GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

A High-Class Monthly Magazine, Conducted in the Interests of the Higher Life of the Household

Two Good Journals for the Price of One

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING occupies a position peculiarly its own, in that it is conducted in the interests of the higher life of the household, for it is devoted not only to practice, but to inspiration—to telling how the everyday affairs of life may be conducted, but always leading upward. Its departments, regular and special, are as numerous as the varied phases of the life of the household. It appeals to either sex, whether of young or of advancing years, and not only helps but gratifies the physical, mental and æsthetic natures of all its readers. The contributors' list for the coming year is a long one, and contains the names of many writers who are already familiar to the public. The following topics and lines of research are samples of what GOOD HOUSEKEEPING is doing for the dwellers in the homes of America:

Successful Kitchens
Solutions of the Domestic Help Problem
The Latest Hygiene
Home Handicraft of Various Kinds
Homemade Christmas Gifts, Illustrated
Truth about Dishonest and Adulterated Food
Famous Cooking Schools Described
People Who Have Uplifted Home Life, Illustrated
New Sources of Income
Tasteful House Furnishing, Illustrated.
'Good Housekeeping Babies'
Disadvantages and Advantages of Country Girls

Advantages and Disadvantages of City Girls
Women's Exchanges
'The Best Way' in all kinds of Housework
Mistakes of Young Housekeepers
Original Recipe from Famous Cooks and Cooking Teachers
The Four-foot Cousins
Fathers and So
Household Economics
New Ideas in Fancy Work
Changes and Tendencies in Home Life
New Fashions at Their Wearers
Diseases of Children, etc., etc.

The whole magazine is dominated by a high purpose to be an ever-ready help and inspiration toward making "the higher life of the household" a practical and delightful reality in every family, and a force in social and civic affairs. Each number consists of 96 pages filled to overflowing with original and interesting reading, including many handsome and striking illustrations.

Our Absolutely Unparalleled Offer

By an arrangement just perfected we are enabled to offer this most useful and interesting magazine on the following special and markedly liberal terms:

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY, One Year, $1.50
GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, One Year, $1.00 } BOTH for $1.50
Total, $2.50

We thus offer the two ablest and most representative journals of their class at the price of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY alone, thus giving our readers an opportunity never before offered. Think of it, a handsome illustrated magazine, a year's numbers of which make an elegant volume of over 1150 pages, all of which may be had for a nominal sum by every subscriber, old or new, under this most remarkable offer. This is surely a rare opportunity, and no one should delay or fail to take advantage of it.

A sample copy of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING will be sent to any address on receipt of eight cents in stamps, which should be sent to the publishers at Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, Ill. Remit by postoffice express money order, check, draft or registered letter to

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

EDITORIAL.

ONE THOUGHT.

Though time may dig the grave of creeds,
And dogmas wither in the sod,
My soul will keep the thought it needs—
Its swerveless faith in God.

No matter how the world began,
Nor where the march of science goes,
My trust in something more than man
Shall help me bear life's woes.

Let progress take the props away,
And moldering superstitions fall;
Still God retains his regal sway—
The Maker of the all.

Why cavil over that or this?
One thought is vast enough for me—
The great Creator was and is,
And evermore will be.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in Woman's Home Companion.

THE COMING CHRISTIAN JOURNAL.

THE first man to discover the power of the press in the formation of public opinion was Martin Luther. During the four or five years which preceded the year of the Reformation the average number of books published annually in the German language was about forty-five. As soon as the great reformer began his work the printing presses became busy, and he was by far the largest contributor to their activity. In the year 1523, only five years after the movement had begun, the number of German books was four hundred and ninety-eight, and of these Luther himself actually wrote one hundred and eighty-three. Since those days the press has been abundantly used for the purpose of molding public opinion. All newspapers and most magazines attempt to do so, even when they seem to be merely catering to the whims of public fancy or the appetite for news. For few editors can be found to denude themselves so completely of their own opinions and aspirations that their personality does not color the news or articles which they send out to their readers. And the most powerful periodicals, those which have made their mark, whether in secular or religious matters, upon the public mind, have always been those through which some personality spoke its message frankly and earnestly. On the other hand, almost all the great social and spiritual movements of modern times have been sustained and directed by means of the press and very largely by means of periodicals.

It is impossible nowadays for any group of pulpits to form a society or club for the propagation of some new ism without a paper being immediately started. Through its pages they seek to maintain communication with one another and to win converts to their faith and supporters for their enterprise.

The Church of Christ, which began the use of the press to create popular movements, is today fully alive to the power of this instrument. Every denomination has and must continue to have its own weekly and monthly papers and its year books. Every important church society feels the need of some sheet by which it may keep in touch with its subscribers, inspiring and reminding them by regular and interesting accounts of the work to which they have given their money, and its fruits of blessing. Even individual congregations, when they are large and their work is varied and powerful, find it necessary to print and circulate a weekly or a monthly sheet with full accounts of the diverse departments of labor which are being carried on by them.

An Open Field.

Amid all these spheres of influence which are occupied in the America of today, by a countless multitude of papers, there is one field, perhaps the greatest of all, which has not been occupied, or is not occupied adequately, at the present time. We refer to the need for an inter-denominational weekly paper. It is certain that none at present exists in all the length and breadth of America which attempts to do the exact work which ought to be done for the evangelical churches of this continent. As this is a matter of vital and, from some view points, even overwhelming importance, we propose to sketch briefly the main features by which such a paper should be characterized.

1. In the first place, there is need for a popular and influential exposition and defense of the Christian faith. This is no doubt being carried on with considerable power by many of the religious weeklies connected with the various denominations. But it must be remembered that they are seldom read or valued by any but the already convinced supporters of the respective sections of the church with which they are connected as more or less official organs. And the very fact that they are thus connected does not add to the force of their defense of the faith which is held in common by all the separated portions of Christendom. If a paper could be found to speak in the name of them all, to stand out as the exponent of the very heart of the Christian experience as all the denominations possess and enjoy it, its voice would certainly reach circles which at present are hardly affected by all the learned and eloquent and thoroughly adequate claims and pleas for Christ which are being made under present circumstances.

Profound Faith Necessary.

This must be done by writers who are themselves convinced of the final truth and supreme authority of the central elements of the Christian faith. The world knows perfectly well when would-be exponents of Christianity are tampering with its real nature. When the incarnation of the Son of God is made less than that by some clever juggling with the word divine, or the fact of sin is hidden behind a maze of scientific metaphors, or the profound, conscience-stirring New Testament doctrine of an actual atonement which cost Christ his life-blood, is softened to suit the supposed refinement of the modern mind into something less terrible, less crushing, than that—the modern mind knows perfectly well that it is being deceived and played with. Christianity is well known as to its main features, and the popular mind has a very keen feeling for, and a very clear judgment of, any and every attempt to withdraw any of these features, because they are miscreations, or terrible, or humbling to human pride. The journal which would stand forth as the spokesman of the faith held in common by all the great evangelical churches must do so in the full light of present-day scholarship and science. Nothing can be weaker than to suppose that the critical study, either of the Bible or nature, is going to undermine the essentials of Christianity. It is not too much to say that a generation of men is growing up in the ministry of all the churches who know the assured results of historical and scientific investigation, and who know that their faith stands stronger and their evangelical doctrine clearer for these results. The paper that would interpret the Christian faith of all the denominations to our generation must have behind it this degree of scholarship and this glad confidence in the Christ of God.

Religious and Literary.

2. But this paper of which we are dreaming, and doing more than dream, must be so religious as to stand in the place of an interpreter of life. It must therefore be a journal not only of religion, but of social and literary progress as well. It must be a paper which is able to hold its own as a first-class authority on these subjects, speaking with the voice of those who again know the facts and see their meaning in the light of the gospel of God's grace. Nothing can be more disastrous to the church than the separation of the religious from the so-called secular periodicals. There must ever be special periodicals as we have seen above, which shall be concerned with their own fields of investigation and work; but all leading at last to Christ. And there must be brought into existence more periodicals which can survey, as from the throne of that kingdom, all these varied interests. The unity of all departments is, as we believe, in that kingdom. This unity must be made real somewhere and somehow, and in as many ways and places as possible. One way of revealing this unity of all life in Christ is by establishing and promoting a journal that shall deliberately set itself to the task of making that unity real, supreme, inspiring beyond all other thoughts or facts for the minds and hearts and the enkindled imaginations of its readers.

3. We have but brief space to say in conclusion that the paper we speak of should do what none at present attempts in a broad and successful manner. It should give very week a survey of the Christian world. This would become one of its most influential departments. The denominations all suffer from ignorance of one another. The ministers of each ought to know a great deal more than they do of the problems, aims and triumphs of the rest of Christendom. This alone is sufficient to strengthen our faith and to give us all a new sense of the proportion of things in our study of living doctrines, the doctrines that are active and powerful as the very word of God today.

It must be evident that if a journal could be established which in any measure fulfilled the functions which we have sketched it would exert a most powerful influence upon the movements for the reunion of Christendom. No union can ever be secured until the churches come to know and respect each other better than they do. When their mutual confidence and affection have deepened they will become ashamed of some misunderstandings and some forms of rivalry which at present run over the country unashamed. Blessed the journal which can help to bring the churches nearer that great day of peace and love and final reunion.

Where can such a paper be better established than in Chicago, the central city of the nation? And what paper can hope to move toward that lofty ideal, if it be not THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY?

FOREIGN MISSIONARIES UNDER FIRE.

The criticisms by Mark Twain in the North American Review of the missionaries in China in general, and of Dr. W. S. Ament in particular, have been unjustifiably severe; and his failure to retract statements which have been proved to be groundless is not to his credit; yet the main charge in the indictment is one over which the Christian church would do well to do a little more pondering before dismissing it from their thoughts. That Dr. Ament in taking part in "a punitive expedition," and in accepting and disbursing tribute for indemnity which was collected under pressure, acted from the purest and most chivalrous motives is at once conceded. Those who know him intimately regard him as a high-minded Christian gentleman who would not wittingly descend to an unworthy deed. In this opinion The Christian Century shares. And Dr. Ament himself is reported to have said in a recent interview that while further light might lead to a change of heart, with the light which he now possesses he would do over again everything that he has done. Mr. Conger, the United States minister in Peking, who understands the difficulties of the situation arising from the confused and chaotic condition of society, unqualifiedly endorses his course of action. Dr. Ament has returned to this country and is now making his defense. Some of the criticisms made by Mr. Clements have been successfully answered, still there are some points in the indictment which neither Dr. Ament nor any of his defenders, including Dr. Judson Smith, the secretary of the American Board, has made clear. It makes no difference whatever in the argument to say that not a cent of the money collected went to Dr. Ament or to his associates for mission purposes, but that it was used solely for the relief of the native refugees whom the Boxers had despoiled; nor does it make any difference in the argument to say that Dr. Ament acted in accordance with the Chinese custom of making the head of the clan or village responsible for the actions of the people as a whole. Deeper than questions of policy is the question of principle. "A punitive expedition" does not seem to be the kind of undertaking in which missionaries ought to take part. Dr. Ament's defense is that "the Chinese were likely to mistake leniency for weakness and fear. The punitive expeditions were therefore the only thing that could show them that no weakness or fear existed." He adds: "What we missionaries wanted was a judicious punishment spread over the entire affected district." Speaking of Captain Forsyth, who had charge of the expedition, Dr. Ament puts it to his credit that although not in sympathy with the missionaries, "he did not permit his feelings to interfere with his work." There are many who have difficulty in harmonizing this appeal to the sword with the spirit of Christ.

And when, after the siege of Peking, the Chinese Christian refugees took possession of the deserted palace of a native prince, Dr. Ament "at the advice of the foreign officials," confiscated the furnishings still left in the house and sold them, using the money to feed the starving refugees, he evidently exceeded his authority. As an emergency act the taking and selling of loot for such a humane purpose might be defended; but to justify it in cold blood upon high ethical grounds is another matter. What the churches expect from the missionaries is a strict adherence to the highest ethical principles, whatever be the sacrifice entailed; and if, under the strain and stress of circumstances, a compromise of principle be made, or a standard be adopted lower than the highest, let it be excused, but never let it be justified.

The ethical principle involved in the case before us is essentially the same as that with which Victor Hugo grapples in "Les Miserables." Jean Valjean is out of work. His sister and her seven children, who are dependent upon him for bread, are famishing. In his desperation he knocks a hole in the window of a baker's shop, passes his arm through the grating and glass, seizes a loaf of bread and carries it off. He runs at the full speed of his legs, but is overtaken, is arraigned for theft and house-breaking, is found guilty, and is sentenced to five years in the galleys. Was Jean Valjean morally justifiable in stealing that loaf of bread to feed a starving family? The motive of the man we admire, the severity of his punishment we deplore, but if men were allowed to put forth their hands in times of emergency and take what is not their own, the underpinning would be removed from our social order. Many a man who could endure the intensest sufferings himself rather than yield to compromise would stretch his principles to the breaking point rather than see others suffer. The ideal is seldom realizable, and in practical affairs the highest course is always hard; but the highest course is the only one that needs neither apology nor defense.

THE VISITOR.

One of the notes of the recent American literature has been dispersion—the search of the continent for a new scene in which the old drama of life might be staged. Every nook of the land has been explored for local color, every dialect has been phonographed, and many of our writers have seemed to believe that a new dislocation of language, or a fresh crudity of character was all that was necessary to originality. Fortunately enough of the actually new abides that is worth discovery and report to afford material for novelists and anthropologists for some time to come. Among the most interesting of the regions thus opened in recent years is that mountainous district which constitutes the back yards of some eight or nine of our southern states, including the Virginias, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, and which has been happily named "Appalachian America." Here is a race of mountain whites, the descendants of the patriots of revolutionary days, but for generations so isolated that until of late no jostlings of lowland civilization had disturbed the solitudes or broken in upon the mountain customs. Of late, however, reports have begun to reach us regarding these interesting folk, preserving as they do the very speech and habits of an earlier age, so that in them we seem to discover our "contemporary ancestors." Into this region we are taken by such books as Mr. John Fox's "Mountain Europa" and other tales, the Craddock Stories, Mr. Cable's "John March, Southerner," Lillian Bell's "Little Sister to the Wilderness," and W. E. Barton's "A Hero in Homespun."

The Visitor had recently a chance to see a bit of this mountain life, and at the same time catch a glimpse of one of the most effective agencies for the education and equipment of this mountain people. Berea college, a half day's delightful drive over Kentucky pikes, brings one from the heart of the "blue grass" region, that garden spot of our land, to the border of "the mountains," which is as much a sociological as a geographical term. On the plateau through which the country climbs up from its rolling greenness to the rocky stronghold held by the mountaineers, the moonshiners and feudists of current report, lies Berea, the center from which radiate educational and Christian agencies through the entire mountain neighborhood. With Berea the name of John G. Fee is intimately linked, and in his story one finds all the elements of romance and heroism required for the most effective novel. Born in 1816, converted in 1830, graduated from school and entering Lane seminary in 1842, married in 1844, and nine years later coming to Madison county, he founded the Church of Christ in Berea. In Lane he had been greatly stirred on the subject of slavery, and he determined to give his life at whatever cost to its abolition and the repair of the wrongs it had inflicted. Such ideas were little calculated to give a man a quiet life in those times. From the first he was the object of opposition, and mobbing was a frequent experience. His meetings were interrupted, himself carried out unresisting but unbending in his purpose, and after exposure, evil usage and threats, set at liberty, perhaps many miles from home. He had a way of praying himself out of difficulties. A lady told the Visitor that a relative of hers was a member of one of these mobs which started fully determined to hang Mr. Fee. They took him to the chosen place, and with a rope about his neck they gave him time only to pray. He fell upon his knees, and when he had finished that earnest petition not a man was left to do him harm. Soon Gen. Cassius M. Clay heard of him, and being of kindred sentiment they became associated first in anti-slavery agitation and later in the organization of Berea college for the education of the negroes and all others in similar case. It will be remembered that Gen. Clay was the original of Mrs. Stowe's St. Clair, the kindly disposed slave owner in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Two men of such positive convictions as Mr. Fee and Gen. Clay could not always agree, but their work in behalf of Berea linked their names in indissoluble union. Mr. Fee's positiveness is illustrated not only by his bold attitude on the subject of the negro, but as well by his uncompromising adherence to his convictions on Biblical teaching. Coming to the conclusion that he was not fully following the Scriptures as a new school Presbyterian, he left the little congregation which he had established in Berea, and after being immersed, he began the organization of a Christian church, with only himself and family to start with. His great saying was, "The one and only test for membership should be the acceptance of Christ in all the fulness of his character." Loved and honored, he lived till January of the present year, when he passed into the fuller life. His best monument is the college, on the walls of whose chapel his portrait hangs.

The school is certain to surprise one who sees it for the first time. The majority of the students are of the mountain class, young men and women whose education augurs the best possible things for their mountain homes. The Visitor talked with several who had never seen a train till they came to Berea. These young people have grown up in the typical mountain homes, where the whole family lives in a log cabin, either single or double, the latter consisting of two cabins side by side, with a roofed space between serving for a dining room, and where the margin of conveniences, and even of what most of us would consider necessities, is very narrow. Such cabins fall into groups on creeks or in mountain valleys, and take to themselves quaint and characteristic village names, like Fair Play, Wide-Awake, Cutshin, No Bizness Branch, Troublesome, Stand-Around and Hell-fer-Sartin. One is interested to find among these people certain informing survivals of the old Anglo-Saxon that would have read well in Chaucer, such as "hit," for "it," "holp" for "helped," "drug" for "dragged," "pack" for "carry," "gorm" for "muss," and "feisty," meaning full of life, impertinent. The greeting, on riding up to a cabin, is, "Howdy, strangers 'light and hitch yer beasties." Curiosity is unrestrained, and the comer is likely to be greeted with a shower of questions that would do credit to a Chinese ambassador visiting in Chicago. "Who might you all be? Where are ye aimin' ter go? What brung ye up this air way off branch? Where do ye live at? Where's yer old man? (This to a lady.) How old be ye?"

The "Moonshiners".

The mountaineers are, of course, "moonshiners" to a great extent. One is likely to be told quietly in a country rendezvous where "court" or trading brings the people together, that every other man makes illicit whisky. It is difficult to convince these people that the government has any more right to interfere in this regard than in any other household affair. If you inquire for the "dispensaries," you are likely to be taken up any of the roads a short distance to some by-path and there have pointed to you a very simple plan for satisfying the thirst of the traveler. There may be a cave, or a sheltering thicket. Perhaps there is a rude sign to the effect that "Bill don't talk," indicating the impracticability of any attempts at conversation with the unseen genius of the place, who has, of course, taken full note of your appearance and harmlessness as you approached. You put your money on the designated spot, and withdrawing presently return to find the whiskey in its place. Now the Visitor does not vouch for all this, but is so informed "upon the best authority."

One of the most interesting features of the mountain life is the preaching. The ministers are for the most part very poorly equipped for their work, and as a result their discourses are curiosities from both the linguistic and the theological point of view. President Frost of Berea says:

"A few of their preachers aspire to greater knowledge—several have moved to Berea and entered school. But the majority rather glory in their ability to speak 'as the Spirit gives them utterance.' And their utterance is loud. The present writer was invited to preach at one of these associations, and in the middle of his discourse one woman nudged another, with the remark, 'I wish he'd quit talkin' and go to preachin'!"

"And it is sad to see that this class of preachers is still being replenished. One young man, persuaded to attend a southern theological school, was back in three months fully equipped.

"Yas," he said, 'the seminary is a good place to go and get rested up, but 'tain't worth while for me ter go thar no more's long as I've got good wind.'

"Meeting a young man unusually well dressed at a mountain 'court day,' we asked if he was a teacher.

"No," he answered, 'I couldn't get nary certificate.'

"What are you doing, may I ask?"

"I'm tendin' some churches," was the unabashed reply.

"And in proportion to their lack of education is their sectarian assurance. We found four kinds of Baptists, each refusing to recognize the validity of the ordinances as performed by the others."

Here is a sample of the mountain preaching upon which the Visitor came, as it was set down by a hearer.

"My brethering, you'll find my tex' somers in the Bible, an' I hain't agoin' ter tell yer whar; but hit's thar. Ef yer don't believe hit, you jest take down yer Bible an' hunt twell yer fine hit, an' you'll fine a heap more thet's good, too. My tex' it this: 'On this rock will I build my church, an' the gates of hell shall not prevail against hit.'

The True Chrch.

"Now, I'm goin' ter speak the truth ter-day, no matter who hit hits. Ef they's ary man in this aujience thet don't agree with me, thet's his lookout, an' not mine. The question fur us ter answer 'bout this tex' is this: Wut church war hit thet the Lord founded? Wut church is hit thet the gates of hell haint agoin' ter prevail against? I'm agoin' ter answer thet question; an' I'll tell yer wut church hit is; hit's the Ole Hardshell Baptist church; thet's wut church hit is.

"A heap o' people says hit war the Christian church. Well, hit warn't. The Campbellites says they're Christians; the Methodis' says, 'We're Christians, too.' Wall, I haint a Christian: I'm a Baptist. I fine in the Bible thet the disciples war fust called Christians at Antioch. Not at Jerusalem. The Lord never called the church Christians, nur no person else thet had any right ter gin the church a name. The Lord founded the church wen he went down inter the warter, an' the gates of hell shall not prevail against hit."

Proceeding, the preacher gave a vivid description of his conversion, which he affirmed took place under a hickory tree on a stormy night.

"I cud go," said he, "to thet ole hick'ry tree the darkest night the Lord over made. An' wen they axed wut 'church I'd jine, I sez, sez I, 'Lemme jine the Baptist,' sez I; 'not the Missionary Baptist, nor the reg'lar Baptist, but the ole, Two Seed, Iron Jacket, Predestination, Hardshell Baptist-ah!' For on this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against hit-ah."

It is greatly to the credit of some of these preachers that they are trying to atone for lack of education by attendance at such schools as Berea. The Visitor had pointed out to him in one of the classes a middle-aged man who was laboriously naming the states bordering on the Atlantic. He was spoken of as a rather successful Methodist preacher.

Adapted to Its Purpose.

The school is admirably equipped for its service to this community. President Frost is an Oberlin man, a scholar of recognized abilities, and devoted heart and hand to this work. All branches of educational work are carried on, emphasis being laid on manual training as an aid to resourcefulness among the people. On the walls of the wood-workers' department one reads such legends as "Jesus was a carpenter," and "A trade learned is a fortune made." The class of students at Berea is surprisingly alert. The chapel services were inspiring and the points made in a brief address were as quickly caught by the young people as in any college in the land. Negroes and whites work side by side, and not a few boys from the north, even as far as New England, have been drawn to Berea by the character of the work and the limited expense.

Out from this school go teachers into the mountain regions, and this is the promise of better things for this people. A young woman who goes as a teacher has a difficult task, but one that is self-rewarding.

An enthusiastic old mountaineer described an example in this wise: "I tell yeou hit teks a moughty resolute gal ter do what that thar gal has done. She got, I reckon, about the toughest deestric in the ceounty, which is sayin' a good deal. An' then fer boardin'-place—well, there warn't much choice. There was one house, with one room. But she kep' right on, an' yeou would hev thought she was havin' the finest kind of a time ter look at her. An' then the last day, when they was sayin' their pieces an' sich, some sorry fellers come in thar full o' moonshine an' shot their revolvers. I'm a-tellin' ye hit takes a moughty resolute gal."

Best of all, the college goes to the people in a score of ways, by lecturers, literature and extensive libraries, carried on horses, a box of books on each side of the saddle. By these and other methods President Frost and his associates are slowly bringing a new day to the mountain people, the hardness of whose fiber is destined to lend strength to southern life, even as their highland region forms the geographical backbone of the south.

SETTLEMENT OF THE GILBERT CASE.

The Congregationalists of the middle west have had a disagreeable task in dealing with the case of one of the professors in the Chicago Theological seminary. About two years ago Professor George H. Gilbert of the New Testament department began to publish his conclusions regarding the person of Christ. These appeared partly in magazine articles and partly in a series of volumes. In "The Revelation of Jesus," published in 1899, Dr. Gilbert reached the position that the Fourth Gospel does not teach the real but "an ideal" pre-existence of Christ. As this deeply affected the doctrine of the person of Christ, the directors of the seminary asked Dr. Gilbert to prepare his own complete statement of New Testament doctrine. This it appears that he has done by writing a new book, entitled "The First Interpreters of Jesus." We are able to say that in this part of his historical investigations the professor has reached a similar conclusion. It appears that for the apostle Paul Christ only began to be really when he was born at Bethlehem. When Paul speaks of Christ as pre-existent he is again referring to the purpose of God, and not to any real pre-existence. This must mean that Dr. Gilbert does not find in the New Testament any ground for believing in the incarnation as the church has held and taught it from the earliest times. Christ the real man, is not, then, the real God; he was a man foreseen and so ideally existent from eternity; highly gifted with natural genius and gracious character, when at last he was brought into being, anointed with the Holy Spirit to be the Messiah. This is a perfectly familiar doctrine to those who know church history. It is the very doctrine which the Congregationalists of New England gave up their churches and parsonages and a thousand historic associations to repudiate. We consider it a serious error on the part of the directors that in accepting the resignation of Professor Gilbert they did not specify the one sole reason for their action. They have thereby done an injustice to Professor Gilbert, who has a right to stand clear of any other suspicion; and they have made it appear by comparing their resolutions with his letter that it is critical investigation and scientific study which they dislike and condemn. By shirking the statement of the one supreme doctrine which caused this resignation, they have put themselves on record as if they were obscurantists of a very primitive order. It is quite clear from his own writings that if Professor Gilbert's resignation had not been accepted, the Chicago Theological seminary would have stood before the world as an institution for which the Catholic doctrine of the incarnation was a matter of indifference. In saving themselves, as they have done, from that situation, they ought, for their own sakes, as well as Professor Gilbert's, to have given the ground for their action.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Theology is progressive, truth is eternal.

What the Churches Want.

The churches want preachers rather than sermonizers; men who have a message to deliver, rather than men who have a subject to develop. A well-known divine, at the end of his public life, was heard to say: "If I had loved subjects less and men more, I would have had larger results to show in my ministry."

Correction Essential.

Conviction breeds conviction. Doubt engenders doubt. Better offensive dogmatism than inoffensive know-nothingism. Benjamin Kid remarks that "the undogmatic sects reap the scantiest harvests, while the dogmatic churches still take the multitude." The preacher who says, "I believe, therefore I speak," will never lack converts. But why should dogmatism be offensive? Why should it not be tempered with charity and seasoned with love? Why should the possession of a belligerent spirit be regarded as necessary to the holding of positive convictions?

The Supreme Problem.

Every age has its supreme problems. The supreme problem of theology in the present day is the person of Christ. "Who is he? What is he?" are the questions which men are asking with new emphasis and urgency. His incarnation and resurrection are being studied anew in the light of the doctrine of evolution. Christ challenges the world's attention and the more men know of him the more does his influence over them increase.

A Sign of the Times.

Among the signs of the times is the inauguration of new societies for the furtherance of social reform. One of the latest born is called "The Scottish Christian Social Union." Its objects are: (a) To claim for the Christian law the ultimate authority to rule social practice; (b) to affirm the social mission of the church, and make practical suggestions as to how that mission may best be fulfilled; (c) to investigate where necessary the social and economic facts in different departments of the national life, and to study how to apply the truths and principles of Christianity to the problems arising therefrom; (d) to take action as occasion arises for the furtherance of specific reforms. All such movements are in the right direction; but plain Christian folk will naturally wonder why the church itself is not being made more effective as an agency for social reform.

Marcus Dods

The Rev. Marcus Dods, D. D., the eminent Free Church of Scotland divine, who is now on a visit to this country, does not speak hopefully of the results of the recent union of the United and Free Presbyterian Churches of Scotland. The Highlanders, who are intensely conservative and provincial, are afraid that too many concessions have been made; and unless better counsels prevail, they may break off and form themselves into a separate organization.

Light on a Dark Background.

The desolating fire which swept over Jacksonville, Fla., licking up over ten million dollars' worth of property, and rendering upward of fifteen hundred people shelterless, brought into light some of the noble qualities of human nature. It was said that the disaster effectually obliterated the dividing line between the rich and the poor, making all akin. Women of wealth sat on the curbstone beside their poorer sisters; sharers with them in a common misfortune. When all the trappings of wealth and rank are stripped off, men are seen to be very much alike. In the deep experiences of life the rich and the poor meet together; and in the common touch of kinship they are made to feel that the Lord is the Master of them all.

Creed Revision.

At the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, now in session at Philadelphia, the burning question is the revision of the church standards. The committee appointed to consider the whole matter of "the restatement of doctrines most surely believed among us, and which are substantially embodied in our Confession of Faith," has had a hard task before it. The expression of opinion obtained from the Presbyteries has been divided; yet there has been a very general desire that some deliverance might be formulated by the committee on creed revision that would secure harmony, and set the entire question at rest. It is high time that some way of relief was found from subscription to the Westminster standards. However interesting they may be as a historical relic, they have long ceased to express the living faith of the church. A few pages of large type are all that is needed in which to give formal expression to the essential truths which constitute the vital core of the Christian religion.

What is Success?

One of the most discouraging things in life today is the tendency to believe that success is in having, instead of in being. If a man makes a million of dollars he is called successful, though he should utterly lack in the elementary moralities. We believe the true view of success is that it is the development of all the best in a man. If one makes a fortune for himself and does not make a man of himself, what will it profit him? This is the answer to the speech recently delivered by Mr. Charles M. Schwab, president of the American steel trust, to three hundred poor boys of St. George's Evening Trade school in New York, when he said that he knew no college men who had succeeded in industrial and manufacturing lives. Such an estimate of success has a debasing tendency. It ought to be steadily and earnestly preached that whoever makes a character is a success. What he may have in the way of wealth is incidental. A man without a character is a failure.

CHICAGO NOTES.

Chicago is a great city, but it is still in the making. Great forces are at work within it—forces both of good and evil. Its population, which numbers something near two million souls, and which is scattered over 196 square miles of territory, is heterogeneous in the extreme. It includes representatives of almost every nation under heaven. About ninety per cent of its population are foreign born, or are of foreign-born parentage. And what renders the work of civic and social unification slow and difficult is the circumstance that these foreign elements are in solid blocks. There is a Bohemian district, a Polish district, an Italian district, and so on. Between the different settlements there is often intense race hatred. Unity will come only as the idea of brotherhood grows.

The forces of evil are mighty and are very much in evidence. There are 6,000 saloons, employing about 31,600 people, and having a daily revenue of $316,000; there are 31 theaters, most of which are open on Sundays; there are 3,000 pool and billiard rooms; there are large numbers of gambling dens and houses of ill-fame. It is estimated that there are in all 50,000 people who live directly upon crime, or who are connected with evil resorts, the influence of which tends to the demoralization of the community. To match herself against these destructive forces it behooves the Church of Christ to be intensively aggressive.

But if the shadows are deep the light is bright. Nowhere are the forces that make against sin and for righteousness more active or more potential than in Chicago. Leaving out of view the Roman Catholic Church, and other religious and charitable organizations, we have in the city 605 Protestant churches, with 167,000 members, and 184,000 pupils in the Sunday schools. The various forms of benevolent effort of which these churches are the center cannot be even enumerated. In the sum total of their results they make a noble showing; and although generally silent and unseen in their operations, upon them depend, to an extent that many never dream of, the saving of the city.

The movement of population in the city of Chicago is something remarkable. The postoffice authorities state that on the 1st of May of this year there were a hundred per cent more changes in the down town district than there were last year. In the resident districts the proportion of changes caused by the "Moving Carnival" are no doubt equally large. From this shifting of population great confusion arises in church work. The pastor of a medium-sized church reports that after the 1st of May he has had to strike off his visiting list the names of two hundred families, who have removed from his district. One of the most popular preachers of the city is wont to say that he does not preach in a church, but in a railroad depot, where people are continually coming and going.

The reception given by the trustees and residents of Chicago Commons to their friends in the new building on Saturday, May 11th, marks the beginning of a new era in the history of that useful institution. A recent gift of $12,000 from the family of John Marshall Williams for the completion of the residence wing of the building supplies a much needed addition, while at the same time it makes necessary the raising of an additional $5,000 for its equipment. If people only knew the blessed work which Chicago Commons, with its band of noble workers, is doing; if they only knew the cheer which it is bringing into dark and desolate homes, the social discontent which it is allaying, the festering sores on the body politic which it is healing, they would give to it unstinted sympathy and support.

At the first annual meeting of the Associated Jewish Charities held May 12th, an encouraging report was presented. Through this agency the large sum of $135,000 has been collected during the year. This is an advance of twenty-five per cent upon the amount raised in the previous year. Few people have any idea of the beneficent work done by the various Jewish charitable organizations of the city. Hospitals, training schools, homes for orphans and for the aged are among the institutions which these organizations sustain. The Christian church has no right to claim an exclusive monopoly of works of mercy.

The Bible Society—the sixty-first annual report of which has just been issued—is one of the helpful agencies in the city. Its purpose is to place a Bible in every Bibleless home in Chicago. A house to house canvass made a few years ago revealed the startling fact that of the 1,280 families visited, 1,200 were found to be destitute of the Word of God. In another section of the city 1,140 Bibleless homes were found. The agents of this society say that it is no uncommon thing to find people who have never seen a Bible or who do not know it from a dictionary.

"Holiness Bands" have been invading this citadel of Satan. They speak of themselves as "none of your dead Quaker sort of people that go to meetings, and sit around like so many whitened tombstones in a graveyard." They believe in having "a lively time," and in "making the dust fly." Their artificial methods for getting up a revival savor of self-excitation and hypnotism. They belong to the class who have "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge."

It is somewhat difficult to determine what the exact result of closing the army canteen at Fort Sheridan has been. It is affirmed that a large number of "blind pigs" have been started in Highwood since the abolition of the canteen, and that drunkenness among the soldiers has been on the increase. The testimony is somewhat conflicting; but the ministerial committee appointed to investigate the matter report that upon the whole the results have been in favor of good order and sobriety. The official reports at Fort Sheridan show that whereas from Nov. 1, 1900, to Feb. 10, 1901, the percentage of arrests was 5.2; from Feb. 10th to May 2d the percentage of arrests has been 4.9.

An epidemic of speculation in stocks and grain has broken out in the city. A peep into the Board of Trade the other day revealed a condition of things which is perfectly appalling. If that excited crowd of vociferating and gesticulating men represents the commercial center of the northwest, a more unhealthy condition of things could hardly be imagined. It is said that the gambling epidemic is spreading from employer to employed and that thousands of clerks are mortgaging their wages months in advance, on the ten per cent plan, to have money to stake on the chances of the game. For almost every one of them there is surely coming a day of reckoning. They are generally following the lead of George Phillips, who is the hero of the hour; and whose large winnings represent hundreds of wrecked fortunes. The gambling passion is eating our industrial and social life as a canker. Can nothing be done to check it? Is there no balm in Gilead that can cure this social sore?

The Chicago Federation of Religious Workers has now completed its organization. Its objects are the establishment of a bureau of information concerning the religious and social forces of the city and the laws and ordinances relating thereto; and the promotion of combined efforts for the general good. Among its officers are men whose names are prominent as workers in the cause of religion and good morals in Chicago. The secretary is H. F. Ward, 4648 Marshfield avenue.

Last week thirty-seven women graduated from the Chicago Training School for City, Home and Foreign Missions in connection with the Methodist church. Dr. John Henry Barrows, president of Oberlin, gave an address on "The Extension of the Kingdom of God, as Seen by the World Traveler."

The recent death of Mrs. Lucy Judd, wife of Deacon H. Worthington Judd, and her new-born baby, who received no medical treatment, together with other similar cases also, has aroused a storm of popular indignation against Dr. Dowie, and the authorities are threatening criminal action against him. "I think that Dr. Dowie is crooked—crooked in his teachings and crooked in his dealings," declared J. W. Cabeen, a former elder of Zion, living at 248 LaSalle avenue, to a reporter for the Daily News. "He is false in his theology and false in his business transactions. He is not insane; on the contrary, he is an extremely long-headed man and a man of superhuman cunning. Some take the ground that he is an out-and-out imposter, but I take the more charitable view that he is self-deluded. He is guilty of the most arrant hypocrisy and yet I think that he believes in his own acts. You have heard of the man who lied so much that he came to believe his lies were the truth. He is a man of remarkable resource and powers of mind and is a born leader, and that accounts for his wonderful success. I believe that God really used him in the days of his humbler condition when he was pure in heart, but success has puffed him and filled him with pride, and he has fallen away, and when a man falls the devil can do almost anything with him. The power that he assumed was too much for him and he has gradually got to the point where he uses the whole church for his selfish aggrandisement and exploitation. He has piled up an immense fortune, which has been poured into his coffers for the cause, but which he has retained absolute control of and has used as he pleased."

Dowie is now hiding, trying to escape the clutches of the law, and it is said that a "run" has been made upon his bank by nervous depositors. It is thought by some that the knell of Dowieism has sounded; but Dr. Dowie is a resourceful man, and his power will not be so easily broken. He is one of the most colossal frauds of the century.

At a recent meeting of the Chicago Association of Congregational Churches, when the subject of second service was under discussion, the statement was made by Dr. I. C. Armstrong, the city missionary secretary, that of the seventy-six Congregational churches within the limits of the city twelve have larger morning than evening audiences, and sixty-four have larger evening than morning audiences.

Hushed was that little room; so very still

As if a whole world's heart had ceased to beat
Through withered leaves of Hope, the tears fell chill
On lonely feet.

Shalt Thou not count the widow's tears that fall?

Shalt Thou not give the broken-hearted rest?

Shalt Thou not hear earth's weary ones that call?

Beloved and Best!

CONTRIBUTED.

EAST LONDON.

'Twas August, and the fierce sun overhead
Smote on the squalid streets of Bethnal Green,
And the pale weaver, through his windows seen
In Spitalfields, looked thrice dispirited.

I met a preacher there I knew, and said:
"Ill and o'erworked, how fare you in this scene?"
"Bravely!" said he, "for I of late have been Much cheered with thoughts of Christ, the living bread."

O human soul! As long as thou canst so Set up a mark of everlasting light,
Above the howling senses' ebb and flow,

To cheer thee and to right thee if thou roam—
Not with lost toil thou laborest through the night!
Thou mak'st the heaven thou hop'st indeed thy home.
—Matthew Arnold.

WHAT DOES THE PRESENCE FORETOKEN?

By James M. Campbell.

What are we to hope for from the presence of Christ? If Christ is really present, what are we to expect from him? What does the fact of his being present, presage? We answer, the presence of Christ is a pledge of good for the world. If he is here in the power of the Spirit, we have every reason to expect great things from him. We cannot paint the future too brightly if it is in his hands. To those who believe in the potency of his presence pessimism is impossible.

To a large extent the inspiration of hope has died out of the church. Great things are not expected. Christians are not, as a rule, in the attitude of eager expectancy. They have ceased to hope for much from the future because they have in reality ceased to hope for much from Christ; and they have ceased to hope for much from Christ because the sense of his presence has become dim. The days of buoyant, youthful hopefulness have always been days when the church has been deeply imbued with the consciousness of the presence of her Lord.

There are those who, looking abroad upon the increasing conflict between good and evil, estimate that these two forces are so evenly balanced as to preclude the possibility of any great measure of progress. It almost seems to them as if the conflict which is now on must end in a drawn battle. Their gloomy forecast comes from not seeing the invisible leader who is at the head of the forces of good, and is pushing them on to ultimate victory.

The American soldiers in the war of the rebellion went to battle singing:

"John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave,
But his soul goes marching on."

Not the soul of the dead Christ, but the living Christ himself, goes marching on through the ages at the head of his conquering legions.

Others glowingly optimistic see not only victory for the right, but they see it close at hand. The world which they look upon is growing steadily better. It has within itself power of recuperation. Only give it time, and it is well able to overcome all alien forces and to work out its own salvation.

Others regard the present order of things as doomed to failure. They believe that the world is growing worse. They have no hope of victory from the forces that are at present in operation, and which are at the command of the church. They do not think that Christ is making much headway. What he is gaining at one point he is more than losing at another. They even hold that it is not the mission of the church to convert the world, and hence all her well-meaning efforts to compass this great result must of necessity prove abortive. They are looking forward to a general collapse. And when things have come to the worst the absent Christ will return to begin his millennial reign. Touching the present, this class are pessimists to the core. They strike hands with the Buddhist theosophist, who looks upon the world as moving in a circle, rather than in an upward course. Instead of hoping great things from "the presence," they are hoping for "the presence" as something yet to come. But that which the church hath, why should she yet hope for?

There are others who take a medium view of things. They believe in the final victory of the right. They hold with Professor Drummond that "the whole tone of the Bible when it speaks of the final results of the world's history is of jubilee and triumph, never of sorrow and despondency." They believe with John Bunyan that "there will come a time when Antichrist will be a matter of history, when saints will speak of how he grew and spread, and how he was consumed by the breath of the Lord's mouth, and destroyed by the brightness of his coming." Yet they do not believe that the goal is to be reached at a single bound; or that the path of progress will describe a straight line. Obstacles many and stubborn have to be surmounted. The conflict of the human will with the divine purpose, out of which have grown the tragedies of the ages, will continue. But Christ will be ultimately victorious. He will gain supreme control of all things. "For he must reign until he hath put all his enemies under his feet." (I. Cor. 25: 25.)

Strengthens Faith.

When it is seen that Christ has not delayed his coming, that he has not kept the world waiting in vain through long centuries for his return, the hope of the church instead of being extinguished is put upon a firmer basis. If "for this end he both died and rose again, that he might be the Lord both of the dead and the living" (Rom. 14: 9), then his presence in the world means that he is here to establish his sovereignty over men. Our hope that he will succeed is based upon our knowledge of what he has already accomplished. He has given us every reason to believe in him. He is now, as never before, the central object of the world's hope. Even those who have lost faith in the church may retain faith in him. They acknowledge the immense debt of gratitude which the world owes him. They turn to him in the hour of extremity as the true and tried friend of humanity. With a faith that puts to shame the unbelief of those Christians who magnify what Christ is going to do by minifying what he has already done, they believe in the glorious possibilities of the present, holding that if Christ's way were only followed all would be right with the world. What comfort of hope would come to this class did they also see that the Christ who is lover and brother of all men holds the future of the world in his wounded hands!

The perplexing problems of the present require to be studied in the light of the presence of Christ. His presence is too often the omitted factor. Of course, if he is absent from the world in person, if he is not touching its life as intimately as he might do, or as he will yet do, it is well to know it, that we may not be led to expect too much from him in the present or in the immediate future; but if he is here in all the plenitude of his spiritual power, his presence is to be taken into account in the solution of all the political, social and industrial problems that now confront us. Let his presence become a living reality and the future will be faced with calm hopefulness; for working alongside of the leaven of iniquity will be seen a power sufficient to counteract it. Mighty is sin, but mightier is the grace of the unseen Christ.

War still goes on. True; but Christ is here to end it. No power but his can stay the red hand of rapine, and bring peace on earth. Until his love quenches human greed and hate, the sword shall not be beat into the plowshare, or the spear into the pruning hook. Let the world recognize the authority of the unseen king and bow before his sceptre, "and nation shall not lift up the sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." And this is the promise. The rescript of the czar of Russia may fail of its end, but the proclamation of the Prince of Peace will yet be obeyed.

To End Oppression.

Unrighteous oppression exists. Yes; but Christ is here to end it. There is no wrong that he is not able to right. There is no emergency for which he is unprepared. Nothing can take him by surprise, No evil can spring up for which he has not provided a remedy. He knows all about the present situation. The tear-dimmed eyes that looked from the brow of Olivet upon Jerusalem take in the whole of the sin and sorrow of every city. He sees the unjust monopolies which rob men of equality of opportunity which is their inalienable birthright, and which crush honest industry into the dust; he sees the growing dissatisfaction and bitterness of the working classes; he sees the increasing intensity of the fight for bread; he sees the triumphal car of progress transformed into the car of a modern Juggernaut, whose path is marked by the mangled souls and bodies of the victims of an un-Christian commercialism. Indifferent to these things he cannot be. Upon the spoiler he looks with eyes of flame, upon the victim with eyes of tenderest pity. But is he impotent? Can he do nothing to help? Is he doing nothing to help? Is he unable to effect social adjustments, to transform business methods, to furnish new social ideas, to impart new social motives? Who that believes in him as the world's Redeemer can for a moment doubt his power? We may be sure that when anything is wrong he will not leave it alone until he has put it right. The work of putting the world right is exactly the work which he has undertaken. And he is equal to it. Something has been done; but there is more to follow. He is not yet through with the world. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he has set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law."

Only when the future is taken into account can the full significance of the presence be grasped. A power which holds within itself not merely the possibility but the certainty of continuous, progressive change has become resident in the world. A good work has been begun which will be carried on until it is completed. Long and toilsome may be the way, many and dark may be the tragedies which come from the resistance which the forces of evil offer to the program of Christ, but the divine plan will not miscarry, nor will divine power fail in the accomplishment of its object. The evolutionary process which has God for its origin, and Christ for its agent, has redemption for its end. A redeemed world, a finished world, a world brought by the power of the unseen Christ into harmony with heaven's order, is the goal to which all things tend.

Were the presence of Christ to become more vividly realized a new note of evangelical power would be struck. The church is practically without hope because it is without Christ. The old evangelism, whose influence is fading, derived no small measure of its power from its attitude of expectancy. It looked for the Lord's speedy return. But hope deferred has made the heart grow sick. The most ingenious calculations as to the year, if not the day and hour, of the absent Lord's return have failed to bolster up the hope of disappointed saints. Oh, that the church of today might wake up to the glorious reality of the real personal presence of her living Lord, so that rejoicing in her powerful ally, whom nothing can vanquish, her unseen king, whose complete sovereignty over all the kingdoms of the world no alien power can forever usurp, she may arise from the dust and shine forth in the resplendent glory of her Lord, fair as the moon in love, clear as the sun in holiness, and terrible in strength as a bannered host.

THE GRADED BIBLE SCHOOL.

Herbert L. Willett.

There has been for some time a growing feeling in the minds of Sunday school teachers that the present methods of study are inadequate and that something needs to be done in the direction of placing the Sunday school upon the same level of pedagogical competency as that which prevails in the day schools. The times in which we live have shown the possibility of great improvement in the methods of the public school, and in every community there is eager endeavor to obtain the most skilled and able instructors to assume the charge of the children. Not less important is the need of such a standard in the Sunday school, and even more so, when it is considered that but a bare half-hour in the week is devoted to the study of the most important of all disciplines.

None of the methods of Bible study now in vogue seems to meet the demands when viewed from the plane of an adequate knowledge of child nature and child study. Especially is this defect felt by those who are attempting to employ the international system of lessons. The utter absence of any pedagogical perspective in the arrangement of these lessons has been long recognized and grows insupportable by those who are compelled to work under this yoke. Other systems have perhaps presented points of improvement in some particulars, but none meets in any adequate manner the needs of the times. Considering all these facts, several of the denominations have undertaken the preparation of courses of study which should adjust themselves to the modern point of view in the departments of pedagogy, Biblical scholarship and the Christian life. Among them an interesting report has been presented by a committee of the Illinois Congregational association, to which was assigned the task of preparing an outline course of study. With this committee representatives of several states co-operated. The committee in its report registers its belief that any system of Bible study which confines itself to lesson leaves is not only inadequate but detrimental to the best interests of the children. It therefore submits a plan for the preparation and use of text books which shall be purely auxiliary to the study of the Bible in class. It insists, first, that nothing should replace the Bible in the hands of the scholars. Second, that a course of study must be prepared for a particular grade and adapted to pupils of the age for which it is intended. Third, it must, especially in the senior grades, encourage the use of Bible dictionaries, histories and other books of reference. Fourth, the text book must give to the pupils work to do in discovering truth for themselves, and not simply telling the facts of the lesson. At the same time, the pupils must be encouraged to write answers to leading questions.

The Scheme Outlined'

The scheme for graded Bible school thus outlined includes the following departments:

1. The cradle roll, which means all children below the kindergarten age in families connected with the Bible school.

2. The kindergarten, including all children who have not yet entered the first grade in the public school, or in general, children under seven years of age.

3. The graded Bible school, which includes twelve grades corresponding to the grades in the public schools and covering the period of six to eighteen years. The school is divided into primary, junior, intermediate and senior departments, each including four grades.

The primary and junior equal the period of grammar school, and the senior that of high school in our public school system. The course begins with stories from the life of Christ, centering about Christmas, Easter and Children's day. The first year is thus a year with Christ. The next three grades are devoted to Bible stories, Bible truths, nature lessons and the memorizing of verses and passages from the Bible. In the fifth grade each child is furnished with a New Testament, and in this and the two following grades the life of Christ, the history of the early church and Christian biographies are studied. In the eighth grade the child is in the decision period, and the teaching is intended to awaken an intelligent purpose for Christian living and guide to a right understanding of the religious emotions and experiences sure to arise at this time in the child's life. Large accessions to the church should be expected from the eighth grade of the Bible school. In the ninth and tenth grades the Old Testament is studied, with drill in Old Testament history, geography and literature. In the eleventh a rapid review of the life of Christ is followed by the outline study of the early church and church history. The twelfth grade is devoted to the social teaching of Jesus, Christian beliefs, Christian evidences and duties to the church and the kingdom.

The Normal Course.

Higher still come the adult Bible classes. Scholars should never be allowed to feel that the completion of the course of the Bible in the graded school means graduation, but only promotion to the adult Bible classes or Normal Course. The Normal Course itself is designed for those graduates of the graded Bible school who desire to fit themselves for teaching. The course consists of three parts. 1. Review of the subjects taught in the graded Bible school, with special reference to the methods of teaching. 2. Study of the principles and methods of pedagogy. 3. Christian nurture covering the principles of child psychology in relation to the religious development and training of children.

The home study department is, first, to encourage parents or others in charge of the children to assist the children in the study of the lessons during the week. Second, to assist those who attend the Bible school in systematic Bible study at home.

The committee has provided for each department and each grade a list of text books for the classes and of helps for the teachers. This is on the principle of the public school system, and will instantly appeal to all who are confronted with the limitations of the present Sunday school methods. The committee are aware apparently that it will be found impossible in most schools to adopt the full graded course at once. Neither trained teachers nor suitable text books are as yet available, but every school can make a beginning in the direction of grading. The success of graded Bible schools will depend largely on the securing and training of teachers who can master the subjects and teach with Bible and reference books, furnishing their own directions for study and question slips to the pupils. This is not too much to expect of a teacher. The Sunday school must await for its true value the time when the same high requirements which prevail in the day schools shall be insisted upon, and when the whole scheme of the child's work is kept in mind at each point. The teacher who knows only one lesson at a time, knows no lesson. The aim of the school should be to raise up expert teachers, but no teacher can be equally expert in all the subjects of the school. In the graded school this is not necessary. Each becomes expert in his own grade. It is apparent that the fullest value of the Sunday school will never be realized until specially trained and paid superintendents are secured, and this is already becoming recognized as a necessity in many parts of the country today. It is a moment of great promise for the Bible school, and the report of this committee is one which ought to cheer the hearts of those who have been working with inadequate tools and according to antiquated methods so long. There is no reason why any school should wait to put such a plan as is here outlined into execution. It is perfectly plastic and adjustable. Indeed, many classes in schools which still adhere to one or the other of the old systems have broken away as individual groups and are studying by more adequate and scientific methods. The full report of the committee is very interesting, containing, as it does, the suggestions for text books in each grade. It is to be hoped that in the near future either this or some other plan will be agreed upon by which schools can undertake in a manner satisfactory to all ages of pupils the task of adequate Biblical and Christian instruction.

A SILENT LIFE.

Silently falls the snow-flake,
 Silently falls the dew,
 Silently dies the old year,
 Silently comes the new,
 Silently steal the sunbeams
 Over the dales and hills;
 Silently flows the river
 That turns a hundred mills.

Silently do a kind deed,
 Silently lighten care;
 Silently shed the grief-tear,
 Silently kneel in prayer,
 Silently bear a wrong done—
 Care not what slanders say;
 Silently live a good life,
 Silently pass away.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

J. J. Haley.

1. The Spirit of Christ Is the Spirit of Justice and Fairness.

It goes without saying that no unfair criticism of a human being ever passed the lips of Jesus. He never exaggerated the faults or misrepresented the motives of a fellow man. He never took up an uncertified rumor about anybody and gave it currency by repeating it. We cannot conceive that Jesus ever stayed in a house that was turned into a slaughter pen with the characters of neighbors for victims. No such holocaust was ever offered to Satan in his presence. All his judgments were charitable and just. The fact is, no uncharitable man is either just or fair, or indeed can be. Charity and justice live together and die together. Like the Siamese twins, they cannot be separated without killing both. Uncharitableness so perverts the judicial faculty, and so colors the mental vision, that it can do simple justice to neither friends nor foes. There is nothing, in my judgment, in which the Christian world has more signally and shamefully departed from the spirit of Christ than in this matter of justice and fairness to brother men. The time was in the near past, and that dispensation has not entirely come to an end, when misrepresentation of a religious opponent was thought to be the highest mark of fervent zeal and lofty piety. Religious denominations thought they were doing God's will in slandering each other. They not only proved their opinions orthodox by apostolic blows and knocks, according to Hudibras, but they could not for very life see how others could differ from them and be honest. I once felt that way about it myself, but I would have resented the idea bitterly that other people had a right to think that about me. The world is growing rapidly away from that condition of things, but the dregs of it still remain in some places. I saw a statement in a religious paper last week to the effect that the "Campbellites" denied the name Christian to everybody but themselves. There is the application of an offensive nickname, which is unfair and a flagrant misrepresentation of fact, which is unjust because untrue. Scarcely a week passes that I do not see a specimen of this kind of injustice in the southern religious press. If ability and willingness to state with scrupulous fairness and correctness the position of an opponent is a characteristic of the spirit of Christ, then the orthodox religious press has very little of it and the political press has none. If I did not have in me the sense of justice and truthfulness to represent correctly the position of one who differed from me, I would have a slender claim indeed to the mind of Christ. Prejudice and the habit of misrepresentation are not of God. There is no sin more common than doing injustice to others. We say reckless and groundless things about our neighbors that a little thought and care would show to be as unkind as they are untrue. If we have any respect for the golden rule, which is the spirit of Christ, we will be just and fair to others as we wish them to be just and fair to us.

2. The Spirit of Christ Is the Spirit of Tolerance and Forbearance.

The Christ of God could not be otherwise. And yet this fact is one of the most remarkable and phenomenal indications of the superhuman character of Christ.

He appeared in an age when bigotry was universal and apparently ineradicable, at a time when both religious and racial tolerance were unknown. Unceasing war and the bitter jealousies of tribes and nations had developed the passions of men to the highest pitch. There were numerous sects in religion, philosophy and politics, and these in their fierce and consuming hostilities were hateful and hating one another. Our Lord was born in an atmosphere of religious hate and political bigotry. "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans," expressed a universal condition of race and religious strife among the nations. Jews regarded Gentiles as heathen dogs, outside the pale of salvation, while Greeks, Romans and barbarians looked down upon the Jew as a fanatic and a fool. Into such a world did Jesus come, and as Renan said of him, "He was free from prejudice, the source of our sorrows, and thought only of his work, of his race and of humanity." Neither heredity nor environment can explain the tolerance and forbearance of Jesus. It is a true remark of Newman Smythe that the spirit of Jesus is the miracle that neither history nor science can explain. It was a rare exocytic transplanted from the heavenly garden into the race and religious fungi of Jews and Gentiles.

The observation of George Eliot that the hardest lesson of toleration was learning to tolerate the intolerant, finds a striking illustration in the experience of Christ in training his disciples. While lifting them to his own higher level and wider vision, he often times had occasion to rebuke their narrowness. As he ascended toward Jerusalem a Samaritan village refused him hospitality, because his face was set toward the Jewish capital. This so angered John, who as a Jew despised the Samaritans, that he proposed to call down fire from heaven to burn them up. The Lord rebuked this fanatic outburst of race tolerance based on religion, and inspired by a personal slight to himself, by saying to John: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." You imagine, John, that this outbreak of inhuman fanaticism is a manifestation of personal friendship for me and zeal for the glory of God; your suggestion is inspired by race hatred and religious bigotry, which is contrary to all that I am trying to teach you to be. John had so completely mastered this lesson fifty years later that he said to all young disciples: "My little children, love one another; for love is of God."

The other occasion you well remember, when this same John saw somebody casting out demons who did not belong to the Master's immediate personal following, and took it on himself to forbid them. He said in substance: "My crowd has a corner on this business, you are trenching on our rights and therefore, unless you join us you will have to quit." John was a sectarian, and, like all partisans, he was suspicious, jealous and intolerant of differences, and imagined that all truth, all right to act for God, were confined to the inner circle to which he belonged. Jesus hastened to countermand the prohibition of the young zealot. "Let them alone," said he, "they are doing the same work that we are doing, and therefore they are doing the work of God." This is a death blow to all sectarian exclusiveness, and all priestly claims to a monopoly of divine authority, where Jesus Christ is understood. It is not strange, under the circumstances, that John should feel as he did, but it is strange that men, after eighteen centuries of Christ, should feel that way. Any church that sets up exclusive claim to divine authority, for its sacraments, its ministry, its ritual or its creed, and stands aloof from all the rest of God's workers, brands itself on the face as a fraudulent representation of the Christianity of Jesus of Nazareth. Any narrow, exclusive, intolerant, uncharitable thing, whatever else it may stand for, does not represent Jesus Christ.

3. The Spirit of Christ Is the Spirit of Sympathy and Mercy.

The hard man, the man without sympathy, the greedy, selfish man who takes advantage of the necessities of his fellows to oppress and impoverish them, is at the opposite poll from the mind of Christ. He has the mind of Satan and is doing the work of his master. This Divine Man can be touched with the feeling of all our infirmities, he knows our frame and remembers that we are dust. No man appealed to him in vain, "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me." He spent his time among the people, healing their diseases, enlightening their minds, ministering to them in their troubles, comforting them in their sorrows, seeking in a thousand ways to bless and make them better. When his claims were challenged, he gave this certificate of their authentication: "The blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear and the dead are raised up and the poor have the good tidings preached to them." But one of the most suggestive incidents in the Gospels brings into bold relief the two elements of sympathy and mercy in the mind of the Master. I refer to the woman taken in sin recorded in the eighth chapter of John. Scholars have decided that this story is probably an interpolation and not a part of John's original narrative, but it is so characteristic, so much like Jesus, that I believe it to be a genuine story of the Master. The Pharisees brought a woman who had been convicted of sin by the testimony of eye witnesses, asking Jesus to pronounce judgment in the case. "Moses commanded us to stone such; what, then, sayest thou? And this they said, tempting him, that they might have whereof to accuse him."

They knew he would not sanction the cruel act of stoning, and that he dare not array himself openly against the law of Moses. So into the cunning trap they had set for him he is bound to walk. How could he escape the dilemma of saying stone her on the one hand, or of countermanding a law of Moses on the other? And now they think they have him, he declines to answer, apparently, and stooping down he begins to write on the ground. "Ah," they say, "we have spiked his guns, we have silenced his batteries, we have driven him into the confession of silence, we have him at last"; and so with loud and clamorous insistence they press upon him demanding an answer to their question. Jesus continued to write till they had reached the point where they were sure of victory, and were chuckling and crowing and grinning over their triumph, when he suddenly and quietly arose and said with a penetrating glance into the eyes of these pious rascals, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." No stones were cast. Every mother's son of these fellows was a hypocrite, and about all the conscience he had left was enough to fire him out of that place in a jiffy. The Roman Catholics have a very suggestive and pretty conceit in the interpretation of this passage. When Jesus wrote on the ground, what was it he was writing? It was surely not mere scribbling for pastime. There must have been intelligent purpose in it, and something written with an end in view. What was it? Would the words uttered by Jesus have effected the rapid scatteration of the woman's accusers that the text represents? When Jesus stooped down to write, it is represented that the leader of the gang rushed up and looked over his shoulder, and lo! there was his name inscribed on the sand, and Jesus writing a list of all the secret sins he had committed up to that hour! He made himself scarce. Number two rushed up to fill the breach, and down went his name, and below it a catalogue of the dirty things he was in the habit of doing on the sly! Exit No. 2. The third man laughed aloud at the discomforture of his brethren, and bravely stepped up to take a peep, and there was his cognomen in the sand and his secret rascalities listed for public inspection, and away he went like a pebble out of a catapult. Filled with curiosity, the others came up to see and fled to keep from being seen! No wonder they were convicted by their consciences and went out one by one! They couldn't stand it! Jesus stood up and looked round and he was by himself as far as the Pharisee gang was concerned. He said to the woman, "Where are they? Did no man condemn thee?" And she said, "No man, Lord." And Jesus said, "Neither do I condemn thee; go thy way; from henceforth sin no more." He did justice to those rascals, the Pharisees. He showed sympathy and mercy for this fallen but penitent woman. This incident is a conspicuous illustration of the mercifulness of the disposition of Jesus, and his willingness to forgive sinners on condition that henceforth they sin no more.

4. The Spirit of Christ Is the Spirit of Love and Forgiveness.

This feature in the character of Christ stands out in the New Testament record above all others. Not alone did he teach the people in the Sermon on the Mount to forgive their enemies and to pray for those who spitefully used and persecuted them, but he himself manifested this spirit in a wonderful manner in his own life. He taught his disciples to love and forgive, and told them unless they were forgiving they would not be forgiven. In the agonies of the cross he prayed for those who had crucified him: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." And lest it should be thought that this was a divine spirit that no human being could possess and manifest, Stephen, the first Christian martyr, prayed for his murderers, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." And Paul expected the Colossians to bear the fruit of the celestial graces of love and forgiveness. "Put on, therefore, as God's elect, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, humility, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another and forgiving each other; if any man have a complaint against any, even as the Lord forgave you, so also do ye; and above all these things, put on love, which is the bond of perfectness." If, then, we are just and fair, tolerant and forbearing, sympathetic and merciful, affectionate and forgiving, we have the spirit of Christ and we are his. If we have not these qualities, which the Holy Spirit brings into the hearts of men, we are not Christ-like and we are none of his. The spirit of Christ is the one thing most essential in his religion.

He was better to me than all my hopes,
He was better than all my fears;
He made a bridge of my broken works,
And a rainbow of my tears;
The billows that guarded my sea-girt path
Carried my Lord on their crest;
When I dwell on the days of my wilderness march,
I can lean on his love for the rest.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY MINISTRY.

By W. P. Aylsworth.

Passing over the abiding elements of preaching, let us consider some of those characteristics which are more properly subject to change. New methods are warranted by new conditions. Whether the pulpit shall adopt an illustrative or argumentative, a positive or apologetic style, must be determined, in some degree at least, by circumstances of time and place. The history of preaching shows clearly the influence of environment in these respects. A correct estimate of some of the conditions of the present will suggest the methods of the coming ministry.

I assume that the preaching of the future will be direct and practical. These two characteristics are mentioned together, since in practice they can scarcely be separated. For obvious reasons the brief and pointed sermon has come to stay. Yet the length of the sermon must ever be related to the subject and the occasion. It must be remembered that preaching is, and ever will be, for the common people. The preacher must touch, with quick and skillful fingers, the keys of human need. His spirit must be one of progress and hope. Abstract questions of philosophy and speculative theology will continue to agitate the minds of scholars, but they will not be discussed in the pulpit. The preacher is a herald to the masses, not a lecturer to the few. The witticism of the professor, who, when asked by his pulpit how long a sermon should be, replied: "Thirty minutes, with a leaning to the side of mercy," has a practical point. The coming time, even more than the present, will be far too busy to wait for circumlocution and indirection in preaching.

All our habits of thought and action tend the other way. Our modes of travel and of the transmission of intelligence influence our thought. Men are impatient of the least obstruction. They seek the shortest route to a destination. Mountains are tunnelled and chasms bridged that time may be economized and distance obliterated. We speak across continents and under seas with the quickness of lightning. The pulpit must keep step with the industrial world or be left out of the race altogether.

The public will not wait for a preacher whose message does not appeal to common sense and does not have the "ring" of purpose.

Again, many things formerly taught from the pulpit and platform are now relegated to the public library or the fireside reading. Almost within a generation the system of popular education has been revolutionized. The best books are cheap and will be cheaper. The average audience is already in possession of the general information which had to be woven into the sermon of a half a century ago. Attractive periodicals, wonderfully illustrated, place a premium upon reading along the lines of important information. The pulpit must find some other source for power and attractiveness, or it will be ruled out of the contest for popular attention and interest. One field remains to it supremely—namely, the plain, direct, practical persuasion of men to enter paths of righteousness. As never before the watchword of the pulpit is to be the Pauline exhortation, "Watch ye, be strong, quit you like men." Many questions, also, once considered of vital importance in religious discussion, are no longer so regarded. Many refinements of theology that found their way into sermonic literature are now chiefly interesting as theological curiosities. Even many things which were earnestly proclaimed in the past century are no longer matters of interest in the thought of the present. And God grant that in the sifting of unprofitable and valueless materials from the sermons of the present, we may still retain or supply, if wanting, the commandments of God and the instruction which leads to a righteous life. Any sermon which does not contain these elements is too long.

Not only directness of speech, but skill in expressing the truth must be cultivated. The preacher of the twentieth century must indeed be apt to teach. Much that formerly passed for profound ability in the pulpit is now rated prosaic dullness. It is the feeling that the professional minister is out of touch with the common people that has quickened the demand for "lay" preaching. The rude and untrained preacher is often preferred to the cultured and scholarly for this very reason. Even slang and downright vulgarity are often applauded. It is a grave question where this tendency will end. Is it to continue until the pulpit is robbed of its propriety and purity of speech? Surely not. A better ideal will triumph. But the danger can only be averted by removing the cause. The preacher must study how to get near to the people. His style should be as a fresh breeze blowing from the fields of practical life. False sensationalism must be opposed by its genuine counterpart. There is a sort of awakening which results from finding the souls of men at unexplored depths of experience, a kind of preaching that fearlessly proclaims truth, that designates sins by their true name, that drives admonition and reproof with honest Saxon straight to the mark, and that touches the hidden springs of sympathy. Such a sensationalism belongs to the pulpit of the future. In this sense the Sermon on the Mount was truly sensational. The preacher is to covet and develop the power that thrills multitudes and elevates them to higher planes of life. Such power is not only inseparable from ability in the art of expression, but springs from profound conviction and spiritual consecration.

A PARABLE.

One night a man took a little taper out of a drawer and lighted it, and began to ascend a long, winding stair.

"Where are you going?" said the taper.

"Away high up," said the man; "higher than the top of the house where we sleep."

"And what are you going to do there?" said the taper.

"I am going to show the ships out at sea where the harbor is," said the man. "For we stand here at the entrance to the harbor, and some ships far out on the stormy sea may be looking for our light even now."

"Alas! no ship could ever see my light," said the little taper; "it is so very small."

"If your light is small," said the man, "keep it burning bright, and leave the rest to me."

Well, when the man got up to the top of the lighthouse, for this was a lighthouse they were in, he took the little taper, and with it lighted the great lamps that stood ready there with their polished reflectors behind them.

You who think your light of so small account, can you not see what God may do with it? Shine—and leave the rest to Him.

THERE LIVED A MAN.

Once, in the flight of ages past,
There lived a man—and who was he?
Mortal, however thy lot is cast,
That man resembled thee.

He suffered, but his pangs are o'er;
Enjoyed—but his delights are fled;
Had friends—his friends are now no more
And foes—his foes are dead.

He saw whatever thou hast seen;
Encountered all that troubles thee;
He was whatever thou hast been;
He is what thou shalt be.

The annals of the human race,
Their ruins since the world began,
Of him afford no other trace
Than this—there lived a man.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON.

By Peter Ainslie.

*He ever liveth to make intercession.—Heb. 7: 25.
Jesus Christ is now our high priest. The Old Testament, with its shadows and types of priesthood and tabernacle, has passed away. The scaffolding has been removed and the eternal things have come into view. For ages the blood of beasts was shed to teach men that sometime God would offer a spotless Lamb for the sins of all the world. The time came; it was done and Jesus by his own blood put away all sin and entered upon the high priesthood of the human races and obtained eternal redemption for his people.

Our high priest knows our weakness, and there is no sympathy in all this world to be compared to the sympathy of Jesus for the human heart. He did not come to this world as an angel, but he took on himself this human body and it was human. "God sent forth his Son made of woman." He grew up like other children, for it is said that "he increased in wisdom and stature." He had a human heart, for I read that "in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest." And again it is said: "We have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted, like as we are, yet without sin." It is a wonderful sight. God sent forth "his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh"—yet not sinful, but like sinful flesh. To the whole world he said, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" He had no sin, but once and only once it was that the sinless died for the sinner. Having made atonement for our sins, he entered heaven, where he ever "liveth to make intercession"—more now our servant than when he walked in the plain garments of a carpenter and looked out only upon the hills of Judea, Samaria and Galilee. In his humiliation he took up the garments that now shine with beauty and glory. The living cherubim bow before him with outstretched wings as he ministers in the holy of holies.

We might think him too great to stay for his little prayers and hear our pleadings if it were not told us more clearly than it has been written that "he is the same, yesterday, today and forever." He listened to the beggar when on earth, he sat by those in grief, he gathered the children up into his arms. That same heart that beat on earth now beats in heaven. He knows us every one. It is said "The Lord knoweth them that are his." What help he daily gives us we will never know until we pass beyond the veil, and then we will know that we could not have lived without—no, he belongs to all and he is our all.

O Lord, we bow with new hope at thy throne, remembering that our Jesus is our high priest forever more. Amen.

JESUS OUR HIGH PRIEST IN HEAVEN.

Lesson for June 2, Heb. 9: 11-14, 24-26. Golden Text, Heb. 7: 25: Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.

11. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building;

12. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

13. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh;

14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?

24. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us;

25. Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others;

26. For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Ellas A. Long.

Book of Hebrews. A letter written to Hebrew Christians, its keynote, "Looking unto Jesus" (12: 2), and showing his pre-eminence over Moses and other great Jewish heroes; proving also the divinity, humanity and intercession of Christ from their own scriptures. The epistle was designed to comfort these Christians as they suffered for their faith. The Jews continued the attractive ancient ritual, while Christian converts had nothing of the kind to show; they must be encouraged to look for the better things of the unseen, spiritual realm. The authorship of the book has for many centuries been in dispute. It is widely agreed to be Paul's in conception and thought, but written by another. The epistle is believed to date from Italy about A. D. 61-63.

Two weeks ago the lesson told of Jesus ascending into heaven; today it is about Jesus in heaven and his purpose there. If the lesson is more difficult than some, it is only because it deals with things that are unseen by earthly eyes. But as our great Teacher had, by parable and simile, used flowers, birds, sheep and many of the most common things to lead the mind to higher truths, so here this course is employed to teach one of the sweetest truths of salvation—namely, Christ's present care for his own. It likewise teaches about man's access to God. To Jews nothing was more familiar than the priestly sacrifices constantly observed in their devotions and which likewise are plainly set forth for us in the Old Testament scriptures. The apostle, taking up the familiar Jewish priesthood and sacrifices indicates that these but illustrate Jesus as both the true high priest in heaven and the true sacrifice.

Verse 11. The Glorious Outlook. "But Christ". In contrast with the high priest who brought dumb, driven brutes that "could not make perfect". Verse 9. Notice it is not now Jesus, but the very Messiah, of whom the prophets had foretold. Christ means "anointed," and here corresponds exactly to the type "the priest that is anointed" of Lev. 4: 5. . . . "Being come an high priest". He was the perfect high priest. Unlike the order of Aaronic high priests, he was without sin, hence had not, like they, first to offer sacrifices for himself. He was after the order of Melchizedek, a mysterious figure in Abraham's day, "a priest of the most high

God" (7: 1), who belonged to an eternal order (6: 20). Jesus being a Son, the Father was in perfect sympathy with him; he could perfectly represent God and man. The three-fold work of the Jewish high priest was fulfilled in Christ. (1) Instructing the people—typical of Christ's earthly ministry as a divine teacher; (2) to offer sacrifices—typical of Christ's offering of himself as a sacrifice; (3) to act as mediator—typical of Christ's present work before the Father (Verse 24). He perfectly understands us, he loves us and he is touched by the feeling of our infirmities. 4: 15. . . . "Of good things to come". This perfect high priest of Christianity is a promise of glorious things. The very keynote of the writer's argument is "Better". See how he multiplies the glory of the prospect. "A better hope" 7: 19; "A better testament" 7: 22; "A better covenant" 8: 6; "Better Promises" 8: 6; "Better substances" 10: 24; "A better country" 11: 16; "Better resurrection" 11: 35; "Better things" 12: 24. . . . "By a greater and more perfect tabernacle". The heavens into which he entered, passing behind the veil of cloud (Acts 1: 9), in contrast with the puny dimensions, about 15x45 feet, of the sacred tent first erected by Moses. . . . "Not made with hands". As was the Mosaic tabernacle (Exod. 25: 9), but this one by the Lord himself. Chap. 8: 2. . . . "Not of this building" meaning not of the earthly order of creation.

Verse 12. Contrasted Sacrifices. "Blood of goats and calves" referring to the yearly sacrifice of brutes for an atonement, and which secured to those who participated an outward purity and a place among the people of God. . . . "But by his own blood". One cannot give more than blood, it is the life (Lev. 17: 11). A sacrifice so precious (1 Peter 1: 19) worked on the heart and life of all for whom it was made; it is continuous to this day. . . . "Entered in once". So great and perfect was this sacrifice that one offering sufficed forever; the Jewish high priest's offering, repeated yearly, showed its incompleteness. . . . "Into the holy place". Into the presence of God, the true holy of holies, where the seraphim cry one to another, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts". Isa. 6: 3; Rev. 4: 8. . . . "Obtained eternal redemption". The redemption obtained in type was for a year; the redemption in Christ for eternity. The power of his sacrifice never ceases to act, it is eternal as the spirit, and as is his own nature. Verse 14.

Verse 13. The Argument. "For if the blood of bulls and of goats". If this availed with God for ceremonial results, how much more must the blood of Christ avail for spiritual results as affecting character unto holiness. . . . "Ashes of heifer to purifying". A purifying commanded for removing ceremonial defilement, incurred by contact with the dead. Num. 19: 2, 17-21. In our contact with the spiritual dead we also have need of the cleansing power of blood, which, by the grace of Christ, is available. . . . "Purifying of the flesh". The sacrifices of the Old Testament had to do with external ceremonial defilement (Num. 19: 2-20; Luke 17: 14, 16), and thus serve as a type of the better, inner purifying.

Verse 14. Power of Blood. "How much more". If the forms of religion helped poor, depraved mankind toward God, how much more the true sacrifice would impart divine strength and power. It is a question bearing upon sinful man's access to his holy maker. This differed in a progressive order. (1) In the ages before Moses, Paul tells us, death reigned, with but a few like Melchizedek and Abraham among millions, that offered sacrifices, indicating that the functions of the priesthood were not popularly applied. (2) In the Mosaic dispensation more common provision for man's access by sacrifices through an imperfect priesthood was made. (3) Now in the Christian dispensation, our apostle shows there is complete provision for salvation and access to God, open to all men who will accept. . . . "The blood of Christ". Nothing else so clearly expresses the highest degree of love, heroism and self-sacrifice as the pouring out of one's blood for any cause. Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his brother. John 15: 13; Acts 21: 13. In any case, the blood with which noble men have sealed their devotion to a great cause, has not been without far-reaching power and influence; how much more, then, the blood of him in whom dwells all the fulness of God bodily (Col. 2: 9). . . . "Through eternal spirit offered himself". By the Spirit's power in contrast with offered brutes that had no spirit or will to consent in the act of sacrifice. His was a voluntary service. We, too, should hold ourselves in readiness for a voluntary offering of ourselves. Rom. 12: 1. . . . "Without spot". The typical victims had to be without blemish. Num. 19: 2. . . . "Purge your conscience". Purge the conscience defiled by sin. Taking away the life of sin and giving forgiveness and the peace of heaven where all is purity and holiness, when our guilt is purged away. . . . "From dead works". Works done in a natural state, lacking life and the holy spirit. . . . "To serve the living God". We are cleansed unto—made meet for—living, spiritual service, which God, a living spirit, must needs require. John 4: 24.

Verse 24. Our Heavenly Priest. "Not entered into holy place made with hands". Enlarging on the thought of verse 12. He as the true high priest avoided the place and conditions of the Jewish type and shadows. John 4: 24; 1 Tim. 6: 16. . . . "Figures of the true". That is, pictures or representations of the true holy place, which is heaven. . . . "Into heaven itself". Through and beyond the created heavens into the immediate presence of God in the spirit realm. . . . "To appear in the presence of God" or before the face of God for us as in the revised version. Jesus stands as God and man in the heavenly courts, his very presence an eloquent plea for the last one that calls upon him. The character of these intercessions no doubt is seen in John 17: 9-20 also in Luke 22: 31-32, which latter contains the blessed thought that while we, like Peter, are falling, we have help that we do not fatally fall away from God. Some of the results of the presence of Jesus in heaven are (1) the gift of the Holy Spirit to abide with and to strengthen us. John 16: 7. (2) The changes wrought within us by our Priest's perpetual agency. Gal. 2: 20. (3) We have boldness of access to the very presence of God. Heb. 4: 16. . . . "For us". It was for our offenses that he died. Our cause is his cause. He gave himself a propitiation for our sins and he will stand by us before God to the end.

Verse 25. Needing No Renewal. "Nor yet offer himself often". The offering Christ brings needs not renewal, being possessed of the imperishable nature of his own person now forever freed from death. . . . "As the high priest every year". Because necessary in the oft-repeated, insufficient Levitical atonement.

Verse 26. Sufficiency of Sacrifice. "Then must often have suffered". Since the continued sins of man from the creation, would entail continued suffering and offering of his blood if one offering did not satisfy. . . . "Now once". The offering is so meritorious that its influence reaches from the beginning to the end of time. Its efficiency is proven by the changed lives of men as found in every church. . . . "To put away sin". To deliver from the guilt and power of sin. The Lamb of God came to do away absolutely (Jno. 1: 29) and beyond need of being supplemented by any similar manifestations. His sacrifice is the greatest known power for taking away sin and the love of sin. . . . "Sacrifice of himself". He was both priest and sacrifice.

Verse 27. Death Not the End. "Once to die". Notice the aspect of finality repeatedly brought out in this lesson. As men have "once" not many times, to die, so Christ "once" offered himself for the sins of many (Verse 28; Isa. 53: 12); entered "once" into the holy place (verse 12); appeared "once" to put away sin (verse 26). It is ours to accept Christ and the benefits of his salvation; have we done so? . . . "To die". Disease, violence and natural decay are the apparent causes of death, for the reason that our Lord works by second causes. The key is certainly in his hands. . . . "Judgment". Let us reflect that a judgment awaits every man for deeds committed before death.

Verse 28. Completed Salvation. "To bear the sins". An evident allusion to the scapegoat, which in a figure carried the sins of the people far away. Comp. Lev. 16: 5-10; 20-22 with Psalm 103: 12. . . . "Appear the second time". As he entered into the heavenly holy of holies in our behalf, so he will come forth again in our interest. . . . "Without sin," or better, as the revised version, "apart from sin". At his first appearance our Lord came as a sin bearer; at his second coming he will have completely done with sin, a glorious state to contemplate. . . . "Unto salvation". To bestow the complete fruits of his redeeming mission, the fullness of eternal happiness; he shall receive us to be forever with him. 1 Thess. 4: 17. In the gospels we were permitted to see Jesus, as it were, within the sphere of the visible; many seem never to get much beyond that. Let us by the help of the enlightening word (Psa. 119: 130) train our spiritual eyes to see him within the veil, first as dwelling unseen in our own hearts our constant companion, second as our heavenly intercessor. Let us make the keynote of this epistle our own: Looking unto Jesus.

"God pity them both, God pity us all
Who vainly the dreams of life recall:
For all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: 'It might have been.'"

LITTLE HELPERS.

Prov. 20: 11; Zech. 4: 10; John 6: 5-11; Matt. 21: 15, 16.

What a poor and desolate habitation this world would be without these little helpers—the children. We are just commencing to value them at their true worth, and learn from them some of the deepest lessons of life. Where did the Master show greater wisdom than when he took a little child and set it in the midst of his disciples and taught them that beautiful lesson of humility. That person who does not love and is not led by children will become a cynic if he does not reform. The smile from a child is worth more than the applause of the multitude, for it is more genuine and sincere. As we study the child (and to modern psychology we are greatly indebted for the interest it has awakened in a better understanding of child life), so we shall be able to solve the world's great problems. We may know books, but not until we #### Know the Child.

Will we know how to teach. The parent is at times almost overcome by the willfulness and perverseness of the child; but this is due not to original sin, but to some inherited characteristics of not far distant ancestors, which is allowed to find expression and is greatly aggravated because so little is known of the real nature of the child. Perhaps we want to treat it as a mechanism, but not so, it is a living organism, holding within its being great possibilities for good or evil. "The fragile beginnings of a mighty end." The marvelous thing is that this world has made the advancement that it has when we take into consideration "the hit or miss fashion" in which the child in most instances has been reared. Is it any wonder that they are not all angels? Much empirical wisdom has been developed which is now being supplemented by some of the greatest thinkers of the age, in such a way that the child is becoming a great helper in the civilization and Christianization of the race. At first the little one wants to "help mamma," when it seems that it would be a hindrance, but it is helping the mother to patience and love, to realize the

Divinity of True Motherhood.

