'se been baptized an' Bro' Johnson ain't. Dat's huccum I kin wa'ar de hat an' he can't." With this explanation he disappeared, and I very much doubt if Brother Johnson ever saw his hat again.

FOR THANKSGIVING DAY

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets within distances of 150 miles, November 27th and 28th, at rate of a fare and one-third for the round trip. Tickets good returning until November 29, inclusive. This road has three express trains daily to Fort Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York and Boston, with vestibuled sleeping cars. Also excellent dining-car service; meals served on Individual Club Plan, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00. For reservations in sleeping cars or other information, address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams St.; City Ticket Office, 111 Adams St., Chicago. Phone 2057 Central. No. 42 of any kidney disease or be distressed by stomach troubles or tortured and poisoned by constipation. Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine will be sent free and prepaid to any reader of this publication who needs it and writes for it. One dose a day of this remedy does the work and cures perfectly, to stay cured. If you care to be cured of indigestion, dyspepsia, flatulence, catarrh of stomach and bowels, constipation, or torpid and congested liver; if you wish to be sure that your kidneys are free from disease and are doing their necessary work thoroughly; if you expect to be free from bladder and prostate inflammation and from catarrh, rheumatism and backache; if you desire a full supply of pure, rich blood, a healthy tissue and a perfect skin, write at once for a free bottle of this remedy and prove for yourself, without expense to you, that these ailments are cured quickly, thoroughly, and permanently with only one dose a day of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine.

NO PERSON SHOULD DIE

Any reader of Christian Century may have a sample bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine sent free and prepaid by writing to Vernal Remedy Company, Buffalo, N. Y. It cures catarrh, indigestion, constipation of the bowels, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of bladder, and enlargement of prostate gland.

There is no trouble and but a trifle of expense to cure the most stubborn case. Write for a free bottle.

CATARRH CAN BE CURED.

Catarrh is a kindred ailment of consumption, long considered incurable; and yet there is one remedy that will positively cure catarrh in any of its stages. For many years this remedy was used by the late Dr. Stevens, a widely noted authority on all diseases of the throat and lungs. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption, and nervous diseases, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

AGENTS Make 100 PER CENT on Conklin's Vest Pocket Argument Settler. Revised edition with New Census Statistics, 254 pgs. A complete Encyclopedia of a million proved Facts Tables, and General Information. It settles Arguments instantly. Invaluable to everyone. Sample postpaid, Cloth, 25c., Morocco, 50c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. George W. Noble, 285 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

A Monthly Magazine

Devoted to the upbuilding of Christian character and earnest church work. Rev. Charles Warwick, Editor, Pastor Diamond Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia. Asks for support—in the way of subscriptions and advertisements. Price 50c per year, 12 issues, postpaid. Publication office 200 South 10th Street, Philadelphia.

BOOKS

"The Old Gospel for the New Age," by H. C. G. Moule, D. D. Chicago, Fleming H. Revell Co.

The new Bishop of Durham last spring sent out into the world this little volume of sixteen sermons, which the Revell Company has now reprinted with a brief account of Dr. Moule by the editor of The British Weekly. The sermon which gives this volume its name was preached at the ninety-ninth anniversary of the great Church Missionary Society in 1898. This and all of the sermons are full of that characteristic spirit which readers of Dr. Moule's book can recognize almost at a glance. There is no formal effort at labored and difficult thinking, yet the deepest thoughts connected with the Christian experience are here expressed in a style which is at once flexible and clear. Dr. Moule believes emphatically in the old gospel, and this for him is summed up in the message of the Christ. For him the story of redemption is not a portion of God's message to mankind, but the very substance of that message. It is not an incident in the history of revelation but the summation of all God's revelation in one sublime act of sacrifice and atonement. This gospel is, he confesses, a narrow gospel when looked at from the point of view of the world, hence he is not surprised that human nature tends to be ashamed of it. Yet this very gospel is as wide as the greatest need of man, which is the forgiveness and removal of sin, and as wide also as the immeasurable love of God, from whose wisdom and cross it comes. The other characteristic notes of Dr. Moule's teaching also appear in this interesting and stimulating volume; self-surrender, self-consecration, endowment of the Holy Spirit, are all dealt with from various points of view, without monotony, and in no shallow or easy-going manner.

"The Modern Mission Century Viewed as a Cycle of Divine Working," by Arthur T. Pierson. The Baker Taylor Co., New York. Price, $1.50 net.

This book of over 500 pages is said to be the fruit of forty years of preparation and patient plodding. And it shows it. The material of which it is composed has been gathered from afar; and it has not been thrown loosely together, but is arranged with the utmost care. The framework of the book is somewhat peculiar. It consists of twelve parts, each part being subdivided into three chapters. There runs through the whole a fine philosophic vein. Indeed the book may be looked upon as a philosophy of missions rather than a history of missions. This gives to it a wider interest than belongs to missionary books generally. The missionary achievements of the nineteenth century are not strung together as beads upon a string. They are looked upon in their relation to one another as parts of one continuous and organic whole. The entire course of modern missions is set forth as "a march of God, showing his superintendence over all forward movements for bearing his good tidings to a lost world." Our author says: "We lay down the pen with an unchangeable persuasion that, from the first yearnings of William Carey over the death shade of a heathen world to the last longing of the most recent convert for the salvation of his fellows, God has been at work—the same God Who, in the darkness of that primal chaos, said 'Let light be!' and light was."

This is a book which will do not a little to reinforce Christian faith. Preachers will find it to be a mine of wealth with regard to sermonic material; and the ordinary reader will find it to be a continuation of the acts of the apostles. He will see in it what the risen Christ has wrought by the hands of those whom he has anointed to the work of the world's evangelization.

"The Sunny Side of Christianity," by Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D. Fleming H. Revell Co. Price, 60 cents net.

The scope of this attractive little book can best be indicated by giving the table of contents, which reads: "Love in the Heart Versus Phosphorous in the Brain; Love as a Theory and Love as an Experience; Acquiring the Love Lesson; Love Considered as a Lubricant; Loving a Means of Knowing." Dr. Parkhurst has a clear, ornate and nervous style. He can express his thought in the most correct literary form; but when occasion demands it he can use the vernacular of the street. Speaking of the power of embodied love within the Church he says: "If hearts were trumps we would win." Referring to the contradictory things done by the Church he says: "At one date one branch of the Church would be making saints and another would be boiling and broiling them." Dr. Parkhurst is never obscure. He feathers his arrow with whatever will serve best to speed it to the mark. There is a glow of earnestness in all that he writes.

In this book he presents the love side of Christianity as if it were the only side. The chapter "Loving as a Means of Knowing" ought to have had for a companion another chapter on "Knowing as a means of Loving." But the side which he has emphasized is the side which is too frequently overlooked, hence the timeliness of the message of the book.

Conklin's Vest Pocket Argument Settler, by Prof. Geo. W. Conklin; 1901 edition revised and enlarged. Geo. W.

Noble, Chicago. Price, flexible cloth 25 cents, full leather 50 cents.

In this handy little volume is condensed a surprisingly large amount of practical information, valuable not only as an "Argument Settler," but also an answer to most queries which, in both business and social life, are constantly pressing for a speedy answer. This new edition has been thoroughly revised to date, embracing U. S. Census of 1900 and other recent data.

Is Your Brain Tired?

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. Y. S. Troyer, Memphis, Tenn., says: "It recuperates the brain and enables one to think and act." Makes exertion easy.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

THE VEST Pocket Commentary

On the International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1902.

128 pages 2 1/2 x 3 1/2

Original, Fresh, Brainsy.

International S. S. Evangel says—"This little book gives on each lesson what would require many hours to acquire, and all better than but very few men in America could prepare... It is at once scholarly, spiritual and practical, and in convenience and serviceability EXCELS OTHER HELPS."

Association Men—"Commends itself at a glance... Particularly appropriate for the busy business man."

The Advance—"Condensation as a fine art is exhibited in this book. Remarkably suggestive and helpful."

Sunday School Times—"Vest Pocket Commentary is a unique and reasonably successful attempt to enable busy people to prepare their Sunday School lessons in their 'one spare moment'... The 'Reflections' are excellent."

The Baptist Union—"The pith and marrow of the topics are given, the things that must be said to ensure a first grasp of the lesson. It will be of ready value to those who would gain a bird's-eye view of the theme at a glance."

"Up-to-Date," thoroughly Spiritual and Christian.

A SPLENDID PRESENT TO ANY ONE.

Bound in Red Morocco, gold edges	$0.25
Per dozen,	2.50
Interleaved Edition, two blank pages to each lesson for pencil notes, Red Morocco, gold edges, etc.	.85
Per dozen,	3.50

This valuable little volume sent on receipt of price or FREE AS A PREMIUM for one new subscriber to The Christian Century.

The Christian Century Co.,
358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

"THE BADNESS BREAKING OUT."

It is often jokingly said by parents when their children's faces are pimpled, "It's the badness breaking out." That is just what it is—blood badness. But that is not the proper outlet for such impurities. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer will work them off in nature's channels. It has a reputation extending over one hundred years, as a blood cleansing remedy. Not a drug-store medicine. Sold by special agents or the proprietor direct. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 S. Hoyne ave., Chicago, Ill.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women and girls, and for abdominal weakness, backache, lung troubles or general weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO &
ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train
of
the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service
Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information
furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent,
Chicago, Ill.

Burlington
Route

It costs no more to ride
on this beautiful train
than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul
Minneapolis
Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

Daily and Personally Conducted

Excursions

to

California

and

Oregon

SPECIAL attention given to organizing family parties. Lowest rates;
no change of cars; first scenery; shortest time on the road. Address

S. A. HUTCHISON, Manager,
212 Clark Street,
Chicago, Ill.

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars,
Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars.
See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad.
It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.
L. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

20,000 CHURCHES

Lighted by the FRINK System of Reflectors with Electric, Gas, Welsbach, Acetylene or C INCISED to manufacture electric and combination gas and electric fixtures. Send dimensions for estimate.
I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St.,
NEW YORK.

TWO BIBLES IN ONE

OLD AND REVISED VERSIONS ON SAME PAGE.

COMBINATION SELF-PRONOUNCING TEACHERS' REFERENCE BIBLE.

Gives every advantage of the complete parallel Bible without increase in size or bulk of book. At foot of each page is shown every change made by the revisers. The letters R V in the text denote that the word or passage following is changed in the foot-note of same verse. The letters R O denote that the word or passage following is omitted in the revised version as shown in parentheses ( ) in foot-note. When two or more changes occur in the same verse they are divided by a dash in the foot-note.

Most Elegant Bible and Greatest Premium Ever Offered

All standard helps prepared by most eminent Biblical scholars. Complete series of new colored maps, fully index. Concordance containing over 40,000 references. History of books of the Bible, etc. SELF-PRONOUNCING. Large, beautiful, clear new type. All proper names are divided into syllables and every vowel is marked and the syllables inflected, showing the sounds and accents, enabling the reader to properly pronounce every word.

FINE ART EDITION. The Art edition is the same book, but profusely illustrated and embellished with numerous phototype engravings from the paintings of the world's greatest masters to illustrate the teachings of Our Lord.

OUR REMARKABLE OFFERS

This beautiful Bible, French Seal, Divinity Circuit, leather lined, round corners, carmine under gold edges, extra finish, publisher's price $5, and The Christian Century for 1 year for $3. The Fine Art Edition of the same Bible, publisher's price $6, and The Christian Century for 1 year for $3.50.

THE CHRISTIAN COMPANY, 358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

the word;

3 <sup>o</sup> It seemed good to me also, having <sup>rv</sup> had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee <sup>d</sup> in order, <sup>e</sup> most excellent Thê-ôph'î-lûs,

4 <sup>f</sup> That thou mightest know the certainty <sup>rv</sup> of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.

5 ¶ THERE was <sup>2g</sup> in the days of Hêr'od, <sup>ro</sup> the king of Jû-dæ'â, a certain priest named Zâch-q-rî'as, <sup>h</sup> of the course of Æ-bî'â: and <sup>rv</sup> his wife was of the daughters of Aâr'on, and her name was Ê-lîs'q-bêth.

6 And they were both <sup>i</sup> righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

g Matt. 2. 1.
h 1 Chr. 24.
10, 19.
Neh. 12. 4, 17.
i Gen. 7. 1;
17. 1.
1 Kin. 9. 4.
2 Kin. 20. 3.
Job 1. 1.
Acts 23. 1;
24. 16.
Phil. 3. 6.
k 1 Chr. 24. 10.
2 Chr. 8. 14;
31. 2.
l Ex. 30. 7, 8.
1 Sam. 2. 28.
1 Chr. 23. 13.
2 Chr. 29. 11.
m Lev. 16. 17.
n Rev. 8. 3, 4.
o Ex. 30. 1.
p ver. 23.
Judg. 6. 22;
13. 22.
Dan. 10. 8.
ch. 2. 9.
Acts 10. 4.
Rev. 1. 17.
p ver. 60, 63.
q ver. 58.
r Num. 6. 3.
Judg. 13. 4.
ch. 7. 33.

10 <sup>m</sup> And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the <sup>rv</sup> time of incense.

11 And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of <sup>n</sup> the altar of incense.

12 And <sup>rv</sup> when Zâch-q-rî'as saw <sup>him</sup>, <sup>o</sup> he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

13 But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zâch-q-rî'as: <sup>rv</sup> for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Ê-lîs'q-bêth shall bear thee a son, and <sup>p</sup> thou shalt call his name Jôhn.

14 And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and <sup>q</sup> many shall rejoice at his birth.

15 For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and <sup>rv r</sup> shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he

3 traced the course of all things accurately from the first, 4 concerning the things wherein thou wast instructed. 5 (the)—he had a wife of 8 Now it came to pass, while he 9 enter into the temple of the Lord and burn incense. 10 hour of 12 Zacharias was troubled when he saw him, and fear 13 because thy supplication is heard, 15 he shall drink no wine

PRONOUNCING
HOLY BIBLE

COMBINATION
TEACHERS' EDITION

A GREAT PREMIUM OFFER

Life of Wm. McKinley

OUR MARTYRED PRESIDENT

With a short Biography of Garfield and Lincoln, containing masterpieces of McKinley's eloquence and the History of Anarchy, its Purposes and Results. Complete authentic Biography of 453 pages. Written by

BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS, LL.D.

Personal friend and comrade of the late President, author of "Life of Samuel Adams," "Synonyms and Antonyms," "Liberty and Unions," etc., etc. Introduction by United States Senator Hon. Wm. E. Mason.

A Standard Authority because written by BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS.

He was the intimate friend of William McKinley during all the years of his eminent career; the Bishop enjoyed his utmost confidence; under these conditions the manuscript had been in course of preparation for several years. It is a literary work of the highest order, accurate, interesting and truthful. It was almost ready for the press when the horrible tragedy came. Nothing remained to do save the necessity of the Bishop's final revisions and writing the last sad and closing chapters.

A Few of the Half-tone Illustrations

William McKinley, Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. McKinley (Mother), Father of William McKinley, Mark Hanna, Members of McKinley's Cabinet, President Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, President Garfield, President Lincoln, Assassination of President McKinley, Death-bed Scenes of President McKinley, Photograph of Assassin, Capital Building, President McKinley's Residence, Temple of Music, White House, Milburn House, Scenes from McKinley's Early Life, Etc., Etc.

SYNOPSIS OF CONTENTS

The Story of the Assassination. Funeral Procession and Rites. Expressive Tributes from Foreign Lands. Tributes from Eminent Americans. Life of Wm. McKinley. His Last Term in Congress. Governor of Ohio. Financial Troubles. Great Campaign of 1894. Nominated for President. First Presidential Campaign. President of the United States. His Own Story of the Spanish War. Chronological Events of Spanish War. Country Expands and Becomes a World Power. Meets the Crisis in China. Renomination and Re-elected President. Anecdotes and Incidents in his Life. Chronological Record of his Life. Masterpieces from his Pen. Lincoln's Life Described by McKinley. Garfield's Life Described by McKinley.

Theodore Roosevelt.

His Birth. Political History and War Experience. As Assistant Secretary of the Navy. Governor and Vice-President. Marriage and Children. Author—in the Pulpit. Ideas of Honesty. Police Commissioner. Thoughts as a Boy. Qualities as a Rough Rider, etc., etc.

Anarchy

Its Origin, Purposes and Results. Notable Assassinations—Herbert Spencer—Herr Most—Opinions of Eminent Men.

Trial and Condemnation.

The Assassin Leon Czolgosz.

The Nation's Man. Great Speech of Senator J. N. Thurston at the St. Louis Convention 1896, etc.

THE SUBJECT

WM. MCKINLEY

A Grand Character for Biography

Our Martyred President's Life will ever call to mind the greatness of the man, for he was the embodiment of nobleness. It was by his tireless energy and ambition that he rose from amidst the common people to take his place among the great men of the earth, to a place in the hearts of the people.

No president since the time of Washington and Lincoln has endeared himself to the hearts of the people as our late president. He ever showed his interest in their welfare in a political way that went right home to the hearts and consciences of all. His policies were ever those that would benefit his country and with it the great masses of the working people.

He was the one man among men, loved and revered by all.

Recognized experts in the book business estimate the sale of McKinley Biographies during the next six months will exceed 3,000,000 volumes. These astounding figures were had by calculations based upon the sale of over 1,000,000 Biographies of President Garfield. It is an undisputed fact, Biography is of supreme interest to everyone.

THE AUTHOR

Bishop Fallows, before he essayed the present great work, was well prepared for the task, because he had already written, copiously, critically, comprehensively and understandingly of William McKinley and the historical epoch in which he so long played an important part. For forty years American statesmen, measures, politics and history have been as familiar to Bishop Fallows as are his own fingers that handle the pen so deftly, his own mind that produces such lofty thoughts, just judgments and beautiful sentiments. For many years he had personally known William McKinley, had admired, loved and carefully chronicled his splendid achievements, his wise and patriotic utterances. Understanding the motives, principles and lofty aims of our martyred President, familiar with recent American history and fortified with an array of the richest material which he had made peculiarly his own by employing it in the composition of many patriotic and historical works and addresses probably no American was better qualified, nor so matchlessly equipped for this great work as Bishop Samuel Fallows, and none has produced such splendid results—a book that will take its place upon the shelves of public and private libraries as a comprehensive and accurate life of Our Martyred President.

THE BOOK

A Model of MECHANICAL SKILL.

It is printed upon the finest paper, large, clear and new type, forty FINE ART full page photographic portraits of the president's eminent associates, friends and relatives, and has numerous engravings of interesting features of the text.

Bound in fine imported cloth, measuring 7 x 10 inches, 2 1/2 inches thick, gold and black embossing with front cover illuminated by the President's Portrait; in all making a most magnificent library, center table or gift volume. The business man will want it for the wonderful manner in which his policies influenced business; the parent, that his children may gather instruction and inspiration from it. The teacher wants it to enable him to instruct his classes in the duties of citizenship, for he was the ideal citizen. Every statesman will want it for his lessons in political integrity. Every working man throughout the country will want it for he proved himself to be the friend of the working man. Every youth will want it for his sympathy and love of youth. The minister wants it for he exemplified in his daily life the true principles of the Christian citizen. Every wife will want it, for he was a model husband and father.

Extraordinary Offer to Our Readers

Every family will want this book and every one can have it: 1st—Without Money. Send us at once three new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY for one year at the regular rate, $1.50 each, and this magnificent memorial volume will be sent you as a premium.

SECOND, COMBINATION OFFER:

The Price of the Book in cloth is.....	$1.50
Extra for postage.....	.20
The Christian Century, six months.....	.75
Foreign postage extra.....
Total value of both.....	$2.45

Our Price For Both, $1.50
Including Postage.

Good to old or new subscribers alike, all arrangements being paid to date.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, - 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago

THE CHRISTIAN
 CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, November 21, 1901.

Number 27.

LEADING FEATURES.

The New Life

The Chronicler's Desk

The Right Use of God's Mercies

Temperance a Social Question

Our London Correspondence

The Quiet Hour

Put Yourself in His Place

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arrearage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES

Quarterly Helps.

THE PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Youngest Classes. It contains Lesson Stories, Lesson Questions, Lesson Thoughts and Lesson Pictures, and never fails to interest the little ones.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter,	5 cents.
10 copies, per quarter,	$ .20; per year, $ .75
25 copies,	.40; " 1.50
50 "	.75; " 3.00

THE YOUTH'S QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Junior Classes. The Scripture Text is printed in full, but an interesting Lesson Story takes the place of the usual explanatory notes.

TERMS—Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 21-2 cents each per quarter.

THE SCHOLAR'S QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Senior Classes. This Quarterly contains every help needed by the senior classes. Its popularity is shown by its immense circulation.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter,	$ .10; per year, $ .30
10 copies,	.40; " 1.25
25 "	1.00; " 3.00
50 "	1.80; " 6.00
100 "	3.00; " 12.00

THE BIBLE STUDENT.

A Lesson Magazine for the Advanced Classes, containing the Scripture Text in both the Common and Revised Versions, with Explanatory Notes, Helpful Readings, Practical Lessons. Maps, etc.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter,	$ .10; per year, $ .40
10 copies,	.40; " 2.50
25 "	1.00; " 6.00
50 "	3.00; " 10.50
100 "	5.50; " 20.00

BIBLE LESSON PICTURE ROLL.

Printed in 8 colors. Each leaf, 26 by 37 inches, contains a picture illustrating one lesson. 13 leaves in a set. Price per Roll—one quarter—reduced to 75 cents.

CHRISTIAN PICTURE LESSON CARDS.

A reduced fac-simile of the large Bible Lesson Picture Roll. Put up in sets, containing one card for each Sunday in quarter. One set will be required for each child in the class. Price reduced to 2-1-2 cents per set.

Model Sunday-School Record.

A complete record of the Attendance of Officers, Teachers and Pupils, with column for Roll of Officers, Teachers, and column for recording Attendance or Absence. Collections by Classes, Total Enrollment, with Gain or Loss for the Quarter, List and Cost of Supplies, Treasurer's Receipt to Secretary, Weekly and Quarterly Report, etc., for one to twenty-eight classes, all for entire quarter, without turning a leaf. Each book contains blanks for two years' records. Cloth.....$1.00

Model Sunday-School Treasurer's Book.

Arranged for the Systematic Recording of all Receipts and Expenditures. Blanks for Annual Reports, etc. Good for three years. Fine paper. Pocket size, cloth, 25 cents. Morocco.....$ .50

Model Sunday-School Class Book.

Arranged for Complete Record of Name, Residence, Date of Entering, Attendance, Contributions, etc. Good for one year. Single copy, five cents. Per dozen.....$ .50

Standard Sunday-School Class Book.

Ruling and Printed Headings, and keeps One Month's Record without turning a leaf. Good for one year. Bound in marbled paper. Single copy, ten cents. Per dozen.....$ .75

Sunday-School Collection and Class Envelopes.

Cloth-lined, printed, and good for one year. Per dozen.....$ .50
Manila paper, printed, and good for one year. Per hundred, 35 cents. Per thousand..... 2.25

Model Superintendent's Roll or Pocket Record.

Containing an Alphabetical List of the Names and Addresses of all the Pupils connected with the School; also, List of Officers and Teachers, with Addresses, and blanks for recording some of the most important items from the Secretary's Weekly Reports. Cloth, 50 cents. Morocco....$ .75

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

358 Dearborn Street,

Chicago, Ill.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago
Indianapolis
Cincinnati
Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake
and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

Bethany College.

Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,

J. G. KEITH, Chairman Faculty

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Monthly.

CHRISTIAN BIBLE LESSON LEAVES.

These Lesson Leaves are especially for the use of Sunday-schools that may not be able to fully supply themselves with the Lesson Books or Quarterlies.

TERMS.

10 copies, 1 mo.,	$ .15; 3 mos., $ .30; 1 yr., $1.00
25 "	.25; " .60; " 2.40
50 "	.45; " 1.20; " 4.60
100 "	.75; " 2.10; " 8.00

Weekly.

THE LITTLE ONES.

Printed in Colors.

This is a Weekly for the Primary Department in the Sunday-school and the Little Ones at Home, full of Charming Little Stories, Sweet Poems, Merry Rhymes and Jingles, Beautiful Pictures and Simple Lesson Talks. The prettiest and best of all papers for the very little people.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than five copies to one address, 25 cents a copy per year. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL EVANGELIST.

This is a Weekly for the Sunday-school and Family, of varied and attractive contents, embracing Serial and Shorter Stories; Sketches; Incidents of Travel; Poetry; Field Notes; Lesson Talks, and Letters from the Children. Printed from clear type, on fine calendered paper, and profusely illustrated.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 30 cents a copy per year, or 8 cents per quarter. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A Large Illustrated Weekly Magazine, devoted to the welfare and work of Our Young People, giving special attention to the Sunday-school and Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. It contains wood-cuts and biographical sketches of prominent workers, Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons, and Endeavor Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, Outlines of Work, etc. This Magazine has called forth more commendatory notices than any other periodical ever issued by our people. The Sunday-school pupil or teacher who has this publication will need no other lesson help, and will be able to keep fully "abreast of the times" in the Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. work.

TERMS—One copy, per year, 75 cents; in clubs of ten, 60 cents each; in packages of ten or more to one name and address, only 50 cents each. Send for Sample.

RHEUMATISM...

Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws cords, and hardens muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take any more. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

BLMYER BELL
BCHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELL SWEETENERS, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE, OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., November 21, 1901.

Number 27.

EDITORIAL

A LITANY OF THANKFULNESS.

For days of health; for nights of quiet sleep; for seasons of bounty and of beauty; for all earth's contributions to our need through this past year,
Good Lord, we thank thee.

For our country's shelter; for our homes; for the joy of faces, and the joy of hearts that love,
Good Lord, we thank thee.

For the power of great examples; for holy ones who lead us in the ways of life and love,
Good Lord, we thank thee.

For our powers of growth; for longings to be better and do more; for ideals that ever rise above our real,
Good Lord, we thank thee.

For the blessedness of service, and the power to fit ourselves to others' needs,
Good Lord, we thank thee.

For our necessities to work; for burdens, pain and disappointments, means of growth; for sorrow, for death,
Father, we thank thee.

For all that brings us to each other, nearer to ourselves, nearer to thee,
We thank thee, O our Father.

—W. C. Gannett.

THE NEW LIFE.

BEDIENCE to the command given by Jesus, "Come unto me," signifies such an approach to him as enables the one so coming to gain the life which is in him. Many characteristic phrases of Jesus and the apostles give us to understand that they regarded man unregenerated as dead. This word, of course, has a figurative meaning. It was not that physical death had come, but rather that the life lived was of so perishable a sort as not to be considered real life from the standpoint of its true assessment. The gift of Christ was life. To live truly was to have been quickened by him. Without him the soul was dead. Similar expressions are used frequently in our own attempt to describe the inability of particular men to appreciate the beauties of music or of art. Dead to harmony, dead to the beauty of color, dead to the glories of nature, dead to the wonders of science, are expressions which are common in describing partially educated and thus only partially wakened natures.

The fundamental attribute of God, in the Old Testament as well as in the New, is life-giving power. It is true that God is spoken of as love, but this no more describes his essential being than does any other characteristic of his disposition. It is not love, nor justice, nor omnipresence, nor omniscience, which defines his being, but life. In the Old Testament he is "the living God," and by this is signified not merely the existing one, but the one having life within himself, its primal fount and source. This was the name which he gave himself when sending Moses as the national leader. "Jehovah" signifies "the living one," the one whose life is not dependent, but original. Christ came as the disclosure of the life of God. That life was made flesh and dwelt among us. He said of himself, "I am come that they might have life, and have it abundantly." His most intimate biographer writes, "In him was life, and that life was the light of men," the essential quality which illuminated the sphere of human life, otherwise darkened by the gloom and shadow of a weak and partial life.

The chief purpose of Jesus was the impartation of life. How was it possible that men could secure this divine and imperishable quality which was in him? Without it they have but the semblance and show of things.

"Possessing him they all possess
Wisdom and strength and righteousness
And holiness complete."

But how was this life attained? There are three ways in which this significant transformation is represented in the New Testament. The first is an agricultural figure, in which the seed is described as falling into the soil and springing forth into the new life. The good word is the implanted seed. This is the message of the Gospel; it is the story of the Christ; it is the essence of his life deposited in the soil of the human soul and left to spring up under favorable conditions into fullness of growth. Yet this is but a figure of speech, such a figure indeed as those which abound in the Holy Word, but still a figure. The reality lies yet unexpressed.

Another illustration is taken from biological phenomena. Jesus describes the one who follows him as being born again. He even commands this process, and though his first hearer utterly mistook his meaning, we may gather something from the figure as to the fact. It is a new life. That much is clear. It is not the old life made over. There is an impartation of a new germ of being. The figure of the child issuing into life is descriptive of the phenomena of spiritual birth. Water and the Spirit are the concomitant elements of this regeneration. The one is the inward and quickening power, the other the outward symbol. It is easy to understand that Jesus is describing to Nicodemus the wakening of faith in the soul, and the issue of that faith in obedience through the visible action of baptism. But still the words, "born again," constitute a figure, and not the description of the actual fact.

If we take a third form in which the process reveals itself in the New Testament, it will be that of actual facts presented by early Christian experience; and these facts lie in four successive lines of approach to the possession of the life of Christ. The first is the holy vision, like the revealing of the divine form to Isaiah in the temple; like the appearance of the wonder-working Master to the suddenly-aroused Peter in the boat. The vision of Christ is the first step toward the regenerate life. To behold him in the beauty of his character, in the revealing and persuading love which he exhibits, in the attitude of a fair and yet attainable ideal—this is the vision which allures and charms the beholder until he longs for its possession. Then comes the second step, when the vision of beauty has melted into the vision of love. It is no longer a distant admiration, but the quickening of warm and vital currents within the soul. The life of Christ must ever produce in human hearts a responding love where it is given place. Next the charm of love grows into the passion for possession. One cannot be satisfied to behold the object of affection unpossessed. All the energies are aroused to this one divine pursuit. To know Christ is to be filled with an enthusiasm to become like him, which is the supreme quest. At last the consummation is reached when the divine and consenting life comes into the possession of the yearning heart. There is no reluctance to be encountered, but only an answering and exceeding eagerness. Christ waits to be possessed by all who desire him. Then the question alone remains of the capacity of embodiment of his life in one's own. And the answer to this question can only come by Christian experience. This process of vision, love, possession and likeness may go on continuously through years, or it may come to sudden ripening in a moment.

In these regards the great affections of human life form a striking analogy to the transforming love of Christ. When the ideal of a prized and admired nature is set before a man he is charmed by its beauty, but does not love at first. This ideal may be the life of sweetheart or of friend. Then, little by little, love takes up the harp of life and possession becomes the passion of the soul. When this at last is attained, a true love consummates itself in likeness, and two minds with a single thought are the result of this divine possession. It is not strange that we speak of a man so changed by love as "a new man." He has been regenerated by the power of a divine passion.

If, now, the object of this love be the divinest which human life can know, its power to transform will be vastly augmented and the result will be a nature like to that which is in Christ. Of such a life there is no doubt. It manifests itself in every act. It is not by means of tests of worship, creed or organization that it declares itself. These are all helpful agencies, as they yield benefit to the new life. This life naturally issues in exercises of obedience and service which are the commands and ideals of our Lord. But the real thing is the life within. Without this all else would be superficial and transient.

But the most significant fact regarding the regenerate life is its eternity. Its quality is inextinguishable. Eternal life, as Jesus defines it, consists in knowing God and the Son. It is not a life which waits to begin elsewhere and afterwhile; it is already growing within the soul, and expecting larger opportunities for companionship with the object of its love in years without end.

THE CHRONICLER'S DESK.

THE Chronicler is in receipt of a note from an eminent preacher and profound thinker, a man of breadth and vision and wide experience, who declares that the passion for preaching is growing upon him. This man was deficient in the inspiration of passion and the enthusiasm of humanity in the early days of his ministry, but the afflatus of insight and the inflaming Spirit has come upon him, and the chiefest of his joys is to preach Christ.

The Chronicler must plead guilty to a bit of practical heresy on this point. He has preached a great deal, but he cannot honestly say that he loves to preach. He has tried to exercise a conscientious and painstaking care in thoroughness of preparation for all his pulpit ministrations, and to do his full duty in the presentation of the Christ to men, but all this he realizes comes from a sense of obligation rather than the inspiration of a passionate love of preaching. This may be temperamental, but it is not ideal. The Chronicler frankly acknowledges the deficiency and confesses that he would love to love to preach. A man ought to be in love with his calling. The preacher's high calling of God in Christ Jesus should change a vocation into a mission, a sense of obligation into a passion, the labor of duty into a labor of love. When the preacher becomes a prophet the preaching of the cross becomes a holy and quenchless enthusiasm, the joy and crown of existence, the divinest and noblest of human vocations.

The Chronicler has known men who loved to preach more than they loved what they were preaching. An egotistical, self-important ministerial harlequin delights to disport himself in the presence of a congregation because it provides him an opportunity to win applause and court popularity and get a name unto himself. Some men have a passion for talking, accompanied generally by quite a facility for fluency and volubility of speech, and there is no music to a man of this type half so sweet and charming as the sound of his own voice. The Chronicler, however, is not speaking of the degenerates or mere generaters of the pulpit who use the sacred desk for about the same purposes that other men employ the lecture platform or the political hustings or the traditional stump of the spellbinders. He is referring to good and honest men who preach from a deep sense of their consciousness of the world's need and shared responsibility in the great redemptive sacrifice laid upon them by a divine hand and heart, but who have not attained their ideal in a holy, consuming passion for the preaching of the cross that makes the hardest task easy and the heaviest burden light.

Is it allowable to make the enthusiasm of preaching a progressive and cultivable virtue in the equipment of the minister of Christ? It is. May it not be that our deficiency of passion is a lack of appreciation of the message we deliver? Does it arise from a defective sympathy with lost men? Does it originate in a limited supply of the Holy Spirit? If we possessed the passion for souls that has characterized all the great ministries from Paul to Spurgeon, would not the passion for preaching, the instrument of reaching souls, spring up within us as a spontaneous and irresistible enthusiasm? Let us pray for the Master's enthusiasm of humanity and Paul's passion for souls, and see what effect it will have on our preaching.

Dr. H. C. G. Moule, a Cambridge professor lately elevated to the see of Durham, to whom the readers of The Christian Century were introduced last week in a beautiful sketch by "A Bookman," sent a letter recently to "The Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Union" of a non-conformist church, in which he writes a winsome paragraph that touches the heart of the passion for preaching, although the subject is not directly referred to:

Pray, brethren, above all things, for a large outpouring of the power of the blessed Spirit upon the Church. There are a thousand subsidiary things. But this is our supreme "thing needful." We need unspeakably the developed power of the Paraclete to glorify Christ to our own souls; to fill us in living reality with the Word of the Cross, the supernatural, eternal message of him who, for us, "was dead, and is alive for evermore;" to fill us with that "fulness" which must overflow in life and word; to lift us to the highest ministerial aim, and keep us there; to give us an insight, sympathy, and power which not the most exalted culture of the finest natural gifts can ever give; to make us strong with men, because prevalent with God; yea, to make us "vessels meet for the Master's use"—our one, our dear ambition.

If there is within us, brother ministers, the developed power of the Paraclete to glorify Christ to our own souls, to fill us in living reality with the Word of the Cross, the supernatural, eternal message of Jesus, there will be indeed, there must be, the overflowing in life and deed and the lifting to the highest ministerial aim, the infilling and outflashing of the Divine Spirit that makes the passion of the cross a necessity in the preaching of the Word.

There are current misconceptions of the preacher's message that have much to do with the superficial and artificial and unpassionate preaching of these days. The parrotism of professional preaching is the curse and blight of the modern pulpit. We learn the subject matter of our sermons from text books and theological seminaries—the dogmas of our creeds and the doctrines of our churches—and this we give forth by rote from the resources of memory, untested by experience, untouched by emotion, unappropriated by the spiritual and personal consciousness of the speaker. The repetition of a message delivered to some one else, is given us. Must not the preacher, if he really preaches at all, get his message from God, and not from church courts and theological seminaries? Dare we speak as the mouthpiece of God when God is not speaking through us? Can we speak to men with effect and power unless God speaks to us? Is the pulpit a voice, or is it only an echo? Are we repeating a message second-hand which has not passed through the alembic of our own consciousness, or do we speak the authentic word of God from God himself? How can we expect the people to listen to us if we do not listen to God? How can we teach the people unless we ourselves are taught of God? Let us hope it will not be said of us as Keble said of the disobedient man of God in the Old Testament:

"Alas, my brother, round thy tomb
In sorrow kneeling, and in fear,
We read the pastor's doom
Who speaks and will not hear."

"All manner of sins may be forgiven a preacher," says Mr. Horton in his "Verbum Dei," "a harsh voice, a clumsy delivery, a bad pronunciation, an insufficient scholarship, a crude doctrine, an ignorance of men; but there is one defect which cannot be forgiven, for it is a kind of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost; it cannot be forgiven him if he preaches when he has not received a message from God to deliver. Woe unto those prophets whom the Lord hath not sent." If there were more men in the pulpit with a passion for preaching, would there not be more people in the pews with a passion for hearing?

THE RIGHT USE OF GOD'S MERCIES.

OD'S mercies are blessings only when rightly used. There is no reason for rejoicing in what we have received if it has not ministered to our higher life.

It is usual on Thanksgiving day to take an inventory of the things for which we ought to be thankful. The list is a long one. Especially do we delight to recall the goodness of God in bestowing upon us the fruits of the field, and to rejoice before him "according to the joy in harvest."

"The summer's work is over and done,
The brown fields sleep in the waning sun;
Fruit of the harvest is gathered in,
And grain is heaped both in barn and bin.
And up from the homes that are richly blest
Dowered with abundance and crowned with rest,
And up from the hearts that in highest mood
The lowliest bow in their gratitude,
Anthems arise to the Giver of all,
Whose love beholds if a sparrow fall—
Whose matchless grace on the earth hath smiled,
Like a parent's look on a cradled child."

But the question arises, why are we dowered with abundance? Are we fed simply for the sake of being kept alive, or of adding so many pounds of flesh? The ox is fattened to be eaten; that is the end of the ox. But what is the end, the true end, of man? God supplies our wants by sending us seedtime and harvest; what is the purpose for which he keeps us alive?

First of all, then, it is a cause for thankfulness that God thinks us worth preserving, that he thinks it worth while to keep us alive; that he considers us worth all that he is doing for us. God must see in us great possibilities. A farmer raises a horse for what he expects to get out of him. For four years or so there is nothing but outlay. Sometimes a horse is not worth his keep; he eats his head off, as we say. Are we worth all that God is doing for us? Are we worth our keep? We are not fed for the sake of being fed. We do not live to eat, but eat to live. Some one said, "It costs me ten thousand a year to live." "Do you think it worth it?" was the reply. Are we worth what we cost?

It is a cause of thankfulness that God thinks the world worth preserving. Disappointed with it in many ways he must be. If we had the power would we not sometimes be tempted to blot it out. He keeps it swinging in space for a purpose. Large harvests are not the end of its continued existence, but improved lives; God is less anxious in making it a more productive world than in making it a better world. Because we live in fraternal relations a bountiful harvest means abounding possibility of service. There is no lack of supplies, but there is often very faulty distribution. A boy in a mission Sunday school had come to believe in God's fatherly love. His companions tried to shake his faith by asking, "If God really loves you, why does he not tell somebody to send you a pair of shoes, and coal enough to keep you warm in winter?" The boy thought a moment and then said, as the tears rushed to his eyes: "I guess he does tell somebody and somebody forgets." The boy was right. If human want is not relieved it is not because somebody is not told to relieve it, but because somebody forgets.

It is a further cause for thankfulness that God provides for all the world so royally. His blessings are varied and abundant. They evince his forethought, his providence—that is his fore-seeing. What he sees his children need he prepares and provides, planning in all things to secure moral ends.

We ought, therefore, to be thankful not only for outward things, such as good crops, health and prosperous times, but for everything that ministers to the higher life. Trials may be among our greatest blessings. "My cup runneth over" was said by one who had many trials.

Nor ought we to be thankful only for pleasant things. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." "In everything give thanks." Instead of seeking to escape trials, we are to use them for noble ends. We are to believe that divine love is at the heart of all things. "Every spring and wheel fits into its own place. Every providence is jeweled with goodness."

"Thy lot is hard—shouldst thou complain
And mourn thy bitter part?
Nay, let God's love and mercy rain
Into thy opened heart."

There is reason to thank God if the true end of life has in any measure been realized; if we have been able so to use the bounties of God's providence as to get spiritual good out of them. And there is still greater reason to thank God if we are able to say, "Thou hast put gladness in my heart more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased." To thank God for spiritual blessings is to thank him for the essential things. Comfort is good, character is better.

"Lord, for the erring thought
Not into evil wrought;
Lord, for the wicked will Betrayed and baffled still;
For the heart from itself kept,
Our thanksgiving accept."

I received a letter from a lad, asking me to find him an easy berth. To this I replied: "You cannot be an editor; do not try law; do not think of the ministry; let alone all ships, shops and merchandise; abhor politics; don't practice medicine; be not a farmer nor mechanic; neither be a soldier nor a sailor. Don't work. Don't study. Don't think—none of these are easy. Oh, my son! You have come into a hard world. I know of only one easy place in it, and that is the grave."—Henry Ward Beecher.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A Corner on Pumpkins.

EVER since the time when Joseph made a corner on grain in Egypt there have been those who have wrung fortunes out of other people's necessities. One of the smallest cases of this kind on record is surely that of the Chicago dealer who has cornered the pumpkin market, thus increasing the cost of Young America's jack lantern and levying a tax upon the pumpkin pie which is an indispensable part of every Thanksgiving dinner.

Is the Church a Misfit?

Dr. Rainsford of New York, who believes in the saloon as a reforming agency, looks upon the modern church as "a good deal of a misfit." He says that "many good but ill-informed or lop-sided people are putting an immense amount of religious energy into organizations mistakenly called churches."

Suggested Amendment of Marriage Ceremony

In view of the laxity of the marriage laws and the facility with which divorces are obtained, one of our Chicago dailies suggests that society ought to arise and demand that the preachers change the marriage formula to "What God hath joined together let no man put asunder—for at least six months."

Violent Deaths.

In two days, during last week, nineteen deaths from violence were reported at the coroner's office. Of these eight were from suicide, six were from accidents connected with street cars and railway trains, and five from other forms of violence. This is a fearful showing; and indicates something radically wrong in the body politic. A society in which human life is held so cheap is not in a healthy way.

Europe Coming Here to School.

France is about to establish in this country, probably in Chicago, a technical institute to give French students an opportunity of studying American industrial methods. This institute will be under the direction of the Minister of Commerce. Indirectly this is a recognition of American progress in industrial development. Other nations are finding out that they have something to learn from us, but it will be a dark day for us when we hug to ourselves the flattering delusion that we have nothing to learn from them.

Christian Science Assailed.

The characterization of Christian Science given by Father Sherman in a recent lecture as "a rag-bag of follies—a system that is both blasphemous and damnable," has called forth an indignant protest from the adherents of that cult. And for good reason. Such wholesale denunciation overshoots its mark; and strengthens the cause against which it is directed. Christian Science is not all bad. On the practical side it has been of immense benefit to thousands of people. It has healed disease; it has taken fret and worry out of many lives. Its benefits every unprejudiced person must admit. It is to the explanation which it has to give to these results that we object. It is a philosophy rather than a religion; and it is a philosophy the most inane and foolish that was ever concocted in a human brain. In an early issue of The Christian Century we intend to turn the white light of honest criticism upon this entire subject.

The Main Element of Success.

At the vesper service of the Second Congregational church of Oak Park on Sunday last, Judge Carter, in speaking of the elements of success, uttered a wise and timely word when he said: "Character is the vital thing in success. If this be not the highest ideal, the great mass of men could struggle through this life as best they might without hope of success."

Marriage by Telephone.

Two people, one in Chicago and the other in Kansas City, who found it inconvenient to be present at their own weddings attempted to surmount the difficulty and consummate the marriage ceremony by the use of the long distance telephone. But a matter-of-fact judge has expressed the opinion that such a marriage is not binding. There are always a few people whose love of the romantic will lead them to do things which are unusual and foolish, but the light way in which the marriage contract is generally regarded is one of the signs of the times which it is not pleasant to contemplate.

Manifesto of New Pastor of People's Church.

In his opening sermon as pastor of the People's church, Rev. Frank Crane struck a high spiritual note. He said:

It shall be my business to disclose Jesus. I have but one message; it is to preach Jesus. If you ask my creed, it is there—the personal influence of Jesus. If you ask what I have to offer for the good of the city, it is that we need men who shall try to be like Jesus. If you want my views on current topics, there is but one topic current here—the deep need the human soul has for God and the satisfaction of that need in Jesus.

In his interesting book on "The Religion of Tomorrow," the central thought is that religion is the personal influence of God upon man; and that Christianity shows this personal influence exerted in its fullest form through Jesus Christ. Judging from the above manifesto this thought is to be the central one in his preaching in the People's church. And in this we rejoice, for it touches upon what is essential in Christianity, and has in it a dynamic force which may be brought into saving contact with every side of social and individual life.

The Office of the Preacher.

A writer in the November number of The Arena in the iconoclastic fashion of that magazine has some rather severe strictures to offer regarding the office of the preacher. He says that "it would almost seem that all there is left for the parson to do is to bury us, for help us to live in virtue of his office he cannot. As a man he may give us the example of an unselfish life, but as the exponent of a dead creed what can he offer us?" Yet this writer admits the necessity of something answering to that for which the preacher has stood; he admits the need of a brotherhood of wise men—men of vision, men of insight, men of spiritual power, who can minister to the deepest needs of man. He says "The world is full of kindly souls who can minister to the body—carrying jellies to the sick and bread and bacon to the needy; but few there be that can minister to a mind diseased." All of which simply emphasizes the truth that the value of a preacher will in the last analysis be estimated by his spiritual influence. Emerson voiced the thought of many when he said, "I love a prophet of the soul." In the present day the priest must give place to the prophet. And the preacher who has a message to give that has come fresh from heaven and that has first of all been dissolved in his own consciousness will never lack an audience fit. While men will turn away from the trained official, they will welcome the spiritual leader whose word brings comfort to the sorrowful, hope to the despairing, light to the perplexed and salvation to the lost. The office of the preacher will never fail of recognition except when the preacher fails in his true mission.

Anarchy Still Smouldering.

Those who imagine that anarchy has been stamped out are very much mistaken. At a large meeting held at Brant's Hall on Nov. 11th to commemorate the anniversary of the death of the five Haymarket anarchists who were hanged fourteen years ago, sentiments were uttered which may well give us pause. The meeting was orderly and was marked by a subdued and restrained enthusiasm, but there was no mistaking the sentiments of these 1,200 people. The five Haymarket anarchists were spoken of as "our heroic murdered comrades, the teachers of a new and noble ideal of life." The principles which caused their execution were said to have been made more enduring, and more widely known. One speaker declared that "it is the vainest of all things to suppose that out of government can ever come any good whatever." If the sowing of dragons' teeth be allowed need we wonder if there come up a host of armed men? An anarchist meeting which was announced to be held in London on the same evening "to commemorate the legal murder of the Chicago anarchists," was promptly suppressed by the police.

Jesus and the Jews.

"He came unto his own and his own received him not." With hearts veiled by prejudice the Jews have turned away from the greatest of their race. A change is, however, coming over them. As a straw indicating the new current, take these significant words of Rabbi Meyer of Immanuel Temple, Milwaukee, addressed to his own people on a recent occasion:

Our children will learn about Jesus from the lips of others. Why not learn about him from the lips of the Jew in the Sunday school and in the public utterances? Some of our clever Jews have already learned some things about Jesus which are not compatible with views of our religion. We may be able to correct these errors with our children in the Sunday school. A study of the life and teachings of Jesus has become a necessity among the Jews.

Reference was made to the rabbinical conference held in Philadelphia in July of this year. A committee reported on this question. Though the committee could not recommend a study of Jesus from a theological view-point, yet it was suggested that, with profit, his life might be studied historically, leaving each to be guided by freedom and good judgment. In harmony with this report the Rabbi strongly urged a course of study of the life and teachings of Christianity. He made a strong appeal and judging from the cordial greeting he received at the close of his address a favorable impression was made.

CONTRIBUTED

My Triumph.

The autumn-time has come;
On woods that dream of bloom,
And over purpling vines,
The low sun fainter shines.

The aster-flower is failing,
The hazel's gold is paling;
Yet overhead more near
The eternal stars appear!

And present gratitude
Insures the future's good,
And for the things I see
I trust the things to be;

That in the paths untrod,
And the long days of God,
My feet shall still be led,
My heart be comforted.
* * * *

I feel the earth move sunward,
I join the great march onward,
And take, by faith, while living
My freehold of thanksgiving.

—Whittier.

TEMPERANCE A SOCIAL RATHER THAN AN INDIVIDUAL QUESTION.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, PH. D.

IN VIEW of the deep and wide-spread interest in the Symposium on Temperance in last week's Christian Century an afterword may be allowed on an aspect of the subject which was not touched upon in the discussion.

The Bible is a book of principles, and not of rules, and the life of the present time is as different from that of the Patriarchs, or the time of Christ, as two conditions of society could well be. It is possible to illustrate the evils of strong drink upon the individual or society from the Scriptures. Noah's drunkenness and shame, Belshazzar's revelry, Herod's birthday debauch and its tragic ending, the drunken abominations of the Corinthians, are all illustrations of the power of strong drink to steal away men's brains and self-respect. Then there are numerous instances of the power of self-control. The abstinence of Daniel and his friends; the Nazarite vows of Samuel, Samson and John the Baptist, the splendid example of the Rechabites, are all instructive. Then there are almost numberless admonitions to self-control, temperance and sobriety, with like numbers of warnings against the ruin of intemperance, ungoverned appetite and passion, scattered through the Old and New Testaments, notably in the Book of Proverbs and in the Epistles.

But the attempt to find in Scripture a passage that meets the situation at the present time upon the question of temperance is as futile as to find there a reproof for the dance of modern society. The temperance question of the Bible was chiefly an individual question; the question of temperance today is a social question. In the days of the Old Testament and the New the drink habit was an individual matter; every man, especially in the earlier period of the national history, was his own wine-maker and merchant. He used it as he used other articles of diet, and if in its use he ran into excess, squandered his patrimony and beggared his family, it was still a matter of restricted importance; he alone bore the responsibility. No one was particularly the richer if he became a drunkard; no class of men fattened on his poverty; the saloon was still a long way in the distance. There was no organization whose purpose it was to debauch the manhood of the nation through strong drink, and line its own purse at the expense of a drunkard constituency. The nation looked upon drunkenness, not so much as a crime, but as the mark of a foolish man; it was the folly of the drunkard that the Proverbs held up to ridicule.

Today, the whole matter has largely changed front. The drink question is no longer a theme of individual interest; it is a social question and must be approached from a social standpoint. It is possible to train the child in the habits of sobriety, and no effort should be spared in the home, the public school and the Sunday school to accomplish this end. It is possible to improve greatly the tone of public opinion and increase the sense of responsibility on the part of teachers and parents through the medium of the public press. It is possible by the power of moral suasion, or of medical treatment, to reclaim many from the drink habit, and restore them to useful lives. But beyond all these one is confronted by the fact that the question of the drink habit is largely unsolved yet. Its power is located very largely in the greed of men who are banded together, not simply to supply, but to create the appetite for strong drink, and the forces of our social life become amazingly helpful to them in the furtherance of this diabolical purpose. The Christian home sends out many young men, fortified with good principles, to begin the career of life. But where there is one such young man, there are probably a score whom the saloon can reach and master by its temptations.

The Sunday-school has the attention, one hour in the week, of multitudes of children and young people, and if the best use is made of the time, at least twice a year, the question of temperance and personal sobriety may be brought to their attention by the teacher who is thoroughly consecrated to the responsible duties of his position. But the saloon is working night and day with appalling success to reach and overthrow that same class of young people. The public school, where the teacher is faithful and competent, is able to give wholesome and scientific instruction upon the structure of the human system and the injurious effects of alcohol; but where one child is permanently reached by such influence, a dozen will pass through it without effective results, while thousands never receive even this modicum of temperance instruction. Drunkards now and then are rescued in greater or less numbers from the swift stream that is bearing them down toward the abyss. But where one is thus rescued by moral suasion or medical skill, a hundred are plunged into the stream further up by the power of the organized and relentless saloon.

This whole question is a social and not an individual matter. It is no longer a question of the right of an individual to ruin himself and impoverish his family; it is the question whether society as a whole shall permit itself to be slowly poisoned to death by the league of money-loving, soul-destroying rum-sellers. It is the question whether the American home and the American child are worth as much as the spoils of office and the gratification of political ambitions. It is the question whether the individual honor, the domestic safety and the industrial prosperity of the country, all of which hinge upon the liquor question, are of more importance than the tariff on wool, the price of pig-iron, and the number of grains in a silver dollar. When we are willing, as a people, to put into rigid political and economic practice the maxim that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," then we may expect to see a better day. When we are willing to subordinate every material question to this one of paramount importance, then we may expect the reward of a national conscience in true national health and prosperity.

FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT.

E. DOUGLAS SHIELDS.

THE most interesting event in the non-conformist church world this week was Dr. John Hunter's assumption of his duties as minister of the King's Weigh House church, Grosvenor Square, London.

Dr. Hunter is a Scotchman. His father belonged to the Church of Scotland, but his mother was an Episcopalian, and it is probably from her that John Hunter inherits his love of form in worship. His parents were not able to give him a college education; but by diligence and zeal he worked his way through Spring Hill College (now Mansfield College, Oxford). He was "a lad o' pairts," and was physically as well as mentally fitted to brave the privations and strain which have to be undergone by the poor student.

After a pastorate of fourteen years in England he was called in 1885 to Trinity church, Glasgow. There he has labored until now. Under him the church grew to the utmost capacity of the building and a close relationship existed between it and the University of Glasgow. It was there also that Dr. Hunter perfected his elaborate ritual. It is based on the form of service in the Episcopal Church of England, from which several of the prayers are taken. This liturgy is contained in the "Book of Devotional Services," and it abounds in beauty of thought and diction. Among the thoughts for quiet hours printed in his calendar, Dr. Hunter has the following: "It is not so much a forward movement we require in these days as an inward movement. The course of true and living religion is, indeed, most onward when it is most inward. Religions and reformations of religions date from the quickenings of the roots of faith in the personal soul. We are trusting too much to machinery, to agencies and organizations. We are so much helped from without that we are neglecting the deep springs within. We are losing our souls. We must pray to God to restore our souls and help him to do it. We must have deeper experiences. The active man must also be a thoughtful and devout man, and the broad church a deep church."

It would be safe to foretell that a great many of our American cousins will wend their way to Dr. Hunter's church next summer, and a more particular description of him as a man and as a preacher will therefore not come amiss.

Dr. Hunter is of medium height and of broad and powerful build. His dark hair is worn slightly long, but off from his oval forehead. His face is massive, clean-shaven and strong, his mouth sensitive and mobile. But when he entered the church last Sunday with swift steps, wearing his black gown, the red and white hood of Aberdeen University and the bands of a Scottish minister, only the brightness of his eyes betrayed consciousness of the episcopalian character of the occasion. In low, distinct and intense tones he read every word, not looking at his audience save now and then when, with upward and leonine shake of his head, he gave a swift glance at the people from under his brows. Every word was forced from him by reason of its necessity. His quiet intensity thrilled, as restrained and reasoned power always must. During the first part of the service he was evidently nervous, and one soon felt that he was listening to a man in whom an impelling assurance of a divine message and mission struggled with a constitutional diffidence. His text was from I. Corinthians 3: 9; the theme of the sermon being "God's Fellow-Workers." It contained gems of thought, flashes of epigram and an exquisite word picture of a lonely churchyard in Perthshire. The following are some of his most striking passages:

"It is a bold claim to make—that of being a fellow-worker of God."

"In one sense all things serve him, in that he makes all things, even the wickedness of men, to work out his purposes. But St. Paul meant much more than this—a conscious and willing co-operation with God."

"No man has a right to place himself in the position of a leader of men unless he believes himself to be a fellow-worker with God."

"There has been a sharp ecclesiastical line drawn between churchmen and laymen, but God knows no such distinction. There are diversities of gifts and offices, but one Spirit. There is no distinction save of character. All who minister in any way to human weal are coworkers with God. Paul had the feeling of helping God. He felt the sacredness and responsibility of all callings. He felt that the power of God was not only in the world without, but that it was also in the world within. He felt he was a part of the power of God."

"He who made man and sent him here has work for him to do. The Spirit of God is imminent in earnest workers."

"God has made himself dependent on the fidelity of man. God and man are not two, but one; they belong essentially to each other. God quickening and inspiring, and man opening his life to be a part of the divine mission. What miseries have arisen from our striving to find God apart from man! Some people feel that they have to stand by and see God do the work. God and man work together."

"What God has need of to do his work is a fully exercised heart and mind, a strong, consecrated will and disciplined faculties. Martin Luther said 'God has need of strong men. He cannot get on without them.'"

"When God made the world he did not finish it. Genesis is never ended. Science tells us that the products of nature are of a low order until man by his skill cultivates and perfects them."

"The Hebrew Poem of Beginnings says that God made man after his own image. Genesis was prophecy—a seeing of the man at the end. God prepared the world out of chaos into readiness for man. Nature was then a wilderness for man to make a garden.

Clearly he is made in the image of the Creator, working to bring nature toward the perfection of the Creator."

"Prayer is not meant to be a substitute for action. It is a means of obtaining wisdom and strength, a power to hold us at our best and enable us to achieve tomorrow something better than our best of today."

These extracts can give only an incomplete idea of what was a powerful sermon. It was long, although read rapidly. Dr. Hunter is by no means an orator. His delivery is almost free from gestures, of which he seems to have only one with his right arm, and one when he is nervous with his left; his favorite attitude being to stand with hands clasped. His chief characteristic is intensity. While listening to him one finds one's self involuntarily grasping one's book or leaflet tightly, as one becomes imbued with his spirit. Yet he addresses his congregation with ease of manner. His head flung up does not at once bend over the page again, but takes in the auditorium and galleries with its glance.

His style of sermon and delivery, coming as it does in the midst of a beautiful and somewhat gorgeous service, reminds one of a mountain torrent that rushes through heather-clad moor and rich woodland. The impetuous stream is always clear, save when it reaches the deep pools—and what is a stream without pools to the fisherman?

One may safely predict a career of great usefulness for Dr. Hunter here in London. His influence will be a deep rather than an extended one; for as he himself says, "a man serves his denomination best not by running hither and thither, but by building up a strong church and making it a center of the best influence in a city or community."

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION.

E. W. LOUNSBURY.

THE American Baptist Missionary Union was organized May 14, 1814, in Philadelphia, Pa., and was incorporated under the name of "The General Missionary Convention of the Baptist Denomination in the United States of America for Foreign Missions." It came to be known as the "Triennial Convention," in consequence of its holding its meetings once in three years. In 1840 the name of the organization was changed to "The American Baptist Missionary Union."

The conversion of Adoniram Judson to Baptist views while on his way to India as a missionary, and the expression of his willingness to be considered a missionary of the Baptist denomination, should there be a society formed in America, was the direct cause under God for the organization.

At the present time the Missionary Union has its representatives on the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa and in the Philippine Islands. In Asia work is being carried on in the countries of India, including Burma, Assam and India proper, China and Japan; in Africa along the Congo river; in Europe, in Germany, Sweden, Russia, Finland, Denmark, Norway, France and Spain.

Burma.

Burma was the first field occupied by the American Baptist Missionary Union. Rev. Adoniram Judson, being expelled from India by the East India Company, sailed for Rangoon and began his missionary labors there in 1813. After nearly six years of toil and hardship he had the joy of baptizing his first convert. Today the Union has 29 stations with 170 missionaries; 689 churches having a total membership of 39,065, with 1,533 native helpers.

Assam.

In 1836 the request came to the American Baptists to open mission work among the many tribes of Assam. The request was granted and missionaries were sent who opened the first station in 1841 at Sadiya in the extreme northeast of Assam. At the present time the Union has 11 stations, with 52 missionaries; 75 churches, having a membership of 6,532 with 258 native helpers.

India.

The work of the Missionary Union in India proper is given to the territory occupied by the Telugus and is known as the "Telugu Mission." This work was commenced in response to a request from Rev. Amos Sutton, a missionary of the English General Baptists, and in 1835 a party of missionaries sailed from Boston for Calcutta with instructions to open a mission among the Telugus. The history of this mission has been a most remarkable one; the earlier years were apparently so unfruitful that the abandonment of this field was seriously considered. The reading of the beautiful poem entitled "The Lone Star," written by Dr. S. F. Smith at the time this question was under consideration, led to the decision to continue this mission. Later years have proved that the decision was a right one. Jan. 1, 1867, a church was formed at Ongole with 8 members. The gospel had been preached in a thousand villages and converts were multiplied. The whole number baptized in the Telugu Mission to Dec. 31, 1876, was 4,394, of whom 3,407 were in the church at Ongole. Today there are 25 stations among the Telugus with 98 missionaries; 114 churches with a total membership of 58,418 and 984 native helpers.

China.

The work of the Missionary Union in China is divided into six departments: The mission in Siam, the South China mission, the Hakka mission, the East China mission, the West China mission and the Central China mission. Work for the Chinese was commenced in 1833 in Bangkok, Siam, and in 1843 the station at Ningpo, China, was opened. Today the Union supports 15 stations in China with 70 missionaries; there are 32 Chinese churches with a membership of 3,353 and 182 native helpers.

Japan.

The work in Japan was opened in Yokohama in 1872 by the acceptance of a missionary already on the field. The first Baptist church in Japan was organized at Yokohama in 1873 with 8 members, three of whom were natives. Other stations were opened from time to time and missionaries sent out until today the Union has a working force of 54 missionaries occupying 8 stations; there are 27 churches with a membership of 2,011 and 153 native helpers. A revival of great power has visited Japan within the past few months and a large number of converts are added to the church.

Africa.

The Congo Mission came into the hands of American Baptists by a remarkable chain of providential circumstances. It had previously been known as the Livingstone Inland Mission and was under the superintendence of Dr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness of London. The development of the work was such that it became too large to be conducted as a personal mission and was tendered to the Missionary Union with a force of 21 missionaries occupying 7 stations. The work on the Congo has been wonderfully blessed and in August, 1886, began the remarkable revival known as "The Pentecost on the Congo." In a few weeks 1,062 persons cast away their idols and declared themselves the followers of Jesus. At the present time the Union has 7 stations on the Congo with 32 missionaries; 17 churches with a total membership of 2,784 and 121 native helpers.

Philippine Islands.

The work in the Philippine Islands was opened in 1900 with one missionary and one native helper. The outlook for the work in these islands is full of promise; the people who have been so long under the bondage of superstition and error rejoice in the opportunity now afforded them of free access to the Bible and the teachings of the Christian missionary. The Union has one missionary on the field and two under appointment. One baptism has been reported, while a multitude of inquirers are seeking the missionary.

Of the 954 native churches in heathen lands 579 are self-supporting. There are 1,335 out-stations and 1,110 chapels; 6 theological seminaries and 302 students for the ministry; 91 high schools and 1,347 other schools.

European Missions.

The European missions report 1,000 churches with a membership of 103,763, with 5,546 baptisms during the last year and 1,231 preachers.

THE POETRY OF PREACHING.

JOHN WRIGHT BUCKHAM.

THE poet is a creator. The creator is a poet, whether his creation be a sonnet or a song or a statue or a sermon. No preacher who has caught the inspiration of his vocation has failed to feel the poetry of preaching. It belongs with the other divine arts that are creative, rhythmic, inspired. The similarity between a great sermon and a noble poem is clear. In each there is the same glow of imagination, the same harmony of proportion, progress, impression. The form may not be identical, nor the purpose, but both the method and nature of poem and sermon are the same.

No one who feels the justice of the ban under which the "flowery sermon" is placed, in the interest of reality and sincerity, would care to remove it. Nevertheless, the sermon that has not poetry as well as logic in it is a failure. For the clothing of poetry is as essential to truth as the skeleton of logic. By poetry, of course, is not meant verse, but the products of imagination, beauty, harmony, idealism. Poetry is truth in its beauty—truth as it appeals, not merely to the intellect, but to the imagination and the emotions, truth enkindled, irradiated, transfigured. Poetry, in this sense, is a conspicuous element in the power of the great preachers—in Paul, Augustine, Luther, Newman, Robertson, Edwards, Beecher, Phillips Brooks. Such preaching is musical, harmonious, poetic. In it men hear, as it were, the song of the winds, the melody of brooks and birds, the roll of thunder. In it they see the glow of sunshine, the freshness of fields and woods and flowers, the azure of cleansed skies, the splendor of mountain peaks and the serene light of distant stars. It smacks of Nature, not superficially or æsthetically, but unconsciously, harmoniously, sympathetically.

In no modern preacher was the poetry of preaching more conspicuous than in Phillips Brooks. Phillips Brooks was a poet. The poetic instinct molded his thought, his expression, his life. Oftener than was known before his biography was published, this poetic impulse found expression in verse, and verse of a very high order. But still more completely and perfectly did the poetry that was in him reveal itself in his preaching. His sermons are poems—poems that move and thrill and uplift one like "The Ode to Immortality" or "In Memoriam" or "Paracelsus." And those who heard him know how perfectly the delivery of them corresponded with this poetic character, with what rush and fervor of imagination and beauty they were uttered, making the whole man not only an embodiment of "noble, sublime, godlike action," but of exalted, majestic, inspired poetry.

It may be said that such preaching, in which imagination, beauty, poetry are so prominent, simply pleases, captivates, enraptures, without producing conviction or action. The charge is based upon a false and incomplete understanding of life and the relation which poetry sustains to thought and conduct. The truest poetry, like the noblest music, does more than please. It inspires. And its inspiration issues in a sublimer faith, a nobler life and more Christ-like deeds.

While the foundations of the famous Bell Rock lighthouse on Inchcape Reef were being laid two men only, as the story goes, could remain on the rock at once. The chilling waves were almost too much for endurance and it began to be doubtful if the terrible task could be accomplished, when a sailor appeared with his flute and began to play to the workmen familiar airs, strains of home and country and battlefield. It was only music, the breathing of lips behind which was a soul, but it inspirited and sustained the exhausted toilers till their arduous work was done, and the Bell Rock lighthouse rose above the waves to light the mariner safely home. Even although men know beforehand the truth which the preacher utters, if the music, the poetry, the inspiration of preaching can, like the music of the sailor's flute, keep them from discouragement and failure and despair till their task is accomplished, preaching will never lose its place and power—so long as there are waves to be breasted and lives to be saved and work to be done.

Salem, Mass.

The Presbyterian says that, in 1855, Mr. Cobden heard the following petition in a Scotch church: "O Lord, we thank thee that thou hast brought the Pope into trouble, and we pray that thou would'st be mercifully pleased to increase the same."

Cardinal Manning's very candid friends used to tell this story of him: The cardinal once sat to a sculptor for his bust. During the sitting the sculptor discoursed on phrenology, and Manning made him point out on the head he was modelling the various "bumps." At last Manning asked, "Where is the organ of conscientiousness?" The sculptor walked across the room to where Manning was sitting, and, touching a certain part of the cardinal's cranium, said: "That's where it ought to be."

DEVOTION TO HEATHENISM.

BY W. REMFRY HUNT.

WHILE recently itinerating in the Chu-cheo district, in An-huei province, it was my privilege to witness an instance of remarkable devotion to heathenism. A Buddhist devotee, travel-stained, footsore and wearied, a would-be hermit priest of more than fifty summers, was traveling alone on a mission to Tai-shan, a high, sacred mountain in the province of Shantung.

One of the strangest things about the odd, rugged pilgrim was his patriarchal and dignified bearing. He might have passed for an incarnation of the Hindoo Shakyamuni Guatama. The priest was well marked with the insignia of his fraternity, and on his stolid, yellow face could be read the expression of determination, far-away hope and almost heroism.

"The vows
Of Heaven were on his heart; nor would he stay
To chance his hope on other creeds, or play
With shadows—till the end."

In his hand he carried a little wooden table about the size of a man's hand. On it was fastened a small incense holder and burner. Around his neck, and flowing beneath his loosely folded gown, were some beads and seals of other religious significance. On, on, on, he went; one, two, three, four, five, six measured paces; and then a very reverential prostration. This was repeated all along the high road, the monotony of such penance being occasionally varied by his lighting up a small bunch of incense and uttering longer and louder prayers.

Being interested in this deluded pilgrimage, I asked the prematurely-aged priest a few questions. He was polite, but reticent. Gaining his confidence by referring to the fact that his religion, like mine, was not native to China, we struck up an affinity which won him over to conversation. He thereupon informed me that his devotion to the task of traveling at the rate of six paces and a prostration, and the fact of continuing this performance through sunshine and rain, cold and heat, from sunrise to sunset until the sacred mountain was reached in "the province of the eastern hills," would secure for him much merit, as well as a high rank in the priesthood, and finally ensure for him a place in the shining ranks of the immortals.

Speaking with him on the delusions of heathenism and the hopelessness of man without God, he became peculiarly responsive. The idea of a mediator (middleman) between God and man in the fact of reconciliation seemed to interest him in a special sense, especially as the work and character of Christ were unfolded to him; yet he clung with tenacious pride to the rites, symbols, ceremonies and traditions of the fathers.

As the light seemed, at intervals, to dawn on his clouded mind, my hopes were raised that he might "turn again and believe"; but he had set his face toward the sacred mountain—where the fathers worshiped—and, to that purpose, with persistency and consecration which would put to shame much of our nominal Christian endeavor, this heathen devotee pressed forward, allured by the fantastic will-o'-the-wisp lights of pagan creation.

Such instances afford side-lights on the other and more real side of the venerable, established and defiant philosophers of these eastlands. Idolatry is but the husk of paganism; and it will crumble away of itself. The real citadel to be won is the soul and its sympathy, which is the vital spark of divinity in every human. This is what needs to be touched by the gracious influences of the Divine Spirit. It is for this wisdom, grace and power we must labor and pray. Without it our message is an empty sound and our life a signal failure. With it we shall be able to present the "truth in love," and when we have discovered this fountain spring in the mental and spiritual life of these teeming millions, we may announce the early nativity of China into the arena of the Christian economy.

"All the means of action
The shapeless masses, the materials
Lie everywhere about us. What we need
Is the Celestial fire, to change the flint
Into transparent crystal, bright and clear."

THANKSGIVING DAY SET.

President Roosevelt has issued his proclamation fixing Thursday, Nov. 28, as a day of national thanksgiving. It runs as follows:

"A Proclamation—The season is nigh when, according to the time-hallowed custom of our people, the president appoints a day as the especial occasion for praise and thanksgiving to God.

"This thanksgiving finds the people still bowed with sorrow for the death of a great and good president. We mourn President McKinley because we so loved and honored him, and the manner of his death should awaken in the breasts of our people a keen anxiety for the country and at the same time a resolute purpose not to be driven by any calamity from the path of strong, orderly, popular liberty which as a nation we have thus far safely trod.

"Yet, in spite of this great disaster, it is nevertheless true that no people on earth have such abundant cause for thanksgiving as we have. The past year in particular has been one of peace and plenty. We have prospered in things material and have been able to work for our own uplifting in things intellectual and spiritual. Let us remember that, as much has been given us, much will be expected from us; and that true homage comes from the heart as well as from the lips and shows itself in deeds. We can best prove our thankfulness to the Almighty by the way in which on this earth and at this time each of us does his duty to his fellow man.

"Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, president of the United States, do hereby designate as a day of general thanksgiving Thursday, the 28th of this present November, and do recommend that throughout the land the people cease from their wonted occupations, and at their several homes and places of worship reverently thank the Giver of all good for the countless blessings of our national life.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this second day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and one and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-sixth.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"By the president:

"JOHN HAY, Secretary of State."

AT
THE

CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

"PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE."

JAMES A. CHAMBERLIN.

If your soul were in my soul's stead, I could heap up words against you and shake my head at you.—Job. xvi., 4.

HERE is good wit and excellent philosophy in this text. Job was deeply afflicted physically and mentally and sorely tried by self-appointed comforters. These friends essayed to point out to him the reasons for his misfortunes. Eliphaz told him that no man suffers when innocent, and delicately suggested that Job had "plowed iniquity and sown wickedness." Like many modern men of moral teaching he quotes dreams and visions to enforce that which cannot be proven. Job replies with a candid statement of "not guilty." Bildad then begins with scant courtesy and intimates that Job's words were "wind—east wind." With quick illustration he likens Job to a "rush growing in the mire," a "flag in stagnant water," and so indicates that the cause of his troubles may be found in his chosen environment. With some warmth Job replies to the specious argument of Bildad. Then Zophar takes up the same line of comfort and like a preacher puts it plainly that Job's sufferings were the righteous sequences of his iniquity. He becomes warm, eloquent, conclusive. He cites some of Job's offenses as proof, and shakes his head about other sins so gross that they could not even mention them in polite company.

Now Job speaks: "If your soul were in my soul's stead I could heap up words against you and shake my head at you." Read the poem at this point and catch the dramatic movement. Job was undoubtedly justified in his remark. Were places changed he could speak against them and shake his head. It is easy to criticise other people's sins. We are all critics and love to exercise our talents. Unfortunately customs have changed since the good old days of Job. Then men sat on the ground and spoke to each other face to face. It was a matter of give and take. Now too often criticism is expressed behind one's back—spoken to a neighbor or published anonymously.

Solomon, St. James and even our Lord urged men not to criticise their fellow-man, but the world does not heed. The present preacher will not try to do what these influential men failed to accomplish, but will, with all simplicity, urge Job's principle—"Put yourself in his place." We ought to see both sides of a case before we criticise. The Hibernian judge said he was a "splendid judge of a case until he had heard both sides, then he was all confused." We are certain of our criticisms until we have changed places. It is easy to criticise the cook until we have stood over a hot fire in July. It is easy to criticise the coachman until we have sat for an hour or two on the coach in a November chill while tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum are done. After we have peddled milk and meat and bread to shoddy aristocracy for a time we can criticise these functionaries of supply all we like. In like manner criticise the school teacher after your soul has been in his soul's stead teaching dull boys and giddy girls. Criticise the daily paper—untruthful, behind date, sensational, yellow—but not till you have tried to please the buzzard-like appetite of a morbid public and declare annual dividends to parsimonious stockholders. Criticise the preacher—dull, doleful, dyspeptic—only put yourself in his place, living on short salary, scant sympathy, a little flattery and preaching to the dull, the inattentive, the captious, with here and there a hungry soul. Criticise the lawyer—professed Christian, defending notorious criminals, charging enormous fees. Criticise the doctor, mistaking measles for chickenpox. Criticise the mayor, the chief of police, the fire marshal; criticise everybody and do it freely after and only after you have in spirit at least put yourself in the place of the one criticised and viewed life from that point of observation. It is easy to heap up words and shake the head at everybody, but ten days as editor, preacher, lawyer, doctor, mayor, milkman, kitchen maid or policeman will change the character of the heap and the angle of the head-shake.

Just criticism is a fine art. Only the few who have learned the way of broad vision and close sympathy with all human kind are fit to do true critical work. People of such qualifications do little criticism. Small minds criticise much. Many so-called reformers of today are valueless to society and uninfluential as public teachers because they have not that sympathetic quality that enables them to appreciate the environment, tastes and needs of other men. Men who would edify the world must know the world. To know the world one must not only see but feel. Life is many-sided. The more sides a man can see the better is he able to judge of the true way.

The great success that attended Jesus was largely due to his great loving sympathy. Jesus' soul was often in the other one's stead and so he condemned and said "Go, sin no more." He criticised few but the Pharisees. Sympathetic experience kills criticism. Job, the ancient philosopher, in his moment of irritation, spoke the true word, and Jesus, the modern teacher, put the word into active life. Their doctrine is grand. The centuries have not lessened its value as a working philosophy. Exchange soul environment, put yourself in his place, have sympathy with all men before you express criticism of any. This done, invidious criticism will be infrequent. Learning to do as the text suggests, men will understand the secret of the Christ-spirit and leave judgment unto God who always puts his soul in your soul's stead before he judges your deeds and spirit.

Torrington, Conn.

EDELWEISS.

E. CARL LITSEY.

Begotten 'mid the everlasting snow;
Pure as a star, and white as holiness;
Alone and lonely where the wild winds blow,
Celestial purity thy garb and dress.
Forever in the ice-clad wilderness
Thy ceaseless vigil keeping, and thy face
Upturned to God, as though to sue for grace!

So, on the sun-lit peaks of prayer and thought,
Away from all the world's harassing din;
The earnest soul may thus in time be brought,
Broken and cast away each fettered sin;
Lost in the shadowed valley what has been,
Lifted above Life's never-ending fray,
And drawing nearer to the perfect day!

Lebanon, Ky.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

CALL OF MOSES.

Lesson for Dec. 1, 1901, Ex. 3: 1-12.

Golden Text:—Certainly I will be with thee.—Ex. 3: 12.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Setting of the Lesson.

THE time was B. C. 1493 according to the usual reckoning. The home of Moses at this time was in the land of the Midianites at the southern part of the triangle of Arabia and some two hundred miles southeast of Goshen, the abode of the Israelites in Egypt. It is convenient to divide the life of Moses into three periods of forty years each. First:—That of childhood and as a prince in Pharaoh's court; second:—The shepherd period in Midian; third:—As deliverer of his people, each forty years. We now come to the last scene of the second period.

God's Call to Duty.

This is a story of God's providence in calling and developing men for his work. The bondage of the Israelites was permitted to continue, thus preparing their hearts to be less reluctant to leave the idolatrous land of Egypt. And all the while God was leading Moses onward to his destiny as deliverer of his people from their sore bondage. But God's first call to Moses, as to each one of us, was for his own heart. He must conquer himself before he can be used to conquer Pharaoh. And the heart of Moses was won. Acts 7:23. From a murderer of high temper, (Chapt. 2:12) and a fugitive (Chapt. 2:15) he must become the meekest of men. Num. 12:13. God's choice fell to Moses because he had become the fittest man to be used as his nation's deliverer. In all circumstances where a person is fitted for a given work God will by some means open the way for that work, even if it be after many years. Two-thirds of the life of Moses had passed when his great call from God came. Moses showed his fitness by his faith (Heb. 11:27); by his self-denial in choosing the lot of his afflicted people rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin in Egyptian court life (Heb. 11:24-26); by his compassion (Ch. 2:11); by his meekness (Num. 12:3); by his humility (V. 11); by his lowly inclination in adopting the calling of a shepherd; by his willingness to bring his mind into co-operation with divine wisdom and guidance. Every aspiration of ours for a better and higher life is a call of God. To be a true follower of Christ is a call to follow in his footsteps. 1 Pet. 2:21. "Ye are the light of the world"; and ye are bidden to put your lamp on a stand. Matt. 5:14, 16. "Let him that heareth say, Come." Rev. 22:17.

V. 1. "Forty-Year Seclusion." "Now Moses." Since his childhood (Lesson VII) Moses had been highly educated in Egypt (Acts 7: 22); he had thrown his choice with his people (Heb. 11: 24, 26); he fled to Midian for his life (Ch. 2: 15); he took a chivalrous part for the Midian shepherdesses (Ch. 2: 16, 17); he married and entered the home of Jethro (Ch. 2: 18, 20), where he continues for forty years. * * * "Kept the flock of Jethro." From a prince of Egypt Moses had become an humble shepherd a large part of his life. These years on the Midian plains were a preparatory season comparable to the years of Jesus as a carpenter at Nazareth, of Paul in Arabia and of Luther in the Augustinian convent. For a man like Moses with strong faith in God (Heb. 11: 24-27), these would be years of converse with God and spiritual development. * * * "The priest of Midian." Jethro, supposed to be the same as Reuel (Ch. 2: 18). * * * "Led the flock to backside of desert." Shepherd-like, Moses shifted from place to place for better pasture; as the brethren of Joseph had done. (Gen. 16, 17.) He led the flock to the highlands back of the plains. * * * "To the mountain of God, to Horeb." Horeb was another name for Sinai. Horeb more properly was the general name for the mountain range in which Mt. Sinai was situated. It may have been called the mountain of God, because here occurred some remarkable sacred events; (1) the appearance of God in the bush; (2) the delivery of the law; (3) the bringing of the water out of the rock; (4) the two forty-day fasts of Moses; (5) the tables of the law brought forth; (6) and here many years afterwards Elijah was vouchsafed a glorious vision.

V. 2. Divine Token. "And an angel of the Lord." A visible manifestation of God who maketh "a flame of fire his angel." Ps. 104: 4. * * * "A flame out of the midst of the bush." Light and fire are constant emblems of divine glory and holiness. Gen. 15:17; Ex. 33:9; Acts 2:34. * * * "Behold the bush burned . . . not consumed." This was a sight that amazed the shepherd as the next verse shows. But Moses saw far more than the bush. His mind long had been trained to see "him who is invisible," even Christ. Heb. 11:26, 27. The burning bramble is suggestive of Israel in the fiery trials of Egypt, yet unconsumed because God was in the midst. So the church has been in fires of affliction, but which could not prevail against it. Matt. 16:18.

V. 3. Discerning Signs. Moses said, "I will now turn aside." When we turn aside to discern the divine call and opportunities, then we show that God's call has been heard. * * * "Why the bush is not burned." Our intellects are to be exercised in discerning the things of God. When Jesus came to his own and his own received him not, it was because their eyes were closed not to discern the signs of the times. Matt. 16:3; 13:15.

V. 4. Willing Workers. "When the LORD saw." JEHOVAH. Jehovah in Hebrew meaning the Existing One and is printed Lord in small capitals in our Bibles. In Ch. 6:3 the same word appears in its original form. Paul clearly asserts that it was Christ our Lord who was leader in the desert. 1 Cor. 10:4. * * * "God called." Elohim and not Jehovah, meaning in Hebrew, the Almighty. Elohim sets forth God's nature in the sense of creator and governor of nations and the universe; Jehovah designates God's nature as revealing himself to help, guide, save, and deliver the creature made in his own image. * * * "Called unto him." Called him by name as Jesus called Saul when on the way to Damascus. Acts 26:14. As the sound was from the midst of the burning bush it could be none other than that of the Divine Being. * * * "And he said, Here am I." God must have willing workers. At God's call Abraham said, "Here I am" (Gen. 22:1); Isaiah said, "Here am I, send me" (Is. 6:8); Jesus said, "I come to do thy will, O God." Heb. 10:7; Paul said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Acts 9:6. How do we manifest our willingness in response to God's call?

V. 5. A Holy Cause. "Put off thy shoes." In token of the putting away of all contact with the world and self and sin. * * * "The place where thou standest." In the presence of God, the supreme. * * * "Is holy ground." Holy by reason of God's presence and his choice of the place for later giving forth the holy law. The mount on which Christ was transfigured is called the "holy mount." 2 Pet. 1:18. Our religion is to educate us unto holiness; to be filled with the holy spirit. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Heb. 12:14. It was Moses who later gave the message, "Ye shall be holy; for I am holy." Lev. 11:41; 1 Pet. 1:16.

V. 6. Oral Revelation. "I am the God of Abraham," etc. This is the first spoken revelation of God for some ages of which we have knowledge. I am the God of many promises to the forefathers, which promises, despite the present misfortunes, are to be fulfilled. It is not "I was," but "I am" the God of thy fathers. Jesus shows from this that the patriarchs were even then, long after the death of their bodies, living in glory. Mark 12:26, 27. * * * "Moses hid his face . . . afraid to look." Sinful flesh cannot look openly upon the self-revealing holiness of the Divine Presence. If Moses could not behold God's glory, when he descends in mercy, how can the wicked abide in his presence?

V. 7. The Oppressed Masses. "I have surely seen the affliction." In all their affliction he was afflicted. Is. 63:9. And now the man is at hand and the time ripe for a glorious deliverance, later to be celebrated in much joy. Ex. 15. * * * "Of my people." God here for the first time addresses Israel as his people. * * * "I have heard their cry." Their tears, their sighs, and oppression are all known unto him. God hears all groanings. Ch. 2: 24. He hears the cries of the oppressed in every age (James 5:4); of the victims of our drinking institutions (Prov. 23: 21); and that of the slaves of our sweat shops and other iniquitous labor systems the result of a haste to get rich. But the Israelites were unconscious that God had heard them until long afterwards. Even while their anguish was being endured, Moses in the solitudes of Midian was being prepared to lead them in a glorious deliverance. Rom. 8:28.

V. 8. Divine Deliverance. "I am come down to deliver." God delivers man through the agency of man. We become laborers together with him. God is ever ready to do his part when we are ready to do ours. * * * "To bring unto a good land." Christ came to bring us "to a good land," even to the heavenly mansions which he has gone to prepare. John 14: 1-3. * * * "Flowing with milk and honey." A poetical expression but not lacking in literal truth. Canaan was a land of kine and flocks. Honey is many times mentioned in the Bible. It was food to John the Baptist. Matt. 3:4. * * * "Unto the place of the Canaanites." Sons of Canaan. * * * "Hittites." A powerful nation descended from Heth. * * * "Amorites." Mountaineers. * * * "Perizzites." Villagers. * * * "Hivites." One of the smaller tribes of Canaan. * * * "Jebusites." Belonging to Jerusalem.

V. 9. The Pitying Father. "Behold cries come unto me." The chief reason for God's action is emphasized by repetition. God was moved by love, not by any acts or merit on their part. * * * "I have seen the oppression." So when the early Christians were oppressed by Saul, Jesus in Heaven saw, and indeed did feel, that the persecution was against himself, Acts 9:4. So of all conduct, whether good or bad, of men toward men.

V. 10. God's Choice. "Come now therefore." First there is an invitation. God will not use even Moses except there be first a willing mind on his part. * * * "I will send thee unto Pharaoh." To the court from which he had fled for his life forty years before. * * * "Bring forth my people." An amazing undertaking for this unknown shepherd in retirement, to deliver a nation of two million ignorant, down-trodden slaves from the strongest power on earth. * * * "Out of Egypt." Where for eighty years and much longer they had been oppressed. Generation after generation of Israelites had been born and knew no other condition than slavery.

V. 11. Doubting Ability. "Who am I?" His heart was willing, but, like many another, he suspected his own incapacity. How could he, an exile from Egyptian wrath, now as a mere shepherd, return and undertake so stupendous a mission. * * * "That I should bring." He before had pitied his countrymen (Ch. 2:11), but his one brave attempt to help them in his own way had led him into danger of his life. How could he now think of venturing?

V. 12. God with Them. "I will be with thee." Here comes the solution of every difficulty—the bringing down of every mountain obstacle in the path of God's people. Moses alone is weakness; Moses plus God is infinite power. If God's infinite wisdom and protection be his, he can lay hold of the greatest problem. * * * "This shall be a token." The burning bush which in its strangeness had been so remarkable a sight to Moses. This shall be a sign of God's unailing power as of a fire never consumed. To us, even as unto Moses, our Lord as he calls to his work has promised "So I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28:20.

Oh, do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men! Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks! Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come in you by the grace of God.—Phillips Brooks.

THE LESSONS IN A NUT SHELL

Size, 2 3/4 x 5 1/2 inches
128 pages

THE VEST POCKET
Sunday School Lesson
COMMENTARY

International Series
FOR THE YEAR 1902
BY
Rev. DeLoss M. Tompkins, D. D.

THIS is the fourth annual volume of this valuable help. While some have paid it the compliment of imitation, none have equaled it, and it stands in a class by itself for Originality, Soundness and Reliability.

It Contains: With each lesson: The Historical Data; the Revisions; the Statement of the Lesson; a most unique outline for study or the blackboard; a daily reading scheme on the lessons for the entire year, and a commentary and reflections on the separate verses and suggestions of the lesson. In addition there are numerous other helps, purely original, such as Library References, Dictionary, Devotional Readings and Study, an Elaborate Analysis of the Acts of the Apostles, calender, record pages, etc., etc.

Compact==Concise==Convenient

A Pocket Companion for Busy People, Adapted to the needs of the Pupil, the Teacher, or the Class.

THE following commendations are suggestive of the favor this book has won, yet no word can be said that will speak as does the book itself. It is worth many times its cost to the person who will buy and use it:

International S. S. Evangel says: "This little book gives on each lesson what would require many hours to acquire, and all better than but very few men in America could prepare. * * * It is at once scholarly, spiritual and practical, and in convenience and serviceability EXCELS OTHER HELPS."

Association Men: "Commends itself at first glance. * * * Particularly appropriate for the busy business man."
The Advance: "Condensation as a fine art is exhibited in this book. Remarkably suggestive and helpful."

Sunday School Times: "Vest Pocket Commentary is an unique and reasonably successful attempt to enable busy people to prepare their Sunday School lessons in their 'one spare moment.' * * * The 'Reflections' are excellent."

The Baptist Union: "The pith and marrow of the topics are given, the things that must be said to ensure a first grasp of the lesson. It will be of ready value to those who would gain a bird's eye view of the theme at a glance."

MANY SAY:

"I could not do without it."

STYLES AND PRICES

REGULAR EDITION, bound in red morocco, round corners, gold edges. . . . .25 cents each; $2.50 per doz.
INTERLEAVED EDITION, bound in red morocco, gold edges, two blank ruled pages with each lesson for notes. . . . .35 cents each; $3.50 per doz.

Sent on receipt of price or FREE AS A PREMIUM for one new subscriber to The Christian Century.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

WHO of us does not feel the need of God? The way is long and difficult. Strange companions take up with us. Frequently the mind waits in doubt and the heart is kissed by some form of godliness which may lead us away from the real path of life. Things appear not as they are. The unreal lies about us and moves around us, and amid it all the heart is thirsting for life. Tired and sore, disappointed and sick, the heart looks upward for help. The world cannot clothe it nor feed it nor make a tabernacle for its dwelling place. It is a pilgrim crossing a barren waste. But a strange voice comes from the skies. It is the Lord Almighty and he frankly says, "Certainly I will be with thee." At first one feels astonished in such an assurance and then we remember it is the Father's voice, and is not this assurance the chorus of both Testaments? God came very close to the natural eye when men beheld the living form of Jesus. The divine order as presented by Paul is first the natural and then the spiritual. Men beheld the natural body of Jesus and said: "Certainly God is here," and now the natural body has faded away and under the spiritual sight, we beheld the living presence of the Son of God, and hear him say, "Lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world." It is all wonderful!

Then God is with us. His presence is our salvation. To know that he is wherever we are is a marvelous check on human thought and motives for he sees all things and knows what is in us. It makes one humble and sincere. It squares life to the divine model. Is it not a fact that we behave better in the presence of some people than in the presence of others? If we think that man is only a stranger or one that we have little respect for, how often when in his presence are we careless in our acts? But this one here is a man that we have great respect for and sincere love, then how different is our manner? Now above all men is God. To practice his presence is to make one polite all the time, to make one honest, to make one kind. We like to imitate those we love and sometimes unconsciously we grow like them. Then is not the living presence of our God our salvation? We will do as he wants us to do when we know that he is looking at us and not looking to find fault, but looking to stimulate us to godly service. He is the heart's rightful companion and in his presence is peace and joy.

Our Father, we blessed thee because thou art ever with us and we pray for more grace to live better in thy presence. Amen.

"The foundation of all progress is that we should individually choose the good and refuse the evil."

Dr. Wayland speaks of "criminals whose crime is so small as to bring them within the scope of the law." There is too much truth in this epigram to make it wholly laughable.

"Every one will get to heaven who could live there." This saying of an old divine was probably suggested by such Scripture truths as these: "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth." "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

CHILDREN OF GOD.

Topic Dec. 1. Ref. Rom. 8: 14-17. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

THIS is a part of Paul's majestic argument for the supremacy of the spiritual in the lives of believers. Have you noticed that the little word "for" is used not less than twenty times in this wonderful eighth chapter of Romans to introduce and enforce the great apostle's splendid appeal for the prevalence and power of the Spirit in all our lives? Indeed, this is one of the striking characteristics of the Roman letter. Read it through with this thought in mind, noting how Paul links together the great facts of sin, of sacrifice, of the law, of grace and of the revelation of the spiritual, the unseen and eternal. And especially, in this Mountain Peak Chapter of the Christian life, with its revelation of the Spirit, all-pervading and all-prevailing, and its rhapsody of rejoicing, unspeakable and full of triumph and love unsearchable. O it is marvelous—this panorama of the great conflict of the flesh and the Spirit for the conquest of the race. Beside this sublime argument of the inspired and gifted and glorious apostle all the philosophies and pedantries of the past or present sink into insignificance. To possess ourselves of this divine idea and ideal; to let it possess us, control us, leaven us, lead us, link us with the spiritual solemnities and supremacies and serenities, is to become the sons of God in the loftiest sense and to be made heirs and joint heirs with Christ.

But some will say, with a great yearning in the heart, "This is altogether impossible for me." Remember that with God

"All Things Are Possible."

And remember, and dare to rejoice in the assurance of the Master, that "all things are possible to him that believeth." These two divine possibilities make even impossibilities possible for every one of us! O let us believe it, receive it, rejoice in it, as the children of God!

John, the best-beloved, had a revelation of this beyond the power of human speech, for he cries: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God! * * * Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is!" So we have the impossible for us—yes, John, the disciple that leaned on Jesus' breast says "us"—becoming possible! We know not what we shall be—but when he shall appear we shall be like him. We shall see him as he is—and that will solve all difficulties, answer all hard questions, transform us, change us completely into his likeness and glory.

It is not the spirit of fear, but of love and of power and of discipline. In this Spirit we look up from our lowlands of earthly birth and abiding and cry "Abba, Father." And if, in our weakness, it is at times the midnight cry of a startled and sinful child, he will hear in pity and forgive in infinite mercy. In this very cry of "Father" is the Spirit's witness and assurance. In this is the Spirit of our adoption, our birth-right, our inheritance. Let us receive this Spirit, be led thereby, triumph therein!

THE HOME

For an Autumn Festival.

Once more the liberal year laughs out
O'er richer stores than gems or gold;
Once more with harvest song and shout
Is Nature's bloodless triumph told.

Our common mother rests and sings,
Like Ruth among her garnered sheaves;
Her lap is full of goodly things,
Her brow is bright with autumn leaves.

O favors every year made new!
O gifts with rain and sunshine sent!
The bounty overruns our due,
The fullness shames our discontent.

—Whittier.

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter V.

It happened that in the spring of the following year things political pointed to a parliamentary dissolution, and I was invited to contest the northern division of the country.

The knowledge that it had been Allan's constant wish that I should go in for this sort of thing influenced my decision powerfully, but no definite conclusion could be arrived at, of course, until I had threshed the matter out with Waldo. Therefore, one morning at breakfast, I opened up the subject by saying:

"Well, my friend! how do you think old Nell would look in parliament—if he ever got there?"

"What is parnament? A glass?"

"Sometimes, yes. A glass in which men see themselves as others see them."

"That is very funny! What does it mean, Nell?"

Then I unfolded to his childish yet wonderful perception, as best I could, the meaning and the mechanism of our system of government, and tried to show him how there were other ways of fighting for one's country than with sword and bayonet. Finally I said: "Father always thought old Nell should give some of his life to this sort of fighting."

After that, no choice was left me. My darling entered into the heart and spirit of the thing with an enthusiastic zeal that positively inspired me, and sustained me far and away beyond even the strength of my own convictions. This I say without speaking extravagantly in the least. It simply was so.

The summer was fairly well on before the general election took place. Through all the canvassing, speechifying and terrible self-advertisement necessary to insure a decent return, or perhaps any return at all, my little boy was my right hand. Some lucky men have devoted wives and beautiful daughters, who, with tandem and four-in-hand, drive straight ahead into the susceptible hearts of the peasantry, thereby scoring enormously for their mankind; while, whenever possible, at my side, there was just my little Waldo, with his tiny white face and sweet shining eyes, and his dear spontaneous: "Oh, John Richardson, I do hope you're going to vote for my Nell! Because I do want him to win. Because he's going to try and get you annotments—I mean, gardens and things. So I do want him to win, you see."

Or his serious talks with the barber and the blacksmith—unknown to me till long afterwards—to this effect: "I say, Thomas dear, you will vote for my Nell, won't you? Because he's so very kind and beautiful, isn't he? And," gravely shaking his curls, "he always keeps his pwomises—always. He went thousands of miles to find my father, because he pwomised to always be his fwiend, and then he came back thousands of miles to find me—and he is always my gweat-est fwiend!"

I have heard rough voices tremble when they said, "God bless him"; and I have seen positive tears come into eyes where, I am sure, they had long been strangers, when he put out his tiny hand for theirs to grasp, and very well I know that many an honest farmer and tiller of the ground swore and held to allegiance with me primarily and principally on account of my little boy.

Often there were whole days when we were quite apart, since I had to be touring around the country side, and could not take him with me because of the fatigue it would have been to him. On these occasions he would drive out with Barbara and the old coachman, do his share of canvassing, and get up the most delightful and cheering of reports for me on my return. When I came back I used at once to repair to his cot, and, however late the hour, the chances were always in favor of my finding him wide awake, and bursting with news after this manner: "Oh, Nell, only think! We went to pay the miller's bill this afternoon, and when we drove away the workmen were coming out of the yard, and when they saw our horses some one called for three cheers for you. Then I waved my cap to them, and they called for cheers for me—just fancy, Nell, for me! If only father could have heard!"

Clear in outline, brave and strong in principle, was the plan of campaign set forth by the heads of the party in whose interests we labored, Waldo and I. Our opponent's program was of a nature calculated certainly to catch the thoughtless in its wondrous meshes, but to make the thinking ones sit up and do a quiet smile. Nevertheless, though party feeling ran high, I am thankful to say that of personal feeling there was not once, on either side, the least unpleasant display.

As the polling day drew nigh I began to fear the after consequences of reaction for Waldo, so great was his excitement. The rose-color shone constantly and triumphantly in his little face; his eyes were as two jewels; his voice and manner took on a glad eagerness which never lost the charm of childishness; his whole soul and being seemed wrapped, lost, merged in the one idea that Nell—his Nell—must win!

His greatest private conquest was over a stubborn old cobbler, with quite ultra-nihilistic views concerning the state, the court, the government and all pertaining thereto. Him would Waldo tackle boldly and unaided, storming his communistic stronghold with the sweetest and simplest of patrician arguments.

"You see, Josiah, Nell's motto is, Noblesse oblige. Say it after me, Josiah, will you, please? Thank you. It's French, I think. But it means that a gentleman must never do a mean trick, and Nell is a gentleman. So, you see, you can vote for him, can't you, and you know it will be all right, don't you?"

When he was telling me of this, as he sat on my knee in the hour before bedtime, the hour we always called father's hour, in remembrance of those dear far-off days before they snatched his father from him—he said to me, with solemn, wondering eyes:

"Do you know, Nell, that when I first asked him to say Noblesse oblige after me, I thought he said: 'Noblesse—be—jiggered.' But the next moment he said it quite properly. What is 'jiggered,' Nell?"

"Why did you ask him to say our motto, old man?" I inquired, by way of answer, and to gain time.

"I don't esackly know. When I want to believe something very much I keep on saying it over and over. When father went away and said: 'Nell will come,' I was always saying it to myself. So I'm going to make Josiah keep on saying 'Noblesse oblige,' because he doesn't believe in gentlemen at all. He's going to believe in you, though. But what is 'jiggered,' Nell?"

To be continued.

HOUSEHOLD AFFAIRS.

"Man's labor is from sun to sun,
But woman's work is never done."

IF THAT doctrine is to be accepted as true, the only wise thing we women can do is to study how best to make such constant labor most effective and at the same time reduce to a minimum the attendant friction and resultant wear and tear on the nervous system. The women are comparatively few who do not show evidence of living under a strain. An eastern woman brings to us the following valuable suggestion:

"In these days when the modern woman is rushed with committees, clubs and home duties until we could almost say her family know her no more, in the deepest, loveliest sense of wife, friend and mother, the thought should come home to her with awful significance that surely the nervous forces of the coming generation are endangered thereby. I once knew a very busy lady whose social duties were exceedingly numerous, and who for awhile tried (but in vain) to carry the whole world in her large heart. She found herself at thirty-four on the verge of becoming a physical wreck, and then decided upon a novel, but sensible, plan. This was to lay aside one day of each week as a resting day. She chose Saturday, on which day thenceforth no callers were admitted, the meals were of the simplest kind and her garb was a loose gown. The result was almost incredible; twice the work could be accomplished on other days, because of the rested body, the strengthened mind and clear brain. We, the women of today who take life seriously, do not take sufficient rest."

Do we appreciate the truth that we are unconsciously rested or otherwise by means of our surroundings? A little thought will reveal the fact that some colors rest us, while others have an opposite effect; furniture and pictures may be so arranged as to have a soothing and refreshing influence upon us. A few flowers or plants will help much to this end. Study over this theory and work it out in your own case.

The Thanksgiving dinner is near at hand and we gladly welcome new ideas for table decoration. Good Housekeeping mentions two: A low oval-shaped basket of pine cones, filled with fruit, will make a pretty centerpiece. It should have a wide-arched willow handle adorned with a bit of red bittersweet vine and a cluster of thistle puff balls. A wreath of the bittersweet should also encircle the basket. Another suggestion is a cornucopia of plaited grass surrounded by brightly tinted vines and dusky berries as it spills out its wealth of autumn fruits upon the table. Still another idea is an Indian canoe piled high with fruits, the grapes and vines hanging over the sides. The canoe may be made of bark or leaves or woven of grass. Guest cards and favors may be cut out and painted to represent the fall fruits and vegetables and lettered in gold. Puritan hats made of black paper are quite attractive. A little practice will enable one to roll up the tall crown and paste it neatly. When dry, join it to the wide brim and tie a cord round it. Around the hat brim may be lettered in gold "Thanksgiving, 1901." A pumpkin filled with fruit is an easily obtained and an inexpensive decoration. Cut a generous slice from the stem end, remove the inside and line with waxed paper. Fill with pears, red-cheeked apples, purple and white grapes and place on a white centerpiece.

MISTRESS DOMO.

THE QUIET HOUR.

(The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.)

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

ISRAEL OPPRESSED IN EGYPT.

"And God heard their groaning, and God remembered His covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob."—Exodus 2, 24.

Monday—Exodus 1, 1-14.

IF I am amongst God's chosen ones, I may look for tribulation. "The nearer Christ, the nearer the sword," one of the old fathers said; and his witness is true.

There is the Church as a whole. How often are the sufferings of Egypt repeated and reproduced! And the Church has other assaults to bear, of skepticism and of ridicule. She has been "heated hot with burning fears, and bathed in baths of hissing tears."

Or there is the individual Christian. Scarcely a day passes but I am in some strait. It may be pain or anxiety. It may be the fiery darts of Satan, fierce temptations, infidel suggestions, strong allurements to some great wickedness. I am a soldier; and the life of a soldier is a life of struggle, of unrest, of dispeace. I am a pilgrim; and the pilgrim is exposed to continual hardship; if he treads the Via Lucis he finds it the Via Crucis, too.

Thus no strange thing happens me. Trial has been the habitual dowry of the people of the Lord.

Tuesday—Genesis 46, 1-7.

Strangers in a foreign land, Israelites sojourning in Egypt; it is the description just now of the people of God. And why is it so? For wise and gracious reasons, I may be sure.

That I may bless the alien country I am sent into it. There my Lord would have me be as salt, preserving it from corruption. There he would have me be as light, illuminating its darkness and chasing its shadows away. The world is to be better and holier for my presence.

I am permitted to tarry awhile in exile that I may discover Christ's power to sustain, his power to cheer, his power to deliver. In my loneliness he comes near. In my difficulties he succors. In my dangers he saves. The rest will be more welcome after the pilgrimage. The victory will be more complete after the tempestuous battle and the long campaign.

So it is for my benefit and not my bane that for a season I have to go down into Egypt.

Wednesday—Exodus 5, 5-19.

Not on communities only, and not merely in ages which have passed away, has the stroke of trouble fallen. It comes here and now. The iron enters my soul. It may be bodily frailty, under which I can scarcely bear up. It may be disappointment, which has dashed my hopes to the ground. It may be the removal of one who loved me and whom I loved. It is not easy in such circumstances to say, Thy will be done.

My very Christianity will increase my sorrows. If it is as faithful as it should be, it will expose me to reproach. It will compel me to mourn when Christ is dishonored by lukewarmness in the church and by iniquity outside. It will plunge me into penitence, when I feel that I have vexed the Spirit and disobeyed the Father and forsaken the Savior.

But, if the road winds upward and is covered with flints and is begirt by thorns, the New Jerusalem is its ending and its goal.

Thursday—Deuteronomy 26, 1-11.

"Nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness to them who are exercised thereby." O that blessed and fertile Afterward, when trouble has accomplished its purpose!

May the fires melt me. They should bring my sin to remembrance. Tribulation should work patience and submissiveness and estrangement from the world and its evil ways.

May the fires try me. They have power to detect the flaws in my character which I did not suspect. They have power to discover the strength of God's grace in operation within me. Then, when my heart faints, he does mighty things; he is glorified.

May the fires refine me. I go into them impure; I come out from them purer and heavenlier. My pride, my vanity, my self-will are left behind, when God keeps watch over the glow and heat of the furnace. My soul grows more silvery clear and golden bright.

Friday—Isaiah 52, 1-6.

It is "My people," the saints of God, who have the bands laid upon their necks. Does that seem strange, arbitrary, unusual? I do not think it ought to appear so.

The lapidary and the jeweler bestow little pains on the baser metals, but they use every method to beautify and perfect fine silver and gold. The gardener is not anxious to prune shrubs which bear only sour and worthless fruit, but how keen the knife he keeps for the trees with the mellow apples and the purple grapes. The father in the home does not go out of his way to correct another man's child, but his son whom he loves—he chastens him with a tender heart and tear-dimmed eyes. It is the same with the divine Jeweler, and the divine Husbandman. It is the same with the divine Father, who has his sons and daughters to nurture into Christ-like men and women.

It is impossible for him—thanks be to his name!—to deal remissly with those who are the people of his own possession. He cares for them too earnestly. He has destined them to an inheritance too great.

Saturday—Psalm 142.

If my trials teach me to pray as this Psalmist prayed, they will have one good result and fruit.

In his latest story Mr. Neil Munro draws the portrait of Baron Lamond of Doom. He was a poor Highland nobleman, a man with all the romantic and sensitive sympathies of the Celt, who lived in the years immediately succeeding the Forty-five. He had perforce to submit to the government of King George. He had, that he might prove his loyalty, to wear the hated dress of the Saxon. But, every night, he climbed to the highest room of his castle, and from an old chest he took a suit of Highland clothes. He substituted the kilt, the plaid, the bonnet, the gay Tartan, for the dull Sassenach garments. It was like the creation of a man from a lay figure. He was no longer the baron of doleful days and melancholy evenings. He was a soldier alert and eager. He was a hero in the poise of his head, in the set of his limbs, in the sparkle of his eye.

When trouble sends me to the lonely chamber of prayer, I find there is waiting for me there the whole armor of God. I put it on, and forthwith I am another man, larger, cheerfuller, stronger. I have gained and risen a hundredfold in wisdom and in stature.

Sunday—Psalm 94, 1-14.

"Blessed is the man whom thou chasteneth, O Lord." So, when sorrow comes to my tent, she comes as the Angel of God. Here is a little song about it:

"Count each affliction, whether light or grave,
God's Messenger sent down to thee; do thou
With courtesy receive him; rise and bow;
And ere his shadow cross thy threshold, crave
Permission first his heavenly feet to lave;
Then lay before him all thou hast, allow
No cloud of passion to usurp thy brow,
Or mar thy hospitality; no wave
Or tumult to obliterate
The soul's marmoreal calmness; grief should be Like joy, majestic, equable, sedate,
Confirming, cleansing, raising, making free!
Strong to consume great troubles, to commend Great thoughts, grave thoughts, thoughts lasting to the end."

Indeed, this is the right and fitting spirit in which to welcome an Angel of Jehovah, even if that angel draw near to me with veiled face and the gift of pain in his hands.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.
THE MURPHY'S THANKSGIVING.

BY AMY D'ARCY WETMORE.

"I don't think," said Madeline, positively, "that I will keep Thanksgiving at all this year, for I have certainly nothing for which to be thankful."

"Oh, Madeline, you have lots; you know you are so bright and clever and every one loves you," exclaimed Rose.

"You little flatterer;" returned Madeline, slightly appeased. "But, Rose dear, don't be shocked; I really cannot feel thankful, and it would only be deceit to act as if I did. Just think of the cruel difference between now and one year ago," and the tears welled up in Madeline's eyes as she thought of her dear mother, now numbered with the elect, and of her beautiful old home passed into the hands of strangers.

"I know," answered Rose, kindly, "how hard it is and how bravely you have borne all your trials, but, Madeline, don't you remember what Miss King told us in Bible class yesterday, that often the saddest life could find some one more sad, and that none of us realized our common, every-day blessings?"

"But, Rose! Rose!" and Madeline nestled her head down on her companion's lap and sobbed.

Rose, for a young girl, was wonderfully thoughtful. She knew only too well the keen contrast in her friend's life now and twelve months ago, when Madeline had been the petted child of a devoted mother in a luxurious home. Now the mother was gone, and the property, too, was gone. When the estate had been settled up, poor Madeline was left nearly penniless, in the care of an aunt, who was neither sympathetic nor in touch with her niece's life.

Rose thought that if Madeline could only see some one worse off than herself it would be a greater help than all the advice in the world upon the subject, but Rose led such a sheltered life that she wondered how she could go about it, or in any way lighten the burden that was crushing her young friend.

As the girls spoke something was coming that would be the answer to Rose's unspoken prayer. A knock at the library door caused them to jump up from the hearth rug and Madeline hastily dried her eyes.

"What is it, Biddy?" asked Rose of the Irish girl, who had thus disturbed them.

"Plaze, mum, a chile is downstairs a-cryin' as ef her heart would bust. She sez she has lost her oranges, she was a-sellin' an' that she will have no money to take to her sick mother."

Rose and Madeline needed no urging to go to the little forlorn one and soon found in the hall a most pitiful morsel of a child, barely eight years old, clad in ill-fitting garments, and holding in her hands an empty basket.

She explained that some boys had snatched her basket from her and grabbed the oranges. They had laughed at her entreaties, and finally threatened to stone her if she did not run away. In the skirmish she had lost the few pennies she had made that day selling the oranges.

At once the girls came to her relief, and after she had been given a good meal and her face had been washed, she looked quite respectable in an old coat of Rose's which, though much too big, was an improvement upon the huge shawl she had tied around her. The girls accompanied her to her home, determined to find out for themselves the truth of her story. The child seemed radiant at the thought of taking her kind helpers to see her mother, proving, as Madeline thought, the genuineness of the case.

They found Mrs. Murphy, Kitty's mother, ill in bed, in the miserable cot in the fourth story back of the tumbledown tenement house could be dignified by such a name. Her lot was a hard one; a drunken husband who had long ceased to provide for her or the children, and, indeed, had disappeared altogether for some weeks and had left her helpless with rheumatism.

The other child was a cripple, and was therefore only an additional burden. The few cents Kitty could make day by day trying to sell fruit for a man who had a stand and who allowed her a small percentage on whatever she sold, was all that they had to depend upon, except when some charitably disposed neighbor, better off in this world's goods, sent them food occasionally. The rent was behind, and only that morning Mrs. Murphy had received notice to leave in a few days if the money was not forthcoming.

The girls listened with interest to this sad, sorrowful story, and both made up their minds to do what they could for these unfortunates. Rose at once emptied her pocketbook into Mrs. Murphy's hand, and although there was not quite a dollar in it, it seemed like wealth to Kitty and Mamie, who stood staring at the vast sum. Kitty was at once dispatched to get some bread and milk for the family, and both girls promised to come again and see Mrs. Murphy and also told her that they would find the landlord and beg him to give her more time, Rose privately meditating, if possible, to pay the few dollars due for rent herself.

After a long consultation in Rose's pretty room, the girls came to the conclusion that the only way they could raise sufficient money for present emergencies, until Mrs. Murphy was able to go to work again, was to give a little fair. Madeline had some lovely embroidery and worsted work which she had done in more prosperous days for her own amusement, and gladly decided to put them for sale at the fair. Rose promised to add some of hers, and to secure her parents' interest in the undertaking. The fair would take place, Rose said, in their library on Thanksgiving eve, and on the next day she and Madeline could go to the Murphys with whatever they had made, and thus give them a happy Thanksgiving.

Madeline brightened up wonderfully at the very idea of helping others. The next week was a busy one indeed. Rose's mother, who was kind and sympathetic, was only too glad to have her daughter think of such a thing, and even Madeline's aunt was most generous, feeling, perhaps, more than she expressed for her niece's saddened life, and pleased to know that she could interest herself in anything. She promised not only to be a liberal purchaser, but also to give some bric-a-brac and all the cake and bonbons that they could sell.

Other friends heard of the affair, and also expressed themselves delighted with the idea. They gave liberally of fancy work and eatables, so that by the time the evening arrived the fair was a great success, and the girls really enjoyed it for itself, as well as the nice sum of money that they made—nearly thirty dollars. This they decided to distribute by degrees to the Murphy family, first paying the rent and then getting the children shoes, flannels, etc. Many of their friends found old clothes and in this way garments were collected that would last the little Murphys many a day.

On Thanksgiving day after church, Madeline and Rose, laden with good things and some ready money, visited in state Mrs. Murphy and her children.

The poor woman was overwhelmed with gratitude and said that already their kindness had made her feel better. She was sure that next week she could begin work again, as through their interest she had also some washing and ironing promised her. Kitty and Mamie imagined as they ate their good dinner, provided by their kind friends, that there never was such a day as Thanksgiving, and they eagerly promised to go to Sunday-school in their new clothes, which as yet they could hardly realize belonged to them.

Happier days dawned, too, for Madeline, and her aunt's increasing interest kept the poor girl from feeling so lonely, and her new work in taking care of others gave both Rose and herself many cheerful hours. Madeline had discovered that even in the darkest hours one can find something to be thankful for, if one looks about.—The Young People's Magazine.

Master—Late again, Sandy! Can't you manage to get here on time? Sandy (with a doleful headshake)—I canna sleep o' nights, sor, an' so I'm loath to get up in the mornin'. Master—Eh, man, sleeplessness! Why don't you consult a doctor and get at the cause? Sandy—I get at the cause weel enouch, but it'll no shut up. It's six weeks auld, and an awfu' yellor.—Glasgow Times.

General Church News

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY NATIONAL GOSPEL CAMPAIGN.

The national central committee for this Gospel campaign includes many ministers and laymen of note and wide influence, and their suggestions just issued in a printed address carry weight. On this committee we find the names of Dr. Frances E. Clark, the great Endeavorer; Rev. Drs. D. J. Burrell and Cornelius Woelfkin of the Dutch Reformed church, Rev. Drs. Gregory, Withrow, J. Wilbur Chapman and John Balcom Shaw of the Presbyterian body, Rev. Drs. R. S. MacArthur and Cortland Myers of the Baptists, Rev. Drs. Parkes Cadman and E. P. Ingersoll of the Congregational church, Dr. Henry Mottet, Episcopalian, and many others, with such noted laymen as Hon. John Wanamaker, John Willis Baer, John H. Converse, Wm. R. Moody, John S. Huyler, Richard C. Morse, etc. Denominational walls are disappearing in the earnest desire to combine all Christian forces in one supreme effort for a revival of all churches.

This committee believes that "with the opening of the twentieth century the hour struck for the great forward movement of the Church, 'through existing organizations and agencies,' and for the rousing of Christians to their God-given mission of evangelizing the nation and the world." They call attention to four needs:

1. The supreme importance of a national Gospel awakening.
2. The need of an evangelistic reformation of the entire Church of Christ, in order to the evangelization of all the unsaved.
3. The need of a revival of evangelical teaching and preaching.
4. The need of prayer for God's blessing upon, and leadership of, the entire campaign.

To this end, the week from November 10-15 was selected as a time when there might be union of prayer, with topics for each day selected by the committee. Three special noonday prayer meetings are being held daily in New York city for the same purpose, by Dr. Chapman, Dr. Burrell and others. The co-operation of ministers and laymen everywhere is asked, in the planning for special evangelistic services. It is interesting and stimulating to note that at several points already throughout this country, union meetings are resulting in large gatherings of souls saved. We mention several in this issue under the heading, "General." May the good work go on and spread!

A CONFERENCE ABOUT BOYS.

The fifth general conference about boys was held in Charleston, Mass., October 29-30, under the auspices of "The Men of To-morrow" and the General Alliance of Workers with Boys. About seventy men and women came together from various parts of the country.

The main theme of the conference was the Boy and the Home, and it was dealt with by men of experience. Rev. S. W. Dike of the National Society for the Protection of the Family, spoke on "The Home as a Factor in Social Work," and Prof. H. M. Burr of the Y. M. C. A. Training school at Springfield, on "The Boy as an Idealist." Other speakers of note were Rev. Endicott Peabody of the Groton school, Jacob A. Riis, Prof. F. G. Peabody of Harvard and Edward Everett Hale.

On the church side of the question W. H. Culver, the boys' pastor of the Jefferson avenue Presbyterian church of Detroit, who has been particularly successful in his work with boys, gave a most interesting talk on "The Pastor and the Boys." Rev. O. S. Davis of Newton, Mass., handled the sub-topic, "The Y. P. S. C. E. Movement and the Boy," criticising the pledge as not explicitly appealing to the manly virtues of the boy and therefore the society stands with many for the feminine rather than the masculine type of Christianity. In the debate that followed, this position was sustained as well as opposed. It was claimed by some that the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor had always stood for the positive and aggressive side of Christianity as evidenced in the activities promoted by its leaders.

The conference was decidedly helpful and the whole program was of a high order of excellence. It is to be wished that such gatherings might be multiplied for they work on the hopeful side of things, and deal with the laying of foundations. Rev. W. B. Forbush, Ph. D., pastor of Winthrop church, Charlestown, and Mr. Frank Mason of the Bunker Hill club are to be credited with much of the success of this conference.

LAKE MOHONK INDIAN CONFERENCE

Friends of the Indian to the number of 150 to 200 gathered October 16 at the beautiful lake on the mountain top, where they received courteous welcome from the Messrs. Smiley. Inasmuch as the Indian problem—the original cause of the conference—is being solved by the more just and righteous treatment and the educational and religious advantages now being given to the red men and their families, the conference this year broadened its aim and discussed the needs of other dependent races. It has been suggested that its name be changed and that it henceforth be called a "Conference on the Race Problems of the United States."

Dr. Merrill E. Gates was again chosen moderator and he pictured the contrast between the state of the Indian nineteen years ago with no rights, no homes, no door into citizenship, and the present when there is a large Indian vote, marriage regulations, a possible inheritance of property and other modes of helping them into helpfulness.

A beautiful tribute to President McKinley from Lone Wolf, one of the chiefs of the Kiowas, was read by General T. J. Morgan, who also read an excellent paper on "The Relation of the Government to the Education of the Dependent Classes." Miss Mary Collins, for many years a missionary to the Indians, urged that the Indian must be reached in his home life and heart life. Miss Anna Beecher Scoville, a grand-daughter of Henry Ward Beecher, emphasized the evil of too much book knowledge without the true Gospel and our religion.

Among the speakers on the Indian question were Indian Commissioner Wm. A. Jones, Jas. A. Sherman, chairman of the congressional committee on Indian affairs; Hon. W. W. Foulke, of Indiana; Philip Garrett, of Philadelphia, and Rev. M. Wright, an Indian clergyman. Some of the needs emphasized were these: That the leasing of Indian lands should be permitted only under careful limitations; that methods be devised to make grazing lands belonging to Indians profitable; that Indian industries be encouraged and markets furnished, and that the New York Indians should be under the care of the United States government.

The forward step of the past year has been the adoption of a system of marriage licenses and family records for all the agency tribes. This will put the family on a legal basis among the Indians, discourage polygamy, and assure rights of inheritance. The conference was of the opinion that the

STRONG FOOD: Having the Longest Staying Powers.

It is a good thing to know how to select food that will so thoroughly feed and nourish the body that there is no indication of hunger or faintness from one meal to another.

Grape-Nuts Food will carry the user longer, probably, than any other food known. A young lady attending business college writes from Atlanta, Ga., saying, "Before I began using Grape-Nuts I got so hungry before the dinner hour that I was faint and almost sick, but since I have Grape-Nuts Food for breakfast I study harder and wait longer for my dinner without experiencing any of the former trouble.

One great advantage is that it requires no cooking or preparation. I wish everyone knew of the value of Grape-Nuts Food for children in school."—I. Parkhurst next reform demanded was the abolition of a large number of agencies which now exercise a despotic power over civilized communities.

Dr. Lyman Abbott in a strong address made the following points: 1, to govern these inferior peoples in their interest, not ours; 2, to give them law and not hold them outside law; 3, to secure them their proper right in lands; 4, to provide for the education of their children at public expense; 5, to carry to them the pure Gospel and teach them who God really is.

Rev. Dr. Edward Abbott and Hon. Darwin R. James spoke of the Filipinos. Mr. James told of the marked improvement in Manila in regard to the sale of intoxicants. Before January, 1900, there were 218 licensed saloons there, and about 3,000 native shops for the sale of liquor. Now there are 153 licensed saloons and 400 native shops.

Dr. A. F. Beard and Mr. Daniel Smiley spoke on Porto Rico and its people. Sixty Cuban teachers from the normal school in New Paltz were present. They are paid $400 a year by the Cuban government while in this school.

Resolutions were adopted to the effect that the government has one duty toward all the dependent races under its care—to educate them as fast as possible toward the plane of self-government and then make them free citizens. A ringing appeal to all churches to enlarge their mission and educational labors in our newly annexed islands, was incorporated in the resolutions.

The closing address was by the venerable Dr. Theodore Cuyler.

THE BAPTIST CONGRESS

For eighteen years the Baptist denomination has had an open forum for the free discussion of any and every question. No resolutions are ever passed. No man is responsible for any opinions expressed save those to which he gives utterance. Things are sometimes said with which few Baptists would agree. Utterance is sometimes given to convictions which are held by many, but which are not commonly put into words. It is a time for the honest speaking out of honest opinions. Honored brethren have prophesied all manner of evil from such free speaking, but, as yet, the evil has not materialized.

The nineteenth session of this congress has just been held in New York. It met with the Central Baptist church on November 12-14. There were six topics presented for discussion, one session being given to each subject. The discussion of each topic is opened by two papers and two appointed speakers, and then volunteers may enter the field. The readers are allowed twenty-five minutes each, the appointed speakers twenty and the volunteers ten minutes. No one may speak twice upon the same question.

"The Consolidation of Our National Societies," was the topic for discussion on the first afternoon. Dr. L. A. Crandall of Chicago opened the discussion, criticising present methods as involving needless friction and pernicious in educational influence. Dr. J. F. Elder of Albany followed with a defense of the present system, with which Dr. D. B. Jutten of Fall River, Mass., agreed. Owing to lengthy introductory exercises the time for general discussion was cut short. This is a burning question among Baptists. At present the national societies are unrelated bodies, holding anniversaries together by mutual arrangement, but with no general denominational body to which they are responsible. The purpose which some of the brethren cherish is to have a representative delegated body, to which these societies shall report. The matter is likely to come up for discussion next May at the anniversaries, to be held in St. Paul.

No more interesting theme for discussion could be presented than "Modern Evangelism, or Proper Substitutes for the Old-fashioned Revival." The revival of fifty or even of twenty-five years ago has almost entirely disappeared, and Christian men are asking what is to take its place. Although the discussion called out many good things it did not clearly indicate the answer; or, at least, did not give an answer satisfactory to the majority of pastors. Dr. W. M. Lawrence of Chicago gave a sketch of the great revivals under Edwards, Finney and Moody, and showed how each contributed to our common religious life. Other speakers, among whom were Rev. J. H. Randall of Grand Rapids, Rev. Daniel Shephardson, an evangelist, and Rev. C. S. Cooper of Lynn, Mass., suggested the need of personal contact, the importance of reaching the young at the period of adolescence, and the need of cultivated and unselfish evangelists without too great insistence upon the financial element.

"The Function of Penalty in the Christian Religion," called out one of the most vigorous and interesting discussions of the congress. The position taken by the majority of the speakers, including Dr. B. L. Whitman of Philadelphia, Rev. W. N. Giles of Summit, N. J., Dr. R. S. MacArthur of New York, was that penalty is reformatory in nature and purpose. Vigorous dissent from this view was expressed by Dr. J. B. Thomas of Newton Theological seminary, who held that penalty is vindictive. Some of the speakers came near expressing hope that there would be another chance in the future life for some who failed to come to God here.

"The Ethics of Gambling," and "Cosmopolitanism" were ably discussed, and a consideration of "The Keswick Movement" closed a profitable and well attended session.

Latham A. Crandall.

PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD OF MISSOURI.

The opening sermon of this session, held in Jefferson City, was delivered by Dr. S. J. Niccolls of St. Louis, upon the "Signs of the Times," and the annual sermon by Rev. Dr. W. J. McKittick of the same city. These sermons were indicative of spiritual quickening. There was an unusual number of addresses of eloquence and power. The most notable were those by Dr. H. C. Minton, moderator of the General assembly, upon the "Twentieth Century Movement"; Dr. S. J. Niccolls, Mrs. F. R. Palmer of the woman's department of the Freedmen's board; Rev. C. A. R. Janvier of India, Dr. Wilson Phraner of the Home Mission board, President J. H. MacCracken of Westminster college and Editor Walter Williams on "Presbyterianism as a Factor in History."

The special business this year was the co-operation between the Northern and Southern synods of Missouri in conducting their educational institutions. Westminster college is one of the oldest and strongest of the denominational colleges west of the Mississippi river, and the Northern synd

COFFEE COMPLEXION.

Many Ladies Have Poor Complexions from Coffee.

"Coffee caused dark colored blotches on my face and body. I had been drinking it for a long while and these blotches gradually appeared, until finally they became permanent and were about as dark as coffee itself.

I formerly had as fine a complexion as one could ask for.

When I became convinced that coffee was the cause of my trouble I changed and took to using Postum Cereal Food Coffee, and as I made it well, according to directions, I liked it very much, and have since that time used it entirely in place of coffee.

I am thankful to say I am not nervous any more, as I was when I was drinking coffee, and my complexion is now as fair and good as it was years ago. It is very plain that the coffee caused the trouble. Please omit my name from public print." Mrs. —, 2081 Ogden avenue, Chicago, Ill. The name of this lady can be given by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Most bad complexions are caused by some disturbance of the stomach and coffee is the greatest disturber of digestion known. Almost any woman can have a fair complexion if she will leave off coffee and use Postum Food Coffee and nutritious, healthy food in proper quantity. The food coffee furnishes certain parts of the natural grains from the field that nature uses to rebuild the nervous system and when that is in good condition one can depend upon a good complexion as well as a general healthy condition of the body.

will, in December, for the first time, elect half of the trustees.

Strong resolutions were passed by the synod in regard to Sunday observance. During the past year the churches in this synod have contributed to the support of the Gospel within their own bounds, $321,254 and nearly $50,000 for general benevolent work outside.

THE DISCIPLES IN VIRGINIA.

The twenty-sixth annual convention of the Virginia Christian Missionary society was held October 29 when more than 260 delegates came together from all sections of the state. The Ministerial association had an excellent program on the opening day. Rev. B. P. Smith, the president, made the first address and was followed by Rev. J. A. Spencer on "Our Relation to Other Religious Bodies," Rev. L. A. Cutler on "Our Relation to Social and Civil Reforms," Rev. P. A. Cave on "Our Relation to the Problem of Christian Unity," etc.

Two years ago South Richmond brethren offered to provide the salary of a state secretary, and this secretary proposed the raising of $8,000 and the winning of 1,000 converts. This year, Wm. Jackson Shelburne reported nearly $9,000 raised, 1,004 conversions, eleven preachers employed, five new churches organized and a balance of $2,000 in the treasury.

At the sessions of the Christian Women's Board of Missions it was shown that the 1,466 women in the seventy-five auxiliaries gave last year $3,081. Towards the endowment fund of the Bible chair in the University of Virginia, they gave $777.75. Mrs. Bulard, superintendent of young people's work, reported sixty-one mission bands with 1,000 members.

PRESBYTERIANS IN MINNESOTA.

About 300 assembled for the annual meeting of the Minnesota synod, held in Albert Lea. The retiring moderator, Rev. Dr. Carver, gave in the annual session a comprehensive review of church problems.

Widespread activity was evidenced by the reports presented. The total amount given by the seven presbyteries of this synod for home mission work was $6,681.29. Within the state there are 122 missionary societies and twenty-two bands at work. The women sent out boxes valued at $1,651.04. The women's home and foreign societies held interesting sessions with good speakers. Mrs. E. S. Williams of Minneapolis, Mrs. D. B. Wells of Chicago, and Rev. Dr. John Dixon were among them.

The synod voted to use all efforts possible to prevent the repeal of the present anti-canteen law. Rev. Newton E. Clemenson of Utah, spoke strongly on the Mormon evil. Dr. E. B. Hodge made an address on educa-

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Do You Have Rheumatism? Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

To Prove what Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney and Bladder Remedy, will do for YOU, all our Readers May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow: Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince anyone—and you may have a sample bottle for the asking.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night; smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, wornout feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh or sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with marked success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take, and if you are already convinced that this great remedy is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

tion, Dr. John Dixon on home missions, Dr. Halsey on foreign missions, and Dr. Worden on Sunday school work.

The most encouraging feature of the session was the testimony to the marked expectancy everywhere of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the evidence of a decided revival of spiritual interest.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY.

Rev. B. A. Torrey has been granted a year's leave of absence by his congregation, and will sail for Australia December 23 on an extended missionary trip. Before Mr. D. L. Moody died 15,000 residents of that continent petitioned him to hold Gospel meetings there, and the work was delegated to Mr. Torrey. A. P. Fitt of Northfield, Mass., will be in charge of Moody Institute in Mr. Torrey's absence.

The installation of Rev. Joseph A. Milburn, D. D., as pastor of Plymouth Congregational church, took place November 12. The former pastor, Dr. Gunsaulus, preached the sermon, Rev. Messrs. Mackenzie, Fifield, Thorp, Scott, Ray, Sturtevant and Adams taking other parts of the service.

Rev. C. H. Holden was installed pastor of the Humboldt Park Baptist church November 14.

After twenty years of service in the First Baptist church, Dr. Poindexter S. Henson has resigned to accept the call to the Hanson Place church, Brooklyn. His going, December 31, will be a loss to Chicago.

Rev. James Mullenbach was installed as assistant to Dr. Graham Taylor at the Tabernacle Congregational church November 11. Dr. Bartlett preached the sermon.

The Methodist Social union had a reception and banquet at the Auditorium November 2, when Rev. Frank M. Bristol of Washington, D. C., gave an address on President McKinley. Governor Yates also spoke.

Rev. D. W. Forrest, D. D., of the United Free church of Scotland, delivered a lecture at McCormick Theological seminary, November 15 on "Religion and the Law of Probability."

The restored Second Presbyterian church was dedicated Sunday, November 10, the beloved former pastor, Rev. Dr. McPherson, preaching the sermon. Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson offered the dedicatory prayer. A large number of communicants partook of the Lord's Supper in the afternoon, and the pastor, Rev. Dr. Pleasant Hunter, welcomed thirty-two to membership, thirteen on confession. The interior of the church has been greatly transformed, and the result is an almost ideal place for reverent worship. The total cost of reconstruction is $100,000, of which $80,000 came from insurance.

A series of foreign mission conferences are to be held in the presbytery of Chicago, beginning November 22. There will be sixteen in all, and they

Dr. Herbert L. Willett expresses himself freely as to the merits of

The Praise Hymnal

"DEAR BROTHER FILLMORE:—I am greatly pleased with THE PRAISE HYMNAL, which marks a decided advance in hymnology among the Disciples of Christ. The book has many features that place it on a level with the very best hymn collections of the time. There has been displayed a careful regard for the familiar hymns of the church, and indeed I am glad to note the fact that some splendid hymns which have received the approval of widespread portions of the Church of Christ, but have never hitherto found admission to our own hymnals, are included in this collection. There is a large responsibility resting upon the shoulders of men who prepare the collections of music for a great brotherhood like our own. It is easy to mark the advance that has been made since our earliest attempts at hymn-book making. The standard of music has been rising, though not as rapidly, perhaps, as might have been desired. The musician who is conscientious and sincerely desirous of lifting the taste of those who depend upon him must be prepared to encounter opposition in his efforts. There is always a large demand for the so-called "popular music," which has certain helpful and "catchy" features, but which is only the music of a day. This, it seems to me, has occupied too large a place in our collections of church music hitherto, and even the amount of space you have given it in the present collection stretches somewhat the bounds of a just proportion. But there is adequate compensation here, as there has never been before in our church music, by the presentation of a large amount of thoroughly strong and enduring themes, for which I think you are to be emphatically commended. I am pleased also to see that you have incorporated the "Scripture Readings," which are grouped under appropriate heads, both topically and by sections. I am hoping that THE PRAISE HYMNAL will soon find itself employed in many of our churches, and that once employed, the best and most impressive themes in it may receive early recognition.

HERBERT L. WILLETT."

Chicago, Ill.

AS TO PRICES.—The contents of THE PRAISE HYMNAL are of a permanent quality. It is false economy to ask for cheap binding. We make a cloth bound book with leather back that will last ten years with any sort of care. The price is as low as can be made on its superior material and workmanship, $75.00 per 100 copies. Specimen copies sent on approval.

FILLMORE BROS., — 119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O.
40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

Our CHRISTMAS MUSIC is now ready. Send for list. Why not order ALL your music from Fillmore Brothers? We are prompt, courteous, and are publishing new music of all kinds all the time. (4) will be held in various sections, so that the whole field of the presbytery may be reached.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan preached every afternoon and evening of last week at the Union Park Congregational church, and this week he is giving the same time at the Forty-first Street Presbyterian church.

Chicago Theological seminary (Congregational) will open a school of church music January 2, 1902, for the training of young ministers in Hymnology and Liturgies, or the conduct of public worship, history of church music, and training in choir practice. Free instruction in these lines is offered to organists, choir directors and those preparing for evangelistic work and for service as pastors' assistants.

Commander and Mrs. Booth-Tucker of the Salvation Army are to conduct a special revival campaign November 24 and 25 at the Princess rink, 558 West Madison street, and the Studebaker theater.

Rev. A. G. Bergen, pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church at Mattoon, Ill., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Drexel Park Cumberland church, Chicago. He will assume his new duties December 1.

The sixteenth annual convention of the Young Women's Christian associations of Illinois was held at Aurora November 15-17. Addresses were made by Rev. Cleland B. McAfee of Chicago on "The Claims of the Spiritual Life," H. B. Sharman of the University of Chicago on "How a Life Purpose Was Worked Out," and Mrs. Martha Foote Cröwe, dean of women at Northwestern University, on "The Relation of Faculty Members to the Students of the College."

A new home for working boys was opened November 14 in connection with the Champlin Memorial Home for Boys, at 515 West Adams street. There are now seventy boys in the home between the ages of six and sixteen. The superintendent is Rev. John M. Chattin.

The Third United Presbyterian church closed a series of meetings November 3, and on that day twenty boys and girls appeared before the session for church membership.

The Chicago Christian Missionary society received $4,000 last year as against $2,500 the year previous. The year's work has been encouraging. More attention has been given to housing the missions than to evangelistic work. An effort is to be made to raise $8,000 for missions the coming year. The State Christian Women's Board of Missions has offered to pay the salary of an evangelist for Chicago.

Twenty-five new members were received at the last communion service of Covenant Congregational church. On a recent Sunday there were 345 in the Sunday school.

Baptist.

Five new churches have been built in East Washington and North Idaho during the year. Twenty-four missionary pastors have been under appointment for all or part of the year, the average number at work being nineteen. The total number of churches in the district is sixty with a total membership of 3,008.

The Indiana convention resolved "to set apart the second Sunday in November as a day of fasting, prayer and confession before Almighty God," regretting "with deep humiliation and shame, the low state of religious experience which prevails among our people, the decline of personal piety and family religion, the formal and intermittent attendance on the means of grace and the meager and stinted giving; we have thereby greatly displeased our Lord, grieved his Holy Spirit, and brought spiritual leanness to ourselves and to our churches; there is a falling off in the attendance of the Bible schools, in the number of conversions, and in the number of students for the ministry; and we deplore the sins which have brought us, as a Christian people, into an unworthy attitude before God and the world."

During the three years' pastorate of Rev. W. M. Walker of the First church, Des Moines, Iowa, 265 have been added to its membership. The money raised for all purposes during this period was $29,598.65.

At the annual Bible school convention of the Pittsburg association, Dr. L. C. Barnes advocated the plan of salaried superintendents as an ideal.

The young men's Bible class of Calvary church, New York city, invited young men from the various churches to meet with them; 350 were present and about 200 signed cards expressing an interest in the work of the city mission society and many indicated their purpose to do personal mission work in local fields. A call was made for $100,000 for sites and chapels. This meeting is expected to be the beginning of a series that will result in great personal enthusiasm in city mission work.

At the Cleveland Baptist association it was stated by Dr. W. L. Pickard in a strong address on "Baptist and City Evangelization," that $80,000 had been expended in new edifices, improvements and reduction of debts during the past year. The number of baptisms

The Northside Baptist church of in the churches of the association was about 300; the net increase, about 150. Denver has maintained in its Sunday school the exceptionally high record of 282 pupils per 100 church members. Though one of the poorest churches financially it has averaged $18.67 per capita, a standard that has been reached by only three other Denver churches. This church has been aided by the Home Missionary society, but has now become self-supporting. Rev. D. Reddick has been the missionary in charge during the last four years.

There are now twenty colportage wagons at work, four of them in Texas. They do a most useful and aggressive work and are the forerunners of churches and Sunday schools.

Hebron church, St. Paul, has an advance Bible school which is growing in numbers and interest. It studies biblical introduction, ecclesiastical history and practical methods of church work.

The Disciples.

As a monument to Rev. J. B. Sweetney the Texas brethren are raising a preachers' fund for Add-Ran university. A thousand dollars has already been pledged towards the $1,500 desired.

H. C. Patterson addressed the prisoners at Auburn, N. Y., November 3, and at the close called upon all who would take Christ as their Savior and follow him, to stand. Sixty-three stood. Evidently the message awakened new purposes in their hearts.

There have been seventy-five additions to the Peoria, Illinois, Christian church during the year. The pastor, Rev. G. B. Van Arsdall, will resume his study at the University of Chicago April 1.

Hiram college dedicated its new library building October 25, $1,000 was given that day for the purchase of new books, by C. B. Lockwood and H. R. Newcomb of Cleveland. Professor Paul conducts a missionary class numbering 175 persons each week.

Add-Ran University, Waco, Texas, has matriculated 284 students this season. Thanksgiving day is to be observed as "Emancipation Day" from debt.

The West Jefferson Street church, Fort Wayne, Ind., received fifty-five new members November 11, the whole church extending the right hand of fellowship in the old-fashioned way.

At two places in Georgia recently there have been lengthy meetings, with 106 additions to the church at one place and 132 at the other. A new church was organized in one case and three churches re-organized in the other.

A CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Asthma sufferers need no longer leave home and business in order to be cured. Nature has produced a vegetable remedy that will permanently cure Asthma and all diseases of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases (with a record of 90 per cent. permanently cured) and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Asthma, Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis and nervous diseases, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail. Address with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

The Biblical World

80 pages a month; size, 9 $\frac{1}{2}$  x 9  $\frac{1}{2}$  in.

SPECIAL TRIAL RATE to new readers, three months for 25 cents

THE BIBLICAL-WORLD maintains: (1) That the best knowledge of the Bible should be given to all; (2) that all should make acquaintance with the best methods of teaching the Christian religion and Scriptures; (3) that all should be informed of current religious thought, and of the discoveries which are being made in Bible lands.

Subscription price, $2 a year; single numbers, 20c

Address THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Don't Get Married

Until you have seen our strictly correct Wedding Stationery. Samples and prices gladly furnished free.

We make a specialty of Wedding Invitations and Announcements, Folders, Visiting Cards and other polite society stationery. Our work is Guaranteed the finest obtainable at any price. Engraved copper plate and 50 Correct Style, Best Wedding Bristol Visiting Cards, postpaid, 90c. Quire fine correspondence paper with any 2 initial monogram embossed in gold or any color, env. to match, postpaid, 60c. Our new process of printing in imitation of Engraving deceives all but experts, 50 correct form wedding invitations or announcements, 2 sets env., $2.50. 100 visiting or business cards, postpaid, 25c. Write for any information concerning any commercial or society printing, engraving or embossing. We will save you money
The B. W. KINSEY CO., 358 Denaborn St., Chicago

Cheap-Rate Excursions Southwest

Only one fare plus $2.00.

November 5 and 19,
December 3 and 17.

The Santa Fe most directly reaches the fertile valleys, industrial centers, and noted mining camps of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona.

Go out and see the country for yourself.

Santa Fe

Address J. M. Connel, Gen. Agt. A. T. & S. F. R'y., 109 Adams St., Chicago.

BELLS

all kinds, big and little - for Church & School, for Fire, Factory and Farm.
Catalogue FREE. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY CO., Northville, Mich.

At the Tennessee state convention, A. I. Myhr, the state secretary, reported 700 added to the churches during the year, four new churches organized, and $4,000 raised in state mission work.

Large additions have been received at various points, the result of meetings, viz., at Horton, Iowa, thirty; Panorama, Iowa, thirty-seven; Bethany, Mo., thirty-three; Bowling Green, Mo., twenty-four; Camden Point, Mo., forty-nine; Princeton, Mo., sixty-two; Walnut Grove, Mo., eighty; Warrensburg, Mo., seventy; Myrtle Springs, Texas, sixty.

Omaha is already preparing for the annual missionary convention of 1902. A union prayer meeting at the First church is arranged for, to ask for guidance in the planning. The auditorium of which the building and grounds have cost $225,000 will be ready in good season. It is on Howard street, between 14th and 15th and convenient to railway stations and several hotels.

Congregational.

Ex-President George A. Gates, for thirteen years at the head of the Iowa college at Grinnell, Iowa, but now pastor of the Congregational church at Cheyenne, Wyo., has accepted the presidency of the Pomona university at Los Angeles, Cal.

The work of Central church, Topeka, Kas., Dr. Chas. M. Sheldon, pastor, has increased so that necessity for a new building is felt. It is proposed to erect an adequate edifice in the spring, with an audience room to seat 1,500 people, and all facilities for the work that has been undertaken.

The pastor of the church at Plano, Ill., Mr. Francis Wyatt, preaches to the children at the Junior Endeavor meeting and the membership of that organization has grown from a dozen to forty, with an attendance of over thirty.

During the four years of the pastorate of Rev. J. W. Wilson at Council Bluffs, Iowa, seventy have been received to membership on confession and fifty-one by letter, and a long-standing indebtedness has been canceled.

The church at Fort Dodge, Iowa, has decided to become an institutional church. It is proposed to build an addition to the edifice which shall be open every night of the week, and supplied with bath rooms and gymnasium and the usual amusements. The idea of the pastor, Rev. H. D. Wiard, is that the church should provide a Christian home for those who have no such privilege.

The church at Auburn, Cal., opens its spacious parlor two evenings in a week for the entertainment of boys and young men. Games, reading matter and athletic apparatus are furnished.

A feature of Seattle church work, which is being adopted by other churches, is the use of the whole or a part of the prayer meeting hour for study of the Sunday school lesson. The Plymouth plan is to carry on a regular teachers' meeting from 7:30 to 8, and then use the theme of the lesson for the prayer meeting hour. Pilgrim turns the entire meeting into a combination Bible class and teachers' meeting, opening and closing with devotional features, but the pastor seeking during the forty minutes remaining to make living practical and familiar to all the next Sunday's lesson. Questions are many, but discussion is never allowed to devour the time.

Eliot church, Newton, Mass., last month, contributed $1,075 toward the ransom for Miss Stone and $3,177 for the American board.

A revival season came to the Reber Place church, St. Louis, recently. At the close of the sermon one Sunday a man asked permission to speak and confessed unfaithfulness to Christ during the past three years, expressing a desire to return to loyalty and service. Another man made similar confession, and the pastor, Rev. Frank Lonsdale, asked if there were others who wished to consecrate themselves to the Lord, and some twenty responded. The Spirit was manifestly present and a season of prayer followed.

A young men's union has been organized at Sloan, Iowa, whose object is "to stimulate a true Christian manliness and to foster a spirit of hearty good fellowship among its members."

Presbyter an.

The presbytery of San Francisco had a day of prayer for ministers and elders, October 30. Practical topics were discussed and a sacramental service closed the meeting. This conference was found to be so helpful that another was arranged for, to follow the winter gathering of the presbytery.

Rev. Robert Mackenzie, D. D., who leaves the First church, San Francisco, for the pastorate of the Rutgers Riverside church, of New York, has been a leader in Presbyterian circles for fifteen years in San Francisco, and professor of apologetics in the seminary.

Hon. A. C. Rankin of Chicago held a two weeks' temperance meeting at Afton, Iowa, resulting in 372 signatures to the pledge, and the arrest of two druggists for illegal sale of liquors.

The church at Wausau, Wis., had a notable day, October 20, in a harvest home festival. There were three services and at the afternoon one the three missionary workers of the church were on the platform, one of them being from Africa, and delegates from sixteen mission fields within twenty-four miles from the church edifice. All these fields have been cared for by the pastor and members of the Wausau church during the past thirteen years.

The synod of Illinois at its recent meeting petitioned the General assem-

PURE REFINED PARAFFINE

Don't tie the top of your jelly and preserve jars in the old fashioned way. Seal them by the new, quick, absolutely sure way—by a thin coating of Pure Refined Paraffine. Has no taste or odor. Is airtight and acid proof. Easily applied. Useful in a dozen other ways about the house. Full directions with each cake.

Sold everywhere. Made by
STANDARD OIL CO.

bly to consider the question of establishing a system by which "the information which each presbytery is expected to acquire concerning the character, standing and progress of its candidates and licentiates, shall become available for the other presbyteries of the church, into relation with which any of these candidates or licentiates may afterward seek to come." The synod also issued an appeal to young men and to parents and teachers for more men for the ministry. The appeal is to be read in the churches, and in the institutions of learning, young men's classes, clubs and societies, and earnest prayer is to be offered that the Lord of the harvest will send forth more laborers.

Akron, Mich., has been blessed with a three weeks' series of evangelistic services resulting in many decisions to follow Christ. At some of the Sunday evening services, the capacity of the Presbyterian church is overtaxed. The pastor's wife, Mrs. E. L. Buchanan, supplied the out-station for two Sundays during the revival services so that the pastor could attend the men's meeting.

The First church, Saginaw, Mich., is aggressively at work. Miss Sherwin, the deaconess, has returned and has special care of the Sunday school and young people's work. Classes for young women employed during the day, have been organized, in German, music, bookkeeping and sewing.

General.

The meetings held in "Tent Evangelist" at the gate of the Buffalo exposition were of widely varied nature, ranging from strictly revivalistic to broadly sociological. The largest attendance at any one meeting was 5,000; the least, fifty; the total at all, about 30,000. The men's meetings on Sunday afternoons were under charge of the Buffalo Young Men's Christian association. Ten conventions of Christian societies were held in the tent during the season.

For Indigestion Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. Gregory Doyle, Syracuse, N. Y., says: "I have frequently prescribed it in cases of indigestion and nervous prostration and find the result so satisfactory that I shall continue it."

A "social settlement" under unique conditions has been established by Berea college, (Ky.) in a mountain neighborhood known as Narrow Gap. Miss Adelia Fox is in charge, and is settled in a neat log-house, with a "church-house" in her yard in which sewing school, singing school and other activities are carried on for the benefit of a population which has been singularly left behind. "Shootings" and other disorders are rife, but Miss Fox and her work are unmolested.

In Brattleboro, Vt., the Congregational, Baptist and Methodist churches are to unite in Sunday evening services, cottage prayer meetings and parish visitation until January and then have a series of evangelistic meetings under the leadership of Rev. E. E. Davidson.

A series of conferences on the religious situation of the South end of Boston, in which six denominations are represented, is being held to plan for co-operative action.

At the general convention of the Universalists at Buffalo, the attendance of delegates was 286, almost twice what it has been at previous biennial gatherings of the denomination. It was reported that the twentieth century fund of $100,000 for church extension had been entirely subscribed. There was a shrinkage of considerable proportions noted in the foreign mission gifts of the church. The only mission maintained is in Japan, and the budget for its support is only $8,000. The membership of the denomination decreased from 53,070 in 1900 to 52,873 in 1901; the number of parishes from 1,000 to 983.

Fourteen ministers representing four denominations, held a "quiet day" at Manchester, Vt., last month. The needs of the locality were considered and preparation to meet them was sought. It was a devotional gathering.

At Westerly, R. I., four denominations united in an evangelistic campaign from October 25 to November 17. The ministers work in one another's churches without outside help. Special services were held for church officers and for young people. There was a twelve-hour session for prayer and sixteen simultaneous cottage prayer meetings and union services were held. Preliminary to the campaign the pastors met for prayer and conference more than once.

All the Evangelical churches of Neosho, Mo., are uniting in a series of special services under the leadership of L. P. Rowland of Grand Rapids, Mich., who has had a long experience in Y. M. C. A. work.

The Methodist, Baptist and the two Congregational churches of Exeter, N. H., unite in a series of evangelistic services under the leadership of Mr. Herbert L. Gale.

Evangelist L. W. Munhall of Philadelphia has just closed a three weeks' series of meetings at Dallas, Texas. Eighteen churches, with a membership of 6,000, co-operated with him. A tent holding 2,500 was filled every night, and an audience of 400 attended by day. The converts who signed cards numbered 532; more than half of them were men and boys.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY ITEM.

Rev. F. M. Rains, secretary of the Foreign Missionary Board of the Disciples, writes from Japan: "We have a number of out-stations around about Sendai. The number of preaching points is eighteen. At thirteen of these points we have believers, and at three of them the brethren meet every Lord's day to observe the Lord's Supper. In this district we have six Sunday schools. There have been thirty additions during the past year and twice that number are expected during the current missionary year. The name of our preacher at Fukushima is Yontaka Hasegawa. He was educated in a college at Tokyo. He has been a Christian for fifteen years. His family consists of a wife and eight children. He is a good, earnest man, with a good honest eye. His salary is $15 per month. He has baptized about 150. The prospects in his field are very encouraging. He says many are almost ready to turn to the Lord. No member of this church drinks or smokes. Very few Christians in Japan do. His great need at this place is a chapel. The little church, very poor, agrees to buy and pay for a lot if we can build a chapel to cost $300."

Three great encouragements in the Laos mission are the friendliness of the people, of their rulers, and the position of women. While considered much inferior to her husband and with no chance of attaining to Nirvana, the Buddhist heaven, woman has there a social freedom seldom found in other parts of heathendom. One wished we could come with her to a large Bible class of women and see how lives and faces are transformed by the Gospel. "Before you came," they say, "all was darkness, but now we can sing for joy." Forty-one of the Ka Moh tribe were received into the church last year. Ui Mun, a day school pupil in Praa and since a student in Chiang Mai boarding school to which she walked, a seven days' journey, was saved from a fate worse than slavery, the governor's harem. When threats of banishment frightened her mother from entering "the Jesus way," she bravely confessed Christ, taught her mother the catechism, her older sister to read, the younger children to sing and was one of the party who, when the missionary party rode over the mountains on elephants, coming to America, accompanied them on foot, ten days, entreating: "Oh, do come back to us. We're so afraid you'll get interested in some outside country and never return." In her letter telling of the baptism of her widowed sister, she says: "Keep on praying for mother. I'm sure she will come by and by."

Another Presbyterian college is soon

PERSONAL TO SUBSCRIBERS

WE WILL SEND to every subscriber or reader of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY a full-sized ONE DOLLAR package of VIT-E-ORE, by mail postpaid, sufficient for one month's treatment, to be paid for within one month's time after receipt, if the receiver can truthfully say that its use has done him or her more good than all the drugs and dopes of quacks or good doctors or patent medicines he or she has ever used. READ this over again carefully, and understand that we ask our pay only when it has done you good, and not before. We take all the risk; you have nothing to lose. If it does not benefit you, you pay us nothing. VIT-E-ORE is a natural hard, adamantite rock-like substance—mineral-ORE—mined from the ground like gold and silver, and requires about twenty years for oxidation. It contains free iron, free sulphur and magnesium, and one package will equal in medicinal strength and curative value 800 gallons of the most powerful, efficacious mineral water, drunk fresh at the springs. It is a geological discovery, to which there is nothing added or taken from. It is the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Blood Poisoning, Heart Trouble, Diptheria, Catarrh and Throat Affections, Liver, Kidney and Bladder Ailments, Stomach and Female Disorders, La Grippe, Malaria Fever, Nervous Prostration and General Debility, as thousands testify, and as no one, answering this, writing for a package, will deny after using. Give age, ill and sex.

This offer will challenge the attention and consideration, and afterward the gratitude of every living person who desires better health, or who suffers pains, ill and diseases which have defied the medical world and grown worse with age. We care not for your skepticism, but ask only your investigation, and at our expense, regardless of what ill you have, by sending to us for a package. You must not write on a postal card.

In answer to this, address THEO. NOEL COMPANY, 527, 529, 531 W. North Ave., Chicago, Ill.

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

to be established in India. The foreign board at New York has decided to open a school of collegiate grade at Allahabad, capital of a province containing sixty million people. With this new institution at work a splendid circle of Presbyterian colleges will be completed on the Hindoo mission field, including in its circumference Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Indore, Lahore, and Allahabad.

From Egypt Rev. J. Kelly Giffen writes: "The cut made this year (one-third of our working estimate) I am sure works more distress to the missionaries and more injury to the work than the board or any one else outside of the mission field can understand. This, too, has been for years. Missionaries have endeavored to keep up parts of the work from private funds and by begging, until some of them are in debt from this cause. But no missionary can longer endure this. The expense of living in Egypt has greatly increased and is still increasing. It has almost doubled since I came into Egypt. Some of our young missionaries who have not yet begun to educate their children, tell me it is with the greatest difficulty they make both ends meet. Our salaries seem large to some people at home, but the half of $1,400 would purchase more at my old home when I was there ten years ago than $1,400 will in almost any part of Egypt. The salaries of natives have also increased, and the working of the mission is much more expensive than it was formerly—beside trebled in size. The cut of one-third does not leave much more than one-half (proportionately) for working funds than we had fifteen years ago."

SPEND THANKSGIVING IN ST. LOUIS,

Fare, $5.00 for the Round Trip

The Wabash will sell Thanksgiving excursion tickets from Chicago to St. Louis and return at $5 for the round trip, good going on all trains of November 27. Three handsome daily trains. A postal card will secure particulars. Ticket office, 97 Adams street, Chicago.

LARKIN'S SOAP.

From the Baptist Union: The editor of this paper, speaking from a personal acquaintance of nearly twenty years with the head of this firm, is glad to bear witness to his thorough reliability. The premium offers made are surprisingly liberal, but the test of experience, as well as knowledge of the high standing and character of the firm, warrants the statement that the promises made will all be kept.

Larkin Soaps

(GOLD MEDALS AT OMAHA AND BUFFALO.)

and PREMIUMS Sold Only from Factory to Family
Thirty Days' Trial Before Payment.

THE Larkin Idea is simply to save that cost which adds nothing to value. The wholesale and retail dealers' expenses, profits and losses saved to our customers on a $10.00 assortment (purchaser's selection) of the Larkin Soaps and Toilet Preparations pay for a $10.00 Premium. The prejudice prevails that goods with which premiums are given, and the premiums too, are inferior in quality.

The Larkin Soaps and Larkin Premiums were exhibited at the Pan-American Exposition in the beautiful Larkin Building, where hundreds of thousands observed and remarked their value, and where six medals, two of gold, were awarded for supreme merit. The Larkin Soaps are known to millions of users to be the best. They are scientifically made from pure materials in the most modern factory. This is our twenty-seventh year of increasing success, and we are the only large manufacturers selling direct to the homes.

No. 1. COUCH.

Free with a $10.00 Assortment of the Larkin Soaps.

This Couch is 25 in. wide and 6 ft. long; has 24 double conical, extra-tempered springs, spring seat and spring head; hardwood slats and frame; good casters. Filled with extra coarse tow with cotton top. Moth-proof cover, your choice of Corduroy or Velour, plain or figured, in Myrtle Green, Dark Wine, Crimson, Brown or Blue. The construction of this Couch makes it extremely durable. It will withstand rough usage.

We issue special circular of higher priced biscuit-tufted Couches and many other premiums.

Every case of Larkin Soaps packed as purchaser orders; your own selection to amount of $10.00 from this list:

- Sweet Home Family Soap, per bar.....$0.05
For all ordinary laundry and household purposes it has no superior. Full size.
- White Woolen Soap, per bar..... .07
For flannels, infants' clothes and laces.
- Maid o' the Mist, (floating bath) Soap, per bar..... .05
- Honor Bright Scouring Soap, per bar..... .05
To make things bright. Equal to 10c kinds.
- Boraxina Soap Powder, (full lbs.) per pkg..... .10
- Modjeska Complexion Soap, per 1/2-dozen..... .60
Perfume matchless. The luxury of luxuries. For children and those of delicate skin.
- Old English Castile (6-oz. cakes) per 1/2-dozen..... .30
A pure, unscented, milled Castile Soap.
- The Bride, transparent toilet soap, per 1/2-dozen..... .30
- Elite Glycerine Toilet Soap, per 1/2-dozen..... .25
- Creme Oatmeal Toilet Soap, per 1/2-dozen..... .25
- Borated Tar Soap (6-oz. cakes) per 1/2-dozen..... .25
- Witch Hazel Shaving Stick or Tablet, each..... .10
Several higher priced. None better; few equal.
- Sulphur Soap, scented, antiseptic, per 1/2-dozen..... .25
- Modjeska Perfume, per 1-oz. bottle..... .35
Delicate, refined, delicious, lasting.
- Carnation Pink or Bride Rose Perfume, per 1-oz. bottle..... .50
- Violet Perfume, per 1-oz. bottle..... .60
- Sachet Powder, Carnation Pink, Heliotrope, Rose or Violet, per pkg..... .10
- Modjeska Cold Cream, per 2-oz. jar..... .25
A soothing, healing demulcent. For chapped hands or lips, or inflamed eyelids.
- Modjeska Tooth Powder, per 2-oz. vial..... .20
An incomparable antiseptic dentifrice.
- Modjeska Derma-Balm, per bottle..... .25
A cooling, quickly absorbed lotion for all skin irritations. Entirely free from greasiness.
- Modjeska Talcum Powder..... .15
Purified, refined, antiseptic.
- Lavender Smelling Salts, per bottle..... .25
- Chemically Pure Glycerine, per 2-oz. bottle..... .10
Gold Medal Winner. per 6-oz. bottle..... .25
- Jet Neatsfoot Oil Harness Soap, per bar..... .10
- Larkin Silver Polish, very popular, per box..... .05

MANY people obtain Larkin Premiums in two ways, without laying in a $10.00 stock of Soaps (although it is best economy). First, by dividing contents among a few neighbors who readily pay the listed retail prices. This provides the $10.00 needful to pay our bill, and gives the Premium as a middleman's profit. Second, by our interesting Larkin Club-of-Ten plan, explained by a special circular.

30 Days for Trial.

After that, if you find all the Soaps, etc., of excellent quality, and the Premium entirely satisfactory, remit us $10.00. If not, notify us goods are subject to our order. We make no charge for Soaps used in trial.

If you remit with order, we add 50 cents' worth of Soaps as a cash present, and ship goods day after order is received. Money refunded if asked for. Safe delivery of everything we ship is guaranteed. The transaction is not complete until you are satisfied. Our $2,000,000.00 investment is behind our guarantee.

THE PROOF of the Larkin Idea? We omit Premium, when desired, and send a $20 selection of Soaps for $10.

Larkin Soap Co.

Larkin, Seneca and Carroll Streets, BUFFALO, N. Y. Established 1875

BOOKS

A Journey to Nature, by J. P. Mowbray. Doubleday & Page, New York. Price $1.50 net.

The plan and purpose of this book are indicated in the prospectus, which states that "this tale deals with a Wall street man whose doctor orders him to give up work and go to the country to live. The narrative of how he became acquainted with Nature for the first time and of the delicate romance that creeps into this primitive life is told with such uniqueness and charm as to make the volume unique in contemporary literature." All of which we most emphatically endorse. Seldom have we read a more charming book. It is at once exhilarating and restful. It is medicine for a troubled mind. It takes one far from gay cities and the life of man and brings him into touch with nature. The fret is taken out of life; the artificialities of civilized life fall away as one reads its interestingly-written pages. Earth and sky tell their secrets. Woods and meadows, mountains and running brooks, trees and flowers bring their messages. We find ourselves "with nature's heart in tune," and next to being in the midst of the scenes and experiences described is the pleasure of following our author as friend, philosopher and guide. For one who is weary with the moil and toil of city life there can be found no better antidote than a perusal of this heart-refreshing volume.

Across the Continent of the Years, by Newell Dwight Hillis. Fleming H. Revell Co. Old English paper boards, embossed, 25 cents net.

This booklet of 47 pages of large purple-colored type is one of the "Ideal Messages" series. It is in Dr. Hillis' best style. If it has a fault it is that of sometimes smothering the thought in flowers of rhetoric. It is monotonously brilliant. A few rest places would be grateful to the reader. The aim of the book is to sketch the career of man as a pilgrim journeying across the years, led and sustained by the living Christ. The message of the book is comforting and uplifting.

"The Devil, His Origin and Overthrow," by Laurence W. Scott. The Acme Publishing Co., Morgantown, W. Va. Price, 25 cents.

The writer of this booklet has gone deep into his subject. He has made some important discoveries. One of these is that when the sons of God, who were angels, "saw the lovely daughters of men, that they were fair—so fair and beautiful—they fell in love with them and fell for love of them, for they were willing to leave heaven and change their habitation to earth on account of them." Another discovery is that as the "old serpent, which is the devil, had seed, it is implied that he had a wife also, and he may have had several of them, for he instigated polygamy among men." Our one criticism is that our author seems to know too much. It is better to leave the personification of the principle of evil in all the vagueness and majesty in which it is left in Scripture.

"The Bench and Bar—Makers of the American Republic," by Hon W. W. Goodrich. New York, E. B. Treat & Co.

This little book consists of an address delivered on Forefathers' day, by Judge Goodrich. Its object is to show the influence exercised by lawyers upon the earliest stages of the history of the United States. The theme is set forth with enthusiasm, sympathy and knowledge.

LITERARY NOTES.

The author of "David Harum" wrote only one other story, and this is soon to be published by D. Appleton and Company. The title is "The Teller." It is said that this story will be accompanied by a collection of Mr. Westcott's letters which describe the manner in which "David Harum" was written and the adventures of the manuscript.

Lane's translation of "The Arabian Nights," which has just been newly published in six volumes by the Macmillan company, contains one hundred photogravure illustrations by Stanley Wood and an introduction by Joseph Jacobs of fairy tale fame. They are handy volumes, light in weight, and well printed, with handsome covers.

The Humor of It.

Lord Rosebery, in a toast at the banquet of the Alfred Millenary celebration, pleaded ignorance of his high subject, but maintained that there were others who, like himself, believed in the burnt cakes and were ignorant of aught else about the West Saxon king. In proof of this he told the following anecdote, for the truth of which he staked his post-prandial honor: A young girl is seen coming down the steps of a great London library, and is greeted by another: "Hullo, Florry, what are you doing here?" Florry, in discontented accents: "Papa sent me here to find out about King Alfred." The other girl: "What about that old Johnnie?" Florry: "Papa asked us at tea last night what was all this fuss about Alfred and his millinery. Not one of us could tell him, and he sent me here to find out." The other promptly replied: "You stupid! Why, it's the drapery round his statue, of course." Lord Rosebery found in the anecdote a certain consolation for those of his hearers who, like himself, were not deeply versed in the literary works of King Alfred.—New York Evening-Post.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY, of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities, Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degrees. For announcement of Home Study courses write, including stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

Old Books

Can be exchanged for new. If you are through with some of your books send us a list and we will make you an offer for them. Our Second-hand Department contains many bargains which it will pay you to inquire about. Send for our new list, or better yet, step in and look over our shelves. Chicago city pastors should join our

Twentieth Century Circulating Library

You can read all the new books at small expense and choose those you wish to add to your library at your leisure. The expense is trifling, the yearly membership fee being only $1.00. Rental of books is only 2 cents per day, or 10 cents per week. We have 50,000 volumes to choose from and all the new books as issued. You will profit by taking advantage of this the best book offer ever made.

AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

177 Wabash Ave., Chicago

CHARLES M. ROE, Manager.

A Comfortable Living For Fifty Years.

A thorough investigation will convince you that a few dollars per month invested for six years in the Montezuma Plantation will absolutely secure it. This is in no sense a speculation, but a solid, conservative investment, with a complete chain of safeguards around every dollar invested.

Rubber and sugar, the great staples, which never fail, are being planted.

A PERFECT PLAN—RELIABLE COMPANY

The managing company has assets worth $2,000,000. The plan is the perfection of co-operation—each share-holder has only one vote, regardless of the shares held. Over 2 years' work, costing $50,000, has been done.

Sir Thos. Lipton says: "For sure, large and permanent returns, nothing equals a well managed Mexican plantation." Over 400 intelligent people own shares. It is as safe as life insurance, several times more profitable and good for life.

CHICAGO TITLE & TRUST CO., TRUSTEE.

This institution, capital $1,500,000, holds the title to the land, the purchasers' money, and a bond of $100,000, guaranteeing the development work. Write or call for literature, mentioning this paper.

MONTEZUMA PLANTATION

1108 Ashland Block,

Chicago.

PILES TRIAL TREATMENT FREE. We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ Pile Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once, Germ Medical Co., Dept A, 18, 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

WHY DO YOU HESITATE?

The common use of violent cathartics is a habit destructive of health and creates a necessity for larger and more frequent doses.

A trial bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine will be sent free and prepaid to any reader of this publication who needs it and writes for it. One small dose a day quickly cures the most stubborn case of constipation or the most distressing stomach trouble, to stay cured. Its influence upon the liver, kidneys and bladder is gentle and wonderful and restores those organs to a condition of health, so that they perform their functions perfectly and painlessly. Perfect health and vigor is soon established by a little of this wonderful curative tonic.

Any reader of Christian Century may prove this remarkable remedy without expense by writing to Vernal Remedy Company, Buffalo, N. Y. They will send a bottle free to all who write for it. It quickly and permanently cures constipation, catarrh of stomach, bowels and bladder, and all stomach, liver, kidney and bladder troubles caused by inflammation, congestion or catarrh. Why hesitate? Write immediately for one bottle. You will receive it promptly, free and prepaid.

CANCER INCREASING.

This disease has quadrupled itself in the last 40 years. This is made manifest by the increasing number of patients applying to Dr. Bye of Kansas City, Mo. His offices are crowded continually by patients from every state in the union. Dr. Bye is the discoverer of a combination of Medicated Oils that readily cure cancer, tumor, catarrh, piles, fistula, and all skin and womb diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo.

BLOOD AND BRAIN

Have everything to do with each other. Your mental accomplishments are measured by the condition of the vital fluid. If it fails to nourish the organs of the body your supply of brain power is largely diminished, your mind is foggy and you are generally miserable. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer will set things going right again. Not a drug store medicine. Sold only by special agents or the proprietor direct. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 S. Hoyne avenue, Chicago, Ill.

FOR THANKSGIVING DAY.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets within distances of 150 miles, November 27th and 28th, at rate of a fare and one-third for the round trip. Tickets good returning until November 29, inclusive. This road has three express trains daily to Fort Wayne, Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, New York and Boston, with vestibuled sleeping cars. Also excellent dining-car service; meals served on Individual Club Plan, ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00. For reservations in sleeping cars or other information, address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams St.; City Ticket Office, 111 Adams St., Chicago. 'Phone 2057 Central. No. 42

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train of the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent. A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

Observation Cafe Cars.

The Wabash road has placed in service on its fast day trains between Chicago and St. Louis very handsome new observation library cars. Meals are served a la carte. Train leaves Chicago at 11:03 a. m. daily and arrives St. Louis, 6:42 p. m. Ticket office, 97 Adams street, Chicago. 1t

WINTER TOURIST TICKETS

to the

SOUTH

Via the

Southern Railway

Now on sale.

In making arrangements to go to

FLORIDA CUBA or NASSAU

CALL OR WRITE (it costs only two cents.)

GEO. B. ALLEN, A. G. P. A. Southern Railway, ST. LOUIS, MO.

or

J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A. 225 Dearborn St. CHICAGO, ILL.

and they will furnish you rates, send literature and give any information desired.

Special Free Illustrated

Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON, Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry. CHICAGO, ILL.

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

THANKSGIVING DAY EXCURSIONS.

On all trains of the Nickel Plate Road, on November 27th and 28th, to points within 150 miles and good returning November 29th, 1901. Chicago Depot, Van Buren St., near Clark St., on the Elevated Loop. City Ticket Office, 111 Adams St. Also union ticket office, Auditorium Annex. Phone 2057 Central.

21 HOURS TO HOT SPRINGS.

Through Sleeper from Chicago.

Commencing Nov. 17, the Wabash Road will run a daily sleeper from Chicago to Hot Springs, Ark., without change, leaving Chicago on the fast day express at 11:03 a. m., and reaching Hot Springs next morning at 8 o'clock. Write for illustrated booklet, giving full particulars. Ticket office, 97 Adams street, Chicago.

Daily and
Personally Conducted

Excursions

to California

and

Oregon

SPECIAL attention given to organizing family parties. Lowest rates; no change of cars; finest scenery; shortest time on the road. Address

S. A. HUTCHISON, Manager,
212 Clark Street,
Chicago, Ill.

25c. THE LADIES' FRIEND
Hopkins' Bleaching Gloves

Made from the Best Glove-kid in Black, Wine, Tan, and Chocolate. Just the thing for Housecleaning, Gardening, Driving, Wheeling, Outing, Golf, etc. Sizes, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Write for terms to agents.
Hopkins Glove Co., B Apollo, Cincinnati, O.

Burlington
Route

It costs no more to ride
on this beautiful train
than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul
Minneapolis
Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

A GREAT PREMIUM OFFER

Life of Wm. McKinley

OUR MARTYRED PRESIDENT

With a short Biography of Garfield and Lincoln, containing masterpieces of McKinley's eloquence and the History of Anarchy, its Purposes and Results. Complete authentic Biography of 453 pages. Written by

BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS, LL.D.

Personal friend and comrade of the late President, author of "Life of Samuel Adams," "Synonyms and Antonyms," "Liberty and Unions," etc., etc. Introduction by United States Senator Hon. Wm. E. Mason.

A Standard Authority because written by
BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS.

He was the intimate friend of William McKinley during all the years of his eminent career; the Bishop enjoyed his utmost confidence; under these conditions the manuscript had been in course of preparation for several years. It is a literary work of the highest order, accurate, interesting and truthful. It was almost ready for the press when the horrible tragedy came. Nothing remained to do save the necessity of the Bishop's final revisions and writing the last sad and closing chapters.

A Few of the Half-tone Illustrations

William McKinley, Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. McKinley (Mother), Father of William McKinley, Mark Hanna, Members of McKinley's Cabinet, President Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, President Garfield, President Lincoln, Assassination of President McKinley, Death-bed Scenes of President McKinley, Photograph of Assassination, Capital Building, President McKinley's Residence, Temple of Music, White House, Milburn House, Scenes from McKinley's Early Life, Etc., Etc.

SYNOPSIS OF CONTENTS

The Story of the Assassination. Funeral Procession and Rites. Expressive Tributes from Foreign Lands. Tributes from Eminent Americans. Life of Wm. McKinley. His Last Term in Congress. Governor of Ohio. Financial Troubles. Great Campaign of 1894. Nominated for President. First Presidential Campaign. President of the United States. His Own Story of the Spanish War. Chronological Events of Spanish War. Country Expands and Becomes a World Power. Meets the Crisis in China. Renomination and Re-elected President. Anecdotes and Incidents in his Life. Chronological Record of his Life. Masterpieces from his Pen. Lincoln's Life Described by McKinley. Garfield's Life Described by McKinley.

Theodore Roosevelt.

His Birth. Political History and War Experience. As Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Governor and Vice-President. Marriage and Children. Author—in the Pulpit. Ideas of Honesty. Police Commissioner. Thought as a Boy. Qualities as a Tough Rider, etc., etc.

Anarchy

Its Origin, Purposes and Results. Notable Assassinations—Herbert Spencer—Herr Most—Ophiolus of Eminent Men.

Trial and Condemnation.

The Assassin Leon Czolgosz. The Nation's Man. Great Speech of Senator J. N. Thurston at the St. Louis Convention 1896, etc.

THE SUBJECT
WM. McKinley

A Grand Character for Biography

Our Martyred President's Life will ever call to mind the greatness of the man, for he was the embodiment of nobleness. It was by his tireless energy and ambition that he rose from amidst the common people to take his place among the great men of the earth, to a place in the hearts of the people.

No president since the time of Washington and Lincoln has endeared himself to the hearts of the people as our late president. He ever showed his interest in their welfare in a political way that went right home to the hearts and consciences of all. His policies were ever those that would benefit his country and with it the great masses of the working people.

He was the one man among men, loved and revered by all.

Recognized experts in the book business estimate the sale of McKinley Biographies during the next six months will exceed 3,000,000 volumes. These astounding figures were had by calculations based upon the sale of over 1,000,000 Biographies of President Garfield. It is an undisputed fact, Biography is of supreme interest to everyone.

THE AUTHOR

Bishop Fallows, before he essayed the present great work, was well prepared for the task, because he had already written, copiously, critically, comprehensively and understandingly of William McKinley and the historical epoch in which he so long played an important part. For forty years American statesmen, measures, politics and history have been as familiar to Bishop Fallows as are his own fingers that handle the pen so deftly, his own mind that produces such lofty thoughts, just judgments and beautiful sentiments. For many years he had personally known William McKinley, had admired, loved and carefully chronicled his splendid achievements, his wise and patriotic utterances. Understanding the motives, principles and lofty aims of our martyred President, familiar with recent American history and fortified with an array of the richest material which he had made peculiarly his own by employing it in the composition of many patriotic and historical works and addresses probably no American was better qualified, nor so matchlessly equipped for this great work as Bishop Samuel Fallows, and none has produced such splendid results—a book that will take its place upon the shelves of public and private libraries as a comprehensive and accurate life of Our Martyred President.

THE BOOK
A Model of MECHANICAL SKILL.

It is printed upon the finest paper, large, clear and new type, forty FINE ART full page photographic portraits of the president's eminent associates, friends and relatives, and has numerous engravings of interesting features of the text.

Bound in fine imported cloth, measuring 7 x 10 inches, 2 1/2 inches thick, gold and black embossing with front cover illuminated by the President's Portrait; in all making a most magnificent library, center table or gift volume. The business man will want it for the wonderful manner in which his policies influenced business; the parent, that his children may gather instruction and inspiration from it. The teacher wants it to enable him to instruct his classes in the duties of citizenship, for he was the ideal citizen. Every statesman will want it for his lessons in political integrity. Every working man throughout the country will want it for he proved himself to be the friend of the working man. Every youth will want it for his sympathy and love of youth. The minister wants it for he exemplified in his daily life the true principles of the Christian citizen. Every wife will want it, for he was a model husband and father.

Extraordinary Offer to Our Readers

Every family will want this book and every one can have it: 1st—Without Money. Send us at once three new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY for one year at the regular rate, $1.50 each, and this magnificent memorial volume will be sent you as a premium.

SECOND, COMBINATION OFFER:

The Price of the Book in cloth is.....$1.50
Extra for postage......20
The Christian Century, six months......75
Foreign postage extra.
Total value of both.....$2.45

Our Price For Both, $1.50
Including Postage.

Good to old or new subscribers alike, all arrangements being paid to date.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, - 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, November 28, 1901.

Number 28.

LEADING FEATURES.

- Weapons of the Evangelist*
- Two Ways of Ingathering*
- Stray Thoughts on Revivals*
- The Revival We Need*
- Revival Methods*
- Essentials of Revivals*
- A Reviving Again*

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arreage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES

Quarterly Helps.

THE PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Youngest Classes. It contains Lesson Stories, Lesson Questions, Lesson Thoughts and Lesson Pictures, and never fails to interest the little ones.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents.
10 copies, per quarter, $ .20; per year, $ .75
25 copies, " .40; " 1.50
50 " " .75; " 3.00

THE YOUTH'S QUARTERLY

A Lesson Magazine for the Junior Classes. The Scripture Text is printed in full, but an interesting Lesson Story takes the place of the usual explanatory notes.

TERMS—Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 21-2 cents each per quarter.

THE SCHOLAR'S QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Senior Classes. This Quarterly contains every help needed by the senior classes. Its popularity is shown by its immense circulation.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter, $ .10; per year, $ .30
10 copies, " .40; " 1.25
25 " " .90; " 3.00
50 " " 1.60; " 6.00
100 " " 3.00; " 12.00

THE BIBLE STUDENT.

A Lesson Magazine for the Advanced Classes, containing the Scripture Text in both the Common and Revised Versions, with Explanatory Notes, Helpful Readings, Practical Lessons. Maps, etc.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter, $ .10; per year, $ .40
10 copies, " .70; " 2.50
25 " " 1.60; " 6.00
50 " " 3.00; " 10.50
100 " " 5.50; " 20.00

BIBLE LESSON PICTURE ROLL.

Printed in 8 colors. Each leaf, 26 by 37 inches, contains a picture illustrating one lesson. 13 leaves in a set. Price per Roll—one quarter—reduced to 75 cents.

CHRISTIAN PICTURE LESSON CARDS.

A reduced fac-simile of the large Bible Lesson Picture Roll. Put up in sets, containing one card for each Sunday in quarter. One set will be required for each child in the class. Price reduced to 21-2 cents per set.

Model Sunday-School Record.

A complete record of the Attendance of Officers, Teachers and Pupils, with column for Roll of Officers, Teachers, and column for recording Attendance or Absence, Collections by Classes, Total Enrollment, with Gain or Loss for the Quarter, List and Cost of Supplies, Treasurer's Receipt to Secretary, Weekly and Quarterly Report, etc., for one to twenty-eight classes, all for entire quarter, without turning a leaf. Each book contains blanks for two years' records. Cloth.....$1.00

Model Sunday-School Treasurer's Book.

Arranged for the Systematic Recording of all Receipts and Expenditures. Blanks for Annual Reports, etc. Good for three years. Fine paper. Pocket size, cloth, 25 cents. Morocco.....$ .50

Model Sunday-School Class Book.

Arranged for Complete Record of Name, Residence, Date of Entering, Attendance, Contributions, etc. Good for one year. Single copy, five cents. Per dozen.....$ .50

Standard Sunday-School Class Book.

Ruling and Printed Headings, and keeps One Month's Record without turning a leaf. Good for one year. Bound in marbled paper. Single copy, ten cents. Per dozen.....$ .75

Sunday-School Collection and Class Envelopes.

Cloth-lined, printed, and good for one year. Per dozen.....$ .50
Manila paper, printed, and good for one year. Per hundred, 35 cents. Per thousand..... 2.25

Model Superintendent's Roll or Pocket Record.

Containing an Alphabetical List of the Names and Addresses of all the Pupils connected with the School; also, List of Officers and Teachers, with Addresses, and blanks for recording some of the most important items from the Secretary's Weekly Reports. Cloth, 50 cents. Morocco....$ .75

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

358 Dearborn Street,

Chicago, Ill.

Bethany College.

Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,

J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Monthly.

CHRISTIAN BIBLE LESSON LEAVES.

These Lesson Leaves are especially for the use of Sunday-schools that may not be able to fully supply themselves with the Lesson Books or Quarterlies.

TERMS.

10 copies, 1 mo., $ .15; 3 mos., $ .30; 1 yr., $1.00
25 " " .25; " .60; " 2.40
50 " " .45; " 1.20; " 4.60
100 " " .75; " 2.10; " 8.00

Weekly.

THE LITTLE ONES.

Printed in Colors.

This is a Weekly for the Primary Department in the Sunday-school and the Little Ones at Home, full of Charming Little Stories, Sweet Poems, Merry Rhymes and Jingles, Beautiful Pictures and Simple Lesson Talks. The prettiest and best of all papers for the very little people.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than five copies to one address, 25 cents a copy per year. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL EVANGELIST.

This is a Weekly for the Sunday-school and Family, of varied and attractive contents, embracing Serial and Shorter Stories; Sketches; Incidents of Travel; Poetry; Field Notes; Lesson Talks, and Letters from the Children. Printed from clear type, on fine calendered paper, and profusely illustrated.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 30 cents a copy per year, or 8 cents per quarter. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A Large Illustrated Weekly Magazine, devoted to the welfare and work of Our Young People, giving special attention to the Sunday-school and Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. It contains wood-cuts and biographical sketches of prominent workers, Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons, and Endeavor Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, Outlines of Work, etc. This Magazine has called forth more commendatory notices than any other periodical ever issued by our people. The Sunday-school pupil or teacher who has this publication will need no other lesson help, and will be able to keep fully "abreast of the times" in the Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. work.

TERMS—One copy, per year, 75 cents; in clubs of ten, 60 cents each; in packages of ten or more to one name and address, only 50 cents each. Send for Sample.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM....

Chicago
Indianapolis
Cincinnati
Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake
and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

RHEUMATISM...

Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by

Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies

The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws cords, and hardened muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take his word. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted

PLYMUR BELL

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. SEE FREE CATALOGUE. TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., November 28, 1901.

Number 28.

EDITORIAL

LIFT THE GOSPEL BANNER.

Lift the Gospel banner, wave it far and wide,
Thro' the crowded city, over ocean's tide;
Sound the proclamation: peace to all mankind,
Jesus and salvation all the world may find.

Lift the Gospel standard, spread the Gospel light,
Let the blessed radiance flame o'er heathen night;
Love is God's own sunshine, such as angels prove;
Conquer men by kindness, God himself is love.

Let us rise to action, work with one design,
Work with Christ and triumph in the work divine;
Victory's palm awaits us, let us then work on,
Till we hear the welcome, "Faithful ones, well done!"
—Anon.

THE WEAPONS OF THE EVANGELIST.

THE evangelist is one of the most striking figures in the army of God. After we have criticised him to our hearts' content, found out his weaknesses and his dangers, or the evil results that follow a successful revival; after we have even summed up the number of revivals that have produced nothing but a passing excitement; when we come to our sober second thought, we remember that in the New Testament the evangelist is described as one of the gifts of God to the Church, and then we remember that throughout the history of the Church the evangelist has been ever the man in the front rank leading against the foe. Whether we call him a missionary preaching to utterly ignorant heathen or a mediæval saint, like St. Francis of Assisi, urging men to break from the world and enter the life of holy service, sending out his preaching friars over all Europe, or whether we recall the figure of a Martin Luther, heralding a new day and calling the world to arise and rejoice in its light, or a Wesley, riding on horseback night and day in England and America to proclaim the Gospel of Christ, and to found one of the greatest evangelistic organizations that Christendom has ever seen, or a Finney or a Moody doing work nearer our day and more familiar to us all—we recognize at once in all these men the person of the evangelist and rejoice in the ever varied and ever fresh forms under which he has appeared to do his one great work. That he has had his weaknesses and his failures, that he has made his enemies even among fellow Christians, is by no means to utter his condemnation. These facts are to be expected, since even when most truly sent and inspired of God, he is yet a human being among human beings, no more or less faulty than himself.

This warrior-leader of the Church of Christ has his own peculiar weapons. They are those indeed which every true preacher and pastor will seek to use steadily and efficiently. But the pastor uses them along with many other weapons, which have other ends than these; and the evangelist is a man, who, whether for a longer or a shorter period, is specially equipped of God for the effective use of simply these weapons of evangelism. The weapons of the Church are the truths of the Gospel. To proclaim these in life and word is to fight for the Kingdom of Light and to conquer the Kingdom of Darkness. Every truth announced is a word of God, a stroke of the flashing sword of the Spirit. The evangelist is the man who uses in the language of his own day a certain set of truths which move men to a certain set of actions. He has received and learned the most effective way of stating, illustrating, and urging these truths upon the attention and the will of the people, who, as yet, have resisted Christ and remained outside the Church. From the first preaching of Peter and Paul down to the evangelistic sermons of yesterday, the one dominant aim of every such man has been to bring human souls to the first great act of repentance and faith.

The aim of the evangelist then is to reach that innermost shrine of the human spirit where the Will dwells. He cannot rest until he feels that by his announcement of the truth and by his appeals to what is highest and deepest in the human soul, he has at last carried his influence or the influence of God in upon that sacred place where at last all human effort stops, and his brother man is left to exercise the full power of personal decision. The evangelist does not seek of course a vague, an indefinite movement of the soul; he has a very definite direction in which to point it, and one supreme act towards which he fain would move it—this is the act of personal faith in God through Jesus Christ. The heart and soul, the spring and life, the very essence of the Christian religion is faith in the grace of God through Jesus Christ. No man is a Christian until that grace has been accepted, till the act of faith, which is acceptance, has been personally performed; and no man is anything but a Christian who has thus acted towards God in Jesus Christ. All the truths which the evangelist would use to reach his end are those which on the one hand convince the man of his personal need of that mercy, and convince him on the other hand and on the highest grounds that that mercy is directed by the Spirit of God towards himself. All that the evangelist preaches bears upon these two fundamental facts, that they may become through the man's own will experiences of his own soul, the conditions of his own salvation.

No more striking figure has appeared on the battlefield among the warrior evangelists of the Church than that of Henry Drummond. Like a mediæval cavalier he appears, princely in bearing, courageous in spirit, quick and deft in the use of his chosen and well-proved weapons. No man, not even Mr. Moody, dealt at close quarters, steadily for so many years, with the typical educated manhood of the present generation. His was not evangelism in the slums, but evangelism among the brightest youth, among the most self-respecting men, of the most self-respecting classes. Henry Drummond had the instincts of a broad churchman in his soul, the charity that would fain speak well of all mortals, the breadth that would fain throw open the gates of heaven as widely as possible to the faltering children of men. Yet Henry Drummond, face to face with one of his great student audiences, said that he found in all his experience only one fact which kept men permanently from Jesus Christ—only one barrier between the great Son of Man and the loyal trust of all human hearts—and that was sin. Surely his witness is, for men of our time, strangely impressive, and even irresistible. In this witness he but stands where all great evangelists have stood, facing the same foe, giving it the same name. Every man who would bring another to Christ sees between himself and that brother, sin, and between that brother and his Christ, sin. The weapons he would use to reach that man's will and bring him into union with that Christ, must be those that are adapted to remove that sin. Now, there are two facts concerning sin which make it the barrier it is between the soul and God. They are the fear of sin and the love of sin. The fear hath torment, and the love is the torment. How shall the evangelist enable a man to get rid of these two terrific facts—the fear of sin and the fear which sin creates; the love which keeps the sin, the sin which keeps the love?

The wise and powerful evangelist of any day is he who is skilled in knowing how to deal with these two facts and who knows that the secret of power, as concerning the fear and the love wrapped up in sin, is to be found only in Jesus Christ who died for our sins and rose again. Because God sent him into the world, he is the announcement and revelation of the supreme love of God himself; because he offered himself in death on our behalf, he has become the evident revelation of God's condemnation of sin and of every sinner as such. The condemnation has been uttered that the love may break a long silence and speak. The dark dread of the soul that God hates sin has received, therefore, its most awful confirmation in the Cross of Jesus Christ; but this confirmation was given, not that all might end there, but that love might begin there to speak its word of pardon to win the trust of the soul.

These facts are the weapons of the evangelist, which he will use according to his own experience of them and the attitude of the generation in which he lives. Some evangelists, like Jonathan Edwards, have been pre-eminent in disclosing the guilt of sin before the ineffable pureness of the will of God. Others, like Drummond, feel themselves often crushed by the terrible grip which sin, as an alien force, has laid upon the individual heart. Each will speak his message from his own point of view so as to bring his hearers to the same meeting place of all human needs, the Cross of Jesus Christ.

It remains only to be said that in addition to the mastery of the method, nay, rather as a necessary condition for that mastery, the evangelist must be filled with a consuming passion for the salvation of individual men. Around that purpose and around all facts which hinder it and all facts which make it possible, his imagination must move and his emotions be quickened. He must live, therefore, in the closest fellowship with him who was sent into the world for this very purpose and came to save the lost. The urgency of spirit which brought the Son of God from his throne to the Cross, which speaks in all the tones of his teaching, and in the sternness of his self-sacrifice, must, by his own Spirit, enter into and possess the heart and mind of the evangelist. To one so possessed, the weapons which we have named become indeed mighty to the pulling down of the strongholds of despair and the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God.

TWO WAYS OF INGATHERING

HERE is at present a singular reluctance on the part of preachers to commit themselves to a definite opinion on the subject of revival methods. A feeling prevails that many of the methods of the past have become obsolete, and that we are passing through a period of transition which will lead to very important changes. There are some who have broken with the past and have discarded revival methods altogether. One such correspondent writes: "I am not at all in sympathy with any revival methods. In my ministerial experience of over thirty-two years I have seen very little, if any, good resulting from the ordinary revival. It has never been my privilege to see a revival come in a natural way—by the way of a real spiritual development. All I have ever known have been 'gotten up' by sorts of drum-beating, and have been productive only of an effusive sentimentality that evaporates as quickly as it is generated." Very different is the testimony of another minister. He says: "In my ministry I have always favored extra meetings from time to time. I have had the help of evangelists, have joined in union meetings, have occasionally exchanged with neighboring pastors, but have more frequently conducted these special meetings myself. Have seen encouraging results from each of these methods." These two diverse testimonials are from two city pastors who have been equally successful in the work of spiritual ingathering.

Several years ago Dr. Cuyler of Brooklyn and Rev. Newman Hall of London, in comparing notes on this subject, presented equally opposing testimonies. Dr. Cuyler favored the method of occasional religious excitement even although it might be followed by period of spiritual dearth. He said:

"Fully three-fourths of all the two thousand persons whom I have been permitted to receive into the Church have been received during the seasons of unusual prayer and activity." But he admitted "The year or two after these revivals has not witnessed many accessions." He accounted for this by the fact that the most impressible people have been awakened during the revival, so that those who might have responded to the ordinary influences had been already won to the Church, and there was less material for the ordinary agency to work upon; and also "from the unquestionable fact that seasons of unwonted religious activity in one direction are apt to be followed by seasons of comparative repose."

Dr. Newman Hall, on the other hand, favored "the slow and steady ingathering of members without any peculiar periodical excitement, the converting influences of the Spirit descending like dew without any alternation of drought." He said:

"During the twenty-six years of my present pastorate I have been permitted to receive into the Church upward of 3,000 persons. Of these I may, perhaps, reckon, with my friend, about 2,000 received on their personal confession. Instead of three-fourths of these being the result of special seasons of revival, I am within the mark when I say that not twenty-five of the whole number have referred to such seasons as the occasions of conversion, including those benefited by the visit of Mr. Moody. On two or three occasions we have had special services of a revival character; but not ten conversions have resulted, and these have been chiefly cases in which there had been already deep conviction and which, in all probability, would have developed under the ordinary instrumentality. Admissions to the Church have been at a very average rate, year after year, resulting not only from preaching, but also and very largely from the labors of the Sunday-school, from home influence, from open-air services and the various mission operations in the neighborhood."

Now, what is the conclusion to be drawn from these opposing testimonies? This—that God uses a variety of agencies in doing his work, and that methods which are suitable to one person or community are unsuitable to another. Every man must work in the way that is natural to him, and in the way which he deems best fitted, in view of the conditions that obtain, to secure the most satisfactory results.

STRAY THOUGHTS ON REVIVALS.

Early Conversions.

ABOUT twenty years ago it could be confidently affirmed that the majority of members received into our evangelical churches were converted in seasons of revival. This is no longer true. Especially during the last decade the majority of accessions to the Church have been from among the young. This is a condition of things which is not to be deplored, for it means the securing for Christ the unbroken service of the life. The conversion of a child is not to be despised, for it may count more for the advancement of the Kingdom than the conversion of a grown-up sinner who can give to the Lord only the fog end of a wasted life.

Revivals Still Needed.

But while the ideal condition is that all the children of the church should be taught of God and should grow up in the Lord's nurture, the sad fact remains that the church fails to get hold and to keep hold of large numbers of her young people; and outside of her pale there grows up a still larger class of people who have been untouched by her ministrations. So that the condition we are confronted with is this, that the majority of the unevangelized now living on the earth are grown-up sinners. This class can be reached only by revival methods of some sort. The church, therefore, that discards revival methods is leaving a large part of the work of the world's evangelization undone. The work of the church is to be both educational and evangelistic; educational as touching those who are within, evangelistic as touching those who are without.

The Conviction of Sin.

The fact is sometimes mourned over that conversion in the present day is seldom accompanied by any deep sense of sin. A New England deacon is reported to have said that there were at one communion thirty persons received into the church of which he is a member, and not a sinner among them. Some attribute this change to a neglect of what our Puritan forefathers called "law work," which with them preceded the preaching of the Gospel. That may be one cause, but it is not the main one. The main cause is to be found in the change of front which the church has unconsciously made. She is not seeking the awakening of those without so much as she is seeking the instruction of those within. She is for the present addressing herself to a class in whom the sense of sin is not deep. Bunyan saw the significance of this when he represented Pilgrim as having to go through the Slough of Despond, while Christiana and her children found a shorter and easier way to the celestial city. But the main thing in Christian experience is not the depth of conviction, but the thoroughness of the change of purpose and life.

Need of an Awakening.

A certain preacher of note is reported to have said that the kingdom of God is like seed, and not like nitroglycerine; it grows, but does not explode. This comparison is one which will not hold. The Gospel is "the dynamis of God unto salvation." It has power to break in pieces flinty hearts. It does not always develop silently and gradually as a seed, it sometimes comes as a sudden eruption of power, producing an instantaneous revolution and reformation. Spiritual awakening may come by the clanging bells of the fire alarm, as well as by the falling of the light upon the face of the sleeper. Many sinners need to be suddenly aroused. They are slumbering so profoundly that nothing short of an earthquake will awaken them. There is need for the church to lift up her voice and cry: "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee."

Latent Power.

In every church there is a vast amount of latent power. The wheels are turning, but power is going to waste because connection is not being made with the practical affairs of Christian service. There is an abundance of power, but it is not being applied. There is real life, but it is dormant; and hence is as ineffective for practical results as if it were non-existent. What is needed is to secure the utilization of this latent power by connecting it with neglected duties. When this is done we have a revival of religion; the deserted prayer meeting is then thronged, family altar fires are rekindled; new interest is taken in the Word of God and in the services of the sanctuary; new zeal is shown for the salvation of men. In a word there is a resurrection from the dead; formality is gone; things have become real; Christianity has become a living force and Christians have begun to live their true life.

Tendency to Union Through Revivals.

In the past nearly all the great revivals were divisive. Many of them gave birth to new denominations. In the present day the tendency is in the opposite direction; and it is evident that in the future the kingdom is to be advanced not by division, but by union. It is not so common in the present day for churches to have revivals of their own; they are drawing together, federating their forces and ceasing to be rivals; they are becoming fellow-laborers in the Lord. This is evidently the way in which the Spirit of God is leading the church of today; and so the church which was rent by revivals is now being united by revivals.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Mark Twain and Tammany.

In the New York campaign, in which he took a prominent part, Mark Twain made a happy hit by comparing the Tammany ticket to a banana with one end white and wholesome and all the rest black and rotten. The white end, of course, was Shepard, and the people were asked if they were ready to eat the whole banana for the sake of one little morsel at the sound end.

Movements Toward Union.

Time is the great healer. There are signs that some of the schisms brought about by the war of the rebellion are approaching their end. At the next conference of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church the union of the Methodist churches North and South is to be definitely considered. And at Lexington, Kentucky, representatives of the Northern and Southern synods of the Presbyterian church have united in the establishing of a college for the higher education of women. These are steps on the way towards the final consummation.

Important Discovery.

Great interest has been awakened by the experiments of Dr. John E. Gilman of Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, with regard to the treatment of cancer by the Roentgen rays. These experiments, which have extended over a year and a half, have been wonderfully successful. Dr. Gilman claims that he has succeeded in killing the germs from which the cancer cells are developed, thus arresting the growth of the cancer, and in some instances effecting its cure. If this claim turns out to be well founded what a great boon to afflicted humanity this discovery will prove!

On the Altar of Science.

A young woman in Brooklyn, N. Y., has in the interest of science submitted to inoculation with virus taken from a cow suffering from tuberculosis. The object of the experiment is to discover whether or not Professor Koch's theory that bovine tubercle bacilli cannot infect human beings is correct. Whatever we may think of the wisdom or humanity of the experiment, the spirit of altruism which is implied in it is beautiful in the extreme. And this is essentially the Christian spirit, whatever be its form, and whatever be the specific object for which the sacrifice is made.

National Gospel Campaign.

The National Central Committee of the Twentieth Century National Gospel campaign is the somewhat cumbersome title of an organization which is seeking to secure an awakening among the churches of the land. This committee was formed in connection with the great forward movement of the church planned for the opening of the twentieth century. It works through existing organizations, to foster a spirit of union and plan for simultaneous meetings for the revival of evangelical preaching and teaching. A letter has just been issued to the ministers and churches of the country urging them to prosecute with vigor the work of religious reformation.

Salvation Army Loan.

To carry out its western colonization scheme the Salvation Army is endeavoring to float an issue of $150,000 bonds, payable in thirty-five years at five per cent interest. These bonds are to be secured by mortgage on lands owned by the Salvation Army. The scheme is generally regarded as practical and safe; but it is a pity to see a humanitarian work seeking support as a profitable financial investment. It is said that there are now on file applications from over a thousand families who desire to leave the crowded cities and join the colony; and surely money enough ought to be found to put into the hands of the Salvation Army officers to carry out their philanthropic enterprise.

Great Railway Combination.

Imagination staggers in contemplation of the daring schemes which men in these days not only attempt, but carry through. A railroad combination has just been effected involving interests so vast as to baffle ordinary comprehension. A security company has been formed with four hundred million dollars to unite under one control the Great Northern, the Burlington and the Northern Pacific systems. Whatever advantages may be gained by this consolidation of interests it must not be forgotten that it affords an object lesson in state socialism; and, further, it suggests to the workingmen the necessity of meeting combination with combination. Think of the national disaster involved in a general tie-up on this great united railway system!

The United Congregational Church.

At the recent meeting of the Congregational Union of Great Britain Dr. Joseph Parker advocated his pet scheme of a union of all Congregational churches into "The United Congregational church." He said that "isolated independency has had its day, and mongrel independency is a failure." That something is needed to abolish the evils and retain the advantages of independency is evident, but it hardly lies in this way. In his new book on "The Evolution of Congregationalism," Dr. Mackennal has pointed out that the term church is used in Scripture in two senses only, namely, as denoting a single assembly of believers, or as denoting the whole body of believers. It is never used in the denominational sense. Union or federation among churches is a thing to be desired; but the calling of any group of churches, a church, or the church is a thing to be avoided. At the same time the desire for closer fellowship and union is a sign of the times.

Home for Delinquent Boys.

Judge Tuthill, who administers the new Juvenile Court law, has had his sympathies stirred for the homeless waifs of the city, and is endeavoring to establish for them a rural home where they would be under wholesome and helpful influences. He has asked the stockholders of the World's Columbian Exposition to donate for that purpose the surplus of $300,000 which is about to be distributed among them; but this they can do only as individuals. Meanwhile he makes his appeal to the churches. Last Monday at the Methodist preachers' meeting he spoke on the question, "What Can the Churches Do to Save Our Boys From Ruin?" emphasizing the need of probationary work and the providing of a suitable place to which juvenile derelicts could be committed. A resolution was passed pledging support to the movement. In this good cause all the churches ought heartily to join.

CONTRIBUTED

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

Lord! what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will prevail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take!
What parched ground refresh, as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all—the distant and the near—
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear:
We kneel, how weak! we rise, how full of power!

Why therefore should we do ourselves the wrong.
Or others, that we are not always strong?

That we are ever overborne with care;
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with thee?

—Archbishop Trench.

THE REVIVAL WE NEED.*

CHARLES AUBREY EATON.

Y evangelism is meant that branch of Christian work which has to do with the conversion of individuals. In the great commission this is put first, and both in point of time and place it must be first in the modern church. Organization, education and observance of Christian ordinances are necessary and essential; but dead men cannot be trained or educated. And the New Testament word is that apart from Christ men are dead in trespasses and sins.

Consequently the first and highest duty of all those who bear his name is to bring as many as possible into vital relationship with him. The idea is that of an army in actual warfare. The business of the soldier is to fight, and in his campaigning he learns the technique of his calling.

The first great evangelistic need of the modern church is seen in the pulpit. The pulpit must turn away from secondaryism. Culture is always good, and nowadays necessary. Criticism in its methods and results, applied Christianity, æstheticism, all have their place and a most important place. But it is not the first place. In a striking passage the mission of our Lord is described by Paul. "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." He himself declared that the "Son of Man came to give his life a ransom for many." In the great command, love to God is placed before love to man, as root is before fruit. "Good conduct presupposes good character." In this sense the Sermon on the Mount itself is secondary, for underneath it and implied by it lie certain great elemental truths, apart from which it has no meaning. It presupposes a spiritual world, real, present, to which all men are vitally related, and by which they are measured here and hereafter. It implies an atonement as a perfect fulfillment of its high behests. It implies on the part of those who submit to it a new spiritual birth, for it is the law of a higher life, and man in his natural state obeys a lower law. What therefore God has placed first his ministers must place first. What Jesus preached to Nicodemus, his called servants must preach to all without respect of persons—namely, "except a man be born again he cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven."

The world is full of voices and echoes calling loudly. Shows and shadows press upon our attention. But ministers of Christ are men of vision, seers, sent ones. They have seen the Lord, have heard his voice. They listen to these jangling minor voices in the great melody of the world, and they know the relative place and value of each. Back of these the preacher must go; back to the eternal, spiritual facts: God, holy and sinned against; man, lost, fallen from heaven to hell by sin; Jesus Christ the Savior, delivered for man's offences, raised again for his justification; the Holy Spirit, God incarnate in redeemed souls, building them into the old-time Divine image; guiding them in all they do; teaching them the deep mysteries of faith and fitting them in power and wisdom for their high and unique service as followers of Christ. The preacher must know these facts experimentally. Let him be brave and true enough to turn away from secondary calls and duties and deal with these elemental forces and facts. Thus, and thus only, can the pulpit of today meet the evangelistic need of its time.

The second great evangelistic need is seen in the pew. If the pulpit needs to fall back upon the first principles of its Divine experience and message, much more the pew. With a Christless Christianity here no minister can convert a soul. Rather, by giving the lie to what the preacher says, conversion of sinners outside the church is made forever impossible. The spiritual energies of the modern church are paralyzed and neutralized by a great and plain contradiction between what church members say and do. The majority are conformed to the world rather than transformed in life and deed by the renewing of their mind. The Christian man and unbeliever do business side by side. They both acknowledge the same heathen, selfish standard of commercial morality. Christian women weary themselves to follow the fashions of a godless world. They are in many cases more anxious to acquaint their children with the inanities and imbecilities of polite society than to teach them by word and example and pleading prayer to know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom God hath sent. In a word, church members have very largely succumbed to their environment and have allowed the difference between them and a God-hating world to become simply of degree and not of kind. The most faithful and eloquent preacher on earth, yea, an angel from heaven, could not bring about a revival when the members of the church in daily deed and word prove to the world that there is after all nothing in religion.

From these considerations it would seem that the next great revival will be a revival within the church itself. It will consist in an improvement in quality, rather than increase in quantity of church membership. It will turn away from machinery and artificiality and organization, and will depend upon personality and character. It will deal directly as between man and man. It will be a thing of life; of every-day life to be lived as the hours go, simply and honestly; and by obeying this first spiritual law it will surely bring the world nearer to God.

*From "The Old Evangel and the New Evangelism," Fleming H. Revell Co.

REVIVAL METHODS.

W. E. M'LENNAN.

IN all my pastorates I have witnessed seasons of refreshing which I have every reason to believe were true and not pseudo revivals. Sinners were converted and Christians renewed. Moreover, the results were unquestionably good and the effects, speaking generally, permanent. In my early ministry I thought I knew just what methods were necessary for bringing about a revival, and wrote papers for ministers' meetings giving full directions, which, if followed, I held would infallibly produce a revival in any church or community. Greater experience and a wider observation have convinced me that the less method one has the better. I am not criticising others, but for myself I am forced to say that all the advertising, canvassing, special attractions and so forth that I have seen employed, all that I have myself employed, have rather harmed than helped the revival. There have been crowds, of course. People have been drawn together and there has been much outward enthusiasm, but that gripping of the heart, which is the sign that the sinner is conscious that God is looking right into his soul, has been wanting. Without this there can be no revival.

The whole matter, then, may be summed up in this: Whoever would have a revival must seek the face of God until there comes the assurance of perfect union with God in all his purposes, and, secondly, that God will use what is here dedicated to him for the winning of souls. All else we may regard as mere helps, to be used today and discarded tomorrow. Whether this or that hymn book shall be used, whether an evangelist or the pastor shall conduct the meeting, whether the sinner shall be asked to come to an anxious seat or invited to an inquiry room, whether meetings shall be held in the church or the home, or, indeed, whether there shall be meetings at all or only personal and individual work—all is to be determined by the exigencies of the time. The man who is assured that he is the ambassador of heaven to sinful men, and is mentally balanced, will hardly fail of knowing what is the reasonable course to pursue in any emergency. The apostles did not employ our methods, possibly we cannot employ theirs. Every age, one might say every community, needs its own methods.

Speaking out of my own experience, and conscious of the comparative weakness of the instrument—for I am not counted a revival preacher—I can still say that I believe in the efficacy of what is now called old-fashioned preaching in the promotion of a revival; preaching, that is, which is directed first to the conscience, and secondly to the heart; the first to break up the fallow ground, the second to develop soul hunger, and with it the confidence that God will be gracious. I have always chosen the most familiar texts for such sermons with illustrations designed not to produce levity, or merely to entertain, but to help to create an atmosphere of solemnity. The greatest obstacle to a real revival is not worldliness, so-called, but the action or the speech of the man, pastor or evangelist, who thinks he must play the mountebank in order to attract men. Next to the preaching, I would put hymns of the old-fashioned kind, the hymns which every one knows and which are generally free from the sentimentalism and false theology, to say nothing of the doggerel, of the modern variety.

As to the best method of inducing the sinner to decide for Christ, I still, after trying other means, hold to the altar as on the whole the best place to find Christ and to witness for him. In saying this I am, of course, speaking as one whose ministry is among those who habitually use the altar for sacramental and other purposes. And in using it in a revival meeting I seek to secure the same reverential attitude as when it is used in the breaking of bread in the Lord's Supper. To use the altar, as I have seen it used, to produce animal excitement, is a desecration of holy things and properly awakens feelings of disgust and opposition. But used as it should be, it becomes an instrument of power in a revival. Just now there comes before me the memory of scenes which have made of the altar a true shekinah. I have seen scores born into the kingdom there, and there my own heart has received its richest blessings. Why should I not believe in it and love it?

Chicago, Ill.

ESSENTIALS OF REVIVALS.

JOSEPH B. DAVISON.

REVIVAL is life renewed after partial suspension, or life made more vigorous. Soul life is intimate acquaintance with God (John 17: 3) or soul union with God (John 15: 5). This life is first begotten by the Holy Spirit and increases as soul acquaintance, or oneness with God, increases. God's great work is cleansing from sin and enriching character; but he, the vine, does this through the branches, his people. Restored life must then result in restored saving power and increased life in increased saving power. Such increased manifestation of saving power is the essential of every real Christian revival.

The Christian, and so the church, should always be alive; and, if alive, will be ever used by the indwelling Christ to save others; yet there would even then be seasons of special manifestation of God's power in large ingathering of souls to his kingdom. But often sin causes God to depart; then saving power departs till the soul is revived. Always since Moses the chief advances in God's kingdom have been by wide-spread revivals.

The human agents in all true revivals always so intensely believe that the unrepentant are in awful sin and peril, and that God is willing and able to save them now, that they pray most earnestly, and are willing to do anything whereby men may be led to accept Christ and know his indwelling love.

There has been great diversity in the method and outward manifestation in different revivals, caused by differences in age, temperament, intelligence or past life. Revivals of noise, of fear, joy or other emotion, or of joining the church, are not Christian revivals, though they often accompany them, the last always. Conversions have great outward variety; yet all have the common element of entire surrender to God that he may cleanse and rule heart and life, a giving up one's own way and accepting God's way. Conversion is not mere excitement, or outward reform, changing one habit or many, accepting some creed, joining the church or trying to conform to some ethical standard, but accepting Jesus' will as the law of all life.

Whatever the method, God's truth is always the means; and generally the essential truth that has been most neglected is made the most prominent. But certain great truths have always appeared with more or less prominence in every revival, such as:

First—That God is King of kings with infinite authority, and hence all sin is terrible rebellion against him, is intensely abhorred by him, and must bring irremediable ruin if persisted in. (This seems to be the truth now most obscured in the common thought and in much preaching.)

Second—That God is also a Father of boundless love, longing to save every one and urging all to repent, turn to him and live holy lives.

Third—In the Christian era, that Jesus is "God manifest," revealing the Father's love, holiness and power; and is also my perfect brother man, knowing me all through, and ready to save me completely and help me everywhere.

Fourth—That every man's first and highest duty is to repent of all sin, especially the sin of neglecting such a Savior, and accept him as all and in all.

Fifth—That there is no salvation without regeneration by the Holy Spirit.

Sixth—That a changed outward life is one essential evidence of being saved.

Hence in such great revivals as those under Wesley, Edwards, Finney and Moody dishonest creditors have paid their debts, dishonest salesmen changed their false weights, cruel fathers and husbands become kind and disobedient children obedient. The licentious have become pure, eye-servants have become faithful and grinding employers have come to treat their employes as their brethren.

May God speedily prepare the churches of America to ask and receive the most thorough and wide-spread revival ever known.

Milwaukee, Wis.

FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT.

R. HORTON, so well known all over the world as preacher, writer and student, has now been for twenty-one years minister of the Congregational church at Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead, London. He and his congregation are enjoying a festival week in commemoration of the majority attained.

It is now an open secret that Dr. Horton, after repeated invitations to be their minister, only consented to come to them on condition that he was not asked to wear ministerial garb. He said, "I will wear nothing to distinguish me from other men." The punctuation of the sentence is important. One cartoonist in Oxford represented him as having in his noble rage reached the length of throwing away his braces. The story is a favorite one with his people, who, however, delight to do him honor and to whom this week of celebration is an opportunity of showing their devotion to him.

Principal Fairbairn gave the opening sermon on Tuesday, October 29. His lecture was full of erudition, spirituality and poetic fire and was, it need hardly be added, a masterpiece of construction. His text was Hebrews 11: 1. It would be impossible to do justice to it in anything but a full report, so closely reasoned and so wonderfully illustrated was it. It contained a wonderful passage in which the impassioned patriotism of the Scot broke forth in a burst of oratory.

At a luncheon in the Town Hall, the mayor of Hampstead being present, Dr. Robertson Nicol spoke. In the evening a meeting was held in the church at which the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, K. C., M. P., Mr. N. L. Courtney, M. A., LL. D., and Rev. R. J. Campbell of Brighton, spoke.

It was a testimony to Dr. Horton's catholicity and power that these three men—Mr. Asquith, the member of parliament; Mr. Courtney, the man of literature and editor of The Fortnightly, and Rev. R. J. Campbell, one of the leading men of the Congregational church—should have united to do him honor.

No one who has heard Dr. Horton preach could lose the remembrance of his rare combination of gifts. Erudition, liberalism, evangelicalism and a rare simplicity and beauty of diction and manner are his salient features. There is one other, perhaps the most potent of all, and that is his reasoned optimism, if one might so term it. In these days when pessimism is so near to the over-worked brain and heart, it is wonderful to be able to say of a man in the full struggle of a church of 1,200 members, that never from his lips has a word of pessimism fallen. All has been faith, hope and love, and, as Mr. Courtney expressed it, Mr. Horton's attitude of mind is voiced in Browning's words:

"God's in his Heaven, All's right with the world."

E. D. S.

CLAIMING THE CREDIT.

IT is both unfair and wicked for one to take to himself the credit for the success of a certain undertaking, when he has had only a slight connection with the work, while others have labored hard and wisely and are justly entitled to the credit of the results so far as human agency is concerned. I have special reference to religious work. A few years ago a series of meetings were held in a church. The pastor had been laboring nara for several weeks in succession, and part of the time he was aided by another pastor, but no conversions were manifest during those weeks. Finally a minister, who was in the place one evening, was asked to preach; he did so, and after the sermon an opportunity was given the unconverted to express a desire for salvation. At that point the visiting minister, seeing some indications of a desire for conversion, took the lead of the meeting out of the hands of the pastor, who was in charge of the service, and asked for an expression of interest. Nearly twenty persons responded, some of whom became converted that evening. From that time until the present that visiting minister has frequently been relating, with manifest satisfaction, the "great work" that was accomplished that particular evening under his efforts!

To those who know the real character of this man and the situation of things at that revival, it is very evident that the breaking out of special interest and the conversions on that occasion were decidedly due to the faithful labors and fervent prayers of pastor and people, during the preceding weeks and even months.

But the visiting minister, destitute of righteous principle and always exceedingly anxious to have people regard him as a man of superior spiritual force and an unusually able instrument of God, has not yet ceased to claim the full credit of leading those people to Christ. This thing is especially disgusting for the reason that this man is known, far and wide, as being a religious pretender of the worst stripe!

But there is reason to believe that other ministers, actual Christians, too often yield to the temptation to assume more credit for the results of labors, in which they have some part, than they are entitled to. The minister who habitually boasts of what has been done where he has labored, giving the impression that not much would have been accomplished if he had not been there, is in danger of being called a prating coxcomb by those who hear his vauntings.

C. H. WETHERBE.

THE PLACE OF BAPTISM IN REVIVALS.

There cannot be the slightest doubt that with large sections of the church the original use of baptism in evangelistic work is often very much neglected. While it is true that in no outward act is obedience exhausted, and that "the soul of obedience is the obedience of the soul," yet when the outward act is the expression of supreme self-surrender, it marks the completion of obedience. And hence baptism and conversion may, and often do, synchronize. In the apostolic system baptism was a method of evangelism, and had to do with entrance into the kingdom rather than with entrance into the church. It was part of the great evangelistic commission. Incalculable harm has been wrought by changing it from a personal act of spiritual obedience into an ecclesiastical act which has to do with admittance into an outward fellowship! In the modern revival there is need to restore baptism to its place in the Christian system as a helpful and divinely appointed evangelistic agency.

UNITAS.

MANY PENTECOSTS.

Bishop Warren, in The Sunday School Times, shows that since Jesus lives and reigns on high, his promise to give the Holy Spirit included many Pentecosts before its final fulfillment:

"Jesus having gone to heaven, to its perfect state, its bright angelic choirs and his Father's love, what relation does he keep to us? His promise on departure was to give the Holy Spirit, who should even exceed his ministry, prepare a mansion, etc. See how the deed follows the word.

"The progress of the world is not cataclysmic, but epochal—first the blade, then suddenly the flower, and after due preparation the fruit. Individual lives that have no epochs are apt to be dead levels.

"The ugly century-plant blossoms at length into marvelous beauty. The human race blossoms into Pentecost. But one flowering does not exhaust the rose, the race, nor the residue of the Spirit. This one Pentecost does not fulfill the prophecy to pour out the Spirit upon all flesh. Every part of the world needs the outpouring, and the heavens are full of Pentecosts. It is the nature of prophecy to be generic and be fulfilled repeatedly, with enlarged significance and increasing power. How many times has that early prophecy (Gen. 3: 15) of the sneaking way of Satan lying in wait to bite the heel, and the effective way of man's striking at Satan's head, been fulfilled? How many times will it be fulfilled, up to the final and fatal consummation? So of the pouring out of the Spirit.

Since these things are so, we are less interested in history than possibility. The preparation for Pentecost was a sine qua non of its coming. Since God's laws are eternal, like causes produce like effects through all the ages."

The evangelistic revival lasts only a few weeks and is apt to degenerate into a do-it-up-and-done-with-it treatment of religion. The best elements of the spiritual revival must somehow be made permanent. The "worker" method, which aims with a profusion of bustle and device to keep people cumbered with quasi-religious serving, often misses the one thing needful. By some means the emphasis must be carried over from outward work to inward life—to the sources of action.

W. J. MUTCH, Ph. D.

PLEASANTRIES.

You cannot dream yourself into character; you must hammer and forge yourself one.

"Oh, Gertrude! So naughty! And yet you prayed this morning to be made a good girl." "But, mamma, I didn't mean right away."—Life.

Mrs. Homespun (indignantly)—Here's an article says that in Formosa a wife costs five dollars. Mr. Homespun (thoughtfully)—Wal, a good wife is wuth it.—Spare Moments.

"My friends," said the minister, earnestly, "let us beware of Satan. We know that he scatters tacks along the narrow way in order that the just may puncture their tires." And as the congregation pedaled homeward, many a member thought of the pastor's words.

A fellow in Norwich was bitten by a dog. As soon as he recovered from his fright he declared he would kill the animal. "But the dog isn't mad," said the owner. "Mad!" shouted the victim, exasperatingly, "what in thunder has he got to be mad about?" He evidently misconstrued the explanation.

A clergyman asked his Sunday school, "With what remarkable weapon did Samson at one time slay a number of Philistines?" For a while there was no answer, and the clergyman, to assist the children a little, commenced tapping his jaw with the tip of his finger, at the same time saying, "What's this? what's this?" Quick as thought a little fellow innocently replied, "The jaw-bone of an ass, sir?"

At a dinner the other night a large meat pie and a small roast duck were brought on together. The duck was intended for the father principally. The boys were fond of duck, their mother well knew; but it would not make a mouthful apiece for them. So, addressing the boy who sat nearest her, she said, "Which will you have, Bobby, duck or pie?" and at once began cutting the pie. "Duck," said Bobby, promptly. "No, Bobby," answered his mother, cheerfully, "you can't have duck, dear. Take your choice, my son. Take your choice. But you can't have duck!"—New York Tribune.

AT THE CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

A REVIVING AGAIN.

JAMES FOOTE.

Text—Psalm 85-6.—“Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?”

SAYS Dr. Andrew Murray: “What we need to pray and labor for first of all is that the church of true believers may be revived. What the world needs above everything is not more men of the ordinary type of Christians, but better men, stronger in faith and holier in life; men intensely devoted to Christ and his service, and ready to sacrifice all for the salvation of souls. A revival among believers is the great need of our day. A revived church is the only hope of a dying world.” Amen, say all who have any real longing for “a reviving again.”

There is a deep feeling, we believe, in the hearts of many Christian people all over the land that the Christian church needs to be revived. There is a painful consciousness that it is not nearly so aggressive as it ought to be. It is not making that headway as a moral and spiritual force that might be expected of it. The un-Christian forces outside are very powerful, seem to be conscious of their power and disposed to boast over the fact. They look with a kind of pity, in some cases bordering on contempt, on the professedly Christian church. They see its weaknesses, its inconsistencies, its comparative deadness, and its unmistakable formalism, and they are proof, to a very large extent, against its prayers and its appeals. There is a falling away in the numbers of scholars attending our Sunday schools, and presbyteries are lamenting the fact and trying to discover the cause and provide a remedy. Young men, even among those who are brought up in Christian homes, are not coming forward in such numbers as heretofore to have themselves enrolled as theological students. There is almost everywhere a conspicuous dearth of conversions. Church organizations are not diminishing, rather the reverse, but with all the machinery in operation the results, somehow, are sadly disappointing. The question is anxiously asked, “Is the church making any real progress in our day and land, or is she failing to hold her own against the forces marshalled against her?”

Such surmises are disquieting, saddening, but happily they are leading to heart-searching and to more united and earnest prayer. And that of itself is an evidence that the reviving has begun. All such reviving begins where alone it can begin, among the people of God, in the hearts of those who are already Christians. There can be no reviving if there be no life to be revived. So long as the patient lives a reviving may be possible. His strength may be reduced to a minimum, but he may get the turn; he gets it, let us suppose, and in due course is restored to health and strength again. “Wilt thou not revive us again?” is the cry of not a few earnest souls, we believe, at this present time. They are conscious that they have lost ground, that their faith must have become weak, that their zeal had been allowed to evaporate, that their first love was well-nigh gone. We are not, say they, what we were, not what we ought to be, not what we would like to be; our spiritual life is at a low ebb. “Wilt thou not revive us again?”

Revive us. It is a personal request. It is not a prayer this for the conversion of sinners in the first place. That is not the first thing to be prayed for. If sinners were to be converted in any considerable numbers what would an unrevived church do with them? Would they not be a disturbing element in such a church? Could the converts find the atmosphere there to be congenial? A cold, formalistic, backslidden church might do incalculable injury to those who had just decided for Christ.

“Wilt thou not revive us again?” We think of the time when we first knew the Lord. O what a joyous time that was! All things became new to us then. We saw them in a new light. We looked out upon the world, and while sun and moon and stars, and all natural objects around us were the same, there was a something that made them somehow all seem different. By the new and most blessed experience that had sprung up within us, they became, so to speak, transfigured to our eyes. Our friends—we loved them before, but not as we did when Christ became so precious to us, and we knew that he had died for them as well as for ourselves. The Sabbath—how we welcomed it as the best day of all the seven! The sanctuary—with what holy joy we wended our way toward it and joined in its sacred services! The Scriptures—what a treasury of good things for the enrichment of our minds and the enlargement of our hearts! Ah, but we somehow allowed such blessed experiences to slip away from us! We turned our back upon these delectable mountains and got down again into the valleys where the mists and shadows lie. Our path has not, all along, been that of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day. By and by we seemed to hear a voice saying, “Ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?” We were startled, affrighted, ashamed. We said to ourselves:

“Where is the blessedness I knew
When first I saw the Lord?”

We had never, indeed, disowned our Master. We had not made shipwreck of our faith. We still had the root of the matter in us, but we stood sadly in need of a reviving again, and it is coming, has come. The very longing for it is a sign that it is already here. He who stirs the longing, inspires the prayer, answers the cry even while it is being uttered. “Wilt thou revive us again?” Of course he will. That is the desire of his heart before it is the will of ours. He is a faithful Creator, and as such he will keep his word with us; he cannot disappoint us. “After two days he will revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight.”

This reviving again is his work. If he does not do it, it must be because the essential conditions are not supplied by us. If we have winter it is not owing to any inherent change in the sun; the change is in the earth, in its revolutions round the sun. In winter the sun's rays fall slantingly, not so vertically as in summer, hence fewer of them at a given spot. As the day lengthens and spring returns, the earth revives, life and beauty once again burst upon our enraptured view. So, if we have become forgetful of God and divine things; if we have allowed ourselves to drift into a region where the sun of righteousness is all but hidden from us, there is nothing for it but to retrace our steps, saying, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord; for he hath torn and he will heal us; he hath smitten and he will bind us up." What a precious reviving again follows a disposition or attitude like that! "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord; his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth."

Hark! see, there is a sound as of abundance of rain. God's heritage, which is weary, is about to be refreshed. Times of refreshing are at hand. Get ready. Let eyes, ears and heart be open for the inflow of these heavenly influences that change winter into summer and that make the Christian church bloom and flourish like the garden of the Lord. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Dunfermline, Scotland.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

MOSES AND PHARAOH.

Lesson for Dec. 8, 1901. Ex. 11: 1-10.

Golden Text.—The angel of His presence saved them. Is. 63: 9.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Time and Place.

IT IS computed that the plagues of Egypt extended from June—the time of the inundation of the Nile (Ex. 7: 19),—to the following April. The seventh plague occurred when the "barley was in ear," about the middle of February (Ex. 9: 31). It was in B. C. 1492-91, by common reckoning, but some place it about 200 years later. The meeting place was "the field of Zoan" (Ps. 78: 12), or Zoan (Tanis), the capital. Moses now was eighty years old.

The Hardened Heart.

The lesson of Pharaoh's hardened heart is applicable to all ages. In the New Testament there are many references direct and indirect to hearts that are hardened. An awful description of the condition is that of the conscience devoid of feeling toward God, "seared with a hot iron." 1 Tim. 4: 2. The process that wrought upon Pharaoh is seen to-day in the hardening effects of habits that are practiced in disobedience to God. Many a man has, step by step, been led into sin, and a disregard of God's will, which he once would have shuddered at. Loving darkness rather than light; refusing to retain God in his knowledge, God gave him over to a reprobate mind. Rom. 1: 28. Long ages before God had said "My spirit shall not always strive with man." Gen. 6: 3. Acts 7: 51. Even then repentance must still have been open to him, for after the seventh plague we read again (Ch. 9: 34) of Pharaoh's choice, in that he himself "hardened his heart."

Let us notice some steps in the process of Pharaoh's persistent rebellion against God. (1) The Spirit's striving (Gen. 6: 3) with his conscience and reason through the Word. Ex. 5: 1-3. Pharaoh's answer in disobedience and insult is found in verses 2, 4-9. (2) His action in making firm his heart against God, the meaning of the original, is in Ch. 7: 13, 14 ascribed to himself. (3) After the first plague (Ch. 7: 15-25) it is stated in verse 22-23 "Neither did he set his heart to this." (4, 5) Then, following both the next two plagues it is said, "Pharaoh . . . hardened his heart." Ch. 8: 15, 19. (6) Here we discern a new warning, that of his magicians who acknowledge the work of God. (7) After the fourth plague (Ch. 8: 21, 24) it is stated that Pharaoh dealt "deceitfully," (V. 29) and (8) distinctly, that "Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also" (V. 32) implying a repetitional process. (9) After the fifth plague there is a like record. Chapt. 9: 7. (10) And now we see it is only following on the sixth plague—Pharaoh having thus far continuously resisted the grace of God, through lying and deception—that he reaches the hardened state, in which God judicially confirms the choice he has made. This confirmation is several times expressed substantially in the words found in Ch. 9: 12, "And the Lord hardened (made firm) the heart of Pharaoh." He did not tempt Pharaoh to evil (Jas. 1: 13), but simply confirmed his choice.

V. 1 Climax of Severity. "And the Lord said." Our lesson opens with a reference to the last or tenth plague brought upon the Egyptians. * * * "Yet will I bring one plague more." This threatened death of the first-born was by far the severest plague of the ten. The ten plagues may be enumerated as follows: (1) The Nile turned to blood. Ex. 7: 15-25. (2) Plague of the frogs. Ex. 8: 1-14. (3) Plague of lice, gnats, mosquitoes. Ex. 8: 16-19. (4) Plague of swarms. Ex. 8: 21-24. (5) Plague of murrain, destroying many cattle. Ex. 9: 1-7. (6) Plague of boils and blains. Ex. 9: 8-11. (7) Plague of hail, fire, thunder. Ex. 9: 13-33. (8) Plague of locusts. Ex. 10: 12-15. (9) Plague of darkness. Ex. 10: 21-29. (10) The plague of the present lesson, death of the first-born. * * * "Afterwards he will let you go." Pharaoh more than once had promised to let them go, but only to deceive them. Ch. 8: 21. * * * "He shall surely thrust you out altogether." It followed that in his fear of further judgment Pharaoh was to become urgent to have them depart in haste. To him it became a matter of life and death. "For they said, we be all dead men." Ch. 12: 33. It was because of this urgency that, in their speed to depart, they baked the unleavened cakes. Ch. 12: 39.

V. 2. Balancing Accounts. "Speak now." The people were to be instructed in advance regarding the plans of the departure. Let us keep in mind that some 2,000,000 persons were involved in this departure from Egypt. Num. 1: 45, 46. * * * "Let every man borrow of his neighbor." Let them "ask" every man of his neighbor, is the more correct rendering of the revised version. A similar command already had been given to the women. Ch. 3: 10. They were thus commanded to demand a recompense for their past services and God inclined the hearts of the Egyptians to give liberally. No small amount of substance would suffice to pay for their many years of enforced labor.

V. 3. Acknowledged Greatness. "Gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians." This is explained in what follows regarding the greatness of Moses. Such a powerful leader would improve the Egyptians' opinions regarding his people. * * * "Moses was very great." Humanly speaking, the greatness of his deeds made him great. He had brought even the powerful Pharaoh humbled and awed as a suppliant before him. It is interesting to note the secret of Moses' greatness. This may be traced, (1) to his heredity, (2) to early training, (3) to his vision of the invisible universe of power, Heb. 11: 26, 27, (4) to his thorough Egyptian education, (5) to his experience in Egyptian affairs, (6) to his communion with God in the Midian desert, (7) to his meekness, (8) to his spiritual zeal.

V. 4. The Fatal Decree. "Moses said." These words seem to directly follow Ch. 10: 29, as showing what took place after Pharaoh's forcible declaration, "I will see thy face again no more." These words must have been said in the same last interview. * * * "Thus saith the Lord." Moses claims to be no more than God's servant, God's mouthpiece. * * * "About midnight." The hour, but not the day, is stated, leaving the matter in dread uncertainty. It is an uncertainty similar to that which marks the future of every living being. Some days probably elapsed before the final judgment came upon Egypt, during which preparation for the departure of the nation, is completed. * * * "Will I go out." The language is the Lord's. It was his own work for his chosen nation. The Lord himself would be present in the terrible plague threatened.

V. 5. The Sore Judgment. "All the first-born." According to Rawlinson the law of primogeniture prevailed in Egypt a among most of the nations of antiquity. Estates and high position in the family descended to the eldest son, the glory and hope of the family. * * * "Shall die." If the death of their cattle (Ch. 9:6) had humbled and reformed them, their children would have been spared. No severer blow could fall on the land than the singling out of the first-born for death. The cause for this command is considered in Ch. 4:22, 23, where God speaks of Israel as his first-born, held in bondage by the Egyptians. If such bondage was obstinately extended, justice demanded that it be severely punished. The fulfillment is recorded in Ch. 12:29, 30. * * * "From the first-born of Pharaoh." The death of Egypt's crown prince would be involved. * * * "First-born of the maid-servant." Representing the lowest classes. No rank was to be exempt. * * * "First-born of the beasts." Some beasts were held sacred in the idolatry of Egypt; to kill them was regarded as a great calamity. The loss of animals would have a severe effect on the domestic affairs of the people.

V. 6. The National Grief. "A great cry." But this cry had been preceded by another great cry, that of the afflicted captives which arose to God. Ch. 3:7. The fulfillment is recorded in Ch. 12:30. It is a forecast of the great cry that should result from a lifetime spent in disobedience to God. Luke 13:28.

V. 7. The Lord's Favorites. "Against . . . Israel not a dog shall move his tongue." In that awful night, when the piercing shrieks of multitudes would rend the air, causing even the dogs to howl, yet not one of these brutes should molest the slave race. * * * "That ye may know." The words were addressed to Pharaoh by the Lord. * * * "Difference between the Egyptians and Israel." God had already put a difference between the accomplishments of Moses and of the Egyptian magicians. Ch. 8:18. The difference between the terror of the now afflicted Egyptians and the peace of the Israelites who realized that they were under the shadow of God's wing.

V. 8. Universal Homage. "All thy servants shall . . . bow down unto me." Terrorized by the great national calamity, they shall bow down to him who was now esteemed "as very great." V. 3. * * * "I will go out." Heretofore Moses had recited the words of God's message; here he speaks in his own persons. * * * "Went out . . . in a great anger." The heart of Moses is inflamed with righteous indignation at the king's continued impenitence and deceitfulness. Ch. 8:29. Standing as Moses did, the servant and representative of God, he realized that it was that Holy One against which the unrighteousness of Pharaoh was aimed. Even Jesus looked on the hard-hearted Pharisees of his day with holy anger. Mark 3:5.

V. 9. Wonders of the Lord. "The Lord said, Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you." Rather the Lord had said. He had foreseen and had forewarned Moses (Ex. 4:21), that Pharaoh's heart would be hardened, and that he would not let Israel depart in spite of the first nine plagues. This and verse 10 do not speak of things to follow; for clearly Pharaoh now did hearken unto Moses (Ch. 12:30, 32), but they are a summary of all the past opposition met from Pharaoh. * * * "That my wonders may be multiplied." It had been foretold (Ch. 3:20) that at length, after all the wonders were performed, Pharaoh would let the Israelites go.

V. 10. Recapitulation. "And Moses and Aaron." Aaron had become associated with this work. Ch. 4:27, 28. * * * "Do all these wonders before Pharaoh." Referring to the ten plagues. * * * "And the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart." See introduction. "God is sometimes said to do what he merely permits to be done, because he cannot wisely prevent it." Pharaoh hardened his own heart. Because God had foreseen and stated that this process (Ex. 4:21) would take place, is no more remarkable than that Christ or Paul should predict woeful conditions as the direct result of disobedience to God. Matt. 7:22; Acts 20:29; 2 Tim. 3:1. * * * "He would not let the children of Israel go." Referring to the previous plagues, Dr. Alford points out the similarity of this language, preceding the Jewish Passover, and the similar ending of the chapter in John which precedes the Great Passover itself. John 12:37.

THE LESSONS IN A NUT SHELL

Size, 2 3/4 x 5 1/2 inches
128 pages

THE VEST POCKET

Sunday School Lesson

COMMENTARY

International Series

FOR THE YEAR 1902

BY

Rev. DeLoss M. Tompkins, D. D.