The rulers of Judah turned a deaf ear to the cry of the children as they took up the refrain,

"Hosanna to the Son of David"

And made it resound through the temple. They had no other motive than to help; their little hearts were stirred with the purest love; had those in authority but understood the sweet, innocent child nature, they might have been spared something of the awful suffering which later befell the nation.

If they are but guided in a kind and loving way, how quick are they to respond to the higher impulses and to work into the plans of God! Perhaps they can supply but a "few barley loaves and a few small fishes," but in the mighty hand of God their small contributions are made to multiply until a flame of enthusiasm is kindled within the hearts of God's people.

What a stimulus the crusaders received from the children as they offered their young lives so willingly. But a

Far Nobler Work

Lies before us at present; not the rescuing of the tomb of the risen Christ, but the heralding of the news of a glorified and present Redeemer to the nations who know not of his love. The children are doing much to arouse the church to greater activity, to educate the church of the future, and to bring salvation to the home. They have given their little offerings, which only amounted to a small sum at first, but has grown until it has reached far into the thousands of dollars. How they vie with each other to do their best! If wise and intelligent leadership can be secured the problem of the world's redemption is largely solved. Let us not dispise the day of small things. Let us not fail to see the great possibilities in this movement of the children. Neglect everything else, if you must, but don't neglect these little ones, the tender plants, the rare buds of the home; "the living jewels dropped unstained from heaven."

HOW TO GET RID OF SIN.

[Topic June 2. Ref. I. John 1: 5-10.]

The saintly J. S. Lamar, in the series now running in the Christian Evangelist, under the general heading, "What Most Interests Me Now," writes on the

"Mystery of Sin."

The article is thoughtful and Scriptural, but the mystery of it is beyond the limited knowledge and poor reasoning of man. It is the pathetic fact in all this old world's history, and in all the earth-bound lives of its earth-born myriads. But, after all, the real, serious, practical problem, for philosopher and plowboy, is not the mystery of sin, but the #### Mastery of Sin.

Briefly stated, Brother Lamar's reasoning is that God permits the presence and power of sin, the ceaseless conflict of the "flesh" with the "spirit," in order that man may become the manlier and the more spiritual through the mastery of sin. This reasoning finds its justification and its convincing proof in the life of the Lord Jesus. "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered (being tempted, yet without sin), and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."—Heb. 5: 9.

Christ is the author of eternal salvation by his perfect mastery of self and thus of sin. He is also set forth to be a propitiation for the sins of the whole world. John the Baptist declared to the multitudes who came out to the Jordan to be baptized of him, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world!" With this the writers of all the Gospels agree, and Peter and John and Paul all add explicit emphasis. It is the #### Mystery of the Atonement.

The two profoundest problems for all thoughtful minds concern these twofold mysteries of sin and its atonement. We speak of the "simple Gospel," and in our quest of simplicity we have well-nigh relegated the atonement to the myths. Am I wrong in this? How many of our young people are seriously grappling with the great doctrine of grace? This is out of place in the young people's society, and in an article for the Christian Endeavor column? I think not. I believe the church and the young people in their society must grip these great problems of the atonement and of salvation by grace. In swinging away from the theological doctrine of election and reprobation (both Scriptural questions), we have come practically to almost disregard the deeper and profounder problems of our justification and salvation from sin. It is the problem which ought to interest all—

"How to Get Rid of Sin"

And it is a serious, solemn consideration. It is not simply a question of faith, repentance, confession and baptism, as too often presented and understood. Let us have the "simple Gospel." Yes, and let us have the sublime Gospel! The glorious Gospel has to do with "all things pertaining to life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature, having excepted the corruption that is in the world through lust!"—I. Pet. 1: 3, 4. This—this only—is salvation!

HOW TO STUDY THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

By I. J. Cahill.

In Two Parts: Part One.

1. This "word of exhortation" (13: 22) was written to Jewish Christians. Its purpose was to prevent them from abandoning the faith and going back to the old Jewish religion.

The author, whose name is unknown (see Guide to Bible Study, p. 120), seeks to accomplish this purpose by alternating argument and appeal. For example, the first chapter is an argument based on the Scriptures of the Old Testament for the superiority of Christ, who introduced the Gospel, over angels, who were the agents in introducing the law. Immediately, in the first verses of the second chapter, is the appeal: since the Gospel is thus superior to the law, do not apostatize. This is the burden of all exhortations: do not apostatize.

2. The pressure brought to bear on these early Jewish Christians was very great. In becoming Christians they ceased to be in the fullest sense Jews. They still clung to the old service of the temple. Its gorgeous ritual pleased their oriental love of display; its antiquity called forth their reverence; its Mosaic origin gave it still something of the awe-inspiring power felt by their fathers at the mount. So they clung to the old worship. They were children of Abraham. They were disciples of Moses. They were also disciples of Christ, believing him to have come to complete the glory of the old institutions.

3. But little by little a breach grew between these Christian Jews and the unbelieving Jews, so that the Christians were deprived of the temple service. It is probable that the epistle was written at a time when Christians had been driven out of Jerusalem.

It became a question of choice between Christianity and Judaism. They could no longer hold both.

If they retained the new faith it meant the giving up of the splendor of the temple service; the parting from associations, sacred and lifelong; the forsaking of traditions instilled into them from childhood and revered by many generations; the losing of a place in the succession of the Old Testament worthies, Abraham, Moses and the prophets. In return for this they would have a religion of unaccustomed simplicity. There was no temple; there were no sacrifices, no priests. It was a religion without ritual, without traditions and with a doubtful future.

4. It was to show the perfection of the new covenant as against the ostentation of the old that the author wrote.

The key-word of the epistle is "better." Christ has a better name (1: 4); there is a better hope (7: 19); there are better sacrifices (9: 23); a better country (11: 16); a better resurrection (11: 35); better things are reserved for us (11: 40); the blood of Christ speaketh better things than the blood of Abel (12: 24). Equally important and having the same significance is the frequent recurring of the words "perfect" and "perfection." (See 7: 11, 19, 29; 9: 9, 11; 10: 1, 14, etc.): The force of the argument is augmented by the phrase "by how much more" (d. 4; 3: 3; 7: 20, 22; 8: 6; 9: 27; 10: 25), which also sets forth the impregnable position of the author that the new is the better covenant.

The careful student will not fail to see the same thought permeating every part of the epistle and breaking forth in such expressions as "eternal," "forever," "once for all" and "a kingdom that cannot be shaken," all showing the permanent character of the new in contrast with the transitory nature of the old.

EXPOSITORY HINTS.

A Foreword.

The word "exposition" means "laying open." The true end of exposition is to lay open the thought of God enlivened in the words of Scripture. A celebrated anatomist was wont to say to his pupils before beginning a demonstration, "Let us try and find out God's truth in this matter." To find out God's truth, to think his thoughts after him, will be the one object sought in this department of Bible study.

When gross darkness covers the people, gross immorality follows. For lack of knowledge the people are destroyed. Let the Bible be prohibited and a regulative force is removed from society. On the other hand, when the vision of God and of his will is known and obeyed, social order and happiness ensue. "He that keepeth the law, happy is he"; and happy are those who live with him. J M. C.

Reconciling a World in Christ.—"All are from God who reconciled us to himself through Christ, and gave unto us the ministry of the reconciliation, how that God was reconciling in Christ a world unto himself, not reckoning unto them their trespasses, and hath put in us the message of the reconciliation."—(II. Cor. 5: 18, 19.)

This translation differs from other translations in that it omits the definite article "the," which has been unwarrantably inserted before the word "world." The Greek text has no article; hence the definite article should not be inserted unless it is absolutely necessary to make good sense. Such a necessity does not appear here. The frequent insertion of this article is one of the most serious defects of our English translations. Paul desires to show that God is not reconciling a few Jews, or a few Gentiles, or all of the Jews and Gentiles, but a world. The omission of the definite article brings out this thought (Cf. Rom. 8.22).

Another striking difference is this: It is the reconciling that is in Christ rather than God. Paul has not taught to the Corinthians the idea of God in Christ; consequently he may not be teaching it here. In the previous verses (v. 18) God is said to have reconciled men through Christ as an agent. We are reconciled to God when we come into Christ by faith. In Christ we are "a righteousness of God," hence we are reconciled (v. 21). The translation which I have given harmonizes with the use of such periphrastic phrases elsewhere in the New Testament. (Cf. Jn. 2: 6, etc.).

THE QUIET HOUR. THE GREAT COMMISSION.

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.
(The International Bible Reading Association, Daily Readings.)

"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:20.

Monday—Matt. 2 8,16—20.

On me, if I know Jesus as Savior and Master, there is laid the burden of other souls: not on the ordained minister alone, not on the recognized missionary and evangelist alone. There is none in the church, the true church of the redeemed and regenerated, who is not embraced in Christ's imperative. "Go ye," he says to all his people, "and make disciples for me." He expects me to be an ambassador for him.

If I am lifting the burden, I must feel it heavy and crushing in its weight. The work is too great for me. I am overwhelmed by its magnitude and difficulty. Ah, but let me remark how Christ places his lofty commission between two blessed assurances which are full of soothing and succor and strength. He bounds it both on the north side and on the south side by good words and comfortable words.

For he tells me that he is on the throne, and has all power in heaven and earth. And he tells me that he is at my side, with me all the days, even unto the end. Nothing is impossible to me, when I remember these things.

Tuesday—Isa. 52, 7—12.

Christ does not want me to think of religion merely as something which brings peace and rest to my own weary heart; something which makes me a king and a priest unto God, white-robed and golden-crowned; something which will secure for me the glories of heaven at last. Nay, he wishes me, constrained by his love and impelled by his spirit, to conquer new subjects for him.

Up in the heavenly places, he knows every outcast woman, and every neglected child, and every poor drunkard, and every sad heart in the glitter of society, and every dark heathen soul away in the regions beyond. He seeks my love, my sympathy, my service, for these. He desires that these through me may find his salvation. He counts me responsible for them.

Too often, what I crave is a pleasant and comfortable spiritual life, which will make me forget all about trouble and wretchedness. But that is to overlook the purpose for which I have been saved—to glorify God on the earth, and to rescue men who are speeding down to destruction. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace!" Mine be these swift and eager feet in days to come.

Wednesday, Acts 10, 9—16.

If the government of Jesus Christ is universal, his grace is minute and particular. He suits himself to the circumstances and the wants of every separate individual. He forgets nobody. He counts none common or unclean.

There are no two faces in the world exactly the same, no two minds, no two histories. What a difference to the fate of man it makes whether he is born in heathendom, like Cornelius, or in Judaism, like Peter; in the heart of Africa, or in the capital of England; under the great wall of China, or in a God-fearing Scottish home! What a difference wealth or poverty makes; the opportunity of a good education, or the denial of such an opportunity; the surroundings which lift upward to holiness and God, or the surroundings which drag downward in the opposite direction! What varieties of temperament there are—hopeful, melancholy, passionate, calm!

But Christ knows all about it. He speaks the right word at the right moment in the right tone. He understands the peculiarities of each man and each woman. He meets each on his own ground. He addresses Peter in one accent and Cornelius in another. And he has room in his redemption, his love, his home for me.

Thursday, Acts 10, 34—43.

"The Son of God goes forth to war, a kingly crown to gain." But he does not travel out alone. Behind him his faithful soldiers must march—they help him to the attainment of his purposes. "We are witnesses," the apostle says, "and he charged us to preach unto the people."

Am I anxious to be of use to Christ? It does not matter where I am found. It may be in the humblest sphere. It may be in the most unpromising neighborhood. It may be in the hardest and stoniest soil. But I yearn to be serviceable to him. I commend him by every means in my power. I pray for help to live every day, so that my life may be a consistent testimony in his honor and praise. I ask for wisdom and grace to speak for him to those who are in sorest need of him.

Then, though I am one of the "foolish things" of the world, mine is a sublime dignity. I am bringing him nearer to the hour of his final triumph. I am bidding him persevere, until men fear his name from the west and his glory from the rising of the sun.

Friday, Acts 10, 44—48.

In these Gospel days Jesus has a new fulness of the Holy Spirit to impart. "He hath received gifts for the rebellious," the psalm says. And best of all, his gifts is that of the Divine Spirit, who convicts of sin, who converts the ungodly, who awakens the better life, who quickens the kingdom of God in the souls of men.

Unquestionably the Spirit was given long before Jesus died and rose and ascended. Holy men of old spake as they were moved by him. In all ages the saints have been saints simply because he made and kept them so. But how comparatively small the gift was in these far-off times! Over how narrow and confined an area the energies of the Spirit extended! How little he could have to say to those who lived before Bethlehem and Calvary—how much more he has to say to me!

May he, who came in the infancy of the church on circumcision and uncircumcision, visit and inhabit and fill me! May he take of the things of Christ and show them to me, glorifying my crucified and exalted Lord! "Soft as the breath of even," victorious as the tongue of fire, may he bless and transfigure my soul!

Saturday, Rom. 10, 1—13.

Here is a door opened to its widest. "Whosoever"—that is the broad, far-reaching, all-embracing Bible word. It includes me. It brings God's message of grace to me. It bids me rise and enter the inheritance prepared for me.

And here is a method of acquisition reduced to its simplest. "Shall call upon the name of the Lord," the verse goes on. Just a cry from my desperateness and need; just an appeal to him who is mighty, and as willing as he is strong; just the telling my case to his open ear and his tender heart—there is nothing more elaborate, more arduous, than that asked of me.

And here is a treasure expanded and sublimed to its richest. "Shall be saved," the text concludes. Saved—it is one of the inexhaustible terms of God's Book. There is pardon in it, and admission to the household, and acceptance with the King. There is holiness, too, transformation, power, hope. There is heaven by-and-by, when the race is ended and the fight is fought.

Was ever such wealth to be had so easily? Was ever an El Dorado bestowed on beggars and suppliants before? Now, may I "claim my part in all raptures of the skies."

Sunday, Rom. 10. 14—21.

Does not God still provoke me "to jealousy with that which is no nation?" Does he not anger me still "with a nation void of understanding?"

Amongst the heathen I find that the message of the Gospel finds child-like acceptance and belief. It surely is a rebuke to my tendency to cavil, to carp, to suspect, to deny.

Amongst the heathen I find that the disciple soon becomes a preacher, the convert a missionary, the believer in Christ a herald of Christ. The vast majority of those who are publishing the Evangel in the dark lands of the earth once sat themselves in the very midnight of death. Ah, it reproves me for my strange backwardness to proclaim the good news of God.

Amongst the heathen I find that the martyrs of Jesus are not dead. In China, in New Guinea, in Africa, men and women are ready to die for their faith. I wonder whether, if the sleet and hail fell as pitilessly on me, I should come through the tempest as well. God grant that these strong soldiers of Christ do not condemn me in the day of sifting and sentence.

OUR PULPIT.

THE MESSAGE OF THE MINISTRY OF TODAY.

By Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, Chicago.

Text: "Seeing we have this ministry, we faint not." II. Corinthians, iv., 1.

"The true minister is the true minstrel of the human soul—the words minstrel and minister have a common root. He organizes the vagrant and apparently opposing sounds, the devious wafts of melody and the split and recalcitrant currents of tone about a common and regnant center. The center is the all-supreme and embracing theme. It alone co-ordinates and compels each aimless shiver of a chord and each stubbornly isolating tonic energy into harmony.

"It is of first importance to note that only the power which commands our admiration can lift us up. 'We live by admiration.' We are made erect and manly by adoration. Before a merely beautiful character, a profound moralist, a true philosopher, a heroic martyr, we do not fall to earth in obedience, as did Saul or Tarsus, neither do we rise to our full height at his command as did the new man, Paul. Divine enough must be that power which endows the minister of men—divine enough to make our unhelped humanity lie full length upon the common earth which is our fate and home if we try to live without that power, and yet divine enough that power must be on the other side to lift man into the image of God and place him permanently on his feet before the problem of life.

Jesus Believed in Man.

"Jesus believed in man, because he believed in God. He revealed man in revealing God. No one ever so depended upon God to re-enforce man at his best. No one ever stayed so faithfully by man at his worst. He would not even save himself at Calvary from man's fury. He would rather trust that man would come again to Calvary, age after age, to find if one drop of his blood still quivered there. But this trust of his in man was fundamentally a trust in God, his father and man's father.

"This, then, is the meliorism which must be Christ's gift to the man who is his minister. It is far from that pessimism which says that the world is as bad as it can be, and is far from that optimism which says that the world is as good as it can be. It is meliorism, as it has been called, and its assurance is in Jesus Christ when it says that this is not the worst possible world, nor is this the best possible world, but, by the certain victory of Jesus, it shall be the best possible world. This hope keeps the minister from fainting.

"Let us be honest with God and conscience and the fact that it is a hopeless world without this Lord of man unfurling his blood-stained banner of hope. The only pulpit that men respect permanently pours forth the music of the redemption. It is tremulous with the minors of Good Friday. Golf is better than a meaningless gospel. Men scorn to squander an otherwise pleasant hour of their Sunday where two things are not believed—first, the fact that humanity, unhelped from God, is prostrate and despairing; second, the fact that with Christ there come hope, self-respect and manhood.

"People were never as willing—nay, so desirous to go to church as they are now, if Christ is there to get them on their feet. Without him they will not stay to hear your dream of a better day, and with him they will not tolerate any depreciation of humanity or any defamation of the soul of man.

Bread Better Than Gems.

"It is a fearful thing to fail to tell men of Christ in an age both as misanthropic and aspiring as our own. Dr. Roswell Hitchcock mentions a Bedouin in the desert whose piteous condition was this: He had been without food so long that he was starving. His hope was that some other traveler who had already gone that way might have left, by chance or provision, a pocket containing food. Away beyond, near a fountain, he spied what he took to be a traveler's bag, and to his hunger it must contain bread. Slowly and hardly he pulled himself over the hot sand to the little pouch. He took it up and poured out before his vacant eyes a stream of glorious gems. As they wooed the sun by their splendor his famished body fell over, while he murmured: 'Oh, it is only diamonds, only diamonds!'

"Merciful heaven, that this should be an honest description of so much that is called preaching! 'Diamonds, only diamonds!' It is a piteous thing for the preacher and the people. Both are disappointed sadly. Diamonds! And he, the preacher, works so long to find them, and so hard to grind them well, and so unceasingly, perhaps, to set them in a golden paragraph—and they, the people, want only the bread of life. One mouthful of plain bread and you may have the polished dogmas, the glittering periods, the flame-like phrases, the splendid tenses.

Do Not Waste Time.

"Let the preacher say at each year's dawn: 'I have fifty-two precious Sunday mornings before me. I can waste not. I will not take these fifty-two hours from you for any less sublime task or privilege. I do not know enough of politics, sociology, art, literature, music or science to justify your coming to hear me speak on these topics. I know here but one thing, and if I am true to it you will never weary of my use of your time and the expending of my limited strength. My theme has the breadth of God's love and the many-sidedness of his abundant goodness. It is perennially fresh and beautiful. I will not attempt to vie with your other sources of intellectual and spiritual vitality in furnishing you delightful information or high entertainment. If they are valuable to you, it is because each to whom you give your attention is a specialist. So, also, am I."

A HEART POEM.

William Canton is an English poet whose name is not very familiar to American readers. His little volume entitled "W. V.; Her Book," is as "ointment poured forth." "The British Weekly," in a recent issue, says: "Many readers will hear with a thrill of true personal sorrow that Miss Winifred Vida Canton, the 'W. V.' of her father's beautiful book, died suddenly, of peritonitis. She had been ill for only three days, and till the morning of her death there was every hope of her recovery. She was a dear child, bright and beautiful, never to be forgotten by those who knew her. For the rest, the story of her sweet, brief life has been enshrined by her father in 'W. V.; Her Book.' It was her book in a very special manner, though she never knew it. For her father and mother an unusually deep and wide sympathy will be felt in their great sorrow and sore bereavement." We quote from the book a beautiful and touching poem, entitled, "Crying Abba, Father":

Abba, in thine eternal years,
Bethink thee of our fleeting day;
We are but clay;
Bear with our foolish joys, our foolish tears,
And all the willfulness with which we pray.

I have a little maid who, when she leaves
Her father and her father's threshold, grieves,
But, being gone, and life all holiday,
Forgets my love and me straightway.
Yet, when I write,
Kisses my letters, dancing with delight,
Cries "Dearest father!" and in all her glee
For one brief, livelong hour remembers me.
Shall I in anger punish or reprove?
Nay, this is natural; she cannot guess
How one forgotten feels forgetfulness;
And I am glad thinking of her glad face,
And send her little tokens of my love.

And thou—wouldst thou be wroth in such a case?

And, crying Abba, I am fain
To think no human father's heart
Can be so tender as thou art,
So quick to feel our love, to feel our pain.

When she is forward, querulous or wild,
Thou knowest, Abba, how in each offense
I stint not patience, lest I wrong the child,
Mistaking for revolt defect of sense,
For willfulness mere spriteliness of mind;
Thou know'st how often, seeing, I am blind;
How when I turn her face against the wall
And leave her in disgrace,
And will not look at her or speak at all,
I long to speak and long to see her face;
And how, when twice for something grievous done,
I could but smite, and though I lightly smote,
I felt my heart rise strangling in my throat,
And when she wept I kissed her poor red hands.

All these things, Father, a father understands;
And am I not thy son?

Abbas, in thine eternal years,
Bethink thee of our fleeting day;
From all the rapture of our eyes and ears
How shall we tear ourselves away?
At night my little one says nay,
With prayers implores, entreats with tears
For ten more flying minutes' play;
How shall we tear ourselves away?
Yet call and I'll surrender
The flower of soul and sense,
Life's passion and its splendor,
In quick obedience.

If not without the blameless human tears
By eyes which slowly glaze and darken shed,
Yet without questionings or fears
For those I leave behind when I am dead.
Thou, Abba, know'st how dear
My little child's poor playthings are to her;
What love and joy
She has in every darling doll and precious toy;
Yet when she stands between my knees
To kiss good-night, she does not sob in sorrow,
"Oh, father, do not break or injure these!"
She knows that I shall fondly lay them by
For happiness tomorrow;
So leaves them trustfully. And shall not I?

Whatever darkness gather O'er coverlet or pall,
Since thou art Abba Father,
Why should I fear at all?

Thou'st seen how closely, Abba, when at rest
My child's head nestles to my breast;
And how my arm her little form enfolds,
Lest in the darkness she should feel alone;
And how she holds
My hands, my hands, my two hands in her own?

A little easeful sighing
And restful turning round,
And I, too, on thy love relying,
Shall slumber sound.

PLEASANTRIES.

A little fellow who had his wits about him when the contribution plate was passed at church, administered a rebuke to his mother, who, on the way home, was finding fault with the sermon. "Well, mother," he said, innocently, "what could you expect for a cent?"

An old Missouri farmer, coming home from the weekly prayer meeting, awoke his spouse with, "I tell ye, Mandy, 'twas a glorious meetin'." "Why, Si?" grunted Mandy. "Because I spoke," returned the elated Si.—Club Woman.

Here is a story from the Baptist conference at Leicester. A minister found himself at chapel one morning without his sermon. "My dear brethren," he exclaimed, "I can only give you now what God will send me; but to-night I will come back better prepared."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Dear old Father Taylor made his meaning clear when he supplicated something after this fashion: "Lord, let those in authority over us be clean men, just men, goldly men; but, O Lord, what is the use of beating about the bush; give us George N. Briggs for governor!"

A Scotch divine, somewhat "off color" in his theology, met one of his parishioners who was "making his way home somewhat deviously. He thus accosted him: 'John, John, I thought you had taken the pledge.' 'Sae I did, sir,' replied the culprit, 'but it's ae thing to tak' the pledge, and quite another thing to keep it, as ye ken weel enough wi' respect to the Confession o' Faith.'"—Press.

BOOK REVIEWS.

"Comforting Thoughts, Spoken by Henry Ward Beecher, with an Introduction by Newell Dwight Hillis. Fords, Howard & Hulbert, N. Y., Publishers," is the title page of a book beautiful within and without. These extracts from Mr. Beecher's sermons have been made with fine discrimination. They are like a handful of violets wet with the dew of the morning. Every page reveals not only the touch of transcendent genius, but the outflowing of a heart Christlike in its sympathies. It is difficult for anyone who has come under the spell of Mr. Beecher's power to speak of him with measured words. His influence grows as he recedes from us. His words have in them a suggestion of immortality. He spoke for all time. We can think of no better gift to put into the hands of a sick or sorrowing friend than this dainty volume, the contents of which are like the precious ointment which Mary poured from the broken alabaster vase upon the feet of the Master.

"Back to Bethel" is the title of a little book from the prolific pen of F. B. Meyer, and published by The Colportage Association of the Chicago Bible Institute. Its chapters are composed of addresses delivered by Mr. Meyer during his recent visit to this country. It is a kind of book of which we can hardly have too many. It contains the best fruitage of the Keswick school; and is replete with striking interpretations of texts, and with pungent appeals to the conscience. No one can read its glowing pages without having a heightened sense of the glory of the Christian life; and no one can yield to its influence without being led into a life of closer fellowship with the Master, and more complete consecration to his service.

Christian Life and Theology, or The Contribution of Christian Experience to the System of Evangelical Doctrine by Frank Hugh Foster, Ph., D., D. D.—Fleming H. Revell Co.

This is the work of a plodder; and in spite of manifold imperfections and limitations, is a useful book. It evinces a somewhat extensive acquaintance with the literature of the subject, but it handles its material in rather a commonplace manner. From a literary point of view it is lacking in grace and finish, and is often slipshod. There is an absence of that note of distinction which belongs to good literature; hence it makes rather heavy reading. Yet the theme of which it treats is one of absorbing interest, and the reader keeps turning over its pages in the hope that perseverance may find its just reward. Our author finds the tap root of the Christian life in "the permanent choice of duty as such." Had he been defining religious experience rather than Christian experience even then the definition would have been defective; for the Supreme Choice of religion is the choice of God, as the supreme choice of the Christian is the choice of Christ. Christ does not say "Follow duty;" he says "Follow me;" and it is this personal note that is the distinctive thing in his teaching. The necessity of the translation of the abstract into the concrete our author admits; but his admission is fatal to his original definition. Dr. Foster is altogether right also in making individual experience a ground of certainty but not of absolute certainty—something which has to be verified by the collective experience of the Christian Church, and by the teaching of the word of God. All the book and its lack of the modern spirit because with its general aim we are in entire agreement.

The Soul of a Christian. A Study in the Religious Experience, by Frank Granger, D. Lit., M. A.—The MacMillan Co., N. Y.

According to Professor Granger, the soul of a Christian is a deep, mysterious thing. No plummet line can sound its depths profound. Its experiences are illusive. They are as changeful as the colors in a kaleidoscope. All we can do at the best is to catch glimpses of its passing moods. The book itself is interesting as presenting in a series of dissolving views, variations of the Christian life; but it fails to present in clear relief the elements that are basic, and eternally permanent. In a great deal of what is given we have the soul of the abnormal Christian, rather than the soul of the normal Christian.

The table of contents will sufficiently indicate the scope of the book. After a preliminary chapter on Method the themes touched upon are: The Depths of the Soul; The Oversoul; The Soul's Awakening; Ecstasy; The Dark Night of the Soul; Visions and Voices; Human and Divine Love; Symbol and Ritual; Prophecy and Inspiration; Illumination and Progress; Direction, Confession and Casuistry; and Mythical Theology.

The doctrine of the oversoul is the center of our author's thinking. To this doctrine it is his expressed aim "to try to give a quite positive meaning." In this he seems to have succeeded to his own satisfaction, but his thought is nebulous and intangible. The oversoul is said to be "something beyond personality; the one process of which personality is like an aspect repeated at different centers." There may be those to whom this definition is plain as a pike staff; unfortunately for himself, no doubt, the present reviewer is not among the number. It would, however, be unfair to produce the impression that this book ought to be put aside as of no value. Running through it there is a rich philosophical, or rather metaphysical, vein. It also takes into account the most recent discussions touching the new psychology. Parts of it are very suggestive. In the midst of a haze of words there are many luminous points shining out like the lamps of a city in a fog. Among these take the following: "The man who has to deal successfully with the souls of others, must first understand his own." "Whenever the soul aspires beyond the commonplace it shares in the life of the spirit." "Erasmus has this true mark of inspiration: he rose above the mere partisan." "The austere sects excite the most enthusiasm at first, but the temperate sects have always been the most durable." "The possession of a single true thought about Jehovah not derived from current religious teaching, but springing up in the soul as a word from Jehovah, is," says Robertson Smith, "enough to constitute a prophet." "The prophet is a nobler figure than one who is a priest and nothing more; but nobler than either, stands the man who out of unfeigned love towards his fellow men, shares in the burdens like Francis of Assisi or Vincent de Paul." "The mere pictorial representation of the life of Jesus, unless it is suffused with moral ideas, has no permanent effect upon the soul." "It is one of the conditions of religious faith that what it contains in thought should be represented as present." "The spirit which has reached the standpoint of complete toleration in matters of thought, and of impartial pursuit of the truth, serves no longer under the banner of partisan religion; but has reached the standpoint of quietism, and of the scientific method."

"The Story of Eva," by Will Payne. 8 vo.; $1.50. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

A character study of rare interest, which holds one's attention from beginning to end, and is a helpful lesson in life to the reader who comes to it—mature in mind and competent to discriminate, but a dangerous pitfall for the crude, the immature mind or the young. Eva is quite an ordinary girl, as to birth and education, but develops an unsuspected depth and decision of character, under trial. She is good and pure and noble throughout the story—but scarcely so much can be said of the hero, Philip Marvin. It is indeed a question whether it is possible for a man to live as he did, contrary to the generally accepted standard of right, having, or growing to have the feeling of fear of discovery—therefore the knowledge of wrongdoing—without deteriorating in moral strength, and integrity beyond redemption. The book is well written, and shows a knowledge of the struggles of the "other half," and yet shows the bright, cherry side even of that unhappy condition.

Rev. James Tompkins, D. D., of Chicago, secretary of the Illinois Home Missionary society, in reviewing the work of this society for the seventy-five years, says: "There were no Congregational churches in the state when the laborers appointed by the Home Missionary society commenced operations. Now there are 359, with a membership of 49,852. Eighty-one of these receive aid, showing 278 self-supporting churches. With rare exceptions these churches have been organized and nourished to a period and position of vigorous life as a direct result of home missionary operations—the fruitage of home missionary benevolence. And even the exceptions are the indirect result of the same benevolent forces."

Epworth leagues of Chicago celebrated the twelfth anniversary of the society's organization at the Auditorium Tuesday evening.

Dr. H. L. Willett has been engaged to supply the First Congregational church of Evanston, for the next six months, while the pastor, Dr. Loba, is absent as a deputy for the American Board Examining for Mission Work in India.

Rev. William Reid Cross, rector of Grace church, Hinsdale, has resigned and accepted a call to Atchison, Kan.

Ground was broken for the new church building of the Third Congregational church, Oak Park, with interesting services, May 1. Dr. W. E. Barton and Dr. Sydney Strong, pastors of the First and Second churches, gave addresses on "The Value of a Building to a Growing Church," and "The Value of a Church to a Growing Community." The new building is to be a comely structure of modern design, well adapted to the expanding work of this church. Rev. H. W. Stough is pastor.

The North Side Church of the Disciples is having, in place of conventional prayer meetings, a series of ten or twelve sermons by prominent brethren, on vital subjects.

The quarterly meeting of the North-eastern Deanery (Episcopalian) was held May 7, at Highland Park, and was made the occasion of congratulatory greetings to the Rev. H. C. Kinney on the fortieth anniversary of his ordination, and to the Rev. P. C. Wolcott on the completion of the new church at Highland Park.

Dr. Edwin A. Layton and wife, of Chicago, missionaries of the Foreign-Christian Missionary society, sailed from New York on April 27th in the "Umbria," for Bolengi, Africa, their new field of labor. Dr. Layton stands high in the medical profession and is also a preacher of the gospel. Mrs. Layton has spent a number of years teaching in the Chicago schools. They will be associated with E. E. Farris and Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye, at Bolengi, Africa, which is in the Congo Free State, about 800 miles from the mouth of the Congo river. On his way Dr. Layton will spend a few weeks in London in some special medical preparation.

The fifth anniversary of the Church of the Ascension was observed on Ascension Day, May 17th. An orchestra of twelve pieces assisted the choir at the High Celebration, when Bishop Anderson preached.

The new Presbyterian Social Union was successfully launched on Tuesday evening, May 7, at the Palmer House.

there being an attendance of nearly three hundred ministers and laymen at the banquet. The number was unexpectedly large and the interest arose to marked enthusiasm.

At St. Paul's Universalist Church on Prairie avenue an offering of $2,600 was made at the morning service May 12 to the twentieth century fund of the Universalist Church. Dr. Joseph K. Mason, the pastor, now begins the second year of his pastorate.

A charity concert was given at the Second Baptist Church by the women of the congregation Tuesday evening, the proceeds being devoted to establishing a free bed in the Chicago Baptist Hospital.

The Chicago presbytery of the United Presbyterian body held its semi-annual convention at Aurora, Ills., May 15. One hundred delegates were in attendance. Mr. M. D. Brown of the Second church, Chicago, was elected president, and Miss Mary Glenn of the Seventh Church, Chicago, secretary.

Twenty-eight new members were received into the First Baptist Church May 5.

The Rev. Ernest M. Stires, rector of Grace Church, has been elected to the rectorship of the large and important parish of St. Thomas, New York City.

Chicago men were much in evidence in the elections at the Western Unitarian conference in St. Louis May 16. Morton D. Hull was elected president, Rev. J. R. Effinger, vice president; Rev. F. C. Southworth, secretary; H. W. Brough, treasurer. The Sunday School society elected as its president Rev. John R. Effinger; vice president, Rev. W. H. Pulsford; secretary and Church building is progressing among our brethren of the Disciples. Monroe Street Church has begun the erection of what will be the handsomest edifice of that body in the city. Douglas Park Church will break ground soon. Englewood Church has decided to build a church costing $30,000. Humbolt Park will get into their house in time for a summer or early fall campaign. Austin also expects to occupy its own house "before the snow flies," while Irving Park is confident of building its auditorium within a year. Then will follow closely Garfield Boulevard Church, Evanston, and Sixty-third Street Church in rapid succession, since they all have encouraging building funds of several hundred dollars each.

Baptist.

Rochester Theological Seminary held its annual commencement exercises May 5-9. President Strong was given leave of absence for one year until May, 1902. He will devote the time to revising his compendium of systematic theology, which has passed through six editions, and to the visitation of theological seminaries in this country and Europe. The productive assets of the seminary have increased $64,162.76 in the last year.

The Eastern Minnesota Association met in St. Paul May 7 and 8. The gain in baptisms over last year is 122 per cent.

Eighty-seven people received the hand of fellowship in the St. Paul churches May 5.

Central Church, Minneapolis, has received seventy-one members during the year; present membership, 671.

The churches of Seattle have organized "The Baptist City Missionary Society."

Rev. Otto S. Russell has been called to the pastorate of the First Church, Canandaigua, N. Y.

Rev. J. W. Weltner of South Park Church, Kansas City, has asked his people to release him from the pastorate there in order that he may accept the financial secretaryship of Webb College.

Dr. W. W. Dawley, pastor of Central Baptist Church, Minneapolis, baptized twenty converts on Sunday, May 12, making a total of twenty-six for that week.

Rev. Rufus C. Burlison, D. D., LL. D., president emeritus of Baylor University, Waco, Texas, died May 14, in the 78th year of his age. At the age of twenty-five he consecrated his life to the cause of religion and education in Texas, and no considerations of honor or pecuniary reward induced him to swerve from this aim. He lived to see Texas the greatest Baptist state in the union except one.

Unification of the seven missionary societies is proposed, each to be representative delegated bodies to one central organization. One missionary magazine is also favored. Appeals for specific objects are condemned, and every church is asked to recognize its obligation to the general missionary society, which is for men, women and children.

Southern Baptists.

Foreign missions was the chief topic under consideration at the convention held in New Orleans, La. It was the sentiment of that body to accept indemnity for destruction of mission property in China was unchristian. treasurer, Albert Scheible, all of Chicago.

The Woman's Home Missionary Union convened at the same time and place and made plans for vigorous prosecution of its work, especially in the Sunday Schools. "More schools and better schools" is to be its watchword. Seventy thousand dollars was appropriated for home and foreign missions, and $100,000 is to be raised for the building of new churches.

Congregational.

Yankton College is planning to establish several academies throughout South Dakota. Arrangements have just been completed for the acceptance of the building formerly used by Pierre University for the first of these academies.

The Illinois State Association convened at Galesburg, Ill., May 21 and 22. The annual meeting of the Illinois Woman's Home Missionary was held at the same time and place. There are now about 375 churches in this association with a membership of 60,000.

The Diamond Jubilee of the Congregational Home Missionary Society was held in Boston May 14 and 15. Dr. J. B. Clark read a historical paper entitled "Genesis of Congregational Home Missions and Part of the Acts." General O. O. Howard has resigned as president of the society and the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis has been elected to succeed.

Rev. Charles O. Day, secretary of the Congregational Educational Society, has been elected president of Andover Theological Seminary, and Bartlett professor of homiletics and practical theology in the same institution. Dr. Day is a graduate of Yale and of Andover Seminary.

The Rev. Ezra Hoyt Byington, D. D., died suddenly at his home in Newton, Mass., May 16.

The State Association of Indiana met at Fort Wayne May 16.

Pastor Chalmers, of Elgin, Ills., received 114 into church membership last Sunday, which with 136 March 3, and 77 Jan. 6, makes 327 since the first of January.

At the May Communion in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, eighty-two persons were received upon confession of faith. Only once since 1874 has there been such a large accession of members. The two years during which Dr. N. D. Hillis has been pastor of this church have been years of steady growth.

About one hundred delegates attended the annual meeting of the Beloit district auxiliaries of the Wisconsin branch of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Interior.

The Disciples.

A somewhat remarkable series of evangelistic meetings were held in Des Moines, Iowa, during the past weeks by Charles Reign Scoville. In three separate meetings there were over 1,000 additions. The first was at the Central Church with nearly 400, next was at the University Place Church, where there were 573 additions—said to be the greatest meeting ever held by any church in that body—then at the East Side Church there were nearly 300. In each of these meetings extensive plans were laid by the pastors and carried out in detail by the evangelist and his workers.

The semi-annual meeting of the Western Pennsylvania Missionary Society opened at Uniontown May 21.

The annual convention of the churches in the Sedalia (Mo.) district met May 13 at Warrensburg, Mo., for a three days' meeting.

Christian College, Columbia, Mo., matriculated 240 students this year.

During the month of April there was a gain in the regular receipts for foreign missions of $4,002.67. The receipts for the month amounted to $21,512.99.

The Ministerial Institute of the seventh and eighth districts of Illinois was held in Centralia, Ills., May 6 and 7, with an attendance of nearly thirty preachers.

A new $3,000 church at Alva, Okla., was dedicated May 5 by Rev. L. B. Myers of Wichita, Kan. More money was raised than was asked for. There have been 31 additions at Alva in the last four months.

A joint meeting of the official boards of the churches in St. Louis was held recently at the First Church, under the auspices of the Christian Church Circle, to devise ways and means for a closer unity. It is expected to form a central association which will express their essential unity in the city, and that all matters which affect vitally any church or churches will be considered by this association, such as the calling or dismissal of a pastor, the opening of a mission, incurring of a debt, erection or improvement of a building, etc.

The following is the report of the Church Extension Fund for the month of April, 1901: Receipts from churches, $67.16; from individuals, $366.59; from bequests, $6,347.69; from annuities, $3,000.00. Total, $9,781.44.

Harry Walston writes as follows from Knoxville, Iowa, May 12: "On March 29, 1901, 21 of us organized the First Church of Christ of Knoxville, Iowa. We have grown since then to 56 members. We took our first offering of $26.59 to-day for missions. We are making all preparations to observe Children's Day, and expect to raise not less than $15. Sister Newcomer will be with us next Lord's Day to organize a C. W. B. M. Brethren, pray for and rejoice with us."

A one rate for the round trip has been secured from the Western Passenger Association for the First Twentieth Century Missionary convention to be held there next October. On Thursday of this week a delegation of prominent Minneapolitans arrived in Chicago with instructions to secure the one fare rate for the round trip. The brethren of Minneapolis have succeeded in enlisting the interest and co-operation of the entire city to make the convention a grand success. They are devoting to it a degree of enthusiasm, hustle and general management that is bound to win. The Western Passenger Association granted the rate asked for and it is expected the Central Association and trunk lines will do the same.

Episcopal.

The Rev. Peter Voorhees Finch, rector of St. James Church, Greenfield, Mass., died suddenly May 3. He had been in the ministry forty years.

Bishop Huntington recently confirmed thirty-two persons at Trinity Church, Elmira, N. Y., the Rev. Dr. G. H. McKnight, rector.

St. John's parish, Jacksonville, Fla., lost its church, parish house and rectory, valued at $46,500, and most of its families lost their homes, many of them their business places and goods, in the conflagration of May 3.

The second annual meeting of the Sunday School Commission of the diocese of New York was held May 20. This Commission has done valuable work since its foundation in awakening thought in regard to the method of Sunday School teaching. Papers on "The Present State of Sunday School Education," "The Obligation Upon the Pastor to Know Child-Nature," "The Desirability of a Comprehensive and Systematic Order of Study for Our Sunday Schools," "The Child, the School and the Church," were read.

The Most Rev. John Travers Lewis, D. D., LL. D., archbishop of Ontario, and metropolitan of Canada, died on his way to England May 4. He was suffering when he embarked from the results of pneumonia. His diocese was immense and called for long journeys and frequent hardship.

The diocese of Pennsylvania reported at its annual convention, May 7, 3,161 persons confirmed during the year.

The diocese of Massachusetts held its annual convention May 7 and 8 and reported 2,065 persons confirmed last year. Action was taken looking towards division of the diocese.

Bishop Satterlee of Washington confirmed 898 persons during the last convention year.

African Methodist-Episcopal.

A district conference was held in Milwaukee, Wis., May 14-16. Bishop Grant, whose jurisdiction covers Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Ontario, and who was himself once a slave, lectured on "Africa, Its Future, and the American Negro."

Methodist Episcopal.

Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Minneapolis, Minn., has introduced a vested choir of eighty voices.

The St. Paul, Minn., Epworth League Union held its twelfth anniversary at the Central Park Church May 12.

The fifth annual convention of the Epworth League will be held in San Francisco July 18-21.

The thirty-third semi-annual session of the Dubuque conference was held at Earlville, Ia., May 13-16. Some of the subjects discussed were "The Importance of Doctrinal Preaching," "Importance of Business Methods in Church Finances," etc.

Statistics of the North Indiana conference show an increase of $2,800 for missions. Muncie district has brought its collections up to the $2,000,000 standard.

Rev. Dr. George W. Carter, who has ranked as one of the foremost preachers of the South, passed away May 11 at his home, Washington, D. C.

Evangelical-Lutheran.

The annual meeting of the Iowa conference, Augustana synod, held a four days' session at Ottumwa, Ia., May 9-13.

Rev. Henry Frederick Sprengeler will complete on July 30 a pastorate of twenty-five years in Trinity Church, Milwaukee. Progress and prosperity have been marked features of the work under his care. The communicants now number 1,435, and the parochial school has 300 pupils.

Rev. A. O. Swinehart has resigned the pastorate of Immanuel Church, New Orleans, on account of his wife's health, and accepted a call to Fort Wayne, Ind.

Presbyterian.

The General Assembly is in session in Philadelphia. A historic and missionary exhibit of the progress of the church is being held in the Academy of Fine Arts. Dr. Charles A. Dickey, of Philadelphia, the retiring Moderator, preached the opening sermon May 16. Rev. Henry Collin Minton, D. D., of San Francisco, has been elected to succeed him as Moderator. The subject of creed revision will not be taken till more routine matters are out of the way, probably about the middle of this week.

The twenty-second annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Missions met May 16, in Philadelphia. The treasurer reported receipts for the year $357,201, an increase of $6,862 over last year.

A conference on foreign missions was held in the same city May 15. Dr. Evans reported that 80 per cent of the churches in St. Louis had contributed during the last year 20 per cent more to foreign missions than in the previous year.

Marcus Dods, the distinguished Scotch theologian, is delivering two courses of lectures at Bible College, Montclair, N. J., on the Epistle to the Hebrews and the Gospel of John. They are attracting much attention outside the Presbyterian communion.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions passed this year in its receipts the $1,000,000 mark. This is a record-breaker for ordinary contributions. Where the million mark was reached in previous years it was effected by extraordinary windfalls. Besides this $1,000,000 for missions, $500,000 has been raised to clear off the debt on the Presbyterian building in New York. The board finds officials in China more than anxious to settle all indemnity questions without waiting for the government behind the missionaries to collect them. Almost all claims of the board are now adjusted, and the Governor of Shan Tung has invited the missionaries to return, saying their presence will help to allay feeling. The board has responded by sending back the men but not the women missionaries.

Cumberland Presbyterian.

The seventieth annual session of the General Assembly convened in West Point, Miss., May 16. There was an attendance of 400 commissioners, representing the states from Pennsylvania to California and from Iowa to Louisiana.

The twenty-first annual Women's Missionary convention was held in Marshall, Mo., May 5-8.

Southern Presbyterian.

The forty-first General Assembly was held in Little Rock, Ark., May 16.

United Presbyterian.

The forty-third General Assembly will meet in Des Moines, Ia., May 22. The outcome of the year's work is not encouraging. The net gain in membership is 1,033, less than one per cent. Contributions for all purposes, however, are greater than last year by $114,000. The receipts for home missions are $3,036.52 less than last year.

At the annual meeting of the directors of the Allegheny Theological Seminary, held May 15, Rev. Dr. J. C. Wilson of Erie, Pa., was elected president; Rev. Dr. Jesse Johnson of New Concord, Ohio, vice president; Rev. Dr. W. H. McMillan of Allegheny, secretary.

The quadrennial conference has been in session at Frederick, Md., and on May 14 went to Baltimore for the centennial celebration of their church. A handsome new church edifice was dedicated in honor of the event. The topics on the centennial program were indicative of the thought of the times; such as "The Imperative Need of a Cultured Ministry;" "The Next Step in Sunday School Progress," etc.

The total membership of the United Brethren in Christ is, in round numbers, 250,000. The missionary offerings have increased $25,000 over those of the previous quadrennium. The membership of the Y. P. C. U. B. is now 76,103.

the location of a home to educate the children of missionaries in foreign fields. The report on the Junior Society of the church showed a total membership of 6,670; total contributions, $5,599, and total thank offerings of $39,600, being an increase of $18,000 over last year. The total receipts for foreign mission work were $37,480, and the disbursements $31,708.

Universalist.

Rev. Dr. John Coleman Adams, pastor of All Soul's Church, Brooklyn, has received a call to the Church of the Redeemer, Hartford, Conn. The Brooklyn Church has prospered greatly under his administration.

Unitarian.

The Western Unitarian conference met in St. Louis May 15. Eighty-three churches were represented. The secretary's report showed a gain in new churches and increased membership in the old churches. The contributions during the year have been the largest since 1869.

General.

As a result of the Salvation Army "self-denial week," in England, £47,181 has been collected, £4,336 more than last year. London gave £10,693. A sign of devotion and energy well directed.

It is reported that 200 Russian students have addressed the synod, asking to be excommunicated along with Tolstoi. Tolstoi, it is reported, has been warned that he may not live in Moscow, and he is watched also to prevent his leaving Russia. He is practically confined to his country seat at Yasmaya Polyama. He seems to be in some senses stronger than the Czar.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, who had charge of the United States Census of Churches in 1890, estimates that during the nineteenth century the number of churches was multiplied by fifty-four; and that the number of communicants was multiplied by seventy-three. During this time the population of the country was multiplied by only fourteen. This is certainly an enormous gain, and is a hard fact for the pessimists to account for. The gains in the last ten years, according to Dr. Carroll, appear in the following summary:

The largest gains in communicants between 1890 and 1900 were made by the Catholics—2,508,212. The Methodist (17 bodies) stand second with 1,327,065; the Baptists (13 groups) third, with 803,434; the Disciples of Christ fourth, with 508,931; the Lutherans (21 bodies) fifth, with 429,095; the Presbyterians (12 bodies) sixth, with 306,068; and the Episcopalians (2 bodies) seventh, with 179,129.

Changes tending to greater dignity in public religious worship are notable. Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, has a service which takes up exactly one hour before the sermon is reached. Much of it is borrowed from the old liturgies. A Baptist church in Pittsburg confines its music wholly to English composers. Presbyterian congregations in all parts of the country are elaborating their forms, and the number of vested choirs among the Lutherans is now so great as to excite no comment. In New York the third vested choir has been introduced into Methodist churches. The last one is in Calvary, the largest Methodist congregation in New York in point of membership and one of the largest in America. The vestments worn are exactly like those worn by choristers in Episcopal churches, and there is the same processional and recessional hymns. The Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York, the Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the well-known Evangelist pastor, is to introduce a chancel into its auditorium during the coming summer, in order to admit of a boy choir.

Dr. William S. Ament, the missionary, speaking upon "The Present Situation in China," said: "It is a remarkable fact that in this great Chinese nation, one of the oldest among the civilized, the very home of conservatism, the natives are beginning to realize the need of new ideas and modernism is fast gaining a foothold. Only a few days before I left China a prominent Chinese gentleman said to me, 'We Chinese know that we need many things, but first of all we need a new religion.' Christianity now has more friends among the Chinese than it ever had; thousands of Chinese appreciate the Christian religion more than they did a year ago. The church is by no means exterminated, or even weakened; it is still full of vigor and I look forward to a bright and glorious future for it in the Chinese empire."

A writer in the Springfield Republican reports that a Japanese review, the Tetsugaku Zasshi, has lately addressed a series of questions to the students of the Japanese universities and leading colleges, and received answers from about 1,000 young men; 66 per cent declared themselves to be atheists, although of that number some professed regret that they were unable to accept any religious creed, and others said they had had no time to study the question. About 200 reported that they have rejected all religious belief because of philosophical and scientific studies: and, being questioned as to what should replace religion, a majority of the young men declared in favor of subjective as against objective ethics. Nearly all agreed that the dictates of conscience should be the basis of morality. Commenting on the answers received, the prominent Japanese men of learning who conducted the inquiry for the review concluded that the time is ripe in Japan to elaborate an ideal system of ethics which should embody the best principles in all the leading religions of the world.

THE HAND OF PROVIDENCE IN OUR MISTAKES.

By Margaret E. Sangster.

The hand of Providence in our successes, our accomplishments, our deliverances is easily recognized by our quickened or grateful perceptions, but less easily and readily, as a rule, do we acknowledge the same kind and wise hand in our mistakes. Yet in most lives the latter equal, if not exceed, the former in the experiences of the passing years. Our motives are so curiously mixed, our foresight is so short, and our limitations are necessarily so many that we are constantly blundering, now turning in this or that direction when another would be the better one to take, now remaining in a place when we ought to leave it, and changing a place when we ought to remain in it, until, as we draw near the sunset, we are fain to bewail our lack of judgment, and wish in vain that we had our lives to live over again. After the event it is often quite plain to us that we should have acted in another way, and we see clearly where we were wrong and what would have been the wiser course of action. But at the time our eyes were holden and we did not perceive the indications plainly.

Especially when our mistakes affect the lives of others, as when parents by a certain decision modify or entirely change the circumstances and future position of children, or as when, at a turn in the road, our stepping to this side or to that arrests our fortunes and gives us the downward push instead of the upward, we are apt to cast the blame wholly on our fatuity and to leave Providence quite outside the reckoning. And, taking this view, it is not strange if we grow cynical and morbid and eat our bread in bitterness and look with envious wonder on the comrade who has outstripped us in the march.

If, however, we accept the sweet and comforting doctrine that our whole lives, from the beginning to the ending, are under God's sovereign control, that while we are free to choose still, for reasons infinitely kind and far-reaching as eternity, the love that outlasts time and sense permits our errors, we shall escape the danger of complaint or weak chagrin. True, we did on some occasions act on impulse and with childish precipitancy, and again, on another, we suffered merciful reasoning to mislead us, but all the while we were God's dear children and he had not let us go, and there was some need in our nature which even he could not have supplied unless the discipline of life had made us aware of it. There are characters which cannot be developed except by contact with pain and disappointment.

There are strong and noble souls which arrive at their full estate only by wrestling against wind and tide. There are exceptional temperaments which would never find God unless driven to his arms by stress of sorrow and desolation of defeat.

Again, it often happens that the last result of an apparent mistake is happiness for the very persons who seemed most disastrously influenced by it at first. Wealth flies and luxuries are abridged, but the sons and daughters, bravely facing poverty, are better equipped for the struggles before them than they would have been had the path been altogether smooth. By a certain decision, regretted and lamented in solitude and silence, we have closed, at one or another period, a door of our lives which we can never open again. When we locked that door we lost the combination, and never in all our immortality can we discover that forfeited secret.

And yet, where for us there would have been, perhaps, joy and ease, there has been instead blessing and the ability to bless, a wider field of influence, a surer sense of power and the going on to a firmer and higher vantage ground. In our mistakes, and, being finite and sinful, we are always making them, let us not be utterly disheartened, since back of them and back of us is the guiding hand of one whose love and wisdom never err.

Beyond the smiling and the weeping, beyond the sowing and the reaping, as Bonar's lovely hymn puts it, we shall be soon. But even more consolatory is the reflection that beyond these varied experiences, while we stay here, are God's tender care over us, God's purpose for our benefit, God's clear sight for our blurred vision and God's never-slumbering providential love.

HEAVEN'S REMEDY FOR TIRED SOULS AND BODIES.

Louisa S. Weightman.

Weariness of body is simply an effect and not a cause, and any good physician should seek at once to find the real root of the trouble and deal with that. Perhaps all of us would be greatly surprised to find out what a number of apparently contradictory symptoms can be traced back to one and the same cause.

Mrs. Look-a-head is overwhelmed with household cares; Mrs. Work-a-day spends too many hours at the sewing machine; Mrs. Good-all has so many church duties to perform that she is on the verge of nervous prostration; Mrs. Bustle has no time to read the church papers or helpful books; Mrs. Fretful never gets time to rest. She is certain it is not her fault, she would be glad to pause once in awhile, but what with all there is to do, and the children nagging all the time, she can find no stopping place.

ROYAL Baking Powder

Makes the bread more healthful.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

All these symptoms point to one disease—an unrestful soul externalizing itself in an unrestful body. Mrs. Look-a-head is trying to crowd the future into the present, forgetting that "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." She needs the sedative which is found in the promises "As thy days so shall thy strength be" and "My peace I give unto thee." Mrs. Work-a-day is caring too much for outward appearances; following the world's standard and forgetting the rule, "Whose adorning, let it not be the outward adorning of putting on apparel." Mrs. Good-all needs to learn the lesson taught by the Master to Martha which was not that of the absence of service, but of restful unworrying service.

In answer to the great heart-cry of humanity for rest comes the divine offer of peace and so to Mrs. Work-a-day, Mrs. Good-all, and all who are letting their work chafe and fret them is the promise given "I will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on me, because he trusteth in me."

And now comes Mrs. Bustle who has too much self confidence—the kind that gives out suddenly. She is constantly saying to herself "I can do all things" but forgets to add "through Christ who strengtheneth me" and so she is always beginning tasks which she never finishes. She is in a constant rush, and not until she hears the voice of him who alone can stay the raging waves of human passion will she grow restful or useful. And how about Mrs. Fretful? Well, she also sorely needs peace. Not the false peace of indifference, but that calm, steadfast, patient, enduring peace which grows out of love and unselfish thought for others.

"In quietness and confidence shall thy strength be." With God's own peace enfolded and filling us, none of us can ever feel fretful, worried or discouraged. How well the Great Physician knew the human heart when he gave to the world of unrest his precious legacy "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." This is the cure for all the restlessness of the human heart.

ON BETTING.

By the Rev. Charles Kingsley.

The following letter was written by the Rev. Chas. Kingsley to his son: "My dearest boy—There is a matter which gave me much uneasiness when you mentioned it. You said you had put into some lottery for the Derby races, and had hedged to make safe. Now all that is bad, bad—nothing but bad. Of all habits, gambling is the one I hate most and have avoided most. Of all habits it grows most on eager minds. Success and loss alike make it grow. Of all habits, however much civilized men give way to it, it is one of the most intrinsically savage. Historically it has been the chief excitement of the lowest brutes in human form for ages past. Morally it is both unchivalrous and unchristian. It gains money by the lowest and most unjust means, for it takes money out of your neighbor's pocket without giving him anything in return. It tempts you to use what you fancy is your superior knowledge of a horse's merit—or anything else—to your neighbor's harm. If you know better than your neighbor, you are bound to give him your advice. Instead you conceal your knowledge to win from his ignorance; hence come all sorts of concealments, dodges, deceit—I say the devil is the only father of it. I'm sure, moreover, that the headmaster would object seriously to anything like a lottery, betting or gambling. I hope you have not won. I should not be sorry for you to lose. If you have won I shall not congratulate you. If you wish to please me, you will give back to its lawful owners the money you have won. If you are a loser in gross thereby, I will gladly reimburse your losses this time. As you put it, you could not in honor draw back until after the event. Now you can give back your money, saying that you understand that the headmaster and I disapprove of such things, and so gain a great moral influence. Recollect always that the stock argument is worthless. It is this: 'My friend would win from me if he could, therefore I have an equal right to win from him.' Nonsense. The same argument would prove that I have a right to maim or kill a man if only I give him leave to maim or kill me if he can and will. I have spoken my mind once and for all on a matter on which I have held the same views for more than twenty years."

Queer Customs Among Passengers.

In cold weather all Japanese travelers carry rugs, for the cars are heated merely by long steel cylinders filled with hot water and laid on the floor. Spreading his rug out on the seat—a Japanese never sits on anything not perfectly clean—the passenger shakes off his geta or wooden clogs, and curls his feet beneath him. The next move is a smoke, in which both men and women indulge. A tiny pipe is commonly used, which never contains more than a wisp of tobacco the size of a pea and affords not more than one or two puffs to the smoker. The ashes are then knocked out on the floor and another wisp stuffed in and lighted from the smoldering ashes just rejected. At every station there are vendors of the little mandarin oranges. Every passenger buys a dozen or more and eats them in a short time, throwing the skins about the floor. Boys pass by with tea in tiny earthen pots, a cup placed over the top. The price is three sen (a cent and a half). The teapot is left in the car. The Japanese throw all sorts of refuse about and the car soon presents a very untidy appearance, or would do so if it were not for the porters, who come in at odd stations and clean up.—New York Sun.

WORTHY OF ITS CROWN.

The editor of the Kansas State Advertiser, of Wichita, Kan., has this to say about Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer: "We take this opportunity of paying a tribute of well-deserved praise to a remedy which owing to its superior excellent, has gained a wide fame and brought relief and cure to thousands of suffering people. In Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, prepared by Dr. Peter Fahrney, of Chicago, Ill., we have found a remedy, which, as a nerve tonic and health-giver, is unrivaled. It is very seldom that we recommend a proprietary medicine, but, as this remedy seems to stand alone of its kind, we make an exception from our rule and recommend it to our readers in the highest terms. The Blood Vitalizer is our best friend, and we can but acknowledge its valuable services."

Unlike other medicines, Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not to be had in drug stores. It is placed with the people direct, through special agents, by the proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 S. Hoyne avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect; neat, artistic and durable. It contains 102 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

BETHANY BEACH

The new summer resort for the Disciples of Christ is on the Atlantic Coast, near Ocean View, Delaware, being

- 10 miles south of Rehoboth, Del.,
- 27 miles southwest of Cape May, N. J.
- 90 miles east of Baltimore, Md.
- 130 miles south of Philadelphia, Pa.

A charming sight it is to behold the merry bathers leap o'er the white crested waves whilst in the distance can be seen the great ocean grey-hounds racing from the frozen north to the sunny south.

1. Bethany Beach has a bathing ground that cannot be surpassed. The sandy bottom is like a velvet carpet. No holes to terrify the timid bather. No treacherous undertow to swallow the unwary.
2. Bethany Beach is 1½ miles from Indian Bay, a magnificent stretch of placid water. Here will be a paradise for lovers of boating and fishing.
3. Bethany Beach will also have a park in which will be courts for lawn tennis, croquet, base ball and other games, whilst last, but by no means least, will be swings and merry-go-rounds. A great resort it will be for the young.
4. Bethany Beach will have no saloons or gambling hells.

The Assembly Grounds

will be within 300 yards of the ocean. In the auditorium will be con-

COMPLETION OF THE GREATEST NEW TESTAMENT COMMENTARY

The Biblical Illustrator

Edited by REV. JOSEPH S. EXELL, M. A.
Joint Editor of the "Pulpit Commentary."

We have prepared for your consideration a most remarkable offer. Years of patient and careful study and research, by a small army of students under the veteran editor, Rev. Joseph S. Exell, M. A., whose "Pulpit Commentary" is second only to this work, have been given to the preparation and publication of this Commentary of Commentaries, The Biblical Illustrator. As the volumes appeared one by one the enormous outlay precluded the placing of the price sufficiently low to be within easy reach of all. Notwithstanding this fact, the work is most popular and is the source of much comfort to thousands of busy pastors and workers. As an economizer of time and labor it is without a peer. The New York Observer tells the whole story when it says: "No matter how full his library may be, and how empty his pocket-book, the minister who sees this work will want it."

We have perfected a plan for supplying this set at Half Price, the terms of payment involving an immediate expenditure of

Only Two Dollars

The set will be sent for your examination upon receipt of this nominal sum. Nor need the fact that you already possess some of the volumes in the set debar you from participating in the advantages of this offer.

Full details of the plan are published in a separate booklet showing size and style of page and giving very complete information. This booklet is FREE and will be sent to all applicants. Please fill in blank and forward and complete information will reach you promptly.

BETHANY BEACH

The new summer resort for the Disciples of Christ is on the Atlantic Coast, near Ocean View, Delaware, being

10 miles south of Rehoboth, Del.,

27 miles southwest of Cape May, N. J.

90 miles east of Baltimore, Md.

130 miles south of Philadelphia, Pa.

A charming sight it is to behold the merry bathers leap o'er the white crested waves whilst in the distance can be seen the great ocean grey-hounds racing from the frozen north to the sunny south.

1. Bethany Beach has a bathing ground that cannot be surpassed. The sandy bottom is like a velvet carpet. No holes to terrify the timid bather. No treacherous undertow to swallow the unwary.

2. Bethany Beach is 1½ miles from Indian Bay, a magnificent stretch of placid water. Here will be a paradise for lovers of boating and fishing.

3. Bethany Beach will also have a park in which will be courts for lawn tennis, croquet, base ball and other games, whilst last, but by no means least, will be swings and merry-go-rounds. A great resort it will be for the young.

4. Bethany Beach will have no saloons or gambling hells.

The Assembly Grounds

will be within 300 yards of the ocean. In the auditorium will be conducted the great revival meetings, lectures, musicals and concerts. The season will begin about July 4th, the program will be announced later—Rev. F. D. Power, of Washington, D. C., is chairman of the program committee.

Read the following extracts from testimonials from people you know:

"I was reared within four miles of the place and feel that I know nearly every foot of land. I know of no location on the coast better fitted for a summer resort and I have visited a number of popular resorts. There are no swampy places near the site."—Rev. G. B. Townsend, Troy, N. Y.

"It will be an ideal spot for rest." * * * It is the purpose of the management to make it worthy of the patronage of our brotherhood.—Rev. F. D. Power, Washington, D. C.

"I have bathed many times in its surf and doubt that a more desirable selection of a point for a summer resort could be made."—Rev. W. J. Wright, Washington, D. C.

"A delightful place."—Mrs. L. Wheeler, Baltimore, Md.

Lots are selling rapidly, 150 sold within 3 months. They are exceedingly low in prices which average $100. Terms of payment very easy. You ought to own one. By thus doing you secure best terms and choice location. To those who purchase NOW, the following offer is made regarding payment:—25 per cent down, balance within a year. No restrictions made as to time you must build. Think of purchasing a lot at a seaside resort for $100 or $150! Lots similar to these at Atlantic City sold ten years ago for $100. They cannot be purchased today for less than $2,000.

Bethany Beach will grow—mark this statement.

Railroad rates to Bethany Beach are about the same as to Atlantic City. For further information write either

EDITORIAL.

FOR JUST ONE DAY.

If I could live to God for just one day,
One blessed day, from rosy dawn of light
Till purple twilight deepened into night,—
A day of faith unfaltering, trust complete,
Of love unfeigned and perfect charity,
Of hope undimmed, of courage past dismay,
Of heavenly peace, patient humility,
No hint of duty to constrain my feet,
No dream of ease to lull to listlessness,
Within my heart no root of bitterness,
No yielding to temptation's subtle sway,— Methink, in that one day would so expand
My soul to meet such holy, high demand
That never, never more could hold me bound
This shrivelling husk of self that wraps me round.
So might I henceforth live to God alway.

THE BIBLE OF JESUS.

ONE who has any fair acquaintance with the Christian religion will doubt for a moment the importance of the Old Testament in its relation to the faith of the church, nor can question the influence of a man's views of the Old Testament upon his conception of Christianity as a whole. Various sentiments regarding this portion of the Bible have prevailed in the church at different times. There has been in certain instances the tendency to regard it as the most essential part of the divine revelation. In widely scattered communities, again, the Old Testament has been considered of equal importance with the New, and texts have been chosen from it to support doctrinal positions with the same freedom which characterized the examination of the New Testament. On the other hand, there has been at certain times and in certain sections of the church the disposition to regard the Old Testament as of small value, because it has been superseded by the New, and to look upon it as a collection of works interesting only as related somewhat remotely to the beginnings of our holy faith.

Value of the Old Testament.

It is true that the Old Testament is not of equal authority with the New, as binding upon Christians and constituting the source of information regarding our Lord or the authoritative statement of truth for Christian guidance. Nevertheless, any disposition to overlook the rich treasures of Old Testament literature can only be attended with a distinct loss of vision and of power on the part of one who thus confines his view exclusively to New Testament fields. And when the influence of the older book upon the church is considered, this fact becomes more prominent.

The Old Testament was the Bible of Jesus and the apostles. It was the only Scripture they knew, and our Lord is the sufficient example of the immeasurable help that came from a knowledge of this great storehouse of divine revelation. His acquaintance with such books as Deuteronomy, the Psalms, Isaiah, Hosea and Daniel is constantly evidenced in the pages of the Gospels. That he found in it not only satisfaction but support and consolation, as it portrayed the struggles and triumphs of that line of predecessors who had prepared for his ministry, there can be no question. Similar was its value to the writers of the New Testament. They quote it not only as fortifying their statements concerning the Gospel, but as the legitimate ground of appeal in all matters requiring an authority which they recognize as greater than their own. In the history of the church the same fact is patent. Some of the greatest theses in Christian literature have rested upon the imperishable foundations of Old Testament truth. Dante's "De Monarchia," Rutherford's "Rex Lex" and Milton's "Defense of the English People" appealed to the Old Testament for confirmation. The Puritans, both of England and New England, lived in the atmosphere of the old Scriptures, and took far more frequently their great watchwords from the Old than the New Testament. A book that has had such influence in the world needs constant study, and no greater mistake could be made than to neglect it as unworthy of careful consideration, or, on the other side, to use it in such fashion as to misinterpret its great purposes and promises and make it a taskmaster where it should be an inspiration.

Sources of Misconceptions.

Such reflections naturally grow out of reflections upon recent movements in Old Testament study, which have tended to make these Scriptures assume new aspects and afford new values for Christian teaching. There is no doubt that in former days the use of the Old Testament for pulpit material was lessened in no small degree by the growing feeling that its ideals were unsuited to a Christian age, and that the only employment that could be given it was likely to lead rather to misinterpretation of Christ than to a proper understanding of his spirit and aims. Such a misconception was indeed inseparable from the traditional views regarding the Old Testament. While it was understood that the characters of the eminent men of that former time were to be regarded as models for our imitation the minister of the Gospel or the Sunday school teacher who had the least moral sensitiveness could but find himself embarrassed by the necessity of justifying conduct so inconsistent with the ideals of our Lord. Moral difficulties which seemed even to implicate the divine character were found in the Old Testament in such numbers as to make its study perplexing and its use for hortatory purposes impossible. And in this field lay the chief difficulties of the Christian apologist. He was compelled evermore to meet the sneering assaults upon the Scriptures by those who, finding on the one side that the Old Testament contained moral blemishes and frankly stated imperfections of human character, and on the other that the church, under the spell of the old orthodoxy, was disposed to defend these as morally justifiable and praiseworthy, made strong their weapons of attack and placed the defender of the faith in the position of one who had either to give weak excuses or fall back upon an assumed authority which denied all right of question. It was this state of affairs which drove many men into frank disavowal of any belief in the inspiration of the Bible. There were so many points of contact between it and the merely ethnic literatures urged in support of other religions that a distinction seemed well-nigh impossible if the Old Testament was to be included in the investigation. It was this partial and intemperate view of things which led Mr. Goldwin Smith to his crass and wooden judgment, when he pronounced the Old Testament "the millstone about the neck of Christianity."

Benefit of Criticism.

It has been the splendid task of modern Biblical criticism to remove the greatest of the difficulties which have been encountered in the use of the Old Testament by revealing clearly the progressive character of the Jewish religion as rising from lower to higher moral levels, at every stage of which the service of men more or less guided by the divine Spirit, as their natures rendered that guidance possible, prepared the way for the coming of the full truth of our Lord himself. Modern criticism has taught us to distinguish clearly between fact and figure in Old Testament literature; to see that many expressions are to be taken as the forms of speech common in a time when anthropomorphic statements of truth were the only means of impressing men with the actual work of God. In this disclosure it has taught us the freedom and the privilege of opening every question of date and authorship; and the joy of finding ourselves at liberty to use with unreserved enthusiasm all apparatus by means of which the Old Testament is made a living reality, rather than an ancient and mysterious literature, of equal value in all sections, and equally binding upon the conscience.

Perhaps the most memorable service of criticism is to show that even the prophets were partial teachers of truth, not always clearly distinguishing between their own views and those of the divine mind. To the traditionalist this statement seems full of danger, and the opening of the door to all possible diminution of value in prophetic teachings, and it is easy for such a questioner to say, "Then wherein lay the value of any prophetic message?" Fortunately the source of appeal is not the prophet, but the Christ. There is no word that needs to be sounded so insistently in these days as that of the sufficiency and finality of the message and teachings of Jesus as the standard of truth and the source to which appeal is to be made. This is the significance of the transfiguration scene and its voice from the cloud. Moses had spoken, and Elijah had spoken; and with them a multitude of holy men moved by the divine Spirit; but these had been partial and fallible teachers, and now it was the divine announcement that their messages were no longer to be heard, since the final prophet and Savior had appeared.

Investigation Confirms Faith.

With all the searching investigation which has fixed its attention upon the Old Testament in these last years has come to the careful student an immeasurable confirmation of his faith in the progressive revelation of God to man, and increasing appreciation of the essential teachings of the great prophets as their effect is traced step by step through that preparatory history which led to the coming of Christ. It is no doubt true that many people who have heard something of criticism without understanding its purpose or its results have been frightened, and in some cases, perhaps, have been led to abandon faith in the Scriptures. If such cases appear, and it is believed they would be found to be very few in number, it must be remembered that even these hard experiences are the price which the church must be willing to pay in order that it may gain the larger truth and the firmer ground. On the other hand, the multitude of men and women whose faith has been strengthened, whose joy in Biblical study has been multiplied, and whose enthusiasm in Christian service has been increased by a just conception of the real method and purpose of holy Scripture, cannot be estimated. Only those who are in positions where they touch the lives of young men and women passing through the moments of crisis, compelled by the attempt to adjust themselves to the popular views concerning the Old Testament, can know the immeasurable relief that comes when its difficulties are seen to melt away in a just appreciation of the imperishable value of its true revelation of the character of God. The uplift of Christian faith that has come with modern criticism is simply beyond computation, and every teacher and pastor who deals frankly and tenderly with this type of mind knows this to be the fact. Hundreds of men today are preaching the Old Testament with a new joy because they have found in it, not indeed the final teaching of the Scriptures, but elements of greatest value as aids to faith. Its characters live as never before. The figures on Sargent's great panels are not mere dim cloudland outlines, but living men with flesh and blood. The Old Testament becomes the embodiment of divine truth in process of fuller expression, and is seen to be the work of holy men of old who spake as they were impelled, pushed on, by the divine Spirit. They did not see the whole truth. If they had the fuller revelation of Christ would have been unnecessary. But they saw as beholding things that were afar, and left their messages for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the earth are come. One is always reluctant to see doubt awakened in the minds of any by the modern process of Biblical study, yet when he considers the immeasurable uplift to faith and the multitude of those whose doubts have been set at rest by this very means, he feels that the gain is all on the side of the enlarging truth. Dr. George Adam Smith has recently said: "Any one who has had practical dealings with the doubt and religious bewilderment of his day can testify that those who have been led into unbelief by modern criticism are not for one moment to be compared in number with those who have fallen from faith over the edge of the opposite extreme. The dogma of a verbal inspiration, the dogma of the equal divinity of all parts of Scripture, the refusal to see any development, either from the ethnic religions to the religion of Israel, or any development within the religion of Israel itself—all these have had a disastrous influence upon the religious thought and action of our time. They have not only produced confusion in some of the holiest minds among us. They have not only paralyzed the intellects of those who have adopted them, as every mechanical conception of the truth must do, but they have been the provocation to immense numbers of honest hearts to cast off religion altogether!"

It is the satisfaction of the preacher and the Christian teacher to know that the foundation of divine truth stands assured, not only in spite of critical theories, but even by reason of the very scholarship which has so patiently undertaken afresh the task of investigation.

THE GODDESS OF CHANCE.

ALL street has recently presented us with the strange spectacle of twentieth century American citizens worshipping the ancient goddess Fortuna. The picture is full of humiliation for us all. We recall the words of an ancient prophet of Israel addressing those who, in his day, were "preparing a table for Luck and filling up mixed wine to Fortune," and we wonder what he would have said about the wild scenes in a modern stock exchange. When the wine of gambling has mounted to the brain and Luck has caught their reason away, blinding their conscience, these worshipers of Chance are in a frenzy like that of ancient idolaters at the altar and in the celebrations of their vile gods.

That there is and must be a certain amount of chance in all the activities of a complicated commercial system is obvious. We take our lives in our hands even as we cross a Chicago street! But the sensible citizen looks both ways in crossing, and seeks by his own care to reduce the danger to a minimum. Just so does the conscientious and earnest man try to reduce—if he could he would eliminate—the risks in his business undertakings. It is the work of our life to cast out chance, to control the winds and seas, to regulate railroad signalling, to master the laws of the seasons, in order that we may be more sure of our results.

Commercial Speculation.

The business gambler is made after another spirit. Like the man who stakes his money at a roulette table, this man goes into the pit to feed his appetite for one of the most thrilling excitements of life. He speculates. That is, he stakes his money upon the chances of fluctuation in the market price of commodities or shares. He produces nothing except disorder and excitement. It is, indeed, said that speculation helps to regulate prices, but that assertion, though boldly made, has never been substantiated in a scientific manner. And it is obviously untrue, when we are considering such events as the "Northern Pacific" craze in New York, or the dreadfully disastrous mania over "Kaffirs" in London in 1895. The men who live for, and who live or die by, speculation are simply living, or dying, on "chances." This is the most intoxicating, the most selfish, the most deadly kind of life which a man can pursue. In certain countries the commercial conditions are such as to make the worship of Chance very alluring; and America is one of these. Here it is possible by the discovery of oil wells or gold mines or in other chance ways to become a millionaire in a day. The stories of sudden wealth are trumpeted over the country in the newspapers and warm the blood of myriads of young, ambitious men. In their hearts the burning wish becomes a mighty temptation to become rich suddenly, without prolonged and solid labor, without work done for society.

Main Roots of Commercial Gambling.

Now, this wish to become rich rapidly, without solid and valuable service, is one of the main roots of commercial gambling. It is the heart's worship of the heathen goddess of Chance, instead of the living God, and leads naturally to the craze of mere speculation.

(1) This wish is unhealthy for personal character; because it creates restless dreams, weakens the will, distorts the whole moral vision of the man in whose heart it reigns.

(2) This wish is socially immoral; for it means that the man who has it desires to command the labors of his fellowmen, far beyond any return of true service which he has rendered. It is implicit theft.

(3) This wish is ungodly. The Bible has no room for chance, because it is so full of God. "The lot is cast into the lap," it says; "but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." The man who yearns for a lucky chance to make him rich is, while in the midst of that yearning, far from a living faith in the living Father. To turn again to God with love and trust is to awake from his fascinating dream, is to crush his passionate craving.

Labor for True Fortune.

Christ said: "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." Wherefore let the church of Christ bid its men in the very name of God, to cease from attending the altars of Fortuna, and to worship in their very hearts the Father of all, the only giver of true fortune, which is peace and a pure heart, in honest work.

THE VISITOR.

OUR late poet laureate, in giving to the world his "Dream of Fair Women," recalls the fact that an earlier bard,

"Dan Chaucer, the first warbler, whose sweet breath

Prelude those melodious bursts that fill
The spacious times of great Elizabeth With sounds that echo still," had written "The Legend of Good Women" long ago. One begins to feel in these days that a third cycle should be written, "The Story of Brave Women," for the materials begin to grow abundant for such a narrative, and those materials lie most thickly in the field of missionary labors. The lives of saintly women, who made New Testament story bright with their presence, have been familiar for centuries to the thought of the church. The Old Testament, with its splendid names of Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, Huldah, Ruth, Esther, to be followed presently by Judith and the heroines of the Maccabean days, pales into second place in the light of the splendors that gather round the Marys of the New Testament, the Mother of Jesus, Mary of Magdala, Mary of Bethany, Mary, mother of John Mark, and the long list, including Martha, Dorcas, Lois, Eunice of Lystra, Lydia of Philippi, Priscilla of Corinth, Phoebe of Cenchraea, Tryphaena, and Tryphosa of Ephesus, Persis the Beloved, the unnamed mother of Rufus; Julia, the sister of Nereus; the four daughters of Philip the Evangelist, and many another who, although unwritten, played the part of heroines in the story of the advancing faith. Not less alluring are those recitals of early missionary heroism, which link the names of women with those of men in the conquests of Europe for Christ.

"As unto the bow the cord is,
So unto the man is woman."

Bridget of Kildare will be known wherever the name of St. Patrick is revered. Hilda at Whitby is the friend and helper of Columba, and Walpurga stands by the side of Boniface as almost equally the messenger of good to the German people. And what shall one say of the women whose names have become household words wherever missionary enterprises are known? Mary Moffett and Fidelia Fisk, the wives of Judson, Mary Reed and many more, are jewels that shine with increasing luster as their labors are known by the world. The tasks which they have accomplished in penetrating places to which men could not go have made possible the opening of hitherto inaccessible regions of darkness to the advent of Gospel light.

Modern Missionary Heroism.

Missionary heroism does not lie in the past alone. We are thrilled in these days with fresh recitals which tell us that the earlier generations have labored, and that the women of today are entering into their labors, not only as reapers where they have sown, but as sowers where others are yet to reap.

The Visitor had only just laid down the book giving the story of Irene Petrie, as told by her sister, Mrs. Carus-Wilson, giving the recital of only forty-five months of missionary labor which ensued between her departure from England in October, 1893, and her death in the region of Cashmere, to which she had given her life, when he had placed on his table another book, the story not of a life early cut off, but of one which, through heroisms most unique in their character, has been preserved to enter upon still wider ministries in the far fields of the world. Irene Petrie died just at the threshold of the missionary career that promised abundant results and unending blessings for the field she had chosen. Like David Brainerd, who died at the age of thirty; Henry Martin, who was but thirty-two; Keith Falconer, thirty-one, and McKay, who reached only the opening of his fourth decade; George Pilkington, dying at thirty-three; Harold Scofield, at thirty-two; Henry Watson Fox, at thirty-one; William Freemantle, at twenty-nine and Graham Wilmot, at twenty-seven, she seemed only to have begun a brilliant and beneficent career.

Mrs. Susie Carson Rijnhart, whose book, "With the Thibetans in Tent and Temple," has just been issued from the Revell Press, is the survivor of a tragic missionary experience in a land hitherto almost unknown and which has proved inaccessible to most missionary efforts made in its behalf; and she abides to tell the story of her wonderful journey into the interior of this forbidding country, and to assure us that in spite of all she has suffered she proposes to return to complete the task which lies as yet incomplete because of the disasters which came upon her in that first memorable attempt.

Story of an Unknown Country.

Our knowledge of Thibet is but slight, because, for the most part, it has been considered an inaccessible country, whose people are jealous of intrusion from without, and quick to resent any efforts to plant either the Gospel or our modern ideas on that soil. Travelers now and then have penetrated this country, some of whom have perished mysteriously, and others have returned to tell something of the land. Of these, perhaps the most familiar names are those of Mr. W. W. Rockwell, an American traveler; Mm. Huc and Gabet, who made their journey something more than a half century ago, and Dr. Sven Hedin, who, as late as 1897, made a journey of exploration through this region, meeting the Rijnharts at their own home in Tankar. For all this, however, the country may be said to be unknown, and any attempt to penetrate it in despite of the opposition of the natives and their devotion to their customs and religion, may be regarded either as an act of the greatest heroism or as, perhaps, lacking little of sheer madness. Mrs. Rijnhart's book is the recital of the story of one such effort made by her husband and herself, accompanied by a single companion, Mr. William Neil Ferguson. Mr. and Mrs. Rijnhart were members of the Church of the Disciples of Christ, having united with this people in Tacoma prior to their journey. Mr. Rijnhart had visited the country previously, and had lived for ten months in 1892 at Lucar, making the acquaintance of the lamas, or priests, of that district, whose kindness afterward enabled him to carry forward his work on the second journey. It was in the autumn of 1894 that the party left the United States, and, reaching Shanghai, started on the long journey into Thibet. Only a reading of the book can convey an impression of the experiences through which they passed on the journey, which grew more difficult as they proceeded. We have become somewhat accustomed to the narratives of travel in regions where roads are totally uncared for, and where the so-called conveniences of travel are of the roughest sort. The narrative gives an account of experiences at Kumbum during the great Mohammedan insurrection, and the narrow escapes from death incident to such times, together with the growing friendship of the lamas in the sacred school or temple at that place, which proved of such service to the missionaries. But the real interest of the narrative begins with the journey farther inland, undertaken by Mr. and Mrs. Rijnhart and their little boy, when they started to find a point closer to the city of Lhasa, the center of all Thibetan religion and politics, and guarded with boundless jealousy by the natives from all intrusion. No foreigner is even permitted to come within sight of the towers of this sacred place. However, the journey was begun under favorable auspices, and it was not until they had penetrated too far to return that the appalling character of the undertaking made itself apparent. Their guides forsook them, their beasts of burden gave out or were stolen, the little boy, nervous and of delicate constitution, was unable to endure the hardships of the high altitudes and the cold, and, in spite of all the tenderness of parental care, died one day in a lonely district, where they were compelled to give him burial in such rude fashion as their belongings afforded. Reduced presently to almost total isolation by the departure of the last remaining guide, with equipment diminishing and surrounded by hostile tribes of roving natives, the climax of the tragedy was reached when, in the midst of bitter cold, Mr. Rijnhart was compelled to leave his wife and go in search of assistance. His departure toward the camp of a group of nomads who had been seen in the distance is graphically described; but that was the last she ever saw of him. The next two days of growing hopelessness and despair can better be imagined than described. Even when she had finally concluded it was impossible to hope longer, she was only sustained by the thought of carrying forward the task left thus unaccomplished, and through dangers that would have appalled most men she, a solitary white woman, many hundreds of miles from even the comparative civilization of China, was compelled to make her way, under the guidance of evil-minded men, who would at a moment's notice have murdered her for the little silver she carried, had she not, with sleepless vigilance, guarded herself with the weapons happily saved from the loss of almost everything with which the little party started.

A Personal Interview.

The Visitor had, a few weeks since, the privilege of meeting Mrs. Rijnhart at the home of friends, and conversing with her regarding the experiences of this missionary attempt. But the reading of the book was a revelation, as it is sure to be to all who give themselves the privilege of its perusal. Perhaps the most interesting fact with regard to Dr. Rijnhart is her firm determination to return to Thibet and take up the task which she now feels has fallen solely upon her as the survivor of the ill-fated attempt of three years ago. The Visitor is glad to learn, even as he writes, that Mrs. Rijnhart is likely to be sent, in company with suitable companions, to undertake once more the work cut short in earlier days. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society is now favorably considering the enterprise. It is this spirit which makes a heroine—to count not one's life dear, but that one may finish his task and accomplish the purpose which he believes God has given him. By the side of "The Legend of Good Women" and "The Dream of Fair Women" needs to be set "The Story of Brave Women," and in this list the name of Dr. Susie Rijnhart will not be wanting.

FOUNDATION OF SUCCESS.

ONE who watches the slow progress by which the preparations are made for one of the great buildings in Chicago will be impressed with the necessity and value of quiet work in preparing for the superstructure of human character in the adequate making of a life. The men who are putting in foundations for the new Marshall Field building labor in small shafts ninety feet below the street levels and build pillars of concrete on which the structure is to rest. If one could see the entire building, foundation and all, he would see a colossal fabric whose immense height is almost equaled by the depth to which its foundations reach; yet all this preparatory work is unseen and scarcely reckoned with by the observer of the finished product.

Similar is the impression made by a great work of art, a book or a discovery in science. It seems like a sudden flash of genius, whereas perhaps years of silent labor have prepared the way for its accomplishment. People who look upon one of Mr. Sargent's canvases marvel at his wonderful skill in portraying character, but fail to reflect that thirty years of patient sketching lie behind that canvas. Those who read of the discovery of a new planet by some astronomer think of the good fortune which fell upon that solitary observer in the lone fields of night; but they fail to remember that many years of patient scanning of the heavens have been the prelude to this one flashing moment of success. The discovery of a new method of applying the storage battery system of electricity brings fresh prominence to the name of Mr. Edison, and it looks like a sudden piece of good fortune. But for the past ten years he has been working almost night and day to accomplish this very end, and every step of his progress has been the result of mathematical approaches.

Thus character ever builds itself grade by grade, its issues perhaps appearing only after length of days, but all the silent work of preparation is the appropriate preface to the results with which alone the world cares to concern itself. The man who is unwilling to pay the price of the preparation is not likely to be rewarded by the applause that awaits the consummation.

The work which we count so hard to do.
He makes it easy, for he works, too;
The days that are long to live are his,
A bit of his bright eternities,
And close to our need, his helping is.

—Susan Coolidge.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Jealousy of the Sultan.

The Turkish censor refused to allow Dr. Clarke's Outlines of Theology to go into Turkey because it contained reference to the kingship of Christ. He is evidently afraid that Christ, whom the Christians worship as king, is in some way a rival of the Sultan.

The Supreme Test.

The supreme Christian test is unwavering obedience to Christ. "Ye are my friends if you do whatsoever I command you," says the Master. But while we yield unquestioning obedience to the Lord we will not impose our personal convictions upon others. Our private judgment is to be always respected. Nothing but Christ's word is absolute. The door of the church is to be wide as his love and narrow as his law.

Destructive Criticism.

What a heartless business is that of the destructive critic, who takes from people the very things that are the source of comfort and hope, without putting anything in their place! It has well been said "To build up should ever be the end in view and criticism should not stop with undermining structures which furnish more or less comfortable shelter to those who are homeless without them."

Hazing.

It is satisfactory to know that the law passed at the last session of congress against hazing in our military schools is not to remain a dead letter, but is to be unflinchingly enforced. The eleven cadets who mutinied against Colonel Mills, superintendent of the academy of the West Point, are to be either suspended or dismissed. Hazing is a barbarous custom and ought to be unrelentingly stamped out.

Hades vs. Hell.

The action of the quadrennial conference of the United Brethren church substituting the word "hades" for the word "hell" in the Apostle's Creed, is significant. This action has been characterized as "a concession to the refinement of etymology or to the feeling of that weak-kneed party whose teeth chatter every time the preacher points to a lurid picture of the inferno." It is rather a laudable effort to be fair to the meaning of the original. Nothing is finally lost by accuracy and honesty.

Marriage of Dr. Herron.

Dr. Herron, after allowing himself to be expelled from the Grinnell Congregational Association without protest, has married Miss Carrie Rand, the young woman for whom he had abandoned his wife and children. Few careers have been more full of dramatic element than that of Dr. Herron. One would think that there could be no other sensations in reserve, but there is no telling. Dr. Herron is nothing if not explosive and spectacular. The public has heard enough, and more than enough, about him of late, and he could not do a wearied and disgusted public no greater service than to pass into a life of long oblivion.

Pulpit Sensationalism.

Bishop Leonard of Ohio, in his annual address to the clergy at the opening of the convention of the Episcopal diocese at Cleveland, had some strong and wise words to say against pulpit sensationalism. He maintained that the world of busy toilers and tired-out men and women, after six days of labor in merchandise, want on the Lord's day instruction, guidance and inspiration. They do not desire politics, civic questions, social themes and ethical theories brought to them

Sundays by men who know little of what they are talking. They want Christ for the feeding of their souls. They want religion and not rubbish. They want the helpful instruction of the perfect man, Jesus Christ, for spiritual uplifting. The bishop is right. The people need and want the comfort and inspiration of religion. They will not be caught with chaff. The preacher who deals out the bread of life will find eager souls awaiting his ministry.

Death of John R. Tanner.

The news of the sudden death of John R. Tanner, the former governor of Illinois, comes as a shock. Few men have of late been so prominently before the public eye in the northwest as ex-Governor Tanner. However much he might be disliked as a political factor, he could not be ignored. He was a man of undoubted vigor and resourcefulness, and by sheer strength of nature he virtually became the political dictator of his party in the state. Unscrupulous in his methods and self-seeking in his aims, he leaves behind him a memory the opposite of fragrant. His life is a beacon light, rather than a guiding light.

Jubilee of Y. M. C. A.

The anniversary exercises in connection with the jubilee of the American branch of the Y. M. C. A. will take place in Boston June 11-16. About two thousand delegates are expected to be present. An interesting event will be the unveiling of the commemorative tablet in the old South Church meeting house, where the first American society was organized in 1851. The International committee is making every effort to have the meetings worthy of the occasion. Several prominent speakers have promised to be present, among them Bishop Potter of New York and Bishop Maurice S. Baldwin of Montreal. There will be a large delegation from abroad and almost all the European countries will send delegates.

Over-Rigid Literalism.

Great confusion of thought often arises from not distinguishing between what is important and what is vital in the teachings of Scripture. All parts of the Bible are important, but all parts are not vital. The loss of some parts would be something like the loss of a finger, an arm or a leg; the loss of other parts would be like the loss of the heart or the lungs. If certain portions were taken out of the Bible, Christianity would survive; if other parts were eliminated, it would die. Such truths as the deity of Christ, his incarnation, his vicarious sacrifice and his resurrection constitute the very essence of revelation. They form the living core of Christian thought, the foundation of the Christian system itself. They are essential to Christianity, essential to its very existence. Take them away and Christianity has perished!

Opening of Buffalo Exposition.

The Buffalo exposition is opening with splendid promise of gratifying results to commerce and the artistic and useful professions. Each of the great expositions has been unique. It is ungracious even to compare them one with another. The visitor who has seen the expositions at Chicago and Paris may be tempted to form hasty opinions regarding the Buffalo exposition, but such will be found to be unjustified in the light of the special task which the exposition managers have set themselves. It will be freely conceded that the electrical department at Buffalo is superior to anything ever before beheld, and the service rendered by this gathering of fabrics and forces near the great natural storehouse of power, Niagara Falls, cannot but prove instructive and inspiring to the tens of thousands who will attend during the summer.

Ohio's Anti-Lynching Law.

In 1896 the Ohio legislature passed a law making the counties responsible for damage done to persons as well as property by mobs. The law has just been tested and upheld by a decision of the Supreme Court last week. A negro at Urbana was lynched about a year ago for the usual crime. His heirs brought suit against the county and recovered $5,000 damages. It seems that a fairer law could scarcely be made. At the same time it will contribute not a jot or a tittle to the abatement of the lynching evil. Abolish the saloon, abolish vagrancy, abolish technicalities and medieval methods and long-drawn-out processes in court, abolish lawyers who have more cases than conscience, and abolish the animal nature of the negro and the bloodthirstiness of certain types of white people to Christian education, and the lynching crime will be abolished.

A Bloody Strike.

The strike of the street car operators in Albany, N. Y., has been one of the fiercest for a long time. The militia—ever accessible to corporations and always appealed to quickly—was called out and in firing into a crowd killed two of the citizens who were standing in the doors at their business places. The chief cause of the strike was the refusal of the street car company to discharge some non-union men in their employ. The company also refused to recognize the union. A strike in the heart of a civilized community is an anomaly and a disgrace. Rather than call out military companies to shoot men to death and foment a bitterness that may live for years, how much easier to compel both parties to go before a tribunal of arbitration. The workmen are always willing to arbitrate, the companies are never. It is likely because the quarrel of the latter is usually, if not always, unjust.

A Royal Gift.

Carnegie's munificent gift of $10,000,000 to the four Scotch universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and St. Andrews, which is to be applied to paying expenses of Scotch students of good character and ability, is not regarded by some of the Scottish people as an unmixed blessing. A hard tussle with adverse circumstances on the part of students who have come from the ranks of the peasantry has developed the firmest muscle; and it is feared that if the conditions of student life are made too easy, some of the old-time virility which has characterized the Scotch people, may disappear. The Scotch people themselves are more than willing to take the risk, and are thankful for the gift, which is characterized as "diseconcerting for its very munificence." Nothing is more significant than the change wrought in public sentiment concerning this matter in the past decade. The old type of selfish millionaires is becoming impossible as the responsibilities of wealth are forced upon public attention. The millionaire of the Vanderbilt, Jay Gould and Astor type is giving way to the philanthropic man of millions, and this is a stepping stone to the better time approaching when there shall be less disposition to gather millions, and indeed fewer opportunities, with a larger desire to make all one's possessions minister to the public good.

CHICAGO NOTES.

Life in the city is intense. The shadows are deep just because the light is bright. Nowhere are lines more clearly drawn, and nowhere are the forces of good and evil more pronounced and more aggressive than in Chicago.

The most notable thing in this pushing, driving, mercantile center is the university. Not only is the University of Chicago becoming a seat of learning for specialized scholarship, but it is becoming more and more a source of light and leading for the people. The announcements which have been made for the summer quarter contain a list of open lectures of exceptional interest. The first course on the Crane foundation will be given by Professor Maxime Kovalevsky upon "Russian Institutions." The lectures upon Biblical literature and theology will be of practical value. President Harper will give a course of six lectures on "The Prophetic, Priestly and Wisdom Elements of the Old Testament." Chancellor E. B. Andrews of the University of Nebraska will give twenty lectures upon "Practical Ethics." Dr. Marcus Dods of New College, Edinburgh, will deliver a course of ten lectures on "The Teachings of Paul," Professor Shailer Mathews six on "The Social Teachings of the Apostles," and Professor H. L. Willett two courses of lectures of six each upon "Phases of the Psalter" and "Studies in Apocalyptic Literature."

The Pacific Garden mission, on the corner of Van Buren street and Fourth avenue, is one of the most helpful agencies in the city. The history of this rescue mission, which was founded by Col. George D. Clarke, and has since his death been carried on by his devoted wife, forms one of the most striking chapters in the ever-extending record of "The Acts of the Apostles." The story of what it has done for the reclamation of the abandoned and desperate classes would read like a series of thrilling romances. Scarcely a meeting passes without testimonies being given of a saving change wrought in some heart and of a new purpose being formed in some life. Quite a dramatic incident occurred the other evening, a report of which we cull from one of the daily papers:

"Laying upon the altar a revolver and his kit of burglar tools as evidence of his good faith, William Hill startled the 300 persons who were attending religious services at the Pacific Garden mission, 100 Van Buren street, last night, by confessing that he was a thief, but now desired to turn from evil ways and live a Christian life. The Rev. J. S. Detwiler of St. Paul and Assistant Superintendent Harry Monroe of the mission had been preaching, and the latter had just finished his address when the self-confessed burglar walked to the altar.

"Friends," he said, "I have been cracking safes, robbing stores and picking pockets a good many years for a living. I have served terms in Sing Sing and Joliet. But tonight I am going to end my criminal career and start out on a new life. I was walking along State street tonight when I heard the men speaking from your Gospel wagon. They said something that seemed to touch me. I followed the wagon here and entered with the crowd. The more I heard the more I became convinced that this is the time for me to reform. I want you people to help give me a start in the right direction. I have found it easier to steal than work, but now I want to work for my living, and if you will help me I will work for your mission."

This significant conversion was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The man left at the close of the meeting, first promising Mr. Monroe to return today, when an effort will be made to get him work.

True to his promise, Hill appeared at the office of the Pacific Garden mission today and declared that he had not repented his resolution, but was rather more firmly determined to gain an honest livelihood. Mr. Monroe started out with the new convert at once to see if he could get him some employment."

Chicago is what is called "an open city." All forms of social immorality have free course. One of the most debasing agencies is the Sunday theater. Few people have any idea to what extent this institution is being patronized. The suburban trains are crowded with people who on the Sabbath day are leaving the church for the play house. Dr. J. W. Conley of the First Baptist church, Oak Park, speaking of this growing evil, says:

"Twenty-five years ago Sunday theaters in this country were practically unknown, but today they are in full operation in nearly all our large cities. I bring the following charges against the Sunday theater:

"It robs the actor of his rights. The life of an actor is a hard one, the nervous strain is intense. The Sabbath rest is greatly needed. He has rights and ought to be protected in them. The Sunday theater is a large contributor to the growing corruption of the modern theater. No one can fail to observe the moral decline of the theater. Lovers of the drama are among the foremost to deplore this fact. Scandalous plays and immoral actors are becoming uncommonly popular. I believe that this moral degeneracy is in no small measure the result of violating science and despising the law of God by running Sunday theaters. But I go a step farther and urge that the Sunday theater re-enforces the elements of lawlessness in our cities. It lowers the moral sentiment in a community. It stands in with Sunday saloons and other haunts of vice. It draws crowds of people to the heart of the city and fosters revelry and debauchery."

There are many signs at present of an awakening of civic pride. The creation of a park on the lake front; the enlargement of our libraries; the rapid development of our educational institutions are among the things that give evidence that there is not a total absorption in material interests and pursuits. Dr. H. W. Thomas, speaking recently on "Making the City Beautiful," said:

"Nature lays the foundations of cities; man comes along and builds. On the highway of the earth, at the head of a long chain of lakes, central in a vast continent, Chicago is destined to be the largest city in the world, the financial and commercial center in our country. All this means the presence of millions of human beings, and it is important that we begin to think more of making Chicago a city of homes, not a place to simply stay, but a place to live. Commercial greatness alone is not enough; it should be a means to an end, the greatness of man."

CONTRIBUTED.

If the Lord should come in the morning
As I went about my work,
The little things and the quiet things
That a servant cannot shirk,
Though nobody ever sees them,
And only the dear Lord cares
That they always are done in the light of the sun,
Would he take me unawares?

If my Lord should come at noonday,
The time of the dust and heat,
When the glare is white and the air is still
And the hoof-beats sound in the street;
If my dear Lord came at noonday,
And smiled in my tired eyes,
Would it not be sweet his look to meet?
Would he take me by surprise?

If the Lord came hither at evening,
In the fragrant dew and dusk,
When the world drops off its mantle
Of daylight like a husk,
And flowers in wonderful beauty,
And we fold our hands and rest,
Would his touch of my hand, his low command,
Bring me unhopèd-for zest?

Why do I ask and question?
He is ever coming to me,
Morning and noon and evening,
If I have but eyes to see.
And the daily load grows lighter,
The daily cares grow sweet,
For the Master is near, the Master is here,
I have only to sit at his feet.—British Weekly.

TIMES OF REFRESHING FROM THE PRESENCE OF THE LORD.

By James M. Campbell.

In his sermon in Solomon's porch, Peter drove home the truth that the presence of the Messiah, for which the Jews were looking, would bring blessing only by being spiritually prepared for. To the impenitent and disobedient it would prove "a day of vengeance," to the penitent and obedient it would be a day of favor. "Repent ye, and turn again that your sins may be blotted out so that there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." (Acts 3: 19.) The force of this appeal lies in the fact that what was promised lay within the range of possible experience in the present. The Lord's presence was at hand; it was something that might be enjoyed; hence it was something that was to be prepared for.

The presence of the Lord is conditional upon his coming back. The times of refreshing were to come from the presence of the Christ whom the heaven had received, but not until he was given back. "Repent ye, and turn again that your sins may be blotted out in order that there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and that (as the final end) he may send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restoration of all things." (Acts 3: 19-21.) The first point, then, to be settled is whether or not the heaven which received the Christ has restored him. If he has not returned he is not present, and if he is not present the better times which he was to bring are still in the future. And not only that, but if he is still withdrawn; if the church has been looking for his return throughout the centuries in vain; if he is departing further and further from sight as we get further away from the time of his ascension, his power over men must of necessity be diminishing.

As we have already seen, the whole trend of New Testament teaching conveys the impression that the early Christians were waiting for the speedy revisitation of their Lord. They expected that the heaven which had received him for a brief season would soon open and give him back. They believed that all that hung upon his return was about to be realized. In the general expectancy of the speedy appearing of the Messiah the Jewish people shared. With his coming a happy era was to dawn upon them. From his presence would come times of refreshing or revivification. National prosperity would be revived. New life and strength would be breathed into the nation's withered heart. The dry bones which the prophet saw in the valley of vision would start into life, and would become a conquering host. With times of refreshing would come times of restoration, for these are linked together, or more properly are identical as one. Ancient wrongs would be redressed. The glory of the former days would be restored, and Zion would again become the joy and praise of the whole earth. Now, the object of the apostle is to show that in a far grander sense than they had ever dreamed of the great consummation "whereof God spake by the mouth of his holy prophets which have been since the world began," was about to be realized in Jesus the Christ. And because he was the true Messiah, in him all interest ought to be centered; upon him all hope ought to be fixed; and to him, with glad acclaim and with spiritual preparedness, acknowledgment of his Messianic sovereignty ought to be made.

To what dire straits are those commentators driven who hold that the words before us refer to the return of the Lord at the end of the world. "The apostle," says Hackett, "enforces his exhortation to repent by an appeal to the final coming of Christ, not because he would represent it as near in point of time, but because that event was always near to the feeling and consciousness of the first believers." That is to say, the apostle would have them feel that the Lord was near, he would have them conscious of his nearness, for practical effects; although he himself knew that they were hugging to their hearts a delusive hope. A needless slight upon the apostle's honesty, to say the least of it!

A Short Perspective.

In their survey of the future the early Christians did not take a long perspective. They were too deeply impressed with the things which were near to give much thought to the things that were distant. They did not look forward to the coming of the Lord at the end of the world, so much as to his coming at the end of the age—namely, the Jewish age, which was fast drawing to a close. They looked upon his coming as imminent. And since Pentecost they had begun to have a glimmering sense of the nature of his kingdom. They had begun to look for the quickening of the spiritual life, rather than for the reviving of national prosperity; for a heavenly rule, rather than for a heavenly realm; for the restoration of the world into harmony with the divine order, rather than for the restoration of national glory. They had, in fine, begun to look at the things of Christ from the Christian, rather than from the Jewish, point of view.

And we who live in the new age, upon the threshold of which they stood, will utterly fail to understand its significance, if we do not see that Christ, the quickener and restorer, has come and is now at work. Ever since his return he has entered into new and closer relations with men. From his presence come all the influences which are making for individual and social reconstruction. He is here, bringing a dead world back to life; restoring to the divine unity a world disordered by sin. As the head of a new creation he is bringing earth into everlasting reunion with heaven.

And as due preparation was to be made for the presence of the Lord, which was imminent in apostolic days, due preparation is to be made for his presence, which is imminent in the present day. The question then was, how to prepare for the presence which was near so as to get the greatest possible blessing out of it; the question now is, how to prepare for the presence that has come so as to get the greatest possible blessing out of it. To obtain blessing from any divine approach preparation is needed. The exhortations, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," "Prepare your hearts to seek God," are founded upon an abiding law. Clean hands and submissive spirits are indispensable conditions of spiritual blessing. When the proper connection is made the electric spark flies along the wire; and when the proper conditions are supplied times of refreshing and restoration come from the presence of the Lord.

THE MARTYRS OF CHINA.

By William Remfry Hunt.

The year 1900 will be known in the history of Christian missions as the "martyr year." Never in all the history of missions has there been such sacrifice, such tragic events, such seed-sowing and such heroism. Madagascar and Japan furnish only comparative parallel incidents. Since the "Boxer uprising" there have been no less than ninety-eight British, fifty-six Swedish and thirty-two American citizens martyred in the provinces of Shansi, Manchuria, Chili, Chehkiang and Shantung, making a total of one hundred and thirty-four adults, fifty-two children and a grand total of one hundred and eighty-six persons martyred "for the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus" in the middle kingdom.

These devoted and honored souls were connected with the following societies: China Inland Mission, 78; Christian and Missionary alliance, 36; American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 18; English Baptist Missions, 16; Sheo Yang Mission, 13; American Presbyterian Mission (North), 8; Scandinavian alliance (Mongolian), 5; Swedish Mongolian Mission, 4; Society for Propagation of the Gospel, 3; British and Foreign Bible society, 5; number of the slain, 186. The legacy these beloved coworkers of all who are "workers together with God" have left the church is a precious one. They counted not their lives dear unto themselves. They died for their faith. They overcame by faith. They triumphed in the faith. Such magnificent heroism is the final answer that the age of chivalry and glorious deeds for Christ and his cause is not past. It is the supreme vindication of the Christian's standing today before a wondering world. Via lucis, via crucis is the Christian signpost.

To the native church in China the sacrifice, patience, long-suffering, constancy, trust, resignation and joy with which the missionaries, both men, women and sweet little children, bowed beneath the executioner's axe and fell beneath the Manchu sword and spear, is and will be our inspiration and a witness along the ages yet to be. They "were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection; they had trials of cruel mockings and scourgings; yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned . . . were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered in deserts and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth."

The most pathetic and heart-breaking letters were written by Mrs. Lizzie Atwater just before they were led forth to be slain. The following extracts show with what resignation and courage this family of the Rev. E. R. Atwater, wife and two children, yielded up their lives:

Fenchowfu, July 30, 1900.

Dear Ones at Taiku: The last news from you, confirming our fears concerning the dear ones at Taiyuen, was hard,* God knows how hard, God knows how hard, for us to bear, but I cannot write of it yet. We passed a terrible night, and in the morning there was a very severe proclamation ordering us out almost at once. I could do nothing but cry to God; it seemed as if I could bear no more in my present condition. No one talked at meals. We seemed to be waiting for the end, and I, for my part, longed that it might come speedily. Ho Kow went like a brave fellow to the yamen to ask if we could not have an escort to the river. We could hire nothing unless the official helped us. . . . Although an escort has been promised, I feel very uneasy. . . . We are in the Lord's hands. . . . May God keep each one of you. He is our only help. Ever lovingly, Lizzie Atwater.

Later, August 2.

Our plans are upset; we do not think we can escape from the city. Several of the church members are planning to conceal us if we divide up. It is hard to do that. Mr. Lei wishes to conceal me in his home right here in the city, but I want to stay with my dear husband while life is given unto us. . . . Heaven seems very near these last hours, and I feel quite calm. There will be a joyful welcome for us all above. I am fixing my thoughts more and more on the glorious hereafter, and it gives me wonderful peace. God bless you all. Yours in blessed hope,

L. A.

"Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead thou me on.
The night is dark and I am far from home,
Lead thou me on.
Keen thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene—
One step enough for me."

*The three ladies to whom this letter was written were killed the day after the above letter was written to them. All knew of the terrible massacre of the missionaries at the governor's palace in Taiyuen Fu, where forty-five were publicly beheaded, their hearts torn out and their heads placed in baskets and stuck on poles in front of the yamen.

On the following day our dear sister Atwater gathered strength to write again:

Fenchowfu, Aug. 3, 1900.

My Dear, Dear Ones: I have tried to gather courage to write you once more. How am I to write all the horrible details of these days? I would rather spare you. The dear ones at Sheo Yang, seven in all, including our lovely girls, were taken prisoners and brought to Taiyuen in irons and there, by the governor's orders, beheaded, together with the Taiyuen friends, thirty-three souls. . . . We are now waiting our call home. We have tried to get away to the hills, but our plans do not work. Our things are being stolen right and left, for the people know that we are condemned. Why our lives have been spared we cannot tell. The proclamation says that whoever kills us will be doing the governor a great service. . . .

Dear ones, I long for a sight of your dear faces, but I fear we shall not meet on earth. I have loved you all so much, and know you will not forget the one who lies in China. There never were sisters and brothers like mine. I am preparing for the end very quietly and calmly. The Lord is wonderfully near me, and he will not fail me. I was very restless and excited while there seemed a chance of life, but God has taken away that feeling, and now I just pray for grace to meet the terrible end bravely. The pain will soon be over and, oh, the sweetness of the welcome above. My little baby will go with me. I think God will give it to me in heaven, and my dear mother will be so glad to see us. I cannot imagine the Savior's welcome! Oh, that will compensate for all these days of suspense! Dear ones, live near to God and cling less closely to earth. There is no other way by which we can receive that peace from God which passeth understanding. I would like to send a special message to each of you, but it tries me too much. I must keep calm and still these hours. I do not regret coming to China, but I am sorry I have done so little. My married life, two precious years, has been so very full of happiness. We will die together, my dear husband and I. I used to dread separation. If we escape now it will be a miracle. I send my love to you all, and the dear friends who remember me. Your loving sister, Lizzie.

The last will and testament of these, the noble army of martyrs of 1900, is duly declared in the lives of such witnesses. With our sainted Charles F. Garst, who sleeps in the "land of the rising sun," each of these glorified workers could say, "My life is my message." Yes! the legacy is left with us here. How we should have read with reverent tears the wishes of these brave and heroic souls, and while we read reconsecrated our own lives afresh to the service and honor of our King.

"Their blood is shed
In confirmation of the noblest claim,—
Our claim to feed upon immortal truth,
To walk with God, to be divinely free,
To soar, and to anticipate the skies."

The inheritance which our martyred have bequeathed unto the church is still a blood-stained one. It has been so from the cross until now. Those who, down the Christian centuries, have followed "in his train," have attested the same in adding new seals and more signatures to the sacred covenant. This places a new and deeper emphasis upon the meaning of the great commission, and as the church of the new century claims the precious heirloom of the faithfulness, endurance, sacrifice and devotion of its own saints, shall not our own hearts and lives be stirred and quickened in us?

The tragic events of 1900 must not and will not keep back any of the Lord's own witnesses! Who will come over and help us? Though the smoke of battle has scarcely lifted, or the confusion of opposing forces be not yet ended—there is a rift in the clouds, and we read by faith from the new light on the horizon something of the meaning of these sacrificial offerings. Let the whole Church of Christ be given to prayer and effort in behalf of this storm-swept land. It is time for action! The day is at hand! Our opportunities are supreme! What shall we do in and for the new China that is to be?

Nanking, China.

A BETTER CITIZENSHIP.

Mrs. A. M. Harrison.

IN HIS memorable address on "The Twentieth Century City," before the recent Congress of Disciples at Lexington, Ky., Dr. Josiah Strong said that the most vital point in the city was the character of the citizen.

A backward look over the century just closed shows superb progress in art, science, invention and discovery; in our land the citizen is the ruler, and we would naturally expect that good citizenship would have kept pace here with mental and material improvement; but can any one claim that our twentieth century citizenship has reached its full, consummate flower, or that the ideal of duty to city, state or nation is any higher now than in the days of Washington or Jefferson?

Among many other things that stand in the way of a better citizenship, I would mention two points which seem to me to be at the base of much of our public corruption and misrule:

1. The indifference of the better class of people to public duties.
2. The pervulence of differing standards of conduct for public and private life.

Apathy in Social and Political Obligations.

President Andrews, in his admirable address on the "Duty of a Public Spirit," says that the greatest dangers that threaten our democratic institutions are not anarchy or unchecked emigration or a number of other evils that he enumerates, but "Head and front of all our dangers is the apathy among our best people toward social and political obligations." Professor Drummond, in his farewell speech before leaving our land, said that one of the surprises to him in the United States was the indifference of the average Christian to his public duties. We are beginning to see signs of promise on this line in the past few years. It has been a common thing for men to say, "Politics is unclean—therefore I will not soil my fingers with it." I believe it is becoming more common for men to say, "Politics is unclean—therefore I must do my duty as a citizen and help to make it clean." And we are being taught, moreover, that religion and politics are closely allied—that the religious life of today has to do with the life that now is, as well as with the life that is to come. We are beginning to feel, dimly as yet, that any divorce of religion and politics is an unnatural thing—that duty to church should but quicken our sense of duty to state. A hopeful sign in the winter just past was the open and aggressive attitude of Bishop Potter toward certain shameful abuses of public officials of New York city; and his attitude is not an isolated one; all over the land Christians are awakening to a sense of responsibility to public duties, and the feeling is growing that "the patriotism of our day must rally around the ballot box as well as rally round the flag."

Fallacy of Dual Standard of Life.

I expect that most of us have at some time in our lives innocently asked why such and such an outrage in public life went unpunished, or such and such a piece of official duplicity went unrebuked, and have been met with the baffling answer, "Oh, that is politics!"—as though that were a full and sufficient reason for it. It is not only the commission of such outrages, but it is the tolerant attitude of the average politician toward them, as voiced by a late senator who said that "Parties had no use for the ten commandments, and principle in politics was an iridescent dream," that makes the gravest menace to good citizenship. It seems as though many of our citizens carried out the theological doctrine of a dual personality; in private life, in the home, the church, the business office, they were upright Dr. Jekylls, while in the caucus, the convention, the voting precinct, they were transformed into ruthless Mr. Hydes. A recent speaker said at a great mass meeting in Louisville, "Men high in our churches, men honest in their private dealings with other men, men who fear God and do the right in all else, lend aid to bribe voters, to bribe councils and legislatures, to put unfit men in office, to prey upon the public purse, to corrupt justice and corrupt the whole administration of the law."

We talk of a single standard for men and women in moral matters, and that is well—but it is only the beginning of a single standard of conduct. My dream of good citizenship—and it may be an iridescent one—sees the citizen of the coming years governing his public duties by the same standard of conduct that he applies to his private life.

When this ideal is clearly before us, then we may claim that the century upon which we have just entered is pre-eminently the Christian century.

THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK.

Carey E. Morgan.

The unity of Christians is beyond question essential to the evangelization of the world. We believe this because of what our Lord said when he had that solemn talk with the Father the evening before he was betrayed. He never used any idle words; he was far too serious and too busy for that. Surely, standing so near the end, with the shadow of the cross already falling across his path, making an appeal to the Father in behalf of those whom he had taught and for whom he was about to die; surely he would not then depart from his custom and use a phrase that was not full of serious significance. Yet he said in that prayer recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." In this he explicitly makes the faith of the world depend upon the unity of his disciples. Every man who honestly loves the church and the world must care about this, and must be willing to make sacrifices to bring it about.

"Unity of the Spirit."

What unity is it that is necessary to the winning of the world to Christ? It is the "unity of the Spirit," which must be kept in the "bonds of peace." I do not understand that this unity is necessarily organic. It is probable that we will never all belong to one church, if by church is meant a huge hierarchy or ecclesiasticism that has absorbed all the others. I question whether this is desirable, or whether the world would as soon be won to the Lord in that way. There are two ways of getting flocks that are in adjoining fields into the same field; one is to make gaps in the fences through which to drive the various flocks into one enclosure; the other is to tear down the fences. I do not expect that people can be led or driven through gaps, however wide, out of the various churches into one church, but I do confidently expect that the fences will be torn down, or at least that we will outgrow them so as to be able to step over them easily. It is not one great ecclesiastical organization having a temporal head, called pope or cardinal or archbishop, that I look forward to; but rather one great fellowship in which the unity of the Spirit shall be kept in the bond of peace.

Not Necessarily Uniformity.

Nor do I understand this unity to mean uniformity. It is likely that there will always be differences of opinion as to church government. This is a question of method and expediency, and does not in the least affect one's relation to the Christ. It may be that some will always prefer a government by bishops; others government by presbyters; while still others will continue to elect the congregational polity. What difference does that make? We are not saved by any form of church government, but by faith in Jesus Christ. The fact that some congregations of believers prefer to have the oversight of bishops, or that others decide to have elders and government by presbyters, does not in the least affect my relation to them, nor would it for one instant make me desire to withhold fellowship from them. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty," and this liberty in the Holy Spirit surely leaves each body of believers free to determine for itself whether it will have bishops or elders or deacons.

It is probable, too, that there will continue to be different forms of worship. This belongs to aesthetics rather than to essential faith. If some of our brethren prefer a ritual, why should we object? If we prefer to worship without a ritual, why should other brethren object? Surely, the Spirit of the Lord gives us all that liberty. I am a minister in a non-ritualistic church, but I have worshiped with deep satisfaction and profit with churches that used a ritual. Surely, the highest churchmen will be willing to admit that one may worship in spirit and in truth without the aid of these established forms. For myself, I much prefer the simpler form of the non-ritualistic churches, but in the light of our Lord's prayer, and in the knowledge of the world's need, I am not willing to make my preference a test of fellowship.

I believe that in proportion as men are converted to Jesus Christ by the Holy Spirit, and in the measure that the Holy Spirit dwells in fullness in the churches, he, the "Spirit of truth, will," as our Lord declared in the thirteenth verse of the sixteenth chapter of John's Gospel, "guide us into all truth," so that disciples will reach an agreement concerning essential truth and agree to disagree in peace as to the things that are non-essential. Why should the church trouble itself, much less be rent in twain, concerning a matter the acceptance or rejection of which does not affect a man's relation to the Savior, and which it is admitted on all hands will neither let him in or keep him out of the city of the great King? It must come to this: No doctrine will be made a test of fellowship in the church that is not an absolute condition to salvation. No doctrine must be allowed to keep a man out of the church that will not keep him out of heaven. The Sermon on the Mount, the new commandment, the Golden Rule, the necessity of faith in God and Jesus Christ, his Son, of sincere repentance, of obedience to the Gospel, of communion with the Holy Spirit and fellowship with the saints, the binding obligation to live the life of faith—this is common ground, and the Spirit of the Lord, who "maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered," will lead us to stand together here, I certainly believe.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." "By their fruits ye shall know them." If the church shows fruit other than this—contentions, bickerings, disputings, schisms—it must be the fruit of some other than the Holy Spirit. He brings forth after his kind.

Sin is our common enemy; we must love each other and hate it. When the battle of Trafalgar was about to begin, Nelson called two of his officers, between whom there was ill-will, and, pointing to the French fleet, said: "Yonder is the enemy; shake hands and be friends."

THE BOOK LOVER'S LIBRARY.

THE average minister never succeeds in securing all the books he would like to read at the time he would like to read them; and especially does one who has for any time had access to the largest libraries, where all the latest books are supplied promptly, feel his loss when he is deprived of them. A few ministers can buy every book they need or desire to possess; but a very large number cannot, for it takes a good-sized bank account to be able to do that. The Book Lover's library comes as a boon to those who have not access to libraries which can furnish them the latest works, or who cannot or do not care to purchase. It is of greatest benefit to one who is building up his library, as it gives opportunity to peruse a large number of books, and select from the same what he would like to have upon his shelves. The fee for membership is not large, and besides having access to the best and latest literature, it permits you to know just what you are buying. The Book Lover's library was started in March, 1900, and has had a phenomenal growth. It originated in Philadelphia, but has extended to nearly all the larger cities of the east and will soon be established in all the larger cities of the west and south, the ultimate object being to extend the service to every town in the United States. The plan upon which it has been run is to furnish members with the latest and best books—deliver them at their door—allowing them to keep them as long as they wish, and collecting them when the readers are through with them. You get just the book you ask for, and get them promptly and in the best of condition. If you are not in the library center, your books are delivered by the express company and returned by the same free of charge. The service in places some distance from the center is monthly.

TO THE BOOK LOVER.

My Dear Friend:

I am glad that my first letter to you will ask you to read two books of an inspiring character. Their subject is "Faith," the most inspiring of all subjects, because the most inspired of all human experiences.

The two books with such similar titles are both by Congregational ministers. They have signaled the opening of the new century by drawing attention to the fact of faith; by which is meant, of course, Christian faith, for that is the only thoroughly consistent and completely developed system of faith. They find that our generation, far from being hostile to, is really deeply committed to faith. As Dr. Gordon, with strong philosophic grasp, repeatedly insists, the faith that reasoned goodness is at the root and is the heart of all history has more to say for itself today than any other conceivable theory. This faith, as it illumines the age—long processes of the past with a glorious Presence and a supremely worthy purpose, inspires men with new energy and limitless hope when they turn themselves for action toward the future. The presence of faith, thus intellectually triumphant and morally impulsive, will naturally quench the dark lantern of pessimism which some have used to guide them through life as through a dreadful night. It will put fresh oil into the lamps of the optimists who await the coming of the Bridegroom with contented and unanxious joy.

The method of Dr. Bradford is the simpler and narrower. He takes for his starting point the doctrine of the universal fatherhood of God. This being thoroughly established, it is used as the key to every one of the great practical and doctrinal problems which confront us today. In these chapters Dr. Bradford's style seems to have ripened and clarified beyond any degree of excellence attained in his previous works. The reader is carried on as on a smooth-flowing stream from which many a pleasant vista is seen. Dr. Bradford knows how and when to be pointed and epigrammatic, but recognizes that these adornments must not be made the substance of a style. Even Bacon's essays, which can never become popular, are for occasional eating, careful mastication and slow assimilation. Dr. Bradford wishes to deliver a message, and therefore clothes it in the bright and swift style which will attract attention and open the heart.

One of the testing places for every book like this, which would use one key for all problems, is its discussion of pessimism. For Dr. Bradford the solution here is as easy as everywhere else. The immanence of God and his Fatherhood give him the shortest and best road to peace and hope. "Jesus teaches that life, death, judgment, time, eternity, all men, all things—everything is pervaded by God." And again, "a household in which the father watches over his children, works for them, serves them, sacrifices for them, dies for them, is the world in miniature." (Page 94.) Far be it from us to take away confidence in that divine fatherhood. But it is necessary to point out that, while Dr. Bradford uses it as a major premise from which all his conclusions are deduced, it is itself a conclusion drawn from other facts. And those other facts are not used enough by our author. It appears to us as dangerous to build a whole system upon the fatherhood as upon the sovereignty of God. The dangers are different, but they are real. And the method is in each case a purely dogmatic process, which applies to the eternal a title drawn from temporal relations, and which proceeds from the application of that title to God, to define what must be the relations of the eternal to the process of time.

On the specific problem of pessimism, for example, we feel that no discussion has gone to the depths, which does not deal at close quarters with the cross of Christ. No event in history is so calculated to destroy our faith in man and all our hopes of his reaching up to the love of pure goodness. If nothing happened after that crucifixion, then assuredly in his grave all the high prospects of man are buried forever. No wonder that men who reject him drift into cynicism, which is the attempt of despair to smile. But when we find that in that cross another presence must be seen, the presence of one to whom Jesus spoke from that fearful tree, and of one who in three days raised him from the dead, declaring him to be the Son of God, then we see in the cross the cure, and the only final cure, of the pessimist's cancer. The sacrifice of Christ, the manifested and realized sorrow of God himself, his proven sympathy and power, this alone can justify a suffering world. For let us be sure that when we think rigidly through to the end, our spirits demand to believe not only that we shall be delivered from our world's woe, but that God can justify the existence of that woe. This deeper and most solemn factor in the argument of the ages we miss from Dr. Bradford's pleasant paragraphs.

Dr. Gordon's book takes a different line. It is his conviction that the key to the deeper thinking of our day is to be found in the "discovery of humanity," which, he maintains, is the chief glory of the nineteenth century. The fruit of that discovery the new century shall garner. The argument comes from the pen of a good scholar and a deep, original thinker. The style promises to become a remarkable one. It needs chastening. Dr. Gordon's wide reading, retentive memory and remarkable power of seeing analogies, tempt him to the sin of making too many allusions. This must always spoil the literary quality of a book. But Dr. Gordon has a richness of thought, a wealth of vocabulary, an energy of argument and a passionate conviction, which combine to make him a remarkable writer. Some of his paragraphs sweep one on as almost no contemporary writer can.

The principal chapters are entitled, "The Advent of Humanity," "The New Appreciation of Christianity," "The Discipline of Doubt," "The Return of Doubt," "The Return of Faith," "The New Help from History." In all these there is much fresh, vigorous and suggestive thinking. Dr. Gordon betrays his New England atmosphere at times, in his passing, sometimes half-hearted, compliments to Unitarianism, and in his tremendous onslaughts upon Calvinism. Each is a bête noir to be dealt with in a different way. The latter is crushed with a bludgeon, the former is petted like a wayward child. Dr. Gordon's hatred of the one is balanced by his smiling contempt for the other. For Dr. Gordon knows history and shows that alike the hyper-Calvanism of Edwards and the thin theories of the Unitarians grew from the use of logic upon a few theological theories, without the criticism and insight and breadth of a wider knowledge of the history of philosophy, theology and religion.

Dr. Gordon rightly lays much emphasis upon the incarnation, but the absence of a deep grasp of the meaning of the death of the Son of God is again significant. Though Dr. Gordon believes in the God-man, his book does not indicate that he has felt the spell of that question which Anselm put and which the literature of the atonement attempts to answer, "Cui Deus Homo?"

One of the most delightful portions of this soul-stirring book is the little essay in chapter 6 on "History and Humor." It is fitting that a Scotchman should have dealt with this as he does. He means to prove, and does it, that humor "works through the annals of the race, in favor of possessions that are precious to the race." Would that many Americans, tempted by Christian science and Dowieism and theosophy and other humorous phases of contemporary "thought" (!) could read these pages and kill their temptation with a healthy, hearty, human, God-inspired laugh. This is one of the most practically valuable bits of writing we have seen for a long time. Dr. Gordon should extend it—apply it to modern instances, and publish it separately. The historical allusions in it might be easily extended; but we cannot understand his omission of the book of Proverbs in his description of Old Testament humor. Think of the place which the "fool" occupies in those sayings, now playful, now grim, now sardonic, now passionate. An allusion to the first Quaker, with his laughable eccentricities—refusing for conscience' sake to doff his hat—would have been in place.

THE BOW OF PROMISE.

"I do set my bow in the cloud."—Gen. ix. 13.

Yes, it is in the clouds that thou hast spanned the gulf between earth and heaven. Nature can span it in our sunshine ere we have learned the dark shade of the soul's sin and sorrow. But when the shadows appear within, it is in vain that the sunshine gleams without. Nature has no bow for the clouds. It is beautiful to the beautiful, it is joyful to the joyous, but it has no bow for the clouds. It has no arch of triumph to glitter through tears of sorrow, to tell the eye of sorrow that earth is somewhere joined to heaven. But thou art luminous where nature is dark—in the clouds. Thy revelation is the world's mystery; thine appearing is the world's cross. I never see thee till the cloud has overshadowed from my sight all the proud trophies of myself. My sense of night is thy day. When I ask to build a tabernacle to thee, in answer thou sendest me a cloud. I accept thine answer, Lord. I will not fear to enter into the cloud. Thy bow is in it. Thy promise is in it. The pledge of all possible promises is in it, for I see in the midst of it one like unto the Son of Man, and in companionship with him I shall have all things.—Dr. Matheson.

At the CHURCH

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON.

By Peter Ainslie.

*I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision.—
Acts 26: 19.

A few days ago I took up a New Testament which belonged to one of the little girls in my church, whose years reached a little beyond a dozen, and on the first leaf was written in her own handwriting: "Please the Lord first; keep his commandments. Pray. Love." Such was the simple exhortation, and it was a fitting introduction to the study of the great book. This was the life of Paul, who speaks the words of my text. When he met Jesus on his way to Damascus, how quickly came the question, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He was seeking to please the Lord first. Too frequently we make our pleasure first. It is all wrong. Jesus himself said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," and the first step toward God is faith, and thus goes that familiar passage, "Without faith it is impossible to please God." The pleasure of God is our happiness, and there is no happiness without a realization of our giving God some pleasure. It is the beginning in the life of consecration. We come to some difficulty and we worry. What must I do? We hesitate. Then the question, What would please God most in this matter? It will not be difficult to find the answer and the result will be our own pleasure.

Right by the side of this is "keep his commandments," and Paul shouts out, "I was not disobedient." Doing what God has told us to do secures God's pleasure. "If you love me, you will keep my commandments." That is an easy settlement. Has God commanded this to be done? Do I love him? Then I must do. The conclusion is as simple as four and four make eight. It applies to all things with which we have to do. Everything can be settled by this simple rule. Here is one who refuses to pay a debt that he knows is fair and honest. God has said: "Owe no man anything." Do you love God? and the bill is settled. Another is unforgiving. You know that God has commanded you to forgive if one sins against you four hundred and ninety times. Then the simple question is, Do you love God? All difficulties are removed when we take God's plan of doing things. Keeping his commandments is another way of saying walking in God's paths.

Then to pray and to love means victory here and hereafter—pray continually is the apostle's exhortation and love personally and intensely. Paul saw and heard. He first sought to please God. He was ready to obey his commandments both in going immediately into Damascus and forthwith getting up to be baptized as soon as Ananias mentioned it. He was then praying and from then till the sunset of his life he loved as few human hearts ever loved. Some people are perhaps capable of loving very much more than others, but whatever may be our lack God is able to supply. "My God is able to supply all your need." Whatever God reveals to use in his blessed word, do it. See Paul in his wonderful obedience! He has been conquered and his surrender is proven by his perfect obedience. Is not this God's call to you and to me?

Let us then do with all our might what the Lord has laid upon us to be done.

Blessed father, thou art good and gracious to forgive and forget our sins. Oh, save us for Jesus' sake. Amen.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

JESUS APPEARS TO PAUL.

Lesson X, June 9, 1901. Acts 22: 6-16.

Golden Text: I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision. Acts 26: 19.

6. And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7. And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8. And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9. And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

10. And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11. And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

12. And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwell there.

13. Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14. And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth.

15. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

16. And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

Time. Reckoned as May 23, A. D. 58; about 21 years after the Savior's crucifixion.

Name. In Hebrew it was Saul, in Greek Paul.

Occasion. Paul is making a voluntary statement to an excited mob of Jews and others in the outer court of the temple, at Jerusalem. 21: 26, 27. On the false charge that he had polluted the temple (21: 28, 29) he had been shamefully handled and beaten (21: 30, 32) until rescued by the Roman soldiers. Having asked and gained permission to make a defense for himself (21: 37: Vs. 1) he does so in a dignified manner, in the holy Hebrew tongue (Vs. 2) and thus at once meets respectful attention. He begins his speech by giving the soft answer that turneth away wrath (Prov. 15: 1), lovingly calling his hearers "Men, brethren and fathers" (Vs. 1.) Then he sets forth a touching narrative of his life and conversion, laying emphasis on his surpassing zeal as a persecutor, even unto death (Vs. 4). He had stood precisely in the position now occupied by themselves. He makes also an appeal to the High Priest, at whose bidding the expedition was made to confirm the truth of his story. (9: 1; Vs. 5.)

The lesson is still on the great theme of Christ as a risen savior. Last week we saw him as our high priest in heaven interceding for us; in this is shown his work in the world changing the hearts and lives of men and leading on the work of his kingdom. Let us notice that the appearance of the ascended master to Paul receives the emphasis of three different accounts (Acts 9: 1, 22; 22: 6, 21; 26: 12, 21) as in the gospels there are repeated records of our Lord's earthly acts. The strongest argument for the Christian religion is its power to change the lives of the Pauls among men, down through the ages.

V. 6. Chief of Persecutors. "As I made journey." I Paul chief of sinners (1 Tim. 1:15) because the leader of fierce persecution. His zeal was shown by this tedious journey of five or six days, the distance to Damascus being about 140 miles, to arrest, bind and take back to Jerusalem Christians at Damascus. We may assume that on this long, slow journey the scenes of his victim Stephen's triumphant death, were passing before his mind and that the voice within made itself heard preparing his heart for meeting Jesus. * * * "Nigh unto Damascus." Damascus the oldest city of the world. Gen. 15:2. Ananias and other disciples were there filled with terror at the coming of this chief of persecutors. Acts 9:21. * * * "About noon." The broiling, oriental, midday sun did not deter this fiery zealot. The time is mentioned to show that there could have been no deception in what followed. * * * "A great light" above the brightness of the sun (26:13); the light of the glory of the Sun of Righteousness, the Light of the World. Paul tells us in 1 Cor. 15:8 that he saw Christ.

V. 7. The Vine and Branches. "I fell unto the ground." The great light caused the fall of himself and his companions. 26:13, 14. * * * "Heard a voice saying." The voice was in Hebrew 26:14. It was the good shepherd's call to a lost sheep. Matt. 18:12. * * * "Saul, Saul." The name is impressively repeated. The tender remembrance in the tone must have been a first convincing of sin. * * * "Why persecutest thou me." The question was not why persecutest thou my followers as you thought you were doing, but "Me" the very Messiah, whom the nation long had been waiting for; who when he came unto his own, his own received him not (John 1:11). So every act of ours is for or against our Messiah. Can any person give one good reason for fighting against God? * * * "Me." Every blow struck at the branches is a blow at the vine in which the branches abide. The branches are a part of the vine. So we are a part of Christ. So Paul became a part of Christ. Gal. 2:20. See Isa. 63:9; Matt. 25:40, 45.

V. 8. Our Living Savior. "And I answered." Prostrate, with face upturned the startled persecutor cries for light. His ignorance at this stage is pathetic, and of which he perhaps speaks in Romans 7:15. "That which I do I know not." He was "exceedingly mad against them." 26:11. What he had done he thought he ought to do. Acts 26:9. He was following a mistaken notion, instead of the word of God, a common fault today. It is not enough to think we are doing right (2 Cor. 3:5); we must be certain. The word is our guide. Psalm 119:105. * * * "Who art thou Lord?" Saul must have recognized none other than Jehovah in that awful, felling flash from heaven, but it still remained for him to know that it could be Jesus of Nazareth. * * * "I am Jesus." The one slain, buried, and ascended now a living person beyond the power of death. * * * "Jesus of Nazareth." While Saul used the exalted term "Lord," the heavenly speaker sets himself forth neither as the glorious Messiah pictured in the Jewish mind as the fulfillment of the sacrifice and psalm and prophecy, or as the Son of God divine, but as the humble man of hated Nazareth, the horny-handed carpenter, the lower of the common people, the friend of sinners. * * * "Whom thou persecutest." Emphasis on thou. A home thrust of the two edged sword of truth (Heb. 4:12) that pierced Saul's heart for days to come. How had he persecuted him? By persecuting his followers? How do we manifest our love or hatred toward Jesus? By our love or hatred towards his followers. It is now that Jesus added: "It is hard for thee to kick against the goad" (26:14 R. V.).

V. 9. Hearing Shall Not Hear. "They that were with me." People of the persecuting crusade. * * * "Saw and were afraid." All fell in fear (26:14) as did the enemies of Jesus when they sought to arrest him. John 18:6. * * * "Heard not voice." Some see here a contradiction of Acts 9:7, which says they heard the voice. In all interpretation of language the rule is to take words for what they mean. Here the obvious meaning is that they heard the sound, as in John 12:28,29, but not understandingly. They had not been addressed. We say of a public speaker "we cannot hear him," when we plainly hear but not understandingly. The case of hearing and yet not hearing is not uncommon. Matt. 13:14. Do we hear when we hear?

V. 10. Change of Masters. "What shall I do Lord." Or according to Luke's account (Acts 6:9), "what wilt thou have me to do." Not now what will the high priest have me to do, but a new request for a commission. It is the natural question of a truly changed man. He is ready to do. * * * "Arise and go." As a kingly savior and guide, having all authority in heaven and earth, he speaks as a king to a servant. * * * "Unto Damascus." Not back to Jerusalem but keep right on, to the very place for which he was headed; and to the very people on whose destruction he was bent, but now from them to receive loving, christian favors. Here was a severe test of Paul's sincerity. As Peter must show love to enemies, by beginning work among enemies in Jerusalem, so Paul must receive instructions from those to whom he had been an enemy. * * * "It shall be told thee." Paul's conversion dates from the moment he changed masters (Matt. 6:24), but knowledge must come to him, as always, step by step. Here enters the human agency that figures in all conversions; exalting every common Ananias to be a co-laborer with God. Humble Andrew brings a Peter (Jno. 1:40, 41); humble Ananias instructs a Paul. Possibly you and I may have a part in influencing others who will be used of God far beyond our own ability.

V. 11. Damascus Is Reached. "I could not see." For three days Paul was blind, which period was spent in fasting (9:9) and prayer, (9:11). Thus by God's loving provision the world was shut out and Saul is alone with him. So often God graciously takes us from worldly occupations detaining us by bodily ailments, that he may stop and think of our soul's interests. God will be praised through all eternity for some afflictions allowed. * * * "Being led by hand." What a picture of subjection. He indeed enters Damascus but instead of the fiery persecutor to triumph in an enterprise by taking prisoners, he himself becomes the helpless, humble prisoner of the Lord.

V. 12. The Human Helper. "One Ananias." An obscure disciple of whom nothing is known except in connection with this event. And yet in a few words there is sketched a likeness of his faithfulness under difficulties, which is most inspiring. It does make a difference to God what kind of helpers he uses. (1) Ananias was timid (9:13, 14), belonging to that small band of Damascus christians who had trembled at the approach of this bloody persecutor (9:21). (2) He was humble not being an apostle nor had he any pastoral office. * * * (3) "A devout man." Ananias was holy and filled with the spirit of Christ. * * * (4) "Good report of all the Jews." A beautiful example of a disciple so gracious, so filled with true Samaritan love that those possessed, as were these Jews, of the bitter, sectarian spirit, had naught but good to say of him. Do we so live that those with different ideas of creed and church have a good report of us?

V. 13. Brotherly Love for Enemy. (5) "Came unto me." In this verse we see other good qualities of faithful Ananias, who was obedient: "He came * * * stood * * * said." For notwithstanding the alarm of his brethren he went directly where God led even to face the bloody Saul * * * (6) "Brother Saul." Terrible as was the very name of Saul to Damascus christians, he is met with the sweet greeting of "brother." Ananias showed Christ's spirit of love. (7) Ananias was helpful, he instructed and baptized Saul. 9:18. * * * "I looked up upon him." Instead now of a raging persecutor Ananias found in Saul one out of whom the devils of hate had been cast and clothed with a penitent, prayerful mind (9:11) inquiring the way of truth (verse 10). So mountains before us in the path of duty, are cast into the sea. Matt. 21:22.

V. 14. God's Choice. "God of our fathers." Wisely linking the new economy with the old. * * * "Hath chosen thee." God chose Saul because Saul had now chosen God. Verse 10. He might have refused Christ as the rich young ruler, Judas and other had done. So today the seemingly fickle Peter or the hateful-acting Paul in our classes may, if we like Ananias are faithful, turn out to be God's great power unto the salvation of souls. 1 Cor. 1:27, 28. * * * "And saw and heard just One." The other apostles had seen and heard the Lord (1 John 1:1), and this, too, was essential in the case of Paul's special call to the apostleship. 1 Cor. 9:1; Gal. 1:1.

V. 15. The Changed Life. "Witness unto all men." From a bitterest gospel foe, conversion had changed this strong man into an humble, self-denying slave of Christ constrained by cords of love. Before conversion, cruel; afterward, the tenderness of men, and finally martyred under Nero. This shows what a mighty Savior indeed is ours. * * * "Of what has seen and heard." The final answer to the world's unbelief must be the argument of experience in the changed life. We too are to be a witnessing people (Acts 1:8), showing others what God can do for them, by what he has done for us.

V. 16. God's Question. "Now why tarriest thou." The great sense of unworthiness which must have weighed upon Saul, was to be no reason for delay. "Now" is the accepted time for every one to arise and follow Jesus. * * * "Be baptized." Proving his sincerity by a public profession of his faith in Christ. He was to be baptized by an ordinary believer, showing how official distinctions were wiped out. * * * "And wash away thy sins." Indicating that water baptism is the visible seal of the remission of sins. (Acts 2:38). It is a token of our separation from the old life and of our union in newness of life with Christ and his people. It likewise is a type of our becoming inwardly pure. Is this what baptism means to us? Saul immediately entered upon the work of Christ by proclaiming Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God. 9:20 R. V. In his first Corinthian letter (11:1) he commands others on this wise, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." We can have no better watchword than this.

UPLIFTING POWER OF CHRIST.

John 12: 32. References, John 3: 14-17; 8: 28-30.

How grateful we should be that there is one who knows us far better than we know ourselves! He knows the frailty of our human form. He knows the aspirations of our souls. Throughout all ages past God has been very near unto man, for it is in Him we move and live and have our being; and yet man has been feeling out after him if haply he might find Him. Here and there some noble soul would attain to heights beyond; whole nations would make startling progress for a time along a certain line, but there was no symmetrical development, so that in the height of glory a marked decline became evident. The world had enjoyed the instruction of great teachers, but there was a lack of inner harmonization between their teaching and their personality. The world needed some one, not only with the lever which teaching afforded, but a place upon which to rest the fulcrum, which only incarnate truth could supply. He who is armed only with knowledge, like Paracelsus, goes forth to meet with the bitterest disappointment. There must be a new motive and a new force infused into society. There must be some higher power, some diviner means than any man himself had attained unto.

The great monarchs had attracted their subjects to make of them vassals and slaves. Instead of lifting them up, they had trodden them down. The ruler must be exalted though thousands should perish.

Ecce Homo.

In the midst of this world-strife we see Jesus. He comes with an assurance that only oneness with the Father could give. As he proclaims himself as the attracting, uplifting and unifying power of man he sees the cross with all its woe and shame. He is to be lifted that the gaze of centuries might rest upon him. To him it is not final defeat, but the surest way to victory. The Jewish nation pronounced sentence upon him, not knowing that at the same time the whole race—nay, more, the world, was being judged. "His death presents in a dramatic and a compact form the very devotedness which is diffused through every part of his life." He is more than a martyr, more than a hero; he is a lover of the unlovely. He uplifts in his death because the very heart of God was laid bare. Here the Father's love was made conspicuous. "Sin was suspended harmless and dead: it has been absorbed, as it were, into his person."

His was a complete human life; freely exposed to temptation. He had done what no other man had ever done; withstood the prince of this world at every point.

Love vs. Force.

There is no outward compulsion. It is an inward drawing. A divine wooing. Men may not be convinced by argument addressed to the intellect, but love overpowers them and uplifts them. He is the satisfying potion of the human soul. By his name, by his claims, by his person, he uplifts. In him we find a worthy object of choice and one upon whom we can bestow our hearts' warmest affection. In him the will of God is disclosed and made attractive. He uplifts men in their individual ideals and attainments. He makes it possible for one to live in a very large degree above the petty cares of life, while they are continually surrounded by them. He uplifts men into right social relations, giving to the race a new and abiding solidarity. Yet we can so insulate ourselves that he cannot draw us. What is our attitude? Are our hearts open and receptive? Are we willing for this divine dynamic to take hold of us? If we would become a power for good in the world, let us exalt him within our lives; for he alone can give us an influence which is abiding and eternal.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Charles Blanchard.

HOW TO ENTER CHRIST'S FAMILY.

(Topic for June 9: Matt. 12: 46-50.)

There is in this the emphasis of the spiritual relations of those who compose Christ's household. While Jesus recognized his earthly relations to his mother and brethren, the time had come to put himself before them and before the world, in the larger relations of spiritual brotherhood.

Christ Not Clannish.

It is just this fact of spiritual brotherhood which we are slow to learn. Our modern sectarianism and denominationalism are the outgrowth of the old clannishness of our ancestors, in which, with all our boast of freedom, we are not far behind. In fact, it seems to me that clannishness is one of the marked characteristics of this age. Do you ask for proof? The organization and constant multiplication of so-called fraternities indicate the spirit of the age. It is of a piece with the sectarianism of the churches. There is little genuine fraternity. This is not pessimism, or, if it is, we may as well confess the pitiful truth. There is hope even in the midst of much confusion. Federation must follow, from dire necessity, if not from the better and broader spirit of universal brotherhood. So I regard fraternities and federations among various classes as steps toward the better and broader brotherhood—toward the "parliament of man, the federation of the world." But it may hasten the coming of the golden day, to recognize that it is yet a long way off. Therefore we need to hasten.

The True Basis.

It will not be fleshly nor yet fraternal, but spiritual. My objection to all fraternal societies, of whatever name and order, is that they are not spiritual, but essentially materialistic, and hence selfish. They are simply anti-Christ, because the basis of all human fraternities is the dollar. This is not disparaging any good they may do, nor belittling the idea of brotherhood and of benevolence. But they are insufficient because of the selfish basis. There is no salvation in them for the individual nor for society. This is the solemn truth for the hour. I am speaking this to Endeavorers, because I know the attractions and distractions are strong, by reason of the mutual and social appeals of the numerous fraternal orders of the day. It is a touchy subject, perhaps, but the pulpit and the religious press must dare to speak the unwelcome word in loyalty to the larger interests of Christ's kingdom.

The "Whosoever" of Love.

"Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister, and mother." This is the "whosoever" of love, of faith, of devotion. It is spiritual, broad enough for all good men and women—all families, fraternities. Not the dollar, but the doing of the will of our Father in heaven, is the true basis of fellowship, of fraternity, of freedom. Not creeds but deeds; not degrees, but steadfast devotion to duty, in the delight of service, unselfishly, unflinchingly, is love's living way.

HOW TO STUDY THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

By I. J. Cahill.

*Supplementary to the C. E. reading courses.

In Two Parts: Part Two.

5. The Epistle Admits of Varying Analysis.

A simple way is to divide it into two sections, the dogmatic (i. 1—10: 18) and the hortatory (x. 19—13: 25). Hard and fast lines cannot be drawn, for there are numerous exhortations in the first section, and the purpose of the whole epistle is hortatory. Yet the analysis is a fair one for the main teaching is contained in the first section and the second is a last mighty sweep of exhortation.

The theme is stated in the first four verses of the first chapter: Christ is God's final and complete revelation of himself to man; or, in other words, Christianity is the ultimate and perfect religion.

The new religion is superior to the old, both in the agent by whom it is represented and in the nature of the blessings it confers.

(a) The old was ordained by angels, but Christ is greater than angels (chapters 1 and 2). He has a better name than they. He is a Son; they are ministers. The law was given by Moses, but Christ is far above Moses (3 and 4).

Moses, indeed, was faithful in all God's house, but faithful as a servant, whereas Christ is a Son.

The author regards the priesthood as the heart of the old religion. In the priesthood also does the new show its superiority. Indeed, this point is elaborated and urged with great force (v. — 8). He is a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek (v. 6), who, being greater than Abraham (8: 4, 7), is therefore also greater than the Levitical priests who have descended from Abraham (7: 9, 10). They were consecrated to the priesthood without an oath, but he with a great oath (7: 21). They were subject to death, and the priesthood passed from one to another, but in his priesthood there is no succession, for he is ever living (7: 23-25). The high priests needed to offer sacrifices for their own sins before they could offer sacrifices for the sins of the people, but our High Priest is sinless (7: 26). The Mediator of the new is greater than the mediators of the old—greater than angels, or Moses, or the priesthood.

(b) Its blessings also are better (ix.— 10: 18). The former high priest went into the holy of holies but once in the year, a fitting custom, since the way into the holy place had not yet been made manifest (9: 8); but Christ has entered into the holy place once for all, since now the veil is rent and the way is manifest. The old sacrifices could not make the worshiper perfect (9: 9); but Christ has offered his own blood, a perfect sacrifice that brings eternal redemption (9: 12). His high-priestly ministry is not in a mere symbolic holy place made with hands, but in heaven itself (9: 23, 24); he has to do not with the symbol, but with the reality, not with earthly, but with heavenly blessings.

Exhortation to Steadfastness.

The first section has shown with overwhelming force the superiority of the new covenant, and has already interwoven numerous and fervent exhortations to steadfastness. It culminates in a statement of the perfect remission of sins in Christ, and from this point begins the great exhortation which forms the second section: "Having (since there is perfect remission of sins) boldness to enter into the holy place by the blood of Jesus, let us draw near with a true heart in fullness of faith." The tenth chapter closes by assuring these trembling disciples who fear to fall out of the succession of the Old Testament worthies, that "we are not of shrinking back unto perdition, but of faith unto salvation." The inimitable eleventh chapter is an array of those old heroes who were men of faith—just as Christians are—so that by clinging to the faith, and only so, shall they retain a place in the succession of these heroes of faith. In a masterly manner the author makes use of the hortatory force of this marshalling of the facts of history when he comes to the climax of his appeal in verses eighteen to twenty-nine of the twelfth chapter. To lead up to that climax he urges on them (12: 1-13) that their experience is the experience of the faithful of all time—patient waiting through suffering for the recompense of reward. They are thus in the line of succession from Abraham, Moses and all the great servants of God in olden time who form a great multitude of examples (12: 1), whose heroism and patience they should emulate. These hardships do not indicate that the favor of the Father has been withdrawn from them—on the contrary they are to regard their sufferings as the wholesome chastising of the Father, whose love will bring them through this discipline into a participation of his own holiness. This being the end designed for the faithful, let them be careful to foster a growth in holiness both in themselves and in others (12: 14-17). It has been said above that verses eighteen to twenty-nine of the twelfth chapter form the climax of the author's appeal. In them he urges that the very nature of the New Covenant should lead them to persevere in the endeavor for holiness. The old was earthly, sensuous and terrifying; the new is spiritual and heavenly. It brings into fellowship with angels and the spirits of just men and into communion with God himself.

Therefore, rather than apostatize and go back to the mountain of blackness and darkness and tempest, let them receive with thankfulness the kingdom that cannot be shaken.

6. If Hebrews were a treatise and not an epistle, no doubt it would close with the twelfth chapter. However, being a letter, the author takes advantage of the opportunity to append some exhortations of a general nature and some personal salutations, together with such items of news as would be of interest to the readers.

THE QUIET HOUR.

JESUS ASCENDS INTO HEAVEN.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]
"And it came to pass, while He blessed them, He was parted from them, and carried up into Heaven."—Luke 24:51.

Monday—Luke 24, 44-53.

That day of the ascension Christ's prayers on earth were ended: in the act of blessing his disciples, while he lifted priestly hands in benediction, he was parted from them.

But was this the last of his prayers? Are his lips closed now, so far as the utterance of request and entreaty is concerned? No, no. He has taken up the old activities again. He has gone into the heavenly places as a Suppliant. The benediction of the ascension day simply marks the transition from one stage of his life as Mediator to another.

If John and Thomas and Nathanael and Matthew were comforted and strengthened when Jesus prayed for them, how much I should rejoice to know that he pleads for me before the throne!

I thank him that he has resumed his life of prayer in that better world.

Tuesday—Acts 1, 1-11.

From me, as from the Eleven, there may be the withdrawal of the enjoyment of Christ's presence, because I have to go out from the secret place to speak and labor for him.

They had had Jesus with them hitherto. They could sit by this Well of Love, as Samuel Rutherford says, "and drink and sing, and sing and drink." Now they were to travel forth into an unfriendly world, to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name. The happy days were over when they rested at his feet. I, too, have my seasons of near communion, and I cannot dispense with them. But there is a world lying in the wicked one, which demands my witness-bearing and my toil. I must be apostle as well as disciple, missionary as well as learner, servant as well as friend.

But the men, who had bidden Christ farewell in one sense, retained him always in another. He did not leave them orphans; he came to them, he was always coming, in the enlightenment and grace and power of his holy spirit. And when I pass out of my king's chamber, to carry on his warfare and to buttress his throne, I must not imagine that the king himself has forsaken me. Unseen, he is beside every soldier in his army. Lo, he is with me all the days, even to the end.

Wednesday—Acts 5, 24-32.

Do not let me mourn over the withdrawal of my Lord's bodily presence. It is the beginning of his heavenly reign.

From his throne on high, Jesus has wrought greater miracles than he could accomplish here, those miracles of grace which he achieves through the agency of the Holy Ghost—secret, noiseless, loving, transforming. Every conversion of a sinful heart is the work of the exalted Christ. So is every revival of a drooping and languishing church. So is the opening of every new door into the regions beyond. In his majesty he rides on prosperously.

It was good to have him in this world; it is better to have him in the City of God. He can enrich his people more effectually by his outward absence than by his outward presence. He guides each movement of the kingdom: he inspires each endeavor; his hand is on the secret spring of each enterprise.

It is my blessedness that meantime he has gone away.

Thursday—John 14, 1-11.

There was a man who dreamed a dream. He thought he stood at the gate of heaven, and saw an army march up, bearing the banners of victory. He asked who the soldiers were. "The goodly fellowship of the prophets," he was told. And he sighed, "I am not one of them." Then came another band, robed in white; and they were made welcome. "Who are these?" he said. And the answer was, "The glorious company of the apostles." "I am not among them," he mourned. Nor could he go in with the next troop, that of the noble army of martyrs; he had no right to wave their branches of palm. But, at length, as he waited, he saw a larger host than any of the rest. In front walked the woman who had been forgiven much, and Zacchaeus, the grasping tax-gatherer, and the robber who died on the cross. He thought there would be no shouting over these. But all the trumpets sounded for them on the other side. And the angels said, "Those are sinners saved by grace." And he cried, "Thanks be to God, I can go in with them!" So he awoke, and his sleep was sweet to him.

"I am the way," said Jesus; "no one cometh unto the Father but by me." Yes, but "him that cometh," let him be who he may, "I will in no wise cast out."

Friday—Ephesians 1, 15-23.

Jesus came to the river whose streams are icy cold. It was part of his commission, it was involved in the redeeming work he was fulfilling for me and for the world, that he should make acquaintance with the waters of death.

But it was only momentarily fatal, the chill which came from the frosty and frowning stream. For what followed? Resurrection, revival, ascension, dominion.

So I am glad for Christ's sake that he tasted death. It was the commencement of his reign as Savior. Today the crown of redemption glitters on his brow. Today the government of his redeemed rests on his shoulder.

And I am glad for my sake. His experience is the pattern of the spiritual revival God gives me, "according to that working of the strength of his might which he wrought in Christ." Yes, and it is the prophecy of what is waiting for me in the future, when I shall hear my Master's voice, and shall awake to life and glory.

Saturday—Ephesians 4, 1-10.

Christ is ascended on high, say psalmist and apostle, to lead captivity captive and give gifts unto men.

His is a universal beneficence. He passes from country to country, from continent to continent; and he is everywhere at home. He has a message, a bounty, a salvation, suited to all. He addresses himself to what is most characteristic in our human nature, and there is none who may not be redeemed and gladdened by him. Other religions have appealed to select sections of the community; but it is his glory that he seeks the lost, to whatever class or land they belong.

And yet his is a particular grace. He adapts himself to the circumstances and wants of each individual. My sins, my difficulties, my needs, my battles, are not the same as those of my neighbor; so his good news means one thing for that neighbor, and another thing for me. Jesus loses no humble heart in the crowd. Jesus has received for me the gift I require.

I am thankful that he is king of all the earth, and king no less of my unworthy soul.

Sunday—Philippians 2. 1-11

Every knee should bow to Christ. Every tongue should confess him Lord.

I rejoice that the face of the world has already been changed by him. I breathe a different atmosphere from that of those who lived before Bethlehem and Calvary. A new order has conquered the old—and an order sweeter, nobler, holier, less selfish, more divine. Hiems abiit, moestaque crux.

And I can see the blessed process in operation in my own time. Before the light which his gospel brings, and the life which it creates, and the love which it fosters, the evil customs are fleeing discomfited. Peoples who were sunk as low as they could be are stepping forth into liberty and dignity and peace.

But how many victories my king of grace and glory has still to win, even where his throne has been established longest—victories over intemperance and impurity, over class jealousy and the lust of gain, over skepticism and indifference! When I think of them this is my consolation, this alone, that his renewing virtue is as potent and abundant as ever it has been.

And I must help him to the hour when he shall be crowned Lord of all—help him by prayers, by gifts, by services, by showing the shining light.

OUR PULPIT.

THE MESSAGE OF THE MINISTRY OF TODAY.

By Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, D. D., Pastor of Central Church, Chicago.

"And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them that they may be one, even as we are one."—John xvii., 22.

THIS is the method our Lord adopted in order that the church might be and remain after his death as the perpetual witness unto a divine humanity.

The church of God on earth is the perpetual testimony to the fact that of God's fatherhood of man and man's essential sonship unto God. Its holy business in the world is to quicken and comfort the sense-enslaved and world-bound sons of God with the inspiring and liberating fact of their essential sonship unto Jehovah. The church is the body of Christ—the Christ in whose atonement we cry: "Aba, father!"

This is the swift-flowing current of power in the person and life of Christ. He came into the world that men might be born, truly born again, born spiritually, born from above. The great doctrine in the forefront of the church's creed is the doctrine of regeneration—the new birth through Jesus Christ. He comes to find men in darkness and in sin—the man in the creature all hidden and inclosed. This creature—all creatures are "Waiting for the manifestation of the sons of the sons of God." He comes to rouse this unborn possibility, by and through the Holy Spirit. He so gloriously and powerfully manifests the perfect sonship of a man unto God, in his own life, and, above all, in his death, indeed, he so takes our humanity up to God and brings God's deity down to us, in himself, that man is easily persuaded that he is God's child, and the native man in the sinning creatures rouses, comes forth, is born, at the sight of the cross, on which God's fatherhood was brought so near to man, and man's sonship was lifted up in the deity of Jesus so close to God that every eye may see it. It is the man's birthday—a day in which all that makes him a man is delivered and made possessed of the privilege and responsibilities of divine life.

The church of Jesus Christ is, in these and in many more ways, to be the birthplace of manhood. It is the continual witness on earth of the fact that man is God's child, that wrong and sin and ignorance and the narrow world have no right to him, but that this latent, Godlikeness, in which he was created, must be touched and invited forth, that, as the apostle puts it, the creature must wait for and at last must realize the "manifestation of the sons of God."

The day of God's revelation of himself in human beings as he revealed himself in Jesus will be the day of unity among all men. When that day shall dawn the visible church will be the embodiment of the invisible; the true and the good, and the Christ-like shall be less divided and more united in every work which shall bring the kingdom of God upon earth. The sacred and the secular will be less separated and separable. The church will claim every human soul as God's child. Before its unborn destiny it will so keep the cross, in its resistless beauty and grandeur, that the soul must burst forth, and the man be born. Ay, more, it will furnish an atmosphere in which every noble sentiment, every stalwart conviction of truth, every generous reform, every advancing impulse of goodness and faith shall feel the mother's proud kiss of love and her smile of benediction. Give us a manly religion! Let us give ourselves today to the great idea that the church shall more and more become really God's church. Then, surely, it will be the real church of humanity—the birthplace of manhood.

THE GREAT MASTER.

"I am my own master!" cried a young man proudly, when a friend tried to persuade him from an enterprise which he had on hand. "I am my own master!"

"Did you ever consider what a responsible post that is?" asked his friend.

"Responsible—is it?"

"A master must lay out the work which he wants done, and see that it is done right. He should try to secure the best ends by the best means. He must keep on the lookout against obstacles and accidents, and watch that everything goes straight, or else he must fall."

"Well."

"To be master of yourself you have your conscience to keep clear, your heart to cultivate, your temper to govern, your will to direct and your judgment to instruct. You are master over a hard lot, and if you don't master them they will master you."

"That is so," said the young man.

"Now, I could undertake no such thing," said his friend. "I should fail, sure, if I did. Saul wanted to be his own master, and failed. Herod did. Judas did. No man is fit for it. 'One is my Master, even Christ.' I work under his direction. He is regular, and where he is Master all goes right."

BOOKS...

"Christian Theology, A Concise and Practical View of the Cardinal Doctrines and Institutions of Christianity," by Jonathan Weaver, D. D., Dayton, Ohio. United Brethren Publishing House, 1900. pp. 330. Price $1.50.

The author of this volume is one of the bishops of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, and has aimed to give a somewhat popular statement of his views of the current themes of theology. The titles of the various chapters will indicate what a further examination of the book reveals, the standpoint of the writer, including as they do the familiar themes of the old dogmatic theology, such as "The Existence and Attributes of God," "The Divinity of Christ," "Hypostatic Union," "The Personality and Deity of the Holy Ghost," "The Trinity," "Man, His Origin and Fall," "The Existence of Angels," "The Personal Existence and Evil Influence of Devils," "The Future State of the Wicked," "Hell," etc. The treatment is less an investigation of the teachings of the Holy Scriptures than it is the buttressing of a theological position by the appeal to proof-texts, which was the resource of the outgoing theology as over against the attempt in modern times to find out upon the basis of an adequate Biblical criticism, and Biblical theology, the real teachings of the Bible. The book is rather an illustration of an obsolescent theological method than a contribution to present day theological literature.

Among the many signs that point to a great forward movement in soul winning is the increased zeal in Bible study.

No one can enter heartily and sympathetically into the study of God's word without being impressed with the thought of personal responsibility for the souls of men.

How many earnest pastors desire to serve and to reach souls for Christ and yet their aspirations are dissipated and their energies are unutilized because they feel that they have no aptitude for evangelistic work?

Supt. R. A. Torrey of the Moody Institute has anticipated this, and through the publishing house of Fleming H. Revell has recently brought out a book, "How to Promote and Conduct a Successful Revival." To the subject matter is appended about seventy-five suggestive outlines of evangelistic sermons that when preached by some of the most eminent soul winners of the age have been owned and blessed of God.

In the production of this book Mr. Torrey has been ably assisted by some of the greatest specialists in Christian work.

One feature that is particularly refreshing is the constant appeal to the Scriptures and reliance upon the Gospel as God's power unto salvation. All things considered, it is the most complete, helpful, healthful and suggestive book we have seen on the subject.

Roland A. Nichols.

"An Highway There," by William Campbell Scofield. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, 1901. pp. 418. Price $1.25.