THIS is the fourth annual volume of this valuable help. While some have paid it the compliment of imitation, none have equaled it, and it stands in a class by itself for Originality, Soundness and Reliability.

It Contains: With each lesson: The Historical Data; the Revisions; the Statement of the Lesson; a most unique outline for study or the blackboard; a daily reading scheme on the lessons for the entire year, and a commentary and reflections on the separate verses and suggestions of the lesson. In addition there are numerous other helps, purely original, such as Library References, Dictionary, Devotional Readings and Study, an Elaborate Analysis of the Acts of the Apostles, calendar, record pages, etc., etc.

Compact==Concise==Convenient

A Pocket Companion for Busy People, Adapted to the needs of the Pupil, the Teacher, or the Class.

THE following commendations are suggestive of the favor this book has won, yet no word can be said that will speak as does the book itself. It is worth many times its cost to the person who will buy and use it:

International S. S. Evangel says: "This little book gives on each lesson what would require many hours to acquire, and all better than but very few men in America could prepare. * * * It is at once scholarly, spiritual and practical, and in convenience and serviceability EXCELS OTHER HELPS."

Association Men: "Commends itself at first glance. * * * Particularly appropriate for the busy business man."

The Advance: "Condensation as a fine art is exhibited in this book. Remarkably suggestive and helpful."

Sunday School Times: "Vest Pocket Commentary is an unique and reasonably successful attempt to enable busy people to prepare their Sunday School lessons in their 'one spare moment.' * * * The 'Reflections' are excellent."

The Baptist Union: "The pith and marrow of the topics are given, the things that must be said to ensure a first grasp of the lesson. It will be of ready value to those who would gain a bird's eye view of the theme at a glance."

MANY SAY:

"I could not do without it."

STYLES AND PRICES

REGULAR EDITION, bound in red morocco, round corners, gold edges. . . . .25 cents each; $2.50 per doz.

INTERLEAVED EDITION, bound in red morocco, gold edges, two blank ruled pages with each lesson for notes. . . . .35 cents each; $3.50 per doz.

Sent on receipt of price or FREE AS A PREMIUM for one new subscriber to The Christian Century.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

BY PETER AINSLIE.

OUR text to-day is of unusual beauty and sweetness. There stands the angel of his presence with salvation for the lost. Where in all the realm of poetry or in all the world of art is there a picture so beautiful? The angel next to the throne, clothed in majesty and glory, bearing a message to the human race; his countenance ablaze with heavenly light and all his form wrapped in celestial garments. What pictures were thrown upon the mind of Isaiah! He in turn has flashed them before us and they are the living pictures that we carry through life. Angels are God's messengers. They live in his presence; they minister to his children on earth; they bear back impressions to the eternal Father. "Their angels," said Jesus, "do always behold the face of my Father who is in heaven." Angels held conversation with men and women. Both Testaments are rich in illustrations of this fact. See Abraham, Lot, Moses, Gideon, Elijah, Mary, Elizabeth, Zacharias, Peter and Paul. And angels are still around about us. "The angel of the Lord encampeth around about them that fear him and delivereth them." The world above us is more busy to serve us and more anxious to know us than the earth is to know God. If we could see, the air would be filled with angels. Murillo always made the borders of his pictures crowded with angel faces, and who will say that the great Spanish painter's conception was not true? A dying Christian soldier called to the nurse to bring two cups of water, one for his friend and the other for himself. The surprised nurse said, "I don't see your friend here." "You don't," said the dying soldier, and then he added, pointing to an apparently vacant place, "There is some one and he has come a long distance and must be tired" and the next moment an angel left the death-bed for the deathless land. Somewhere I have read, "It came to pass that the beggar died and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom." The Mohammedans give to each person a good and an evil angel, but not so with the Christian conception. With us we know only the guardian angels, who watch over us, direct us and whisper love, mercy and salvation to us daily. Angels watch by the cradle of the new-born babe, shield the growing child and leave us wondering at God's providence. Amid our daily strife, angels strengthen us as they strengthened our Lord when he struggled alone in the garden, and some day they will open our graves and take their seats upon the broken tomb stones and upturned earth as on one famous morning they sat by the shattered tomb down in the garden of Arimathaea.

---

Our Father, we bless thee for thy heavenly messengers, who are our helpers and praise forever thy holy name. Amen.

---

The heathen oracle said, "Know thyself," but the Christian oracles say, "Know Christ," for through knowledge of him is the true self discovered.

---

If the sense of the ridiculous is one side of an impressionable nature, it is very well; but if that is all there is in a man, he had better have been an ape, and stood at the head of his profession at once.—O. W. Holmes.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

THE RIGHT USE OF ABILITY.

Topic Dec. 8, Ref. Matt. 5: 13-16.

WE are so familiar with the Beatitudes, and the Sermon on the Mount, of which they form the heavenly prelude, that we miss the music of the one and the mastery of the other. But the music is there, and it is singing its song of aspiration and hope in humble hearts wherever the message has gone. And the mastery of the Sermon on the Mount still throbs in the great struggling souls of men, who serve in the silences, hearing not or heeding not the appeals and applauds of their fellows. There are still multitudes which no man can number, whom the Seer of Patmos saw, who find in the Beatitudes and the Sermon on the Mount the inspiration to all noble living, the ideal of all attainable virtue, the Holy Grail of all knightly service, conflict, conquest. So, notwithstanding the failures of Christians to attain unto the loftier heights of holiness, toward which we strive, oftentimes with shrinking souls, I believe the world is better and men are braver for the influences of Christianity.

Let the persuasion possess you that Christians are really to be the salt of the earth and the light of the world. It is the Master's serious commission. It is his high appreciation of the calling and conditions of discipleship. And it is true. Without the purifying and preserving influences of Christian principles and practice in the social and business life of any community, none but men of "graft" would find a livelihood. Few of us realize what we owe to the silent but all-pervading, though not yet all-prevailing, influences of the Gospel of grace and good will among men.

As Christians, endeavorers, we underestimate our privileges, our abilities, our opportunities, our responsibilities. It is one of the serious blunders of even good men. It prevents us from being and doing what we ought to be and do. We need to fully appreciate the Master's high estimate of our discipleship when he says: "Ye are the salt of the earth." "Ye are the light of the world." Salt is good for nothing only to preserve, to purify, to make palatable.

Sugar No Substitute for Salt.

Our daughter, taking her first lessons in cooking, salted the potatoes with sugar! Have you ever tried it? Mighty flat-tasting potatoes! Not a serious blunder, however. But to substitute sugar for salt is equally unpalatable and unprofitable in the Christian life. And the consequences may be much more serious. The world needs salt—the salt of serious conversation, of spiritual stamina, of strong faith, of vigorous defense of the truth, of stern renunciation and denunciation of evil in high places and in low.

No Substitute for Light.

With all our modern and marvelous inventions there has not been found a substitute for God's good sunlight. No light gets into the dark corners like the sunshine. It is all pervading-prevailing because from above. So with the shining of the true light that lighteth every man coming into the world. And the Lord of light and life intends every enlightened soul to shine! That's what saints are for. Don't hide your light under a peck measure! Arise! Shine!

THE HOME

UNCLE TOBE'S THANKSGIVING.

A Thanksgiving Philosopher.

By WILL H. DIXON.

I'se a-feelin' pow'ful t'ankful on dis T'anks-Gibin' day, Dat de good Lawd's not done forsook me, but still guides me on mah way.

I kain't understan' de reason why some folks am allus sad,
When de good Lawd's sun am shinin', an' all de worl' am glad.

Ob co'se de drou't hab done some harm, an' de tater crop am small.

But Lawsy! da's a-plenty—da's a-plenty foh us all;
Co'se all de days ain't sunshine, an' life am not all fun,
Da's got ter be some clouds obscu' de brightness ob de sun.

So while I'se feelin' t'ankful, yit I pause to drop a teah
Kase little Tobe an' Dinah am not wid me heah dis yeah;
'Peared lak Dinah dess kerflumixed, when little Toby died,
She tuk a tuggin' at de heah't, an' a mizzry in de side;—
Yit when dey laid dem bof away out dar on de hill,
I still kno'd de Lawd was wid me, an' his lub was roun' me still:

An' so I'se t'ankful heah alone, wid my ole heah't a sobbin' teahs,
Dat I'se had dere sweet companionship, fro all de long pas' yeahs.

An' ef de Lawd gibs de birds an' de beasts all his kind an'
lovin' care,
Ain' he gwine to keer fer his little chilluns no mattah whar da are?

Co'se de roof ob de house hab done cabe in whar de raftahs use ter be,

But Lawsy! it'll last awhile, plenty long enuff foh me;
Foh I'se not a gwine ter be heah only dess a little while,
An' so instead ob cryin', I dess fairly has to smile.
I keeps a-lookin' at de flowahs dat my pafway heah adorns,
An' while a-lookin' at de posies, I fergits about de thorns.

An' when I takes dat fiddle down an' 'gins to softly play,
Dess 'pears lak Dinah am wid me heah on dis T'anks-Gibin'
Day,

An' I heahs her voice a-singin' in de music sweet an' cleah,
An' little Toby's prattle sayin': "W'y daddy, I is heah!"
Den I draws de bow mo' softly, as a voice dess seems to say:
"Feah not, Toby, I am wid thee, Lo! I am wid thee all the way;"

Den I kno's de Lawd's a-speakin' an' he'll lead me by an' by Up to little Tobe an' Dinah, to de T'anks-Gibin' in de sky.
Peoria, Illinois.

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter V.—Continued.

Now, I happened to remember that a certain earnest member of our party had caused posters to be fixed up here and there on which, in large letters, was inscribed: "The flowing tide is with us," and that some wag of the opposite side had gone round, presumably while the enemy slept, and printed underneath: "The flowing tide be jiggered, then!" So I referred my little boy to this, and by its means succeeded in arriving with him at a favorable conclusion of the matter.

At last the decisive day dawned and declined. The fight had practically been fought out to the bitter end, but there still remained much for the supporters on both sides to do in organizing ways and means by which the outlying and most distant voters could be brought to the poll. The utmost excitement, coupled with good humor, prevailed. Immense processions were formed, the people keeping step to the particular catchwords of their party, which they sang out as they went along. Flags, colors, mottoes, banners were flying everywhere. As the time drew on toward midnight, when the result of the polling was to be declared, the excitement waxed to a furious intensity, yet happily never got quite out of bounds.

Now, Waldo had pleaded passionately, desperately, to be allowed to be with me at the critical moment of declaration.

"If you win, I must be there to say 'Well played!' and if you lose I must be there—more than ever, Nell."

"To say——?"

"To say 'Tried indeed! tried indeed!' my dear old Nell!"

After that one can scarcely think of the stoniest heart that ever beat refusing him. But it was Barbara whose word was law supreme in things of this sort, and for a long, long time Barbara, gently but firmly, turned her deaf ear to our united and most persuasive arguments on the subject.

"It were just a-flyin' in the face of Providence," she persisted; "and even Providence has limits to its patience, and wouldn't never abide such out-and-out audacious recklessness, as the sayin' is."

After a struggle almost as keen as that of the election itself, we got her round at last to our way of thinking; but she positively insisted that Waldo should stay quietly at home all day, instead of driving about in search of such doubtful quarry as Josiah, as he had planned to do. Afterward she told me how, lying on his sofa, which she drew up under the limes for him, he spoke but very little during that long, warm summer day, and when once she asked him what he was thinking of, he answered her: "I am not thinking, Barbara. I am only saying: 'Please, God, may Nell win!'"

So, late in the soft, dark evening, when the stars were shining, and the dew lay on the meadows, we drove alone together by the park, the village, and the old brown road that led to the little town where the results were to be told off. They cheered vociferously as we passed through the village, and when we reached the town a perfect storm of greeting burst upon us, and if there were any counter-groans from the other side we never heard them. Suddenly a voice from the crowd shouted:

"Three cheers for the little 'un! Three cheers for the little 'un!"

The response was so spontaneous and pronounced, so loud and long, that to listen to it thrilled me through with a passionate pride. I looked down at my little boy. He caught my hand and clung to it hard; it seemed to me that he was feeling rather nervous, but his tiny face was one dear happy smile; and while he waved his cap to the people, he said to me:

"Isn't it beautiful, Nell dear?"

Chapter VI.

Amidst the deafening applause, we pulled up at the hotel in the old square and proceeded to the balcony, where, amongst the flags and palms, some kind hand had provided a deep-cushioned recess for Waldo. Not many minutes after the clock in the church tower had sounded midnight, the result was proclaimed aloud, and every ear might hear that—well—let us say that—Waldo's Nell—headed the poll, with a thousand votes odd to the good!

I smiled down at Waldo. His breath came and went very hard. He was beyond words.

Amidst the cheers, the storm of congratulation, the confusion of handshakings, and the clamor in the square below, I rose to say a few words of thanks to the honest souls who had stood by me so loyally. My own emotion prevented me from expressing myself in anything but the merest conventional platitudes. But when I had finished and the boisterous applause had somewhat died away, a voice—it turned out to be none other than that of Josiah Webb—called out:

"Let's have a look at the little master! And one word—just one word—from the little master!"

Then the whole square took up the refrain, and the excitement got so intense that, rather against my will, I bent down to Waldo and said:

"Can you thank them, dear old man?" and he answered me that he would try.

I lifted him high in my arms above the flags and ferns. His face showed very pale in the torchlight glow, his curls fluttered in the night wind, his left arm was around my neck. A great and sudden silence fell on all the square, and in a moment or two his dear voice, with a tiny tremble in it, slowly struck the air:

"I cannot say anything to you. I am only a little boy. But I do 'dratulate you ever so much. Because you have got the best man in all the world on your side. My father said so!"

I shall not attempt to describe the tremendous roar of enthusiasm that followed on this and brought the proceedings of that unique election day to a close. Words of mine would be powerless quite! With chivalrous generosity and typical of the way in which an Englishman can bear defeat, my opponent came round to us, and, taking Waldo on his knee, remarked laughingly:

"Had I had a Waldo on my side, what a vastly different total I should have made!"

After this we had some long, quiet talks together, my little boy and I. When I was busy, he would lie with his books and pictures in Barbara's room or under the limes; at other times we were inseparable. We played and drove together, and he was never tired of listening whilst I told or read of the exploits of the heroes of olden times. But with a terrible pain I noticed he grew thinner and thinner. His back now began to ache severely and he could no longer run in and about the gardens and the stables, and talk with his dear familiar friends in those same places as of old. But his gaiety and gentle little charm of manner never forsook him; no matter how sore his pain, his tiny arms would be outstretched in an ecstasy of welcome whenever I approached.

The local physicians agreed in deciding that an operation should be performed on him, but I could not bring myself to consent to this without the advice of the great children's specialist who had examined him on his arrival in England. So, later on, when Parliament re-opened, and I had to take the oath as new member, and deliver my maiden speech, and attend to many things which required my presence in town, we went up together, Waldo and I, with dear old Barbara, whom wild horses could not have torn from Waldo's side, as adviser and attender-in-chief. We expected to be away for several weeks, or even months, as I was told that the drier air of the metropolis would be much more beneficial for Waldo than the damp, moist air of Devon.

On the last afternoon at home he strangely but sweetly insisted on a solemn leave-taking of all and everything around. The bees in their hives, the trees, the orchard and fruit-gardens, the horses and the cows, his father's favorite haunts—nothing escaped that loving little memory. In the evening the boys of the cricket elevens came up and after tea he gave them each a little present, bought according to his own wish and from his own pocket-money. The next morning, as we drove through the village to the station, he left small tokens at their cottages for divers of his friends, while to Josiah Webb, who was slightly lame, he presented a stout walking-stick, near the handle of which, on a silver band, was inscribed, "Noblesse oblige," the whole idea being originated and planned out by my darling. The tears stood in Josiah's hard, bleared old eyes. I do not think it is on record that he ever again had recourse to his former expression concerning the Noblesse of his country.

(To Be Continued.)

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

HERE is a bit of personal experience which I hope will touch an answering chord in the heart of some other minister's wife and bring a helpful response. Address Phebe, care of The Christian Century.

"I am a minister's wife and, knowing that your paper must reach many a minister's home, I should like to know if there are many minister's wives who feel towards the ministry as I do. I suppose those wives whose husbands have large wealthy churches do not know anything of what I am going to say, but my husband, although a gentleman, a college graduate and a good preacher, through lack of robust health and "push," which seems in these busy days to be of quite as much account to the minister as to the store clerk, has not been able to climb up the ladder as high as a city or wealthy church. We have now a parish in a country district covering some ten miles; the church stands quite alone, one mile from the nearest house; the parsonage is two miles distant. In winter the roads are frequently impassable. There are 165 members in the church and our salary is $500 annually. We keep a horse and chickens. We have to pay $35 rent for the parsonage; it is a comfortable house, but so lonely sometimes in winter. The summer is charming and we are kept busy attending meetings, paying pastoral calls and caring for our garden. Our salary is paid very irregularly, frequently not one-half is paid until the close of the year; coal is expensive and much is used because of the intense winter cold.

"I help my husband in every possible way. I take care of the children in the church. I have formed them into a "Band of Mercy." From forty to sixty children meet me every Saturday in the church vestry; some of these come ten miles, "five each way." In winter this work is entirely suspended. I teach them to sing and give them lessons on temperance, kindness to dumb animals, etc.

"I find myself getting sick at heart and discouraged frequently. We work very hard. We live honestly and always pray for Divine guidance to do the right thing at the right time. However carefully I plan and scheme I find the struggle to make both ends meet very severe. We hesitate to complain that the salary is small; this we feel would elicit the remark "that all the ministers today care for is money."

We are very successful here; our church being almost full every fine Sabbath. The Sunday school is large. God is indeed blessing us spiritually, and perhaps one ought not to trouble if our clothes are shabby and the table sometimes bare. But the life in a worldly sense is a hard one to me, because I know God would have it otherwise. He, I think, would have his children live in every way beyond reproach, and this can hardly be done if the minister does not get his due. Perhaps others who see this will write and will be able to say something that will cheer us."

What do the ministers' wives think about the question of calling? Shall they call with their husbands or is it better for each to go alone? Which way can the hearts of the people be best reached and the call be made helpful? Let me know what your thought is on these points.

PERSIS.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

MOSES AND PHARAOH.

"In all their afflictions He was afflicted"—Isaiah 63, 9.—
Monday, December 2d—Exodus 11: 1-10.

PHARAOH is a free agent all through. He is not tortured on the rack, he is not held over a slow fire, until he relaxes his despotic grasp on the Hebrew bondmen. After every demand of God there is a respite, a pause, an opportunity to ponder. Thus it is still. The King of kings lays no resistless compulsion on me. I must decide for myself. I may harden my heart, or I may flee to the Savior of my soul.

Pharaoh is ten times reproved, but he always persists. He is subdued again and again, yet again and again he rebels. One day he humbles himself under the mighty hand of Jehovah, and another day he is up in arms against the God of Israel. Even so, in me, in my stout and proud self-will, there lies this awful power of contradicting and opposing my Maker. I can travel from bad to worse; I can sink myself deeper and deeper down.

Pharaoh reaps the bitter harvest at last of the evil seed he has sown. Ah, let me read the lesson of the sorrowful history, so old and yet so new, patriarchal in its antiquity, but modern in its recentness. The war is guilty, and the battle is bootless. What can I do in the day when God contends with me? It is a fearful thing to fall into his strong and holy hands.

Tuesday, December 3rd.—Exodus 8:20-32.

"Swarms of flies"—I am struck by the little things which may become the instruments of God's vengeance.

The Talmud has a wild and weird legend about the death of the Emperor Titus, the conqueror of Jerusalem. Jehovah, it says, sent a gnat to creep into his nostrils and lodge itself in his brain. For seven years the restless insect gnawed the vital tissue. One day, when the tortured prince passed a blacksmith's forge, the thunders of the hammer seemed to startle and arrest it. Four pieces of silver the sufferer gave daily, to have the noise continued in his ear without ceasing. At the end of thirty miserable days, the insect became accustomed to the clang, and resumed its ravages. And Phineas, son of Erouba, was present with the nobles of Rome at the death of the Emperor. The Jewish witness reported that, when the head of Titus was opened, the creature was discovered as big as a swallow, with a brazen beak and claws of iron.

It is an idle fable; but it has a solemn lesson. By weapons which seem small and trifling God can gain his victories over me. With a snowflake he broke the tyrannous power of Napoleon. Ah, let me not be so infatuated as to fight against him; it is so easy for the Lord Almighty to prevail over all my stubbornness and rebellion.

Wednesday, December 4th.—Exodus 9:1-12.

The dumb driven cattle suffer through the sins of man. Let me so live that I shall bless not only my human brothers and sisters, but every creature of God's making. "He prayeth best who loveth best all things both great and small." I remember how Francis of Assisi was the friend and confidant of the animals—the wolf, the ass, the sparrows. I remember how Matthew Arnold sang the elegy of Geist, with all his life and all his love crowded into four brief years. I remember how Louise Imogen Guiney bewails the absence of that true field-fellow of hers, who roams no more by her side even although "the gusty morns are here."

My life should, by the grace of God, be so sweet and holy and beneficent that the very beasts and birds will rejoice in its radiance and will feel its tender grace. The whole creation "groaneth and travaileth in pain"; let me not deliberately add a single pang to its anguish.

Thursday, December 5th.—Exodus 9:13-26.

Why does God linger so long with Pharaoh, sending penalty after penalty before the supreme stroke falls? Partly for the sake of the wrongdoer. He must have room, he must have occasion, for repentance. And, if he will not repent, he must be left without excuse even in his own eyes. Every single rag of self-justification must be swept away. He must see and acknowledge his evil, though he clings to the evil, and in sheer wantonness and falseness and unreason persists in following after it. But O, may I not have this terrible and hopeless revelation. May I not, like Shakespeare's Richard, "hate myself for hateful deeds committed by myself."

And partly for the sake of his own glory God pursues this course. "That thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth"—that, also, is his motive. He must be recognized everywhere for his hatred of sin and yet his long-suffering forbearance towards the sinner, his holiness and his pitifulness, his majesty and his mercy. I wonder whether I can rejoice in a God who is just as well as kind, who "has no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," who is Light of light no less than Love of love.

Friday, December 6th.—Exodus 10:3-15.

That is a precious word of God by the mouth of his servant Joel, "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten."

The field of my own spiritual nature—have not the locusts of neglect and sin made it barren and desolate? I might have been much wiser, much stronger, much holier. I might have grown far more in the grace and knowledge of my Lord Jesus Christ. Today I ask pardon for the defective and erring past. Today I seek grace for a better future.

The field of my neighbor's soul—have not the locusts of indifference and carelessness rendered me unminful of it? I have not sought the Spirit of God, that I might minister effectually to my friend. I have not helped him as I should, in his doubts and perplexities and temptations. Ah, may the Holy Ghost baptize and anoint me now for this most needful and most blessed work.

The field of the kingdom of Christ—have not the locusts of selfishness and indolence unfitted me for cultivating it? How little I have honored and aided the Master, who laid down his life for me! I have been ungrateful, remiss, heedless. Lord, rekindle the heavenly fires on the cold altar of my soul.

Thanks to be him, he can and he will restore the dreary years which the locust has eaten.

Saturday, December 7th.—Exodus 10:16-29.

"There shall not a hoof," Moses said, "be left behind." Thus I am bidden forsake Egypt utterly and wholly. I must allow none of my belongings, none of my desires, none of my loves, to remain in the sinful land. My God wishes me to be absolutely sanctified and set apart for him.

There are certain practices, certain modes of speech and life, certain amusements and indulgences, of which I cannot say that they are actually sinful and defiling; that would be passing a hard judgment on them. But, if I am a true and sensitive Christian, I shall feel that, if I participate in them, I am lowering myself somewhat, I am taking away from the clearness of my testimony, I am blunting the edge of my holiness. Egypt is not so completely abandoned as it ought to be. So may God strengthen me to deny myself everything which would retard and hinder Christ in his cleansing of me.

Sunday, December 8th.—Psalm 10:23-38.

The sinner cannot do all the sin he would. God's judgments repeated again and again, hem Pharaoh in. And there are more merciful checks and barriers and restrictions.

For instance, there is the Word of the Lord. In India, in China, in Japan, there are people with intellects, emotions, aspirations, like mine; and yet they are abandoned to the vices of paganism. Why am I outwardly better? Because the oracles of God are mine, and because the truth in Jesus permeates the atmosphere I breathe.

Then there is the Spirit of the Lord. He acts on my mind and my will and my conscience and my heart. He quenches unholy thoughts. He drives away vain imaginations. He reins in fiery passions as with bit and bridle.

And there is the Providence of the Lord. He renders it difficult for me to transgress. I am set down amongst all sorts of sobering and educative and helpful influences; the laws of a Christian country, the usages of society, business relations, godly friends, the sweet ties of home, the chastisements of my Father in heaven.

"All these fences and their whole array" he raises round me to hinder me from sin. Have I thought about it? Have I wondered at it and thanked him for it?

Dr. W. E. Barton of Oak Park has been trying his hand in the writing of a catechism. The opening question is, "Apart from the things which you believe, hope or imagine to be true, what do you know?" Answer, "I know that there is a world and that I live in it." This is a plunge into philosophy with a vengeance. But perhaps there is wisdom in it, inasmuch as the child is a true philosopher.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

*The Little Champion.**

BY CARMEN SYLVA (QUEEN ELIZABETH OF ROUMANIA).

THIS was the nickname the other boys had given young Arnold, because he could not see any creature in distress without going to its assistance. If a fly fell into the milk he held out a blade of grass for it to escape upon, and when he one day saw a snake about to swallow a poor little frog he killed the cruel reptile just in time to save poor froggy's life, though the little creature could hardly believe itself to be safe, and could only sit there staring at its rescuer with its great big eyes, whilst its poor little heart still went pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat!

Another time, as Arnold was passing a pond, he saw three boys busily engaged in trying to drown a little dog. They had tied a rope with a stone fastened to it round its neck, and threw the poor animal right into the middle of the pond before Arnold could come up to them. Quick as thought he flung off his clothes, plunged into the water, and swam straight for the spot where the bubbles rising to the surface showed the death-struggle going on below. He dived and brought the poor little dog up in his arms, quite limp and motionless, but yet alive.

"You wicked boys!" he said, panting for breath and drying the little animal carefully with his handkerchief; "you wicked boys! I will have nothing more to do with you. I will never play with you again!"

"We did not want to do it," began the youngest boy, and then the second one took heart and said: "We really did not want to do it—we all cried, for we are very fond of Fluff, but my father said"—and here he stopped and hesitated, not sure whether to go on.

"My father says we are too poor to keep a dog," the eldest boy broke out defiantly, "and so we would rather drown him ourselves than let any one else have him!"

"And you shall keep your dog, but in future I will feed him. It is little I have, but I will give it you that you may get him something to eat at once. I have only these three pennies, but that will be enough to keep off hunger for the moment."

But what was the surprise of all when Arnold pulled his pence out of his pocket to see three gold pieces—three bright, new gold pieces, that rang as only gold can ring! The brothers stared at Arnold, who looked just as puzzled himself, and stammered out: "What does it mean? I never had a piece of gold in all my life!"

The others, who at first could hardly believe their eyes, now began to feel somewhat in awe of him, and said: "Feel again in your pockets; perhaps you have turned into a Goldman!"

But the pockets were both empty, and the children separated. The puppy, however, stoutly refused to go with the little wretches who had tried to drown it, and kept coming back to Arnold and taking refuge between his legs. "Well, then," he said at last, "the dog must stay with me, and you must keep the money in payment. I shall take care of him and bring him up. And as for the gold, you need not be afraid; it was not come by dishonestly. It must be fairy-money, and if I find any more you shall share in it!"

*Copyright, 1901, by George T. B. Davis. From "A Real Queen's Fairy Tales." By special arrangement with the publishers, Davis & Company, 388 La Salle ave., Chicago. Price, $1.50.

Not long afterward one of the three brothers fell into the pond himself. Arnold heard the screams a long way off, and saw a group of children standing shoulder to shoulder round the edge of the pond, on which floated a big empty washtub.

"He has fallen in there! he is under the tub! he will be drowned!" they all shouted at the same time, while Arnold did the only sensible thing—threw off his clothes and swam out toward the tub. Giving it a little push, he dived and reappeared holding by the hair the already unconscious lad, with whom he swam to shore. The children, who had looked on breathlessly, now crowded round them.

"Is he dead?" they asked.

"No, his heart still beats feebly."

They rubbed him, turned him over on his face that he might bring up the water he had swallowed, and at length he opened his eyes. His brothers had stood by rather crestfallen, and dreading the beating which they might expect for their valiant conduct.

But Arnold with a sudden resolve held out his cap. "Who will give a little help to the shipwrecked sailor? A small contribution, I beg, for the gallant seaman!"

The children thrust their hands in their pockets, and wonderful to relate! each copper piece was instantly changed into gold; even a button, which one boy had dropped in as being all he possessed, was turned into a gold button. They all stared open-mouthed, then perceiving that another of their number, who had pretended to have nothing to give, not even a button, kept looking disconsolately into the palm of his hand, they rushed round him and burst into ringing laughter, for his hand was full of sand and splintered glass.

"You were not quite so poor, then, as you made out?" asked Arnold, who had suddenly gone up in his comrades' good opinion on account of this new wonder, for until then few had credited the story of the transformation, and rather inclined to believe he had helped himself from his father's money box.

"Who? I?" said the boy, turning very red.

"Well, well," said Arnold, "let us say no more about it; you need not tell us anything, we all understand! Only tell the truth next time!"

The treasure was too large for the children to keep it secret, so they all accompanied the boy who had just been saved from drowning to his home, and there related what had happened. Many questions were put to Arnold, but he knew no more than the rest. The glass splinters, too, were shown, much to the confusion of the little miser, and no one ever learned how much he really had in his hand.

Arnold was now made much of, and for a long time people were always expecting that some new marvel would occur. Many thought it a very fine thing to have among them a lad of such wonderful powers that he could at any moment turn pence into gold pieces—and also gold pieces into glass, some of the shrewder folk observed. Meanwhile, the wonder did not repeat itself.

The little dog Fluff was always close at his master's heels, except when they happened to meet his former owners, and then he took care to go well out of the way to avoid them. These boys retained, however, a somewhat uncomfortable sense of obligation to Arnold, and they resolved to let their playfellows share in the riches he had heaped on them. So they planned a day's excursion into the woods, and all set out with their specimen-cases, filled with bread and butter and sandwiches, slung over their shoulders, and with Arnold as guide, for he knew every inch of the way and all the shady nooks and corners and freshest streams.

He was on the best of terms with all the wild creatures; the squirrels played hide and seek with him, the little lizards ran fearlessly into his outstretched hand and the birds hovered close round, for he brought something for each of them—nuts for the tomits, meat for the blackbirds, apple-pips for the chaffinches and crumbs for the sparrows.

Just as the children were about to stretch themselves on the grass, to picnic comfortably, there came a sound of wind sighing through the trees, like tones of sweetest music, and before they could ask one another what it meant, a lovely fairy appeared before them. Her garments were besprinkled with dew-drops that sparkled in the sun; her snow-white hair fell to her feet, and was even brighter and more glossy than the threads of flax on the distaff she held in her hand, though each of these shone like silver and was as delicate as the petals of newly opened flowers. She was neither young nor old—she was simply beautiful; and the children stood with their eyes fixed upon her, waiting to hear what she would say. And when she began to speak her voice was softer than the breeze, and sweeter than music, and low as the hum of bees, and clear as a silver bell. All could hear her; it was as if she spoke to each one alone.

"You have come into my woods without waiting for an invitation, that is why you have not found the table laid. Follow me now and I will lead you to the banquet which I have had prepared for my guests."

They all readily followed the beautiful fairy who invited them so kindly, and they came to a lovely spot where they had never been before. It was a wide meadow, shut in by beech trees, and with a brooklet forming a waterfall on the one side. The ground was so thick with flowers their brilliant colors almost dazzled the eyes, and the trees were so full of birds their branches fairly bent beneath the weight.

"Sit down, all of you," said the fairy, "and the feast shall be served in a trice!"

She waved her hand and the birds came flying toward her carrying rose leaves in their little beaks. Before each guest was placed a rose leaf containing a tiny patty, very tiny, thought the children, for their good appetites, but they did not like to say so. Another flight of birds brought little silver spoons, and squirrels followed bearing acorn cups full of nectar that had so exquisite a perfume and tasted so good the children regretted the diminutive size of the goblets even more than that of the rose-leaf plates with the fairy patties.

(To be continued.)

In the missionary conference of the young men from college at Northfield, Professor Drummond had happened in an address to refer to cant. When the hour came for him to answer questions, one of the students asked him what he meant by cant. "There is," said he in reply, "such a thing as the religion of a young man; and there is such a thing as the religion of an old woman. Now when a young man talks as if he had an old woman's religion, that is cant."

General Church News

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ANDREW AND PHILIP.

The fifth biennial convention was held in Pittsburg, Pa. This order is very positively of an interdenominational character, for it exists in no less than twenty-three denominations. It has an enrollment of 20,000. Considering the fact that most of the members of the brotherhood are actively engaged in business, the attendance at the convention was satisfactory.

The aim of this brotherhood is to foster the work of the local churches for men. It seeks to help men to reach men. The founder of it is Rev. Rufus W. Miller, and it has been an inspiration to many other organizations of like character, bearing other names.

The convention opened with a "Get Together" meeting in the East Liberty Presbyterian church. Dr. John H. Pugh, president of the Pittsburg local union, welcomed all to the city and Rev. J. T. Gibson, D. D., spoke for the churches. The addresses of the evening were by Dr. D. J. Burrell of New York, on "The Problem of the Kingdom," and Dr. W. S. Plumer Bryan of Chicago. The latter's subject was "Brotherhood the Highest Stage of Christian Growth."

The next day methods were discussed. "What Are You Doing? And How?" Bright, brisk and breezy is a good description of this session. Three helpful talks were given, one on "The Training of the Apostles of the New Century," by Rev. J. Galland Hammer, Jr., of Newark, N. J.; another on "Men and the Church," by Rev. E. N. Hardy, D. D., of Quincy, Mass., and the third on "The Christian Man in Politics," by Rev. John M. Schick, D. D., the "President's pastor." In the afternoon the convention visited Bessemer and saw the process of making steel rails.

In the Sixth United Presbyterian church they gathered in the evening and listened to addresses by Rev. Jno. Balcom Shaw, D. D., of New York, and Rev. Daniel H. Martin, D. D., of Newark, N. J.; one on "The Secret of Soul Winning," and the other on "A Life That Counts." "The Boys" had the time on Saturday, and Boys' club work was discussed. A visit to Mr. Heinz' plant in Alleghany, where business and Christian ethics go together in daily life, came next, and several addresses were made at the noon hour there to the convention and the 2,500 employes, by Rev. I. W. Gowen, Rev. Conrad Clever, D. D., of Baltimore, and President Miller.

The topics of the evening were "The Man of the Moment," "The Importance of Personal Work" and "The Essentials of Character Necessary for Personal Work." The closing meeting came on Sunday evening with an attendance of over 2,000. The sermon was preached by the President and a consecration service conducted by Rev. C. W. Keigwin of Newark, N. J. The sight of the men in that great church, with hands united, singing—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love," was not easily to be forgotten.

An effort is to be made to have a field secretary for the brotherhood work. A writer in the Congregationalist says that not the least contribution made by this order to American church life is the fact that it has exploded some long-standing and most harmful fallacies. No longer is it possible for intelligent men to say that the old ratio of one male to two females is the necessary rule in the churches. There has been a great change in that regard, and especially where special work for men has been carried on.

THE TEXAS BAPTIST CONVENTION.

The gathering in Fort Worth was a large one. The pastors' conference, which was the first in the order of events, was attended by about 500 pastors, and was a place of power and inspiration.

The convention proper had a total of some 1,800 delegates, 478 churches being represented, seventy-one associations and twenty-eight missionary societies. Dr. R. C. Buckner was re-elected president. The secretary reported a large amount of work done; 203 missionaries supplied 2,152 stations; eighty-three churches were organized and 269 Sunday schools; there had been 2,994 baptisms; the total of additions to the churches in the mission stations was 6,062; forty-nine church edifices had been built and $52,462.24 had been collected for state missions. This amount passed through the board's hands; if co-operative work were counted the state mission fund would reach $100,000. The report also showed $18,000 raised for foreign missions, $14,000 for home missions and $2,034.96 for old ministers. Much enthusiasm was aroused by this report, especially by the fact that all debts were paid and there was a cash balance of $1,100.

Dr. R. C. Buckner presented the work of the orphan's home, and $11,000 was pledged for it, and $1,200 for the students' fund of the Louisville theological seminary.

Dr. B. H. Carroll of the Texas Baptist Educational Commission reported $233,000 raised this year, $80,000 being given by Geo. Carroll of Beaumont, and $60,000 by his father, F. L. Carroll of Waco. In order to free the six schools of all indebtedness $25,000 more was needed, and this was raised at this meeting. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," was the hearty response of the convention to this effort.

It was voted to raise $20,000 in the next three months to build meeting-houses in the storm-swept district of the state. The Baptists of Texas give more for missions than is given in any southern state; they represent one-thirteenth of the total Baptist membership in the United States, and one-fifteenth of all the Baptists in the World.

The finishing touch to the convention was the visit of 275 children from the Buckner Orphans Home, which so stirred the people that they took up a collection on the spot of $600 for the children, and Rev. Arthur Little promised that the First church, Fort Worth, of which he is pastor, would supply the forty-five turkeys needed for the Thanksgiving dinner of the 500 orphans in the home.

Chicago and Vicinity.

The Oak Park Baptist church, Rev. Dr. J. W. Conley, pastor, gave last year more than $1.50 per member for local and city mission work, and more than twenty-five cents per member for state missions.

At Immanuel Baptist church, Evangelists D. W. Potter and E. O. Excell conducted meetings for five evenings

HORSE BUCKED.

Rider Severely Hurt.

A Cincinnati man visiting in Texas, on a ranch, was thrown from a horse and so severely injured that his life was despaired of. He takes pride in telling how food saved his life. The heavy drugs given seriously injured his stomach and as he says "It seemed I would soon have to starve in the midst of plenty. My stomach refused to digest food and I ran down from 165 to 133 pounds. When my appetite failed I was ready to give up, and it looked as though I would soon 'wink out.'

"One morning the foreman's daughter brought in what she called a splendid food, and it turned out to be Grape-Nuts. A little skeptical I ate it and found it was good, and just the kind of food I could keep on my stomach which had been almost burned out by the vile drugs.

"I felt that I had obtained a new lease of life for improvement set in at once. A week later I was weighed and had gained two pounds. My weight has since steadily increased by the constant use of Grape-Nuts, and I am now better than I have been in years, as my friends will all testify.

"In all kinds of athletic sports I notice I have a greater reserve force than formerly, for which I am indebted to Grape-Nuts. Taken in moderation, it is the greatest food of its kind in the world, being equally well adapted to athletes and invalids." Paul Alwin Platz, 1906 Biglow Ave., Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, O.

which resulted in some thirty professing conversion and others expressing a desire to be Christians.

During the second year of the pastorate of the Rev. F. P. Baker, D. D., which has now closed, the Reformed church at Irving Park has prospered greatly, both spiritually and materially. The membership of the church now numbers 246, 108 of that number having been added in the two years in question. There is large and regular attendance at all the services, including the weekly prayer meeting. One change, introduced by Dr. Baker, has proved to be an unbounded blessing. This is a series of preparatory services throughout the week preceding each communion. They have been remarkably well attended, and it is the testimony of all that they have been most refreshing and uplifting. The meetings for Bible study conducted by Dr. Baker throughout the winter months have also proved highly instructive and profitable.

Rev. Dr. Wm. E. Barton of the First Congregational church, Oak Park, has started a pastor's class for children between ten and fifteen years of age. He has prepared for this purpose an elementary catechism, which he requires the boys and girls to learn before coming to the class, explaining the same to them afterwards.

Under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute a series of revival meetings have been commenced in the Studebaker theater. They will be held at three o'clock every Sunday afternoon. The theater was filled last Sunday. Two hundred persons working under a chairman distributed 20,000 invitations to the meeting. There was a choir of 200 voices on the stage.

The Congregational Club at its monthly meeting at the Auditorium Hotel, November 18, listened to three addresses: Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, originator of the Deaconess movement in the Methodist church, spoke on that subject; Rev. J. H. George, D. D., the new president of the seminary, spoke on the Chicago Theological Seminary and Affiliated Schools, and Rev. J. A. Milburn, D. D., pastor of Plymouth church, on "The Practical Need of Trained Workers as Church Helpers."

The lecture room of the Millard avenue Presbyterian church, though not completely finished, was dedicated on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 17. Rev. Dr. Willis G. Craig of McCormick seminary, preached the sermon. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Rev. T. D. Wallace, D. D. An offering was taken, amounting to $754, covering all the indebtedness. The total cost of the chapel is $3,250.

Baptist.

Four new buildings were dedicated at Spelman seminary, Atlanta, Ga., the school for Negro girls, Nov. 14-17. The new buildings are Reynolds Cottage, the president's residence; MacVicar hospital, including provision for invalid students, and also accommodations for outside patients and a nurse's training school; Morgan Hall, containing dining rooms and kitchens, and study halls and dormitories. With these new buildings the seminary is admirably equipped for the training of young negro women for usefulness in various wage-earning occupations, while giving them all the advantages of a cultured Christian environment in attractive surroundings.

During the past year 105 persons have been received into the First church, Butte, Montana; fifty-four by baptism. Two missions have been established by this church since Rev. J. E. Notsinger became pastor.

Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, Ohio, had its services disturbed on a recent Sunday by the noise caused by the laying of a new roadway in front of the edifice. The pastor, Dr. Eaton, stopped his sermon and drew up resolutions of protest which were adopted by a rising vote of the congregation and forwarded to the mayor of the city.

Rev. H. C. Crane, pastor of the First church, Cincinnati, has a Sunday school class of over fifty medical students.

Congregational.

At Elkhorn, Wis., Rev. F. M. Hubbell, pastor, a Kingdom Extension society has recently been organized, the membership of which is not to be limited to any age or sex, but is to include all who assume some definite pledge for Congregational benevolences.

The church at Sturgeon Bay, Wis., exceeds its apportionment for home missions in consequence of the wise work of the pastor, Rev. L. E. Osgood, in teaching systematic proportionate giving. An annual sermon is preached on the subject and covenant cards distributed for the adoption of the tithing system by those who choose to do so.

Pilgrim church, St. Louis, has placed a lady visitor on the field and is securing an increased attendance at the Sunday services.

Covenant church, St. Louis, has opened a reading room which is proving of value to the community.

The church at Fort Scott, Kan., is having a great awakening. Rev. Henry W. Stough, formerly of the Third church, Oak Park, has been conducting special meetings. In his afternoon Bible readings Christians have been specially helped.

Bethlehem church, Los Angeles, has added to its institutional work a children's choral class, free to all the children in the neighborhood and a class in English for foreign-speaking women, and Olivet church adds to its work a cooking class for girls and a sloyd class for boys.

The Tabernacle congregation, Denver, Colo., has entered its new building which, however, is not yet complete.

It will seat more than 1,500. Rev. Thomas Uzzell is pastor and Rev. C. J. Hall, his assistant. This church has a dispensary and medical staff; a labor bureau and various benevolent departments.

The church at Mill Valley, Cal., has rearranged its Sunday morning program to include a short period of worship, Bible study by classes and a service in unison at the close. New features also appear at the midweek meeting, such as the presentation of various phases of organized Christian work and discussion of the religious bearing of great public questions.

The First church, Springfield, Ill., has a normal class for the special training of Sunday school primary teachers, with the superintendent of the city training school for teachers as instructor. A similar class for intermediate teachers is in charge of one of the high school teachers. The music in the Sunday school is in the care of the teacher of music in the public schools. The gain in the average attendance of the First church Sunday school during the year has been nine per cent. Rev. Dr. Archibald M. Hall is pastor.

Plymouth church, Springfield, Ill., Rev. Orville C. Clark, pastor, divides

TWICE TOLD TALES.

No Meat Extracted from Them by Some Who Most Need the Facts.

We have more than twice, told the reader, of the fact that he or she may perhaps easily discover the cause of the daily ill-feeling and the experiment is not difficult to make.

But there are readers who think truths are for some one else and not for themselves.

Some day the oft told fact will flash upon us as applicable when the knowledge comes home, that day after day of inconvenience and perhaps of suffering has been endured, the cause not being recognized or believed, although we may have been told of the cause many times over, but never believed it applied to us.

It would startle a person to know how many people suffer because they drug themselves daily with coffee. We repeat it, it is a powerful drug, and so affects the delicate nervous system that disease may appear in any part of the body, all parts being dependent for health, on a healthy nervous system.

Relief from coffee for 30 days has cured thousands of people who never suspected the cause of their troubles.

The use of Postum Food Coffee is of great benefit to such, as it goes to work directly to rebuild the delicate cell structures from the elements nature selects for the work. Relief from a heavy drug and the taking of proper nourishment is the true and only permanent method.

its parish into six sections, and a committee is appointed for each section, whose duty it is to make a thorough canvass, visiting each house, and, as far as practicable, each person in the district. In case a family is distinctly Roman Catholic or directly connected with some other church, this fact is noted, but nothing further is done. In all other cases the names of each member of the family are entered in the appropriate place on the parish map, giving street and number. The committees report to the pastor, and also notify him when any changes occur in the district and promptly inform him of new comers. They also circulate interesting religious literature, distribute a church calendar which gives the time of each public service, and invite attendance to any and all of them. The invitation is often made specific and personal. Aside from what may be termed the regular services, cottage prayer meetings are held in different parts of the parish, a week-day class for Bible study is conducted by the pastor, and a special meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. (aside from the Sunday meetings) held for religious instruction and the formation of plans for better service. The pastor also looks closely after the Sunday school, often sending some card or leaflet to each member. He also sends a note to each absentee. In this manner both attendance and interest are increased, and the school is kept in vital touch with the church.

During the current year 145 have been added to the First church, Los Angeles, a net gain of 112. The joint pastoral salary has had an increase of $1,000. Rev. Warren F. Day and his son, Rev. Wm. Horace Day, are the associate pastors.

At Mill Valley, California, a change in the Sunday morning services has been made. The present plan is a short period of worship, Bible instruction by classes and united services at the close. The mid-week meeting provides readings of helpful selections from published writings, presentation of various aspects of organized Christian work, and of great public questions in their religious aspects, as well as what are ordinarily recognized as "prayer-meeting topics."

The First church, San Francisco, has received 117 members during 1901, of whom fifty-six were on confession. Of the twenty-six received Nov. 3, fourteen were men and six distinct races were included. The church has now in its membership among other races, one Jew, a Filipino, an Armenian, a Negro and an Egyptian. The year just closed has been one of the most prosperous in the church's history, including the paying of the mortgage indebtedness of $10,000.

The Disciples.

The report of the Board of Ministerial Relief shows that 430 persons, 216 churches and fourteen societies, Sunday schools and other organizations contributed to the fund for the aid of superannuated ministers and their families last year. The total receipts for the year were $11,809.17.

Evangelistic meetings are being held in many of the churches in Cincinnati and vicinity. At the Central church Rev. A. M. Harvuot, forty-eight have been added during the first two weeks of the meeting. There have been thirty-two additions at Rev. George A. Miller's church in Covington, Ky.

At Rushville, Ind., Evangelists Wilson and Huston have had 196 additions to the church as a result of their meetings.

The college at Wilson, N. C., the purchase of which by the Disciples we recorded a few weeks ago, is to be named the Atlantic Christian college. The secretary of the Board of Trustees is B. H. Melton and the president is to be Daniel E. Motley, Ph. D., a graduate of the Milligan college and Johns Hopkins university. The college will open next September.

Thirty-four have been added to the First church, Omaha, since September 1. A new building is being planned for.

The church at Shenandoah, Iowa, J. H. Wright, pastor, recently, lifted a mortgage of over $1,000, placed about $250 worth of permanent improvements on the church building and parsonage, paid off a floating debt of $200 in addition to meeting all current expenses and making liberal offerings for special evangelistic services, missions and local benevolences.

The Christian Woman's Missionary society supports twenty-two stations in Jamaica, two in Mexico, one in Porto Rico, and six in India; Bible chairs in three universities, a Chinese school in Oregon, four schools for negroes in the South, and a large amount of evangelistic work. They have 167 missionaries besides native helpers. There are 1,796 auxiliary societies of which the membership is 37,299.

Since June 1st there have been forty-eight added to the First Christian church, Seattle, thirteen by confession and baptism, and thirty-five by letter and statement.

Episcopal.

The Society for the Home Study of the Holy Scriptures has taken up a new course of reading in Christian classics, which has been arranged by the warden, the Rev. Dr. Body of the General Theological seminary, and the director, Miss Smiley. This course consists of 100 books selected as classics in Christian theology and upon completion of the reading of any 25 of the list, a certificate is bestowed; while at the end of the entire course a medal will be conferred. The design of this medal will be copied from the Key of David, a most interesting relic found at the foot of the tower of David in 1839.

Kenyon college has been made richer by an addition of $100,000 to its endowment fund and a gift of $50,000 for a new dormitory.

The Sunday School association of California has arranged for a course of valuable lectures to be delivered in St. Luke's church, San Francisco: Nov. 15, "Religious and Secular Education," Rev. Edward L. Parsons, rector of the Church of St. Matthew, San Mateo, and instructor in philosophy, Stanford university; Nov. 20th and 27th, "The Religious Development of the Child Mind," Professor Edwin D. Starbuck, Ph.D., Stanford university; Dec. 4th, "Teaching in the Sunday School," Professor F. B. Dresslar, Ph.D., University of California; Dec. 11th, "How to Teach the Life of Christ," Very Rev. Edgar J. Lion, rector of St. Stephen's church, San Francisco; Jan. 8th, "Story Telling to Children," Mrs. D. S. Snedden, Stanford university; Jan. 21st, "How to Teach Morality in the Sunday School," Rev. Chas. R. Brown, M. A., pastor of First Congregational church, Oakland, and lecturer on ethics, Stanford university; Jan. 28th, "The Poetry of the Bible," Professor Chas. M. Gayley, Ph. D., University of California; Feb. 5th, "How to Teach Doctrine," Rt. Rev. W. F. Nichols, D. D., Bishop of California.

The annual convention of the Sunday School institute of the diocese of Washington was held November 7th. There was a large attendance, both of the clergy and of the teachers and officers, and the session proved a most interesting one. The first subject was, "The Best Way of Teaching Youngest Children, and How Far May Kindergarten Methods and Material Be Made Available in Church Sunday Schools." Two excellent and instructive papers were read by Miss Duffield and Miss Mechlin, both well-known and successful teachers of infant classes. It was shown how kindergarten methods of instruction may be adapted to Sunday schools, but the use of what is called material was discouraged, and in regard to stories is was urged that Bible stories have the preference. The second subject, "Normal Class Teaching," was divided into "The Need" and "The Method," upon each of which a valuable paper was read. The third subject was "Sunday School and Church Attendance," and the question, "Does the Present System Tend to Diminish Church Attendance?" was ably discussed by the Rev. Dr. R. P. Williams; the second question, "How Can the Sunday School Best Promote the Attendance of Children at the Services of the Church?" was answered by the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins.

Methodist.

The Epworth league chapters are to observe Sunday, December 29, as a day of special prayer for the presence of the Holy Spirit among the people. Pastors are asked to preach on prayer in the morning and some phase of the Holy Spirit's work in the evening. It is desired that special services be held also on the two following evenings.

The great benevolences of Methodism are splendidly organized. The Missionary Church Extension and Freedmen's Aid societies have a general committee. On this committee are: 1. All the bishops; 2. The officers of the respective societies; 3. Fourteen men from the general conference districts, representing every conference in the church; and, 4. Fourteen representatives from the respective boards of management. Together these make a body of about fifty men, every one of whom is expert in the knowledge necessary to wisely perform his duty. In each case these committees make all appropriations and the respective boards of management can spend no money not first appropriated by the general committee. This committee—for missions—is the only body that establishes a new mission or, for the Freedmen's Aid, starts a new school. On every item of appropriation asked there are from one to several persons present to give first-hand information from personal observation in the case, having only recently been there, no matter in what part of this country or foreign lands it may be located. All sessions of these committees are open to the general public.

The Church Extension society has already aided into existence nearly 12,000 churches capable of seating over 3,000,000 people. There are still, however, over 2,500 unsheltered congregations.

For the reopening of Methodist schools in Utah $10,000 is to be raised by special contributions.

During the last three years Methodist women in this country have raised a twentieth century thank-offering amounting to $401,270.64.

Presbyterian.

The old First church, Columbus, Ohio, made a very great change in its removal to a new site two miles out, and though it lost many members by so doing it had over 100 additions during the first year under its efficient pastor, Dr. John C. Watt. Now the old church building has been sold. It is regretted that it cannot remain as a Presbyterian landmark in its commanding position.

Another change in Columbus, Ohio, is in the union of the Westminster with the old Second church under the name of the Central and occupying the edifice belonging to the Second church. The handsome stone building of Westminster has passed for a song into the hands of the Spiritualists.

Dr. Samuel S. Palmer as pastor of Broad Street church, Columbus, Ohio, has received 286 persons into the church within three years, ninety being on profession. The present membership is 725.

The First Chinese church on Stockton street, San Francisco, Dr. I. M. Condit, pastor, is enjoying a revival. Nine were admitted to full membership Sunday evening, October 13.

At Piqua, Ohio, 119 new members have been received since Dr. Black became pastor, less than one year ago. The membership is now over 800. Since the first of last April the monthly envelop system has been used in raising the church benevolences. The result has been the doubling of contributions.

By the help of the Home board the gospel is preached in five languages regularly in South Dakota and in another occasionally. The contributions to missions from this synod last year reached nearly $5,900.

The Dakota (Indian) Presbytery, without geographical bounds, but made up of Sioux Indian churches and ministers and their missionaries, located in the Dakotas, Montana and Minnesota, recently held their stated fall meeting at Good Will, S. D. The attendance was large, considerable numbers occupying tents. A score of Chippewas from Wisconsin were among the number. This last is significant when one remembers that formerly the Sioux and the Chippewas were enemies, warring with each other.

Rev. J. Fred Tower of Carthage, Ill., has devised a scheme for removing the tediousness of quarterly review Sundays in the Sunday school. He employs an electric stereopticon and so holds the attention of the pupils.

The first United Presbyterian church to adopt institutional methods is the Eighth church, Allegheny, Pa. It has a large reading room and library and four classes for physical culture have been formed.

The United Presbyterian church has fourteen mission stations among the Freedmen; five in the southeast; five in Tennessee, and four in Alabama.

The First United Presbyterian church of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary November 8. Six hundred persons have been received as members since its organization. Rev. A. R. Paul is pastor.

Rev. Malcolm J. McLeod has just completed the first year of his pastorate at the First church, Pasadena, California. Fifty-six during that time have been received into the church on confession of faith and 102 by certificate.

General.

Union Gospel meetings are being held at Charlevoix, Mich., by the Congregational, Methodist and Baptist churches, for three weeks without the aid of an evangelist.

The Swedish Evangelical Mission

KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES PROMPTLY CURED.

A Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the wonderful new discovery in medical science, fulfills every wish in promptly curing kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles, rheumatism and pain in the back. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything, but if you have kidney, liver, bladder or uric acid trouble you will find it just the remedy you need.

If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it and its great cures, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing, mention that you read this generous offer in The Christian Century.

Covenant college, a missionary institution with a hospital and seminary in Bowmanville, has just been presented with a gift of over $80,000 through the instrumentality of P. H. Anderson, one of its graduates, who left here only two years ago, a poor young student, to take up mission work in Alaska. Of the amount Mr. Anderson gives $57,000, the balance coming from John Brintesen, a friend, who also found fortune in the far North. Fifty thousand dollars goes to the building of a new hospital, $25,000 for extension work and a home for the president, Rev. David Nyvall; $5,000 for a fund to aid needy students and $1,000 each for the China and Alaska mission funds. The college sends missionaries every year to various parts of the world, and at present has in training in Chicago several Eskimos, who are being prepared for work in their native land.

The Congregational and Presbyterian churches in South Bend, Washington, have united under one pastor. He preaches in one church in the morning and in the other in the evening. The edifices are two miles apart.

At the daily meetings held in Baltimore by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan about 400 asked for prayer or determined to lead a Christian life. The last week's meetings were held in Music hall, which accommodates 4,000 people, but overflow gatherings were held in the Associate Congregational church. After the meetings 163 homes were opened for prayer meetings for a spiritual awakening in Philadelphia. The names and addresses of these have been placed in the hands of the Philadelphia County Sabbath School association. Its hope is that pastors and superintendents of Sabbath schools may see in the suggestion an opportunity for them to organize through their congregations a number of parlor prayer meetings during the month of November, looking forward to a meeting on December 3d in the lecture room of the Young Men's Christian association, when the leaders shall be called together for conference as to further steps in evangelistic work.

The churches of Los Angeles, California, are uniting in men's meetings for prayer and Christian effort. These men's meetings and the prayer union of the ministers indicate increasing earnestness and have proved fruitful in results.

The Union City Mission association of Minneapolis is doing a great work both in caring for the poor and saving souls and reforming lives. The contributions to the work for the past year were $5,196.23. Twenty-one churches representing eight denominations contributed $903.97. The restaurant and the express departments more than defray their own running expenses, contributing quite a sum into the treasury. Evangelistic services are held each evening of the year, the gospel wagon being used therefor in the summer.

Through reduction of population and financial strength in Carbondale, Kan., it has been found impracticable for the churches to sustain more than one pastor. They have therefore united in holding services for the present on the basis of a simple creed. These are held in the Congregational edifice and the minister is a Baptist.

Dr. P. Waldenstrom, one of Sweden's great religious leaders and the founder of the Free Mission churches, is visiting this country. He has done much for his own land. By conservative methods, yet with strenuous effort, he secured measures for temperance reform that have worked wonderful things for the moral enlightenment of the people of Sweden. In cities, for instance, the license system has been abolished and there is only one place where liquor can be obtained, and that place is closed from 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon to 8 o'clock Monday morning. The treating system, that was so general during former years, has been done away with.

Foreign Missionary Items.

Rev. Dr. J. D. Davis writes from Japan:

Mr. Mott's work among the students in Japan is proving a great success. It began in Sendai, where during three days 140 young men declared their purpose to become Christians.

A Musical Preacher Speaks Favorably of

The Praise Hymnal

"I have examined every piece of music in THE PRAISE HYMNAL and I regard it the best book for general use I have ever seen for the following reasons:

1. "For the regular worship it has everything desired.
2. "If you want revival songs you do not have to get another book.
3. "When prayer-meeting hour comes appropriate songs are abundant.
4. "If you have a national service, THE PRAISE HYMNAL contains what you want.
5. "If you desire a jubilee day, in this book are the songs.
6. "If a rally day, no other book is needed.
7. "Songs for Christian Endeavor are in good supply.
8. "If you have a funeral you do not have to search three or four books to get appropriate songs.

"Those who buy THE PRAISE HYMNAL will not regret it.

Lynn, Ind.

J. M. LAND."

AS TO PRICES.—The contents of THE PRAISE HYMNAL are of a permanent quality. It is false economy to ask for cheap binding. We make a cloth bound book with leather back that will last ten years with any sort of care. The price is as low as can be made on its superior material and workmanship, $75.00 per 100 copies. Specimen copies sent on approval.

FILLMORE BROS., - 119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O.
40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

Our CHRISTMAS MUSIC is now ready. Send for list. Why not order ALL your music from Fillmore Brothers? We are prompt, courteous, and are publishing new music of all kinds all the time. (5)

LARKIN SOAPS AND . . . PREMIUMS

FACTORY TO FAMILY
Were awarded six medals, two gold, for supreme merit at the Pan-American Exposition. Never exhibited without an award of Gold Medal. Did you see the Larkin advertisement in The Christian Century of November 21st. Don't miss this opportunity for economy. Larkin Soap Co. Larkin St., Buffalo, N. Y.
Already millions of friends and users.

Christian Work, New York, says: The Larkin Co. never disappoint. They create wonder with the great value they give for so little money. A customer once is a customer always with them.

A four days' conference of workers was held in Tokyo which was attended by 125 workers from different parts of the empire, and all were moved to greater earnestness and deeper consecration in this work for students. During two days in Kyoto 173 young men declared their purpose to become Christians. Over fifty of these are students in Doshisha; over forty in the government Higher Middle school; fifteen in the Medical college and others representing almost every school in the city. The Christian teachers in the schools, the pastors, evangelists and missionaries in the city are organized and at work to look after every one of these men and teach and lead them. Doshisha has opened this fall with over seventy new students, and with several earnest Christian teachers added to its faculty, so that it has the most earnest and united body of teachers which it has had for many years. With this new Christian impulse from Mr. Mott's visit, the outlook for the school is very encouraging. The first night of Mott's meetings in Osaka 130 young men declared their purpose to become Christians.

During the Industrial exposition held at Niigata, Japan, for fifty days, beginning August 10, a series of evangelistic services were held. Native pastors and members of the Presbyterian as well as the American Board mission contributed largely to the success of the meetings which were attended by some 2,000 persons, and much seed was sown through the distribution of tracts. One of the most beneficial results was the quickening of the spiritual life of the Christian people, and the stirring of them up to active service.

At Urgub, in Turkey, some five or six years ago, a prominent Greek lawyer procured from his priest a copy of the New Testament, and though previously perfectly indifferent, and even profligate, became interested, and with his wife soon began a new life. Zealous for the salvation of his friends he began at once to communicate the good news, and after a time had some forty listeners in a room connected with the church. At length the priest observed this interest and forbade him to use the room, at which he took another room, but was soon driven from that; then he invited his friends to his own home. Now from this small beginning the truth has gained adherents in twenty-five or thirty families, with a strong working band of young and middle-aged men and women and the Cesarea station has just sent them a preacher.

It is now something like seventy-five years since the American board began work in Turkey, but by the severely enforced laws of the empire that work has been confined to populations nominally Christian. A Protestant missionary attempting directly the conversion of the Moslems would be deported from the realm instantly, if indeed suffered to escape alive. In European Turkey the Board, which by tacit agreement of churches is left to occupy this field alone, addresses itself chiefly to the Bulgarians, a population of about three and a third millions. It was the hope of the missionaries at first to work through the Greek church, educating and elevating the native ministry, the natural leaders of the people. But the native ministry had no wish to be educated or evangelized. They preferred their own superstitious rites to the study of the New Testament; and as they drove those converted under the preaching of the missionaries out of the home churches, it became necessary to organize other churches into which to receive them. There are now about 3,000 Protestant communicants in Bulgaria, and the numerous schools established by the Board in central cities are among the finest institutions under its care. In Asia Minor, also Turkish territory, the work of Protestant missions is confined again to nominally Christian populations, the Armenian people furnishing a large and important field. In the mountainous regions a certain number of Nestorians are reached, but most of this sect live within the boundaries of the Persian empire and of late the majority of them have placed themselves under the care of the church of the Russian czar. In Syria the Presbyterian Board has important fields upon Turkish ground, the work being chiefly among the Druses and Maronites. The Syrian Protestant college located at Beirut had upon its roll over 530 students last year, and the Protestant press put out in the neighborhood of 25,000,000 pages of evangelistic literature.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women backache, lung troubles or general and girls, and for abdominal weakness weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

Won't You
WRITE A POSTAL
To Get Well?

Send me no money, but simply write me a postal if you are not well. Pay when you get well.

I will send you a book that tells how a lifetime of study has enabled me to strengthen the inside nerves. Those are the nerves that operate the stomach, kidneys, heart, womanly organism, etc. Weakness of these organs means weakness of those nerves. Nerve strength alone makes any organ do its duty.

I will send you, too, an order on your nearest druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Use it for a month, and if it succeeds pay him $5.50 for it. If not, I will pay him myself.

No matter how difficult your case; no matter what you have tried. If my book shows you that your trouble is nerve weakness—and most sickness is—I will warrant my Restorative to cure you.

I fail sometimes, but not often. My records show that 39 out of 40 who get those six bottles pay, and pay gladly. I have learned that most people are honest with a physician who cures them. That is all I ask. If I fail I don't expect a penny from you.

Mine is the only way to restore vital nerve power. Other treatments bring but fleeting results at best. If you want to be well, let me send you an order for the medicine. If it cures pay $5.50. I leave the decision to you.

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 595, Racine, Wis.

- Book No. 1 on Dyspepsia.
- Book No. 2 on the Heart.
- Book No. 3 on the Kidneys.
- Book No. 4 for Women.
- Book No. 5 for men (sealed).
- Book No. 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

A NIGHT EXPRESS TRAIN ON THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD.

A change of schedule for departure of train No. 6 from Chicago on the Nickel Plate road provides a convenient express train for Ft. Wayne, Findlay, Fostoria, Cleveland, Erie, Dunkirk, Buffalo, New York city, Boston and all points East, leaving Chicago daily at 11:20 p. m., reaching New York city 6:50 second morning, Boston 10:07 second morning; also all other points east of Buffalo on same time as heretofore. Sleeping car open for reception of passengers to retire at their convenience, after 9:30 p. m.

Daily train from Chicago at 10:35 a. m. reaches New York city following afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, Boston 5:20. Daily train from Chicago at 2:30 p. m. reaches New York at 7:35 p. m. next day. Through vestibuled sleeping car. Meals served in Nickel Plate dining cars, on individual club meal plan, ranging in price from 35c to $1.00. No excess fares on any train of the Nickel Plate road.

Chicago depot, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, on the elevated loop. For further information, write John Y. Calahan, general agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago. (No. 44.)

Observation Cafe Cars.

The Wabash road has placed in service on its fast day trains between Chicago and St. Louis very handsome new observation library cars. Meals are served a la carte. Train leaves Chicago at 11:03 a. m. daily and arrives St. Louis, 6:42 p. m. Ticket office, 97 Adams street, Chicago. It

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers' Block, Rochester New York.

Cheap-Rate Excursions Southwest

Only one fare plus $2.00.
November 5 and 19,
December 3 and 17.

The Santa Fe most directly reaches the fertile valleys, industrial centers, and noted mining camps of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona.

Go out and see the country for yourself.

Santa Fe

Address J. M. Connelly, Gen. Agt. A. T. & S. F.
R'y., 109 Adams St., Chicago.

CHURCH
BELLS

SWEET TONED,
FAR SOUNDING, & DURABLE

CATALOGUE FREE,
NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN.

Living Together.

"It is better to live with others even at the cost of considerable jarring and friction than to live in undisturbed quiet alone," said a wise little woman the other day.

"Yes, I know that sort of life brings hurts, smart, and heartaches, to say nothing of an occasional tempest, but all the same it is an education that cannot be gained in solitude. Life brings many changes and throws strange people together, and it is easy to decide that some of one's kindred by birth or by law—especially the latter—are so uncongenial as to make living with them unendurable.

"Sometimes that is true, but very rarely. Usually if two persons are well-meaning—and most people really do mean well at heart—they can gradually grow into each other's ways, and by doing so modify individual traits and habits to the great improvement of character. We need to have our sharp corners rubbed off, our little pet vanities punctured, and most of all to learn self-control, 'sweet reasonableness,' and toleration for other people's point of view. When persons say to me of members of their own families, 'I do not know how to live with them,' I feel an unsympathetic desire to reply: 'Keep on living with them till you learn how; it is exactly what you need.'"

Plutarch Newly Translated.

Most interesting to all readers of cultivation and taste, as well as to scholars, must prove the announcement of a new translation from the original of Plutarch by so penetrating a student and so able a writer as Prof. Bernadotte Perrin of Yale University. The volume, which will soon be published by the Scribners, bears the title, "Plutarch's Themistocles and Aristides," and has several illustrations. Prof. Perrin has sought especially to reach the general reader, though he hopes for the approval of scholars also.

This translation brings out clearly the spirit of Plutarch as a writer of lives; the easy and comfortable movements of his thought; his attitude toward men who are struggling with great problems of life and destiny; his amiable weakness as a judge of historical evidence, and his consummate art in making deeds and words portray a preconceived character.

Early Syria and Palestine.

Dr. Lewis Bayles Paton, professor of Old Testament Exegesis and Criticism in Hartford Theological Seminary, has contributed to Scribner's Semitic Series a valuable work entitled "The Early History of Syria and Palestine." Its purpose is to tell the story of the Semitic nations dwelling at the eastern end of the Mediterranean from the earliest time down to the establishment of the Persian empire. Within the last few years important archaeological ### False Colors.

Many Soapless Powders masquerading as Soap Powders. Either they possess little cleansing power, or are merely chemicals.

PEARLINE is a true soap powder,—built on soap with other things added, that double its effectiveness. PEARLINE is improved soap,—soap with more working power, more economy. 655 finds have been made in Syria and Palestine. On account of their central position these lands were in constant contact with Babylonia, Assyria, Egypt and Arabia; and consequently all discoveries in the Orient tend to throw light upon their early history. In this book the endeavor is made to gather up the results of the most recent explorations, and, combining them with facts already known from the Bible and from other ancient sources, to present them in a clear and popular form.

For students of the Old Testament this work will have a special interest, inasmuch as it exhibits the history of Israel in its proper relations and proportions as a fragment of the general history of the ancient Orient.

AGENTS Make 100 PER CENT on Conklin's Vest Pocket Argument Settler. Revised edition with New Census Statistics, 254 pgs. A complete Encyclopedia of a million proved Facts Tables, and General Information. It settles Arguments instantly. Invaluable to everyone. Sample postpaid, Cloth, 25c., Morocco, 50c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. George W. Noble, 285 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

A New Money Raising Plan

For Churches & Societies

EASY AND SUCCESSFUL CAN NOT FAIL.—Write at once stating the amount to be raised and the number of willing lady workers, and we will forward plan with full particulars and do all we can to assist you in carrying it out successfully.

F. R. PARKER,
283 Madison St., CHICAGO.

Largest Foundry in Earth making
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free.
WESHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train of the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent.
Chicago, Ill.

THE VEST Pocket Commentary

On the International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1902.

A POCKET COMPANION For Sunday School Teachers and Scholars

IT CONTAINS THE Lessons for the Entire Year in full (references showing the Revised Version) together with an unusual amount of

STUDY HELPS

such as Comments, Daily Readings, Outline Study and Seed Thoughts.

Original, Fresh, Brainy.

International S. S. Evangel says—"This little book gives on each lesson what would require many hours to acquire, and all better than but very few men in America could prepare... It is at once scholarly, spiritual and practical, and in convenience and serviceability EXCELS OTHER HELPS."

Association Men—"Comments itself at a glance... Particularly appropriate for the busy business man."

The Advance—"Condensation as a fine art is exhibited in this book. Remarkably suggestive and helpful."

Sunday School Times—"Vest Pocket Commentary is a unique and reasonably successful attempt to enable busy people to prepare their Sunday School lessons in their 'one spare moment'... The 'Reflections' are excellent."

The Baptist Union—"The pith and marrow of the topics are given, the things that must be said to ensure a first grasp of the lesson. It will be of ready value to those who would gain a bird's-eye view of the theme at a glance."

"Up-to-Date," thoroughly Spiritual and Christian.

A SPLENDID PRESENT TO ANY ONE.

Bound in Red Morocco, gold edges	$0.25
Per dozen	2.50
Interleaved Edition, two blank pages to each lesson for pencil notes, Red Morocco, gold edges, etc.	.35
Per dozen	3.50

This valuable little volume sent on receipt of price or FREE AS A PREMIUM for one new subscriber to The Christian Century.

The Christian Century Co.,
358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

TWO BIBLES IN ONE

OLD AND REVISED VERSIONS ON SAME PAGE.

COMBINATION SELF-PRONOUNCING TEACHERS' REFERENCE BIBLE.

Gives every advantage of the complete parallel Bible without increase in size or bulk of book. At foot of each page is shown every change made by the revisers. The letters R V in the text denote that the word or passage following is changed in the foot-note of same verse. The letters R O denote that the word or passage following is omitted in the revised version as shown in parentheses ( ) in foot-note. When two or more changes occur in the same verse they are divided by a dash in the foot-note.

Most Elegant Bible and Greatest Premium Ever Offered

All standard helps prepared by most eminent Biblical scholars. Complete series of new colored maps, fully index. Concordance containing over 40,000 references. History of books of the Bible, etc. SELF-PRONOUNCING. Large, beautiful, clear new type. All proper names are divided into syllables and every vowel is marked and the syllables inflected, showing the sounds and accents, enabling the reader to properly pronounce every word.

FINE ART EDITION. The Art edition is the same book, but profusely illustrated and embellished with numerous phototype engravings from the paintings of the world's greatest masters to illustrate the teachings of Our Lord.

OUR REMARKABLE OFFERS

This beautiful Bible, French Seal, Divinity Circuit, leather lined, round corners, carmine under gold edges, extra finish, publisher's price $5, and The Christian Century for 1 year for $3. The Fine Art Edition of the same Bible, publisher's price $6, and The Christian Century for 1 year for $3.50.

THE CHRISTIAN COMPANY, 358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

the word;

3 <sup>o</sup> It seemed good to me also, having <sup>rv</sup> had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee <sup>d</sup> in order, <sup>e</sup> most excellent Thê-ôph'î-lûs,

4 / That thou mightest know the certainty <sup>rv</sup> of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.

5 ¶ THERE was <sup>2g</sup> in the days of Hêr'od, <sup>ro</sup> the king of Jû-dæ'á, a certain priest named Zâch-â-rî'as, <sup>h</sup> of the course of Â-bî'â: and <sup>rv</sup> his wife was of the daughters of Aâr'ôn, and her name was Ê-lîs'q-bêth.

6 And they were both <sup>i</sup> righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

3 traced the course of all things accurately from the first, 4 concerning the things wherein thou wast instructed, 5 (the)—he had a wife of 8 Now it came to pass,

g Matt. 2. 1.
h 1 Chr. 24.
10, 19.
Neh. 12. 4, 17.
i Gen. 7. 1;
17. 1.
j Kin. 9. 4.
k Kin. 23. 3.
l Job 1. 1.
m Acts 23. 1;
24. 16.
n Phil. 3. 6.
o 1 Chr. 24. 19.
p 2 Chr. 8. 14;
31. 2.
q Ex. 30. 7, 8.
r Sim. 2. 23.
s 1 Chr. 23. 13.
t 2 Chr. 29. 11.
u Lev. 16. 17.
v Rev. 8. 3, 4.
w Ex. 30. 1.
x ver. 29.
y Judg. 6. 22;
13. 22.
z Dan. 10. 8.
aa ch. 2. 9.
ab Acts 10. 4.
ac Rev. 1. 17.
ad pver. 60, 63.
ae q ver. 53.
af Num. 6. 3.
ag Judg. 13. 4.
ah ch. 7. 33.

10 <sup>m</sup> And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the <sup>rv</sup> time of incense.

11 And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of <sup>n</sup> the altar of incense.

12 And <sup>rv</sup> when Zâch-â-rî'as saw <sup>kim</sup>, <sup>o</sup> he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

13 But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zâch-â-rî'as: <sup>rv</sup> for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Ê-lîs'q-bêth shall bear thee a son, and <sup>p</sup> thou shalt call his name Jôhn.

14 And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and <sup>q</sup> many shall rejoice at his birth.

15 For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and <sup>rv</sup> shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he

while he 9 enter into the temple of the Lord and burn incense. 10 hour of 12 Zacharias was troubled when he saw him, and fear 13 because thy supplication is heard, 15 he shall drink no wine

SELF-PRONOUNCING HOLY BIBLE

COMBINATION TEACHERS' EDITION

BOOKS

Sunday School Movements in America, by Marianna C. Brown. Fleming H. Revell Co. 269 pages. Price $1.25.

Some time ago an article appeared in a current magazine, written by Dr. Charles F. Thwing, and entitled "Scientific Ignorance About the Bible, as Shown Among College Students of Both Sexes." It was this article, as it seems, which gave the author the impulse to pursue the course of study of which this book is the result. With true scientific instinct, it was rightly apprehended that "an opinion as to the causes or remedies for the present condition of religious teaching" must be based upon "a careful study of Sunday school movements in America." Eight, out of its nine chapters, therefore, are devoted to this historical survey, the practical suggestions which follow from such study forming the substance of the concluding chapter. These considerations possess additional weight from the fact that the work here presented was received in "partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Columbia University."

The Sunday school movements are classified in the following manner: Early American Sunday Schools, The American Sunday School Union, The National Convention System, The Uniform or International Sunday School Lesson System, Institutes and the Chautauqua Movement, The Church and Sunday School Work, The Bible Study Union, while Sunday school books and periodicals, organizations for encouraging home Bible study, and The Foreign Sunday School Association receive notice under the title, Miscellaneous. It will thus be seen that a comprehensive view is here given of the whole development of the Sunday school in America, and the subject matter is handled with the utmost clearness and with sympathetic candor. It would be a great advantage if all Sunday school workers would familiarize themselves with the material in these chapters. A knowledge of its historical relations is essential to the intelligent direction of any line of work and it is perhaps safe to say that the progress of Sunday school administration has been greatly retarded by a too general disregard of its history. The result has been that the theories of idealists have often been too far removed from actual conditions, and hence impractical, while, on the other hand, those who are more directly concerned with the practical working of the Sunday school have failed to observe the onward movement which is constantly and must ever be taking place.

In full view of the subject in its historical bearing, the author then proceeds to discuss the fundamental principles which underlie all Sunday school work. In the concluding chapter there is full and intelligent treatment of the Aim of the Sunday School, the relation of this aim to The Ultimate Aim of Education, The Greatest Need of the Present Sunday School, and a discussion of The Final Problem. There can be no doubt that one of the most pressing needs at present is a more general agreement as to what should constitute the real aim of the Sunday school. Its efficiency has been greatly impaired in the past by lack of definiteness and co-ordination in this regard. And of course this involves a clearer conception of the relation between religious instruction, and the agencies which furnish it, to the larger subject of education, its ultimate aim, and the agencies employed.

The peculiar problem in America seems now to be, How to fit into the general scheme of education, a part of which is carried on under the care and direction of the state and made compulsory, the religious instruction which must go hand-in-hand with this other, but which is at present provided for by agencies purely voluntary in character and without the backing of state authority. The elements of this problem are well brought out in the book, and some suggestions for its solution rather timidly ventured. Probably the truth is that no one has yet arrived at the point where he feels warranted in making any very positive statements along this line. The matter is still one requiring deep study and with American traditions as to the relation between Church and State the wise will proceed with caution. It is, however, an inviting field for the specialist, and one for which he will find much that is stimulating and suggestive in the book under consideration. Incidentally there are many practical hints for teacher and superintendent, put in a fresh and attractive form. Valuable statistical appendices have been prepared, showing the progress of the Sunday school according to states and as influenced by various organizations; also the demoniational representation of the International Lesson Committee. Particularly suggestive is a table showing the relative attention paid to the different books of the Bible in the International scheme of lessons during a term of years from 1873 to 1899 inclusive. Some omissions here are significant. The minute which led to the forming of the Bible Study Union is given together with its constitution. The book concludes with a copious bibliography and index.

The First Book of Moses called Genesis. Edited by A. H. Sayce, D. D., LL. D. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.

This is the first volume of "The Temple Bible." It is gotten up in imitation of The Temple Shakespeare. It has the same clear type, but is hardly its peer in binding, and in general appearance. It is made to read as a continuous narrative, the beginning of each chapter being indicated by an asterisk. The introduction and notes by Dr. Sayce are of great value. The position taken upon critical questions is somewhat conservative. "Recent archaeological research has shown that there is no reason why the Pentateuch should not be substantially a work of the age to which tradition assigns it. Still less reason is there for holding that the narratives it contains are not historically true." He admits that the work is "a compilation," but he avers that "whatever allowances we may make for subsequent editing, and for the additions and changes which may have been brought with it, the Book of Genesis bears the stamp of individual authorship, and of the subordination of the materials embodied in it to the purpose which its author had from the outset in view"—that purpose being, "to exemplify the fact of Divine selection, first of all in the history of civilized mankind as a whole, and then in that of a particular branch of the Semitic family." These questions are sufficient to indicate the attitude of Dr. Sayce towards questions of Biblical criticism. In seeking to substantiate his position he makes altogether too much capital out of modern archaeological discoveries, as one who has devoted himself to studies along that line is apt to do. Yet into his introduction and notes he has compressed much that is informing and suggestive.

We hasten to say that the presentation of the Bible in this interesting and attractive form emphasizes the idea of the Bible as literature, and puts the Christian public under a debt of gratitude to the enterprising publishers.

For Sick Headache Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. J. Wells, Nashville, Tenn., says: "It acts like a charm in all cases of sick headache and nervous debility." Gives quiet sleep.

IS CANCER HEREDITARY?

Dr. Bye, the Eminent Specialist, on the treatment of cancer, Kansas City, Mo., states that in his long years of extensive practice in the treatment of carcinoma has proven beyond a doubt that the disease is hereditary, having successfully treated as many as four or more members of one family suffering from the disease. The Doctor has printed a valuable book, profusely illustrated, which is sent free. Parties afflicted or having friends afflicted should write him. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Kansas City, Mo.

DON'T FAIL.

Be sure to read "Personal to Subscribers" in next week's issue. An item of interest to every person, young or old.

A DIFFERENT DISEASE

every week is felt by those whose stomach, blood or liver is out of order. They never enjoy life long at a time, for they seem to suffer with every ailment that is going; their vitality is so low that the system can not resist disease. If you wish to fortify your system and make it almost impervious to disease, take an occasional dose of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. Remember it is not a drug-store medicine; sold to the people direct by the proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 South Hoyne ave., Chicago, Ill.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
 Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Falls to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

WINTER TOURIST TICKETS
to the

SOUTH
Via the
Southern Railway

Now on sale.
In making arrangements to go to

FLORIDA
CUBA or NASSAU

CALL OR WRITE (it costs only two cents.)
 GEO. B. ALLEN, A. G. P. A. Southern Railway,
 ST. LOUIS, MO.
 or
 J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A. 225 Dearborn St.
 CHICAGO, ILL.

and they will furnish you rates, send literature and give any information desired.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY,
of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities, Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

Old Books

Can be exchanged for new. If you are through with some of your books send us a list and we will make you an offer for them. Our Second-hand Department contains many bargains which it will pay you to inquire about. Send for our new list, or better yet, step in and look over our shelves. Chicago city pastors should join our

Twentieth Century
Circulating Library

You can read all the new books at small expense and choose those you wish to add to your library at your leisure. The expense is trifling, the yearly membership fee being only $1.00. Rental of books is only 2 cents per day, or 10 cents per week. We have 50,000 volumes to choose from and all the new books as issued. You will profit by taking advantage of this the best book offer ever made.

AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
 177 Wabash Ave., Chicago
 CHARLES M. ROE, Manager.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
 Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
 CHICAGO, ILL.

TO ST. LOUIS
ILLINOIS CENTRAL
CENTRAL
MISSISSIPPI VALLEY
ROUTE
RAILROAD
DAYLIGHT SPECIAL
FAST DAY TRAIN
THE
DIAMOND SPECIAL
POPULAR NIGHT TRAIN

A Comfortable Living
For Fifty Years.

A thorough investigation will convince you that a few dollars per month invested for six years in the Montezuma Plantation will absolutely secure it. This is in no sense a speculation, but a solid, conservative investment, with a complete chain of safeguards around every dollar invested.

Rubber and sugar, the great staples, which never fail, are being planted.

A PERFECT PLAN---RELIABLE COMPANY

The managing company has assets worth $2,000,000. The plan is the perfection of co-operation—each share-holder has only one vote, regardless of the shares held. Over 2 years' work, costing $50,000, has been done.

Sir Thos. Lipton says: "For sure, large and permanent returns, nothing equals a well managed Mexican plantation." Over 400 intelligent people own shares. It is as safe as life insurance, several times more profitable and good for life.

CHICAGO TITLE & TRUST CO., TRUSTEE.

This institution, capital $1,500,000, holds the title to the land, the purchasers' money, and a bond of $100,000, guaranteeing the development work. Write or call for literature, mentioning this paper.

MONTEZUMA PLANTATION
 1108 Ashland Block, Chicago.

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

CURES
 Female Troubles, Stooping Posture, Inflammations, Internal Pains, Tired Feeling, Backache, Weak Lungs, Nervousness.

TRIAL FREE.
 It will make you comfortable, buoyant, happy—give you ability to work and enjoy life. It is simple, wholly external, adjustable to any figure. Worn with or without corset.

We have over 15,000 letters like this:
 Chandler, Okla., July 27, 1899.
 Your Brace did all you said about it and more for me. It has saved me a big doctor's bill and brought me good health, which I had not had before in 27 years. My troubles were dropsy, headache, lung disease, stomach and other ills to which women are subject.
 MRS. L. B. DICKINSON.
 Write today for particulars and illustrated book mailed free in plain sealed envelope. Address
 The Natural Body Brace Co., Box 744, Salina, Kansas.
 Every woman should have this Brace.

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.
 A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

TRIAL TREATMENT FREE.
PILES We will forfeit $50 for any case of Internal, External or Itching Piles the Germ Pile Cure fails to cure. Instant and permanent relief. Write at once. Germ Medical Co., Dept. A, 13, 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

Marion Harland's New Departure

Unprecedented Introductory Offer of MARION HARLAND'S latest and best work entitled:

BITS OF COMMON SENSE SERIES

In four handsome volumes, comprising thirty different subjects. The books are beautifully printed from new large clear type specially selected for this edition, on fine white laid book paper, and handsomely bound in cloth. They are published under the authority of Marion Harland and protected by U. S. and European copyrights, and can only be had in this edition. You can not buy them in the book stores, you can secure them from us by accepting our subscription offer. We consider ourselves fortunate in being able to make our readers such liberal offers of so valuable a set.

THE AUTHOR.

CONTENTS OF THE SET

Volume 1.
HEALTH TOPICS.

- Chapter.
 1. The Family Medicine Chest.
 2. The Latest Arrival.
 3. Food for Infants.
 4. Baby's Clothes.
 5. The "Second Summer."
 6. Sickness in the Family.
 7. "Brainy Children."
 8. Good Cookery as a Moral—Because Healthful—Agency.
 9. Good Cookery as a Moral—Because Healthful—Agency (Continued.)

Volume 2.
HOME TOPICS.

- Chapter.
 1. Helpful or Harmful.
 2. Manners for Everyday Wear.
 3. Our Girl and Doubtful Books.
 4. Politeness as Policy.
 5. Our Feet and Our Hands.
 6. Common-Sense Window-Gardening
 7. Common-Sense Window-Gardening
 8. The Marriage Tie.
 9. What People Should Not Wear.

Volume 3.
Household Management.

- Chapter.
 1. How We Make Housekeeping Harder.
 2. Ways and Ways of Work.
 3. Beds and Bed Making.
 4. How to Save Time and Yourself.
 5. Fine Art in "Drudgery."
 6. Spring House Cleaning.
 7. "Wanted—Change."
 8. Where the Shoe Pinches.
 9. Where the Shoe Pinches (Concluded)

Volume 4.
COOKING HINTS.

- Chapter.
 1. How to be Hospitable Though Rural
 2. Eggs—Their Uses and Abuses.
 3. Diet and Homes.
 4. The Modern Luncheon for Ladies Only.
 5. The Invariable Potato.
 6. Between Seasons.
 7. Hot Weather Dishes.
 8. "Under Protest."
 9. Oil Stoves and John.

MARION HARLAND as a writer on household affairs is world-famous. We could not add to the words of praise with which each new work from her pen has been received by the critics of the two continents.

There can hardly be a woman who is not familiar with some of her writings. She has been a constant contributor to the current literature of the day but it is as a writer of sound wholesome advice that we know her best. Her world-famous book "Common Sense in the Household" has enjoyed a sale of over 250,000 at $1.50 per copy. Her first complete novel entitled "Alone" ran over 100,000 copies in the United States. We are all more or less familiar with her famous novels such as "True as Steel," "Sunnybank," "Eve's Daughters," "Judith," also her "Breakfast, Luncheon and Tea," and "The Dinner Year Book." Over 800,000 copies of these last-named books have been sold. Her works on Domestic Life and Home Training have never been surpassed. Her last work, the "Bits of Common Sense" series offered here, is the essence of her life work. These charming volumes will be eagerly sought after by all women for the real sound and wholesome advice given on various household matters.

TWO GREAT PREMIUM OFFERS

FOR TWO NEW ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS to The Christian Century at the regular rate, we will send free as a Premium, postpaid, this complete set of four cloth-bound volumes as described above.

FOR TWO DOLLARS CASH WITH order we will send, postpaid, this complete set of four cloth bound volumes as described above and The Christian Century for one whole year. Foreign postage, extra, $1.04.

Remember the regular subscription price of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is $1.50 a year. Foreign postage, extra, $1.04. Do not delay. Send your order to-day. Address,

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Books, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

Through First Class and Tourist Sleeping Cars to California and Oregon

Every day in the year between

Chicago, San Francisco Los Angeles and Portland

via

Chicago, Union Pacific and North-Western Line

A most comfortable and inexpensive means of making the trip overland

Lowest Rates • Finest Scenery Shortest Time on the Road

Personally Conducted Excursions

every Tuesday and Thursday from Chicago

For illustrated pamphlets, rates and particulars inquire at ticket offices Chicago & North-Western Railway, 212 Clark Street or Wells Street Station, or address S. A. Hutchison, 212 Clark Street, Chicago.

25c. THE LADIES' FRIEND Hopkins' Bleaching Gloves Made from the Best Glove-Kid in Black, Wine, Tan, and Chocolate. Just the thing for Housecleaning, Gardening, Driving, Wheeling, Outing, Golf, etc. Sizes, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Write for terms to agents. Hopkins Glove Co., B Apollo, Cincinnati, O.

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R. 209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

Combination Magazine Offer

By special arrangements with the publishers we are enabled to present the following exceedingly attractive club offers with The Christian Century. The following are the periodicals with which these arrangements have been made:

SUCCESS, the brightest, most up-to-date and most profusely illustrated monthly published. The inspiration of a lifetime has come to thousands of SUCCESS readers through their investment of One Dollar, its regular subscription price. REVIEW OF REVIEWS, the "indispensable" magazine, presenting a brilliant record in print and picture of the world's thought and work—monthly, $2.50 a year. THE COSMOPOLITAN, for years without a superior as a magazine of general and varied attractions—monthly, $1.00 a year. THE HOUSEHOLD, a supreme authority in home-work and decoration, table-equipment, nursery-lore, etiquette, pyrography, photography, and offers a very high class of poetry and fiction—monthly, $1.00 a year. LESLIE'S is one of the great modern monthlies whose articles and illustrations are the highest expression of magazine art—monthly, $1.00 a year. CURRENT LITERATURE, the leading literary monthly of America; it keeps you in complete touch with the world of letters—$3.00 a year. NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW presents a most brilliant galaxy of articles by the greatest writers on world problems—monthly, $5.00 a year. THE DESIGNER pictures in colors the latest Parisian and New York fashions, describing costumes, millinery, designs and fabrics for women and children—monthly, $1.00 a year. THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE paints with loving touch the landmarks of New England; tells of her history and traditions, and of the achievements of her sons throughout the world—monthly, $3.00 per annum. GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, the acknowledged arbiter regarding the little "kinks" which make home a place of delight—monthly, $1.00 a year. LESLIE'S WEEKLY, the popular, up-to-date, literary and pictorial record of moving events at home and abroad—now in its ninety-third volume—monthly, $4.00 a year. THE GENTLEWOMAN, one the best, cheapest, brightest and most practical Ladies' magazine published in America. It is liked by women everywhere and should be in every American home—monthly, $1.00 a year. HOME AND FLOWERS, devoted to the art of raising flowers and cultivation of public beauty—monthly, $1.00 year. THE AMERICAN BOY, a most valuable and beneficial publication for the youth, containing illustrated stories, aids and suggestions on the problem of success in life.

Special Offers on Optional Combinations

	Regular price.	Our price.
The Christian Century (new), Success, and any ONE of the above dollar magazines . . .	$3.50	$2.50
The Christian Century (new), Success, and any TWO of the above dollar magazines . . .	4.50	2.85
The Christian Century (new), Success, and any THREE of the above dollar magazines . . .	5.50	3.25
The Christian Century (new), Success, and Review of Reviews (new) . . . . .	5.00	3.85
The Christian Century (new), Success, and Current Literature (new) . . . . .	5.50	2.75
The Christian Century (new), Success, Review of Reviews (new), and any one of our dollar magazines . . .	6.00	3.25

Popular Combination Dollar-Magazine Offer

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY . . . . .	$1.50	}	$7.50 In Value
SUCCESS . . . . .	1.00
THE COSMOPOLITAN . . . . .	1.00
THE HOUSEHOLD . . . . .	1.00
HOME &amp; FLOWERS . . . . .	1.00
THE GENTLEWOMAN . . . . .	1.00
THE AMERICAN BOY . . . . .	1.00
			Our Price Only $3.50

Our Great Family Offer

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY . . . . .	$1.50	}	$9.50 In Value
SUCCESS . . . . .	1.00
REVIEW OF REVIEWS (new) . . . . .	2.50
Current Literature, (new), or New England Magazine may be substituted. {	3.00
COSMOPOLITAN . . . . .	1.00
Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly may be substituted.
THE HOUSEHOLD . . . . .	1.00
Good Housekeeping, the Designer or Gentlewoman may be substituted.
THE AMERICAN BOY . . . . .	1.00		Our Price Only $4.50
HOME AND FLOWERS . . . . .	1.00

Our Great Educational Offer

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY . . . . .	$1.50	}	$13.50 In Value
REVIEW OF REVIEWS (new) . . . . .	2.50
New England Magazine may be substituted. {	3.00
CURRENT LITERATURE (new) . . . . .	3.00
Any two of the above one dollar magazines may be substituted.
NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW (new) . . . . .	5.00
Leslie's Weekly may be substituted.
SUCCESS . . . . .	1.00		Our Price Only $6.00

All subscriptions are for a full year. Magazines may be sent to one or different addresses. Foreign postage extra.

New subscriptions only will be accepted at the above prices for the Review of Reviews, Current Literature, and North American Review, but present subscribers may renew their subscriptions by adding One Dollar for each renewal subscription to the combination prices named. Either new or renewal subscriptions will be accepted for all other magazines named. A transfer from one member of a family to another does not constitute a new subscription. A new subscription to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY and to SUCCESS must be included in every offer.

SUBSTITUTIONS: A new subscription to the Review of Reviews, a new subscription to Current Literature, and a new or renewal subscription to the Designer and the Household may be substituted each for the other. The Cosmopolitan, Leslie's Monthly, Good Housekeeping, The Progress of the work of the Church. Subscription price, $1.50 a year. Address all orders to

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is the only strongly evangelical undenominational religious paper in America representative of the ripest scholarship of the time. Its department of interdenominational news gives a view of the activities of the whole Church. It covers a unique field and is indispensable to those interested in religious teaching and the progress of the work of the Church. Subscription price, $1.50 a year. Address all orders to

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, - 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, December 5, 1901.

Number 29.

Holiday Book Number

LEADING FEATURES.

The Church in the City

The Chronler's Desk

Letters to the Book-Lover

The Influence of Matthew Arnold on Modern Thought

India Letter

Reviews of Books

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arreage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES

Quarterly Helps.

THE PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Youngest Classes. It contains Lesson Stories, Lesson Questions, Lesson Thoughts and Lesson Pictures, and never fails to interest the little ones.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter,	5 cents.
10 copies, per quarter,	$ .20; per year, $ .75
25 copies,	.40; " 1.50
50 " "	.75; " 3.00

THE YOUTH'S QUARTERLY

A Lesson Magazine for the Junior Classes. The Scripture Text is printed in full, but an interesting Lesson Story takes the place of the usual explanatory notes.

TERMS—Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 2 1-2 cents each per quarter.

THE SCHOLAR'S QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Senior Classes. This Quarterly contains every help needed by the senior classes. Its popularity is shown by its immense circulation.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter,	$ .10; per year, $ .30
10 copies,	.40; " 1.25
25 " "	.90; " 3.00
50 " "	1.60; " 6.00
100 " "	3.00; " 12.00

THE BIBLE STUDENT.

A Lesson Magazine for the Advanced Classes, containing the Scripture Text in both the Common and Revised Versions, with Explanatory Notes, Helpful Readings, Practical Lessons. Maps, etc.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter,	$ .10; per year, $ .40
10 copies,	.40; " 2.50
25 " "	1.60; " 6.00
50 " "	3.00; " 10.50
100 " "	5.50; " 20.00

BIBLE LESSON PICTURE ROLL.

Printed in 8 colors. Each leaf, 26 by 37 inches, contains a picture illustrating one lesson. 13 leaves in a set. Price per Roll—one quarter—reduced to 75 cents.

CHRISTIAN PICTURE LESSON CARDS.

A reduced fac-simile of the large Bible Lesson Picture Roll. Put up in sets, containing one card for each Sunday in quarter. One set will be required for each child in the class. Price reduced to 2 1-2 cents per set.

Model Sunday-School Record.

A complete record of the Attendance of Officers, Teachers and Pupils, with column for Roll of Officers, Teachers, and column for recording Attendance or Absence. Collections by Classes, Total Enrollment, with Gain or Loss for the Quarter, List and Cost of Supplies, Treasurer's Receipt to Secretary, Weekly and Quarterly Report, etc., for one to twenty-eight classes, all for entire quarter, without turning a leaf. Each book contains blanks for two years' records. Cloth.....$1.00

Model Sunday-School Treasurer's Book.

Arranged for the Systematic Recording of all Receipts and Expenditures. Blanks for Annual Reports, etc. Good for three years. Fine paper. Pocket size, cloth, 25 cents. Morocco.....$ .50

Model Sunday-School Class Book.

Arranged for Complete Record of Name, Residence, Date of Entering, Attendance, Contributions, etc. Good for one year. Single copy, five cents. Per dozen.....$ .50

Standard Sunday-School Class Book.

Ruling and Printed Headings, and keeps One Month's Record without turning a leaf. Good for one year. Bound in marbled paper. Single copy, ten cents. Per dozen.....$ .75

Sunday-School Collection and Class Envelopes.

Cloth-lined, printed, and good for one year. Per dozen.....$ .50
Manila paper, printed, and good for one year. Per hundred, 35 cents. Per thousand..... 2.25

Model Superintendent's Roll or Pocket Record.

Containing an Alphabetical List of the Names and Addresses of all the Pupils connected with the School; also, List of Officers and Teachers, with Addresses, and blanks for recording some of the most important items from the Secretary's Weekly Reports. Cloth, 50 cents. Morocco.....$ .75

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

358 Dearborn Street,

Chicago, Ill.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago
Indianapolis
Cincinnati
Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake
and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent,
234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

Bethany College.

Founded in 1841 by
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Open to Men and Women. Sixtieth Session begins Sept. 23, 1901. Postoffice, Bethany, W. Va. Railway Station, Wellsburg, W. Va. For catalogue and particulars address,

J. C. KEITH, Chairman Faculty

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Monthly.

CHRISTIAN BIBLE LESSON LEAVES.

These Lesson Leaves are especially for the use of Sunday-schools that may not be able to fully supply themselves with the Lesson Books or Quarterlies.

TERMS.

10 copies, 1 mo.,	$ .15; 3 mos., $ .30; 1 yr., $1.00
25 " "	.25; " .60; " 2.40
50 " "	.45; " 1.20; " 4.60
100 " "	.75; " 2.10; " 8.00

Weekly.

THE LITTLE ONES.

Printed in Colors.

This is a Weekly for the Primary Department in the Sunday-school and the Little Ones at Home. Full of Charming Little Stories, Sweet Poems, Merry Rhymes and Jingles, Beautiful Pictures and Simple Lesson Talks. The prettiest and best of all papers for the very little people.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than five copies to one address, 25 cents a copy per year. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL EVANGELIST.

This is a Weekly for the Sunday-school and Family, of varied and attractive contents, embracing Serial and Shorter Stories; Sketches; Incidents of Travel; Poetry; Field Notes; Lesson Talks, and Letters from the Children. Printed from clear type, on fine calendered paper, and profusely illustrated.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 30 cents a copy per year, or 8 cents per quarter. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A Large Illustrated Weekly Magazine, devoted to the welfare and work of Our Young People, giving special attention to the Sunday-school and Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. It contains wood-cuts and biographical sketches of prominent workers, Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons, and Endeavor Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, Outlines of Work, etc. This Magazine has called forth more commendatory notices than any other periodical ever issued by our people. The Sunday-school pupil or teacher who has this publication will need no other lesson help, and will be able to keep fully "abreast of the times" in the Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. work.

TERMS—One copy, per year, 75 cents; in clubs of ten, 60 cents each; in packages of ten or more to one name and address, only 50 cents each. Send for Sample.

RHEUMATISM...

Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws cords, and hardens muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take any more. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

PLYMYER BELL
BCHURCH BELLS.  UNLIKE OTHER BELL SWEETENERS, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., December 5, 1901.

Number 29.

EDITORIAL

THE CHURCH IN THE CITY.

One can consider the problems which confront an aggressive Christianity without facing those presented by our large cities. The large city is itself a modern innovation, and therefore its problems are modern. It is puzzling not only the churches, but the legislatures of every land where its portentous form has appeared.

For the Church of Christ the problems of the large cities are created by their density of population. Its marvelous opportunity has become its supreme embarrassment. For where human beings teem in such numbers, living in such close quarters to one another, the conditions become, alas, hostile to the spiritual life, and therefore to the organizations which seek to promote it. A dense population always tends to become a pleasure-loving population. Caterers of amusement of every kind reap a great harvest and are therefore able to offer their questionable wares with ever more alluring and varied devices. This love and pursuit of pleasure, promoted by density of population, creeps over from the evening into the night time, and from the week-day into the day of rest and worship. While some of our friends are forever shouting that there is no distinction between sacred and secular, the answer of the enemy is found in the obliteration of sacred days, places, associations, from the heart and imagination of the community. In these communities the difference for their own consciences between sacred and secular has indeed been abolished by the practical expulsion of the former.

How is the Church of Christ to attack the vast masses of society thus organized for the two great industries of money-making through hard toil, and money-spending in sensuous pleasure? Few of our readers will advocate the recurrence to Puritan ideals in relation to recreation and amusement. Few will now maintain that all recreation is sinful, and that God disowns the man who seeks rest for mind and body, either in a novel or a game. And yet how is the Church to reach the conscience of these great cities with the urgent and insistent voice of those who believe in the eternal life, in the awfulness of the holy law of God, and in the hard task of winning and keeping the spiritual mind? There is not a church in Chicago or in any other city which is not face to face with this problem. It comes to the conscience of every young person who wants to know what to give up and what to retain when he becomes a confessed follower and earnest servant of Jesus Christ. It confronts every church when its young people propose to raise money by means of shows and entertainments of various kinds. It confronts every minister when he sees those who had been worshipers gradually drawn away from the house of God by the allurements of Sunday picnics and Sunday golf. And who of our readers have reached a clear decision on these points? Who know or feel convinced that they know exactly what Christ would have his Church at this hour attempt in relation to those customs of the world around it and the world within it?

Our large cities have also presented to the Church what we call distinctively the down-town problem. Toward the center of these cities the densest populations are gathering, and they are unable to maintain on an adequate scale the modern expensive church organization. People of these classes do not care for small religious meetings. The little church has no chance in their midst. The gregarious instinct is powerful in them. They like to be in large crowds and hear vast volumes of song, and to witness the stirring control of an eloquent speaker over big audiences. These people need Christianity and are sometimes as destitute of the Gospel as the Japanese or the Indians.

Let us confess frankly, and yet with great humiliation, that the Protestant churches have not discovered, in many cities, how to deal with the down-town problem. The Episcopalians in New York and the Methodists in London are the most successful in this kind of work that we know of. In Chicago there is practically no success. It may perhaps be said without invidiousness that two Baptist churches, those presided over by Dr. Lawrence and Dr. Johnston Myers, and the Chicago Avenue church, under Dr. Torrey, have done more than any others, perhaps more than all others put together, to meet the situation. There is no strictly speaking down-town Presbyterian church in existence, although the Second Presbyterian church is rapidly finding itself in that position. The First Congregational church, although tempted a while, has bravely set its face to its great opportunity and its most solemn responsibility and has called to its pulpit a man who has shown elsewhere special adaptation to this work. We earnestly trust that Dr. Bartlett may be able to demonstrate to all the churches what can be done to evangelize the section of the city in which his ministry is now placed.

It would be ungracious not to acknowledge with great cordiality and admiration the work done by such men as Dr. Gunsaulus in the Central church, and which is now expected from Dr. Frank Crane, the new pastor of the People's church. Beyond all doubt, work of the kind in which they are engaged is urgently needed in this city. The configuration of the city, the habits of the people and traditions which are now a quarter of a century old, make such centers of Christian preaching not only necessary, but most valuable. Whether they can ever reach the highest type of church life, and do for their congregations the best that a church can do, remains to be seen; and it can hardly be said that either of these churches has yet attempted the proof of this. But in such a city there must ever be a great transient population in hotels and boarding houses, as well as many men and women for whom this kind of organization and this type of preaching brings the blessing of God.

It must be confessed, then, as we look around upon the problem of evangelizing the heart of Chicago, that no one plan has yet been discovered whose pre-eminent success is at once a triumph and a beacon of hope to others. The churches of Christ in this city could not possibly undertake a more urgent task than that of considering what means can be employed for establishing and maintaining great centers of evangelical influence in down-town Chicago.

THE CHRONICLER'S DESK.

ACCORDING to the definition of Leconte, religion is "the life of God in the soul of man." Lyman Abbott quoted and expounded this definition in one of his books and used the expression a few times in The Outlook, which gave it a kind of currency at the time in the most intelligent religious circles. This was too much for the nerves of a conservative theological professor, who seldom sees anything in Dr. Abbott except something criticizable and dangerous. Being ignorant apparently of the author of the definition, he ascribed it to the familiar heretical source, and proceeded with a characteristic piece of enlightened and discriminating criticism. After lamenting the fact that some of his brethren had taken to the use of this dangerous expression, and hoping they would not do so any more, he goes on, in true Socratic fashion, to take it to pieces. Does the life spoken of mean the life that God lives? If so, it is impossible to us. Does it mean the life that God possesses? If so, this life is not all in the soul, but some of it is in the conduct.

Well, the Chronicler wonders if this theological professor and teacher in a Bible college ever heard the expressions "divine life," "spiritual life," "eternal life"? Would it not be in point for some of his students to rise up and explain to him that these are the exact equivalents of the phrase, the life of God? And while this student is on his legs, would it not be in order for him to adopt the Socratic method and ask, if the life of God is not in the divine part of man, eternal life not in the eternal part, spiritual life in the spiritual part, the soul, where are we to look for it? When God made man in his own image and likeness and breathed into him the breath of lives, what part of him constituted the image and into what part did he breathe the breath of immortality? And what about the words of Jesus, "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit"?

Is it true that we can not live the life that God lives? Christ thought we could, not in the infinite or absolute sense, but in the moral and spiritual sense. The only thing absolutely new in the teaching of Jesus was holding up the divine character as the model and inspiration of human character. His conduct was the ideal of ours. This revelation was a fundamental proposition of the Sermon on the Mount. Matt. 5: 44-48. The basis of religion is God's relation to us, and this determines our relation to him. God is related to us in the first place as Maker—he made us, therefore we are his, and if we are his we ought to do as he tells us. God is related to us in the second place as Father. This is the relationship that Christ emphasizes. If God is our Father we are his children. If we are children of God we partake of his nature; if we partake of his nature, we partake of his character, our moral actions are of the same kind as his, we are like him in the ethics of conduct. So in this ethical sense we can and must live the kind of life that God lives. God tells the truth; can we tell the truth? God's integrity is beyond question; can we be honest? There is either a just God or no God; can we be just? God loves; can we love? God sacrificed himself for human redemption; are we capable of self-sacrifice? God has filled the universe with his benevolences; can we reach the high altitude of the humanities? God is pure, righteous and holy; do these attributes belong to us? So when the theological professor, bent on finding fault with the views of a brother man, and fellow-Christian, obviously more enlightened on this point than himself, said it was impossible for us to live the kind of life that God lives, it was a shallow observation to come from so exalted a source. Leconte's definition of religion as the life of God in the soul of man is an excellent one.

Referring to Leconte's words as his definition of religion, reminds one of the hazards of modern originality, and the likelihood of blundering in ascribing phrases, maxims, proverbs or definitions to this man or that. As a matter of fact, these identical words, "the life of God in the soul of man," occur in an essay written by Alexander Campbell for The Christian Baptist seventy-five years ago. Whether this expression was original with Mr. Campbell or not, or whether Leconte ever so much as heard of that publication, or read a word from the nineteenth century reformer, this deponent sayeth not. It is probable, if a literary antiquarian should search the records, he would find this pregnant phrase farther down the line than the days of Alexander Campbell. The critical theological professor referred it to Lyman Abbott. Lyman Abbott referred to Leconte, and Leconte might have quoted it from Alexander Campbell, and there is no telling how soon an ecclesiastical archaeologist may unearth it from among the remains of a literary and religious ruin of the past. The expression was not original with Professor Leconte, but he was first to fix and formulate it as a definition of religion, and this is originality enough for any modern to aspire to attain. That famous and familiar saying, "unity in things essential, liberty in things indifferent, charity in all things," long attributed to Richard Baxter, has been found to have fore-dated the time of Baxter by at least a century. The Golden Rule was not original with Jesus, and there is hardly a phrase in the Lord's Prayer that was not current in Israel before it found a place in that wonderful compilation. Truly the ancients have stolen all our good ideas and most of our fine expressions.

The Chronicler, after writing the preceding paragraph, leaned back in his chair to take a breathing spell, when his eye fell upon the first volume of the Twentieth Century New Testament lying upon his "Desk." He took it up, and carelessly opening to the first chapter of Luke, read the "Dedication" according to this vernacular translation. It is certainly the completest and most beautiful thing on earth of its kind. Here it is:

"To his Excellency Theophilus.

"Many attempts have been made to draw up an account of those matters that are accepted as true among us, exactly as they have been handed down to us by those who from the very first were eye witnesses and afterwards became bearers of the message. I also, therefore, having investigated all resolved to write a connected history of them for you. In this way you will be able to satisfy yourself of the accuracy of the story which you have heard from the lips of others."

What form of dedication or introduction could be completer or finer, or more to the point? M. Renan and Ian Maclaren have expressed the opinion that Luke's gospel is the finest production ever penned by mortal man, and certainly his dedicatory inscription is as exquisitely fashioned by the literary artist as any other portion of that remarkable narrative. Whatever may have been the inspirational qualification of the historian when he sat down to put this marvelous composition together, all he claims for his story is accuracy and verity. It was based upon the testimony of eyewitnesses and a careful investigation of the facts, and if a history is true and beautiful and full of the supernatural, and the record of it is accurate and verifiable, what could inspiration have added to this gem memorial of Luke, the beloved physician? The fundamental question after all is a question of verity and not a question of inspiration.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT has been said that Christ is enthroned in heaven today because yesterday he was crucified on earth; and no one can occupy the throne of moral power who does not reach it by the way of the cross.

A wealthy merchant in Illinois has just bought a carnation for which he paid $1,750. These prosperous times are leading to extravagance in many ways. When it comes to the indulgence of personal tastes and whims there is no lack of money. With our increased prosperity we need an increased sense of stewardship.

We publish this week our Holiday Book number. If the reviews are generally laudatory, it is because we have made selection of some of the best books of the season. We mean to make our review department discriminative and authoritative.

The printing presses of the land have been groaning under the work imposed upon them. There is a perfect flood of new books; more than publishers can advantageously handle. But of the multitude of books produced, the large majority will sink and only a few will swim.

We make mention in this issue, in our review department, of a book of fairy tales by the Queen of Roumania. King Oscar of Sweden is another royal author. His literary works require ten pages of the regular publishers' catalogue, and comprise books on history, poetry and music; with numerous speeches and essays.

One of the penalties which civilized people have to pay for much reading of books is impaired vision. Book reading is spoiling our eyesight. Dr. W. V. Black of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh points out how that in South Africa the sight of the Hottentot, the Kaffir, and other natives is so much more acute than ours, they being able to distinguish game lurking in kloof, forest and veldt much easier than we, and he suggests that in the work of education we do away with a large portion of our book study, and substitute for it blackboard demonstrations, pictures and models of objects.

Discovery in Astronomy.

An important astronomical discovery has been made by Professor G. W. Ritchey of the Yerkes Observatory. It is in substance this: "That a nebula, with a star for a nucleus, changes its shape and the quantity of light it emits, and that these changes are so rapid as to be observable within the compass of a few hours." His observations, which will soon be given to the scientific world, confirm the nebula hypothesis of La Place, that new worlds are formed by slow evolution from gaseous matter floating in space, and also the theory of Herbert Spencer that the entire universe is passing through a constant flux of evolution and dissolution. By a series of photographs of one star, Nova of Perseus, Professor Ritchey is able to furnish positive knowledge "that in the unspeakably vast gulfs of space nature is slowly molding suns and planets and solar systems and star clusters; that nebulae are converted into suns and suns into nebulae; that catastrophes involving unthinkable quantities of matter are by no means rare in the infinite womb of space, and that out of the chaos and confusion thus produced order and symmetry emerge after ages of evolution."

Freedom of the Pulpit.

The question of the freedom of the pulpit has of late been somewhat prominently discussed. Some have claimed that the pulpit has a right to invade every domain of human interest; others holding that it has a specialty of its own to which it ought to confine itself; a specialty, moreover, so large and wide as to give ample room for the exercise of all the freedom that ought to be desired. Seldom have we seen the true function of the pulpit better defined than in a recent editorial in the Chicago Record-Herald, in which the secularization of the pulpit was unsparingly denounced. The editorial in question concludes with these significant words:

"Aside from the question of authority, men are sated with such stuff anyway during the week, and if they go to church Sunday it is to be recalled to the spiritual side of life, which is too much neglected. There is still enough in it and in pure religion for centuries upon centuries of sermons, as there has been in the past. The specialty is still rightly considered the greatest of specialties, and when it is properly fulfilled it ministers more to the higher aspirations of humanity than any other and commands a veneration that is a very bulwark against those who would curtail its just freedom."

Decrease of Theological Students.

The causes of the decline in the number of theological students in all the denominations are being seriously discussed. In some cases it is claimed that quality is being sought more than quantity. Another reason doubtless is the multiplication of the modes of Christian service. It is now possible for men to preach without a pulpit, and to work for the moral elevation of humanity without the backing of a church. But the main reason is found in the condition of the churches. As Dr. Charles J. Little has said, "the modern congregation is heterogeneous and hard to satisfy. Men of marked power gather audiences of their own and hold them, but even they are tempted to the unusual and the extravagant. The statistics of the Protestant churches show an appallingly short term for the average minister, and gray hairs are not a crown of glory but of thorns."

The Function of the Pulpit.

Into a recent utterance the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," has condensed the experience of years in reference to the functions of the modern pulpit. With most that he says we are in perfect agreement, but we think that he undervalues the preaching function of the pulpit. He says that the modern church is over-organized; that the work of the church should be simpler and more specific; that there should be fewer meetings; that the young people should receive special care—all of which is true, but in all that he says there seems to be an underlying admission that as a world-saving agency the pulpit has lost its glory and power; and it is from this that we dissent.

The four points which he makes are these:

"First, we have reached a point where we feel there is no longer such a great need of preaching. That is so in my home. Of course there are local conditions everywhere and we cannot always speak for another man. However, six years ago I told my people plainly that I could not prepare two sermons a week. If I write one I tell all I know for that week. Our people are preached to too much. A young minister should preach one good, strong sermon on Sunday and preach it in the morning. The people enjoy preaching, but don't require too much.

"Second, we should not talk to the old so much. It is the young people who need us. It would pay you all to say next Sunday: 'For three months now I am going to preach to the Sunday school and the younger members of the congregation.' We talk, as a rule, to the cream of our congregation and forget that the average man is like a child.

"Third, we need to preach the truths of applied doctrine. For instance, the doctrine of ownership of property by God. That doctrine has not been preached for the last twenty-five years. The bulk of the business men have not gotten hold of the great truth that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof. They usually say the earth is the Lord's, except my corner lot, and that is mine. We ought to preach to our people that everything of the earth belongs to God. If we take a man in everyday life and teach this doctrine for ten or fifteen years we will find that we will have an easier time to get money for our charities. Men will regard their wealth as consecrated and themselves as merely stewards.

"Fourth, we should break down sectarian boundaries. We can assist the great principle of unification. I do not think, however, it is desirable to work toward unity of creed but unity of service."

The only thing to which we take exception in these valuable suggestions is that we have reached a point where there is no longer such a great need of preaching. We believe that the very opposite is true. Never was there a time when there was such a crying need for gospel preaching. It is true that our ordinary congregations of staid and respectable worshippers are surfeited with preaching; but preaching as a means—yea, as the divinely-appointed means of securing the world's redemption is sadly in abeyance. Almost everything else is being tried. The Church must move out from her entrenchments; she must regain her faith in the Gospel as the power of God unto salvation; by the foolishness of preaching she is to demonstrate the inherent power of the Gospel of Christ to accomplish its God-given mission of saving the world.

CHICAGO NOTES.

Joseph Hocking, the English novelist, quotes with unconcealed disgust the remark of a friend, "I wouldn't care a fig to see Rome, but wouldn't I like to see Chicago!" It is largely a choice between seeing a thing that is made, and a thing that is in the making.

Professor McClintock of the Chicago University, speaking recently before the Englewood Woman's Club, emphasized the place of play in the education of a child. Free, spontaneous play that will develop the child's faculties is what is needed. At present the city children have little more than the street to play in. The providing of playgrounds in the crowded districts of the city would develop better health and better morals.

The co-operative dining room which was established in Longwood, one of Chicago's suburbs, a year ago, has proved so successful that the idea is being adopted elsewhere. The families who compose the club sit at their own tables, use their own silverware, but are spared all the drudgery of cooking, and save in money besides. The club is talking of establishing a co-operative laundry. Those who have watched this experiment are of the opinion that it is one way out of the servant girl difficulty.

A movement is on foot in the Roman Catholic parishes of Chicago, and throughout the state, to organize labor unions along the lines indicated in the Pope's encyclical letters on the labor question. Mass meetings are to be held in each parish to foster the movement. In other churches a like interest in the labor question is being manifested. The general convention of the Episcopal church at San Francisco and the national council of the Congregational church at Portland, Me., both appointed commissioners to mediate between employers and employes in labor disputes.

An amusing blunder has been made by the London Evening News. It pays us its compliments in this fashion:

"In Chicago even the masterpiece of literature is not sacred. Twenty misguided inhabitants have just issued a translation of the New Testament into modern American. Such an atrocity almost makes one sigh for a few hours of the Inquisition."

The Evening News evidently refers to the Twentieth Century New Testament, the third part of which has just been issued by the Fleming H. Revell Co. Now, that is an English production. The twenty misguided men who have attempted to render the New Testament into modern or colloquial English all belong to the tight little island of Great Britain. And by the way, they have done their work remarkably well. Occasionally there is a "colloquialism" which makes the chills run down one's spinal column, but as a rule the sacred record is made more real, more interesting, and more luminous.

CONTRIBUTED

LETTERS TO THE BOOK-LOVER.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING'S "KIM."

MY DEAR Friend: Few booklovers of to-day are not interested in the striking and original quality of Mr. Rudyard Kipling, and those who have taken any interest in him know something of his remarkable career. Familiar with India from childhood and drawn into the life of an Indian journalist while yet a youth, he gained an unusual command of the vast and mysterious subject which we simply call "India." He first made his mark by sketches in prose and verse, which were published in India, and which deal mainly with the life and spirit, the weakness and the goodness of the British soldier, and of the British civilian in India. These sketches and ditties are well known to all readers of Mr. Kipling. They show his remarkable command of language, his dramatic power of speaking the thought of other minds in their own manner, and that quality which is an evidence of the highest literary genius, of direct descriptive speech which startles one with its vividness and impresses one with its truth. Much of his early as much of his later work would induce one to say that the main characteristic of Mr. Rudyard Kipling must be called his energy. It is this energy of the man which seizes the fact as it is, which covers it with exactly the appropriate word, which throws it with swift and sure aim right into the seat of vision and of feeling in his reader's mind.

When Mr. Kipling passed from these lighter things to his Jungle Books, he did for India a little of what Scott has done for Scotland, or Thomas Hardy for southwestern England. In his wonderful idealization of the boy brought up from infancy to live among the wolves, we have at once an effort of real genius, clothing itself in a fascinating form out of a rich and abundant knowledge of both human and animal nature. In these sketches one is made to live in a most absorbing way, right in the heart of that interesting realm. One has lessons in psychology, in morals, in sociology, as well as in zoology and several other 'ologies, all woven together as by a master hand. There is humor and pathos, those two essentials of all the noblest literature; there is earnestness and simplicity, neither of which can be either beautiful or strong without the other.

Then Mr. Kipling took to other fields and pastures new. He wrote abundant verse, not all of which can be called poetry, and various stories, all of which manifest power, in the sense of what we have called energy, but which too often lacked the grace and sweetness and the goodness which teach us to love the author, and above all to love mankind. Then came a brief spasm of decadence, when Mr. Kipling hurried to Africa and made himself one of the scouts of Imperialism, and a somewhat too blatant and inconsiderate writer of war sketches and war poems.

One must not forget that it was before this dip in his career that he produced his noble hymn, "Lest we forget." Few words of modern times have been spoken with a prophet's promptitude and a prophet's passion, as were the words of this poem. They rang out over the British Empire, and over the whole world, with a solemn thunder, succeeding the blare of trumpets and the music of admiring love which followed the celebrations of Queen Victoria's sixtieth year of queenship. Many of us who believe in the Old Empire and love it, have for two years felt as though the sad and insistent refrain, "Lest we forget," was a veritable word of the living God.

And now Mr. Kipling has returned to his own appropriate field. "Kim" takes his hand and leads him and us, grateful and glad, to India. It is, I take courage to say, Mr. Kipling's greatest work, and one which, along with the Jungle Books and his Jubilee Hymn, has most chance of putting him among the immortals.

"Kim" himself holds us entranced from the first page to the last. A child of an Irish soldier and his English wife, who is left an orphan to grow up a waif and stray in the city of Lahore, he masters the vernacular and grows up in intimate acquaintance with the spirit and the ways of the Indian people. Free from malice and rejoicing in mischief; free from the worst evils, and acquainted with all; free from religious training, yet filled with deepest religious instincts; free from the restrictions of a strict upbringing, yet naturally courteous, affectionate and loyal; Kim lives before us through several years of his life, his heart opened to our view, so that we follow him as if he were a brother or a child of our own, the object of a tender solicitude and love. When he meets a mystic Buddhist, a "lama," who has traveled all the way from Thibet in search of a great religious blessing, he is at once struck with the difference between this "priest," as he calls him, and all others of that shameless brood, with whose pretentious self-complaisance and open greed he had long been familiar. This man is indeed earnest about the worship of his great Lord, the Buddha, and the discovery of the final secret of his religion, the spring of water that will wash away a man's sins. Right through the book, with marvelous reserve and skill, Mr. Kipling carries us in deepest sympathy with this man's search for the supreme good. With rare insight and yet without comment, he shows us how this man lives, on the one hand desiring and hoping and endeavoring to heap up merit by all good deeds of sacrifice, and on the other hungering and thirsting for that experience which is nothing less than the forgiveness of sins. It is the inevitable failure, not only of his heart but of all non-Christian religions, by which he is unable to see that until there is a denial of merit there can be no forgiveness of sins, and yet that in the forgiveness of sins alone can there be the beginning of a truly meritorious life.

Mr. Kipling takes these two, the old man and the young boy, through the teeming cities and the wide crowded highways of northern India in their vain, yet attractive search. We seem to live a while personally among those great and motley crowds. The noise of India fills our ears. The sordidness of its masses, the vague content, combined with a spiritual discontent, of its wealthier classes, its leisurely estimate of the value of time, and its solemn insistence upon the value of life and of worship—all this is made real to us as we walk through it, open-eyed and amazed. And then we are taken, led as it were by this little child, into some phases of the relations between the British Government and its vast Empire. We are made to see what good is done and what stupid harm; what mingled admiration and contempt, gratitude and dislike, the people feel for their white rulers. We are taken a little under the surface of things to see a portion here and there of the vast system of intrigue and plotting, of disloyalty, which connects one city with another and state with state, and on the other hand the unwearied and watchful skill with which the rulers of the land, by a great system of spies, keep themselves informed of every hostile intent and plan.

"Kim" is then not only a deep study in human nature, but an absorbing revelation of that portion of the Orient to our western world. Mr. Kipling's style is here seen at its very best. Its energy is almost nowhere grotesque; its wayward coarseness is softened and refined, without losing its vigor; it is direct, and yet chastened and sometimes sweet in its quality. The book is undoubtedly the product of an earnest mind that has faced and dealt with some of the deepest problems in human life. We are thankful to have from one more of the leaders of our contemporary literature a book so profound in its sympathy with man's religious cravings, and with the deepest principles of Christian morality. If the story ends abruptly, leaving us unsatisfied as to what became of "Kim" and making us long to go further with him, either into the "Great Game" or the "Great Search," let us take courage and hope from Mr. Barrie and his "Tommy." And yet let us not forget to fear also, remembering what Mr. Barrie did with Tommy, and through him with the hearts of us all.

Yours faithfully,

A. BOOKMAN.

"THE INFLUENCE OF MATTHEW ARNOLD ON MODERN THOUGHT."

REV. W. AYLMEYER-STARK.

ATHER more than thirteen years have come and gone since there passed into the silent land one of the outstanding intellectual figures of the nineteenth century. I refer to Matthew Arnold, poet, critic, essayist, likewise prophet and inventor of a new religion, which he fondly imagined to be identical with that of the Author of Christianity. The brilliant writer of "Literature and Dogma" played many parts in his time, and that he succeeded well in most of them is proved by the place which he occupies to-day in the world of letters, and especially in the province of literary criticism. An assailant of orthodox theology more philosophical than Rénan, more informed with a broad culture than Comte or even Huxley, more constructive than the creed-breakers of Tübingen, a critic who himself defied criticism, in style at any rate if not in ideas, a poet whose vogue is ever increasing and whose particular niche in the Temple of Fame is only a little lower than the topmost pinnacle, Matthew Arnold stands before us to-day as vividly and picturesquely as in the old days, when he played battledore with Moses and the Apostle Paul, and gravely admonished a frivolous world for departing from the simple teaching of Jesus.

Perhaps one of the reasons why Arnold fascinates us so much lies in his invincible superiority or, at least, assumption of it. His persistent habit of treating the rest of the nation as children, and himself as parental adviser on things mundane and spiritual, gave to his personality a piquancy which might well be called by another name in another man less gifted, and with less solid and substantial attainments. For the prince of critics was nothing if not the superior person. As R. H. Hutton remarks with a slight suspicion of irony—"Mr. Arnold is a master of the grand style. He has the port of a great teacher." He possessed indeed an unusually large share of that serene self-confidence which the atmosphere of Oxford University seems to produce in so many of its alumni—a thinly-veiled contempt for middle-class people, dissenters, "bourgeois," and Philistines, under which mildly insolent term Matthew Arnold evidently includes all who have the temerity to ignore his own particular brand of culture. The author of "Essays in Criticism" firmly believed in the soundness of his own judgments, so firmly indeed that towards the end of his life he clothed himself with the mantle of infallibility, and fondly imagined himself sitting in the seat of the dethroned doctors of Christendom. It was a pretty spectacle, but perhaps the world, which secretly worships impertinence, liked Arnold none the worse for it.

A very fair test of a writer's popularity, or at any rate of the degree in which he has impressed the popular imagination, lies in the number of his phrases that have become current coin of the realm. There is hardly a line in Hamlet, for instance, or Locksley Hall that has not become a quotation for the man in the street. Now, Matthew Arnold had a distinct genius for inventing such phrases and for reiterating them over and over again with a cumulative complacency, until it would be a task of considerable difficulty to forget them. I need hardly mention such familiar catchwords as "sweetness and light" (a phrase borrowed, by the way, from Dean Swift), the "secret of Jesus," "Hebraism and Hellenism," "dissidence of dissent," "conduct is three-fourths of life," and many another. There is no author more guilty of plagiarism than Arnold, but when he steals he does so with the most charming effrontery from a preceding paragraph, chapter, or volume of his own composition, which thus becomes invested with all the inerrancy of a sacred canon.

As regards Arnold's influence on modern theological opinion, one can but say that in the general disintegration of theology which has been and still is taking place, his writings have materially helped. Not, indeed, that the religion of "Literature and Dogma" can ever be considered synonymous with that of the Nazarene Jesus, or that the former can ever adequately satisfy the religious cravings of the race. He has reduced religion to "morality touched with emotion," but, as has often been pointed out, he has taken away from us those objects which alone are capable of producing such an emotion. He tells us that when the poor Hebrew in his extremity called upon his God he was really thinking of a "stream of tendency that makes for righteousness." It is quite obvious, however, that such an abstract idea could never have entered the poor Hebrew's cranium, which was built to hold the concrete, and the concrete only. It is likewise quite obvious that Christian people as a rule have no burning enthusiasm for such cheerless deities as "streams of tendency." They will not light a single candle on such an altar, nor will they spend a single penny in propagating such a nebulous faith. Nor will Arnold's description of the doctrine of immortality as "Aberglaube," as an excess of belief or superstition, make his new religion any the more palatable to the mass of the people who, we take it, identify religion with a definite personal future life, and not with a mere shadowy existence "somewhere in the vast sounding house of labor."

And yet, on the other hand, Arnold's influence on modern theology—not that of the schools, perhaps, but that of the lay mind—has been in some respects salutary. It has certainly been deep-reaching. For one thing he has helped to promote that impatience, so characteristic of these days, with mysticism—at least where mysticism takes the place of conduct and life. He has destroyed a great many venerable and high-sounding theological shibboleths, and clerical reactionaries of every creed and discipline have cause to remember his irony, which has eaten like an acid into their hardened formularies. Such performances, although fraught with grave danger, have been somewhat refreshing to a world weary of the hair-splittings and logic-choppings, and insufferable pedantries of those who have turned religion from a thing of practical life into a thing of mere scholastic metaphysics. Then, again, by tilting (rather presumptuously, it must be admitted) at the paramount importance of St. Paul, he has emphasized the extreme significance of the actual sayings and teachings of Jesus, and has thus helped to promote that "Return to Christ" of which we hear ad nauseam to-day. In quite other religions the same phenomenon has appeared where devout but dreary disciples, fond overmuch of ratiocination, have neglected the simple gospel of their Founder and have muddled their heads with the involved and systematized disquisitions of the scribes and schools. The true Protestant surely is he who protests not merely against palpable errors and corruptions, but against this radical and impious error of substituting the theology of a disciple for the religion of a master. In this sense Matthew Arnold was a Protestant of the first water.

It will thus be seen that Arnold has enunciated several of the fundamental propositions of recent German theology, including Ritschl—that lately discovered star in a somewhat murky firmament, towards which theologians, in various stages of emancipation, are craning their necks—with a charm and imaginative vigor which is none too common in the dogmatic treatises of the Fatherland. The paramount importance of the ideal, the moral, the spiritual, the eternal, over the historical and transitory garments in which the ideal clothes itself from time to time—that is the witness and testimony of Matthew Arnold to the world. And that, too, is substantially the faith of all the great literary figures of the nineteenth century, who combine reverence with genius. It is an intelligible gospel, although it is not altogether the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ!

When we come to consider Arnold's influence on modern literary criticism, we are entering another territory altogether. But we stand upon surer ground. In the opinion of many Arnold is the greatest literary critic of the age. We may notice how in almost every journal of repute his obiter dicta are accepted as axiomatic. He has had a host of imitators, most of whom have caught his mannerisms and air of complacent superiority, but little else. He has introduced us to Sainte-Beuve and Senancour, and many another (before unknown) of the great French stylists and thinkers, and for that we cannot be sufficiently grateful. He has burst many bubbles, exploded many fallacies, and pierced many inflated literary reputations. He has created many new ones, which will be pierced in their turn! But on the whole his influence in a relaxed and sentimental age has been tonic and astringent. We are all the better for that austere figure, who, through his pages, still keeps beckoning us to perfection, and urging us to give up our "all too human creeds and scan simply the way divine."

INDIA LETTER.

GEO. W. BROWN.

INDIA is a land full of surprises. Before we left America for here, we had no idea that long railway journeys could be made in this country with as much comfort as is really possible. There are in all India about 24,000 miles of railway, of various gauges it is true, but most of it wider than in the United States. The railways, the cars, and their management, are patterned after the English system, of course, not the American.

The first thing which appeals to one on seeing an Indian railway is the size of the cars. But if the traveler has passed through England on his way, he has been prepared somewhat for it. The freight cars resemble large Saratoga trunks in their shape and size. Each one is mounted on four wheels, and their ordinary capacity is nine or ten tons, though I have seen some monster cars capable of carrying sixteen tons. But these vehicles are not dignified by the name of "cars"; they are "waggons," with two g's in the word. Passenger cars are "carriages." These names are perhaps more appropriate to the size.

According to the condition of one's pocketbook he may travel first class, second class, intermediate, or third, but the rates are all cheaper than in the United States, varying from two or three cents a mile to less than one-half cent. Government officials, many tourists, and all of aristocratic ideas travel first class. Missionaries, unless making a short journey, when they go in a lower class, usually go second class, paying half first class rates, that is, from one cent to one and one-half cents a mile. There is not much difference between first and second class. The cars are divided into compartments or pens about eight feet long and as wide as the cars, each compartment opening into a small bath room. In the second class compartment there are usually three lower berths, one on each side of the car and one in the center, and two upper ones. The first class does not have the center berth, and the berths are a little wider. The whole compartment is more roomy. The intermediate and third class carriages are divided into compartments by benches running crosswise of the car, two benches, facing each other, being in each compartment. Intermediate carriages are to third class what first class carriages are to second. Into these lower class carriages the howling natives are packed like sardines, each one loaded down with his individual bundles, smells and microbes. In the hot season it is no uncommon thing for some of them to die in their stuffy compartments, which, however, are open on all sides so as to be well ventilated.

On making the journey from Landour to the plains, the first seven miles, the descent of the mountain, is made on horseback, on foot, or in a dandy. The last is a boat-shaped contrivance with a skeleton frame covered by oil cloth, the whole thing being carried on the shoulders of four men. Two extra coolies go along as relays. At the end of seven miles we have descended about 4,500 to 5,000 feet. Here we get into an antediluvian-looking carriage driven by a most villainous Jehu and go seven miles farther to Dehra, the railway station.

The first essential to comfortable railway travel in India is to know the whole system of railway management. After you start you can get very little knowledge of the journey except such as comes by experience. First comes the important matter of getting a ticket. Not less than half an hour should be allowed for this work. In fact, an enterprising ticket broker in Chicago could sell you a ticket from his city to Harda, for ocean passage and all, in about the same length of time it takes the Dehra clerk to provide you with your necessary pasteboards. Then your heavy baggage is weighed up and charged for, and you receive a receipt for the same. Here the railway system is better than England's, for one does not have to get off at every station and see that his packages are coming on all right, nor does he have to join in a mad scramble with the other passengers at his journey's end to prevent some one from walking off with his belongings. When these matters have been attended to, you proceed to get into the car. If you are wise, you have written two or three days beforehand to reserve accommodation for you. First you take in your roll of bedding. A traveler no more goes without his bedding any place in India than without his shoes in America. Then your small steel trunk, a hand satchel or two, your lunch basket, a porous earthenware vessel of water, a basket of fruit for use when you get to your station, where nothing of the kind is procurable, and various other articles that you are taking along. After you have embarked, perhaps a ticket collector comes along and looks at your ticket. Then a man comes along and inquires whether you will have dinner at some station you will reach about 9 p. m. The guard saunters by in his white uniform crossed with a huge black leather strap. He is the manager of the train; a combined conductor - expressman - baggagemaster-brakeman.

The iron gates at the third-class waiting room (or waiting ground) hem in a surging mob of natives. A clerk comes and undoes the lock and the mob makes a wild rush for their pens in the train, and after several minutes of climbing over each other succeed in finding places. Presently the train starts and you begin to survey your own pen. If only two or three personal friends share it with you your prospects are good for a pleasant journey. But if the compartment is not full some native baboo in government employ or some fat maharaja may come in, and after making the place reek with his garlic breath, modify the odor with his vile cigarette or still viler hookah, as he carefully gathers his feet up for a comfortable squat on the cushions. You cannot communicate with any one else on the train, —not even the guard—except by punching a thing in the roof of the car, when the train will stop.

When night comes you get out your roll of bedding and spread it out on your narrow shelf, gathering it up again in the morning. One of the missionaries has suggested that each candidate for the foreign field be compelled to take a course as porter in a Pullman car before he comes to India. Next day your food supply will be eaten or spoiled, and you must order a meal from the railway eating house. You go in to a table adorned with not less than three long rows of bottles, filled with several varieties of beer, brandy, wine, whisky and other poisons. There is no food in sight, but it will come. If a man were to shut his eyes while eating he might easily believe that the chief article of food was pepper, mixed a little with several kinds of tasteless dilutants, which, upon observation, would be found to be rice, curry, meat, potatoes and several unknown vegetables. If you ask for water to drink you will be looked upon as a monstrosity in male attire. The table servants are adepts in the old trick of not letting you get fairly started until it is about train time. Later on your water supply gives out. Now you have your choice of several things. You can drink the water you get along the road, supposed to be filled with cholera, typhoid and other choice germs; you can get a cup of tea at almost any station; or you can get a bottle of soda water or lemonade (made of acids and innocent of fruit juice), supposed to be made of filtered water. Not liking tea, and not desiring to imbibe any microbes, you try a bottle of lemonade, receiving with it a piece of ice the size of a thimble, that you may cool the liquid to drinking temperature.

If you are lucky enough to be on the watch, you will know your station and get off at it. If not you may ride a hundred miles farther along. Perhaps a ticket collector will come up and ask for your ticket, and perhaps he will not. If you should get off on the wrong side of the train he never would bother you about it. Such is travel in India, and in many ways it is better adapted to the country than our American system would be.

Harda, India.

PLEASANTRIES.

"You are from the country, are you not, sir?" said a dandy young bookseller to a homely-dressed Quaker who had given him some trouble. "Yes." "Here's an essay on the rearing of calves." "That," said Aminabad, as he turned to leave the shop, "thee had better present to thy mother."

A Welsh editor had misspelled the name of a famous poet of Wales. "Why do you spell Llywarch Hen's name Llwyarch?" asked a friend of the editor. "Why, does he object?" asked the editor. "Object!" echoed the other; "Why, he has been dead 1,200 years." "Oh, then, I don't care a toss," said the editor.

"I want," she said, "to buy a book for a friend of mine for Christmas. What would you advise me to get?" "Well," he answered, "it depends upon what your friend is and does. If he is a married man who has to look after the furnace himself you might give him 'Humphry Clinker.' Or if she is a lady who is troubled over the servant question, give her 'Self Help.' In case your friend is constructed after the Russell Sage plan send around 'To Have and to Hold.' 'Within the Gates' would be an appropriate book to present to a friend at Joliet or Sing Sing. To the father of noisy triplets I have no doubt that 'The Heavenly Twins' would be a welcome relief, and for one who is waiting for a dead man's shoes 'Put Yourself in His Place' would be an appropriate gift. 'Ships That Pass in the Night' would be a nice book to give to the wife of a commuter who has to get up about four o'clock in order to reach his place of business during the forenoon."

BOOK REVIEWS.

A Real Queen's Fairy Tales, by Carmen Sylva, Queen of Roumania. Translated by Miss Edith Hopkirk. Illustrated by Harold Nelson and A. Garth Jones. Davis and Company, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

This is one of the choice gift-books of the season. To find a copyrighted book of the Queen of Roumania emanating from a Chicago publishing house is something of a surprise. The young firm of Davis & Company are to be congratulated upon securing such a literary treasure. They have evidently given to the making of the book loving, painstaking care. The illustrations are quaint and striking and the letter press is clear and grateful to the eye.

CARMEN SYLVA, (QUEEN ELIZABETH OF ROUMANIA).

Some books are impersonal. They seem to have been written in a mood of detachment, and hence reveal but little of the author. The writings of Carmen Sylva are intensely personal, they are part of herself, and an interesting autobiography could be constructed from them. In this book we have a reflection of the queen's pure, simple and romantic child-life. These fairy tales, which are so charmingly told, could have been written only by one who had lived in fairyland.

The queen takes us into her confidence and tells us of her free life in girlhood, as she roamed through the forest that surrounded her home on the Rhine. She says, "The storm-wind was a special friend of mine. When it made the oaks and the beeches sway and groan, sawing the branches asunder till they came crashing down, then I would tie my little hood over my brown hair, and with my two big St. Bernard dogs by my side, I would race through the forest, avoiding all the beaten tracks, and listen to its voices; for the forest told me stories all the time. The forest sang the songs to me, which I wrote down afterward at home, but which I never showed to any one. It was our secret—the woods' and mine. We kept it to ourselves. No one else knew the songs we sang together, we two, for no one else would understand them as we did." It is said in the introduction that "at nine she composed verses; at eleven she attempted to write a novel; at fourteen she composed dramas and acted them with the aid of her companions and dolls; at fifteen she studied three newspapers daily, and took a keen interest in politics; at eighteen she had the reputation of being the best educated princess in Europe."

Literary work has been to Carmen Sylva as natural as breathing. It was the way in which she instinctively expressed herself. In it she must have found much solace amid the cares of state, which she has shared with her royal husband for thirty years. As a writer her style is clear as a mountain stream. The predominant notes are love of nature and love of humankind. This volume of fairy tales is issued simultaneously in eight different languages. It will doubtless have, as it deserves to have, a wide circulation.

"A Lily of France," by Caroline Atwater Mason. American Baptist Publication Society.

The period chosen by Mrs. Mason for her historical romance is one of the most interesting and important in history. The character which is the central figure in this romance is one of the purest and most worthy which ever grew on the soil of France. The period includes the struggle for civil and religious liberty in the Netherlands and the character is Charlotte of Bourbon, the second wife of William the Silent. Mrs. Mason has an unusual faculty of bringing out the fundamental problems which confront the Church today. In "A Wind Flower" she made a strong plea for Christian unity. In "A Lily of France" she pleads for the authority of the Bible and the liberty of conscience. Many very important historical characters are grouped around the central figure, Charlotte of Bourbon. One is Catherine de Medici, whose cold, cruel plotting brought on the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Another is Queen Elizabeth of England, whose scheming leads the author of the romance to say: "The ineffaceable blot on the pages of history which the next fortnight was to bring was not, however, the work of one woman of wicked will alone. The underlying shame of it (the massacre of St. Bartholomew) must rest also upon the duplicity, the double-dealing, the cowardly shiftiness of another woman, the Protestant Queen of England." The most important character in this historical romance, which is not surpassed by any of Scott's novels, next to Charlotte of Bourbon, is her husband, the Prince of Orange, William the Silent. Philip of Spain, the Duke of Alva—the bloody butcher, Henry III. of France, Charles IX., the Huguenot leaders—Admiral Coligny and Conde, Louis of Nassau, Sir Philip Sidney and Mary, Queen of Scots, are lesser characters in the plot of the romance. Mrs. Mason deserves much credit for her careful study of the historical situation which led to the liberation of Leyden after one of the epoch-making sieges in history. The courage and determination of the Protestants is strongly portrayed in the characters of the Queen of Navarre and Count Louis of Nassau, both of whom lost their lives in the struggle for religious liberty. Norbert Tontorf, whose noble father was butchered for printing Bibles, is a fine type of the sturdy, noble Dutch character. Notwithstanding the wealth of historical information woven around the central figure, "A Lily of France" is intensely interesting as a romance and will certainly have a permanent place among the great historical novels. It should be in every Christian home.

COPYRIGHT, 1901, BY FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY.

NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS

The Right of Way, by Gilbert Parker. Illustrated by A. I. Reller. Harper and Brothers, New York.

The three things about this novel which impress one most at first are its strength, its tenderness and its dramatic interest. It is neither a pleasant nor a satisfactory story, yet it throws over its readers a spell of enchantment which holds them to the end. The psychological problem which it presents is an interesting one; but the solution of the problem is faulty inasmuch as it involves a moral change for which no adequate cause is assigned. The plot of the story is in substance this: A young lawyer, cold, cynical, passionless and skeptical, finds that his sympathies are awakened and his powers of intellect and oratory quickened by the use of stimulants. He falls a victim to the liquor habit. In a murder trial he succeeds in overpowering the judgment of the jury, and in securing acquittal of a man whom he afterward charged to his face with being as guilty as hell. By this brilliant display of forensic power he wins the hand, if not the heart, of a young woman like-minded with himself. In their loveless wedded life he seeks solace in the bottle. With affection stifled and ambition dead, his life is an aimless one. Yet gleams of his better nature appear. He allows himself to become the scapegoat for an offense committed by his wife's brother. In a drunken brawl he is struck on the head and cast into the river. His friends give him up for dead, but he is rescued by the man whom he had saved from the gallows. As the result of his wound memory is blotted out. For six months he lives a simple, innocent, animal existence, when, by a skillful operation, he is restored to consciousness. He is born again physically and morally; and begins a new life in a remote French-Canadian hamlet. We cannot, however, follow the story through all the intricacies of its plot. Incident is piled upon incident; one startling episode follows another in rapid succession. There is abundance of power, but the whole thing is too stagey. Here and there it descends to the melodramatic. But with all its faults, it is a virile story. Its description of life in a French-Canadian Catholic community is remarkably well done. The lights and shadows of that quaint and simple peasant life are put upon the canvas with a sure hand. The book has already taken a foremost place among the popular books of the season.

COPYRIGHT, 1901, BY FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY
RALPH CONNOR (CHARLES W. GORDON.)

Winsome Womanhood, by Margaret E. Sangster. Illustrated. Fleming H. Revell Co. Price, $2.50, net.

Mrs. Sangster is one in whom the mother-nature is so strong that she establishes at once a bond of sympathy between herself and her girl readers. She draws them to her, breaks down all barriers of reserve and speaks to them heart to heart. She also speaks with a judgment that commands the respect of those who are of riper years. In her "foreword" she defines the object of her book. She says that it was "written for women, with a wish and hope that it may prove suggestive and helpful to the girl in her teens who faces so many problems and stands before an unknown future, to the older woman bearing the responsibilities of middle life, and to her whose outlook is toward the setting sun."

The thirty-two chapters which comprise this book are divided into four parts; namely, Day Break; High Noon; Eventide, and the Rounded Life. The first part begins with "The Girl of Fifteen"; the last part closes with "Waiting for the Angels." The common things of which life is largely made up are touched upon with rare good sense. The style of the book is as clear and limpid as the thought. And through all there is the fragrance of a sweet and lofty Christian sentiment. Perhaps it is just a little too preachy at times; but it is done in such a winning way that it is hardly possible to take offense at it.

The Revell house have put out some handsome books this year, but this one excels them all. It reaches high-water mark in the printer's art. The illustrations are sketches from life, and every page is decorated with artistic designs whose delicate colors charm the eye without detracting attention from the text. Happy the woman who at this Christmastide receives as a love gift this beautiful book.

COPYRIGHT, 1901, by FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY
From "DEBORAH," by DR. LUDLOW

The Making of an American, by Jacob A. Riis, with numerous illustrations. The Macmillan Co., New York. Price, $2.00, net.

The title of this sumptuous book is a happy one, but it might just as appropriately have read "The Making of a Man." The book itself contains the record of the struggles of a heroic human soul, fighting against great odds, and cutting his way to honorable manhood. But there is this to be said, the stuff was there out of which strong character can be made. The elemental force which comes from good heredity was in this young Dane. His energy was something tremendous. When obstacles were encountered something had to give way, and it was never Jacob Riis. He showed clear grit. He was what the ancients called a four-square man. It did not matter how high fortune might toss him into the air, he always came down on a solid base.

Every man is interesting to himself, but every man does not confess it. Jacob Riis does. He has all the frankness of a boy. He objectifies himself, and speaks of himself as one whom he knows and can criticize impartially; praising his virtues, condemning his mistakes and failures, and laughing at his foibles and follies. It is this ability to laugh at himself that is the most characteristic thing in the story. There are many who can smile at their misfortunes, but there are few who can laugh at themselves.

The style of the book is like the man himself, natural and picturesque, full of dash and daring. The author often runs along the edge of the precipice of propriety, but never once does he lose his balance and topple over. The poise of the book and the poise of the man are alike remarkable. The interest centers in the humanitarian work to which Jacob Riis was led in following his duties as a newspaper reporter. Largely through his untiring effort Mulberry bend, one of the plague spots of the city of New York, was wiped out, and parks and playgrounds for the poor were secured. It was this work which led President Roosevelt to speak of Mr. Riis as the most useful citizen in New York.

This book will serve two important ends—it will show how rapid is the transformation by which a raw foreigner can be changed into a loyal and patriotic citizen, and it will afford an example to young men of a clean and true life lived in the midst of the constant strain of temptation. It is a book whose influence for good will be wide and enduring.

Stories of the Colleges, being tales of life at the great American universities, told by noted graduates. J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia. Price, $1.20 net.

This is not a history of American colleges, but is a series of breezy stories hitting off some of the characteristics of American college life. The stories are from the pens of alumni who have gained distinction in the world of letters. They are written in a healthy, rollicking spirit, with fine insight into character, and with not a little of the saving grace of good-natured humor. The experiences and reminiscences which they record throw a flood of light upon the inner workings of college life. They give a succession of kodak pictures taken when those concerned were in a condition of undress. They will be read with delight by old college graduates, who will laugh with moistened eyes as they look back upon their callow days, and by young people who are looking wistfully forward to their entrance upon college.

The nine colleges connected with these stories are Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Pennsylvania, Columbia, West Point, Annapolis, Cornell and Chicago. This arrangement follows the order of the dates of the charters of these colleges; and the list may be regarded as fairly representative. The general impression which these sketches produce is that our American college life is in a healthy condition; and that its influence in the formation of character is on the side of what is pure and manly and good.

The Romance of Religion, by Olive Vivian and Herbert Vivian, M. A. Illustrated. Longmans, Green, New York. Pp. 304. Price, $1.50.

The articles which are gathered in this volume have appeared elsewhere in such magazines as The Wide World, Pearson's, The Royal, The Saturday Review, The Daily Graphic, etc., but it is an interesting collection which one is now able to hold in his hand at one time, giving as it does some of the curious ceremonies which connect themselves with religious sentiment. The reader wanders with these authors among strange people in far corners of the world. Those religious customs which are usually passed by in the hurried life of most of us as mere superstitions, worthless and degrading, are here searched out with a certain passion of discovery which is supplemented with a deep desire to know why a given custom has taken root on a given soil and is made the vehicle of religious sentiment. The curious customs of Spain, Italy, parts of Germany, Servia, Bulgaria, Ethiopia and Turkey are given in such detail as to show a painstaking and careful observation in many parts of the world. The curative use of images, the religious and commemorative dances of some religious orders, the curious custom of wearing masks in Tuscan processions commemorating religious events; the manners and mysteries of life in certain European nunneries; the vows of perpetual silence and perpetual adoration taken in some religious orders; Holy Week customs in different countries; passion plays; monastic retreats and their treasures, are some of the many themes discussed in this somewhat rambling, but unusually interesting, volume. Many of the themes are illustrated with excellent photographs, apparently taken by the travelers themselves, whose individual work evidently supplemented each that of the other, as one was able to see that side of various religious establishments to which the other could not obtain admission.

The Soul of a Cat and Other Stories, by Margaret Benson, with illustrations by Henriette Ronner and from photographs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

The soul of a cat! "Have cats souls?" some one may be ready to ask. This book on canine psychology does not go into the vexed question of instinct versus reason; but it does afford abundance of material for the assumption that cats have a fair supply of intelligence, and many human qualities besides. Of course there are cats and cats, just as there are men and men, and the cats who are immortalized in these pages are among the elect of their kind. In reading some of these bright sketches we can sympathize with the remark of the famous woman who said, "The more I know men, the better I like dogs."

These animal stories, while dealing mainly with cats, include also sketches of a dog, a pair of parrots, a peacock, and a barn door fowl. Of one of the parrots it is said, "Joey has a heart. It is not a very admirable heart. Its fickleness is beyond description: he hates more hotly than he loves; but the heart is there." This is a mere suggestion of the racy quality of the book. Its sympathy with all forms of animal life, and its power to interpret them to others make it a valuable book to put into the hands of children.

Little Men, Life at Plumfield with Jo's Boys, by Louisa M. Alcott. Little, Brown & Co. Boston.

It is not too much to say that Louisa M. Alcott's "Little Women" and "Little Men" must be reckoned among the classics of child life. Every reader remembers their first coming into his or her home, and the pure unmitigated delight which their sunny purity, vigor and kindness yield at every page. They must be placed along with "Tom Brown's School Days" among the books that are likely to live and to carry their message and blessing to many generations of happy boys and girls. This single volume edition of "Little Men" ought to receive a warm welcome. The illustrations of Mr. Reginald B. Birch are not many but good, and come in at interesting crises of the story. The whole get-up of the book is artistic and the printing clear and pleasant to the eye.

Unto You, Young Women, by Archdeacon William Sinclair. Lippincott & Co. Philadelphia.

Dr. Sinclair, the archdeacon of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, has sent out an exceedingly interesting book of addresses. He is well known for his broad and healthy outlook upon life, combined with his earnest devotion to the Christian Gospel. These qualities appear harmonized and made effective in the teachings of this book. Volumes for young men are very numerous, but those which deal with the specific problems of young womanhood are much less frequently met. This volume will therefore come as a welcome means of instruction and encouragement to many of the better educated young women of our day. It is indeed to the more intelligent that Dr. Sinclair speaks. He discusses such subjects as unbelief, Christianity's gift to women, modesty, the Golden Rule, cheerfulness, grumbling, novels, plays, gossip and gambling. On these and other subjects of a practical and religious nature, the archdeacon speaks in an easy yet striking and earnest manner. He has abundant references, for purposes of illustration, to history and literature, and on every topic speaks both kindly and pointedly.

Gallopoff, the Talking Pony, by Tudor Jenks. Illustrated. Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia. Pp. 243. Price, $1.00.

One of the burning questions of the time is the proper reading for the little folks, and anything which serves the double purpose of really interesting them, and at the same time teaching helpful and inspiring lessons of kindness, is worth while. The book named above is just the sort one would wish to have for an evening's or even an hour's companionship with the children. It serves all the admirable purposes of a fairy story, with very much more of reality than fairy stories usually have. It is, indeed, the experience of a pony who, though he is not able to talk, at least can teach some very useful lessons. Among the books which every child should have, such as "Grimm's Fairy Tales," "Tom Brown," "Alice in Wonderland," the Rollo books, "Black Beauty" and the rest, this one may well have a place.

Reynard the Fox, pictured by J. J. Moro. Dana, Estes & Co., Boston.

This handsome book of nearly two hundred pages will be welcomed by the young folks at Christmastide. It consists of a translation in rhyme of a well-known German burlesque narrative, which has been familiar in Germany for centuries, and has passed through many editions in its original language. The story is a reflection of social conditions in the period before the Reformation in mid-Europe, and many of its scenes which appear to be concerned only with laughable events among the animals really contain subtle criticisms of human society. Nevertheless, the story element is not destroyed by this underlying motive, and remains in itself an interesting and amusing narrative. The illustrations are very well gotten up and add greatly to the beauty and interest of the book.

The Little Lady—Her Book, by Albert Bigelow Paine, with illustrations by Mabel Humphrey and others. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

One of the greatest discoveries of the modern times has been the discovery of the child. Such books as "Alice in Wonderland" have been the delight of children as well as the study of thoughtful persons who love the child nature. Seldom has any book come to our desk with so many excellencies and with so little to criticise adversely as "The Little Lady—Her Book." The mechanical make-up will produce a good impression on any book-lover. To say nothing of its literary merit, which is excellent, the publishers have made the book a work of art which cannot fail to have a refining influence upon all children—and grown persons alike—who may read its fascinating pages. The beautiful paper, the clear type, the fine illustrations, are not only attractive, but have an artistic value which parents cannot fail to appreciate. While the book is profusely illustrated, such original drawings as "Come and see my store, papa," are of genuine merit. There are nearly fifty of these beautiful illustrations. Besides the tender touches in the book, there are many strong moral lessons in the course of the narrative.

Folly in Fairyland, by Caroline Wells. Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia.

This is a beautifully printed book. It will make an excellent Christmas gift for the children. Little Florinda, who called herself Folly, visits Fairyland in her dreams and becomes acquainted with the characters of many of our familiar stories. She meets "Cinderella at Home," visits "Beauty and the Beast," attends the "Wolf's Party," and goes with "Puss-in-Boots" to see the sleeping beauty. The book makes a wholesome appeal to the imagination of the child.

Bobtailed Dixie, by Abbie N. Smith. The Abbey Press. New York.

Who does not love a household dog, and who can resist Bobtailed Dixie, who comes to know him as Miss Smith helps us to know her dog? He stands before us in one photograph after another, giving us the impression that these chapters are literally true of a certain dog we know of, in a certain family we know, who live in a certain Congregational parsonage. The story of this dog is written with delicate insight, humor, sympathy and skill. We trust that it will have many readers and teach many to have a still deeper sympathy for their own dogs.

Select Sunflowers, by Harry Edward Mills. Sunflower Press. Fort Scott, Kansas.

Here is a little volume of one hundred pages, thick smooth paper, pretty cloth binding, with a sunflower in gold, which brings to us the poetical efforts of a new writer. He must receive a warm welcome from those who read his pages. There is something unusually healthy and bright in his view of life, while at the same time he has a variety of language, vivid insight into both the humor and pathos of life and a good gift of imagination. His best work is as yet done in dialect, and some of his most delightful poems deal with childhood. Mr. Mills has not yet arrived at his full powers, but his work certainly gives hope that he will make contributions of some importance to American poetry. He will forgive us for quoting the following lines entire:

"Grandma Pays the Bill."

Before the busy merchant Stood pretty little Bess.
"I want some cloff for dollie, Enough to make a dwess."

"What color, little lady?"
The pleasant dealer said.
"Why, don't you know?" she answered,
"I want it awful red."

He smiled and cut the fabric
For the delighted little Miss.
"What does it cost?" she questioned.
He answered, "Just one kiss."

And then the clerks who heard her
Went roaring up and down.
"My Dran'ma said she'd pay you Next time she comes to town."

AT THE CHURCH

BIBLE SCHOOL.

THE PASSOVER.

Lesson for Dec. 15, 1901—Ex. 12: 1-17.

Golden Text—Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us. I Cor. 5: 7.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Setting of the Lesson.

THE time of the Exodus is placed in the latter part of March or early in April, B. C. 1491. It is generally believed that Menephtah, son of Rameses II, was the Pharaoh at this time. The first journey was from Rameses to Succoth. Ex. 12:37.

The Deliverance of the Lord.

At last the mightiest nation of antiquity, the nation capable of building the vast pyramids, and endless monuments and tombs, that to this day testify to Egypt's greatness, was to be humbled by One of "mighty hand." Ex. 32:11. The time of the deliverance of the Israelite slaves was one in which the most intense excitement and grief were strangely mingled with joy inexpressible throughout Egypt. Who can picture the gladness on the part of the Israelites as their visions of freedom, so long unfulfilled, were to be realized? In that fateful night, on the other hand, agonizing cries rent the air, as the death blow fell on every home from sea to cataract.

But in these verses, referring to shedding the blood of thousands of lambs, there is a higher lesson than that of a nation's deliverance. The passover sacrifice of that night points to the race's redemption by the blood of Christ. Our Master not only is the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (V. 3; Rev. 13:8), but as shown by our golden text Christ is our Passover.

V. 1, 2. Change of Calendar. "In the land of Egypt." Moses in withdrawing from Pharaoh's presence (Ch. 10:29) doubtless passed into the land of Goshen to carry out the arrangements for delivering his nation. * * * "This month." So momentous is the event that the very order of the year was changed, for Moses appointed that Nisan or Abib (Ch. 13:4), instead of Adar as formerly, should be the first month of the year. This month corresponded to a part each of our March and April. With the coming of God in the person of Jesus the calendar of the world, both civil and religious was changed.

V. 3. All Goshen Stirred. "Speak ye . . . they shall." The word "shall" appears twenty-nine times in this chapter. Before God can deliver, the people must bring their wills in subjection to his. It is a noble spectacle of their faith that when they received this command "the people bowed the head and worshipped." V. 27. * * * "Unto all the congregation." Israel now must have been a nation of some two million people. Moses directed "all the elders" (V. 21), and they would pass on the word to others throughout Goshen. * * * "Tenth day of the month." Four days before the feast. * * * "Take . . . lamb." The most gentle and innocent of all God's creatures was chosen, typical of the Lamb of God. John 1:29. The valuables provided by the Egyptians (Ch. 11:2) would aid the poor slaves in procuring the many victims required. * * * "For a house." For a family or neighborhood circle. All were members of one body, type of the church.

V. 4. Bond of Fellowship. * * * "Let him and his neighbor." This eating together in a great feast of all the people was a covenant of unity among themselves. So of our partaking of the Lord's Supper, commemorating our Passover, "we being many are one bread and body." 1 Cor. 10:7. * * * "Every man according to his eating." The distribution was thus to be planned with prudence and economy, in order that of the multitudes some might not have an excess of the feast and others go without.

V. 5. The Victims. "Lamb without blemish." Had it borne a mark of the slightest deformity or deficiency, it could not fitly represent Jesus. Pet. 1:19. * * * "Of the first year." An animal in its prime, as Jesus offered himself in his prime when he "began to be about thirty years of age." Luke 3:23. * * * "From the sheep or from the goats." As there had been no provision for rearing the vast number of lambs required for this sacrifice, young goats also were allowed. 2 Chr. 35:7.

V. 6. Time for Deliberation. "Ye shall keep it up." As sacred for use four days later. The interval would allow spiritual impressions to be received, as the people conversed and meditated on the unusual event. * * * "The whole assembly." All the people, but not in one place. * * * "Shall kill it in the evening." Afternoon or early eventide, as some time would be required to slay and roast the lambs. Jesus, the Lamb of God, was offered at the time of the Passover feast, for "at the ninth hour" (3 p. m.) he uttered a loud voice and gave up the ghost. Mark 15:34, 37.

V. 7. The Human Element. "Take of the blood." The people were to do such things as they could and God would do what they could not. Blood represents life. Lev. 17:11. It indicates that the ultimate blessing was at the cost of blood. It typifies the blood of Christ, the life, the love, the heart, the whole quality of Deity. * * * "Strike it." The blood was to be applied by a bunch of hyssop twigs. V. 27. Hyssop thus became a symbol of cleansing (Num. 19:18; Ps. 51:7), as the blood itself became an emblem of the atonement made by Christ. 1 Pet. 1:2; Heb. 9:13, 14; 8:10. * * * "On the two side posts." Also above the door, where it might be looked up to, not on the threshold to be trodden under foot. Heb. 10:29.

V. 8-10. Feast of Fellowship. "Shall eat the flesh." To receive and appropriate what God had provided for them. So in the Lord's Supper we are to appropriate him spiritually. Gal. 2:20. * * * "In that night." The lamb was slain before sunset on the 14th and eaten after sunset the evening of the 15th Abib. * * * "Roast with fire." The only proper course in preparing an entire animal. * * * "Unleavened bread." Such bread is spoken of as "the bread of affliction" in Deut. 16:3. In the New Testament unleavened bread represents sincerity and truth (1 Cor. 5:8); leaven, corruption. Mark 8:15. * * * "Bitter herbs." It called to mind the bitterness of their experience in Egypt. * * * "Eat not of it raw." V. 9. It was not to be a barbarous feast, as encouraged by many idolaters. True religion civilizes. * * * "Nor sodden"—that is, nor boiled—for in boiling the water dissipates tissue, flavor and strength, which with all the savor, are retained in roasting. * * * "Head . . . legs . . . purtenance." The entire animal as a perfect symbol of Christ. John 19:33-36. * * * "That which remaineth . . . burn." V. 10. Such parts as were unfit for food; these, with any other that remained, the flames were to consume.

V. 11. In Rea "Loins girded." The loose outer clothing to be turned up and fastened in a girdle. In Christ's service we are to have "our loins girded about with truth." Ep. 6:14. * * * "Shoes on your feet." So the Christian is to have the shoes of readiness, for whatever work the Master leads in. Ep. 6:15. * * * "It is the Lord's Passover." The Lord's Supper of ancient days, as the Christian's memorial feast is the present Lord's Supper. It was a memorial of the Lord's mercy.

V. 12. Pass Through Egypt. "I will pass through." God was to be the direct agency in inflicting this judgment. * * * "All the first born." Objects of Egyptian worship. It included beasts. Every town had its sacred animals, while lower forms of animal life, such as frogs and beetles, were worshiped. Because of sin the lower beasts were to suffer with their masters. How much pain have sin and lack of mercy wrought upon dumb brutes in all ages! Rom. 8:2, Prov. 12:10. * * * "Against all the gods of Egypt." Doubtless the reference is to the sacred river and the sacred animals at which the plagues were aimed. Dr. Alexander says that the Nile lost its sacredness when it was turned to blood; serpent worship was made absurd when Moses' rod devoured the other serpents. So the plague of murrain against the beasts sacred to the god Apis would reveal the momentous truth that the Egyptians' religion was useless. * * * "I am the Lord." The one great truth manifested by the judgment.

V. 13. Pass Over Israel. "The blood shall be to you for a token." A sign of their compliance with the will of God and thus a source of strength to them in what was before. In that act of obedience there would come forth a peace and a helpful staying of the mind. Thus confession of Christ's name, attendance on his service and partaking of his ordinance are a sign to others and a token to the participant. * * * "When I see the blood I will pass over you." The sign showed their faith and obedience. Man, not God, needed this sign. The whole Gospel is in fact summed up just here, "When I see the blood I will pass over you." The blood is the central idea of all the revelation of God. Is man redeemed? It is through Christ's blood. Eph. 1:7; 1 Pet. 1:18. Are any ransomed from sin? It is by the slain Lamb of God. Mark 10:45. Are these justified? "Being now justified by his blood." Rom. 5:9. Are these cleansed and made whole? His blood cleanseth from all sin. 1 John 1:7. Are they arrayed in spotless robes? They have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb. Rev. 7:14. Are sinners cast off at last? It is because they have trampled under foot the blood of the Son of God. Heb. 10:29. (Robinson.) * * * "When I smite." The smiting was necessary that the world might know that he is the Lord. V. 12.

V. 14. Perpetual Remembrance. "This day . . . for a memorial." It was a day of God's appointment to help them remember his mercy, and to inspire trust in him as their helper. * * * "Throughout your generation." The Divine Heart knows man's need of tangible forms and memorials as an aid to his development in the unseen things of the Spirit. * * * "The feast by an ordinance forever." At the last Passover feast which Jesus attended he inaugurated a change from that to the Greater Passover or Lord's Supper, which is to be observed "till he come again." In its latter form, instead of a memorial of one nation's deliverance, it becomes a token of the greater deliverance of all nations from the power of sin through the Lamb of God.

V. 15-17. Form of observance. "Seven days shall ye eat." Here follow instructions in detail for this national festival as it was to be celebrated in later ages.

CONVERSION.

REV. DR. AMORY H. BRADFORD.

WHATEVER unbelievers in Christianity may assert concerning other things, they would not deny that great changes are wrought in character and conduct by what is called conversion. The supernatural cause would doubtless be denied, but the change in the individual would not be disputed. I am not attempting to account for these changes, but only to show that there are facts outside the physical series as unquestionable, and probably as numerous, as those within it, which have a claim on the attention of all who seek a scientific explanation of the life of man. Illustrations by the thousand could be given of those whose heredity was bad enough to bind them to evil as with chains of steel; whose actual indulgence in vicious courses had been long continued; and whose environment was full of gross and selfish influences, who yet without cause (using cause as a force in the physical series) were truly converted. If it be thought that motives more or less selfish, such as desire for outward prosperity, account for the change in some, this explanation utterly fails in the case of those who surrender all that ministers to selfishness, and devote themselves to undoing the mischief of their previous lives.

When the phenomena of conversion in thousands of instances are studied scientifically, what is discovered? Events without a physical cause; an absolute revolution in character and life, due neither to any discoverable element of heredity, nor to any difference in environment. Due to what, then? Either to a sovereign act of will, or to a change of spiritual environment which Christians call the presence of the Holy Ghost—probably to both. I once read a paper on heredity to one who is now in the front rank of his profession—a man of fine and noble character. As point after point was made, an aspect of solemnity crept over the face of the hearer. Before the reading had ceased, he was called out of the room, and, taking the chair he occupied, I saw written on a scrap of paper on the table these words: "That is true, and my heredity is all pure devil." Afterward I found that what he had written was probably true. Yet he determined that the devil should be chained, and chained he has been; with full many a tendency toward base living, the man walks the earth everywhere useful and deservedly honored. A Christian would doubtless call this an example of the Spirit's work in that man, and quite justly; but even the Spirit of God does little without the consent of the individual.

A TEN-YEAR-OLD PHILOSOPHER.

Rev. J. M. Green of Chicago, when a representative of the American Home Finding Association, was once presenting the cause of the latter in a village church near the city. The community in which the church was situated was peculiar in the fact that a large majority of the farmers about the church were young or middle-aged married people, and many of them childless. Children were scarce in that neighborhood. The aforesaid farmers also knew how to take care of the pennies.

Dr. Green, however, thought that he had a promising field upon which to work. After a plea of nearly an hour with the farmers that they take children, especially boys, to nurture and care for—a plea that brought the audience to tears—he dismissed the meeting. He expected a number of applications for children but received not one. Almost discouraged the doctor left the church to take dinner with a prominent member. A ten-year-old son sat at the table, and seemed to be in deep thought as the meal progressed. Finally he said:

"Strange, wasn't it, mamma?"

"What was strange, my son?"

"Why, mamma, if Dr. Green had offered them a pig, or a calf, or a colt, today, they would each have wanted one, but they wouldn't take a boy."

The ten-year-old saw what many older ones mourn over, that human life is still too cheap.

We have a liking for the man who is not above admitting that he comes short. He is a much more pleasant and helpful person than he who seems to walk the road with never a stumble. The confessed shortcomer is natural and therefore lovable. St. Peter's fall, confession and rise have inspired many to renewed effort to whom "the loved disciple's" unflinching faith has been as discouragement. To continue steadfast as John seemed so difficult, well-nigh impossible, but new hope came with remembrance of the fallen apostle's uprising and triumph. The shortcomer will pray with Whittier:

THE HOME

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter VII.

N the journey up to London, at one of the large stations, looking from our window, we were interested in watching a pathetic parting between a mother and her little boy, who was apparently going to school for the first time, in charge of an older brother. As the train steamed off and we caught a glimpse of the poor, pale mother left alone behind, Waldo turned to me, and, in sudden wondering excitement, asked me:

"Nell, dear, how is it I have never had a mother. Didn't father like them?"

This was the first inquiry of the sort he had made to me, and the quaintness and the suddenness of it took me completely aback. I knew him to be altogether unaware of the sad story that had marred his father's life. Allan had told me that he knew nothing, and it seems that Dr. Vorstrovna, too, had kept back from him all information on the subject. I was glad to think that all that was necessary for him to learn he would learn from me.

Now, though I am of opinion that the clouds of doubt and of distrust should never be allowed to settle on the heads of little children, yet none the less do I think that they should not be brought up in a fairyland of golden illusion, only to be dispelled rudely at their first real contact with the hard, grim world. I think the shock of their faith then is not to be compensated for by all the enchantment of those early days. Moreover, Waldo was not as most children are. The piteous sadness and the long martyrdom of those tiny years had, whilst leaving his childishness intact, nevertheless made him wise beyond his age and quick to respond most sweetly to the least call for sympathy. Swiftly it dawned on me that the only way I could present this unknown mother to him was so that he should feel compelled to pour out on her some of the store of love with which his little heart was loaded. I sometimes think that Allan's spirit, like a good angel, was hovering about me and inspired me with this idea.

"You had your mother, dear, like all other little boys," I said, as he patiently awaited my reply.

"Oh, Nell, did I really? Why did I never see her?"

"Because—she went away, dear."

"Where, Nell? To heaven, like father?"

"No, not to heaven; to St. Petersburg."

I do not know the man who could have faced those dear and solemn eyes and told them aught but the truth, no matter how bitter or how bare that truth might be.

He looked at me with a very puzzled expression. I remember likening his face to a crumpled rose leaf. Then, as the train whirled on and he lay back in my arms with his head on my shoulder, I told him.

"Once father married some one who was very beautiful, because he loved her so. A great famine was over the land where she lived, and the times were very sad and dark. Though her home was in a great castle, she was poor and lonely, and had no one in the world to care for her, and at last even her home fell into the hands of strangers. But father took her away with him to Kiev—you remember Kiev?—and did all he could to make her happy and beautiful. In time God sent them a little boy—who was just this same old Waldo and no one else! So things went on until it somehow came to pass that they heard of Waldo's lovely mother at the Russian Court, and the Emperor and the Empress remembered that they had known her people. So they sent for her, and her beauty was talked of everywhere, and they kept her at St. Petersburg; that is to say, she never came back to little Waldo. There are many things we cannot understand. We cannot understand, you and I, how she should have chosen to live in palaces and dine with kings, wear costly dresses and sparkling jewels, drive out in gorgeous carriages, and have liveried servants to attend her, when at home, beyond and so far above all these things, father's love was waiting for her. We must not blame her, you and I. She was very young, and people are not made all alike. Some forget. They do not seem to think. Yet I have a fancy, dear old man, that some day she will hear how father was taken from you, and how you lay in lonely pain for long, long months, waiting till Nell should come. Then perhaps she will see all that she has missed, all that she might have been, all that she might have done, and her grief will be very great, because there is no grief like that which knows that what has been lost can never be found again—what has been done can never be atoned for or undone. So we should be sorry for her, you and I. Do you know that almost the last words father said to Nell were: 'If you ever see her, tell her—let little Waldo tell her—that I loved her, always, always.' And father would like to think that, if she wanted it, his boy had tried to love her, too."

He was silent for a long time. Then slowly his eyes filled with tears, and he set his little mouth hard and firm. But he only said: "Then, Nell, of course I shall."

It was but February, and the London season was not as yet in full swing. The great specialist was called to the Riviera immediately on our arrival and nearly three weeks elapsed before his return to town. The days were mild and sweet, and little Waldo had rest from pain, and saw many strange and wonderful sights, and was gay and glad exceedingly. One afternoon we were in Bond street, passing through on our way to the park, where Waldo loved to note the signs of the coming spring, the call of the birds, the soft brown haze that hangs upon budding trees, the hyacinths and crocuses that would ere long be bursting into beauty, the faint blue skies that seemed afraid, he used to say, to smile quite properly! It happened that where the street is narrowest there was a dead block of some duration, and in the crush the various carriages and omnibuses got very closely jammed together. I was looking casually into a shop window on my left, I think, when a little hand was thrust through my arm and a little voice said, very softly:

"Nell, I do think that is the beautifullest face I have ever seen."

I turned my eyes to where his were fixed, and there I saw that which for a moment seemed to stop the beating of my heart. More than once had Allan, in the pride and delight of his heart, sent me photographs of her whom he had loved so well. I knew that at last I looked upon his wife.

She was alone. She sat erect in her carriage, looking dreamily across the crowded street. We were driving in opposite directions and thus sat facing each other. Suddenly her eyes met mine, then fell from me to little Waldo at my side. Then a mighty scarlet blaze crept up into her clear, pale face; her eyes took on a startled, pained expression; her lips parted; she made a nervous movement with her hands. But gradually the obstruction to the traffic was broken and she passed from our sight.

"You think her so very beautiful, old man?" I asked him, wondering if he had noticed the emotion that had moved her as the wind may move a slender flower.

"Oh, very! But I think I like the faces like Barbara's best. They are so kind and smiley."—The Quiver.

(To be continued.)

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

THE PASSOVER.

"Christ our passover is sacrificed for us"—1 Corinthians 5:7.

Monday, December 9—Exodus 12: 11-10.

"I saw the sheep with their lambs, and thought on the Lamb of God."

There is his whiteness most white. He is the Lamb without blemish, flawless, stainless, perfect. Even the sceptics acknowledge his peerless excellence. There can be no better translation of the rule of virtue from the abstract to the concrete, John Stuart Mill says, than to live so that Jesus Christ will approve my life. And O that I may see his beauty, and may be changed into it too!

There are his sorrows, keen, awful, transcendent. The Paschal Lamb killed by the congregation of Israel in the evening—it is the picture of him who, from morning to evening, one April day, hung bleeding on the Cross for me.

There is the health that comes from him to me. I eat his flesh, I drink his blood; I live by faith on the Son of God; and my death is past, my spiritual impotence is at an end. I am ready for the pilgrim-march on to the bound of the waste. I have rest through his sorrow. I am strong in my dying and undying Lord.

Tuesday, December 10—Exodus 12: 11-20.

"When I see the blood," said God, "I will pass over you."

Unbelief has always cried out against the doctrine of substitution, of the laying of my guilt on Jesus, of my deliverance through his obedience and his blood. It has many a specious argument to bring against it. But I can appeal to more witnesses than one in defense of the slighted truth.

I take the soul which has been thoroughly awakened to the knowledge of its sin. It sees itself, utterly unworthy, helpless to do anything for its salvation. What is the one sight which brings it peace? What is the one medicine for its disease? It is the Cross of Christ. It is the Lamb bruised, wounded, dying.

Or I make my appeal to the holiest and most decided Christians. I ask them where they find strength to overcome temptation, and to finish the work given them to do. And their reply is, At the foot of the Cross. They know that they should have died where Jesus died; they know that they pierced his hands and feet and side; and they feel that they belong to One who loved them so.

Wednesday, December 11—Exodus 12: 21-30.

When I read the Old Testament, it grows plain to me that, from the very beginning, God has been grappling with the problem of my sin, and with the question of how it must be met.

That great sacrificial system which he enjoined on the Jewish people; what was it all but God's partial revealing of his Savior and his redemption? It proves that the death of my Lord Jesus was no after thought; that, on the contrary, it was determined long, long ago. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews is right when he tells me that the priests and offerings of the Old Covenant were only the "copies of things in the heavens, only the pictures of God's thoughts about how my salvation was to be accomplished. It is not Calvary that is moulded on Leviticus, but Leviticus that is moulded on Calvary; for Calvary, with its accursed tree and the Sufferer who bled willingly there, has been in God's mind age after age.

Thursday, December 12—Exodus 12: 31-42.

"It is a night to be much observed." And is it not well for me to recall the years of the right hand of the Most High? Is it not wise to remember my Lord's mighty doings in the past? I know of nothing better fitted to strengthen my own faith.

The God of those who went before me was a living God. People question today whether there is any Maker and Governor of the world. But my fathers, for whom he did great things, were sure of him, and would have doubted their own personality sooner than doubt his. They bid me believe and be persuaded that he lives.

And the God of the ancient saints was an accessible God. In their hour of need they spoke to him, spoke simply and fervently and every day. And they were confident that he answered them; they had innumerable convincing proofs of it. They assure me that he is near me, and that in everything I should make my requests known to him.

Friday, December 13—Exodus 13: 3-10.

Not less conspicuous than the age-long love of the Father is the age-long love of the Son. There is a fine story in early church history, the story of the march of Ignatius from Antioch to Rome, to his martyrdom there. He turned the march to such good account. The chains were on him, binding him to the rough soldiers who guarded him like leopards. Before him was the great amphitheater, with its ten thousand spectators, in the midst of whom he should stand for Christ, until the lions tore him limb from limb. Through town after town he traveled to his doom. Deputations greeted him. Messengers bore away his farewell letters to the churches. "Good and fair it is," he told his friends, "to sink to death for God in the West, that I may rise to meet him in his own East."

But the march of Ignatius sinks into nothingness alongside of the march of Christ. Through many a century he anticipated his death. Old Testament Psalms and Prophecies were his letters about it; Old Testament sacrifices shadowed forth his one perfect sacrifice. O, the matchless love of Jesus, my Savior!

Saturday, December 14—Mark 14: 12-25.

Here is the reality of which the Passover was the emblem.

How much Jesus sorrowed! He was betrayed by one of his friends. He knew, before it came, the death to which he was going out; he could speak of his broken body and his outpoured blood. For long there had been the mystery of pain in his soul, for long the mark of the Cross on his brow. The Man of Sorrows indeed!

How dearly Jesus loved! When he talked in this calm and collected way of his sufferings, it becomes manifest to me that it was no sudden impulse of generous feeling which prompted him to die. He moves onward to a foreseen and accepted anguish.

How freely Jesus bled! It was the Father's will that he should be put to grief, but evidently it is his own will too. With his heart's consent he goes step by step down the slow descent to the terrible ending—the pain of body and mind, the hiding of God's blessed face, the ignominious Cross, the imprisoning tomb.

How greatly Jesus saves! Not for himself but for me he laid down his life. That I might be ransomed and delivered he chose the dolorous way, and he walked it with willing feet to the sad and glorious Hill.

Sunday, December 15—1. Peter 1: 15-22.

If I am redeemed by One "who was foreknown indeed before the foundation of the world," then is my salvation absolutely secure. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

It was not even on Calvary, nor yet in Bethlehem, that he became my Savior. I was in his thought and his affection whilst Calvary and Bethlehem lay in the distant future. He suffered and bled for me in purpose and resolution, while he was yet in the heavenly places. He has loved me vicariously from everlasting to everlasting. For me he is "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

*The Little Champion.**

BY CARMEN SYLVA (QUEEN ELIZABETH OF ROUMANIA).

(Continued from last week.)

OW fall to, my little friends, and do justice to my fare!" At this instant the fairy waved her distaff and with one accord the birds in the branches overhead began to sing so sweetly many of the children forgot the food and drink before them and could only listen.

And when they did begin to eat and drink, very discreetly at first, taking only wee morsels and little tiny sips of nectar, so that their kind hostess might not perceive that the portions she had provided would be rather small even for birds, being scarcely a mouthful for hungry children after a long walk—when they did begin, why then they found there was no end to the good things set before them. They ate and drank, and yet the rose-leaf plates were never empty, the acorn cups were always full of nectar.

Care, too, was taken that their banqueting hall should never become too hot. Splendid peacock butterflies and great blue moths, bigger and more beautiful than any the children had ever seen before, kept hovering round them, fanning them, and setting the air perpetually in motion with the beating of their wings. When all the patties were eaten, birds came and removed the rose leaves, and more followed carrying beech leaves and oak leaves filled with all sorts of delicious little cakes and tarts. And it seemed as if these would never be done, for no sooner did any one think to himself, "I should like a little more of that cake," than a fresh slice was before him. And the squirrels fetched fresh milk in campanula flowers, and bumblebees brought honey in nutshells skillfully hollowed out by the squirrels. The water, too, was inexhaustible: the nutshell pitchers were always full, however much one drank, and the water in them remained as cool as if it were just drawn from the spring. Then came fruit of all sorts, in and out of season, cherries and raspberries, strawberries and peaches, pears and mulberries, apricots and grapes, all piled up on little wicker carts pushed along by deer, who kept running up behind them and giving little pushes with their foreheads. At that sight the youngsters broke out into such shouts of delight the wild creatures would most certainly all have taken flight had not the fairy made them understand these children were really not dangerous, they only had a somewhat boisterous fashion of expressing their joy. And when the mirth was at its highest she waved her magic distaff over their heads and they all sank back asleep among the flowers. Their slumber, though it only lasted a few minutes, refreshed them as though they had slept the whole night long, and when they woke, rubbing their eyes, they found that each one had had a different beautiful dream.

In the meantime the little carts had been packed with all sorts of good things: "You may take these home for the little brothers and sisters," said the kind fairy; "and now I have one thing more in store for you, a great pleasure, the very greatest that there is. You shall all have presents to give to one another!"

And as she spoke she passed her fingers through her hair, and from out the long silver threads she kept drawing some lovely jewel or toy or chased gold ornament, and handed it to each child in turn.

At first they could only stare enraptured at the magic gifts; then suddenly they remembered what they had them for, and they began giving them away, each one to his or her dearest friend. Only two wanted to keep their presents for themselves, and immediately the precious stones were changed into jumping frogs that hopped away and would not let themselves be caught. Finally the last two children to receive gifts were allowed to choose for themselves. The one was a little girl whose parents were very, very poor, and she wished that her brothers and sisters might never be cold or hungry again during the coming winter. "Good," said the fairy: "you shall not only have your wish, dear child, but what is more, if ever again you feel afraid that bad times are at hand, then you have only to rub this thread I give you from my spindle and all will go well. But remember, the spindle only helps those who are themselves industrious, and to prove it I will show you what I spun during the short time you were asleep." And the air was suddenly filled with shining silken threads, so fine the children were afraid of touching them, lest they should break, and the threads began to shimmer in a thousand changing colors, red and yellow and green and blue, and some laid themselves as broad ribbons round the children's hats or as scarfs across their broad shoulders, whilst others became little flags at the end of straws, which they had only to put their hands out for. And quickly several more little carts were laden with pretty ribbons and scarfs for the little ones at home.

(To be continued.)

General Church News

ACROSS THE WATER.

The twenty-first annual convention of the Christian Association of Great Britain was held recently at the West London Tabernacle. Nearly 2,500 Disciples now belong to the association. Church extension was felt to be a pressing need and it was resolved to ask J. H. Bicknell to leave his Liverpool pastorate and go into the field to present the plea of the Disciples. A Church of Christ is to be established at Brighton, England. For this and other purposes pledges were made amounting to nearly £600. Four new missionaries were present at this convention, who were on the point of departure for India; also Miss Josepha Franklin about to return to her work at Damoh, India.

It is considered that the Ecumenical Conference of the Methodists did much to foster a spirit of fellowship and co-operation, which has been growing during the past twenty years. There is now a standing committee on concerted action made up of representatives from all the branches of Methodism on the other side of the water, some of whom were formerly hardly on speaking terms with each other. There is a distinct trend towards union also in world-wide Methodism. In Ireland Methodism became a unit twenty-three years ago, and a little later the four or five branches in Canada became one. More recently still Australasian Methodists were united in one body. It is affirmed that in all these cases there has been no resulting friction, but the gain in influence and progress has been marked. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, although prevented by ill-health from being present, sent a letter to the conference in which he said that the one great essential to the continued success of Methodism was organic union. A resolution was offered and passed, declaring ultimate union to be the will of God and expressing confidence that in due time it would be realized.

The twentieth century fund of British Baptists now amounts in subscriptions to £185,414, of which £121,600 has been paid in. The amount aimed at is £250,000, and at the Baptist Union meetings in Edinburgh a renewed effort was made to secure widened interest in the fund. It is proposed to raise the remainder largely in shilling contributions from a multitude of persons who could easily afford so small a sum. The object of the fund is denominational extension and educational enlargement at home and the broadening of mission work abroad.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, so widely known and revered, has resigned the pastorate of Christ Church, London, to devote the remainder of his life to evangelistic work. After thirty-five years of pastoral life he feels he can no longer endure the strain a large church puts on him in addition to the outside work to which he feels specially called. He desires to "travel quietly through the world, and specially through Great Britain and Ireland, the colonies and the United States, doing what he can to quicken and raise the standard of Christian living." Surely nothing is more needed.

Report was made to the English Presbyterian synod that the contributions of its churches to foreign missions were increased during the ecclesiastical year just ended, by $30,000 over the previous year, making a total in the current report of $176,000. The building fund of $250,000 was also completed within the year. The net increase of membership was 1,570, giving an aggregate strength of 76,111. The sociological tendency was manifested strongly in the synod. Committees were appointed to study methods for bringing the church into the fuller confidence of the poor and to agitate for better housing of the tenement population.

The transfer of Rev. Dr. John Hunter from Glasgow to London is an event of importance in British Congregationalism. He preached his farewell sermon in Glasgow Sept. 15. The London Christian World hopes that he will become in that city a leader in theological reconstruction and in denominational esprit de corps.

Rev. Thomas Richardson, the founder of the Bible and Prayer Union, recently passed away in London. He had been Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End, for about thirty years. He commenced the Bible-reading Union in 1876 with fifty members; since then 350,000 have been connected with it.

Miss Helen Gladstone, daughter of the "Grand Old Man," has been warden of the Women's University Settlement, Southward—a part of London—since early in September. Formerly Miss Gladstone was dean of Newnham, the college for women at Oxford. She has given up her high educational work in order to prosecute a practical social effort among the industrious poor of Blackfriars Road and the Borough. As warden she will be the head of a band consisting of sixteen members and students, all of whom are earnest workers in the cause of social reform.

Six colonial Presbyterian denominations in Australia have federated into one continental church. Joint conferences and conventions biennially or oftener during the last twenty years have paved the way to this desirable consummation. The deed of union was signed by the moderators of the six constituent assemblies in the great Centennial hall at Sydney, and the Rev. J. Meiklejohn, of South Melbourne, one of the leading agents in the work of federation, was at once elected moderator of the first general assembly.

Forty presbyteries and 450 congregations are comprised in the Presbyterian church of Australia, and the combination has imbued its membership in all parts of the island continent with an added sense of power and a fresh impulse to energetic aggression.

The Summer school of Oxford University had an enrollment of 1,000 students, about one-fifth coming from outside Great Britain. Nearly every country in Europe was numerously represented, while about forty came from the United States and Canada. Daily lectures were given by university professors on history, astronomy and other topics, with special classes in the English language and in education. One of the most notable lectures was by the Bishop of Ripon, on "The Epic with Special Relation to Dante."

Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, the most famous woman traveler now living, has volunteered for mission service in India, having offered her service to the Anglican bishop of Calcutta. Mrs. Bishop was a scoffer at missions when she began the tours described in her books of travel, but what she saw of

WRITE RIGHT.

"Scatter Decent, Helpful Things."

Good, philosophical Ras Wilson once said to a new reporter, "Young man, write as you feel, but try to feel right. Be good humored toward every one and everything. Believe that other folks are just as good as you are, for they are. Give 'em your best and bear in mind that God has sent them, in his wisdom, all the trouble they need, and it is for you to scatter gladness and decent, helpful things as you go. Don't be particular about how the stuff will look in print, but let 'er go. Some one will understand. That is better than to write so doshing high, or so tarnashun deep, deep that no one understands. Let 'er go."

"So on the above plan," says H. W. Porter of Topeka, Kan., "I will write what I know of Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food from personal experience. After a long period of indigestion and other disorders, with some misgivings, I took up the use of Grape-Nuts. Despite the hot weather I kept gaining in strength and mentally, a thing I had never done at that season of the year.

I found the food an excellent stimulant for the brain, and I could do more and better work than I had ever done. It was a revelation to discover how closely the brain and digestive organs were in sympathy with each other. Whatever retarded the work of one had a corresponding effect on the other, and the food that tended to put one in proper shape acted accordingly on the other. I know that my great improvement mentally and physically came from dispensing with unwholesome food and using Grape-Nuts liberally.

missionary consecration and missionary results has caused her to desire a part in the work. It is understood that she will support herself on the field.

The Hebrew Christians of all denominations in London have formed a Hebrew Christian Alliance, with which the old Hebrew Christian Prayer Union has been incorporated. The Rev. Maxwell M. Ben-Oliel has been unanimously elected president; the Revs. Dr. Rosedale, LL. D., and Isaac Levinson (secretary of the British Society), together with Mr. Marcus Bergmann (translator of the Bible into Yiddish), vice-presidents; Rev. Aaron Berstein, B. D., treasurer. Combined and energetic actions is to be taken to bring the Gospel to bear upon the Jews and Jewish movements, especially upon Zionism.

Christian Endeavorers in England having seen the good results following the services they held in workingmen's lodgings, have built a model lodging house in Sheffield, which is regulated on Christian principles. Every Sunday and Wednesday Christian Endeavor meetings are held in a common room. "Since we cannot bring the people to church," said one of the leaders in the movement, "we intend to take the church to the people." The plan has been so successful that similar lodging houses are to be established in London.

The Christian, London, reports that there are six large Gospel tents and six caravans at work in connection with the Caravan Mission to Village Children. Not only are the children reached, but their parents also, as each night the young people's service is followed by a meeting for adults. Some 1,500 young converts are written to each month. Scripture Union branches are commenced in the villages whenever possible.

Twenty-five years ago Rev. Wilson Carlile, with the conviction that the Church of England ought not to leave the submerged Tenth to be cared for by organizations that were outside her own fold, started a society which has so developed that, in addition to the evangelistic work it does in the army, in prisons, in infirmaries, and in its rescue homes for women, has now in constant service throughout the country districts of England, sixty-seven diocesan mission vans, each van manned by two or more trained workers, and in London and the large provincial cities is maintaining seventy-two lodging and labor homes through which there pass annually more than 7,000 outcasts, of whom it is said that forty-two per cent obtain situations and a fresh start in life.

At the meetings of the Baptist Union in Edinburgh Dr. Alexander McLaren rebuked those who without regard for others, break the impressive quiet that follows a solemn service or an effective address by leaving in haste. At the conclusion of a magnificent address by Dr. Clifford, numbers of the delegates made for the doors, without waiting for the closing words of the chairman, the prayer, and the benediction. Dr. McLaren rose, and with a twinkle in his eye said that he could echo the remark of Edward Irving on a similar occasion: "We will wait until the chaff has blown off."

NEW YORK FEDERATION OF CHURCHES.

The first annual meeting of this state federation of churches and Christian workers was held in Central Presbyterian church, Rochester, November 12 and 13. The pastor of this church is the president of the organization. Episcopalians, Free Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Reformed and Congregationalists are represented in this Federation.

Several local federations have been formed during the year. The methods adopted in the cities and in the small towns were explained at this meeting. Dr. Walter Laidlaw, secretary of the New York Federation, and J. Cleveland Cady, Esq., president of the National Society, took active part. Interesting questions were discussed regarding the conditions peculiar to city and country districts, and to places where the denominations are in harmony and where they are not. Dr. E. B. Sanford reported a hopeful outlook in the field at large. Dr. I. J. Lansing of Scranton, Pa., spoke on the prison problem.

In all the plans made for future work the evangelistic aim was prominent. The purpose to combine to evangelize communities was placed foremost. Dr. C. L. Goodell, a Methodist pastor of Brooklyn, made this thought the leading one in his address; he expressed it thus: "In the last century we learned how to master physical forces; this century should put us in line to master spiritual forces." Other objects proposed by the federation are comity between different bodies, and agreement to arbitrate questions about new churches or the abandonment of over-churched fields. Dr. W. T. Sutherland, representing the executive committee, gave a careful paper on the negative work of federation.

Dean J. B. Brooks of Syracuse, a Methodist, is president of this state body. The governor of the state and Mr. W. E. Dodge are vice-presidents; Dr. E. B. Sanford is field secretary.

WISCONSIN FEDERATION OF REFORMS.

It is now three years since the above-named organization was effected. It is composed of two representatives from each state denominational body and each state Moral Reform Association, and its object is the massing of the Christian forces of the state against vice and crime and in behalf of public virtue. This it does by fed-erating the churches and moral reform associations of a given locality for work together for the moral betterment of that locality.

The Wisconsin State Federation has thus far concerned itself in securing better moral legislation and preventing the passage of bills that are favorable in any way to vice. For several years our soldier boys were transported to and from Camp Douglas on Sunday. Efforts were made from time to time to secure the passage of a law forbidding such transportation. It was not until

PINEY WOODS.

Healthful but Not Always Curative.

To go to the piney woods is a help, but if one carries along the bad habits of food and drink that have caused sickness, the piney woods will not produce a recovery.

Coffee drinking caused blindness in a Virginia gentleman, and his remarkable experience is worth reading. "I have been a coffee drinker since my earliest remembrance. If I missed coffee at a meal it brought on headache. This should have shown me that I was a victim to a drug habit. Finally, wakeful, restless nights came on. After dinner I was always drowsy and after sleeping would waken stupid and morbid, and felt as though I had been drugged, and when this feeling wore off nervousness and restlessness would set in until I drugged myself with coffee again.

At last my eyesight began to fail. Some of the best optical specialists agreed that I had an affliction of the optic nerve and after two or three years treatment my eyes slowly lost their power and I became almost sightless.

I was advised to go to a pine woods near the sea in a most isolated place. This I did and lived there for two years without any visible benefit. I gave up all hope of recovery until last spring a friend expressed the belief that the coffee I drank was the cause of all of my trouble. He had been a slave to it and had been unable to find relief until he quit and took up Postum Food Coffee.

His experience startled me and I decided to try the change, although I had but little faith in its merits. My first cup of Postum proved delicious and was a great surprise. It was evidently well made. I had not the slightest trouble in leaving off coffee for the Postum filled its place perfectly.

During the past six months I have gained in flesh, my sallow complexion has become clear, and my eyesight gradually improved until now I am able to read and write. My mind is once more clear and active, and I no longer suffer from sleepless, nervous spells. You can imagine I feel grateful for my restoration." W. Harold Fenton, Brighton, Va.

the State Federation voiced the sentiment of at least 130,000 of the intelligent Christian people of Wisconsin, that the petition was heard and the desired law passed. Several temperance measures have been secured in the same way. Last winter a bill to prohibit the sale or distribution in any way of criminal literature like the Police Gazette, was passed. A bill to repeal an anti-pooling law was defeated, the federation rendering valuable aid in securing the result. These are sample illustrations of its work.

The third annual convention at Madison, Nov. 18-20, was held jointly with the Wisconsin Sunday Rest Day Association and the Wisconsin Anti-Saloon League, both organizations being constituents of the federation. At present there are nine denominational and six moral reform bodies represented in the federation. Two days were given to discussions and business and three evenings devoted to mass meetings. Rev. W. F. Crafts of Washington, D. C., superintendent of the National Bureau of Reforms, did valuable service. Rev. Geo. R. Leavitt, D. D., of Beloit, spoke on "The Price of the Sabbath"; Rev. L. C. Smith of Oshkosh on "Rest of the Holiday Sunday"; Rev. Dr. Hazlett of Racine on "The Gambling Curse"; Rev. E. A. Cutler of Milwaukee on "Massing of Christian Forces." Prof. C. O. Merica of the State Industrial School for Boys at Waukesha, and Mrs. E. F. Bland, superintendent of the Girls' Industrial School at Milwaukee, each interested the federation in their respective lines of work. Substitutes for saloons were carefully considered, and other phases of the drink problem.

The convention, while not large, was made up of leading Christian workers from the different state denominational bodies, and so its deliberations had more than ordinary weight, and on the whole were exceedingly encouraging. It is no small matter for such a body to unite in its declarations concerning the reform questions of the day. Resolutions were passed approving the work of the Milwaukee Ministerial Association in their campaign against open gambling and stall saloons; urging all Christians to mass their efforts in each locality against vice and in behalf of virtue; condemning Sunday excursions; to stand by the anti-canteen law and urge its application to all soldiers' homes; to work in every way possible for the better enforcement of law and for the passage of such laws as shall ultimately result in the banishment of the liquor curse from our own land, and prevent the sale of opium, liquor and firearms by our traders to the uncivilized child races of other lands.

The officers chosen for the coming year are: Rev. Henry Faville, D. D., of La Crosse, for president, and Rev. H. A. Miner of Madison for secretary.
H. A. M.

WOMAN'S KIDNEYS.

Thousands of Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

To Prove What the Great Kidney Remedy, SWAMP-ROOT, Will do for YOU, Every Reader of The Christian Century May Have a Sample bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root investigated by THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY, none seem to speak higher of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy than the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 117 High Rock St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Nov. 2, 1900: "About eighteen months ago I had a very severe spell of sickness. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very much like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. THE DOCTORS SAID MY KIDNEYS WERE NOT AFFECTED, AND WHILE I

Did Not Know I Had Kidney Troubles,

I somehow felt certain that my kidneys were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser, I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me."

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

Swamp-Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak

How to Find Out If You Need Swamp-Root.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work. So when your kidneys are weak or out of order you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Many women suffer untold misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood; in most cases they are led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for their many ills, when in fact disordered kidneys are the chief cause of their distressing troubles.

Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, weakness or bearing down sensation, profuse or scanty supply of urine, with strong odor, frequent desire to pass it night or day, with scalding or burning sensation,—these are all unmistakable signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are sleeplessness, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, plenty of ambition but no strength.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

EDITORIAL NOTICE—Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder remedy, is so remarkably successful that a special arrangement has been made by which all of our readers who have not already tried it may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling all about kidney and bladder troubles and containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured by Swamp-Root. In writing, be sure and mention reading this generous offer in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY.

Auburn Park Congregational church, Rev. M. A. Frost, pastor, has received forty-three new members since January 1, twenty-three of whom came on confession.

Principal S. D. F. Salmond, D. D., visited Chicago Theological Seminary on October 10 and gave an interesting address to the students on "The Work of the Minister."

Judge Tuthill is earnestly advocating the establishment of a school and home for homeless boys. He is speaking in the churches and addressing the ministers meetings. Large sums have been already promised.

A home has now been found for the Central church, of which Rev. Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus is pastor. The recent demolition of Central Music Hall, where services had been held from the early days of Professor David Swing, required the finding of new quarters which were obtained in the Fine Arts or Studebaker building. The Northwestern University is now remodeling the Tremont House, corner of Lake and Dearborn streets, for its own specific uses. An auditorium with a seating capacity of 2,000 will be provided and the Central church will lease it for ten years at an annual rental of $3,500. The fine organ taken out of Central Music Hall belongs to the Central church and will be installed in the new auditorium.

The Forty-first Street Presbyterian church, Rev. Cleland B. McAfee, D. D., pastor, received last Sunday, thirty-nine new members—twenty-one by letter and eighteen on confession of faith.

The Presbyterian hospital has received a gift of $10,000 by the will of the late Abijah Keith.

Chicago Presbyterians are in the midst of a foreign mission campaign. Meetings addressed by missionary workers are being held in various sections of the city and suburbs. Bringing the churches into close acquaintance with the foreign fields is sure to increase the gifts.

At the annual dinner of the Men's League of the First Baptist church, covers were laid for ninety men. The speakers were Rev. J. Vance of the Hyde Park Presbyterian church, Judge Haney, Prof. Shailer Mathews of the University of Chicago, and Dr. M. W. Haynes of the Belden Avenue church.

Centennial Baptist church tendered a reception to its new pastor, Rev. Arthur Fowler, and his wife, recently. Addresses of welcome were given by Dr. A. K. Parker, who for twenty-one years served as pastor; Dr. W. M. Lawrence of the Second church, Rev. W. H. Geistweit, Rev. Kittredge Wheeler.

Dr. Lorimer was the principal speaker at the meeting, December 3, of the Baptist Social Union. His subject was "The Ethical Message of Jesus."

Bethany Presbyterian church, at Humboldt boulevard and Cortland street, was dedicated Sunday, Decem-

A Model Church Hymnal,

So says Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, of

The Praise Hymnal

"THE PRAISE HYMNAL is in use in both the Franklin Circle and Aetna Street Churches of this city, and each week brings to me a new appreciation of the work. The dignity and variety of the contents, and the rare taste displayed in the arrangement and typography combine to make it a model church hymnal. So far as I have seen, the Responsive Readings are unequalled, and are a most attractive feature of the book.

JESSIE BROWN POUNDS."

Cleveland, O.

AS TO PRICES.—The contents of THE PRAISE HYMNAL are of a permanent quality. It is false economy to ask for cheap binding. We make a cloth bound book with leather back that will last ten years with any sort of care. The price is as low as can be made on its superior material and workmanship, $75.00 per 100 copies. Specimen copies sent on approval.

FILLMORE BROS., - 119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O.
40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

Our CHRISTMAS MUSIC is now ready. Send for list. Why not order ALL your music from Fillmore Brothers? We are prompt, courteous, and are publishing new music of all kinds all the time. (6)

LARKIN SOAPS AND PREMIUMS
FACTORY TO FAMILY

Were awarded six medals, two gold, for supreme merit at the Pan-American Exposition. Never exhibited without an award of Gold Medal. Did you see the Larkin advertisement in the Christian Century of November 21st.

Don't miss this opportunity for economy. Larkin Soap Co. Larkin St., Buffalo, N. Y. Already millions of friends and users.

Christian Work, New York, says: they give for so little money. A customer once is a customer always with them. The Larkin Co. never disappoint. They create wonder with the great value them.

20,000 CHURCHES

Lighted by the FRINK System of Reflectors with Electric, Gas, Welsbach, Acetylene or C. I. LICENSED to manufacture electric and combination gas and electric fixtures. Send dimensions for estimate. I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., NEW YORK.

ber 1, Rev. Willis G. Craig, D. D., preaching the sermon. The new church is regarded as one of the prettiest on the West Side. The front is of Bedford stone and the remainder of brick. The pews are of heavy oak and the building is heated with steam. The church is free from debt on the structure, which has cost over $10,000.

The park in Evanston, on which front four churches, has been named "Raymond Park," in honor of the late Miner Raymond, D. D., LL. D., for many years professor in Garrett Biblical Institute.

Rev. Dr. M. M. Parkhurst of Chicago, who has been the agent of the State Anti-saloon League, has severed his connection with that organization.

Halsted street Methodist church has more than doubled its congregation in the last four weeks. At two recent Sunday evening services twenty-two persons accepted Christ. The Sunday school increased 196 November 24. Rev. T. K. Gale is pastor.

Baptist.

Immanuel Baptist church, Minneapolis, is located in a section where the population is largely Scandinavian, and of the working class. There are thousands of young people in the immediate neighborhood. In order to reach them the church has a gymnasium and clubs for boys and girls. The young men have a magazine club and the young ladies a tourists' class. The various clubs have an enrollment of 170. The church attendance of the young people is noticeably increased. During August the Sunday school increased seventy-five per cent over last year, and in September the increase was thirty-two per cent over that of 1900.

A class of twenty-seven newsboys has been organized in connection with the Century Hall mission under the auspices of the First church, Minneapolis.

The Baptists of the South during the past year raised $156,000 for foreign missions. Their missionaries report 1,009 baptisms, 200 of which were in China.

Bishop College, Marshall, Texas, has an attendance this year of over 350 students. Besides the regular school work there is manual training in wood and metal work for the boys, and domestic economy for the girls.

In the weekly church bulletin of the First church, Philadelphia, Dr. K. B. Tupper, pastor, it is announced that pastoral visits may be expected during the week at certain numbers on certain streets. It is also announced that the pastor of this church, during the coming winter, will deliver on the second Sunday morning of each month a sermon by some distinguished preacher of righteousness. These are to be reproduced without manuscript or note.

Rev. R. G. Robbins completed thirteen years of work with the Lincoln Park church, Cincinnati, December 1. He has received 1,109 members into the church. It has now 827 members. Two missions have been formed by Mr. Robbins, one of which is now an independent church.

Congregational.

The church at Kent, Conn., has a Young Men's club, open five nights in the week, and held in the church parlors. It has a membership of twenty-five, keeping them from the attractions of a low resort. The pastor conducted a music class for the club.

The Congregational Union of Cincinnati is planning for work in connection with the coming of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan to that city. An aggressive movement is to be made.

Oberlin College opened its first semester with a freshman class of 162, the largest in its history. The Warner Men's Gymnasium and the Severance Chemical Laboratory have been completed and are in use.

The church at Pelham, N. H., celebrated November 13, its 150th anniversary. Mr. Chas. W. Hobbs gave an historical sketch. In June, 1747, the town voted to call Mr. James Hobbs as gospel minister, and to give him a salary of £700 (old tenor—42 cents to the pound). Rev. Dr. Samuel Gerould, Dr. Addison P. Foster and others gave further historical reminiscences. A social reunion and banquet followed, after which an anniversary anthem composed by the pastor, Rev. C. L. Merriam, was sung, and an address was delivered by Dr. A. A. Berle.

The North church, Amherst, Mass., observed its seventy-fifth anniversary November 15. During this period 7,000 sermons have been preached from its pulpit; 862 persons have been received into membership; $30,579 has been given to Christian benevolences. Four of the sons of the church have gone into the ministry and twelve of the daughters have become the wives of ministers. One is a foreign missionary.

The Disciples.

Evangelist W. E. Harlow has been holding meetings for six weeks at Springfield, Mo.; 105 have been added.

There are ten church buildings and ten congregations of the Disciples in Des Moines with a membership of about 5,000.

There have been seventy-six additions at Centralia, Ills., as a result of

I Will Cure You of Rheumatism

NO PAY UNTIL YOU KNOW IT.

After 2,000 experiments, I have learned how to cure Rheumatism. Not to turn bony joints into flesh again; that is impossible. But I can cure the disease always, at any stage, and forever.

I ask for no money. Simply write me a postal and I will send you an order on your nearest druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure, for every druggist keeps it. Use it for a month, and if it does what I claim, pay your druggist $5.50 for it. If it doesn't, I will pay him myself.

I have no samples. Any medicine that can affect rheumatism with but a few doses must be drugged to the verge of danger. I use no such drugs. It is folly to take them. You must get the disease out of the blood.

My remedy does that, even in the most difficult, obstinate cases. No matter how impossible this seems to you, I know it and I take this risk. I have cured tens of thousands of cases in this way, and my records show that 39 out of 40 who get those six bottles pay, and gladly. I have learned that people in general are honest with a physician who cures them. That is all I ask. If I fail I don't expect a penny from you.

Simply write me a postal card or letter. Let me send you an order for the medicine; also a book. Take it for a month, for it won't harm you anyway. If it cures, pay $5.50. I leave that entirely to you. Address Dr. Shoop, Box 535, Racine, Wis.

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

NEVER FEEL RIGHT.

There are thousands who pass year after year without a really well day. They are never bedridden, but have a constant feeling of weariness and weakness that unfits them for work and pleasure. Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is just what such people need. It makes live blood and makes it circulate and nourish, regulates the liver, whets the appetite. Sold by special agents or the proprietor direct. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 South Hoyne avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD.

Will sell tickets December 24th, 25th, 31st, 1901, and January 1st, 1902, at rate of a fare and a third for the round trip to any point located in Central Passenger Association territory, account Christmas and New Year holidays. Return limit including January 2d, 1902. Through service to New York City, Boston, and other eastern points. Chicago Passenger Station, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, on the Elevated Loop. For further information address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

Self-Pronouncing COMMENTARY on International N. S. Lessons for 1902, by Rev. P. E. Thomas. Contains all the lessons in self-pronouncing form, with right to the point HELP on each verse, also Official Prayer Meeting Topics of Young People's Societies for 1902, with MOTTO, PLEDGE and BENEDICTION. Pocket size. 128 pgs. Red Morocco 25c. Interleaved Edition for Notes 40c; postpaid. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. GEORGE W. NORLE, 275 Madison St. Chicago.

EVERY CHURCH SHOULD USE OUR INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION OUTFITS

Simplest and Best. Send for Trial Outfit, giving Number of Communicants. Address THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO. Box 2232, LIMA, OHIO

A Comfortable Living For Fifty Years.

A thorough investigation will convince you that a few dollars per month invested for six years in the Montezuma Plantation will absolutely secure it. This is in no sense a speculation, but a solid, conservative investment, with a complete chain of safeguards around every dollar invested.

Rubber and sugar, the great staples, which never fail, are being planted.

A PERFECT PLAN---RELIABLE COMPANY

The managing company has assets worth $2,000,000. The plan is the perfection of co-operation—each share-holder has only one vote, regardless of the shares held. Over 2 years' work, costing $50,000, has been done.

Sir Thos. Lipton says: "For sure, large and permanent returns, nothing equals a well managed Mexican plantation." Over 400 intelligent people own shares. It is as safe as life insurance, several times more profitable and good for life.

CHICAGO TITLE & TRUST CO., TRUSTEE.

This institution, capital $1,500,000, holds the title to the land, the purchasers' money, and a bond of $100,000, guaranteeing the development work. Write or call for literature, mentioning this paper.

MONTEZUMA PLANTATION

1108 Ashland Block, Chicago.

LYON & HEALY ORGANS

are the great favorites today. Unapproached for Sweetness and Purity of Tone. New styles of which give the most enthusiastic satisfaction.

PIANO CASE ORGANS

All our organs have all the latest and most modern improvements. The cases are models of neatness and beauty and are made of fine

The Latest Style. If finished solid Oak, Black Walnut, Mahogany or Ebony finish.

PRICES ALWAYS THE LOWEST.

We make the terms of payment so easy that any body can buy one. Ask your dealer for the Lyon & Healy Organs. If he does not keep them write direct to us. Beautiful Catalogue FREE.

Also bargains in good second hand Organs.

A sealed guarantee with every Organ.

The freight on an Organ is a very small matter. We ship Organs everywhere.

Remember when you buy an Organ from us genuine musical worth is assured. Avoid the imitations now on the market.

Write today.

Our Piano Case Organ. LYON & HEALY, CHICAGO, ILL. 70 Adams St.

a three weeks' meeting held by Rev. Mr. Stotler, the pastor.

To the First church, Springfield, Mo., 114 have been added during a six weeks' meeting; seventy-two by baptism.

At Vincennes, Ind., Rev. Wm. Oescher, the pastor, has just closed a twenty nights' meeting, resulting in ninety-four additions.

The new church at Georgetown, Ill., was dedicated October 20; it cost $7,400 and is built of brick and stone.

The Norwood Avenue church, Toledo, Ohio, has about doubled its membership during the present pastorate, while its indebtedness has been very largely wiped out. H. F. MacLane is pastor. The church has a King's daughters' Circle, the members of which visit the hospital, infirmary and the homes of the poor, conducting services and giving relief. Their leader is the pastor's wife. The married people have a "Christian Culture Club," where one-half hour is given to Bible study, and another to the reading of some book, after which an hour is spent in social enjoyment. There is also a branch of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, an organization of young men for young men. This church has an orchestra of fourteen pieces, none of the players being paid for their services.

Large additions to the churches in various places in Kentucky have resulted from special meetings: Twenty-seven at Nicholasville, fifty-four at Paris, seventy-four at Carlisle, thirty-five at Cynthiana, sixty-three at Covington, and fifty-six at Ludlow.

Methodist.

Forty thousand dollars of the debt on Epworth Memorial church, Cleveland, Ohio, was provided for in forty insurance policies of $1,000, taken out and paid for by friends of the church.

Methodists North and South have united in the building of a Methodist College in Oklahoma. This is the first step towards unity of these two bodies.

The Methodist Episcopal church claims the right to be excepted from any observations made upon the decrease of candidates for the ministry. No such decline has been noted in any of the Methodist theological schools. The attendance at Garrett Biblical institute at Evanston, Ill., and at Drew Theological seminary at Madison, N. J., is quite up to the best standard of past years, while the enrollment at the school of theology at Boston University, the chief institution of ministerial training in the church, has risen this fall to 187, higher than at any previous time in its history.

The General Missionary Committee meeting at Pittsburg had to face a debt of $81,000. The increase in donations for the year was only $9,000. Nearly all the appropriations were therefore cut down about eight per cent. The total appropriated to foreign missions was $578,232, being fifty-seven per cent of the total amount appropriated, the balance of forty-three per cent going to the home missionary work. The Missionary Committee appropriated $8,565 for work in Utah, and $1,840 for schools in that state. It was considered necessary to reopen the Methodist schools there, now that the public school system is wholly in the hands of the Mormons. For work in Alaska $4,140 was appropriated. There is a Methodist church in Skaguay and another in Juneau. For English work in Honolulu, $500 was designated. To New Mexico Spanish work, $1,800 was appropriated, and $9,200 for work in Porto Rico. Nearly all the missionary appropriations were cut down eight per cent. The total of the appropriations for foreign missions was $578,232. Resolutions were adopted urging the churches "to make quick and very generous increase in its missionary contributions, so that at least a million and a half of dollars from collections only may be received in 1902."

The District Epworth League of New Haven, Conn., has just held a two days' institute in Trinity church for the instruction of officers, committees and workers in the local leagues. It was well attended and thorough instruction was given by experts.

The General Missionary Committee voted $7,500 to the Philippine and $800 to the Hawaiian Japanese mission of the Methodists. They plan to erect at least a dozen churches in the Philippines during the coming year.

Presbyterian.

The Northern and Southern churches are to join in the support of the Presbyterian University of Texas, putting it on a basis similar to that now occupied by Westminster in Missouri, and the Presbyterian institutions in Kentucky.

The First church, Kansas City, Mo., has received seventy in the last four months. Dr. Carter has recently started a mid-week Bible class, which already has an enrollment of seventy-five, with new members being added each week. For convenience, the class is divided into two sections, one meeting in the afternoon and the other in the evening.

The First church, Saginaw, Mich., is very active this season. The church building is to be enlarged and the Sunday school department is to be remodeled. The Rev. Mr. Covert, the pastor, has organized a normal class for the instruction of the teachers. It has been voted that three successive absences from teachers' meeting, without a good excuse, will debar the person from teaching. The church has an organization for boys from fourteen to twenty, called the Yoke fellows. The Young Women's Club is very helpful to some seventy-five young girls, most of the working class. They have classes in advanced German, intermediate and preserves and pickles, spread a thin coating of

On Jellies

PURE REFINED PARAFFINE

Will keep them absolutely moisture and acid proof. Pure Refined Paraffine is also useful in a dozen other ways about the house. Full directions in each package. Sold everywhere.

STANDARD OIL CO.

primary German, bookkeeping, fancy work and music. There is a Dorcas Circle, a Ladies' Aid Society, and the "Home Circle," which meets to sew every Friday for those who, because they work all day, have no time to sew for their families.

The Presbytery of Cincinnati has just devoted a full day to prayer and spiritual conference. Sixty or more ministers were present and a great evangelistic desire was evinced. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is to be in Cincinnati soon, under the auspices of Lane Seminary, for a special mission to students and ministers of the city. Evening services will be open to the public.

For Sleeplessness Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Dr. Patrick Booth, Oxford, N. C., says: "It acts admirably in insomnia, especially of old people and convalescents."

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have been selling perfumes for the past six months. I make them myself at home and sell to friends and neighbors. Have made $710. Everybody buys a bottle. For 50 cents' worth of material I make perfumes that would cost $2.00 in drug stores. I also sold 125 formulas for making perfumes at $1.00 each.

I first made it for my own use only, but the curiosity of friends as to where I procured such exquisite odors prompted me to sell it. I clear from $25 to $35 per week. I do not canvass, people come and send to me for the perfumes. Any intelligent person can do as well as I do. For 10 cents in stamps I will send you the formula for making twelve of the most popular odors and sample bottle prepaid. I will also help you get started in the business. Martha Francis. No. 11 So. Vandaventer Ave., St Louis.

BOOKS

A new edition of the Katy Did books has been published by Little, Brown & Company this fall. This new edition of Susan Coolidge's popular stories appears in a handsome new cover design.

No books for children published since Miss Alcott's books have won higher praise than those from the pen of Anna Chapin Ray, in which Teddy and her sister Phebe are the principal characters. This fall Little, Brown and Company have published a new volume in the popular Teddy series, entitled "Teddy; Her Daughter." The new book is illustrated by J. B. Graff.

D. Appleton and Company have in preparation a notable series of Nature books, superbly illustrated in colors by lithographic process. The new edition of Frank M. Chapman's "Bird Life," with seventy-five plates of our common birds in their natural colors, reproducing Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson's drawings; Prof. John Henry Comstock's "Insect Life," with its fine pictures of butterflies and other insects, and Mr. F. Schuyler Mathew's works on "Familiar Trees" and "Familiar Flowers," are particularly valuable.

Mrs. Laura E. Richards, whose "Geoffrey Strong" is among the holiday publications of Dana Estes and Company, has written in all thirty books and her readers are now in their second generation. Her previous stories have sold more than half a million copies.

Professor Amos R. Wells understands the multiform character of American life very accurately. He has come to the conclusion that one great foe to success is "worry," and to meet this foe and conquer him he has compiled "The Cheer Book" as the best year book for a busy man or woman. In it he has gathered the cheery wisdom of the ages, in prose and verse, noting carefully the authors, but not disregarding the stray testimonies that gather on an editor's desk. It is gotten out in unique, attractive form by the Revell Company and makes an elegant holiday gift-book.

Yes, clean yer house an' clean yer shed,
An' clean yer barn in ev'ry part;
But brush the cobwebs from yer head,
An' sweep the snowbanks from yer heart.
Yes, w'en spring cleanin' comes 'roun',
Bring forth the duster an' the broom,
But rake yer foggy notions down,
An' sweep yer dusty soul of gloom.
—Sam Walter Foss

Messrs. Dana Estes and Company's fall and holiday announcements include the following: Juveniles, "Chat-terbox" for 1901, containing over two

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Makes delicious hot biscuit, griddle cakes, rolls and muffins.

An absolutely pure, cream of tartar powder.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

hundred full-page illustrations expressly designed for the book by English artists. "Traveler Tales of China," by Hezekiah Butterworth, author of the celebrated "Zig Zag" series, containing folk lore and legends of the Chinese Empire, together with picturesque and historical description of the lands and people, illustrated by sixty-four full-page reproductions of new photographs and sketches; uniform with "Traveler Tales of South Africa."

"Sir Christopher," by Maud Wilder Goodwin, has been placed on the list of the one hundred best books of the year by the Western Massachusetts Library Club. A new edition of Mrs. Goodwin's "White Aprons," with colored frontispiece and five full-page illustrations, has been issued by Little, Brown & Co. for the holidays.

Sophie Cramp Taylor, the author of the new and popular juvenile "Story of a Little Poet," wrote the story for her three children, who appear as three of the principal characters, with no idea of publishing it. Many of the sayings and incidents are true, and some of the compositions of Paul, the little nine-year-old poet, are remarkable, considering his years. Here are his verses on Bridget's Wedding Day":

"Ring, ye bells, pour forth your lay,
For this is Bridget's wedding day.
Beat, ye drums, and toot, ye horn,
For this is not a day to mourn.

"Dance, ye people, and laugh with glee,
And be as happy as the bumble-bee.
If it's only for the night, be bright,
For we don't have weddings every night.

"May she always happy be,
And with Mike never disagree.
I hope she will ne'er again
Wish she was Bridget Flannagan."

L. J. Bridgman, the artist-author of that popular juvenile of last year,

"Mother Wild Goose and Her Wild Beast Show," offers this season, through his publishers, the H. M. Caldwell Co., New York and Boston, a juvenile novelty, entitled "Guess," being original riddles in rhyme, with the answers in pictures. The book, which the author describes "as sugar-coated educational pills," consists of 112 pages printed in colors, and has an unusually attractive and taking cover design. Its unique features are aptly suggested by the introduction:

"These pages are like sandwich
Men who go about the street
One sign before and one behind
For readers whom they meet.
If you can't guess the riddles here,
The answers you won't lack;
Just turn the pages and you'll find
The answers on the back."

The Macmillan Company, who were the fortunate publishers of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden," will issue another anonymous work shortly. This time of American outdoor life that bids fair, so say those who have read it, to rival Elizabeth's book, "The Garden of a Commuter's Wife; the Record of a Garden That Began in Autumn," will appear in time for the holiday season. It is now in press.

Mrs. Lily F. Wesselhoeft's new book entitled "High School Days in Harbortown," is in a somewhat different vein from that of her earlier stories, being written for the entertainment of boys and girls of from twelve to sixteen years of age. The author's love and knowledge of animals, so conspicuous in her previous books, is shown in the present work, and "Goggles," the faithful dog of the story is bound to be a great favorite. Little, Brown and Company, Boston, are the publishers.

Kirk Munroe's new book for boys.

just published by J. B. Lippincott Company, is called "The Belt of Seven Totems," and this title, Mr. Munroe says, was suggested by a discussion he had one evening in the University Club of New York with Mr. Charles Dudley Warner. This discussion concerned the attitude of American Indians towards the earliest white settlers of this continent. Mr. Warner maintained, as does Palfrey in his "History of New England," that the Indians, being a cowardly lot, were paralyzed into comparative inactivity by the evident superiority of the whites. "I contended," adds Mr. Munroe, "that at the beginning they were a hospitable and kindly race who would have scorned to attack strangers so helpless as were the newcomers; that their existing dissensions forbade them to present a united opposition; and that their apparent cowardice arose from their ignorance and uncertainty as to the true character of the mysterious strangers, as well as from a natural terror excited by the appearance of horsemen and the deadly effect of firearms."

"Up and Down the Sands of Gold," the new novel by Mary Devereux, author of "From Kingdom to Colony," takes its title from Longfellow's "Building of the Ship":

"The ocean old,
Centuries old;
Strong as youth and as uncontrolled,
Paces restless to and fro
Up and down the sands of gold."

The book is well named, as the incidents occur on the New England coast within sight and even within sound of the sea.

"The World Beautiful," first series, by Lilian Whiting, is to be published in France. Over 72,000 volumes of the three series of Miss Whiting's "World Beautiful" books have already been printed in English. Her latest volume "World Beautiful in Books" will be published by Little, Brown and Company some time in October.

"Brenda's Summer at Rockley," by Miss Helen Leah Reed, is offered by Little, Brown and Company, for early publication. Like the popular "Brenda, Her Club and Her School," this is a story for young girls. The scene is the picturesque North Shore of Massachusetts, and the story faithfully depicts the life of the average girl whose father has a summer home there. Brenda and her friends make excursions to Salem, Marblehead and other historic places, under the guidance of a new companion, Amy. The latter is made an especially attractive character.

Those who read the announcement of the Success Clubbing Offers, which give four and in some cases five magazines for the price of one, are very apt to wonder how it can be done. The Success Company answers by simply saying, "We are wholesalers." We sent almost 80,000 subscriptions to the "Review of Reviews" last season, over 80,000 to the "Cosmopolitan"; and immense numbers to other magazines. Our checks accompany every order, and publishers are relieved of large expenses for advertising, circularizing, etc. Naturally, therefore, we get the lowest possible prices—these prices are given exclusively to us—and we give the public the benefit of them. We cordially recommend our readers to take advantage of these great Success Clubbing Offers (advertised elsewhere in this issue) while the opportunity remains open. It enables them to make the most of their "magazine money."

A LILY OF FRANCE

One of the best selling Holiday books. A story of the romance of William, Prince of Orange, and Charlotte of Bourbon by Caroline Atwater Mason, author of a Minister of the World, a Wind Flower, the Quiet King, &c.

10,000 COPIES
Sold before Publication

SECOND 10,000
Now on Sale

The cover design is in blue and white, four illustrations, 456 pages, a beautiful and acceptable gift book. Price $1.10 net, postpaid $1.25.

Griffith and Rowland Press

PHILADELPHIA

For sale by all Booksellers and at 177 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

PERSONAL TO SUBSCRIBERS

WE WILL SEND to every subscriber or reader of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY a full-sized ONE DOLLAR package of VIT-E-ORE, by mail postpaid, sufficient for one month's treatment, to be paid for within one month's time after receipt, if the receiver can truthfully say that its use has done him or her more good than all the drugs and dopes of quacks or good doctors or patent medicines he or she has ever used. READ this over again carefully, and understand that we ask our pay only when it has done you good, and not before. We take all the risk: you have nothing to lose. If it does not benefit you, you pay us nothing. VIT-E-ORE is a natural, adamantine rock-like substance—mineral—ORE—mined from the ground like gold and silver, and requires about twenty years for oxidation. It contains free iron, free sulphur and magnesium, and one package will equal in medicinal strength and curative value 800 gallons of the most powerful, efficacious mineral water, drunk fresh at the springs. It is a geological discovery, to which there is nothing added or taken from. It is the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Blood Poisoning, Heart Trouble, Diphtheria, Catarrh and Throat Affectious, Liver, Kidney and Bladder Ailments, Stomach and Female Disorders, La Grippe, Malarial Fever, Nervous Prostration and General Debility, as thousands testify, and as no one, answering this, writing for a package, will deny after using. Give age, sex.

This offer will challenge the attention and consideration, and afterward the gratitude of every living person who desires better health, or who suffers pains, ills and diseases which have defied the medical world and grown worse with age. We care not for your skepticism, but ask only your investigation, and at our expense, regardless of what ills you have, by sending to us for a package. You must not write on a postal card.

In answer to this, address THEO. NOEL COMPANY, 527, 529, 531 W. North Ave., Chicago, Ill.

$2 a Year The Biblical World $2 a Year

25 Cts. SPECIAL OFFER TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION THREE MONTHS 25 Cts.

THE BIBLICAL WORLD, 6½ X 9½ inches, monthly. An indispensable aid to systematic Bible study. From new readers a trial subscription of three months will be received for 25 cents. Address. THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

REDUCED RATES FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR HOLIDAYS.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets December 24th, 25th, 31st, 1901, and January 1st, 1902, at rate of a fare and one-third for the round trip, to any point located in Central Passenger Association territory, good returning to and including January 2d, 1902. Pullman service on all trains. Individual Club Meals ranging in price from 35 cents to $1 served in Nickel Plate dining cars. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago, for particulars. Depot, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, on the Elevated Loop.

VERY EMPHATIC

are the claims made concerning the remarkable results obtained from the use of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine for quick and complete cure of all stomach troubles, such as dyspepsia, indigestion, flatulence and catarrh of stomach, with only one small dose a day.

These positive claims are made by thousands who are cured as well as by the compounders of this wonderful medicine. No statement can be too positive concerning what this great remedy has done and is now doing for sufferers.

A trial bottle is sent free and prepaid to any reader of the Christian Century who writes to Vernal Remedy Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine will cure any case of constipation, to stay cured. The most stubborn case will yield in less than a week, so the sufferer is free from all trouble and a perfect and permanent cure is well begun with only one small dose a day.

Every sufferer from catarrh, stomach troubles, constipation, torpid or congested liver and kidney troubles should write to Vernal Remedy Company, Buffalo, N. Y., for a trial bottle.

Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine is a specific for the cure of inflammation of bladder and prostate gland. A trial bottle is sent free and prepaid if you write for it.

THE FAIR SOUTHLAND

With its blue skies and balmy air, can best be reached via the

Southern Railway.

This great system reaches all important points in the South and, with its limited trains, elegant sleeping, parlor, dining and cafe cars, offers unexcelled service to Florida and all Southern tourist points.

"The Florida Limited"

Leaves Chicago daily, in the evening, arrives Jacksonville, Fla., the second morning, less than 35 hours en route, passing through Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Macon and Jesup.

Another Limited Train.

Leaving Chicago daily, in the morning, for Jacksonville, Fla., passes through Cincinnati, Knoxville, Asheville, Columbia and Savannah—a daylight ride through the famous "Land of the Sky."

Both limited trains carry sleepers, Chicago to Cincinnati, and through sleepers from Cincinnati to Jacksonville.

Another still to come! On January 6, 1902, the

"Chicago & Florida Special"

Will be inaugurated, running through sleepers, solid, Chicago to St. Augustine, Fla., via Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Jesup and Jacksonville. This train, with its elegant sleepers, composite and observation cars, perfect dining car service and fast time, will eclipse anything of the kind ever before offered to the public in the Northwest for the South.

South Carolina Interstate & West Indian Exposition.

Commencing Dec. 1, 1901, a through sleeper will be run from St. Louis to Charleston, S. C., via Louisville and Asheville.

Winter Tourist Tickets now on sale. For full particulars see your nearest ticket agent or write or call on J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A., 225 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.; G. B. Allen, A. G. P. A., St. Louis, Mo.

CANCER OF THE BREAST

So many people are dying of this terrible disease. The disease is increasing with wonderful rapidity. Mrs. B. F. Southard of Buffalo, Mo., has recently recovered from a most advanced stage of this disease by the Oil treatment of Dr. Bye of Kansas City, Mo. Mrs. Nancy F. Billings of West Bridgewater, Mass., was cured by home treatment. Persons afflicted should write Dr. Bye for 112 page illustrated book on the treatment of cancer in its various forms. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Kansas City, Mo.

LADIES. DR. J. LOAR'S FEMALE PRESCRIPTION CURES ALL FEMALE TROUBLES

One month Treatment $1.25. Three month Treatment $3.00
A. D. LOAR MED. CO. Bloomington, Ill.

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain in a Piano?

We have hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting by persons moving which must be disposed of at once as we cannot make room for them in our salesrooms. These pianos include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many of them cannot be distinguished from new, yet all are offered at a great discount from prices when new. Uprights as low as $100. Very easy terms of payment to reliable persons. Freight would cost you about $4. New large size mahogany pianos, with mandolin attachment, $175, sent anywhere on easy payments. Write at once for complete list and full particulars. You can make a great saving by securing your piano from us. Every piano warranted exactly as represented. LYON & HEALY, 92 Adams St., Chicago.
The World's Largest Music House.

GOD'S BOOKS

An Inquiry respecting
The Books of Judgment
WHAT THEY ARE
WHERE THEY ARE
WHAT THEY CONTAIN

By John Williams, with an introduction by I. N. McCash. L.L. D.

This is an interesting and attractive little book and contains many valuable thoughts. All book readers will want it. Paper binding only. Sent postpaid for 35 cents. Address,

The Christian Century Company
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY,
of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities, Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

Special Free Illustrated Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

TO ST. LOUIS
ILLINOIS CENTRAL
CENTRAL
MISSISSIPPI VALLEY
ROUTE
RAILROAD
DAYLIGHT SPECIAL
FAST DAY TRAIN
DIAMOND SPECIAL
POPULAR NIGHT TRAIN

Free Reclining Chair Cars, Parlor Cars, Dining Cars, Pullman Buffet Open and Compartment Sleeping Cars. See that your ticket between Chicago and St. Louis reads via Illinois Central Railroad. It can be obtained of your local ticket agent.
A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Ill. Cent. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

Marion Harland's New Departure

Unprecedented Introductory Offer of MARION HARLAND'S latest and best work entitled:

BITS OF COMMON SENSE SERIES

In four handsome volumes, comprising thirty different subjects. The books are beautifully printed from new large clear type specially selected for this edition, on fine white laid book paper, and handsomely bound in cloth. They are published under the authority of Marion Harland and protected by U. S. and European copyrights, and can only be had in this edition. You can not buy them in the book stores, you can secure them from us by accepting our subscription offer. We consider ourselves fortunate in being able to make our readers such liberal offers of so valuable a set.