The author informs us in the preface that the work is an application of the prophecy regarding the simplicity and plainness of the "Way of Holiness" (Isa. 35). The book is divided into chapters on "The Highway," "Ransom," "Growing," "Praying" and "Last Things." It is full of excellent Christian truth, and while not striking, it will be found profitable reading. It is, however, an illustration of a total misunderstanding of some texts. While all the points made regarding the highway are true, they are not taught in the prophecy to which reference is made in the title and throughout the book. The statement is not that the highway of holiness is so plain that even fools cannot make a mistake, but just the opposite, that no ravenous beasts, nor mere travelers, nor fools, shall go in that way, but it shall be for the ransomed of the Lord. This is very different teaching, though it is certainly a fact that the Gospel highway is simple enough to be unmistakable.

"The Everlasting Harmony, God Our Father," by Rose Porter. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago. pp. 120. Price $1.

A book of suggestive reflections on the divine Fatherhood. Devotional in character, and an excellent companion for the quiet hour.

"The Lady of Nations," by Richard Hayes McCartney. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago. pp. 114. Price 10 cents.

This is an attempt to set forth in meter a system of theology, based upon the statement that "the blood-bought, blood-washed believers in our Lord can rest assured that all the prophecies in the Old and New Testament not yet fulfilled, shall yet be fulfilled in the most liberal manner, in the most minute detail as recorded". "The Lady of Nations" is the city of Babylon, which the author supposes will be rebuilt as the center of a world-wide empire of evil, in opposition to the Kingdom of God.

"Principles of Interpretation," by Clinton Lockhart, A. M., Ph. D. The Christian Index Publishing Co., Des Moines, Ia., 1901. pp. 288. Price $1.

The volume here presented has grown out of the class-room work of Professor Lockhart, who is professor of Semitic and sacred literature in Drake University. The volume is a treatise on the "Laws of Interpretation," treated as a science, derived inductively from an exegesis of important passages of Scripture. The plan is that of investigating the Scripture in order to find the methods of its interpretation, derived from comparative examination of different passages in the light of the total and general meaning of the Word of God, and from such examination to derive certain axioms or rules in accordance with which all interpretation must proceed. The themes treated occupy twelve chapters dealing with such subjects as the value of laws of interpretation, axioms of Hermeneutics, the meaning of words and expressions, the use of parallel passages, figurative language, poetry, prophecy, types, and the interpretation of books, and the Bible as a whole. One of the most interesting chapters in the book is that on figurative language, the comprehension of whose characteristics is absolutely essential to the interpretation of a book so full of figures of speech as is the Bible. One could have wished that the treatment of this particular subject might have been extended further, but no doubt the purpose of the book imposed limitations. The volume is not only valuable for use in the class-room and in Bible classes, but would be found of interest to all students of the Scriptures, and might well find its place in circles for Bible study, in connection with the prayer meeting, the Young People's Society, or family devotions.

"Critique on Higher Criticism," by George T. Smith, Winfield, Kan. Industrial Free Press. pp. 323-48. Price $1.25.

The author has gathered a large amount of material from many sources in this volume, and has discussed the principal problems of Old Testament criticism, with constant assertion of the necessity for an unbiased and judicial view, but with strong leaning to a conservative position on nearly all points. The book cannot fail to be informing and suggestive to that large to more ambitious works on the subject. The general impression made is that of a somewhat scrappy method class of readers who have not access of writing, but perhaps this was unavoidable, in view of the writer's purpose, and the limitations which he set himself. It is not free from errors of form, and lacks a list of books which would afford further information on the subject.

"Cupid's Garden," by Ellen Thornycloft Fowler. pp. 296; $1.50. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

The preface of this book is the best of it. It is a really superior essay on the art of writing short stories, which, if it had been fully carried out in the volume, would have made it much more interesting than such collections usually are.

Some of the stories are very interesting, and all are written in the author's usual happy vein.

General Church News

The Christian News Department will be made a prominent feature in The Christian Century. Our aim will be to give a comprehensive view of the things which are deemed of vital interest. In the collection of news we invite the co-operation of our friends in all parts of the country. An indispensable quality of these items will be brevity. A book worth one dollar or upwards will be given each week to the person sending in the best list of news items of general interest for this department. The book offered this week is Dr. Trumbull's Yale Lectures on the Sunday-school, the regular price of which is $2.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Leavitt Street Congregational Church, Sunday, May 19, raised $10,000 of its $13,000 debt.

Professor S. Ives Curtis of the Congregational Theological Seminary has gone again to Syria to complete investigations begun by him last summer.

The forty-third annual convention of the Illinois State Sunday School Association is in session in the First Methodist Church of Bloomington this week.

Rev. Isaac W. Higgs, for two years pastor of Trinity Congregational Church, Seventy-first street and Normal avenue, has tendered his resignation to take effect June 1.

These officers for the year have been chosen by the Presbyterian Ministers' Association: President, Rev. Joseph A. Vance; vice president, Rev. L. P. Cain; secretary and treasurer, Rev. L. A. Barrett.

"Why Be a Christian?" will be the subject of an address to men by Rev. J. W. Conley, D. D., of the First Baptist Church of Oak Park at the Central Y. M. C. A. Auditorium tomorrow at 4 o'clock.

President John Henry Barrows of Oberlin College gave the fourth of his series of lectures, this one on "Spiritual Worship," in Kent Theater, University of Chicago, last Sunday afternoon.

Union services of the West Side and Monroe Street Christian churches were held at 1010 West Jackson boulevard. Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison of the Monroe Street Church preached.

The third annual rally of the Intermediate Societies of Christian Endeavor in the Chicago Union will be held at 2:30 p. m. next Saturday in Recital Hall, Auditorium. Representatives from every Sunday school in the city are expected to attend.

The Chicago Methodist Social Union held a reception and banquet Thursday evening, May 23, at the Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Park avenue and Robey street. Addresses were delivered by D. D. Thompson, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate; Rev. C. C. Stratton, Col. Henry L. Turner and others.

The principal officers of the Illinois Woman's Home Missionary Union (Congregational) are from this neighborhood: President, Mrs. Sydney Strong, Oak Park; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. O. Whitcomb, Chicago; recording secretary, Miss Belle Preston, Hinsdale; treasurer, Mrs. Mary Booth, Chicago; auditor, Mrs. H. W. Chester, Chicago.

At the Forty-first Street Presbyterian Church, Grand boulevard and Forty-first street, last Sunday evening, a union service for men was held under the auspices of the young men's Bible classes of the Presbyterian churches of Chicago. Cleland B. McAfee, president of Park College, addressed the meeting.

By unanimous vote the official board of the Ravenswood Methodist Church has granted its pastor, Rev. W. E. Tilroe, a three months' vacation. It will be spent traveling with friends in England and on the continent. The fifth year of a successful pastorate is closing with the church in excellent condition and with bright promise for the future.

Marshall Field has given to the Chicago Home for Incurables ten lots in Greenwood avenue, northwest corner of Fifty-sixth street. The land adjoins the ground now occupied by the home, and the acquisition of it gives the trustees almost an entire block. It is understood that plans for the enlargement of the home are being considered.

The Woman's Society for Foreign Missions in Chicago Presbytery celebrated its silver anniversary May 9 in the Fullerton Avenue Church. The treasurer reported the receipts during the year $17,641. In the quarter century the society has raised $347,470, not including the contingent fund. The young people's societies contributed over $2,200 last year.

A vacation exchange of two ministers in congregations separated by the breadth of the ocean is unusual. Such an exchange has been planned and will be carried out by Rev. Robert Anderson, M. A., of Castlewellan, County Down, Ireland, and Rev. David Creighton of Christ Presbyterian Church, Chicago. The exchange embraces the manse as well as the pulpit, and covers the period of four months.

The fiftieth anniversary of Grace Episcopal Church was celebrated May 19. Bishop McLaren made an address and Dr. Clinton Locke, the rector for thirty-six years, preached the sermon. It was the first time since he retired from active duty six years ago that he has been heard from his old pulpit; he has been suffering from a chronic and aggravated throat affection. Rev. E. M. Stires, the present rector, conducted the service.

Following are the officers elected last week at the annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Chicago Presbytery: President, Mrs. A. L. M. Trowbridge; recording secretary, Mrs. S. A. Sterne; secretary of literature, Miss Helen A. Dounan; corresponding secretary, Mrs. G. R. Pike; secretary of young people's work, Miss Helen Thomson; treasurer, Mrs.

Capron; field secretary, E. B. McCuskey.

The heirs of the late J. M. Williams of Evanston have agreed to give Professor Taylor $12,000 for the completion of the residence part of the Commons, provided $8,000 given by Mr. Williams during his lifetime, and used in the erection of the church wing, be released and put into the front now to be erected and named the Williams Residence Hall. The new building will be forty feet square, five stories high and contain settlement quarters for twelve or fifteen people, reception-rooms and an office.

The reported gifts to Home Missions in the Chicago Presbytery, $44,122, fall $8,650 below last year's record, and the Foreign Missions offering, $32,398, is also short $3,960. The largest amount for any one board is that accredited to Chicago Aid, $110,033, which includes the twentieth century offering, made special to Lake Forest University. The grand aggregate of outlay for all purposes, including these gifts, is $622,828, against $575,693 reported last year, a net gain of $47,135.

Of special interest to ministers is the announcement of three conferences on practical religious work, to be held at the University of Chicago the afternoons of June 19, 20 and 21. The subjects of these are "Revivals," "Prayer Meetings," and "The Sunday School." The speakers in these conferences will be well-known pastors in Chicago and other cities. The celebration of the decennial of the University of Chicago the same week will bring together a large number of alumni of the Divinity School as well as other departments.

For the year closing April 1, Chicago Presbytery lost by death 233 church members, and by other causes 1,813, gaining 1,559 on confession and 1,443 by letter. The disbanding of the Fifth and Sixtieth street churches added to the reported loss, as less than half of the 260 members in these have yet found homes in other Presbyterian churches. In the place of these two now appear the Garfield Boulevard Church with 98, and Hope and Joliet, with 102 members. The Sunday-school total of 27,667 is 250 less than last year. Of the 87 churches, 66 have settled pastors and 19 are regularly supplied, leaving only two to be reported as really vacant.

The Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) graduated twenty-five young men this year. The Alumni Institute occupied three days and proved very profitable. In an address on New Wine in Old Bottles Rev. Fred Staff raised the question of the right of a minister to use words which mean one thing to the average hearer and another to the speaker, and illustrated his meaning by reference to the doctrine of inspiration, sin and the atonement. The most attractive feature of the three days were the lectures on English Congregationalism, by Dr.

Alexander Mackennal of England. Dr. J. H. George of Montreal was chosen president of the seminary.

The Chicago Federation of Religious Workers has been permanently organized. Its objects are the establishment of a bureau of information concerning the religious and social forces of the city and the laws and ordinances relating thereto, and the promotion of combined efforts for the general good, irrespective of church organization. Prof. Graham Taylor is chairman of the committee in charge, which includes the names of Rev. Drs. J. A. Rondthaler, J. R. Crosser and W. P. Merrill, Bishop Fallows, Prof. Henderson, W. N. Slater, Revs. R. A. White, L. B. Mercer and David Beaton and other prominent workers in the cause of religion and good morals in Chicago. The secretary is H. F. Ward, 4648 Marshfield avenue.

Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus preached at Central Church Sunday morning, May 19, on "American Womanhood," the death of Mrs. Lyman J. Gage and the illness of Mrs. McKinley having occasioned the sermon. Dr. Gunsaulus took for his text verses 11 and 12 of Matthew xxv. He said, among other things: "In a sense, differences founded in sex have departed in fact, as they have in legislation and society. There is the deepest possible significance in the old statement of primitive Christianity. 'There is neither man nor woman in Christ Jesus.' That means this: In those realms of life where God fills our human nature with himself and makes it great, there is no such thing as sex."

The First Congregational Church, corner of Ann and Washington streets, has been holding a series of services in commemoration of its semi-centennial. On Sunday, May 26, Prof. Chamberlain, the acting pastor, read the twenty-fifth anniversary sermon of the Rev. E. P. Goodwin, who resigned last summer after a pastorate of over thirty-two years and whose death occurred a few months ago. The daughters of this mother church—Covenant, Warren Avenue, Grace and the Tabernacle—united in a fellowship service with her on Sunday afternoon. A rally of Congregationalists of Chicago and vicinity was held on Monday evening in connection with the gathering of the Congregational Club.

The eighth annual May festival concert under the auspices of the Cook County Sunday School Association was given at the Auditorium Friday evening, May 24. The principal feature was a chorus of 1,000 young women from the Sunday schools of Chicago and vicinity. The program included "How Lovely Are the Messengers," from St. Paul; "Grand March," from "Tannhauser"; "The Lost Chord," by Arthur Sullivan, and other works of high musical character. Interest centered in a new cantata written by Miss Bertha Frances of the Hyde Park High School. The work is entitled "The Passing of the Swan." The concert, as in former years, was under the direction of H. W. Fairbank.

Among Christian Endeavorers there will be several rallies during the latter part of May and the early part of June. That of the North division was held May 21 at the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian Church. The "Q" division will rally May 31 at Downers Grove, while the Englewood division the same evening will hold its annual reception at the Emerald Avenue Presbyterian Church; an orchestra will furnish the music. Saturday, May 25, the Northwestern Juniors held a rally at Norwood Park, and the Hyde Park Juniors are arranging a similar division meeting in June. June 8 the general annual Junior rally will be held in the Association Auditorium at 2:30 p. m., under the direction of the city junior superintendent, Miss Anita Earle.

The open lectures for the summer quarter at the University of Chicago promise to be of exceptional interest and importance to Chicago ministers. The first course on the Crane foundation will be given by Prof. Maxime Kovalevsky upon "Russian Institutions." President Harper will give a course of six lectures on "The Prophetic, Priestly and Wisdom Elements of the Old Testament." Chancellor E. B. Andrews of the University of Nebraska will give twenty lectures upon "Practical Ethics." Dr. Marcus Dods of New College, Edinburgh, will deliver a course of ten lectures on "The Teachings of Paul," Prof. Shailer Matthews six on "The Social Teachings of the Apostles" and Prof. H. L. Willett two courses of lectures of six each upon "Phases of the Psalter" and "Studies in Apocalyptic Literature."

Adventist—Seventh Day.

At the recent general conference it was decided to remove the college at Battle Creek, Mich., to South Haven. The twenty-fifth commencement of the college occurred May 20, when a large class graduated.

Baptist.

The Rev. J. W. Carr, for the last fourteen years pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Indianapolis, Ind., the largest colored congregation in the city, has accepted the pastorate of the First Baptist Church at Savannah, Ga., which has a membership of 4,750 persons, and the largest colored congregation in the country. The call comes as the result of a recent visit to Savannah during which over 200 persons were added to this church in a series of meetings. About $50,000 has been raised by Mr. Carr during his pastorate of the Second Baptist Church. He has increased the membership to 1,800 persons.

The annual meeting of the Minneapolis Association was held at Northfield, Minn., May 10 and 11. A very able address was delivered by Rev. W. B. Riley on "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation." The association, representing 4,500 Baptists, expressed its disapproval of the "so-called Faribault plan of education" in the Philippine islands as being un-American, un-Christian and unconstitutional, and respectfully urged President McKinley to veto this or similar legislation. The association heartily approved of the act of Congress which discontinues the use of the army cantonments. Addresses were made on "Our Churches in Their Relation to Philanthropic Movements and Civic Reforms," "The Missionary Spirit," "The New Age and the Men It Needs" and "Religion; an Inward Life."

The Women's National Baptist Home Missionary Society held its annual meeting in New York City May 18.

Mrs. J. N. Crouse of Chicago, president of the national organization, stated that there are at present 109 missionaries in 34 states and territories supported by the society; these are employed among Europeans, Asiatics, Indians, Jews and negroes. The latest station to be opened is in Cuba, where there are three teachers one of whom is supported by the young women of the Baptist church. The "Baby Band," with its 4,817 enrolled members, pays the expenses of a kindergarten among the Chinese of San Francisco, and one in Mexico. There are 2,807 auxiliaries. During the 24 years of existence of the national society $1,034,103 has been raised, $69,796 of the amount being last year's income.

The May anniversaries of the Baptist organizations are being held at Springfield Mass.

The past year has been one of great prosperity for the Southern Baptist Church. It has increased largely in membership, has built many new edifices, improved many old ones, and extended both its domestic and foreign work very largely. For foreign mission work $156,000 was raised, an increase of $16,000 over the fund for the previous year. The committee on missions has asked for $200,000 with which to push its work in Cuba, and it will undoubtedly be provided. The convention just held sent $3,000 to the Jacksonville sufferers.

The Glenn's Creek Baptist Church, five miles west of Versailles, Ky., celebrated its centennial anniversary Sunday, May 19, with appropriate ceremonies. The centennial sermon was delivered by Dr. J. R. Sampey of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville.

Congregational.

Seven men were graduated from Oberlin Theological Seminary, May 9, of whom one goes to South Africa, one to a Hungarian church in Connecticut and one to A. M. A. work in the south.

Rev. Dr. Edwin B. Webb died at Wellesley, Mass., May 20. He has held the offices of chairman of the prudential committee of the American Board, president of the trustees of Hartford Theological Seminary and member of the executive committee of the Congregational Home Missionary Society.

Miss Abbie G. Chapin, one of the American Board missionaries in China, has received a medal from the British government for hospital services rendered during the siege of Peking.

The Ohio State Association took for its topic "The Gospel of Jesus Christ in the Twentieth Century." Dr. Gladden spoke on "The Gospel to Non-Church Goers—What It Ought To Be Shown To Mean." Dr. Tenney took for his subject "Ohio's Place in the Work of the New Century."

President Franklin Carter of Williams College has resigned on account of his health. He has held the office for twenty years. His presidency has been a successful one. Several fine buildings have been secured during his administration. He has steadfastly held to the idea that the college is a place for laying broad foundations rather than teaching specialties.

Compton Hill Church, St. Louis, has a remarkable work going on amongst the pupils of its Sunday-school, which the pastor, Rev. W. W. Newell, attributes in part to stereopticon services on the Life of Christ, on Sunday evenings, closing with the resurrection and ascension. 200 pupils have signed cards expressing their desire to lead a Christian life, and wish to unite with the church. An analysis of these cards shows that there is an increase in the number each year from 9 to 12 years old, and then a decrease each year from 12 to 18 years old. This Sunday-school had an attendance of 419 on Easter Sunday. Hyde Park came next with 415. Olive Branch took the lead in additions to the church, receiving 17 by confession and 2 by letter.

Dr. Lyman Abbott preached the sermon at the Diamond Jubilee of the Congregational Home Missionary referred to in our last issue. The number of missionaries under the society last year was 1,863, employed in 46 states and territories. Sunday-school and Bible-class scholars in organizations under the society's care, 147,274; new schools organized, 183; additions to the churches, 8,115; 5,113 on confession. The society began the year with a debt of $108,544, which has been reduced to $63,698. Receipts by auxiliary societies, $203,731; total receipts for Home Missions by national and auxiliary societies, $538,986.

The semi-centennial of Hanover Street church, Milwaukee, was celebrated May 19, and the pastor, Rev. H. H. Jacobs, was formally installed May 20.

Congregational churches in Indiana number sixty-one, with a membership of 6,000; Y. P. S. C. E. membership, 1,400. There are 6,000 scholars in the Sunday schools.

The General Association of the churches in Massachusetts held its ninety-ninth annual meeting at Andover, May 21-23, taking for its theme of thought and discussion "The Church at the Dawn of the New Century." "The Opening of the Bible," "Modern English Versions of the Scriptures," "Our Missionary Problems," "The Preaching for the Times," "The Enlistment of Men," "The Church's Care of Its Young People," and "The Modern Prayer Meeting" were some of the sub-topics.

The benevolent contributions of Illinois Congregationalists as reported at the State Association meeting at Galesburg, showed a gain, the total being $131,391.

The fifty-eighth annual meeting of the Illinois association opened with a banquet, 300 being seated. The leading address the first evening was by Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D., on "National Conquest." Prof. Wm. Douglas Mackenzie spoke on Wednesday on "The Theology of the Conquering Church," and Prof. Graham Taylor on "Her Sociology," Prof. E. T. Harper of Chicago Theological Seminary spoke on "Better Teaching in the Sunday School," and Mr. E. H. Duff on "The Spiritual Training in the Sunday School."

At the General Congregational Association of Illinois held last week in Galesburg, the central idea was the Conquering Church. This idea ran through all the program, giving to it unity and cumulative power. Beginning with conquests in Illinois, the range of thought expanded to national conquests, and from that to world-wide conquests. In a survey of home mission work the unconquered elements were discussed, and an entire session was given to a discussion of the liquor traffic as one of the chief organized forces opposed to the church. The subject of the theology of the conquering church was presented by Prof. H. D. Mackenzie, while Prof. Graham Taylor spoke of its sociology. The Society secretaries emphasized the missionary function of the church, and in a series of interesting addresses present day organized religion was discussed in studies of the prayer meeting, Christian Endeavor societies, the federation of benevolent societies, the Deaconess movement, and the Sunday school. Special interest was manifested in the securing of better methods of teaching in the Sunday school. It is evident that we are on the eve of great changes in this department of Christian work. There is a loud demand for text books in the place of the present Imperial lesson leaves. There is also a demand for improved pedagogical methods in harmony with the new psychology, and with the advanced ideas which obtain in connection with our public school system.

The Central Congregational church, in which the state association was held, is a handsome cathedral-like building, and has all the latest appointments for Christian work. It is moving steadily forward under the leadership of its present pastor, Rev.

When writing, mention that you read this generous offer in the Chicago Christian Century.

Clarence A. Vincent, D. D. Its present membership in 800.

The Illinois Congregational State Association was organized at Farmington in 1844 by nine ministers and delegates from five churches. At present it numbers 359 churches, with 49,852 church members. Its benevolent contributions amount to $130,000 annually.

The Disciples.

The Church of Christ at Canton, Ill., celebrated its tenth anniversary on May 19. The present membership is about 400.

The convention of the Central district of Iowa will be held at Pleasantville, May 27-29.

In order to reach the $200,000 mark by September 30, a gain of $15,000 for the receipts of the Foreign Society must be made in the next four months. The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the South Kentucky Christian Missionary and Sunday School Association will be held at Owensboro May 28-30.

Rev. Charles S. Earley has resigned the pastorate of the Central Christian church at Pueblo, Col., to enter the University of Chicago. The church has paid the debt which has hung over it for several years and is in a prosperous condition. There have been additions every Sunday recently.

The Church of Christ at Gillespie, Ill., was dedicated May 19, by Rev. George F. Hall. A large audience was present and more than enough money was raised. There were five additions to the church on dedication day. The work is prospering under the able ministrations of Rev. John G. M. Lutenberger.

The Church Extension Board received some large gifts last month: $5,000 from the estate of John W. Cassell of Hopedale, O.; $1,347.69 from the estate of Dr. Geroud of Cleveland and an annuity of $3,000 from Nicholas J. Wirebaugh of Prairie Depot, O. The total receipts for April were nearly $10,000, a gain of more than $1,600 over last year. The total amount of the Extension Fund, on May 1, was $292,754.71.

The union church of the Christian and Baptist congregations at Dixie, Mo., was dedicated May 19. Fully 2,000 people were present and about $800 was raised, this being the entire amount remaining due.

A two weeks' meeting at Clarkville, Mo., resulted in fifty-nine additions to the church there.

Add-Ran University is the only institution in Texas that is owned and controlled by the Disciples of Christ. It is situated just out of the limits of Waco. It has two brick buildings. The main building is one of the finest and largest school buildings in the south. It cost about $120,000. The second building is the "Ladies' Home."

The annual convention of the Southern Illinois Ministerial Association will be held in Cairo, July 22-26. The entire convention will be devoted to an examination of the following questions: "The fundamental principles upon which New Testament restoration is attempted; Is it a practicable work? Are its ideas new? Is a re-statement needed? Can there be progress in using them?" "In what sense is the Bible our creed more than that of other bodies, and how does our practice differ from that of others in regard to the use of the creed?" "What is the meaning, scope and application of 'Where the Bible speaks we speak, where the Bible is silent we are silent'?" "What should be our relation to other religious bodies? To what extent can we work with them?"

Cotner University aims to secure during 1901-1902, "$25,000 endowment and 350 students." The raising of endowment is being pushed by two plans: Endowment Notes, for a term of years, bearing interest, which will go in the end to the permanent endowment, and Endowment Pledges, the interest on which is to be paid for an indefinite term of years unless the pledge is recalled by the subscriber. In the last fortnight over $3,000 has been pledged by these two methods. This has been on the whole a prosperous year for Cotner. The new Dental Department opened last year has prospered and this year is organized as one of the independent colleges of the University. Kushi Kumamoto, its first graduate, returns to his native country, Japan, to practice his profession. The Medical college more than doubled its enrollment this year and sent out twelve graduates. The total enrollment of the University for the year in all departments has been 230, an increase of 35 per cent over last year.

The annual convention of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society was held last week at Akron, enjoying the hospitality of the High Street church and its pastor, J. G. Slayter. In this hospitality the Second, Third and Fourth churches shared, and their pastors, G. W. Moore, Luther Moore, and W. D. Van Vooris assisted. The report of the active and successful corresponding secretary, S. H. Bartlett, showed substantial progress in the work of evangelization in Ohio during the past year. The missionary enterprises were never so prosperous in that state, and the outlook never so hopeful. The convention was the largest in the history of the society. C. W. Huffer was the efficient president and on the program appeared among others the names of J. M. Van Horn, L. G. Batman, J. E. Pounds, W. A. Harp, Mrs. Susie Rijnhart, Mrs. Mary Graybiel, T. W. Pinkerton and Herbert L. Willett. The convention goes next year to Columbus.

Episcopal.

Rev. Dr. Samuel Hart of the Berkeley Divinity School at Middletown, Conn., was elected to the professorship of pastoral theology of the General Theological Seminary in New York city, May 21, at the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees.

A special session of the synod of the diocese of Springfield, Ill., has been called to meet at St. Paul's pro-cathedral, Springfield, June 25, to decide upon a division of the diocese into the setting off a missionary diocese.

Ground was broken for the new cathedral, at the corner of Euclid avenue and Perry street, Cleveland, O., May 21.

Rev. Frederick W. Taylor, D. D., of Springfield, Ill., has been elected coadjutor for Bishop Burgess of the diocese of Quincy. He has been rector of St. Paul's, Springfield, for the last thirteen years.

Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, the son of Principal Marshall Lang, of the University of Aberdeen, in his thirty-seventh year, has been chosen to succeed Bishop Ingram as Canon of St. Paul's and Bishop of Stepney, East London. He has lately published a volume upon "The Miracles of Christ," which has attracted deserved and favorable comment. From his entrance into the church of England Mr. Lang was a marked man, and young as he is he was one of those invited to take part in the late conference at Oxford between churchmen and non-conformists upon the priesthood and sacraments, which conference was promoted by Dr. Sanday.

Friends.

The yearly meeting was held in Philadelphia May 14-15. Much satisfaction was expressed with the report of the incorporated trustees and their management of the large amount of money entrusted to them. The various educational funds are all in flourishing condition.

Lutheran.

The fortieth biennial convention of the general synod is being held in Des Moines, Ia., opening May 29 and continuing ten days. The membership of the Lutheran church has grown rapidly in the United States during recent years by reason of the large immigration from Germany and the Scandinavian countries, bringing this church up to a position ranking third in strength among the Protestant churches in this country. The Lutheran population, according to the latest figures, amounts to 7,386,746, of whom about 2,590,000 are actual communicants of the church. The general synod, which meets in Des Moines this year, is composed chiefly of English-speaking churches, and is the most distinctively American of any of the Lutheran organizations. These organizations differ only in details of administration, and in some church customs. They all have the same doctrinal basis and subscribe to the same creed, the Augsburg confession, though some of the churches have made additions to it. This convention will be composed of 264 ministers and lay delegates with about 60 officers, missionary secretaries, and chairmen of committees.

Methodist.

Rev. John Wesley Solomon died May 17 at Seale, Ala. With one exception he was the oldest member of the Oklahoma conference, and was one of the best known ministers in the state.

The funeral of Rev. Dr. John Dew Gilham occurred May 17. He had served as pastor at Gillespie, Litchfield, Kane, Upper Alton, Edwardsville, Nashville, Centralia, Belleville, Carbondale. He had been presiding elder of the Lebanon district and delegate to the General Conference in 1891.

Two of the Detroit, Mich., churches are to be consolidated—the Oakland Avenue and the North Woodward Avenue. A new church edifice will shortly be built at the corner of Woodward avenue and Melbourne street. Rev. C. L. Adams will be pastor, and Rev. Mr. Shaw, of the Oakland Church, associate pastor. The old Woodward Avenue Church will be used for the united congregations until the new edifice is erected, while the Oakland Church will be maintained as a mission and Sunday school. The combined churches will start with a membership of 350.

New Orleans Methodists are taking steps towards organization of city mission work.

A missionary mass meeting of all the Methodist churches in Nashville, Tenn., was held May 20. There was much missionary enthusiasm.

Presbyterian.

May 12, the pastor at Wayne, Neb., the Rev. D. C. Montgomery, received into the church fifteen new members, making a total of twenty-four during the past month. Twenty-one of these were received upon profession of their faith in Christ.

The church at Bluffton, Ind., held its semi-annual congregational meeting Monday, May 6. Reports were most encouraging. During the year fifty have been added to membership, thirty-six being on profession. Present membership is 400. A debt of $14,000 on the new building is all paid or provided for but $1,900. By unanimous vote of congregation $150 was added to the pastor's salary. Dr. C. G. Miller has been on this field seven months.

At Pasadena, Cal., forty-five united with the church May 5; twenty-one upon profession of faith.

The amount given by foreign mission work in the United Presbyterian Church last year was $162,727.92.

The Board of Aid for Colleges and Seminaries of the Presbyterian Church has aided seventy-eight institutions, scattered over twenty-nine states and territories. Thirty-six schools have been founded. The board desires $150,000 for the coming year in order to do its work adequately.

The Woman's Board of Home Missions re-elected its old board of officers, Mrs. D. R. James of Brooklyn being its president, and the treasurer, Miss S. F. Lincoln of New York.

The Presbyterian Church has a foreign missionary force numbering 715, of whom 299 are men and 416 women.

The native force numbers 583 ordained preachers and licentiates, and 1,258 other helpers, making a total of 1,841. There are now 636 native churches, with 41,559 communicants—4,481 having been added during the year—and 817 schools are maintained, with 25,910 pupils. There are in Sabbath schools 38,137 pupils. Eighty-four students are preparing for the ministry. The board has 117 mission stations and 1,182 out stations, distributed through thirteen different countries.

If your washing medium does that, what matters its cheapness or its working power? Is it safe? That's the first thing. Some imitations of PEARLINE are not safe. They eat the clothes, slowly, but surely. Don't experiment. You are sure of PEARLINE; stick to it; it is standard, tested, proved, by years of use and millions of women. 638

On the question of revision of the creed the votes show that sixty-three Presbyteries favor some revision of the confession of faith and eighty-eight Presbyteries favor some form of a supplemental statement of the doctrines.

Announcement is made of the death at Naples of the Rev. Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock, who succeeded Dr. Henry Van Dyke as pastor of the Brick Church, New York. He was one of the most popular men in the Presbyterian Church.

Under the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions there are 1,342 missionaries, including twenty-eight Mexican and Indian helpers.

The annual report of the executive committee of the Home Missions for the Southern Presbyterian Church made to its General Assembly in session at Little Rock, Ark., showed receipts of $55,356. Seventy-nine presbyteries are represented in this assembly, by about 200 clerical and lay commissions.

Sunday Schools to the number of 767 have been organized by the Presbyterian Board of Publication in its missionary department during the year; 304 schools were re-organized. Total memberships of teachers and scholars in these schools, 38,269. This board issued 46,541,512 publications for the year. The net profits were $23,881.

Wednesday was crowded with anniversary gatherings of various organizations, and a Unitarian festival was held in Tremont Temple. On Thursday morning there was a communion service at King's Chapel, followed by the annual meetings of the Moral Education Society, the Unitarian Historical Society, Unitarian Sunday School Society. The Massachusetts Evangelical Missionary Society held its annual meeting on Friday and the Society for Aged and Destitute Clergymen.

General.

The fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Young Men's Christian Association in the United States will be celebrated June 11-16 in Boston. During these years 6,192 branches have been established, with 521,000 members, among fifty nations speaking thirty-five different languages. Fourteen hundred secretaries are employed, two schools for training officers conducted, and $40,000 per year contributed for Association work in foreign lands, where twenty secretaries are stationed. A building has been erected every nine days during the past year and the total valuation of property exceeds $24,000,000.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, speaking in Plymouth pulpit, Brooklyn, May 19, on the necessity of brotherhood, said: "It is our duty to make a nation so pervaded by the spirit of Christ that it shall be a witness of the power and grace of God. This we Americans have done, in a measure. We have treated the foreigners who have come to us as no nation has ever done. We have granted to them land and have opened to them our factories and schools. Our country is a revelation of the way the poor and the lowly are to be treated. Nothing is so inspiring as the way the Southern states have endeavored to uplift the negro race. The reports that come to northerners of cruelty and injustice are not representative, for the South has indeed done nobly." After citing our nation as an example for other nations, Dr. Abbott said this was not inspired by mere national pride. "I thank God that this one American nation stood for the rights of even a hostile China, that the government did not transgress upon their right, and it was the first to withdraw its troops."

An organization of clergymen has been formed in Atlanta, Ga., for the purpose of enforcing the Georgia Sunday law under which a person may be fined $1,000 and made to serve a year in the chain-gang for working on Sunday. Everything, excepting churches, hotels, and restaurants, is to close on Sundays in Omaha in future.

The Labor Secretariat, an organization formed by trades unions, is watching butchers, bakers, barbers and others in New York for violations of Sunday laws. One hundred bakeries were watched on a recent Sunday. In Philadelphia warrants were issued against 38 barbers for plying their avocations on Sunday, and 18 others were under bonds at the time on the same charge. In London, England, an agitation is in progress against Sunday concerts and other forms of "Sabbath desecration." The Sunday closing law is now a fixed and probably permanent city regeneration of Bangor, Me.

An unusual national convention will be held in Madison, Wis., July 5-7, it being the second annual session of the Gideons, a religious organization of traveling men. It is expected to bring here fully 300 Gideons, and their wives are expected to add 200 more. At the first national gathering, held in Waukegan, Ill., there were 600 traveling men enrolled as members. The organization is the result of some earnest endeavor of a few traveling men who felt the spiritual and social need of protecting the good name of their calling.

Arrangements are being made for a "Christian workers' conference" at Wheaton, Ill., July 22 to 28. The preparations are well under way and the prospects are unusually bright for a memorable gathering. W. R. Moody has sent word that the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will speak several times during the meetings. Addresses will be delivered by the Rev. R. A. Torrey, pastor of the Chicago Avenue Church, and superintendent of the Moody Bible Institute. The Rev. Johnston Myers, pastor of Immanuel Baptist Church, will speak on Monday, July 22. Promises have been received of missionary addresses by the Rev. Dr. Roy of the American Missionary Association; the Rev. Dr. Lounsbury of the Baptist Missionary Board, and Harry Monroe of Pacific Garden Mission. The Rev. Milford H. Lyon, superintendent of the evangelistic work for the Illinois Christian Endeavor Union, is expected to give a number of evangelistic addresses. L. Wilbur Messer of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago has promised to speak for the Young Men's Christian Association or send a representative to do so. The singing will be in charge of Mr. Williams, the evangelistic leader. His wife will be with him during the week. Messrs. Excell and Bilhorn may be with the conference for a part of the time. The afternoons will be reserved for rest, excursions and athletic sports.

The American Bible Society has laid out a costly and extensive plan of work in the Philippines, according to Dr. John A. Pearson, field agent of the society. He says: "It is variously estimated that there are between twenty-four and eighty-four different languages and dialects in the islands, and from correspondence with workers in the field I have learned that it will take ten different versions of the bible to reach them. It is estimated that translations will require all of one man's time for ten years, together with that of a native teacher as assistant.

The twelfth annual convention of the Brooklyn Christian Endeavor Union was very inspiring and very largely attended.

Official reports submitted at the convention of the Kansas State Christian Endeavor convention here today show that 540 senior and 271 junior societies reported with a membership of 9,870. The estimated membership of the state, including societies not reported, is 20,000. During the year the societies reported gave $3,340 to missions and $3,598 to other benevolences. The junior societies gave about $1,000 to missions.

A LIVING THERMOMETER.

The human system is constituted like a thermometer—climate, weather and seasons affect it and bring about various bodily conditions. The blood is the mercury; sometimes at the point of fever heat, again far down the scale, lifeless and sluggish in its circulation. We can tell by our pulse-beats, by our feelings, whether or not our blood is healthy and life-giving. Pure, rich blood is the jewel of health. If our blood is right, all the vital organs are nourished by it, and we are well. If it is wrong, the first thing needed is a blood cleanser and strengthening tonic to set it right again.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer has stood the test of more than a century's constant use. It eliminates all impurities from the blood and invigorates the entire system. Unlike other medicines, it is not to be had in drug stores. Special agents sell it. If there are none in your neighborhood, write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 S. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MATERNAL FORECASTINGS.

This is the dress that my baby will wear;

Touch it with care, for my heart lieth there,

Filmy and white like a garment of mist—

Show me the fold that I have not yet kissed.

Give to my needle a song and a prayer;

This is the dress that my baby will wear.

This little sleeve with its rume and lace

Soon will encompass in tender embrace

Baby's wee arm, and the little pink hand,

Waving good-by back to shadowy land—

Waving farewell to the sweet angels there;

This is the dress that my baby will wear.

Here in my room—in my temple—I pray,

Sewing and dreaming, a peace to the day.

Each tiny band is a band round my heart.

Each bit of lace makes the fond tear-drops start;

Every stitch is a stitch and a prayer;

This is the dress that my baby will wear. —Selected.

ONE WAY OF REVENGE.

H. Rea Woodman.

One lazy June day a beautiful white butterfly idling in the sunshine, lit on a Red Rose and sat there, slowly fanning himself with his big white wings, just enjoying himself, thinking of nothing in particular. After awhile, the Red Rose, who was very beautiful and vain, grew tired of the silence. She thought the Butterfly ought to admire her.

"Go 'way," she said, crossly. "I don't want you here!"

"But I am fanning you—it is a very hot day," said the Butterfly, waving his yellow-tipped wings gracefully, "I think it will rain."

"But I don't want to be fanned! Go 'way!" impatiently.

"Then I'll shade you," and the broad wings lay still, like tiny sails, spread to the breeze.

"I don't want any shade, thank you. I am not in the least warm," snapped the Red Rose.

A rose on the other side of the bush laughed merrily.

"Why, you were just fussing about the heat!" she said, "Before you came," turning politely to the Butterfly, "she really was."

"Well, I didn't say I wanted a worthless Butterfly to shade me!" scornfully tossing her crimson petals.

"I am not worthless!" cried the Butterfly. "Nobody ever called me that before! What are roses good for, if you please?"

"Why, we're good for lots of things!" replied the Red Rose, thinking very hard and talking very fast. "We go to funerals and make the ugly black coffins look beautiful—everybody says so! And we go to hospitals where sick people are, and cheer them up. And brides always wear us at all the big weddings, and we go to balls and parties and—and—everything! Roses are lots of use!"

The Butterfly laughed unpleasantly. "Yes, but you—you have never gone to a funeral or a hospital,—you've never cheered anybody up. What are you good for—anything special?"

"Oh, go 'way—you are too stupid to talk to!" Then, turning languidly to another rose, "I don't care for butterflies—they're so stupid, you know."

The Butterfly's wings grew still again—quite still—and he said, quietly, "You don't like butterflies—honest now?"

The Red Rose was really very ignorant and silly, or she would never have answered as she did.

"No, I don't! So there, now! They think they're so smart and pretend to be so learned and traveled!"

The Butterfly did not answer this unladylike speech. He sat very still, his wings waving slowly and his bright eyes fixed absently on a Daddy-Long-Legs, who was solemnly striding along the top of a distant trellis. The white Butterfly was thinking very deeply, for after the Daddy-Long-Legs had dropped out of sight, the Butterfly continued to stare at the place where he had been, as steadily as before. After a few minutes' profound cogitation, the Butterfly smiled a philosopher's smile, poised his wings daintily, and serenely floated away. With vengeance in his heart and a smile on his face, he divulged his scheme to a great red-gold butterfly, whom he found asleep on a crimson poppy. Then they told a tiny yellow one, who had nothing to do and was delighted to assist in any sort of a scheme. Then they found three more in the pansy bed, talking and flirting with the golden-eyed pansies. It took considerable eloquence and persuasion to get these three, but they were finally prevailed upon and tore themselves away.

An hour later, a fluttering brilliant cloud of butterflies settled on the Red Rose. No word was spoken, but each butterfly seized a petal, pulled it out and dropped it on the grass. The discipline was excellent: in two minutes, nothing remained of the beautiful Red Rose but a green waxen calyx, and an irregular circle of crimson petals, like drops of blood on the green grass. Each butterfly, having pulled out two petals, quietly retired to a leaf to hear the official announcement and indication. From every direction birds and bees came flocking, attracted by the exclamations of fear and dismay from the roses. The butterflies waited calmly, and, when he considered the audience large enough, the white Butterfly, sitting on a white rose bud, surrounded by a brilliant and attentive audience—birds, butterflies, flowers and bees, made a speech.

"Doubtless, my friends," said the white Butterfly, sitting very erect and looking very judicial, that is, as erect and judicial as possible, for the white rose bud trembled from fear, "Doubtless, my friends, you are all shocked at the way we have treated the Red Rose. It is only right that we explain our action to you. The Red Rose was impolite—yes, impudent to me. Impudent, my friends, actually impudent. She said that butterflies were useless and stupid—stupid—she used that obnoxious word, she did indeed!"

Here the little yellow butterfly broke into wild applause, but was instantly silenced. The white Butterfly went on, "As was my plain duty, I reported the slander to the other butterflies in the garden. Upon consultation, they decided upon this course of action." (Cries of "No, No!" "Go on!" "Mistake!" from the butterflies and "Hear, hear!" from the bees.) "I myself," continued the speaker, when the excitement calmed sufficiently, "I myself consider the plan at once dignified and conclusive. For what respect could you have for us butterflies if we allowed a rose to call us stupid? The Red Rose has at last accomplished something in the world"—here the white Butterfly's voice grew deep and sarcastic, "she has attended a funeral."

A burst of applause, mostly from the butterflies, followed these words. The roses were sobbing softly, and the bees mumbled, threateningly, among themselves. A tiny Wren talked excitedly with a big Blue Jay, or rather, talked at him, for the Jay was too mad to hear. All was confusion. From a bunch of bees, a big black-and-yellow Bee, with a voice like a toy drum, buzzed up to the white Butterfly.

"I don't care!" he bumbled, loudly, "It was a mean trick!"

"You're just saying that because you wanted the Red Rose yourself!" retorted the white Butterfly.

"No, that isn't it!" cried the Bee. And it really wasn't.

"Well, the Rose deserved it, anyway," said the Butterfly. And he honestly thought so.

Perhaps they both were right—it is a queer world.—Drake University.

Gratitude and Forgiveness.

As man is the only being capable of sinning, so ingratitude belongs alone to him. His memory is brief. Everything, in some way, expresses its recognition for what it receives. The flower turns its face toward the sun, and the little birds greet the morning with their sweetest songs; but man forgets his God. He goes to work at day with no sense of gratitude, and at night rests his tired head upon a thankless pillow. Sometimes we find it where we least expect. Jesus met it in the stranger from Samaria, and the poor woman in the house of Simon had no voice but tears. The conversions of modern times are just and valid, no doubt, as those of the apostolic age, but the intense gratitude that once marked forgiveness is no longer present. Faith and feeling have parted friendship. Emotion is regarded as a mark of weakness rather than that of genuine strength, but in the days of Christ men laughed and cried when He spoke the magic word, "forgive!"—Presbyterian Journal.

GOOD
 HOUSEKEEPING

A High-Class Monthly Magazine, Conducted in the Interests of the Higher Life of the Household

Two Good Journals for the Price of One

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING occupies a position peculiarly its own, in that it is conducted in the interests of the higher life of the household, for it is devoted not only to practice, but to inspiration—to telling how the everyday affairs of life may be conducted, but always leading upward. Its departments, regular and special, are as numerous as the varied phases of the life of the household. It appeals to either sex, whether of young or of advancing years, and not only helps but gratifies the physical, mental and aesthetic natures of all its readers. The contributors' list for the coming year is a long one, and contains the names of many writers who are already familiar to the public. The following topics and lines of research are samples of what GOOD HOUSEKEEPING is doing for the dwellers in the homes of America:

COMPLETION OF THE GREATEST NEW TESTAMENT COMMENTARY

The Biblical Illustrator

Edited by REV. JOSEPH S. EXELL, M. A.
Joint Editor of the "Pulpit Commentary."

We have prepared for your consideration a most remarkable offer. Years of patient and careful study and research, by a small army of students under the veteran editor, Rev. Joseph S. Exell, M. A., whose "Pulpit Commentary" is second only to this work, have been given to the preparation and publication of this Commentary of Commentaries, The Biblical Illustrator. As the volumes appeared one by one the enormous outlay precluded the placing of the price sufficiently low to be within easy reach of all. Notwithstanding this fact, the work is most popular and is the source of much comfort to thousands of busy pastors and workers. As an economizer of time and labor it is without a peer. The New York Observer tells the whole story when it says: "No matter how full his library may be, and how empty his pocket-book, the minister who sees this work will want it."

We have perfected a plan for supplying this set at Half Price, the terms of payment involving an immediate expenditure of

Only Two Dollars

The set will be sent for your examination upon receipt of this nominal sum. Nor need the fact that you already possess some of the volumes in the set debar you from participating in the advantages of this offer.

Full details of the plan are published in a separate booklet showing size and style of page and giving very complete information. This booklet is FREE and will be sent to all applicants. Please fill in blank and forward and complete information will reach you promptly.

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

A High-Class Monthly Magazine, Conducted in the Interests of the Higher Life of the Household

Two Good Journals for the Price of One

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING occupies a position peculiarly its own, in that it is conducted in the interests of the higher life of the household, for it is devoted not only to practice, but to inspiration—to telling how the everyday affairs of life may be conducted, but always leading upward. Its departments, regular and special, are as numerous as the varied phases of the life of the household. It appeals to either sex, whether of young or of advancing years, and not only helps but gratifies the physical, mental and aesthetic natures of all its readers. The contributors' list for the coming year is a long one, and contains the names of many writers who are already familiar to the public. The following topics and lines of research are samples of what GOOD HOUSEKEEPING is doing for the dwellers in the homes of America:

Successful Kitchens
Solutions of the Domestic Help Problem
The Latest Hygiene
Home Handicraft of Various Kinds
Homemade Christmas Gifts, Illustrated
Truth about Dishonest and Adulterated Food
Famous Cooking Schools Described
People Who Have Uplifted Home Life, Illustrated
New Sources of Income
Tasteful House Furnishing, Illustrated.
'Good Housekeeping Babies'

PRAYER.

A prayerful soul, brothers, through the face,
Like perfume through a rose;
No art can imitate the grace
Of spiritual repose.

The heart that talks with God in prayer
Unconsciously imparts
Some portion of the truths learned there
To other minds or hearts.

It needs no utterance of a word,
It needs no page or book;
What God speaks to the heart is heard
In every act or look.

Pray much; in pleasure, toil or rest
Call on that Unseen Force,
And let your heart kneel in your breast,

THE SPIRIT OF BREADTH.

NOTHING is more tempting than the desire to be classified theologically as well as socially. We have men all around us who hunger to be known as "broad" or as "orthodox," as of "the new theology," or as "Bible Christians," and so on, according to their varying interests and associations. Of all their inclinations the one which is most alluring is undoubtedly the title "broad." That word carries with it such an atmosphere of freedom, of life, of sympathy, of genial energy that very few men indeed have not felt its attractiveness. And of course this feeling is sharpened by the universal desire to escape the terrible alternative of being called "narrow." In fact, there are many people who use the word "broad" as if it were an equivalent for the word true. We wish to ask, and it may be, to answer the question, what ought we to understand by the word "broad" and to what class of theological leaders is it appropriately applied?

In ordinary circumstances a man's breadth is supposed to be shown rather by the doctrines which he denies than by those which he affirms. Thus a Unitarian, or a man moving in that direction, is said to be broader than a man convinced of the Deity of Christ and holding some form of Trinitarianism. But if a man goes further off than Unitarians like Channing or Martineau, if he names our Lord easily and comfortably alongside and in the midst of Plato and Shakespeare and Goethe, he will most certainly claim to be "broader" than those who still give the unique supremacy to Jesus Christ. So, with the doctrine of the atonement a man who has given up the position that Christ is in any sense a substitute for mankind as he dies on the cross receives the honor of being called "broad" as compared with the man who holds to a vicarious sacrifice as the ground of forgiveness. The latter may be a more learned man, a more sympathetic soul, a deeper thinker, but he is not so broad as the former. In relation to the Bible the same distinction is apt to be made. The man who classes the Bible with the Koran and the sacred books of the East, is "broader," we are to understand, than he who, it may be, again with wider scholarship and wider vision, believes in the Bible as the word of the living God.

Undoubtedly there is something wrong here in our use of words and a prejudice is excited against some men which they do not deserve and an honor is given to others which they have not earned. It must be perfectly obvious the moment it is said that if God lives then the convinced Theist is a much broader man in his actual grasp of truth in the relation of his mind to the facts than the man who is in doubt on that subject. If the law of substitution underlies all history alike of nature and of man, and if on the cross God himself has come under the sweep of that law in sheer love for man, then the man who holds this with heart and soul and mind is really a much broader man than he who cannot see it and merely hates it.

Look at it as we may the word "broad" ought not to be applied to the opinions which a man holds unless we believe that they are true. Only to deny what the majority in the church have held is not in itself a sign of breadth of mind; for if the majority have been right, then they are the broad church. Pilate was not a broader thinker than Jesus because he was able to sneer at the profound convictions of his august Prisoner. The judge who called Paul mad because Paul had very definite things to say about the new gospel did not prove his own breadth thereby. Neither is the Theosophist broad because he smiles superciliously at the Theist, nor is the Theist broad because he says it is unscientific to believe in the miracle of the resurrection, nor is the Universalist broad because he says that all men ought to be saved and therefore all men shall be saved.

Origin of Term "Broad."

The fact is that the word "broad" was at first used in relation to certain exclusive claims made by certain sections of the Christian church. The first men to wear the title, and very unwilling they were to be so labeled, were men like Arnold of Rugby, Frederick Maurice, Charles Kingsley and Dean Stanley. They were so called because they refused to acknowledge the ecclesiastical pretensions of the High Churchmen on the one hand and of the Low Churchmen on the other. It was not theological conviction against which they directed their battle but the narrowness of sectarian claims. On fundamental matters of the faith Maurice held tenaciously to the central positions of the Church catholic. He defied the spirit of exclusion, of intolerance, of prejudice. It is a matter of history that the word "broad" which was first applied to these men against their will was gradually assumed by various groups of men on the ground that they denied certain doctrines and affirmed others. Thus it came about that a man's breadth is now measured by his capacity to deny or his incapacity to believe what ordinary Christians affirm and accept.

It is the Spirit of Breadth which is attractive. It is because that Spirit is pure and kind and keen and strong that so many men are fascinated by the name. We admire it wherever we find it, in a Luther or in a Spinoza, in a Martineau or in a Bushnell, in a Henry Drummond or in a D. L. Moody. It is, therefore, an impertinence for any man to claim that he is "broad" merely because he does or does not profess to hold a certain opinion. That he arrogates the title for himself and his group makes us suspect that he neither understands nor possesses the Spirit of Breadth.

What Is the Spirit of Breadth?

What is that Spirit? We shall name just three qualities by which its presence in any man may be discerned.

In the first place he must hold his own conviction definitely, firmly and sincerely. The man whose faith is all a haze, is not broad; he is nothing. The basis of all spiritual life must be at last connected with certain powerful, clear beliefs, grounded in an ultimate authority and grasped as a prize that must be kept forever.

In the second place the "broad" man must seek to understand and even sympathize with the man who doubts or denies what is dearest to him. This is a gift of God's grace. It can only be won on our knees and in the school of Christ and his apostles, in the atmosphere of the real New Testament. It must not imply or create weakness in one's own convictions; it must grow out of the memory of one's own battles for the truth and not of insight into the complexity of the human mind. The subtlety of the influence of sin on all man's life and chiefly upon his opinions is the dread and deadly fact which the man of the broad spirit will always hold in view for his own humbling and the stirring of love in his heart toward all men.

And in the third place the Spirit of Breadth will keep a man from taking action against his brother man on doctrinal grounds. This is the hardest lesson for the narrow mind to learn. The narrow man thinks he is doing God service when he persecutes a heretic out of his own fellowship. To him exclusion is the immediate duty and a possible effort to enlighten and save his brother must come second. The Spirit of Breadth is the spirit of the Savior who would even die to save his brother from a false belief, and who sees that to shut that brother out of fellowship is the way to make his conversion infinitely harder to achieve.

In fact the Spirit of Breadth ought to fill those who hold with most conviction the profoundest truths of the gospel salvation through Jesus Christ, and to fill them more than any other. He is of the broad church who believes these highest things about the Son of God and goes forth in the might of love and truth to convince the world by the power only of the Spirit of God.

A PRAYER.

Duties are pressing on me,
And the time for work is brief;
What if with purblind vision
I neglect the very chief?

What if I do with ardor
What a thousand could, maybe,
And leave undone forever
What was meant for only me?

From that, O Master, save me!
Move my hand, thought, voice, and pen,
To their peculiar service
In this world of needy men!

And, oh! whatever labors
Are not finished with my day,
Let them be for self—for others
Grant the doing, Lord, I pray!

THE PLACE OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIAN TRUTH.

THE Holy Spirit is no longer "the neglected term of the Trinity." Nor is the doctrine of the Holy Spirit any longer passed over in silence by the pulpit. No themes awaken more interest at religious gatherings than these which relate to the extent and nature of the Spirit's work. They are among the living issues of the day to the study of which many minds are turning.

That the elucidation of this vital doctrine should have been left to the present age is only what might have been expected. In the development of truth the revelation of God in the Spirit comes last. "The succession indicated in the terms Father, Son and Spirit is a philosophic and progressive culmination," says Dr. Parker. "The holy man is followed by the holy Spirit," says Bishop Andrews.

Looking at the doctrine of the Holy Spirit in its relation to the law of development which is the only way in which it can be intelligently viewed—we learn that the Spirit is now speaking to the church, giving to her an ever-enlarging revelation of Christian truth. He is leading her into all the truth, correcting her errors, dispelling her darkness, and giving to her a clearer knowledge of the ripening purpose of redemption that runs through the ages. He causes new light to break from God's Word and works, as fast as she is able to bear it. He has nothing essentially new to teach. The truth into which he leads the church is not the truth as it is apart from Jesus, but the truth as it is in Jesus. His specific mission is to reveal Christ; to unfold the glory of his nature; to bring to light what lays hidden in the depth of his consciousness; to make known something of the fathomless meaning of his words; to take the things of Christ and show their real significance to his people; thus leading them into all the truth which Christ seminally revealed alike in what he said and in what he did. His progressive revelation is a progressive revelation of Christ. All that he makes known is what has been hid in Christ as the flower is hid in the seed waiting for the time of unfolding.

A Growing Gospel.

And because the revelation of Christ which the Holy Spirit is now giving is a growing revelation, the gospel to be preached is a growing gospel. Although ever the same in its essential elements, being in this sense "an everlasting gospel," it is constantly enlarging in the thoughts of men, and in the circle of things which it embraces. We come to the end of many things, but we can never come to the end of the saving knowledge of the risen, living, reigning, conquering Christ whom the Holy Spirit is constantly revealing. The light which the Holy Spirit causes to break upon this benighted world from his teaching, from his cross and from his life is the light in which all men are to walk; a light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

The Holy Spirit is also imparting to the church an ever-increasing measure of the life of Christ. He is the agent by whom Christ is fulfilling the purpose of his earthly mission as expressed in the words, "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." The coming of the Spirit at Pentecost marks the beginning of a new creative epoch in which Christ works from the center of personality to the circumference of the social circle, until he becomes the indwelling life of the world. He gives to the world not a new ethical code but a new life. He breathes upon his people, saying, "Receive ye the Holy Spirit"; receive ye the breath of my life; let my Spirit dwell within you as the animating power in your lives. "The Holy Spirit," says Archer Butler, "lives in the soul under this dispensation as the Spirit of Christ." In Christian experience the Spirit of Christ is the spirit of man. So that "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."

Influence on Inner Man.

Signs of a power at work upon the inner man appear in every Christian life. The Holy Spirit in the heart works out objectively into holy, Christlike character. Those who have the spirit of Christ repeat the life of Christ. It was said of Dr. Scott of the Blantyre Mission in Africa, "To see him, and the Holy Spirit working in him made one as sure of the third person of the godhead as of the existence of Arthur's Seat." There is a kind of life which nothing, save the presence of the Holy Spirit of Christ in the heart, can explain. Christ is not dead—it was only his flesh that died. Quickened in the Spirit he lives again in the world. The new evangel in which his life is being written is the life of him in whom his Spirit dwells. He ascended upon high that he might fill all things with his affluent life; he descended again in the power of the Spirit as he had promised, that he might carry out this purpose by giving himself more and more for the life of the world.

That the Holy Spirit is giving to the church an ever-increasing measure of spiritual power means that he is giving an ever-increasing measure of himself. For he is the power of God in its highest form. He is Heaven's ultimate gift of power—a gift, moreover, not simply offered, but given. There is more of the Spirit's power yet to be got, but there is not more to be given. The fulness of his power ever waits for the readiness of man to appropriate and use it. The problem of utilizing reserved resources, which modern science is tackling with such marked success is the problem with which the modern church stands face to face. Now it is reasonable to assume that the resources of the spiritual world which are held in reserve for the children of God are just as ample, and just as adequate to the ends to be gained, as the reserved resources of nature. And if there was never a time when men drew so largely upon the stored-up forces of nature and made such an extensive use of them, never was there a time when the church drew so largely upon spiritual forces and used them for a greater variety of practical ends. The limit of the Holy Spirit's power is not yet reached; the possibilities touching what he can do for us and by us are not yet exhausted. For the larger work to which the church of to-day is called a larger measure of power is needed, and what is needed is provided. In the spiritual kingdom there is a perfect correlation between supply and demand.

The Day of the Lord's Power.

In view of the false judgments which are formed in reference to the place which the dispensation of the Spirit occupies in the plan of redemption, it is well to remember that the dispensation of the Spirit is the day of the Lord's power. The risen Christ is now accomplishing through the Holy Spirit what he failed to accomplish in the days of his flesh, which were the days of his weakness. He is gradually gaining the place of supremacy in the world's affairs which belongs to him by right. His kingdom is coming with inward power if not with outward pomp. From him originates a power which is constantly at work opposing and overcoming all the forces of wickedness, and working steadily towards an ideal righteousness. His Spirit is the source of all the moral progress of the age; as it is also the power by which the redemption of the world is yet to be accomplished. All expectations regarding the coming to earth of the kingdom of heaven that are not based upon the inworking of the Holy Spirit upon human souls, are vain. Unless the sociological movement of to-day is born of the Spirit it can never see the kingdom of God. The only power that can regenerate human society is the power that can regenerate human souls; the only power that can bring into unity the discordant elements in human life is the power that can bring discordant lives into oneness with God. When at length the work begun at Pentecost is completed and a great multitude whom no man can number out of every nation and of all tribes and peoples and tongues are seen standing before the throne and before the Lamb a new humanity has been formed around a spiritual center, a new kingdom has been established by the operation of a spiritual power. The center of that new humanity is the Lamb, the power by which the kingdom is established is the power of the Holy Spirit.

THE POLITICIAN.

HE passing away of Ex-Governor Tanner of Illinois recalls his political passing, which occurred only a few months ago. The career of a man like Mr. Tanner is an interesting study, exhibiting as it does all the elements of a successful politician who scrupled at nothing to gain partisan and personal ends. No one ever questioned the political ability and diplomatic skill of this man. Without, perhaps, a single element of real greatness, he was still one of those characters around which the interests of a rather selfish grade of political organizers naturally revolved; because, however lacking in true leadership, he had the ability to become indispensable to those who were seeking to make use of the public interests for their own promotion or enrichment. In all the arts which make the typical politician of the time, he appears to have been accomplished.

And yet the administration of Mr. Tanner and his continuance in power have for so long a time constituted one of the most serious blemishes on the fair name of this great commonwealth, that not even the disposition to say nothing evil of the dead could silence the impulse to point the lesson of such a life as this. It is from such leadership that the Republic may well pray to be delivered. The universal sigh of relief which went up from the people of Illinois when at the last election of the chief executive of the state, the opportunity was presented for the first time in many years to make choice between men whose names were not synonymous with either dangerous political expedients or disreputable methods is an interesting commentary upon some of the burdens which the citizens of free states permit themselves to carry. Our politics is still too much controlled by men of this class to be the true expression of popular will. Not even the most ardent friends of Governor Tanner would, for a moment, have contended that his administration was in the interests of honesty, or that he was the real choice of the people. The utmost that could be pleaded was that he was popular with the men who were able to control the elections, and better satisfied the political interests of his party than any other man in sight.

The overwhelming rebuke administered to him in the senatorial elections, and the rapid decay in the political machinery of the state is one of the cheering notes of our present public life, and may be believed to herald the day when men of honor and integrity will be the only ones who shall dare aspire to places of trust within the gift of the people. This time can only come as the people appreciate their political duties, and assert themselves with unflinching loyalty, not to party, but to principle; not to the rule of the politician, but to righteousness in the conduct of public affairs.

SATAN IN THE GUISE OF A CALL.

By the Visitor.

HERE are three stages in the work of a successful minister of the gospel. One needs to say a successful minister, because there are other sorts. It is not of them I am speaking at this time. The three stages may be characterized as, first, that of obscurity, the second that of popularity and calls, and the third that of a fixed and permanent work in which life comes to its richest fruitage. A ministerial career that is marked by these three stages may be said to be successful whatever may be said of those of different sort. Some of the characteristics of these three periods may be pointed out with especial reference to the dangers of the second.

Entering Upon the Work of the Ministry.

When a young man starts out in his life work as a minister of the gospel there is always a certain timidity and hesitancy and wistfulness in his bearing. He is full of hope not unmixed with apprehension as to the results of his work. He has for the most part a fitting appreciation of his own merits and hopes that he may have sufficient modesty and wisdom to merit the good approval of his people. Of course he feels that he has not yet reached the place for which he was intended. He has taken a small church because it was the best thing offered since leaving college and he is saying to himself that he proposes to make his mark here in such fashion that he will be noticed and needed in a larger field; nevertheless he is not impatient to get away. Indeed, like John Carmichael, he tells himself that he hopes he will not receive a call to a large city church before the expiration of his first pastoral year. If he is a wise young man he will understand that the opportunities offered him by a small pastorate are of the very highest value and that he will be likely to do more solid and extensive reading in the first year or two of his ministry in the small church where he has providentially been placed than in any subsequent year of his life. Happy is the man who knows this occasion and can use it to his highest advantage. From the stress and difficulties of a city pastorate a young man just from college or seminary ought to pray to be delivered as from a dread misfortune. He will probably not understand the reasons for this attitude at first, but his work will soon prove the value of two or three years of quiet study and reading while he is winning his spurs in his first pastoral experience.

The Turning Point.

Then comes one of the turning points of his life. His work has been noticed by a larger church and as they are without a minister they send him a tentative call which throws him into a state of mind. His work is prospering where he is and he himself is growing in self-command and ability to do the best work of his life, yet there is a fascination about this call which he can hardly describe. It is the beckoning of a hand that invites him to a wider field, ampler financial rewards, and, withal, there is that subtle flattery implied in the call which persuades him that his talents are too conspicuous to remain in the obscure place he now holds.

If he is a wise man he will carefully consider the meaning of this experience. Even a tolerable success is sure to bring him calls repeatedly, and many of these will be to fields which allure him with the promise of larger work and greater conspicuity. He may for ample and sufficient reasons decide to accept in due season one of these invitations to a more ambitious ministry. The probability is that such will often happen in the life of most ministers, but what the Visitor is anxious to affirm with emphasis is that the success of a man's life lies in inverse ratio to the changes in his past or three propositions. First, that if his work is at all successful there are many churches that will wish his services. There is nothing in this fact to flatter or unduly puff his pride. It is the experience of every man of fair success. Secondly, he must remember that the difference between a strong and weak man is the ability to regard these calls as the commonplaces of his work and the price which good service is likely to command in any field, but at the same time as the most subtle and dangerous temptation of his ministerial career. The call offers him an opportunity of evading the problem which is confronting him in his own ministry. There are some factors in his congregation with which he finds it difficult to deal. New demands are constantly made upon him and the friction of the machinery brings him at times to the verge of departure. It is just in such moments as this that the true metal of the minister is tested. The difference between the long pastorate and the short one lies in this ability of the truly strong man to grapple quietly and modestly with the difficulties of his position and surmount them while the weak man confronted by a hard situation grows peevish and impatient and is tempted by a call received at that moment to abandon his work and start in afresh with the whole foundation of a truly successful minister to be laid elsewhere.

Changes Sometimes Necessary.

I am not denying that there are reasons why a minister should change his field of operation at times. There are now and then misfits of men and place even where the man is a strong man and the place is ordinarily considered advantageous. But usually a man's reputation with thoughtful people is made upon the basis of the permanency of his work. I know several men who are considered excellent preachers, but of whom it is likely to be said, "Yes, he is a good man, but he doesn't wear." Such men become religious "rounders." They stay for a period of a year or even three or four years at a church and then leave because they haven't depth of root or power of adjustment or self-restraint sufficient to give them the joy of permanence and the results that wait upon it.

Permanent Ministry.

There comes a third period in the life of a really great preacher, and this third period marks him as great. Circumstances deny this experience to some who may be in true senses strong men. But there is one experience that shows that a man may be considered a really strong and effective minister of the gospel. This comes to pass when his ministry settles itself into such permanent form that it is taken for granted that he is a fixture. I know of no more honorable place to which a man might aspire than that which is recognized as no longer a matter of question or doubt, but fixed and unchanging with a life tenure, and such a man has reached the point where he no longer receives calls. It is not because he is not greatly appreciated, for there are probably few churches that would not consider themselves honored by believing that they could secure him as a pastor, but he has been able to impress himself upon his own people and upon the church to which he ministers as a man who is not to be tempted away from the field where he believes God has placed him, and his work increases in geometrical ratio of value every year of his lengthening ministry. What church would have ventured to extend a call to Mr. Spurgeon to leave the Metropolitan Tabernacle, or to Phillips Brooks to leave Trinity or to Mr. Beecher to leave Plymouth, or to Frederick William Robertson to leave his small field at Brighton? It was not that these men had reached the highest place to which they could aspire, but it was because they felt they were in a situation which offered them amplest opportunity for service. Nor is the generation of great preachers of this class extinct. Who would not feel disappointed if he learned of the probable departure of Joseph Parker from the City Temple, London, or Washington Gladden from Columbus, or Frederick D. Power from Washington, or E. L. Powell from Louisville, or Geo. Darsie from Frankfort, or P. S. Henson or W. M. Lawrence from Chicago. Indeed, one would feel that there was a sort of insult in asking such a man to abandon his field and go elsewhere. The men and the place have become identified in some true sense. This is only a partial list of names that might be mentioned which have come to be effective most of all by the community of service in a single field.

Numerous Calls Not Greatest Flattery.

If then a minister is tempted to feel flattered by numerous calls to change his pastoral relations let him understand once for all that the highest compliment that delicacy of appreciation of a work which has become so fixed that it no longer permits any man to trifle with what is understood to be the greatness and permanency of the ministry in which God has set him. I never meet one of these "long-time" men without feeling an admiration for the greatness of their patience and courage which has led them steadily to decline all inducements to abandon under any stress of provocation a ministry which must at many times have been difficult and perplexing and yet which has grown richer to its fullness of value by the very passing of the years and is destined to leave itself on record not as a mere ripple on the surface of the water, to which so many ministers doom their lives by impatience or foolish ambitions, but to be a well-marked line upon the shore indented by increasing waves of power and purpose through a series of years that closes only with the passage to the highest ministry in the presence of the King.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Dr. Stalker on Evangelistic Work.

In answer to a query touching his attitude toward evangelistic work Dr. Stalker is reported to have said: "I believe in the diversity of the operations of the Spirit, and in the widest diversity of experiences. I work for long results and also for immediate ones; and I believe equally in catastrophic and educative developments."

Conscience of Politicians.

Dr. Guinness Rogers tells of a certain politician to whom he had made an appeal on the ground of conscience. "When I have to manage an election," said the politician, "I take conscience and everything of that kind and lock it in a box until after the affair is over." "And are you able easily to find it again?" was the pertinent retort.

Negation and Doubt.

The end of theology is knowledge, the end of religion is character. The first thing demanded of a religious teacher is that he have a definite and positive message. Hunger-bitten souls turn away with disgust from those who attempt to feed them with the husks of negation. Carlyle once said to a preacher who was airing his doubts before him: "I have plenty of doubts of my own, and have no desire to have their number increased. If you have anything to say that will help and strengthen me, I will listen to you, but if you have not, for God's sake hold your peace."

Bottomless Bathos.

What consummate asses some men and preachers can make of themselves! At the wedding of Dr. Heron and Miss Carrie Rand, Rev. Wm. T. Brown, the officiating clergyman, is reported to have said: "This is the time for the muse of a poet and the speech of a god." Rather was it a time for the scorn of men and the weeping of angels. To call that compact of companionship entered into "a sacrament" and "a divine event" is the sheerest nonsense. Nothing is more calculated to dissolve the bonds of our social order than such an open disregard of the sanctity of the marriage relation.

Cuba and the Platt Amendment.

The Platt amendment, giving the United States the right to interfere in Cuban affairs when it is necessary to preserve "Cuba libre" from destruction, has been adopted by the constitutional convention, but in such a way and under such comments and understandings, that it may make the path of the president very difficult. So thinks the New York Times. In other words, it may mean a war with Cuba or that the United States will have to give up entirely the oversight of that little island. This is not a reassuring view of the situation, but did we not go into the war with Spain that we might set Cuba free? We common folks who know nothing technically about the ways of politicians and latter-day statesmanship so understood it, and we are also of the opinion that truth and right do not as quickly change their nature or their obligation as politicians change their minds.

The Roman Church and Marriage.

Not with any sectarian feelings, but with profound regret, should we think of the Romanist views of marriage. While claiming to stand for such a high ideal of marriage, and practically claiming that marriages outside of their fold are irregular, in countries where the church has had full sway they have brought about a very deplorable state of affairs with regard to the subject. When the light was turned on in Cuba people beheld a sickening sight. The following dispatch in the dailies shows the state of the case in our possessions in the Pacific:

"The monks in the Philippines are accused of all kinds of atrocities. It is reported that the spread of concubinage is due to their refusal to perform the marriage service without large remuneration."

This is the fruit of a system which usurps the place of a definite revelation given from heaven, and places men and women, body, soul and spirit, in the hands of mere mortals. The church is not the guide of the human race. Christ is. The Bible is a record of revelation. It is the light by which we look upon the face and heart of the Master. The church is a body of witnesses to the living and ever-present Christ. It is no little sin, as the fruits of it show, for even the church to stand between Christ and the people.

Creed Revision.

A substantial advance was made at the Presbyterian General Assembly in the matter of creed revision. The position taken is that a new statement of doctrine is to be issued which will be supplementary to the Westminster Confession. It will be of the nature of a declaratory statement. In view of all the circumstances in the case, this is on the whole a wise decision; but it will be a difficult matter to get up a statement of doctrine which will harmonize with the ultra Calvinistic theology of the Westminster Confession. When this same work was undertaken in the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland some one suggested that the words of the preamble "consistently therewith," which referred to the supposed harmony between the declaratory statement and the confession, be changed into "inconsistently therewith." There is good authority for saying that it is never advisable to sew a piece of new cloth upon an old garment.

Is England Decadent?

An article in the May Contemporary review on "The Economic Decay of Great Britain" says that country is on the downgrade and that she will be bankrupt in ten years, economically and politically, unless there are greater energy and genius than have yet appeared. "It is," says the writer, "perhaps the grandest and at the same time the saddest, spectacle in the world to watch the decay of a mighty empire. This spectacle is at present afforded by Great Britain, with the whole world as spectators." This vision is surely disquieting enough, even to England's relatives, but the possibility of it cannot be denied. Nations get their growth and serve their purpose in the world like individuals, and then other nations take the lead. The lights of English history are the brightest and its shadows among the darkest in the annals of the world. But should the nation even be blotted out, like the hypothetical blotting out of the fixed star, her light will shine on the pathway of the human race for ages to come; her shadows will be remembered as warnings. In the meantime let us remember that the pallbearers have not yet been selected for the funeral.

The Battle of the Giants.

Hon. Henry Watterson and William Jennings Bryan are trying to adjust their political differences before the court of public opinion—at least Mr. Watterson comes forward with a long statement of their differences. For that fact in itself we have no concern, but some of Mr. Watterson's utterances are decidedly interesting. We infer that he would divorce morality from statesmanship and put success—which with him seems to mean getting into office—above all other considerations. He says: "The baby Jonathan grown to manhood is going the gaits. It may be wrong. But moral platitudes will not stop him. * * * This may be good enough moral philosophy of the copy-book variety, but it is mighty poor statesmanship." A majority of the American people think Mr. Bryan's views of political questions wrong—about that we do not care now—but Mr. Bryan is right when he insists on taking morality into account in public questions. And in the long run that will prove to be statesmanship.

An English Millionaires Views.

An English millionaire is reported to have declared that the sweetest thing about having money is the power to tell anybody else "to go to the devil." Which makes one think of an incident in France. Foulon, possibly in the heat of excitement, said: "The people may eat grass." The remark was not forgotten, and later he was lynched; and to quote Carlyle's account of it, "His body is dragged through the streets; his head goes aloft on a pike, the mouth filled with grass; amid sounds as of Tophet from a grass-eating people."

It is very interesting to know what men of vast means are thinking. They have immense influence on the ideals of the nation, and when we know a people's ideals and methods of attainment it is easy to guess what they will finally come to unless turned aside by some new and unexpected force.

The New Revival.

That the air is tremulous with the near approach of some great spiritual movement is a very general belief. But let us be careful not to circumscribe the action of God's free Spirit. The Lord's thoughts are not always our thoughts, neither are his ways our ways. The blessing which is already on its way may be coming in a form in which we do not expect it. We may be looking for it in one direction while it is coming in another. God never repeats himself. The manifestations of his redeeming power are always more or less of the nature of a surprise. Hence the day of his visitation is seldom recognized when it comes.

More important than looking for the new revival is getting into the attitude that will bring it. When the conditions are supplied the blessing comes; when the water-pots are filled to the brim the miracle is wrought; when the church is upon her knees the holy fire descends. This was the attitude of the disciples prior to Pentecost. To quote the words of Dr. Alfred Cave, "They all continued in prayer—their prayer was persistent. They all continued in prayer—there was united petitioning. They all with one accord continued steadfastly in prayer—to the external association they added internal union. They all with one accord continued steadfastly in prayer—the difficulties in the way, and the absence of response did not shake their resolution." They believed in God and waited; and while they waited they set themselves in order.

The Presbyterian General Assembly.

The sessions of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church are being watched with great interest, not only by Presbyterians throughout the country, but as well by students of religious thought in all the churches. It is the ever-renewed struggle of venerable pronouncements of the past with the advancing and emancipating thought of the present, and as well with a larger vision which comes from the better acquaintance with the holy Scriptures themselves. There is, of course, the recognized division of sentiment which may always be expected in such debates. There are those who have no difficulty with the Westminster standards and advocate their maintenance unchanged. There are those, on the other hand, who wish them modified in such manner as to express the present views of Presbyterian scholarship regarding the teachings of holy Scriptures. Between these two forces there can be no acceptable middle ground, even though a compromise is finally reached. The whole situation is a commentary upon the inability of the church to formulate a human creed that can be more than temporarily satisfactory. The most simple solution of the matter would be the continuation of the Westminster creed as it now stands, regarding it as a venerable historic symbol of the church, giving at the same time full liberty of personal modification of views to the ministry of the church. This would save debate on the creed itself, which is not only inevitable as long as it remains, but would obviate the necessity of renewed discussion, at some future time, of any modified creed which might be formulated today.

CHICAGO NOÛES.

Whatever else may be said against Chicago, it cannot be charged with dullness. As the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph put it recently:

O, there's always something doing
In Chicago;
For sensations they keep brewing
In Chicago;
There is always some one posing,
And in some new way disclosing
That the freaks are seldom dosing
In Chicago.

Meeting of Theosophists.

The convention of the American section of Theosophical society, which met last week in the Athenæum building, was full of enthusiasm. The interest was deepened by the presence of Col. H. S. Olcott, the president-founder of the society. Those who think that the interest of people in the study of the occult is on the wane are mistaken. Man does not live by bread alone; he hungers for the spiritual, and if the church fails to supply it he will seek for it elsewhere.

Dr. Dowie Again.

John Alexander Dowie, "the divine healer," as the Philistine wickedly dubs him, manages to get a great deal of free advertising, and here we are helping to swell the general result. The net of the law seems to be closing upon him. A true bill has been returned against him, and he has been indicted for trial before the grand jury for criminal neglect in connection with the death of a patient at Zion Home. It is to be hoped that a quietus will in some way be put upon him.

The Annual May Festival.

The annual May festival of the Sunday schools of Chicago and vicinity, held last week in the Auditorium under the auspices of the Cook County Sunday School association, was a great success. H. N. Fairbank led the chorus of a thousand voices, and the presentation of flags was made by Rev. P. H. Swift of the Wesley M. E. church. The time of this "gathering" raises the question why Chicago should not be made the center of a series of great May meetings such as are held in London. Centralization is the order of the day.

Endowed City Churches.

Fifty years in the life of a Chicago church goes back very near to the beginning of things. The First Congregational church is now celebrating its fiftieth anniversary in a series of meetings. Last Monday evening it entertained the Chicago Congregational club. Among many noteworthy features of that meeting was the prominence given to the consideration of the problem of the down-town church. The movement of population has left the old historic First church in the midst of a shifting population composed largely of working people. It must either move westward or change its methods of work so as to adapt itself to changed conditions. There is a growing conviction that it ought to stay where it is and widen its work so as to become more or less of an institutional church. The problem of city evangelization unquestionably demands the creation of large, strongly endowed churches in the congested districts, and with a multiplicity of philanthropic agencies for the relief of distress.

A Novel Movement.

A novel movement is under way to unite in an organization the young men's Bible classes connected with twenty-one Presbyterian churches throughout the city. The object of this society is to further the material and spiritual welfare of young men. Among the helpful things contemplated is the establishment of employment and boarding bureaus. The work of the society will be along the lines of the Y. M. C. A.

The Olympic Games in Chicago.

Chicago is rejoicing in the decision of the committee on the place for the celebration of the Olympian games; their deliberation a week since resulted in the choice of this city for the Olympian celebration in 1904. This is an interesting event, as it is the first time in the history of the games that they have been brought to this country, and indeed the Paris celebration of last year was the first time they had ever been held outside of Greece. The games date from 776 B. C., the days when Greece was struggling into unity, a period contemporary with the reigns of Uzziah of Judah and Jeroboam II. of Israel, and with the ministries of the prophets Jonah, Amos and Hosea. The games soon assumed a panhellenic character and included contests of strength, chariot races, horse races, wrestling, leaping, throwing of the discus and of quoites, the hurling of the javelin and other athletic features. The event will be one of extraordinary interest, and will have a unique character, making it almost as important as a world's exposition.

The Army Canteen.

The struggle to keep the canteen out of the army is not without its difficulties. Having once secured the abolition of this legalized infamy in army circles, there is, of course, a renewed effort on the part of all interested in the liquor traffic to reinstate it, and the efforts employed to accomplish this purpose embrace the wide-spread employment of the press in the attempt to create the opinion that the canteen cannot be wisely excluded from army posts, and that more harm is accomplished by this exclusion than by what is supposed to be its regulated use. We are sorry to see that even ministers of the Gospel are lending themselves to the propaganda of restoration. It is not easy to secure an ideal condition as long as men's appetites are depraved, but it is far better to run the risk of some violations of law than to have the law itself openly defiant of moral principle and pledged to the interest of the worst elements of our civilization. Christian people can scarcely contemplate with tolerance the agitation to restore this iniquity to an official position.

CONTRIBUTED.

THE DEVIL.

By Alfred J. Hough.

Men don't believe in a Devil now, as their father's used to do;
They've forced the door of the broadest creed to let his Majesty through.

There isn't a print of his cloven foot, or a fiery dart from his bow
To be found in earth or air today, for the world has voted so.

But who is it mixing the fatal draught that palsies heart and brain,
And loads the bier of each passing year with ten hundred thousand slain?

Who blights the bloom of the land today with the fiery breath of hell,
If the Devil isn't, and never was? Won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saint and digs the pit for his feet?

Who sows the tares in the fields of time wherever God sows his wheat?

The Devil is voted not to be, and, of course, the thing is true;
But who is doing the kind of work the Devil alone should do?

We are told he does not go about like a roaring lion now;
But who shall we hold responsible for the everlasting row
To be heard in home, in church and state, to the earth's re-motest bound,

If the Devil by a unanimous vote is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody step to the front forthwith, and make their bow and show

How the frauds and crimes of a single day spring up? We want to know.

The Devil was fairly voted out, and, of course, the Devil's gone,

But simple people would like to know who carries his business on?
—The Independent.