THE AUTHOR.

MARION HARLAND as a writer on household affairs is world-famous. We could not add to the words of praise with which each new work from her pen has been received by the critics of the two continents.

There can hardly be a woman who is not familiar with some of her writings. She has been a constant contributor to the current literature of the day but it is as a writer of sound wholesome advice that we know her best. Her world-famous book "Common Sense in the Household" has enjoyed a sale of over 250,000 at $1.50 per copy. Her first complete novel entitled "Alone" ran over 100,000 copies in the United States. We are all more or less familiar with her famous novels such as "True as Steel," "Sunnybank," "Eve's Daughters," "Judith," also her "Breakfast, Luncheon and Tea," and "The Dinner Year Book." Over 800,000 copies of these last-named books have been sold. Her works on Domestic Life and Home Training have never been surpassed. Her last work, the "Bits of Common Sense" series offered here, is the essence of her life work. These charming volumes will be eagerly sought after by all women for the real sound and wholesome advice given on various household matters.

CONTENTS OF THE SET

Volume 1.
HEALTH TOPICS.

- Chapter.
 1. The Family Medicine Chest.
 2. The Latest Arrival.
 3. Food for Infants.
 4. Baby's Clothes.
 5. The "Second Summer."
 6. Sickness in the Family.
 7. "Brainy Children."
 8. Good Cookery as a Moral—Because Healthful—Agency.
 9. Good Cookery as a Moral—Because Healthful—Agency (Continued.)

Volume 2.
HOME TOPICS.

- Chapter.
 1. Helpful or Harmful.
 2. Manners for Everyday Wear.
 3. Our Girl and Don'tful Books.
 4. Politeness as Polity.
 5. Our Feet and Our Hands.
 6. Common-Sense Window-Gardening
 7. Common-Sense Window-Gardening
 8. The Marriage Tie.
 9. What People Should Not Wear.

Volume 3.
Household Management.

- Chapter.
 1. How We Make Housekeeping Harder.
 2. Ways and Ways of Work.
 3. Beds and Bed Making.
 4. How to Save Time and Yourself.
 5. Fine Art in "Drudgery."
 6. Spring House Cleaning.
 7. "Wanted—Change."
 8. Where the Shoe Pinches.
 9. Where the Shoe Pinches (Concluded)

Volume 4.
COOKING HINTS.

- Chapter.
 1. How to be Hospitable Though Rural
 2. Eggs—Their Uses and Abuses.
 3. Diet and Houses.
 4. The Modern Luncheon for Ladies Only.
 5. The Invariable Potato.
 6. Between Seasons.
 7. Hot Weather Dishes.
 8. "Under Protest."
 9. Oil Stoves and John.

TWO GREAT PREMIUM OFFERS

FOR TWO NEW ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS to The Christian Century at the regular rate, we will send free as a Premium, postpaid, this complete set of four cloth-bound volumes as described above.

FOR TWO DOLLARS CASH WITH order we will send, postpaid, this complete set of four cloth bound volumes as described above and The Christian Century for one whole year. Foreign postage, extra, $1.04.

Remember the regular subscription price of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is $1.50 a year. Foreign postage, extra, $1.04. Do not delay. Send your order to-day. Address,

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago

CHRISTIAN MELODIES

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

"Book of Rarest Musical Gems"

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time," etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. Contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

Choicest Songs of the Century

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets, were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all, "A Book of Gems."

Notice Reduction in Prices

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per hundred; $2.50 per dozen, not prepaid; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., - Chicago, Ill.

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

Through First Class and Tourist Sleeping Cars to

California and Oregon

Every day in the year between

Chicago, San Francisco
Los Angeles and Portland

via

Chicago, Union Pacific
and North-Western Line

A most comfortable and inexpensive means of making the trip overland

Lowest Rates • Finest Scenery
Shortest Time on the Road

Personally Conducted
Excursions

every Tuesday and Thursday
from Chicago

For illustrated pamphlets, rates and particulars inquire at ticket offices Chicago & North-Western Railway, 212 Clark Street or Wells Street Station, or address S. A. Hutchinson, 212 Clark Street, Chicago.

BELLS

all kinds big and little—for Church & School, for Fire, Factory and Farm. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY CO., Northville, Mich.

Burlington
Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago=St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Con'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE SUCCESS CLUBBING OFFERS

1901-2

1901-2

Four Magazines for the Price of One

WE are often asked "How Can You Do It?" The answer is simple,—we are "wholesalers." We sent almost 80,000 subscriptions to the Review of Reviews last season (over 10,000 in a single week); over 50,000 to the Cosmopolitan; and immense numbers to other magazines.

Our checks accompany every order, and publishers are relieved of large expenses for advertising, circularizing, etc. Naturally, therefore, we get the lowest possible prices—these prices are given exclusively to us—and we give the public the benefit of them.

Last season more than 300,000 people took advantage of our remarkable offers

OUR GREAT FAMILY OFFER

(For Father, Mother, Boys and Girls)

SUCCESS (new or renewal),

Regular Price

$1.00

Review of Reviews (new),

2.50

Current Literature (new), or New England Magazine may be substituted.

3.00

Cosmopolitan (new or renewal),

1.00

The Household, Good Housekeeping, or the Designer may be substituted.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, 1.00

The Household, Good Housekeeping, or the Designer may be substituted.

$ 6 In Value

$ 3

Our Price Only

Personal Checks Accepted

All Subscriptions are for a full year and may be sent to one or different addresses. Foreign Postage Extra

OTHER ATTRACTIVE OFFERS

(The "dollar-magazines" from which you may choose, in the following offer, are the Cosmopolitan, Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, the Household, Good Housekeeping, and the Designer)

SUCCESS, and any one of the above dollar-magazines, . . . . . $2.00 $1.50

SUCCESS, and any two of the above dollar-magazines, . . . . . 3.00 2.00

SUCCESS, { Review of Reviews (new), } and any one of the above dollar-magazines, . . . . . 5.00 2.50

SUCCESS, { or Current Literature (new), } and any one of the above dollar-magazines, . . . . . 5.00 2.75

SUCCESS, and LESLIE'S WEEKLY (new or renewal), . . . . . 5.00 2.75

SUCCESS, { Review of Reviews (new), } and any two of the above dollar-magazines . . . . . 6.00 3.00

SUCCESS, { or New England Magazine, } and any two of the above dollar-magazines . . . . . 6.00 3.00

SUCCESS, Review of Reviews (new), and Current Literature (new), . . . . . 6.50 3.00

SUCCESS, Current Literature (new), and New England Magazine (new or renewal), . . . . . 7.00 3.00

SUCCESS, { Review of Reviews (new), } and LESLIE'S WEEKLY, . . . . . 8.00 3.75

SUCCESS, { or Current Literature (new), } and LESLIE'S WEEKLY, . . . . . 8.00 3.75

SUCCESS, Review of Reviews (new), Current Literature (new), and New England Magazine . . . . . 9.50 4.00

All the magazines on our list are controlled exclusively by us for clubbing purposes. None of the periodicals can be secured at these remarkably low clubbing offers except through, or in combination with SUCCESS.

RENEWALS : New or renewal subscriptions will be accepted at the above prices for all magazines in our list (including SUCCESS), except Current Literature, the Review of Reviews, and the North American Review, for which all subscriptions must be new; but present subscribers to these three magazines may renew their subscriptions through our offers by adding one dollar for each renewal subscription to the combination prices named. Transfers from one member of a family to another are not new subscriptions.

OUR GREAT EDUCATIONAL OFFER

SUCCESS (new or renewal),

Regular Price

$1.00

North American Review (new),

5.00

Or Leslie's Weekly.

Current Literature (new),

3.00

The New England Magazine or any two of the above dollar-magazines may be substituted.

Review of Reviews (new)

2.50

The New England Magazine or any two of the above dollar-magazines may be substituted.

3.00

$ 12

(These four magazines will keep you in constant touch with the world of thought on all the burning questions of the day)

In Value $ 5

For Only

(Personal Checks Accepted)

SUBSTITUTIONS : A new subscription to REVIEW OF REVIEWS, a new subscription to CURRENT LITERATURE, and a new or renewal subscription to the NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE may be substituted each for the other. The COSMOPOLITAN, FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY, GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, the DESIGNER and the HOUSEHOLD may be substituted each for any other, except SUCCESS. A subscription to SUCCESS, either new or renewal, must be included in every order. Subscriptions will commence with issues requested wherever possible to furnish copies; otherwise with issues of the month following that in which the subscriptions are received. Copies of all the above periodicals may be purchased of your newsdealer with whom orders for these combinations may also be left.

EMPLOYERS subscribing to SUCCESS as a Christmas present for all their "business family" will not only do a kindly deed, but will reap a rich reward in the increased efficiency and faithfulness of their working force, through the inspiration and encouragement which SUCCESS brings to all.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS and TEACHERS can give their pupils no more appropriate and valuable gift than a subscription to SUCCESS, which may exercise a far-reaching influence upon their lives.

Send All Orders and Remittances to

THE SUCCESS COMPANY

272 University Building, Washington Square, - - NEW YORK CITY

A Magazine-Subscription makes the best possible Christmas Gift

Order immediately so as not to miss the Superb Holiday Issues

We want representatives for SUCCESS in every City, Town, and Village,—in every Church, School, and Neighborhood

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, December 12, 1901.

Number 30.

COPYRIGHT, 1901, BY FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY.

G. CAMPBELL MORGAN

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company.

358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arrearage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES

Quarterly Helps.

THE PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Youngest Classes. It contains Lesson Stories, Lesson Questions, Lesson Thoughts and Lesson Pictures, and never fails to interest the little ones.

TERMS.

Table with 2 columns: Quantity, Price. Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents. 10 copies, per quarter, $ .20; per year, $ .75. 25 copies, " .40; " 1.50. 50 " " .75; " 3.00.

THE YOUTH'S QUARTERLY

A Lesson Magazine for the Junior Classes. The Scripture Text is printed in full, but an interesting Lesson Story takes the place of the usual explanatory notes.

TERMS—Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 2 1-2 cents each per quarter.

THE SCHOLAR'S QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Senior Classes. This Quarterly contains every help needed by the senior classes. Its popularity is shown by its immense circulation.

TERMS.

Table with 2 columns: Quantity, Price. Single copy, per quarter, $ .10; per year, $ .30. 10 copies, " .40; " 1.25. 25 " " .90; " 3.00. 50 " " 1.60; " 6.00. 100 " " 3.00; " 12.00.

THE BIBLE STUDENT.

A Lesson Magazine for the Advanced Classes, containing the Scripture Text, in both the Common and Revised Versions, with Explanatory Notes, Helpful Readings, Practical Lessons. Maps, etc.

TERMS.

Table with 2 columns: Quantity, Price. Single copy, per quarter, $ .10; per year, $ .40. 10 copies, " .70; " 2.50. 25 " " 1.60; " 6.00. 50 " " 3.00; " 10.50. 100 " " 5.50; " 20.00.

BIBLE LESSON PICTURE ROLL.

Printed in 8 colors. Each leaf, 26 by 37 inches, contains a picture illustrating one lesson. 13 leaves in a set. Price per Roll—one quarter—reduced to 75 cents.

CHRISTIAN PICTURE LESSON CARDS.

A reduced fac-simile of the large Bible Lesson Picture Roll. Put up in sets, containing one card for each Sunday in quarter. One set will be required for each child in the class. Price reduced to 2 1-2 cents per set.

Monthly.

CHRISTIAN BIBLE LESSON LEAVES.

These Lesson Leaves are especially for the use of Sunday-schools that may not be able to fully supply themselves with the Lesson Books or Quarterlies.

TERMS.

Table with 2 columns: Quantity, Price. 10 copies, 1 mo., $ .15; 3 mos., $ .30; 1 yr., $1.00. 25 " " .25; " .60; " 2.40. 50 " " .45; " 1.20; " 4.60. 100 " " .75; " 2.10; " 8.00.

Weekly.

THE LITTLE ONES.

Printed in Colors.

This is a Weekly for the Primary Department in the Sunday-school and the Little Ones at Home, full of Charming Little Stories, Sweet Poems, Merry Rhymes and Jingles, Beautiful Pictures and Simple Lesson Talks. The prettiest and best of all papers for the very little people.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than five copies to one address, 25 cents a copy per year. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL EVANGELIST.

This is a Weekly for the Sunday-school and Family, of varied and attractive contents, embracing Serial and Shorter Stories; Sketches; Incidents of Travel; Poetry; Field Notes; Lesson Talks, and Letters from the Children. Printed from clear type, on fine calendered paper, and profusely illustrated.

TERMS—Weekly, in clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 30 cents a copy per year, or 8 cents per quarter. Single copy, 50 cents per year.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A Large Illustrated Weekly Magazine, devoted to the welfare and work of Our Young People, giving special attention to the Sunday-school and Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. It contains wood-cuts and biographical sketches of prominent workers, Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons, and Endeavor Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, Outlines of Work, etc. This Magazine has called forth more commendatory notices than any other periodical ever issued by our people. The Sunday-school pupil or teacher who has this publication will need no other lesson help, and will be able to keep fully "abreast of the times" in the Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. work.

TERMS—One copy, per year, 75 cents; in clubs of ten, 60 cents each; in packages of ten or more to one name and address, only 50 cents each. Send for Sample.

Model Sunday-School Record.

A complete record of the Attendance of Officers, Teachers and Pupils, with column for Roll of Officers, Teachers, and column for recording Attendance or Absence, Collections by Classes, Total Enrollment, with Gain or Loss for the Quarter, List and Cost of Supplies, Treasurer's Receipt to Secretary, Weekly and Quarterly Report, etc., for one to twenty-eight classes, all for entire quarter, without turning a leaf. Each book contains blanks for two years' records. Cloth.....$1.00

Model Sunday-School Treasurer's Book.

Arranged for the Systematic Recording of all Receipts and Expenditures. Blanks for Annual Reports, etc. Good for three years. Fine paper. Pocket size, cloth, 25 cents. Morocco.....$ .50

Model Sunday-School Class Book.

Arranged for Complete Record of Name, Residence, Date of Entering, Attendance, Contributions, etc. Good for one year. Single copy, five cents. Per dozen.....$ .50

Standard Sunday-School Class Book.

Ruling and Printed Headings, and keeps One Month's Record without turning a leaf. Good for one year. Bound in marbled paper. Single copy, ten cents. Per dozen.....$ .75

Sunday-School Collection and Class Envelopes.

Cloth-lined, printed, and good for one year. Per dozen.....$ .50 Manila paper, printed, and good for one year. Per hundred, 35 cents. Per thousand.....$ 2.25

Model Superintendent's Roll or Pocket Record.

Containing an Alphabetical List of the Names and Addresses of all the Pupils connected with the School; also, List of Officers and Teachers, with Addresses, and blanks for recording some of the most important items from the Secretary's Weekly Reports. Cloth, 50 cents. Morocco... $ .75

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

358 Dearborn Street,

Chicago, Ill.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM....

Chicago Indianapolis Cincinnati Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C., And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent, 234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

AGENTS Make 100 PER CENT

on Conklin's Vest Pocket Argument Settler. Revised edition with New Census Statistics, 254 pgs. A complete Encyclopedia of a million proved Facts Tables, and General Information. It settles Arguments instantly. Invaluable to everyone. Sample postpaid, Cloth, 25c., Morocco, 50c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. George W. Noble, 285 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

RHEUMATISM...

is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, breaks cords, and hardened muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take any pains to send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

UNLIKE OTHERS BELLS ARE SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., December 12, 1901.

Number 30.

EDITORIAL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

LOVE THE LAW OF CHRIST.

THE necessary sequence of the approach to Jesus in full-hearted acceptance of his invitation, "Come unto Me," must be the acquisition of his mind and character. When once the soul has come into unity with him by love and obedience, nothing less than the quality which was dominant in him can satisfy. To possess that nature and disposition which were his will be the controlling passion of the soul.

In looking at the Christ of the New Testament and of history we are instantly aware that the supreme expression of his life was love, and that thus he became in a true sense the revelation of the life of God. He said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me," which he did not utter as signifying his demand that men should recognize his mediatorship, but rather as emphasizing the impossibility of knowing the Father or of drawing near to him save in Christ. And when once this discovery of the divine character is made, that the strongest quality in God's life is love, both nature and revelation seem to unite in proclaiming the fact. It is true that we may read the Old Testament as we may read the book of nature without discovering this quality, but as soon as the life of Christ has given us the key it is no longer possible to avoid the significance of the disclosure which he makes. The whole prophetic history of Israel was a continuous unfolding of the nature of God as loving and as seeking the response of love on the part of his people. Forgiveness is the constantly recurring theme of the earlier Scriptures, in which the love of God expresses itself at its best, not only in the passion of pardon but in the stern warnings against the dangers of sin.

And when one goes outside this ampler revelation of God in the Bible and looks at nature in her varied forms he discovers that she also has been insistent upon the proclamation of the law of love. Our science has misread her character when it has insisted that her only interests lay in the realm of force, of hate, of revenge and of strife, in a hard and repelling principle of the survival of the fittest and the crushing of the weak and helpless. We are learning with satisfaction in these days from prophets of science no less severe in their methods, but perhaps ampler in their horizon, that the law of love is the law of nature as well as of the Bible. The struggle for others is witnessed in the entire series of animal organisms; the mother love of offspring, and sacrifice in its behalf; the law of affection in a group of animals, which dictates their protection of their weaker members against assault and destruction. Indeed, when Paul speaks of the law of Christ as embodied in the injunction, "Bear ye one another's burdens," he is speaking of a law not belonging alone to a single teacher and his rules of conduct, but rather so characteristic of the universe as to make that teacher who first gave the law expression the world's greatest prophet. We are yet to learn that the only successful life is that based upon the law of love, which is also the law of the universe. Unjust rivalries and competitions must disappear and those who advocate and practice them are destined to be overthrown in the development of the race because they are unscientific and self-destructive. Thus the high principles of the law of God unite with economic conditions to emphasize this principle which found its fullest expression in the heart and teachings of Jesus.

Yet the love which Christ displayed was not a mild and amiable toleration, nor a small philanthropy manifested toward a few unfortunate folk. It was a passion of affection which issued perpetually in a service so large and inspiring that it meant nothing less than the redemption of those on whom its benediction fell. Jesus loved the disciples whom he chose, and the greatest agonies of his earthly life were caused by the defections of these men from the spirit and purpose of his ministry. We are told that as he looked upon the rich young man whom he bade give up all his possessions, Jesus loved him, and this love was the kindling of the Master's regard toward one in whom he saw great possibilities of good. The charm of his nature won the Samaritans who came at the call of the woman Jesus had met at the well. Zacchæus, in the presence of that winning and compelling affection, melted from his habitual mood of harsh and stubborn unrepentance into a flood of eager zeal to do the Master's will. The multitude in the desert experienced this same love as Jesus ministered to them from the fullness of his life, and those who saw him weep over Jerusalem with cries that seemed to rend his heart knew that his love was not idle emotion.

Such a spirit as his, with its ruling motive, could not fail to influence those men whom he called to be his followers and representatives. They became insensibly pervaded by his spirit and their lives were transformed by his example and his indwelling mind. James, his own brother, who appears in early Christian history to have been a man unsentimental to a degree and possessed of that stern righteousness which made so large a part of the Phariseism of the times, pours out his soul in the epistle which bears his name in words which at times reveal a deep and growing possession of divine tenderness and love. Peter, whose practical nature took long to experience its complete transformation nevertheless speaks in his later years in words eloquent and reverent of that sympathy, humility, and love which had characterized the Lord, and which had already passed in truly transforming streams into his own life. Paul, the practical Jew, full of ambitions and self-importance, priding himself on his ancestry and the correctness of his legal conduct, comes at last to forget all these lower and less essential elements of righteousness and to glory in his kinship with Christ, which was his chief possession and joy. To him we owe the finest utterance of all the New Testament, his marvelous Psalm of Love, which is not only the revelation of the heart of Christ, but the coronation of Paul's own transfigured character. And one hardly need mention John, who, from the fiery and ambitious Galilean partisan, the Son of Thunder, the man of ambition, and, at times, of intolerance and anger, came to be truly the apostle of love, and to speak in words of imperishable beauty the final message of the New Testament. It is not strange that early Christianity struck this note of love with a firm and vigorous touch; and that through its influence there came into this world of hate and striving ambitions the gospel of humility, love and good will.

THE CHRONICLER'S DESK.

ONE in these days often comes across a remark of this kind: "For hundreds of years the churches have been preaching a gospel equally adapted to embodied and disembodied spirits. Religion now is dealing less in futures and laying more stress on the present." It is said when Henry D. Thoreau lay dying at Concord, his friend, Parker Pillsbury, sat by his bedside; he leaned over, and took him by the hand, and said, "Henry, you are so near to the border now, can you see anything on the other side?" And Thoreau answered, "One world at a time, Parker." Religion must lay plenty of emphasis on the present, it must be sociological and psychological and ethical, as well as theological, but religion will never see the day when it can adopt the modern fad, "one world at a time." A fully developed man already lives in two worlds at the same time, and he cannot do with less. I must know what kind of a person I am before I can tell what kind of a life I ought to live. If human life is animal life simply, and death is the extinguisher of life, then indeed one world at a time, and one world for all time. If this is an animal world only, then may I live an animal life, and die an animal death, and enter the animal Nirvana of endless unconsciousness. If, however, I am made in God's image and after God's likeness, and possess the indestructible nature of God, and if, through this relationship to the divine, I touch the spiritual world and hold communion with it, then no one world at a time will do for me. I must make the most of both worlds while living in this world. If the extreme of the mediæval church in despising this life in the interest of the life to come was bad, the other extreme of ignoring the future existence in the interest of the life that now is, is worse. Two worlds at a time, if you please.

The Dean of Rochester, whose name, significantly enough, is Hole, declared recently that evolution was a "bubble from a dirty pipe." He fell afoul of those who believe in evolution declaring that they "do nothing for the Church." This is doubtless true of many of them, as it is of the majority of anti-evolutionists. Is there any real or logical connection between the premise alleged and the effect attributed to it? The Chronicler has several times heard the assertion made by orthodox conservatives that evolutionists and higher critics were not the men who were saving souls or doing the work of the Church. In fact, this is a stock argument seriously put on the boards to overthrow these dangerous heresies of modern scholastics. Now the Chronicler has no concern to defend evolution or the doctrine of higher criticism in these columns; but he is interested in justice, fairness, the exposure of false reasoning and truth-telling about those who may not see eye to eye with our noble selves. As a matter of fact, is it true that believers in evolution and higher criticism are inferior to their orthodox brethren in the business of soul-saving and in practical service for the Church? W. Robertson Smith, the brilliant evolutionist, who practically introduced the higher criticism into Scotland, was one of the most intensely evangelical preachers north of the Tweed. Hugh Price Hughes, whom the Chronicler heard say he had not held a single service in the six years of his work in St. James' hall, Piccadilly, without a conversion, is well known to be in line with modern thought on these questions. Dr. Clifford, one of the great preachers and thinkers of the world, presides over an immense congregation in London, and numbers his conversions annually by the hundreds. This believer and advocate of modern views has one of the largest and most active and consecrated churches in the metropolis of the world.

Robert F. Horton is particularly pertinent as an illustration of the point before us. Mr. Horton has a genius for spiritual insight and literary expression. An Oxford scholar, he approaches nearer to a critical expert of the first order, of any popular preacher in the world. He has written a half-dozen brilliant volumes in exposition and defense of the higher criticism, much to the scandal and consternation of many pious, old-fashioned believers. This same man, Horton, is one of the most intense, unctuous, consecrated, evangelical preachers in England, and presides over the most prosperous church in London. His congregation in Hampstead gives more money and does more evangelistic and social work than any other organization in the great city of great churches. These facts and many others like them go to show that the differences between the two schools in relation to evolution and higher criticism have no evangelical significance and no religious value, and the reason of the soul-saving power of both parties, as demonstrated notably in the co-operative work of Henry Drummond and Dwight L. Moody, is that alike they preach the eternal gospel of the grace of God for the salvation of men.

The cogency of Dean Hole's logic and the clearness of his perception may be seen from another affirmative of his. Speaking on the drink question, he said: "The drinking races have not only conquered, but have moralized the world. The Jew drank and gave us monotheism and Christianity, the Greek drank and gave us literature and art, the Roman drank and gave us law, the Teuton drank (hard) and gave us the passion for freedom." If this rodomontade is to be taken seriously it means because the Jew drank he gave us monotheism and Christianity; a doctrine of inspiration in which physiologists and theologians will find food for reflection! This reminds us of the assertion that left a stain on the memory of Archbishop Magee, who declared that he would rather see England free than England sober, as though England drunk could be England free! It was the sober Jew who made the inspired race; it was the sober Greek who gave us literature, art and philosophy; it was the sober Roman who gave us law and forensic wisdom; it was the sober Teuton who gave us the passion for freedom; no drunken brute in bondage to lust and appetite ever did anything of the kind. It is a thousand pities that the Church of England gives the weight of its great influence to the accursed rum traffic, and that her high officials in complicity with the trade constantly apologize for this abomination of desolation in the holy place of humanity.

Recently the Chronicler was requested to send a committee of ladies his favorite quotation. In seeking to ascertain which one of many should occupy that place of honor, he was struck through and through with fright upon the discovery that most of them were from unorthodox and heretical sources. The one he sent was actually from Herbert Spencer, "The profoundest infidelity is fear lest the truth be bad." Good enough and true to have been said by an inspired prophet. It strikes in the midst where many religious leaders of the present day are camping! Another came to mind from Carlyle: "Love not pleasure, love God, this is the everlasting yea, in which all contradiction is solved, wherein he who walks and works, it is well with him." Here is a rich and timely quotation from Dr. James Martineau that suits the Chronicler's way of thinking exactly: "Complete unbelief is attained when God is driven as much out of the past as we have driven him out of the present; and complete belief is reached when God is made to fill the present as much as piety causes him to fill the past." Piety has no trouble in filling ancient Israel with God, it is atheistic and impious to deny that he is equally with us to-day, although some of the methods of the divine manifestations have doubtless changed. The Chronicler will not quote from Tennyson, "Better to have loved and lost," etc., or from Longfellow's "Psalm of Life," "Lives of great men all remind us," etc., or from Milton, "He who only stands and waits," etc., or from Lowell, "Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne," etc., but will close with the suggestion that the quotable sentences and sayings of great men add an important element to the resources of writers and speakers. They are useful for argumentative and illustrative as well as for ornamental purposes.

THE EXPLANATION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

HERE are no people who keep a more watchful eye upon the press of the country, and exercise over it a more vigilant censorship than the Christian Scientists. The following reply to an editorial note in a recent number of The Christian Century will speak for itself:

To the Editor: It seems odd after enumerating some of the beneficial results of Christian Science, as you do in your issue of November 21st, that you should object to the Christian Scientists' explanation of how these results were obtained. It would seem to be a logical proposition that the only person whose explanation is worth anything, is the person who is able to apply Christian Science and obtain such results as you credit it with in the following words: "On the practical side it has been of immense benefit to thousands of people. It has healed disease; it has taken fret and worry out of many lives. Its benefits every unprejudiced person must admit."

And is it not a waste of words for those who are without a demonstrable knowledge of the subject, to attempt to explain it?

ARCHIBALD M'LELLAN.

Now, this is delicious! Because one accepts certain facts he does not necessarily accept a given explanation of them. One might accept the fact of an eclipse without accepting the explanation of the savage that it was caused by a dragon devouring the sun. And one might accept the facts touching the practical side of Christian Science without accepting the absurd explanation which Christian Scientists put upon them.

The assertion that the Christian Scientist is in this case "the only person whose explanation is worth anything," is simply amusing. Surely there are some other people left in the world who possess a sufficient measure of the judicial faculty to enable them to weigh evidence, and to search into the reason of things. A religious cult is in a poor way when it has no rational explanation to give for itself, such as ordinary mortals can understand. Christianity itself makes its appeal unto reason. Its advocates front the world, saying: "We speak as unto wise men; judge ye what we say;" and until Christian Scientists have a rational philosophy to offer they need not be astonished if sober-minded people refuse to accept their illogical theories. It is always a suspicious thing anyway when you try to pin one down to give a reason for the hope that is in him, if like the cuttle fish, he surrounds himself with a cloud of ink in which he endeavors to make his escape. A system that cannot stand the test of reason has much need to hide in a cloud of philosophic verbiage.

Similar beneficial results to those connected with Christian Science are to be found in connection with other remedial methods. Divine Healing, Faith Cure, Metaphysical Healing, Hypnotism, and the like have substantially the same credentials to show. They all point to the same class of cases in evidence of their power to heal. There must therefore be some common law underlying them all. That common law is unquestionably the law of therapeutic suggestion, by which, through the subtle action and interaction of mind upon mind, one person can convey to another health-giving suggestion and impulse. This at least has the merit of being an explanation that explains.

SCARCITY OF MISSIONARIES.

Additional confirmation of the statement that despite the wonderful enthusiasm awakened a few years ago by the Student Volunteer movement, there is at present a dearth of suitable missionaries for the foreign field, is furnished in the fact that the Mission Board of the Reformed Church asks the General Synod to arrange for a conference in which the situation may be carefully considered. It says:

Our missions have reached another crisis in their history. Not now burdened by financial debt to any considerable extent, the Board finds itself confronted by a situation which is in some respects even harder to bear. Since 1881 the fields under its care have prospered in a remarkable degree. Its missionaries have more than doubled and the results of their work have increased many times more in every particular. Each mission needs and loudly calls for men and women whom it is unable to send out. Even vacancies caused by the death of some of our oldest, most honored and best beloved missionaries and the withdrawal of others have not been filled. Meantime the call for men to reap the harvest of seed sown is louder than ever and the prospect of harvest brighter if only the laborers can be sent forth into it.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The first message of President Roosevelt to Congress is a dignified and statesmanlike document. It is characterized by admirable poise, breadth of vision, and practical suggestiveness. It begins with an appropriate tribute to the memory of the late President, from which it naturally passes on to a consideration of anarchy, which it denounces as a crime against the whole human race. Repressive measures are advocated; but these alone are not sufficient. The disease is in the blood, and the causes that produce it must be inquired into and remedied. It is impossible in a brief note even to enumerate the points touched upon in this comprehensive message. They afford food for reflection, and will no doubt be the subjects of prolonged discussions. For its high ethical tone the message is specially to be commended.

THE EXCLUSION OF THE CHINESE.

General satisfaction is expressed with regard to the decided position taken by the President in his message on the question of re-enacting the law excluding not only Chinese laborers who come to this country under contract, but the Chinese in general. There may be some valid economic reasons for this stringent measure, but where are we to stop? Will the edict of exclusion be extended to the Japanese, who are beginning to invade the western coast? And does it not look a trifle inconsistent anyway, as the Chinese member Wu Ting Fang pointed out the other day in his fiery speech, to force an open door into China that we may impose our civilization upon a people who do not want it, while we reciprocate by slamming our own door in their face?

FRENCH MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

According to the confidential report of General Vayron to the French government, a wholesale system of looting was organized and carried out by the French missionaries in Peking. This report is confirmed by the statements of responsible Chinese officials who say that the missionaries in China fail to practice what they preach. The justification given for these systematic expeditions of spoliation is, of course, that the missions and their converts having suffered from the Boxer uprising, were entitled to indemnity; but on ethical grounds this method of collecting indemnity is wholly unjustifiable. Such things will retard for generations the progress of Christianity in China.

OPENING OF CHARLESTON EXPOSITION.

It was a happy idea of the directors of the Charleston Exposition that when it was discovered that the opening day had been put down in the charter for December 1st without observing that the date fell on Sunday, they resolved to turn the occasion to good account by making it a distinctively religious service. The attendance was large. Bishop Capers of the Episcopal diocese of South Carolina, presided at the service, and representatives of all the religious denominations of the city were present.

FATE OF MISS STONE.

Contradictory rumors reach us from day to day regarding the fate of Miss Ellen M. Stone, the missionary who is held for ransom by brigands in the mountains of Bulgaria. From last accounts we gather that she is still alive, although reports of her death have frequently been circulated. Some of her friends think that her release is near; others think that she will be held by her captors until spring. It is difficult for us at this distance to realize how any one could be kept in confinement so long in spite of the efforts by the authorities to effect her release.

G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

We have as the frontispiece of the present number an attractive portrait of the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, the English evangelist, who is at present carrying out the work outlined for him by Mr. Moody. Mr. Morgan's recent meetings in Chicago were eminently fruitful and a strong effort is being made to have him return to the city for evangelistic work during the month of April of the coming year.

OUTBREAK IN GREECE.

It is difficult to understand the reasons for the outbreak at Athens on account of the proposal to translate the Bible into modern Greek. One reason seems to be that those who pride themselves on direct descent from the ancient Greeks resent what they regard as the degradation of the classic tongue of Pericles and Plato; but the prime reason is to be found in opposition to Russian influence which is being secretly employed to break down the Greek national spirit. Apart from the animus of the movement there would probably be no objection to giving the sacred Scriptures to the common people in their own tongue.

THE RIGHT KIND OF MONUMENT

The nurses of Boston have submitted to Governor Crane, chairman of the state commission on McKinley memorial, a unique plan for perpetuating the memory of President McKinley. They want the fund devoted to establishing the "McKinley Order of Nurses." The idea is to make the McKinley order in this country what the Victoria Order of Nurses is in England. No memorial would be more in harmony with the sympathetic character of Mr. McKinley himself.

CONTRIBUTED

A WORLD-ORATIO.

E. S. COLBORN.

God of the Nations! just and true,
Of all the past and yet to be!
In trials sore and conflicts dire,
We lift our hearts and hopes to Thee.

Fain would men walk in ways of peace,
Along the paths of earthly life,
But sin and pride lead them astray,
And on they drift to mortal strife.

Thou God of Nations! lead us on,
In peaceful ways if this may be,
But whether peace or strife or war,
Through faith may we look up to Thee.

God of the Nations! just and true,
In peace or strife or war's dread scourge,
In ways of right lead us along,
And of all wrongs the nations purge.

In throes of anguish and of death,
Where nations groan from day to day,
May Heaven's mercy send relief
And roll the darkening clouds away.

Father of Nations and of Worlds,
Great Parent of the human race,
Through faith we look to Thee and cry,
Save lands and peoples by thy grace.

THE NEXT STEP.

C. S. PEDLEY, B. A.

THE nineteenth century was momentous in the history of Protestant Christendom. It throbbed with life, and abounded in religious activities. It saw the birth of great hopes, and the realization of some of them. But it went out leaving the Church profoundly dissatisfied with itself, face to face with some disheartening facts with which it found itself practically powerless to deal: The alienation of the wage-earning classes; the indifference of the more keenly intellectual people to church services; the lapse from church influence of increasing numbers of respectable sober-minded citizens and their families; the loss from the church of so large a percentage of the young people; and (one of the most disturbing features), the aversion of church-going people themselves to the serious problems of religion, and the tendency of the churches to rely on superficialities—clever preaching, "attractive" music and social advantages, to retain their hold on their people.

One sign of this dissatisfaction was the recurrence in the latter years of the century of such phrases as "the coming church," the "church of the future," "the twentieth century church." These bore witness to a sense of being hitherto baffled, a consciousness that the work of the past had been to start and develop problems but not to solve them; a conviction that these problems had been approaching a critical point at which a solution must be forthcoming if the Church—Protestant Christendom—was not to fail of its hopes; an eager looking forward to the dawn of a new age. If the nineteenth century started the difficulties or brought them to a head, the twentieth century was to settle them.

Well, the twentieth century has come. But is there any sign of the twentieth century church? Are we making headway? Have the representatives of our common Protestant Christianity as yet seriously considered and grappled with the task the nineteenth century has left as a legacy to us? Individuals doubtless are working at it; isolated sections are trying experiments directed to one or other element of the problem; they will go on doing that, but is there any sign of the coming together of men of all parties in a determined effort to find and face the bottom causes of the nervelessness of the Church's grip upon the world at this date?

I suggest three lines along which a profound revolution has been in progress, resulting for Christendom in a state of things with which old-fashioned Churchism is incapable of dealing. There must be a radical readjustment of the different sections of the Church to one another, and that must arise out of or be contemporaneous with a radical readjustment of the relations to each other of the members of each section. There will result a new statement, in new power, of the gospel message. It will be the end of one age and the dawn of another.

Take the whole period since the Reformation and consider what has taken place in each of these directions.

1. In the direction of a great expansion and intensifying of the ethical demand made in the name of Christianity. And this on two sides. The Church on her side has been developing an ever loftier ideal of personal character and a broader conception of social righteousness. Religion is seen more and more to be a spirit pervading all departments of life, the social, commercial, political, as well as the private. This constitutes the Church's demand upon the world. But the world, on its side, makes a corresponding demand upon the Church. It insists on judging the Church by its own standards. It calls on Christian men to line up to the higher ideals which the progress of Christianity has evolved. Of course it was always expected that Christians should show themselves patterns in conduct. "Christian" is the world's highest name for conduct, and has been so all along. But the standard has risen. Rough tests have been replaced by finer. The grocer's scales have given way to the chemist's balance. The possibilities of Christian character are put higher. Its range has widened.

Sham Christianity, skin-deep Christianity, the Christianity of spiritual paralytics, who are alive in parts, but not all through, crude and low-grade Christianity, never had less chance to pass for more than they were worth than to-day. That is, with the world outside the Church. Within the Church it is different. Paradoxical as it may seem the Church seems to grow more tolerant of what fails to come up to standard in the same measure as it is teaching the world to be more severe. And with that its hold on men goes.

2. In the crumbling of the old social order. When the Reformation dawned, society was ranged in well-defined classes—nobility, gentry, artisans, laborers, etc. The rules of precedence which are seen in their glory now only in royal courts, obtained throughout the social fabric. Every one knew his place and accepted it. "Ordering ourselves lowly and reverently to all our betters" was more than a phrase in a church catechism. It was a rule of life. Only a few extreme people questioned it or strove to disregard it. The rich were the patrons of the poor and accepted and revered as such, and the poor were those who were not rich; so men met in church, each in his own order. The well-born and well-to-do took precedence by a sort of natural right which no one questioned and the rest fell in behind. There was no friction.

This order is passing away. Democracy has come, men call labor king. The order is passing away but it has not passed. Liberty has got itself pretty well established; but equality? fraternity? They are not yet here. Here and not here; an idea striving for a footing and not yet established. The two orders in conflict, sometimes with noise and tumult of the battle, oftener silent but none the less strenuous. Church fellowship has become difficult; it involves so much of general social fellowship; impossible now on the old feudal basis of classes ranked in well-defined order one below another; impossible as yet on the new basis of democracy. The old lines blurred but felt to be there; so that we don't know quite where we are, and walk warily as over fields lined out with old half-sunken fences and partly filled ditches, some wishing them repaired, some wishing them gone, some wishing to run new dividing lines, on various principles. Meantime the rich and poor will not meet together, and the church is a congeries of social cliques. Catholicism, where it flourishes, hardly feels this difficulty; for Catholicism is founded on the feudal instinct and frankly accepts aristocracy. Protestantism, on the contrary, is essentially democratic, and cannot flourish till it as frankly accepts the position and adjusts itself to it. It must either democratise society or go to the wall.

3. In the direction of theological chaos. The early Protestants were united by a common creed. There were, it is true, many subjects of controversy, but what we have agreed to call "The Evangelical Theology" in its fundamental assumptions and broad features, was embraced with practical unanimity. The words, Inspiration, Trinity, Fall, Atonement, Prophecy, Judgment, Heaven, Hell, etc., stood for definite conceptions generally received as of absolute validity, and where differences existed of any moment, they found expression as a rule in different sects or communions. But to-day all varieties of belief co-exist within the same communion. In the early years of last century profound differences in theology led to the rise of Unitarianism to the status of an important sect in America. Channing was a Unitarian; his father was an orthodox Calvinist. To-day there are many members of so-called evangelical churches who are farther removed from the position of Channing's father than even Channing was. There are Unitarians in New England—there certainly were twenty years ago—far nearer the evangelical position in fundamental assumptions than some who sit at orthodox communion tables. In not a few minds the old system of theology has been unbuilded down to the ground. Our churches are composed of members whose minds are in various stages of theological decomposition, side by side with others in various stages of theological reconstruction. Occasionally a religious teacher comes sharply out, in virtue of a greater boldness and definiteness than the common, into conflict with the orthodox creed as set forth in the formulas of his church, and we have a trial for heresy, and possibly a deposition from office, but he never stands alone, he is a voice speaking for a larger number; the number is growing. Trials for heresy are getting less easy to bring about. The "way called heresy" is winning a home for itself in the Church ever more feebly disputed.

What I am seeking to describe is not a change of front. It is a change from definite front to no front. The Church is now facing every way theologically, and not any one way, old or new. It is not new theology; it is theological chaos.

The evil of this lies chiefly within the Church. Dr. Pierson some years ago wrote of "the leaven of a new theology" as "cutting the nerve of missions;" he was referring to missions to the heathen. But it is something more serious than even the cutting of an important nerve. It is paralysis of the very brain of the Church. It is a blight upon zeal for anything. Christian fellowship becomes almost impossible. It is not only that the ministers distrust each other. The whole membership, in proportion as it is earnest, is infected with this distrust. Theology itself has ceased to interest large numbers. They take refuge in indifference; as if after all, in the religion which is to win the world to faith, it doesn't matter what a man believes.

Is there not a growing number of devout people who give the Church up, as offering something it has no power to give—no fellowship of kindred souls but only a loose aggregation of minds set at various angles of irreconcilable difference, and held together from the outside rather than from the inside? Are there not good men who find nothing better than to say with Clough:

"O let me love my love unto myself alone,
And know my knowledge to the world unknown;
No witness to my vision call,
Beholding, unbeheld of all;
And worship thee, with thee withdrawn apart."

How can the Church put forth her strength in these straits? She is like a man standing with one foot on shore and the other on a rocking boat; or rather, one foot on one boat, the other on another, each tossing indifferent to the other in a sea that is never still.

It may be urged that it is useless pointing these things out unless at the same time one has a remedy to propose. Nevertheless, the aim of this paper is not to propose remedies. The first thing to do is to get all thoughtful Christians to see how these movements have been affecting the Church. If the three movements I have sketched have been in progress with the results indicated, then here are three formidable obstacles in the path of Protestant Christendom, and nothing strong can be hoped for, no effective progress can be made while they block the way. The important thing at present is not to offer remedies but for Christians generally to see where the Church's weakness lies. Let it be clearly seen that the ethical ideal has left the Church's practice far behind; that a new social order has arisen which must make its home in the Church or push the Church aside; that the Church must find a common theological foundation on which all and not merely a section of its members can stand, or remain hopelessly divided, and for its highest work useless. Then let the wise men of all denominations unite to find the remedies. They will be pretty sure to begin with the last. They will draw out the common faith which does actually underlie every really Christian life—the bottom ground where the thought of D. L. Moody and the thought of George Adam Smith meet, and wherein they both, and the hosts of their respective unreconciled and jarring followers, are Christians. When the Church recognizes this common faith and accepts it as the bond of union between all believers, other incongruities will not be hard to resolve.

Barrie, Canada.

EUROPEAN LETTER.

QUINCY L. DOWD.

VOILA! Come with me for a spin all the forenoon long out through the Savoy district. Our course lies south of Lake Lemman, and we start from the University quarter of Old Geneva. Being a Saturday the streets are now filled with hand carts and small wagons, saying naught of the space occupied along the curb and in the more open squares by the crowded vegetable and flower booths. But we can accommodate our speed to suit the interesting sights of country folk, who throng into town on market day. What exhilaration to be thus wheel-bound on a tour of discovery of the beautiful, not to say, the good and the true as well. Let it be the upper road to get some distance back from the lake. This leads toward Annemasse, and the protruding eastern end of Mt. Saleve. Here are the suburban villas and small hamlets off the main routes; how much good will fall to our lot! Is it not hard to resist stopping at each and every point of special charm just to dilate on its details of loveliness! But look! There is an ancient oak avenue, which beguiles and really overcomes both our direct momentum and vis inertia. Though it be but a rough lane, the kodak must do its hurried work there to seize the spot of beauty ere lost. Then, too, that bovine group over the thick hedge with the fine country seat in a grove at the meadow's edge; this requires another innocent shot. Here now, after reaching a goodly elevation, is the much friendly guide post. Each arm of it shows an embarrassment of riches in the way of alluring names. Shall it be the list of attractive places that ends with Nernier, or with Gy? Something about the latter (possibly its shortness or its suggestiveness) wins favor, and we will roll along to the right. There off to the south in full view stretches the seductive, sinuous ribbon of white roadway surely leading into the vale of Chamounix. But that route is out of the question for us. Ours to keep within bounds of a few golden hours.

It is plain that this is an unfrequented course we are on, the roads being just good, honest, farmer thoroughfares between their tiny hamlets clustered about the parish church and its modest walled-in Campo Santo. Behold now all the homely operations of the field and the wine press, the plowing and the sowing, the tending of goats and cows! What can it mean, those great sheaves of rye suspended high up under the immensely wide eaves of that spacious barn? Is this a kindness to fowls of the air, or an act of piety? For, we are evidently pedaling through a Roman Catholic canton, its signs of devotion everywhere visible.

Is it not time to make a detour though and so fetch round to the lake shore for the run back home? That hill, however, crowned by church and manor house, looks formidable. The lower road will probably gain the point by leading around "the acclivity," so to speak. So, Voila! we will spin on. But an unknown country road is a delusion and a snare. Here we are, where the usual round of the cart wheels is not enough to keep down the grass between the tracks. Fortunately the Hill of Difficulty is not far behind. Repentantly let us resume the hard road to travel; "if sharp, 'tis short." Once surmounted, what a prospect is now gained from the top lakeward. Ah! here is a moment's outburst of sunshine, the first of the morning. There is even sufficient sky "for a pair of Dutchman's breeches," if cut scant. But we'll hope for more. Now we have struck onto a wonderful macadam roadway of extraordinary breadth and easy grade. This is the poetry of motion, a lyric of the wheel, or an Oh!-ed long drawn out. It is a struggle between poetry and puns as this delectable spin runs on. Though the company kept on this ride is all invisible, it is select. How many imaginary conversations are held with the pick of friends from A to Z! Garrulity in this kind has its utmost scope, and no one to be bored.

Yes, we have come at last to Gy, a most insignificant, yet quaintly pretty village. The one lounge on its streets before the inn is decorously polite to the invader, but intensely curious about the use of the kodak, to him having the look of an infernal machine. Did we not set out on this morning's diversion with the purpose to make close connection with dinner hour at the end of the circuit? Still it is a happy forethought to have provided a pocket luncheon to be enjoyed in medias res. We will stop under this lone tree to enjoy a hearty chunk of wizzened sausage, an aged roll and the remnant of sweet chocolate, fit dessert to go with a handful of walnuts of one's own gathering at Interlaken. Isn't it pleasant to eat in the open, while viewing a wide expanse of field, that group of peasants meanwhile watching this prandial scene under the oak with bucolic wonderment. Voila! again. This done we can stretch out bravely in hopes of better fare at penion Sutterlin after an hour's ride, now on an easy down grade. We get close beside the beaming lake, the track enlivened by all kinds of company, serious and gay. Has this not been an exhilarating experience round about Geneva? Oh! that John Calvin might have known the like in his day and generation!

We will now drop into more sober vein, for tomorrow is Sunday, or Lord's Day. Moreover, the anniversary fete of the Reformation is to be celebrated by special programs, both at St. Pierre Cathedral and the Salle de Reformation. As one cannot attend both, it shall be the musical service at St. Pierre. The price of tickets was put at two francs; yet the immense church is filled with the elite. In the center around the pulpit, plain to be heard, are those irreverent, unreformed Americans out in force. Their speech bewrayeth them to be of the few "well-groomed," but ill-grammared variety. Their solecisms in manners equal those in their loud talk. The people in general, however, take the whole affair very much as a mere concert of the semi-sacred order. There is no opportunity given to express any Protestant fervor, should any exist in Geneva of the twentieth century. In truth this city seems very much devoted to running a Vanity Fair all the year. Doubtless there are earnest religious people here still. It is said that the old Genevese families are very orthodox, also very exclusive socially. Taking the Evangel to heart is no longer their forte. It is greatly needful that the Salvation Army do its work in such a city. Let us be thankful that they are meeting favor and success with many.

Perhaps it might be pleasant to join in another visit out to country places. Let it be to the north of Lake Lemman, but not to Ferney-Voltaire, though that is delightful enough, especially if one chance upon a beautiful engroved spot for college field sports, and can look on at a spirited, graceful game of football after the Rugby rules. This trip shall be to Aubonne, a hill town back a few miles from the lake and railway. Here Dr. M— resides, and will be glad to welcome American friends, as we come in the name of a Swiss comrade of his student days at Lausanne, a name difficult to rhyme with, yet of a charming sound in the ears of multitudes who know it even as far as farthest Ind. What a pity it is a dull, gray day, in which to see this picturesque town! Aubonne was once strongly fortified, having its antique castle, no knowing how many hundred of years old, apparently good to endure as many more, but now utilized in the peaceful arts of a public school for boys. The doctor kindly guides us on a tour of inspection down the precipitous cobblestone stairway of the gorge lying back of Aubonne, and over the stone-arched bridge of the rapid stream flowing down from the Juras. Then we go up the steep opposite bank, that all the beauty of the place may be visible, at least as well as this raw, misty air will allow. What a treat to be thus entertained in the home of Swiss friends! One learns a little of how the better class of people live, what they think of and care for. The octogenarian "papa" is wholly reminiscent of early days when he went on evangelizing tours with Lord Cecil through Southern France. On our way through town we come upon a strange-looking machine set on wheels, about the size of a thresher-engine. It proves to be a portable distillery used to work up the refuse of the grapes after being pressed for wine into a villainous raw alcohol. This stuff costs but twenty cents in Swiss money, or four cents, a gallon. As one such machine produces 500 gallons per day, it is simple to compute its power for mischief and misery. This drink, said Dr. M—, is a common beverage among Swiss laboring men, producing fearful intemperance. Such evil necessitates a total abstinence crusade. Medical men and good citizens, Catholic and Protestant, are engaged in it.

Our visit over, we leave Villa Violet with regret, to return in the darkness to Geneva. The time has finally come to depart into Italy. Lord Salisbury once urged on a friend whose ideas were too limited, "Use a large map!" But if little Switzerland itself occupy one's whole mind during five weeks, and he then goes away conscious of having only touched at a few points its endless beauty, pray what is he to make of a world-map? But Italy must seem an easier matter to get over. There are only the lakes, and Milan, and Verona, and Venice to think of as a beginning. Getting used to a larger map will be simple enough.

Geneva, Switzerland.

RANDOM SHOTS.

LAUREN JONES.

The Devil always smiles when a moral question is settled on the dollar plan.

All things which are being brought about have a hidden purpose. We may not be able properly to interpret many things, but we do know that God is not trifling with humanity nor toying with the elements.

When you go to church to pray for rain always take your umbrella.

Every age has its national and church errors and dangers, but those who insist on making them known are generally called pessimists. It is true, however, that the so-called pessimism of one age often becomes the accepted philosophy of the next.

The reason God cannot talk to some people is because they are not interested in his themes.

Those who would build on God's ideal should acquaint themselves with his plans and specifications.

When some of us get to heaven we will be wonderfully surprised to learn how small were the things over which we quibbled on earth.

It is pretty hard for the Lord to squeeze into a heart that takes a penny to Sunday school and leaves twelve dollars at the millinery store.

A small heart can see all its own virtues and all the sins of others.

The Lord will not give you what you are too lazy to use.

Do not pray for guidance unless you are willing to be guided.

It seems easy for some persons with dollars in their pockets to say that starvation seems necessary, but we notice that they don't want the experience.

Instead of breaking the banks of children to get pennies for the Lord, we ought to be breaking the banks of fashion to get dollars.

The Bible teaches that the kingdom of heaven is within us, but some persons are searching diligently everywhere else trying to find it.

"Blessed are they
Who their Savior obey,
And have lain up treasures above."

So ran the ancient song.

Honored are they,
With gold to pay
For the earthly things that they love.

So sing a modern throng.

PROGRESS TOWARD CHRISTIAN UNION.

This is not very observable in Protestant bodies here at home. The practical difficulties in uniting churches substantially one in faith and order are found well-nigh insuperable. But what does not succeed at home works successfully abroad. In China and Japan Reformed churches of the Presbyterian order have long wrought together in a common organization. In southern India the same union has been inaugurated, and will soon be in operation. Mexico is now included in the list. The Presbyterian church, north and south, have each had prosperous missions there. Now the churches connected with the two bodies have been consolidated with the consent of their respective General Assemblies, and the Presbyterian Synod of Mexico has been formed independent of the Assemblies in this country. Missionaries will continue under the direction of the foreign boards of the Presbyterian church, north and south, but the churches organized will be under the new Synod. This is as it should be.

WHY ONE PASTOR FAILED.

HE church at Rockville has been rated among the best in the state for several years. Its ministers have usually had long and fruitful pastorates and its missionary offerings have been liberal. When Brother Bower closed his work there a year ago, the church thought itself fortunate to find such a man as Rev. A. Skye Frescoe open for engagement just at that time; indeed, it was fortunate if its members had rightly appreciated the greatness of the man. Dr. Frescoe carried some strong testimonials from our leading brethren and his coming to the state was noted with satisfaction by neighboring ministers. An elaborate installation service was carried out, other pastors of the town having part on the program, and the work started off with a flourish.

After all this it was, of course, a great surprise to the brethren in the state when, a few weeks ago, his resignation was announced in our papers. Now, having been on the ground (I delivered the leading lecture in the local course there last week and to a crowded house, too, in spite of bad weather), and wishing to see justice done to the outgoing pastor, I send you this report that the public may know the situation as it really is.

The work ran down rapidly after the first few weeks of the new pastorate, and the blame for it all fell on Brother Frescoe as a matter of course, but it was not at all his fault. The fact is, the Rockville church has been spoiled by former ministers. The people have been used to a pastor who spent much time visiting among them. It is related of one that he frequently drove to the country with his family and spent the entire day at some farm house. Another made it a point to see all the members and read and pray in their homes at least once in six months, and it has been the general rule for the pastor to spend three afternoons each week in calling among his people. Now, this alone will spoil any congregation, but this is not all; when we consider that Brother Frescoe's predecessors had been accustomed to make a great fuss over every missionary offering, to attend the women's missionary meetings, to work in the Sunday school and so on, it will be seen what the church would expect of him.

Now, while Brother Frescoe is one of the most genial fellows on earth, these are not his lines. He is pre-eminently a great speaker. When it comes to oratory he has few equals and no peers in the brotherhood. He owns one of the finest stereopticons made, and has more calls to lecture than any man of his age among us. When he came to Rockville he mentioned this to the brethren and no objection was made. During the year he spent there his church had great reason to feel proud of the prominence of their minister in public functions. He delivered the memorial address in May and spoke at the local soldiers' reunion, preached to the M. W. A., the Odd Fellows, the A. F. and A. M., the Knights of Pythias and a new order called "the New and Independent Order of Political, Social and Religious Deadbeats." He is a member of all these organizations and is thus brought into touch with multitudes of non-church-going people. He was also the chief speaker at the "Grand Annual Convocation of the New International Confederation of Literary Clubs and Fraternal Organizations." Besides these, he answered many outside calls for work of the same nature in addition to his own pulpit work.

Some of the members complain that they did not get acquainted with their preacher during the year; this, if true, was purely their own fault. Brother Frescoe is a busy man, but he knew everybody in the town worth knowing, even to the doctors and lawyers and five saloonkeepers, and without a dissenting voice they all regard him as a most affable Christian gentleman. He is a man of too large mold to go tagging around after people, coaxing them to attend services and give to missions.

Dr. Frescoe will enter the lecture field for the present. It is not known who his successor will be, but it is to be hoped that he will receive better treatment at the hands of the Rockville church. Let it be known to all the brethren, however, that the decline in the work at that place was due not to the pastoral inefficiency, but to the fact that the Rockville church has been babied to death.

A. LINCOLN FLUBDUB.

No. 1 Brass street, Nov. 5, 1901.

A LARGE GOSPEL.

If revival methods are meant to include the matter and the manner of the message, the Gospel preached must be a large Gospel, not large in the sense of overlooking evil, but large in the sense that it is the solution of all personal and social problems and the only proper rule of life. It must take account of the new adjustment now in process, emphasizing, however, the thought that while men's ideas of the truth may change, the truth itself abides forever. Let it be constructive. In manner it should be winning and convincing without estranging. The pugilistic preacher is a back number.

J. M. LOWE.

THE UNION IDEA.

There was a time when the world was divided into warring sects, and there is still a little firing from old flintlocks at long range. Those who think their opinions are absolutely infallible die hard. But the era of cast-iron creed and hermetically sealed theology is giving way to the era of sanctified common sense.

* * *

The day of narrow-minded and narrow-chested clergymen has passed. The small dug-outs of religious thought and action are being submerged by the strong currents of a Spirit-filled life. Controversy is giving way to charity and sectarianism to practical religion. Some readers can remember when the more loyal a man was to his denomination the more violent were his attacks on his brother of another denomination. The ministering of a neighboring church was a delusion and a snare. One denomination believed that the other might possibly get to heaven, but the chances were against it. Members of differing churches were afraid to touch the hem of each other's garments for fear of the contagion of heresy. No wonder the Holy Spirit has been grieved and the world is unchurched and unredeemed.

The churches and Christian people must get together.

* * *

Christianity will make but little progress till we reduce to their proper place all denominational differences. The Word of God gives them no quarter. What have your notions or my notions of Calvin or Arminius, or of baptism, or of the apostolic succession, to do with the one great divine practical life of the church of God?

The organized evils can be conquered by no power but that of the united churches.

ALLAN MACNEILL.

Ridgefield Park, N. J.

THE SELF-MASTERY OF JESUS.

WHENEVER the collapse of one whom men have grown to regard as a leader of new movements makes evident the danger that lies in a great, revolutionary body of teaching, it serves also to bring out the wonderful self-mastery and poise of Jesus. His teaching is radical. It brings a sword more often than it brings peace. And it takes a strong man to become a conspicuous interpreter of it or to lead other men forward into a more perfect practice of the Master's doctrine. Time and again the men who seem to catch a new glimpse of the social application of the Gospel become leaders for a little while, and then the revolutionary elements in it leads them to such inconsistency or over-emphasis that they go to pieces from the shaking of those very forces which they have grasped, but have not been able to control. Like the energy of steam, the forces in Jesus' teaching are only useful when they can be controlled by a resisting medium, a steam-chest and cylinder, stronger than themselves. And the matchless example of this control is Jesus himself.

In every interpretation, therefore, of the doctrine of Christ, especially as regards its economic and social application, we never must allow ourselves to lose the man who gave the message. Jesus himself is a part of his doctrine. We must understand both the Sermon on the Mount and the Teacher who wrought the whole substance of that sermon into his sane and saving life. The Master never sacrificed the content of his message to indiscretions and follies. And the character of his teaching makes more evident the sublime self-mastery of the Master's spirit.

The men who are to show the world what the Gospel means must be men who can attain the personal poise of Jesus. Deep insight, fervid utterance, dedicated passion, will not avail alone to show us the way to a redeemed society; to these must be added that which made Jesus a peerless teacher, a spirit under control, and a personality which, made great by the doctrine, is greater than the doctrine and able to resist its revolutionary suggestions.—Zion's Herald.

PLEASANTRIES.

Bishop Stubbs was witty, even when he grumbled. He was not willing to be moved from Chester to Oxford; and he said, as he left the chapter house, "I am like Homer; I suffer from translations."

Dr. F., becoming a little sleepy in his prayer at the Cambridge Divinity School, groaned out, "O Lord, may the improvement become provident, the in-temperate temperate, and the industrious dustrious."

The latest and most refreshing Sunday school incident is the following: The teacher had grown eloquent in picturing to his little pupils the beauties of heaven, and he finally asked: "What kind of little boys go to heaven?" A lively little four-year-old boy, with kicking boots, flourished his fist. "Well, you may answer," said the teacher. "Dead ones!" the little fellow shouted at the extent of his lungs.

"Is you gwine ter let dat mewel do as he please?" asked Uncle Ephram's wife; "wha's you' will power?" "My will power's all right," he answered. "You jest want ter come out hyar an' measure dis here mewel's won't power."

"What would you say," began the voluble prophet of woe, "if I were to tell you that in a very short space of time all the rivers in this country would dry up?" "I would say," replied the patient man, "go thou and do likewise."—Philadelphia Press.

I heard an old farmer whine out the other day, "My—hay—crop—is—a—failure." Said I, "Is your potato crop a failure?" "No." "Your oats?" "No." "Your corn?" "O, no! O, no!" "Well, brother, why not begin with success and thankfulness, and then put your one failure in parenthesis at the end?" No answer. Pause for reflection.—C. E. World.

This story is told of an eccentric Hastings parson. One day, on visiting the belfry, he found a whitewasher whistling a dance tune as he worked. The parson reproved him sharply for choosing such music for such a place.

"Beg your pardon, sir," said the man, "but I forgot where I was," and then to show he was sorry he started whistling the "Old Hundredth." His hand, however, kept time with the music, and so the "Old Hundredth" made the whitewash brush go wonderfully slow.

"Oh, get back to your dance tune," the old parson shouted, "or the job'll never be done."

"Henry," she said, thoughtfully. "What is it?" responded the worried business man, rather shortly. "I wish you would rearrange your business a little bit." "How?" "So as to be a bear on the stock exchange instead of at home."—Truth.

Those of us who are inclined to give up to discouragement when things go wrong might learn a helpful lesson from a young woman who had left home because her father was a drunkard. When she became a Christian, however, she announced her intention of returning and doing what she could do to reclaim him.

"But what will you do when he finds fault with all your efforts to please him?" some one asked her.

"Try a little harder," she answered, with a soft light in her eyes.

"Yes; but when he is unreasonable and unkind you will be tempted to lose your temper and answer him angrily. What will you do then?"

"Pray a little harder," came the answer with a fearless ring in the words.

The discourager had one more arrow in his quiver. "Suppose he should strike you as he did before. What could you do but leave him again?"

"Love him a little harder," said the young Christian, steadily.

It is pleasant to add that her splendid faith conquered. Through love and prayer and patient effort her father was not only reclaimed from his besetting sin, but proved Christ's power to save to the uttermost all that come unto him.

AT THE CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

DEVOLUTION VERSUS EVOLUTION.

BY J. B. SILCOX.

"Strangers have devoured his strength and he knoweth it not; yea gray hairs are here and there upon him and he knoweth it not."—Hosea, 7, 9.

THE theme suggested by this text and on which I speak at this time, is devolution. The word devolution literally means the act of rolling down. It indicates a retrograde movement, from good to bad, from bad to worse. I use the words as the opposite to evolution. Evolution means progress, growth, development. It means the rising from a lower form of life to a higher form. We know that living things do not spring into perfected condition at once.

There is a gradual evolution or unfolding into higher and still higher stages. The seed evolves a stem, the stem evolves a branch, the branch evolves a bud, the bud evolves a flower, from the flower is evolved the perfect fruit. In these and similar processes we observe an upward movement. The principle of evolution is recognized by our Savior in the parable of the growing seed, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." That is the physical statement of a spiritual truth. Scientists tell us that evolution in some form or other is the key to the understanding of all living forms which exist on the earth. Stars and worlds do not spring into full-orbed splendor at once, but through long ages pass through manifold stages to their present condition.

Evolution attempts to explain the method of God in creation. It is modal not casual. The hypothesis is not necessarily materialistic or atheistic. Many scientific men hold this theory of creation, and at the same time hold to the declaration in Genesis that "In the beginning God created." They contend that evolution is the best explanation of the method of God in creation. In the minds of many this view of creation enhances the glory of the Creator. It is in harmony with the teaching of Scripture that the golden age of humanity is in the future. We have not yet attained but are going on unto perfection. As the word evolution means growth, progress, development, the word devolution means the opposite. It means deterioration, degeneration, decay. It means drifting down and back.

While it is interesting and profitable to study evolution, to show how in nature the superior rises out of the inferior, how the dead mineral is seized on by life and converted into organized vegetable structure, how the vegetable is converted into animal, how from the animal condition man rises into the intellectual and spiritual realm, becomes a partaker of the divine nature and is transformed into the divine image—while this study is full of interest, it is also wise to study the opposite and disintegrating forces at work in nature and human life. Devolution is as active and universal a force in nature and human society as evolution. There is a down-grade movement as truly as an up-grade.

There are forces that waste and wear and tear down, as well as forces that conserve and build up. Growth has its opposite in decay; health its opposite in disease; life its opposite in death. There is an attraction of gravitation pulling things down, as truly as there is a capillary attraction drawing things up. There is devolution as well as evolution.

Henry Drummond in "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," has a chapter entitled "Degeneration." He reminds us of some facts in the natural world which illustrate the process of devolution in nature. For example, here are a great variety of domesticated pigeons, they are of all colors and combination of colors. Let these many colored, different marked pigeons loose on some uninhabited island and they will unite and form a sort of colony. After the lapse of many years you visit the island, and find that the pigeons, or rather the descendants, have all become one color. The black, the white, the dun, the striped, the spotted and ringed are all metamorphosed into one color—a dark slaty blue.

I need not multiply illustrations. Your observation of the animal and vegetable world will furnish you with examples illustrating the principle of devolution in nature. Domestic animals and plants if left to themselves or to "natural selection," will retrograde in size, beauty, usefulness. Devolution is as marked a feature in nature as evolution.

Spiritual Devolution.

As we have seen the principle of devolution in the physical world, let us discover its presence and power in the intellectual and spiritual world. We shall find that we are subject spiritually to the same law that we are subject to physically. If a plant or animal is neglected, by a law of nature it degenerates. It becomes less and worse than it formerly was. If a human soul is neglected, it, too, degenerates, becomes less and worse, lower and meaner. The saddest sight that men or angels look on, is the gradual waste and decay of man's intellectual and spiritual powers. This down-grade tendency is universal. Every man who knows himself, knows and feels that he is liable to retrograde intellectually and morally. "There is a natural principle in man, lowering him, deadening him, pulling him down by inches to the mere animal plane, blinding reason, searing conscience, paralyzing will." It requires continued effort to keep heights we have once attained. This is true intellectually. It is true spiritually. You may call this downward tendency by whatever name you will. You may refuse to call it depravity or sin. Never mind the name, it's the thing, the fact you have to do with. No sane man will deny, and no wise man will ignore, the existence of this principle of devolution in human life and character.

Our ordinary speech recognizes this principle. How often you hear it said of this one and that one, "he's going to the dogs." There is a terrible significance in that expression, "he's going to the dogs." It means that the man is degenerating intellectually, and degenerating morally and degenerating socially. It means that instead of being ruled by reason and religion, he is swayed by his animal appetites and passions and is sinking down into a bestial condition of life.

Our best literature recognizes and portrays this tendency of man to degenerate. George Eliot in Romola, pictures the downward career of Tito Melema, a man who "sold himself to evil, but was not conscious of the bond." From honor and truth and purity he gradually lapsed, until at last he who might have stood a prince among men, sank to the lowest depths of black dishonor. He is an example of the deterioration of a bright and gifted nature through the preference of what is pleasant to what is right.

Victor Hugo, in Notre Dame, traces the deteriorating process in the character and career of a young priest, who began life with a high ideal of purity and of service to humanity. The morning of his life was chastely pure and radiantly hopeful. Later on the shadows began to gather. His animal passions triumphed over his spiritual aspirations. Holy love turned into loathsome lust. The life that should have closed in honor, ended in ignominy.

Robert L. Stevenson in that dramatic novel "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," shows in lurid light the principle of devolution working the wreck and ruin of one who had in him the promise and possibilities of highest manhood, but who sank into a hideous, fiendish condition of character and life. That is not fiction. It is fact. It is not the creation of a novelist's frenzied brain. It is history. It is biography. It is the awful tragedy constantly enacted all around us.

Robert Browning in the wondrously weird and fascinating poem, "Childe Ronald to the Dark Tower Came," describes, how, by yielding to subtle temptation, one after another of a band of knightly adventurers came to shameful ruin. He tells how such a one was strong and such was bold—yet each of old, lost, lost; "one moment knelled the woe of years." The noble peer, Cuthbert, sowed the seeds of shameful death by one night's dissipation. "Alas, one night's disgrace. Out went my heart's new fire and left it cold."

You and I have seen men for a time run well in the Christian race. But when near the goal their steps slackened, their energies waned and finally they dropped out, covered with the dishonor of defeat. They endured, but not unto the end. These falls from virtue, these lapses from purity, these examples of moral devolution, are facts in human life. They are sad facts, inexpressibly, mysteriously sad. It is sad to look on a work of art defaced by some vandal hand. It is sad to look on a magnificent architectural structure blackened and ruined by devouring flames. Ten thousand times sadder it is to look on a human soul once white as an angel's wing, now smirched and blotched by the mildewed fingers of vice.

"Yet it shall be; thou shalt lower to his level, day by day,
What is fine within thee growing coarse to sympathize with clay,
As the husband is the wife is, thou art mated with a clown,
And the grossness of his nature will have weight to drag thee down."

This down dragging process, we all feel and must struggle against. "The flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh and these are contrary the one to the other." There is a dual nature in man. The animal and spiritual contend for supremacy. We are wonderfully made. We have a rational soul linked with or imprisoned in a material body. The soul would rise heavenward, delighting itself in all that is true and holy. The body would plunge earthward, reveling in sensual indulgences. Thus what comedies, farces, tragedies take place in the same human life. Today we are on the transfiguration mount of devout prayer and holy praise, tomorrow we are down in the sulphurous abysses of pandemonium, indulging in that which both reason and religion condemn. On what shining heights of glory we sometimes tread. In what black gulfs of folly we sometimes grope. "Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing."

This deterioration of character may, unconsciously, be going on in some life before me. As you look over the years of the past and reflect on what you were then and what you are now, you are compelled to acknowledge that you have drifted from the high standard that once was your model. You have lowered your ideals. You allow yourself indulgence in things you once prohibited. You tolerate practices that were once repugnant to you. You are less watchful and less prayerful than you were in the morning of your life.

My brother, my sister, you cannot afford to let this process of deterioration go on. These deflections and departures from the straight and narrow way lead finally into the broad way that ends in death.

"Unfaith in aught is want of faith in all,
It is the little rift within the lute,
That by and by will make the music mute,
And ever widening slowly silence all."

To all who may be drifting, to any who may be sinking, I throw out the life-line of the gospel. It is possible for a man to renew his life. It is possible for a man to recover himself and turn defeat into victory, to find his way back to his Father's love and home. Commit yourself anew to the keeping of Christ. Return unto the Lord thy God and he will heal thee of all thy backslidings and restore unto thee the joy of his salvation.

Winnipeg, Canada.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

THE PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.

Lesson for Dec. 22, 1901—Exodus 14: 13-27.

Golden Text: "I will Sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously."—Exodus 15: 1.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

The Pursuit of Pharaoh.

THE course of the Israelites at first was northward towards Canaan by the short eleven-day route. But God caused them to "turn" (Ch. 14:2) and take a much longer course. This was done in order that, when in time they should become discouraged by war in Canaan, they would not, from familiarity with an easy way to Egypt, be induced to return. Ch. 13:17. When Pharaoh heard of the change of route southward he interpreted it as a favorable sign of weakness on the part of the fleeing slaves. V. 3. By this time also the Egyptians began to realize the loss of their numerous Hebrew subjects, inasmuch as public works were stopped for want of workmen, and fields were without flocks; hence the question "Why have we let Israel go from serving us?" V. 5. Pursuit with an armed force of horsemen and chariots therefore followed. V. 6-9. Soon the Israelites in great fear found themselves entrapped between the sea, the mountains and Pharaoh's horsemen. V. 10. Then they began grievously to complain against Moses as told in the verses preceding the lesson.

Christmas Aspect of the Lesson.

We celebrate Christmas because in the birth of Christ, the world found a Deliverer from sin, as in Moses the slave race had found a deliverer from Egypt. As the last-mentioned event called forth the immortal Hebrew song commencing "I will sing unto Jehovah, for he hath triumphed gloriously," (Ch. 15:1). So the dawn of the Greater Deliverer was greeted by sweet angel strains beginning, "Glory to God in the highest." Luke 2:14. The Scriptures declare that Moses was a type of Christ, and Egypt was a type of the world of sin. Acts 3:20-26; Rev. 11:8. We no more can save ourselves than could the Israelites. Matt. 1:21. It was when the Israelites were helpless, hopeless, and seemingly lost, and when they confessed as much (vs. 10-12), that their delivery was nigh; apt illustration of salvation by Jesus Christ. Luke 18:13; Acts 2:37. Again our Moses, like the Moses of old, was "proved of God by miracles and wonders." Acts 2:22. Moreover, as the Israelites in the present crisis were saved by faith, (Heb. 11:29) so our salvation depends on faith. Eph. 2:8, 9. In both instances the walk was by new and unseen paths, and Paul declares that the passage through the sea was a baptism. 1 Cor. 10:2. But the main lesson of this portion of the Scripture—the idea fundamental in all true religion—is that God is a personal Redeemer.

V. 13, 14. Command of Faith. "And Moses said." He spake in answer to the alarmed Israelites. V. 10. * * * "Stand still, and see." Nor could Moses see a way of escape except through the eye of faith in the Invisible. Heb. 11:23. * * * "Shall see them again no more." God had rewarded the faith of Moses by revealing to him what he would do. Ps. 25:14. * * * "The Lord shall fight for you." It was the Lord's battle. Vs. 25, Zec. 4:6.

V. 15-18. Prayer of Faith. "Wherefore criest thou unto me?" Moses had been praying. * * * "Speak . . . go forward." Moses had bidden them stand still; now God answers the thought of his heart by bidding them go forward. * * * "Shall go . . . through the sea." (V. 16.) Here is the solution of the dilemma. * * * "Egypt shall know that I am the Lord." That the true and living God was in the "midst of the earth" was the great lesson to be taught to the Egyptians, and to all generations. V. 4; Ch. 12:12.

V. 19. Prayer Answered. "And the angel of God." This was none other than the Lord himself; that is, the cloud was a symbol of the divine presence. Ch. 3:2; 13:21. * * * "Removed and went behind." That majestic column of cloud which served as a guide suddenly changes position to the rearward, now to protect them from pursuers. The pillar's presence was miraculous, one of several indications that the narrative means to describe miraculous action, but not superseding the force of nature. V. 16, 21, 26.

V. 20. Help of the Helpless. "It came between." The guidance of the pillar was not now needed ahead as there was a clear way before them. God presents himself where the need is the sorest. * * * "The Egyptians." Now in hot pursuit; continuing in the mistake that thousands to-day make in not counting on the fact of God's presence and dealings with men. * * * "Cloud and darkness to them." A dark side of the divine cloud was turned toward the Egyptians, perhaps as dense fog, utterly shielding the advancing Israelites from their sight. * * * "But light by night to these." In the direction of the Israelites it was a luminous cloud. God now is the light of his followers. 1 John 1:7. His word is a guide and a light (Ps. 119:105, 130), but to the unbelieving more or less obscure and a terror. Matt. 13:13; 2 Cor. 2:16. * * * "So they came not near." The pursuing army was foiled by the intervening cloud and darkness. Josh. 24:7.

V. 21. Storm and Earthquake. "Moses stretched out his hand." He stretched out that wonder-working rod which in his hand had such a remarkable history. So God now calls his children to be co-workers with him. * * * "The Lord caused the sea to go back." Ch. 15:18. A way of escape now appeared to the alarmed Israelites by that command to the sea. Rev. 14:7. Jesus proved his divinity by commanding the sea. Mark 4:39. * * * "A strong east wind." In the language of the Psalmist the elements were greatly disturbed as in a tremendous storm and earthquake. Ps. 77:16, 18. * * * "The waters were divided." Some think that there was a complete separation, at a shallow sea area here, between the deeper waters northward and the main sea.

V. 22. God a Shield. "Israel went into the midst of the sea." This advancing of the hosts of Israel is celebrated in the Epistle to the Hebrews as an instance of faith. Heb. 11:29. The passage opened, through the waters must have been of considerable width; possibly a fourth of a mile or more to allow between two or three million people with their herds readily to cross. * * * "And the waters were a wall." In the poetical language of Ch. 15:8 and Ps. 78:13 the waters are spoken of as a perpendicular mass as of ice. See Josh. 3:16. The allusion to the wall may be in the sense of a protection, preventing their mounted pursuers (V. 9) attacking from the side. God always is a wall of defense to his followers.

V. 23. Wild Night March. "Egyptians pursued." Having the advantage of soldiers, horses and chariots, while the hosts of Israel, men, women, and children, necessarily moved slowly, they rushed forward in blind fury with the best possible chance, as humanly viewed, of overtaking the fleeing slaves. * * * "In the midst of the sea." It was dark, and as the course was "dry ground" and roomy enough to accommodate millions, they may not have been aware that their path was leading into the sea bed. * * * "All Pharaoh's horses, chariots, horsemen." Apparently the foot soldiers were left behind. Egyptian chariots were famous. The people trusted in them and now failed. Ps. 20:7. It nowhere is stated that Pharaoh himself was in pursuit.

V. 24. Consternation at Dawn. "In the morning watch." Immediately before sunrise. The ancients divided the night on a military basis into four watches of the guards, who were changed as policemen in our cities are changed. * * * "The Lord looked unto . . . the Egyptians." The Lord, Jehovah. Dr. Chalmer says of this statement, "We know of no sentence more memorably impressive in the Bible than that which tells us that God looked out of the pillar of cloud and fire and troubled the Egyptians." Such is the difference between the light of his countenance and the rebuke of his countenance. * * * "Troubled the host." On that awful night the very earth trembled (Ps. 77:18) and nothing gives greater alarm than an earthquake. This discomfiture of the Egyptians was extreme.

V. 25. Panic in the Sea. "And took off their chariot wheels." Elsewhere it is said that the Lord "discomfited chariots." Judges 4:15; Ps. 46:9; Jer. 51:21. * * * "That they drove them heavily." Doubtless the horses and drivers were in extreme confusion, and between the collision of vehicles, led by mad steeds, and the sinking of wheels in the sea-bed, they were upset and the wheels torn from the axles. They went down like lead. Ch. 15:10. * * * "Let us flee from the face of Israel." Flee from their awful situation. Such panics have not been unknown to other history of military operations. * * * "The Lord fighteth for them." To save the race, Jehovah fought for Israel. At last the question of Pharaoh was answered, "Who is Jehovah that I should let his people go?" Ex. 5:2. Repeatedly God is spoken of as fighting in his children's behalf. Deut. 3:22; Judges 4:14; 1 Sam. 4:7, 8.

V. 26. Human Agency. "Stretch out thine hand." Moses still has a part to do, as testing his faith in the real power at work. * * * "That the waters may come again." In the return of the waters somewhat later "when the morning appeared" (V. 27) it is possible that the agency of the wind again was employed. * * * "Upon the Egyptians." The Egyptians long before had caused the children of Israel to die by casting them into the water (Ch. 1:22); with what measure they had meted, it was meted to them. Matt. 7:2.

V. 27. Morning of Death. "The sea returned to its strength." V. 21; Josh. 4:18. * * * "The Lord overthrew the Egyptians." Ch. 15:5. God overthrew them, because it was a necessity for the salvation of the world. Egypt, like Canaan later, was as a gangrened limb that in part had to be removed.

It is estimated that the great smoke cloud which hangs over London weighs 300 tons, fifty tons of which is solid carbon and 250 tons hydro-carbon. It is calculated that the smoke of the year is worth £2,000,000.

FIVE MINUTES SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

EVERYBODY loves music and both history and mythology furnish wonderful instances of its power. No religion is so rich in music as Christianity. In fact, the religion of Jesus stands alone as the religion of music, for none other can approach the beauty of music save the Christian influence. Somehow the new-born religion must have caught the music from the skies on that memorable night when the heavenly host sung over the Bethlehem plains and from that time to this all the rich gifts of music to the world have come from our Christian civilization. The song of the Jew was alone for centuries and his song was only a play at real music. Music is Christianity's gift to the world and now it is as common as speech. Some years ago in crossing the Atlantic I saw a sight and heard the blending of music that I shall never forget. It was near the calmness of sunset and we had been out of sight of land for four or five days. At least sixteen hundred people were aboard the "Majestic." A minister was conducting services among the steerage passengers in their own native Swiss tongue, while several hundred of us stood on the upper deck looking and listening. At the close of the services they began to sing, "Shall we gather at the river." They sang in Swiss, and those on the upper deck instantly began singing in English—unknown words to each other—but the music was common and the whole of that beautiful song was sung through with an enthusiasm that I had never heard before nor have I since heard. The music was the common bond. It is the language of the universe. Some day the differences of all tongues shall be wiped out and the whole universe shall join in a common song to him that sitteth upon the Throne. That will mark the triumph of all ages. It looks sometimes now as though God was almost defeated. Men despair and grow discouraged, but some day the Son of God shall lead in triumph rich trophies from out of every nation and then we shall see that his way was the way and his triumph shall be absolute and complete. We may be troubled about our own imperfections, but our God is Lord of all and gracious unto all. He works in us and through us and the chariot of his glory shall be the human hearts regained from sin and death and set to the perfect measurement of his divine grace.

Our Father, we sing unto thee for all that thou hast done for us and for all that thou hast promised to do. Glory be to thy name forever. Amen.

OUR CHRISTMAS BOX.

Our small Sunday schools must not be forgotten. We will help them have new song books for Christmas. Thousands of copies of Christian Melodies have been sold at twenty-five dollars per hundred. We are selling them now at twenty dollars per hundred. Any school sending a club of ten new subscribers to the Christian Century at one dollar each, will receive fifty copies of Christian Melodies as a Christmas gift. Send us ten dollars and we will ship the books to you at once. The names can be sent in later. Better appoint a committee of ten and secure them next Lord's day. Christian Melodies has most of the standard hymns and many new songs. This offer is only good for three weeks. Fifty copies of Christian Melodies free with a club of ten subscribers to the Christian Century.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

OUR GIFTS TO OUR KING.

Topic Dec. 22; Ref. Matt, 2: 1-25.

THE remarkable absence of the romantic in the Gospel narratives is a fine proof of the inspiration of the evangelists. The serious purpose of the writers of the New Testament forbade the thought of romancing. They could not say what was in their hearts to say, as John intimates in the last verse of his Gospel. With something of pathetic renunciation, yet with exultation, he adds: "There are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."

There is, however, just a suggestion of romance in this story of the wise men from the East who had seen his star and followed it. It is a bit of orientalism, with its mysticism and its strange belief in the influences of the heavenly bodies upon the earth and its events. Its simplicity of style gives it a peculiar charm. It suggests a world of romance which the hearts of childhood cherish, and which the romancers of all the Christian centuries have delighted to revel in. If you are inclined to question the inspiration of Matthew and Luke, read some of the books whose writers have woven their stories around these events and you will not dare to doubt that the divine Spirit restrained the human hand that penned the beautiful evangels of the Christ Child and of the Christ Life.

It is almost impossible for me to restrain myself from speculating about the mysterious star which led them until it came and stood over where the young Child was. This story of the Star and of shepherds keeping watch over their flocks by night, with the glory of the angels' song making musical the midnight of the world, forms the most perfect poetical setting for the birth of the world's Savior. It is the fitting introduction to the romance of redemption as revealed in the unique character and life of Jesus.

"And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshiped him, and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, frankincense, and myrrh."

There is in this a suggestion of the attitude of approach to Christ. They worshiped him first. And I think worship comes first. The spirit of reverence and of true worship is more important than all gifts. But it is just this which, I feel, we are apt to forget. Reverence is not a marked characteristic of our modern-day Christmas observance. To fail here is to fail of the true spirit of the Christian life.

The wise men opened their treasures and presented the most precious things they had. We need to imitate them in this. All too many of us keep our treasures, if not under spiritual lock and key, hidden under a false modesty, or permit them to be crowded aside by social customs, or neglected in the midst of the perplexities of household and business cares. The gold of graciousness, the frankincense of faithfulness, the myrrh of a merciful and melodious life—these are the best gifts we can bring to him who is our King—the Babe of Bethlehem, the Crucified, the Risen and Glorified Redeemer.

THE HOME

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter VII.

LATER on, at a great reception at the Russian Embassy, I met her once again, the cynosure of every eye, fair, royal, sapphire-crowned, serene. We were introduced, and again I watched the anguished quiver of her lip, and the scarlet glow that suffused her face, as her society bravery failed her for a moment. I could not trust myself to say more than a few cold, careless conventionalities to her, though vaguely I felt that her eyes were full of a desperate entreaty. But my thoughts were of a lonely prison death-bed across the icy Siberian plain, and of the little boy at home, who had asked me: "How is it, Nell, that I have never had a mother, too?"

And some of the scorn that was in my heart got into my voice—and I forgot that dying voice and the farewell message it had spoken.

But it seems to me that I need not tarry, that I may pass quickly on to those last dear scenes, where death lingered in order that life might give out its measure of perfect love.

Eventually arrived the day appointed for the consultation on my little Waldo. The doctors were unanimous in deciding for an operation. It was explained to me that in similar cases a perfect cure had often thus been effected, and how with such a possible, nay, probable, result in view, the risk attending on most operations would in this instance be fully justified. Personally I was dead against any such thing, trusting to time, constant care, nature, sea or mountain air, to tide my darling safely over the weakness that beset his tiny frame. But when four, as I firmly believed, "good men and true," who had given up their lives to the patient study and investigation of these things—when these gave out their verdict, what could one who confessedly knew nothing, do, but conceive it his plain duty to abide by it and put the sinking of his own heart aside? However, as Waldo appeared to have gained a little strength since coming to town, it was decided to postpone the operation yet a month, in the hope that he would then be even stronger still to meet the dread occasion.

At this time I would occasionally note the unwonted seriousness of his expression, and once I asked him: "Dear little one, why so very grave?"

"I was thinking, Nell," he answered, flashing out the warm, bright smile that went with all his words, whether sad or gay.

"What of, old man?"

"Whether father minded," and his dear blue eyes were fixed on mine with pathetic intensity.

"Minded?" I asked, not knowing for the moment of what he spoke.

"Yes, Nell dear, you know—minded."

Then the meaning of his childish broken utterance was suddenly made clear to me. But I knew not what to say that would cheer that anxious little heart of love.

"Oh, well, we always mind, I think, when those we love do not show that they love us back again. But you must remember that she did not leave father comfortless. She left him you. And you were so much to him, so very much, that you made him often and often forget the loss of other things. He told me so himself in many a letter which some day I shall read to you."

A great radiance overspread his face.

"Yes," he said, very sweetly, "I suppose I was."

Then he asked me if I thought she was very unhappy sometimes. If so, he said with a little effort, he would like to find her and give her father's message.

I took him in my arms but did not answer him, being lost in many thoughts.

One afternoon, about this time, he and I were driving in the park. He seemed very bright and bonny; people turned to look at his happy little face as it lay back amongst the cushions, and smiled when they heard the clear, gay laugh which always rang out when we saw or spoke of anything that amused us. At a certain spot under the trees we pulled up and watched the riders in the Row, and many friends came to our carriage and talked with little Waldo and lingered long beside him.

Presently, as I was leaning against a railing, talking to a friend, two ladies and a gentleman came strolling down the path by the side of which our carriage was drawn up, and I saw that the younger of the ladies was she whom men called the Princess Tourgenoff. Without exactly knowing why, I moved at once to Waldo, who was lying back in the carriage watching the people as they passed.

"Oh, Nell, only look! My beautiful lady is coming," he said to me in delighted excitement as I approached. "Put me up a little, will you, Nell, dear! Because I want to see her especially well to-day."

The eager tone in which he spoke must have carried down the path, for at his words I noticed that she quickly turned her head to where he was, and when she saw him, over her face, which had been expressionless to irritation, there came a sudden wondrous light, the light that never was on sea or land.

We saluted each other gravely. She whispered something to her friends, who passed slowly on. After that she hesitated a moment, then, still with that beautiful light upon her, she looked me beseechingly but bravely in the face, saying:

"May I—may I shake hands—with your little boy?"

There is a weapon surer, more powerful far, than cruelty. I had been cruel to her that other night, with shame I felt it; but now, in Waldo's little presence, I know that love alone should breathe or speak. He had heard her words to me, and in a moment his tiny hand was outstretched to hers, and she had bent over him with a long kiss. When she raised her head, I saw that her eyes, which were blue as Waldo's own, were heavy with tears.

"You have no pain?" she asked him.

"No, not any, thank you. Not to-day," he answered, looking up at her with smiling, wondering eyes.

"I saw you the other day. But you did not see me. I thought what a happy little face yours was, and it made me very glad."

She was smiling as she spoke, yet in her voice there was such sadness, and before her eyes that mist of tears, that little Waldo, instantaneous to feel and to respond, asked her in his sweetest way:

"Aren't you happy, too?"

"Not quite, dear," she answered softly, "not quite." "I know," he said, in his wise and charming little way, "I know what it is. And I am very sorry. Perhaps some day you will be—quite."

In his left hand he had a bunch of primroses. They were late ones and of the palest white. They had been sent him that morning from Devonshire and it had been his wish to take a bunch of them with him on his drive. Now he held them out to her.

"Would you like my primroses?" he said, with the color rising to his small white face—he was rather shy. It was a theory of his that when there seems nothing more to do for any one, you can at least give them something.—The Quiver.

(To be continued.)

MOTHER AND CHILDREN.

STORMY days are coming when the little ones will have to be more or less confined to the house and the mother will either be taxed to find ways and means of keeping them happily interested and occupied or the house will be turned upside down by the noise and confusion they create. Some suggestions as to meeting these occasions may therefore be helpful.

"A Rainy Day Box" is the plan proposed by one mother. It requires, of course, preparation ahead of the time of need. But "forewarned is forearmed." Scraps of velvet and silk, odds and ends of ribbons and dress goods, can be saved up for the box and will prove a bonanza for doll dress-making, keeping the girls absorbed for many an hour. Old magazines will provide pictures to be cut and pasted into scrap books. If not needed for home use, these will be welcomed by the sick children in the hospitals, and so thought and work for others can be woven into pleasant occupation for idle hours.

Interesting employment may be found in "furnishing the house." Let the children cut out all the pictures of furniture and housekeeping articles and then sort them out according as they are used in different rooms. Provide a large scrap book, giving a page to each room of the house. Then let the children arrange the pictures so as to "furnish" the kitchen, the parlor, the dining-room, bedroom, etc. The catalogues of furniture dealers and house-furnishing firms will supply an abundance of pictures and cuts of stoves, tables, chairs, couches, bedsteads, pots and pans, etc. The ingenuity of the children will be put to good use and their powers of observation and memory developed.

A microscope and a magnet are excellent means of occupation. Hunting for the insects on the house plants, looking at finger nails or hair or anything else, will interest the boys and girls, for the magnifying power makes everything look somewhat unnatural. The magnet may be set to drawing the needles out of an old pincushion, or attracting a small heap of steel filings.

From railway advertising pamphlets views of various places may be cut, and the children can play they are traveling from one city or town to another by arranging them in order according to the railroad maps. Pan-American scrap books may be made that will be quite educational and seed catalogues will furnish material for "making gardens." Mother-wit will multiply these suggestions ad libitum.

"Something new to play" is described by Elizabeth Ward in The American Mother: The children start the game by saying, "Now we will furnish a house, and we will begin in the hall." One child gives the name of some article of furniture in the hall, such as "chair"; then another answers by giving the name of some other article, the first letter of which must be the last letter of the word just pronounced; for instance, rug. When several children are playing, the one who answers most promptly holds precedence. From the hall they proceed to the parlor, thence to the library, the dining-room, and, finally, to the kitchen. Upstairs they have the nursery, bathroom, and bedrooms. The children might plant a garden, beginning with potato, oyster-plant, tomato, onion—thus carrying it on through the entire catalogue of vegetables; or they might plant flowers, or "go to the zoo." When they are older they might "put the books on the shelves," using their titles instead of the nouns.

If there is but one child to be kept interested, the mother while sewing, may start a story thus: "When we went down to grandma's house we saw a fenice." The child answers: "I saw an elm." Then perhaps the mother says: "It grew in a meadow," and the child, after a moment's quick thought, adds, "By a stream of water." Again the mother takes up the thread: "In its branches sang a robin," and the child continues, "I saw its nest." Then, "I saw a thrush, too," may be followed by any number of ideas, for the letter h holds many possibilities and suggests houses, horses, hills. Any noun is permissible, provided that its first letter is identical with the last letter of the last noun given, and it is the name of something seen "on the way to grandma's house."
PHILO.

THE QUIET HOUR.

(The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.)

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

THE PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.

"I will sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously—Exodus 15: 1.

Monday, December 16th—Exodus 14: 1-12.

HOW slow I am to learn the lesson of simple trust in the power and the wisdom and the love of God! I am little better than the Israelites, murmuring and panic-stricken though already Jehovah has done such great things for them.

Have I forgotten his name—the Lord my Healer, the Lord my Provider, the Lord my Righteousness, the Lord my Banner, the Lord my Peace? Have I forgotten his past doings; the lives of my fathers and my own life are filled with the manifestations of his mercy and his might? Have I forgotten his promises—more in number than the stars of the sky, and every one of them heaven's Yea, which "is Yea indeed?" Have I forgotten his holy and beneficent purpose in trying me; he seeks to ripen my faith and to confirm my character?

Ah, it is utterly wrong to "faint in the day of adversity." Rather will I raise Madame Guyon's song in her convent-prison:

A little bird I am,
Shut in from fields of air;
But in my cage I sit and sing
To Him who placed me there.
Well-pleased a prisoner to be,
Because, my Lord, it pleases Thee.

Tuesday, December 17th—Exodus 14: 13-22.

"The Lord shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace"—how often the words are proved true!

One time to remember them is when I am anxious for growth in grace. It is right that I should "gird up the loins of my mind" that I should "give diligence to make my calling and election sure," that I should "keep under the body." But God does more for me than I can do for myself, and I must lean on him. That preserves me from feverishness. That makes my progress certain.

Another time to remember them is when I am in darkness of spirit. The Greek hunter Orion, when he was deprived of sight, turned his eyeballs to the sun, and his vision came back. Let me gaze and gaze towards my Sun of Righteousness, and at length my midnight will flee.

And yet another time to remember them is when I am desirous of the salvation of others. When I have tried all that my wisdom and my love can suggest, I must recognize the limits of my power. I must leave God to "give the increase." Having used every means, I must commit the issue to Father and Son and Spirit.

Along the whole of my Christian course, the battle is not mine but his.

Wednesday, December 18—Exodus 14: 23-31.

Here is the triumph of simple trust.

Sometimes it is anything but easy, in the difficulties of the soul, to maintain my faith and to believe that all will come right. There are critical seasons when despair looks natural and almost unavoidable. But despair is not the mood of mind to which any Christian is called. Nay, not despair, but its contradictory and opposite.

I am to be like General Gordon in Khartoum during the last weeks of the long siege. He built himself a tower of observation, from the top of which he could command the whole country round. At dawn he slept; by day he looked to his defenses, and administered justice, and cheered the spirit of his people; every night he mounted to his tower, and there, as one of his biographers says, "alone with his God, a universal sentinel, he kept watch over the ramparts, and prayed for the help that never came." He could not work out the deliverance of himself, but he had childlike confidence in God. And the divine help did come—the martyr's crown, the everlasting rest, the good soldier's welcome from his Commander-in-Chief.

God blesses to the full the heart that relies on him. "Thus saith the Lord: In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

Thursday, December 19th—Exodus 15: 1-10.

After victory, let there be the song of praise.

Surely I have been blind. I have complained that my life is dull and monotonous, poor and paltry. But God does as marvelous things for it and for me as he did for Israel in the mighty waters. When Jacob lay down to sleep in Bethel, the place looked barren, weird, dismal; but, when he awoke, he said, "This is none other but the gate of heaven." So may my Lord purge my vision, and the stoniest parts of my history will be glorious.

And surely I have been thankless. Where have my hymns of gratitude been? How seldom and how perfunctorily have I blessed the Hand that guided and the Heart that planned! "Up, my sinking eyes! Up, my drowsing heart!"

And surely I have been hopeless. It is not the Aurorra which I see, with the dying Neander; it is the sunset, "and after that the dark." I am full of gloomy prognostications and prophecies of evil. But the love of God is not wearied yet, and it never will be. He will send revival to the Church. He will save the world. His mercies are perennial, bestowed on each generation, "new every morning." What he did long since at the Red Sea he will do again and again.

Friday, December 20th—Exodus 15: 11-21.

"What has been, it is that which shall be:" to-day I give the words their happiest signification. Because Egypt is vanquished, "the dukes of Edom shall be amazed: the mighty men of Moab, trembling shall take hold upon them; all the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away." God has been with me in six troubles, and he will lead me safely through the seventh. I go from strength to strength. I travel "through a region bright." Beyond question, he who has begun the good work will perform it, too.

Though I toil all the night, and take nothing, and do not know where my daily bread is to come from, in the morning he will supply all my need. Though the great iron gate, massive, impenetrable, seems to shut me in from liberty and useful service, lo, he will send his angel, and the gate will open of its own accord. Though the storm sweeps down upon me, the hour of testing and trial, he will come to me over the crest of the waves, and there shall be a great calm. Though I sit in a desolate chamber, whose doors are closed to all comfort, before I am aware he will stand in the midst, saying, "Peace be unto you!"

Saturday, December 21st—Psalm 77: 11-20.

"Thy way is in the sea:" I know it as Asaph knew it long ago.

There is a sea of sorrow. I lose my dearest, "my loves, my best beloved of all." I am overtaken by bereavement and loneliness. The cold waters seem as though they would engulf and drown me. But if God is mine, he draws near me when the floods lift up their voice. So he drew near James Gilmour, in Mongolia, when he bade farewell to his wife. A new tenderness softened that strong nature. A new zeal impelled him on. A new Power filled him.

There is a sea of doubt. A hundred vexing problems rise up like armed men—problems of belief, and problems of experience. But God comes to me across the tossing billows. He solves some difficulties; and, if he lets others remain, it is only that I may lean more implicitly on himself, and may learn that the life of trust is better than the possession of the mind which has taken all knowledge for its province.

There is a sea of temptation; but, if he enables me to overcome, then I am better, stronger, wiser, holier, for the conflict. It reveals my character. It matures my soul. It crowns my life. It teaches me to testify to his sustaining and perfecting grace.

Sunday, December 22nd—Psalm 106: 1-12.

Hundreds of years after the Red Sea was crossed, the deliverance wrought out there was recalled and celebrated. In similar fashion let me remember "the days of old, the years of ancient time." It will be a strong consolation to myself.

Those who trod the path of life before me made trial of God, and found him a very present help. He was their Rock and Fortress; and to me they have handed down the stimulating tradition of his mercy and power. The French Huguenots and the Scottish Covenanters had a pleasant fancy. When persecution had done its worst with them, when their churches were demolished and their worship forbidden, they gathered in the darkness round the ruins, and they imagined that they heard the sound of Psalms in the air, "a song in the night as of a holy solemnity."

And nothing on earth can disturb that sang,
Not Clavers in a' his pride;
For it's raised by the Lord's ain ransomed thrang, Forgethered abune Kirkbride.

The melodies of saints and martyrs haunted the hallowed spots. It should be as reviving to me to think that my God was Master and Friend of the good who preceded me. I am cheered by the knowledge of what he did for them. I catch the far-off echoes of their Psalms of thanksgiving and praise.

*The Little Champion.**

BY CARMEN SYLVA (QUEEN ELIZABETH OF ROUMANIA).

(Continued from last week.)

Now it was the turn of the other child to wish. He was a very small boy, and he took some time to make up his mind. "I want a little live horse to ride," he said at last. That moment the sound of galloping hoofs echoed through the forest, and a beautiful little dun-colored pony, with long mane and tail, dashed out and came straight up to the boy and rubbed his nose on his shoulder, as though asking to be caressed.

"Oh, you darling little creature," cried the boy, beside himself with delight; "but he cannot really be my own!"

"Yes, he is really your own; but you must let your little companions ride him, too, and play with him, as long as they do not tire him nor hurt him. For if any one should hurt him, then he would kick out so that whoever had hurt him would never want to mount him again. He must never have a blow, only kind words, and pats, and sugar, bread, carrots and a handful of oats; he wants nothing more. But you must comb and groom him yourself and clean out his stable more than once a day. You must take plenty of trouble about him, or one morning you may find him gone, for I insist on all the animals that belong to me being made happy, as happy as you have all been today. And now," she said, turning to Arnold, "I am going to ask the guest in whose honor the banquet has been given what he would like for himself?"

"But I have had a present," said Arnold; "I may not have another wish?"

"Yes, you may!"

"Well, then," said the boy, "I want to ask you, kind fairy, to pardon these two friends of mine, whose presents the frogs have run away with, so that they may not have to return home ashamed and empty-handed after such a day."

He had hardly finished speaking when the loveliest precious stones were already in the boys' hands, and delighted, they embraced Arnold, and rushing up to the good fairy, kissed her hands and stroked her shining hair. And the others, seeing this, all crowded round, begging that they too might be allowed just once to touch her beautiful hair. And as they did so a feeling of gladness so intense came over them it was as if the whole world were theirs.

"You little guess what it is I have bestowed upon you," said the fairy, smiling; "I have lent you the power to do good to others, to make happy all those you love. Now you must see to it that you love many, and try to help many, for without love the charm will not work. But since my favorite, Arnold, has asked nothing for himself, I shall give him my spindle; he will make good use of it. As often as you wish to help others," she continued, turning to the boy, "you have only to touch it and whatever you want will be there. But it will never grant a selfish wish, nor need you have any fear of its being stolen from you, for it can take good care of itself. Would any one like to try to take it from me?" asked the fairy.

One boy, bolder than the rest, laughingly put out his hand, but the magic spindle at once began to belabor him with such good will he cried out for mercy, and instantly it was back again in the firm, gracious hand that held it out to Arnold. "Take it; and as for all of you who now laugh so loudly, remember that in Arnold's hand it may still be a benefactress to you. Hold it in high honor, for it has been very dear to me, and has worked for me for many a year, and has helped me more than any of you can understand."

But now when it came to the leave-taking, the children were so distressed and begged so hard, with tears in their eyes, that they might see the fairy again some day that she said at last: "If for a whole year you have all been good children, and not one of you has had to be punished nor to be kept in at school, and no one has been unkind to brothers and sisters or play-fellows, nor disobedient to his parents, then you may all meet together again in this meadow, and Arnold has only to wave the spindle once and I will be there in the midst of you, and you shall be my guests once more."

The young people were not altogether cheered by this, for they had their misgivings, knowing very well that they were not always quite so perfect as they might be; however, they all vowed silently in their hearts that they would work hard and that no fault of their own should deprive them of the promised reward.

"Look here," said one boy to another who was often backward with his lessons, "if you don't work this time you will get such a thrashing from the rest of us that you will remember it."

"I think," said the fairy, who had heard the threat, "it might be better if some of you were to help your companion with his work, as it is perhaps more difficult for him than for you."

They all stopped and looked at one another. "That is true," they cried. "We will all help him, and then he will get on, and we shall all be able to meet here together again next year."

How they succeeded I must tell you some day in another story.

(THE END.)

Bishop Wilberforce used to tell a story of a clerk at a village church of the old style who deliberately took half a crown out of the offertory plate as he brought it up to the communion table and slipped it into his pocket. "I distinctly saw him take it," said the bishop, "and intended to charge him with it at the end of the service; but, carried away by the sublimity of the service, I forgot all about it. Next day I remembered and spoke about it. 'Oh, sir,' said the old clerk, 'never you fash yourself about that! That half-crown has done good service for many years. I keep it to put down first; then the gentry, when they see a poor man like me put 2s. 6d. in the plate, cannot for shame give a less sum themselves!' Not to be imitated.

General Church News

INTERDENOMINATIONAL EVANGELISTIC EFFORTS.

In Berkshire county, Mass., there has been a co-operative movement in response to the call of the national committee of the Twentieth Century Gospel campaign which has some interesting and unusual features. Four denominations in Pittsfield, through their leading pastors, issued a call for two days of conference and prayer, inviting pastors of all the evangelical churches in the county. At this conference a committee was chosen representing all the denominations uniting in the work. This committee sent out a circular letter to all the churches, asking the following questions:

1. Will you unite with other churches in a special work of evangelization?

2. Will you release your pastor for a period of service in another church and community?

3. Do you desire special services in your church, and will you gather at least one offering to assist in defraying the necessary expense?

When responses came in it was found that more than thirty churches desired the services and an adequate number of pastors volunteered to engage in the work. It was determined to employ no outside evangelist, and, after the gospel method, to send the ministers by twos, each couple to represent different denominations.

Five series of services of five days each have been concluded. Eight churches have shared in the work. During each series a dozen or more persons have openly declared their purpose to lead a Christian life, and they were those whom the ordinary services had failed to reach. In some unpromising fields results have been most gratifying. In all about seventy persons have responded during the two weeks to the claims presented before them. And, above all, the essential unity of the Church of Christ has been demonstrated by these pastors and members of the various denominational churches.

OHIO FEDERATION OF CHURCHES.

A convention of delegates appointed by the various religious bodies of the state of Ohio met in Columbus Dec. 3d in the interests of federation. Fourteen denominations were represented and several local federations. After a careful consideration of the subject and the needs, an organization was effected and a constitution adopted similar to that of the New York Federation. An executive board of seventeen members was appointed, with President J. W. Bashford, D. D., as president; Rev. Charles H. Small as secretary, and Rev. Dr. John Clark Hill as treasurer. The State Council is to be constituted by the election of a delegate by each denomination and one additional for every 15,000 members. The secretary of the National Federation, Rev. E. B. Sanford, D. D., was present and his efficient help in furthering the work was heartily appreciated. Delegates were appointed to the annual meeting of the National Federation to be held in Washington Feb. 4 and 5.

The object of the federation is to promote the effective co-operation of the churches and Christian workers of the state, to stimulate local federations in cities and towns of the state, and to provide that the evangelization of every community may be more systematically accomplished.

INTERNATIONAL PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.

It is over twenty years since the great Prophetic conference was held in the church of the Holy Trinity, New York, when Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., was at the height of his popularity. At that time Drs. Kellogg, Gordon, Nicholson, Brooks, Clark and W. P. McKay—all of whom are deceased—were the prominent speakers. It is now proposed to hold an international conference on matters of prophecy, in Clarendon Street Baptist church, Boston, from Dec. 10th to 15th, inclusive. Although the conference is under the direction of brethren whose views are in harmony with what was taught at the previous conference named, we do not notice, on the present program, any name that appeared on the former. The speakers are Sir Robert Anderson, LL. D.; Prof. Margoliouth, M. A.; Henry Varley and Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglass, M. A., from Great Britain, and Drs. A. C. Dixon, E. W. Hunt, Jas. M. Gray, Henry G. Weston, W. G. Moorehead, C. I. Schofield, Elmore Harris, W. J. Erdman, E. Y. Mullins, L. W. Munhall, Robert Cameron, E. C. Gordon, H. M. King, Arthur T. Pierson, Len G. Broughton and Rt. Rev. W. W. Niles, D. D. An hour is to be devoted to asking and answering questions at the morning sessions. Amongst other themes to be discussed are "The Integrity of the Scriptures," "The Pre-eminence of the Lord's Coming in the New Testament," "The Conversion of the Jews and the Conversion of the World," "Signs of the Nearness of the Lord's Coming," "The Resurrections and the Judgments," "The Coming and Universal Sovereignty of the Lord, the World's Greatest Need," "Redemption—Past, Present and Future," "The

Your Problem Solved.

Secure a Twentieth Century New Testament for your preacher or S. S. superintendent. Such a valuable Christmas gift will delight any friend. See announcement on another page.

Second Advent and the Future Life," "The Eschatology of Jesus," "The Holy Spirit in Prophecy and Fulfilment," and "The Final Consummation of All Things." Tremont Temple is also engaged for the services of the closing day.

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

The twenty-eighth annual gathering was at Fort Worth, Texas, Nov. 20th. This was the first time the White Ribbons had held a convention so far south; nevertheless there was the largest ex-officio representation that ever responded to the first roll call—147. There was altogether a voting delegation of 293 and a visiting and fraternal delegation of double that number. There was a notable spirit of harmony and enthusiasm. According to established custom, the Crusade

MEMORY FOOD.

A Case Where Memory Was Strengthened by Grape-Nuts.

Food that will actually help the memory as well as agree perfectly with a delicate stomach is worth knowing of.

A good wife out in Alta, Ia., who did not know which way to turn to get food that would agree with her husband, who was left in a weakened condition after a serious illness and could scarcely retain any food in his stomach, was one day induced to try him on Grape-Nuts, the famous ready-cooked breakfast food, and from the first he began to improve rapidly. In three months he had gained 30 pounds.

She says that his stomach has recovered so completely that he can now eat any kind of food.

She mentions the boy of an intimate acquaintance, who was so delicate and thin that his appearance was pitiable and he had no appetite for any ordinary food. He was put on Grape-Nuts and liked the crispness and sweetish taste of the new food and took to it. His improvement began at once and he is now a healthy, plump boy.

"I know that Grape-Nuts will do more for weak stomachs than any medicine. The claim that it will build up and strengthen the brain has been proven to my certain knowledge. Sister, who writes for the press, and is compelled to memorize a great deal, has been using Grape-Nuts and says she is surprised at the result. There is a marked improvement in her memory and the brain works more perfectly and with better results.

"Please do not publish my name." Name can be given by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Psalm was read at the opening and the Crusade hymn sung.

The address of the president, Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, contained the following significant passage: "One of the chief sources of anarchy in our country is without doubt the un-American liquor business, for the saloons are the schools of lawlessness. It is too well known for me to even mention that the assassin of President McKinley imbibed his first lessons in anarchy in his father's saloon, which was the headquarters of anarchists, and that a Buffalo saloon was his home while he was nerving himself to do the dreadful deed. Because we are patriots, if for no other reason, we should work for the overthrow of the saloon and the saloon power and for the extermination of the liquor traffic. On the day of President McKinley's burial, in that hour of supreme sorrow, when the heart and the business of the nation stood still, the saloon alone could not afford to stop, but in many places defiantly plied its trade—selfish, cruel and diabolical as it always is."

The corresponding secretary's report showed an encouraging growth in the organization, 6,000 new members having paid dues. The treasurer's report presented a balance of $536, although the expenditures have been about $24,000.

The young women's work and that of the Loyal Temperance Legion—the work for children—showed great increase in growth, which is, of course, a most hopeful and encouraging feature. The reports of all departments showed that the society is growing in numbers and influence. "New open doors" and "Greater responsiveness" were the watchwords of all those who have been at work in the field.

An important meeting was the Philippine rally on Sunday afternoon. A public farewell was given to Mrs. Carrie C. Faxon, who was to leave for Manila the next day. She goes as W. C. T. U. commissioner to open rest and reading rooms for our soldiers in the Philippines. The interest aroused in the social needs and conditions of the islands was demonstrated in the contribution taken, which amounted to $1,528.45.

The convention was practically unanimous against formally indorsing the Prohibition party. It was reported at the convention that the sale of alcoholic liquors was forbidden on fair grounds in the District of Columbia and in the states of Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia and Missouri. There are now connected with the W. C. T. U. 1,133 Bands of Mercy, with a membership of 36,008. The union has twelve rescue homes and much has been accomplished during the year by the Department of Purity. Florida, Tennessee and Idaho have this year raised the age of protection for girls to eighteen years. More than 2,000 towns in the United States have now a curfew law.

The same corps of officers which has guided the organization so successfully was re-elected. These are: President, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens of Maine; vice president, Miss Anna A. Gordon of Massachusetts; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Sue M. D. Frye of Illinois; recording secretary, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Kansas; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, Kentucky; treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker.

The evening gatherings were very popular, drawing large audiences. Hon. T. J. Powell, the mayor of Fort Worth, addressed the convention the first night, speaking appreciatively of "that matchless trinity, Woman, Christianity, Temperance." Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president of the Texas W. C. T. U., referred to the map she had prepared of the state, showing the 120 prohibition counties in black, and gave as the reason why white had not been us from one to five dollars and we shall send you from one to five Bibles. If you are not satisfied, you may keep the Bibles as a Christmas gift and we shall refund your money. We have some flexible back Testaments and a few other Testaments worth fifty cents and one dollar each. Teachers may have these fine Testaments at three dollars a dozen. Write to-day or you will be too late.

HIGH ALTITUDES.

Food Cannot Be Boiled as Quickly as in Low.

The curious experiences people have with coffee drinking are worth pondering over if any one is ailing and does not know the exact reason thereof.

Coffee is a secretive worker, and through the nervous system affects different parts of the body in different people.

A young married woman, Mrs. T. L. Blackmon, Oswego, Montana, had a conclusive experience in the effects of coffee on her eyes. She says: "I have used coffee since a child, but a short time ago my eyes began to grow weak, and the least exertion such as reading or sewing would cause shooting pains and wavy lines of light so that I could see but little else for minutes at a time.

"This alarmed me and I earnestly sought the cause of the trouble. Some one told me that coffee sometimes affected the eyes. I at once decided to quit it and see if I would be benefited, but I must have something to take the place of coffee, for I wanted to modify, as much as possible, the sacrifice of giving it up.

"So I decided to try Postum for myself. When it came I made it strictly according to directions and was wonderfully surprised and pleased with it. Husband says that my Postum is very different, indeed, from that he once drank at a friend's table.

"I frankly own that I like Postum better than I ever liked coffee. It has a rich body to it that coffee lacks. I boil it longer than twenty minutes and it improves it. Perhaps it requires longer boiling in the high altitudes. I think it does.

"For three months now I have been using Postum and have been wonderfully benefited. My eyes no longer pain me, and are strong as they ever were. My complexion, instead of being sallow as formerly, is clear and rosy. I know to a certainty that my improvement has been caused by leaving off coffee and using Postum, for that is absolutely the only change I have made, and I have taken no medicine.

"A Mr. Randall, a friend of ours, has obtained relief from his stomach trouble and headaches by leaving off coffee and taking Postum. We think we know something of the facts about coffee and about Postum."

OUR CHRISTMAS BOX.

Man of Glengarry.

We will send "The Man of Glengarry" (price $1.50) to any reader of The Christian Century who will send us one new subscription to The Christian Century and two dollars.

Book Offer.

"A Lilly of France" (price $1.25 prepaid), "Our Plea for Union" (75c prepaid), The Christian Century, one year $1.50, all three sent to any address in the United States for two dollars.

Special Bible Offer.

Large parallel Bibles (regular price $2.50) and The Christian Century (one year $1.50), both given to a new subscriber for $2.00. We will send one of these Bibles to any old subscriber who will renew and send us one new subscription to The Christian Century as long as the stock lasts.

Magazine Offer.

A year's subscription to any one of the one-dollar magazines, such as "Success," "The Ladies' Home Journal," "Cosmopolitan," and a handsome leather-bound New Testament ($1.50) for a club of five subscribers to The Christian Century and six dollars in cash.

Great Bible Offer.

To the readers of The Christian Century and their friends we offer a limited number of Bibles and Testaments at one-half price. Fine bold-faced type teachers' Bibles at sixty per cent discount. We have only a few of these Bibles in stock. First come, first served. Do not wait to inquire. Send used that black in this case meant death to the liquor traffic.

The young women had the floor on Saturday evening and made good use of it as a vantage point from which to inspire enthusiasm for the cause. Miss Christina Tinling of London, England, made the chief address, basing it on the thought, "The nobler born the maiden, the more bound to be sweet and serviceable."

The children's work embodied in the Loyal Temperance Legion occupied Monday evening. On Tuesday night a state benefit was held, the states which had made a net gain of 500 or more being represented on the platform. South Dakota, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Kansas, Texas and Oklahoma territory were the banner states.

Wednesday night the enthusiasm of the convention culminated and so closed.

Your Problem Solved.

Secure a Twentieth Century New Testament for your preacher or S. S. superintendent. Such a valuable Christmas gift will delight any friend. See announcement on another page.

CHICAGO TRACT SOCIETY.

The twelfth anniversary of the Chicago Tract Society was celebrated on Monday, Dec. 2d, at the Young Men's Christian Association Auditorium. The annual address was delivered by the Rev. William A. Bartlett, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational church. Several of the missionary workers of the society took part in the service, and the reports of both the treasurer and secretary showed that encouraging progress had been made. Three special services are arranged in connection with this anniversary in the three sections of the city. These will be held during the Sunday evenings of December. On the 15th, anniversary services will be held at the Warren Avenue Congregational church, and on the 22d at the Kenwood Evangelical church. Following is the condensed summary of the year's work:

Half a million pages of tracts in more than a score of languages have been distributed through voluntary workers. Twelve missionary colporters have served the society during the whole or a part of this year. The total time devoted to the work has been equal to that of one man for eighty months. These colporters have worked largely among our foreign-speaking population, and have been able to use orally, in the aggregate, ten languages, and to distribute literature judiciously in as many more; 54,000 homes have been visited. In 48,000 of them prayer or religious conversation has been engaged in. By sale and donation some thousands of good books have been put in circulation.

The work among the poor of our city at Dunning and in the Cook County Hospital has been especially fruitful. The Christian Endeavor Societies of the city have, to a considerable extent, assumed the responsibility of these two departments of work. At Dunning they have used literature and tracts in thirteen languages, and at the County Hospital similar use has been made of literature in eighteen different languages.

The results cannot be measured or estimated, but many wanderers have been reclaimed. More than 400 hopeful conversions have been reported as the direct result of the efforts of the missionary colporters.

The society needs money to carry on and extend this work. Every dollar that is contributed to the treasury will provide at least two thousand pages of literature in any of the languages in use.

There is special need of the where-withal to sustain at least seven more good men to labor among the more than 300,000 Slavonic people of Chicago. Mr. David Vernon, 167-169 Wabash avenue, is treasurer.

Chicago and Vicinity.

Belden Avenue Baptist church has come into possession of valuable property, seventy-five feet east of Halsted street, and near the church building. With improvements, conveyed to it by Mr. A. J. Rankin, who also adds $2,000 to his gift, the total value to the church is $12,000. The building is to be used for the young men's and young women's work in the church.

About a score of the men of the Irving Park Baptist church and congregation have organized themselves into a men's club for social, intellectual and spiritual improvement. The club will meet on the first Monday evening of each month at 6:30 and after supper will discuss questions of interest, local, denominational and otherwise. This church has a German department in its Sunday school, with fifteen to twenty pupils in attendance.

St. Paul's Episcopal church occupied its new building Dec. 8th. The cost is $65,000, without the organ, which will be $7,000. The edifice is Gothic in style and constructed of gray stone.

Rev. Dr. L. A. Crandall, pastor of Memorial Baptist church, has announced four series of addresses, with one sermon in each series. The subjects are: "Hymns We Love," "Dead Men Who Live," "Questions that Trouble" and "Applied Christianity." Each month will have one of each series.

West Division Christian Endeavor Union held a rally Tuesday evening at the Union Park Congregational church. Rev. W. H. Matthews of the Central Park Presbyterian church led the devotional exercises and Rev. W. A. Bartlett of the First Congregational church delivered an address. The same evening the Oak Park division held a rally at the Austin Congregational

LIFE SAVED BY SWAMP-ROOT.

The Wonderful New Discovery in Medical Science.

Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Swamp-Root, discovered by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, is wonderfully successful in promptly curing kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Some of the early symptoms of weak kidneys are pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatism, dizziness, headache, nervousness, catarrh of the bladder, gravel or calculi, bloating, sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, suppression of urine, or compelled to pass water often day and night.

The mild and extraordinary effect of the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best.

Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and a pamphlet that tells all about it, including many of the thousands of letters received from sufferers cured, both sent free by mail. Write Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and please mention that you read this generous offer in the Christian Century.

church. Miss Florence Ben-Oliel spoke.

The Amoret Henson Guild of the First Baptist church held its monthly meeting and supper Nov. 25th, with an attendance of fifty-five young ladies. An excellent program followed. The guild carries on a work for young ladies by young ladies. It conducts a Bible class on Sundays, which has an increasing attendance.

Lexington Avenue Baptist church keeps "open house" monthly. The several auxiliary societies have in charge the providing of refreshments and the reception committee. A short program is rendered and a cordial "get-acquainted" spirit makes welcome the large numbers of strangers these socials bring together. Special invitations are sent to the newcomers reported to the pastor by the members, who are on the watch for them, and the plan followed in a complete and business-like manner has proved successful.

The Baptist City Mission Society has secured the $1,500 extra needed towards the purchase of the property of the Chicago Polish Mission.

A farewell reception was given to Dr. W. T. Meloy and his wife by the congregation of the First United Presbyterian church on the occasion of his resignation of the pastorate after a tenure of nearly twenty-four years.

Several addresses were made and a presentation to Dr. Meloy of a gold watch and chain and to his wife of a brooch set with pearls and diamonds.

At the Kenwood Evangelical church, Dec. 1, Rev. John Crosser welcomed twenty-six to membership, five of them on confession of faith.

Woodlawn Park Presbyterian church, Rev. Dr. E. H. Curtis, pastor, received twenty-two new members Dec. 1.

The Central church, Dr. Gunsaulus, pastor, and the First Methodist church, Dr. J. P. Brushingham, united in a Thanksgiving service at the People's church, McVicker's theater, on Thanksgiving Day. Dr. Brushingham preached.

The Open church (Methodist) gave a dinner to 400 of the neighborhood poor on Thanksgiving Day.

An all-day session of the Chicago Western District Ministerial Association (Methodist) was held at Western Avenue church Nov. 26. There was an excellent attendance and the interest was so great at this first meeting that it was decided to meet twice each year, in the fall and spring. The following papers were presented: "The preacher in the prayer meeting," Rev. C. L. Roberts; "The preacher in his pastoral work," Rev. J. M. Caldwell; "The preacher and the presentation of the benevolences," Rev. John R. Creighton; "The preacher and Epworth League problems," Rev. M. W. Chase; "The preacher and the promotion of family religion," Rev. E. D. Hull; "The preacher's equipment for revival work," Rev. T. K. Gale; "The conditions on which the gift is received," Rev. J. A. Matlack; "The gift of the Holy Spirit the present heritage of the Church," Rev. M. B. Williams.

Your Problem Solved.

Secure a Twentieth Century New Testament for your preacher or S. S. superintendent. Such a valuable Christmas gift will delight any friend. See announcement on another page.

Baptist.

Rev. Stephen A. Northrop has served the First church, Kansas City, Mo., for five years. During this time 527 persons have been added to its membership and nearly $40,000 raised for church expenses and beneficence.

At Dundee, Ills., the pastor has two classes of boys and girls each week at the parsonage for instruction in Bible study, missionary work and encouragement and help in Christian living.

Between forty and fifty have been received into the Baptist church of Centralia, Ills., during the month of November as a result of the union meetings recently held there.

"Muster day" at Moline, Ills., had special speakers and Dr. E. A. Stone addressed the home Sunday school; nearly thirty of the boys and girls expressed a willingness to follow Christ.

EDW. B. BAGBY recommends the Scripture Readings of The Praise Hymnal

"With the opening of our new house of worship we introduced a new hymn book. Our music committee selected THE PRAISE HYMNAL, and we have never regretted their choice. We found beautiful and appropriate hymns for our dedicatory service. For the varying seasons that have followed, and for all the regular and special services held, we have found this selection adequate to all needs.

"I wish to commend especially the collection of Psalms and Topical Selections from the Revised Version of the Scriptures. The use of these Responsive Readings has greatly enriched the worship of our Lord's Day meetings.

EDWARD B. BAGBY."

Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C.

We advise our customers to take the cloth with leather back binding, not because it is our profit, but because it is best for them. The price is $75 per hundred copies. We send samples on approval where persons wish to examine the book.

FILLMORE BROS., - 119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O.
40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

THE CHOIR, our monthly anthem journal, is meeting with great success. We are glad to send samples to choir leaders. It wins every time. (9)

Christian Cleanliness

Why do you permit a custom at the communion table which you would not tolerate in your own home? Would you like to know where Individual Communion Cups are used? Send for our free book—it tells all about it. A trial outfit sent free.

SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT COMPANY, Box 111 Rochester, N. Y.

Congregational.

At the communion service November 3, ninety-six students of Mount Holyoke College united with the church through the wayside covenant. The occasion was deeply impressive.

Two Sunday school classes at Shawmut church, Boston, have just celebrated their first anniversary. The young men's class has acquired a membership of 250, while the young women's numbers 200. From the two classes fifty-three young people have been received into the church. Mr. and Mrs. Floody are the teachers. The members of the classes are organized into bands of ten to keep track of absentees. A Saturday evening prayer-meeting is held at the teachers' home, which brings the two classes together. This is also done in various social ways.

During the eight years' service of Rev. W. L. Sutherland as state Sunday school superintendent of Kansas over 200 schools have been organized.

Washburn College, Topeka, Kas., has over 300 students, its largest number yet. Holbrook Hall for women has been newly furnished by several women's clubs of Topeka.

Rev. Edward G. Heal began his pastorate of the West Pittston (Pa.) church in May, 1900; the membership at that time was fifty-eight and the debt $3,100. To-day the membership is 145 and the debt is gone; $500 of it had been standing since the erection of the church in 1883.

Cleveland, O., has twenty-two Congregational churches; they have twenty-four pastors and two pastors' assistants. Cyril church has Bohemian services; Bethlehem both English and Bohemian, with a pastor for each; Mizpah has in addition to Bohemian and English a Polish service. There is a church for the Welsh, the Scandinavians and the colored people. An Italian mission is maintained jointly by the Euclid Avenue and the City Missionary Society. Some work has been done among the Germans and Magyars. One of the churches, numbering 200, has not in its membership a single original Congregationalist.

Pilgrim church, Cleveland, carries on its institutional work through the Pilgrim Institute, which has a membership of between 300 and 400. The institute work for this season includes the library and reading room, issuing 2,200 books a year; the Olney Kindergarten, with 75 pupils; the Sewing School, 20 teachers and 150 girls; the Mothers' Club, 80 members, studying home life and child culture; the Congressional Club, 50 members, studying national problems; the Young Men's Club, for those between 16 and 20; the Orchestral Club, 20 members, appearing once a month in the Sunday evening service; the Boys' Club, and the Gymnasium, with classes for women, men and boys.

Colorado College opens its new year with by far the largest enrollment in its history, having six hundred students in all departments. Ground has already been broken for the new Science Building, which will add greatly to the equipment of the institution, and which will cost something over two hundred thousand dollars. The remarkable growth of the college has made it necessary to increase the faculty by the addition of four new members.

In Oklahoma City, Pastor Harper of Pilgrim church has organized a class for Bible study which meets Wednesday evenings. He is using Dr. Jas. Gray's system of lessons. The interest and attendance are growing. An athletic club for the boys has been organized, and free lectures are being planned for the school children. The Sunday school is the largest in the territory. A chorus has been organized under a competent leader.

The Disciples.

The Alabama Christian Missionary convention was very encouraging in its spirit. The reports were satisfactory. The additions during the year have been 215.

The Mothers' and Babies' Home in St. Louis was opened two and a half years ago. Since then 404 babies have been in the home from twenty-eight states and territories. Sixty-six babies have been placed with Christian families in ten states. This is the only institution in St. Louis that will keep the mother with her baby. If the mother is working she pays a nominal sum for her baby's board. Almost 300 women, some of them in despair and destitute, have been helped.

The University of Texas has among its students this year exactly 100 members of the Christian church.

The Second Christian church of St. Louis had a jubilee last week to celebrate the payment of its debt, largely due to the efforts of W. Daviess Pittman, a business man who has been acting as pastor without compensation for two years or more, preaches regularly twice every Sunday and has held protracted meetings with large results.

Rev. C. H. White completes his third year with the church in Galesburg, Ill., next April; 225 members have been added during his pastorate and an indebtedness of $4,000 has been paid.

Methodist.

The annual meeting of the Church Extension Society was held at Columbus, O. The treasurer's statement showed a remarkably fine increase of $343,000 in contributions. Aid was given by the society in the erection of 341 new churches within the year. Appropriations of $341,000 were voted for next year. It was decided that two new assistant secretaries were needed, and Drs. T. C. Iliff and W. D. Parr were chosen. The former has attained national celebrity as an anti-polygamy warrior.

A revival of five weeks' duration at De Soto, Wis., resulted in thirty-five accessions and about forty conversions. The church is greatly revived. Captain Frank Gray and his band assisted Pastor A. A. Pittenger.

At Perry, Ills., a special effort made by the pastor, Rev. W. W. Drake, and his people has resulted in forty-one persons confessing their faith in Christ. The pastor has a young people's and probationers' prayer circle at 3 p. m. on Sunday, with a membership of forty-two. He preaches to crowded houses morning and evening. The Sunday school is testing the capacity of the edifice. The Epworth League is well attended and is a power for good.

The twentieth annual convention of the Women's Home Missionary Society reported the sum total of receipts for the year as $234,246.21. The work is carried on under twenty-one bureaus in charge of trained secretaries. A silver loving cup was presented to the president, Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church, in general executive session, and representing 117,000 women, petitioned the United States Congress in the interest of the womanhood of this and other lands to pass the anti-polygamy constitutional amendment now pending and to be voted on the coming session of Congress. The foreign work of the society is embraced under the following classification: Three colleges, sixty-three boarding schools, 455 day schools, seventeen training schools, nineteen hospitals and dispensaries, besides kindergarten, evangelistic and industrial work.

The schools in charge of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society have an attendance of 10,146.

Presbyterian.

An all-day meeting for prayer and conference was held November 5 in Salem, Ore., invitations being sent by the special evangelistic committee to every minister and church in Willamette Presbytery. The conference was delightful in fellowship and a real spiritual uplift. The following week, November 10 to 15, union services were held in which a large part of the evangelical churches of the city participated. The program prepared by the "Twentieth Century National Gospel Campaign" committee was used.

The Presbytery of West Chester, Pa., holds an annual convention of ruling elders which serves a good purpose in stirring up loyalty and quickening to action by a comparison of views and the discussion of live questions, as well as a means of getting better acquainted. At the eighth annual convention of the elders of the above-named presbytery such subjects as the following were discussed: "Is the Fourth Commandment Still Valid in Its Integrity Enforcing a Day of Rest?" "What Shall Be Expected of an Elder in Visit-

After a Day's Hard Work Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It nourishes, strengthens and imparts new life and vigor, by supplying the needed nerve food. Relieves the worst forms of dyspepsia.

WRITE AND SEE.

Don't Let Prejudice Keep You from Getting Well.

No Money Is Wanted.

Simply write a postal for the book you need. See what I have to say. You can't know too much about ways to get well.

My way is not less effective because I tell you about it. There are millions of cases which nothing else can cure. How can I reach them save by advertising?

I will send with the book also an order on your druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I will tell him to let you test it for a month at my risk. If you are satisfied, the cost will be $5.50. If it fails, I will pay him myself.

The book will tell you how my Restorative strengthens the inside nerves. It brings back the power that operates the vital organs. My book will prove that no other way can make those organs strong.

No matter what your doubts. Remember that my method is unknown to you, while I spent a lifetime on it. Remember that only the cured need pay. Won't you write a postal to learn what treatment makes such an offer possible?

Book No. 1 on Dyspepsia,
Book No. 2 on the Heart,
Book No. 3 on the Kidneys,
Book No. 4 for Women,
Book No. 5 for Men ((sealed),
Book No. 6 on Rheumatism.

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 595 Racine, Wis.

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

ing Members of His Own Congregation?" "What Can the Elder Do to Increase the Activity and Zeal of the Elders and Members of the Church Generally?" "The Elder as the Pastor's Assistant," "The Duty of an Elder When the Pulpit is Vacant."

The United Presbyterian church at Avalon, Pa., has formed a society for the support of a school for girls in India the erection of a building and the salaries of two teachers. This interest was aroused by the reading of a book by the missionary at Pathankot, India, entitled "One Hundred Girls of India."

Indiana Synod's committee on evangelistic work, Rev. Dr. R. W. Hunter of Indianapolis, chairman, has issued a "pastoral letter" to the ministers of the synod, dealing with plans for a more decided soul-winning movement throughout the state. Days of prayer and conference in each presbytery are urged. It is insisted that each pastor hold special evangelistic services in each congregation, securing the aid of some other pastor or some evangelist of approved standing. For next summer the churches in the larger centers are exhorted to plan tent services. For the winter of 1902-3 the committee proposes that preparation be made in presbyterial institutes for the study of the Bible and evangelistic methods, to be held next autumn. Efforts are already being made to engage Dr. Moorehead, Dr. Woelfkin, and Mr. Gordon for such service in the synod.

Eighty have been added to the church at Palo Alto, Cal., during the year. Rev. Chas. Ellis Smith is the pastor.

The Sixth church, Des Moines, has lately undertaken institutional work in some of its departments and has remodeled a portion of its building with a view to it. A fully equipped gymnasium has been put into the basement. A boys' club, calling themselves "Junior Citizens," has been organized with about forty members, under the leadership of Mr. W. E. Hamlin, a recent graduate of Grinnell College, a specialist in sociology. Rev. Chas. E. Reynolds is the pastor.

The superintendent of the First church Sunday school of Salt Lake City, Mr. Thomas Weir, offered prizes aggregating about $40 in value, for the best essays written by scholars of the school on the life of Joseph at the close of the series of five lessons dealing with his career. For the purposes of the competition the school was divided into five grades. Scholars in the youngest grade were allowed to tell the story orally instead of writing it. Mr. Weir found his plan a great stimulant to study.

The members of Central Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, of which Dr. John F. Carson is pastor, practically wiped out a mortgage of $40,000 at the morning and evening services Sunday, December 1.

Your Problem Solved.

Secure a Twentieth Century New Testament for your preacher or S. S. superintendent. Such a valuable Christmas gift will delight any friend. See announcement on another page.

GENERAL.

The Bible study rally at Harvard University, on October 9, was addressed by Mr. Henry B. Wright, Yale, '98. Fifty-seven men were enrolled in four classes at the close of the meeting. A series of daily Bible readings, selected from the Old and New Testaments, has been prepared. These are intended to supplement and not supplant the courses of study and are distributed to the students of the university. The Religious Union and the St. Paul Society will co-operate with the Law School and other university men in Bible work.

At the ninety-eighth anniversary of the Vermont Bible Society held October 27 it was reported that three colporters have visited over 7,000 homes, and many of the public institutions of the state have been supplied with Bibles.

The National conference on the Christian Principles of Civil Government which met in Pittsburg November 19-21 was attended by more than 500. The first address of the conference was made by the Rev. T. P. Stevenson, D. D., of Philadelphia, on "The March of the Nations Toward the Kingdom of Christ." This was a review of the events of modern history which shows that public morals are improving, that the sway of the Christian nations is being extended over the whole earth, and that the governments nominally Christian are becoming more and more Christian. The Rev. S. F. Scovel, D. D., of Wooster University, spoke on "Practical Methods of Christian Education in the Public Schools;" Congressman Robt. Walker Taylor of Ohio, on "The Place of the Family in Our National Life;" Mr. Clinton Rodgers Woodruff, secretary of the Municipal League of Philadelphia, on "Municipal Reform—The Moral Elements in the Problem," and President Charles A. Blanchard of Wheaton College, Illinois, on "The Bearing of National Reform on Spiritual Interests." "The Expression of Our National Christianity in Fundamental Law" was discussed by the Rev. Dr. McAllister of Pittsburg and the Rev. H. H. George, D. D., field secretary of the National Reform Association. Resolutions were adopted insisting on Christian training in the public schools as essential to a good and patriotic citizenship; on a national marriage and divorce law in accord with the law of Christ; condemning the Sunday newspaper; protesting against the reenactment of the Chinese Exclusion Law, while favoring impartial restrictions on immigration.

When General O. O. Howard was in Portland, Ore., there was a mass-meeting of the Chinese residents to meet him. He showed an interest in the effort to repeal the Geary law. The Chinese leaders requested the missions to meet with them. This is the first time the organized merchants have recognized the missions. Three hundred dollars was collected and handed to General Howard to use in helping toward the repeal of the law. November 16, the Chinese Merchants' Association called a mass-meeting of Chinese residents to consider what should be done. The Rev. Mr. Chase of the Presbyterian mission was asked to be their spokesman. The old Chinese theater building was well filled. Then, as a sort of compensation for what the Christian Chinese had done, on Sunday, November 17, the theater was opened for religious services. An organ was carried to the theater and was played by a Christian Chinese. Mrs. W. S. Holt, the superintendent of the Presbyterian mission, was invited to a seat on the platform, and Mr.

Just one thing: prejudice, keeps some women from using PEARLINE. They think, if it acts on dirt so strongly, it must hurt the clothes. Soap and rubbing act on dirt, and the fabric is rubbed away. PEARLINE loosens the dirt better than any soap and bundles it out with little or no rubbing, and no injury. 656

Proved by Millions

Chase preached to an audience of about 300 people.

For the first time since the division of the religious Society of Friends, members from all parts of the United States, representing the three factions, orthodox, Hicksites and Wilburites, will meet together this month. The occasion is the American Friends' peace conference, which will be held in Philadelphia on December 12, 13 and 14.

Union street church, San Francisco, celebrated the third anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Dwight E. Potter, recently. During this period 154 members have been received, a mortgage has been burned, the church repaired and the pastor's salary increased. Through the organization of the Missionary Substitute company the church's gifts to foreign missions have been increased to $1,500 yearly, and like enthusiasm has been communicated to eight other churches in the presbytery where substitute companies have been organized.

Mizpah church, Portland, Oregon,

CATARRH CAN BE CURED.

Catarrh is a kindred ailment of consumption, long considered incurable; and yet there is one remedy that will positively cure catarrh in any of its stages. For many years this remedy was used by the late Dr. Stevens, a widely noted authority on all diseases of the throat and lungs. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption, and nervous diseases, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD.

Will sell tickets December 24th, 25th, 31st, 1901, and January 1st, 1902, at rate of a fare and a third for the round trip to any point located in Central Passenger Association territory, account Christmas and New Year holidays. Return limit including January 2d, 1902. Through service to New York City, Boston, and other eastern points. Chicago Passenger Station, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, on the Elevated Loop. For further information address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street. Chicago.

has had thirty-seven accessions within ten months. A new church edifice is being planned.

Rev. George B. Stewart, D. D., president of Auburn Theological Seminary, is traveling through the country and visiting the churches in order to arouse a greater interest in evangelistic work, and urge the holding of special meetings.

Rev. Dr. Thomas Marshall, field secretary of the Foreign Board, is holding meetings throughout the West in the interest of the foreign missionary work.

Foreign Missionary Items.

The workers in India, having learned of the deepened religious interest in Japan, have sent forth through their North India Mission Conference, assembled September 18-26 at Missoorie, a call for prayer that this wave of revival may sweep over all countries. Missionaries have been working in India now for one hundred years, and there are many indications that the seed so faithfully sown is likely to bear soon an unprecedented harvest.

The orphanage sustained by the Disciples at Bilaspur, India, has now over 120 girls who are taught to be useful in many ways. They do their own cooking, sewing, housecleaning, etc. Those who are well and old enough go to school. Those who stay at home after passing the upper primary examination are taught all kinds of fine needle work. Several of them learn nurse's work by taking care of the little babies, of whom there are quite a number in the orphanage. The outlook for this work is especially encouraging. Forty-six of the girls have united with the Church of Christ by baptism and by declaring their faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and their Savior. Quite a number of them have been married to Christian workers, and we learn that they are doing well. Several of them are doing good work for the Master. One is in charge of an orphanage, two or three are doing school work, and others are helping their husbands in various ways. The Chata school, in which one hundred and fifty girls are taught, and out of which five have passed their teachers' examination, the inspectors speak and write of as the best girls' school in the Central Provinces. The orphanage children have an excellent influence on the Hindu and Mohammedan children who attend school with them.

Through the zenana work, which has been carried on by Miss Boyd for many years, the Gospel of Jesus Christ is carried into Hindu and Mohammedan homes. The women who are taught are mostly in purdah (curtained) and would not otherwise hear anything about the Word of God. They receive regular Bible instruction this way, and the visits of their teacher are very much appreciated by them. The evangelistic work done in the villages around has begun to bear its fruit.

The pioneer missionary, James Chal-

Stand by the Standard!

Price's Cream Baking Powder is everywhere the acknowledged standard, the powder of the highest reputation, greatest strength, and absolutely pure. It renders the food more healthful and palatable, and using it exclusively you are assured against alum and other dangerous chemicals from which the low-grade powders are made.

Dr. Price's Baking Powder is sold on its merits only—never by the aid of lotteries, gifts, commissions or other schemes. The entire value of your money comes back to you in baking powder—the purest, most economical made.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
CHICAGO.

NOTE.—Alum baking powders are low priced, as they cost but three cents a pound to make. But alum leaves in the bread or cake glauber salts, sulphuric acid and hydrate of alumina—all injurious, the last two poisonous.

mers, who was murdered by the natives of New Guinea last spring, confirmation of the fact having only recently reached London, had labored among these native races of the south seas for upwards of thirty years. He was sent to New Guinea by the London Missionary Society from Samoa in 1877, with ten native Polynesian teachers; two missionaries and fifteen native assistants having preceded them. He was a man of magnificent physique and indomitable courage. Time and time again he had escaped from the hands of cannibal tribes more by reason of the awe his presence inspired than for any other cause. Untiring, resourceful, perfectly acquainted with the traits of the native character as he was, his loss will be a great blow to the mission. His most acceptable assistants were the Samoans, themselves recent converts from a like barbarism. Schools had been established among many tribes before his death, and religious customs were well observed in all the older stations. But Mr. Chalmers was upon a tour to the mouth of Aird river with the mission steamer Niue, when a large party of natives enticed him and his assistants ashore. An exploring party some weeks later found evidence that they had met a violent death soon after landing.

"It is the custom in Micronesia for all the people in a neighborhood (where it is Christian) to come together of an evening for prayers. Every evening about 7 o'clock some of the boys blow the horn—a very large shell which makes a noise like a fog horn, and the people gather here at the church. No one lives on the mission land except the native preacher and his family, but usually there are a number of others about his house and a few natives come from quite a distance; frequently there are twenty or even thirty present at prayers. The people have been in the habit of singing a song or two and offering prayer, with a few words from the preacher, perhaps. But neither here (Oua) nor at Kiti did they read any Scripture before we came. Now that we can read Ponape and use the language a little we have those who can read bring their New Testaments and we are studying the book of Mark. Mr. Gray assigns topics to different ones and they enjoy it and study as best they can. The ladies at Kiti gave us half a dozen large colored picture rolls and when we hung them on the wall they excited great interest. The one which is specially admired is of David and Goliath. A little group will sit on the floor in front of it and talk about it repeatedly. I ought to say that part of the Old Testament had been translated. The people do not ask for this often. They say they want all of the Old Testament. Mr. Gray gave our two boys the Old Testament translations and they read it as a boy in the states reads a story book. They keep a book near at hand to read during spare minutes while about their work. One night after we had been asleep some time I wakened and slipped to my door to learn why a light was burning so late in another room. There were the two boys lying stretched out on the floor with a smoky lantern between them, deeply absorbed in some old story of the Kings."

The mission at Tripoli, in northern Syria, has lately issued a semi-centennial report of its work, the beginnings of which were under the auspices of the American Board, but the larger labors of which have been aided and directed by the Presbyterian church North. There is now a Presbytery of Northern Syria in which are embraced eight churches. These congregations eight years ago gave almost nothing toward their own support; now, poor as they are, they contribute one-third the cost of their churches and their schools. The territory embraced in this mission is all of northern Lebanon, including the plains and mountains about Aleppo, touching on the east the boundaries of the Irish Presbyterian mission at Damascus; on the north and west the outposts of the Reformed Presbyterian mission, and on the south the Presbyterian Syrian field. The area covered is about the size of the state of Connecticut; but in it there is not a mile of railway and scarcely a road fit for a wheeled vehicle. Within this district there are no less than a thousand scattered

A LILY OF FRANCE

One of the best selling Holiday books. A story of the romance of William, Prince of Orange, and Charlotte of Bourbon by Caroline Atwater Mason, author of a Minister of the World, a Wind Flower, the Quiet King, &c.

10,000 COPIES Sold before Publication		SECOND 10,000 Now on Sale
--	--	--

The cover design is in blue and white, four illustrations, 456 pages, a beautiful and acceptable gift book. Price $1.10 net, postpaid $1.25.

Griffith and Rowland Press

PHILADELPHIA

For sale by all Booksellers and at 177 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

towns and villages. Tripoli is supposed to contain about 30,000 people; Hums, the ancient Emesa of Roman history, upwards of 70,000, and Hamath about the same. In the dispensary at Tripoli upwards of 6,000 patients are annually treated, and the surgical cases last year numbered 414. Practically most of the villages have been reached by the Bible colporter.

Rev. George W. Morrison wrote from Dharmasala, September 27: "While I have been away from the Orphanage for some three weeks, yet I am glad to report very satisfactory progress in more ways than one." He describes the progress of the boys in getting hold of different kinds of work by which they will be able to earn a livelihood. He seems to be much encouraged. Religiously, too, the results are gratifying. "The first Sabbath of this month we had communion at Gujranwala, at which time ten of the boys were on examination admitted to full communion. Most of these were from the '97 famine waifs. There were also fourteen others of the boys baptized on their own profession."

Mrs. Thompson of Tokyo wrote, October 25: "We are near the end of a second Taikyo Dendo campaign in Kyobashi Ku. The chief workers are very tired, but their zeal is wonderful. Between five and six hundred have given in their names as learners. We have been attending the great all-day woman's prayer-meeting in the Shin-sakaye church to-day. It was inspiring to see such a houseful of earnest, intelligent Japanese women spending a whole day in prayer and conference on Christian truth."

Seven new missionaries were recently sent by the American Board to Turkey.

Your Problem Solved.

Secure a Twentieth Century New Testament for your preacher or S. S. superintendent. Such a valuable Christmas gift will delight any friend. See announcement on another page.

LADIES. DR. J. LOAR'S FEMALE PRESCRIPTION CURES ALL FEMALE TROUBLES

One months Treatment $1.25. Three months Treatment $3.00

A. D. LOAR MED. CO. Bloomington, Ill.

REDUCED RATES FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR HOLIDAYS.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets December 24th, 25th, 31st, 1901, and January 1st, 1902, at rate of a fare and one-third for the round trip, to any point located in Central Passenger Association territory, good returning to and including January 2d, 1902. Pullman service on all trains. Individual Club Meals ranging in price from 35 cents to $1 served in Nickel Plate dining cars. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago, for particulars. Depot, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, on the Elevated Loop.

BOOKS

"The Little Lady," reviewed by us last week, was inadvertently credited to Dodd, Mead & Co. It is published by Henry Altemus Co. of Philadelphia, "Modern Criticism and the Preaching of the Old Testament," by George Adam Smith, D. D., LL. D. A. C. Armstrong & Co., New York.

There is perhaps no man living who is better fitted to handle this theme than Professor Smith; for while a ripe scholar, he has the instincts and aptitudes of a preacher. There is nothing academic about his writings. They give both warmth and light.

Special interest is directed to this book at present from the circumstance that at a meeting of ministers and elders of the United Free Church of Scotland which was held recently at Edinburg, it was resolved to call the earnest attention of the college committee to its teachings. The college committee are respectfully asked to submit the critical opinions set forth in Professor Smith's volume to early and careful examination, and to adopt such measures as may seem to be necessary for asserting and vindicating the Church's attitude towards them. A leading Scotch religious journal remarks that if this request is granted the United Free church will have its work before it.

It is hardly conceivable that this heresy hunt will be prosecuted farther. The United Free church will think twice before repeating the blunder which was made in the case of Professor Henry Drummond. Professor Smith, while taking advanced positions on questions of biblical criticism, is soundly evangelical. By making faith seem reasonable he has brought deliverance to many who were floundering in a quagmire of doubt. Instead of unsettling faith in the reliability of the Bible as a spiritual guide, he has placed it upon a firmer basis.

The objects of the book before us, as stated in the preface, "are in the main, three: A statement of the Christian right of criticism; an account of the modern critical movement so far as the Old Testament is concerned; and an appreciation of its effects upon the Old Testament as history and as a record of a Divine Revelation."

As these themes are developed the Old Testament becomes a living book, but it is seen to be something more than a series of tracts for the times. Its temporal and eternal elements are always carefully separated. Its relation to the New Testament is also shown to be that of the "Hinterlands" of the same continent of truth: A being not under, but behind the New.

In discussing the historical basis in the Old Testament our author sometimes relegates to the legendary what is generally accepted as historical;

but everywhere he finds evidence of a divine revelation, a revelation that grows in clearness and fulness until it is at length consummated in the Christ of history.

We can hardly commend this volume too warmly. It is conspicuous alike for fair-mindedness, ripe scholarship, and deep spirituality. It is especially valuable to the Christian preacher by showing what wealth of material is offered to him in the Old Testament Scriptures.

Vest-Pocket Commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1902. Outlines and Notes by the Rev. De Loss M. Tompkins, D. D. Fred D. Ewell, Chicago. Price, 25 cents. Interleaved edition, 35 cents. The Gist of the Lesson—A Concise Exposition of the International Sunday School Lessons for the Year 1902, by R. A. Torrey. Fleming H. Revell Co. 25 cents. Interleaved edition, 50 cents.

Here are two books which resemble one another like two peas. They are the same in size, in binding, in color, and in the arrangement of material. Evidently one is an imitation of the other. With regard to the books themselves there are points of difference. That of Dr. Tompkins is more scholarly and exact; that of Dr. Torrey is more direct and practical. Both are in their own way meritorious and will be of immense value for ready reference and for giving a bird's-eye view of the year's lessons.

PERFECT HEALTH

Is impossible when the blood is impoverished, the supply scant and watery, or when through impurities it has become stagnant and sluggish. Don't neglect such a condition an instant. Hasten to correct the evils of bad blood, and regain health and happiness by using Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, the time-tested herb remedy. It is not a drug-store medicine, but is sold to the people direct through special agents by the manufacturer, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 So. Hoyne avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE AIR SOUTHLAND

With its blue skies and balmy air, can best be reached via the

Southern Railway.

This great system reaches all important points in the South and, with its limited trains, elegant sleeping, parlor, dining and cafe cars, offers unexcelled service to Florida and all Southern tourist points.

"The Florida Limited"

Leaves Chicago daily, in the evening, arrives Jacksonville, Fla., the second morning, less than 35 hours en route, passing through Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Macon and Jesup.

Another Limited Train.

Leaving Chicago daily, in the morning, for Jacksonville, Fla., passes through Cincinnati, Knoxville, Asheville, Columbia and Savannah—a daylight ride through the famous "Land of the Sky."

Both limited trains carry sleepers, Chicago to Cincinnati, and through sleepers from Cincinnati to Jacksonville.

Another still to come! On January 6, 1902, the

"Chicago & Florida Special"

Will be inaugurated, running through sleepers, solid, Chicago to St. Augustine, Fla., via Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Jesup and Jacksonville. This train, with its elegant sleepers, composite and observation cars, perfect dining car service and fast time, will eclipse anything of the kind ever before offered to the public in the Northwest for the South.

South Carolina Interstate & West Indian Exposition.

Commencing Dec. 1, 1901, a through sleeper will be run from St. Louis to Charleston, S. C., via Louisville and Asheville.

Winter Tourist Tickets now on sale. For full particulars see your nearest ticket agent or write or call on J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A., 225 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.; G. B. Allen, A. G. P. A., St. Louis, Mo.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women backache, lung troubles or general and girls, and for abdominal weakness, weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Forty-eight years of constant and healthful progress and growth has put this institution at the head (both in size and standing) of musical institutions in America. Comprehensive in plan, moderate in price, thorough in practice and famous for results.

GEO. W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.
Send for music and elocution catalogues.
FRANK W. HALL, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

A GREAT PREMIUM OFFER

Life of Wm. McKinley

OUR MARTYRED PRESIDENT

With a short Biography of Garfield and Lincoln, containing masterpieces of McKinley's eloquence and the History of Anarchy, its Purposes and Results. Complete authentic Biography of 453 pages. Written by

BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS, LL.D.

Personal friend and comrade of the late President, author of "Life of Samuel Adams," "Synonyms and Antonyms," "Liberty and Unions," etc., etc. Introduction by United States Senator Hon. Wm. E. Mason.

A Standard Authority because written by BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS.

He was the intimate friend of William McKinley during all the years of his eminent career; the Bishop enjoyed his utmost confidence; under these conditions the manuscript had been in course of preparation for several years. It is a literary work of the highest order, accurate, interesting and truthful. It was almost ready for the press when the horrible tragedy came. Nothing remained to do save the necessity of the Bishop's final revisions and writing the last sad and closing chapters.

A Few of the Half-tone Illustrations

William McKinley, Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. McKinley (Mother), Father of William McKinley, Mark Hanna, Members of McKinley's Cabinet, President Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, President Garfield, President Lincoln, Assassination of President McKinley, Death-bed Scenes of President McKinley, Photograph of Assassin, Capital Building, President McKinley's Residence, Temple of Music, White House, Milburn House, Scenes from McKinley's Early Life, Etc., Etc.

SYNOPSIS OF CONTENTS

The Story of the Assassination. Funeral Procession and Rites. Expressive Tributes from Foreign Lands. Tributes from Eminent Americans. Life of Wm. McKinley. His Last Term in Congress. Governor of Ohio. Financial Troubles. Great Campaign of 1894. Nominated for President. First Presidential Campaign. President of the United States. His Own Story of the Spanish War. Chronological Events of Spanish War. Country Expands and Becomes a World Power. Meets the Crisis in China. Renomination and Re-elected President. Anecdotes and Incidents in his Life. Chronological Record of his Life. Masterpieces from his Pen. Lincoln's Life Described by McKinley. Garfield's Life Described by McKinley.

Theodore Roosevelt.

His Birth. Political History and War Experience. As Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Governor and Vice-President. Marriage and Children. Author—In the Pulpit. Ideas of Honesty. Police Commissioner. Thoughts as a Boy. Qualities as a Rough Rider, etc., etc.

Anarchy

Its Origin, Purposes and Results. Notable Assassinations—Herbert Spencer—Herr Most—Opinions of Eminent Men.

Trial and Condemnation.

The Nation's Man. Great Speech of Senator J. N. Thurston at the St. Louis Convention 1896, etc.

THE SUBJECT

WM. MCKINLEY

A Grand Character for Biography

Our Martyred President's Life will ever call to mind the greatness of the man, for he was the embodiment of nobleness. It was by his tireless energy and ambition that he rose from amidst the common people to take his place among the great men of the earth, to a place in the hearts of the people.

No president since the time of Washington and Lincoln has endeared himself to the hearts of the people as our late president. He ever showed his interest in their welfare in a political way that went right home to the hearts and consciences of all. His policies were ever those that would benefit his country and with it the great masses of the working people.

He was the one man among men, loved and revered by all.

Recognized experts in the book business estimate the sale of McKinley Biographies during the next six months will exceed 3,000,000 volumes. These astounding figures were had by calculations based upon the sale of over 1,000,000 Biographies of President Garfield. It is an undisputed fact, Biography is of supreme interest to everyone.

THE AUTHOR

Bishop Fallows, before he essayed the present great work, was well prepared for the task, because he had already written, copiously, critically, comprehensively and understandingly of William McKinley and the historical epoch in which he so long played an important part. For forty years American statesmen, measures, politics and history have been as familiar to Bishop Fallows as are his own fingers that handle the pen so deftly, his own mind that produces such lofty thoughts, just judgments and beautiful sentiments. For many years he had personally known William McKinley, had admired, loved and carefully chronicled his splendid achievements, his wise and patriotic utterances. Understanding the motives, principles and lofty aims of our martyred President, familiar with recent American history and fortified with an array of the richest material which he had made peculiarly his own by employing it in the composition of many patriotic and historical works and addresses probably no American was better qualified, nor so matchlessly equipped for this great work as Bishop Samuel Fallows, and none has produced such splendid results—a book that will take its place upon the shelves of public and private libraries as a comprehensive and accurate life of Our Martyred President.

THE BOOK

A Model of MECHANICAL SKILL.

It is printed upon the finest paper, large, clear and new type, forty FIXE ART full page photographic portraits of the president's eminent associates, friends and relatives, and has numerous eugravings of interesting features of the text.

Bound in fine imported cloth, measuring 7 x 10 inches, 2 1/2 inches thick, gold and black embossing with front cover illuminated by the President's Portrait; in all making a most magnificent library, center table or gift volume. The business man will want it for the wonderful manner in which his policies influenced business; the parent, that his children may gather instruction and inspiration from it. The teacher wants it to enable him to instruct his classes in the duties of citizenship, for he was the ideal citizen. Every statesman will want it for his lessons in political integrity. Every working man throughout the country will want it for he proved himself to be the friend of the working man. Every youth will want it for his sympathy and love of youth. The minister wants it for he exemplified in his daily life the true principles of the Christian citizen. Every wife will want it, for he was a model husband and father.

Extraordinary Offer to Our Readers

Every family will want this book and every one can have it: 1st—Without Money. Send us at once three new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY for one year at the regular rate, $1.50 each, and this magnificent memorial volume will be sent you as a premium.

SECOND, COMBINATION OFFER:

The Price of the Book in cloth is.....$1.50
 Extra for postage......20
 The Christian Century, six months......75
 Foreign postage extra.
 Total value of both.....$2.45

Our Price For Both, $1.50
 Including Postage.

Good to old or new subscribers alike, all arrangements being paid to date.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, - 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago

Special Free Illustrated Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco
FOR THE
Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free, & postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY, of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities. Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing Mich.

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain in a Piano?

We have hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting by persons moving which must be disposed of at once as we cannot make room for them in our salesrooms. These pianos include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many of them cannot be distinguished from new, yet all are offered at a great discount from prices when new. Uprights as low as $100. Very easy terms of payment to reliable persons. Freight would cost you about $7. New large size mahogany pianos, with maddolin attachment, $175, sent anywhere on easy payments. Write at once for complete list and full particulars. You can make a great saving by securing your piano from us. Every piano warranted exactly as represented. LYON & HEALY, 92 Adams St., Chicago.
The World's Largest Music House.

PARKER'S
HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair.
Promotes a luxuriant growth.
Never Fails to Restore Gray
Hair to its Youthful Color.
Cures scalp diseases & hair falling.
50c. and $1.00 at Druggists

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM, FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

The Pioneer
Limited.

Famous
Train
of
the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service
Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information
furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent,
Chicago, Ill.

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

We have over 15,000 letters like this:

Your Brace did all you said about it and more for me. It has saved me a big doctor's bill and brought me good health, which I had not had before in 25 years. My troubles were dropsy, headache, lung disease, stomach and other ills to which women are subject.
MRS. L. B. DICKINSON.

Write today for particulars and illustrated book mailed free in plain sealed envelope. Address
The Natural Body Brace Co., Box 744, Salina, Kansas.
Every woman should have this Brace.

Through First Class and
Tourist Sleeping Cars to

California and Oregon

Every day in the year between

Chicago, San Francisco
Los Angeles and Portland
via

Chicago, Union Pacific
and North-Western Line

A most comfortable and inexpensive means of making the trip overland

Lowest Rates • Finest Scenery
Shortest Time on the Road

Personally Conducted
Excursions

every Tuesday and Thursday
from Chicago

For illustrated pamphlets, rates and particulars inquire at ticket offices Chicago & North-Western Railway, 212 Clark Street or Wells Street Station, or address S. A. Hutchison, 212 Clark Street, Chicago.

CHURCH BELL'S SWEET TONED, FAR SOUNDING, DURABLE CATALOGUE FREE. NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN.
AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY,

It costs no more to ride
on this beautiful train
than on any other.

Chicago-St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

20TH CENTURY NEW TESTAMENT

Written in Modern English

Some Special Features

This is a translation into simple modern English, excluding all words and phrases not used in the English of the present day.

Quotations from the Old Testament are printed in special type, and passages from the Apocrypha are also distinguished.

The usual grouping of books is retained, but the books in each group are given in chronological order.

Specimen Quotation

From the Twentieth Century New Testament.

1. CORINTHIANS, 1-3.

Now on the subject of food that has been offered in sacrifice to idols, we are sure that we all have some knowledge! Knowledge breeds conceit, while love builds up character. If a man fancies he knows anything, he has not yet acquired the knowledge of it that he ought to have acquired. On the other hand, if a man loves God, he is known and loved by God.

One Great Reason For This Edition

We have been reading our Bible in the English of three centuries ago while Hottentots and others have had it in the tongues and dialects of their own times. The idioms and forms peculiar to the times of King James have seemed to have been the only medium through which the Holy Spirit could express itself to the modern Anglo-Saxon, and all previous attempts at Bible-making have been merely new revisions and new versions of these obsolescent forms.

Representative Opinions

We have used it at family prayers, and the whole circle, from the oldest to the youngest has given rapt attention: As a light and life-giving critical commentary, we do not know where any open-minded reader could get so much in the same compass.—Methodist Review.

The whole work is the product of twenty authorities, including graduates of several Universities and members of the various sections of the Christian Church, and it is an excellent volume for students and teachers.—New York Observer.

"A valuable piece of work. It elucidates many points and compels thought all along."—Presbyterian.

"An honest effort to make a free translation which shall give the meaning of the original with all clearness."—The Christian Observer.

Our Special Premium Offers

The 20th Century New Testament is published in three parts, divided as follows: Part I: The Gospels and the Acts. Part II: Paul's Letters to the Churches. Part III: Remaining Letters and the Book of Revelation. Price of each part, 16mo, flexible cloth, 50 cents, net.

FIRST OFFER: One part of the 20th Century New Testament, sent post paid, with each new subscription to The Christian Century, at the regular rate, $1.50.

SECOND OFFER: To show our appreciation of our regular subscribers we will send the entire 20th Century New Testament, in three parts, to any reader of The Christian Century who will send us two new subscriptions at the regular rate.

It will make a splendid gift for your pastor or Sunday-school superintendent. All Bible students are eager to possess the 20th Century New Testament.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., 358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN

CENTURY

CHRISTMAS

1901.

W. G.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,
358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arreage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit cannot be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES

Quarterly Helps.

THE PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Youngest Classes. It contains Lesson Stories, Lesson Questions, Lesson Thoughts and Lesson Pictures, and never fails to interest the little ones.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents.
10 copies, per quarter, $ .20;	per year, $ .75
25 " " " "	.40; " 1.50
50 " " " "	.75; " 3.00

THE YOUTH'S QUARTERLY

A Lesson Magazine for the Junior Classes. The Scripture Text is printed in full, but an interesting Lesson Story takes the place of the usual explanatory notes.

TERMS—Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 21-2 cents each per quarter.

THE SCHOLAR'S QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Senior Classes. This Quarterly contains every help needed by the senior classes. Its popularity is shown by its immense circulation.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter, $ .10;	per year, $ .30
10 copies, " "	.40; " 1.25
25 " " " "	.90; " 3.00
50 " " " "	1.60; " 6.00
100 " " " "	3.00; " 12.00

THE BIBLE STUDENT.

A Lesson Magazine for the Advanced Classes, containing the Scripture Text in both the Common and Revised Versions, with Explanatory Notes, Helpful Readings, Practical Lessons. Maps, etc.

TERMS.

Single copy, per quarter, $ .10;	per year, $ .40
10 copies, " "	.70; " 2.50
25 " " " "	1.00; " 6.00
50 " " " "	3.00; " 10.50
100 " " " "	5.50; " 20.00

BIBLE LESSON PICTURE ROLL.

Printed in 8 colors. Each leaf, 26 by 37 inches, contains a picture illustrating one lesson. 13 leaves in a set. Price per Roll—one quarter—reduced to 75 cents.

CHRISTIAN PICTURE LESSON CARDS.

A reduced fac-simile of the large Bible Lesson Picture Roll. Put up in sets, containing one card for each Sunday in quarter. One set will be required for each child in the class. Price reduced to 21-2 cents per set.

Model Sunday-School Record.

A complete record of the Attendance of Officers, Teachers and Pupils, with column for Roll of Officers, Teachers, and column for recording Attendance or Absence, Collections by Classes, Total Enrollment, with Gain or Loss for the Quarter, List and Cost of Supplies, Treasurer's Receipt to Secretary, Weekly and Quarterly Report, etc., for one to twenty-eight classes, all for entire quarter, without turning a leaf. Each book contains blanks for two years' records. Cloth.....$1.00

Model Sunday-School Treasurer's Book.

Arranged for the Systematic Recording of all Receipts and Expenditures. Blanks for Annual Reports, etc. Good for three years. Fine paper. Pocket size, cloth, 25 cents. Morocco .....$ .50

Model Sunday-School Class Book.

Arranged for Complete Record of Name, Residence, Date of Entering, Attendance, Contributions, etc. Good for one year. Single copy, five cents. Per dozen .....$ .50

Standard Sunday-School Class Book.

Ruling and Printed Headings, and keeps One Month's Record without turning a leaf. Good for one year. Bound in marbled paper. Single copy, ten cents. Per dozen .....$ .75

Sunday-School Collection and Class Envelopes.

Cloth-lined, printed, and good for one year. Per dozen.....$ .50
Manila paper, printed, and good for one year. Per hundred, 35 cents. Per thousand..... 2.25

Model Superintendent's Roll or Pocket Record.

Containing an Alphabetical List of the Names and Addresses of all the Pupils connected with the School; also, List of Officers and Teachers, with Addresses, and blanks for recording some of the most important items from the Secretary's Weekly Reports. Cloth, 50 cents. Morocco.....$ .75

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

358 Dearborn Street,

Chicago, Ill.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM.....

Chicago Indianapolis Cincinnati Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C., And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent, 234 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

Self-Pronouncing COMMENTARY

on International S. S. Lessons for 1902, by Rev. P. E. Thomas. Contains all the lessons in self-pronouncing form, with right to the point HELP on each verse, also Official Prayer Meeting Topics of Young People's Societies for 1902, with MORRO, PLEDGE and BENEDICTION. Pocket size, 128 pgs. Red Morocco 25c. Interleaved Edition for Notes 40c; post-paid. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. GEORGE W. NOBLE, 275 Madison St. Chicago.

RHEUMATISM...

is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies.

The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws cords, and hardens muscles. If your druggist does not have these remedies in stock, do not take his word for it. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. SEE CATALOGUE. BELLS WHY? Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., December 19, 1901.

Number 31.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE.

During the remainder of December all subscribers to The Christian Century may have their time advanced one year by the payment of one dollar. Old subscribers who are paid one year in advance, who will send us one new subscription will have their time advanced three months free.

We are making a number of fine offers in this issue. Look over our columns carefully.

EDITORIAL

Christmas: to thee we owe a vast, vast debt!
O what a dull affair would be the year,
Our weary, wintry, uphill work how drear,
Were not thy half-way house thus blithely set
'Twixt fall and spring, for traveler to forget
Their worst Novembral fogs in thy sweet cheer,
And dream that January's icy spear
Might in thy festal glow drop pointless yet.

J. T. SLINGSBY.

THE MEASURE OF THE DIVINE LOVE.

THE loftiest peak of Christian teaching was reached in the saying of John that "God is love." We do no justice to this saying if we change its form and remain content with "God is loving," or "God loves." We mean to say that love is an essential quality of his being, and a quality so pervasive that it enters into and affects every part of the divine nature. It is a condition of his being. But while we can say this and feel that there is both meaning and truth in it, the peak is too high for us to live there. We must go back nearer to the earth—back to the course of history, to view God's love in actual deeds. It is then that we feel ourselves inspired to our deeds of faith and to our words of praise:

"The love of God is broader Than the measure of man's mind."

There are two events in history upon which the doctrine that God loves the world is founded, and through which alone, therefore, the world has come to believe that the very nature of God is love. These are the birth of the babe at Bethlehem and the death of the Son of Man on Calvary. These two are brought together in one saying, which John utters as his proof of the love of God, and therefore of the faith that God is love. For he says, "God sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." At Christmas time it is the first part of this double saying upon which our minds and hearts are centered—"God sent his Son."

We need not stay to discuss the problem with which theologians have sometimes troubled themselves, as to whether the incarnation would have occurred if man had not sinned. That discussion has a bearing only indirectly and remotely upon the practical thoughts with which we are at present concerned. The fact is that the world has sinned and that God sent his Son into the world. To the men of ancient times this seemed incredible and even dishonoring to God, because they conceived of nature either as inherently evil or as deeply cursed by man's evil, and of sin as so truly inherent in man's physical nature that God could not share that nature without sharing its sinful contamination. Hence when men were persuaded that the incarnation had taken place, and that Jesus Christ was indeed the Son of God, their incredulity changed into amazement, and their amazement, quickly, into adoring praise and passionate love. The love of God was seen in the bare fact of his willingness to cross the gulf, which they had ever felt impassable, and on the nearer side to fight man's battle with the divine wisdom and energy.

We do not share these ancient views of the evil of matter; but surely we cannot afford to depart from their contention of the sinfulness of the race, and of the hostility of God's very nature to this sin. If we allow our modern view of the sacredness of the world, which is God's workmanship, to creep over and to cover even man's history so that the reality and terribleness of his guilt is blotted out, we are in great danger of being unable to measure God's love. And this danger must lead to that of losing faith in the assertion that God is love. You cannot save the moon by blotting out the sun; nor keep man's dignity if God's mercy is obscured. Love, if it is to prove itself in the most intense and real fashion, must ever cross a gulf—sacrifice belongs to its very heart, sorrow to its life. There may be beings upon whom God's love shines uninterruptedly and without any intervening darkness, but such beings we are not. Whether it be due to a primitive fall from a life of blessedness and holiness, or to an inheritance of animal proclivities, which evolutionary science is laying bare to our eyes, the fact of man's guilt in sin, and therefore of his immeasurable need, remains unchanged. It is in relation to this moral condition and this profound need which it creates that we must look upon the wonder of the incarnation.

There is beauty shining from all sides upon the birth at Bethlehem. We may regard it as the consummation of a long process of history, in which God had been gradually making possible a more intimate union of himself with his creatures, or we may regard it as the consummation of a process in which creation had been groaning and travailing in pain, striving up to the attainment of the divine. From either view this birth, in which the consummation is attained, and the God-Man enters on history, is a moment whose beauty fills the eye. But we may regard it more personally, as the apostle Paul has taught us to do. We may remember the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who for our sakes became poor, and the event appears at once immeasurably more attractive to our souls. We remind ourselves then of the glory which he had with the Father and of the marvel implied in his becoming flesh, even in the person of a human babe. The sheen of his act of humanity wears an irresistible charm. But further, had he come only to be a teacher—had he come only to work miracles of entrancing tenderness and purest sympathy—had he come only to show us the radiance of a sinless consciousness, and the unspeakable joy of a life infilled with the very life of God the Father—this condescension would have appeared marvelous indeed, worthy of all the praises of men. He did more, infinitely more, than even all that. He who was in the form of God did, in his human life, not only become obedient, but obedient unto death, yea, even to the death of the Cross.

"It behooved him in all things to be made like unto his brethren"; not only to stand as the peerless Man, the revealed God of nature and of truth, but "that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make propitiation for the sins of the people." It is when, once more, we touch that word "sins" that the electric thrill sends its quivering message through our spirits. It is then that the love of God, the love of the Son of God, the love of Jesus, the Man who is God, comes upon us with overwhelming force. He came deliberately, to take upon himself the sin of the world—deliberately to drink with stainless sorrow the bitter dregs of our guilty woe. That Babe in the cradle is therefore, to us of the Christian spirit, and especially to us of the evangelical faith, significant of more than simple babyhood, more than the appearance of the "Christ-man" in history. We gather around that cradle and sing our "Adeste Fideles," because in him we see God manifest in the flesh, assuming this helplessness, this dumb dependence upon human kindness as well as upon divine power, because this is the only way to that Cross. As to the birthday of all great men of history, there gathers the memory of their after greatness and their historic achievements, so there gathers to this cradle, for the thoughtful Christian heart, not only the radiant smiles of the purest motherhood in history, but the shadow of the greatest sorrow—the sacrifice of the Son of God.

And yet, let us remember, for us and for him that sacrifice is not gloom, but triumph. "It is finished."

The whole story is long ago complete, and we have learned, alike at Bethlehem and on Calvary, to see in each great deed another of the stages by which God's love fulfilled itself. That love itself, which was then fulfilled, is shining full blaze upon his Church to-day.

THE COMING OF CHRIST THE FULFILLMENT OF HUMAN HOPE.

At the time of the Advent all the world was in a hush of expectancy. It was waiting for some great event. Luke describing the situation in Judea, says, "the people were in expectation." They were looking for the promised Messiah who was to fulfill their national hopes. When Jesus made his appearance John the Baptist sent a delegation of his disciples to him to inquire, "Art thou the Coming One or look we for another?" The hope of a coming deliverer shines out clearly in Jewish history. Plato voiced the same expectation when he said, "We look for a God, or a God-inspired man who will show us our duty and take away the darkness from our eyes."

The deepest desire of man is to know the Invisible. The religious history of the race represents the unending search of man after the unknown God. Now the incarnation of Christ is God's response to man's search. It is God coming to man; God revealing himself to man in the only adequate way. In nature and in providence God had continually been revealing himself, but these forms of revelation were only the dawn before the day. In Christ the divine process of self revelation is completed. When Christ came it was the hour of the world's moral sunrise.

Above the shrine in the temple of Osiris were the words, "Who is he that shall draw aside the veil?" It was implied that man could not do it; for none by searching can find out God. Before God can be known he must unveil himself, he must come forth from his concealment. This he has done in Christ. He has come to man; yea, he has entered into humanity, uniting himself with man in all his upward strugglings, so that henceforth the hope of man is not in his own power of self-development, but in the in-dwelling presence of God. This is the lesson of Christmas. Christmas tells us that God had disclosed himself; that he has come near to man; that he has given himself to us; that he has entered into our human lives for the purpose of redemption.

The hope which prophecy voiced, the hope which led the wise men of the East to the manger at Bethlehem, has been fulfilled. The Advent is an historical fact. The world Deliverer has come; he has come to speak for God, come to show men the right way, come to deliver men from the power of sin. His crowning work is the work of salvation. Christmas does not mark the coming of a great man merely, or of a great teacher, but of a Savior. "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is Christ the Lord"; and in this alone is human expectation met. The burden of sin is heavy. Who can take it away? Who can repair the past? Who can blot out transgression as a thick cloud? The answer to these heart-aching questions is "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The last painting of Gustave Dore, which is called "The Vale of Tears," has for its background a valley bleak and bare, overhung with rocks—a type of our earthly life. On the foreground stands a representation of our Lord, winning and attractive, expressive of tenderness and helpfulness. Over his head there is an arch of light symbolic of hope; upon his shoulders there is a cross. Around him are representatives of all classes and nations. All faces are turned wistfully toward him, while with his outstretched hand he beckons them to himself. This picture expresses at once the hope of humanity in Christ and the ability of Christ to meet that hope.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

This is the day of large things. Large fortunes are being made and large gifts are being given. Mrs. Jane L. Stanford has transferred to Leland Stanford, Jr., University property worth approximately $30,000,000. The gift includes $18,000,000 in stocks and bonds, all gilt-edge securities, bringing large revenue, and $12,000,000 in real estate, comprising almost a million acres. What a princely gift! This will probably make the Leland Stanford University the wealthiest educational institution in the world.

Then there is Andrew Carnegie's gift of $10,000,000 to endow a great university extension organization, under the title of the University of the United States. To handle this munificent benefaction a national board is to be created. The object of this fund is to further the cause of popular education. The national board, which will have its headquarters in Washington, will co-operate with all the universities throughout the country, thus creating something of the nature of an educational trust.

Alongside of these two munificent gifts, the fortune of half a million dollars left to Dartmouth College by Tappan Wentworth appears small. But relatively it is large, and it will provide means for the much-needed enlargement of an institution of learning which has made for itself a noble record for solid and efficient work.

FEDERATION OF MORAL FORCES.

The Milwaukee Ministerial Association of Milwaukee has been making an investigation touching the moral condition of their city. They find that during the past year 1,760 saloon licenses have been granted, or one to every 170 of the population. They also found thirty-two gambling houses running wide open, and in low theaters, concert saloons and palm gardens were witnessed scenes which are not to be described. The city officials were giving to the forces of evil a free rein. Public sentiment has been aroused, and good men have been made to feel that something has to be done to remove temptation from the path of the unwary. Mr. Gladstone said that it is the duty of society to make the practice of virtue as easy, and the practice of vice as difficult, as possible. By our indifference to existing social evils we often do the very opposite.

NO MIDWAY AT THE ST. LOUIS FAIR

It is gratifying to learn that the promoters of the St. Louis World's Fair of 1903 have decided not to have a "Midway." The Midway was a blot upon the Chicago and Buffalo expositions. It had a degrading influence, and did not justify its right to be on the ground of the slight educational value that was claimed for it. The St. Louis Fair Commissioners are doing a praiseworthy thing in eliminating this feature from the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

HELP IN STUDY OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

The American Institute of Sacred Literature offers special help to those who are studying the International Sunday School lessons. Beginning with January 1, the International lessons take up the book of Acts, and the Institute has well-planned work covering the same period in courses varying in degree of difficulty from the simple outline courses for general adult classes to the most technical work in Greek. More definitely the courses are: 1. An outline study course for adult classes or for teachers. This course is wholly Biblical. 2. A reading course supplementary to the outline study course. 3. A reading course for ministers, teachers and others desiring more technical work than above. In all these courses special helps appropriate to the subject and to the grade of work are provided. The fee is small. 4. A correspondence course (in English) in which careful work under an instructor is expected, lessons passing back and forth every fortnight. 5. A correspondence course (Greek) in which exhaustive work in the original text may be done under competent direction. For this course a reading knowledge of Greek is required, and for the last two courses a moderate tuition fee. We suggest that any one interested in Bible study for himself and others would do well to look into these schemes. The address of the Institute is Hyde Park, Chicago, Illinois. These courses are all under the direction of the Council of Seventy, of which President John Henry Barrows of Oberlin is president, and President William R. Harper of Chicago, principal.

TEACHING AND INSANITY.

The physical and mental wear and tear of the teaching profession is something which is scarcely appreciated by the patrons of our public schools. A conscientious teacher literally gives herself to her pupils, with the inevitable result that she becomes bankrupt of energy. A contemporary says:

According to the statistics of the state hospital for the insane at Elgin, Ill., contained in the last biennial report, one person in every sixty-six admitted during the last two years has been a school teacher. In that period 660 persons were received at the asylum, ten of them being women teachers. The inquiry into the number of teachers in the state asylums was caused by a statement made by Professor Zimmer of Berlin, who said in a report of investigations in Austria, Switzerland, Russia and Germany he had discovered that in every eighty-five female patients one was a school teacher.

RELIGIOUS BUILDING AT WORLD'S FAIR.

The movement to secure a Religious Building at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1903 is being vigorously prosecuted by the representatives of the various churches in St. Louis. The application of the committee is for a building to be not less than 380 by 460 feet, of an estimated cost of $400,000. In this building they wish to include all exhibits of a religious nature. It was also stated that there was a general sentiment among church workers against having religious exhibits distributed among the department buildings. Among the exhibits suggested was a collection of the relics of the Vatican, including the tiara of the Pope. The movement for a religious building is entirely apart from that for a congress of religions.

The Southern Methodist preachers of St. Louis have appointed a committee, composed of Dr. W. F. McMurray, Dr. R. D. Smart, Dr. J. W. Lee, Mr. Sam Kennard and Mr. Murray Carleton, to confer with a like committee appointed by the Methodist Episcopal ministers for the purpose of arranging for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of Wesley in connection with the World's Fair. This matter came before the recent Ecumenical Council of Methodism in London, and it was referred to the several branches represented for action.

THE NATION'S WARDS.

The report of Indian Commissioner Jones has in it a rather pessimistic vein with regard to the progress among the Indians during the last thirty or forty years. But he is altogether right in his recommendations that the guardianship which has so long been exercised over the Indians be brought to an end, that they be given land in severalty and that they be put upon an equal footing with the white man. This may involve hardship in individual cases, but it is without doubt the only real solution of the problem.

THE ANTI-CIGARETTE ARMY.

Every victory of the anti-cigarette army is a victory for civilization and the onward and upward progress of the race. This is a mighty movement, and its results will be far-reaching. To save the boyhood of today from the vitiating and devitalizing influence of tobacco is to have a finer, cleaner, and nobler type of manhood in the world's to-morrow. Horace Mann spoke wisely when he said: "Where there is anything growing, one former is worth a thousand reformers." The anti-cigarette agitation is one of the most effective agencies for temperance and good citizenship.

CHICAGO NOTES.

By a vote of sixty-one to three the ordinance wiping out wineroms in saloons, restaurants and hotels has been passed by the City Council.

At a dinner given at the Union League Club by Samuel W. Allerton to sixty guests, all of them prominent in the business and professional world, nearly $50,000 was subscribed in half an hour as the result of an appeal for funds toward the erection of a home for delinquent boys.

The Zionist movement is said to be increasing in strength in Chicago, and in the West generally. Its object is to create a Jewish state in Palestine and there make a legal home for the Jewish people. The Jewish organizations of the city have sent a delegate to attend the fifth annual Zionistic Congress to be held in Basle, Switzerland, December 26.

In her address before the Chicago Association of Collegiate Alumnae Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer pled for compulsory education, honest administration, and vacation schools. She said that if Milton's Satan had come to Chicago for recruits for the criminal class, he could not have done a shrewder thing than to close the public schools during July and August.

Dr. H. W. Thomas, late pastor of the People's church, has been deputed by those who are interested in the cause of the Boers to go to South Africa to investigate the condition of the concentration camps. The death rate in these camps has been deplorable, but with improved sanitary arrangements, and the transference of administration from the military to the civil authorities great improvement may be expected. And there is room for it. War is a terrible thing.

In their investigation of child labor in the local factories and workshops the Woman's Club representatives have found many children who are evidently below the age of fourteen, engaged in toilsome labor, while deprived of fresh air and the light of day. Some of them worked fourteen hours a day preparing Christmas toys. It is well for our comfort that we do not know what some of our luxuries cost. But have we a right to take comfort in things which cost the price of involuntary and preventable sacrifice?

A great deal of confusion exists in the public mind with regard to the difference between socialism and anarchy. Sometimes the two are looked upon as identical. In a recent debate in Chicago the issue between the two systems was clearly drawn, the socialists while sympathizing with many of the aims of the anarchists, repudiating their methods. That anarchy is not yet dead was seen in the way in which the name of Czolgosz was cheered. Abraham Isaak, the editor of The Free Society, said, "Czolgosz was a better man than I am. I pass misery on the street, go home and write an editorial; he saw misery and could not stand it. He took the life of the man he thought was the cause of it."

The Methodist preachers of the city have been discussing the subject of "Preparation for the Revival." One speaker censured the presiding elders for allowing themselves to be absorbed in the business routine while neglecting the spiritual interests of the church. He said that they ought to spend more time upon their knees, and lead in a spiritual awakening. But does not this apply equally to all preachers? Secular interests are absorbing too much of the time and the energy of the modern preacher. A preacher is a specialist, and he will succeed in his calling just in the measure in which he can say, "This one thing I do."

From the report of the director of the census, just issued, we learn how wonderful has been the growth of Chicago's manufactories during the decade from 1890 to 1900. It seems that whereas the city had in 1890 9,977 manufacturing establishments it now has 19,203, an increase of more than 92 per cent. The capital invested has increased from $359,739,598 in 1890 to $534,000,689 in 1900, an advance of more than forty-six per cent, while the total number of wage-earners employed in these industries has increased from 190,621 to 262,609. The value of the products has increased by more than one-third, the production of $664,567,923 in 1890 having grown to $888,651,995 in 1900. To keep pace with this rapid enlargement of material interests, on the spiritual side, is not an easy matter. But it must be done or material prosperity will prove the means of corruption and decay.

CONTRIBUTED

THE MEANING OF CHRISTMAS.

God who taught mankind on that first Christmas day
 What 't'was to be a man; to give, not take;
 To serve, not rule; to nourish, not devour;
 To help, not crush; if need, to die, not live.
 O blessed day which gives the eternal lie
 To self, to sense, and all the brute within;
 O come to us amid this war of life,
 To hall and hovel, come; to all who toil
 In senate, shops, or study: and to those Who, sundered by the wastes of half a world,
 Ill-warned, and sorely tempted, ever face
 Nature's brute powers and men unmanned to brutes.
 Come to them, blest and blessing, Christmas day.
 Tell them once more the tale of Bethlehem,
 The kneeling shepherds, and the Babe Divine;
 And keep them men indeed, fair Christmas day.

CHARLES KINGSLEY.

STARS IN THE EAST.

BY WM. REMFRY HUNT.

HEATHENISM is the night of Asia. The little light there is in any of the best of the pagan systems is as a flickering star. These mythologies, philosophies, and will o' the wisp lights of human creation are set in the rich imagery and gorgeous dress of oriental coloring. They have run their course like a flaming meteor, and shone "for a season," but have left the darkness deeper, blacker and more intense than ever. Milton says of it:

"Black it stood as night,
 Fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell."

There has been, however, in the mission and purpose of these partial, ethnic and temporary creeds, some forces in, through, and by which we see the resultant condition in their sad confessions of need. Never in all the ages has man by the compass and scope of human wisdom located God. The speculations of non-Christian peoples are a dirge and a wail. Confucianism gave a high code of ethics with no spirit of power to lend it action. Buddhism created a longing for a saviour, but threw no search light on the gloom. Taoism sought to find the elixir vitae, but found a quintessence of doubt. These three prevailing religions in the great Chinese empire stand as three chaste, beautiful and gilded lamps, set high in the throne of the national ideas of worship. There they are, stately, ornate, and exalted, as if ready at a moment's notice to illuminate the arena, but alas, alas, there are only the mere materials, there is neither light, heat, nor response to kindling, for they lack the last and greatest requisite, the touch of divinity—the fire of God to illuminate and regenerate.

It was a remarkable period when, in the sixth century before Christ, there arose the great personalities and forces which adumbrated the dawn of the world's brightest day. In China arose Confucius to set in order the state religion. In India, Shakyamuni Gautama Buddha came, and denouncing the Brahminical system as defective, sought to reform Brahmanism. In Greece, Pythagoras, the father of ancient philosophy, taught in the schools. In Judea, the holy city of Jerusalem was captured, and her sons and daughters made captives. This was the era in which the religion of Jehovah was thrown down, tested, tried and re-established. The genius and character of Jeremiah and Ezekiel made the age unique. The work of Cyrus and the light of the prophets of the exile show the peculiar setting of the historic survey and indicate a great preparatory scheme in the religious instinct of the race.

With regard to the special religions of the Chinese the following analysis may be useful:

CONFUCIANISM.

Confucius, born in China B. C. 551, died B. C. 478. Emblem of state church, dragon. Has had 2,400 years of propagation. Has influenced seventy-five generations of men now in the tomb. Represents atheism.

BUDDHISM.

Buddha, born in India B. C. 620, died B. C. 543. Emblem of worship, image of Buddha. Has had 2,500 years of propagation. Has influenced eighty generations of men now in the tomb. Represents idolatry.

TAOISM.

Taotsz, born in China B. C. 604, disappeared B. C. 524. Emblem of worship, demon. Has had 2,500 years of propagation. Has influenced eighty generations of men now in the tomb. Represents superstition.

At best, these effete, unhistoric and innumerable idolatries are as opaque lanterns. With all their multiple legends, gods, heroes and goblins, they have no basic foundation for their sublime and mystic ideas, and like the baseless fabric of a vision, "live no longer in the faith of reason." Though the aspirations of the Hindoo, Chinese and Arabian teachers are—as compared with the eternal verities of the Christian evidences—mere airy speculations, yet it must be admitted that they have prepared the way, in a measure, for the reception of higher, larger, truer and grander truths of "the Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

The general expectation that the long-looked-for Messiah should come into the world was not confined to the Jews. From the time that God gave special revelations to man on the Chaldean plains, and before the heaven-sent impulses and divine communications were imparted to any of these races, man had some divinity in him and though spoiled and marred like an ancient coin, with scarce any of the original likeness upon him, yet he shows in even the most remote and barbaric state, in his arts, religion, myths, gods, longings and confessions of need, that he is apart from God, unregenerate, alien, sinful, hopeless and lost! This is as true of the cultured student of the Zend-Avesta as it is of the rude cannibals of the islands of the South Seas.

Christianity, of all the faiths and philosophies of mankind, alone answers to the longings of the human soul, and unlike the dim guesses of non-Christian literatures and systems, has satisfied the heart and given it peace. The very fact that the heathen world is tired of mere symbol, and is, and has been for so long, asking, "Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?" is prima facie evidence that their own fabled springs have not satisfied the thirst, but have only intensified it and made the call more real, and the need more urgent.

Among the Chinese, Hindoos and Japanese there has been for ages the cherished tradition that the Deity would come on the earth in human form, since the teachings of the sages had been lost and their messages of consolation made unintelligible. This view was shared by the ancient Tacitus, Suetonius and by Josephus, when the convictions were current, that a powerful ruler would come to Judea and dominate the world. Virgil says that "a little child from heaven was looked for who should restore the golden age, take away sin and bring in the millennial era." Confucius, about B. C. 500, prognosticated the imminent advent of a deliverer, and later, sent disciples west in search of the celestial sign. There was a peculiar affinity between the Chinese early ideas of religion and those of the Magi of the Medes and Persians. Star worship was universal. This came from the Babylonians who were the orthodox teachers of the occult natural sciences. When Daniel was president of the "wise men" in Babylon, the Chinese were already initiated into the mysteries of astronomy, navigation, astrology, and medicine. The mythology of the five (holy ones) emperors, Venus, Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, and Saturn, was current as early as B. C. 800, and bears the stamp also of Western origin.

In the year A. D. 68, the first Hindoo missionaries arrived at the capital of China on white horses from Cabul. They were two Brahmin priests. Received with imperial favor, they translated some of their books in the palace. Thirteen years before these men reached China, the first missionaries of the Cross had crossed the Egean sea and entered Europe. They were dismissed and whipped by the Praetors of a Roman colony. Buddhism went east and covered China, and the adjacent countries, with monasteries; while Christianity marched over the imperial highways of the west and dotted Europe with churches.

The Nestorians came to China about the same time as the teachings of Zoroaster became popular, and they had monasteries in the capital. In the seventh century the northern provinces again had visits from the Nestorians from Persia. Their churches flourished at Singanfu in Shansi, which was then the capital of the Tangs. Their religion was of a mere partial and low type, and, like a theatrical seance, it passed off the stage. There is still a stone tablet and some ruins there to tell of their existence. The Nestorians claimed that Zoroaster was a disciple of Jeremiah and that it was from him that he learned about the Messiah. He said 'in the latter days a virgin should conceive, and that as soon as the child was born, a star would appear, blazing at noonday with undiminished lustre. You, my sons," said the aged seer, "will perceive its rising before any other nation. Seeing it, follow it, adore the mysterious child, offering gifts with profound humility. He is the Almighty Word which created the heavens." This prediction was made B. C. 500.

These are some of the lights that have failed. Others are like the star that, having faded out, seems for centuries to emit a little light, because it is so far away that its light takes hundreds of years to reach the earth. So men trusting to these broken systems, preparatory ideas, and shadows of the "good things to come," have lost their way in the meshes of types, symbols, vestments, days, sacrifices, and woe to sleep with the subtle nectar and the fumes of incense, they have been ensnared and allured to the fascinations of mental and moral inertia. This is the spell and charm of heathenism. It is passive, lifeless, dead!

There are, however, some true stars now shining. To these graveyard nations of the earth the voice of the Lord has come, saying, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee." China has now had the light of the gospel for a hundred years. But we have sent so little and neglected so much in the great trust committed to us. China is the great Gibraltar of heathen power and influence! When China is a Christian empire we may announce the coming of the "City of God" and the era of universal peace on earth and good will among men. The Chinese church prays in faith and hope for this:

"The soul's dark cottage battered and decayed, Lets in new light through chinks that time has made."

The destiny of China seals the destiny of the far East. Unevangelized, this mighty, hoary, and troubled empire will be the greatest menace to the spread of the Gospel in Thibet, Mongolia, Manchuria, Corea, and even Japan. China is the paramount power among the swarming millions of this peculiar and needy yellow race. The political, commercial and moral future lies in the course that China will take.

There is light on the horizon. The cataclysm of last year shook the dust from the eyes of the sleeping monster, and there are signs all around us that the dawn of a better day is at hand. The Emperor is showing a spirit of real reform. The literati are awakening, and ask for schools teaching western sciences. There are great changes taking place in the court. All that practical science can demonstrate in the exhibition of railroads, telegraphs, steamships and mechanical engines is doing a part of this great civilizing and transforming work. But there is a more magnificent, transcendent and imperial program before the Christian Church today, than the mere civilizing of an empire, or the reinstatement of a stranded state; it is the preaching of the unsearchable riches of Christ among the nations, and witnessing to the mighty energies of the Holy Spirit in the reformation and regeneration of the whole man, through the blood of the eternal covenant, and by the power of God unto the salvation of society, institutions, law, government, education, the bringing to these heathen lands the crowning glory of the Christian economy—a pure home, a sanctified womanhood, the sweetness of child life, a Christmastide, the knowledge of salvation through him who is "the way, the truth, and the life." O China! thou art lone among the nations; when wilt thou see his star?

"Shine on, lone star, the day draws near
When none will shine more fair than thou;
Thou, born and nursed in doubt and fear,
Wilt glitter on Immanuel's brow!"

"Shine on, lone star, till earth redeemed,
In dust shall bid its idols fall;
And thousands whom thy radiance beamed,
Shall crown the Savior Lord of all."

Nanking, China.

A CHRISTMAS LEGEND.

Matthew Arnold, in his poem of "Saint Brandan," tells how the saint voyaged northward, and still northward, one stormy winter, until his vessel reached the north pole, and on Christmas eve he saw upon a floating iceberg the figure of a man. He was horrified to discover him to be the traitor Judas, alive and out of hell. But Judas humbly entreated him to listen, and told him how, every Christmas eve, he is released from torment, and mercifully allowed to cool himself among the healing snows and ice of that wintry region. This grace is extended to him because of a small, unrecollected act of charity on his own part when on earth. In Joppa he had once in pity given his cloak to a poor leper to shield him from the heat and the driving sand.

CHRISTMAS IN STRASBURG.

WM. H. WALKER, PH. D.

YOU have all heard of it, have you not—the city of the storks, the great cathedral, and of the wonderful cathedral clock—the city that has belonged to Gauls, Romans, Germans, French and now again belongs to the Germans? It has been more fought over than any city in Germany. It has had a longer history than any other.

It was my fortune to spend two Christmases in that old city. Christmas as we know it is mainly a German festival. St. Nicholas was a German saint. The Christmas tree is a German idea; and, by the way, the oldest mention of a Christmas tree pure and simple, an evergreen tree, “hung with horses cut out of many colored paper, with apples, wafers, whistles, sugar, and so forth,” comes from a man who came from somewhere else in Germany to live in Strasburg three hundred years ago, and wrote down the things that were new to him. So plainly, they did not have Christmas trees everywhere in Germany then.

Christmas is in the air long before the day arrives. Down in the Broglieplatz, a long open square, shaded with lime trees, with the palace of the regent on one side and the old theater at one end, two streets of wooden booths are erected. They are slight buildings, open in front save for a table or counter. They are soon filled with Christmas wares. Of course there are dolls in abundance. Some of the girl dolls are dressed in the Alsatian costume, with bright red skirts, black bodices with tinsel shields in front, short, white puffed sleeves and head-dresses of broad black ribbon, tied in a large bow, with the ends falling down the back. Some of the boy dolls are equally gay, but not many, for seldom do the men in Alsace now wear the ancient costume of the country. There are more of the soldier dolls, and soldiers of tin, iron and paper; uhlands and foot soldiers and gunners. There are swords and guns and drums and trumpets and helmets in profusion, for every German boy is to be a soldier, and he begins to play war very early. There are a great many wooden toys, castles, farm yards, with all the farm animals, and some representations of the Savior's birth in the cave at Bethlehem, with Mary and her Baby looking just like a German baby, and Joseph, the ass, the angels, and the wise men besides. Other whole booths sparkle with tinsel ornaments for the Christmas trees. Others are given up to Christmas cakes and cookies.

The goods in the stores are much the same as those in the Broglieplatz, only finer in make. The merchants do not like their Christmas rivals, but the Broglieplatz fair has its interest as all that is left of the great fairs of the middle ages. Then, once or twice a year, there was a great gathering of merchants from all over the empire, and of buyers from all the country round, and there were booths in all the city squares. The Broglieplatz was then the horse fair, and you might have seen Rosa Bonheur's great painting enacted at any hour of the day. Now there is a small horse fair in the spring out near the wall, and this Christmas fair, and that is all.

Something is going on in the homes. German mothers bake very few cakes, and almost no bread, at home. They buy such things at the bakery. As for pies, they are seldom seen in Germany. But every mother has some cherished recipes for making the most delicious Christmas cookies, and a week or two before the day she makes a great store of them. They are much passed around and sampled among the old folks beforehand, just to compare recipes, you know; but the children get the most of them. The cookies are in the funniest shapes, stars, half moons, shoes, animals, birds, fishes, faces, and even men and women. Of course that makes them taste a great deal nicer. One kind of Christmas cake is made of sugar and almonds, frosted and decorated with candies. It is called the Martzipan. It is made in all sizes and at all prices, and every lover buys his sweetheart one for Christmas.

The end of the Broglieplatz down in front of the old theater has been left open and the Christmas shopping has been going on quite a while at the booths, when suddenly that end is filled with a forest of Christmas trees. Their owners are busy setting each one in a little green-painted wooden rack. Everybody must have a Christmas tree. Even the soldiers up in the gloomy barracks—there are twelve to fifteen thousand soldiers in Strasburg, and a dozen or more barracks—try to get one, too. The trees are not meant to be loaded with presents, but just to be things of beauty. They are decorated with candles, balls, bells, stars, “angels' hair,” and the Christmas cookies hung with bright colored yarn. On the very tiptop of the tree is an angel with golden wings outspread. When finished the tree is set in the front window, and on Christmas Eve is lighted, while the curtain is left up. One Christmas Eve I had to go clear across the city, and as I looked up at the pyramids of lights in the windows old Strasburg seemed to me a fairy town. The air was, too, musical with Christmas songs. The children are fond of singing:

“O Tannenbaum, O Tannenbaum,
Wie schön sind deine Blätter!”

“O pine tree, O pine tree, how beautiful are thy leaves!” Sometimes they form a ring about the tree and sing about it as the most beautiful of all trees. Another beautiful Christmas song begins, “Silent night! Holy night! Everything sleeps. One alone waits,” and another, “O thou joyous, O thou blessed gladness, bringing Christmas time.”

Well, the candles are not burned up that night. They are lighted again and again during the week, and then on St. Sylvester's Eve, the last night of the old year, they are lighted for the last time and allowed to burn out. Meanwhile most of the cookies have disappeared. Mother has used them during the week as bribes for good behavior.

There are all sorts of Christmas celebrations before and on the day, but little before the day in the churches. The Sunday school has not made much headway in Germany, and does not figure at such times. I remember a concert in St. Thomas' church the Sunday night before Christmas, at which two huge Christmas trees were lighted.

The children are up bright and early Christmas morning and looking for their presents, which they do not find in stockings, but on the table or under the tree. Then the great bell in the Cathedral tower, that only rings four times a year, rolls out its Christmas greeting in deep mellow tones, and all the other church bells chime in, and men, women and children troop to the churches. After the service the day is given to feasting, and often, I am sorry to say, to drinking. That is the dark side of a German Christmas.

Wilmette, Ill.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHRISTMAS DAY.

B. S. WINCHESTER.

SNAP SHOTS WITH A KODAK.

CHRISTMAS day this year dawned bright and glorious, and the balmy air and pure sunlight were so alluring that I concluded to take my camera and try to catch a few pictures showing some of the different ways of celebrating this of all festivals most sacred and joyous. As I strolled down the street with camera under my arm I passed the door of an Episcopal church. The hour of service was fast approaching, and already the entrance was thronged with crowds of well-dressed, happy-looking men and women, dapper young men in their trim, tailor-made suits and close-fitting gloves, blushing and smiling maidens in gay and holiday attire, here and there one whose plainer but neatly fitting clothing and serious face showed that life with her was not all holiday, while just before me passed an aged couple whose silvery locks and tottering steps showed that their earthly pilgrimage must soon be o'er, but who, like Simeon and Anna, wished to pay their homage to the Child of Bethlehem—all these eager faces, shining with the joy of Christmastide and bowing in reverence as the open door was entered and the deep tones of the organ fell upon the ear. This, thought I, is just the picture I want to start with, so, slipping quietly around behind a carriage which had stopped before the door, with as little ceremony as possible, I "pressed the button" and hastened on.

Turning the corner of a business street, I noticed another crowd, and as I drew nearer I saw that they presented a strange contrast to the one I had just left. This one was composed of men, not dressed in fine clothes, with silk hats and long overcoats, but in rough garments, forlorn-looking hats and caps, and without overcoats or gloves. As they stood in line I looked up and saw over the door the sign, "Salvation Army Barracks," and then I remembered that the Salvationists were to give away several hundred Christmas dinners. And then I looked again upon this unkempt, ragged, shivering line of hard-visaged, hungry human beings, jostling one another with grim determination stamped upon their faces, as the odor of hot soup and coffee was wafted out to them. As I looked upon them these words came into my mind: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Brushing aside a tear, I slipped across the street and, standing in the shadow of a doorway, caught upon the film this my second Christmas picture.

A little farther on I paused again, this time in front of a saloon. The sidewalk was filled with a curious crowd of idlers, pressing about the door of the saloon, which they were prevented from entering by two or three burly policemen. Over the door was flaunted a gaudy sign, on which were rude attempts to represent overflowing beer-mugs, roast turkey, clams and bottles of wine, among which tempting articles of diet were conspicuously lettered the words: "Free Christmas Lunch all Day. Come in and try a Bottle of Wine!" No one in the crowd seemed to know exactly why the policemen were there, nor why the ambulance was drawn up before the door, but presently one of the men with a star and brass buttons shouted.

"Stand back!" and over the heads of the crowd I saw two men bearing on a stretcher the bleeding, unconscious form of a young man. Feeling sick at heart and scarcely knowing what I did, I pressed the button again, and the sharp "click" told me I had another picture.

I was obliged to hurry on now, for I had been invited to dine in a distant part of the city. Finding it already so late, I concluded not to return home, but set out immediately for the place, taking my camera with me. I was glad I did so, for on the way I passed through a portion of the city in the neighborhood of one of its universities. The car stopped, and there entered several students who seemed to be spending the vacation in town. They were evidently "football men" who had been out for a Christmas game. As my glance fell upon their huge frames, made still more ungainly by their padded football suits, with hair towls and faces muddy, I felt a kind of admiration for them, much as one feels in looking at a great ox at some cattle show. Like the ox, too, they seemed quite careless of their surroundings and altogether oblivious of the presence of some score of other persons in the car. Taking advantage of this fact and of the bright sunshine, I contrived to bring my camera to bear upon them without attracting their attention, and soon had them enclosed within its dark sides, together with my other pictures.

By this time I had arrived at my destination and hastened up the steps to scenes quite different from those just witnessed. I was graciously received by the hostess and ushered into the pleasant drawing-room, elegantly furnished with easy chairs and the walls hung with costly pictures. As this was a kind of family Christmas party, and the guests were all well acquainted, we soon fell into a lively conversation and forgot, for the time being, the outside world. And the dinner was all that could be desired. There was the huge turkey, of course, with cranberry sauce, and then came salads and the old-fashioned plum pudding, and oranges and raisins and nuts—all the accompaniments of Christmas and the triumphs of culinary art. And then, after dinner, the bright fire in the grate, about which we all sat and told stories and cracked jokes until the Christmas sun sank low in the heavens. Of course, I could not hope to capture all this in my camera, but as I started homeward after taking leave of the merry company, I managed to catch, in the last rays of the setting sun, a picture of the house, which will recall to me the pleasures of this day.

It had now grown too dark to attempt to take any more pictures, but two scenes which I saw on my way home will always remain associated in my mind with those photographed upon the film of my camera.

One was a street car episode. As I took my seat I soon became conscious of the fumes of whisky, and was for a time unable to determine whence they proceeded. Finally I traced them to the seat opposite, where two poor wrecks of feminine humanity were sitting. Their bleared eyes and thick speech, as they tried to converse together, gave evidence of the kind of Christmas they had spent. Once I overheard the name of him whose birthday Christmas is, but, alas! in the form of an oath! Presently, as the conductor called out "—— street!" they attempted to rise, and half reeled, half fell, into the street amid the jeers and coarse taunts of the idle throng without. Poor, wandering wretches! May God have mercy on them!

The other scene was quite different from this. It had now grown quite dark, and as I neared my home

I paused before a window through which the rays of light from many candles streamed. All within was gayety and mirth. There stood the Christmas tree, brilliant with sparkling tinsel and laden with many gifts; drums, dolls, sleds, sleigh-bells, skates, books, slippers, handkerchiefs—something for every member of the family, from grandpapa down to Baby Nell, while "Santa Claus," in long, gray beard and suit of red, was standing in the midst, distributing the Christmas cheer. As I lingered for a moment, fascinated by this happy sight, my mind went back over the day's experiences, and I wondered whether the rough men, waiting for their soup at the Salvation Army quarters, or the young man I saw carried to the ambulance, or those poor, abandoned women had once been happy, innocent children like these that danced in glee before my eyes, and as I thought of the contrast, a prayer went silently up that God might shield these pure souls from the dangers of this evil world.

Chicago, Ill.

CALEB, THE GARDENER.

LEONORA BECK ELLIS.

CALEB'S heart was white and guileless as a child's, but his face was black and middle-aged, with pathos written upon every line of it. We never learned his history until he had made our vegetable garden through many seasons, giving us the earliest peas, the largest potatoes and most perfect tomatoes in the whole village.

One summer morning in our early Bradley days, Ned said:

"Sue, do find out why your ebony gardener invariably prefers his weekly payment in old clothes rather than money. It is so curious that I should like the subject investigated."

But I answered:

"No, Ned. Of course everybody calls Caleb simpleminded, and I must confess that he doesn't seem to have an idea beyond his gardening. But in regard to his feelings, it is different, I believe; he has a dignity that I wouldn't dare affront by prying questions. Besides, since he is a genuine artist in his line of work, our duty is to pay him as he asks, and concede his right to individuality."

"What, harnessing Emerson's theories on our poor gardener, Sue?" Ned asked, teasingly.

The summer days passed, winter came, and our second Bradley spring followed, with Caleb perpetually faithful. Lack what intellect he might, he yet knew perfectly the demands of the soil and vegetable nature in our climate. Each waxing or waning moon laid its duties upon him, and from June to June he never seemed idle. I grew more and more in awe of his garden-wisdom as seasons and issues proved more and more my lack of it. He came to have entire control of our vegetable plats at last, with nothing more than approbation from Ned and me. I learned that he gardened in similar fashion for some of our neighbors at the other end of the village.

When the third summer was over, and cool days demanded heavier clothing, my husband was dismayed to find he had not a single left-over suit to start on. I explained meekly that every garment of his not in regular use had to be paid to Caleb for his steady services.

"But, Sue," he remonstrated, "this will never do. It would be much more economical for us, and far better for him, to make use of the current coin of the republic in return for his labor. I admit that Caleb is indispensable, but so is my apparel. The price you set upon it, when used as wages, is simply what it may be worth to him,—not the real value. Now, the value to him diminishes, in your estimate, and mine, too, I confess, with each suit paid him: for we have never yet seen him wear a single article of mine; and we know that he has not shrewdness enough to run a second-hand clothing establishment in his shanty out in the woods. Yet the more you are oppressed with the idea that he can have no earthly need for any more of my trousers, coats, and vests, the more you heap them upon him."

"I know it, Ned," I almost sobbed, "and it has worried me until I could not enjoy the strawberries and lettuce. I venture upon a remonstrance now and then, and urge him to take money, since he must already have far too many clothes. But he always answers that he 'druther have some nice britches ur a fine-lookin' hat this time, please, mum.'"

"But tell him, Sue, that your husband needs a few 'britches' and kindred articles, himself. Please worry over me a little, and you'll do Caleb a real kindness in denying him what the poor, half-witted fellow only imagines he needs. If you and he persist longer in the present policy, I shall be driven to invoke the help of the 'ole clo's man' in town."

After that, Caleb continued working and receiving his usual wages. But I kept up an irregular correspondence with my brothers' wives in the city, and Ned often had to bring out mysterious packages which they had sent down to his office for me. As his own clothes ceased to disappear so persistently, he ceased to remonstrate about Caleb's wages, and enjoyment of our magnificent garden products was once more unalloyed.

But there came a sunny autumn morning when my faithful gardener did not appear at the hour appointed. What could it mean? He had been as constant as the sun itself for many years. And yet, that day the ground was ready to the nicest point, the atmosphere soft and humid, the turnip seed demanding immediate planting,—while Caleb came not! In the morning I was uneasy; in the afternoon, anxious; and by Ned's coming in the evening, thoroughly filled with the conviction of some evil to the honest laborer. When I told my husband, he felt as I did, and we at once concluded to walk together to Caleb's hut, a mile and a half away, across fields and woods. We found what we had feared, the faithful negro alone and suffering, upon his rough straw pallet, and with no food in the house except a stale "pone" of cornbread.

There were many weeks of pain for Caleb. We did what we could to make the end peaceful and easy. My husband had a bed and other articles of comfort carried out, and we hired a good old black "mammy" and her husband to nurse the patient. We went each day ourselves, with food prepared at home. At first I carried flowers with me; but a subtle instinct soon told me that there was something else more pleasing to his eyes and soothing to his mind. After that, I frequently placed on the box by his bed a large potato, a cauliflower, or head of cabbage, or hung from the rafter over his bed a festoon of celery, late butter beans or mango peppers. The gleam of satisfaction and triumph that came into his eyes at sight of these fruits of his toil was much better than the mere gratitude which my Marechal Niels and carnations brought, and his gaze would find rest for many hours out of every day on his vegetable trophies.

Just before the end came, I asked him what he was longing for: I had divined for days that some deep desire was craving fulfillment. He looked at me long in silence, and at last slowly whispered: "Ef you'd only count my britches an' coats an' vestises, so you could tell Roxanny when she come back, how many I had! Ain't this Christmas day? She may come to-night."

With Mammy Lou's help, I took all the garments from the great chest in the corner, and also those hanging layer upon layer in the shed room. We spread them in the winter sunshine outside, and I counted them carefully into heaps. There were years and years of Ned's clothes, then my brother Tom's, then Joe's, and Robert's. There were many others, perhaps from our neighbors at the other side of the village.

When the task was finished, I recited the inventory to the sick man, and his eyes gleamed and shone. When I had done, he asked me please to tell him again. Afterwards, he said it all over slowly, with some help from me, and then lay silent for a long while, with closed eyes. At last he said huskily:

"Mis' Sue, when Roxanny comes, won't you tell her I could er dressed ez good ez Jud?"

I promised that I would, and he closed his eyes again, while I slipped away and walked up and down outside until Ned came. He went softly into the hut, but soon returned to tell me that Caleb had passed to a better world to claim his Christmas gift.

After the burial, we learned from a colored neighbor of our gardener the story of his warped existence. From the earliest of his hard-working years, he had loved a brown damsel, named Roxanna; but when grown she had flouted his affection, having eyes and ears only for a dashing young mulatto who wore good second-hand clothes and gay ties. She soon married this young fellow, Jud Byers, and he carried her off to an adjoining town. Caleb plodded on alone, shrinking now from his own race, and returning always to his hut in the forest as soon as his daily labor was finished.

A year or two later, one stormy Christmas night, he heard a call through the woods and a child's cry. Going out with a torch, he found Roxanna and her baby nearly frozen and starved. She had been deserted by her husband many months before, and ill health had driven her to give up the struggle for support of herself and child. In her desperation, she remembered that there was one true heart in the world, and she mustered strength enough to come to her forsaken lover.

Caleb housed her and the child, and induced an aged female relative to come and take care of them. He, himself, with a delicacy you hardly expect to find in his race, took a steady job in town, boarding there and coming out to the shanty only twice a week, to bring provisions or to cut wood. When mild weather returned Roxanna was strong again, and the child bouncing. She began to talk coquettishly about going off to "chamber-maid fur a hotel" near by; but it was easy for Caleb to dissuade her. In the end, she obtained her freedom from Jud, and, being married to her old lover, went with him next Christmas time to live in a good house in Bradley.

But Caleb's glimpse of happiness was short. Roxanna suddenly gained value in Jud's estimation from belonging to another, and he reappeared before her dazzled eyes, wearing more fashionable clothes and gaudier cravats than before. Caleb worked from daylight until after dark, and he kept her and the child well-dressed and well-fed; but he never looked anything else than shabby and uncouth himself. It was not long before the poor fellow came home one night to find only an empty house; his wife had run away with Jud. He accepted the fact heart-brokenly but without attempt to alter it; there was no resistance in his nature. He moved back to his hermitage in the woods and over its threshold no guest was ever again invited.

As his trouble unseated his mind, but one idea possessed him; to have more and better clothes than Jud when Roxanna should come back, as she surely must come, he thought, some wild, wet night. He always kept a "fat pine" torch ready to go and seek her when he should hear her call, and had wood piled up to make a great fire to dry her and the baby when they came. And in all the long years there was never a Christmas night when he did not sit up until daylight listening for her call. But Death called before Roxanna, and Caleb's splendid outrivalling of Jud's attire was never to be. He had his Christmas gift in different wise.

After all, Life would be only a sorry thing if there were no overruling Power to ordain fullness in the next world for the emptiness of this.

Atlanta, Ga.

PLEASANTRIES.

"Spell 'chicken,'" said a Paola teacher to a boy in the primary class. "I can't do it, ma'am. I ain't got that far along," said the boy, "but I can spell egg."—Kansas City Journal.

"Ma," said a newspaper man's son, "I know why newspaper men call themselves 'we.'" "Why?" "So that the man that doesn't like the article will think there are too many people for him to tackle."

Mamma—"Willie, what did you do with that penny I gave you this morning?" Willie (aged four)—"I gave it to the monkey." Mamma—"And what did he do with it?" Willie—"He put it in his cap, then gave it to his father, who played the organ."

Two laborers set out from Wexford to walk to Dublin. By the time they reached Bray they were very much tired with their journey, and the more so when they were told they were still twelve miles from Dublin. "Be me sowl," said one, after a little thought, "sure, it's but six miles apiece; let us walk on!"

One day in a town where he was to lecture, Mr. Beecher went into a barber's shop to be shaved. The barber, not knowing him, asked him whether he was going to hear Beecher lecture. "I guess so," was the reply. "Well," continued the barber, "if you haven't got a ticket you can't get one. They're all sold, and you'll have to stand." "That's just my luck," said Mr. Beecher. "I always did have to stand when I've heard that man talk."

"My dear brudders an' sisters," remarked the venerable pastor of the only colored church in town, as he carefully cleared the broad table in front of him so that every nickel, cent, and button laid upon it would stand out in startling distinctness, "dere is some of de folks in dis chu'ch gives accawdin' to deir means, an' some accawdin' to deir meanness. Le's not have any of de secon' class heal dis mawnin'!" After which the procession commenced, and everybody reached for his bottom dime.

AT THE CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

SERMON BY DR. JOSEPH PARKER.

REPORTED BY OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT.

Prefatory Note.

IT is interesting after having heard preachers on both sides of the Atlantic to notice their similarities and differences as a class and as individuals. On hearing Dr. Joseph Parker of the City Temple, London, lately, I was struck with the resemblance he bears to Dr. Gunsaulus of Chicago. Both these men have a quality which is difficult to describe, but its effect is, that when each is praying, he is not a minister praying for his congregation, he is his congregation praying. The first words they utter take them straight in among their people and there they remain. The gift shows great insight and sympathy and gives a power to prayer. Dr. Joseph Parker, who is always happy in his dissertations on the patriarchs and rulers of Israel, preached last Sunday morning on the thirty-second chapter of Exodus. He has been ill, but seems to have regained his usual vigor. He preached with great force; and running in and out of his prayers and preaching was a golden thread of gentleness of which one feels the aureole of saints is spun and which is the beautiful accompaniment of age. Any account of a sermon of Dr. Parker's must give an impression of somewhat of abruptness. This is largely obviated by his perfect mastery of the art of saying things.

The Sermon.

After reading the first verse of the chapter Dr. Parker said: "And Moses delayed to come down out of the mount." And what wonder! Who would have come down if he could have stayed there? For there God was. In later times men have said, "Let us make three tabernacles on the mount."

How important is one man! If he be away the whole business goes to pieces. There is always a time in the home, in business, in the church, in journalism when the one man is needed. Moses delayed. The people said, "Let us up and make us gods." He was receiving the Lord's hands upon him, he was working for them, writing in their interests, yet they called him "This Moses," and said, The man who brought us up out of the land of Egypt—he is lost in some cloud. We shall never see him again. It is a natural cry. Man must have a god or invent one. He must have a deity or a calf.

We hold our sweetest, greatest blessings delicately and as we loose our hold on them we go down hill at a hundred miles a minute. Hold on. Say "I will not let thee go except thou bless me."

Some men think they can get on without "means of grace." You are not old enough to know those words. In the old times "means of grace" were the openings in heaven through which God poured blessings. How long can a man get on without the sacraments, without church? When are our afflictions but for a moment? When we look, not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. "We wot not where Moses is, though he is away working, resting, sleeping for us. Though we know this man has no other object in life than our good and though he is away for our sake—yes, but he is away from us."

And the irreligious religiousness of the people, for there is an irreligious religiousness and an impious piety, impelled them, and they fashioned the calf. And this is just what we would do if God went away, if God turned his back upon us.

And they said, "These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of Egypt." And weak Aaron built an altar. Just what we should do now. Growth is a slow process. Without God we have no standing place, we must have a calf. We must have the living God or something made by man's device. The Lord God Almighty—or the calf. It's an awful tumble. But when man tumbles, he tumbles fast. Take care!

"And the Lord said, Go, get thee down; thy people which thou broughtest out of Egypt have corrupted themselves." Everything is known in heaven. We can't have a calf but it is known to him whose eyes make the whole heavens alight with his presence. Many of us have little golden calves carefully graven, which we carry about in our pockets and which we worship. We offer God ten per cent, like Jacob, promise to patronize him for his share in our success. Aaron was a fool. God must have repented that he made him!

So Moses came down from the tabernacle, made of the morning, fashioned of radiant clouds, and seized, as it were, by neck and throat a people who had defied God and corrupted man. And Moses became a priest and made prayers such as no other made until Christ came and taught us to pray. "The mischief of it is the Egyptians will hear of it. They will mock, and I cannot bear it. Remember Egypt is looking on. Remember Abraham and thy promises. Remember thy servants to whom thou swearest by thine own self." And God says, "So be it."

And Joshua, waiting for him, said, "There is a noise of war in the camp." But Moses said, "It is the noise of them that do sing to idols." And he cast out of his hand the tablet that had been graven by the hand of God. And he seized the calf, burnt it in the fire, ground it to powder, strewed it upon the water and gave to the children of Israel to drink. He destroyed it, then argued. We trifle with evil. We say, "Let us inquire into this."

An indifferent world always thinks its leaders mad. I have had occasion to say lately that a man cannot make a fire out of sawdust. We are all made of the same stuff, but some of us are chopped so fine. We are all most decorous. We reason with the devil, are polite with the devil or Appollyon or whatever we call him.

Moses did not temporize. He did not ask, "What is this calf made of?" Oh, that we had a Moses here to-day! We have fallen on ways of carelessness. We have left all this to the Salvation Army and when they sing in the street they offend us.

And then Aaron began to explain matters. "Why," he said, "I put in the ear-rings and the gold into the fire and I was never so surprised in my life as when that calf came out." How ridiculous is the excuse of the sinner, how absurd! As if there could be an excuse for sin. A sinner is not only a criminal, he is a fool, which is worse. Aaron said, "Now, Moses is amenable to reason, and if I make him believe I never expected that calf, he will understand the matter." Aaron never mentioned the graving tools. A man that can make a calf can make any number of excuses.

And we now come face to face with an old habit, that of making excuses in the face of deadliest sins. We say we are going to pray for strength. But we can't pray till we get rid of a thing. My friend, when you get home, take the laudanum, pour it out, stamp on it, and then pray. Whatever it is that you should not take, get it out of the house and then pray.

We talk about reducing quantities. We must grind to powder. We coddle ourselves. That is not God's way. He says, Resist the devil, abhor that which is evil. And there is One to help us. We have One to hold on to. Thou, God, art my only stay and trust. Give me thy name—the benefit of thy name, the assurance of thy help, and then in thy mercy my soul will be delivered.

Each man has his own besetment and each man is hardest on that particular besetment which is not his. When all comes to be known we shall be pitiful one to another, "leaving with meekness his sins to his Savior."

BIBLE SCHOOL.

REVIEW.

Lesson for December 29, 1901.

Golden Text:—If God be for us, who can be against us?—Rom. 8:31.

A CHICAGO BEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

Lesson I.—Joseph Sold Into Egypt—Gen. 37: 12-36.

Golden text: The Patriarchs moved with envy.—Acts 7:9.
Topic: Divine Character Building.

Verse topics: 12-14—The Father's Anxiety. 15-17—The Further Search. 18-20—Brethren's Jealousy. (Where love between the brethren should have prevailed for mutual strength and good, envy entered with its fruits of malice, deceit, lying, murderous intent and slavery.) 21, 22—Reuben's Intercession. 23, 24—The Desert Pit. 25—Historical Meanness. 26—A Troubled Conscience. (Judah asks, what profit, if we slay? He seems to think of slavery as being much milder than slaying, but in God's sight sin is not graded as men sometimes calculate. Sin is treason, and like treason against government, not the act but the principle condemns.) 26—A Troubled Conscience. 27—Appalled at Blood. 28—The Sale of Human Flesh. 29—Reuben's Anguish. 30—The Missing Child. 31—Sin Begets Sin. 32—Dreadful Life's Secret. 33, 34—It is My Son's Coat.

Lesson II.—Joseph in Prison—Gen. 39: 20-40:15.

Golden text: But the Lord was.—Gen. 39:21.

Topic: Power of Character.

Verse topics: 20—False Imprisonment. 21—Living by Faith. 22—Advancement. 23—Power of Character. 1—The King's Offenders. 2—The King's Wrath. 3—Distinguished Companions. 4—Further Advancement. (Even in prison all things were working together for good. Rom. 8:20.) 5—Dreams of the Night. 6, 7—Conspicuous Sadness. 8—God's Witness. 9-13—Dream of the Vine. ("Pressed them." The statement is useful in showing that anciently wine was the pure, fresh juice of the grape without fermentation.) 14, 15—Longings in Prison.

Lesson III.—Joseph Exalted—Gen. 41: 38-49

Golden text: Them that honor me.—I Sam. 2:30.

Topic: Pharaoh's Discovery of Joseph.

Verse topic: 38—Wanted, A Great Leader. 39—Fitness Recognized. 40—High appointment. (Joseph's word was to be absolute. Men may be brought to have greater regard for the word of human rulers than for the word of God.) 41—Duties defined. 42—Credentials Needed. (The seal ring was a stamp of personal authority. The credentials from our King, when we are called to "go," are the fruits of the spirit.) 43—The Great Procession. 44—Formal Inauguration. 45—Overcoming Caste. 46—Duties Begun. 47—Bounteous Crops. 48—Royal Granaries. 49—Superabundant Stores.

Lesson IV.—Joseph and His Brethren—Gen. 45: 1-15.

Golden text: Be not overcome.—Rom. 12:21.

Topic: Lesson of Forgiveness.

Verse topics: 1—Joseph's Love Prevails. 2—A Weeping Ruler. 3—The Great Disclosure. (The first shock of Joseph's disclosure was overpowering. Like the guest at the wedding feast, the brethren were unprepared, hence were speechless.) 4—Love's Reconciliation. 5—Forgiveness. (Instead of Joseph being left in the desert pit, a caravan providentially appeared, suggesting the idea of profit, and thus he was saved alive and came to Egypt. But their guilt was none the less because God made the wrath of men to praise him. Ps. 76:10.) 6—The Prediction. 7—"A Great Nation." 8—Giving God Praise. 9—Speed the Gospel. 10—Settlement of Egypt. 11—"The Fatted Calf." 12—Recognition Confirmed. 13—Glorious Story. 14—The Two Brothers. 15—The Silence Broken.

Lesson V.—Death of Joseph—Gen. 50: 13-26.

Golden text: So teach us to number.—Ps. 90:12.

Topic: From Sacrifice to Possession.

Verse topics: 15:15—Frightened Brothers. 16—Message to Throne. 17—Tears of Love. (Tender-hearted Joseph is more ready to forgive than are the brethren to acknowledge their offense. As Joseph wept over his brethren, so Jesus wept over his brethren. Luke 19:41.) 18—The Bowing Sheaves. 19—Vengeance is God's. 20—Salvation from Famine. 21—Fruit of the Spirit. (Joseph with the dim light he had brought forth love and all other fruits of the Spirit. Gal 5:22, 23. Are we doing as well?) 22, 23—Prosperity Prolonged. 24—Kept the Faith. 25—Last Words of Faith. 26—Last Will Recorded.

Lesson VI.—Israel Oppressed in Egypt—Ex. 1: 1-14.

Golden text: God heard their groaning.—Ex. 2:24.

Topic: Growth Into a Nation.

Verse topics: 1-4—Family Roll. 5—Small Beginnings. 6—"Dust Thou Art." 7—Unprecedented Increase. (All the expressions are designed to emphasize the surprising increase from family to clan, to nation in fulfillment of God's special promise to Abraham ages before.) 8—Political Revolution. ("Which knew not Joseph." Forgetfulness easily becomes a great sin. The object of the Lord's Supper is that we may not forget the death of our Savior.) 9—Exciting Race Prejudices. 10—Exaggerated Alarm. 11—Cold-blooded Measures. 12—Fruitless Opposition. 13—Symbol of Sin Service. 14—Fellowship in Suffering.

Lesson VII.—The Childhood of Moses—Ex. 2:1-10

Golden text: Train up a child.—Prov. 22:6.

Topic: Child Training.

Verse topics: 1—God a Shield. 2—Faith Overcometh the World. 3—Desperate Measures. (Faith led the mother to do all she could for her child. God works through the willing hearts and hands of his children.) 4—Wise as Serpent. 5—"Sacred-river Bather." 6—Gentile Deliverer. (Our example was noted for his compassion; how much more should compassion towards the needy be expected of his followers than of this daughter of a cruel pagan. 1 Pet. 3:8.) 7—Fitly Spoken Word. 8—Relieved Hearts. 9—In Royal Presence. 10—Soul Culture.

Lesson VIII.—World's Temperance Lesson—Is. 5: 8-30.

Golden text: Woe unto them.—Is. 5:22.

Topic: Sin in Prosperity.

Verse topics: 8-10—The Idol of Self. 11—Serving the Appetite. 12—God is Forgotten. (All elaborate feasting and drinking tend to God-forgetfulness. Luke 16:19.) 13—Warning Disregarded. 14—Increased Death-rate. 15—Sin the Leveler. 16—Holiness Exalted. 17—Sin's Devastation. 18—Growth of Habit. 19—Defiance of God. 20—Fatal Imposture. 21—Pride's Blindness. 22, 23—Unbridled License. (The drink habit invariably grows by that upon which it feeds. Drinking men are boastful of the amount they can consume.) 24-30—The Result.

Lesson IX.—The Call of Moses—Ex. 3: 1-12.

Golden text: Certainly I will be with thee.—Rom. 3:12.

Topic: God's Call to Duty.

Verse topics: 1—Forty-year Seclusion. 2—Divine Token. (Moses saw more than the bush. His heart long had been trained to see Him "who is invisible," even Christ. Heb. 11:26, 27.) 3—Discerning Signs. 4—Willing Workers. 5—A Holy Cause. (Our religion is to educate us into holiness; to be filled with the Holy Spirit. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Heb. 12:14. 6—Oral Revelation. 7—The Oppressed Masses. 8—Divine Deliverance. 9—The Pitying Father. 10—God's Choice. 11—Doubting Ability. 12—God With Them.

Lesson X.—Moses and Pharaoh—Ex. 11: 1-10.

Golden text: The Angel of his presence—Is. 63:9.
Topic: The Hardened Heart.

Verse topics: 1—Climax of Severity. 2—Balancing Accounts. 3—Acknowledged Greatness. (The secret of Moses' greatness lay in his heredity; his early training; his vision of the invisible; his thorough Egyptian education and experience; his meekness; his spiritual zeal.) 4—The Fatal Decree. 5—The Sore Judgment. 6—The National Grief. 7—The Lord's Favorites. 8—Universal Homage. 9—Wonders of The Lord. 10—Recapitulation. (The process that was wrought upon Pharaoh's heart is seen to-day in the hardening effects of habits. The conscience becomes "seared as with a hot iron." 1 Tim. 4:2.)

Lesson XI.—The Passover—Ex. 12: 1-17.

Golden text: Christ our passover—1 Cor. 5:7.
Topic: The Deliverance of the Lord.

Verse topics: 1, 2—Change of Calendar. 3—All Goshen Stirred. 4—Bond of Fellowship. 5—The Victims. 6—Time for Deliberation. 7—The Human Element. 8-10—Feast of Fellowship. (They were to receive and appropriate what God had provided. So in the Lord's Supper we are to appropriate Christ spiritually. Gal. 2:20.) 11—In Readiness. 12—Pass Through Egypt. 13—Pass Over Israel. (Man not God needed this sign of the blood. The blood is the central idea of all the revelation of God. Man is redeemed thereby, Ep. 1:7; 1 Pet. 1:18; he is justified by blood. Rom. 5:9; cleansed; 1 John 1:7; made spotless. Rev. 7:14. If any are cast off, it is because they have trampled under foot the blood of Christ. Heb. 10:29.) 14—Perpetual Remembrance. 15:17—Form of Observance.

Lesson XII.—Passage of the Red Sea—Ex. 14: 13-27.

Golden text: I will sing unto—Ex. 15:1.
Topic: Divine Deliverance.

Verse topics: 13-14—Command of Faith. 15:18—Prayer of Faith. 19—Prayer Answered. 20—Help of the Helpless. (God's Word now is guide and light to his children, (Ps. 119:105, 130,) but to the unbelieving that word is more or less obscure and terrible. Matt. 13:13; 2 Cor.; 2:16; Jno. 7:17.) 21—Storm and Earthquake. 22—God a Shield. 23—Wild Night March. 24—Consternation at Dawn. (As this cloud to pursuers and the fleeing, so there is a difference between the light of his countenance and the rebuke of his countenance.) 25—Panic in the Sea. 26—Human Agency. (The Egyptians long before had caused the children of Israel to die by casting them into the water. Matt. 7:2.) 27—Morning of Death.

OUR ERROR YOUR GAIN.

Last week the following offer occurred under the caption "Our Christmas Box":

"Our small Sunday schools must not be forgotten. We will help them have new song books for Christmas. Thousands of copies of Christian Melodies have been sold at twenty-five dollars per hundred. We are selling them now at twenty dollars per hundred. Any school sending a club of ten new subscribers to the Christian Century at one dollar each, will receive fifty copies of Christian Melodies as a Christmas gift. Send us ten dollars and we will ship the books to you at once. The names can be sent in later. Better appoint a committee of ten and secure them next Lord's day. Christian Melodies has most of the standard hymns and many new songs. This offer is only good for three weeks. Fifty copies of Christian Melodies free with a club of ten subscribers to the Christian Century."

It was a mistake. It should have read, "Any school sending a club of ten new subscribers at one dollar and fifty cents each." Ten dollars, the regular price of the books, was to accompany the order, and the rest of the money to be sent with the ten names. The mistake was not noticed until the orders began to come in. Sunday schools are quick to see a good bargain. As many schools have already begun a canvass for the ten new subscribers, and as the offer is only good for one week more, including the present week, we will not recall the offer. Our error is your gain.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

PETER AINSLIE.

HE who has God, has all things. It is not so much a question whether we have this man or some other man on our side. Have we God? To possess him solves every difficulty. Is it any surprise that David should have said, "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord?" It is not sufficient to know that one is right, but there is all sufficiency to know that God is for us. A thing may be right and yet not expedient, nor wise; consequently all conduct must be measured by what God would like and whether he be for us or against us. If he is for us, the whole matter is settled, for all the world could not harm us. He is a fortress, a shield, a strong tower, an hiding place for perfect safety. If we be in him, men can smite us, but their blows fall upon the Almighty and vengeance belongs unto him and he will repay. The chief thing in life is not to get even with people. It has been said that self-preservation is the first law of nature, but it is not true. Jesus never taught any such principle. If this were a dispensation of justice we would not be. It is a dispensation of mercy and grace. We have to bear, we have to suffer, but the apostle's exhortation was, "let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief or as an evil doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters; yet if any man suffer as a Christian let him not be ashamed." In his very sufferings God is with him, God is for him, and if patience is developed and trust is made more confident, the suffering was surely a blessing. Has he not already taught us: "If you endure chastening God dealth with you as with sons, and no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous, nevertheless afterward it yields the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them who are exercised thereby?" You may think that things go strangely with you. You do not understand the circumstances that came into your life yesterday and the day before, but that is of no real concern. Where is God? Is he for you? Then what seemed as clouds are melted away and you lose sight of surrounding circumstances and begin with new interest to think of him who alone can help. All the world is not equal to God. His friendship is first over all others and his companionship is the chiefest in the world. Count all things else as naught beside him. God has the power and the grace and for him to be for us means peace, joy and salvation; such is the golden thought of this text.