WHERE ARE WE TO LOOK FOR THE PRESENCE?

By James M. Campbell.

In the recently discovered "Logia" are the words,
"Raise the stone and there shalt thou find me; cleave the wood and I am there." These words have been variously interpreted, the three most plausible interpretations being (a) that they refer to the finding of Christ in the sacrificial offering; (b) that they afford a suggestion of his immanence in nature; (c) that they refer to his presence in the common things of life. Dr. Henry Van

Dyke, contending for the last of these interpretations, represents a young man as having made a fruitless quest for Christ in the church and its ceremonies, when Christ himself appears to him and says:

"Where the many toil together, there am I among my own;
Where the tired workman sleepeth, there am I with him alone;
I, the peace that passeth knowledge, dwell amid the daily strife;

I, the bread of heaven, am broken in the sacrament of life.
Every task, however simple, sets the soul that does it free;
Every deed of love and mercy done to men is done to me.
Thou hast learned the peaceful secret; thou hast come to me for rest;

With thy burden, in thy labor, thou art, Felix, doubly blest.
Nevermore thou needest seek me; I am with thee everywhere;
Raise the stone and thou shalt find Me; cleave the wood, and I am there."

In emphasizing the idea that Christ is to be found in the common life of man it is not necessary to ignore or undervalue his Presence in other things. That he is to be found in the sacrificial offering is one of the commonplaces of religion. The altar has always been the meeting place between God and man. To the Jews as they entered the door of the tabernacle was the pledge given by Jehovah, "There will I meet with the children of Israel, and the tabernacle shall be sanctified by my glory." (Exod. xxix, 43.) And in the Christian assembly the worshipers take up the song:

"The King himself comes near,
And feasts his saints today;
Here we may sit and see him here,
And love, and praise, and pray."

Christ in Nature.

That he is to be found in nature is implied in the declaration, "All things were made through him, and apart from him was not anything made, that hath been made." Nature is the expression not alone of his creative energy, but also of his redeeming purpose. Its message is one of propitiousness. Its undertone is judgment against sin, but its overtone is mercy triumphing over judgment. Nature is the original version of the gospel of Christ. It is his hand-writing that is seen in the clouds; his voice that is heard in the winds; his smile that is made visible in the flowers; his goodness that is revealed in the harvests that reward the labors of the husbandman. The grace of nature is none other than the grace of the cross. The truth, however, to which special attention is now demanded is that the unseen Christ is to be found to-day where he was to be found in the days of his flesh, namely, in the haunts of men, and in the things of common life. With his love for man unchanged how could he remain in heaven listening to the harpings of the angels when he was sorely needed down here among the sinning and suffering children of earth?
The place to find a Savior is at the side of a sinner.
A gentleman once called upon a celebrated physician.
"Is your father at home?" he asked the little boy who answered the door. "No," was the reply. "Where do you think I could find him?" "Well," he said, with a thoughtful air, "You've got to look for some place where people are sick or hurt, or something like that.
He is sure to be somewhere helping somebody." And where are we to find the Savior of sinners but down here among them in the midst of the strife; their friend in loneliness, their consoler in sorrow, their helper in temptation, their inspirer in the hour when the path of duty is trod with leaden feet; their faithful ally when bankrupt of hope because the door of honest toil will not open to their most importunate knocking. He is by no means absent from them in their happier hours. He is present at weddings as well as at funerals; but it is where there is want and woe that he is principally to be found.

"'Tis here, O pitying Christ, where thee I seek—Here where the strife is fiercest, where the sun
Beats down upon the highway thronged with men
And in the raging mart."
—Richard W. Gilder.

When we turn to the distinct statement that at the opening of the new age the Son of man was to be seen "coming in his kingdom" (Matt. xvi, 28), we are led to inquire if mistaken views do not continue to exist regarding the nature of his coming. Because his coming was to be dispensational was it on that account to be any the less personal? Because it was to take place in a kingly way, was it on that account to be different from his coming in the common life of men?

New Idea of Kingdom.

One of the contributions which Christ made to the world's thought was a new idea of kingdom. King-hood in the world-sense was a thing of pageantry and pomp; according to Jesus it was a thing of moral supremacy. Jesus tried to have it clearly understood that his kingdom was not of this world. It was a spiritual, not a political dominion. Its insignia was not a scepter of gold, but a scepter of righteousness. The power by which it was upheld was not force of arms, but the power of love. In his wonderful series of paintings representing the principal scenes in the life of Christ, Tissot has caught the conception of the moral majesty of his peasant life. His life is regal throughout, but it is regal in a new way. Destitute of all the trappings of worldly greatness, it is made to stand out in all the matchless glory of its moral greatness. In the peasant king the life of the common man is glorified.

Jesus was the strangest king the world had ever seen. It was a strange kind of sovereignty that began in a manger and ended upon a cross. What is called his triumphal entry into Jerusalem was in reality his progress to the cross; but the way to the cross was the way to the kingdom. The idea of his kingdom was never taken seriously by his enemies. They treated it with ridicule because it was too unimportant to be treated with scorn. A king without a visible court, or throne, or army, or empire, what did Caesar care about the rivalry of such a monarch? When Pilate asked Jesus, "Art thou a king?" he answered, "Thou sayest it, because I am a king; to this end have I been born, and to this end am I come into the world that I might be a witness to the truth." A poor sort of a king this, a king whose empire was founded upon truth. Against such a well-meaning enthusiast Pilate had nothing to say, and he would have released him at once, had he not feared the people. The brutal soldiers, catching the mood of the hour, put upon Jesus a crown of thorns and a purple robe, and kneeling before him in mock homage, exclaimed, "Hail king of the Jews!" A sorry king! And yet of all the kings of earth the kingliest and the mightiest. The empire of the Caesars has perished, but his kingdom remains and grows. Before the throne of the Crucified the whole world bows in homage.

Christ's Kingdom Invisible.

The nature of Christ's kingdom is still unchanged. It is a kingdom of spiritual power humanly exercised. "The king eternal, immortal and invisible" is not seated upon a throne remote; he does not dwell apart "pavilioned in splendor." His presence chamber is more likely to be found in a humble attic than in a lordly palace. He comes to his people to-day in the same lowly ways in which he came to them in the days of his flesh. If then we are to see him as he has come, or as he is coming in his kingdom, we must get rid of all preconceived ideas of royalty. For this is a new kind of king. We must beware of falling back upon the old Jewish conception of his kingdom as a kingdom of outward power and glory. His kingdom cometh not with pomp and show. It is a spiritual thing. "The kingdom of heaven is among you, said Jesus to the people of his day. Alas that many in the present day should still be ignorant of its coming. Influenced by a narrow literalism they look for a kingdom that is yet to come, whose center is to be found in ancient Jerusalem. They forget that it has been said to the saints of the new age, "Ye are come unto the heavenly Jerusalem" (Heb. xii, 22). The walls of that holy city are slowly rising before our eyes; but it is an inevitable thing that those who look for a kingdom after the flesh, shall fail to see them.

The Emperor of China is kept out of the sight of common mortals, but he is seen in his kingdom—and just at present he is seen in his kingdom in a somewhat tragic and pathetic way. Christ is now as completely concealed from sight as he was before he became incarnate. But he has come in his kingdom and in his kingdom we may see him. His kingdom is a greater thing than many dream. Professor James Orr, in his recent volume on "Neglected Factors in the Study of the Early Progress of Christianity," contends that Christianity had a larger extension laterally, that is, in point of numbers; vertically, that is, in respect to the strata of society, and intensively or penetratively, that is, in its effect upon the thought and life of the age, than is generally acknowledged." In every direction the power of Christ extends beyond what men have dreamed. His influence extends outside the church. His spirit pervades society. He is king of the only real world-wide empire. Upon his head are many crowns. The universal dominion which is his by right he is coming to possess. To see the coming of his kingdom is to see the coming of the king.

May this word be added, that where Christ is to be found, there his people ought to be found? The words, "Where I am there shall also my servant be," were originally applied to the participation with Christ in his glory. They are equally applicable to participation with him in his service and suffering. A follower of Christ is one who goes where Christ goes. Christ's leading and the Christians following are both present acts. Where sin and sorrow abound, where the pale, pinched face of want bends over unrequited toil; where the bitter cry of the outcast is heard; where there are heavy burdens to unbind; where there are bleeding hearts to comfort; where there are fainting souls to succor, there the true Christian will be found. Where you find the Master you will find the disciple, and where you find the disciple you will find the Master.

THE MAKER AND THE TRADER.

W. D. MacClintock.

NE can love only those who produce things—mothers, farmers, miners, artists. The hunter we should dislike, and the trader and arranger we may scorn. Even the teacher can barely be endured, and that not that he handles other men's ideas, but that he very earnestly endeavor to produce trained persons. The healer is merely a necessary evil and not in the perfect world. The producer has so few, such independent elements to work with—raw and common material, his love of making and some skill. The first is everybody's, unlimited in quantity and always at hand. His love is his inspiration, his delight, and it creates a skill. He is the only one who can love things for themselves, because his love is in them and speaks out to him. It can be quiet and contemplate the thing he makes. He does not grow tired feeling its face, bending down his mind over and into its curves, indentations, edges; he goes over in fancy the moments of its making, reproducing the thrills of discovery or skill. He needs no other things to make this one a joy and never regards it as a means to an end or merely part of a whole or a syllabus. The contemplation of his work gives perfect satisfaction, being a joy both as a subject movement and object product—the mind flying back and forth between them, never feeling a disharmony in size or fit. Mothers, poets and farmers know; all others are both shallow and inexact. They can tell you the daintiest shapes and most intimate needs. Every instant the face of child and crop changes, but love follows as fast as change. This discipline of the hand and eye, this absolute knowledge of the physical detail, this flexible awareness of the quick changes of life in the growing child or verse—this is the only absolute liberality. The traders' ease is mere indifference. Should his work fail or perish, the producer leaves with it or follows it with a large share of his own tender feeling; his love makes it immortal. Never while love lasts can the child still-born or early dead, the song that could not find expression, the wheat blighted by late frosts fade from memory and wistful regard.

The trader, the manipulator, does not love the things he handles. He regards them only as indifferent means to a further end; that end gained, he hurries it into another series and so forever. He but counts them for correct numbers, judges quickly their grades and sees them placed for catching the eyes of consumers. His child is but a member of a "large and respectable" family, for whom he savagely works, not with whom he closely lives.

His cattle suggest to him only the market. He thinks of books as property. This man instinctively forever rearranges, destroying all natural associations. If the lady-slipper is dainty in its pink peculiarity there in the deep woods, your trader must make it grow in his staring city lawn. Nothing must grow old with him; he occupies his days seeing something new. He is the executive officer—he makes all things move, dispart and recombine. He proves his greatness by the number of startling combinations he can effect. Hand him your dear thing, produced with love, he flashes it into a scheme with things before and after, it becomes one of fifty points. Your child sinks into the school, your idea into a many-headed syllabus, your personality into his corps.

This man thinks, he does not contemplate or love. Meditation is idleness to him and mystic jugglery. He delights to startle, he uses precious stones and precious hearts as balls to see how many he can keep in the air at once. As production runs from the maker to the user, this man falls upon it, delays, deflects, uses it for his own advantage, enhances its price, delights in making all depend upon him, and out of it all plays the benefactor to the race. In this situation he speculates, produces disharmony, refuses distinctions natural, sends things to wrong ends, now and again discovering a peace which is only his relenting. In the garden two were given plats, one for flowers and one for fruit. They were bidden exchange them at a spreading tree by a brook. A third lazy one stole under the tree, first as a humble helper of their exchange, soon as a trading despot. Since then the two work harder and never meet.

This trafficker in hearts makes nothing, loves nothing, learns nothing. The earth produces, the plants bloom, the children refine without him. Immortality grows not in a convenience. The wavelet in the ocean is dearer to love than he. The peasant's song at labor makes all his show and bigness idle. For all the beauty his hands have touched, all the pathetic or happy labor wrought into its texture, all the love still lingering there, all fail to make him love, consider, bend to their several selves. He is the sentient but eccentric and arbitrary lock upon the stream, on whose stony face the water leaves no impress, except of its height

"SUPPOSE THE CHURCH SHOULD BE SWEEPED AWAY?"

W. H. Matlock.

One meets with this pessimistic supposition in perhaps an otherwise healthful book. It is heard in an otherwise good prayer meeting, where some devout disciple of Jesus responds to the maker of it, that the disappearance of the church would be followed by horrors and calamities, heralding the judgment of God on a wicked world and over a forgetful institution of his own founding. It may be read in otherwise good family journals whose editors are not exempt from sick headache. It may be read also alas! in the faces of many preachers of God's word and believers in the preached word, who have forgotten the "immutable things" of God, and whose anchor drags like that of a ship that has broken from its moorings. Let all such do as the poet Heine did when he felt his faith in God returning: "Quit herding swine with the Hegelians." Pardon, philosophers.

How many there are who shiver and shake, who quiver and quake whenever such possibilities are suggested. They seem to see the skyscrapers of New York city tumbling into the harbor; they seem to hear trumpets of destruction on every hand. The faith that remains calm is treated as sinful indifference. The true disciple, true because his faith in God is serene and inviolable, is mistaken by his more imaginative, feverish brother for a heretic; as if spiritual ague were a better test of faith in God than serenity of soul. At whose feet have they learned this? Certainly not at the feet of him who thought a grain of mustard seed a suitable symbol of a faith sufficient to put wheels under a mountain.

The Church Indestructible.

Is it possible to suppose that the church can be swept away? No. The church is not chaff. Nobody has a broom big enough. Nor does the man live that is herculean enough to do the sweeping. It can not be done; therefore, fearful soul, be consoled. Is it possible to imagine that the church can be burned away? No! For it is not a barrier to human progress, in spite of everything which might be said to the contrary. I have nothing to say in defense of the wood, hay and stubble; but the church will not be burned. It is not a wall between men and truth that they should tear it down. It is not a bastille for the human intellect, that men should raze it to make way for a statue of liberty. Its courts are large; its windows and doors and gates swing open toward the future and toward the light. The soul that flees from the beautiful temple of God and from the presence of Jesus will return to confess with shame its flight from the home of the soul, sweet home of the soul. Therefore be consoled.

Is it possible to imagine the church washed away? Now, if the theory of Thales is true, as many excellent minds maintain—with reference to the church at least—then there is indeed some danger that the church may ultimately return to its "first and essential principle." I have no hesitancy in asserting the sufficiency of faith against even the possibility of the church being washed away. It withstood fire, another principle of early Greek philosophy, through long ages, in spite of the persistent efforts of good men to burn up the best that was in it. To the disciples of Heraclitus the church owes its long list of martyrs. The Hylacists have withdrawn from the field. The church has been victorious in the past. It will withstand and overcome all that now opposes it. It will not be washed away. God did not build it upon the sand.

Pessimism Rests Upon Fallacy.

The widespread pessimism as to the future of the church is deplorable. It seems to rest on a fallacy. Where else, pray, could pessimism find soil and nourishment? The fallacy is, men too readily identify the raiment with the body, the unreal with the veritable, the insignificant with the all-significant, the passing fancy of the age in which they live with the eternal fact that was, and is, and ever shall be. Will men ever cease to identify their own opinions with God's verities? This is the stupidity of the centuries. Naturally, since men grow pessimistic when God does not honor their opinions, when he allows what seemed to them to be an eternal verity to fall into disrepute, to reveal itself as a passing fancy. Form is but another name for fashion. The history of the church is its fashion plate. Fashions are transient. Religion, pure and undefiled, never changes except in the manner of its manifestation. It will animate and perpetuate any institution that is a suitable expression of its known realities. The church in so far as it is identical with pure religion, is indestructible; but the church, in so far as it is the form of religion, will suffer great changes in the future as in the past. Its forms, its ceremonies, may suffer violence. Attached to these because they are more palpable, many souls will be often distressed. But why identify the possibly transient with the surely permanent? Why identify first forms with first principles? Why mourn because the perishable passes? Mourn, if you must, but do not doubt the future over which God reigns. The permanent is the true source of joy. God is more than systems of theology. Rejoice in him. "Our little systems have their day, they have their day and cease to be." Because they cease men are pessimists. If they are swept away it is because God does it. He always leaves the permanent intact. Be satisfied with what he leaves on the threshing floor. He left the wheat of Jewish morality when he swept the chaff Jewish ceremonialism away. He left a purer worship when he destroyed the temple with its altars. It becomes men, even the most intelligent, not to challenge his judgment as to what shall be kept and what shall be cast forth.

The supposition with which this article began can have little meaning for a man whose trust is in the true God. The chaos is not any worse now that it was in the beginning. God still reigns and religion is still practical among men. The source and animating principle of the church still remains. The personality of Jesus dominates the imagination and intellects of tens of thousands of virtuous men and women. As long as human need and divine love exist contemporaneously in the world, some God-inspired institution will represent the one and live by the alleviation of the other. Pure religion will never be in disfavor. The institution that is the highest expression of it will be approved of God and men.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

By J. S. Hughes.

Adolph Harnack gives a summary of the teaching of Jesus. He sums them up under three heads, one of which is "The Kingdom of God." At one important point he seems to fail in comprehending the subject. I have heard pastors' associations of the leading denominations discuss this subject, and always with the outcome of a very confused understanding of its whole meaning. Harnack says: "The proclamation of this kingdom * * * culminates in the announcement that this kingdom is now coming in the hearts of the people. The proclamation of the kingdom therefore presents two phases according to one of which this kingdom is represented as something entirely in the future and according to the other it is a present possession. The central thought of Christ's teachings, namely, "The Kingdom of God," is not therefore a single idea. For us these contrasts, or these two phases, are hard to bridge over; to find the higher unity in this diversity must be the work of future generations."

This "higher unity," as the great German scholar calls it, is fully developed and illustrated in the revelation of the prophet John, given about the close of the century, the book which Prof. Harnack and all his school unwittingly abuse.

To say that the kingdom of God is in you and is with you and is to come to you in the future is perfectly consistent with John's conception of things. The same "higher unity" is seen when in John's teaching we read that "he that believes has eternal life and then that "we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is." Eternal life is both a present and a future possession and these are the two phases of a great single truth to be understood when John is comprehended. Many other seemingly incongruous teachings of holy scriptures are by this last and greatest teacher crystallized into a "higher unity." The church and the kingdom stand as substitute and substance. They are not coequal. The church of Christ is temporary and is a stepping stone to the kingdom of God. Those in whom the kingdom was, that is in whose hearts the kingdom of God was regnant, had to be cared for and preserved as a peculiar and elect people and as the church originated among the Jews the idea of separateness which had been the divine provision by which Israel had been saved from the contact with heathen nations it prevailed in constituting the church. Hence in all we see from Paul as well as from Peter has this ecclesiastical idea prevailing. This was characteristic of the whole movement from the day of Pentecost up to and beyond the middle of the first century, but after the fall of Jerusalem and the waning of the Jewish Christian church, John writes a last message, in which we find him preaching again the kingdom as Christ did at the beginning and when John reveals the conditions of the kingdom come as he saw it in vision one of the startling changes is that he "saw no temple therein." "The temple" is one of John's symbols for the church.

The light which the church gives is the light of candlesticks or of stars and "the kingdom come" is like the sun rising, which puts them out by its greater glory.

The church, as commonly understood, will never convert the world. It is in its own self-defense separated from the world to sanctifications in Christ and when it essays to go back at the world with a vast load of ecclesiastical machinery and baggage of doctrines, ordinances, ancient, mediaeval, modern, an army of straggling, conflicting sects, saying to the world, "We have each come to save you; come and go with us and help save us from each other."

When the kingdom comes there will be no church. The ministries of Paul and of John were dominated by two different ideas. Paul's whole thought was "Come out of the world and into the ecclesia," while John's thought was not so much that we are to come out of the world as that Christ has been raised up over the world to rule it. That the world will be converted in the usual sense, that is, that all will become the spiritual children of God, seems out of the question; but that the children of God will some day get their eyes opened and will become active and aggressive instead of creeping around under the huge legs of mammon only to get themselves tolerated, is certain. They will rule the world in righteousness. Then will come "the kingdom of God."

The unbelieving and sinful will live the outward life of the Christian, which so many church members are doing now, because they will find it is so much better even for this world than the old earthly regime.

We have all seen the kingdom of God prevail in spots for a time at least. The sons of God were happy in the true life of God and the outside people were respectful, orderly and prosperous and set a high value upon Christ as a civilizing agency. The kingdom of God on earth means this condition of society throughout the world. Its inside is the faith in God which rules in the hearts of believers. Its outside is all who are walking under the righteous government of God administered by his people, without themselves being necessarily inwardly purified for eternal life.

It is the dual reign which John so well brings out by showing that the kingdom of God can be in you and in the world; a present and yet a future kingdom. The greatest change will transpire when Christians shall cease to regard their position in the world as one of mere toleration and shall arise and take on the characteristics that belong to the last age of the world and become active, positive and aggressive and take the thrones from under the world-power and place Christ upon them. The kingdom of God must compass two widely diverse conditions, its entrance into and its victory over the world.

From the first purity of its proclamation it swerved in the hands of its trustees and took on ecclesiastical infirmities, but at the close of the century John brings back its elementary status as the ideal and outcome of the struggle not yet understood by believers. On this plane the churches seem to move and the rapid rise and growth of Christian science and Dowieism and the like tell us plainly that the kingdom is larger than the church and that we are not equal to our opportunity nor to the spirit of progress. Christianity had to take root in the negative virtues, meekness and humility, it must blossom and fruit in aggression and victory. He who was shepherd will be "Lord of lords and king of kings in the kingdom of God."

Four things a man must learn to do
If he would make his record true:
To think without confusion clearly;
To love his fellow-men sincerely;
To act from honest motives purely;
To trust in God and Heaven securely.

A GLIMPSE AT THE SOCIOLOGICAL TEACHINGS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

M. B. Ryan.

SOCIAL DEGENERATION.

While the New Testament has a social ideal, it recognizes that the ideal is not the real. It contemplates society as degenerate. It recognizes the causes and the fruits of degeneracy, and reveals the means and the way of Redemption. Its message is "Salvation." And that salvation is a social salvation, as well as an individual salvation. Society cannot be bright while man is wrong. Sinful man implies a degenerate society.

The New Testament surpasses all sociological literature in its insight into the cause of social corruption. It deals, not with secondary causes, but with the fountains of social life. It begins at the beginning. In the light of its teaching social evils are laid bare at the root. This is an inestimable service, absolutely indispensable to any true social salvation, and for which the world must ever be dependent on this old, but ever new, book.

Sin is here. The whole compass of social degeneration is tersely indicated in Paul's statement, "Sin entered into the world, and death through sin."

Sin is a social disturber. We might say also that it is a social disturbance. Sin perverts the individual. It works thus on the very factors out of which society is to be constructed, and it works to destroy their social fitness. The moral integrity of the individual is a necessity to a true social structure. Sin upsets the moral balance in life. It institutes a moral schism. The moral nature becomes a battlefield where antagonistic forces contend for the mastery, and where the better impulses are often overcome by the baser. "Not what I would, that do I practice; but what I hate, that I do. * * * To will is present with me, but to do that which is good is not. For the good which I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I practice. * * * For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see a different law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity under the law of sin which is in my members."

Beginning a Social Ruin.

Here is social ruin in embryo. The social factor is here being rendered unfit. How can the structure remain secure when its timbers are worm-eaten?

Cut of this moral schism in the individual proceed all moral wreck and ruin, all social disturbance and destruction. The works of the flesh, "fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, revelings and such like," all of them anti-social, spring rankly from this seed-bed. Men become "lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God; holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof." They are "filled with all unrighteousness, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, strife, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, insolent, inventors of evil things, without understanding, covenant-breakers, unmerciful."

Disintegration of Society.

Here is not alone the ruin of the individual. Here is also the disintegration of society. This is social anarchy that we see here. And all possibilities of social evil are in it. In the sweep of this dread circle of iniquities, there is room for all social baseness, all civil misrule, all political perfidy, all commercial dishonesty, all economic heartlessness and cruelty, all military aggression and oppression, that have ever blighted this fair earth. Out of this Pandora's Box spring all social evils, in whatever guise the passing ages may bring them to us.

Social degeneration is due to a loss of the truth. This, in the individual, means a divided life, with the evil in the ascendancy. In the social structure it means disintegration of its elements, the reign of selfishness, strife, ruin. With reference to God, it means that society has lost its center, and is the sport of malign influences, being plunged evermore into deeper helplessness.

THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK.

Carey E. Morgan.

This department has had something to say concerning the reported shocking condition of immorality into which the Americans have suffered Manila to lapse. It is only fair to give currency to the testimony of the general in command as to the facts as he observes them. In reply to a remonstrance from the W. C. T. U., forwarded through Secretary Root, General MacArthur writes: "I am convinced that the city of Manila may to-day challenge comparison as to its moral and orderly condition with any city in the United States. This condition is the more remarkable in view of the general lack of moral tone pervading the seaports of the east; the fact that the government of the Philippines since American occupation has been necessarily one of emergency; that Manila is the headquarters of an army of sixty-five thousand men, the city through which this army must come and go; and that these many thousands of men are in the prime of life and are remotely removed from the restraining influences that might be exercised over them by their home surroundings." He calls attention to the fact that the care of the soldiers' health is almost the first duty of the officers, denies specific charges of having licensed or encouraged vice, and suggests that a committee should be sent at the government's expense to examine the conditions, stipulating only that for purposes of comparison they should also examine into the moral conditions of other oriental seaports. The issue between General MacArthur and his critics becomes one of fact. For my part, for the sake of decency and the reputation of everybody concerned, I hope that the general is right and his critics wrong.

The recent Missionary Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held in New Orleans, was a notable gathering.

Booker Washington made an eloquent appeal for his race, and is said to have won assent to its main contentions to a degree that a few years ago would have been impossible.

After a searching address on "Lessons from the Lives of Master Missionaries," by Bishop Galloway, the delegates made personal pledges to the amount of $51,000 for the endowment of a college at Soo Chow, China.

Mr. John R. Mott made an appeal which led thirty-three young people to offer themselves for mission service.

The Conference decided to send out twenty new missionaries a year for five years, and to raise $500,000 in addition to the regular annual offerings. In order to carry out this resolution and to prevent the dissipation of the Conference's influence, arrangements were made by which a corps of one hundred writers from among the delegates were appointed to write articles about the Conference for the denominational and secular press, during five weeks subsequent to the adjournment. Also a force of three hundred speakers, including thirty missionaries, were selected to go out among the churches to follow up the impressions made at the Conference and to make the "forward movement" a reality.

This looks like business, and will furnish inspiration and some hints on methods to other churches that are trying to raise a special twentieth century fund.

The tragic death in Italy of Rev. Maltbie Davenport Babcock, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church of New York city, last week, was universally regretted by American Christians of every communion. He had done a great work in Baltimore, from which city he went about two years ago to become the successor of that princely preacher, teacher and author, Dr. Henry Van Dyke. One of his members told me of the profound impression he was already making upon this historic church. He delivered a notable address at the Ecumenical Conference in New York city last spring. He was young and had a sunny disposition, and gave promise of long years of splendid usefulness.

A German paper, as quoted in the Interior, says that during the three years around 1895; three hundred and twenty Armenian churches have been converted into Mohammedan mosques. Five hundred and sixty-eight churches and seventy-seven Greek monasteries have been destroyed, and the priests and monks either forced to accept Islam or put to the sword. Fully one hundred thousand Christian Armenians, men, women and children, have been murdered, ten thousand more perished from hunger, cold and typhus fever, and five hundred thousand were driven from their homes and their property was seized by the Mohammedans. As many as two thousand four hundred and ninety-four Armenian villages were destroyed by the murderous fury of the Kurds and Turks.

CONSCIENCE AND REMORSE.

"Good-bye," I said to my conscience—

"Good-bye for aye and aye."

And I put her hands off harshly,

And turned my face away;

And conscience, smitten sorely,

Returned not from that day.

But a time came when my spirit

Grew weary of its pace;

And I cried: "Come back, my conscience,

For I long to see thy face!"

But conscience cried: "I cannot;

Remorse sits in my place!"

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON.

By Peter Ainslie.

*Jesus Christ the same yesterday and today and forever.—Heb. 13: 8.

This is one of the greatest passages of Scripture. The sentence that stands before this doubtless refers to those two early martyrs, James, the brother of our Lord, and James, the brother of the apostle John. These two men were the teachers and leaders in the church at Jerusalem. For their belief that Jesus was the Christ, they had paid the penalty of death. The writer of my text simply calls to remembrance their service and fidelity, and then reminds his readers that, to these two men, Jesus was all and in all—he was the soul of their existence. As he had helped those two martyrs, he would help all who trusted him, for he is the same yesterday, today and forever. He stopped to hear the prayer of a blind beggar. He did this once, and he has done it ten thousand times since. However humble we may be, Jesus hears us. It is not our poverty nor our ignorance that interferes with God hearing us or his fellowship with us, but seven hundred years before the birth of Christ Isaiah said, "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." God hears the cry of his people. There is not a sigh that escapes your lips, not a weight that bears down your heart, not a tear that falls upon your cheek, but that God knows it all and that same Jesus that heard the blind beggar stands before you as a common and personal benefactor. When the woman was brought in the very act of sin before him, Jesus forgave her and rebuked her accusers. He forgives all sin now and he rebukes those who are continually talking about the sins and faults of others. The scene in the temple in Jerusalem is not alone, but the same Jesus still lives, with forgiveness for the penitent and scorn for the self-righteous. It is difficult to understand that he was the friend of sinners and every one who loves him proves their love by their likeness.

The very model that the apostles and early disciples had we have. The last painter before whom Louis XIV. sat has a much more difficult subject to paint than when, in his twenty-third year, on the death of Cardinal Mazarin, he assumed the prime ministry of his own administration, but it is not so with us. The same Jesus that Paul modeled his life after, the same Jesus that Stephen so willingly died for, is the same Jesus before us today—as merciful, as gracious, as lovable and as powerful as in the days when he was the Son of Mary. Not only now, but he will forever be the same. God has shown us what eternity is and what heaven will be. That Jesus of the cross will be the same Jesus of the throne.

Our Father, we have seen more than we can understand. Draw thou closer to us and teach us that we may know thee better and love thee more. Amen.

BIBLE SCHOOL.
JESUS APPEARS TO JOHN.

Lesson, June 16, 1901, Rev. 1: 9-20.

9. I, John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet.

11. Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea, the voice that spake with me.

12. And I turned to see me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks.

13. And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the foot and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

14. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow:

and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15. And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

16. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

17. And when I saw him I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last;

18. I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

19. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter.

20. The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

In the last lesson we saw our ascended Lord appearing unto a persecutor of Christians; in this his appearance is to, and in behalf of, persecuted ones.

The Book, Its Purpose.

The Revelation was written by John to brethren and companions in tribulation (Chapter 1: 9). Tribulation means hard blows, as upon wheat in threshing. The book applies, among other things, to a period of distress "such as was not from the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor never shall be", language used by Jesus as he foretold evils to come. Matt. 24: 16, 19. Whether this terrible ordeal occurred in the Neronian and Jewish persecutions and in the destruction of Jerusalem (A. D. 64-70), or during the second general persecution of Christians under Domitian, about A. D. 96, is not certainly known. The preponderance of opinion now is for the earlier date. In any event, that dark hour found Rome and Jerusalem deluged with massacre. Chaps. 11: 8; 6: 9; see also 17: 6; 18: 24. Christians were flung to wild beasts or suffered martyrdom in pitchy torches that lighted the emperor's gardens. The apostle Peter was among those crucified; Paul had been beheaded; and agent John alone of the twelve was suffered to remain, and he is in exile. In such a time as this the present Revelation or Unveiling seems graciously to have appeared. Its purpose was to inspire hope by showing that Christ the Mighty One still lived to succor his children and to turn the tremendous conflict, between the powers of good and evil, into glorious victory. Chapt. 11: 15-17. In one place we hear the Master's "Fear not," and again and again "Behold, I come quickly," ending all in a magnificent assertion of hope, indicating the complete fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy, regarding the glorious Messianic reign on earth, and which no temporary darkness could extinguish. See Chapt. 2: 7, 11, 17, 26, etc.; 18: 1; 19: 6, 16; 20: 9, 10; Chapt. 21; 22.

The Symbolism,

But writings designed for comfort to Christians, while the same writings predicted the downfall of enemies, could never be spread under the reign of fierce rulers like Nero or Domitian, unless the language was effectually veiled. As Christ had taught by the use of veiled language in parables (Luke 8: 9, 10), so here the use of symbols, seemingly for a like purpose, was adopted. A kind of imagery is employed, which, while it must have appeared grotesque and obscure to heathen informers, would, it is assumed, not be without plain meaning to those addressed. The style of the symbols used is for the most part colossal. See Psalm 36: 6; Chapt. 21: 16, etc. It is well to note that the writings were designed for Christians in places such as Ephesus (2: 1), where the cry "Great is Diana of the Ephesians" (Acts 19: 35) was on the lips of overpowering heathen, hence the need of showing that the living Christ and the things of Christ were supremely great. See Luke 1: 46; Psalm 34: 3. In the interpretation of the symbols it is necessary to observe that the oriental mind required that separate details should have separate symbols, without regard to anything like a harmonious picture of a combination of symbols. The figures do not so much stand for forms and substances as for ideas, a point which must be recognized in interpreting every part of this rich and helpful book. Numbers in the Apocalypse also are invariably symbolical.

Verse 9. Tribulation in Exile. "I. John." The last of the apostles. To him alone could Christ's suffering followers turn in these days of persecution for counsel and comfort. Under such circumstances he plainly asserts his own name in a way that was uncalled for in his calmer writings—the fourth gospel and the epistles. . . . "Your brother." Not now apostle, but brother and companion, member of God's family. Mutual tribulations draw us closer one to another. . . . "In tribulation—kingdom—patience." The persecution under the Roman Emperors were unspeakably awful. There are indications all through the gospels and epistles of the increasing current of tribulation which found its climax in those days. See Matt. 24:15-22; John 16:2, 33; Acts 9:16; Eph. 6:11, 12; 2 Tim. 2:3; 4:10-18; 2 Peter, 2; John's Epistles, Jude. It is indeed a "kingdom"—the reign of Christ in the heart—in the midst of terrible "tribulation" and of "patience." The kingdom is raised by patience in tribulation. See Chapt. 2:2, 19; 3:10; 13:10; 14:12. . . . "In island called Patmos." This island, about 70 miles southwest of Ephesus, was used by the Romans as a place of banishment for criminals. It was a mass of barren, bleak rocks, some rising nearly a thousand feet, and with a surrounding coast line of about 20 miles. . . . "For word—for testimony of Jesus Christ." Fidelity to God brought on bitter persecution under the reigns both of Nero and Domitian. Scholars who fix the date of this book in the days of the former compare this statement with Chapt. 6:9, "Slain for the word of God", etc.; also Chapt. 12:17, as indicating that John's life was spared from slaughter through exile. He may voluntarily have fled to this island for safety. Matt. 24:16.

Verse 10. The Comforter Present. "In the Spirit." In the midst of tribulation John was not alone. He was filled and quickened by the Comforter. John 14:16-18. "In the Spirit may also refer to a special spiritual experience, such as Paul speaks of in 2 Cor. 12:2, 3. He elsewhere in this book uses the expression repeatedly. . . . "On the Lord's day." Seemingly the first day of the week, and which meant so much to followers of the risen and ascended Lord then even as it now does. If we are not full of the Spirit on the Lord's day we never can be. Had the Hebrew Sabbath been meant it would have been so designated. . . . "Great voice as of a trumpet." See "The Symbolism" in introduction. Here we come to the great vision of our lesson. The trumpet was a token of the majestic voice of Him now glorified who when in the flesh spake as never man spake. It is not now "the still small voice" of God.

Verse 11. Mighty Trumpet Voice. "Saying." Now the great voice speaks with loud and far-reaching trumpet sound, filling John with awe. . . . "Alpha and Omega." Omitted in the R. V., where it appears in Verse 8 and Chapt. 21:6. These are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, meaning that he is the beginning and the end, or as we would say, from "a to z." . . . "What thou seest write." As Paul and Silas testified through songs of praise to their companions in prison, so John in his island prison is to testify to all the world through the instrumentality of visions. This command to write appears twelve times in the book. We are to proclaim such truths as we learn. . . . "Send unto seven churches." These churches actually existed. There were many other churches in Asia Minor at the time, but these seemingly were taken, as representative of the church of Christ in that and every age; and not of church alone, but of Christians who compose churches. Two groups of churches are named. The first three were those whose faith had remained pure through temptation and persecution. The remaining group of four comprised those whose spiritual life had been invaded by the worldly influences of the times unto weakness and corruption, sunken to the line of compromise with the world. Matt. 24:12.

Verse 12. Precious Light Bearers "Being turned I saw." For the first time now his eyes beheld the marvelous picture which, part by part, portrayed the characteristics of the glorified Christ and his church. In the seven messages to the churches used in this book a different portion of the picture of Verses 12-16 appears in each address. This might indicate the separate impression which the different features of the divine majesty as here set forth made upon John's mind. . . . "Seven golden candlesticks." The candlesticks "are the seven churches," as shown by verse 20. The most beautiful and costliest metal is used as a symbol of the church, and this is deeply significant of the church's preciousness in the sight of God. Rom. 10:15; Isa. 52:7.

Verse 13. The Glorified One. "In the midst of the candlesticks." Walking in and out among them (2:1). Compare Matt. 28:20; 18:20. . . . "Like unto Son of man." Christ's human kinship is emphasized to show that he is the same sympathizing, helpful, suffering Jesus who had lived and died on earth. It may have been necessary to state this, otherwise his glory as revealed to John might obscure his humanity and his sympathy for earthly brethren. . . . "Clothed to the feet." Not now stripped and naked bearing the world's sin (Matt. 27:28; John 19:23), but clothed with a high priest's robe. See Exod. 28:6-8, 31, etc. . . . "Girt with golden girdle" "around the breast" R. V., the girdle of royal righteousness and faithfulness, Isa. 11:5. John the Baptist wore a leathern girdle, Matt. 3:4.

Verse 14. Magnify the Lord. "His head and hair white." See "The Symbolism" at head. Indicating celestial purity and glory. The transfiguration robes were "white as the light." Matt. 17:2. White hair was not a sign of age, for, as our Golden Text shows, he is the same yesterday, today, forever. . . . "Eyes as flame of fire." All penetrating as fire or light is penetrating. He is the light of the world, the revealer of all things. To every one of the seven churches he said, "I know thy works." And so he says of all churches; so of all individuals. Acts 9:6.

Verse 15. Hear All People. "Feet like fine brass." Brass denotes stability and strength; it was one of the most useful and valuable metals of that day. . . . "His voice." In verse 10 it was spoken of as a trumpet, here as the sound of many waters. Symbolic of the idea that he will make himself heard even to the ends of the earth. . . . "Sound of many waters." One of the local colorings of the Apocalypse, perhaps incidental to John's being within hearing of the wild billows and tides of Patmos. Local coloring peculiar to the island, such as "mountains," "rocks," "sea," are frequent throughout the book. In Chapt. 14:2 the voice of many waters is spoken of as great thunder.

Verse 16. Sublime Signs. "In right hand seven stars." The right hand is an emblem of power. Stars are angels—that is, ministers or any sent ones. See verse 20. This with other passages like John 18:8 show how dear to Christ are those who labor in his cause. Deut. 33:3; John 10:28. . . . "A sharp two-edged sword." The word of God, especially as pronouncing blessing and executing judgment, is here meant. Chapt. 2:12, 16. This symbol elsewhere is used to indicate the searching power of the word, even "dividing asunder of soul and spirit." Heb. 4:12. . . . "As the sun shineth in strength." He is the Sun of righteousness.

The churches are but lampstands shedding forth the reflection of his light. Our own faces glow with the light of love when Christ's spirit dwells within us. He is the true light. John 1:9. He is the all-sufficient light. Rev. 21:23. He is the Light of the world. John 8:12; 9:5.

Verse 17. Reassuring One. "I fell at his feet." It was not the first time that mortal man was overpowered by the supernatural glory of the heavenly. Ezek. 1:28; Dan. 8:17; Acts 9:4. . . . "Laid his right hand upon me." The same sympathetic, helpful right hand which touched the leper and gave sinking Peter support. . . . "Fear not." On an occasion years before when John was present, the sound of many waters brought forth alarm that called out the same words of comfort (John 6:16, 21). It is an expression that often fell from the Master's lips. He still utters the same "Fear not." Do you in tribulation hear this sweet voice?

Verse 18. Resurrection Hope. "I am he that liveth and was dead." It was the same Jesus you saw die on the cross, thus again setting forth his humanity. . . . "Alive for evermore." As a King he had conquered Death. One way in which Jesus now is occupied is shown by Chapt. 2:1, he walks in the midst of his people. . . . "Keys of hell," not Gehenna, but Hades (R. V.), the unseen world place of the departed.

Verse 19. The Commission Given. "Write the things." As usual a human helper is called to proclaim the comforting, heavenly message. He was both to write and send. Chapt. 2:1. The things are the vision, already seen, the letters to the churches, the later visions that John beheld. . . . "Which are" actually present conditions. . . . "Which shall be" in the future of the church and in the glorious hereafter.

Verse 20. Mysteries Cleared. "Stars in right hand." Referred to in verse 16; the explanation here is that they are the "angels of seven churches." The number seven represents the whole number of ministers, that is, sent ones, for that is what "angels" mean. As the stars were in the right hand, so the idea is that all who minister in the church, all instrumentalities that are a help to the church, are in the sustaining hand of Christ, in his hand of power. . . . "Seven candlesticks are the seven churches." Referred to in verses 12 and 13. Seven in scripture is the complete number. It here means Christ's churches in their completeness; his precious light bearers (Phil. 2:16), to whom is entrusted the great commission; the success of which is Christ's greatest concern. The church's success likewise should be our greatest concern. He promises that the gates of hades shall not prevail against it. Christ is always in the midst of the churches. Verse 13; Chapt. 2:1; Matt. 28:20; 18:20. Each individual Christian is a part of that church and as such is an angel, a sent one. (Chapt. 22:17.) As stars were the symbols of living, working forces that comprise true churches, so faithful individuals who turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever. Dan. 12:3. Shall we be of that blessed number?

PRAYER MEETING.

Fred'k F. Grim.

LIGHTS IN THE WORLD.

Matt. 5: 14-16. References, John 5: 32-35; Phil. 2: 14-16.

As in nature, so in the realm of the spirit there are lights of different order. All have an important function to perform. But without the light of the sun—the center of our solar system—this would be a dark and cheerless world; but not more so than if the name and memory of Christ could be forgotten, and the light of his presence was extinguished. What would the Bible be if Christ were removed? He it is that illuminates the whole world, and if we but follow him we shall have the light of life. He speaks of John as a light in whose presence they were willing to rejoice for a season. But how deeply his first disciples must have been stirred when he said to them, "Ye are the light of the world. . . . Let your light shine before men." They are not words to be wrangled over or conjured with; they are of universal application. We shall not forget to pause in the midst of the hurry and bustle of this work-a-day life, and in meditation ask ourselves: Am I a light in the midst of darkness, gloom and despair? Is the world brighter, happier, and has it more of the heavenly joy because I am living?

Avoid Extremes.

Great temptation besets us to put our light under a bushel if it is going to involve us in difficulty. How many people reason in this fashion: "It is going to cost me something. I can't conduct my business just as I want to. It's a great annoyance, so I will just turn my light low for a few years or keep it hid, and then I can go along about as I please. If I am not too busy or too tired I will go to church when some "big preacher" comes along." Sometimes you will find these people at the conventions. They don't know much about what is going on, but then they join the procession and are found on dress parade. You may deceive yourself, and possibly you may deceive the world for a brief time, but be assured you cannot deceive your Lord and Master.

Just let your light shine constantly and steadily. Don't wave it about and cry out: "Look here and see me." Light does not make any noise. It just shines. If a light burns low and gets to "sputtering," we get just a little concerned, and well we may, for there is something wrong. Your light will be turned into darkness and many will stumble and fall.

Nature and Purpose.

It is giving forth of itself. It is sacrificial; and only in this way can its purpose be accomplished. If the sun would refuse to shine it would be turned into darkness. We must keep in close touch with the source of divine power. We must "practice the thought" of the divine presence, and constantly hold communion with him who can supply our every want. The reason why so many are giving such poor lights is that the connection is not good, or it has been broken somewhere. Let us be careful not to find ourselves in the situation of the foolish virgins. They had their lamps, and alas! that is all some people have today. Their religion is in a book, or at best it is something to be apprehended intellectually, to be argued about and disputed over. Truth must be vitalized. "It must glow in human hearts, born on human tongues and shine in human lives."

Let us remember that the purpose is not self-glory, but to give light to dispell the darkness, to glorify God. What the world knows of the Bible and of Jesus is not what they have read, but what they have seen in our lives. Their eyes are blinded, so that they cannot see Jesus only as they see him through us. With a determined purpose let us hold forth the word of life, that our labor may not have been in vain, and that we may have whereof to glory with the apostle Paul, in the day of Christ.

REVERENCE FOR SACRED THINGS.

(Topic for June 16. Ref. Ex. 3: 1-6.)

This story of the manifestation of the Divine Presence to Moses, while he kept the flock of Jethro, is suggestive of several things, from which we may get a needed lesson.

"The Backside of the Desert."

"And he led the flock to the backside of the desert, and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb." Finding God at the backside of the desert is one of the things that we may learn from this. Thus Moses found God. Perhaps he never would have realized the Divine Presence had he continued to live in the palace of Pharaoh, as the son of the princess. "By faith, Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of reward." By faith Moses made his choice—and it was a heroic thing to do. But it required yet greater faith, and the sternest stuff of genuine spiritual heroism, to continue forty years in the mountains of Midia, there to find God at last!

What we need is more of the backside of the desert sort of faith, that we may realize, as we do not, the Divine Presence, and be made strong, as Moses, the servant of God, to endure as seeing him who is invisible; and as Paul, who was three years in the desert of Arabia, that he might come to know the deep things of God and the mystery of grace.

God in Common Things.

"And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush." Finding God in common things, in out-of-the-way places, is another thing we may gather from this simple narrative. It is a beautiful symbol, this burning bush, of the Divine Presence. It tells us we may find God anywhere! O, how slow of heart we are to learn, as Moses was, as the disciples were, from the parables of the Lord. I'm glad God appeared to Moses in a bush—the very commonest of objects—and not in the palace of Pharaoh. Will we ever learn that God is not worshiped nor revered alone in temples made with the hands; neither in this mountain nor in yonder; but they that worship the Father must worship him in spirit and in truth! It is the question that perplexed the Master's life. It is the old problem that Paul met on Mars' Hill. We are terribly in the toils of tradition and temple service still.

Curiosity Not Reverence.

Another thing we have to learn is that curiosity is not reverence. "And Moses said, I will now turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burned." It was necessary for Moses, the man of God, to be stopped and reprov'd. "Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." O, that we had eyes to see the glory of God in the burning bush, and ears to hear the solemn word of warning against our almost universal lack of reverence! In reverence is one of the awful sins of the age.

HOW TO STUDY THE EPISTLES OF JAMES, JUDE AND PETER.

Marion Stevenson.

The Epistles of James and Jude are unique treasures. They were written by two sons of Mary, the mother of Jesus, therefore by the brothers of our Lord. This fact invests them with a fine sentiment.

Before you study the writings, study the men. The home training of Jesus was the home training of James and Jude. These three boys had the same parents, just, devout, pious and pure. They shared the same privations, helped one another in the same tasks, climbed the same hills, loved the same valleys, learned the same lessons, studied the same Scriptures, heard the same traditions, went to the same synagogue on the Sabbath, traveled in the same companies to the great feasts.

When Jesus began his public ministry they did not believe on him. They did not understand him. They joined in the attempt of the family to put their insane relative under restraint. From his trial and death they stood aloof and hid themselves from his shame. They were not present at his cross, they left his burial to strange hands. We can understand how his baptism in shame overwhelmed their grief.

James a Slave to His Lord.

After his resurrection he appeared unto James. From that moment James became "the slave of the Lord Jesus" and rose to apostolic dignity in the church in Jerusalem. We may also believe that he spent some time in traveling and preaching the good news of the risen Lord.

He writes to the Jewish Christians scattered abroad. He is a Christian, but ever a Jew. His epistle is the word of the most primitive stage of the development of Christianity. Its sympathies are scarcely less narrow than the spirit of the old religion. It is concerned about proper outward conduct. Newer and more spiritual ideas of relation to God are scarcely hinted. It reads like the wisdom literature of the Old Testament. It is the literature of the first stage. Peter is the prophet of a wider view and a better purpose of Christ. Paul proclaims a still wider conception, John is the seer with clear vision of the perfect spiritual purpose and power of the only Begotten of the Father. Read the Epistle of John when you have finished the Epistle of James. We rise to the plane of John, however, only from the plane of James. No better guide to Christian conduct has ever been written for the beginner than the Epistle of James. It should be hid in the heart.

Study the epistle with the help of the Revised Version with marginal references. As you read make a note of the references to the books of Job, Proverbs, Psalms, the Pentateuch, Isaiah, Amos, and to various Old Testament persons and events. The Old Testament was the text book in the Nazareth home. James was acquainted also with the Wisdom Literature of the Apocrypha, Ecclesiasticus and the Wisdom of Solomon.

The marginal references reveal numerous allusions to the Sermon on the Mount. Doubtless James was in the audience when it was delivered. He makes more frequent reference to its teaching than to any other part of the Scripture. James has the same love of nature and the same fondness for the parable that characterized the teaching of his brother Jesus.

Complete the study of the epistle by making a table of contents of its teachings. Note what he has to say about conduct in trial, the relation of the word to conduct, respect of persons, the use of the tongue, true and false wisdom, strife and worldliness, oppression of the poor, encouragement for the oppressed, miscellaneous precepts, instruction to the sick. The everydayness of the epistle impresses us. It is indispensable to us.

As I walked by myself, I said to myself,
And myself said again to me,
Look to thyself, take care of thyself,
For nobody cares for thee.
Then I said to myself, and thus answered myself,
With the self-same repartee,
Look to thyself, or look not to thyself
'Tis the self-same thing to me.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.

The Holy Spirit Given.

"When He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth."—John 16, 13.

Monday, Acts 2, 1-11.

Very wonderful and very blessed were the effects of Pentecost. The recital of these mysteries and portents—is it nothing but a history? Is it the reminiscence of a vanished age of gold? Did Christianity set out on its course attended by miracles of uplifting and salvation which were never meant to be permanent? Must we look for "shades of the prison-house" closing about the church of God, which was born among those splendors and triumphs?

To ask these questions is to answer them. If my life is nerveless and ineffective, if the army of the living God is working a mournfully small deliverance on the earth, if there are few conversions of sinners into saints and of enemies into friends; it is not because the fire is quenched or the power withdrawn. It is because I and others are not receiving and employing the immeasurable resources of heaven which are freely placed at our disposal. God has not revoked the baptism of Pentecost. The endowment of the first century remains the endowment of the twentieth.

To-day I may enjoy the overflowing benediction of the Upper Room. To-day I may go forth to the battles of my Lord, strengthened with that unearthly might which dwelt in the Apostles.

Tuesday, Acts 2, 12-21.

The Holy Spirit can quicken me into a witness for Christ, as he quickened Peter. Yesterday you might have named Peter Mr. Ready-to-Halt. To-day, possessed by the truth and valiant for it, he has become Mr. Standfast.

I can guess with what sort of message the Spirit of Jesus will send me forth.

It will be one in which there is a grave and thorough-going doctrine of sin—sin which, in its guilt and blackness, deserves the wrath of God. There is need for the doctrine when a too-sanguine optimism is as popular as a too-despairing pessimism.

It will be one which holds Christ up for the acceptance of men, and, most especially, Christ crucified, the Substitute, the Sin-bearer, the Lamb of sacrifice and propitiation.

It will be one through which there quivers the passion to redeem. And it will be one in which the speaker forgets himself altogether, and is conscious merely of the Redeemer he seeks to commend, and the lost he seeks to gain.

Would that I were a prophet after this fashion!

Wednesday, Acts 2, 37-47.

People tell me that the era of miracles is gone. No more melancholy word could be spoken, if it were a true word. But it is false. Conversion is the standing and perpetual miracle of all the Christian generations.

The era of miracles ended! But when was its latest hour? When did the wonder-working God take his departure from the world? In the sixteenth century, in the time of the Reformation, I see multitudes pressing near to his throne and his gracious Face. In John Wesley's day, and George Whitefield's, I discover that sleeping souls are being roused and regenerated from Cornwall to Cumberland, and from the lifework of Charles Spurgeon and Mr. Moody; and from many a mission field in Africa and India and China and the islands of the Pacific.

"There were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls"; not of the Pentecost in Jerusalem only is the record true.

Thursday, Acts 4, 23-31.

Give me this boldness, my Lord, to speak for Jesus.

Never was Biblical scholarship more exact than in my time, more anxious to arrive at the truth regarding the sacred books, more abundantly justified by the striking discoveries which it has made. Never was there a more painstaking endeavor to communicate to all who will listen the real meaning of Scripture. Never was work in Christ's harvest field more carefully and more systematically organized. Never in the history of Christianity were philanthropy and self-sacrifice more zealous in seeking to win the sceptical and the outcast both at home and far away.

But I crave something more. I would fain speak the word with a boldness born from above.

Ah, well, the Divine Power, which made the Apostles ambassadors in deed and in truth, is waiting to equip me, so that my words, like Luther's, will be half-battles—no, not half-battles but complete and absolute triumphs. Let me receive the Holy Spirit in the quiet of the Upper Room, and in public my Master will win his captives and his citizens through me.

Friday, Joel 2, 28-32.

The Mystics said that there were three stages on the road to sainthood—Purification, Illumination, Union. Up to each of these stages it is the task and the joy of the Holy Spirit to conduct me.

He purifies. He disciplines me, he ennobles me, until I am changed into the image and the stainlessness of my Lord.

And he illumines. He makes the Bible shine as with the light of a transfiguration.

And he unites. It is the crowning mystery and the consummate gladness. He infuses into me a life which is nothing lower and nothing less than the life of Jesus Christ. I think my Master's thoughts. I throb with my Master's purposes. I bring my Master back in miniature to the world.

Saturday, John 14, 15-26.

Once, in a time of sickness, sickness that led him to the gates of death, John Woolman, that sweet and sublime soul over whom "the Dove seemed visibly brooding," had a vision. He forgot his own name; his separate identity was lost. Then he heard the angels sing, "John Woolman is dead," and he wondered greatly what these celestial voices might mean. But at last he felt a divine strength prepare his mouth, so that he said, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." And then the vision was opened to him. He perceived that there was joy in heaven over a sinner who had repented, and that the language, "John Woolman is dead," signified the death of his own will.

May God the Spirit unite me thus with Christ my Lord! May I know that I am in Christ, and that Christ is in me, manifesting himself to me in another way than he does to the world. Till I am a new man, a new creation, a child in the blameless family of God.

Sunday, John 16, 1-14.

It is not easy to describe that Power from on high which is within my reach. Power, even on its lower levels, eludes and escapes exact definition. Light and heat, the storm and the sea, the living seed and the permeating leaven, the wind rooting up the forest trees and the dew refreshing the face of nature and the little child in the home—every one of them is invested with the mysterious quality of power; and yet who shall explain in what the quality consists? But, if its secret baffles my discovery, I am a witness of its effects; I can study it in the results which it brings about; I know it by its fruits.

I crave the witness of these things, the presence of the Paraclete, in myself. Through me may he convict the world of sin and righteousness and judgment. May he guide me into all the truth.

OUR PULPIT.

A NOTABLE SERMON.

Synopsis of a sermon preached at the Diamond Jubilee of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, by Dr. Lyman Abbott.

Text—"After this manner therefore pray ye, Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."—Matt. vi. 9-10.

FOR something like nine centuries the church of Christ has been praying this prayer, and yet I wonder how much the church of Christ has really believed in the prayer—how much it has really believed that the kingdom of God was to come in the earth, and the will of God to be done in the earth, as it is in heaven. Take your concordance and examine the phrase "Kingdom of God" and set down in array the scripture texts, especially those uttered by Jesus Christ concerning the kingdom of God. This kingdom of God is at hand. It is one which the poor in spirit, the humble, the children easily enter. It is one which is open to the pagan nations. They will come from afar to enter it, while some of the children of Abraham will be shut out. It is a kingdom which it is difficult for the rich to enter and impossible for the self-satisfied and the self-righteous to enter. It is growing up on the earth; it is like a seed planted and growing secretly, men know not how. It grows from little beginnings to a great consummation. It grows under difficulty, and its growth depends upon circumstances. Sometimes it grows rapidly, sometimes slowly, sometimes it grows a little while and then fails and falls back again. Other things grow as well as the kingdom of God, evil as well as good, tares as well as wheat; and yet it is here. It is like a feast; the rich, the noble, the aristocratic, the educated, the cultivated are invited and they make excuses; one is too much occupied with his business; another is too much occupied with his property, another is too much concerned with domestic affairs; then the highways and hedges are sought for the poor, the lame, the halt, to come in. But to all the message is the same. The table is ready; all things are ready. Come! It is here; you have not to wait.

Invisible Kingdom.

And still, though it grows up here, and is here, and the message given to the disciples is to tell men that it is here, they cannot see it; they cannot say, "Lo here, lo there, look at it!" It is invisible; men cannot see it unless a new power of vision is given to them. It is not ostensible; it is not palpable. It is earthly, because it is on the earth, and yet it is celestial, because it is spiritual. It is human, because it is made up of men; it is divine, because it is the kingdom of God.

And when the consummation of human history is accomplished, the consummation will be written in this sentence: "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of Our Lord and of his Christ." The kingdoms of this world—still world kingdoms, the politics still human politics, the rule still human rule, and yet transformed so that the kingdoms of this world themselves are the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. We are not to wait until the drama is over; we are not to wait until some great surprises are made in some future state; we are not to wait for the kingdom of God to be seen in the celestial city. The new Jerusalem is coming down out of heaven among men.

"Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven." The ideal celestial, the realization earthly. The subject, men; the center and source and power divine.

I must assume what I should like to attempt to demonstrate, that the kingdom of God is to be on the earth, that Jesus Christ came to establish that kingdom of God on the earth, to found here upon this globe, out of living men, a new social order, and that he has appointed his church to take this work up and carry it on. We, his followers, are to herald this kingdom on the earth, organize this kingdom on the earth, suffer for this kingdom on the earth, and by our teaching, our organization and our suffering, build up this kingdom of God on the earth.

Essential Elements of Faith.

There are five points of Calvinism and there are five points of Christianity. Perhaps the five points of Christianity which I shall specify are not the five points some of you would specify, nor will I pretend to say that the five points of which I shall speak are sufficiently adequate and comprehensive to include Christianity. But I think you will all agree with me that they are at least essential elements in the Christian faith, and they are expressed by these five words: Revelation, redemption, regeneration, atonement and sacrifice. These five words have their individual and personal meaning, and on that great stress has been laid in the past, and not too much stress; but they also have a corporate or social meaning, and it is to these five words that I want to direct your thoughts.

1. In the first place, revelation is a personal word—the unveiling of God through Moses and David and Isaiah and Paul to you and to me, one by one. But this is not all that revelation means, and this is not even chiefly what revelation means. Says Dr. Samuel Harris of Yale Theological Seminary: "The Bible is not a collection of truths which God from time to time whispered in the ear to be communicated to the world as the unchanging formulas of thought and life for all. Revelation is God's majestic march through history, redeeming men from sin." The revelation of God is the revelation of a God in history as much now as at any former time.

2. Redemption has a personal meaning. It is the saving of the individual soul, and souls must be saved, one by one. But redemption is more than personal; it is organic, it is corporate. Christ is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, not some sins from some men in the world. He is the God who is majestically marching through history, redeeming not individuals merely, picked here and there, but redeeming the world.

3. Regeneration is an individual matter. Each individual soul must be born into the spiritual life as each individual soul must be born into the earthly life. But regeneration is more than an individual matter; it is a corporate matter, it is social. The nation is to be born anew; the community in its industry, its government, its social order, is to be born from above. Socialism and Christianity are alike in that both of them seek a new social order. They are unlike in the method by which they propose to secure the new social order.

The method of Christianity is that of regeneration. Christ was not a reformer; he was a regenerator. That is to say, Christ said very little about the forms of society, and a great deal about the spirit and the life which was to animate society. Life involves a spirit and an organism, the organism through which it acts, the spirit which acts through the organism. The reformer wishes to change the organism; Christ left the organism almost wholly untouched, and devoted himself to changing the spirit. Government was despotic; he did not preach republicanism. Slavery was universal; he said nothing about slavery. He sought to put into the existing forms a new life that the new life itself might create new forms or use the old ones.

4. Atonement is individual and personal. Each soul must be brought into harmony with God. But atonement is more than individual and personal; it is organic, it is corporate. In that unity of the individual soul with God is the secret of the unity of the human race in itself. "God was in Christ," says Paul, "reconciling the world unto himself," and because he was reconciling the world unto himself he was reconciling all parts of the world to one another. The secret of unity is the recognition of God's fatherhood, and of Christ's redeeming work in the world. Christ has told us what is the secret of the unity of the human race. "Call no man your father upon the earth, for all ye are brethren," and again, "Own no man your master on the earth, for one is your master, even Christ."

5. Sacrifice is personal. Christ suffered and died once for all, for the sins of the whole world. Sacrifice is individual; it is personal. Christ died for me—you cannot state that so strongly that I will not say amen to it. But sacrifice is generic and corporate and continuous. I will not enter into the debated question whether we are to say that Christ died on our behalf or that Christ died in our stead, but this I will say—and I am sure you will agree with me—his death is idle for us unless we take up our cross and follow him. His death is idle for us unless we die with him, and his crucifixion is ineffective for us unless we also are crucified and rise with him. It is written all over the gospels; it is written all over the Pauline writings. The Roman Catholics are right in their statement that the sacrifice is a continuous sacrifice; they are wrong in thinking it is a mere show of sacrifice—the wine and bread upon the altar. It is a sacrifice in the home, in the store, in the shop, a sacrifice day by day by every man for his fellow men.

EXPOSITORY HINTS.

Perfection in Service.

"He gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministry, unto the building up of the body of Christ."—Eph. 4: 11, 12. These words plainly teach that the multiplied agencies within the church exist for a practical end. That end is stated to be "the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering." Means of grace have for their end preparation for work. They are the food which is to give strength for the work of ministering.

The common version is misleading. There an official class, called "the Christian ministry," has been substituted for a ministering church. In the New Testament equality of responsibility is connected with equality of privilege. There is no priestly class. Of all believers it is said "ye are a royal priesthood." There is no official class called "the Christian ministry." Every Christian is a minister or servant of Christ. The offices and ordinances of religion are for the perfecting of all the saints unto the work of serving. It is not enough that Christians live decent lives. They are to live useful lives. It is not enough that they are good, they are to be good for something. They are to be the ministering body of Christ; they are to serve him by serving others; they are to fill up that which remains of his service to the world.

Through service comes edification. The saints are perfected in the work of ministering "unto the building up of the body of Christ." Service has a reflex influence upon the individual. It is a condition of spiritual growth. It is also the condition of church growth. In order to grow the church must put herself into vital and practical relation with the world, ministering of what she has to the whole circle of human needs, but ministering especially to those deep spiritual needs which it is her peculiar mission to supply.

Triumph in Christ.

"Thanks be unto God who always leadeth us in triumph in Christ."—II Cor. 2: 14. Two views have been taken of this verse. The first view is based upon the opinion that the figure contained in these words is that of a Roman triumph given to a successful general upon his return to the Imperial city. In the brilliant pageant he leads his captives through the gates in triumph. According to this view, God is represented as leading his people in triumph as trophies of his saving power; exhibiting those who were his former foes as willing captives overcome by love.

The other view represents God not as triumphing over his people, but as triumphing through them. Working in them mightily; making them strong for the conflict; transforming them from cowards into heroes, he leads them forth as his conquering legion. These two views are not antagonistic. The triumph of God over his people and through his people is said to be "in Christ." God conquers us through Christ; he makes us conquerors through Christ. Christ is the medium through whom divine power reaches us.

Our triumph is constant. God is to be thanked because "he always leadeth us in triumph in Christ." His conquest over us is continuous; our submission to him is unbroken. His conquest through us is also constant. He makes us successful in every conflict, leading us on, through the power of Christ, from victory to victory.

By his triumph over us and through us God "makes manifest through us the Savior of the knowledge of Christ in every place." The life in which God rules and reigns makes the name of Christ fragrant. For, since from him is the power, to him is the glory.

I asked the roses, as they grew Richer and lovelier in their hue,
What made their tints so rich and bright:
They answered, "Looking toward the light."
Ah! secret dear! said heart of mine;
God meant my life to be like thine,
Radiant with heavenly beauty bright,
By simply looking toward the Light.

BOOKS...

"Constructive Studies In the Life of Christ, An Aid to Historical Study, and a Condensed Commentary on the Gospels," by Earnest DeWitt Burton and Shailer Mathews, University of Chicago Press, 1901, pp. 295. Price $1.

The makers of this volume have had in mind needs of students in academies and colleges, and in the advanced classes of Sunday schools. The volume is a contribution distinct and helpful to that higher type of Sunday school and Bible class work which is demanded at the present time and is certainly destined to displace the miscellaneous and unpedagogical Bible study so largely in vogue even yet, in spite of the protests of those who feel its inadequacy. The advantages of the volume lie in its introduction, on the subject of Palestine during the last two centuries before Christ, its careful division of the life of Christ and discussion of the various portions of our Lord's career, with full references to helpful literature, both permanent and periodical, and suggestions for teaching. It is a book whose value will not depend upon the arrangement of any mere concerted course of studies in the life of Christ, but can be taken up at any time and carried forward by the appropriate section of any school or by a single class.

"What Is Your Life? or Aims and Aids to Success and Happiness," by W. J. Russell, St. Louis Christian Publishing Co., 1900. Price $1.

The table of contents of this volume indicates its scope and range, dealing as it does with such questions as "The Value of Time," "The Bad and Good Life," "Character Building," "The Business Life," "Christian Citizenship," "Amusements," etc. The essays are suggestive, and numerous references are made to standard and helpful literature. The book is not ambitious in its purpose, and it will be found excellent in its spirit and frequently suggestive.

"Satan, His Kingdom and Its Overthrow," by W. E. B. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago. pp 51. Price 10 cents.

Mr. Blackstone is the author of several books dealing with eschatology from the ultra pre-millennial point of view. The effort of this booklet is to rehabilitate the doctrine of Satan, which the author conceives to be in danger of neglect.

"Messiah's Second Advent, A Study in Eschatology," by Calvin Goodspeed, D. D., LL. D., Toronto. Wm. Briggs, 1900. pp. 234. Price $1.

The author is professor of systematic theology and apologetics in McMaster University, Toronto. The work is an able statement of the post-millenarian, and shows conclusively the unsubstantial foundations of pre-millennial arguments and interpretations of Scripture. Perhaps the greatest defect of the work lies in its literalism, which fails to separate between figure and fact in Biblical teachings regarding the last things.

"Parliamentary Rules Made Easy," by Mrs. Emma Lord Langan, Kansas City. Hailman & Co. 25 cents.

A convenient presentation of the principles of procedure that should regulate deliberative bodies. Any who are called upon to preside over or who have anything to do with gatherings of the kind would find this book of value.

A book by Wm. Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon, on "The Religious Spirit in the Poets," has just appeared. It is fortunate in not being an attempt to formulate the theology of the poets. This would be an entirely gratuitous undertaking. It is not impossible that a poet may be a theologian—but his theology is neither his power nor his charm. The probability is that he is not a theologian at all. The true theologian has such a care for consistency as to clip the wings of fancy; the true poet must be free.

Theology aims to enclose all truth. It analyzes, systematizes, classifies and labels. It must be all-inclusive and its parts mutually consistent. This task is interesting, but has not yet been accomplished.

Such a habit of thought stifles freedom. It quenches the muse. If this were done in furtherance of truth, it would be well—but there is more truth in our best poetry than in our best theology. There is more truth than poetry in the best poetry. There is more truth in poetry than in logic.

Spiritual truth is more a matter of insight than of syllogisms. Spiritual truth is warm; logic is cold. Truth is a circle; logic is a square. Logic attains to demonstration of truth. It is the instrument of reason. Poetry is the article of faith.

Bishop Carpenter is right in maintaining as he does with force the kinship between religion and poetry. He is also just in holding that there can be poetry without religion and religion without poetry. As a matter of fact, however, such instances are rare.

The book opens with the suggestive remark of Benj. Jowett to a young girl whom he found reading a semi-theological book, that Wordsworth would be more suitable. This is the key-thought of the first chapter and, indeed, of the book.

After discussing general principles in chapters on "Kinship Between Religion and Poetry," "Religion and Literary Inspiration," and "The Genuine and Superficial Religious Element," the author treats of the religious spirit in selected poets and poems. If it shall succeed in impressing the wisdom of Jowett's advice upon its readers it will prove a useful book.

Preachers will be wise when they recognize that it is more profitable for them to feast on the poets—the real poets—than upon the theologians, that is, if they care that their thoughts should have in them the breath of life. Poetry is not mere sentimentalism. It can be as robust and as invigorating to the mind as logic. Perhaps it is well to say that both logic and theology have a useful place, and there is no intention to decry the latter. But they are not everything, even in invigorating mental training of the preacher.

The zeal for Kipling was a tribute to the vigor and virility with which he has declared his vision of things as they are.

Tennyson is gentler and not so rugged, but he, too, has a vision. He sings of the problems of life. He feeds us. No doubt a theology might be extracted from his works but he has not done it. It would not have been artistic. It would not have been according to the analogy of nature or revelation. His thoughts are not labeled; they are living.

FRESH AT NIGHT.

If One Uses the Right Kind of Food.

If by proper selection of food one can feel strong and fresh at the end of a day's work, it is worth while to know the kind of food that will produce this result.

A school teacher of Media, Kan., says in this connection, "I commenced the use of Grape-Nuts Food five months ago. At that time my health was so poor that I thought I would have to give up my work altogether. I was rapidly losing in weight, had little appetite, was nervous and sleepless, and experienced, almost constantly, a feeling of exhaustion. I tried various remedies without good results, then I determined to give particular attention to my food, and have learned something of the properties of Grape-Nuts for rebuilding the brain and nerve centers.

"I commenced using that food and have since made a constant and rapid improvement in health in spite of the fact that all this time I have been engaged in the most strenuous and exacting work.

"I have gained twelve pounds in weight and have a good appetite, my nerves are steady and I sleep sound. I have such strength and reserve force that I feel almost as strong and fresh at the close of a day's work as at the beginning.

"Before using Grape-Nuts I was troubled much with weak eyes, but as my vitality increased the eyes became stronger. I never heard of food as nutritious and economical as Grape-Nuts. Please omit my name from print." Name can be given by Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

General Church News

The Christian News Department will be made a prominent feature in The Christian Century. Our aim will be to give a comprehensive view of the things which are deemed of vital interest. In the collection of news we invite the co-operation of our friends in all parts of the country. An indispensable quality of these items will be brevity. A book worth one dollar or upwards will be given each week to the person sending in the best list of news items of general interest for this department. The book offered this week is Dr. Trumbull's Yale Lectures on the Sunday-school, the regular price of which is $2.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, D. D., preached the baccalaureate sermon to the senior class of the Chicago Law School June 2 in Studebaker Hall.

Immanuel Baptist Church, Elgin, has received fifty-three additions during the year and a quarter of the pastorate of Rev. H. F. Wright.

Rev. Dr. William Fawcett, pastor of the Methodist church of River Forest, will dedicate a church at Winnipeg June 9, and deliver the ordination sermon before the Methodist conference of Manitoba.

The First Congregational church of Elgin, being now entirely free from debt, was dedicated May 12, on the sixty-fifth anniversary of its organization. The dedicatory sermon was preached by President Blanchard.

Rev. J. W. Conley, D. D., of Oak Park delivered the alumni address at the Cedar Valley Seminary, Osage, Iowa, May 25. He also is to preach the baccalaureate sermon at Denison University, Granville, Ohio, June 9.

The pulpit of the Forty-first Street Presbyterian church was filled by the Rev. Cleland B. McAfee, D. D., pastorelect, Sunday, May 26, a large congregation gathering to hear him. He expects to begin his pastoral work about July 1st.

The remaining indebtedness of $3,500 on the Forty-seventh Street Methodist Church was paid this week. This was accomplished through the generosity of G. F. Swift, who added $1,750 to his previous contributions, making over $6,000 paid by him.

Alumni of the Western Theological Seminary (Episcopal), 1113 Washington boulevard, have elected the following officers: President, Rev. J. C. Sage, Dixon, Ill.; vice president, Rev. H. R. Neeley; secretary, Rev. A. B. Whitcombe; treasurer, Rev. J. C. Cole.

At the General Lutheran general synod meeting in Des Moines Rev. F. W. Meyer of Chicago urged the importance of taking advantage of the opportunities in Chicago with its large German population and the growing demand for Lutheran churches.

The seventeenth yearly commencement exercises of the Danish-Norwegian Theological Seminary of the University of Chicago took place in the Scandinavian Pilgrim Church May 10. There were six graduates. The seminary during the last year has been attended by twenty-seven students.

The forty-fifth annual commencement exercises of Garrett Biblical institute were held May 2 in the chapel in Memorial hall in Evanston. Six orations were delivered by members of the graduating class. The resignation of Dr. C. F. Bradley as a member of the faculty was accepted.

Young Men's Christian Association.—Commencement exercises of the Secretarial Institute and Training School took place May 31. There were twelve graduates. The annual statement of the institute showed rapid strides in the last year and promised still greater improvement.

Rev. Austin K. de Blois, Ph. D., pastor of the First Baptist church, Elgin, has been given a three months' vacation, which he will spend abroad. His church has subscribed $3,300 for repairing and decorating the church building in addition to raising $1,000 more for annual expenses this year than in any previous year.

Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church, Chicago, and Mrs. Edith Boyden are to be married July 2. After this Dr. Henson will take his vacation during July and August. He will address some Chautauqua assemblies and is one of the preachers at the Delaware Avenue church, Buffalo, during the Pan-American Exposition.

The thirteenth annual rally of the Young Ladies' Missionary Societies and the Societies of Christian Endeavor of Chicago and vicinity was held in Pilgrim Congregational church June 1. Dr. Emily Dillman Smith, appointed to Foochow; Miss J. Arnott, under appointment to Africa, and Rev. Dwight Goddard of Foochow made addresses.

Rev. Alfred C. Kelly, late pastor of South Chicago Baptist church, but now of the Central Baptist Orphanage, was presented May 23 with the four volumes of the autobiography of Charles H. Spurgeon. The gift came from some fifty or more German brethren and sisters, who united with the church during the last year of Mr. Kelly's pastorate.

The corner stone of the new Grace Episcopal church, Oak Park, was laid June 2. Addresses were made by Bishop McLaren, Bishop Coadjutor Anderson and Rev. E. V. Shayler, rector of the church. There was a grand choir of 200 voices, made up of the choirs from St. Barnabas', Calvary, the cathedral, St. Martin's (Austin), Holy Communion (Maywood), and Grace Church (Oak Park).

Lake Forest University.—The Rev. James G. K. McClure, D. D., who has notified the Board of Trustees of the Lake Forest University that he wished to be relieved as president of the institution served four years in that position without pay. The Rev. Richard D. Harlan of Rochester, N. Y., has been offered the presidency. Dr. McClure prefers to resign the presidency rather than retire from the ministry. He is pastor of the Lake Forest Presbyterian Church. Since he became president the university has secured $190,000 in interest-bearing endowment and four large buildings have been erected on the campus. They are Lois Durand Hall, the dormitory for women, erected at a cost of $30,000; Alice Home, the hospital, the cost of which was $10,000; the Arthur S. Reid Library, costing $34,000, and the Reid Chapel, costing $34,000.

Presbyterian Ministers' Meeting.—The ministers' meeting on May 27 had for its topic the paper of Rev. S. M. Campbell on "The Problem Before the Smaller City Churches," which was discussed with interest. Rev. Dr. C. B. McAfee, by request, gave an outline of the proposed plan of federating the Bible classes of young men in city Presbyterian churches. The plan involves a central office and a paid secretary. A combination of the young men seems desirable for mutual strengthening and for promoting the Christian welfare of newcomers to the city. The scheme provides also for social privileges and aid in various directions.

WHERE'S THE USE?

Drugging with Coffee and Keeping Sick All the Time.

A coffee drinker is liable to a smash almost any time and without much warning. A New York man, C. W. Bedford, 1065 Lex. Ave., says that when he was in apparently perfect health, weighing about 185 pounds, with good appetite, he suddenly had a severe attack of gastritis. He lost his appetite and the doctor put him on a rigid diet and gave him remedies, but all to no purpose. He says, "Everybody I met had a cure and I tried a lot of them. I lost weight until I reached 144 pounds. I had those nasty gastric staggers.

"About the middle of the summer, when on a vacation, a friend asked whether I drank coffee or not. Being told that I did, he suggested that I quit it and take Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts breakfast food. I laughed at him and told him that I was through with special articles of diet.

"One day the nerves had another bad smash and I concluded to quit coffee and see if that was really the cause of the trouble.

"Next morning I had Postum for breakfast and it was well made, and tasted good. I also had Grape-Nuts for breakfast, and from that day my troubles begade to fade away.

"I am steadily gaining in flesh, can sleep naturally, and can eat whatever I want. What is the use of a man's drinking an article like coffee that poisons him, and causes such troubles as I have had when you can have a delicious Food Coffee like Postum that builds up instead of tearing down?" Health is worth more than all the coffee on earth.

the Cathedral May 28. Bishop McLean preached the annual sermon. A scathing denunciation of the municipal government of Chicago closed the address. The officers elected are: The Rev. Luther Pardee, secretary; the Rev. J. M. Ericson, assistant secretary; F. F. Ainsworth, treasurer. In the Diocese of Chicago there are fifty parishes and about forty missions.

The committee appointed by the presbytery of Chicago (United Presbyterian) to organize the congregation at Evanston, Ill., completed its work May 22. Twenty-six members were received, five on profession of faith. Two elders were ordained and installed, Adam Tait and Wm. R. Wilson. The outlook is encouraging.

A council representing eighteen Baptist churches met with Bethel Church, Chicago, May 23, to advise concerning the recognition of its pastor, Mr. D. B. Jones, as a regular Baptist minister. Until three years ago Mr. Jones was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. The council approved his recognition.

Bohemian Conference.—Thirty-five ministers from all over the United States attended the opening session of the First Interdenominational Bohemian convention May 29 at Bethlehem Congregational church, Loomis, near Eighteenth street. The object of the meeting was to discuss the religious needs of people of Slavonic extraction and plan an extension of church work among them. Representatives of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and Congregational churches were in attendance.

Woman's Auxiliary of Chicago Diocese.—Representatives from every Episcopal parish and mission in the city attended the seventeenth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary at the Church of the Epiphany. All the officers were re-elected. They are: President, Mrs. John Henry Hopkins; treasurer, Mrs. James T. Hoyne; corresponding secretary, Miss Mary L. Banks; recording secretary, Miss Florence Beckett; vice presidents, Miss Katherine D. Arnold, Mrs. V. B. Fullerton, Mrs. W. D. C. Street and Mrs. Eleanor M. Duncombe.

Baptist.

Women's Home Mission Society.—The year's receipts were $69,976.79, with a deficit of over $4,000. Last year seventeen young women graduated from the Missionary Training School at Chicago.

One hundred and fourteen new members have been received into the First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., since the Rev. Henry Alford Porter became pastor two years ago; forty-one by letter and seventy-three by baptism and experience.

At Bay City, Mich., the First Church closes its year with a record of seventy new members received, thirty-eight by baptism, twenty-six by letter and six by experience.

The semi-annual meeting of the Quincy Baptist Association was held at Plainville, Ill., May 23-25. The first day was devoted to Sunday school work and the next to the young people.

Rev. Dr. William Dandridge Thomas, one of the most widely known Baptist ministers in Virginia, and for the last twenty years professor of philology in Richmond College, died in Baltimore May 21.

Rock River Association.—The annual associational meeting is being held with the First Church of Sycamore, June 5-6. This meeting marks the sixty-first anniversary of the organization. The association includes thirteen churches of the denomination. In this number are three Swedish churches. The total membership represented is about 2,750.

At the Anniversaries.—The "Sunday School Problem of the Twentieth Century" was the title of an important address delivered by Dr. C. R. Blackall. He asked and answered the questions: Is the Sunday school what its name implies, or does it merely afford opportunity for personal exhortation and spiritual application? Have the methods employed in management and teaching been so effective in results as to warrant their continuance? Rev. James Edmunds urged suitable training courses for Sunday school teachers. On the matter of co-ordination of the missionary societies, the action taken favored closer co-operation by an annual meeting of the executive boards of the several societies for consultation, and recommended that delegates to the annual gatherings shall, so far as possible, be identical, uniform qualifications for voters being adopted by each society.

The Missionary Union.—For a number of years there have been annual deficits, but this year the report shows the turning of the tide. There has been a decrease of debt, the year having paid its own expenses and $7,300 on past deficits. The donations from churches and individuals amounted to $361,000, and the grand total of receipts from all sources has been $687,706.13, exclusive of famine funds. During the year nine men and eight women have been sent to the foreign field.