Our Father, thou art so close to us and in thee is all safety and joy. We bless thy holy name through all ages. Amen.

The total undeveloped energy of Niagara Falls is estimated by electrical experts to be 8,000,000-horse power.

Naturalists estimate the number of worms in each acre of earth to be 34,000, and they maintain that it is almost impossible to calculate the amount of good done by these creatures.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

NUMBERING OUR DAYS,

Topic December 29, 1901—Ref. Ps. 90: 1-17.

HIS Ninetieth Psalm is called "a prayer of Moses, the man of God." Whether or no it be such, it is altogether worthy. It is one of the majestic Psalms of all the ages of human history, princely yet pathetic. The rhythm of it moves the soul aloft amid the solemnities. It sweeps the spirit like a strain from the heights celestial. And yet it is of the earth, and pathetic as a reminder of the fleeting of the earthly. Standing in the presence of our dead years, and of all the pathetic past, its stately measures strike the dirge of another year—the first of the twentieth century. Yet, through all its majestic stateliness, sounds the note of Prevailing Faith.

"Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." Upon this the saints and servants of God have stayed their souls in the hours of conflict. With every passing year, professing themselves to be pilgrims and strangers, they have found strength and assurance in leaning on the everlasting arms. And this is the faith that we need. We need it in our youth as in age. O young men, in the midst of the perils of these modern days, when the strife for position and power, and the mad clamor for commercial supremacy, are drowning the cry of the soul, I beseech you to get anchored in the faith that overcomes the world. To get and to hold are not the chief things. Success is not measured by what a man has, but by what he is, and by what he holds of faith in the future. To be able to say with Moses, the man of God, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms"—this is the great thing. To be assured that whatever comes, the everlasting Father and the unchangeable Christ are our refuge and support—these are the supremacies of the soul. To feel that there is none like unto our God, who rideth upon the heavens in our help, is to stay our souls for the conflict of the coming year and of this strenuous century. Brothers, let us believe it, rejoice in it, and be strong!

Numbering Our Days.

It is of little worth that we number our days, unless we apply our hearts unto wisdom. But where shall wisdom be found? And where is the place of understanding? It is the old perplexing problem. Of this much be assured—the wisdom of this world does not make men either wise or happy. The Psalmist of old had learned the true secret of satisfaction, which we seem slow of heart to understand. Here it is: "O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days." And this is the need of all our lives, and of every day of our lives. The Revised Version gives a most beautiful rendering. O, satisfy us "in the morning" with thy mercy. This makes a most fitting prayer for the beginning of each day. To find his mercy in early life; to rest in the assurance of his almighty love and power, will enable us to rejoice and be glad all our days. And so shall the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and so shall he establish the work of our hands upon us. Amen!

A SONG OUT OF SILENCE.

By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

The sweetest song is that
No poet has begun;
The grandest deed, the deed
No hand hath ever done;
The keenest thought, the dream
That cleaves the dying brain;
The wildest joy, the sense
Of a release from pain.

Oh, mad and sweet the song
That I to thee could sing!
And high as hope I'd reach
To do the noblest thing.
May heaven preserve the power
Thou shouldst have waked in me!
Will heaven hold the joy
I could have given thee?
Or is the finest fate
That life or death shall know
The rapture of despair,
The glory of this woe?

To know the dearest words
Unsaid forever be,
Because thou mayst not speak
The least of them to me,
To know not earth nor heaven.
Nor any crimson star,
Can measure losses such
As ours unmeasured are.
To know we would not quench
With any paler wine
The everlasting thirst
That must be mine and thine.

Business Men N. B.*EXTRAORDINARY*CHRISTMAS OFFER*The Christian Century

and

Christian Melodies

$$20 + 15 = 20$$

$$40 + 15 = 30$$

How can  $20 + 15 = 20$ ? That is no puzzle to a good business man. Business in Christianity solves many problems. Your Sunday School or Church needs one hundred first-class song books. Your Sunday School Superintendent knows that Christian Melodies sell for $20 per hundred. You know that ten subscriptions to The Christian Century is worth $15. We need money for our growing business. You need song books for your growing church and school. Send us ten dollars ($10) at once and your promise to send us a club of ten new subscribers within thirty days, at one dollar each ($10 additional) and we shall ship you one hundred copies of Christian Melodies.

You Pay the Freight

How can  $40 + 10 = 30$ ? Send us twenty dollars ($20) and your promise to secure ten new subscribers for The Christian Century at one dollar each ($10 additional) and we will ship your Sunday School or Church two hundred copies (worth $40) of Christian Melodies. This is how

$$40 + 15 = 30$$

$$20 + 15 = 20$$

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., 358 Dearborn St., Chicago

THE HOME

O silver chiming bells, in the misty Christmas morning
Filling with glad ripples the frost-enlightened air,

What song is it you sing to us,

What tidings that you bring to us,

What burden that the clamors of your changeful cadence bear?

Do ye still recall the advent of the star-enkindled dawning,
When 'mid flower calm the Lily of old Christendom was born?

Still hail the domination

In many a land and nation

Of him who opened baby eyes upon the throned morn?

JULIAN BENNANT.

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Chapter VII.

THAT same night, at a great reception to which I had been bidden, again I met her. She was regally and gloriously beautiful, and in her jewelless shimmering attire was Waldo's bunch of pure pale primroses! "Tremendous marriages have been proposed to her, I believe, but she has declined them all. Some shadow over her early history, perhaps, disinclination for the bondage—who knows what or why? Yet even so it is. The Princess Tourgenoff is still to be waited for and won!" So I overheard some one say laughingly, and as one who personally had no desire to enter the lists and strive for so fair a prize.

On the grand staircase I saw her for a brief moment alone. She was looking at a picture; suddenly she turned and saw me, too. I answered the dumb inquiry of her eyes and made my way to her.

"Thank you," she said simply; but her voice was scarcely audible, though no one was very near at hand. "Tell me; he will get better—surely, surely—will he not?"

"The day after to-morrow they are to perform an operation on him. I have sought the best advice in London. It seems that it must be done. They hold out every hope for a good result. I will most assuredly let you know. Good night."

"Good night," she said, growing very pale. "I have heard all that you have been to—them; all that you are to him. But I have lost even the right to thank you;" and the hopeless sadness of her voice sent a shiver through me. For the first time in my life I smiled at her.

"You must not say that," I said. "No one calling himself a friend could possibly have done less. It is I who owe them—everything. By the way, there was a message for you—I think, if you will wait, little Waldo shall give it you himself!"

Then we parted. To me she was more of an enigma each time we met. But my joy was very great to know that at last, for Allan's sake, I could think of her with sorrow instead of scorn.

The next day, as I sat with my little boy, I told him that his beautiful lady had worn his primroses at the great house. Knowing his way of taking things to heart, I told him nothing more, as I wished to keep him quiet and free from the least thing of the nature of a surprise or shock on the eve of the day when all his frail measure of strength would be so sorely needed.

"I hope she will be quite happy some day, dear old Neil, don't you?" he said.

A day of flowers and sunshine, of radiance and rejoicing in the outside world, was the day on which they came to bring the relief and remedies of surgery and science to my darling. But for us to whom he was so much, to Barbara and myself and all the members of our little household, the day was dark and heavy with a terrible suspense. In the morning he was singing his gayest songs, feeding the birds, playing with "Dainty," the little Skye, who was never out of his sight, telling me of future plans and the grand things he meant to do. In the afternoon, when the grave, kind doctors came, albeit he wore his very bravest face—"father's face," I used to call it—he put his hand in mine, clung to me curiously, and I could hear the beating of his heart against my own, though of course he knew nothing of what was to come. But, game to death as he would always have proved under any circumstances, yet in the presence of doctors nothing could wholly reassure him. I have since thought that it was perhaps the appellation that frightened him, because of the hideous association connected with the Dr. Vorstrovna of by-gone days.

Thus, in the morning, happy and triumphant; later on, bravely trying to smile with those who, God knows, meant so well by him; in the evening he lay unconscious, in a delirium of fever, on the edge of that terrible line, from whence the slopes lead down so easily and swiftly unto death.

He lay in a quiet room overlooking the gardens at the back of the house. It was a burning night, and the windows were flung wide open to the air. All through the long, black hours, Barbara and I watched over him and listened to his tortured moanings.

He called to the doctors, beseeching them not to take his father from him, promising piteously that he would give them his prettiest books, all his flowers, his goats at home, nay, even his little Dainty, if they would only spare him his father. He then babbled of the elections, begging them not to vote for Dr. Vorstrovna, but for Nell and Nell only; Nell, who was the best fellow in the world, since his own father said so! Then again he was watching the boys at their cricket in the field at home, one moment asking Barbara to take a turn at bowling, the next warning her to keep out of the line of the ball. Then he would implore me to tell him when I thought he would be able to climb the tree which father had found so hard to climb. Would his back soon get better—very, very soon? Then his dear thoughts would soar to the highest heaven, and he would talk familiarly with God and look among the angels for his dearest one. Then it seemed to us who listened in our pain to those sweet, mad babblings, that he wanted some one who was not there, some one whose name he knew not—some one whom father had loved always, always.

Then and there I would have gone for her, but they told me that his only chance lay in utter stillness, that no strange faces might come near him; that before twenty-four hours the crisis would be reached, that even then there would be time enough, although the worst should be declared.

Through all the long, hot day that followed we never left him, Barbara and I. He had his burning little hands clasped tightly about my fingers most of the time. Although he did not know me, he seemed to know if I moved for a moment from his side.

"Nell," he would cry, "dear Nell, if you are going to find father, you must take me, too—you must take me, too!"

But I knew it was rather he who was going to find his father, and that on that dread journey his little feet must travel all alone.—The Quiver.

(To be continued.)

WE AND OUR NEIGHBORS.

A PARLOR CONFERENCE.

"I'm sure I don't know what my talent is," exclaimed one of a group of ladies gathered in the pleasant parlors of a suburban home. "I could better tell what somebody else's talent is."

"You may be helpful to that somebody then, and so each may show the other what to do. Come and let us talk it over, anyway," said the hostess. With this parting word, good-bys were said and the little circle separated.

A week went by and again they met, to resume the subject under discussion.

"Have we any individual talent given us that we can use for the benefit of others?" So ran the wording of the thought that was to occupy their attention.

"As good stewards of the manifold grace of God," read the leader, "'even so minister the same one to another.' Most of us, I think, are apt to feel that we ordinary people do not possess any special gifts or talents, but don't we make a mistake in our estimate of what a talent is? Have we not each some power, some faculty, something we can use for the good of others, that duly cultivated, may become our talent; in fact, is the gift or grace of which we are made steward?"

"Better than waiting to discover whether we have any special talent, is to make the best use of our every day capabilities—the little things we do in our homes," said Mrs. Griswold, and Mrs. Jones added: "Do you remember our Sunday school lesson about Dorcas? Evidently her talent was the making of garments, but she was one of the lonely ones and had none of her own to do for, so the poor had the benefit of the one thing she could do well. It was a simple, ordinary thing, but surely it was her talent."

"I envy Dorcas when she woke up and found how deeply they all cared for her, for I imagine she did not realize it while living. We are all apt to leave our gratitude unspoken till it is too late," said Miss Fontaine.

"You have touched there one of the lines which I think our subject embraces. Forgetting to say the kindly appreciative word loses us many a chance for helpfulness. Such a word lightens the burdens and is often an inspiration to further service. I don't see why we are so chary of our words of commendation and appreciation. They do not cost us anything but a little effort to be thoughtful."

"I'm afraid I fail pretty often in that," said Mrs. Somers, with a sigh. "And yet I really think it is a talent—at least it seems so when one notices how much sunshine Mrs. Winton brings to other people just by her way of doing that very thing. And it isn't flattery, either. It's just real, honest appreciation of other people's efforts and taking the trouble to let them know it."

"Yes, indeed," added Winnie Benton, "the other day Grace Stone was quite nervous about reading that paper and felt as if perhaps it wasn't worth much, but Mrs. Winton put out her hand as she passed her and said, with one of her bright smiles, 'That was a helpful incident you mentioned, Miss Grace. I shall not forget it.' And yesterday when she met Mrs. Stanton at our house she said to her, 'That little visit of yours did my friend good. I hope you will go again and see her.' Both those people were helped and encouraged more than you would imagine."

"A little story I read recently seems to fit our subject," remarked Miss Hood. "In a leper settlement this strange sight may be seen: A man who has feet carrying a man who has hands, but no feet. The man who has feet scratched up the ground with his foot and the man on his back dropped the seed he carried into the ground. We can supplement the defects of others and they ours. I was thinking I who have no children to care for might find my talent was helping some overtaxed mother with her brood, seeing I love the little ones so much."

"And as I like to read aloud, I might read to some one who has no time to read herself or Mary here, who is so handy with her needle, might help her with her sewing, and so give her a chance to read," laughingly added Jessie Lee.

"Some of us have specially sympathetic natures. Have we thought what a talent it is and how constantly we may use it for the help of others?"

"I am glad you mention that," responded Mrs. Dunn, "for recently I have had occasion to know that more people are hungry for sympathy than I ever imagined possible. There are so many around us, wearied and burdened, some with one thing and some with another, and a sympathetic word or deed helps wonderfully."

"I am sure of that, but I want to put in a plea for those who do not seem to need our help in this way. Their burdens are not visible ones, but they are none the less real. They do not need help in the usual ways and yet from force of circumstances, theirs is a solitary way. To all these—and they are more numerous than you would think—let us give a sympathetic friendship."

"It would be following the Master's example," softly said gentle Miss Grace.

PHILO.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

REVIEW.

If God Be for Us, Who Can Be Against Us?—Roman 8: 31.

Monday, December 23rd—Genesis 37: 23-36.

HERE is no pit so deep and darksome that it is not brightened for the believing heart by the presence and the love of God.

Is it sorrow? There are lessons to be learned which only sorrow can teach me. Patience is one of them, and trust is another, and humility is a third, and sympathy for those who are in any tribulation is a fourth. Said Samuel Rutherford, "I never knew, by my nine years' preaching, so much of Christ's love as he hath taught me in Aberdeen, by six months' imprisonment."

Is it conflict? If I had not the battle against temptation and sin, how should I discover the wiliness and persistence of my enemy, and how should I taste the helping and delivering grace of my Lord? "I send you against the foe with six thousand men," Frederick the Great said to one of his generals. It was found that there were only fifty thousand, and the general complained. "I counted you for ten thousand," Frederick replied. But who shall say for how many my Master counts?

Is it discouragement in work? If there is a cessation of redeeming victories in my service, it should certainly lead me to solemn searchings of heart. But it is no reason for forsaking my task. The only question is, Am I where God would have me to be? I may be a sentry at outpost duty far from the camp; but, if it is his will, it is enough.

Tuesday, December 24th—Genesis 45: 1-15.

Teach me, O Lord, the spirit of the peacemaker.

I would keep peace with others. If I hear of their unkindness, if I find in them some injurious and disparaging word or act, I would pay no heed. It is not easy, for often I take fire at the first spark of reproach. I would learn to speak nothing, write nothing, do nothing, until I have regained the evenness and gentleness of my composure.

And I would restore peace when it has fled. I can do it by a Christian reticence and a watchful silence. Let me never repeat an offensive imputation or retail a hurtful story. I can do it, also, by active reconciliation. Let me win the confidence of those who are at variance. Without precipitancy, without partiality, let me draw them together again.

And I would establish peace between men and God. There is only one mediator; but I may be a laborer with him, a bearer of heaven's sweet and generous pardon to those who need it sorely. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that publisheth peace!"

Wednesday, December 25th—Isaiah 9: 1-7.

"Christ, the Comforter, was born, and still is born, in winter-tide." In my heart let him have his cradle and nest.

Then I shall be enriched with his salvation. He laid his glory aside, he stooped so low, he came "a weeping babe, all in the cold"—why? That, through weariness and painfulness, and hunger and thirst, and death and shame, he might lift the curse away from me. So it is the dawn of a new morning, the beginning of a happy era, when I trust him. Let it be December outside, it is June within. I am forgiven, accepted, crowned, through his strange humiliation and exceeding grace.

Yes, and then, when he is "new-born my heart within, new-born, dear Babe and little King," I shall be changed into his likeness. His lowliness, his pitifulness, his purity, his love, will have in me their reproduction and their miniature. Men will see the Christ-Child looking out from my eyes, and refining my spirit, and energizing my hands, and making swift and beautiful my laggard and stumbling feet. My pride will be gone. My delight in sin will be crucified. My lukewarmness will be exchanged for a flame of tenderness and zeal.

Thursday, December 26th—Exodus 1: 1-14.

When I am made to "serve with rigour," then is the time for patience to have her perfect work.

Over hostile circumstances let me rise victorious and prevailing. It is with bravery, with manliness, with confidence, that the Christian should contend against the various hindrances and persecutions and temptations which befall him in his conflict with the inward and outward world.

Over men who provoke and persecute let me gain a perpetual triumph. I would be like David with Shimei; like Job with his sharp-tongued friends; like Stephen, who "heeded not reviling tones," but prayed, "Lay not this sin to their charge;" like Jesus, who made his cross an oratory of intercession for his murderers and foes. Never let me be irritated unduly. Never let me reward resentment with resentment, but evil with good.

Over God's delays—and this is the keenest trial of all—let me be more than a conqueror. I would copy him who refused to let the angel go without the angel's benediction, and Christ himself who pleaded again and again, "If it be possible! If it be possible!" I have need of more unutterable intensity in prayer.

Friday, December 27th—Exodus 2: 1-10.

Let me care wisely and lovingly for the children. Who knows but that a Moses may be hiding among them?

I have been impressed by the number and the tenderness of the references to the little folks in Robert Louis Stevenson's Letters. He carried an observant and gracious heart in him. Thus: "I sometimes hate the children I see on the street—you know what I mean by hate—wish they were somewhere else, and not there to mock me; and sometimes I don't know how to go by them for love of them, especially the very wee ones."

And again, from San Francisco: "My landlord and landlady's little four-year-old child is dying in the house; and O, what he has suffered! The child weighs on me, dear Colvin, I did all I could to help; but all seems little, to the point of crime, when one of these poor innocents lies in misery."

I covet this open eye, this interested mind, this overflowing heart, these ministering and succoring hands.

Saturday, December 28th—Exodus 3: 7-18.

When God is with me, there is nothing too high or too hard. So let me refuse to be depressed by temperament. Perhaps I am predisposed to gloom. But I live in triumph, when my soul stays itself on God.

And let me come away from the sense of indwelling sin. That kills joy and energy at their very roots. This hostile power, this insidious disease, this yoke of bondage, robs me of life and spirit and hope. But my Lord's salvation is mighty to deliver me from the body of death; I will trust in him and not be afraid.

And let me emerge from the shadows cast by trouble and death. If I am a Christian, I am not less sensitive, but more, than other men. Bereavement and sorrow cloud my sky with a thick mist, and death has its own sharp pain. But I will sing my song, "Thanks be to God who giveth me the victory through my Lord Jesus Christ."

Sunday, December 29th—Exodus 14: 19-31.

The same pillar of God which is light to Israel is darkness to Egypt. Does it not remind me how Christ, according as I accept him or refuse him, will be my salvation or my doom?

I may cavil at the mystery and the majesty of his person. Or I may be perplexed by the lowliness and poverty of his human life. Or I may dislike the uncompromising character of his precepts and demands. Or I may pronounce the doctrine that he died in my room and stead too humiliating and too repulsive. Self-righteousness, scepticism and intellectual vanity; worldliness and the devotion of heart and life to temporal success—these forces and motives hinder too many of the lost sheep from trusting and following the Good Shepherd. God in his mercy prevent them from dominating me.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

A Christmas Story.

ANNIE E. S. BEARD.

CHRISTMAS! Merry Christmas! How the words seem to bring good cheer in their very sound! They make us think of such a crowd of good things. It brings good Santa Claus on his special visit to the young folks, and who is not glad to see him? Then everybody knows the eager delight with which the appearance of the dear old Christmas tree is hailed and the pleasure derived from its unloading. Sleigh rides in the clear, frosty air, merry games and pleasant visits; in short, a general cluster of good things combine to make Christmas a memorable time of the year. But how often does it occur to the minds of the happy ones, that there are in the great city some to whom the good things do not come at Christmas any more than at any other time? Girls and boys, let me tell you of one of the little ones to whom but for the kindness of a stranger, Christmas day would have been no day of rejoicing.

Amidst a group of well-dressed, healthy-looking children, who were gazing into the tempting windows of a toy store, stood a child of nine or ten years. A bright, pretty child, you would have said, if you had seen her in the same circumstances as those around her, but as it was her cheeks were pale and sunken and the blue eyes had a sad and weary look for one so young. Wistfully she gazed at the gaily dressed dolls, the miniature horses and carriages, the brightly painted sleds and the pretty baskets and boxes. As the crowd around her moved away, unconsciously she began talking to herself aloud. "Wouldn't Johnnie like that big horse and wagon! Then he could take mother's work to the store when I'm helping her. And if I could only have that little doll with the blue eyes and curly hair. But Santa Claus didn't come to us last night. I guess he couldn't find us, 'cose it is such a little place, up so many stairs." And with a tired sigh, poor little Susie turned from the tempting window, little heeding how her words had touched the heart of one who stood near, and who now followed her footsteps to "the little place up so many stairs," where the sorrows of a child's life lay hidden.

Leaving the broad highway, Susie Lane turned down a narrow street and from thence into an alley, where a row of tall red houses stood gaunt and grim—houses that, like most of their inhabitants, suggested memories of better days. Entering one of them by the back door, Mrs. Hyde followed Susie up the stairway. Flight after flight she went, until she reached the very top, lingering only sufficiently behind that the child might not perceive her presence. Knocking at the door, it was opened by Susie.

"Can I see your mother, my dear?" inquired Mrs. Hyde.

Mrs. Lane came to the door. "Did you want me, ma'am?"

"Yes, I heard you took in sewing and I want some done."

"Certainly, ma'am; will you please walk in and sit down."

Mrs. Hyde glanced round the room, which though small was neat and clean, but cold, while the floor was bare of any covering whatever. One bedstead stood in the corner, with only a mattress and old quilt on it. On a little table by the window lay the flannel shirting Mrs. Lane was at work upon. In a chair by the tiny stove sat a boy of five or six years, thin and pale. After a short conversation, during which she learned that the poor woman was a widow, Mrs. Hyde took her leave, promising to send some work. Hurrying home, she found her own children gathered round a blazing fire in the comfortable parlor. "Why, how long you have been, mamma," they cried in chorus.

"Yes, I went further than I intended. How would you like, children, to spend Christmas in a room without any carpet or fire or presents?"

"Oh, mamma, how dreadful! Who was it?"

"A little girl named Susie Lane and her brother Johnnie. I saw her looking into the stores so wistfully, and then, when she thought no one was near, I heard her talking to herself. She thought Santa Claus had not been able to find their home, 'cose it was such a little place, up so many stairs.' Now don't you want to send them some things to make Christmas for them?"

"Oh, yes! What can we do?" they exclaimed, and forthwith commenced their plans.

Two hours after, a boy knocked at Mrs. Lane's door. Her surprise was great as he brought in a big basket and told her friends had sent it as a Christmas present. "It can't be for us; there must be some mistake," said the widow.

"No mistake, ma'am; there's your name on it," and he departed, leaving them all mute with wonder at the unexpected visit. However, the children's curiosity did not allow them to keep quiet long, and they watched with impatience the opening of the basket. Parcel after parcel was taken out and then each was opened. It is impossible to describe the pleasure and delight of Susie and Johnnie, or even Mrs. Lane. If you want to know what it was like, just do the same as the Hydes did and then see if you don't get your own pleasure sweetened in doing it. There were groceries and bread and meat, a shawl for Mrs. Lane and a little red one for Susie; a warm coat and muffler for Johnnie and I don't know how many nice things besides. But Susie's joy was complete, indeed, when last of all came a doll just like the one she had seen in the store, and a horse and wagon for Johnnie.

"Oh, I guess Santa Claus remembered us after he got home, and asked somebody where we lived. That's why it came late. Don't you think so, mother?" said Susie, as she hugged her doll and her eyes danced with delight.

"I think God has been very good to us, dear; let us thank him at once for all these nice things." And the mother knelt, with her children round her, and gave thanks, while the merry boy, who had been bearer of the gifts and who had lingered to look through a window "to see the fun," as he expressed it, crept downstairs with a sobered face, and reaching the street, dashed off home at a boy's usual break-neck speed.

"Well, Charlie, what did they say?" "What did you see?" "Tell us all about it," cried three or four voices at once, as he entered the house.

"Wait a moment, then, till a fellow's got his breath." So Charlie told them all about his visit and was kept answering eager questions for I don't know how long. And they all declared when the day was ended they had enjoyed their own pleasure the more because they knew they had given happiness and a merry Christmas to others.

General Church News

RELIGIOUS WORK IN OUR NEW POSSESSIONS.

The missionary societies of the various religious bodies were not slow to seize the opportunity afforded them in the acquisition by the United States of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. A conference was early held in New York city of the representatives of these societies and a tacit agreement arrived at as to the ground to be occupied by the different bodies.

In Cuba.

Seven evangelical societies are now at work in Cuba. More than 2,000 persons are enrolled as members of the churches and over twice this number are in the Sunday schools. Over thirty ordained men are preaching the gospel in Spanish, with their helpers, and a number of ladies are teaching in the schools. In Havana, which has one-sixth of the population of Cuba, there are seven societies at work, Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, Disciples and Episcopal.

The eastern provinces of Puerto Principe and Santiago de Cuba are the mission field of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, while the western portion of the island is taken by Southern Baptists. The work was begun in Havana in 1883 by Baptists and by 1895 there were 1,000 in the church there. In January, 1899, the first missionary was sent to eastern Cuba, Rev. H. R. Moseley, D. D., who has worked in Mexico and was familiar with the Spanish language. In November, 1899, work was begun at Manzanillo. A native Mexican missionary was appointed pastor of the church in Santiago. At the present time there are now seven Baptist Sunday schools in that city, organized and maintained by the Christian Endeavor Society of the church. There is an average attendance of between 300 and 400 in these schools. The Baptist missionary force in eastern Cuba during the past year has consisted of the General Missionary, Rev. Dr. Moseley, Rev. Teofilo Barocio, pastor in Santiago; Rev. A. B. Carlisle, Guantanamo; Rev. M. Callejo, Manzanillo, and Rev. W. A. Nichololas, La Gloria; I. M. Cabrera, Puerto Principe, and the missionary teachers in Santiago, Miss Anna M. Barkley, Miss Effie Purdy and Miss Elma G. Gowen; 45 members have been added to the churches by baptism, making the total membership 168.

Beginning in Havana the Congregational work has been extended until now services are held in three of the six provinces. The Central church of Havana, Rev. G. L. Todd, has now a membership of 140, with constant accessions. There are over 130 children in the three Sunday schools, with one Christian Endeavor Sunday school. Preaching services are maintained at two stations in the suburbs, besides those at the chapel in the Prado. In San Antonio de los Banos a most successful work has been initiated. A Cuban pastor has been ordained and installed. Over sixty children are in the Sunday school, and the church has twenty-eight members. At Guanabacoa another station has been opened; no other evangelical church is at work here. Sixty-eight are in the Sunday school. Rev. A. De Barritt has been at work for a year in Cienfuegos, where three schools are at work, four preaching places, with a night class of fifty persons in the church. Sewing classes for the children, Latin and English for the young people and singing classes find work for all. At two other points occasional services have been held, at one, Guanajay, a mission is to be established in care of Rev. C. W. Frazer.

The Disciples have sent four missionaries to Havana: L. C. McPherson, Mrs. L. C. McPherson, Melvin Menges, Mrs. Melvin Menges. They are holding services in English and Spanish. At the former the morning congregations average twenty-five and the evening forty, the two being entirely different audiences. The Sunday school has an attendance of twenty-five to forty-five. Fifteen persons have been baptized. The Spanish work will receive more attention, as the language is more fully acquired. A day school has also been opened and taught by Mr. Menges, which has an average attendance of eleven, although twenty-nine have been enrolled.

At Jaruco, in eastern Havana, the Friends are at work. The Episcopalians have a church in Havana and a mission at Matanzas. The Methodist church South carries on work in Cuba, but at present we have no details regarding it.

The Presbyterians have sent Rev. J. Milton Greene, D. D., as superintendent of their missionary work in Havana. Thirty Cuban Christians have just been organized into the First Presbyterian church of Havana. They have been gathered by two years of faithful pioneer work of a Spanish missionary, Rev. Pedro Rioseco. Three other preaching places are now being maintained in the city, each with Sabbath school and two other services weekly. Associated with Dr. Greene will be Mr. Rioseco and Mr. Mazzorana, serving as co-pastors. The latter has newly come to the work and will be supported in it by the Brick church of Rochester, N. Y. There are two lady teachers in Havana also. At Puerto Principe Rev. A. W. Stevenson is missionary pastor, with a native helper.

An Evangelical Union has been organized in Cuba, which will foster in-terdenominational comity and co-operation.

In our next issue we shall report the work in Porto Rico and the Philippines.

CONFERENCE ON MISSIONARY SOCIETY METHODS.

Indications point to coming changes in the management of the missionary societies of some, if not all, of the denominations. The conference just held by the Baptists in New York is of interest as showing the lines along which such changes may lie.

On the subject of "Co-operation in the Collection of Missionary Offerings," Rev. Dr. C. A. Cook of Bloomfield, N. J., said that there were too many little circles and societies through which church members give in little groups to home and foreign missions.

MISCHIEF MAKER.

A Surprise in Brooklyn.

An adult's food that can save a baby proves itself to be nourishing and easily digested and good for big and little folks. A Brooklyn man says: "When baby was about eleven months old he began to grow thin and pale. This was, at first, attributed to the heat and the fact that his teeth were coming, but, in reality, the poor little thing was starving, his mother's milk not being sufficient nourishment.

"One day after he had cried bitterly for an hour. I suggested that my wife try him on Grape-Nuts. She soaked two teaspoonfuls in a saucer with a little sugar and warm milk. This baby ate so ravenously that she fixed a second which he likewise finished. It was not many days before he forgot all about being nursed, and has since lived almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. Today the boy is strong and robust, and as cute a mischief-maker as a thirteen months old baby is expected to be.

"We have put before him other foods, but he will have none of them, evidently preferring to stick to that which did him so much good in his time of need—his old friend Grape-Nuts.

"Use this letter any way you wish, for my wife and I can never praise Grape-Nuts enough after the brightness it has brought to our household. These statements can be verified by anyone who wishes to make a visit to our home." F. F. McElroy, 256 So. 3rd St. Brooklyn, N. Y.

Grape-Nuts is not made for a baby food, but experience with thousands of babies shows it to be among the best, if not entirely the best in use. Being a scientific preparation of Nature's grains, it is equally effective as a body and brain builder for grown-ups.

We need co-operation at the base of supplies, so that the church will act as a unit, and as a whole will study missions, work for missions and give to missions. There may be co-operation in the collecting of funds without consolidation of the societies.

The work of the district secretary was discussed. It was asked, Is he to be a collector or an educator? Is it first and principally his business to get a good collection for the society he represents, or is it primarily and chiefly his mission to create interest, inculcate principles, impart information about the work of the society he represents and to secure the active sympathy and co-operation of the pastors and the churches in the wider extension of the kingdom? The problem of co-operation hinges largely on which view we take. If the former, then co-operation will be difficult; if the latter, it becomes simple and feasible. Shall we ever succeed in getting men to put their lives into the work while we are forever appealing to them to only put their money into it? Once they give their lives they will give their money.

It was suggested by Dr. Cook that the Home Mission Society, the Missionary Union and the Publication Society, and perhaps the women's societies, unite in establishing joint agencies or bureaus of missions, these to awaken and foster interest in all the churches in the work of all the societies represented, and to work through the pastors in securing collections. This plan has been tried and found successful in Texas.

An interesting discussion followed Dr. Cook's paper. Dr. Walker of Philadelphia thought that such limitation by agencies would decrease the contributions. Doubt was expressed whether any one man was big enough to take in three or more societies and present impartially the interests of each. Dr. Jutten thought such a plan would do service to the denomination if it should have clearly defined the difference between co-operation and co-ordination. Dr. Morehouse considered it practicable for the societies to have a joint committee on Christian stewardship and on literature and conference, but anything further must depend on the competency of the engineer to plan for the whole country. Others thought the scheme practicable.

Rev. W. C. Bitting, D. D., read a paper upon the question, "What Changes, if Any, Are Desirable and Feasible in Our Denominational Missionary Organizations and Methods?" Five suggestions were made: (1) Terminate existing vested rights of membership only with death of those who have them. (2) Strike out present articles in the constitutions of the three societies defining membership. (3) Insert in the place of that stricken out the same provision for all, an article giving each Baptist district association the right to elect one person, and one for each 2,000 communicants in its churches, as members of the three societies. Sixteen reasons for this were given. (4) An advisory board of three from each society. (5) The women to be on the same terms as men. Distinctions of sex to be abolished. Free discussion followed this paper also. The boards in joint session gave it consideration. They passed resolutions requesting that these topics be given a place in the program of the anniversary meeting.

CONGREGATIONAL CONVENTION IN GEORGIA.

The state convention representing the ninety-six churches and 4,714 members, met at Macon, November 14-17. The color question in Georgia touching the union of the white and colored churches in one state body seems to be reaching an answer for there were three white delegates present this year. Last year there was but one. Rev. H. H. Proctor of Atlanta was moderator.

The topics and discussions were eminently practical. Three sermons were preached on progressive Christian living. The work of the benevolent societies was ably presented. A permanent committee on church extension was created and a little fund for this work was laid aside by the women, for requests had come from many towns for Congregational churches. Christian education and the need of more effective efforts for youthful criminals were the subjects of addresses.

The women's missionary meeting was a live affair. Special interest is to be taken this year in work for the Porto Ricans. Addresses from representatives of other denominations told what they were doing for missions. Sunday afternoon was devoted to a mass meeting of Endeavorers. At the closing session Sunday night enthusiastic addresses were made on temperance. There was not one minister in the convention addicted to the use of whiskey or tobacco.

BAPTIST CONVENTION IN NORTHERN AND CENTRAL CALIFORNIA.

This annual gathering was in Chico, and a large number of churches was represented. The opening session was a departure from the usual custom. It was a review of Bible lessons by the boys and girls which was well done. Devotional meetings were held each morning, and were well attended. Addresses and reports of committees occupied the days. The Women's Home Mission Society of California occupied an hour. It has voted to affiliate with the Chicago society and hereafter the funds raised by it will pass through the Chicago treasury.

Foreign missions, chapel car work, colporterage and Sunday school work had each its representation. Much interest was aroused in a tribe of Indians who for many years have been under the training of Mrs. John Bidwell. There are about seventy in the tribe and she conducts services for them every Sunday. A Sunday school rally was held Sunday afternoon and a union young people's service at 6:30. About 1,000 people gathered in the evening to hear a sermon by Rev. J. George Gibson. The convention was spiritual and educational in its tone. Every evening except Sunday evening a meeting was held on the street preceding the evening session. From three to four hundred people, mostly men, heard the gospel sung and preached that would possibly not have been otherwise reached.

Chicago and Vicinity.

The Fellowship Congregational church, Dr. D. De Long, pastor, is growing steadily, although removals have depleted its force greatly. Lots have been obtained for a church edifice, a portion of which has been constructed. There are over 100 members now in the church and there is a large Sunday school. The pastor was recently presented with gifts testifying the appreciation of his people.

Green Street Congregational church under the pastoral care of Rev. J. D.

SHOOTS AGAIN

Although Coffee Took His Eyesight for Awhile.

A Colorado camp cook had to quit his job because he could not make coffee without drinking it himself and it was killing him. He says he used to take a cup of coffee before he got his breakfast for the men, for he felt the need of keeping up his strength and his stomach troubled him so much.

"Finally," he says, "I got so bad I was taken to the hospital. The doctor told me it was a clear case of coffee poison and if I did not quit I would never get well. I had to quit in the hospital and gradually got a little better, then I took to drinking Postum Food Coffee and took it out with me to a job in the woods.

"I have been using Postum steadily for about eighteen months and have entirely recovered from dyspepsia, and all my old aches and ills. My eyes are so well now that I can see the gun sights as good as anybody, but two years ago I never could hunt because of my eyes. I know it is the quitting of coffee and using Postum that has benefited me. Nobody could have dyspepsia any worse than I had. All my neighbors thought I was going to die, but I am all right now. I have to send thirty-five miles to the city of Trinidad for my Postum but it is worth while." Wm. Green, Burwing, Colorado.

McCord, has morning and evening congregations that fill the house. Between thirty and forty have joined the church during the year, the majority on confession of faith.

The Chicago Baptist Social Union held its last meeting of the year December 3. The principal speaker was Dr. George C. Lorimer. His subject was "The Ethical Message of Jesus." Dr. Henson also spoke, as this was the last meeting at which he would be present as a Chicago pastor. The annual report of the secretary showed a membership of 199, total receipts of $1,867.16, and an average attendance on the banquets of 300. Officers were elected for next year.

The Highland Park Baptist church has called to its pastorate Rev. Edwin Seldon of Emporia, Kas., who will enter on his new charge January 1. He is president of the Kansas Young People's State Union.

Rev. Donald K. Campbell, who for two years has been in the South Chicago Presbyterian church, will accept a unanimous call to the Presbyterian church at Ottawa, Ill.

The Chicago Congregational Club held its annual forefathers' observances December 16. An address on "An Inherited Responsibility" was delivered by Bishop Charles Edward Cheney, rector of Christ Reformed Episcopal church. Rev. Frank Crane, D. D., of People's church, also delivered an address.

The Englewood Christian church, although the cold was so intense on Sunday, December 15, as to keep many worshipers at home, yet made the good record of raising $8,500 for a new church building.

During the five years' pastorate of Rev. H. Francis Perry at the Englewood Baptist church 591 members have been received, 326 of them by baptism, and 3,689 pastoral calls were made. In the past three years 9,656 letters and communications were sent out from the study.

Rev. George B. Safford, Ph. D., has announced his acceptance of the call of the Fifty-second Avenue Presbyterian church, and was installed December 15.

The South Side Tabernacle (Presbyterian), will hereafter be known as the South Park church.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Theological Faculties' Union of Chicago and vicinity was held December 13. Rev. Dr. Eri B. Hulbert, the president, was in the chair. Memorial addresses were delivered on Dr. G. W. Northrup of the divinity school of the University of Chicago and President F. W. Fisk of the Chicago Theological Seminary. The election of officers resulted in the choice of Dr. G. H. Gerberding as president and Ira M. Price as secretary and treasurer. The discussion of the evening was on the subject of "The Decrease in the Number of Students for the Ministry in Our Institutions of Learning," and the pos-

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Do You Have Rheumatism? Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow: Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney and bladder remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince anyone—and you may have a sample bottle free, by mail.

Backache and Urinary Trouble.

Among the many famous investigated cures of Swamp-Root the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers, speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy.

Dr. KILMER & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:—When I wrote you last March for a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, my wife was a great sufferer from backache, rheumatism and urinary trouble. After trying the sample bottle, she bought a large bottle here at the drug store. That did her so much good she bought more. The effect of Swamp-Root was wonderful and almost immediate. She has felt no return of the old trouble since.

Oct. 1901.

F. THOMAS,

427 Best St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night; inability to hold your urine, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, uric acid, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart-beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, wornout feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with wonderful success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

To Prove What SWAMP-ROOT, the Great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy, Will do for YOU, Every Reader of The Christian Century May Have a Sample Bottle Absolutely Free by Mail.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

COPYRIGHT 1898.
DR. KILMER & CO.

sible ways of increasing the number. President C. J. Little of Garrett Biblical Institute, Professor A. C. Zenos of McCormick Seminary and Dr. C. E. Hewitt of the University of Chicago discussed the subject.

Baptist.

A conference in the interest of world-wide evangelization was held December 4-6 at the Park Avenue church, Rochester, N. Y. Eminent men delivered addresses in a spirit of hopefulness and aggressiveness. "Helps and Hindrances to the World Conquest of the Kingdom" were discussed in a number of ten-minute speeches. Dr. O. P. Gifford, among these speakers, mentioned two hindrances: (1) Immigration and the growth of cities distract from foreign work; (2) Men in the ministry lack conviction as to the essential teachings of the faith. The warfare is defensive, not offensive. "The Evangelization of the Foreigners Among Us" was treated by President Merrill, who said we were burdened with too many organizations. "Co-ordination of national societies is not so important as that 90 per cent of our lesser, local societies should die." Also, there must be more positive evangelism. Thursday evening Drs. Gifford and Buttrick delivered addresses, respectively, on "The Press and Its Proper Functions" and "The Education of the Negro." President Strong delivered on Friday an address on "World Missions." Dr. Applegarth of Cambridge, Mass., and Dr. Mabie also gave addresses. The Publication Society was discussed by Drs. Seymour and Rowland. The conference closed with a banquet, given by the Rochester Social Union.

During the four years of Dr. Pickard's pastorate at the First church, Cleveland, 380 have been received into membership, about 200 of that number by baptism. The Sunday school during this time, has grown from 334 to 665, with increasing attendance in all departments. The days of small prayer-meeting attendance are past, the chapel often being filled on a Friday night.

Sixty-three persons have been added to the church at Norfolk, Neb., during the first year of Rev. Herbert E. Ryder's pastorate; thirty-four of these were by baptism.

Over 600 persons have joined the Ninth Street church, Cincinnati, during the six years' pastorate of Dr. Warren G. Partridge, D. D., most of them by baptism. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan began a series of meetings in this church December 1, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, of which Dr. Partridge is president. The Ninth Street church gave in free-will offerings over $1,200 on Thanksgiving Day for its six missions and other departments of work.

The young men's Bible class of the

IT GROWS UPON THEM.

The Praise Hymnal

IT settles the music question satisfactorily as far as the book question is concerned. It is the most economical investment as to music books, for it settles that question for a long term of years, and you have, during the time, the best that is to be had.

DEAR BROTHER FILLMORE:—THE PRAISE HYMNAL is the best church music book I have ever seen. We have been using it at Richmond Street, Cincinnati, ever since it came out. Its strength and excellency have grown upon us from the first. To-day we appreciate it more than ever. We have tested, I presume, one-half of its contents, and I believe the other half must be just as good.

Our church is capable of testing the book pretty thoroughly. We have always had a singing church, and at one time had for two years a highly cultured choir-master with a volunteer choir of some thirty voices. This chorister had served many different churches and had used as many different hymnals. He frequently remarked that THE PRAISE HYMNAL was by far the best he had ever seen. He was enthusiastic over it, and took great delight in teaching our choir and congregation its beautiful songs.

The book has been a great blessing to our church. Our Lord's Day services have been dignified by its grand hymns, while our prayer meetings and evangelistic services have been stirred deeply by its effective gospel songs. Its combination of the older classic hymns and modern gospel songs makes it a great book. With us it is the ideal church music book.

I wish also to make especial mention of the Responsive Scripture Readings. We have used these constantly in our Lord's Day services, and frequently at other services. Not only are they a source of instruction, but a great help to devotion. At times our services have been very impressive when the whole congregation have read together as one voice the sublime utterances of Holy Scripture as found in these selections.

If by anything I could say I could induce our churches generally to get THE PRAISE HYMNAL, and use it as it is capable of being used, I would gladly say it. With THE PRAISE HYMNAL on the market there is certainly no excuse for churches being without first-class music.

JUSTIN N. GREEN.

Cincinnati, November 6, 1901.

WE advise our customers to take the cloth with leather back binding, not because it is to our profit, but because it is best for them. The price is $75 per hundred copies. We send samples on approval where persons wish to examine the book.

FILLMORE BROS., 119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O. 40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

THE CHOIR, our monthly anthem journal, is meeting with great success. We are glad to send samples to choir leaders. It wins every time. (7)

Washington Street church, Lynn, Mass., held an open session on Nov. 17, when 800 were present. Three young men were recently baptized from this class, making eighty-six who have united with the church during the past three years from this class.

Congregational.

The new church at Nome, Alaska, was rendered necessary by the growth of the congregation. The edifice was built in twenty-one days. The miners and others gave volunteer labor, for they appreciated what the church had done for them in giving them a reading room and library. With coal at $50 a ton a warm room to sit in counts for something. After a public offering there was still a deficit of $200. An ex-saloonkeeper and a Roman Catholic offered to contribute the amount, which was gladly accepted. The building seats 500. The former one is now used as library and reading room. It contains over 1,500 books and periodicals, and is supported by the church at a cost of $75 per month. The hospital is now self-supporting and is managed by a board of business men.

The First church of Detroit, Mich., Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, pastor, maintains three branches, one in a poor neighborhood, one among the Poles, of whom there are 40,000 in the city, and one in the northern outskirts of Detroit, where a new chapel has just been finished at a cost of $4,700. The associate pastor, Rev. John W. Sutherland, D. D., has taken charge of this enterprise. Dr. Boynton received 102 new members last year.

The church at La Salle, Ill., has been without a pastor for many months. Indebtedness and general discouragement prevailed. The Illinois Home Missionary Society sent its field secretary, Rev. John H. Wilson, there, the debt of $1,200 was provided for, with a surplus, and a week of daily meetings followed, resulting in the receiving of forty-nine persons into the church. A "Children-of-Promise" band was gathered, numbering eighty.

The Christian Endeavor Society of South Hadley Falls, Mass., while retaining the name, Y. P. S. C. E., and the essential spirit of its pledge, has shortened and broadened the constitution, thus providing for closer connection with local church work, freedom in worship, simpler organization and more practical lines of work. A six months' trial under the new regime has revived a decadent society.

A unique "service of recognition of the teachers and officers of the Sunday schools of First church" Hartford, Conn., recently took the place of the usual midweek meeting. An address by the pastor, a prayer of consecration by the assistant pastor, who is also superintendent of the mother school, and other exercises gave dignity to a service every way admirable.

Springfield, Ohio, has chosen a Sunday school superintendent as its mayor and he has appointed another Sunday school superintendent as head of the police force and fire board. The result was the closing of the saloons on Sunday and at certain hours on week nights. Meanwhile the Ministers' Association had arranged for a series of evangelistic meetings. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman conducted them, preaching clear, convincing sermons that were listened to by many thousands of people. At the same time large meetings were held at the Lagonda Avenue, in another part of the city. Noon meetings at the shops were attended by thousands of appreciative working men. The entire community showed great interest, and at least 400 signed cards. The churches have been greatly stirred and the spirit of Christian fellowship is everywhere manifest.

The Disciples.

We are sending the general edition of the Christian Century to all of our subscribers this week.

The Church of Christ at Buffalo, Kansas, was dedicated under pleasant auspices, all the money necessary to defray the cost of erection being pledged. Members of the choir of the Friends' meeting and the Methodist Episcopal church took part in the song services.

Rev. W. J. Russell has resigned at Rushville, Ind., to accept a call to the East End church, Pittsburg, Pa.

Rev. J. A. Campell reports as the result of one year's work at Graham, Va., on half-time, 302 additions to the church and $1,752.61 raised for various purposes.

The Fifth Avenue church, Grand Rapids, Mich., was dedicated, Sunday, December 8, C. B. Newnan of Detroit, speaking both morning and evening.

M. M. Davis of Dallas, Texas, speaks of Dr. H. L. Willett's lectures at Waco, Texas, on "New Testament Criticism" and "New Testament Quotations from the Old Testament" as being most helpful and valuable.

At Wichita, Kansas, J. V. Coombs had sixty-seven additions on one Sunday and twenty-four on the next.

One hundred have been added to Central church, Lexington, Ky., within a few weeks.

There are now 729 Christian churches in Indiana.

Rev. C. W. Henry has been appointed superintendent of public instruction for Clay County, Nebraska.

The calls for evangelistic work in the state of Nebraska exceed the capacity of the men in the field. Further help is needed in this line.

Professor C. E. Millard has been very successful in a revival meeting at Moline, Ill.

Bible institutes, reports Rev. W. H. Waggoner, have been better attended and better supported the past year than ever before. He has lectured thirty-four weeks this year on home and foreign missions, in connection with institutes.

The Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, Ohio, will build a new edifice at a cost of $75,000.

Methodist.

Thirty thousand dollars of the amount needed to pay the debt on the $80,000 Methodist church at Pasadena, Cal., was raised at the morning service Sunday, December 8. Bishop Cranston officiated at the dedication.

Wm. Sunday, the well-known evangelist, is assisting Dr. De Loss M. Tompkins in a very successful revival in the M. E. church of Belvidere, Ill.

A successful two-weeks' meeting at Hillsdale, Central Illinois conference, closed Nov. 24 with about thirty conversions. Rev. A. Sturgeon, evangelist, assisted the pastor, J. P. McCormick. The church was greatly quickened.

Special meetings of three weeks' duration have just closed at Mt. Ayr, Ia., Rev. P. V. D. Vedder, pastor, resulting in twenty-eight conversions. Twenty-five united with the church and others will follow. The pastor was assisted by Evangelist D. W. McGregor of Omaha, Neb.

Rev. Frank O. Fraley of Flora, Ind., is having a revival in his church. So far about thirty have professed conversion and twenty-two have united with the church.

Fifty-seven in the First church, Wamego, Kas., have announced their decision to follow Christ. Most of the converts are from the Sunday school. Twelve have united with the church and others will follow. The pastor, Rev. J. B. Bollman, was his own evangelist.

Presbyterian.

Special meetings on evangelistic work have been held in St. Louis, the afternoon being given specially to prayer and the evening to addresses.

A course of free Saturday night concerts is being given at the Markham Memorial church, St. Louis. The best musical talent in the city have volunteered their services, and large audiences of workingmen and their families are appreciating the good music. It is proposed to continue the concerts throughout the winter. Seventy-two girls and young women are receiving weekly lessons in cooking and household economics, under the direction of a trained teacher.

Several of the Detroit churches have held series of special meetings and about a dozen outside the city are now holding special services. The evangelistic spirit is spreading. At

I Will Cure You of Rheumatism

NO PAY UNTIL YOU KNOW IT.

After 2,000 experiments, I have learned how to cure Rheumatism. Not to turn bony joints into flesh again; that is impossible. But I can cure the disease always, at any stage, and forever.

I ask for no money. Simply write me a postal and I will send you an order on your nearest druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure, for every druggist keeps it. Use it for a month, and if it does what I claim, pay your druggist $5.50 for it. If it doesn't, I will pay him myself.

I have no samples. Any medicine that can affect rheumatism with but a few doses must be drugged to the verge of danger. I use no such drugs. It is folly to take them. You must get the disease out of the blood.

My remedy does that, even in the most difficult, obstinate cases. No matter how impossible this seems to you, I know it and I take this risk. I have cured tens of thousands of cases in this way, and my records show that 39 out of 40 who get those six bottles pay, and gladly. I have learned that people in general are honest with a physician who cures them. That is all I ask. If I fail I don't expect a penny from you.

Simply write me a postal card or letter. Let me send you an order for the medicine; also a book. Take it for a month, for it won't harm you anyway. If it cures, pay $5.50. I leave that entirely to you. Address Dr. Shoop, Box 555, Racine, Wis.

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

The Biblical World

80 pages a month; size, 9 $\frac{3}{4}$  x 9 $\frac{1}{2}$  in.

SPECIAL TRIAL RATE: The Biblical World is the only popular magazine devoted exclusively to Bible study. The journal does not stand for any theory of interpretation or school of criticism or denomination, but for a definite endeavor to promote the knowledge of the Word of God as interpreted in the best light of today. The subscription rate is $2.00 a year; single copies, 20 cents; but new Readers May Test Its Merits for Three Months for 25 cents. Address

Address THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

EVERY CHURCH SHOULD USE OUR
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION OUTFITS

Simplest and Best. Send for Trial Outfit, giving Number of Communicants. Address: Box 2332, THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., LIMA, OHIO the last communion service twelve of the city churches received 119 new members, sixty-eight on confessions.

It is hoped shortly to organize an Italian Presbyterian church in Detroit. There are now some forty converts in the mission.

The First church, Minneapolis, Rev. J. B. Helwig, D. D. pastor, is rejoicing in freedom from debt, $16,347 having been raised since January 1, 1900. Mrs. Vanderburg, whose liberality largely helped towards this release, has presented a very desirable residence to the church for a manse.

At Menominee, Mich., Rev. A. C. V. Skinner received twenty-four new members into the church; in two cases entire families united.

Thirty-one members have been added to the Hope church of Joliet since the coming of the new pastor, Rev. D. T. Robertson, Ph. D., in the latter part of last October. Of these, twenty-seven were welcomed at the December communion.

General.

Plymouth Congregational church, Indianapolis, united with the Hebrew Temple congregation in Thanksgiving services, Rabbi Messing and Rev. H. C. Meserve participating.

Four churches in Indianapolis held union services for two weeks in People's church. They were well attended and nearly 100 cards were received from those desirous of religious help and guidance.

In Franklin county, Maine, there are two Congregational churches and two Free Baptist churches. Each couple had one minister between them, involving a long ride for the pastor between morning and afternoon services. An interesting experiment in church union is now being made. One Congregational church and its near Free Baptist neighbor are to be under the pastoral care of the Congregational minister, and the other two are to be in charge of the Free Baptist pastor. This arrangement gives an entire township with three little church organizations to the pastoral care of one minister.

The St. Louis Young Men's Christian association received 355 new members at the Central branch during the past month, this being the largest number received during any month in its history.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has just concluded an evangelistic campaign in Dallas, Texas, in which twenty churches united. Among the meetings held were four for men only. Fully 12,000 men were present at these four meetings. More than 1,000 of these arose for prayers, and 400 of them accepted and confessed Jesus as Saviour and Lord.

Foreign Missionary Items.

The spirit of co-operation is increasing on the mission fields. The Church Missionary Training School for Teachers at Krishnagar, India, and the Ahmednagar Theological Seminary of the American Board's Marathi Mission have recently let down sectarian barriers, both offering to receive students from other missions, who will be taught without tuition fees being charged. More than that, representatives of other evangelical missions in western India have been invited to send representatives to the board of trustees of the theological seminary.

From Taiku, Korea's newest station, Mr. and Mrs. Adams write: "Owing to our limited number, also reduced by sickness, and the building operations, not much itineration has been done. Five new groups have developed during the year. They are widely scattered. These groups have all suffered for lack of supervision and instruction, but in all Sunday is fairly observed; they gather for worship, and have a regular system of collection. An afternoon class for girls has been started, with some encouraging results. Fourteen girls under fifteen years of age attend regu-

OUR CHRISTMAS BOX.

Man of Glengarry.

We will send "The Man of Glengarry" (price $1.50) to any reader of The Christian Century who will send us one new subscription to The Christian Century and two dollars.

Book Offer.

"A Lilly of France" (price $1.25 prepaid), "Our Plea for Union" (75c prepaid), The Christian Century, one year $1.50, all three sent to any address in the United States for two dollars.

Special Bible Offer.

Large parallel Bibles (regular price $2.50) and The Christian Century (one year $1.50), both given to a new subscriber for $2.00. We will send one of these Bibles to any old subscriber who will renew and send us one new subscription to The Christian Century as long as the stock lasts.

Magazine Offer.

A year's subscription to any one of the one-dollar magazines, such as "Success," "The Ladies' Home Journal," "Cosmopolitan," and a handsome leather-bound New Testament ($1.50) for a club of five subscribers to The Christian Century and six dollars in cash.

Great Bible Offer.

To the readers of The Christian Century and their friends we offer a limited number of Bibles and Testaments at one-half price. Fine bold-faced type teachers' Bibles at sixty per cent discount. We have only a few of these Bibles in stock. First come, first served. Do not wait to inquire. Send us from one to five dollars and we shall send you from one to five Bibles. If you are not satisfied, you may keep the Bibles as a Christmas gift and we shall refund your money. We have some flexible back Testaments and a few other Testaments worth fifty cents and one dollar each. Teachers may have these fine Testaments at three dollars a dozen. Write to-day or you will be too late.

LYON & HEALY ORGANS

The Latest Style. Walnut, Mahogany or Ebony finish.

are the great favorites today. Unapproached for Sweetness and Purity of Tone. New styles of

PIANO CASE ORGANS

which give the most enthusiastic satisfaction.

All our organs have all the latest and most modern improvements. The cases are models of neatness and beauty and are made of finely finished solid Oak, Black

PRICES ALWAYS THE LOWEST.

We make the terms of payment so easy that anybody can buy one. Ask your dealer for the Lyon & Healy Organs. If he does not keep them write direct to us. Beautiful Catalogue FREE.

Our Piano Case Organ.

Write today. 70 Adams St., LYON & HEALY, CHICAGO, ILL.

larly, learning to read, write and sing. They study the lessons at home and show much eagerness to learn. From the first of January, a Bible class was held for the country Christians, continuing through ten days. A graded course of study was followed out, including studies in the life of Christ, a course through the Gospel of Luke, topical studies, and Old Testament stories. In all there was an attendance upon this class of about fifteen, though not this number all at one time. A number of men came in whom we had not met before and at the close of the class eleven catechumens were received. The women attend the Sunday services quite well, and seem prone to stay when they are over, so that after-meetings are held as we have opportunity, and the ladies answer their many questions in regard to the doctrine taught. Sometimes they come as they did when Christ was here upon earth, with the plea that they are sick, and asking what they must do to believe and be healed. One woman not long since wanted to be taught how to pray, and, with hands folded and throwing herself prostrate, repeated over and over, 'I believe God. I believe Jesus.'

The female department of Euphrates College at Harpoot, Turkey, closed its year's work with the joyful occasion of the dedication of the new college buildings. In the college and lower schools last year 453 girls were registered, with representatives from 75 cities and villages; 64 girls and teachers were in the boarding department. Much inconvenience was experienced from the crowded quarters, but the coming year the work will be easier with the light, airy, commodious college. During the winter there was a deepening of the spiritual life of the girls. Many foined themselves into bands to work and pray for the salvation of others. As early as June last, applications begun to come in for admission to the college, and girls are expected from distant cities. Some of the most hopeful and spiritual of the orphans are to be admitted to the boarding department in order that they may have every opportunity for training to prepare them to become teachers. Miss Platt expects to open her kindergarten, in connection with which she plans to have a training class.

From the annual report by Mr. Stover of work at the Bailundu station in the West African Mission: 'About the middle of March a school was organized at the outstation of Ulika, with a native teacher in charge. A young man residing in the

For a Nerve Tonic
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
Dr. H. M. Harlow, Augusta, Me., says: "One of the best remedies in all cases in which the system requires an acid and a nerve tonic."

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake

It is conceded that Royal Baking Powder is purest and strongest of all baking powders, absolutely free from alum, ammonia and every adulterant. "Royal" makes the best and most wholesome food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

village, who had made profession of Christianity during the week of prayer, had been collecting the children and others and giving them such instruction as he could, which was very little, as he himself could barely read the Gospel of John. It seemed best, therefore, to give those who wished to learn a better opportunity to do so. The house built by this young man after the fashion of those built on the mission premises served admirably as a school house. And instead of the children of that one village, there now attend this school all the young people of the district, some of them going a mile or more and starting at sunrise. There are over eighty names enrolled. The teachers who go out to these village schools receive the same wages as when at work on the station, four yards of cloth a week. There has been a large increase in the number attending these religious services and in the area represented. People come from villages seven and eight miles distant and have been quite regular and prompt, notwithstanding the services begin at the unfashionable hour of 9:30. Only twice has the attendance been less than 300 and in both cases there was heavy rain. There is also a marked change in the attitude of the congregation. All who are old enough to understand have come to realize that they are there to listen to what is said. Sleeping, playing and running out are discounted by all. Even the women pay good attention and can give, when questioned, a fair account of the sermon for the day."

A DOSE OF THE RIGHT MEDICINE

at the right time has prevented many a serious ailment, as well as years of suffering. By keeping a bottle of the old herb remedy, Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, on hand, you are prepared for most emergencies. It is prompt in action, certain in results, and permanent in effect. Druggists cannot supply it. It is sold to the people direct through special agents by the proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 So. Hoyne avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD.

Will sell tickets December 24th, 25th, 31st, 1901, and January 1st, 1902, at rate of a fare and a third for the round trip to any point located in Central Passenger Association territory, account Christmas and New Year holidays. Return limit including January 2d, 1902. Through service to New York City, Boston, and other eastern points. Chicago Passenger Station. Van Buren street and Pacific avenue. See Elevated Loop. For further information address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago.

BOOKS

The Apostles of the Southeast. By Frank T. Bullen. D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price $1.50.

The Apostles of the Southeast are the mission workers in Rotherhithe, in the Southeast of London. Their work among the flotsam and jetsam of the city life is graphically described. Mr. Bullen has the command of a wonderfully clear and picturesque style. His sea stories are charming, and have placed him among the foremost writers of the day. The salt sea breezes blow through them, and the pictures he draws of sea life, especially of the man before the mast, abide in the memory. He has done not a little to let in the light upon the hard lot of the British sailor and to set in motion influences that have led to its amelioration. In this book he relates his experiences in one of the London slums. He shows the lights and shadows in the lives of the poor. His pictures, which are drawn from real life, are replete with human interest, and while they reveal the squalor and vice of city slums, they show the working of forces which are making for social betterment and thus awaken hope regarding the future. The book is as wholesome as it is stimulating and interesting.

Time and Chance: A Romance and a History; being the Story of the Life of a Man. By Elbert Hubbard. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

This is more than the story of the life of a man. It is the history of a movement which was perhaps the greatest moral movement that ever convulsed a nation. Out of this movement heroes were born. And chief among them was the hero of this tale, John Brown of Harper's Ferry. The anti-slavery movement is here traced from its inception to the quixotic attempt of John Brown to free the slaves, which led to his death. The story shifts with the migrations of its chief character from Connecticut to the Western Reserve of Ohio, and from there to the new territory of Kansas, and it depicts with a graphic hand the manners of these early pioneer days. The reader has the conviction pressed upon him that the author must surely be writing from a personal knowledge of many of the things which he relates. The working of the underground railroad and the conflict of political parties in Kansas are particularly well described. And while something of the glamor of romance may have been thrown around the character of John Brown, yet the picture of him which has been drawn is substantially that which is coming to be accepted as the true representation of the man. An enthusiast, a dreamer? Yes, but also a pure, lofty-minded man with a deep religious motive, and with a singleness

A LILY OF FRANCE

One of the best selling Holiday books. A story of the romance of William, Prince of Orange, and Charlotte of Bourbon by Caroline Atwater Mason, author of a Minister of the World, a Wind Flower, the Quiet King, &c.

10,000 COPIES
Sold before Publication

SECOND 10,000
Now on Sale

The cover design is in blue and white, four illustrations, 456 pages, a beautiful and acceptable gift book. Price $1.10 net, postpaid $1.25.

Griffith and Rowland Press
PHILADELPHIA

For sale by all Booksellers and at 177 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

of purpose that went straight to its end, uncaring for consequences. Scattered over the pages of the book are sallies of wit and bits of home-spun philosophy such as we might expect to find dropping from the pen of the editor of the Philistine.

Life Everlasting. By John Fiske. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. Price, $1 net.

This little volume of eighty-seven pages of large type is not to be estimated by its size. It is multum in parvo. Those who have read Professor Fiske's preceding volumes on "The Idea of God," "The Destiny of Man" and "Through Nature to God," will be prepared to welcome this volume as the attempt of a philosophic evolutionist to put the cope-stone upon his argument in behalf of the unseen, the supernatural and the eternal. He sets out to consider "the supreme achievement of man—his belief in his own immortality—in the light of our modern studies of evolution," and concludes his argument by affirming that "a patient study of evolution is likely soon to supply the basis for a natural theology more comprehensive, more profound, and more hopeful than could formerly have been imagined. The nineteenth century has borne the brunt, the twentieth will reap the fruition." We lay down this little treatise with a profound admiration for its restrained statement, its lucid style and its spiritual aspiration after a ground of hope in the immortal life outside of the domain of scientific demonstration. There is a touch of pathos in the thought that this was the final message of a master mind to

THE VEST Pocket Commentary

On the International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS
FOR 1902.

128 pages 2 1/2 x 3 1/2

A POCKET COMPANION
For Sunday School
Teachers and Scholars

IT CONTAINS THE
Lessons for the Entire Year

in full (references showing the Revised Version) together with an unusual amount of

STUDY HELPS
such as Comments, Daily Readings, Outline study and Seed Thoughts.

Original, Fresh, Brainy.

International S. S. Evangel says—"This little book gives on each lesson what would require many hours to acquire, and all better than but very few men in America could prepare... It is at once scholarly, spiritual and practical, and in convenience and serviceability EXCELS OTHER HELPS."

Association Men—"Commends itself at a glance... Particularly appropriate for the busy business man."

The Advance—"Condensation as a fine art is exhibited in this book. Remarkably suggestive and helpful."

Sunday School Times—"Vest Pocket Commentary is a unique and reasonably successful attempt to enable busy people to prepare their Sunday School lessons in their 'one spare moment'.... The 'Reflections' are excellent."

The Baptist Union—"The pith and marrow of the topics are given, the things that must be said to ensure a first grasp of the lesson. It will be of ready value to those who would gain a bird's-eye view of the theme at a glance."

"Up-to-Date," thoroughly Spiritual and Christian.

A SPLENDID PRESENT TO ANY ONE.

Bound in Red Morocco, gold edges	$0.25
Per dozen	2.50
Interleaved Edition, two blank pages to each lesson for pencil notes, Red Morocco, gold edges, etc.	.35
Per dozen	3.50

This valuable little volume sent on receipt of price or FREE AS A PREMIUM for one new subscriber to The Christian Century.

The Christian Century Co.,
358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

whom the growing vision was coming.

The Spinster Book. By Myrte Reed. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Price $1.50 net.

This book has a spicy quality. It treats hackneyed themes in an un-hackneyed manner. Its table of contents is as follows: Notes on Men; Concerning Women; The Philosophy of Love; The Lost Art of Courtship; The Natural History of Proposals; Love Letters, Old and New; An Inquiry into Marriage; The Physiology of Vanity; Widows and Widowers; The Consolations of Spinsterhood. All of these themes are touched upon in a sprightly, pleasant way, and the practical hints which are strewn all over the book are not made too obtrusive.

Lyrics of Love, of Hearth and Home and Field and Garden. By Margaret E. Sangster. Fleming H. Revell Co. Price $1.25 net.

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster has so firmly established herself in favor by the writings in which she has revealed her thoughts to us, that the imprint of her name as author of a new book is at once its best introduction and recommendation. She has a way of reaching hearts and coming close to her readers by her tender touches and revelations of the inner life and love of the home. She links together most beautifully our humanities and divinities. Some of the lyrics in the volume before us have been published before in certain periodicals, but many make here their first appearance in public. The author hopes they may "slip into our busy mornings and quiet evenings with a message of comfort and cheer. They are songs of the nest and the home, songs of the way and the inn, songs of love and fidelity and the eternal peace." "They are home verses for home folk." The publishers have given them a dainty setting, exceedingly appropriate to the quiet beauty of the themes around which the author weaves her melodies. Those to whom home love and true friendship are dear will welcome this volume for a Christmas gift.

My Host, the Enemy, and Other Tales.

By Franklin Welles Calkins. Fleming H. Revell Co. Price $1.50.

This volume is written out of the experience of a boyhood spent in the upper Missouri country and ten years of after life as plainsman and mountaineer. Actual adventure is here narrated in most cases, and in others there is good reason for believing the stories to be based upon real occurrences. They are well told—all of them—and have a good healthy interest. Tales of imminent danger to life and limb, they yet are free from a sensational tone, and we note also that the bad language which too often mars a Western story of adventure is happily missing herein. This and other admirable features render the book a good one for boys and we do not question its reception by them, for what boy does not love stories of escapes from wild animals and Indians and even wilder white men? The illustrations are effective and really illustrate.

LITERARY NOTES.

Under the suggestive title of "The Imp and the Angel," the Scribners will soon publish a book by Josephine Dodge Daskam that adds a character to the world of juvenile fiction.

Boys who delight in stories of sea fights and naval adventures—and what boy does not—will find in "Sea Kings and Naval Heroes" (Henry Altemus Co.) singularly realistic descriptions of famous victories and exploits on the broad bosom of old ocean.

A practical book, which almost every family will find invaluable, is entitled "First Principles of Nursing." It is written by Anne R. Manning, a graduate of the City Hospital of the Quincy (Mass.) Training School, and is indispensable in cases of emergency, or during long periods of sickness where a trained nurse is not employed.

We are to get another volume of essays written by Max Muller during the closing years of his life. It treats of Buddhism, of "the alleged sojourn of Christ in India," of religions in China and of many like subjects. In one essay Max Muller tells us "Why I Am Not an Agnostic," and in another he asks "Is Man Immortal?" The book will be published by Longmans, Green & Co.

"The True Story of Captain John Smith," by Katharine Pearson Woods, will be published shortly by Doubleday, Page & Co., with a valuable and interesting array of maps, portraits, facsimiles, etc. The material of the work is drawn from historical sources on both sides of the Atlantic, and new facts of importance have been brought to light. New light is thrown upon the character of Pocahontas and her relations to Smith.

The Macmillan Company will soon publish for the University of Chicago Press the first of several series of translations and transliterations of "Ancient Records," which are to be published in the near future under the general editorship of President Wm. R. Harper. The first will be the "Ancient Records of Babylonia and Assyria," including all the Babylonian and Assyrian historical inscriptions, arranged in chronological order, which have been published up to this time. This series will consist of six volumes of 200-250 pages each.

THE FAIR SOUTHLAND
With its blue skies and balmy air, can best be reached via the

Southern Railway.

This great system reaches all important points in the South and, with its limited trains, elegant sleeping, parlor, dining and cafe cars, offers unexcelled service to Florida and all Southern tourist points.

"The Florida Limited"

Leaves Chicago daily, in the evening, arrives Jacksonville, Fla., the second morning, less than 35 hours en route, passing through Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Macon and Jesup.

Another Limited Train.

Leaving Chicago daily, in the morning, for Jacksonville, Fla., passes through Cincinnati, Knoxville, Asheville, Columbia and Savannah—a daylight ride through the famous "Land of the Sky."

Both limited trains carry sleepers, Chicago to Cincinnati, and through sleepers from Cincinnati to Jacksonville.

Another still to come! On January 6, 1902, the

"Chicago @ Florida Special"

Will be inaugurated, running through sleepers, solid, Chicago to St. Augustine, Fla., via Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Jesup and Jacksonville. This train, with its elegant sleepers, composite and observation cars, perfect dining car service and fast time, will eclipse anything of the kind ever before offered to the public in the Northwest for the South.

South Carolina Interstate @ West Indian Exposition.

Commencing Dec. 1, 1901, a through sleeper will be run from St. Louis to Charleston, S. C., via Louisville and Asheville.

Winter Tourist Tickets now on sale. For full particulars see your nearest ticket agent or write or call on J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A., 225 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.; G. B. Allen, A. G. P. A., St. Louis, Mo.

REDUCED RATES FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR HOLIDAYS.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell tickets December 24th, 25th, 31st, 1901, and January 1st, 1902, at rate of a fare and one-third for the round trip, to any point located in Central Passenger Association territory, good returning to and including January 2d, 1902. Pullman service on all trains. Individual Club Meals ranging in price from 35 cents to $1 served in Nickel Plate dining cars. Address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams street, Chicago, for particulars. Depot, Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, on the Elevated Loop.

Individual Communion Outfits. Send for free catalog and list of users. SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO., Box 53 Rochester, N. Y.

20TH CENTURY NEW TESTAMENT

Written in Modern English

Some Special Features

This is a translation into simple modern English, excluding all words and phrases not used in the English of the present day.

Quotations from the Old Testament are printed in special type, and passages from the Apocrypha are also distinguished.

The usual grouping of books is retained, but the books in each group are given in chronological order.

Specimen Quotation

From the Twentieth Century New Testament.

1. CORINTHIANS, 1-3.

Now on the subject of food that has been offered in sacrifice to idols, we are sure that we all have some knowledge! Knowledge breeds conceit, while love builds up character. If a man fancies he knows anything, he has not yet acquired the knowledge of it that he ought to have acquired. On the other hand, if a man loves God, he is known and loved by God.

One Great Reason For This Edition

We have been reading our Bible in the English of three centuries ago while Hottentots and others have had it in the tongues and dialects of their own times. The idioms and forms peculiar to the times of King James have seemed to have been the only medium through which the Holy Spirit could express itself to the modern Anglo-Saxon, and all previous attempts at Bible-making have been merely new revisions and new versions of these obsolescent forms.

Representative Opinions

We have used it at family prayers, and the whole circle, from the oldest to the youngest has given rapt attention: As a light and life-giving critical commentary, we do not know where any open-minded reader could get so much in the same compass.—Methodist Review.

The whole work is the product of twenty authorities, including graduates of several Universities and members of the various sections of the Christian Church, and it is an excellent volume for students and teachers.—New York Observer.

"A valuable piece of work. It elucidates many points and compels thought all along."—Presbyterian.

"An honest effort to make a free translation which shall give the meaning of the original with all clearness."—The Christian Observer.

Our Special Premium Offers

The 20th Century New Testament is published in three parts, divided as follows: Part I: The Gospels and the Acts. Part II: Paul's Letters to the Churches. Part III: Remaining Letters and the Book of Revelation. Price of each part, 16mo, flexible cloth, 50 cents, net.

FIRST OFFER: One part of the 20th Century New Testament, sent post paid, with each new subscription to The Christian Century, at the regular rate, $1.50.

SECOND OFFER: To show our appreciation of our regular subscribers we will send the entire 20th Century New Testament, in three parts, to any reader of The Christian Century who will send us two new subscriptions at the regular rate.

It will make a splendid gift for your pastor or Sunday-school superintendent. All Bible students are eager to possess the 20th Century New Testament.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., 358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

Special Free Illustrated Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE

CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco

FOR THE

Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free. A postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
CHICAGO, ILL.

The Pioneer
Limited.

Famous
Train
of
the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA

THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service
Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information
furnished on application to

F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent.
Chicago, Ill.

Through First Class and
Tourist Sleeping Cars to

California and Oregon

Every day in the year between

Chicago, San Francisco
Los Angeles and Portland
via

Chicago, Union Pacific
and North-Western Line

A most comfortable and inexpensive means of making the trip overland

Lowest Rates • Finest Scenery
Shortest Time on the Road

Personally Conducted
Excursions

every Tuesday and Thursday
from Chicago

For illustrated pamphlets, rates and particulars inquire at ticket offices Chicago & North-Western Railway, 212 Clark Street or Wells Street Station, or address S. A. Hutchison, 212 Clark Street, Chicago.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY, of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities, Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to the Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain in a Piano?

We have hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting by persons moving which must be disposed of at once as we cannot make room for them in our salesrooms. These pianos include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many of them cannot be distinguished from new, yet all are offered at a great discount from prices when new. Uprights as low as $100. Very easy terms of payment to reliable persons. Freight would cost you about $7. New large size mahogany pianos, with maudolin attachment, $175, sent anywhere on easy payments. Write at once for complete list and full particulars. You can make a great saving by securing your piano from us. Every piano warranted exactly as represented. LYON & HEALY, 92 Adams St., Chicago. The World's Largest Music House.

PARKER'S
HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair.
Promotes a luxuriant growth.
Never Fails to Restore Gray
Hair to its Youthful Color.
Cures scalp diseases & hair falling.
50c. and $1.00 at Druggists

GOD'S BOOKS

An Inquiry respecting

The Books of Judgment

WHAT THEY ARE
WHERE THEY ARE
WHAT THEY CONTAIN

By John Williams, with an introduction
by I. N. McCash. LL. D.

This is an interesting and attractive little book and contains many valuable thoughts. All book readers will want it. Paper binding only. Sent postpaid for 35 cents. Address,

The Christian Century Company
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

The leading musical institution of America. Founded 1853. Unsurpassed advantages in composition, vocal and instrumental music, and elocution. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Pupils received at any time. For prospectus address FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

BELLS

all kinds, big and little—for Church & School, for Fire, Factory and Farm. AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY CO., Northville, Mich.

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

P. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, C. B. & Q. R. R.
209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

This Watch, Chain & Charm GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine, in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.

Address

CHRISTIAN MONTHLY

1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY

Arthur H. Smith

Large 8vo, cloth, 2 vols., boxed.
Superbly illustrated.

$5.00, Net

The Final Authority on the Most Significant Epoch in the History of the Far East.

CHINA IN CONVULSION

"Is now and is likely long to remain, an authority on the subject."—

New York Sun.

"Entitled to rank as the book of the hour on the great problems of the Orient."—

New York World.

The
Intellect of China

In Five parts: Arts and Sciences, Literature, Philosophy and Religion, Education, History. By W. A. P. Martin. Illustrated, $2.50, Net.

THE LORE OF CATHAY

"The reader finds here a student who has so far divested himself of western prejudices as to see beneath the surface to the very heart of a majestic and enduring civilization."—The Dial.

Margaret Sangster

Large paper Edition de Luxe. Illuminated pages and many extra illustrations in Sepia by W. B. Dyer. 8vo, cloth, boxed, $2.50, Net.

WINSOME WOMANHOOD

"An exquisite book, written in the sweetest spirit, out of the ripest wisdom and the tenderest love. It ought to stand at the very head of all Mrs. Sangster's publications in popularity."—The Interior.

Culture and Restraint

by

HUGH BLACK

Author of FRIENDSHIP

"We can well understand his popularity, for he has the faculty of expression in a marked degree."—New York Observer.

"Expresses his message clearly and well."—Mail and Express.

8vo, Cloth, $1.50, net

THE MAN FROM GLENGARRY

A Tale of the Ottawa 12mo, $1.50

"As straight as a pine, as sweet as a balsam, as sound as a white oak."—The Interior.

RALPH CONNOR

DEBORAH

A Tale of the Times of Judas Maccabaeus

12mo, Cloth, Illustrated, $1.50

"Characters are here with fibre like Shakespere's best. The ambition of Deborah is as daring as that of Macbeth."—Book News.

JAMES M. LUDLOW

DAVID

The Poet and King

By Newell Dwight Hillis

"Dr. Hillis has presented something more than a mere sketch. It is an essay giving the result of careful and intelligent study of the career of David, who in our day would be called 'a man of many parts.' All the romance, tragedy, and pathos of his career is graphically related in clear-cut narrative style. Moralizing never intrudes, yet no one can read without feeling something of awe at the life of the man."—New York Times.

12mo, Cloth, 75c., net

W. C. GRAY

EDITOR OF THE INTERIOR

12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50, Net

MUSINGS BY CAMP-FIRE AND WAYSIDE

It is doubtful if American journalism has produced a more picturesque figure than the editor of "The Interior." The present volume is a collection by himself, prepared just prior to his death.

Margaret Sangster

is among the best of our living poets. She has the genuine poetic feeling and insight.—Boston Traveler. Decorations on each page—printed in two colors, 12mo. Decorated cloth, boxed, $1.25, Net

LYRICS OF LOVE OF HEART AND HOME, OF FIELD AND GARDEN

"Mrs. Sangster's verses are unaffected, kindly in thought and feeling, and are sure to find readers. Some of them display a pretty fancy, but more of them disclose what is still better—a warm heart."—New York Times.

Western Tales

BY FRANKLIN WELLES CALKINS

Sketches of Life and Adventure on the Border Line of the West. Fully illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50

MY HOST, THE ENEMY

"Capital sketches of life and adventure on the border line of the west."—New York Journal.

"A real contribution to the literature of western life."—Zion's Herald.

CHICAGO : NEW YORK : TORONTO

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Illinois, December 26, 1901.

Number 32.

LEADING FEATURES.

Nature and Need of Love

The Chronicler's Desk

Have we outgrown the Catechism

The Pulpit and the Social Unrest

A Week in Venice

Christmas in India

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS, LITERARY AND NEWS MAGAZINE.

Published by

The Christian Century Company,

358 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

Subscriptions—

Are payable in advance and may begin at any time. Terms, $1.50 a year. Arrearage rate after 90 days $2.00. Foreign subscriptions $1.00 extra.

Expirations—

The label on the paper shows the month to which your subscription is paid. List is revised once a month and change of date on label is the receipt for remittance on subscription account.

Discontinuances—

All subscriptions are considered permanent and are not discontinued at expiration of time paid for without request of subscriber. Paper is continued until all arrearages are paid.

Change of Address—

In ordering change of address be sure to give the old as well as the new. If paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

Remittances—

Should be sent by draft or money order payable to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY. Do not send local checks or full credit can not be given, as we have to pay exchange charges.

Advertising—

Nothing but clean business and reliable firms advertised. Rates given on application.

Communications—

Articles for publication should not exceed one thousand words and should be in our office one week previous to date of paper in which they are to appear. News letters should be condensed as much as possible. News items are solicited and should be sent in promptly.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES

Quarterly Helps.

THE PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Youngest Classes. It contains Lesson Stories, Lesson Questions, Lesson Thoughts and Lesson Pictures, and never fails to interest the little ones.

TERMS.

Table with 2 columns: Quantity and Price. Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents. 10 copies, per quarter, $ .20; per year, $ .75. 25 copies, " .40; " 1.50. 50 " " .75; " 3.00.

THE YOUTH'S QUARTERLY

A Lesson Magazine for the Junior Classes. The Scripture Text is printed in full, but an interesting Lesson Story takes the place of the usual explanatory notes.

TERMS—Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 2 1-2 cents each per quarter.

THE SCHOLAR'S QUARTERLY.

A Lesson Magazine for the Senior Classes. This Quarterly contains every help needed by the senior classes. Its popularity is shown by its immense circulation.

TERMS.

Table with 2 columns: Quantity and Price. Single copy, per quarter, $ .10; per year, $ .30. 10 copies, " .40; " 1.25. 25 " " .90; " 3.00. 50 " " 1.60; " 6.00. 100 " " 3.00; " 12.00.

THE BIBLE STUDENT.

A Lesson Magazine for the Advanced Classes, containing the Scripture Text in both the Common and Revised Versions, with Explanatory Notes, Helpful Readings, Practical Lessons, Maps, etc.

TERMS.

Table with 2 columns: Quantity and Price. Single copy, per quarter, $ .10; per year, $ .40. 10 copies, " .70; " 2.50. 25 " " 1.60; " 6.00. 50 " " 3.00; " 10.50. 100 " " 5.50; " 20.00.

BIBLE LESSON PICTURE ROLL.

Printed in 8 colors. Each leaf, 26 by 37 inches, contains a picture illustrating one lesson. 13 leaves in a set. Price per Roll—one quarter—reduced to 75 cents.

CHRISTIAN PICTURE LESSON CARDS.

A reduced fac-simile of the large Bible Lesson Picture Roll. Put up in sets, containing one card for each Sunday in quarter. One set will be required for each child in the class. Price reduced to 2 1-2 cents per set.

Model Sunday-School Record.

A complete record of the Attendance of Officers, Teachers and Pupils, with column for Roll of Officers, Teachers, and column for recording Attendance or Absence, Collections by Classes, Total Enrollment, with Gain or Loss for the Quarter, List and Cost of Supplies, Treasurer's Receipt to Secretary, Weekly and Quarterly Report, etc., for one to twenty-eight classes, all for entire quarter, without turning a leaf. Each book contains blanks for two years' records. Cloth.....$1.00

Model Sunday-School Treasurer's Book.

Arranged for the Systematic Recording of all Receipts and Expenditures. Blanks for Annual Reports, etc. Good for three years. Fine paper. Pocket size, cloth, 25 cents. Morocco.....$ .50

Model Sunday-School Class Book.

Arranged for Complete Record of Name, Residence, Date of Entering, Attendance, Contributions, etc. Good for one year. Single copy, five cents. Per dozen.....$ .50

Standard Sunday-School Class Book.

Ruling and Printed Headings, and keeps One Month's Record without turning a leaf. Good for one year. Bound in marbled paper. Single copy, ten cents. Per dozen.....$ .75

Sunday-School Collection and Class Envelopes.

Cloth-lined, printed, and good for one year. Per dozen.....$ .50 Manila paper, printed, and good for one year. Per hundred, 35 cents. Per thousand.....$ 2.25

Model Superintendent's Roll or Pocket Record.

Containing an Alphabetical List of the Names and Addresses of all the Pupils connected with the School; also, List of Officers and Teachers, with Addresses, and blanks for recording some of the most important items from the Secretary's Weekly Reports. Cloth, 50 cents. Morocco....$ .75

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY

358 Dearborn Street,

Chicago, Ill.

BIG FOUR ROUTE

THE POPULAR LINE FROM....

Chicago Indianapolis Cincinnati Louisville

and all points South & Southeast

THE SCENIC LINE TO

WASHINGTON, D. C., And HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Cincinnati and the Chesapeake and Ohio's Railway

For Maps, Rates or Descriptive Matter call on or address

J. C. TUCKER, General Northern Agent, 254 Clark Street, CHICAGO.

AGENTS Make 100 PER CENT on Conklin's Vest Pocket Argument Settler. Revised edition with New Census Statistics, 254 pgs. A complete Encyclopedia of a million proved Facts Tables, and General Information. It settles Arguments instantly. Invaluable to everyone. Sample postpaid, Cloth, 25c., Morocco, 50c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. George W. Noble, 285 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

RHEUMATISM...

Is quickly relieved and promptly cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedies. The internal remedy is pleasant to take, acts immediately, does not disturb digestion, and is for rheumatism only in all its torturing forms. The external preparation restores stiff joints, draws cords, and hardened muscles. If your druggist does not these remedies in stock, do not take any thing else. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., New York, and the full treatment of two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

BLMYER BUCHER BELLS. UNLIKE OTHERS BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

Volume I.

Chicago, Ill., December 26, 1901.

Number 32.

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

Glory be to God on high:
Christ is born to-day.
Peace on earth, and charity,
Christ is born to-day.
Stars from heaven look wondering down.
On the Lord that left his throne.
White-robed angels, golden-crowned
Shake their harps with joyful sound.
Glory be to God on high:
Christ is born to-day.
Peace on earth, and charity,
Christ is born to-day.

J. T. SLINGSBY.

THE NATURE AND NEED OF LOVE.

WHAT is this quality we call love, and what are its manifestations? First, it may be said that it is an affection with capacity for sacrifice. No love is worth the name which does not include both these elements. There may be affection, indeed, which is selfish and destructive; that is not love. But when this affection purifies itself by the denial of selfish motives, and the acquisition of willingness to suffer for the sake of the object loved, then it has come to its true expression. When, now, that object is the highest, the power of the love is limitless. To love the highest and to love with a sacrificial affection which denies self is the supreme quality of human life. The repentant queen sadly exclaimed after the final departure of King Arthur:

"What might I not have made of thy fair world,
Had I but loved thy highest creature here?
It was my duty to have loved the highest:
It surely was my profit had I known:
It would have been my pleasure had I seen.
We needs must love the highest when we see it."

Again, love is the harmonization of the inner life by the direction of its purposes toward a definite end, which lies in the realm of purpose expressed in the life of the one who is loved. It is the directing of all one's life forces to the accomplishment of the will of the beloved. In such a passion there is harmony, because no friction enters to destroy the smoothness and restfulness of the soul. Hate is destructive to all peace, but love brings the powers of the soul to unity and beauty. In this is found the secret of power, that power which comes through the repose of the soul in an affection that has claimed every power and ambition. Once more, love is the inspiration of life. Love can never be merely quiescent, though it is calm. It must be active, impelling, inspiring. It provides the life with the motive to constant and self-forgetting service. Love is also the safeguard against sin. A soul in love with the highest beauty and purity is incapable of unworthy thoughts and acts. In such a soil an evil purpose can no more root itself than a nettle upon a glacier. In the confidence that the object of its love is worthy of all, the life rests happy and content, inaccessible to lower passions and affections. Most of all is this true when Christ is so loved. His life becomes the supreme object of admiration and transforming love. From this it follows easily that love is the secret of likeness to God. To love Christ is to wish to be like him, is to brood upon his excellence and beauty, and this very attitude soon begets the state of likeness in which the soul reaps its highest satisfaction.

Love is the secret of power and of fearlessness. The man whose love is full and satisfied has no distressing doubts, no wavering of faith, no disharmony of effort. All his springs are in God. He therefore is hopeful and constant; his spiritual life flourishes. His physical life gathers strength and vigor. His business undertakings and professional pursuits draw their inspiration from this guiding and impelling force within him. It is not strange, therefore, that the Christian who lives normally and abides in the love of God, is likely to be whole in body, mind and spirit. There should be no mystery nor vagary in this doctrine. Jesus himself lived a physically normal and vigorous life. The very forces that were within him were health-giving, and enabled him to sustain those mysterious drafts upon his physical vitality which his miracles necessitated. In this doctrine there is no occultism or fadism. It only becomes dangerous when made to obscure the whole horizon, as the only phase of Christianity worth consideration. But in the words of the apostle, "Perfect love casteth out fear," one finds the secret of a normal, trustful, calm, disciplined, healthy and successful life.

It hardly need be said that the life of love is the life of forgiveness; not the kind of forgiveness which merely forgets the past, but that which turns all of its resources to the uplifting of the sinning and recreant soul, so that life comes back because love has manifested its reclaiming power. And closely allied with this doctrine of forgiveness, which needs further amplification and larger embodiment in the Christian life of to-day, is the duty not only of acting kindly toward others and speaking well of them, but in almost equal measure of thinking only good things of all. We can recognize and measure somewhat the force of good and evil actions; we know in some sense the power of good and evil words; but our psychology is just beginning to make us understand how potent are our very thoughts for lifting or casting down the lives of others. It is the actual output of personality directed to good or evil which makes the conquest of thought a matter of almost infinite moment. If it is possible for a congregation to uplift the preacher by its thought and prayer, or to pull him from his throne of power, it is as certainly possible for a single mind with persistent malevolence irreparably to destroy another, who may be quite unconscious of the source of his disaster. In this very fact lies whatever of truth may yet be discovered in the old superstition of witchcraft. Persistent evil thinking of any life cannot but do it injury. When you have thought well of a man you have already helped him to realize your good opinion. When you think of him evil you are pulling a beam out of his house, and the responsibility for mental attitude, as well as for word and speech, receives most impressive scientific attestation.

THE CHRONICLER'S DESK.

The doctrine of love as taught by Jesus and as exemplified by him is a practical doctrine. It will prove its value in every field of human activity. Men may say, "It is not possible to practice the doctrine of love or even the golden rule in business. Rivalry and competition are necessary." The time will come when such sentiments will be reviewed with astonishment by those who shall have passed already into the realm of the ethics of Jesus. For those ethics, when severely tested, are found to be always practicable, and they are the only ethics that are practicable. Men may be skeptical to-day, but already the law of love is transforming certain sections of the business world, and it is destined to increase its effectiveness like "the light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

To come unto Christ, then, means to come into the atmosphere and to abide in the glory of his law of love. It means to possess that quality which is above all others indestructible. The apostle has given us in the crowning words of his Psalm of Love the secret of this fact: that while eloquence and wisdom, even good deeds, may pass away, faith and hope and love abide as a perpetual possession, "and the greatest of these is Love."

"Aye, and when prophecy her tale hath finished,
Knowledge hath faded from the trembling tongue;
Love shall survive and love be undiminished,
Love be imperishable, love be young."

THE Chronicler's interest was excited and his curiosity aroused by the title of an article in one of the current magazines: "Do we really know Dr. Johnson?" The first thought that struck him was that the substitution of Jesus Christ for Dr. Johnson would make a splendid subject for a sermon, or an editorial in a religious newspaper, based on Paul's expression in Philippians, "that I may know him." As this is an age of discovery and novelty, an age that primes itself on the reversion of old decisions and the reconstruction of old reputations, the second thought was one of wonder if this writer was a literary smart Alex who had discovered a brand-new Samuel Johnson, whose chief characteristic was not the union of great powers and low prejudices, as Macaulay declared it was, but the union of great powers and no prejudices, that he was not the gruff old bear and bigot of contemporaneous and universal opinion, but an angel of sweetness and light so entirely free from credulity and superstition that he did not begin to believe where other people left off.

Dipping into the article, however, the Chronicler to his surprise found the writer entirely sane and the old conclusions standing firm at the end of his article. He concurs in the verdict of Macaulay, that no historic personage is better known than Dr. Johnson, and why? The witnesses are first-hand and competent, and therefore the sources of information are strictly first-class and wholly reliable. Boswell was a literary artist thirsting for literary distinction and he had the wit to see in Johnson his one chance for an imperishable name; but heaven save us from a literary artist bent on his own immortality. He is pretty sure to leave the wart out and to put the paint in, and all this in the interest of a vivid and lasting impression that will introduce himself into the company of the immortals who are not born to die. Over against this weakness, Boswell had the saving quality of allowing the great doctor to masquerade in his own intellectual garments; at every turn of the narrative there is a self-presentation of his own personality. The reader is so long in the presence of the real man that the feeling grows to the end that the subject of this inimitable biography is the actual man of flesh and blood and brains, and plenty of all three, who bullied his friends and berated his foes, a genius of overpowering strength, of great and ridiculous weaknesses. Miss Burney gives us a memoir of Johnson almost equal in interest and importance to Boswell's. Mrs. Thrale, to whom Johnson wrote three hundred letters, and no man ever wrote three hundred letters to a woman without being in love with her, wrote "Anecdotes of the Late Samuel Johnson, LL. D., During the Last Twenty Years of His Life." The remarkable and convincing fact is that Burney's Johnson is Boswell's Johnson; Thrale's Johnson is Boswell's Johnson; the "Seward Letters" give us the old identical of the Boswellian Johnson; and Macaulay repaints the same glowing picture and illustrates the truth of his own dictum when he says, "No human being who has been more than seventy years in his grave is so well known to us." Adding forty-seven years to the seventy, we can repeat Macaulay's assertion, so that we really know Dr. Johnson.

Do we really know Jesus Christ? The basis of our Johnsonian knowledge is first-hand, accurate literary sources. "We have in Johnson's case a quite unusual number of first-hand and first-class sources of information, and they all combine wittingly and unwittingly to produce a deeply-cut impression of essential unity. They all stand up to say, 'That is the man.'"

Johnson had three Boswells, at least, and Jesus Christ had four, and Christ's Boswells were inspired witnesses or had access to inspired sources of first-hand knowledge. A rationalistic writer of some distinction remarked twenty-five years ago that Jesus, from the dogmatic point of view, was the best known, and from the historic point of view, the least known, of all the great founders of religions. He tells us it is because we know so much of the dogmatic Christ that we know so little of the historic Christ. The Christ of dogma is in every lineament familiar to us from early childhood; but concerning the Jesus of history we possess but few facts resting upon trustworthy evidence. He contrasts the meagerness of our information concerning the historic career of Jesus with the mass of information which lies within our reach concerning the primitive character of Christologic speculation. The Pauline epistles give us full and trustworthy information respecting the impression Jesus made, but they add little or nothing to our stock of knowledge in respect to what Jesus did and said.

There is some truth in all this, but more error. These assertions concerning the meagerness of the world's knowledge of the Jesus of history were not true twenty-five years ago, and they are palpably untrue to-day. It is a fact that speculative theology and the accumulation of creeds through many generations had emphasized and made prominent the Christ of dogma at the expense of the Christ of history and of reality, but the sources of our knowledge of the historic Christ have never been as meager or as untrustworthy as this writer represents. The Jesus who lived and taught and died in Palestine has been for more than eighteen centuries the colossal figure and best-known personality in the history of the world. He was a young man when he died, his ministry was brief, he lived in an obscure part of the world, he wrote nothing, he caused no information to be placed upon record concerning himself or his teaching, the evangelic sources are fragmentary and unchronological, the records are not strictly contemporaneous with the events, and yet the great Person stands out in these simple pages with increasing influence and power as knowledge grows with time.

Thanks to the historic and critical spirit of modern times, which has pushed the investigation back to original sources of information, we know more to-day of the historical Christ than any age of Christian history since the first. The assertion made now that we have no facts about Jesus resting upon trustworthy evidence, would be a stupendous exhibition of ignorance or prejudice or both. The personality of Jesus in the first year of the twentieth century stands out in the clear light of well-attested facts, as distinctly and unmistakably as the personality of Samuel Johnson. The synoptic memorials are still with us, and their claim to historic reality is more unquestionable than ever, and the fourth gospel has fought a good fight for the old place as an original witness to Jesus. The Messianic prophecies of the Old Testament, the historic memorials of the New, and the rich spiritual utterances of apostles and prophets combine, like Johnson's Boswells, wittingly and unwittingly to produce a deeply-cut impression of essential unity; they all stand up to say "That is the man."

WHEN THE VISION COMES.

IN the book of Daniel it is said that "at the time of the end shall be the vision." Many things which are dark at the first are made clear at the end. Dark clouds thicken about us as we set out on a certain undertaking, but in the evening time there is light. How dark for a time was the way in which such men as Joseph and Job had to travel; but at the time of the end came the vision, and behind a frowning providence was seen God's smiling face.

In the self-revelation of God to man there were things that could come only at the end of a long process of development. The incarnation itself, which is the climax of divine self-manifestation, had to be prepared for. Although it was to bring the vision for which man was wearily waiting, it could not come before "the fulness of the time." The time of the end is the time for the vision. When the divine purpose is fulfilled it is understood, and not before.

So it often is at the close of life. Dying men look into eternity, and discover its reality; they look into life and see its meaning, which, alas, they may hitherto have missed; they look beyond the bourne of time and anticipate that fast-approaching event when they shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ and "at the time of the end shall be the vision," which will consist in the manifestation of self, and out of which will come joy or woe unspeakable.

The end of the year ought to be a time of vision. We think of it mainly as a time of retrospection, a time for the casting up of our accounts, a time for the taking of a kind of spiritual inventory. It is that, and more. It is a time for seeing things in a stronger, clearer light; a time for stripping from life all artificialities and deceits; a time for a new vision of God, of self, of life, of duty; a time for looking upon the unfulfilled purposes of the past and the boundless possibilities of the future; a time to pause in the midst of life's shadows and anticipate the full and open vision which is to come at the end of all.

TELEGRAPHY WITHOUT WIRES.

Marconi, the young Italian inventor, has succeeded in his wireless system of telegraphy beyond the wildest dream. He has received messages at St. John's, Newfoundland, which were sent across the ocean from Cornwall, England, a distance of 1,800 miles. These messages consisted of the repetition of the letter "S," which was the sign agreed upon between him and his assistant in Cornwall. He expects to inaugurate the New Year by sending a special message over the Atlantic, if the steamer on which he is to sail from New York reaches England in time. Scientists seem to be agreed that, although the signals received were very faint, yet the experiment was in every way successful; and all that is now required to bring this system of communication into practical operation is the development of the transmitter. This may take time, but every obstacle will without doubt be ultimately surmounted.

An amusing incident in connection with Marconi's successful experiment is the action of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, which threatens to issue an injunction against him for infringing upon their monopoly. What a pity it is that they cannot cover all the conditions of the case by the formation of an air trust!

TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND.

In view of the great embarrassment caused to the work of the American Board of Foreign Missions through the fluctuations of its legacy receipts, a business-like plan has now been proposed by President Capen of securing a fund of $250,000 to act as a permanent and effectual balance against such fluctuations. From a purely business point of view this is an eminently prudential proposal. But is it a bad thing for missionary societies to have periods of fluctuation? Is it a bad thing for them to be thrown back upon God and the churches? Even missionary societies may move too smoothly and may suffer from having things made too soft and easy. In the management of these societies there is a tendency in the present day to exalt what is called "a business policy." An address recently published by the American Board mentions as the important things in the prosecution of our missionary work, "better organization, better education, business forethought." Shades of the apostles! Were these the things which the Church depended upon at first in her work of conquering the world for Christ?

OBJECTION TO TERMS OF CARNEGIE'S GIFT.

It seems that the proffered gift of ten million dollars by Andrew Carnegie for the endowment of a National University at Washington was in form of preferred stock or bonds of the United States Steel Corporation. For Congress to have accepted these bonds would have placed the government seal of approval upon a combination whose business methods are believed by many to be in opposition to the anti-trust law. The President, with whom would have rested the appointment of the board to administer this fund, has wisely decided not to accept the offer in its present form. It is believed, however, that an adjustment can be made by which Mr. Carnegie will convert the bonds which he has tendered into cash, or United States bonds, and that the gift can then be accepted.

RELIGIOUS AWAKENING IN JAPAN.

From Japan come cheering reports of a deep and widespread revival of religious interest. Mr. Mott's presence has brought to the movement strong re-enforcement. When he addressed the students of the Imperial University eighty-four out of an audience of 800 expressed a purpose to follow Christ. At almost all the mission stations there have been numerous baptisms, and the conviction prevails that what has been witnessed is only the beginning of a forward work which will greatly advance the kingdom of Christ in the Flowery Kingdom.

CREED REVISION.

The Presbyterian Committee on creed revision has completed the brief statement of the reformed faith for the information of church members. It consists of sixteen articles. The official statement given out, after saying the statement was tentatively adopted, adds: "The committee is now engaged on the matter of the second instruction from the assembly, the preparation of a declaratory statement to explain certain disputed points in the confession of faith such as the doctrines of election and of the salvation of all infants."

CHICAGO NOTES.

John D. Rockefeller has given his usual Christmas gift to the University of Chicago. His gift this year consisted of one million dollars to the general fund and $250,000 for current expenses. This makes his total gifts to the university about ten million dollars. Additional gifts from unknown donors amounted to $375,437.

One of the bright things in connection with Christmas-tide is the open-handed charity shown toward the poor. A number of annual Christmas dinners were given. The Volunteers of America and the Salvation Army each provided for about ten thousand persons. In addition to the feasts spread, baskets were packed with Christmas dinners and sent to needy persons throughout the city.

John W. Ela of Chicago, speaking at the National Civil Service Reform League at Boston, on Dec. 13, reported substantial progress in our city in the matter of civil service reform. He instanced the work done by the trial boards appointed by the police and fire departments. The Federation of Labor at its recent meeting also endorsed the civil service laws by overwhelmingly defeating a resolution aimed against the proposed civil service law for the state.

The four eastern divines who will serve as university preachers during the coming quarter are: Rev. Henry M. Sanders, pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist church, New York city; Rev. Francis B. Peabody, professor of sociology and chaplain at Harvard University; Rev. Philip S. Moxom, pastor of the First Congregational church, Springfield, Mass.; Rev. H. P. Faunce, D. D., president of Brown University. The convocation sermon, which is in fact a baccalaureate sermon, was preached by Rev. Dr. Herbert L. Willett, acting chaplain of the university.

At a meeting of the corporate members of the American Board and their friends, held on Thursday evening last at Kinsley's Hotel, there was evidence of the rising tide of missionary interest. The note sounded was one of hope. But a mistake made—which, by the way, is a mistake common to missionary gatherings—was that too much emphasis was placed upon methods, and too little upon motives. Methods are no doubt important, and have to be considered, but the Church of to-day is suffering less from the inefficiency of its methods than from the feebleness of its motives.

Christmas has its shadows as well as its lights. A young father in Chicago was out of work and had no money to give to his children for Christmas presents. His youngest child said, "Papa, won't you give us some pennies? We want to buy you and mamma something, 'cause Santa Claus may forget you." This plea broke his heart. In his despondency he swallowed a quantity of carbolic acid and ended his troubles. Before taking the poison he said to his wife, "Some childless, kind-hearted man or woman will do for you what I cannot." Cowardly? Yes, but pathetic. Oh, the pity of it, that in the midst of plenty so many should suffer the pangs of poverty!

CONTRIBUTED

NOBILITY.

True worth is in being, not seeming,
 In doing, each day that goes by,
 Some little good—not all in dreaming
 Of great things to do by and by.
 Whatever men say in their blindness,
 And spite of the fancies of youth,
 There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
 And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure—
 We can not do wrong and feel right;
 Nor can we give pain and feel pleasure,
 For justice avenges each slight,
 The air for the wing of the sparrow,
 The bush for the robin and wren,
 But always the path that is narrow
 And straight for the children of men.

'Tis not in the pages of story
 The heart of its ills to beguile,
 Though he who makes courtship to glory
 Gives all that he hath for a smile.
 For when, from her heights, he has won her,
 Alas, it is only to prove
 There's nothing so royal as honor,
 And nothing so loyal as love.

We can not make bargains for blisses,
 Nor catch them like fishes in nets,
 And sometimes the thing our life misses Helps more than the things which it gets;
 For good lieth not in pursuing,
 Nor gaining of great or of small,
 But just this—the doing and doing
 As we would be done by—is all.

—Alice Cary.

HAVE WE OUTGROWN THE CATECHISM?

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON, D. D.

"WHAT is the chief end of man?" This was a most familiar question to our fathers and grandfathers. From 1647, when the Westminster catechism was adopted by a commission of learned divines, the boys and girls of Puritan and Presbyterian parentage were taught, in regular order, the one hundred and seven questions and answers of this "shorter" catechism. It was taught at the fire-side, reverently rehearsed on Sunday afternoons whose declining sun was eagerly watched by the restless little Puritans, and diligently reviewed by the minister on his periodical and somewhat formidable visits. Young people of the present day may think of these times with levity, and older ones with memories of childhood dread, but the catechism had its value, and nothing since has quite taken its place. From the time of Socrates, the question and answer method has been a valuable means of imparting definite instruction. It inculcated, first of all, the habit of asking questions, and secondly, it gave positive and formulated answers to those inquiries.

The question and answer method early established itself in the Church as that best adapted to the instruction of "catechumens," to whom we find reference as early as the second century, as a class preparing for church membership. The course of instruction at first embraced as its chief features the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and a summary confession of faith. As the Church grew older and its accessions came less through conversions from the heathen world, and more from the nurture of the children of believers, the instruction adapted itself more to the purposes of Christian nurture. It was the Reformation, however, which gave us formal catechisms covering the whole system of Christian truth as then understood. Luther published his first short catechism in 1520, only three years after the nailing of his theses. Calvin drew up his first catechism in 1536. The Heidelberg, most important of the reformed catechisms, was published in 1562. The Roman church, which had tended to substitute the confessional for systematic public instruction, followed the reformers with a published catechism in 1566. While Protestantism has quite commonly discarded the catechism, the Roman church, which learned the method from the reformers, has steadfastly adhered to it, and as any bishop can authorize a catechism for his diocese, the Catholics possess them in great variety.

The Westminster catechism, on which our fathers were fed for more than two centuries, was not the only catechism the Puritan children learned. The New England Primer printed this in full, but several pages before it was a series of "instructive questions and answers," beginning with:

Who was the first man? Adam.
 Who was the first woman? Eve.
 Who was the first murderer? Cain.
 Who was the first martyr? Abel.
 And leading up to a series including:
 Who made you? God.
 Who redeemed you? Jesus Christ.
 Of what are you made? Dust.
 What doth that teach you? To be humble, and mindful of death.

When we go through the New England Primer and note its variety and scope, we are first of all thankful that some of its contents are not now taught to our children, but are the more strongly reminded of the lack of any substitute in our modern methods of instruction for some of the things which it contains.

Within the past few years many churches and pastors have seriously considered the wisdom of re-establishing a course of catechetical instruction, but there is real lack of any proper text book. A number of pastors in the last few years have issued for the children of their own congregations a course of catechetical instruction. All of these, so far as fall under the writer's notice, are excellent in their spirit and generally judicious in the answers given to the questions asked, but there is real need of a catechism which shall approach the subject of the Christian life according to the method of the child's own earlier mental processes. Logically it is well to begin a catechism with some question whose answer is a dogmatic affirmation of the existence, or nature, or will of God, but pedagogically this method is open to serious objections. The child did not first know God, and his reason now affirms the existence of God through a somewhat crude but still logical and traceable series of inductions and deductions. A catechism need not attempt a formal system of philosophy, nor seek to give every answer in terms which no philosopher could criticise, but it may attempt at least at the outset to align itself with the general principles of fundamental truth and the order of elementary perceptions.

The child born into a Christian home perceives and reciprocates the love of human parents before he suspects the existence of a God. Through his knowledge of parental love and care, he comes to believe in and to measure the care and providence of God. The analogy between human and Divine fatherhood becomes a permanent part of his mental equipment, and renews its force when he becomes a parent. This was the fundamental truth upon which Jesus built his system of instruction concerning the nature of God, first of all teaching us to call him "Our Father who art in heaven;" secondly, affirming that we must come into the kingdom as a little child, and thirdly, declaring that if we "being evil, know how to give good gifts" to our children, and to seek their good unselfishly, we are never to attribute to God any lower motive than that made possible to us through parental affection.

I venture to suggest, therefore, that a catechism might be constructed which in its beginning should follow this well authorized and well established line of inquiry and deduction. If each pastor prepared a catechism for the children of his own congregation, it would have the merit of freshness and would be in line with his regular instruction from the pulpit. If such a catechism could be agreed upon by a representative company of thoughtful, scholarly and practical pastors, there would be added value in the uniformity. It would be better for such a catechism to be practical than to be scholarly. It might better be prepared by men who are face to face with the needs of modern congregations than by theorists however scientific, but it ought to be both scholarly and scientific. I venture to give below the first chapter of what might be such a catechism. It includes twenty-five questions, which is quite enough for three lessons, each of which lessons ought to lead naturally to some practical truth. Some sacrifice of logical order might be made if necessary in order that no lesson should fail to include some question and answer which the pastor could use to enforce a moral truth. These questions could be printed a lesson at a time in the Church calendar, with the request that parents teach them to their children in the home on Sunday afternoon and paste each lesson on the left-hand page of a notebook, leaving the right-hand page blank for notes to be taken in the class, thus reviving systematic home instruction, as well as pastoral training. Not all parents would do it, and some portion of the time of the class would need to be given to teaching the questions; still there would be time for questions and expositions and farther instruction. The following chapter begins about where Descartes began with his Cogito ergo sum, which may not be above criticism philosophically, but is sufficiently fundamental for a course of instruction such as this is designed to be. The questions and answers which follow and which are the beginning of a catechism employed in the writer's own church for the past three weeks, are given, not as an exhibition of profound philosophy, but as an example of what might possibly be done in the way of supplying the boys and girls with a series of definitions less dogmatic and more instructive than former catechisms have contained.

No attempt is made to provide answers in terms wholly familiar to the children. The explanation of the terms implied, and the association of new words with the truths enforced, would be a valuable part of the class exercises, still here as everywhere a simple word is always to be preferred to one that is difficult or abstruse.

MYSELF, THE WORLD AND GOD.

1. Q. Apart from the things which you believe, hope or imagine to be true, what do you know?

- A. I know that there is a world, and that I live in it.
2. Q. How do you know that there is a world?
A. I know that there is a world because I can touch, taste, smell, see and hear.
3. Q. How do you know that you live?
A. I know that I live because I think, feel, and will.
4. Q. When you began to think, what did you learn about the world outside yourself?
A. When I began to think, I learned that my father and mother loved me, and deserved my love.
5. Q. When did your parents begin to love you?
A. My parents loved me before I knew them, or could love them in return.
6. Q. Are there others who love you and deserve your love?
A. Yes, I have other friends near and far, some of whom I have never seen; and I have received many blessings through the labor of others who died before I was born; all these deserve my love and gratitude.
7. Q. Have you any other friend or benefactor?
A. Yes, God is my Benefactor, my Father, and my best Friend.
8. Q. Ought you to love God?
A. I ought to love God most of all; for he is my nearest Relative, my first and most faithful Friend.
9. Q. Who made you?
A. God made me.
10. Q. Of what did God make you?
A. God made my body of the dust of the earth, but my soul is not made as things in the outer world are made, but is born of God's own love and formed in his image.
11. Q. What is your soul?
A. My soul is my mind; my spirit; my moral nature.
12. Q. Which is your real self, your soul or your body?
A. My soul is my real self, and that which is most like to God.
13. Q. With what powers did God endow your soul?
A. God made me to know, to love, and to perform.
14. Q. What powers has God himself?
A. God has the same powers which in smaller measure he has given to me.
15. Q. Has God knowledge?
A. God has knowledge; for he created me with the power of knowing.
15. Q. Has God will?
A. God has will; for he created me with the power of will.
17. Q. Can God love and hate?
A. God can love and hate; for he has made me able to love and hate.
18. Q. What does God hate?
A. God hates sin.
19. Q. What ought you to hate?
A. I ought to hate all sin, especially my own wrongdoing, and put it far from me.
20. Q. What does God love?
A. God loves the good, the true, and the beautiful.
21. Q. How do you know that God loves the good, the true, and the beautiful?
A. God loves the good, the true, and the beautiful, because he has made me to love them.
22. Q. What ought you to love?
A. I ought to love all things good, and true, and beautiful; to seek to make these qualities my own; and to help all others to love and possess them.
23. Q. Since God made you to love these things, does he compel you to do so?
A. No, though God made me able to love the good, the true, and the beautiful, he also made me free to love or to hate, to choose or to refuse, so that my love may be my own free offering to him. This is God's highest gift to me, and I must take heed that I do not prove unworthy of his trust.
24. Q. How may we know God?
A. We may know God through our own moral character, our conscience, and our best aspirations and hopes; through nature and the beauty of the world which he has made; through the better impulses of all men, and the enlightened understanding and holy living of the best men; through the Bible; and through the life and teachings of Jesus Christ.

25. Q. What is the purpose of your present study?

A. The purpose of my present study is that I may know better the nature and the will of God; that I may learn the better to love him and all good things; and that I may do his will both now and evermore.

Oak Park, Ill.

THE PULPIT AND THE SOCIAL UNREST.

BY PEARSE PINCH.

THE blame for social unrest is to be placed chiefly at the door of the prosperous classes. At a ministerial gathering held recently in Chicago the trend of the discussion seemed to indicate that ministers were more inclined to utilize the prosperous than to set them right. It is the contention of the writer that the social unrest which characterizes our times has its tap-root in certain economic heresies which prevail among the prosperous classes.

If we grant that combination instead of competition is the true plan for conducting the world's business we cannot approve of evil-doing in order that the better plan may come. The crushing out of competition and shutting men out of their just share in the large concern which absorbs their business; the bribing of legislators; the undue influence brought to bear on courts and juries, all constitute a tale of wrong against which a sense of outraged justice cries out.

Such things as men have said about "tainted money," or touching the inquiry, "Who are the lawless classes?" ought never to have been said at all; or else ten thousand pulpits ought to be thundering the same until the world should hear nothing else.

The responsibilities of the men of wealth are not met in works of large benefaction. Though they bestow all their goods to feed the poor, or build colleges and libraries, it does not meet the need. What the world demands today is to be assured that the great fortunes have been gathered righteously. If his business will bear the light, the most useful thing the man of largest wealth could do to-day would be to take the world into his confidence. He should open his books and say: "You can see the method by which I became so wealthy; you can see for yourselves that no taint of wrong rests on my business." An exhibit of that sort would be the most useful service that any rich man could render. The discontented, sore, and bitter hearts of men are needing it.

Ministers ought also to be pointing out the degradation there is in unrighteous gain. The pulpit should also insist that the human life involved in business is, beyond all comparison, a greater thing than all the moneyed and material interests. The fact that one man gathers a fortune out of his business is of small value compared to the fact that multitudes are getting their living out of it. Business men must be taught to look past the counting room and see what their business is doing for the lives that are involved in it.

Men are not content in these days for the reason that they feel their manhood underrated, and money reckoned above it. So far as wages are concerned there has been little to justify recent strikes. What men are unconsciously resenting is the lie that is getting into life, that money counts for more than manhood. The pulpit can help the world not only to say, but to feel once more, that noble word of Robert Burns, that—

"A man's a man for a' that."

The pulpit can do little to allay discontent so long as those in high places give occasion for it. We can not reach professional agitators. They are largely atheistic, and have no use for us. The designing agitators are beyond our reach, for they have no conscience. Men of large responsibility and vast interests will hear and will be moved when the pulpit shall speak the courageous and adequate word.

Chicago, Ill.

A WEEK IN VENICE.

QUINCY L. DOWD.

WHO has ever had his week at Venice who did not echo the utterance of Howell's housekeeper, Giovanna, "Ma benedetta la mia Venezia" (but blessed be my Venice)! The charm of it all is quite enhanced by the fine crescendo of sensations which grows with every mile after the first bursting through the Alpine range via the St. Gotthard tunnel. When the stop at Airolo is made the sudden wealth of sunshine strikes the eyes as a gleam from that heavenly city where there is no night. The glory of the Italian lakes (though, by the way, they are partly Swiss) is a glory sui generis, their loveliness the standard by which to measure all other inland waters. To enjoy the mountain-encircled view at Lugano, and then to journey by boat and train to Como furnishes such a revel of ecstasy as borders on spiritual intoxication. One's senses fairly reel under the influence of excess of pleasant emotions. There is an abandon of natural beauty here which man's artistic taste and hand have turned to highest uses. Tiny hamlets clinging to the shore, that their graceful shapes and colors may be mirrored in the blue green lake, have for their setting clumps of olive and mulberry trees overhanging with curling vines so disposed as to show the artfully artless way of looking pretty. Then terrace on terrace, up the sheer precipice are seen vineyards whose southern exposure absorbs the sun's good cheer the year round. Here and there on jutting rocks at a great height stand towered church and fortified monastery or villas conscious of choosing the best places.