Home Mission Society.—The year began with a debt of $32,200.90, but the receipts have been sufficient to liquidate the debt, carry on the work on an enlarged scale, and leave a balance of $203.41 in the treasury. This gratifying result is made possible by the very large receipts from legacies amounting to $159,323.65, which is almost $50,000 more than the annual average for the past ten years. The total receipts for actual working purposes were $684,910.71.

Seventh Day Baptists.—The quarterly meeting and ministerial conference of the churches of Southern Wisconsin and Chicago was held at Milton Junction, Wis., May 24-29.

Congregationalist.

There are now 601 Congregational churches in Massachusetts, with 113,235 members, a gain in membership of 269. During the year 3,385 joined the church on profession and 3,022 by letter. The Sunday schools numbering 600, report 120,286 members, a gain of 5,075.

During the nine years of labor of C. B. Moody as pastor of Pilgrim Church, Minneapolis, Minn., 442 have been received to membership, a large proportion on confession, 49 of the number uniting in 1900. The present membership is 445.

Dr. J. F. Dudley.—During his six years' pastorate of the First Church, Dak., the number of families connected with the church has doubled, nearly a hundred members have been added to the church, a floating indebtedness of $3,000 has been cared for, and the college carried through a financial crisis. Dr. Dudley will round out with this pastorate nearly forty years' service in the Northwest in Minnesota, Wisconsin and North Dakota. His ministry has been spent with four churches, and has been one of the most notable in these years of the making of the Northwest.

The Minnesota Congregational Club had a spring outing at Lake Minnetonka and elected the following officers: A. C. Anderson, St. Paul, president; Rev. R. P. Herrick of Minneapolis, first vice president; Rev. T. M. Edmunds of Mankato, second vice president; Rev. W. A. Snow of Minneapolis, secretary; Walter N. Carroll of Minneapolis, treasurer and W. B. Geery of St. Paul auditor.

Iowa Association.—The sixty-second annual meeting began at Burlington May 21. A review of the past century and a forecast the signs of promise were among the topics presented. A new departure, a Sunday school convention, occupied one afternoon. "Education at the Turning Point of the Centuries," "The State of Religion," at this same point, and "Type of Piety the New Century Needs," were the live subjects of addresses delivered by Prof. Fairbanks of the State University, Rev. A. L. Frisbie and Rev. Mr. Smith. Prof. Graham Taylor spoke on "The Church for the Twentieth Century." "The Church and the Laboring Man" was the subject of a reasonable discussion by the newly elected president of the State Federation of Labor.

Michigan Association.—The state reports a net gain of thirty-eight in church membership for the decade, but a small reduction in the membership for the year due to the obliteration of little churches or decay of towns where lumbering interests have fallen off. There is a corresponding decrease of 1,000 in Sunday school membership. The benevolences have greatly increased, however; they amount to $107,000, a large part being gifts for Olivet College. The Home Missionary Society has come to the end of the year with its bills paid and $6,000 in the treasury, but the receipts from the churches have fallen off steadily for seven years. There would have been a deficit this year but for a legacy of $5,000. For the first time in many years the Home Missionary Society has been able to undertake new work in the Northern Peninsula, where a general missionary, Rev. F. Bagnall, is pushing things, and in the new portion of the Lower Peninsula where emigrants are settling up land recently stripped of timber. For the first time state contributions for Home Missions have exceeded local needs.

South Dakota.—The thirty-first annual State Association meeting had two very practical and hopeful features: two open parliament hours. One was led by the State H. M. Superintendent on Pastoral and Ministerial Work. A question drawer called out such questions: How would you act in visiting at homes where the church affinities are doubtful and the conditions sensitive? Is it wise for a pastor to join secret societies? If a pastor marries on his own field, is it wise for him to remain? When should a pastor leave a field? Are short pastorates injurious to a church? Should a pastor ever withdraw a resignation? Should a pastor take money for funerals? How should the invitation to the Lord's Supper be given? The other hour was given to the recommendations of the "Committee of Nine."

The Disciples.

Summer Bible School.—The school will meet for the first time in Hopkinsville, Ky., June 16 and will continue thirteen days. J. B. Briney of Missouri is principal and instructor in Christian Evidences. Chas. A. Young, a professor in the University of Virginia, will lecture on The Great Teachings of Certain Books of the Bible. Prof. Young will also preach to a great mass meeting on "The Divine Christ." W. H. Pinkerton of Paducah will give three lectures on as many periods of Church History. J. L. Hill of Madisonville will lecture on Homiletics. A profitable feature of the program will be a series of conferences on Sunday school and Endeavor work, the prayer meeting and other practical problems.

Children's Day.—Last year 182 schools in Kentucky gave $2,935.04 for Foreign Missions. In Kansas there are only about one-half as many churches. In Kansas 229 schools contributed; in Iowa 296 schools; in Missouri, 374; in Illinois, 397; in Ohio, 383.

Morris St. Church, Indianapolis.—The meetings still continue. Up to May 22 there had been thirty-six additions during the meeting, twenty-nine of these being by primary obedience. Since January 1 there have been sixty-two added to this congregation, and many more are "almost persuaded."

The Church of Christ at Canton, Ill., is ten years old and has 400 members. They recently celebrated their tenth anniversary.

Rev. S. D. Dutcher, of Oklahoma City, Okla., has had 65 additions to the congregation during his first three and a half months' work. This is a great field and he is building up the church rapidly.

The annual convention of the Northeastern Iowa Christian Churches closed on May 23 a successful session of three days at Marshalltown, Ia.

Bethany, Mo.—The new church is very satisfactory. Toward the house $11,000 has been paid in one year, leaving only $350, and that is provided. The school membership has increased its average attendance more than 300 per cent, all under the efficient leadership of Pastor F. J. Stinson. Enrollment now 225, the best in the history of the church.

Fort Smith, Ark.—The meeting continued for eight weeks, and 163 persons came forward. About 125 were candidates for baptism. At the beginning of the present year lots were purchased for a new building, and this enterprise will now be vigorously prosecuted. Since the meeting closed 13 have been added, all but one by confession. The membership is now about 450.

The Church of Christ at Lincoln, Neb., in two months has received twenty-seven new members and raised a building fund of $2,100, and secured a good site for building.

Growth of The Disciples Church.—The missionary conventions of this church body, outside of the International C. E. conventions, have been the largest, so it is claimed, of any religious organization. The membership in Illinois is reported very strong, numbering 124,000. Missouri leads the states for membership with 168,000, then follow Kentucky, 115,000; Indiana, 114,000; Texas, 76,000; Ohio, 75,000; Iowa, 56,000, and a total of 1,250,000 in the United States.

The programme for the convention at Minneapolis includes Professor H. L. Willett of the University of Chicago, Rev. F. D. Powers of the President Garfield Memorial Church of Washington, D. C., and J. H. Garrison of St. Louis, well known to Christian Endeavorers generally as one of the trustees of their united societies.

School of Pastoral Helpers.—Held its first commencement at the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, May 12-14. The class sermon was delivered by J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard. An address was delivered by Dr. H. L. Willett. A. M. Harvuot, who more than any one else may be called the founder of the school, presented the diplomas to a class of eight graduates.

The baccalaureate services of Christian College, Columbia, were held in the Christian Church, graduating class numbering thirty-one. The institution excels in its musical training, both vocal and instrumental.

Bro. Geo. L. Snively of Jacksonville, Ill., has resigned his pastorate in that city to become general secretary of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, whose expanding work, including the maintenance of three Homes, has come to demand the services of such a man in the field.

Episcopal.

Central Pennsylvania.—The thirtieth annual convention of the diocese was held May 21 and 22. The reports showed a year of gratifying progress. Confirmations have been larger in number than usual, and a number of new churches have been built or completed.

The 200th anniversary of the organization of the parish of St. Paul's, Edenton, N. C., was celebrated May 22, in connection with the eighteenth annual council of the diocese of East Carolina.

Sunday School Graded Instruction.—For two years past the diocese of Florida has had a committee at work for the purpose of finding or preparing a practicable system of graded instruction for Sunday schools. At the fifty-eighth annual council this committee presented a scheme for graded Sunday school study covering a period of six years. This was approved by the council, and the committee continued, with instructions to give special attention to the selection of textbooks, or the preparation of lessons, where not otherwise obtainable, suited to the teaching of the system. When the scheme has been perfected it will be offered to the consideration of the church at large.

Diocese of Iowa.—Encouraging progress was reported at the forty-ninth annual convention held May 21 in Des Moines. There is evidence of a thorough awakening throughout the diocese and of a "mind to work" on the part of clergy and people. A beautiful new church has been built at Charlton, costing $22,000. New churches are contemplated at Oskaloosa and Albia. The foundation of a new church is laid and paid for at West Union. Lots have been paid for at Britt; one nearly paid for at Shenandoah and West Union.

Sunday School Conference.—The second annual meeting of the Sunday School Commission of the diocese of New York was held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, May 20. The Holy Communion was celebrated and the opening address made by Bishop Potter. The topics treated were "The Present State of Sunday School Education," by Rev. Pascal Harrower, chairman of the commission; "The Obligation Upon the Pastor to Know Child-Nature," by Rev. Dr. Alford A. Butler of Faribault, Minn.; "The Desirability of a Comprehensive and Systematic Order of Study For Our Sunday Schools," by Rev. Dr. Lawrence T. Cole, warden of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y.; "How Shall Such an Order of Study

Be Co-ordinated with the Development of the Child-Mind?" by Prof. S. T. Dutton of Columbia University.

Long Island.—In almost every department of diocesan life and endeavor there has been a steady and constant growth. In thirty-two years the number of communicants has quadrupled, the number of clergy increased twofold and the number of parishes doubled. In the past convention year 2,000 have been confirmed, making a total of 50,000 in thirty-two years. The missionary work of the diocese is exceedingly gratifying. Forty-four mission stations are being maintained at a cost to the diocese of only $10,000.

New Cathedral for Ohio.—During the past year $300,000 has come into the hands of the trustees, which, with the sale of the site of the old cathedral property, will enable the great enterprise to be begun at once. Some years ago a large and beautiful site was secured, at the corner of Euclid avenue and Perry street, in Cleveland. On the rear of this property a fine stone parish building, three stories high, has been already erected, with a chapel, church club rooms, school rooms, gymnasium, dormitories, and with modern improvements and facilities for all kinds of church work. The plans of the cathedral show it to be one of the most beautiful structures of this character in all the middle west, to cost $600,000.

At Wabasha, Minn., May 23, Bishop Whipple consecrated a new church edifice of stone costing $20,000, a memorial of Mrs. Thos. Irving given by her husband.

Lutheran.

Fortieth Biennial Convention.—Rev. W. S. Freas, D. D., of Baltimore, was elected president. An address of welcome was delivered by Governor Shaw, the Mayor of Des Moines, etc. The synod will be in session ten days. June 1 the convention celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the establishment of a western superintendency of home missions and the appointment of Dr. Samuel B. Barnitz of Des Moines as western secretary.

The annual session of the Franckean Lutheran Synod opened May 23 at Troy, N. Y. It continued over Sunday, June 2.

The Rev. J. A. Treas, who resigned his work at Red Wing, Minn., to accept a call to Portland, Ore., has entered upon his duties. He is a graduate of the Chicago Lutheran Seminary.

Rev. Louis Zahn, pastor of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church and visiting elder of the Quincy Synod, dropped dead while making an address at the laying of the corner-stone of a new school building.

The new Orphans' Home at Waverly, Ia., of the Lutheran Synod of Iowa and other states, recently completed at a cost of $35,000, was formally dedicated May 30 in the presence of 5,000 people.

The Twin City Central Luther

League held its sixth convention May 27 in St. Mark's English Evangelical Lutheran Church, North St. Paul. Lutheran literature and "Practical Work for Our Young People" were among the subjects presented.

Methodist.

The next semi-annual meeting of the Board of Methodist Bishops will take place in Cincinnati in November.

The Iowa state Methodist camp meeting will be held on the old Methodist grounds at Clear Lake, Ia., July 17 to 28, and will be conducted by Rev. Dr. R. N. McKaig of Minneapolis, Rev. Dr. C. W. Blodgett of Cincinnati assisting during the closing week.

The Ministerial Conference for the Indianapolis district has held a three days' session at Mooresville, Ind., from May 19 to May 22.

A quarter of a million converts are alleged to have been made and added to Methodist Episcopal Church membership during the last winter. This statement is made by Secretary Cooper of the Methodist Forward Movement, and by him is based upon returns from 150 Presiding Elder districts.

Rev. H. S. Abbott, who is president of the Georgia Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and superintendent of the Southern District of that church, has resigned his position and will remove to Marion, Ind., where he will take a year's vacation.

The St. Paul district Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church opened a convention at Stillwater, Minn., May 25, to continue through June 2.

The members of the First German M. E. Church of St. Paul, Minn., celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the church May 24.

The fiftieth anniversary of the Wesley M. E. Church of Trenton, O., was celebrated by jubilee services through the week beginning May 26. Dr. John S. Heisler, the first pastor of the church, preached the evening sermon.

The Iowa Conference Twentieth Century Convention was held at Ottumwa, Ia., May 28 and 29, for the consideration of advanced work along Methodist lines.

Presbyterian.

The first church at Pasadena, Cal., has had another large accession of forty-five members. Of these twenty-one were upon confession of faith. The pastor, the Rev. M. J. McLeod, has certainly great cause for encouragement.

Since the last quarterly communion the Third church, Sioux City, Iowa, Rev. C. F. Ensign, pastor, has added to its roll twenty members, eighteen being on profession. There were six baptisms of adults.

Cumberland Presbyterian.—At the general assembly session at West Point, Miss., the committee on centennial education endowment movement reported $203,000 raised for college and theological seminary endowment since the inauguration of the movement two years ago; this in addition to the million dollar James Militon University being established in Decatur, Ill. Six colleges and the theological seminary are named as the only objects of the endowment funds being raised.

Southern Presbyterian.—Dr. N. M. Woods of Memphis was chosen moderator of the forty-first annual session of the general assembly at Little Rock, Ark. Rev. S. L. Morris of Macon, Ga., was made secretary of home missions. The assembly divided the synod of Mississippi and Louisiana on state lines. The synod of Memphis was divided and the synod of Tennessee was created.

Church Extension.—At a meeting of representative Presbyterians held in the Second church, St. Louis, recently it was decided to raise $100,000 for church extension. Dr. Frank W. Sneed pledged his congregation for $25,000 if the other churches made up the other $75,000. The fund is to be raised in shares of $10 each, payable annually at 10 per cent. Rev. Dr. C. A. Dick-ey addressed a mass meeting of Presbyterians in Washington-Compton Avenue church on the following Sunday evening in the interest of the movement, the result of which, together with the efforts of the members of the Twentieth Century fund committee and the pastors of the city, was the raising of nearly the entire amount.

Presbyterianism in Minnesota.—The growth, especially in southern Minnesota and in Mankato Presbytery, has been phenomenal. Thirty-eight churches have been organized in this one presbytery in the last ten years. The church membership has grown 125 per cent, and the population has increased 35 per cent. Sixty-eight per cent of all additions were by confession of faith. The actual loss by death and removal has been 41 per cent of all additions.

Topeka, Kas.—Four years ago the Rev. J. D. Counterline, D. D., was installed pastor of the First church. During that time he has baptised sixty-three infants and 134 adults; received into the church, 625; present membership, active, 1,152; reserved roll, 150. Raised for benevolences, $19,314; for congregational expenses, including repairs and payment of old debts and mortgages, $35,838; total moneys raised for all purposes, $55,152.

First Church, St. Louis.—While nearly every church in St. Louis presbytery has given toward benevolences, the First church, Rev. W. J. McKit-trick, pastor, deserves special mention. The total amount raised for all purposes during the year just closed was $44,549, of which amount only $12,000 was used for congregational expenses.

Ministerial Changes.—During the past month three Presbyterian pastors in St. Louis resigned their charges. Rev. Dr. J. M. Spencer left the People's church (South) to become the president of Westminster Female college in Fulton, Mo.; Rev. H. M. Campbell closed his work at the Cote Brillante church and is to go to the Mesa church in Pueblo, Colo., and Rev. Dr. William H. Bates resigned the Webster Grove church owing to poor health.

Creed Revision.—The general assembly adopted the following: "That a committee be appointed and instructed to prepare and submit to the next general assembly, for such disposition as may seem to it wise, a brief statement of our reformed faith, expressed as far as possible in untechnical language, the purpose of this statement being to give information and a better understanding of our doctrinal beliefs and not with a view to being a substitute for or an alternative of our confession of faith."

"That this committee be instructed to prepare amendments of chapter 10, section 3; chapter 16, section 7; chapter 22, section 3, and chapter 25, section 6, of our confession of faith, either by modification of the text or by declaratory statement, but by a declaratory statement so far as possible, so as more clearly to express the mind of the church, with additional statements concerning the love of God for all men, missions and the Holy Spirit. It being understood that the revision shall in no way impair the integrity of the system of doctrine set forth in our confession and taught in the Holy Scriptures."

The United Presbyterian Church.—The board of church extension reports receipts for the last year as $81,846.96. Of the 909 congregations in America, 172 have not contributed to this work. The board of ministerial relief reports an endowment fund of $116,090; the year's receipts, $36,415, and expenditures $31,517. Five thousand dollars by the general assembly was appropriated for the establishment of a mission at Dolaib Hai, Soudan. Steps were ordered to be taken for the establishment of colleges at Asyut, Egypt, and Gordon, India. Ten thousand dollars was appropriated for ministerial relief and $100,000 for home missions. The Women's General Missionary society reported that contributions during the year were $31,478 and disbursements $31,707. The society supports thirty-nine women in the missionary field and maintains a boarding school for girls in upper Egypt.

General.

CHURCH FEDERATION.—Under the name of "The Federation of Church and Christian Workers in Toledo and Vicinity," a close union has been formed, the object of which is to extend religious work into every home in Toledo, O. Nearly all evangelical bodies in the city were represented at the meeting, May 29, and even greater interest than expected was shown in the organization. The government of the federation is vested in a council, composed of the pastor and two delegates from each church and one delegate from each organization other than a church. The council will have no authority over the churches or over any society, its powers being simply advisory and executive. The following were elected to serve for one year: President, Rev. Dr. R. W. A. Powell, First Presbyterian; vice president, Thomas Tracy, St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal; secretary, Rev. G. B. Wiltsie, Monroe Street Methodist Episcopal; treasurer, Alfred Milmine, First Baptist; executive committee, T. F. Randolph, Central Congregational; J. T. Jones, St. Paul's Episcopal; Rev. E. D. Wettach, Grace Reformed; Rev. F. P. Rosselot, Memorial United Brethren; and the Rev. H. F. MacLane, Norwood Avenue Church of Christ.

State Sunday School Convention.—The forty-third annual convention of the Illinois Association opened May 28 in Bloomington, Ill. There was a very large attendance, every county in the state being entitled to twelve delegates, except Cook, which is not limited. The principal speaker was Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman of New York City. His leading address will be on Wednesday evening on "The Bible and the New Century," and Thursday evening on "The Work of the True Preacher." Prof. H. M. Hamill and Mr. Marion Lawrence were also among the speakers. The convention elected the following officers: President, Knox P. Taylor, Bloomington; first vice president, L. B. Vose Macomb; second vice president H. H. Rassweiler, Naperville. Executive committee W. S. Rearick, Ashland; I. W. Schill, Polo; W. B. Rundle, Clinton; H. O. Stone, Bloomington; H. L. Lay, Kewanee; R. C. Willis Toledo. Knox Taylor elected president, is a noted evangelist of the Christian Church.

Brooklyn Sunday School Union.—The seventy-second anniversary was celebrated Friday, May 24, by a parade of 90,000 children, in nineteen divisions each with its own line of march. The parade was noteworthy for its remarkable display of patriotic emblems—whole platoons of children were arrayed in the national colors; flags and sashes were worn by the elders.

The Dunkards.—Eight to ten thousand persons attended the biennial conference of Dunkards which opened May 24 at Lincoln, Neb. The conference was held on the State fair grounds and the seventy-acre tract was covered with tents, in which the members made their homes during the week.

The twentieth international Christian Endeavor convention will be held in Cincinnati July 6 to 10. Arrangements are made for six meetings to be held simultaneously, in Music Hall, the Odeon, the two exposition halls and in adjoining churches.

Salvation Army.—A tract of land valued at $25,000 has been given for farm colony purposes. Efforts are being made in Cleveland to raise $25,000 for the extension of colony work. There are twenty homes for fallen women in this country, with accommodations for 500 girls. Last year 1,500 women passed through the rescue homes. "This of itself means a great deal," says Col. Booth-Tucker, "but the true significance of this work lies in the fact that 80 per cent of the women who entered the Salvation Army homes came out good women, have remained so, and, with the help of God, will continue to live pure and useful lives."

Moody Bible Institute.—The summer school which opened June 4 offers free to both men and women courses for the study of the Bible and practical methods of Christian work including instruction in music. Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., of Boston will conduct a synthetic study of the Old Testament books and General Epistles. He will also give practical instruction in the preparation of Bible readings and addresses and conduct a weekly teacher's meeting in the International Sabbath school lesson. Associated with Dr. Gray will be Prof. N. Fay Smith of Mt. Hermon, Mass.; Rev. Wm. Evans of Rogers Park, Ill.; John H. Hunter, Rev. R. A. Torrey and J. H. Todd of Chicago, and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan of East Northfield, Mass., who has just arrived in this country to promote the Northfield Extension Movement.

The Winona Bible Conference will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 17-27. Rev. John McNeill of Scotland, whom Mr. Moody counted one of the greatest preachers in the world, will preach every evening during the conference. Rev. George T. Purves, D. D., LL.D., of New York; Rev. James M. Buckley, D. D., editor of the Methodist Christian Advocate; the Rev. Cornelius Weelfkin, D. D., church of Brooklyn; Rev. W. G. Moorhead, D. D., United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Xenia, Ohio; Rev. George L. Robinson, D. D., McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill.; Bishop J. W. Hott, D. D., of the United Brethren church, Dayton, Ohio; the Rev. L. W. Munhall, D. D., the distinguished Evangelist; Mr. S. D. Gordon of Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. S. H. Hadley of the McAuley Mission, New York city; Mr. Todd H. Hall, the Detective Evangelist, and very many others will make addresses. A conference for pastors and church officers will be held daily under the direction of a successful pastor. The Young People's Conference will be under the direction of Mr. John Willis Baer, secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. The children's meetings will be held daily under the leadership of the Rev. J. W. Van DeVenter of Scotland. A conference for evangelists directed by Rev. L. W. Munhall, D. D., will be held and also a Missionary's Conference

MORE LOVE GO CHRIST!

More love to thee, O Christ!
More love to thee!
Hear thou the prayer I make,
On bended knee;
This is my earnest plea—
More love, O Christ! to thee,
More love to thee!

Once earthly joy I craved,
Sought peace and rest;
Now thee alone I seek,
Give what is best;
This all my prayer shall be—
More love, O Christ! to thee,
More love to thee!

Let sorrow do its work,
Send grief and pain;
Sweet are thy messengers,
Sweet their refrain,
When they can sing with me—
More love, O Christ! to thee,
More love to thee!

Then shall my latest breath
Whisper thy praise;
This be the parting cry
My heart shall raise—
This still its prayer shall be—
More love, O Christ, to thee,
More love to thee!

Elizabeth Payson Prentiss.

EARLY CONVERSIONS.

A farmer on a cool afternoon was gathering his sheep and lambs into the barn, to shelter them from the weather. His minister asked him why he was so anxious to get the little lambs in. He replied:

"If they stay out all night they will freeze to death before morning."

"But," said the minister, "why not let them stay out several nights to see if they are going to live, and then take them in?"

The farmer's child had recently professed conversion, and he had said she was too young to join the church, that she had better wait to see if she was going to be pious. His own conduct about the lambs convinced him of his error, and he consented for his child to be taken into the fold.

A little girl was refused admission into the church because they thought her too young. She leaped upon her pastor's bosom and said:

"Jesus did not treat me so when I went to him; he received me, and now you turn me away."

The pastor clasped her to his bosom and said:

"No, my child, we will not turn you away." And she was received.

Some of the most consistent and useful Christians that ever lived were converted at seven, nine, ten and eleven years of age. And the Lord says, "I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me."

A cabman signed the pledge for

Rev. Charles Garrett, but soon after broke it. Conscience-stricken and ashamed, he tried to keep out of the way of his friend; but Mr. Garrett was not to be put off. One day he found the poor, miserable man, and, taking hold of his hand, he said:

"John, when the road is slippery, and your cab-horse falls down, what do you do with him?"

"I help him up again," replied John. "Well, I have come to do the same," said Mr. Garrett, affectionately; "the road was slippery. I know, John, and you fell, but there's my hand to help you up again."

The cabman's heart was thrilled. He caught his friend's hand in a vice-like grip, and said:

"God bless you, sir; you'll never have cause to regret this—I'll never fall again."

And to this day he kept his word.

Am I to thank God for everything?
Am I to thank him for bereavement, for pain, for poverty, for toil? Must I lift up my hands over my dead and say: "Father, I thank thee that thou hast taken away my friend?" Is it pleasing to my Father that loss should be pleasant to me? Is it good that I should be told to give thanks in everything? Be still, my soul, thou hast misread the message. It is not to give thanks for everything but to give thanks in everything. It is not to praise God for the night but to bless him that the night is not deeper. I have read of the Son of Man that he gave thanks over the symbol of his broken body. Not for the pain, but for the mitigation of pain, did the Son of Man give thanks—not that his body was broken, but that it was broken for me. In thine hour of sorrow give thanks like Jesus.—Matheson.

Illustrating the fact that Jesus sympathizes with and seeks to help the poor and needy, one tells of a visit he once made to a doctor's home: "Is your father at home?" I asked a small child on our village doctor's doorstep. "No," he said, "he's away." "Where do you think I could find him?" "Well," he said, with a considering air, "you've got to look for some place where people are sick or hurt or something like that. I don't know where he is, but he's helping somewhere."

GIVE WHAT COSTS.

Another time the mother told them that it was nearing Christmas, and asked them what they could spare for the children who had no playthings. The one who did not like to give, said: "Mother, you know I like to keep my things. I love my things." "Yes," said his mother, "but as you have a new rocking-horse, I thought maybe you would like to give your small one to some poor little boy." A short time after, to the mother's surprise, she found the little fellow with a hammer, striking the horse as hard as he could. His mother exclaimed:

"What are you doing?" "Oh, mamma," the child replied, "I am breaking my horse, because it will be easier to give it after it is broken." In that moment it came to me, how many of us find it easier to give when life is going and we can no longer use the money, or we give ourselves to God when broken by sickness. It is easier then—but is it noble? Is it the grand way to give that which costs us nothing? There was a deep lesson in this to me. The noble Psalmist of old said he would not give to God that which cost him nothing. The joy is in real self-sacrifice—to give what we love—to give what we value. I am very much afraid it is with some of us as I heard it was with a congregation—among a people who used to say Amen. The minister said in prayer: "Lord, we give thee our hearts," and the people said Amen. "Lord, we give thee our lives," and the people said Amen. "Lord, we give thee our money," but there was no Amen!

WHY NOT?

There is nothing more inspiring than the story of a triumphant life; a life that overcomes great difficulties, works itself clear of sharp limitations, and issues at last in a large, free activity. It is an old story, but it remains the one story of which men never tire, but which seems to assuage a thirst of the soul. For the end of life is freedom and power, and those of us who miss these supreme results of patience and toil and character feel that we have been defrauded of that which was our due. The old stories of magic carry a deep meaning under their wild extravagances; they betray the mighty passion of men for supremacy over things material and over inferior orders of life. The man with geni at his command could build palaces in a night, and rejoice in a marvelous mastery over the forces against which so many of his fellows seemed to measure their strength in vain. These magical successes are only dreams of the real successes which all men and women crave; which the noblest and most aspiring must conquer, or lose utterly the joy and sweetness of living. These successes are, fortunately, not external, though they are generally accompanied by visible trophies; they are achievements of character, and are independent of conditions and largely of human recognition. The man whose life, outwardly all defeat, is steadily expanding in its interests and sympathies, steadily growing in power to bear and suffer and be strong, has the blessed consciousness of coming into his kingdom. No outward disaster, no external obstacle or limitation can ever defeat a true life; it can escape all these things as the bird escapes the perils of the snare and the net by flying above them. This highest of all successes lies within the grasp of every earnest man and woman, and it is rarely without attestations of its presence and value, even in the eyes of those who take small account of spiritual things. There is a force which streams from a noble nature which is as irresistible and pervasive as the sunlight. The warmth and the vitality of such natures, while they invigorate the strongest men and women about them, penetrate to the heart of clouded and obscure lives, and minister to their need. There is no success so satisfying as that which is embodied in one's character, and so cannot be taken from him, and the influence of which, embodied in the character of others, is also indestructible.

THE VISION OF CHRIST.

"O Christ, dear Master, if I could but see thee face to face, and feel the reality of thy blessed life!" I prayed. . . .

But at that moment my servant came to me with a broken cup, much prized, and now useless; and after coldly remarking that she ought to have had more care, I bade her go away and not disturb me; so she went away, unhappy and unforgiven.

"O Christ, dear Master, if I could but hear thy blessed tones speaking to me!" I prayed yet again. . . .

But a little disturbing voice cried loudly and sadly at my door for a broken doll, and I bade the baby go away and not break in upon my quiet hour.

"O Christ, dear Master, if I could but have a token of thy personal love for me!" I prayed yet a third time. . . .

But no voice or vision came to me, so I rose from my praying, and went about the house. My servant sang not as usual over her work, nor did she greet me as I passed; and there, in a corner, asleep with the recent tears on the little pale cheek, lay the child and her broken doll, and her first great grief.

And somewhere in my heart a voice spoke out clear, so that I could not choose but hear: "Forever, and forever, I, the Christ, am that which asks for love and compassion. These asked for both from thee, and thou gavest not. Thou shouldst have looked for Me in them, and they would then have found Me in thee. Thou canst not find Me until thou art able to lose thyself in love and compassion. If thou wouldst know Me, thou must be Me."

So I picked up the baby and her broken doll, and spoke words of tender good cheer to my servant, and led them both out into the sweet garden, and the afternoon sunshine, to gather flowers and fruit; till, by-and-by, the air was full of laughter, and smiles were on all our faces.

Oh, then I knew that behind our smiles was the face of Christ, and in our happy tones his voice.

For Christ is the love that redeems, and the compassion that heals, and the unselfishness that brings joy, and makes man happy, even as God is happy.—L. Ormiston Chant, in Woman's Herald.

When a man declares to me, "I cannot believe in miracles," I reply, "I can, because I have witnessed them." "When and where?" "On a certain street in this city is a man who was a week ago given over to every form of vice and brutality, and who is now a good citizen, an honest workman, a kind husband, a loving father, a pure upright man. Surely, that is such a miracle as makes me forever believe in the possibility of miracles.—Prof. Drummond.

For Sleeplessness

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. Patrick Booth, Oxford, N. C., says: "It acts admirably in insomnia, especially of old people and convalescents."

Lost on the Prairie.

Fenimore Cooper, the celebrated American novelist, describes in one of his tales of frontier life, the experience and trials of a wanderer, who strayed away from his companions and was lost in a vast prairie; how he wandered about, and at last lay down to die.

This episode brings to mind the condition of many unfortunates, who, sick and miserable, try one thing and another in their search for health, and failing to find it, sink down in despair, into an early grave.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer brings a message of hope and good cheer to the sick and ailing. One bottle taken strictly according to directions will promptly demonstrate its efficacy. # Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. It contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style or binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

A High-Class Monthly Magazine, Conducted in the interests of the Higher Life of the Household

Two Good Journals for the Price of One

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING occupies a position peculiarly its own, in that it is conducted in the interests of the higher life of the household, for it is devoted not only to practice, but to inspiration—to telling how the everyday affairs of life may be conducted, but always leading upward. Its departments, regular and special, are as numerous as the varied phases of the life of the household. It appeals to either sex, whether of young or of advancing years, and not only helps but gratifies the physical, mental and æsthetic natures of all its readers. The contributors' list for the coming year is a long one, and contains the names of many writers who are already familiar to the public. The following topics and lines of research are samples of what GOOD HOUSEKEEPING is doing for the dwellers in the homes of America:

Successful Kitchens
Solutions of the Domestic Help Problem
The Latest Hygiene
Home Handicraft of Various Kinds
Homemade Christmas Gifts, Illustrated
Truth about Dishonest and Adulterated Food
Famous Cooking Schools Described
People Who Have Uplifted Home Life, Illustrated
New Sources of Income
Tasteful House Furnishing, Illustrated.
'Good Housekeeping Babies'
Disadvantages and Advantages of Country Girls

Advantages and Disadvantages of City Girls
Women's Exchanges
'The Best Way,' in all kinds of Housework
Mistakes of Young Housekeepers
Original Recipes from Famous Cooks and Cooking Teachers
The Four-footed Cousins
Fathers and Sons
Household Economics
New Ideas in Fancy Work
Changes and Tendencies in Home Life
New Fashions and Their Wearers
Diseases of Children, etc., etc.

The whole magazine is dominated by a high purpose to be an ever-ready help and inspiration toward making "the higher life of the household" a practical and delightful reality in every family, and a force in social and civic affairs. Each number consists of 96 pages filled to overflowing with original and interesting reading, including many handsome and striking illustrations.

Our Absolutely Unparalleled Offer

By an arrangement just perfected we are enabled to offer this most useful and interesting magazine on the following special and remarkably liberal terms:

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY, One Year, $1.50
GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, One Year, $1.00 } BOTH for $1.50
Total, $2.50

We thus offer the two ablest and most representative journals of their class at the price of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY alone, thus giving our readers an opportunity never before offered. Think of it, a handsome illustrated magazine, a year's numbers of which make an elegant volume of over 1150 pages, all of which may be had for a nominal sum by every subscriber, old or new, under this most remarkable offer. This is surely a rare opportunity, and no one should delay or fail to take advantage of it.

A sample copy of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING will be sent to any address on receipt of eight cents in stamps, which should be sent to the publishers at Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, Ill. Remit by postoffice or express money order, check, draft or registered letter to

A CALL FOR MEN.

"God give us men. A time like this Demands strong minds, great hearts, true
Faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And scorn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking;
For while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions, and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife."

THE BIBLE FROM JESUS.

IT REQUIRES only a cursory investigation of the Holy Scriptures to determine the fact that the outstanding personality revealed therein is that of our Lord. Perhaps it cannot be said exactly in the phrase of the old theologians that on every page of the Bible Christ is revealed; but certainly his personality makes itself felt in both Old and New Testaments. It is perhaps from the point of view presented in the New Testament that this can best be observed; for here it is a commonplace that he is the central figure of every situation. The Gospels declare their purpose of portraying his character as a means of producing faith in the readers. They are the record of those things which the early disciples of Jesus were accustomed to say in their public proclamations of his life. Indeed the Gospels are made up apparently of just those sayings regarding Jesus which were in current use in the early church, and which had come thus to be common property as appearing first in the utterances of the apostles who had companied with Jesus and knew of his work. The book of Acts is the continuation of this narrative with emphasis upon the things which Jesus continued both to do and teach through the ministry of the apostles guided by the Holy Spirit. Everywhere the motive of obedience to Jesus is apparent and it is in his name that every word is spoken by the preachers whose figures are drawn with such artistic skill. In the Epistles also the motive is that of bringing Christian believers to an apprehension of the mind that was in Jesus, and thus reproducing his life in the world. The Apocalypse is the revelation of Jesus as the King of Kings in a time when the weak and despairing church needed a word of power to hearten it for its struggle with a persecuting Rome. Certainly it does not require long examination of the New Testament to determine the centrality of Jesus. He is its motive and object. It all springs from his life. Without him it would have no meaning or value; and, indeed, that it could not have had existence may be affirmed in the most sweeping sense.

But the Old Testament is from Jesus also in a sense which may be overlooked by one who is guided solely by the historical or critical motive in his examination of its pages. It was the confident affirmation of the old theology that the Old Testament was full of Jesus, and upon this hypothesis it proceeded to read the events of his life indiscriminately into all sections of the older Scriptures. So thoroughgoing and enthusiastic was this supposed labor of love that when simple historical passages seemed to afford no ground for reference to the life of Jesus resort was had to allegory, and it was affirmed that the chief value in Scripture lay not in the simple meaning but rather in those implied and suggested teachings which lay in the circle of symbol and figure. Under this treatment any possible meaning could be extorted from a text of Scripture; and men apparently supposed themselves to be honoring their Lord when they thus disfigured his word by attempting to reduce it to a dead level of allegorical theology. It only remained for a closer and more reverent scholarship to discover the fallacy and the violence which inhered in this forced method of exegesis. When one after another the passages confidently quoted as referring to Jesus were found on closer perusal to yield no allusions to him by any just method of interpretation, the question naturally arose whether it could be truly affirmed that there was in the Old Testament any reference to him whatsoever.

The reaction which thus resulted from a fantastic exegesis of the Old Testament has carried far as all reactionary movements are likely to do; yet there has been much gained in the process. However destructive it appeared at first to be it was certainly worth while to know how much weight the ground on which we are now standing will sustain. One does not wish to be walking over bridges which are liable to break beneath him, however well they may have supported previous generations. It is therefore one of the satisfactions of present methods of Old Testament study that they bring the student to a fresh examination of the claims of Jesus as voiced in the Old Testament, and that the tests which present scholarship applies to these ancient Scriptures more and more vindicate the claims of our Lord to a presence and possession in the Old Testament which if less fantastic than the old apologists believed is certainly more convincing and abiding. The presence of Jesus in the Old Testament does not lie in the domain of mere prediction, though this has its place, and an important place. Time will not permit present entrance upon this alluring theme, but it may be said in passing that the argument from Messianic prophecy is not only unimpaired but vitalized and strengthened by the processes of modern criticism. It is lifted from the domain of mere details, and shown to be a providential movement issuing appropriately in the life of our Lord.

But what engages us here is the fact that the Old Testament, like the New, has its motive and purpose in the life of Jesus aside from the fact that the prophets predicted a coming Deliverer and Savior. The whole of their work demands him as its appropriate end and explanation. The evolutionary process postulates a goal to be reached; and he is but a dull student of Old Testament history who does not perceive that process unfolding under the eye of the beholder, and through the guiding power and presence of the divine life in that history, as nowhere else manifested. It would perhaps be enough to say that the prophets expected the Messiah to come, and looked forward to the days of his advent; but when to this we add the fact that their own work formed an ascending pathway along which Israel was led toward some great culmination yet unseen, it is felt that the progress was not meaningless nor random. It was direct, precise, methodical. The prophets were working toward an ideal whose exact terms they were never able to state. That peering, wistful look of theirs as they sought to know the meaning of times and seasons which God had in his own keeping is one of their most striking characteristics. We can see as they could not how the ministry of the Messiah was to complete their expectation. Without that life the story of Israel would be a narrative without a sequel, a torso without a head. In Jesus Christ Hebrew history found its appropriate climax and consummation. What is true of the historical books of the Old Testament is equally true of the psalms, of the law, of the wisdom books, and of the apocalypses. They were all gravidia Christi, heavy with Christ, and thus finding their motive in his anticipated work they were the products of that providential movement which culminated in him; and of which he in the spirit of his work was the author and director.

The Church is not therefore the maker of the Bible as is so frequently affirmed. It can no more be said that the Church has produced the Bible than that the Bible has produced the Church; for Christ is the author of both; and while they have acted and reacted upon each other, sometimes almost in the relation of cause and effect, yet deeper than either have been those springs of power from which both have issued. The Bible is the human expression of that Eternal Word of God which found partial expression in prophets and sages of the olden time, partial expression in the apostles of our Lord, partial expression in the books of holy Scripture, but full and absolute expression in the life of Jesus. The partialness of the other expressions, to-wit, those of prophets, apostles and holy Scriptures, was as necessary and indispensable as the completeness of expression in the life of our Lord. Without that partialness these mediators of divine truth could never have accomplished their purpose of reaching humanity. Without that completeness our Lord would have been excluded from the high tasks for which he was prepared. Inspiration could never have been a process of galvanizing imperfect material into an instant perfection, whether limited or permanent. To so affirm would be to discredit the very utterances of holy Scripture. Our Lord's voice is alone the perfect medium; our Lord's life and message the only perfect revelation, of divine truth. God who at various times and in fragmentary ways spoke in time past unto the fathers in the prophets, in the last days spoke unto us in his Son. It is this fact which gives to Jesus the unique position of possessor and author of the Word of God. From him we receive disclosure of his nature and of those processes by which a particular people was prepared for his coming. To him, however, dimly seen and partially understood, the Old Testament writers make their appeal. The kingdom of God, to which they looked as the embodiment of divine purpose in the world could be realized only in him; and this in varying degrees they dimly foresaw. The writers of the New Testament appeal to him constantly as their Master and authority. He recognized both as his possession and heritage. Upon the Old Testament Scriptures he laid his hand with a sense of possession, saying "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." He sent forth his disciples, commanding them to speak everywhere in his name and to interpret and apply those truths which he had uttered. Both old and New Testaments therefore are from Jesus and are to be judged in the light of his possession and of that unique authority which he claimed for himself, and by virtue of which he was greater than prophets, apostles, or Scriptures. Their partialness resulted from their human elements. His completeness lay in his perfect blending of the human and the divine. That unique ministry which began with the incarnation and closed with the cross and the resurrection, has proven the divine life and power to be resident in him.

LETTERS TO THE BOOK-LOVER.

THE DISASTERS OF SUBTILTY.

My Dear Friend:

You are of course an admirer of that most fascinating literary artist, Mr. J. M. Barrie. You have laughed and wept as you sat at "A Window in Thrums." You have been carried, astonished and yet abashed through the sudden changes of "The Little Minister." You have looked with reverence into the beauty of motherhood and sonship as you heard him speak to you, his hand on your arm, about "Margaret Ogilvy."

But it is "Tommy" I am concerned with to-day, the Tommy, whom it took two large volumes to bring into the world and carry through his brief career to his humiliating end. Some men and all women hate Tommy, and I cannot pretend to love him. But at the same time I have a profound interest in him, and that because he is so true to life. This of course is not what you believe, but I must ask you to listen to me for a while. That there are many people who answer directly and completely to Mr. Barrie's picture of "Tommy" is not what I mean. But it is certain to my mind that there are many of us who correspond to that type and whose chief task in life has been to escape becoming Tommies. A most remarkable corroboration of this came under my own experience the other day. A friend was discussing the character and history of a man whose name has been much in our mouths recently. This friend had known him intimately for many years and his analysis was that of a keen student of character. As he described that man I, silently and with utter amazement, found him using one after another nearly all the terms under which Mr. Barrie has depicted "Tommy."

It is true, of course, that in Mr. Barrie's picture there is an element of exaggeration. It is one of Mr. Barrie's little weaknesses that he likes, now and again, to use pretty strong colors. We feel this in some of the descriptions of Pym, in such an event as Tommy's proposal to Mrs. Jerry, and in the picture of Tommy when he "ricked his foot" to hide the fact that he had been shamming lameness. But even these criticisms we state with fear such as Tommy's teacher, Cathro, felt whensoever he dared to find any fault with that subtle hero.

There are two words by which more than any others, the working of Tommy's mind is set forth. These are "sentiment" and "artist." Tommy was born with the artistic nature. He had an instinctive love for the process of idealizing, whether in the use of words, or in the reconstruction of past history or in the contemplation of nature and of human life around him. He perceived as the true artistic nature does the value of form and color and sound. He could not have deliberately destroyed a bird or crushed a lovely flower, nor could he be content to use a word which did not exactly and exquisitely fit into the feeling or the fact which he wished to identify and to name. To write down an inexact word was like breaking a lark's wing or throwing a fresh Marshal Niel rose with dew drops on it into the fire.

It is one of Mr. Barrie's most powerful devices that he begins his study of this artistic sense in Tommy while he is yet a child, and long before he is able to bring his use of it under the criticism of conscience or the control of judgment. Along with the enjoyment of this artistic view of things Tommy came into the possession of that most subtle and dangerous of all inner experiences, the sentimental view of life. The sentimental is not identical with the artistic mind, but it can enter into a very close alliance with it. Tommy unawares had the Greek notion that the virtuous is the beautiful; all events therefore that were heroic or pathetic, where virtue of any kind shone upon his sensitive soul, made him quiver with emotion. Now Tommy enjoyed this emotion, found that by merely imagining such events he could stimulate it, and proceeded to do so. Then he formed the habit of valuing every fact in the light of these feelings; and then, alas! every other person came to be valued in the light of their subjective feelings as well as his own. To see them happy made him happy, and he would at last do anything to save himself the pain of seeing them in pain. When, in London, as a young lion of society, he found himself talking mournfully to a lady, he thoroughly enjoyed the whole complex of interacting forces in that experience. He pictured himself as a mourning lover, for example, and threw himself so truly into the situation that some glamor of a lover's woe swept over his heart. But he saw that this fancied woe of his was evoking the sympathy of his fair confidante and the sight of her tender feelings made another chord of tender feeling resound in his own heart.

This dramatizing habit grew upon Tommy from his earliest years and it led to all his ruin. The power of course belonged to his artistic nature and it fed with fierce flames his sentimental valuation of all things. Sir Walter Scott tells us in his "Journal" that he had formed in early life this habit of living through all kinds of purely imaginary scenes and events where he himself was supposed to be an actor. With a smile he adds that whether dangerous or not, this habit had enabled him to give all the pleasure for which the readers of his novels were in the habit of thanking him. But some poison had entered into Tommy's soul which made his imaginary dreams corrode his power to deal with reality. For him the supreme law of life was to do the wonderful, the dramatic, the thrilling thing; when he sacrificed himself for others he did it in order to save other people's feelings, not their rights. He would pretend to know or not to know, to be or not to be anything, if only he could give pleasure to some other heart. This was his sin, the essence of his terrific distortion of the moral nature in him. Even when Elspeth announced her engagement he deceived her in order to make it easier for her. The supreme crisis came, and Mr. Barrie dwells on that with almost appalling thoroughness, when he proposed to Grisel. Sentimental attitudinizing made him accept her, prevented him from undeceiving her, kept him hovering round her when she had found out his loveless heart, made him at last marry her with the resolve to be true to her, and with the conviction that it was very noble to make that resolution! It may be said that throughout this book Mr. Barrie has not been studying merely the artistic self-consciousness, nor the sentimental valuation of life, that cancer of the modern world, which is corrupting religion and philanthropy, government and literature, philosophy and art. He has studied the subtle mind as it enjoys its own subtlety. The sentimental mind tries to be heroic even in its dreams and cries with Tommy, "Am I not a wonder?" But the subtle mind, again with Tommy, sees that this is unheroic and then praises itself and feels itself safe because it can see that fact. The subtle mind is that which watches the inner life of self for the mere pleasure of that sight. It is very intoxicating. Further, the subtle mind by playing with its own motives learns to play upon the motives of others. Hence Tommy's unearthly power of managing other people. Corp said that he would always "find a wy," and he always did. He startled poor old Aaron Latta, as if he wielded an unearthly gift, when he told him many of his secret thoughts and interpreted his moods. Even Grisel, keen and true as her insight was, could not escape the control of her "magerful Tam." His subtlety outwitted her. This is a most dreadful power. It is seldom wielded in this way by good men for good ends. It is the property of the mind that has deceived itself to deceive others and to drag them down to destruction.

And, then, for I must add one word more, Tommy's doom came upon him when neither he nor any one else knew or could know whether he loved or did not love another woman than Grisel. Mr. Barrie's genius reaches his height when he depicts that dreary and most awful collapse of the moral consciousness. Tommy had lost the power to distinguish between reality and pretence in his own mind. Sentimentality and the enjoyment of the subtle mind made him at last the prey of that uncertainty and that passion which must be on the verge of insanity. Why does the world unanimously resent the close of Tommy's life? If our interpretation of that last scene is right, then after that there could only be a despairing shame or a gradual redemption to tell of. But how can a human soul be redeemed which has come to such complete self-sophistication as that? Where is reality to get in and touch the real man buried somewhere there under the rubbish of a sentimental conscience and an intellectual sensuality? If Mr. Barrie could answer that he might have shown us the redemption of Tommy, otherwise it was better to kill the body in any contemptible way when the soul, the moral capacity, was dead already. For Mr. Barrie is quite merciless to the dead soul. "His last reflection before he passed into unconsciousness was, 'Serves me right.' Perhaps it was only a little bit of sentiment for the end." We hear much of the psychology of religion nowadays. There is much of it in this book for those who have eyes to see. I have written to you about it because I am profoundly interested in that deep, deep psychological question, How can the subtle mind, the sentimental conscience, the self-deceiving deceiver be redeemed? There is one very beautiful passage where Mr. Barrie approaches the problem. "The accursed thing to me is not the accursed thing to you, but all have it, and from this comes pity for those who have sinned, and the desire to help each other springs, for knowledge is sympathy, and sympathy is love and to learn it the Son of God became a man."

But, then, ah, me! poor Tommy was not saved, and his biographer says that the last judgment he passed on himself, although it was true, was uttered not for truth's sake, but for sentiment! Yours truly,

BELIEF AND ACTION.

It is often asserted that it does not matter what a man's beliefs are if his life is right. Beliefs are held to be not merely of secondary importance, but of hardly any importance whatever. The life, it is said, is the only thing worth speaking about. Now, it must be admitted that conduct is more important than creed, that life is more important than the thing which sustains it. There is a sense in which everybody can endorse the words of Pope:

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight.
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

But the bottom question in all this is: How is a man going to live right if he does not believe right? "A man without a belief," says Beecher, "is like a bird without a tail. A bird's tail feathers are for him to steer by, and if he has no tail he cannot steer himself." A man's beliefs control his actions. As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

Break up the word belief, and you will find it composed of two old English words, bi lief—by-life; a man's belief thus being regarded as the thing by which he lives, the mainspring of all his activities, the soul of his soul, the life of his life.

Carlyle says: "The fearful unbelief is unbelief in yourself," and Emerson adds, "Self-trust is the essence of heroism." It is not so. The most fearful unbelief is not unbelief in self, although that is in one respect bad enough; but unbelief in God, and the essence of heroism is not self-trust, but trust in God.

The very reason why faith is made indispensable to salvation—the very reason why it is made the hinge of the soul's destiny, is that it connects the soul with the source of saving power. Unbelief is separation from God, and separation from God leads to godlessness. Unbelief is the sin of all sins because it is the breaking of the chain which binds man to the Infinite. There is no strength in unbelief. It takes away the inspiration to holy living, and makes moral duty a dead lift.

The development of certain words in common use shows the close connection between belief and action. Infidelity meant at first a want of faith; and a want of faith came to be looked upon as a want of faithfulness. One who is faithful, is literally one who is full of faith, and the common use of the word implies the growth of a conviction that one who is full of faith will be faithful to every trust reposed in him. The Norman word miscreant originally meant unbeliever, and the changed meaning of the word is evidence that experience has shown that one who is an unbeliever is apt to degenerate into a scoundrel.

We thus see that a man's beliefs are of prime importance. They are practical, operative forces in his life. It is this that makes faith in God, and in God's Christ such a vital thing. It is the root of righteousness, the source of every grace. A holy life lies enclosed in the act of Christian faith as the oak lies enclosed in the acorn. St. James declares that "faith without works is dead." Is is a dead pole stuck in the ground and not a living tree. Living faith and good works are inseparable. They are like the famous Siamese twins who were bound together by a ligament that could not be cut. Those who say they have faith, and have not works are guilty of the same kind of fiction as the gentleman who said that he knew one of the Siamese twins, but did not happen to enjoy the acquaintanceship of the other. Wherever faith is found his twin brother works is found also. They exist together, they grow together, they decay together, they die together. In life and death they are undivided.

Merry in God.

Sir Thomas Moore writing to his wife when news reached him that the great mansion of the Chelsea with its offices and granaries had been destroyed by fire, said: "I pray you, Alice, with my children to be merry in God," and he adds, "Find out if any poor neighbors have stored their corn in the granaries, and if so, return to them what they have lost." To be merry in God one must make others merry.

The Living Word.

It is possible to strangle the life out of the Scripture by the over-rigid principle of literal interpretation. We may rack the Scripture simile beyond the true intent thereof, and instead of sucking milk, squeeze blood out of it. What boots it to hold possession of the casket if we lose the jewel it contains. The Word of God is more than sounds which strike the ear or signs which strike the eye; it is living message from a living Being. "The words that I speak unto you," said the Christ, "are more than words; they are spirit and they are life."

The Restraining Power of Truth.

"Where there is no vision the people perish."—Prov. 29: 18. A more correct rendering of this text would be, "Where there is no vision the people are lawless." The revised version reads, "Where there is no vision the people cast off restraint." That is undoubtedly the meaning of the words. If the vision of God and of his holy law be taken away the sense of moral accountability is weakened and the tiger of man's sinful nature is unchained. The open vision checks rebellious passion. Anarchy is the legitimate offspring of atheism.

The Mystery of Life.

We are surrounded with mystery. The inexplicable meets us on every hand. If left unaided and alone we find ourselves most pitiable; the lonesomeness of despair would encompass us. When viewed from the standpoint of this world, life with many must be felt to be a series of failures. Without some guiding star of hope we would find ourselves breathing the miasma of cynicism and pessimism. The awful weight of the world's burden of sin and woe must of necessity bear heavily upon us at times if we have entered into the fellowship of Christ's sufferings. There comes the impulse to get out of it all and live our own life in peacefulness and serenity. But we know the futility of that, and moreover it is cowardly. What we need is to get away from the maddening strife of this world, just for a few moments each day and then occasionally for a few hours, that we may commune in a very personal way with an ever-present and living God. May he become so real to us that we will be conscious of this Divine Comforter in all the conflicts and discouragements of life.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Reform in Sunday School Helps.

As some good, wide and careful reading of the reports of recent religious gatherings reveals the fact that one of the prominent questions before the churches is the necessity of the reconstruction of our methods of Sunday school work. Great changes are eminent. Sooner or later lesson helps must go and in their place will come permanent text books. There is also coming a graded system closely resembling that of the public schools.

The Gifts of the Presbyterians.

The gifts of the Presbyterians for all purposes amounted last year to more than $15,000,000. They closed the year with their missionary treasuries free from indebtedness. Their 20th century fund, to be applied to different branches of church work, has risen above $3,500,000. This is an encouraging showing. The Presbyterian church has a rich constituency and they are liberal. Their ministers are faithful in presenting the doctrine of stewardship and that is bearing fruit. When money is consecrated to the cause of Christ it will become truly one of the greatest forces in the world.

Progress in Municipal Governments.

Dr. Albert Shaw comments in the May Review of Reviews on the meaning of the recent municipal elections. He takes the view of an optimist and thinks there are many good signs that cities are working toward higher ideals. There are on the whole better methods of technical organization; partisanship is being banished from elections and appointments, the independent vote in several large cities being the determining factor; more attention is being paid to schools and buildings; fine new asphalt pavements are displacing the old ones; and public buildings and parks are receiving attention never before given them. Some day we may know how to build a "city beautiful."

The Bishop of Rhode Island on Divorce.

Bishop William Neilson McVicker of Rhode Island has written an interesting letter on the divorce question. He assails the clause in the divorce laws which makes non-support ground for divorce and points out that many who get divorce on such a plea are at the same time rolling in wealth. Some of these petitioners drive on Bellevue avenue, Newport, in regal style and preside at feasts, the price of which would keep an ordinary family in luxury for a year. It is certainly a piece of technical irony to grant a divorce in such a case for non-support. Along with the repeal of this clause, or at least its modification, should go another, and that is partial divorce, and divorce with alimony. In our opinion, if not essentially immoral, these statutes contribute to immorality.

Reconciliation of the Booths.

There are rumors in the air of a possible reconciliation between Ballington Booth and his father, General William Booth. This on many grounds would be a good thing; but it is difficult to see how there can be a union of two organizations so diametrically opposed to one another as the Volunteers of America and the Salvation Army; the former being democratic and the latter being autocratic. The rise and prosperity of the Salvation Army is one of the marvels of modern history; the work it has done among the poor and distressed is beyond all praise; yet its organization is a strange anomaly in a day in which the idea of freedom and equality prevail. It is not a brotherhood, but an absolute monarchy; and an absolute monarchy which can be prevented from becoming a despotism only by the tactfulness and good sense of the man in whose hands all ultimate authority is lodged.

Exit Dr. Herron.

The deposition of Dr. Herron from the Congregational ministry was a quiet and dignified proceeding. The only bit of theatrics in connection with the affair was the reading of Dr. Herron's letter of protest and defence. In the main it was a tirade against "the coercive family system," and when stripped of its glittering rhetoric it was an unequivocal plea for free love. It arraigned the leaders of the church for their "pitiless digging at the roots of the sacred sorrow and tragedy of a life, in order to get at its secret, and prove thereby that its teachings are false, and its deeds evil." Nobody will be hoodwinked by this sophistical reasoning. Ordinary people will still persistently maintain that "a tree is known by its fruits"; nor will they be turned aside from the unvarnished fact that the man who has posed as a prophet of righteousness has trampled under foot the most sacred principles of morality. The cold-blooded, heartless way in which, after deserting his faithful wife for his "intellectual affinity" with whom he was to "scale the heights," he repudiates all responsibility for his children, is the cruelest cut of all. A man that can do this—but we forbear. Let the curtain be rung down on this pathetic domestic tragedy.

A New Question in Life Insurance.

The question is being discussed by some insurance companies whether any discrimination ought to be made against Christian Scientists, Faith Healers, and people of that ilk. Opinion is divided; officials of some of the leading societies holding that there is a much lower death rate among this class than among those who depend upon material remedies. Others are equally confident that those who discard surgery and medicine constitute what insurance men call bad risks. The question in dispute can be settled only after a wide and careful induction of facts. While incalculable injury is often wrought by the rejection of medicine, the therapeutic power of these cults must not be overlooked or undervalued. But there is nothing in them of therapeutic value that is not found in a still larger degree in Christianity. God is the health of the good man's countenance; and Christ is the healer of all the ills of humanity.

Pan-American Bible Study Congress.

Plans for the Pan-American Bible Study Congress to be held in Buffalo July 17-31, in connection with the Pan-American Exposition, are progressing rapidly and a splendid program is already announced. The Congress is to be held at City Convention Hall, Virginia street and Elmwood avenue, in forenoon sessions, 9:30 to 1 p. m. Opportunity for discussions will be given at each session. Sunday services will be held at Convention Hall, commencing at three o'clock. The subjects considered include The Present Status of Bible Study, The English Bible and Its Different Versions, Bible Reading and Study in the home, in the church, in schools and colleges, and in seminaries; distinctive features of Sunday school work in the United States and other countries; the study of the Bible as literature; the Bible and the stage; the Bible and the child; the power of the Bible, and the future of Bible study.

In addition there will be presented the various methods of Bible study as used by the different organizations which have this end in view. Among those who are scheduled to speak are Prof. Frank K. Sanders of Yale University, Prof. Shailer Matthews and Prof. Herbert L. Willett of University of Chicago, Prof. W. W. White of Montclair, N. J.; Rev. E. Blakeslee of Boston, Prof. H. M. Hamill of Jacksonville, Ill.; Miss Finie Murfree Burton of Louisville, Ky.; Rev. J. E. Gilbert of Washington, D. C., and Rev. C. R. Blackall of Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman and the Bible.

Some people are unconscious humorists. In asking for an expurgated Bible, with all references to the "inferiority of woman" and all suggestion of blame attaching to woman as the "author of sin," left out, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton takes her place among this class. What a strange book the Bible would become if every one cut out of it the things they do not like. It is true that in the Old Testament the Hebrew idea regarding the inferiority of woman obtains; but the Bible is a progressive revelation, and in the New Testament the inequality of sexes vanishes; for in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female, for all are one in him. The trouble is that many of our mannish women reformers not content with the obliteration of sex equality would also blot out sex distinction, claiming for woman the right to occupy the same sphere as is occupied by man. The modern woman ought to remember that she owes her exalted position to Christianity. In knocking away the ladder by which she has risen she at the same time knocks away the ladder by which she is to rise.

Professor Gilbert's Book.

Speaking of Professor Gilbert's book entitled "The First Interpreters of Jesus," which has just been published, the Christian Register, the organ of the Unitarian denomination, says: "While in many particulars Professor Gilbert's teaching is as orthodox as that of any other leader of the new theology, parts of his interpretation of the writings of Paul, Peter and others could not be called orthodox after any recognized standard. In regard, for instance, to the nature of Jesus he quotes the language of Paul as if he meant exactly what he said, and no more. His method is that of any Unitarian theologian, and brings him to the conclusion that Paul regarded Jesus as in every respect a true man, or, as in derision it was once phrased, 'a mere man.'" The Register quotes approvingly the words of Professor Gilbert: "Hence we say that Paul ascribes to Jesus a human origin, and that this include both body and spirit," and it sums up by saying of his teachings, "We do not see how, by any stretch of interpretation, they can be called orthodox, using that word in its accepted meaning." There cannot be the slightest doubt that, with regard to the doctrine of the person of Christ, Professor Gilbert stands squarely upon Unitarian ground.

To Get Rid of the Tramp.

The number tramps is so considerable in many sections that the matter has been taken into serious discussion by those responsible for the public weal. A recent convention in Philadelphia representing about sixty towns and cities decided to drive tramps out of the state. The means to be used are very simple. It is proposed to force the tramp to work. This will do good, but how much like worldly wisdom is such a solution of so grave a problem. Merely applying the lash may only aggravate the situation. Would it be a solution of the problem to drive the tramps out of every state and drown them in the ocean? Would not the same causes that have produced the tramps we have produce annually a like crop? Why not hunt for the causes and thus pluck up the root of the matter? One of the causes will be found to be a lack of discipline in childhood; another, such defects in our industrial system as compel some men to be idle and beg for bread; another, inherited tendencies which it may take generations to eradicate; another, imaginary stories of romance and adventure which take too strong hold of youth of certain temperament and lack of equilibrium of personality; but by far the greatest cause of tramps is the saloon. Close the saloon and you have practically solved the tramp problem.

SCOTCH CAUTION.

Scotch caution has become proverbial. There was no lack of that national characteristic in the countryman, who, when asked if he could play upon the fiddle, warily answered that "He couldna say, for he had never tried." An admirable example of this same quality is furnished by the answer given at a catechetical examination to the question from the Shorter Catechism, "What are the decrees of God?" "'Deed, sir, he kens that best himself.'" To the question, "Why did the Israelites make a golden calf?" the safe and shrewd reply of a little girl was, "Because they hadna ye're breaking something there besides the stanes!"

What consummate tact and grace are contained in the sly, covert rebuke administered by a shepherd to an eminent geologist who was thoughtlessly making use of his pocket hammer one Sabbath morning. "Sir, ye're breaking something there ——— the stanes!"

The following example of juvenile shrewdness and caution has a flavor all its own. A little boy when asked how he stood in his class at school, invariably answered, "I'm second dux," meaning in school parlance, I am second from the top. The members of his family being well aware that his habits were the opposite of studious, at length interrogated him as to the number of scholars in his class, when he hesitatingly answered, "Ou, there's jist me and anither lass."

For the subtle blending of dry humor with coolness and caution what can excel the following? An Englishman in the company of Scotchmen was enlarging upon the wonders he had seen in India from which he had lately arrived. Among other marvelous things he mentioned the fact that he had seen and shot a tiger, forty feet in length. Not to be outdone, a Scotch gentlemen present said that in his own country were to be seen things no less wonderful, and instanced the recent capture of a skate-fish, which exceeded half an acre in extent. The Englishman, stung by this bit of pointed sarcasm, left the room, and afterwards demanded satisfaction for the insult which had been offered him. To the friend who had acted as mediator the author of the skate story very coolly replied: "Weel, sir, gin yer freend will tak' a few feet off the length of his tiger, we'll see what can be dune about the breadth o' the skate."

"I find the great thing is, not so much where we stand, as in what direction we are moving. To reach the port of heaven, we must sail sometimes with the wind, and sometimes against it—but we must sail, and not drift, nor lie at anchor."
—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

CHICAGO NOTES

Temptations of Ministers.

At the meeting of the Congregational Ministers' Union last week the subject discussed was the tempting of ministers. The chief temptations were said to be laziness, self-seeking, and insincerity.

Free Text Books.

The question of free text books is now before the Board of Education. The movement is opposed by advocates of economy, by Roman Catholics and by publishing firms that have vested interests in the present order of things. Something like a plebiscite is being taken among the parents. It seems to be doubtful whether there is any great demand for it outside the board itself. There is much to be said on both sides of the question. Few, however, question the desirability of providing text books for indigent pupils.

The Root of the Matter.

In his report upon the state of religion Dr. Percival laid special emphasis upon "pleasure seeking" as a cause of spiritual indifference. He said that the answer now practically given to the first question in the Shorter Catechism, "What is the chief end of man?" is, "Man's chief end is to have a good time." There is too much truth in the indictment. Equally pertinent was the answer of a little boy who, blundering better than he knew, said man's chief end is to glorify God and to annoy him forever. Certainly some people do give God no end of annoyance.

Causes of Low Death Rate.

Surprise is sometimes expressed at the low death rate in the city considering its overcrowding and its unspeakable filthiness. Two reasons may be given for this. In the first place the population of Chicago is largely made up of young and vigorous foreign-born people, and in the second place—being a new city—the soil has not been impregnated with the accumulated filth of generations. But let things go on as at present—let there be no civic repentance and purification and Chicago will become one of the world's pest holes.

Tenement Conditions in Chicago.

The City Home Association has just issued a report on tenement conditions in Chicago which presents a startling picture of the filthy and unsanitary condition of large areas of the city. Referring to the congestion of population in the residence districts the report says: "Considering the size of our dwellings, our density of population is most appalling. It is very probable, if we would compare the height of the dwelling and its density of population in the Jewish, Italian, Polish and Bohemian districts with the like in districts elsewhere, the real density would equal the worst in the world." An English reformer, after studying at first hand the condition of the city, declared that he found in it a depth of squalor and of destitution not to be matched anywhere else.

The Swearing Habit.

The action of a prominent Chicago firm forbidding swearing among its employes—not on moral grounds, but because it breeds dissension and lowers the efficiency of the workmen—has led to a discussion of the habit of profane swearing. That it is a growing habit is but too apparent. One can hardly walk along the street without having his sensibilities shocked. It is confined to no particular class. The children at play imitate their elders, and give expression to language so horrible that we must in charity presume that the little ones do not know its meaning. Swearing is often thoughtless, mechanical. It is not always an indication of the lack of moral principle, but it always shows a lack of sense. It is a foolish and profitless habit. "He knew not what to say, so he swore," is often the only explanation that can be given for indulgence in this habit. But it is more than senseless, it is sinful. It is the empty froth of perverted speech that marks out the perverted heart as the slime on the path marks out the reptile. An important part of the work of redemption is the purification of the tongue.

C. M. Sheldon Coming to Chicago.

The Rev. C. M. Sheldon of Topeka, Kansas, author of "In His Steps," and other popular books, is to supply the South Park Congregational Church during the month of July. Mr. Sheldon attracted wide attention by his attempt to edit the Topeka Capital for a week, as Jesus would have done. Despite the exploitation he has received, Mr. Sheldon is a modest man. His great success and popularity have not spoiled him in the least. He is an earnest, hard-working pastor; and his visit to our city will be looked forward to with interest.

A Well-Placed Gift.

It was a disappointment to many people that P. D. Armour left so little in his will to benevolent objects. He evidently followed the more excellent way of leaving it to his family to continue his work of philanthropy by personally dispensing his garnered wealth. Mrs. Armour has just decided to add $250,000 to the recent gift of $1,000,000 made by her and her son, J. Ogden Armour, to Armour Institute. This supplementary gift is for the erection of a school of engineering, to which is to be attached a model workshop. It has been announced that Dr. Gunsaulus is about to resume the Presidency of this institution. It is fortunate that he will continue to give it the touch of his guiding hand.

Death of Edward Kimball.

Edward Kimball, who died at the home of his son in Oak Park on Wednesday last, was a somewhat remarkable man. He was known all over the United States for his success in raising church debts. He is credited with raising over fifteen million dollars. His services were given to churches of all denominations. He was a striking personality and was possessed of great tact and persuasiveness. But perhaps his greatest work was that of molding the life of D. L. Moody, the evangelist. He was the instrument of Moody's conversion, and started him in his evangelistic career. While somewhat erratic he seemed to fill a niche peculiarly his own.

SENSITIVENESS.

Time was, I shrank from what was right,
From fear of what was wrong;
I would not brave the sacred fight,
Because the foe was strong.

But now I cast that finer sense
And sorer shame aside;
Such dread of sin was indolence,
Such aim at Heaven was pride.

So, when my Saviour calls, I rise
And calmly do my best;
Leaving to Him, with silent eyes
Of hope and fear, the rest.

I step, I mount, where He has led;
Men count my haltings o'er;
I know them; yet, though self I dread,
I love His precepts more. —Cardinal Newman.

CONTRIBUTED.
THE LIVING VOICE.

It seemed like the gardener's footstep—
His dress like the gardener's dress;
For her eyes were filled with weeping,
And her heart with heaviness.
But O! at that sweet word, "Mary!"
Doth the soul within her rejoice;
It may be the gardener's semblance—
But the voice—it is Jesus' voice!

Forgotten the nights of vigil,
Forgotten the dawns of tears;
Her Lord is standing beside her,
His greeting in her ears!
Could mine be a bygone rapture,
The moment—the place—my choice,
I would be the maid in the garden,
When she knows it is Jesus' voice!

THE PRESENCE IN THE CHURCH.

By James M. Campbell.

WHAT is the church? Inwardly, it is a spiritual fellowship composed of those who have seen the risen, living Christ and have made personal and absolute surrender to his authority. Outwardly, it is the body of Christ, the society in which he perpetually abides, and through which he is manifesting himself to the world.

The vital core from which the church ideal and actual has grown is found in the words, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18: 20). Ubi Christus ubi ecclesia, where Christ is there is the church. Equally true is it that where the church is, there is Christ. He is ever in the midst of those who gather together "into his name," making it the center of common attraction, the sphere of mutual fellowship.

These words are not a promise for the fulfillment of which we are to wait, but a pledge in the fulfillment of which we are to rejoice. Jesus does not say, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name there shall I be in the midst of them"; but "there I am in the midst of them." Where two or three draw together and are drawn together unto Christ, he is beside them, making himself one of the number, and making himself one with them in all they seek to attain. How he does this we need not stop to inquire. It is enough to know that the divine Christ is an omnipresent Christ. The theory of the ubiquity of his glorified body, which Luther propounded to support his view of the eucharist, is far from satisfactory. By intruding an element of bald literalism into the realm of the spiritual, it substitutes a greater mystery for a lesser. There are some things which lie beyond the reach of human comprehension, and this is one of them. The mystery of the universal, personal presence of Christ we can never hope to fathom; but the fact itself need not on that account be to any of us the less real. That he is everywhere, and at all times present with those who meet to call upon his name, Jesus himself declares; and surely in his word we have sufficient ground for faith. And seeing that he is present in all the assemblies of his saints, instead of praying to him to fulfill his promise and meet with them, they ought to fall back upon the absolute and unrepealed pledge of his presence, and say, "How blessed is this place! Surely this is none other than the spirit's meeting place with Christ—the house of God and the gate of heaven!"

A Distinguishing Characteristic.

The presence of Christ in his church is that which marks it off from all other organizations. Of his unseen presence it is the living embodiment. Its very existence is a proof that he has risen from the dead and that he has returned to dwell with his people. Its continued existence is the proof of his continued presence within it. He is its indwelling life. All its vital movements of thought and activity are from him. All its power for good is from him. In all its gatherings he is present. And yet of his presence there is no outward sign whatever. No shekinah appears in the Christian meeting house as an aid to faith. The presence that so profoundly moves the hearts of the worshipers is unseen, yet of its reality they are no less fully assured than they are of the presence of their fellow worshipers. Into the ear of the listening Christ they direct their prayers; by his sympathy they are soothed; and as they come from his secret chamber, others, detecting on their garments the aroma of heavenly grace, take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus.

According to the New Testament representations of it, the church is a very simple thing. It is not something that Christ instituted so much as it is something which grew from the seed which he planted. The word which Jesus used for church is, in the margin of the Revised Version, translated "congregation." And that is what it means—the congregation or assembly of those who, impelled by the need of fellowship, have come together upon the confession of his name. In the Catechism prepared by the National Council of Free Churches of England, the church is defined as "that Holy Society of believers in Jesus Christ, which he founded, of which he is the only Head, and in which he dwells by his Spirit." Accepting this definition—than which a better could hardly be given, the question is forced upon us, In what relation does Christ now stand to this Holy Society which he has founded, and in which he dwells? The reply to that vital question is that he is its enlightener, guide and ruler.

1. Enlightener. He still walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks keeping the light of truth burning. It is the presence of his Spirit which makes the Bible, which otherwise would be a dead letter, glow with light, and pulsate with life. By his Spirit Christ keeps in connection with every member of his church, speaking to him, interpreting to him his will, and leading him into all the truth. All the light that shines in Christian hearts; all the light that shines from the church, comes from the Presence of Him who is "the sun of righteousness"—"The light of the world."

2. Guide. According to Lightfoot, the Rabbins say that when two or three are sitting in judgment Shebanai is in the midst of them. And so where two or three meet in the name of Christ to consider the interests of his kingdom he is in the midst of them to guide them in their deliberations. Absolute dependence upon Christ; belief in his unseen Presence; confidence in his unerring guidance are essential to the highest life of the church. When these things are surrendered the gravest evils follow.

It is commonly said that Newman was driven into the Roman Catholic church from a deep distrust of reason. There was another and deeper cause. What he really doubted was not only the sufficiency of reason as a guide; but the sufficiency of the unseen Christ as a guide. He could not see how it was possible for Christ to control the affairs of his church without some outwardly imposed form of authority. An advance movement from the Anglican half-way house of centralized authority to the final goal of a single and supreme authority in the Roman church became inevitable if the premise he had accepted was to be carried to its logical conclusion. The same battle between spiritual and temporal authority is being fought to-day in the Church of England. And well will it be, if in the midst of the smoke of battle, the momentous issue involved is kept clearly in view; for it is none other than that of sight versus faith; bondage versus freedom; visible leadership versus invisible leadership; the headship of a fallible man versus the Headship of the infallible Christ. The substitution of temporal headship for spiritual headship is the great apostasy and it can come only as the result of the atrophy of the faith of the church in the Presence and leadership of her unseen Lord.

3. Ruler. The unseen Christ is the actual ruler of the church. For the larger recognition of his sovereignty he patiently waits. He has made himself dependent upon his church for the exercise of his sovereign power. The authority given to him he has delegated to them. Into their hands he has put the keys of the kingdom. They are to sit down with him on his throne; they are to declare his judgments; they are to administer the affairs of his kingdom; they are to do his works; they are to be to him hands and feet and mouth; they are to go for him into the abodes of poverty and vice; they are to put themselves at his service, allowing him to make what use of them he pleases; they are, as his representatives, to aim to express his mind, to do his will, and to make his kingdom real and visible on the earth.

Recognition of the Presence.

One of the things demanded of the church of to-day is a more definite acknowledgment of the Presence of her reigning Lord. It is not enough to rest in a historic connection with the Lord of the past; the church must live in actual connection with the Lord of the present. It is not enough to see what he has done for the church in ages past, or what he is going to do for it in the ages to come, the question is what is he doing for it now? Is he its actual ruler and leader in the present? To lay hold anew upon the strength of her unseen king, to see him at the head of his sacramental host leading it on to victory, will bring the church a new influx of conquering power. When the noble four hundred Scotch ministers surrendering their livings, marched out of the Assembly Hall in Edinburgh, taking as their watchword "The crown rights of Jesus Christ," and reaffirming the original position of the Scotch church, that "the Church of Christ is spiritual, not having a temporal head on earth but only Christ, the one king and governor of his church," they kindled a fire of evangelical life in Scotland, which, by God's grace, burns until this day.

Speaking of the deeper movement of spiritual life in the Nonconformist churches of England, Dr. A. Mackennal recently said: "There is a sense of dependence upon the unseen presence and effective grace of Christ, which promises a spiritual awakening of large and enduring results." No more hopeful sign could anywhere be seen in the ecclesiastical sky than a return to a simple faith in the Presence of the unseen Christ in the midst of his church, as her enlightener, guide, and ruler—a faith which, just in proportion to the hold which it gets upon Christian hearts, transforms the church somnolent and discomfited into the church militant and triumphant. A recognition of the living Christ will make a living church; a recognition of the working Christ will make a working church; a recognition of the conquering Christ will make a conquering church.

EDUCATING POWER OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHRIST.

J. A. Beattie.

IN the school of Christ as in every other there are three factors—the persons to be taught, the teacher and the subject-matter. The educational influence of the teacher also depends upon three things: the kind of subject-matter employed, the teacher's acquaintance with it and with the persons to be taught, and the teacher's spirit and purpose, life and character.

In the light of these three factors taken separately and as a product, let us ask what is there in the life, conduct and character of Jesus that gives him influence over the minds and hearts of men?

Considered negatively by the educating ability and guiding influence of Christ are not to be understood the fame, the reputation of the Savior for the reputation of any one has very little to do with ability in education only in so far as it gives confidence, the hearing ear, the attentative mind and the understanding heart. While reputation in general—his reputation and yours—is valuable, it is not character. On the other hand, it is character which gives all the reputation that is worth having and all that any one can hope will endure. This is the case because character is within and of the man—a part of the being himself—while reputation is without. Character is a plant of so slow a growth that it requires time to develop. Reputation, good or bad, may come from a single act and within a day or week.

The Distinction Drawn.

Character is in fact what is, while reputation is what seems to be. Character is the true measure of a man to himself, to the church, to society and to the state, while reputation is the estimate others have made of him in these relations. Character is not an effect, or a result of which accident is the cause. Rather it is that stamp upon the moral nature of the man which makes such an impression upon him, when good, that he recognizes his relation to truth and righteousness, to manliness of bearing and to nobility of conduct—yea, that he is in the world with the opportunity to secure divine approval and to accomplish for himself and for others divine ends. It was not, therefore, the fame of Jesus in any large measure which gave him his power among the people, but rather his character which gave him his reputation.

Neither was it the Savior's ability to work miracles and to exhibit signs of divine relationship which gave his life, teaching and character influence and educating force. The wonders he wrought, the signs he exhibited and the many manifestations of God's presence which he made to the people had their place, their meaning and their influence then and have now, but they are not the things in Christ and in his teaching which draw us to him and cause us to put ourselves under his tuition.

Christ's Qualifications as Leader.

Turning from this negative side to the affirmative let us ask: What are some of the positive qualities which commend Christ to us as the one to be chosen as friend and guide, as teacher and example? 1. Jesus knew and appreciated every element, every want, every capacity and every aspiration of man. The body with its need of food and clothing; the mind in all its wonderful powers and almost divine capabilities; the moral nature in all its longings for fellowship with kindred beings and the spiritual being in its deathless yearnings for immortal life and endless glory are all recognized by this great Teacher as parts of the complex unity we call man. Not only so, but Jesus makes provision for man's development, for his cultivation in appreciation and training in apprehension that his social nature may find nourishment and gratification in the exercise of those graces and virtues which beautify and ennoble. Yea, the way is opened through such teaching and we find in the golden rule and elsewhere for the exercise of those things which fit us in mind and disposition, which form the habit and character, and which inspire the thought and purpose for the greatest usefulness and fullest enjoyment and that not simply for the present, but for all the future.

2. The Savior is to be accepted as our great Teacher because he taught the truest and purest principles with regard to life and conduct and because in all respects his own life conformed to that which he desired his followers to become. Two or three illustrations from the Savior's teaching will make this statement perfectly clear. Take, for example, the sayings in the first part of the sermon on the mount and what do we find? Compare these utterances with every known thought and act and we find that they are not only in harmony with each other and with all that is genuine in human life, but also, that they are the expression of the Savior's own life and character. Study for a few minutes the seven of the nine beatitudes, as they are called, which relate to personal motives and individual conduct and what is the result? They furnish not only some general principles by which conduct may be measured; the key to the divinely constructed scheme of redemption; the frame work about which the system of Christianity has been built; the guiding principles of the Apostles in their efforts among the people and in their letters to the churches, but they are also, so far as Christ was of man and a partaker of man's nature, the elements which enter into the highest ideals it is possible for us to have of manly qualities and worthy motives, of human sympathy and helpfulness, exhibited on the part of the Savior to the highest and best possible degree of perfection.

Character Emphasises Teaching.

It is this embodiment of principles in character and this setting in action and conduct which give such emphasis to the teaching of Jesus when he says: "Blessed are the poor in spirit"; "blessed are the meek"; "blessed are they that mourn"; "blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness"; "blessed are the merciful"; "blessed are the pure in heart"; and "blessed are the peace-makers." Two things in this illustration from the Savior's teaching give us the lesson as it relates to the educating force and benign influence of his character.

1. The value which is placed upon these graces and upon their possession.

2. The condition of the individual members of society and of society itself when these virtues are wanting. He who is adorned with these seven graces is promised the kingdom of heaven; an inheritance in the earth; comfort in sorrow; perfection in righteousness; fullness of mercy, and to be called a child of God.