It is good fortune indeed to be so late in the season that the steamer connections on Lago Como are infrequent. Thereby one gets two hours at Menaggio to walk through the town and watch the market scenes on the open square before the church. Likewise at delightful Bellagio there is leisure for a stroll along the incomparable quay, or to watch the kneeling women busy at laundry work near the water's edge. Apparently all feminine Italy, not to mention Switzerland, are in the laundry business at this season, judging from the wholesale display of linen on rocks and hedges and improvised poles, the women and girls at their washing stands. They use either the long stone troughs at the public fountains or the river banks, making "blue Monday" last the whole week through. There certainly seems to be no lack of clothes to wash anywhere. At Como a rare experience was ours, viz., the densest fog ever known. And how its chill struck in, the very marrow congealing in one's bones! It is all very nice to breakfast under a glass-roofed conservatory of the hotel when there is sunshine in November, but a fog like this needs stove heat to battle it. Even at Milan this same demon of mist prevailed for a time, though to grumble at it would be a waste of ill-temper, seeing the rest of Europe suffers the same infliction, only worse. Rather let us be thankful that the sun by midday has overpowered the thick dampness and allows us the glorious vision from the Duomo's towers and pinnacled roofs.

In Milan is felt the new, throbbing life of young Italy. Here is the center of Republicanism and Socialism. Hence emanates the propaganda of ideas and movements which would dissever Italy from her dead past in order that the nation may create her future in accordance with her people's genius for democracy. The appearance of the citizens of the better class, as seen on the streets and in the cafes, makes a favorable impression. They are well built, show intellectual force, and look worthy of a great country with a new epoch of history-making in store. Riding from Milan to Verona the plains of Lombardy are a disappointment to the eye, so low, so level, so monotonous. True, the Alpine range to the north hovers still in view, and at Brescia the expanse of Lago Garda adds a pleasant break to the unvarying scene. But this most fertile region is otherwise a dull, uninteresting landscape, save as a romantic imagination pictures the scenes often enacted on the blood-saturated plain, for whose possession armies have fought inch by inch, as though it were another Esdraelion.

But Verona! that is another matter. Here is the unmolested haunt of romance in all its verity. Shades of Romeo and Juliet! Pleasing shapes in the persons of "The Two Gentlemen of Verona!" Your very habitat, the antique houses, the noisy squares crowded with rabble and hucksters, the swaggering soldiers, the finely-attired ladies and groups of girls with graceful mantillas, all hold their places with the air of its always having been so. So with the splendid, swift Adige making its grand loop round Verona, and spanned by bridges that have stood against countless floods. How queer those great, black barges anchored in midstream, carrying between them immense old water wheels for grinding corn or crushing tan bark! Then an afternoon at the partly demolished amphitheater that Diocletian built, but still sufficiently in repair to allow of acrobatic exhibitions in the arena with seats to accommodate ten or fifteen thousand spectators; isn't this enough to excite a momentary return of pagan taste for sport? Here in Verona one learns more about the Scalagers, those doughty rulers in their day—the ladder their crest. Typical "climbers" they were, hand-over-hand getting to the place they wanted, not ashamed of the Scala (ladder) name. Who wouldn't go a-laddering if he could attain eminence like theirs?

Another stretch of flatness, then you are conscious of the train's rolling out upon the very ooze of the lagunes among which somewhere Venice herself must lie. Is this not a delicious sensation, feeling that your own turn has come to pay homage to the Bride of the Adriatic? So here is the Grande Canal and a vaporetta landing at the very ucita, or exit, from the railway station. No trouble about a facchino, a dozen porters are only too eager to unhand you of your luggage. The man who officiously attends you onto the vaporetta unceremoniously conducts you off at the Rialto barge station, plunges ahead into a narrow street, soon has you struggling to keep him in sight as he forces a passage along the densely crowded Merceria (the principal thoroughfare of Venice about five feet broad in places), leading by many a dark and unexplained turn to the piazza San Marco. We are a trio party bound for pension "Deutsches Heim," just adjoining the famous Clock Tower and the Duomo. But who would expect to get there by turning off into this gloomy side portal! However, it proves to be the right place, and after ascending a spiral stone stairway of eighty-six steps, a room is reached, a kind of heavenly attainment. Lo! before us and beneath is spread the perfection of earthly beauty. Ruskin, nor Browning, nor Howells, during their stay in palaces here, had such a choice of sights at all times of the day and night as this from Deutches Heim. And how comfortable, how homelike, how inexpensive! Our coming to Venice is just out of season, to be sure, but then it gives us the monopoly of the natives, of the gondoliers, the beggars, the canals and islands with other desired things.

What better use of a foggy first morning than to risk losing oneself in the old Ghetto, there to find the Hebrew temple open. Being Sabbath, a service is in progress. Why not mount to the synagogue room? That scene within! Could anything be stranger, more incongruous? An assembly of about thirty men, well dressed, a strong business type of features, hats on, a scarf or tallith flung over the shoulders, a reader in the high, ornately-carved pulpit reading, in a jerky, rapid, intoning sing-song, the prayers, the other male voices chiming in with responses, all in the Hebrew tongue. It looked the most formal, unfeeling service ever perpetrated in religion's name. But who of us can understand or judge another's worship? Can it be that Jesus attended the same sort of synagogues in Galilee to take part in this kind of devotion? or that Paul and Barnabas joined fellow Jews in similar intonations and genuflections on their Sabbath days? One could but note a tablet let into the wall of the vestibule inscribed with the memorable notice, that on two occasions "the illustrious Sir Moses Montefiore prayed to God in this temple." It was a joy on Sunday to find the Church of Scotland service near by San Marco. We heard Rev. Alexander Robertson, D. D., discourse instructively and inspiringly on the art and worth of life-building illustrated by the similitude of building palaces at Venice. Much of his local lore he gave, at the same time making it only serve the higher purpose of his sermon. How little time for Venice, barely eight days! Still it is pleasant to think that one or two things worth while were left undone. This holds out hope for another visit. Not "See Venice and die," but live to see Venice again and again is the proper saying.

---

"Oh, to have dwelt in Bethlehem,
When the star of the Lord shone bright,
To have sheltered the holy wanderer
On that blessed Christmas night;
To have kissed the tender way-worn feet
Of the mother undefiled,
And with sweetest wonder and deep delight
To have attended the Holy Child.

Hush! Such a glory was not for thee;
But that care may still be thine,
For are there not still little ones to aid,
For the sake of the Child Divine?
Are there no wandering pilgrims now,
To thy heart and thy home to take?
And are there no mothers, whose weary hearts
You can comfort for Jesus' sake?"

—Selected.

CHRISTMAS IN INDIA.

ADELAIDE GAIL FROST.

RIGHT sunshine falling over the palm and banyan trees and touching the bright green of the lace-like tamarind trees; sunshine caressing the heavy heads of beautiful roses and the snow stars of the cork trees; sunshine brightening the wonderful scarlet and gold of the moruh blossoms and tempering every breeze with a delightful warmth and softness. Brown children about our orphanages are full of delighted anticipation, the same mysterious whispers are borne on the tropical breezes as on the cold, bracing winds of a home December. It is there, too, a season of mystery and happiness. The girls and boys are making, not garlands of evergreen and strands of popcorn, but wreaths of bright marigolds and long garlands of the shining green mango leaves. The man with sweetmeats for sale rises to his proper importance and dignity, and wonderful jalebis, gulab jamuns, barfi and halwa are weighed out by the seer (two pounds) under cover of the mission house with its guarded doors, for one must be circumspect when eyes, three times the number possessed by Argus, are very brown, very bright and very inquisitive. Busy brown fingers are hemstitching handkerchiefs, crocheting lace, molding mud mills or more elaborate figures designed by ambitious little clay modelers. Once I received the statue of a horseman carrying an umbrella. This gift was borne to me triumphantly but gingerly lest the horse's tail or the umbrella should fall off. In Miss Braybiel's room or Dr. Rosa Oxer's are neat rolls of bright cloth to delight the body and soul of some native woman. It is to be truly, as they call Christmas, "the Great Day." The children have learned the birth song on earth and the heaven song of the angels; they can sing in their own language "Silent night, hallowed night," and we know that early morning queer little croaking voices will be singing hoarse Christmas carols under our windows! Ah, I can hear now the soft scurry and patter of the bare, brown feet on Christmas morning!

If the home mail reaches us about Christmas time how eager we are for the kind, helpful greetings and our Christmas is a month long. Father has sent a loved book, there is mother's picture, there are calendars, handkerchiefs and books and, best of all, the letters that tell us India, our India, is not forgotten; that the work will go on, will grow, and our beloveds are "holding the ropes."

When the afterglow comes on Christmas day, drawing our eyes to the beautiful West, off in the home-way, we remember that Christ was born in the East, that our Light came to us from the East, and that close about us thousands live as though he had never been born, as though he had never lived, and seryed and left his message for every creature. The temple bells ring on to wake the gods, yonder a man bows to his ugly idol, there another weeps for his dead child without hope, and if we did not hear the children of our orphanages singing:

"Jesus, the Saviour, to Bethlehem came.

our heart would be faint and burdened that God's gift was all unknown. But this day some heard for the first time that "unto us a child is born and unto us a Son is given," and many a wise man in the East has had the message taken to him by the voice and life of a follower of the Christ-child. We of the West must point them to the brightness of the eastern Star, their eyes are dimmed by two thousand years of twilight, yea, even midnight, and they know not their Star. Let us announce his birth with joy and gladness. "Glory to God in the highest and on earth, peace, good will toward men."

THANKSGIVING.

EMILE L. PATTERSON.

OD is good. "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children." The natural impulse of the true heart is to render thanks unto the giver of every good and perfect gift, for "of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever." But of what are these thanks to consist? Is it to be the sacrifice of fools, which consisteth of words only? "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

"Were the whole realm of Nature mine,
That were an offering far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all."

Our thanksgiving must be a continual living for God. Nor can this be a negative living. Mere being good will not do. We must do good. A living sacrifice. A positive Christianity. Do something good as well as be nothing bad. Stand for something. Don't be a slave to public opinion, if it is wrong; but rise above the fog in public duty and in private thinking. Make public sentiment for the right and truth, though you are crucified on the cruel cross of carping criticism. Notice not the sneer and jeers of the rabble, though those near and dear be in it. Be yourself. Be not a conformer, but a reformer. Be an oak, not a vine. Wherever there is a tyrant, there must be a rebel. A wrong custom demands a brave soul to break it. A false idea demands some one to correct it. In society, in politics and in religion, stand for the right though the heavens fall.

Wait not for great occasions and times. If in our own town there are false ideas and practices, be a man, not a thing, and stand against them. Don't let it be said when you are old that the town in which you have lived is no better than it was twenty-five or fifty years ago. Discountenance that evil which puts cash before character. Away with that churchianity that has the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ with respect of persons. Be man enough to extend the hand of sympathy to those who need it, let others say what they will, remembering that inasmuch as ye do it not unto the least of these, ye do it not to the Lord of Judgment. Be a lover and a helper of humanity, and thereby a true servant of God.

This is the kind of gratitude that we should render to God. Not that that finds expression once a year in a holiday and a feast and perhaps a service; but a continual giving of ourselves to others.

Mount up the heights of Wisdom,
And crush each error low;
Keep back no words of knowledge
That human hearts should know.
Be faithful to thy mission
In service of thy Lord.
And then a golden chaplet
Shall be thy just reward.

THE "NOW" OF CHRISTMAS

G. B. F. HALLOCK, D. D.

A very meaningful Christmas legend is told among the Russian peasants. The wise men from the East, with their precious gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh, had started on their journey to the Infant Messiah. On their way across the deserts they saw a humble dwelling in which an old lady was engaged in household work. They told her that they were going to seek the Christ, and asked her to accompany them. She made answer, "I will come, but not now." She gave them her blessing, and promised to follow them as soon as her work was done. But when she was ready to go, the wise men had departed, and the beacon star in the heavens had disappeared.

"She did not find the Christ-Child;

'Tis said she seeks him still,

Over the wide earth roaming,

With swift remorseful will."

And although, according to the legend,

"She twines the Christmas garlands,

And lights the Christmas fires,

And leads the joyful carols

In all the Christmas choirs."

although the peasants pray,

"Attend her, holy angels,

Guard her, ye cherubim," her search for Christ is fruitless, because she did not improve the one golden opportunity of finding him who is the Savior of the world.

There is a deep truth wrapped up in this simple story, a story which, in some, though varied, form, finds expression among almost every people of earth. The "Now" of Christmas is a solemn thing to neglect. At this holy, happy Christmastide you are again invited to come to Christ. Say not the words of a possible fatal delay: "I will come, but not now!"

PLEASANTRIES.

"Say, pa, what was the Appian Way?" "Why, it was—er—just a way the Appians had, I suppose."—Chicago News.

During a discussion at a meeting of the Trinity College Historical Society upon the slight consideration attached to life by uncivilized nations, a speaker mentioned the extraordinary circumstance that in China if a man were condemned to death he could easily hire a substitute to die for him; "and," the debater went on, "I believe many poor fellows get their living by acting as substitutes in that way!"—London Spectator.

A good story is told of a Cardiganshire local preacher. He was declaiming one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons—unknown, of course, to his hearers—in a Bethel of miniature dimensions, which did not even possess a gallery. Toward the close he electrified the little congregation with the sentence, "And now I turn to you—the hundreds in the gallery."—Christian Life.

"I say, Teddy," said one little newsboy to another, "what are them things those fellows were talking about?—'bacteria' they call them." "Them are French things. They come from Paris; that is why they call them 'parasites!'" "No," said another, "they come from Germany; that is why they call them 'germs!'" "Not at all," said a third. "They are Irish; they come from Ireland, for I heard Dr. White call them 'Mike-crobes!'"

When Bishop Potter of New York was asked the other day what he thought of woman suffrage he made the diplomatic reply: "My dear madam, I have got got away beyond that; I am trying to make the best terms with the sex that I can obtain." This brings to mind the mot of William M. Evarts when asked by a lady if he did not think that woman was the best judge of woman. He replied: "Not only the best judge, madam, but the best executioner."

The porter at an Arkansas railroad eating house began to ring a large gong when the train stopped. The porter had heard some forcible expressions as to the quality of the food from those who had eaten on previous occasions. He kept on ringing, and as you know, a gong is worse than a church bell, it set a dog howling, and this gong was working with telling effect on a lean, lank hound standing on the platform. The porter stopped long enough to say, "What you howling for, dawg, you don't have to eat here."

The following incident, reported over twenty years ago to the South Middlesex Conference by its president, Hon. John C. Park, has probably never found its way into print. While waiting for the train at one of the Newtons, a delegate requested an Irishman to explain why the vane on a neighboring Unitarian church pointed due north and that on the orthodox church pointed in the exactly opposite and proper direction. His verdict was prompt and brief, "Arrah, it's for want of grase." The listeners were unable to decide whether it was a case of mispronunciation or of sarcasm.

Early in his career as a missionary to the Indians the late Bishop Whipple had journeyed into the Indian country to preach a sermon to the assembled Chippewas in Chief Good Thunder's village. Bishop Whipple had with him the costly garments of his office which he wore on such occasions, and it became necessary to leave them unguarded in the chief's tepee. It seems that the bishop had his doubts at that time as to the inherent honesty of the average Indian. Before leaving he asked, turning to Good Thunder: "Chief, do you think it will be safe to leave them here?" "Never fear, bishop," was the reply, "there isn't a white man within three miles of here."

Sheridan, the celebrated playwright, who was no sportsman, having gone one day on a shooting excursion, everything flew before him and his gun, despite his effort to secure something for his bag. On his return home with an empty bag he saw a man, apparently a farmer, looking at a flock of ducks in a pool. "What will you take," said Sheridan, "for a shot at those ducks?" The man looked at him with astonishment. "Will half a crown do?" The man nodded and Sheridan gave him the half-crown, taking his shot at the ducks. About half a dozen fell dead. As he was preparing to bag them he said to the man: "I think on the whole I made a good bargain with you." "Why," said the man, "they're none o' mine."

AT THE CHURCH

OUR PULPIT.

"PRESENT DAY GIANTS."

JAMES A. CHAMBERLIN.

"There were giants in the earth in those days."—Gen. vi. 4.

HIS text represents the wail of the morbid man who refuses to enter into the activities of life, and finds no fit leadership among the men of to-day. He views the men of yesterday, and, by comparing them with his own nothingness, calls them giants. Unwilling to follow his rightful leaders, he pines for the mighty men of the past.

If the wail were only the expression of dissatisfied do-nothings in the world, it would be of little account, but the cry regarding the ancient giants has connected with it an inference that no giants exist to-day, because there is no opportunity for giant life. This pseudo reverence for the great men of the past carries with it the poisonous pessimism that says: "There can be no giants now." It is discouragement boiled down and sugar-coated with a pious worship of ancient worthies. Cæsar, Napoleon and Wellington were great generals, but "there never will be any more." "There never will be another poet like Homer." "No more orators like Burt, Pitt and Webster." "No more preachers like Wesley, Whitefield, and Edwards." "No such statesmen as Madison and Jefferson." "There is no chance for such men to-day, and no demand for them."

This is a fair specimen of the idle talk of men who pretend to appreciate the greatness of the fathers, and with this pious plaint unnerve the ambition of youth. Were this simply the talk of imbecility, no protest from the pulpit would be in place, but in behalf of discouraged youth I purpose to enter an unqualified denial of the spirit of all this word. Did it not seem like impious rejection of sacred writ, I would affirm that there were no giants in those days. The men of yesterday were not so great as the men of to-day.

Physically, men are better than ever before. Fitzsimmons may safely challenge the world of yesterday, not because its pugilists are dead, but because he is a better man physically. The average man of to-day cannot wear the English armor discarded by giant warriors of a few years back. The collegian of to-day surpasses the ancient Olympian; Cicero and Demosthenes were giants in oratory, by comparison; orators were few and poor at that time, so these were easily noted. There are better preachers to-day than Wesley. Edwards is far surpassed in truthful presentation of the Word by modern sermon-makers.

Bismarck, Blaine and Gladstone overshadow ancient men of statecraft. Macaulay tells us that men usually put the golden age of England at a time "when noblemen were destitute of comforts which would be intolerable to a modern footman, and storekeepers breakfasted on loaves that would cause riot in a modern workhouse." So men are constantly placing the age of mental and spiritual greatness in times when men were conspicuous not so much for their own individual merit as because of the lack of ordinary merit among their fellows. In a very true sense we may say that in the light of the nineteenth century men there were no giants in those days.

Moreover, there never was a time more opportune for individual greatness than the present. There was never a greater call for giants than now; not a giant here and there, but a race of giants. Every profession is crowded with little men and is seeking for giants. Professions, like modern sky-scrapers, have vacant rooms on the top floor. Railroads are anxious for first-class men; editorial offices will give handsome salaries to skillful writers; pulpits seek commanding preachers; corporations seek in vain for properly qualified counsel; the nation calls for better statesmen; the colleges for better teachers; the merchants for better salesmen; the manufacturers for better artisans. "Top floors for rent" is hung out at every corner, inviting boys who are willing and able to climb the old-fashioned stairs. There is no elevator for carrying idle seekers to the top of business and professional life. Men who work at the head of a profession or business must have strength, and that strength best comes by toiling up to the high places.

Giants are not born, they are made. Inherited adaptability will have some hearing, but earned qualities will have more. Common strength, common sense, common honesty are the first requisites. The genius of hard work, frugality of time and power, controlled by an indomitable "I will," must enter into the make-up of a great man. Time, money and nerve power dissipated by young men, not in true recreation and relaxation, but in idle loitering, would, if truly directed, make many great.

Nor will we forget that "godliness is profitable." The giants spoken of in Genesis were grandsons of God; the giants of to-day are real sons of God. The strongest men are they that are strong in the Lord. Jesus is the giant of the ages, and the nearer related to Jesus the more gigantic is man. Christian qualities are realizable assets, for Christ rules to-day more than all earthly potentates. Men who scoff at religion desire Christ-like qualities in their employes.

Faith, hope and charity are fit emblems for the market, for commerce and the professions. There are Calvays along the road to greatness; men must bear crosses if they would rise. "It is good for man that he bear the yoke in his youth." It is more than good, it is essential, and the Christ-yoke is the typical emblem by which men may work themselves, by the grace of God, to be present-day giants.

Torrington, Conn.

"Put sadness away from thee," the Shepherd of Hermas says, "for truly sadness is the sister of half-heartedness and bitterness. Array thee in the joy that always finds favor in God's sight and is accepted with him; yea, revel thou therein. For every one that is joyous worketh and thinketh those things that are good."

God save the poor and weary ones, for Christ our King was poor
 And they made his infant cradle behind a stable door;
 In palace chambers dwelt he not, nor sought soft beds for sleep.
 O never grasp your gold too hard, or sneer at human woe.
 But let gay hearts and generous hands together always go.
 MORTIMER COLLINS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

THAT WHICH COMES FIRST.

Topic Jan. 5, 1902—Ref. Gen. 12: 7, 8; Matt. 6: 33; 8: 22.

GLANCE at the topics for the coming year shows a rich prospect for all who really want to know more of the Bible. There are infinite possibilities in the study of the uniform topics selected by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Almost unconsciously the youth and young manhood and womanhood of our land (and, in a degree, of all lands) are becoming enriched with the treasures of Scripture. And this means much for the religious advancement of the age in all that makes for enlightened enthusiasm, and the unity of all believers in the great essentials of faith. Herein is the chief glory of the Christian Endeavor movement.

The Altar First.

"And the Lord appeared unto Abram and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land; and there builded he an altar unto the Lord who appeared unto him. And he removed from thence unto a mountain on the east of Bethel, and pitched his tent, having Bethel on the west and Ai on the east; and there he builded an altar unto the Lord, and called upon the name of the Lord."

The beautiful lesson in this for us is that the altar comes first. And this is just what we have forgotten, or are in peril of forgetting. The very luxuries of our modern times—the treasures of literature in books and papers—these tempt us to neglect of our private and family altars. Deep in the delights of our beautiful things, and cumbered, almost overwhelmed, by the profusion of helps to Bible study, we overlook the chief things—the place of prayer in the sanctuary of our own hearts, the Bethels of our crowded lives. I believe that what we need to remember is this—nothing can take the place of prayer. The altar has been first in all the heroic lives of the past, from Abel to Abram, and Martin Luther and John Wesley.

The Kingdom First.

The altar must always be first in our individual and family life. The kingdom of God and his righteousness must come first in our social and organic life. And here, I feel, we need to make an advance in our modern-day thought. Great emphasis is put upon the expression, "The kingdom of God is within you." As an emphasis of the spiritual this is needed. But the kingdom of God, in the scriptural sense, is not an immaterial something, a sort of etherialized ethical sentiment, but an organized body of believers, of which the Church, as used in the apostolic sense, is the visible representation. The kingdom of God is the exponent of his righteousness. The two are linked together. Whatever concerns the moral and spiritual welfare of the community falls within the bounds of the kingdom of heaven and under the rule of his righteousness. Some clear thinking is needed here, a better definition of the kingdom. The true idea is given in the marginal reading: "The kingdom of God is in the midst of you." And such the kingdom is to be in its loftiest sense—the great ethical thought, force, organization, in the world for the promotion of the principles of righteousness, temperance, and good citizenship. The emphasis put upon "good citizenship" promises better things for the future. Christian citizenship comes within the all-inclusive meaning of the phrase, "kingdom of heaven." "His righteousness" includes everything that pertains to human well-being. Sheldon's "In His Steps" is an attempt to express this better conception of the kingdom of God and his righteousness. That it met with such sympathetic response throughout the Christian world proves the trend of our modern thought. And the Endeavor movement has done much, but must do more, to foster this scriptural and humanitarian idea of Christ's kingdom.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

THE PROMISE OF POWER—Acts 1:1-11, 14.

Lesson for Jan. 5, 1902.

Leading Thought: Greater Things of the Spirit Era.

Golden Text: Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you—Acts 1: 18.

Time: May. A. D. 30.

Place: Mount of Olives near Bethany.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

ELIAS A. LONG.

The Work of the Year.

THE lessons for the first six months are taken from the book of Acts, as far as the sixteenth chapter. The remainder of the year is occupied with Old Testament history, from the giving of the manna in the Desert to the period of Samuel.

The Book of Acts.

This book lays no claim to completeness of material. It is a rapid survey of the work of the Church from the ascension of Jesus to the arrival of Paul at Rome. It does not give all the facts, nor even outline the work of most of the apostles. Two of them, Peter and Paul, are the figures chiefly kept in view. It is not therefore "The Acts of the Apostles," but rather "Acts of apostles," i. e., some acts of some apostles.

It was written by Luke, the Gentile convert and companion of Paul, who had already written the Gospel that bears his name, and to which he refers in 1:1 as "the former treatise." His acquaintance with the facts grew out of his journeys with Paul and his knowledge of the events of the period gained during his visits in Palestine.

The purposes of the book were apparently:

1. To describe the work of Luke's friend and teacher, the apostle Paul.
2. To present a picture of the Church during its early growth.
3. To exhibit the process of conversion by a variety of examples.
4. To emphasize the work of the Holy Spirit, under whose leadership the great commission was executed by the apostles.

The Book of Acts was probably written not far from the year 80 A. D.

Verse 1. Continued Ministry.

Wherever Christian work is done, the Lord is the true actor, through the heart and spirit impelling men to bring forth the fruit of the Spirit (Rom. 14:17; Gal. 5:22-25), just as Jesus would do, if he were here.

The Lord works with men. Mark 16:20; Ch. 3:6-16; 7:59; 9:5, 34; 10:13; 12:11; 18:9; 23:11.

Verse 2. Kingdom of the Spirit.

"Through the Spirit." R. V. The Holy Spirit always has been the active agent or impulse in Divine work, whether as manifested in God (Gen. 1:2; 6:3), or in his Son (Heb. 9:14; John 3:34; Math. 4:1; Rom. 8:9), or in those made in his image. Vo. 8; Rom. 8:14.

Verse 3. Great Things of the Kingdom.

"By many infallible proofs." The resurrection of Jesus is the best attested fact of ancient history. To-day the date on every letter, document, and newspaper points to the ascended Lord's supreme place in the world's affairs.

"Speaking the things concerning the kingdom." But the greatest of these is love; love to God; love to man. Luke 24:27, 32; 10:27; 1 Cor. 13:13.

Verse 4. The Great Promise.

Nothing less than the Spirit of the Father, the Spirit of power, is to be imparted to all who would receive. Ch. 2:38; John 1:12. The promise is both an old one and a new one. Is. 44:31; Ezek. 36:27; Joel 2:28-32; John 14:16-26, etc.

But there were extraordinary as well as ordinary manifestations of the Spirit.

Verse 5. Greater Baptism.

John's ministry and baptism of water had stirred Judea from end to end; the greater baptism of the Holy Spirit was with mighty power to stir the world to its uttermost parts. For the key to that greater baptism read Luke 9:23; Acts 2:38.

Verse 6. Asking Amiss.

"Restore again the kingdom." Their dreams were of a glorious, secular kingdom as that of David and Solomon, and they to be lords and senators. The longing for earthly glory, who has not felt it? Yet it is through this that the devil seeks to gain power over us as he sought to do over Jesus. Matt. 4:8.

Verse 7. The Future Is God's.

"Not for you to know." The Divine Word is not designed to answer curious queries, but to make wise unto salvation. Note the things that Paul was determined to know. 1 Cor. 2:2.

Verse 8. The Greater Power.

"Ye shall receive power." They had said, "Lord wilt thou?" (V. 6.) He replies, "Ye shall receive power." There are promises of power for "greater works" than even Christ did. John 14:12. It means the "Lo I am with you" (Matt. 28:20), the "Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2:20.

"Ye shall be witnesses." It is the business of Christians to follow in the steps of the Great Witness "who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession." 1 Tim. 6:13. They were to go forth to leaven, sweeten, and redeem the world by witnessing through the power of Christ within themselves.

They were to begin unarmed, except the sword of the Spirit, among bitterest enemies in Jerusalem and must go even to hateful neighbors in Samaria. John 4:9; Matt. 5:43-48.

Verse 9. The Unseen Kingdom.

"Received out of sight." Passed to the universe of the unseen whence proceeds all power. Acts 5:3; 7:5, 6.

Verse 10. Angel Service.

"As he went up two men." There were angels attending his ascension as angels had attended his forthcoming and his resurrection. And angels will accompany Jesus on his return.

Verse 11. A Living Savior.

"Why stand ye gazing up?" God calls us from gazing upward to carry the good news of his love to the needy of the earth. John 20:17.

But the 'unseen Christ stands even now knocking at the hearts of men for entrance. Rev. 3:20.

Verses 12-14. Ten-Day Prayer Service.

"Continued with one accord in prayer." The greatest revival in the world was preceded by a ten-day prayer meeting. Do we pray enough for the church, the Sunday school, and for individuals?

"And Mary." This is the last glimpse we have of the blessed mother of Jesus, and that in the beautiful attitude of prayer.

Concluding Thoughts.

God is a spirit.

The spirit world is the real world of power and the source of all things. Gen. 1:2. It existed before the material universe and is eternal.

Man was made a spiritual being in the image of the Divine (Gen. 1:25) and although he became alienated from God by sin, yet through our Savior's death it was made possible for the power of the Holy Spirit to be shared by all who will believe.

Christ's love, sacrifice, and heroism give to life a new meaning and a new impulse, even the Holy Spirit, to the end that all the world may be brought to accept him as Redeemer, King and Lord.

THE LESSONS IN A NUT SHELL

Size, 2 1/4 x 5 1/2 inches
128 pages

THE VEST POCKET Sunday School Lesson COMMENTARY

International Series
FOR THE YEAR 1902

BY
Rev. DeLoss M. Tompkins, D. D.

---

THIS is the fourth annual volume of this valuable help. While some have paid it the compliment of imitation, none have equaled it, and it stands in a class by itself for Originality, Soundness and Reliability.

It Contains:

- With each lesson: The Historical Data; the Revisions; the Statement of the Lesson; a most unique outline for study or the blackboard; a daily reading scheme on the lessons for the entire year, and a commentary and reflections on the separate verses and suggestions of the lesson. In addition there are numerous other helps, purely original, such as Library References, Dictionary, Devotional Readings and Study, an Elaborate Analysis of the Acts of the Apostles, calender, record pages, etc., etc.

Compact==Concise==Convenient

A Pocket Companion for Busy People, Adapted to the needs of the Pupil, the Teacher, or the Class.

THE following commendations are suggestive of the favor this book has won, yet no word can be said that will speak as does the book itself. It is worth many times its cost to the person who will buy and use it:

- International S. S. Evangel says: "This little book gives on each lesson what would require many hours to acquire, and all better than but very few men in America could prepare. *** It is at once scholarly, spiritual and practical, and in convenience and serviceability EXCELS OTHER HELPS."
- Association Men: "Commends itself at first glance. *** Particularly appropriate for the busy business man."
- The Advance: "Condensation as a fine art is exhibited in this book. Remarkably suggestive and helpful."
- Sunday School Times: "Vest Pocket Commentary is an unique and reasonably successful attempt to enable busy people to prepare their Sunday School lessons in their 'one spare moment.' *** The 'Reflections' are excellent."
- The Baptist Union: "The pith and marrow of the topics are given, the things that must be said to ensure a first grasp of the lesson. It will be of ready value to those who would gain a bird's eye view of the theme at a glance."

MANY SAY:

"I could not do without it."

STYLES AND PRICES

- REGULAR EDITION, bound in red morocco, round corners, gold edges.....25 cents each; $2.50 per doz.
- INTERLEAVED EDITION, bound in red morocco, gold edges, two blank ruled pages with each lesson for notes.....35 cents each; $3.50 per doz.

Sent on receipt of price or FREE AS A PREMIUM for one new subscriber to The Christian Century.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
358 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

THE HOME

The Procrastinator's Lullaby.

The letter that I ought to write,
And put off day to day,
The many tasks I ought to do
The calls I ought to pay,
The social favors that I owe,
And should return—some way
I think of them and yawn—heigh-o-o!
I'll wait another day.

The sick I ought to go and see,
The garments I should mend,
The books I promised to return,
Oh, torments without end!
They all rise up like skeletons
And mock me, but someway
I think of them and yawn—heigh-o-o!
I'll wait another day.

The poem that I ought to write,
The fame I should attain,
The laurels that my hands would reach,
The name I hope to gain,
They urge me, scourge me, beckon me,
Reville me, but someway
I sit and think and yawn—heigh-o-o!
I'll wait another day.

The little good I ought to do,
The poor I ought to aid,
The weak I should lend succor to,
All in my mind arrayed
March angrily and to and fro,
I ought to—but someway
I sit and dream and yawn—heigh-o-o!
I'll wait another day.

The preparations I should make
For better life some day,
The medicines that I should take,
The prayers I ought to pray.
They troop before me to and fro,
And call me, but someway
I don't feel like it now—heigh-o-o!
I'll wait another day.

Since you're my friend—a valued friend—
I don't mind telling you,
To do 'em all I do intend—
The tasks I ought to do—
I thought this morning this would be
The day, but now, someway,
I'm tired; I don't believe—heigh-o-o!
I'd better—work—to-day!

—Bismarck Tribune.

My Little Man.

BY KATHLEEN WATSON.

Concluded.

TOWARD evening he became gradually calmer, his temperature sank sub-normally, the fever left him; they told me he was dying. He smiled his tiny conscious smile at me once more, and asked for Dainty—but still they whispered in my ear that he was dying, dying fast. Together for the last time we talked in fragments of the things we loved, of the heaven where we should meet, of the world where pain and prison, aching backs and sorrowing hearts, are things unthought of and unknown, of the shining time when we should see and know what here it sometimes is so hard to understand—that God is love alone. Then I remembered that across the streets and squares was one in whose life a great, strange crisis, too, had perhaps been reached; and I knew that the time had come for dying lips to speak that last pathetic message from the dead.

So I penciled off a hasty line, bidding her to come at once to hear that which little Waldo had to tell her.

And, as we waited, I told him that the beautiful lady who had worn his primroses was none other than his own mother, and she whom father had loved always—that, if he himself could tell her so, she might be quite happy once again.

He smiled as even I had never seen him smile before—he, whose entire childish heart was just the shrine for father's memory. The knowledge that there was one thing still for him to do, some one still to be made "quite, quite happy" for that dear father's sake, touched his tiny dying face with a glory that it was worth a lifetime to have lived to see. As the minutes sped, he turned over restlessly once or twice in my arms and looked toward the door, but he did not speak. It seemed almost as though he knew that he must keep the little strength that was slipping so quickly from him, keep it for father's message, that not one word might fail. Presently, however, he spoke faintly:

"My verses, Nell, dear. Say my verses to me." He was thinking of his favorite hymn, a hymn Barbara had taught him underneath the limes at home, a hymn resplendent with the imagery which goes straight to the hearts of little children. I do not know if the words have ever been printed, but here they are, as I learned them from him—as in that sweet and solemn hour I gave them back to him:

In the paradise of Jesus
There are many homes of light,
And they shine beyond the darkness
With a radiance clear and bright.
There are sounds of many voices
In the golden streets above,
Filling all the air with gladness,
Blended in eternal love.

Can we see the happy faces
Of the dear ones gone before?
They are ready now to greet us
When we gain the blessed shore.
Then the pearly gates unfolding,
Never shall be closed again;
We shall see within the city
Jesus with his white-robed train.

After that he lay very still, always with my fingers held tightly in his hand. Once or twice I thought he slept, yet knew that he was watching, waiting still. The beating of his pulse slackened, then at intervals quickened fitfully again. Long shadows swept across the room; a clear yellow glow shone and deepened in the western sky; at last in the tender silence—she came.

Softly, so softly that at first I did not hear her, like a fair white angel she drew near the bed. Then he let my fingers go and smiled at her, and stretched his tiny arms toward her. No anguished exclamation, no broken-hearted cry escaped her, but I dimly guessed her torture as she knelt beside him and buried her face ashamedly in her hands. One by one great slow tears fell from between her fingers; every now and then her body writhed as if in more than mortal agony; she could not speak or lift her eyes to look at the little face so close to her.

"Mother!" he whispered, gathering all his failing strength together for a final effort: "dear mother, my mother, I am so glad you've come! I've been waiting and waiting to tell you something—something so beautiful—and I thought you'd never come!"

After that he lay back wordlessly on the pillows, but in a short time he turned to me.

"Lift me up a little, please, dear Nell; I want to tell mother—my dear mother—what father said. Are you crying, mother? Do not cry. Because, listen—father always loved you, always. Don't cry any more—my—dear—mother—father would like to think you were quite, quite happy—because he always loved you. He said so—"

Then I only remember a long, sweet silence in that shadowy room of death. She was holding fast his tiny hand, the great tears fell, she made no other sign or sound of pain. The curtains waved ever so lightly to and fro as the quiet evening breeze swept in. Barbara's wrinkled old hands trembled noiselessly amongst the glasses and bottles on the table near the bed; it seemed as though they ached and burned to do yet one more thing for him for whom all earthly help was unavailing; bits of prayer hovered on her quivering lips; the clear, kind old eyes that had looked out bravely on sixty years of chequered life, were dim with a piteous longing.

Then, as we kept watch in the gathering twilight, military strains from the band of a regiment on parade were presently wafted up to us from one of the streets around. It was a glorious but unusual music, solemn, tender, full of rest; yet, in the distance one heard, as it were, the battle song of brave men going to their death, of dying conquerors entering into everlasting peace. To us who listened there, it had a more than earthly meaning, echoing, as it did, about the presence of that tiny wounded soldier who had fought his fight so well. Suddenly, as the strains drew near and nearer, he started up, saying: "Listen, Nell, dear—it is a band!"

His cheeks flushed brightly; his blue eyes shone, he tossed back his curls, and said—but this time very faintly: "Mother, dear mother, do you hear, too?"

Those were the last conscious words he spoke, I think. After that we only heard scattered phrases, broken expressions of love undoubting, undismayed. At the last, her arms, not mine, were holding him; her kisses, hers alone, comforted him. His work on earth was done; he had saved a soul alive.

* * *

Softly darkness was over all the land and sea; from the clock in the old church tower midnight rang out across the barley fields and the heather slopes; the tale was told.

And that part of it that he told not, since men of honor and fine instincts rarely speak to one woman of their most intimate feelings for another—that part I think to see more clearly than the rest. That grand old place in the dear south country, the place that little Waldo loved so well; the baronial pile in northern lands; the stately house in town—I think I know why no woman will ever reign over these with him, as wife. In heaven two are waiting for the only one he has ever loved; among the angels two are walking in and out, waiting to shower on her the love she failed to answer to on earth; not even in thought may he mar the radiance of that reunion, the perfection of that trinity of love.

Sometimes I hear of her. The great places of the earth know her now no more. She has laid aside her state and luxury of life. Where the poor are poorest, the suffering most neglected, and the struggle very hard—above all, where little children stretch their tiny arms to a dark and loveless world—there she moves.

The tragedies of lives need not be written in chapters—sentences will do. Hers perhaps might be written thus: She lost, she understood, she lives anew.

THE END.

THE QUIET HOUR.

(The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.)

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M. A.

THE PROMISE OF POWER.

"Ye shall receive power; after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."—Acts 1: 8.

Monday, December 30—Acts 1: 1-14.

Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." Here is the power which quickens men and women into witnesses of Christ. Before they are filled with the Spirit, the apostles are disappointing, slow of heart to believe, quickly dismayed by opposition, failing to grasp, themselves, and, much more, failing to publish abroad the most elementary lessons of the Gospel. After he has come, they are possessed by the truth and valiant for it. It dominates their souls; it scatters their alarms; it is pealed out in trumpet tones from their lips; it passes from them to convict and conquer others.

Yes, it is the baptism of the Holy Ghost which alone can make me a prophet of God.

Tuesday, December 31—Luke 24: 44-53.

When the Holy Spirit, "the promise of the Father," is mine, I am marvelously ennobled. Here is the power which refines men and women into saints of God.

The Mystics said that there are three stages on the road to sainthood: Purification, illumination, union. Upward to each of these stages it is the task and the joy of the Holy Ghost to conduct me.

He purifies. No besetting and darling sin can lodge side by side with him in one heart. At any cost, by any discipline, he cleanses and transfigures me, until I am changed into the image and the stainlessness of my Lord.

And he illumines. When I receive his teaching, the Bible shines as with the light of "glad confident morning." He who was its author becomes in my experience its expositor and interpreter; and I know for myself the meaning of William Cowper's line, "A glory gilds the sacred page, majestic like the sun."

And he unites. It is the crowning mystery and the consummate gladness. He infuses into me a life which is nothing lower than the life of Jesus Christ.

Wednesday, January 1, 1902—Matthew 10: 1-15

This New Year I crave the power I read of in these verses. May mine be the power which converts men and women into sons and daughters of the Father.

All down the ages I see the Holy Spirit working his wonders. I see it on the day of Pentecost. And at the Reformation in the sixteenth century, multitudes, led by him, press near to God. And in John Wesley's day, and George Whitefield's, sleeping souls are roused and regenerated from Cornwall to Cumberland. And the same thrice-blessed story reaches me from the life-story of Charles Spurgeon and Mr. Moody; and from many a mission field in Africa and India and China and the islands of the sea.

Ah, well! but round me, at this hour, conversions ought to be much more numerous and much more manifest. Are they not far too rare? Do I not mourn their comparative absence? It is because I, and others, have not been looking sufficiently to, and depending sufficiently upon, the power of the Holy Spirit. Let me welcome him now in larger measure, and from me cures will flow, as fragrance flows from the flowers, and living water from the spring, and light from the sun.

Thursday, January 2—John 14: 1-19.

"I will pray the Father," Jesus said, "and he shall give you another Paraclete, that he may be with you forever." So the endowment of the first century remains the endowment of the twentieth century; and the one thing which is required is that I should use the supernatural grace which is not far from every one of us. If my own life is nerveless and ineffective; if the armies of God are working a mournfully small deliverance on the earth; if there are few conversions of sinners into saints and of enemies into friends—it is not because the Fire is quenched or the Power withdrawn; it is because I am not receiving the immeasurable resources of heaven which are freely put at my disposal. God has not revoked the baptism of the divine Spirit. God, in truth, has no need to repeat the baptism; once for all he sent the Spirit to a world which demands his regeneration and renewal as indispensably as it demands the Cross and redemption of the well-beloved Son.

Friday, January 3—John 14: 20-31.

"He shall teach you all things"—the Master promised of the Holy Spirit, who was to come in his room and to perpetuate his work.

Those who speak for Christ have, in my time, many admirable qualities. Never was biblical scholarship more exact, more anxious to arrive at the truth regarding the sacred books, more abundantly justified by the striking discoveries which it has made. Never was there a more painstaking endeavor to communicate to all who will listen, the real meaning of Scripture, or a more widely diffused eloquence to give the proclamation point and pathos and force. Never was work in the harvest field of Christ more carefully and more systematically organized. Never in the history of Christianity were philanthropy and self-sacrifice more zealous in seeking to win the skeptical and the outcast both at home and far away.

And yet, and yet, I want the supernatural power which, having first taught me, will make me a teacher of others in deed and in truth. When Henry Venn preached, men went down before him "like slaked lime." When Ludwig Hofacker spoke of Jesus, the heads of his listeners were instinctively bent as the corn is bent by the autumn breeze. I would that I stood in the same apostolical succession. I would that my words, like Luther's, were half-battles—no, not half battles, but complete and absolute triumphs.

This, then, is the secret. Let me receive the Holy Ghost in the quietness of the chamber where I am alone with God, and in public my Lord will win his captives and his servants through me. Enlightened, I will enlighten. Made wise myself, I shall impart wisdom to many.

Saturday, January 4—John 15: 17-27.

"When the Comforter is come," I am indeed equipped and strong. It is not easy to describe the Power from on high which uplifts and energizes me. Power, even on its lower levels, eludes and escapes exact definition. Light and heat, the wind and the sea, the storm which roots up the forest trees and the dew whose gentleness beautifies all the face of nature, are every one invested with the mysterious quality of power; yet who shall explain in what the quality consists? But, if its secret baffles my discovery, I am a spectator of its effects; I can study it in the results which it brings about; I know it by its fruits.

Just so it is with the almightiness of the Holy Spirit. It defies my analysis. It is inexplicable by my logic. But it grows plain to me in its issues and achievements. I have the witness in myself. I am compelled, as Mr. Ruskin phrases it, to say, not "There has been a great effort here," but "There has been a great power here." I awake, like Jacob at Bethel, to confess that I am in the house of God and at the gate of heaven.

Sunday, January 5—John 16: 1-14.

If the canon of Scripture is closed, there are discoveries to be made still in that illimitable field by him who follows the leading of the Holy Spirit. I remember how Edward Winslow reports John Robinson: "He was very confident the Lord had more truth and light yet to break forth out of his Word. Though there were precious shining lights in past times, yet God had not revealed his whole will to them; and were they now living, saith he, they would be as ready and willing to embrace further light as that they had received. But withal he exhorted us to take heed what we received for truth, and well to examine and compare and weigh it with other Scriptures."

So, if I will but study my Bible with God's own Spirit for my tutor, there are mysteries still to be unveiled to me, and I may sing, "Glory to God for all the grace I have not tasted yet!"

Business Men N. B.

EXTRAORDINARY CHRISTMAS OFFER

The Christian Century and Christian Melodies

$$20 + 15 = 20$$

$$40 + 15 = 30$$

How can  $20 + 15 = 20$ ? That is no puzzle to a good business man. Business in Christianity solves many problems. Your Sunday School or Church needs one hundred first-class song books. Your Sunday School Superintendent knows that Christian Melodies sell for $20 per hundred. You know that ten subscriptions to The Christian Century is worth $15. We need money for our growing business. You need song books for your growing church and school. Send us ten dollars ($10) at once and your promise to send us a club of ten new subscribers within thirty days, at one dollar each ($10 additional) and we shall ship you one hundred copies of Christian Melodies.

You Pay the Freight

How can  $40 + 10 = 30$ ? Send us twenty dollars ($20) and your promise to secure ten new subscribers for The Christian Century at one dollar each ($10 additional) and we will ship your Sunday School or Church two hundred copies (worth $40) of Christian Melodies. This is how

$$40 + 15 = 30$$

$$20 + 15 = 20$$

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., 358 Dearborn St., Chicago

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

The Girl Nobody Loved.

She was sure that nobody liked her. She had told herself so again and again with a queer tightening about her heart that was like a real pain. And she had tossed her head and set her lips in a defiant little smile. Nobody should know that she cared. Never!

It was on her eighteenth birthday that Aunt Elizabeth made a suggestion which caused the girl to open her eyes, and then to laugh a little. It was sure an odd idea—so like Aunt Elizabeth!

"Then, I'm to 'hold up' everybody I meet till I've said something brilliant?" she observed. "Not exactly," and Aunt Elizabeth smiled, unruffled, "but I've noticed that you pass your acquaintances with a mere nod or a curt 'good-morning.' I wish you would try the experiment of saying something pleasant to each one, unless there is some good reason against it."

"It will grow rather tiresome," said the girl, and she shrugged her shoulders.

"Try it for a week," suggested Aunt Elizabeth; and rather to her own surprise, the girl found herself giving the promise.

She came very near forgetting her pledge when she met Mrs. Anderson on the street the next morning; in fact, she had passed with her usual uncompromising nod, when the recollection of her promise flashed into her mind. She prided herself on being a girl of her word, and she turned quickly.

"How is Jimmy today?" she said, speaking out the first thing that came into her mind.

There was a good deal of detail in Mrs. Anderson's answer. Jimmy had been sick with the measles, and then had caught cold and been worse. Mrs. Anderson poured out her story as if it was a relief to find a listener, and as she talked on, that particular listener found herself more interested than she would have believed possible in Jimmy and his mother. She said that she had some old scrapbooks which Jimmy might enjoy looking over, and Mrs. Anderson flushed and thanked her with more gratitude than the slight favor seemed to warrant.

At the very next corner was Cissy Bailey, and the girl wondered if her promise covered the washerwoman's daughter and people of that sort. But she did not let herself wonder very long.

"It was very kind of you to bring home the clothes so early last week, Cissy. I was in a hurry for that shirtwaist."

Cissy Bailey did not know what to answer. She smiled in an embarrassed way, and looked up and then down. But the girl whom nobody liked had seen something in the uplifted eyes which warmed her heart and made that one-sided conversation something to remember.

She stopped Mrs. White to ask her if she would like to read the book she had just finished, and she patted little Barbara Smith's soft cheeks as she inquired if the new baby sister had grown at all. When she could think of nothing else she said, "Hasn't this been a beautiful day?" and her earnestness rather surprised some people, who had not had opportunities for realizing that there was anything unusual about the day. The days went by, and she did not find opportunity to say anything very brilliant.

By the time the week was over the girl whom nobody liked had learned a valuable lesson. She had found out that hearts respond to cordiality and kindness, just as the strings of one musical instrument vibrate in unison with the chord struck in another. It is a new discovery, since long ago it was written in a wise book, "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly"; yet this is one of the truths that each person must rediscover on his own account. And the girl who was learning to love every one and was tasting the joy of being loved, thanked God that she had not waited any longer before finding out the wonderful secret for herself.—Young People's Weekly.

A Brave Boy.

When the cruiser Boston went into action in the battle of Manila bay, one of the powder boys took off his coat hurriedly and it went over the rail into the water. He turned to the nearest officer and asked permission to jump overboard and recover it. Naturally the request was refused, so the boy went to the other side of the ship, climbed down the ladder, swam around to where the coat was floating and came back with it. The action was noticed, and the officer ordered him put in the brig. After the battle the boy was court-martialed and found guilty of disobedience of orders, and he made no defense. Being in command of the fleet, Commodore Dewey had to review the findings of the court. He sent for the lad and asked him in a kindly way why he had risked punishment for an old coat. The boy broke into tears and explained that his mother's picture was in the coat pocket and he could not bear to lose it. The gallant commodore fairly picked the boy up in his arms, and then ordered him to be instantly released and pardoned. "Boys who love their mothers enough to risk their lives for their pictures cannot be imprisoned in this fleet," he said.—Selected.

The Eye That Watches.

When some one told Robbie that the eye of God is always watching us, the little fellow pondered uneasily for a minute, and then demanded:

"Well, what kind of watchin' is it? Tim Brown always watches me in school, so he can tell the teacher if I whisper, and get me bad marks if I don't fold my arms; he's always tryin' to catch me breakin' the rules. But father watches me when we're on the beach. He laughs to see me splash the water, and he tells me when there's a big wave comin'. He keeps watch so I won't get in too deep, and so he can help me in a minute. I'm not a bit afraid 'cause I know he's right there. I like his kind of watchin'. Now, what kind is God's?"

It is the eye of the heavenly father, Robbie, tireless and tender, guarding us from evil, noting every danger, and watchful to help and to save.

Good news from heaven the angels bring,
Glad tidings to the earth they sing;
To us this day a child is given,
To crown us with the joy of heaven.

—Martin Luther (sixteenth century).

A Merrie Christmas to you,
For we serve the Lord with mirth,
And we carol forth glad tidings,
Of our holy Savior's birth.

So we keep the olden greeting,
With its meaning deep and true,
And wish "a Merrie Christmas
And a happy New Year" to you.

General Church News

RELIGIOUS WORK IN OUR NEW POSSESSIONS.

In Porto Rico.

The response to religious effort in Porto Rico has been very encouraging. It is found to be a fruitful missionary field. About two years ago the Baptists began work there. They report over 200 baptized and formed into churches in San Juan, Ponce, Rio Pedras, Caguas and Adjuntas. Rev. H. P. McCormick, general missionary, is located at San Juan, Rev. A. B. Rudd at Ponce, Miss Ida Hayes, missionary teacher at Rio Piedras and San Juan, Mrs. J. P. Duggan working at Ponce, La Playa, Adjuntas and Yauco. There are also four native helpers. From one church at Ponce with forty-six members, three churches have developed with a combined membership of 124. Ponce is particularly responsive, and there is difficulty in finding room for the worshippers. From 350 to 400 are frequently present, a large proportion having to stand through the entire service. The church numbers ninety-seven members, fifty-four of whom have been added during the year. The Sunday school numbers over 200. A handsome church is to be erected in Ponce, costing $20,000, the Home Mission Society contributing one-half this sum, and the Ponce Baptists the other half.

The American Missionary Association of the Congregationalists conducts the missionary operations of that denomination in Porto Rico. They have fourteen workers now in the field, and two schools. The number of pupils is 306. The schools are located at Santurce, a few miles from San Juan, where Miss Isabel French is principal, with three teachers, and at Lares, where Professor Charles B. Scott and wife and four other ladies are located. All the educational work of the Congregationalists in Porto Rico is in charge of Prof. Scott, who is a graduate of Rutgers College. The Bible is a daily text-book in the schools. A fine property has been purchased in Santurce and a permanent school building will be erected. There is eager attendance at both schools. Rev. John Edwards is the field missionary; Rev. Francisco Castro is doing evangelistic work at Humasco and Rev. Sebastian L. Hernander and his wife at Lares. Other points occupied are Fajardo and Naguabo.

The Disciples have three mission stations in Porto Rico: San Juan, Port du Tierre and Bayamon. J. A. Erwin and wife were the first missionaries there, but Mr. Erwin, who practiced law before he became a minister, was appointed district judge by the Governor of Porto Rico, and W. M. Taylor and wife have succeeded to the missionary work. An orphanage was opened August, 1900, at Bayamon, with five orphans. It now has forty-six girls and has had to shut its doors against many others. Five girls have confessed Christ as their Savior this year. Mrs. A. M. Fullen is in charge, assisted by Miss Nora Collins. The girls are taught industrial training as well as the usual branches of common school education. Seven acres of land with a dilapidated building on it were granted by the town council to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and enlargement of the building to accommodate 100 will be made as soon as possible. Mrs. Erwin says that the children of the lower classes are raised in the street, in the midst of crime, wretchedness and filth. "I believe the saving of the children of Catholic Porto Rico is a more serious problem than that of heathen India."

The Methodists have four pastoral charges in Porto Rico, two of which are in San Juan, one at Arecibo and one in Puerta de Tierra. At the last-named, Mr. George S. James, a Wesleyan local preacher from Antigua, is in charge, at Arecibo Rev. A. H. Lambert, in San Juan, Rev. B. O. Campbell is pastor of the First Methodist church and Rev. John Vollmer. Dr. Drees has charge of the whole work of the Methodists in the island, and there are three lady teachers. There are fifteen preaching places, and the present number of communicants is 674. The appropriation for work in Porto Rico the coming year is $9,200.

The Presbyterians have established four schools in Porto Rico: At Aguadilla, Mayaguez, The Playa and La Marina. They have churches at San Juan, Mayaguez, La Playa, Aguadilla and San German. The schools are full to overflowing. Ten teachers are employed. A medical mission has been established at San Juan, which has proved very useful. The Woman's Board care for this work, as well as for the schools. Rev. John Knox Hall and Rev. H. T. Jason have charge of the crowded congregations in Santurce and the Marina respectively—these are wards of the capital. Flourishing congregations demand a church edifice at Mayaguez. Rev. M. E. Caldwell, D. D., is located there. There are four outstations to Aguadilla. Two ministers with a native helper have this field of remarkable growth and promise. A church edifice is to be put up. The Presbyterians have made it a point to seek only those parts of the population for whom no one else is working.

In Ponce the United Brethren carry on educational, medical and evangelistic work under the name of Bethlehem Mission and Institute. Rev. N. H. Huffman is superintendent and teacher; his wife is also a teacher there. W. E. Clymer, M. D., is in charge of the medical work, and P.

W. Drury is principal of the school. His wife and Mrs. Clymer are both teachers. More than thirty conversions are reported for the month of November. There are fifty pupils in the school.

INTERNATIONAL PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.

The meeting of this conference at the Clarendon Street Baptist church, Boston, December 10-15, was a revival of the organization of which the late Rev. A. J. Gordon was president, and was the first meeting held since his death. The original gathering of this conference, which has for its object the study of prophetic utterances in the Bible concerning the personal second coming of Christ and the ultimate conversion and salvation of the Jews, was in New York city in 1878. The call to the first conference was

GAS AND TROUBLE Comes from White Bread.

While it is true that we build up the body from food, it is also true that different kinds of food have different effects on the body and produce different results.

For instance, it is absolutely impossible to live on white bread alone, for it contains almost nothing but starch, and an excess of white bread produces gas and trouble in the intestines, while, at the same time, the other elements required by the body for building up brain and nerve centers, as well as muscular tissue, have been left out of the white bread, and we see from experience the one trying to live on white bread alone gradually fails in mental and nervous power as well as loss in muscle.

Such a diet could not be kept up long without fatal results. A lady in Jacksonville, Fla., was crippled by an accident two years ago. Being without power of exercise, an old stomach trouble that was hers for years became worse, and it was a serious question regarding food that she could digest.

A physician put her on Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food with some remarkable results. She says now that, not only is she able to do a big day's work, because of the strength of her brain and nerves, but that she has finally thrown away her crutches because the muscles of her limbs have gradually grown stronger since she began the use of Grape-Nuts, and now she is practically well and can go about without trouble, notwithstanding the fact that it was said she would never be able to walk again. So much for eating the right kind of food instead of remaining an invalid and a cripple because of lack of knowledge of the kind of food to use to bring one back to health. Name given on application to Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

signed by a large number of theologians and Bible students of all denominations. At this recent conference the interdenominational representation was not so large, the organization being officered by Baptists and to a great extent addressed by Baptists, although other denominations were represented sparingly.

Papers were prepared by Bishop W. W. Niles of New Hampshire, Rev. Robert Cameron, D. D., Rev. E. Y. Mullins, D. D., of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Dr. Elmore Harris of the Toronto Training School and Prof. D. S. Margoliouth of Oxford. Dr. W. J. Erdman of Germantown, Pa., conducted the daily question box. Rev. L. G. Broughton of Atlanta, and Evangelist Henry Varley of England were among the speakers, also Rev. J. M. Gray of Boston, and Rev. Sholto Douglass of Scotland. The president of the conference was Rev. A. C. Dixon of Ruggles Street church, Boston. It is probable that these conferences will be held frequently in the future, in various parts of the country.

METHODIST CONFERENCE IN GEORGIA.

The thirty-fifth session of the South Georgia conference, which was held in Macon, was a pleasant and helpful one. The Board of Missions carefully planned the work for another year. There were sixty-one missions on the board the past year, twelve of these were discontinued or raised to self-sustaining charges; fifteen new missions were created, making the number of missions practically the same as last year. Nearly one-third of the charges of the conference are mission charges; not a few of these are in the older sections of the conference, and were a few years ago strong and self-sustaining. This is not the result of any lack of faithfulness on the part of the ministry, but is due to the drift to the cities.

The spiritual results in the mission are gratifying, souls have been converted, and the accessions to the church are gratifyingly large as to numbers.

Dr. Dowman made an appeal for Emory College, which was strongly endorsed by Bishop Galloway. The conference pledged $2,100 to the science hall of the college. The "conference collection" was the largest the conference has ever made, so of the collection on the educational assessment, and every district pays out on the foreign missionary assessment, with nearly $1,000 over; domestic missions lacked but a few dollars of being paid in full, and five special missionaries in the foreign field were supported over and above the assessments. The conference sang the long meter doxology when these facts were announced.

The missionary anniversary was an enjoyable and inspiring occasion. Rev. George R. Loehr of China made an effective speech, followed by the wise and forceful presentation of facts by Dr. Lambuth.

Chicago and Vicinity.

Rev. Arthur Armstrong, pastor for the past eight or nine years of the Waveland Avenue Congregational church, has resigned to accept a call from the Third Congregational church of Oak Park, succeeding Rev. Henry W. Stough, who is now engaged in evangelistic work.

During the twenty years of Dr. P. S. Henson's pastorate of the First Baptist church there have been added to the church 1,089 persons by baptism, 1,398 by letter and 205 by restoration and experience, a total of 2,692. The diminutions have been 1,645 by letter, 51 by exclusion, 583 by erasure and 214 by death, a total of 2,493. During this time the church has raised for current expenses and benevolences, $582,624.50, of which $87,000 in 1890 was for the new University of Chicago.

Rev. Homer M. Cook, pastor of Calvary Baptist church, has adopted the plan of sending a postal card every week to one member of every family in the church, also to members of the congregation, inviting them to the church services and giving the subjects of the sermons of the day. He thinks the plan has resulted in a more regular attendance. About 130 cards are prepared by the church clerk, type-written and uniform. The Sunday school has outgrown its accommodations in the basement of the church, and the intermediate department and Bible classes meet in the main audience room, leaving the basement for the primary department.

The First Congregational church of Austin has pledged the entire amount of its indebtedness. This has given the people new courage to go forward.

The National Camp-Meeting Association will hold a holiness convention in the Wabash Avenue M. E. church, January 10-19. Eminent and able preachers will be present from various parts of the country.

The Methodist church at Downer's Grove is enjoying "times of refreshing." Evangelist B. E. Shawhan of Kansas City, Mo., has just closed a two weeks' campaign there. Thirty-two have been received into the church—seven by letter and twenty-five on probation. Others will be received later.

There will be an evangelistic conference among the Presbyterians on January 14. Mr. John Converse of Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. Carson of Brooklyn and Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., of New York, will speak at it.

The Gary Memorial Methodist church at Wheaton, Ill., was dedicated Sunday, December 22. Rev. Lewis Curtis, the pastor, and Presiding Elder

Fred H. Sheets conducted the services. The edifice is valued at $100,000 and has been erected by Judge E. H. Gary, president of the Federal Steel Company, and chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, in memory of his parents. The building is of Gothic architecture and constructed of stone. The total seating capacity is 1,500. It has many conveniences not usually found in churches, such as a steel fireproof vault for storing records and the communion service, a fully equipped kitchen, several cloakrooms and lavatories, janitor's apartments, a nursery for babies who are brought to church, a room which may be fitted up for a gymnasium, and a pastor's reception room, as well as a private office. The

QUAINT PHILOSOPHY In an Advertisement.

When a man acts as he believes the Infinite within him would have him act, he draws power to himself from unseen sources; that power may be shown in many ways.

Things work smoother, plans carry out, people begin to say, "lucky;" "he's a winner;" "everything he touches succeeds," etc., etc.

Ever try it? If you ever do, you will agree that it is the greatest proposition on earth.

There is a marvelous potency behind the man who acts in a simple, straightforward way, as near as he knows, in accordance with the promptings of that invisible Deity within.

This should teach him that great and honorable work is ahead; Man at once the tool and a part of the master workman.

The tool must not be dulled and ruined by bad food, tobacco, whiskey, coffee, etc. You question including coffee among "bad habits." None of these habits are bad habits unless they weaken or lessen the clean cut power of the individual. If they do, quit them. If food and drink are not well selected, change. Put your machine in clean, first-class shape. It is the purpose of this article to suggest a way to keep the body well so it can carry out the behest of the mind.

A sure and safe start in the right direction is to adopt Grape-Nuts Food for every morning's breakfast. It is delicious, pre-digested, highly nourishing, and will put one far along toward doing his best in life's work.

Follow this with abandonment of coffee, if it does not agree with you, and take in place of it, Postum Cereal Food Coffee, for its regenerating and vitalizing nourishment.

With a wise selection of food and drink, man can quickly place himself in shape where the marvelous Directing Power will use him for some good and worthy purpose.

Sense, just plain, common sense.

tower lantern, when lighted, will illuminate not only the whole square, but can be seen from every township in the county.

Rev. J. F. Loba, pastor of the First Congregational church of Evanston, has returned from a five months' visit to mission fields in India and Ceylon. "The Christianizing of India," Dr. Loba thinks, "may take 100 years or more, but it is sure to come. Our committee found that there are already 1,000,000 Christians in the land, and that the natives, especially those of high caste, feel most kindly toward Christianity."

Rev. Stowell L. Bryant, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, Washington, D. C., is to succeed Rev. Frank Crane in the pulpit of the Hyde Park church, which the latter vacated to assume the pastorate of the People's church. Mr. Bryant is a graduate of the Ohio Wesleyan University, and the Boston School of Theology.

Rev. W. A. Bartlett of the First Congregational church is giving a series of Sunday evening sermons on "Bible Types of Women." The subject of the first series is "The Woman Who Blessed All Homes." To add interest to the topics half-tone engravings of each subject are to be given out to each one present. These engravings were made especially for this purpose from famous paintings. The one given last Sunday evening was "The Mother and Child," by W. A. Bouguereau.

A meeting of the officers of the Presbyterian League was held at the Palmer House December 12, to consider ways and means for raising the large sum of money now required for housing the homeless churches and helping growing congregations build larger and better houses of worship. The difficulties of the position were freely discussed, but the problem of how to secure funds for the work was not solved. A resolution was adopted at the close of the conference, expressing, as the sense of the meeting, that the church erection committee appeal to the churches for an amount next year equal at least to that raised for home missions, and that a salaried secretary be employed by the committee. This is not final action, being subject to approval by the presbytery.

The dedicatory services of the new Congregational church at Harvey extended over eight days. The central thought of the program was the dedication of the church to the whole work of Christ, at home and abroad, therefore the benevolent societies were well represented. Rev. A. C. Moses has been pastor for the last eighteen months, and has led the people to success in this effort.

Baptist.

Rev. Henry Alford Porter of the First church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, gives a blank form to those who wish to be considered the "Pastor's Helpers." At the top of it are the words: "I have faithfully endeavored to increase the attendance upon our church services, and have invited the following persons during the week ending —." Then follow blank spaces for the names of those invited. A printed card is used for asking letters of dismissal from the church, and another for letters of dismissal to the church. They have only to be signed and filled out as to name, date, etc., and it is thought facilitate the getting church members to take letters on going elsewhere.

There are eighteen Baptist churches in Cleveland with a total membership of 4,721.

A profitable series of meetings in the interest of Bible school work has just been held in the Rock Island Association, Illinois. Rev. P. S. Heald of Alpha and Dr. E. A. Stone, the district missionary, planned and carried out the movement. Three sessions were held each day; a morning conference followed by earnest studies in child nature, child conversion, and a children's meeting. In this way eighteen churches, Sunday schools and missions were visited. Nearly 100 sermons and addresses were delivered. Hopeful and instructive counsel was given. Not far from 1,000 children attended the children's meetings and nearly as many adults were reached by the other services.

Congregational.

Plymouth church, Syracuse, N. Y., devotes two prayer meetings a month to the devotional study of the Psalms. Each person is requested to read the psalm to be studied every day for the week preceding, and then to bring one thought as a contribution to the meeting.

Rev. O. C. Clark of Plymouth church, Springfield, Ill., has had recently what he calls "A Month With the Children." All the sermons, both morning and evening, were on topics adapted to interest children, though Mr. Clark aimed to interest adults also. The prayer meeting topics were along similar lines of thought, the relations of children and parents to each other and to the church being considered.

The First church of Keene, N. H., sends two young women evangelists into some of the weaker towns. These ladies visit the homes and by word, song or prayer, give the gospel message to many who have seldom heard it. Their labors have resulted in several conversions and the reviving of church serices.

Twenty-five new schools and eight new churches have been organized during the year in North Dakota. About fifteen new points have been occupied as preaching stations.

Plymouth church, Minneapolis, has been enjoying a "Campaign of Education" at its Sunday morning service. In the weeks before the annual pledge for benevolent work is to be made, representatives of the different forms of Christian service in which the church takes part, are invited to present, each his own work, within ten minutes, time remorselessly called.

Rev. George W. D. Short of Jefferson, Ill., welcomed forty new members on confession of faith, December 1, making a total of fifty-eight admitted since last June.

The East church, Grand Rapids, Mich., has organized a "Church Missionary Society," in which men, women and children may find a place. The constitution provides that the ladies shall form an auxiliary to co-operate with the Woman's Home Missionary Union. A program of missions has been arranged for the winter. The program is a "History Year." Papers are to be read on the history of Congregational Missionary societies and upon the history of the different missions both at home and abroad. Two meetings have been held with marked success. This is the Kingdom Extension Society with a different name.

At Athens, Mich., Rev. W. J. Pres-tidge, pastor, twelve have been received into the church this month and twenty-two last month.

The church at Union City, Mich., has a very interesting Bible Reading Circle of thirty-five members, meeting every Monday evening in the parlors of the church. Many others are pursuing the course at home. The Bible is read in course, suggestions and hints being furnished in a book used as one of the text-books, "Through the Bible with a Guide." The book is the work of the pastor, Rev. David L. Holbrook, and was published last July by Fleming H. Revell Co.

The church at Glenwood, Iowa, has just closed a three weeks' gospel meeting. More than forty have been led into the kingdom.

The Disciples.

Rev. Carlos C. Rowilson, pastor of the Third Christian church, Indianapolis, is organizing two Saturday morning classes to run from New Year's to Easter, 1902; one is for children from eight to twelve years of age and one for young people from thirteen to seventeen. In the first-named the subject for study will be "The Life, Deeds and Teachings of Jesus," with illustrative stories from the Old Testament. The geography of the Holy Land will be studied by means of sand maps and other helps. "The Beginnings of Christianity" will be the subject for study in the older class, as given in the Book of Acts; the making and preservation of the New Testament books will be taught

For Nervous Headache Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Dr. F. A. Roberts, Waterville, Me., says: "It is of great benefit in nervous headache, nervous dyspepsia and neuralgia."

and also the history of the Disciples of Christ and what they stand for.

Rev. B. L. Allen reports 117 additions at the Morris Street church, Indianapolis, since January 1.

The Disciples are to establish a college at Washington, D. C. The project has been under consideration two or three years. Recently it was definitely decided to begin the work next year. F. D. Power and E. B. Bagby, Washington; B. A. Abbott and Peter Ainslie, Baltimore; Francis M. Applegate, New York, and Daniel E. Motley, ex officio, are the trustees. Three more trustees are to be chosen from other places. The institution expects to do the highest order of college work from the beginning. Daniel E. Motley is to be president of the college.

The Urdike revival in New Castle, Pa., closed December 9 with 145 additions.

Flournoy Payne has been called to remain the third year at Colorado City, Colo. The membership has been increased fifty per cent, nearly all debt removed and the church property improved within the last two years.

At South Bend, Ind., the First Christian church Sunday school had a rally day, November 24, with 387 present. A chapel is being erected in the southern part of the city, and it is the hope of the pastor, P. J. Rice, that a church will soon be organized there.

Recent special meetings have resulted in the following additions: At Summum, Ill., thirty-four; Clarks-ville, Ia., twenty-seven; Horton, Kas., thirty; Scott, Kas., twenty-four; Soldier, Kas., forty; Erlanger, Ky., four; Leonard, Mo., seventy-two; Odessa, Mo., ninety-one; Speckards, Mo., thirty-seven; Warrensburg, Mo., twenty-four.

Joseph Gaylor reports that since December 1, 1900, 160 have come into the church under his preaching; five new churches and five Bible schools have been organized and five union temperance societies, which have been successful in closing permanently ten whiskey joints and three saloons. This work was done in southwest Missouri under the state mission board.

Methodist.

Annual pledge cards are sent out by Dr. Beans' church in Sacramento, California, which state the amount expected from the church for all the benevolent causes during the year. There are nine causes enumerated, with a specific sum assigned to each. A brief quotation from the church covenant, relating to giving, is also printed on the cards.

A new scheme for the raising of money among the Sunday schools has been devised by issuing a set of stamps of five denominations: One-cent, two-cent, five-cent, ten-cent and twenty-five-cent. The plan is to sell them to the children as they collect money for the fund of the Twentieth Century Thank Offering Commission. Small albums are provided by the commission in which the stamps can be pasted, showing the amount raised by each child. The designs are not unlike ordinary postage and revenue stamps, but vignettes of well known Methodists are printed in their centers, and the value of the stamp is shown in large letters at the top. They expect to raise $1,000,000, through the Methodist Sunday schools in this way.

The First church, Kankakee, Ill., has had a net gain of forty in membership during the last two months. Rev. H. D. Clark is pastor.

The First church, Sioux Falls, S. D., claims to have the largest Bible club of any Methodist church in the northwest. It has seventy-five members who are using the Epworth League "Bible Studies in the Life of Christ," and a deep interest has been developed in the meetings, which are held on Monday evenings. There have been large accessions to the church membership since conference. Rev. W. H. Jordan, D. D., is pastor.

There have been over sixty accessions to the church at Zanesfield, Ohio, recently. Rev. A. M. Virden is pastor.

In special meetings at Villisca, Ia., in which Pastor W. M. Dudley was assisted by Evangelist E. F. Miller, fifty were converted or reclaimed; forty-eight have already united with the church, which was itself greatly revived.

First church, Streator, Ill., recently closed one of the most remarkable revivals in its history. It continued four weeks and resulted in 261 professions, 171 of which were conversions. A large proportion were men. The church has been greatly revived and strengthened by accessions. Messrs. Hart and Magann of St. Louis assisted Pastor Joe Bell.

Bishop John H. Vincent, who for the past two years has been resident in Switzerland in charge of the work of the Methodist Episcopal church in Europe, has been appointed as a delegate to the Wesleyan conferences in England next June. In July Bishop Vincent will sail for the United States and spend August in his old work at Chautauqua, with which he is still officially connected.

The vote on the new constitution, according to the returns made to Dr. David S. Monroe, secretary of the general conference: The total vote is yeas, 8,189; nays, 2,510, leaving a surplus in favor of the constitution of 165; that is, it would require 165 negative votes to offset the present majority.

Presbyterian.

December 1 the Wilkesburg, Pa., church received an addition of forty members, making an increase of seventy-five for the past two communions. The total membership of this church is now 1,563, this being the largest church in the denomination

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in The Christian Century.

with only one pastor. The leaders of the evangelistic committee advised pastors to pray and work for a definite number of additions to their churches. Two years ago Pastor Parry prayed and worked for an addition of 100, and received into the Wilkesburg church 110. Last year he prayed and worked for 100, and received 107. This year he is praying and working for 150, and has already received seventy-five. The new church is already too small, and there are three families for every pew. The Wilkesburg church has as many men as women at the morning service on Sabbath, and a great many more men than women at night.

The Rev. Edgar W. Work, D. D., pastor of Third Street Presbyterian church, Dayton, O., has resigned to accept a call from the Old Stone church, Cleveland. Dr. Work, though among the younger ministers of the church, has held his present pastorate for seven years, and previous to that he was a professor at Wooster University.

The Presbyterians in Fulton, Ill., had a day of rejoicing November 24 in the reopening of the church with improvements costing over $1,300, all paid. This is the result of the union in 1868 of the Old and New School churches, which had long been rivals in weakness. In the morning the pastor, Rev. Cary F. Moore, gave the story of faith and sacrifice of members, elders and pastors. In the evening there was a roll-call of over 600 names, with responses from the present, letters from the absent, and tributes to those translated.

Rev. L. F. Laverty has completed his third year with the First church, Wellsville, Ohio. During these years 152 have united with the church, sixty-eight by profession. There is now a membership of 500.

At the First church, Portsmouth, Ohio, the pastor, once a month, on a week night, reviews the Sunday school lesson by means of stereopticon views, which adds both to the interest and attendance of the school. At the church services the evening congregations are three-fifths men.

The church at Winfield, Kas., has received into its membership fifty persons on confession of faith, as a result of the revival services.

The ministers of Los Angeles and vicinity held an all-day meeting for conference and prayer December 2. A talk was given by Dr. E. S. Chapman on "Personal Preparation for a Revival." Other topics considered were, "Confession and Consecration" and "Forward for God." Over eighty persons have indicated a desire to confess Christ as a result of evangelistic services held twice a day for three weeks. Another conference will be held in January.

General.

The Clinton Avenue Reformed church of Newark, N. J., led all the churches of the denomination last year for accessions to its membership. Dr. D. H. Martin, the pastor, says his sole methods have been hard work, dependence on the spirit of God and the co-operation of a devoted and prayerful people. After the morning service Dr. Martin held brief meetings for prayer with the officers of the church in his study. He would then ask for volunteers to take the names of unconverted persons, to call upon them and invite them to the special meetings which were inaugurated. The women of the church held cottage meetings in different parts of the parish, and the pastor had a special co-worker in calling upon those who became interested in their homes. He also wrote more than 200 personal letters to young men and others of his congregation, enclosing a little leaflet which he had prepared, "Why Join the Church?" Special services were held in the church and in the mission chapel, and after-meetings for individual conversation. The result of all these various lines of effort was most gratifying, in some cases whole families coming out for Christ.

In Westerly, R. I., recently, in the course of special evangelical services, sixteen cottage prayer meetings were

WALTER SCOTT PRIEST, and his church delighted with

The Praise Hymnal

"Last October the church in this city purchased 150 copies of the PRAISE HYMNAL, and everybody is delighted with them. Since we have had them we have introduced the responsive reading of the Scriptures, very admirable selections from the Psalms and portions of the New Testament, comprising the first 64 pages of the book, and the morning worship of our church has been greatly improved. The selection of hymns, both old and new, can hardly be improved. The general make-up of the book is the best. We cordially recommend the PRAISE HYMNAL to all churches contemplating the purchase of new hymn books."

WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

Atchison, Kansas.

We advise our customers to take the cloth with leather back binding, not because it is our profit, but because it is best for them. The price is $75 per hundred copies. We send samples on approval where persons wish to examine the book.

FILLMORE BROS., - 119 W. 6th St., CINCINNATI, O.
40 Bible House, NEW YORK.

THE CHOIR, our monthly anthem journal, is meeting with great success. We are glad to send samples to choir leaders. It wins every time. (8)

20,000 CHURCHES
Lighted by the FRINK System of Reflectors with Electric, Gas, Welsbach, Acetylene or C. I.
LICENSED to manufacture electric and combination gas and electric fixtures. Send dimensions for estimate. I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., NEW YORK.

Christian Cleanliness

Why do you permit a custom at the communion table which you would not tolerate in your own home? Would you like to know where Individual Communion Cups are used? Send for our free book—it tells all about it. A trial outfit sent free.
SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT COMPANY, Box 111 Rochester, N. Y.

held one evening in as many homes, under the united auspices of four denominations—Baptist, Disciples, Congregationalist and Methodist.

At Bay View, Wis., the Baptist, Trinity Methodist Episcopal and Grace Presbyterian churches have joined forces in a Bible Institute, led by Mr. E. A. Marshall of Chicago.

The Salvation Army reports 7,000 associations in forty-seven countries, with an effective force of 47,000 officers.

Rev. E. J. Baskerville commenced union revival services at Coldwater, Mich., Nov. 29. Sunday, Dec. 1, great congregations filled the largest church, and nearly 100 pledged themselves for Christ.

Mr. W. A. Sunday has just closed a great revival in Corydon, Ia. Among the 411 converts were the mayor, marshal, aldermen, ex-district judge, lawyers, merchants, livery-stablemen and gamblers.

The American Bible Society has issued a report based on a recent visit to its agencies in the Levant by its secretary, Rev. Dr. William I. Baven. This report asserts that there has been an increasing demand for the Scriptures in more than twenty languages spoken by the people along the eastern shores of the Mediterranean. The principal circulation is in Armenian, Greek and Arabic. The Arabic issues during the last year were over 40,000.

Foreign Missionary Items.

A Thanksgiving service in Ponce was participated in by the Baptist churches of Ponce and La Plaza together with the United Brethren and the Disciples' missions of the city. The attendance was large, and the interest sustained throughout the entire service. Addresses were made in English and Spanish, the former by Mr. Drury of the United Brethren, and the latter by Mr. Innungarro, a Spaniard of the Plymouth Brethren; the pastor of the Baptist church presiding. Altogether it was perhaps the most interesting Protestant service ever held in this city. Its effect on the native Christians, as well as on the many outsiders who were present, was decidedly salutary, and has served in an unusual degree to call attention to the Protestant work being done in the city. The possibility of such a service in Ponce at the end of less than three years' work here is highly encouraging to the missionaries, who, with might and main, are working for the salvation of the people.

Mrs. U. S. G. Jones, Lodiana Mission, writes: "Just picture a long, narrow room, bare, mud-plastered walls, two small windows, a small platform at one end with a table and a couple of chairs. The congregation sit on the floor, the men behind and the women in front. How I wish I could convey some idea of the singing; I suppose the stirring music of the darkies with you, comes nearest to it. The teacher, a blind violin player, and the composer of most of the most stirring songs, is a wonderful man himself. A couple of years ago he was a very popular singer at all the heathen gatherings, feasts and weddings, when his obscene songs were most in demand. But since his conversion he has consecrated this talent to the service of the King, thereby losing much in worldly means, as he made from $3 to $8 at these gatherings.

"It is gatherings such as these that encourage us. Ten years ago, with the exception of two or three, every one of these men and women was in heathen darkness. And now look at their bright faces! There are many wonderful histories behind numbers of these people, for not a few have been brands plucked from the burning. The father of the conference—an old white-headed man with eagle eyes, and hooked nose, was once a highwayman and a murderer—now a humble believer. Two of these women were Magdalenes, now faithful wives and adorning the gospel of God, their Savior."

A letter from Rev. J. W. Baird of Samokov, Turkey, states the following facts in the case of Miss Stone: "You in America can hardly take in the situation. Getting into contact with the brigands is not the easy thing most people imagine. We suspect some persons, but the great uncertainty as to the identity of those evil doers is something remarkable. The first letter received from Miss Stone (Sept. 25), was handed through a window at about midnight to Miss Haskell. After a few words the man left. No one but Miss Haskell saw him. To have put detectives on his track would have hindered negotiations and endangered the lives of the captives. The second letter received here Oct. 25 was brought by a young man with whom Dr. H. and I haggled about three-quarters of an hour. No one but us saw him. What his name is or where he lives we do not know. Since then no communication of any kind has come from any of the band to us missionaries, as far as I am aware, though the agent we talked with promised to bring an answer in five days. The idea that by searching we can find the brigands is folly. They must come to our hook from out of the unknown depths. We have insisted that they be delivered on or before payment and not after. So far as I know, no one of the important conditions has been accepted by the two parties, so the end may be in the far future."

The intense desire of the people of Uganda to secure Bibles has been often referred to. A recent letter reports the arrival from England of a consignment of Bibles and of the way in which they were received: "The new Bibles have come and are selling like wildfire, and in spite of the almost prohibitive price, the first edition is almost entirely exhausted. The Mungunda has a keen appreciation of good print and binding, and to see him handling his books or bandaging them with strips of calico when he has finished using them would delight a book lover. In order that the Bibles might get as quickly as possible into the hands of the teachers, who so sorely need them, the bishop determined to reduce the price of the cheapest to two months' wages for those teachers who had already taught a year, and to three months' wages for a slightly better quality. This would seem dear enough to Christians in England, but the very day the news was given out, a great crowd of teachers fairly danced down to Mr. Millar's house to have their names written down for a 'Holy Book,' shouting and singing with such beaming faces. They came as we were walking along from the prayer meeting, and crowded round the bishop, kneeling at his feet, crying, 'Joy, Joy! God be praised, God be praised!' Some of them quite broke down. It brought a lump to one's throat."

A PLEA FOR MISSIONARY AID.

I wish to call the attention of our brethren to the great need for missionary work and funds among the Pima Indians of Southern Arizona.

This Pima (pronounced Peemah) reservation is about 60 miles long and about 16 miles wide, and is inhabited by about 6,000 Indians.

Among all this scattered population there are but two missionary agencies and three churches. These are under the auspices of the C. P. church.

One is at Saccaton the government agency, the other at Gila Crossing, and a little church at Casa Blanco, which the missionary from Saccaton visits twice a month in the afternoons. A distance of 16 miles.

I want to point out to you the open field and the opportunity that is ours. I live on the only cultivated ranche joining the reservation at Kyrene. The distance from my place to Saccaton is near twenty-six miles, to Casa Blanco is sixteen miles, to Gila Crossing is thirty miles. In this Indian neighborhood south of us there are about 500 Indians who are out of reach of the missionaries, and we want to build a church at a point near Kyrene where we can reach these Indians, who are without Christian influence and teaching.

This is pointed out as the hardest part of the reservation, and I am constantly reminded of the great contrast between them and the Indians of the villages mentioned above. In Saccaton and Gila Crossing I see the Indians clean and well dressed, going to church on Sunday morning and evening, many of them walking a distance of five miles. Every seat in the

IF YOU ARE SICK LET ME KNOW IT.

I wish simply your name and address—no money. Say which book you want.

I will send with it an order on your druggist to let you have 6 bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. He will let you take it for a month; and if it succeeds, he will charge you $5.50 for it. If it fails, he will send the bill to me. He will trust to your honesty, leaving the decision to you.

Such an offer as this could not be made on any other remedy. It would bankrupt the physicians who tried it. But in five years I have supplied my Restorative on these terms to 550,000 people. My records show that 39 out of each 40 paid for it, because they were cured.

This remedy alone strengthens those inside nerves that operate all vital organs. It brings back the only power than can make each organ do its duty. No matter how difficult the case, it will permanently cure, unless some organic trouble like cancer makes a cure impossible.

I have spent my lifetime in preparing this remedy. I offer now to pay for all you take if it fails. I cannot better show my faith in it. Won't you merely write a postal to learn if I can help you?

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 595, Racine, Wis.

Book No. 1 on Dyspepsia.

Book No. 2 on the Heart.

Book No. 3 on the Kidneys.

Book No. 4 for Women.

Book No. 5 for Men, (sealed.)

Book No. 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

churches is full, and there they sit through long tiresome services that would wear you out. I do not mean to show any disrespect to the good old missionaries who have done such a grand work among these people when I say they are very tedious, and when they have delivered their sermons an Indian interpreter takes the pulpit and repeats the entire sermon in Pima for the benefit of those who do not understand English. Yet they never seem to tire. I have sat through three-hour services when the mercury registered 115 degrees, every seat and aisle were full and they even sat around the pulpit, and I just marveled at the interest manifested by these people. Nobody frowned nor scowled nor snapped watches in the minister's face nor left the room, except two or three babies who fretted with the heat and were carried out by their mothers and silenced. One baby was dressed in a nicely starched and ironed dress. It fretted and fretted until its mother took it out to the well and dipped it in a tub of water and brought it back dripping all over. After that it was quiet and the mother listened intently to the sermon, regardless of the damage to her own nice white dress. Nobody giggled and thought this funny; they were accustomed to such things, and they were too much interested in the sermon to notice it. No difference how long the sermon or the song service they will gladly listen to more. They not only hear this gospel but they carry it into their daily lives. A man with two children 12 and 14, were in our store one day at noon. They bought some lunch goods and went out. In a few minutes my husband stepped out, and there, in the shade of the building they had spread out their lunch, and they sat with bowed heads returning thanks for it.

Mr. Nansen offered a position to one Indian named Horace Williams, one of the best educated Indians on the reservation. He hesitated; said how much he would like to have it but he didn't think he could accept it. Mr. H. begged him to think it over and let him know. In a few days he met him and again urged him to take the position, which offered $25 per month. Again the young man told how he would like to make the money, and how his family needed it, but he explained that Mr. Cook, the missionary at Saccaton, had asked him to watch and care for the church at Casa Blanco and he had promised that he would, and he chose to remain true to his trust. Tramps and campers enter and destroy so much property in this country that property cannot be left alone in safety. He didn't consider the thought of getting some one else to guard the property, because Brother Cook had made the request of him.

I am giving you illustrations from the lives of those Indians who have been under the influence of the missionaries. I could go on giving you many such illustrations to show you the material we have to deal with, were it necessary. This is enough to prove to you that the material is good and the result of our labor is bound to be satisfactory.

The children are all taught to sing in the government schools and the music we hear in these mission churches is really good. They have a male quartette who sit near the organ, and they all sing by note.

Note the contrast. In my neighborhood I see the Indians on Sunday sitting in the shade or sun, whichever is most convenient, some clean and well dressed perhaps, many not dressed at all. Some gambling, some smoking, horse-racing, hunting; any way to kill time.

Many of them have had no religious instruction whatever. They still worship the coyote, the gopher and the turkey buzzard. They still imagine Montezuma dwells in a certain high peak in the south part of the terri-

Dr Pierce's Cream Baking Powder

Used in Millions of Homes.
40 Years the Standard. A Pure Cream of Tartar Powder. Superior to every other known. Makes finest cake and pastry, light, flaky biscuit, delicious griddle cakes
—palatable and wholesome.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
CHICAGO.

NOTE.—Avoid baking powders made from alum. They look like pure powders, and may raise the cake, but alum is a poison and no one can eat food mixed with it without injury to health.

tory and turn their faces to it in times of extreme drouth and pray for rain.

In Saccaton and Gila Crossing I see neat, substantial adobe houses, shingle roofs and porches, as good as many white people's houses. Antonio, the high chief at Saccaton, has a two-story eight-room house, much better than the average white person's house in this country, and a good picket fence around it. In many of these houses we see whitened walls, pictures, window curtains, palm mats made by the Indian women. Cook-stoves, tables, dishes, chairs and bedsteads. In other houses none of these things are seen. They still cook on a camp-fire, eat from pottery dishes made by the squaws, sit and sleep on the ground. In the latter houses they wash their clothes in a ditch and dry them on a sage brush and put them on or, worse yet, they wear them till they are in rags, then replace them with new ones. While the more civilized ones wash, starch and iron their clothes, just as we do, and more wonderful, they have sewing machines to make them, and they tuck, ruffle and trim their clothes and fit them in a way equal to hundreds of white people whom you see every day. These better conditions are common in the villages where the missionaries have lived and worked so long.

I give the missionaries credit for the extreme advancement of these people, because all have the same chances for education. These in my neighborhood have gone into the schools with those of the villages named, proving that the missionaries have greater influence than the teachers.

The parents are most all anxious to have their children go to school, yet occasionally they find parents who refuse. These cases are rare, however.

Harry Azul, grandson of the high chief, is official interpreter at the government agency. He takes the Phoenix and Los Angeles daily papers, and is well informed. I don't want you to think the ones in my neighborhood are a lot of savages and dummies. Compared with other tribes they rank very high, but they do appear in a bad light when compared with those of their own tribe who have had so much better influence thrown about them. For instance, the chief in our neighborhood lives in a little round mud hut.

I have watched these people for five years. I have rejoiced over the spiritual condition of the one side, and have grieved over the state of the others. I have felt so long that we might be doing so much for them if we only had a place of worship. The nearest church is Tempe, ten miles.

I have been so closely associated with them, and so many things transpire every year to show their dependence on me that it melts me, and I feel that I must do something that will be of real benefit to them.

Not long ago an Indian was beating his wife. She told him if he didn't treat her better she would leave him. He sneeringly asked what she would do. She said she would go to Mrs. Hansen. She knew Mrs. Hansen would take care of her. This was told me by other Indians of the camp.

One Indian came to me last summer and told me his wife was going astray. Said he: "I am a Christian, but Ruth is not," and related to me how he had tried to persuade her to do right. He then begged me to talk to her and see if I could not get her to live right. He then told me of others who were leading her astray, and asked me to use my influence on them also.

The work which I have been able to do has been so small compared with what I could have done in the years I have been here if we had only had a church building where we could have conducted a Sunday school and a religious service.

At last I can wait no longer and I have recently taken up the work of raising funds for this church. Surely your attention could not be called to a more promising field. These Indians alone made it possible for the white man to settle in Salt River Valley, the garden spot of sunny Arizona. They protected the white people for years from the savage Apaches. They have always been the white man's friend and they boast that no white man's blood has ever stained their hands.

I have so much pity and sympathy for all, but especially for the young people, who have spent several years perhaps in the government schools in nice clean rooms, comfortable beds, neat clothing, sit at orderly tables provided with the best food, instructed by the best teachers, just as your children are, until such time as they are crowded out to make room for more. Then they must go back to the old life of poverty and dirt. Not far enough advanced to do much to better their condition, yet far enough advanced to rebel against fate and long for better things. How they cry and beg to stay when told they must leave the schools.

They are the ones who will do the singing and interpret the talks for the old people. Surely it would do your heart good to hear these children sing. Your own Sunday school children cannot sing better than these Indian children who have been to school.

If the brethren of the east will furnish the house, the organ and the song books, they need not worry about the crowds. They will all be there. They dearly love music and consider it a great privilege to be permitted to go where they can hear that, even though they may not understand a word.

I could make as strong a plea for the Maricopas, the Papagoes and other tribes, and I hope I shall later.

I had the pleasure this month of traveling three days and nights with Missionary Kate Johnson, who is now on her road to Japan. I left her at Maricopa, in the very midst of this great white field. I told her how my heart ached to think of women of her talent and ability hurrying through to foreign lands when our own people are groping here in darkness; passing through these great Indian tribes, of whom she had not even heard, to carry the gospel across the seas to subjects of other countries, when we have here all these subjects to our own flag and laws, peaceable, intelligent and loyal—the three greatest necessities to good citizenship—overlooked.

Brethren we cannot afford to neglect this opportunity for establishing our cause here. I am attempting this work alone, only asking our brethren everywhere for funds. Building material is very high here and this is no small task. We want contributions at once for this church. Don't withhold your offering thinking others will send the required amount and yours will not be needed.

The missionary board can work a long time to aid our white brethren in this great territory, where they have so many calls already. We make our appeal to the people. I know they have enough surplus money to do this without interfering with their regular missionary offering, and I have confidence enough in them to believe they will do it.

We have plans for making this mission self-supporting. We want a missionary and we want to select him. These Indians are very queer and unless a man suits them our labor is in vain.

Brothers and sisters everywhere,

What will you do for these Indians? The fields are broad and white for the harvest. Now is our time to reap.

Aurora L. S. Hansen,
Kyrene, Arizona. (Mail via Tempe.)

WAS WAYLAID.

An interesting incident showing the popularity of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer when once it has become known in a neighborhood, is related by Mr. John J. Graf of Hamilton, Ontario, who is agent for the medicine at that place. He writes: "Everybody in our neighborhood recognizes the merits of the Blood Vitalizer, and everybody seems to want it. The other evening when I started from the depot with a box of the Blood Vitalizer, the women waylaid me to get the medicine, and I did not bring a single bottle home." Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not a drug-store medicine; it is sold only by special agents or the proprietor direct. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-118 S. Hoyne avenue, Chicago, Ill.

In order to accommodate the largely increased passenger business at Chicago Van Buren street depot, it has been found necessary to build a new and more commodious passenger station. Therefore, commencing December 29th all passenger trains of the Nickel Plate road will arrive at and depart from Grand Central station, Fifth avenue and Harrison street, during the erection of the new depot.

LYON & HEALY ORGANS

are the great favorites today. Unapproached for Sweetness and Purity of Tone. New styles of

PIANO CASE ORGANS

which give the most enthusiastic satisfaction.

All our organs have all the latest and most modern improvements. The cases are models of neatness and beauty and are made of finely finished solid Oak, Black Walnut, Mahogany or Ebony finish.

The Latest Style. Fully finished solid Oak, Black Walnut, Mahogany or Ebony finish.

PRICES ALWAYS THE LOWEST.

We make the terms of payment so easy that anybody can buy one. Ask your dealer for the Lyon & Healy Organs. If he does not keep them write direct to us. Beautiful Catalogue FREE.

Also bargains in good second hand Organs. A sealed guarantee with every Organ.

The freight on an Organ is a very small matter. We ship Organs everywhere. Remember when you buy an Organ from us genuine musical worth assured. Beware of the imitations now on the market.

Our Piano Case Organ.

Write today.
70 Adams St.,
LYON & HEALY, CHICAGO, ILL.

BOOKS

Musical Ministries in the Church, by Waldo Selden Pratt, Fleming H. Revell Co. 181 pages. Price $1.00.

This book is a timely contribution to the literature of a much neglected subject, by one who is a master both in theory and practice. The material was first gathered for a series of lectures which were delivered by Professor Pratt before the faculty and students of McCormick Theological Seminary in the spring of 1900. The general scope of the book is indicated in the subtitle, "Studies in the History, Theory and Administration of Sacred Music." Contrary to a method often pursued, the author begins with the congregation and proceeds from them to consider the choir, the organ and organist, and finally the minister. He is undoubtedly right in following this order, for without the congregation church music could not be, and without an understanding of the needs and capabilities of the congregation all efforts on the part of music committee, choir, organist or minister must fall short of attaining the desired end. Accordingly, the author undertakes to show, both from history and experience, what is the true relation between religion and the art of music, between worship and the use of hymns, anthems and organ parts.

He brings out very clearly one thought upon which all congregations and ministers would do well to ponder, namely, that every church service should be an orderly and progressive unity, in which every part has its appropriate and necessary place. He protests vigorously against the too prevalent habit, on the part of both congregations and ministers, of ignoring much that is essential in the service of worship, and what is even worse, insulting both organist and choir by late arrival at church and by preoccupation in church with other matters utterly foreign to the spirit of worship. He would not underestimate the importance of the sermon, but he pleads for more general recognition of the fact that unless those other parts of the service are regarded with rightful respect and directed with thoughtful attention they had better be omitted altogether, and thus save us from what is really hypocrisy in worship.

The book abounds in practical suggestions concerning the selection of music, the arrangement of orders of worship, the organizing and conducting of a choir, and its value is further enhanced by bibliographical appendices of Church Music in general, Hymns and Hymn-writers, and American Church Hymnals. To these is added an index. The language is remarkably free from technical terms, and while the discussion is pervaded by the lofty idealism of the true artist, this is always tempered by the sympa-

A LILY OF FRANCE

One of the best selling Holiday books. A story of the romance of William, Prince of Orange, and Charlotte of Bourbon by Caroline Atwater Mason, author of a Minister of the World, a Wind Flower, the Quiet King, &c.

10,000 COPIES
Sold before Publication

SECOND 10,000
Now on Sale

The cover design is in blue and white, four illustrations, 456 pages, a beautiful and acceptable gift book. Price $1.10 net, postpaid $1.25.

Griffith and Rowland Press

PHILADELPHIA

For sale by all Booksellers and at 177 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

thetic appreciation of the practical difficulties which confront the average church. Among other sensible suggestions, the writer asks that organists and members of the choir be no longer regarded as a peculiar race of beings, unreasonable and difficult to deal with, but that they be treated with the same courtesy, consideration and respect which we are accustomed to bestow upon other people. The book deserves a careful perusal by all ministers, choir-masters and music committees who really desire to improve the service of worship.

American and British Authors. By Frank V. Irish.

This excellent book should be in every home. As the author says: "Literature is a culture and must be treated generously as a great liberalizing and spiritualizing force in education." This work represents years of earnest toil during which the author has constantly kept in mind the highest needs of teachers and parents, students and children.

A brief but very discriminating and sympathetic sketch is given of each of the better American and British authors. This sketch is followed by extracts giving very just criticism of the author's character and writings. Facts concerning each great author's life and his principal writings are also given. A number of fine and characteristic selections are given from each author. The writer of this book of authors has given it the best efforts of his life during years of diligent study. Besides its value from the literary standpoint it will be a handy, ready reference book on American and British authors, the only work covering such a large field in one volume. (Price, only $1.35.)

Dorothy Fox. By Louisa Parr. Lip-pincott & Co., Philadelphia, 370 pages. Price, $1.50.

The story begins in the summer of 1856, in the old historic town of Plymouth, and the principal characters belonged to the Society of Friends. Of the father of Dorothy, it was said, "no fanatic ever stood by a dictum more staunchly than did Nathaniel Fox advocate every principle enjoined by the Society of Friends." "The diminishing of the height of his collar or narrowing of the brim of his hat by the fraction of an inch, would have been considered by this worthy man a grave offense." His wife had enjoyed a more liberal education and her

A CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Asthma sufferers need no longer leave home and business in order to be cured. Nature has produced a vegetable remedy that will permanently cure Asthma and all diseases of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases (with a record of 90 per cent. permanently cured) and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Asthma, Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis and nervous diseases, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail. Address with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 847 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

EVERY CHURCH SHOULD USE OUR INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION OUTFITS

Simplest and Best. Send for Trial Outfit, giving Number of Communicants. Address
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 2232, LIMA, OHIO

opinions were consequently less rigid as regarded dress and ceremonials. The young man selected by the father as the future husband of Dorothy, was the son of one of the strictest of the sect, of irreproachable character and life. His home life had been cheerless and gloomy, as all mirth was considered unseemly, if not wicked; at table all conversation was forbidden to the younger members of the family, and all diversion strictly prohibited. While we may deprecate the repressive measures of that time and people, it is a question if the opposite extreme, so often met with at the present time, is productive of more beneficial results or lasting good.

Dorothy herself is a charming personage, and other characters in the book are diversified sufficiently to give the necessary interest throughout. Readers will pronounce it a charming book.

A newcomer among the periodicals is "The World's Work," published by Doubleday, Page and Co. It is a very attractive magazine, most handsomely gotten up and lavishly illustrated. The cover designs are works of art. A leading feature is "The March of Events," an illustrated editorial interpretation. A notable omission is the absence of fiction. The general articles are all on present-day subjects, such as "The Boer War to Date," by Julian Ralph; "The Greater America," by Frederic Emory; "The Pivotal Farm of the Union"; "The Rebuilding of New York"; "The Fight Against Tuberculosis"; "A Storehouse of Industrial Facts," etc. "Among the World's Workers, A Record of Industry," closes each number. ($3 a year.)

CHANGE OF CHICAGO PASSENGER DEPOT.

Beginning December 29th, all passenger trains of the Nickel Plate road will arrive at and depart from Grand Central station, Fifth avenue and Harrison street, Chicago, instead of Van Buren street station, as formerly.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women backache, lung troubles or general and girls, and for abdominal weakness, weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for

Any child can wash with PEARLINE. Really nothing but soaking in PEARLINE and water to loosen the dirt, and then rinsing out. No washboard needed; better without. Washboard ruins, PEARLINE saves clothes. Less rubbing, less wear and tear, less steaming over washtub, less ill-health for every woman who uses PEARLINE. 657

Pearline rescues women

it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

OUR CHRISTMAS BOX.

Magazine Offer.

A year's subscription to any one of the one-dollar magazines, such as "Success," "The Ladies' Home Journal," "Cosmopolitan," and a handsome leather-bound New Testament ($1.50) for a club of five subscribers to The Christian Century and six dollars in cash.

Great Bible Offer.

To the readers of The Christian Century and their friends we offer a limited number of Bibles and Testaments at one-half price. Fine bold-faced type teachers' Bibles at sixty per cent discount. We have only a few of these Bibles in stock. First come, first served. Do not wait to inquire. Send us from one to five dollars and we shall send you from one to five Bibles. If you are not satisfied, you may keep the Bibles as a Christmas gift and we shall refund your money. We have some flexible back Testaments and a few other Testaments worth fifty cents and one dollar each. Teachers may have these fine Testaments at three dollars a dozen. Write to-day or you will be too late.

TRIENNIAL CONVENTION.

International Sunday School Association.

On account of the International Sunday School convention, to be held at Denver, Col., June 26 to July 2, 1902, the Chicago & North-Western R'y will make a rate of $31.50 for the round trip from Chicago, tickets to be sold June 23d-24th, with return limit of July 31, 1902. The excellent train service offered by this line to and from Colorado will undoubtedly secure a large share of the travel upon this occasion. The Colorado Special leaving Chicago at 10 o'clock every morning requires only one night en route, and the night train leaving at 11:30 reaches Denver early the second morning. Both trains have free reclining chair cars and first-class sleeping cars. Particulars relating to special train and ticketing arrangements will be announced in due time.

Your Problem Solved.

Secure a Twentieth Century New Testament for your preacher or S. S. superintendent. Such a valuable Christmas gift will delight any friend. See announcement on another page.

THE FAIR SOUTHLAND

With its blue skies and balmy air, can best be reached via the

Southern Railway.

This great system reaches all important points in the South and, with its limited trains, elegant sleeping, parlor, dining and cafe cars, offers unexcelled service to Florida and all Southern tourist points.

"The Florida Limited"

Leaves Chicago daily, in the evening, arrives Jacksonville, Fla., the second morning, less than 35 hours en route, passing through Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Macon and Jesup.

Another Limited Train.

Leaving Chicago daily, in the morning, for Jacksonville, Fla., passes through Cincinnati, Knoxville, Asheville, Columbia and Savannah—a daylight ride through the famous "Land of the Sky."

Both limited trains carry sleepers, Chicago to Cincinnati, and through sleepers from Cincinnati to Jacksonville.

Another still to come! On January 6, 1902, the

"Chicago & Florida Special"

Will be inaugurated, running through sleepers, solid, Chicago to St. Augustine, Fla., via Cincinnati, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Jesup and Jacksonville. This train, with its elegant sleepers, composite and observation cars, perfect dining car service and fast time, will eclipse anything of the kind ever before offered to the public in the Northwest for the South.

South Carolina Interstate & West Indian Exposition.

Commencing Dec. 1, 1901, a through sleeper will be run from St. Louis to Charleston, S. C., via Louisville and Asheville.

Winter Tourist Tickets now on sale. For full particulars see your nearest ticket agent or write or call on J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A., 225 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.; G. B. Allen, A. G. P. A., St. Louis, Mo.

Combination Magazine Offer

By special arrangements with the publishers we are enabled to present the following exceedingly attractive club offers with The Christian Century. The following are the periodicals with which these arrangements have been made:

SUCCESS, the brightest, most up-to-date and most profusely illustrated monthly published. The inspiration of a lifetime has come to thousands of SUCCESS readers through their investment of One Dollar, its regular subscription price. REVIEW OF REVIEWS, the "indispensable" magazine, presenting a brilliant record in print and picture of the world's thought and work—monthly, $2.50 a year. THE COSMOPOLITAN, for years without a superior as a magazine of general and varied attractions—monthly, $1.00 a year. THE HOUSEHOLD, a supreme authority in home-work and decoration, table-equipment, nursery-lore, etiquette, pyrography, photography, and offers a very high class of poetry and fiction—monthly, $1.00 a year. LESLIE'S is one of the great modern monthlies whose articles and illustrations are the highest expression of magazine art—monthly, $1.00 a year. CURRENT LITERATURE, the leading literary monthly of America; it keeps you in complete touch with the world of letters—$3.00 a year. NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW presents a most brilliant galaxy of articles by the greatest writers on world-problems—monthly, $5.00 a year. THE DESIGNER

pictures in colors the latest Parisian and New York fashions, describing costumes, millinery, designs and fabrics for women and children—monthly, $1.00 a year. THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE paints with loving touch the landmarks of New England; tells of her history and traditions, and of the achievements of her sons throughout the world—monthly, $3.00 per annum. GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, the acknowledged arbiter regarding the little "kinks" which make home a place of delight—monthly, $1.00 a year. LESLIE'S WEEKLY, the popular, up-to-date, literary and pictorial record of moving events at home and abroad—now in its ninety-third volume—monthly, $4.00 a year. THE GENTLEWOMAN, one the best, cheapest, brightest and most practical Ladies' magazine published in America. It is liked by women everywhere and should be in every American home—monthly, $1.00 a year. HOME AND FLOWERS, devoted to the art of raising flowers and cultivation of public beauty—monthly, $1.00 year. THE AMERICAN BOY, a most valuable and beneficial publication for the youth, containing illustrated stories, aids and suggestions on the problem of success in life.

Special Offers on Optional Combinations

	Regular price.	Our price.
The Christian Century (new), Success, and any ONE of the above dollar magazines . . .	$3.50	$2.50
The Christian Century (new), Success, and any TWO of the above dollar magazines . . .	4.50	2.85
The Christian Century (new), Success, and any THREE of the above dollar magazines . . .	5.50	3.25
The Christian Century (new), Success, and Review of Reviews (new) . . . . .	5.00	3.85
The Christian Century (new), Success, and Current Literature (new) . . . . .	5.50	2.75
The Christian Century (new), Success, Review of Reviews (new), and any one of our dollar magazines . . .	6.00	3.25

Popular Combination Dollar-Magazine Offer

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY . . . . .	$1.50	}	$7.50 In Value
SUCCESS . . . . .	1.00
THE COSMOPOLITAN . . . . .	1.00
THE HOUSEHOLD . . . . .	1.00
HOME & FLOWERS . . . . .	1.00
THE GENTLEWOMAN . . . . .	1.00
THE AMERICAN BOY . . . . .	1.00
			} Our Price Only $3.50

Our Great Family Offer

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY . . . . .	$1.50	}	$9.50 In Value
SUCCESS . . . . .	1.00
REVIEW OF REVIEWS (new) . . . . .	2.50
Current Literature, (new), or New England Magazine may be substituted. {	3.00
COSMOPOLITAN . . . . .	1.00
Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly may be substituted.
THE HOUSEHOLD . . . . .	1.00
Good Housekeeping, the Designer or Gentlewoman may be substituted.
THE AMERICAN BOY . . . . .	1.00	}	$4.50
HOME AND FLOWERS . . . . .	1.00
			} Our Price Only

Our Great Educational Offer

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY . . . . .	$1.50	}	$13.50 In Value
REVIEW OF REVIEWS (new) . . . . .	2.50
New England Magazine may be substituted. {	3.00
CURRENT LITERATURE (new) . . . . .	3.00
Any two of the above one dollar magazines may be substituted.
NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW (new) . . . . .	5.00	}	$6.00
Leslie's Weekly may be substituted.
SUCCESS . . . . .	1.00		} Our Price Only

All subscriptions are for a full year. Magazines may be sent to one or different addresses. Foreign postage extra.

New subscriptions only will be accepted at the above prices for the Review of Reviews, Current Literature, and North American Review, but present subscribers may renew their subscriptions by adding One Dollar for each renewal subscription to the combination prices named. Either new or renewal subscriptions will be accepted for all other magazines named. A transfer from one member of a family to another does not constitute a new subscription. A new subscription to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY and to SUCCESS must be included in every offer.

SUBSTITUTIONS: A new subscription to the Review of Reviews, a new subscription to Current Literature, and a new or renewal subscription to the Designer and the Household may be substituted each for any other except Success. Subscription will commence with issues requested wherever possible to furnish copies—otherwise with issues of the month following that in which the subscription is received.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is the only strongly evangelical undenominational religious paper in America representative of the ripest scholarship of the time. Its department of interdenominational news gives a view of the activities of the whole Church. It covers a unique field and is indispensable to those interested in religious teaching and the progress of the work of the Church. Subscription price $1.50 a year. Address all orders to

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, - 358 Dearbrn Street, Chicago.

Special Free Illustrated
Epworth League Folder

PUBLISHED BY THE
CHICAGO & ALTON RY.

"The Only Way" to San Francisco
 FOR THE
Epworth League Convention

Folder contains not only information regarding the journey, but where to go, what to see, and what to wear after you reach the Coast. There exists no publication which contains as complete information for the intending California visitor. It is free, a postal card brings it to you.

GEO. J. CHARLTON,
 Gen. Passenger Agent Chicago & Alton Ry.
 CHICAGO, ILL.

THE HOME UNIVERSITY,
 of FLUSHING, MICH.

Offers non-resident students exceptional facilities. Undergraduate and Post-Graduate studies in Law, Theology, Pedagogy, Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature, by correspondence, leading to their respective Bachelor's and Doctor's degree. For announcement of Home Study courses write, inclosing stamp, to The Registrar, The Home University, Flushing, Mich.

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain in a Piano?

We have hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting by persons moving which must be disposed of at once as we cannot make room for them in our salesrooms. These pianos include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many of them cannot be distinguished from new, yet all are offered at a great discount from prices when new. Uprights as low as $100. Very easy terms of payment to reliable persons. Freight would cost you about $5. New large size mahogany pianos, with mandolin attachment, $175, sent anywhere on easy payments. Write at once for complete list and full particulars. You can make a great saving by securing your piano from us. Every piano warranted exactly as represented. LYON & HEALY, 92 Adams St., Chicago.
The World's Largest Music House.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
 Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

This Watch, Chain & Charm
GIVEN FREE!

To any boy or girl who will distribute a few copies of the Christian Monthly, a new religious magazine in their neighborhood, and assist in other ways. The watch is a beauty, an excellent timepiece, and is guaranteed to please.

IF YOU WANT THE WATCH, CHAIN AND CHARM FREE clip out this advertisement and forward to us, giving your full name and address, and we will send papers and full information by return mail.

We only want one in each locality.
 Address
CHRISTIAN MONTHLY
 1333 E. Franklin St., - Richmond, Va.

The Pioneer Limited.

Famous Train of the World.

Chicago—St. Paul—Minneapolis.

VIA
THE ST. PAUL ROAD

(Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.)

Equipment and Service Unequaled.

Time tables, maps and information furnished on application to
 F. A. MILLER, General Passenger Agent.
 Chicago, Ill.

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

CURES
 Female Troubles, Stooping Posture, Inflammations, Internal Pains, Tired Feeling, Backache, Weak Lungs, Nervousness.

TRIAL FREE.

It will make you comfortable, buoyant, happy—give you ability to work and enjoy life. It is simple, wholly external, adjustable to any figure. Worn with or without corset.

We have over 15,000 letters like this:
 Chandler, Okla., July 27, 1899.
 Your Brace did all you said about it and more for me. It has saved me a big doctor's bill and brought me good health, which I had not had before in 25 years. My troubles were dropsy, headache, lung disease, stomach and other ills to which women are subject.
 MRS. L. B. DICKINSON.

Write today for particulars and illustrated book mailed free in plain sealed envelope. Address
The Natural Body Brace Co., Box 744, Salina, Kansas.
 Every woman should have this Brace.

Through First Class and Tourist Sleeping Cars to California and Oregon

Every day in the year between
 Chicago, San Francisco
 Los Angeles and Portland
 via Chicago, Union Pacific
 and North-Western Line

A most comfortable and inexpensive means of making the trip overland

Lowest Rates * Finest Scenery
 Shortest Time on the Road

Personally Conducted Excursions
 every Tuesday and Thursday from Chicago

For illustrated pamphlets, rates and particulars inquire at ticket offices Chicago & North-Western Railway, 212 Clark Street or Wells Street Station, or address S. A. Hutchinson, 212 Clark Street, Chicago.

CHURCH BELLS SWEET TONED, FAR SOUNDING, DURABLE
 CATALOGUE FREE. NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN.
 AMERICAN BELL FOUNDRY

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 7:30 p.m. Daily

By paying the closest attention to little details, by constantly inviting criticism and by providing only the best of everything, our Dining Cars have achieved an international reputation.

F. S. EUSTIS, Gen'l Pass'r Agent C. B. & Q. R. R.
 209 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

20TH CENTURY NEW TESTAMENT

Written in Modern English

Some Special Features

This is a translation into simple modern English, excluding all words and phrases not used in the English of the present day.

Quotations from the Old Testament are printed in special type, and passages from the Apocrypha are also distinguished.

The usual grouping of books is retained, but the books in each group are given in chronological order.

Specimen Quotation

From the Twentieth Century New Testament.

1. CORINTHIANS, 1-3.

Now on the subject of food that has been offered in sacrifice to idols, we are sure that we all have some knowledge! Knowledge breeds conceit, while love builds up character. If a man fancies he knows anything, he has not yet acquired the knowledge of it that he ought to have acquired. On the other hand, if a man loves God, he is known and loved by God.

One Great Reason For This Edition

We have been reading our Bible in the English of three centuries ago while Hottentots and others have had it in the tongues and dialects of their own times. The idioms and forms peculiar to the times of King James have seemed to have been the only medium through which the Holy Spirit could express itself to the modern Anglo-Saxon, and all previous attempts at Bible-making have been merely new revisions and new versions of these obsolescent forms.

Representative Opinions

We have used it at family prayers, and the whole circle, from the oldest to the youngest has given rapt attention: As a light and life-giving critical commentary, we do not know where any open-minded reader could get so much in the same compass.—Methodist Review.

The whole work is the product of twenty authorities, including graduates of several Universities and members of the various sections of the Christian Church, and it is an excellent volume for students and teachers.—New York Observer.

"A valuable piece of work. It elucidates many points and compels thought all along."—Presbyterian.

"An honest effort to make a free translation which shall give the meaning of the original with all clearness."—The Christian Observer.

Our Special Premium Offers

The 20th Century New Testament is published in three parts, divided as follows: Part I: The Gospels and the Acts. Part II: Paul's Letters to the Churches. Part III: Remaining Letters and the Book of Revelation. Price of each part, 16mo, flexible cloth, 50 cents, net.

FIRST OFFER: One part of the 20th Century New Testament, sent post paid, with each new subscription to The Christian Century, at the regular rate, $1.50.

SECOND OFFER: To show our appreciation of our regular subscribers we will send the entire 20th Century New Testament, in three parts, to any reader of The Christian Century who will send us two new subscriptions at the regular rate.

It will make a splendid gift for your pastor or Sunday-school superintendent. All Bible students are eager to possess the 20th Century New Testament.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO., 358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY
MAY-DEC 1901

AUTHOR

TITLE