The value of these graces is indicated also by a contrast with the opposite qualities; proud in spirit, arrogant in behavior, pleasure in sin, hating righteousness, impure in heart, despising mercy, and disturbing the peace. These elements, or qualities, last named, when found in the life, conduct and character of any one so destructive in action, so deadly in tendency and so terrible in results that their presence puts an end to peace and happiness, to truth and industry, to thrift and progress, to culture and refinement, to joy and satisfaction, yea, to all things worthy of manly efforts and womanly attainments. Another illustration of the comprehensive nature of Christ's instruction, of the pure and lofty character of the principles he taught and of the fact that every excellence in precept was exhibited in his own life as an example for man is found in what is usually called the Lord's Prayer. An analysis of it will show how fully this lesson is taught and to what extent the conduct and character, the heart and purpose, the spirit and mission of Jesus set forth its meaning. "Our Father who art in heaven," which shows our reliance upon God and our need of his ever-present and protecting care. "Hallowed be thy name," which teaches us not only that God's name is holy, that reverence is to be upon our lips, and that we are to stand with uncovered heads in his presence, but also that we are to exalt his name by growing into the likeness of his divine image. "Thy kingdom come," which assumes that the inhabitants of the earth have not all become subjects of his divine government and recognizes the fact that not all professed citizens of the kingdom of God are loyal to their pledges of citizenship. "Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth," which accepts God's presence everywhere and realizes that the desires of God should be the life and delight of men. "Give us this day our daily bread," which implies that we are dependent upon God; that it is from his bounty we are fed; and that his hand provides the growing corn and the standing harvest. "And forgive us our sins," which acknowledges that we have come short of the glory of God; that we need his pardoning mercy; and that we rest in his love and confidence. "And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," which places our weakness in his strength; which realizes that temptation is on every hand; that we need some one to make for us a way of escape—some one to show us the cleft rock of safety and the high tower of defence.

"Tommy," said the visitor, "have you read the books in your Sunday school library?" "Some of them," he replied, rather doubtfully. "Can you tell me what happened to the boy who went fishing on Sunday?" "Yes, he caught three catfish and an ell." "How do you know that?" "'Cos I was with him." —Washington Star.

Somebody once said to D. L. Moody: "Have you grace enough to be burned at the stake?"

"No," was the reply.

"Do you wish you had?"

"No, sir, for I do not need it. What I need just now is grace to live in Milwaukee three days and hold a convention."

A GLIMPSE AT THE SOCIOLOGICAL TEACHINGS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

By M. B. Ryan.

Social Redemption.

Of all the schemes for social redemption, that presented by the New Testament is at once the simplest, the amplest, the most consistent and the most sublime. Of the necessary elements, none are lacking; all are here in their highest perfection.

Christ the Agent.

Christ is the Savior of society. In person and position he is eminently fitted to this mission. He is the Truth.

A loss of truth lies at the basis of all social disorder. Social redemption requires a recovery of the truth, the enthronement of the truth in human life and relations. Christ makes this possible. Christ's enthronement in human hearts is the key to social salvation.

He is the ideal individual. Sin has perverted the individual, thus spoiling the social factor. Christ is the perfect individual, in whom there is no moral schism. To have Christ formed within us is to be restored to moral wholeness, consequently to social fitness.

He is the "Son of Man." Sin has shattered the social bond. The race is distracted. Social antagonisms have supplanted social peace. Jesus springs out of the race. The race is summed up in him. He is its one perfect representative. The race finds a meeting place and a ground of reconciliation in him.

He is the God-man. Sin has divorced man from God. Society is thus set adrift. Jesus invites the human and the divine in himself. In him society once more finds its center. On him the structure has a foundation. The essential feature of social degeneration is a loss of unity. Christ is a uniter. He brings the sheep of different folds and makes one flock. He breaks down the middle wall of partition and makes one new man of the separated factions.

The Kingdom of Heaven—The Agency.

The kingdom of heaven is the regnancy of the Truth. It is the agency for social redemption, as well as the outcome of it. It is a renovating force, heavenly in its origin, silent yet aggressive in its progress, supplanting evil with good, impelling reformation, fostering a superior life, ushering in social reconstruction. Under its influence society swings into the orbit of Truth, and social order takes the place of chaos.

The Gospel—The Instrumentality.

The preaching of the truth is the instrumentality for social salvation. Social redemption is not a thing of swords and cannon; nor is it wholly a thing of ballot-boxes and legislatures, of judicial benches, and executive chairs. It is a spiritual thing, that must take place first of all in the heart. All false ideas, ideals, practices, institutions, must be counteracted, overcome, destroyed, by the truth. Sin itself must be driven from the heart by getting Christ, who is the Truth, into it. The truth must, to this end, be proclaimed.

Hence the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation." "Preach the word!" Hence Paul's determination to know nothing else among men save Jesus Christ and him crucified. "For seeing that in the wisdom of God, the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe."

The Methods.

The New Testament pursues a logical method in social redemption. It begins with the individual. It does not attempt to build a good society out of bad men. Individual regeneration is the condition of social reconstruction. The birth from above is a prerequisite to entrance into the kingdom of heaven. No superficial readjustment of social conditions can restore society to its lost wholeness. There must be a vital change in the social factors. The beginning point in social redemption is with the individual, as this is also the beginning point in social degeneration. Society is neither lost, nor saved, in the mass. Christ, preaching to one woman, suggests a basic principle in social redemption. "Everyone," "whosoever," are keywords in social methods.

The product of the new birth is a "new creature in Christ Jesus." Here is new stuff for the new social fabric. With the social factors redeemed, a redeemed society is possible. Two things are apparent in this new society.

1. New social ideals and aspirations. The prayer which Jesus taught his disciples is but the breathing of new social desires, in which selfishness has disappeared, and good will to men on earth, as well as glory to God on high, is the burden of the petition.

2. Social readjustment. Anti-social practices are discarded. Social qualities are fostered. Falsehood is replaced by truth, anger by good will, theft by honest labor, corrupt speech by that which edifies. "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and railing, be put away from you, with all malice." These are all anti-social. "And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you." Here is the true social attitude. Here nationality is forgotten, class distinctions are in abeyance, selfishness dies, swords are sheathed.

By such a process as this are social antagonisms to be eliminated. Before its silent march strife shall cease, armies shall melt away, sceptres shall fall, thrones shall crumble, and warring factions shall give place to the brotherhood of man.

THE SERENITY OF JESUS.

By David Beaton.

THE disease of our age and country, even among religious people, is anxiety, feverish eagerness and unrest. It is found among all kinds of religious workers; the merchant who tries all church work by commercial standards, and the preacher whose spiritual energies are consumed by sensational tricks. The purity, sweetness and energy of Christian character are being wasted or enervated by this false fire.

Contrast the serenity of Jesus with all this tumult of the spirit and vain striving. His serenity was not the result of indifference to the woes and agony of men; for he carried the cares and burdens of the world on his heart, he was vexed with its errors and follies as no other heart had ever been. Yet he moved without haste, he spoke without passion, he knew neither the anxiety of failure nor the ambition of success in the carrying on of the mightiest work ever given to man.

The secret of the serenity of Jesus lay in his absolute confidence in and identification of himself and his work with God, so that amid the wildest passions of men and the wrath of the elements he could be at rest. This characteristic astonished his disciples as when they, in the midst of the storm, found him asleep on a pillow. He had the mental and moral confidence in God which gives sound nerves and calm, sweet thoughts of life, even amid the conflicting moral confusion of the world.

But his serenity did more than this. It did not allow the moral evils around him to warp his judgments of men, and his sympathy with their common interests, and the beautiful and helpful aspects of nature. As Harnack says: "His whole life and thoughts and feelings were absorbed in the relation of God, yet he did not talk like an enthusiast or a fanatic who sees only one red-hot spot and so is blind to the world and all that it contains. He is possessed of a quiet, uniform, collected demeanor * * * and his speech, in picture and parable, exhibits an inner freedom and cheerfulness of soul in the midst of the greatest strains such as no prophet ever possessed before him."

This trait of the character of Jesus affects us as the mighty current of the Mississippi at its mouth. We know that such a river must be fed from the perennial sources of the eternal snows; we know that only a mighty continent could produce it and carry it. So the serenity of Jesus is fed and sustained by the exhaustless energy and expansiveness of the life of the spirit.

This comes, however, not merely by faith, but by the identification of his own life and work with the power of God; for whatever views we may hold of the nature of Christ we cannot conceive of him as relieved of the necessity of the exercise of such confidence in, and dependence on, God as the source of all power. This quality of spirit, then in Jesus, reached to the height of absolute identification of himself with the divine power. This was the measure of his serenity, and points to the secret of his sway over the forces of life. As the measure of man's physical power to-day is his yoking himself to the elemental energies of steam and electricity, so the measure of the Christian's power is his yoking his soul to the elemental truths of the Spirit. Power goes forth from him as from Jesus. If we can not give men rest and peace it is because our hearts are fearful and ambitious. He had rest and peace in his own soul and so could give it to others.

COMPRESSED TRUTH.

By B. O. Aylesworth.

Mercy sometimes carries a whip.
The divine palmetry—keep your hand open.
Logic has proved more lies than truth.
Keep your brain "cells" unlocked.
A reckless driver lacks "horse sense."
Some folks mistake vivacity for vitality.
"Bug-juice" is a good thing if applied to bugs.
The religious quack does his share of advertising.
A trick mule isn't of much account in a weedy cornfield.
Humpty-dumpty on a wall is nobler than genius in a ditch.
When Homer nods all the sleepy heads wake up.
If you are unhappy don't hang around the morgue.
Always be baby enough to play with a patch of sunshine.

Progress has at least a by-path through the graveyard.

A soldier of the cross does not look well in "fatigue dress."

Even a pig knows there are acorns under the dead leaves.

A SMILE

W. H. B.

Upon its downy cradle-bed
A sleeping little child
Lay dreaming of its mother dead,
And in its slumber smiled.

An angel took the baby's smile
And, bearing it to Heaven,
He placed it in the crown of her
To whom it had been given.

THE SPIRIT THAT DENIES.

James Norval Crutcher.

In Goethe's wonderful "Tragedy of Faust," Mephisto, in the garb of a traveling scholar approaches Faust, and in reply to the question as to who he was, says: "I am the spirit that denies." The answer is significant. It describes the attitude which many in every age have taken toward the truth. In the beautiful story of Eden, we are told that God assured the woman "the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die," but the spirit of evil, the tempter, the adversary of all souls denied the statement, not by mild insinuation, but by bold assertion, "thou shalt not surely die." He has, throughout all the years, held out that false hope to the children of men, causing souls to waste their substance in sinful pleasure, believing that death is in the far away future. Whatever be the situation Mephisto is ready with a denial, frequently "quoting Scripture for his purpose." If the soul has long dwelt in "that far country," away from the Father's house, and would make an attempt to return, hearing the whisperings of God's love, "catching a glimpse of him who is able to save even unto the uttermost," this spirit confronts him with a bald denial, saying, "You are an outcast, there is no place for you in the Father's heart or in the Father's home." He uses question marks with apparent prodigality, and adds a "perhaps" to every truth. He is an iconoclast. He is censor and critic. He is cynical, he is truth-hating; he is, in a word, "the spirit that denies." You immediately recognize in him the adversary of all good, of virtue and truth to doubt until men deny the possibility of unselfishness and the dawn of a well-earned immortality. The result is a paralysis of noble sentiment, higher impulse and earnest endeavor. The spirit that denies may come in the garb of a scholar, or with the charm of an orator, but he is the same Mephistopheles still. When the man "comes to himself" and adjustment takes place, then the realization comes that negation is powerless, that it leaves the soul weak and nerveless. Every forceful, helpful, victorious man has possessed positive moral convictions. The best, the greatest, the truest men have ever been positive in their character, and affirmative in their spiritual attitude. Every great movement toward "the brighter age to be" has been led by men who believed in something with all their "soul and mind and strength." The church is strong in proportion as it is affirmative, and has a positive program and does not treat life on the negative side, but lives to rebuke the spirit that denies. For "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith."

ON HAVING AXES TO GRIND.

By W. T. Moore.

Is there really such a thing as altruism? The word itself has an awkward derivation. It is scarcely legitimate English. Still, it has probably come to stay. The old word love is far better, but it does not express exactly the same idea. Probably we shall have to put up with the former until the later comes into use according to its significance as it is found in the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians.

Nevertheless, we are half persuaded that most of the acts of even Christian people are influenced largely by selfish considerations. If we were to take away the winning card most of our public enterprises would lose interest in the eyes of many people. This is why it is true that "nothing succeeds like success," and that nothing fails like failure. "Everybody feeds the fat goose, and everybody kicks the poor pig." While we are rising, all forces help us up; but when we begin to go down hill everybody gives us a push.

Selfishness is evidently fundamental in many of our actions; even our altruism, in its last analysis, is tinged with selfishness. We help others largely because it is our self-interest to do so. I do not say that this is as it ought to be. From an ethical point of view the "is" and the "ought" are widely different. I am dealing with what actually exists, and what evidently shows a very low standard of action. And yet, if the selfish incentive were removed, we should probably have no benevolence at all worth considering. So in this case, it is perhaps better that we should "bear the ills we have than fly to others we know not of."

I have been led into this line of reflection by some things that have recently come under my notice. I have attended a number of conventions, conferences and congresses, and have been impressed by the ubiquity and persistence of the ax-grinders. I find them at all our public gatherings, always ready to get in their little word for selfish ends. They usually work the program committee for all they are worth; but then, if they cannot get a place for advertising their wares, they will, by hook or crook, in some adroit way, manage to get in their business before the convention adjourns.

Now I protest against this ax-grinding habit. It makes no difference how good the cause may be which is to receive advertisement. There is not only a time for everything, but also a place for everything. Opportunism may not always be wise, but in the case under consideration it cannot receive too much emphasis. The ax-grinding business ought to cease. Indeed, it must cease if our great public gatherings are to be beneficial in the highest sense. Let the program committees make a note of this fact. But if they will not do this, then let the presidents of the conventions extinguish every man who has an ax to grind.

"How can any sensitive and thoughtful man permanently possess good health?" Longfellow once asked. "Outside I laugh," said Dr. Holmes, "but inside I never laugh. The world is too sad."

The late Dr. Norman Macleod of the Barony church, Glasgow, once told the writer a good story. When minister of the parish of Dalkeith, and in the course of his ordinary visitation, Norman called at a cottage one day about two miles distant. The only occupant was a lad of about six years of age. The father was at the coalpit, the mother at the harvest field, and the other members of the family employed one way or another. The minister was rather taken with the sharpness of the boy, and entered into conversation with him. Amongst other questions the following were put: Q.—"Do you go to school?" A.—"Sometimes." Q.—"Can you read?" A.—"Yes." Q.—"Do you read the Bible?" A.—"Sometimes." Q.—"Can you write?" A.—"A little." Q.—"Do you pray at night and morning?" A.—"Not often." Q.—"Do you say grace before meals?" A.—"Yes." Q.—"Well," said Norman, "let me hear you say grace." A.—"Let's see some meat first."

CHRIST THE OBJECT OF THE SOUL'S QUEST.

W. Douglas Mackenzie.

FROM the first moment of intercourse with Jesus Peter found that his faith and his knowledge were henceforth always growing together. The more he knew of Jesus, the more he trusted him. The more he trusted him, the more he knew. For at its deepest all your knowledge is not information, but experience. Everything that you really know is acting upon your character, every fact that is a big fact, worth taking into your soul, is changing the quality of that soul. All knowledge is soul knowledge. When Peter found himself following Jesus and learning more and more about him, he found that knowing him more was to trust him more and that to trust him more was to open his heart to fresh influences, so that he could say, increasingly, as time went on, "I believe, and the more I believe the more I know that thou art the Holy One of God. And the more I know and experience that thou art the Holy One of God, the more deeply do I give my soul in fealty and in trust into thy keeping."

"We have believed and have known." What is it they had believed and known? Peter says "that thou art the Holy One of God." I suppose there are people to whom the word "holiness" has been so despoiled of its true glory that it means cant and hypocrisy and superficiality and the use of ordinary religious phraseology. If you think for a moment what holiness means you will get right down to the very heart of humanity, you will get right down to reality itself. To get to what we mean by a holy man, a holy will, is to pass through all shams, all hypocrisies, all outward phrases, is to get in within a man's words and a man's professions and a man's living, right into the soul of the man—and to find God there. When a man has come in contact with the very idea of holiness it changes his days for him. He can not think of life as he used to. He can not think of himself and his career as he used to do. He can not think of society and its problems as he used to do. He can not think of the church and its world-wide, age-long task as he used to do. After he has looked into the very heart and found out for himself the real meaning of that word, "the Holy One of God," it means nothing less than a human life in which God himself is living. All the words which that man utters are the very truth of God; all the looks which pour from that man's eyes are the looks of the spirit of God; all the inward emotions and impulses and desires of that man are formed in him and controlled in him, moment by moment, by the indwelling of God himself, so that you can not distinguish between that man's life and the will of God, so that you can not draw any line between the man's own energies and the spirit of God himself. All that the man is and all that the man does is filled full with the very God. That is to be "the Holy One of God." Now, you and I find it hard to think of it because we are so far from it ourselves and have never seen any one of whom we can say that was fully true. But Peter had seen him, those disciples had come upon the fact. Does it not almost make you leap up to think what they were discovering as they walked and talked with Jesus and gradually found that there was only one word that could describe him, because every word of his bore upon it the stamp of divinity and every look of his was a message from the heart of the Eternal—upon sin the burning scorn of God, upon the sinner the eternal saving pity of the Eternal Father. Gradually there formed in their hearts and minds this one inevitable conclusion: This is the Holy One of God.

That is one of the hundred and the thousand reasons why Christianity is immortal and inexhaustible, why it can never pass away from our earth and why its influence must increase until it covers the earth with the knowledge, this inward soul knowledge, of the Lord—because in Jesus we find the Holy One of God. When you go to any other teacher you always take the liberty of differing from him, do you not? It is your prerogative to judge what he says, to weigh what he urges and to decide for yourself upon the expediency of following out his suggestions. If you go to the wisest of all the teachers of mankind you are bound at some point or another very seriously and profoundly to differ from them. What one of the great moralists of the centuries has not said words that now are completely out of date? The men who wrote for the middle of the last century, into the '50s and '60s, are becoming effete writers for the new day that is dawning and passing. But who is there, when he comes to the Holy One of God, who does not find that from Him there comes an irresistible influence, that in his words there is a majesty before which he does not argue but fall down to worship? When we and all the generations read the words of Jesus, we feel it is woe to the man who attempts to differ from him. We feel that the man who criticises Jesus opens himself to the criticism of the world. The world knows and feels with that feeling and that knowledge which is deeper than analysis and inexpressible to its full extent in words, knows and feels that in the Holy One of God we have the final authority for our conscience and our lives. "We have believed and know that thou art the Holy One of God."

Observe in the next place that the Apostle Peter says also, "Thou hast the words of eternal life," and yet, when he wants to speak fully about the matter he comes to the person of Christ himself, saying, "To whom shall we go?" Christ stands in the Christian religion, to the Christian heart, in a relation in which no other teacher and no other man who has attempted to found a religion stands towards that religion. Every other man who has ever founded a religion has been a teacher and said that he had the words of truth—words of eternal life, if you will. But every man who has taught a religion has known that he would pass away; that if they followed him for generations it would be by remembering him afar off; that when he was dead they would talk about him, the time when he lived and the importance of treasuring his sacred words. When a man has thus been the founder of a religion, of a system, he has always known that his own person must be less than his system, if his system had any good at all; that his own character fell below his teaching, if his teaching had any value in it; and he has told men, therefore, of the heights which lay beyond himself. He has urged them to travel up those heights and find the truth, scale those mountain tops and behold the clear heavens uninterrupted above them. "I die here at the bend of the hill. I am to be buried here half way up the mountain. The generations are coming that shall stand yonder, the characters are yet to be formed that shall, away on those distant peaks, find nothing between themselves and the perfections of eternity." So have they all felt, so some of them have spoken. Is it so with Christ? Was he buried at the bottom or half way up in a valley, secluded and beautiful? Or where, where did he stand? Up on the mountain top. And hence his message to the world is and can only be, "Come, come unto me." Christianity is the person of Christ and our relations to him. Christianity for Peter is not the number of sayings that he can remember and write down on a bit of parchment and show to his friends and say, "There is our religion." That is not his religion. His religion is to go and bring those men to Christ and say, "Now, look at him, the Holy One of God. Attach yourself to him, the Holy One of God. God and open your heart to him who opens his heart to you, the Holy One of God."

"Thou hast the words of eternal life," the apostle said. Christ had lived before them, the Holy One of God, and they had come gradually to discover that the Holy One of God has an eternal life in his very person. You can not conceive of the Holy One of God as a perishable quantity. You can not for a moment conceive of the Holy One of God being cast back by God into nothingness and oblivion. The idea is impossible, ungraspable! It shocks our moral sense. It puts nonsense into history, darkness upon the name of God who is light himself.

There is then this other amazing and thrilling fact concerning those disciples and their discovery, that when they came to apprehend that Jesus was the Holy One of God, they came gradually to behold him as the eternal life. Where did he come from? Up from the fountains of human life? Can you account for Jesus by ordinary evolution? Can you trace him back in the holiness of his spirit to the beast and the brute and the tiger? Can you go back there and find the roots of the being and person of the Holy One of God in those "resident forces?" Can you confront the law of heredity that has reigned over our race and will reign over it to the very end, and say that the Holy One of God came entirely out of a race that was corrupt and sinful and degraded, that the conscience which never had a stain was inherited from the consciences that were stained through and through? That would be a most astonishing miracle. The miracle of unbelief at that point is far harder for me to believe than the other miracle that Christ came out of the presence of God and that there was that element in his life which is the eternal life itself. When those men walked and talked with him and began to look in, as it were through the windows of his words, upon the secrets of his soul, the inner chambers of his life, they beheld it glistening and flashing with the Eternal itself, and they knew that he was the Holy One of God because in him there was—there is—eternal life. Now, what must come from that man? All the words that flow from that man come out of this holy, eternal self. They come out of this conscience of his, this mind of his, this inner life of his which is all God and from God and is going unto God, so that his words are words that pulsate and are filled with eternal life.

"Thou hast the words of eternal life," the apostle says. "We believed and knew and have come to know more and more that thou art the Holy One of God." No wonder that the apostle cries, "To whom shall we go?" Could Peter dare to go back now to the synagogue and listen to a scribe teaching about phylacteries and sacrifices and the tests for the spotless lamb and the methods of purification and that sort of thing? Would it be tolerable for the men who had lived with Jesus to go away and listen to any other kind of teacher and worship in the presence of any other kind of religion than that given to them by the person of Jesus Christ? To go away from Jesus is to go away to emptiness; it is to go away back to fishing and merchandise. To one who has been driven away from Christ the heavens have grown black above and the fair earth a desert, for there is no teacher to tell him of any God in whom he can believe as he believed awhile in Jesus. Religion to him has become empty and meaningless. That is a reason why I always stand in utter amazement in the presence of people, of whom there are a good many around us, who are seeking after other religions. When I see a man or a woman with some gift of intelligence and some education going in for theosophy as a religion—and I shall not name any others—going in for any one of these dozen or more attempts at religion that people profess to be founding, or seeking rest in, it always comes back upon me as a kind of shock when I say to myself, That man, that woman is exchanging that for Jesus Christ, is preferring that to Jesus Christ. That man, that woman, is actually imagining that these people, who, without being crucified, are founding new religions, have something to say that is deeper, greater than Jesus Christ, something to do for a man which he has failed to do. Oh! the pity of it! There is only one way of accounting for it; and that is the simple and obvious one that these people could not use the words of Peter, "We have believed and know that thou art the Holy One of God." To the man who once has had that experience and over whose life since it has shed something of its light, it is like a burning shame even to consider the possibility of going anywhere else to Mr. or Mrs. So and So, with an address in Boston or Chicago, in exchange for Jesus Christ.

My friend, I want to ask you whether you in your own character and heart have made his acquaintance. You know a great deal about him or a very little about him, but you know all that he wants to teach you just now if you know him, the quality of his person, of his character, with your own heart; if you know that he is the holy one of God, your Lord and your Savior. Do you know that? Is it an experience to you that belongs to your conscience, to your affections, to your will, to all that is real in your human nature? Then you know the defiant and the despairing meaning of those words with which Peter first met the question of Jesus, "To whom shall we go?"

A NEW HEAVEN AND A NEW EARTH.

Lesson for June 23: Rev. 21: 1-7, 22-27. Golden Text: Rev. 21: 7.

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the earth were passed away; first heaven and the first and there was no more sea.

2. And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

3. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

4. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.

5. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write; for these words are true and faithful.

6. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

7. He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

22. And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it.

25. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there.

26. And they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it.

27. And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

By Peter Ainslie.

He that overcometh shall inherit all things and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.—Rev. 21: 7.

Life is a contest. Obstacles lie about us on every side and the straight path is not the smooth path. Life seeks to be supreme, but every step for supremacy is contested. The weak, like a worm surrounded by a ring of fire, shrink back and die; the brave cut their way through the fire. God has said: "When thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." A child entering school is studying to overcome ignorance and in every undertaking in life one must overcome something in order to be something. Battle grounds must always lie in the wake of the victor and wrecks must mark his pathway—not his wreck, but the wreck he has made of obstacles. There is a star-shaped flower in Siberia that blooms only in January. Its white petals are covered with glistening specks that look like diamonds. A Russian nobleman took some of the seeds to St. Petersburg and planted them and on the coldest day in the year they pushed aside the snow and ice and burst into full bloom. There are people that this world has tried to freeze out and snow under, but by the grace of God they push aside every obstacle and burst forth the sweetest bloom right in the face of their enemies. They are set to overcome and their obstacles are apparently steps to higher things. What ordinarily would defeat others they turn into success. They do not stop to murmur, to pick a quarrel, to get even with somebody or set their tempers wild. They know only one thing, and that is to overcome. Most people are like a dog I knew once that rarely started on a fox trail but that he would start up a rabbit and he would leave the fox for the rabbit trail, or, if he treed a squirrel, and noticed the ground being raised by the boring of a mole, he would immediately leave the squirrel and start scratching for the mole, and that dog was of very little consequence. I know hosts of people who spend enough time on their feelings, conditions and pride to conquer every sin that they meet in daily life, but they leave off contesting to overcome in order to nurse their pride that has some way been hurt, which was the very thing that ought to have been hurt, and they spend days in trying to restore it to its former eminence. These are those who are daily contending for dignity, personal justice and respect—just like the dog scratching up the mole. None of these things are worth contesting for. God wants us to overcome the heart sins, to put down self, to throw out pride and to bring in humility, kindness and service. If we are hurt, if things do go wrong, if we cannot have our way—that is all right. If we belong to God and are trying to overcome self, everything that happens in our pathway, both the pleasant and the unpleasant, shall be for our good, for God himself has said so. Care for none of these things, but only care to overcome, not others, but ourselves, and then the promise is "I will be his God and he shall be my son." It is certainly worth working for and God is able to perform what he has promised.

Our Father, as we contend for personal righteousness, stand by us and give us thy strength or we shall not overcome. Amen.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

For time and symbolism see notes on previous lesson. In no part of this book must we lose sight of the prominence given to the figurative over the literal.

Purpose of the Lesson.

This sublime portion of Scripture relates to heavenly conditions. It is not necessary to spend much time discussing an unimportant question that meets us at the outset. Does the horizon of the lesson take into view the ideal life in Christ on earth; or is it limited to the glorified state beyond the bounds of time; or does it include both? What this Scripture does present is a glorious insight into new conditions that attend the descent of heavenly things and correspondingly the absence of sin and its awful fruitage. That it contemplates the ultimate good of our noblest Christian aspirations cannot be doubted. It can hardly be overlooked that no intimation is given of one thought pertaining to the life beyond, which is treasured with the sweetest anticipation in every Christian heart. It is that of the future meeting of our own precious ones who have gone before (2 Sam. 12: 23), and the personal recognition of all the faithful saints now beyond the grave. To these heart longings Jesus himself responded. (Matt. 17: 3; Luke 13: 28; 23: 43.) Such absence may give some strength to the view, that the lesson primarily is designed, to afford but a clearer conception of the first or earthly stage of heavenly existence, and as such to serve as a type of the "far better" (Phil. 1: 23) things beyond. It must be true that every previous object of earth (Chap. 21: 18, 21) and especially the beauty of holiness, is a type or foretaste of the eternal felicity. May we not, then, without lessening by a fraction, the ultimate heavenly idea associated with these verses, receive therefrom help to so augment our present-day, heavenly experiences that we shall be eternally richer thereby? There can, moreover, be only profit in observing another remarkable fact. It is that of the harmony, existing between this lesson and those other parts of Scripture, which teach that the heavenly life truly begins when we receive the Heavenly One, even as God "hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." (Eph. 1:3; Heb. 3:1; 6:4.)

V. 1. Heavenly Newness. "I saw." It is John who is speaking of what he saw in vision. * * * "New heaven and new earth." The subject of a renewed heaven and earth is not a new one in the Scriptures. Heaven as well as earth had been polluted with sin. Chap. 12:7, 9; Jude 6. In Isaiah 65:17-25 there is a nearly parallel description to this; with the scene laid where common occupations of life go on. See also Isa. 66:22; 2 Pet. 3:13. But this theme of heavenly newness in various aspects is one in which the Bible abounds. Christ taught of a new commandment (John 13:34), and a new birth (John 3:3-5). We also are taught about a new spirit (Ezek. 18:31; 11:19; Rom. 7:6); the new creature (2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15); new man (Col. 3:10); new life (Rom. 6:4); new tongues (Mark 16:17); new hearts (Ezek. 18:31); new song (Psalm 40:3; Rev. 14:3) and in to-day's lesson of a new heaven and earth. Can we wonder that the inspired apostle can say, "Behold all things are become new?" 2 Cor. 5:17. As Jesus the source thereof is the same yesterday, to-day and forever so this newness will continue forever. * * * "First heaven and earth pass away." In the previous chapter, verse 11, the heaven and earth are referred to as having "fled away." Always when heavenly newness is possessed "old things are passed away." 2 Cor. 5:17. In the Revelation "new" refers not to time but always to a new aspect or character. * * * "There was no more sea." A symbolic expression, doubtless, for Chapter 22:1, 2 implies the presence of a large area of water. The sea is an emblem of the unruly and troubled peoples of earth. Isa. 57:20. It is the source from which the blasphemous beast of Chapter 13 had its origin.

V. 2. Bride of God. "Saw the holy city." The earthly Jerusalem is spoken of as the holy city in Neh. 11:1. Let us in our classes think of a city that is filled only with people who are "new creatures in Christ Jesus" and who "hate every false way." Psa. 119:128. * * * "Holy * * * New Jerusalem." Writers of all schools of interpretation are agreed that this new Jerusalem is a figure of the true church; as such, without spot or wrinkle, it is Christ's bride. Eph. 5:23, 27. * * * "Coming down from God." The text indicates that this holy city is to be established under divine rule. From the Gospel of John we learn that Jesus came down from heaven (John 3:13); from James, that heavenly wisdom, and every good and perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights. James 3:17; 1:17. So here is indicated the same source for the new Jerusalem. Elsewhere it is stated that we even now "Come unto the city of the living God the heavenly Jerusalem." Heb. 12:22. See Gal. 4:26; Heb. 10:22; Rev. 3:12. * * * "Prepared as a bride." A familiar and striking figure of that which represents the best that eager love can prepare. In Psa. 46, the bird's attire is symbolic of the purity of character belonging to the church. * * * "Adorned for husband." The relation of the Lord to humanity under the figure of bridegroom and bride is common throughout the Scriptures. See Chap. 19:79. It indicates relations the closest, tenderest, and most harmonious possible; the very reverse of the sinners' rebellion against God: A meek and Christlike spirit is the adorning that is acceptable with the Heavenly Bridegroom. 1 Pet. 3:4.

V. 3. God's Dwelling Place. "A great voice out of heaven." A voice repeatedly mentioned in this book. The heavenly voice always is great for its themes and aims are great. * * * "Behold tabernacle of God is with man." See Ezek. 37:27. A picture taken doubtless from the conception of Jehovah, as a resident of the old Jewish tabernacle. * * * "He will dwell with them." In the completest sense for sinfulness will no longer separate from God. Isa. 59:2. But God dwells with us now; we are his temple, as shown by 2 Cor. 6:16, etc. Too often our imperfections of vision, and of flesh, obscure the fact. John 14:23. * * * "Shall be His people." The word "people" here is plural (R. V.) denoting nations. * * * "And shall be their God." For God to be our God, dwelling with us, that truly is heaven; for "they that know not God" will be punished with separation from the presence of the Lord, that is hell. 2 Thes. 1:9.

V. 4. Devil's Works Destroyed. "Shall wipe away all tears." All sin and tears have their source in the devil, whose works Christ came to destroy. 1 John 3:8. When sin is gone all tears will be wiped away. They that sow in tears shall reap again in joy. Psa. 126:5, 6; Isa. 25:8; 65:19. * * *

"There shall be no more death." This truly is a mark of the eternal abode. But shall we say the words apply only to a time beyond the grave? With the Christian there is no more death in the true sense. Jesus says, "If a man keep my sayings, he shall never see death" (John 8:51) because he "is passed from death unto life" (John 5:24); such a one "shall never die. Believeth thou this?" John 11:26; 1 John 3:14. * * * "Neither sorrow nor crying." Mourning for the dead as in the experience of acts of violence mentioned in Chap. 13:10, 17; 2:10; see also Exod. 3:7, 9; Esther 4:3. One object of Christ's coming was to remove the cause of tears. Luke 4:18; 7:13; 8:52. * * * "Neither any more pain." Pain is another accompaniment of sin. That disease and pain even now are disappearing we all know. The time was, for instance, when smallpox depopulated almost entire cities; to-day there are few deaths from this cause. Thanks to the discoveries of Christian civilization pain now is almost wholly within the control of physicians. * * * "Former things are passed away." The devil, the author of all evil, is a bruised and conquered foe (Gen. 3:15); at the worst his power is shorn, has passed away. He may war against the saints, afflict them, persecute them, kill them, but their true spirit life is beyond his reach. Already they have passed through the first or spiritual resurrection (Chap. 20:6) into the spirit life.

V. 5. Commission Repeated. "He that sat upon throne." The "throne of God and the Lamb," 22:1; 3:21. He now confirms that which the heavenly voice, in verse 3, had proclaimed. * * * "Said behold, I make all things new." Probably the change implied is as that of the new plant or tree from the seed. 1 Cor. 15:37, 38. * * * "Write for these words are true." A statement in substance several times repeated in this book. See Chap. 1:4. * * * "True and faithful." True refers to the statement; faithful to its fulfillment. As we look upon all that was written, doing so in the light of a symbolic picture of the conflict between truth and error, this book continually fulfills its noble mission as a book of hope and comfort to the church.

V. 6. The Invitation. "He said * * * it is done." The Throned One speaks. On the cross Christ has said "it is finished"; that was the beginning of the heavenly blessings in Him. * * * "I am Alpha and Omega." Christ is the beginning and end of heaven to human beings. * * * "Will give unto him that thirsts." "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst for they shall be filled." Mat. 5:4. And again, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." John 7:37. This was beautifully illustrated in the case of the Samaritan woman. John 4:14, 29. * * * "Fountain of the water of life." What is this fountain? It is the exhaustless supply of "joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Pet. 1:8) given to all who truly have "passed from death to life." 1 John 3:14. * * * "Freely." Beautifully set forth in Isa. 55:1, 2.

V. 7. Condition and Promise. "He that overcometh" John is the "overcometh" apostle. He shows that Christ "overcome the world" with its tribulation. John 16:33. He writes, " whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world." John 5:4, 5. Again unto young men, strong, because the word of God abideth in them "ye have overcome the wicked one." 1 John 2:13, 14. * * * "Shall inherit all things." "These things" R. V. Are you lacking many seemingly desirable things in life? It is yours in Christ to advance to the enjoyment of all the things here set forth.

As in our last lesson the church in tribulation was represented by golden candle sticks, so in verses 8 to 22 we see the glory of earthly treasures is exhausted, in order that the thought of the beauty and splendor of heavenly conditions may be impressed. By Isa. 54:11-14, there is seen the employment of earthly treasures to set forth the righteousness, peace and joy in God. See Job 28:15, 19.

V. 22. God Is a Spirit. "No temple therein." Spiritual worship, apart from temple and ritual, is clearly illustrated in John 4:20, 24. * * * "For the Lord God and the Lamb." The name "Lamb" symbolizes the meek and innocent character and the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ. In the coming of the Hope of Israel every aspiration and longing of the human heart was accomplished and all the glorious prophecies of Messiah's triumphs in the Old Testament were fulfilled. * * * "Are the temple of it." This new city was all temple; a temple not made with hands. Acts 7:48; 17:24; 2 Cor. 5:1.

V. 23. The Heavenly Light. "No need of the sun * * * moon." It is not said that these were absent. When Paul and Silas were suffering sore tribulation in the Roman prison, even that place was conformed into a heavenly place. Eph. 1:3. The gospel dispensation is the dispensation of light. 1 John 1:5, 7. God is light. 1 John 1:5. Jesus is light. John 8:12. The true church is a light. Phil. 2:15. True Christians are lights. Matt. 5:14. * * * "And the Lamb." Christ in an especial sense is the Light of the world. He is light for all darkened lives; the light of civilization; of political freedom; of missionaries in the slums and among the darkest heathen lands.

V. 24. I Am the Way. "Nations shall walk in it." The words, "All they which are saved," are not found in the best manuscripts. Shall walk represents an active state. In Chap. 22:3, 4 it is said "They shall serve him and shall see him. * * * And the kings of earth." John informs us in Chap. 1:6; 5:10 that Christ hath made all believers kings and priests. The kingdom over which we reign is within ourselves. Luke 17:21. Earthly kings who become possessed of this heavenly newness will be included in the heavenly state. * * * "Bring their glory." As did the Queen of Sheba and others to Jerusalem. The glory of our own true living can add to the glory of the Celestial City.

V. 25. No Darkness. "The gates shall not be shut." As in the case of Jerusalem, to keep out robbers and enemies. Christ himself represents the door into the heavenly city, a door now always open. John 10:7, 9. * * * "No night there." Symbolic language and which may have no reference to an actual absence of the splendor and glory of the night. The Scriptures repeatedly convey the idea of stars in the world of glory. Dan. 12:3; 1 Cor. 15:41. * * * "No night" of the soul more likely is the meaning. Darkness is the Scripture emblem of sin, sorrow, trouble, pain and death. See Col. 1:13; Heb. 12:18.

V. 26. Glorious Gospel. This verse is largely repetitional of verse 24. The evangelical prophet had foreseen the time when "the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising." Isa. 60:3.

V. 27. God's Pledge. "No wise enter * * * anything that defileth." There is in it no sin; this and its source and action were destroyed. Chap. 20:10, 15. * * * "Maketh a lie." The lie is specified as if it was the very synonym of defilement and abomination. And so it is. There can be no good conscience or character or salvation to the makers of falsehood. Lying is an awful sin. * * * "Written in the Lamb's book of life." The eternal record of character. Contrast this with Chap. 20:15. God desires that all names shall be written there. John 3:17.

The verses that follow show by symbol the presence of positive elements of happiness. The volume of a flowing river; the frequency of fruit-bearing, not once a year, but, "every month"; the variety, of twelve manner of fruits. The book ends with the prayer, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Let this prayer never die from the lips of man or child.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Charles Blanchard.

WHAT TEMPERANCE WILL DO.

(A Temperance Service.)

Topic for June 23: Ref. Rev. 21: 1-7.

IT seems odd enough to find this revelation of the new heaven and the new earth given as our Scripture lesson for a temperance service. Yet it is suggestive.

"No More Sea."

If the expression, "No more sea" only read "No more saloon," the reference would be more in point. There is something striking in the statement that there shall be no more sea. The ocean is symbol of instability, of unrest. These things shall not be in heaven. In another place the revelator speaks of beholding a "sea of glass" before the throne. This is not a contradiction, but a confirmation. It is symbol of peace—perfect peace.

"No Saloon in Heaven!"

The very thought of a saloon in heaven shocks us, Doubtless the most degraded keeper of the vilest den on earth would have a qualm of misgiving at the suggestion of a saloon in heaven. The very thought is enough to show us the abnormal state of the individual and public mind which causes multitudes to regard the presence of the saloon on earth with such little concern. The total separation of earth and heaven in our thought accounts for much of our lack of private and public conscience on the saloon question. We need a readjustment of our spiritual vision. We need a quickening of our moral sense to see the inconsistency of countenancing the saloon on earth, while seeking to bring in the better conditions which John foresaw.

Heaven Here.

This Scripture has always seemed to me to intimate that heaven—our heaven—is to be on this sphere. The new heaven and the new earth take the place of the first, which "were passed away." This is confirmed in the words: "I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

A Hint to Reformers.

The new city is to come down from God out of heaven. Municipal reform must come down from above. It is like the new birth. In fact, it will come just as fast and no faster. There is just one cure for sin—regeneration. But, like Nicodemus, we are slow to understand what that means. Redemption will come to society when regeneration comes to the individual. I have less and less confidence, with every fleeting year, in reformatory measures. I am not a pessimist. He can not be such who reads, albeit with tear-dimmed eyes, this twenty-first chapter of Revelation. But what we need, dear brethren, in the ministry of the Gospel of God's grace, and dear endeavorers, in our blessed band, is not more organization and plans and methods—not reformation for the individual, for the church, for the city, for society—but regeneration. Life! Life! It is the Gospel way, it is God's way. "Behold, I make all things new!" It is the voice of him that sitteth upon the throne. And because he has spoken it I believe it will be. But when will it be, and how will it be? It will be when the former things have passed away.

"The Former Things."

"There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." These are among the former things. And along with them will go the saloon—one of the chief sources of the world's utter wretchedness and unuttered woe. With them will go also, "the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable and murderers and whoremongers and sorcerers and idolaters and all liars." While we oppose the saloon, let us make a clean sweep of the whole business! This is regeneration. Thus the former things shall pass away, and all things shall be made new. This is worth living, striving for!

Christ's heart was wrung for me, if mine is sore;
And if my feet are weary, His have bled;
He had no place wherein to lay His head;
If I am burdened, He was burdened more.
The cup I drink, He drank of long before;
He felt the unuttered anguish which I dread;
He hungered Who the hungry thousands fed,
And thirsted Who the world's refreshment bore.
If grief be such a looking-glass as shows
Christ's face and man's in some sort made alike,
Then grief is pleasure with a subtle taste;
Wherefore should any fret or faint or haste?
Grief is not grievous to a soul that knows
Christ comes,—and listens for that hour to strike.

HOW TO STUDY THE EPISTLES OF JAMES, JUDE AND PETER.

Story of Jude.

The story of James is also the story of Jude as to his relation to Jesus. He became a traveling evangelist of the new faith. A plausible suggestion as to the destination of the epistle is that it was written to church in Syrian Antioch. It is a burning protest and warning against the heathen impurity that seemed to threaten the life of the church. He gives examples of the dangers of sin and faithlessness, 5-7, rebukes the daring impiety of the men who were troubling them, 8-10, and pronounces their doom, 11-14. He exhorts his readers not to be like them but to be built upon the true foundation, 16-21. He closes by commending them to God. These unique epistles bear a needed message to the individual and to the church of to-day.

Peter's Vision Broader.

Peter had a wider and a clearer view of the new faith than James had. Peter was a Jew, but with the advantage of Joppa visions and Gentile associations. His loyalty to his Lord led him far from his Jewish narrowness. His epistle marks a great advance from the spirit of James.

Peter is always a picturesque character, as a man, a disciple, an apostle, an apostolic writer. His epistle sparkles with memories of the days he spent in the company of the disciples with Christ. You are reading the Revised Version with references. It will be a part of your study of these epistles to note this characteristic.

He writes to his brethren who are scattered abroad. They are in great trial. Note the references in the different chapters to the sufferings they are bearing. Do not hesitate to use the pencil in marking your text. In each chapter reference is made to the suffering. Make a catalogue of the sufferings.

He comforts them with the thought of fellowship with the sufferings of Christ. Note this in two passages, one in the second, and one in the fourth chapter. He also refers to it in the third chapter. The purpose of the suffering of Christ is the explanation of the suffering of His scattered people, scattered in the midst of a hostile world as Christ, they might exercise a ministry. This is the thought in the second chapter.

The unfolding of the character of this ministry in the second chapter reveals at once the Jewish feeling of Peter and his grasp of the worldwide purpose of God through the followers of Christ. Christ's people are dispersed as the Jews were once dispersed, to be ministers of the truth of God to strange peoples who otherwise would never be touched by it. As the Jews were to be a priestly nation, so we are to the world a royal priesthood. This is the thought of the second chapter. Here you will notice in the margin, references to the Book of Leviticus. This was the ritual of the Jewish priest. We can not well understand our priesthood if we are ignorant of the teaching of the Book of Leviticus. Holiness was enjoined upon the Jewish priest. It is also the first qualification of ourselves as royal priests.

The best commentary on the First Epistle of Peter is the Book of Leviticus. I wish you to read it in connection with this epistle. That you may do so intelligently, I give you the outline of the book as given in the Modern Readers' Bible. Law and Ritual of Offerings, Chs. 1-7. Law of the Consecration of the Priests, Chs. 8-10. Law of Purification and Atonement, Chs. 11-16. The Covenant of Holiness, 17-26. Vows and Tithes, Ch. 27. In the nineteenth chapter, holiness is the characteristic of every relation of the life of the Jew. It is not surprising, then, to return to the epistle and note admonitions to holy living on the part of Christians in relation to rulers, servants to masters, wives to husbands, husbands to wives, brother to brother.

What an exalted conception of our calling in Christ. Scattered in the world yet not of it. Suffering, striving to realize holiness, that we may be royal priests on behalf of those without the sanctuary, as was the ancient priest, as was the Jew to the nations, as was Christ for the world. How near to Christ it brings us. How worthy it makes us to understand the name "Christian," and how we should "glorify God in this name!"

The Second Epistle of Peter may best be studied with the help of two words as an index to the thought of the writer, warning and exhortation.

A POINT FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

C. Percy Leach.

I listened on a recent Sunday morning to the annual report of the United Church of New Haven, rendered by their venerable pastor, Dr. T. T. Munger. The report for the most part was not especially remarkable; but Dr. Munger made one point, in speaking of the Sunday school work in his parish, that struck me as being very timely indeed.

The Sunday school showed a slight decrease in average attendance compared with the previous year. The pastor explained that this decrease was due to the disbanding of the men's class. The class disbanded, to use his own words, "because the leader explained rather than taught the lesson."

I consider that a correct diagnosis of a prevailing malady. Many a leader will find in that statement the explanation of waning and sporadic attendance. It is a comparatively easy thing to explain, but it is exceedingly difficult to teach. A lazy, listless person may explain; a lazy teacher is an impossibility. It takes diligent, painstaking study to be a teacher. We are pressed for time during the week; on Sunday morning we rush into Sunday school, not knowing what the lesson is, but assuring ourselves that we can say something. If everything else fails we can fall back upon a description of the temple, an explanation of some Jewish custom; or we can give a section of Jewish history.

So much time is often wasted in explaining the setting of the truth that the truth which ought to be explained and enforced is neglected.

The few moments a teacher stands before a class are inestimably precious. Let them not be wasted in considering the husk of truth. Get at once to the kernel; give to the old truth new flavor from your own experience. Teach more and explain less. Nothing will help more to increase attendance and interest in the Sunday school. Explanations are from the head, teaching is from the heart.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.

JESUS APPEARS TO THE APOSTLES

Monday—John 20, 19-29.

In the room where the disciples were gathered, the doors being shut for fear of their enemies, Jesus showed Himself to them; and, standing in their midst, he said, "Peace be unto you!" It was no empty greeting. Along with his salutation went his gift. A twofold gift it was, and a double peace—the peace of his finished work, the peace of his abiding presence.

So, at conversion, he comes into the chamber of my heart, his blessed fingers undoing the bars which have kept him out too long. Perhaps he needs to break the door down, so rebellious the soul is which is lurking behind. But one thing I know, Jesus is here. He is in the midst of my being and life. And I am glad because I see my Lord.

"A spirit hath not flesh and bones," and Jesus has both. Having passed through death, and emerged on the brighter side of it, he keeps my human nature still. There is a world of strong consolation in the thought.

It tells me that he has lost none of his comprehension of my needs. When I am tried and troubled he feels it. When I am in pain he is not oblivious of my sorrow. When I require succor he knows exactly the aid to send. He is my kinsman.

And it tells me that my humanity is capable of the highest things. Not only in his estate of humiliation does Jesus clothe himself in my bodily nature, but in his estate of exaltation, too. He is not ashamed, in the midst of the celestial glories, to be my brother. Ah, surely, there are the greatest things in store for me.

Wednesday—1 Corinthians 1, 1-11.

"Some," says Paul, "are fallen asleep." It is a beautiful conception. It is a fine phrase.

If I only fall asleep, my heart will live on. The man who slumbers has not ceased to be the man he was. And when life is over here I do not sink into nothingness and forgetfulness. My Lord lives, and I live in fellowship with him.

If I only fall asleep my hands will have a pause and relief from labor. It is not that I am tired of my Master's work, but often I am tired in its prosecution and fulfilment. It will not be an unwelcome moment when Jesus bids me rest awhile. And, during my sleep, he will refresh body and spirit in wondrous ways, so that, when I awake, I shall run and not be weary.

And if I only fall asleep, my eyes will open and will see the King in his beauty. Sleep is merely a parenthesis—it is nothing more than that. I shall be up again in the everlasting morning, and Christ will be the first sight I see, and the best.

Thursday—1 Corinthians 15, 12-22.

The resurrection of the dead may be a profound mystery, but it is no less a certain and glorious truth.

There is the assurance of reason. Something within me tells me that I was not made to die. God, I feel, would not have endowed me with such capacities and aspirations, would not have led me so far along the paths of knowledge and achievement, would have made me contented with smaller things, if there were no future world and no eternal life.

And there is the assurance of promise. Old Testament and New alike bring me many satisfying words about the "country afar beyond the stars." They say to me, "Thy dead men shall live," "At thy right hand are pleasures for evermore," "He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

Best of all, there is the assurance of fact. Christ is raised from the dead. Christ has passed through the grave, and has come forth into that land where there are no graves. And when I link myself with him, I share in his glory and honor and immortality.

Friday—Acts 2, 22-36.

It is sad to live in a world where death is so rife. I see its dark depths swallowing up my dear ones. I know that before long I shall pass into its shadow. Life, with all its temptations, all its anxieties, all its pains, is good and pleasant to those who know the riches of God's love. It has many golden gates that open into the eternal light. There is the Sabbath. There is the worship of the church. There is the Bible. There is secret prayer. There is the comradeship of kindred souls. There is all that inner spiritual power which the Holy Ghost gives. Death is terrible because it snatches me from these.

But there is a divine deliverance. My flesh, even in the grave, shall tabernacle in hope. My soul, like my Lord's human soul, shall not be left in Hades. I may die, I ought to die, not as a captive taken prisoner against my will, but as an invited guest going forth to meet my Bridegroom. I should have within me, clear and vigorous, the hope of the world beyond the sepulchre. And so for me the last enemy should be destroyed.

Saturday—Acts 13, 26-37.

Christ suffered, and Christ reigns.

He drained the cup of grief and shame. "Though they found no cause of death in him, yet asked they of Pilate that he should be slain." But what followed? Resurrection, revival, ascension, dominion. "He whom God raised up saw no corruption."

Very blessed for Jesus himself was his tasting death. It was the beginning of his rule as our Savior. Before he came to our world at all he had been a King, King in virtue of his inherent Godhead and majesty. But, now he is King in a new sense and over a freshly acquired realm. He has gained a people for himself. He has purchased me, and tens of thousands more, for his possession. To-day the crown of redemption glitters on his brow.

And very blessed it is for me that he tasted death, and passed through it to victory. His experience is the pattern of the spiritual resurrection he gives me from the sepulchre of my sins. He endows me with the new life of acceptance, of holiness, of trust and joy—the new life whose goal is heaven and the sight of himself.

Sunday—1 Peter 1, 1-9.

To "strangers" St. Peter writes his Epistle—to those who confess that they have no continuing city here, and who seek one to come.

It will be well if I feel that the Epistle is designed for me. Do I cultivate the spirit of the stranger? Are my interests elsewhere? Is my home elsewhere? When the soldier of the Swiss Guards hears in another land than his own the rude melody which gathers the cows back from their pastures on the lower slopes of the Alps, he is so filled with what the Germans call the Heimweh, the yearning for home, that he casts down his sword, and tears off the foreign livery, and renounces his claim for wages in order to hurry back to his beloved mountains. It will be a good thing if, when Peter speaks to me about the incorruptible inheritance, I see its towers and palaces rising above the mists of time, and embrace it with outstretched arms, and call myself a wayfarer and a pilgrim until I reach it, for here.

BOOKS...

Jesus Christ and the Social Question. An Examination of the Teaching of Jesus in its Relation to Some of the Problems of Modern Social Life; by Francis G. Peabody.—The MacMillan Co., N. Y.

This book is distinguished alike for maturity of thought; for clearness of insight; and for practical suggestiveness. It is one of the sanest treatments of the social question that has yet appeared. The framework of the book is simple; as is seen from the table of contents, which is as follows: "The Comprehensiveness of the Teaching of Jesus;" "The Social Principles of the Teaching of Jesus;" "The Teaching of Jesus Concerning the Family;" "The Teaching of Jesus Concerning the Rich;" "The Teaching of Jesus Concerning the Care of the Poor;" "The Teaching of Jesus Concerning the Industrial Order," and "The Correlation of the Social Questions." The following are some of the leading thoughts of the book: The prime purpose of Christ is the redemption of the individual, and the redemption of the individual, the method of the redemption of society. The social order is the product of personality; and personality when renewed always fulfills itself in a new social order. In the life and teachings of Jesus the ideal social order is disclosed. The phrase which designates this ideal social order is "the kingdom of God." The kingdom of God is in the world, but not of it. It originates within a change of heart; it is realized in love working for righteousness. On the inner side it is a divine rule, on the outer side it is a divine realm. Professor Peabody is an opportunist. The opportunist as he describes him, "is not necessarily a time-server; he may be simply a reformer who uses each opportunity as it arrives. The opportunist has no definite or final program, but is ready to use any means which for the moment appears practicable. He feels his way through what is immediately possible toward the end which he desires."

"The Gospel of the Atonement," by Archdeacon Wilson; MacMillan & Co., N. Y., is a last year's book; but it is not very widely known in America, and attention is now called to it because it presents a thorough-going attempt to interpret the atonement of Christ in harmony with the doctrine of the divine imminence. Beginning with the principle that "all that is essential in religious belief can be sufficiently verified by ethical experience" the writer goes on to show that all theories of a transactional atonement, founded upon the divine transcendence, being outside the sphere of consciousness cannot be verified. The position taken is that the only adequate doctrine of the atonement is that which tells us how Christ saves us by giving us his life. Revelation authenticates itself in experience by the transmission of life through truth. The fact that "Christ has infused new power into the world which has enabled myriads to struggle more successfully with sin in themselves" is a fact true to human experience, and it is this fact which is the central thing in the atonement of Christ.

The point for which Archdeacon Wilson contends so forcefully is true, but it is not the whole truth. A satisfactory theory of the atonement can no more be built up upon the doctrine of the divine imminence alone than upon the doctrine of the divine transcendence alone. In the past almost exclusive regard was given to the doctrine of the divine transcendence, now the pendulum of thought is swinging to the other extreme, and we are in danger of giving too much regard to the doctrine of the divine imminence. Archdeacon Wilson discards every system of theology which makes the atonement a transaction which has as its end the disposing of God to forgive—which is well; but he discards also the connection between the atonement and forgiveness—which is not well. The God who interpenetrates all is the God who is above all; the God who is the indwelling life of man is also the God who holds personal relations with man; and any theory of the atonement is defective which leaves out of account either one of these modes of divine self-manifestation. Archdeacon Wilson's book, although one-sided, is valuable as giving emphasis to the aspect of truth which in the past has been too much overlooked, but which is happily in the present day, receiving a large measure of attention. It is a thought-provoking book, and is well worth reading and pondering.

"The Lady of the Lily Feet, and Other Stories of Chinatown," by Helen F. Clark; The Griffith & Rowland Press, Philadelphia; is a collection of short stories; seven in number; which gives an inside view of the life of the Chinese in San Francisco and New York. It is hardly conceivable that such a condition of things exists among us as that depicted in these pages. The stories are told in a simple, artless manner; and carry with them an air of reality. They show the unspeakable degradation of women among the Orientals, the peril to our civilization from the transportation of eastern customs, while at the same time they reveal the need and the desire for the healing, cleansing gospel of the Christ of God, and the Redeemer of man.

"The O'erturning O' Botany Bay, or Dipper Folk Idylls," by Alethera; American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia; is the unvarnished story of the religious and social reformation wrought in one of the slums of Glasgow, by the labors of two earnest young men, one whom became the pastor of this regenerated district. The methods of work and the theology taught are somewhat conventional, and the purpose of the story to glorify the "dipper folk," as the Baptist's of Scotland were formerly called, is not concealed; yet the realism and straightforwardness of the tale gives to it an element of interest. Grace of form it has none, but it has the charm of reality, and of the presence and power of a holy and commanding passion.

"The Divine Creed, or The Only Ground of Union," by W. H. Willyard, Murphysboro, Ill. 25 cents.

A concise statement of the Biblical grounds on which Christians may unite.

PUTS THE "GINGER" IN.

The Kind of Food Used by Athletes.

A former college athlete, one of the long distance runners, began to lose his power of endurance. His experience with a change in food is interesting.

"While I was in training on the track athletic team, my daily 'jogs' became a task, until after I was put on Grape-Nuts Food for two meals a day. After using the Food for two weeks I felt like a new man. My digestion was perfect, nerves steady and I was full of energy.

I trained for the mile and the half mile runs (those events which require so much endurance) and then the long daily 'jogs,' which before had been such a task, were clipped off with ease. I won both events.

The Grape-Nuts Food put me in perfect condition and gave me my 'ginger.' Not only was my physical condition made perfect, and my weight increased, but my mind was made clear and vigorous so that I could get out my studies in about half the time formerly required. Now most all of the University men use Grape-Nuts for they have learned its value, but I think my testimony will not be amiss and may perhaps help some one to learn how the best results can be obtained. Please do not publish my name."

There is a reason for the effect of Grape-Nuts Food on the human body and brain. The certain elements in wheat and barley are selected with special reference to their power for rebuilding the brain and nerve centers. The product is then carefully and scientifically prepared so as to make it easy of digestion. The physical and mental results are so apparent after two or three weeks' use as to produce a profound impression. The food can be secured at any first-class grocery store.

General Church News

The Christian News Department will be made a prominent feature in The Christian Century. Our aim will be to give a comprehensive view of the things which are deemed of vital interest. In the collection of news we invite the co-operation of our friends in all parts of the country. An indispensable quality of these items will be brevity. A book worth one dollar or upwards will be given each week to the person sending in the best list of news items of general interest for this department. The book offered this week is Dr. Trumbull's Yale Lectures on the Sunday-school, the regular price of which is $2.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Lake Forest University commencement exercises began June 9.

The Woodlawn Presbyterian church received twenty-six new members Sunday, June 2.

Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus has accepted again the presidency of Armour Institute, continuing his work with Central church as before.

In the Episcopal diocese of Chicago there was a total of 1,530 confirmations during the past year, an increase of 193 over the previous year.

Rev. W. J. Hawthorne, for several years rector of the Episcopal church at Wheaton, has resigned to accept a call from Grace church at Gallion, O. He will assume his new pulpit at once.

Rev. Thomas Campbell, who has recently resigned as pastor of the Park Manor Congregational church, sails for his home in Europe, June 1, accompanied by his wife, returning September 1st.

Since Rev. John T. Christian assumed the pastorate of La Salle Ave. Baptist church it has enjoyed a steady growth. Total addition of new members, 107—fourteen during the month of May, ten by baptism.

The Right Rev. Samuel C. Edsall, D. D., bishop of North Dakota, but well known in Chicago, where he was rector of St. Peter's parish for some ten years, has been elected bishop coadjutor of the diocese of Minnesota.

Rev. Dr. E. M. Stires, rector of Grace Episcopal church, is endeavoring to raise an endowment fund of $400,000 for that church before he leaves it in September to become rector of St. Thomas' church, New York City.

The Desplains Methodist camp meeting opened June 10. Addresses were delivered by Rev. F. A. Hardin, D. D., on "The Origin and Work of Camp Meetings," and Rev. H. I. Rasmus, D. D., on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost for Service."

Rev. Niklaus Bolt, who has been obliged to give up the work of St. James' (German) Congregational church, because of a throat difficulty brought on by the severe climate, returns to Switzerland, his native land, having accepted a call to Lugano. Mr. Bolt has done an excellent work and greatly endeared himself to his people.

The West Side church of the Disciples has secured Rev. I. J. Spencer as its pastor. This church was organized in 1873 and since then has swarmed three times and given up members to work in nearly every mission church organized in this city. They now have a membership of 500 or 600 people, who are earnest, active and true to the plea for apostolic Christianity.

Rev. P. A. Hjelm, who for thirteen years with great success has preached the gospel to his countrymen, the Swedes, in Chicago, eight years as pastor of the First Swedish Baptist church and five years as pastor of the Second, has resigned his charge, having accepted a call from the church at San Francisco. The former pastor at San Francisco, Rev. Chas. Palm, will come to Illinois as Sunday school missionary.

Christian Endeavor rallies are announced as follows: Oak Park, June 11, at First Congregational church, the address to be delivered by Rev. Henry W. Stough, South division, June 13, at Christ Reformed Episcopal church, Michigan avenue and Twenty-fourth street; the evening will be devoted largely to a social program. Evanston division, June 17, at the Rogers Park Congregational church, Morse and Forest avenues.

Among the Methodist churches of Chicago an energetic campaign has been undertaken to pay debts and to remove all mortgages. In 1875 there were fifteen English-speaking Methodist churches in Chicago. Now there are three English-speaking Chicago districts, and within the bounds of one of them eighteen new churches have been dedicated within the last three years and three others are being built. Most of these new edifices already are paid for.

The Epworth Children's Home, situated at Ravenswood the last eight years, and the Methodist Deaconess Orphanage at Lake Bluff have been united, and will be at Lake Bluff, where the orphanage already owns a block of land and buildings valued at $30,000. The institution, which is to be known as the Methodist Deaconess Orphanage and Epworth Children's Home, will have 100 children, and this number will be increased as soon as accommodations can be provided. Several new buildings are being planned.

The Swedish Baptist Theological Seminary at Morgan Park had its commencement May 15. The exercises at these commencements are followed year after year with increasing interest. The presence of a great number of members from the different Swedish churches of Chicago was an evidence of this fact. There have been twenty-six students during the school year; of these three graduated. They were already elected pastors before their graduation, respectively by churches at South Chicago, Des Moines, Iowa, and Daggett, Mich.

The report of the thirteen churches and missions aided by the Chicago Christian Missionary society for the past six months, is worthy of study. It shows 991 days' work in the field; 618 sermons, 92 baptisms, 45 added by letter, and 64 other additions, making a total of 201 additions. They now have a membership of 749, with 1,875 in their Sunday schools. They have paid in rentals $883.50, and now have about $3,000 in their various building funds. The entire receipts of the society since Nov. 1, 1901, were $1,949.78; the disbursements were $1,959.83.

The Baptist church at Maywood gave a reception May 21 to the new pastor, Rev. H. E. Norton, late of Batavia, Ill. A large and enthusiastic company were present. F. E. Roberts, the superintendent of the Sunday school, presided. Deacon Alder gave a warm welcome on behalf of the church, followed by Deacon Read, who gave a brief history of the church since the late Pastor Anderson left them for Austin, Minn. Dr. J. W. Conley, the father of the church, made a happy closing speech of congratulation. The indications for good are very promising in every department of the church life.

Dr. H. W. Thomas of the People's church, has taken steps towards the organization of a national federation of churches which stand for freedom in pulpit utterances and religious liberty for congregations. This federation

16 SLUGS.

Even Harder than a Prize Fighter.

A newspaper man is subject to trials and tribulations the same as ordinary mortals. Coffee "slugs" a great many of them.

D. Beidleman, on the Wilkes Barre Record, says, regarding his experience with coffee, "A little over two years ago I was on the verge of collapse superinduced by the steady grind of the newspaper office. For weeks I did not have a night's sound sleep and the wakeful nights were followed by despondency and a general breaking up of my constitution. I ran down in weight. My family physician insisted that I leave off coffee and take on Postum Food Coffee but I would not hear to it.

One day I was served with a cup of coffee, as I supposed, that had a peculiarly delicious flavor. I relished it, and when drinking the second cup I was told that it was not coffee but Postum Food Coffee. I was dumfounded, and for a time thought I was the subject of a practical joke. However, I became a firm believer in, and a user of Postum from that time, and almost immediately I began to sleep nights and the irritableness disappeared, and in less than three months I was completely well and in seven months my weight increased up to 198 pounds. I can now do the work of two ordinary newspaper men."

There is a great big lot of common sense in leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

will be called the People's Church of America. It will devote its best efforts to gathering into the theaters of the various cities of the United States congregations of men and women who are devoted to Christianity, but independent of sectarian dogma and practice.

The Church of the Mediator, Morgan Park (Episcopal), was consecrated June 9. Rev. Harold Morse is priest in charge.

SWEDISH BAPTISTS.—The annual conference of the Swedish Baptist churches of Illinois will be held at the Englewood Swedish church, Emerald Ave. and Fifty-ninth street, June 13-16. There are thirty-one churches, twenty pastors, and 3,721 members in this conference. The Swedish Baptists in this country number 21,309. They have 314 churches, 190 pastors and ninety-nine other ordained ministers; 1,159 persons were baptized during the past year. They have Sunday schools with a membership of 20,217. The fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of Swedish Baptist missions in the United States will be celebrated in Chicago in September, 1902.

EPISCOPALIAN PROGRESS.—Debts have been paid off or reduced at Morgan Park, Streator, Chicago—Epiphany, St. Andrew's, St. Chrysostom's, St. James, St. George's—Emmanuel, La Grange; St. Alban's, Norwood Park; new churches have been erected at Kankakee, Glen Ellyn and Highland Park; parish houses have been built or are in course of erection at West Pullman, St. Barnabas. Atonement and St. Peter's, Chicago; work on the new churches of St. Paul, Chicago, Good Shepherd, Lawndale, and Grace, Oak Park, has been resumed; the debt on St. Paul's, Savannah, paid and the church consecrated; lots purchased for St. John's, Chicago, St. Margaret's, Windsor Park, Emmanuel (Swedish), Chicago; work on a new church at Austin has begun; rectories have been purchased or built at St. Mark's, Evanston, Winnetka and Dixon.

The Adventists.

About one thousand Adventists were in conference last week in Des Moines, Ia. They are a missionary people. The last general conference recommended that each member of the church lay aside ten cents a week for foreign missions. This plan has largely increased the contributions.

Peter H. Vance, the last charter member of the Baptist Church of Danvers, Ill., which was organized in 1838, died on May 17. Mr. Vance was superintendent of the Sunday school of his church for forty years.

Rev. Edmund F. Merriam, for 20 years connected with the Missionary union, much of the time filling the office of editorial secretary, has voluntarily retired from the work. He has written several valuable books and tracts on missionary themes, besides contributing to the weekly papers. He becomes one of the editors of the Watchman, Boston.

At the Baptist anniversaries it was stated that there are 43,959 Baptist churches in America, 29,810 preachers, 4,233,226 members, who contributed last year $14,000,000. There are seven theological seminaries with 999 students; 105 universities and colleges, with 27,241 students, and 90 academies, seminaries and institutes, with 11,127 students.

The annual Baptist ministerial conference held in connection with the commencement exercises of Shurtleff college began June 3, in College Chapel in Upper Alton, and were in session five days.

Six chapel cars for home missionary work are supported by the Baptist denomination. They contain living apartments for the ministry and a chapel. The railroad companies, recognizing the value of religious life in the development of an industrial community, are very willing to haul these cars on their trains and to keep them in repair without expense. In this enterprise the Baptists have $100,000 invested, and, as a result of ten years' work, they report the organization of 100 congregations, 182 Sunday schools, and the building of eighty churches—primitive affairs most of them, but still houses of God.

A Great Gift to Brown University.—The second commencement of the yet new administration of President W. H. P. Faunce, D.D., will be signalized by the record of a great gift within the year, amounting to three-quarters of a million of dollars. It is made by the friends of the late John Carter Brown, consisting of his wonderful library of Americana, together with $650,000 in cash. Of this sum, $150,000 is for a new building and $500,000 for a library fund. This will perpetuate the name of the earliest donor, Nicholas Brown, whose original gift is said to have been only $5,000.

Congregational.

The First Congregational Church, Detroit, has decided not to close its Sunday school during July and August this year, as heretofore, out the superintendent and assistant superintendents will be given a rest and some one person will teach the lesson from the rostrum, thus relieving the teachers as well as the superintendents.

Rev. T. T. Holman and wife of St. Louis are going to Bulgaria under the American Board. He has been pastor for five years of a city missionary church, which, under his care, came to self-support two years ago.

The church at Spring Valley, Minn., celebrated its forty-fifth anniversary May 24. All but three of the original fifteen members are dead.

Rev. Franklin B. Doe entered into rest May 23, aged 74. For ten years he was home missionary superintendent for northern Wisconsin, and for five years more had charge of the missionary work of the entire state. In 1883 he was appointed superintendent of Home Missions for the southwest,

The new Sunday school house of Pilgrim Church, Seattle, was dedicated May 29. It cost $10,000.

Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick has returned to her school, the American Institute for Girls, in Biarritz, France. She hopes soon to transfer it to some Spanish city, where it can do a work even greater than that accomplished for so many years at San Sebastian. She has succeeded in raising about $75,000 for the work. She is a noble woman.

The American Missionary Association has acquired the J. S. Green College at Demorest, Ga., a chartered institution with $30,000 worth of property and over 500 students and includes an infant theological school with twenty-eight students the first term and the promise of seventy-five in the fall. This will be a great advantage for the training of young men for the southern work.

The First Church, Alexandria, Minn., has had a revival. The attendance at the two weeks' meetings reached 1,000. Thirty-two new members were received at the May Communion.

Seventeen members were received on confession into the Red Jacket Church at Calumet, Mich., at the May Communion, a part of the fruit of revival meetings conducted by Rev. F. A. Miller of Elgin, Ill.

More than 150 persons have made public confession of faith at the meetings held in Rev. C. W. Carroll's church, Cleveland, Ohio.

The Disciples.

Columbus, Ohio, has now four Churches of Christ, the West Broad Street Mission being organized May 12. These people have had an Endeavor Society for more than a year. They have a good Ladies' Aid Society, which has already nearly $100 in the treasury to apply toward a new church home; and they have a Bible school which has averaged in attendance more than sixty-five thus far during 1901, and has been self-sustaining for more than a year. It is a missionary school also, having given twice, at least, a generous offering for missions.

A new church has been dedicated at Lexington, Ohio. The membership of the church is now about 150, and apart from $100 of assistance from our state board, the work has been self-sustaining from the beginning. The work shows every mark of stability.

South Kentucky Missionary Convention.—The twenty-seventh annual meeting was held May 29, at Owensboro. Thirty thousand Disciples are reported in this district, seventy-four churches have been organized and 140 Eible schools. The amount raised for the work is near $150,000. The work for the last year indicated that three churches and thirteen Bible schools were organized; there were 676 additions to the Church, and a total of $11,794.94 was raised. To the work of Rev. J. W. Gant these results are largely due. During the coming year Rev. E. J. Willis is to be associated with him.

The church in Jacksonville, Fla., was destroyed by the recent fire and many of its membership rendered homeless. Aid is of course needed to rebuild. The First Church of Christ there had, in less than three years, grown from 150 to 350 members, and the Bible school from thirty-six to an average attendance of over 200.

New Church at Centerville, Iowa.—Twenty-three thousand dollars was raised June 2 in less than thirty minutes for the construction of a new church. Ex-Governor F. M. Drake headed the donation with a subscription of $12,500, Dr. J. L. Sawyers followed with an offering of $6,500; other members gave $500 each. Thirty thousand dollars is necessary.

The fiftieth anniversary of the Sunday school of the Christian Church at Independence, Mo., was celebrated June 2.

The conventions of the Foreign, Home and Women's Missionary Societies are to be held in Minneapolis next October 10-17. The Commercial Club has generously provided the Exposition Hall, holding 6,000 persons and capable of being heard in for speakers of even moderate voice.

Dr. H. L. Willett of the University of Chicago delivered the address at the commencement of Christian College, Columbia, Mo.

At Elwood, Ind., 148 have been added to the Christian Church since Jan. 1, 1901. It now has over 600 members.

The Mothers' and Babies' Home, a department of the work of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, has found it necessary to rent a larger house and establish a training school for nurses. Last year they cared for 188 babies, gave temporary shelter and employment to 100 women and sent thirty-five babies into good homes. The home is located at 2821 Chestnut street, St. Louis.

The receipts for Foreign Missions from October 1 to June 1 amount to $101,279.21, or a gain over the corresponding eight months last year of $4,436.03.

A Great Gift to Christian College Mo.—Two years ago the trustees gave over the college property to Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair upon consideration that they should expend certain moneys in the construction of new buildings. When this was done the property was to become absolutely owned by them. These buildings have now been completed, these two women, out of their own private resources, having expended or provided about $75,000 in improvements, making the whole property worth about $100,000. They have now redeemed the entire property to the trustees, and have assumed all outstanding obligations.

Rev. J. M. Van Horn preached his farewell sermon to the church at Warren, Ohio, two weeks ago. He has been with its congregation for eleven years. During this time the congregation has grown from 450 to 994 members, has paid off all debts, and has now no outstanding financial obligations. Mr. Van Horn goes to Worcester, Mass.

The Fourth Church of Christ of Akron, Ohio, Rev. W. D. Van Voorhis, pastor, will dedicate its new house of worship June 16. The present building, which is but the Sunday school room of the permanent structure, will cost about $5,000, and is located on one of the most desirable sites in the city.

Episcopal.

The Rev. A. G. E. Jenner, rector of St. Andrews' Church, Ashland, Wis., has accepted a call to the Church of the Intercession, Stevens Point.

Canon Theodore S. Richey will resign the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Milwaukee. He takes this step, it is understood, in order to accept an offer from Bishop Nicholson to become a member of the faculty of Nashotah Theological Seminary. His labors at St. Stephen's will end on July 1st.

In the recent diocesan conventions some questions of broad and general interest were discussed. The diocese of Long Island urged a free and full discussion of the subject of marriage and divorce at the coming general convention in October. Bishop Paret of Maryland objected to the envelope system for contributions, as he thought it a great promoter of parochial selfishness and a damper upon missionary enthusiasm and charity. Sunday school improvement was sought and planned for in some of the conventions.

The General Theological Seminary class of 1891 marked its decennial reunion by the offer of an annual prize of $100 to matriculate members of the seminary for an essay on "The Relations of Sociology to Theology and to the Practical Work of the Ministry."

Throughout the diocese of Missouri there has been a solid and gratifying growth and development of the missionary spirit, one of the evidences of which is the fact that although the convention of 1900 relinquished the $1,000 appropriation of the general board, contrary to expectation there is an increase instead of decrease in offerings for general missions.

The Society for the Home Study of the Holy Scriptures, founded by Miss Sarah F. Smiley, who is still its director, organizing secretary, treasurer and general manager, has completed another year of usefulness, marked especially by additions both numerous and rare to its now valuable library. This now comprises 3,500 volumes, and is in much need of a fireproof structure for its safe-keeping. It is used in part locally in Washington, in part by means of traveling libraries of twenty-five volumes each, in part by loans as individual studies may require. Dr. Body is head examiner, and, so far as one may judge from the report, the work is of a scholarly character.

The semi-centennial of Trinity parish, Portland, Ore., was celebrated recently. That of the diocese was included, and offerings were taken for a fund of $50,000 for support of diocesan missions.

Rev. E. W. Hunt has resigned as rector of St. Paul's Church, Lansing, Mich., because the conservative element will not tolerate the preaching of religious truths according to modern thought.

Rev. George L. Neide, rector of Grace Church, Jefferson City, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Holy Trinity Church, St. Joseph, Mo.

Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, rector of St. Martin's Church of South Omaha, has been called to the rectorate of Gethsemane parish, Minneapolis, Minn., to succeed Rev. Dr. Faude, recently deceased.

Lutheran.

The Norwegian Lutheran Free Church, claiming a membership of 40,000, began its fifth annual convention June 5 at Willmar, Minn.

The twelfth annual meeting of the United Norwegian Lutheran Church of America opened June 12 at Minneapolis. The local congregation associated with this church is about 1,150, and the total membership, including the children, is close to a quarter of a million, 135,000 of whom are communicants. During the year $150,000 has been raised for a dormitory for St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minn., and a residence for the president and a theological seminary building at St. Anthony Park, with capacity for 100 students.

The general conference of the United Danish Lutheran Evangelical Church opened June 6 at Albert Lea, Minn. Four hundred delegates, including sixty ministers, were expected.

The Minnesota conference of the German Evangelical Synod of North America closed June 4 after a four days' session at Wadena, Minn. An increased membership in the churches of over 1,500 was reported, besides the building of several churches and great gains in the Sunday and parochial schools. Benevolent contributions were large, one of $22,198 was given for the golden anniversary of Eden Theological Seminary of St. Louis, Mo.

Lutheran General Synod.—The meeting at Des Moines expressed itself against maintaining the Muhlenberg mission in West Africa, which has cost so heavily in the lives of the missionaries. The foreign missionary board has authority to turn the African mission over to natives principally, who can endure the climate. The reporter of the board of church extension showed a total of gifts amounting to $122,250, an excess of $21,941 over the past bi-ennium, an increase of 24 per cent, making the finest record in the church history. The present reported communicant memberships is 198,428, an increase over the last bi-ennium of 629. A comparison of the losses and gains shows a net increase of 11,324. The number of Sunday schools reported is 1,631, an increase of 94, with a scholarship of 196,035, an increase of 8,340. The grand total of contributions from the congregations was $3,333,739, an increase of $110,832.

Methodist.

Dr. J. D. Barbee, for fourteen years the senior book agent of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, will not accept a re-election. Under his management the publishing house has increased its capital twofold, and out of its net earnings has paid to the superannuated preachers and widows and orphans of deceased preachers $167,500.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Bridesburg, Pa., celebrated its semi-centennial last week. The services were largely historical and were participated in by many clergymen who have been connected with the church in the half century. Of the fifteen members who organized the society but one is now living, William McMillan of Norristown, Pa.

Because of alleged heretical teachings, the trustees of the Kansas Wesleyan University have refused to reelect Professor Frank D. Tubbs to the chair of science.

News has been received of the death of Rev. W. C. Dandy, D. D., aged 80 years, May 29, at his residence in Los Angeles, Cal. He was pastor of the Methodist Church in Lexington, Ky., in 1853-4, and later a resident there for ten years. The remains will be buried in Chicago.

The church at Oskaloosa, Iowa, has relieved itself of debt, $10,000 being subscribed June 2.

The St. Louis Methodist district conference recommends the establishment of the Order of Deaconesses in the Southern Methodist Church.

The cornerstone of the new church at Great Falls, Mont., was laid May 30th.

The national convention of the Epworth League will be in session from July 18 to July 21 at San Francisco, Cal. From 30,000 to 50,000 visiting members are expected.

Presbyterian.

The congregation of the Princeton, N. J., Church has just celebrated the forty-first anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. J. Addison Henry. Nearly 750 of the Sunday school scholars and teachers participated in the exercises.

The first brick Presbyterian church west of the Missouri river was erected in Nebraska City, Neb., in 1856. It has been used as a house of worship ever since, but is now in course of demolition to make room for a new and modern structure. William Buchanan, who was one of the two original elders of the church, is still an active member.

The Omaha Theological Seminary has had a good year. During the year an old debt of $1,500 that had been a great weight was paid off; a six-acre site purchased at a cost of $20,000 and paid for; several hundred dollars deficit for a former year debt paid and all bills paid. This year's graduating class numbered five, one of whom goes out to Siam under our board of foreign missions. The executive committee was empowered to proceed in securing plans and erecting a seminary building and also a residence for the president.

The dedicatory services for the new and beautiful church at Neenah, Wis., were held June 2. The church is of white stone, and cost between $35,000 and $40,000.

The net gain in the membership of the United Presbyterian Church in America during the last year was nine-tenths of 1 per cent—1,394 in membership; and in the Sunday schools a gain of 2,017 scholars and 121 teachers. The contributions of the Sunday schools amounted to $112,041, or $11,430 more than ever before.

A new church for the United Presbyterian body at Gayly, near Pittsburg, Pa., was dedicated June 9. It

The Southern General Assembly voted against any change in the Westminster Confession, whether in the form of explanation, summary or statement. The minority would have liked a declaration against the possibility of infant damnation, but the majority refused to make it, and further rescinded the order of the last Southern General Assembly to print in every edition of the Confession of Faith an explanatory note in this regard.

Mackay of Formosa.—The famous missionary is dead. For nearly six months he had been suffering from cancer of the throat. An operation was performed at Hongkong two months ago, but it gave no permanent relief. Thirty years ago Dr. Mackay left Canada and went to Formosa as a missionary. On only two occasions has he returned to his native land. He has been very successful in his work, having been the means of establishing between sixty and seventy churches, a hospital, schools and a college for the training of a native ministry and the higher education of the girls of the island. He married a Formosan lady, and his two daughters married Chinamen. When he landed in Formosa in 1871 he had to make his home in a stable. He was a man of unbounded courage.

As a memorial of the Rev. Maltbie D. Babcock, a magnificent church house, to cost half a million dollars, is planned, and a wealthy friend of the beloved pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York, has contributed $50,000. There is also in contemplation the raising of a fund, the income of which shall be devoted to Dr. Babcock's widow during her life.

The Reformed Presbyterian Church General Synod began its sessions May 29 in Pittsburg.

General.

Mission Friends, a Swedish religious association, claiming 4,000,000 adherents in the United States, have decided to locate their university at McPherson, Kas. Over $50,000 will be spent. A fine site has been secured and work will be rapidly pushed. The prospects of assistance for the college are so flattering that it is the intention of the committee to provide for a full university course. The mother church in Sweden has a membership of 5,000,000. Foreign missions have been established in China, Japan, India, Africa and Alaska. Democratic rule prevails in the management and conduct of the church affairs. Having no creed, their doctrine is liberal, and all believers are accepted, but none but converts can become members of the church.

The Minneapolis Pastoral Alliance has been organized, to be composed of "all ordained ministers of this city and vicinity." The officers of the new alliance are: President, W. W. Dawley, Central Baptist; vice-president, Stanley B. Roberts, Bethlehem Presbyterian; secretary and treasurer, Charles Fox Davis, Bloomington Avenue Methodist; executive committee, C. F. Swift, Park Avenue Congregational; C. J. Tannar, Portland Avenue Church of Christ; William Fielder, presiding elder, Methodist.

There is a noticeable falling off in the supply of pastors for Protestant churches in both England and America. There is also a prospect of a similar deficiency in Germany, for while ten years ago out of every 1,000 students who entered the German universities 206 were students of theology, in 1893 the number was 150 for each 1,000, while this year it is only 101.

Northfield Summer Conferences.—The Northfield dates this year begin June 14 and do not end until September 2. There is a school for Bible study, to include all the conferences and lectures, and the general conference of Christian Workers will, as usual, take up the first twenty days of August. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is to be assisted in the student conferences by President Low of Columbia University, Robert E. Speer of the Presbyterian foreign board, the venerable Dr. Alexander McKenzie of Combridge, and Dr. Howard Taylor of the China Inland Mission, and in the general conference by President Weston of Crozer, Rev. T. S. Hamlin of Washington, Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, the new pastor of Ruggles Street Church, Boston, and Secretary Mable of the Baptist Missionary Union, who has been ill, but is now much better.

American Society of Religious Education.—The annual business meeting of the American Society of Religious Education was held last evening in the parlors of the Colonial Hotel, Washington, D. C., Associate Justice John M. Harlan of the United States Supreme Court, the president, occupying the chair. The Bible College at Home, it was stated, has reached a registration of 2,531 students, and the Sunday Teachers' Normal College, 10,291 students. The School of Christian Motherhood, designed to elevate the ideals of mothers and prepare them to be teachers of their own children, and the College Bible Union, intended to introduce the Bible into colleges, were represented as making progress in their work. During the past year four Biblical assemblies have been held, in which lectures and addresses have been given. The treasurer's report showed a total expenditure of $4,838 for all purposes. Officers chosen were: President, Justice John M. Harlan; vice-presidents, Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D.; Rev. A. Mackay Smith, D. D.; W. S. Shallenberger; general secretary, Rev. J. E. Gilbert, D. D.; treasurer, William Oscar Roome. A Bible students' alliance was established, and Rev. D. S. Gregory, D. D., of New York, editor of the Homiletical Monthly, was appointed chairman of the department. It is proposed to present a series of lectures on the history, doctrines and government of seven of the leading denominations of Protestants.

Pan-American Bible Study Congress.—Representatives of fourteen religious faiths, Jewish and Christian, from sixteen states or provinces, thirty-eight in all, are to be the speakers at the Pan-American Bible Study Congress in Buffalo from July 17-21. It will be non-partisan, non-sectarian, non-eclesiastical and non-polemic. The purpose is strictly educational—to considered modes of Bible study and teaching, compare opinions as to their practical and relative merit, etc. The program is a full one, and includes as speakers Professor Sanders of Yale, President Stewart of Auburn and Professor Rogers of Drew Seminary, President Harper of Chicago, Principal Rexford of Montreal, Dr. J. M. Gray or Boston, Warden Butler of Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn., Professor Holmes of Swarthmore, Dean Willett of the Disciples Divinity House, Chicago University, Brigadier Brengle of the Salvation Army, Dr. Torrey of the Moody Bible Institute, Chancellor Berkowitz of the Jewish Chautauqua, Dr. Halsey of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, Dr. Ashmore of China, Principal White of the Bible Teachers' College, Montclair, and others.

The Roll of Missionary Martyrdom.—The sorrowful tabulation of the foreign missionary martyrs of the Boxer outbreak in China has been made by Rev. G. W. Stephenson, director of the China Inland Mission, to which the largest number of the heroic dead belonged. Ninety-eight British, fifty-six Swedish and thirty-two Americans, women and children are known to have laid down their lives for the faith. In this roll of honor the China Inland Mission stands first, with a total of seventy-eight, followed by the Christian and Missionary Alliance with thirty-six, and our own American Board with eighteen, ten organizations in all, having lost from seventy-eight to three each. Fifty-two children are included.

AN EXPLANATION.

Who are the agents for Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer? We are so often asked this question that we print the following explanation. As the medicines of Dr. Peter Fahrney are not to be had at drug stores, for which the doctor has given important reasons, he reaches the people with his medicines through the appointment of local agents. Among the thousands of agents who are located all over the civilized world, nearly all classes of United States, and in fact the entire society are represented. Ministers,

Woman and Home.

The Boy Who Lives Next Door.

Oft I've envied goodly people who could boast a model boy,
The kind that will not fight, nor shout,
nor break each costly toy;
Who never tracks the mud about the tidy house, nor slings
His playthings round the parlor floor
—my boy did all these things!
But whenever I would scold him, and his heedless ways deplore,
I would always bid him pattern by the Boy That Lives Next Door.

Yet the playthings would get broken in the careless little hand,
And my head came nigh to bursting when he brought his pirate band To tear the house to atoms, while I talked and talked in vain
To keep the small, warm fingers from my polished window pane,
Still, whene'er his brand new trousers or his ruffled shirt he tore,
He would say "he didn't care to hear of that Good Boy Next Door."

Now at last I've perfect quiet—there is stillness every day,
And my window panes so grimy are grown clean and white for aye;
And I strain mine eyes to catch the smallest mud print on the floor,
But alas! my home is spotless as the Boy's That Lives Next Door.

Now I listen—till my yearning ears do ache to catch a sound,
And if only I could find a shoe or broken toy around!
But ah, no! I only hearken, hearken vainly evermore,
And I only hear the laughter of the Boy That Lives Next Door.
—Harper's Bazar.

SUPPOSE TED HADN'T OBEYED.

The boy who obeys his mother, even when the day is warm and his book is unusually good, may not have his reward quite as soon as Teddy; but he will generally have "good feelings about it," as one little fellow expressed it.

"Teddy, dear!" called mamma.

"Yes'm," replied Teddy. He was busy over his book on the cool shaded piazza, and it was a warm August afternoon.

"I want you to take Victor down to the river for a bath. The dog is so hot in the cellar."

"But, mother, at sundown."

"Who promised to play the hose for Patrick at sundown?"

"I did," said Teddy, a little smile replacing the sober pucker over his nose. "Dear me, mamma," he remarked, pulling on his cap, "what a thing it is to be the man of the house!"

"Yes," returned mamma, "it is a beautiful thing to be a cheerful little man of the house."

Presently she loosened the big St. Bernard; and he came leaping toward Teddy, eagerness in every movement; for his freedom usually meant a bath these hot days.

"Come on, Vic!" called Teddy. "You're more bother than you're worth, old fellow!" he declared, fondling him. "Just think of me, a two-legged boy, waiting upon you, a four-legged dog!" Victor could not think about it; but he licked Teddy's hand lovingly, as if to acknowledge the condescension, and they started off.

"It seems to me," said mamma to Betty, when they sat on the porch later, with their fancy work, "that Teddy and Victor have been gone a long time."

"They're coming this minute, mamma!" murmured Betty, peering through the creeper.

"Why, Ted, how flushed you look! Charge, Victor! That's right. Did he have a cool swim, dear?"

"Did he?" cried Ted, excitedly. Then his round face sobered. "Mamma," he said, "how strangely things happen! If I had not promised to play the hose— Why, you see, mamma," he continued, breaking off and plunging into the heart of his story, "when we got down to the water, there was Patrick's old father trying to swim for his straw hat, which had blown into the river. He's old and feeble, I thought it queer he should be swimming for his hat so wildly, with all his clothes on. So I sent Victor in for it; and what do you think?"

"What?" cried Betty, breathlessly.

"He never went near it, but straight for Patrick's father instead, and brought him to shore. A wise thing, too; for the old man had given out. I pulled him ashore, dripping; and then away went Victor after the hat, and brought that! The poor fellow grabbed it, and pulled a ten-dollar bill out from under the leather. He had drawn it from the bank, and thought he had lost it; and they're so poor! He cried over the money! Vic and I took him home, and his sick old wife cried over him. Oh, I tell you 'twas a wet time!" he finished winking oddly himself.

Mamma and Betty both looked suspicious also; and Ted said: "Come here, Vic, till I apologize. You darling old dog, I am proud to wait on you, sir!" And he buried his arms in the damp fur of the noble fellow's shaggy neck.—Youth's Companion.

Learned and Lived.

Religion may be learned on Sunday, but it is lived in the week day's work. The torch of religion may be lit in the church, but it does its burning in the shop and on the street. Religion seeks its life in prayer, but it lives its life in deeds. It is planted in the closet, but it does its growing out in the world. It plumes itself for flight in songs of praise, but its actual flights are in the works of love. It resolves and meditates on faithfulness and it reads its Christian lesson in the Book of Truth; but "faithful is that faithful does." It puts its armor on in all the aids and helps of the sanctuary as its dressing rooms, but it combats for the right, the noble and the good in all the activities of practical existence and its battleground is the whole broad field of life.—John Dougherty.

Record of Twenty-Three Years

In the twenty-three years since the College Young Men's Christian Association was started as an intercollegiate movement, more than 3,000 young men have been led through its influence to enter the ministry. The American and Canadian Students' Association movement is represented in 624 societies in institutions of learning, and has between 33,000 and 34,000 members. Its voluntary Bible classes number 12,000 students engaged in daily devotional study. Over 35,000 persons have been "converted" through its instrumentality.

Summer School of Greek of Drake University

JUNE 17 TO AUGUST 15, 1901

There are not many places where an opportunity is afforded to do work in Greek during the summer vacation. Our summer school of Greek gives to high school graduates and college students an opportunity to make up back work in this study. If you intend to enter college next year, you will need at least one year's work in Greek. Courses will be offered in the first three years' work as usually offered in academy and college.

Course 1—Completes White's First Greek book, first of Xenophon's Anabasis and work in composition.

Course 2—Includes books second and third of Anabasis, with composition based on the text read; four orations of Lysias and books first and second of the Illiad or Odyssey.

Course 3—Will include one or two of Plato's works, the oration on the Crown by Demosthenes and one of the tragedies of Æschylus or Sophocles. Lectures on Old Greek Life, Art and Literature will supplement the text for advanced students. For further information, address

Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. It contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

EVER MADE THE TRIP?

While it has always been a beautiful trip over the Lackawanna Railroad to Buffalo, yet the fact has not been so generally known as it has of late, and the result is that the increase of traffic is very large. One of the most talked of pieces of scenery is the Delaware Water Gap, and it would pay any one who has never made the trip to Buffalo by way of the Lackawanna to take it and view this beautiful spot. Another great advantage is the shortness of the route. It is a fact that the Lackawanna is the shortest road to Buffalo.—Insurance Times.

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

A High-Class Monthly Magazine, Conducted in the interests of the Higher Life of the Household

Two Good Journals for the Price of One

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING occupies a position peculiarly its own, in that it is conducted in the interests of the higher life of the household, for it is devoted not only to practice, but to inspiration—to telling how the everyday affairs of life may be conducted, but always leading upward. Its departments, regular and special, are as numerous as the varied phases of the life of the household. It appeals to either sex, whether of young or of advancing years, and not only helps but gratifies the physical, mental and aesthetic natures of all its readers. The contributors' list for the coming year is a long one, and contains the names of many writers who are already familiar to the public. The following topics and lines of research are samples of what GOOD HOUSEKEEPING is doing for the dwellers in the homes of America:

Successful Kitchens
Solutions of the Domestic Help Problem
The Latest Hygiene
Home Handicraft of Various Kinds
Homemade Christmas Gifts, Illustrated
Truth about Dishonest and Adulterated Food
Famous Cooking Schools Described
People Who Have Uplifted Home Life, Illustrated
New Sources of Income
Tasteful House Furnishing, Illustrated.
'Good Housekeeping Babies'
Disadvantages and Advantages of Country Girls

Advantages and Disadvantages of City Girls
Women's Exchanges
'The Best Way,' in all kinds of Housework
Mistakes of Young Housekeepers
Original Recipes from Famous Cooks and Cooking Teachers
The Four-footed Cousins
Fathers and Sons
Household Economics
New Ideas in Fancy Work
Changes and Tendencies in Home Life
New Fashions and Their Wearers
Diseases of Children, etc., etc.

The whole magazine is dominated by a high purpose to be an ever-ready help and inspiration toward making "the higher life of the household" a practical and delightful reality in every family, and a force in social and civic affairs. Each number consists of 96 pages filled to overflowing with original and interesting reading, including many handsome and striking illustrations.

Our Absolutely Unparalleled Offer

By an arrangement just perfected we are enabled to offer this most useful and interesting magazine on the following special and remarkably liberal terms:

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY, One Year, $1.50	} BOTH for $1.50 only
GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, One Year, $1.00
Total, $2.50

We thus offer the two ablest and most representative journals of their class at the price of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY alone, thus giving our readers an opportunity never before offered. Think of it, a handsome illustrated magazine, a year's numbers of which make an elegant volume of over 1150 pages, all of which may be had for a nominal sum by every subscriber, old or new, under this most remarkable offer. This is surely a rare opportunity, and no one should delay or fail to take advantage of it.

A sample copy of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING will be sent to any address on receipt of eight cents in stamps, which should be sent to the publishers at Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, Ill. Remit by postoffice or express money order, check, draft or registered letter to

EDITORIAL.

SOME BETTER THING.

Some better thing. It is God's way
Of giving to His children. Every day
We crave for things against His will.
He giveth not the things we ask
But in their stead things better still.

The types and shadows of the past
Were by the substance far surpassed;
The glories of the ages gone
Were but the twilight of the rising sun.

So all of life a progress 'is
To higher life and purer bliss.
The flower fades, the fruit appears,
The freshness and the bloom of youth
Are followed by the riper years.

Each stage of life but brings the soul,
Some nearer to the final goal;
And death itself is but the door
To glorious things that lie before.
Through all the years with all they bring,
God ever gives some better thing.

THE DECREASE OF THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

IN a recent number of the Biblical World there appeared a most significant editorial discussion of the fact that the number of candidates for the ministry has declined in recent years. The writer seemed nervous lest the opponents of the higher criticism should turn round with an indignant, "I told you so," and attribute this falling off to the wickedness of the critics. Without being able to reach any definite conclusion, he tried hard to meet and crush that method of attack upon the spirit or teaching of modern biblical scholarship.

The fact that the number of students at theological schools has dropped down is not peculiar to America; it is being confronted also in Scotland, to some extent also in England and in Germany. Of course it may be that this is simply a wave somewhat larger than usual, such as all institutions experience. The causes may be as fleeting as they seem to be obscure. In that case we may expect that without much discussion or effort the matter will be corrected in the next few years. But on the other hand this evident avoidance of the ministry, or at any rate of theological schools, may be due to causes of a deeper kind, causes which will abide and do their dread work until they are discovered and destroyed by the might of the Church's will.

If we wish to identify these causes we must look in two directions. They will be found among the economic or social conditions and among the religious conditions of our day. We propose to look at each of these briefly.

1. During the last twenty-five or thirty years the three great Protestant countries named above—America, Great Britain and Germany—have enormously increased their material wealth. The career of almost any young man of ability may now bear him up to the heights of fabulous wealth. With wealth goes power, and with power, fame, and with all these that most alluring prize, social distinction. The prizes which commerce and science, the handmaid of commerce, now offer surpass in number and apparent amount those to which young men could look forward fifty years ago. It was one of the acute observations of the late Archbishop Whately, a pioneer of formal logic and political economy in England in the first half of the last century, that the church could only hope to secure the services of the best university men if its highest prizes reached very high in the social and economic world. We should be sorry to admit this; but we cannot doubt that what he said contained a practical truth. Undoubtedly social and pecuniary prospects do exercise a certain strong influence over the imagination, and through it over the conscience, of even earnest young men at the age of decision. In Germany itself this has been felt. In the end of the eighteenth and the first half of the nineteenth centuries almost the supreme place was given in the public esteem of Germany to the universities. Not much money was to be made in the Germany of those days in any direction; so that the poverty of teachers, professors, and pastors did not count against them in the minds of men. The result was that into the universities and church there ran the hurrying feet of the most ambitious and gifted youths. But Germany has since then become a greater military empire and is also galloping into the mad career of the wealth makers of the world; and now he would be bold indeed who would maintain that German universities stand as high in intellectual and moral influence as they did two generations ago.

This, then, we must recognize as a fact whose force is now telling as never before upon the number and the quality of those who seek the ministry. The prospects seem socially and economically more brilliant for those who go into other careers.

2. We are prepared to hear an indignant retort to all this. We shall be asked whether these considerations ought to weigh against the sacred and weighty motives which have impelled the noblest men to enter the service of the Gospel in the past. And our answer is, Of course not. We, too, believe that the ministry of Christ can be presented to men in a fashion that ought to call out the most ardent devotion of the most ambitious and gifted men. But this must be done in a religious atmosphere that is intense, by appealing to religious motives that are mighty, and by describing religious results that are sublime. We of the church cannot match the attractions of the world by any mere social or economic arguments or prizes. It is the religious atmosphere against the worldly; the loftiest views of the ministry must outshine the loftiest peaks of social attainment. Then only can we hope to receive into the patient and strenuous life of the Christian ministry the ablest and most eager young spirits of the rising generation.

Scholarship, whether it calls itself higher criticism or anything else, can only justify its claims to make the Bible more real, if it makes those sacred pages shine for the simplest soul in Christendom. It is religious aims and motives that create and sustain the Church of Christ; and it is only when these are most clearly defined and most warmly and passionately urged that we can expect to win the loyal devotion of the best minds and the noblest hearts. And those motives and aims are not far to seek. They cannot be different from those which brought the Son of God into the world and made his great apostles go into all the world and preach his Gospel. The world has no greater reason today for the lifelong devotion of men to the ministry than the salvation of the lost, the manifestation of the redeeming love of God, the determination to make the cause of our only Lord and Savior triumph among men. In those churches and communities where strong men are living on these divine impulses and pursuing these divine ends, we still find that young men of great promise enter the career of the ministry. But diminish the eternal momentousness and immeasurable glory of the Christian Gospel, and out of that chilled atmosphere and commonplace experience no such devotion can be expected.

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE CHURCH.

ONE of the signs of the times is a lessened appreciation of the value of the church. It does not occupy the high place in the estimation of men that it once did. For this the church itself is largely to blame. It has been too apologetic—too much on the defensive. It has not asserted itself—it has not always taken the high place to which it has a right as the representative of Christ in the world.

To Christ the church is an object of special love and regard—the most precious thing on earth. He uses the words "my church" much as a man uses the words my wife, my child, my home.

The glory that belongs to him belongs to his church. He says "All authority has been given unto me in heaven and on earth; go ye therefore as my delegates, and speak in my name, calling upon men to do whatsoever I have commanded them."

The kingly power which belongs to Christ belongs in some measure to his church. Now Christ gave to the world a new idea of sovereignty; he brought in a new imperialism. He was a king without a crown, without a court, without a scepter, without an army, without a visible kingdom. When the accusation was brought against him that he declared himself to be the King of the Jews, Pilate asked with a sneer, "Art thou a king then?" His reply was, "Thou sayest it; a King I am." Was ever such a King seen before? His was a new form of sovereignty; and it is this new form of sovereignty that belongs to the church.

The sovereignty of the church, like the sovereignty of Christ, is moral sovereignty. We are in danger of falling into the mistake of the Jews and looking for a kingdom which comes with outward pomp and show. The Church of Rome does this; and every Protestant church that glorifies outward success does this.

Christ says "My kingdom is not of this world." The kingdom of the church is founded upon moral power. To the question of Pilate, "Art thou a King?" Jesus answered "A King I am, for to this end was

I born that I might bear witness of the truth." His kingdom was to be established not by the power of the sword, but by the power of truth.

To found the kingdom upon truth is to found it upon love—for in truth love is revealed. Love is the power by which the church is to conquer. Before she can rule, the church must be crowned with thorns. Her scepter is the scepter of love—her sovereignty the sovereignty of sacrifice. She wins regal power by the shedding of sacrificial blood.

The sovereignty of the church is not a future attainment, but a present reality. She is called upon to exercise sovereign power now. Looking forward to this Christian age Jesus said, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?" They are as the representatives of Christ to lay down for men the rule of life. They are to speak with authority on moral questions because they speak in the name of Christ. They are to pronounce moral ultimatums. To them has been given binding and losing power. "Whosoever sins ye remit they are remitted unto them, and whosoever sins ye retain they are retained." This power is declarative. The church has this power only when she speaks as the mouthpiece of Christ.

The church is to represent Christ as King. Christ has been set forth crucified among us; has he been set forth enthroned among us? We have held him up as a prophet—a teacher sent from God; we have held him up as a priest who has offered up the sacrifice of himself; have we been equally careful to hold him up as a King? Through the church the moral majesty of Christ—the true Kingdom of Christ—ought to be expressed.

Moreover, the church is to set forth Christ, not as the future King, but as the King who is now reigning. She is not to keep listening for the sound of the chariot wheels of the approaching King, but to recognize the King as in the midst. "Cry aloud and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion, for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

The sovereignty of the church is a growing reality. The question is often asked, Is the church losing ground? The fortunes of Christ and of his church are bound up together. Christ and his church increase and decrease together.

Professor A. B. Bruce on his last visit to America said that he was optimistic as to Christ and Christianity, but pessimistic as to the church. It is hard to see how any one can be optimistic as to Christ and pessimistic as to the church, when it is through the church that Christ is to carry on and complete his redemptive work.

The sovereignty of the church, like the sovereignty of Christ, is to become more and more visible. Visibility belongs to the final stages of the kingdom. Internal at first, it gradually becomes external. First it is like leaven, afterwards it is like a mustard tree.

We are to see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom. Through the church the King is to be manifested. The aim of the church is to lead men to acknowledge the authority of Christ; to accept him as their King; to bow before his scepter; to make him the center of social authority; to look to him to put down everything that opposes the will of heaven, and to establish among men the righteous reign of God.

The church is the nucleus of the kingdom. The church is to pray for the kingdom, labor for it, to be the main agency by which it is to be realized. Let the church be joyful in her King, let her make the kingdom her main issue, and she will at once be re-enthroned in her rightful place of sovereign power.

THE ART OF QUIETNESS.

By the Visitor.

THE master-word of our age is haste. Its motto is "Faster, faster"! Its symbol is the lightning express. To speak of a thing as "slow" is to give it the lowest possible assessment. To increase speed is the ambition of the race. The world is looking for the man who can reduce the schedule of an ocean trip by hours, of an inter-urban train by minutes, of a racehorse by seconds. Values are measured in terms of speed. The time-rate of postal delivery is a matter of greatest importance. Special delivery letters have laid the government under bonds to hasten them to their destination. The telegraph is displacing the post as a means of business, so necessary has rapidity of communication become; and even now the telegraph is rated too slow and the long-distance telephone is the ordinary instrument of intelligence in most of the leading commercial houses. There was a time when a letter was rapid enough. Now not even the telegraph will do. The telephone with its facilities for instant and personal conversation is the only adequate instrument. It is not enough to say that we are a restless and unquiet people: we are actually cultivating restlessness and unquiet. We cannot content ourselves with the modest ways of our fathers. We are dissatisfied with the limitations of country life, and are rushing to the already overcrowded cities, and this because life is more rapid and restless there.

Characteristic of Americans.

This is especially true of our American life. In England a business man gets down to his office at nine or ten o'clock, and after a lunch period of an hour or more at noon, he returns home at four or five o'clock, content with his day's work. The German is even less ambitious. But the American is astir by seven; at eight he is deep in his business, and by noon has completed fifty important business transactions. Then he snatches a twenty-minute interval for lunch, and rushes back to his desk to continue his tremendous mental strain till six o'clock or later.

Max O'Rell, our genial French visitor and critic, says that in the year two thousand the American business man will awake in the morning, enter his dressing cabinet, and by touching a button be bathed, shaved, breakfasted and deposited at his office door, all in the space of a minute and a quarter.

Money? Of course he makes money—no wonder he sells his steel in Sheffield and Birmingham, his cotton in Liverpool, his bicycles in Coventry and his shoes in London. Like the Pharisee of old, he has his reward. The only question is, whether he may not be paying too high a price for his success.

Our spirit of haste produces everything which can be made or secured except manhood and womanhood. Does it help or hinder them? I need not show how this tumult of things renders impossible the cultivation of family life. The household starts in the morning with a rush. The father must be off to business and the children to school. There is no time for conversation or for worship. There was a time when they read a bit of Scripture and had a brief prayer, or joined in the Lord's Prayer; but one day there was no time, they thought, and they let it go, and then the habit grew, and now they have outgrown the wish for these things; and the family life, that was once guarded as by walls of fire by this simple service, goes on unprotected and careless. Then what has the evening for them? The rush of the day has wearied them all. Reading is impossible, the concert or lecture too dry, and the result is that something more exciting like the theater or the card table is the only relish of such a life. In this the children can have no part, and the family is but a name.

This spirit of haste is responsible as well for much of the irritability, nervousness and illness of our age. We are not so organized as to be able to live in a rush of events and maintain our poise without training and caution. The penalty falls upon men in the form of nervous prostration and collapse, and upon women in the shape of worry, vexation, nervousness and such debilities as are their common burden in this age.

The Remedy Suggested.

It is of no value to rail at the world, and grow pessimistic. The only virtue in the discussion of the subject lies in the discovery of a remedy. That remedy lies in a simple, yet much neglected apostolic word, "Study to be quiet." This does not imply withdrawal from the world, but a certain mastery of spirit that saves one from the ceaseless fret and care of an unquiet life. More time is wasted and more power lost in the consciousness of a pressing host of duties than in their actual performance. It is worth while to take time quietly to consider one's work and plan for its best doing. That was the principle on which Martin Luther acted when he said he needed to pray the longer as he had more work to do. The art of quietness, like all other arts, is to be obtained only by cultivation. There is always the impulse to panic when one feels himself smothered under a cloud of pressing duties. It is the wild anxiety that comes to one who arrives at the station at the last minute, and has ticket to get, baggage to check and a score of other things to do, all apparently in a moment. To such a disordered soul the calm, indifferent quietness of railroad servants is little less than maddening. But on reflection he knows that they are right, and he is wrong. If he misses his train it will be because he does not catch the suggestion of their calmness and take things one at a time.

Useless Friction.

It is our disposition to rave at delay, to worry at possibilities, to cross bridges that we shall never reach, to wear out the machinery of life by frantic and useless reversals of levers which only rend and crush. He would be an unwise engineer who treated his machine as we treat ourselves. The quiet steadiness of an ordered and poised life, where calmness is searched for as hidden treasure, is not only self-rewarding in its consciousness of power, but gives to life an artistic value which is impossible to a nature that allows itself to be carried about by every wind of temper, worry or fear. To "abide steadfast at the heart's core," as the French proverb has it; to "study to be quiet," as the apostle enjoins; "in nothing to be anxious, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving to let your requests be made known unto God." This is one of the paths into the mountain of the Lord, where his glory abides, and where "the peace of God that passeth understanding shall guard your hearts and minds through Jesus Christ."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

An Audacious Proposal.

The audacious proposal of President Harper of the University of Chicago to establish branch schools in Europe for the special benefit of the children of Americans who may be traveling abroad, takes away the breath of English educators. They think that he ought to confine his schemes of expansion within the limits of the United States. And at any rate they do not envy him the task involved in such an undertaking, inasmuch as they regard the children of "globe trotters" as very poor educational material.

The Spiritual on the Top.

Professor James of Harvard, in his Gifford lecture in the Edinburgh University, said: "Few of us are not in some way infirm or even diseased, but there remains the consolation that our infirmities may become the unexpected occasion of religious experiences that might otherwise be impossible. The physical process does not invalidate the spiritual result." This is a valuable testimony to the truth that the physical exists for the spiritual, not the spiritual for the physical. Though the outward man perish the inward man may be renewed day by day.

On the Way to Independence.

The unreserved and unconditional acceptance of the Platt amendment by the constitutional convention of Cuba brings to the people of the United States a sense of relief. This action does not secure independence, but it heads Cuba in that way; it constitutes the Cubans candidates for independence. They have acted upon the principle the half the loaf is better than no bread. Cuba has virtually been declared a foreign country under the American sovereignty. If that means much for Cuba, it means more for us. It marks a further step in a new national policy. Whither it shall lead no one can foretell.

An Englishman's Estimate of America.

Referring to his recent visit to Chicago Frederick Harrison, the English critic, records that he finds that "the citizens were bringing their extraordinary enterprise to bear quite as much on social, intellectual and artistic interests as they confessedly were on grain, ham, steel and lumber." And he says further that "they will have to do so if they are to hold their own in the future civilization. For the manifest destiny of Chicago is to be the heart of the American continent." He adds that life in the United States "is one perpetual whirl of telephones, phonographs, electric bells, motors, lifts and automatic instruments. To me such a life would not be worth living and the mere sight of it is incompatible with continuous thought. But business seems to be done in that way. And I did not learn that the percentage of suicide or insanity was very seriously increased by these maddening inventions."

Death of Two Distinguished Men of Letters.

Sir Walter Besant, who has just passed away, was thoroughly English and got to the heart of English life. His writings are strong in the element of human interest. Being purpose novels, they may not take highest rank as literary art, but they throb with life and they stir the heart with generous emotions. The People's Palace of East London was erected as the result of his book entitled "All Sorts and Conditions of Men." Sir Walter Besant was not only ad-nired as a leader of the English people, but was loved as a man. His death is a public loss.

Robert Buchanan is another literary celebrity who has passed over to the majority. He was a virile and versatile writer; somewhat belligerent in tone, and apt to have his judgment darkened by prejudice. His dislike for Kipling was unbounded, and the severity of his criticisms led to something of a reaction in Kipling's favor. But in spite of his unpleasant self-assertiveness he was a distinct and wholesome influence in the realm of letters.

Missionaries and Politics.

In an article on "The Missionary in China," by H. C. Thompson in the Contemporary Review, a high tribute is paid to the value of the missionary work which has been accomplished in that difficult field. But it is added, "the future evangelization of China would be more rapid and complete if the missionaries could free themselves entirely from the assistance of the various governments and would trust solely to the persuasive nature of their doctrine. External force is a Upas tree which, in the far east, withers all belief in the sincerity of the Christian avowals and paralyzes them as nothing else can. This policy might not seem to many to be worldly wise, but if followed out a noble lesson of Christian forbearance and unselfishness would be presented. Mr. Thompson is of the opinion that the claims for indemnities ought not to be pressed. For the heathen Chinese to identify the Christian missionary with a policy of "aggressive worldliness" would, he thinks, be a misfortune to the cause of missions.

President Patton's Baccalaureate.

There is an element of truth in what Pres. Patton of Princeton has to say about the decadence of the sense of sin. But it is well to remember that the convicting work of the Holy Spirit has respect to righteousness as well as to sin; and it is the conviction of righteousness that is receiving special emphasis in the present age. Never was the sense of the need of righteousness, individual and social, more keen; and never was the call to righteousness more clear and loud. There is a pessimistic note in President Patton's baccalaureate which is not in keeping with the belief in the progress of Christianity. He says: "We ask ourselves if we see the nations armed to the teeth and making war upon weaker nations whether we are living in the 20th century of the Christian era. We see that the nations foremost in the service of the Prince of Peace are not studying things that make for peace nor things wherewith they should edify one another, but are studying the things that make for war, and the means by which they may destroy one another." It is true that war has not yet ceased; but never before was war so heartily deplored; never before did man recoil more from its horrors; and never did the nations of the world feel under such a strong obligation to justify themselves in having recourse to the arbitrament of the sword.

Jubilee Day at the Y. M. C. A. Convention.

Jubilee Day, which was celebrated on Thursday last at the International convention of the Y. M. C. A., now being held in Boston, was marked with the highest enthusiasm. Among the interesting features of the occasion was the receipt of a telegram from Emperor William of Germany, which ran as follows: "Transmit to the brotherhood of Young Men's Christian Association of America, assembled for the jubilee convention my hearty congratulations. With pride the brotherhood may look back on its past life, which promises further to flourish and increase. May this expectation be fulfilled in a rich measure. With satisfaction I see that the German associations, active in the same endeavor, take part fraternally in this solemn gathering. May the American associations also in the future train, for their great fatherland, citizens who are sound in body and soul and of earnest convictions of life, standing on the only unmovable foundation of the name of Christ, whose name is above every name.

Willhelm I. R."

CHICAGO NOTES.

A Faithful Public Servant.

The record of over half a century of faithful service belongs to Denis J. Swenie, chief of the Chicago Fire Department, who now retires from office to enjoy a well-earned rest at the end of an active and strenuous life.

The Death of Dr. Fawcett.

In the sudden death of Rev. William Fawcett, D. D., ptomaine poisoning resulting from the eating of canned salmon—the M. E. Church of Chicago loses one of its best-known preachers. Dr. Fawcett was especially prominent in evangelistic work.

Free Text Books.

It has been finally decided that the first four grades of the public school in Chicago will be supplied with free text books. The effect of this action will be watched with interest. The Board has already appropriated $91,000 for the purchase of new books.

Ruinous Agencies.

It is believed that there are 1,000 men in the city who make it their business to allure young men to vile resorts, and not fewer than 50,000 men—that is about one man in every nineteen of the population—are engaged in occupations which tend to the ruin of young manhood.

The Evening Service Versus the Theater.

While the smallness of the evening services in our churches is being deplored, in seventeen theaters on a recent Sunday evening the aggregate attendance of men from 15 to 41 years of age were 17,160, and it was found that relatively the larger audiences of men were in the cheapest and most degraded places.

A New President of Lake Forest University.

Rev. Richard B. Harlan of Rochester, N. Y., has accepted the presidency of Lake Forest University. He comes into office on a rising tide. The financial outlook is promising and steps are being taken to centralize the affiliated departments. Dr. J. G. K. McClure, who has been acting president for the past four years, will now devote all his time to the interests of Lake Forest Presbyterian Church, of which he has been pastor for the past twenty years.

An Important Movement.

An important announcement was made at the Lake Forest University commencement to the effect that $12,000 is now available from the Bross fund, and with this money the trustees have purchased from the heirs of Dr. Mark Hopkins, late president of Williams College, the right to publish "Evidence of Christianity." This volume will be the first of a series to be known as the Bridgewater series and to be sold in accordance with the wish of the founder of the fund at a minimum price, so that they may have as large a circulation as possible. In connection with this fund a lectureship on Christian evidences will be established.

A Startling Statement.

On a recent Sunday evening a careful count was made of the men in a Madison street saloon at seven o'clock. The number was 524, and during the next two hours there were 480 more. At one of the billiard tables young men six feet deep on all sides were eagerly engaged in open gambling. Private stairways connect this saloon with the vilest theater of the city. Surely this condition of things calls loudly for reformatory and preventative work among the young men of the city.

The Religious Condition of Young Men.

In his interesting book on the above subject, which is reviewed on another page, Mr. Oates states that of the thirteen millions of young men in the United States and Canada it is estimated that not more than one million are members of evangelical churches. There is no doubt that at least seven millions of them habitually stay away from all churches. Not more than one-third of the boys remain in Sunday school after they reach the age of fifteen. It is safe to say that 50 per cent of the young men do little or nothing in an aggressive way to promote the organized Christian work of the churches.

SONG OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

"Christ in the heart, and his love in the nation, is the only cure for the ills which threaten us to-day."—Ex-President Harrison at the Ecumenical Conference in New York.

"Christ in the heart, and his love in the nation
Stronger are these than the gun or the sword;
Dawns the new day of our country's salvation,
Cleansed from her sins by the might of the Lord.
Christ in the human heart,
Teach us the better part,
Save us from treachery, battle, and greed.
Love be the nation's word,
By every people heard—
Love for humanity in its great need.

Angels of Bethlehem, sound your glad chorus,
Thrilling our souls by its message divine.
Warfare and carnage no more shall rule o'er us,
Brightly the star of our Saviour shall shine.
Star of the Prince of Peace,
Bring to us swift release,
Let not our brothers their brothers destroy.
Lead us to truly pray,
Show us the higher way,
Teach us that living for others is joy.
Flag of our fathers, float on in thy glory!
Always thy red stand for justice and law,
Ever thy white tell the sweet gospel story,
Never thy blue in its truth show a flaw,
And every lustrous star
Shine from thy folds afar,
Over a people united and free.
Guarding this flag above,
Keep us, O God of Love,
Loyal to country, to manhood and Thee.

—Elizabeth Lloyd.

DARK, AND JESUS HAD NOT COME.

By Theodore G. Soares, Ph. D.

Dark on the stormy lake,
He tarries on the Gilead shore,
While in the boat they quake,
They twelve, and bend the useless oar.
Dark, a lonely dark,
And Jesus had not come.

Dark in the world to-day
In dens of vice, in haunts of crime,
Where self and greed hold sway,
In heathen lands of every clime.
Dark, a hideous dark,
And Jesus has not come.

Dark in the human soul
That's barred from God, great longings crushed,
Set on its own control,
Till e'en the still small voice is hushed.
Dark, a wilful dark,
And Jesus has not come.

Light of the world; he came.
Let none in darkness walk, and death
Become a shadowy name.
"I am with you to the end," he saith.
Light, universal light,
And Jesus now has come.

—S. S. Times.

THE PRESENCE OF CHRIST IN THE EUCHARIST.

By James M. Campbell.

WHAT a change in the meaning of the Supper was to be introduced by the coming of Christ is evident from the words, "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come" (1 Cor. x:26). These words—which are thought by many to be part of a ritual which came into use in the early church in connection with the observance of the Supper—can be taken to mean that the Lord's Supper was to be observed up to to the time of his coming, and then discontinued; or that the Lord's death was to be shown forth by it up to that time, and thereafter it was to have a new significance. These are the only possible interpretations; and we will hold to the one and reject the other just as we put the emphasis upon the Lord's coming, or upon his death. That is, we must hold that in celebrating this ordinance, those who lived before the coming of Christ were to show forth his DEATH till he came, or they were to show forth his death TILL he came. The latter view seems to fall in with the apostle's teaching.

By the coming of the Lord, Paul meant his second advent. Of that there cannot be the slightest doubt. The speedy coming of his Lord was the uppermost thought in his mind. His words seem to mean that by the Lord's coming a new "revelation value" was to be given to the ordinance of the Supper. Henceforth it was to proclaim not the death of the Lord who had gone, but the Presence of the Lord who had come. By his coming again the end for which he died was to be completed. The shedding of his blood upon the cross would have availed nothing had it not been followed by his resurrection and return. When he returned the Supper was to become the expression of his continued life, rather than the symbol of his death. No longer was it merely to refresh the memory concerning the Christ who once lived and died on the earth, but it was to be the token that the Christ who lived and died had come again to live forever with his people. No longer was it to be the memorial of an absent Christ, but the means of contact and fellowship with the living Christ. In a word, it was henceforth to be a sacrament of life, rather than a festival of death.

It was his failure to see the changed significance of this ordinance which led Emerson to reject it. He could not believe that Jesus meant to impose a memorial feast upon the whole world. Had he seen in this simple rite not an audacious attempt on the part of Jesus to perpetuate his name, but a helpful way of perpetuating fellowship with himself, the reason for its observance would have been more apparent.

At present the position is taken by a certain class of Christian scholars that Jesus did not formally institute the Supper as a perpetual ordinance, but that its continuous observance is due to the natural promptings of the love and loyalty of his disciples to express themselves in symbols which Jesus himself had employed. Others coming nearer the truth, think that its perpetual observance "is due to disclosures made by our Lord after his resurrection." Its formal institution is evidently implied in the words "This do in remembrance of me," but new reasons were undoubtedly given for its observance after his resurrection. When first celebrated it was a parting meal in which Jesus himself participated. To his disciples he said, "With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer." The meaning which it had before he suffered it was to retain until he was glorified. During his absence it was to keep green the memory of his death, but after his return it was to be transformed from the memorial of his death to the sign of his real and abiding presence.

At the very time when the Supper was instituted Jesus intimated in the plainest terms that it was to assume a new significance in the future. That was not to be the last occasion upon which Jesus was to meet with his disciples. Death was not to rob them of him. Although about to leave them the fallen threads of their fellowship would again be taken up. The Supper of which they partook together was something more than a farewell feast; it was also the pledge of future reunion, of restored and continued fellowship. The parting cup of which they drank together was to give place to a cup of unending communion. Foreseeing his resurrection and return Jesus says to his disciples, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until the day when I drink it new with you in my father's kingdom" (Matt. xxvi:29). By the Father's kingdom he does not mean the final abode of the blessed which lies beyond the grave, but the kingdom which was about to be established upon earth. In the Father's kingdom fellowship would be resumed on a higher plane. The eating and drinking of the present would pass over into spiritual communion. The Lord's return would be the occasion of festal joy. With his disciples he would drink the new wine of the new age; thus bringing the Supper to its final fulfillment, in the reunion and fellowship of the church with her restored Lord. It was this sublime assurance that made the farewell feast the "bread of comfort, and the cup of consolation" to the sorrowing disciples.

The memorial idea, although not altogether eliminated from the Supper, is not the prominent one. The central idea is not commemoration but communion; not the remembrance of the dead Christ, but communion with the living Christ who once visited this earth in the guise of mortal flesh, but the looking up into the face of Christ who has returned in the Spirit, and who is present in the bread and wine, that in them and through them he might give himself to us.

That this was Paul's view is evident from the words, "The cup of blessing which we bless is it not a communion (literally a participation) in the blood of Christ? The loaf which we break is it not a communion (a participation) in the body of Christ" (1 Cor. x: 16). Apart from the Presence how could there be communion? If Christ is not risen, and if he is not personally present, fellowship with him is impossible.

The Supper was founded upon the Passover, but it is something more than a "transfigured paschal feast." When the Passover was taken over into Christianity it received a new and enlarged meaning. It stood not for national deliverance through the blood of the paschal lamb, but for spiritual deliverance through Christ, the Lamb of God, who was sacrificed for us. In the Parousia the glorious fulness of its spiritual significance was revealed. From that time forth it was to be a great object lesson to the world, teaching men that the one who died for human sin is now present to deliver; that from being a precious memory he has become a living and life-giving presence.

This is also the view which John presents in his Gospel, which contains the latest development of Christian thought. The blood of Jesus is not merely something shed for us, but something received by us. "Unless ye eat the flesh of the son of man and drink his blood, ye have not life in yourselves" (John vi: 53). Christ himself is to be received, not corporeally, but spiritually; not by the mouth of the body, but by the mouth of the soul—namely, by faith. He is to become the life-blood of the soul; the present life of all who receive him.

The practical conclusion, then, to which we are brought, is that since the coming of Christ in the Spirit it is our privilege to enjoy through the Supper the sense of his actual presence. The value of this rite, as an aid to faith, is that it brings the reality of his presence into view. It proclaims that he is really here, that his presence is not figurative nor imaginary, but real and efficacious; that the bread and wine instead of being mere signs to assist the memory, are the forms under which Christ offers himself as the true food of our souls. In a word, it is not a funeral feast, but a feast of joyous fellowship; not a commemorative rite, but an operative rite; not a memory but a faith; not a memorial of an absent friend but the outward seal of his unseen presence; not the act of mourning over the dead, but fellowship close and personal with the living. In the words of Dr. R. W. Dale, "The ordinance represents a permanent relation between Christ and those who trust in him, a perpetual participation in the divine life, so that he becomes the life of our life, the sinew of our strength, the inexhaustible fountain of our joy."

If Christ has come he is present, and if he is present we may find him at his table; but if he has not come, how can he be present, and if he is not present how can we find him at his table, or anywhere else on this desolate earth? That he has come is the only valid ground that exists for the belief in his presence; that he is present is the reason why we may now meet with him and receive the fulness of his sacrificial life. There is a sense in which the presence is in the believing soul.

"Such ever bring him where they come
And going take him to their home."

The presence becomes a reality to the individual only so far as faith looks through the symbols in which Christ is presented, and seeing him, receives him by an act of spiritual appropriation.

The idea of the present must not, however, be limited to the Supper. The presence of Christ in the Eucharist has been called the Real Presence"; and so it is in a distinctive sense; but the Eucharist itself derives its significance from the wider truth of the real and abiding presence of Christ in the church, and in the world. And for this truth it stands. In the Roman Catholic church where the preaching function is not made prominent, and where the Gospel story is not freely circulated, the celebration of the mass is an acted parable which keeps before the minds of the people the thought of the presence of the Lord who was crucified. In this pictorial Gospel is found the popular power of the Roman Catholic church. But when in a mysterious and magical way the presence of Christ is made conditional upon a priestly act, and his presence in the mass is made the only real presence, truth is perverted. For the presence of Christ is just as real at any common meal as it is in the mass or in the Supper; although because it is there made a matter of distinct expression and impression, there we are more likely to find him. The fact of our finding him in the mass or in the Supper will, however, fail to yield its deepest lesson unless by that hallowed moment of fellowship the truth of his abiding presence is confirmed.

EDUCATING POWER OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHRIST.

J. A. Beattie.

ESUS showed himself to be the Wise, the True, the Great Teacher by the choice of the things through which he led men away from that which they were and induced them to become that which he desired them to be.

The poet puts this ability and effort of Christ in this form:

He spoke of lilies, vines and corn,
The sparrow and the raven,
And words so natural, yet so wise
Were on man's heart engraven;
And yeast, and bread, and flax, and cloth,
And eggs, and fish, and candles;
See how the whole familiar world
He most divinely handled.

To the same end and teaching the same lesson, although there is another point involved, are the words of Whittier when he says:

Our common Master did not pen
His followers up from other men;
His service, liberty indeed,
He built no church, he framed no creed,
But while the saintly Pharisee
Made broader his phylactery,
As from the synagogue was soon
The dusty-sandaled Nazarene
Through ripening corn fields lead the way
Upon the awful Sabbath day.
His sermons were the healthful talk

That shorter made the mountain walk;
His wayside texts were flowers and birds,
While, mingled with his gracious words,
The rustle of the tamarish-tree,
The ripple-wash of Galilee.

Again, Jesus showed himself to be the True Teacher by his recognition of the majesty of law and the duty of obedience to authority.

Christ invites all to become really free by a ready and willing subjection to the law and yoke of liberty.

This lesson of the supreme importance of law and of our relation to rightful authority and divine command Jesus teaches most clearly and pointedly by his words and he gives the lesson special significance by the obedience of his own life.

Law the Guardian of Liberty.

His life and words, his tone and spirit, his conduct and character teach that respect for authority and subjection to law are the guardians of liberty and that without obedience to law liberty is but an empty name. Obedience was the watchword of Jesus for thirty years while he was subject to Joseph and Mary.

Obedience is the import of his actual life among the people and obedience is the meaning of every act connected with the judgment seat of Pilate and the cross of Calvary.

Again the life and character of Christ exhibit true educating force because he places a just estimate upon all things and comprehends the relation and importance of each.

He taught constantly that purity and injustice; that truth and righteousness; that virtue and integrity; that faith and genuine character are rewarded with a harvest of blessedness. Moreover, Jesus recognized that good and evil, that truth and error are in a constant warfare—each striving for the mastery of the world and with the knowledge which comes from seeing the end from the beginning he promised the final triumph of truth and righteousness. The constant presence of evil, the great power of error, the desolation sin has wrought in the earth, and the seeming success of wicked and unprincipled men often cause us to forget that right and that truth gain in the end the victory.

We often hear quoted the words, Antony is made to say over the body of Caesar: "The evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones," and they are made to express the final issue in the struggle between good and evil. Good is represented as going down to the darkness of the grave and to the night of forgetfulness while evil rises to place and power, to life and influence.

That this utterance of Antony is but the form of seeming reality—the words of the orator of the day and nothing more, even in Caesar's own case history abundantly proves. For one person in an audience like this, who knows or cares anything about the evil Caesar did fifty know "Caesar, the world's great master and his own, know the genius and generalship and the glory and greatness of his reign." For one, to give another example, who has heard that Bacon was ungrateful, was grasping for power, was thirsty for gain, was a receiver of bribes, was an unjust judge, was fined by the "King's Bench" to the amount of 40,000 pounds, was imprisoned at the king's pleasure by the same high authority, fifty persons know of his work in science and literature—know that he was the wisest of his time, the profound of his day, the most scholarly of his age. It is as a philosopher, as an establisher of laws and as a discoverer of principles that his name is as immortal as the laws he formulated and as undying as the principles upon which they rest. For one person who has heard that John Bunyan was a reckless and dissipated youth forty know that he was imprisoned for twelve long years in Bedford jail for preaching Christ and an hundred have been made wiser and better by his Pilgrim's Progress.

More than this: The teaching of Jesus in its insight and comprehensiveness carry us beyond greatness and men and women of greatness back of the life and character which make true greatness possible. They take us to the goodness of heart, to the honesty of purpose, to the integrity of motive and to the devotion of life which ennoble the soul and ornament the head with the crown of righteousness. Greatness is recorded in history, it is preserved in story, and it is handed down in song, but the goodness and the perfection to which we are invited by the Gospel of the Great Teacher are embalmed in the memory and enthroned in the heart of the good and true of all ages.

Because this is the case the men and the women of God live on in immortal youth and in unfading beauty. It is as true during the opening days of the twentieth century and it will be as true when it reaches its meridian splendor as in the days of Daniel, the prophet, that "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." The Savior is to be accepted as the guide to follow, as the truth to be believed and as the life to be lived, because he presents true motives, proper incentives, worthy ambitions, real objects and because his teaching and example lead to the fullest development, point to the greatest usefulness, insure the largest amount of happiness and reward honest life and earnest effort with such certainty and richness as God only can bestow. Hence it is that the apostles of Jesus who were imbued with his teaching and were guided by his inspiration present the highest ideas and ideals of life, reaching to the very purposes of the heart on the one hand and on the other the fullest measure of usefulness and achievement.

It is in this spirit and in this confidence that Paul writes as quoted in the beginning: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong."

It is the light of the inseparable connection which Paul knew subsists between motives, and conduct, between character and success that he wrote to Timothy: "Take heed unto thyself and to the teaching; continue thou in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." We have, as young people and as endeavorers, in Christ a guide who is not mistaken in the way; who errs not in judgment, who fails not to reward merit, to appreciate earnest effort and honest purpose, and who holds in perpetual memory every noble desire and every loving act. We can follow no other leader who is so worthy. We can be a citizen of no other faultless government. We can render ourselves most useful to this busy, active world by yielding implicitly to his authority and by governing our lives by his divine principles and example. We can have no higher motive, no more worthy ambition, than to become in heart and purpose, in conduct and character, day by day, more and more fully conformed to his divine image and teaching.

What a development is before the Christian. Says Victor Hugo: "I am immortal. I know it. I feel it. I am but a stammerer of what I shall be. I am the tadpole of an archangel." May every young Christian aspire in Christ to his highest possibilities.

A GLIMPSE AT THE SOCIOLOGICAL TEACHINGS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

M. B. Ryan.

THE SOCIAL IDEAL.

As was stated in an earlier article, the social ideal of the New Testament is to have the truth regnant in human life. And this would result in the moral integrity of the individual, in right relations between individuals, and the true relation of all to God, which would mean a perfect society.

In the Church of Jesus Christ the social ideal is in process of realization. At least this is true in the degree in which the church is fulfilling its mission.

The church is composed of regenerated individuals. Here are fit social factors. These are built, not upon partisan foundations, which would perpetuate disunity and breed antagonisms, but upon Christ the unity, the uniter, than whom no man can lay other foundation. They are also reconciled in one body to God through the cross, the enmity having been slain thereby.

Here are all the great factors in social redemption—individual regeneration, social reconciliation, union with God.

Here, too, are the evidences of salvation—the fruits of a redeemed social state. Love is the law, and is “without hypocrisy.” Tender affection is shown one toward another. Evil is abhorred. Good is cherished. One in honor prefers another. Benevolence grows apace. Hospitality abounds. There is mutual sympathy in joy and in sorrow. Retaliation is unknown. Peace is fostered. Forgiveness takes the place of vengeance. Evil is overcome with good. The black shadow of social discord is dispelled. The selfishness, which is the essence of all sin, is displaced by the brotherhood which is the outcome of all salvation. The works of the flesh give place to the fruit of the Spirit. The truth binds the elements together into a harmonious social whole.

Such is the ideal for the Church which the New Testament sets before us, unhappily but poorly realized in the actual present life of the Church.

The Ideal in Prospect.

But that the ideal is yet to become the real is indicated by the vision which John saw, “the holy city Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, having the glory of God.”

It is worthy of note that this crowning picture in the visions of the future is the picture of a social state. It is significant, too, that it “came down out of heaven.” It is not in heaven that this is seen, but coming down to earth. It is a coming state of society among men. It is the social ideal made real.

Here is the city, the place where the strain is heaviest on social principles and institutions; the place where virtue shines the brightest only because the background of vice is here the darkest; the place where a thousand battlefields are crowded into one. If here we can see society redeemed we need not despair.

for citizenship here is moral unfitness. “The fearful, and unbelieving, and abominable, and murderers and fornicators, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, etc.” are not here. These are unfit social factors. In a perfect society they must be eliminated. There is no place here for them. They “shall in no wise enter here.”

Here too, is “social solidarity.” There are no “classes” in this city. The things that divide men, that estrange men, that breed antagonisms, are here eliminated. Private ownership, that vantage-ground of pride and oppression, out of which grow so many and such terrible social evils, has passed; here all things are in common. The gold, instead of being in the pockets of the few with its differentiating power, is in the pavement of the street, where all have the same and equal use of it. The precious stones, instead of glittering on the persons of the few, thus marking them off from their fellows as belonging to a more fortunate and powerful class, are built into the walls and gates, where every one can enjoy them equally and have an equal possession in them, with every one else. There are no splendid avenues for the rich and squalid alleys for the poor. There is one street for all where all meet on an equality. There are no Dives and Lazarus, with but a gate between gluttonous abundance and slow starvation. There is the tree of life, whose ever-ripening and abundant fruit is for all alike; while the river of the water of life, controlled by no corporation, but issuing from the throne of God, the Great Giver of all good, flows free for all. There are no cathedrals for the nobility and mission chapels for the serfs. “The Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb are the temple thereof,” and every man has free access to their presence. All social discrimination is absent. A common level has been reached by the elevation of all into the likeness of the great type, Jesus the Christ.

Here, also, is unity with God. “Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he shall dwell with them, and they shall be his peoples, and he himself shall be with them and be their God.” Society has here found its center. And here it has realized its ideal. The perfect unity which sin disturbed, and whose loss brought all individuals degeneration, and all social evils, is here restored. Here are the perfect conditions for that flower and fruit of human life, the promise of which is in the fact that man is made in the image of God.

CIVIC PROBLEMS.

By Andrew Wilson.

Reduction of the War Revenue.

July first next the law changing revenue taxes will go into effect. It is estimated that the reduction will amount to $41,000,000 annually. This is a reduction of one million dollars more than the estimate based upon the bill as passed by the House of Representatives and four million dollars less than the estimate based upon the Senate amendments.

Some of the detailed estimates of reduction are as follows: Promissory notes, $3,500,000; certificates of deposits, $200,000; bank checks, $7,000,000; insurance, $3,000,000; telegraph dispatches, $800,000; telephone messages, $315,000; express receipts, $800,000; conveyances, $1,750,000; mortgages, $500,000; money orders, $602,000; proprietary medicines, cosmetics and chewing gum, $3,950,000; legacies, $500,000; cigars, $3,100,000; tobacco, $7,000,000; small cigars and cigarettes, $500,000; beer, $9,800,000; leases, $200,000; warehouse receipts, $250,000.

The law removed some of the most irksome of the taxes. The campaign promises to the brewers were faithfully kept, though they are not satisfied.

Our Relations to Cuba.

After a long period of waiting Congress has declared the purpose of the nation in regard to Cuba. To avoid an extra session amendments were added to the army bill defining the status of both Cuba and the Philippines. The demands made upon Cuba are:

1. Cuba to make no foreign treaty affecting its independence and to allow no foreign power to colonize or acquire any control.
2. Cuba to contract no debt for which provision cannot be made as to interest and sinking fund out of the revenues after defraying current expenses.
3. The United States may intervene to preserve independence, safety of life and property, and the discharge of obligations assumed by the United States in the Treaty of Paris.
4. All acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupation to be ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder to be maintained and protected.
5. Cuba is to maintain and extend the plans of sanitation now begun, or others as good.
6. The title to the Isle of Pines not to be claimed by the Constitution, but left for future adjustment by treaty.
7. Coaling or naval stations to be sold or leased to the United States at joints to be agreed upon with the President.
8. All these provisions to be embodied in a treaty.

The Cubans are not pleased with the terms laid down, although the constitutional convention has adopted them. Congress made a mistake when it declared that Cuba "is and of right ought to be independent." Cuba was not independent and a war was fought to destroy Spanish rule. The limitations now to be placed upon Cuban action are of vital importance to the Cubans, and a mistake by our government will cause us embarrassment in the future.

In his inaugural address March 4th the President said:

"The principles which led to our intervention require that the fundamental law upon which the new government rests should be adapted to secure a government capable of performing the duties and discharging the functions of a separate nation, of observing its international obligations of protecting life and property, insuring order, safety and liberty and conforming to the established and historical policy of the United States in its relation to Cuba.

"The peace which we are pledged to leave to the Cuban people must carry with it the guaranties of permanence. We became sponsors for the pacification of the island, and we remain accountable to the Cubans no less than to our own country and people for the reconstruction of Cuba as a free commonwealth on abiding foundations of right, justice, liberty and assured order. Our enfranchisement of the people will not be completed until free Cuba shall 'be a reality, not a name; a perfect entity, not a hasty experiment bearing within itself the elements of failure.'"

We are wont to look forward to troubles with fears of what they will inflict, but back on them with wonder at what they have saved us from.—Samuel Johnson.

LETTERS TO THE BOOKLOVER. MAGAZINES FOR MINISTERS.

My Dear Friend: There is nothing which the minister needs and sometimes longs for more than the stimulus of companionship with fellow students. Only a very strong love for books and study can cope successfully with the enmity of modern pastoral conditions. These conditions tend to dissipate energy and distract attention. They make it hard for a man to keep himself closely at work upon the deepest and hardest problems of the Christian faith. But many a man might be helped to maintain a high standard of intellectual labor if he had some companionship with those who are working in the fields which he ought to till so earnestly and constantly. It is this companionship which he longs for and cannot easily find. If he is in a small town he looks with envy towards the big cities with their libraries and ministers' meetings and other institutions which he supposes, from afar, to be powerful sustainers of the intellectual life. But the minister in the big city has this hunger no less acutely than his country brother. He knows how seldom he can journey down to the libraries, and that the ministers' meetings, while they do some good, are not noted for the ardor of their pursuit of scholarship.

There is a form of companionship which, having found it most useful myself, I wish to recommend very heartily to others. It is found when one has subscribed to a first-class theological or biblical or philosophical magazine. Most ministers take in one or more religious weeklies, some of which may be said to have become less or less religious and more and more weakly. And I understand that many ministers take in periodicals which aim at making the work of sermonizing easier, homiletical things which provide texts, divisions, illustrations and applications. But I am thinking of a class of periodicals, of which, alas! there are far too few, which deal with Biblical doctrinal, and philosophical subjects in a thoroughly competent manner. I say deliberately that every minister who wishes to maintain an intelligent interest in scholarship ought to subscribe for one or more of these. Personally I cannot estimate the amount of inspiration which from the beginning of my ministry I received from such periodicals.

Benefits of Such a Course.

The following are the chief benefits which one may hope to receive from such a technical or scholarly magazine: In the first place, he will be kept abreast of the current discussions of his special field. He will be able to discover from the run of the papers, and the debates to which they sometimes happily lead, the direction in which the main problems are moving, and something of the solutions which are being offered. In such a periodical the minister will often, of course, find articles on subjects which do not specially interest him; but he ought to make it a rule to read even the most technical and abstruse of these. That will strengthen his mind and give him a feeling for scholarly method and the scholarly spirit as nothing else can, except his own thorough work in his own line. In the next place, the minister who reads in such a periodical will be brought frequently and more familiarly in contact with the chief workers and theological writers of his own day. The best of these magazines gather about them an elastic fraternity of writers and readers who come to feel as if they knew each other through their pages. The man in a lonely parish finds himself on a friendly footing with men whose books he may seldom buy and whose names he admires from afar. Here, in this magazine he can count on hearing them several times a year, as they think aloud as it were; for here they may discuss many things rapidly, and yet thoroughly, and sometimes in the delightful self-revealing process of a lively controversy. And by the reading of such a magazine he not only learns what the main problems of today have become, and who the men are who are working at them; for, lastly, he learns also much about the best literature on many subjects from their formal reviews, literary summaries, lists of the best recent books and articles, etc.

Magazines Recommended.

In Biblical and theological circles there are probably five magazines which I ought to name. Three of these are monthlies—viz., The Expositor, The Expository Times and The Biblical World. The first named consists almost exclusively of articles, which discuss all manner of subjects connected with the Old and New Testaments. Articles of a more general nature are occasionally admitted. It was founded by a Dr. Samuel Cox of Nottingham, England, a Baptist minister of singular accomplishment as an expositor of Scripture. When the publishers took his labor of love from him, it passed into the hands of Dr. Robertson Nicoll, the brilliant founder and editor of that most notable weekly paper, The British Weekly. His conduct of The Expositor has been very successful. In its pages such men as Sanday, W. M. Ramsay, Fairbairn; A. B. Davidson, Cheyne! Geo. Adam Smith, besides Geo. Matheson, John Watson and others are very frequent contributors. The Expository Times is a younger monthly paper, founded by Dr. Hastings, the editor of the most useful Dictionary of the Bible. It contains a larger variety of matter than The Expositor, but is no less thorough and authoritative in its workmanship. Besides most interesting editorial paragraphs on leading events in current Biblical study, it provides for the answering of questions in Biblical interpretation, and gives also some valuable homiletical assistance. The Biblical World is maintained chiefly with a view to aiding Sunday school teachers and those pastors who pay much attention to that department. The range of its articles and editorials is, therefore, rather more restricted than the two magazines already named; but its standing is very high within its chosen field, and its spirit admirable. There are two quarterlies. The Critical Review confines itself in the main to philosophical and theological literature. One can, from its learned and well-managed pages, obtain a wide survey of the field with which it deals. The American Journal of Theology is the largest in bulk and the most obviously ambitious of these magazines. Four times a year it publishes long and often very important articles by leading men in Germany, Great Britain and America, on all kinds of Biblical and theological questions. It also surveys a large mass of literature in a long series of reviews written by many different men. It is not likely, as yet, to be popular, but it ought to be to those who take it, a most useful periodical. There is room indeed in America for two or three more theological magazines. If you hear of any new ones, encourage them as best you can. But my observation leads me to say that those who would start them must not make the fatal mistake of opening their pages to all the schools of thought around us. It is magazines, like men, with a character that we most need; and they alone are likely to make for themselves a large constituency. Definiteness of conviction always wins confidence and effectiveness even for a magazine. The magazine that tries to be hospitable to all the most opposite kinds of thought is treated as we treat a man without a conscience; it is left severely alone.

I am yours faithfully,

Chicago, June 14, 1901.

PLEASANTRIES.

Among the anecdotes told by Moritz Busch in his latest book is the following: "When the present Emperor of Germany was a little boy, his governess one day found it necessary to inflict bodily chastisement. She said, however: "Believe me, your Highness, it pains me as much as you?" "D—Does it h—hurt in the same p—place?" inquired the victim of her discipline.

A young man once said to the Bishop of Winchester (Wilberforce): "My lord, have you read Darwin's last book on the Descent of Man?" "Yes, I have," said the bishop. The young man continued: "What nonsense it is, talking of our being descended from apes! Besides, I can't see the use of such stuff. I can't see what difference it would make to me if my grandfather was an ape." "No," the bishop replied, "I don't see that it would; but it must have made an amazing difference to your grandmother!" The young man had no more to say.

Mrs. Fadde, Christian Scientist: "How is your grandfather this morning, Bridget?"

Bridget: "He still has the rheumatics mighty bad, mum."

"You mean he thinks he has the rheumatism. There is no such thing as rheumatism."

"Yes, mum."

A few days later:

"And does your grandfather still persist in his delusion that he has the rheumatism?"

"No, mum; the poor man thinks now that he is dead. We buried um yisterday."—Selected.

A story of quick wit turned to apologetic uses is going the rounds of the English papers. A Salvation Army lassie was being tormented for her belief in the truth of the story of Jonah. "When I get to heaven I'll ask him for an explanation," she said. "But suppose he is not in heaven," said the tormentor. "Then you can ask him."

A bald-headed professor, reproving a youth for the exercise of his fists, said: "We fight with our heads at this college." The youth reflected a moment and then replied: "Ah, I see, and you have butted all your hair off."

A gentleman lately dismissed a clever but dishonest gardener. For the sake of his wife and family, however, he gave the man a character and this is how he worked it: "I hereby certify that A. B. has been my gardener for over two years, and during that time he has got more out of my garden than any man I ever employed."—Dundee Weekly News.

OUR PULPIT.

THE DIVINE SYMPATHY.

W. Douglas Mackenzie.

"We have not a high priest who can not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities."—Hebrews 4: 15.

SORROW is that pain which comes naturally from the disturbance of the relations around which our affections have gathered, out of which they have grown. If there is any man to whom no sorrow has come it means, therefore, that none of his relations have been disturbed. He might as well be a clod of earth, or a rock buried in the heart of a mountain that has never been moved. We feel that a man's life has had no movement in it, no real meaning unless there has been some disturbance of his relations. If his relations have been disturbed in this direction or in that, if change has come upon him, carrying him hither or carrying him thither, then we say that man must have felt sorrow; the disturbance must have brought pain to him. Or again he has never lived, we say, and is incapable of feeling. While then we regard sorrow as that which we wish to get rid of, we despise or look down upon or even pity and condemn the human heart that never had it to get rid of.

When sorrow comes it has a strange double influence upon us. It at once makes us feel our relations to the race and yet isolates and individualizes us. No man ever felt himself to be himself so deeply, never recognized himself so directly as when he went into his darkest hour. And yet that is the time when the man felt most deeply his connection with humanity and when his place in the midst of the race of mankind came to him with a new light upon it. Sorrow at once universalizes a man, so to speak; it gives him a broader outlook upon man, takes him out to think of mankind, to feel with the feeling of mankind in his heart, and yet, also, at the same time and under the same momentous power gathers himself back upon himself to find himself and to name himself over and over again. "Oh," a man says to himself at such a time, "you are in this darkness now; that valley you saw other men pass into is your own path. You could not follow them; you only called to them and said, 'Brother, be of good courage in the darkness. Sister, hold a high heart as you go into the valley.' Ah! Now you are there yourself, how do you feel? How do you recognize yourself?"

Disturbed Relationships.

The relations that can be disturbed are, of course, of various kinds, but I think we may group them mainly under three heads: First of all there are those relations in which we stand towards our fellow-men,—the relations of the family and of friendship; those relations in fact wherein certain individuals become bound up in the bundle of life with us after such a fashion that we identify the continuance of our happiness, somehow, with them and of their happiness, somehow, with us. We do not want to think of them as complete without us. We would despise ourselves if we could ever again be complete without them. They are—because we loved them, called them friends of our souls, beloved of our spirits—forever bound up with us in the bundle of life, in the unity of one experience which we want to be ours and theirs through all eternity.

Then there are those disturbances that come in upon the relations we have with the outer world, with our places of abode and our position. When a man leaves the city that he loved, when a man leaves the home that he built and where his children were brought up, when a young man finds himself going out into a strange city, when he turns to the old house and the trees and the lawn and the fruit garden and bids it all farewell, a man knows that somehow or another this natural world also has entered into his heart and has twined its affections around it; yea, the very stones are dear. But he knows that henceforth he is to carry, into all the years that lie before him, the love that he had for the home that was his. He made it, or it was made for him, but he must love it as long as he lives. It is one of the things that steadies a man for life, that gives the family a feeling of unity as nothing else can, to have had one home for many years. It is one of the awful curses of shifting about from house to house that it makes it impossible for children to keep forever the sacred and beautiful feeling that one home was their home.

Thirdly, there are those other relations which we all have to our personal ambitions and ideals. A man goes out into life to make something of himself and his life. He fashions the ideal of a life that he would like to live. Now, it is a hard thing to have that plan disturbed, to have that dream broken. But many a man has passed through this hard experience. Very few men can really keep at the career which they marked out for themselves and learned to love amid the dreams and idealizations of generous and enthusiastic youth. Very few men can keep to that all their lives and say in their old age, "I have fulfilled the highest ambition and purpose of my youth." Something comes in to disturb a man's relations to his cherished object and ambition in life.

And then, of course, that which applies to the ambition in general, applies also and is especially true of all the detailed purposes in life. There is a great deal of sorrow in our city, a great deal of unspoken pain which comes to myriads of people from the disappointment that has borne a keen edge of pain upon their souls, amid the separations and the defects and perplexities and the changes of their business life.

Darkened Faith.

When one inquires into the meaning of all this and what it does for mankind one finds, of course, that the effect of sorrow in all its different forms is to darken men's hopes and to darken men's faith. Their hopes are darkened. "If there are all these disappointments and defeats and separations then what am I to look forward to? Upon what can my hopes fasten themselves that I may live a man's life henceforth with rest in my heart? And on what am I to fix my faith amidst all this change? I cannot interpret these things. I cannot see why this has come and why that has gone. I cannot tell the meaning for me, or for anybody else, of the thing that has happened. Why has it happened? On what can I fix my faith so as to possess an assurance that everything shall at last work together for good?" When sorrow has thus broken down our hope and our faith, it has begun to disintegrate our character. There are a few select, heroic souls that can keep their honor when they have no hope and can maintain some measure of self-respect when they have lost all faith in the meaning of the universe, but these are rare, rare souls,—one to be found in a century or half a thousand years, one select soul here and there groping in antiquity, standing peerless amid the dark flow of the generations, a soul that was able to resist the disintegrating effect of sorrow and despair upon character. For character is that which a man builds out of his hopes, is that which a man builds upon his faith. Take away the faith and take away the hopes and a man has only despair, a man has only self-will and self-dependence to build on. How can you have aught of a noble and lofty and a generous character made out of foundations and materials like that?

How, then, are we to face this wide, wide, terrible, constant pressure of sorrow upon the race and upon the individual? What are we to do? How shall we master it?

False Cures.

In the first place I do not think we ought to go over and over the question as to the origin of evil, nor as to why this sorrow must come and that sorrow must come. I never found anybody yet who got any betterment of their faith or any purification of their character by any answer that they ever discovered to those questions; except when a man found out that some definite sin had exacted some definite penalty. Then he ought to know it and to face the fact. But, in the next place, I do not think that any imitation of the ancient Stoics will help us to confront the power of sorrow. The Stoic said, "I do not explain the presence of evil in the world, but I will simply with a perfect heart endure it. I will depend upon myself and the best thoughts I can win." Stoicism produced a distant, high, self-respecting character, but it only maintained itself by keeping itself away from the world. Stoicism is not philanthropic, is not pitiful, is not sympathetic. Although it is serene and admirable, Stoicism stands apart from the flow of things and can only maintain itself by looking distantly upon the sorrow of the world in order, if possible, to put its own at a distance. Nor will mere denial of the reality of the thing make the best of sorrow. I do not think it will help us to say, "There is no evil; there is no sorrow." I do not think it will cure the matter to try and live it down by denying it; for, in the first place, it is a lie, and, in the next place, the attempt that many of our friends are making to cure it after this fashion is really going to leave those in a helpless sorrow who must carry the burdens which cannot be cured. Nor will it do to say, to wish in our hearts that a divine miracle should abolish it. I do not know anything that would destroy character more certainly than the instant abolition of sorrow by a miracle. The man who loses all faith because sorrow is near, loses his character, as I have tried to show. No less certainly would that man lose his character upon whom some divine miracle should be exerted to deliver him from all sorrow. He could never build up a noble, sympathetic, serene, generous, pure and true and trustworthy character who lived in an atmosphere prepared for serenity continually.

It is the message of our text concerning Christ which alone comes with a true meaning and a true power to the heart of man. Our God has made known to us here that he is like a high priest who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Priests were often bad people, priests were often tyrants, priests were often greedy and selfish; but there is no more beautiful word in all the ancient world, when you come to study and understand its inner meaning, than that word priesthood,—than that word priest; And in the Old Testament the priest is so described that, apart from the failures of the individual men to fulfill the ideal, we ought to feel our hearts turn to the priests. There is no more glorious figure in all the history of the ancient world than that of the high priest on the great day when he went in within the holy veil carrying the blood of the lamb and gave it up to Jehovah as and for the life of the people. How they loved the man, as taking their life, he disappeared with their life and entered into the presence of the eternal! And after he had prayed there for the whole congregation and when he came out and lifted up his hands and delivered the message of God to the people, how they must have loved him! Out from the fellowship of the Eternal he seemed to them to have come to speak the message of the everlasting heart unto them all. When he went in it was with the humility of the people; when he came out it was with the pity and the mercy of God. When he went in he carried their sorrows upon his heart, pleading for them before God; when he came out he was still thinking of their sorrows but also of the power of Jehovah to deliver his people from their travail and their distress.

The Great High Priest.

Here we are told that the Son of the Eternal God, the Son of his love, is the high priest of all mankind, touched with the feeling of our infirmities. So we turn, of course, always back to Christ, always back to that life which He lived, and we say to ourselves, "The Son of God was the Man of Sorrows and acquainted with griefs. The Son of Man was the greatest, purest, wisest heart that ever lived; therefore He sorrowed most. The one that aimed highest, the one that took the deepest grasp of the meaning of life, loved even the world most. The heart that was most sensitive of all hearts to every stroke of opposition and evil upon its quivering, sensitive cords, the heart that of all hearts knew the intensest agony of the spirit of man, He is the Son of God. The Son of God is the Son of Man, then, sorrowing, entering into griefs, sounding hitherto unplumbed depths of woe, going into the abyss of darkness out of love for Men!" So we say to ourselves: "We have in the heart of God Himself a heart that knows our woe, that feels our sorrows." I am not to think of God as one waiting at the end of my long journey to say, "Well done, you bore your sorrows bravely. I was watching you from afar. Now enter into my joy." Something infinitely better than that is ours. It is a heart that has proved its own real sympathy for man in the wonder and mystery of the incarnation and the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. This is the one great message the world has been able to live on. It surpasses every other message that can be delivered to the sorrowing. I have never heard of anything that ever approached it for the power that lies in the very heart of it, namely, that God has felt the woe of man, God has Himself entered into it. And God has Himself proved this share in our sorrow to be His, has evidenced it to us in the most absolute and real form conceivable. Any man who wants to know whether the end of all his sorrow is to be joy may think of the heart of God in Jesus Christ. Any man who wants to know whether anyone can understand him, to whom he can go with all the darkness, he can not speak to men and all the bitterness he can not describe to himself—to him the message of this gospel is now given. Yes, he can come here into the presence of this living Son of God, this High Priest touched with the feeling of our infirmities.

No verse of the New Testament, even on the literary side of it, is more exquisitely turned than that verse. We would not give up for much fine gold to be able to think of God, of the Son of God, the Eternal Christ, and to say, "He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities." The anguish you writhe under goes to His heart. Your sorrow is His sorrow. Your disappointment reaches Him. If He sees what is the origin and outcome of it all, because He is wiser than you, that does not for a single moment interfere with the fact that your dull pain burdens Him, that the quivering heart of the High Priest is touched with the feeling of your infirmities. He knew what was coming when He approached the grave of Lazarus; He knew that there was in Him from His Father the power to raise that man from the dead; He knew that He was about to wipe away the tears of Martha and Mary and make smiles of radiance break over those eyes, and yet, looking into the sorrow of Mary, looking into the anguish of honest Martha's heart, He wept; He Himself burst into tears. A man may know why his child is suffering thus, he may know why his little one must undergo this operation, may know that the little one will be better all his life for it; but when that little one is laid on the table the strong man's heart quivers, the man's eyes are filled with tears. So it is with the great High Priest. He knows what is coming to you out of that sorrow of last week; He knows what is coming to others out of their disappointments and their separations and their dull and heavy loads of despair. He knows it all, knows the best and the most glorious that can be made out of it all. And yet at this moment, looking down upon your heart that He loves so much, looking down into your love which He cherishes in His own deep, everlasting love, He feels for you, carries you before the face of God. He is touched—touched today—with what touches you. Amen.

TO CONSTANCE.

By F. A. Noble.

Fairer far than any flowers
Ever made by sun and showers;
Delicate beyond the traces
Of the penman's studied graces.
Are the words my Constance wrote
In her sweet and cherished note.

Evermore 'tis words like these,
Writ with sole intent to please;
Evermore 'tis kindly deeds
Speaking louder than the creeds,
Which so help us on our way
As we journey day by day.

Thanks, dear Girlie, for your thought,
And the joy your flowers brought,
In my heart a song is singing;
In my home is gladness ringing;
Fragrance floats upon the air;
Skies are bluer everywhere.

REVIEW.

Lesson for June 30: Read 1 Cor. chapter 15. Golden Text: "God hath both raised up the Lord and will also raise us up by his own power." 1 Cor. 6:14.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

ALL of this quarter's lessons have dealt with the sublime theme of the resurrected, the ascended and the ever-living Christ. They help us to see our Lord after his earth life as teacher and example has ceased (John 20:29). Now he stands forth in the more glorious aspect of our perpetual Companion, Helper, Comforter and Advocate, for "we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. 4:18). We need continually to train our spiritual eyes to discern Jesus in this more glorious aspect.

Lesson I—Resurrection of Jesus, Luke 24, 1-12.

Golden Text: Now is Christ Risen.—1 Cor. 15:20.

Topic: The Risen Christ.

Verse Topics: 1—To complete Embalming. 2—Obstacles Removed (great difficulties always yield to the combined power of love, active faith and God's angels or sent ones). 3—The Forgotten Lamp. 4—Dumbfounded Women. 5—The Great Fear. 6—To the Testimony. (If we will but remember, believing how he spake unto us, many things that now are perplexing will be made clear.) 7—Words Fulfilled. 8—Awakened Hearers. 9—Telling Others. 10—First Gospel Preachers. (Women were the first divinely commissioned preachers of the gospel of a risen Christ.) 11—Skeptics for Hearers. 12—Proofs Demanded.

Lesson II—Jesus Appears to Mary, John 20, 11-18.

Golden Text: Behold, I am alive.—Rev. 1:18.

Topic: The Revealed Christ.

Verse Topics: 11—Tears of Unbelief. (Lack of faith in God's word brings us to gloom and tears.) 12—Joyful Visitors. 13—Reproving Question. 14—Grief's Blindness. (How prone we are not to see that Jesus is standing up ready to take away our sorrows.) 15—Women's Prominence. 16—The Lord Disclosed. 17—Joy to Others. (Many Christians are joyless because they would in self satisfaction cling to the things Christ provides and not go to carry his joy to others.)

Lesson III—The Walk to Emmaus, Luke 24, 13-35.

Golden Text: Did not our heart burn?—Luke 24:32.

Topic: The Christ of Prophecy.

Verse Topics: 13—Woe-begone Disciples. 14—Talking About Jesus. (To think or talk about Jesus always brings him to our side and into our hearts.) 15-16—Jesus with Them. 17—The Questioning Teacher. 18—Astonished Cleopas. 19—Power of Character. 20—Recital of Facts. 21—Fading Hopes. 22-24—Perplexities Reviewed. 25-26—Unintelligent Ones. (They had missed the real point of the Scriptures, warning to all who follow.) 27—First Sunday School. 28-29—Entreating Jesus. 30—A Serving Master. 31—Jesus Revealed. 32—Enlightened Hearts. (No earthly experience is more blessed than that which comes when our hearts are warmed with the power of the enlightened Word.) 33-35—Witnessing for Christ.

Lesson IV—Jesus Appears to the Apostles, John 20, 19-29.

Golden Text: Blessed are they that—John 20:29.

Topic: The Convincing Christ.

Verse Topics: 19—Precaution in Fear. (They allowed not even fear to prevent their assembling.) 20—Convincing Proofs. 21—Startling Commission. 22—Symbol of Commission. 23—Effectual Effort. 24—Notional Absentee. (Thomas fancied he had a good excuse for staying from the assemblage of the saints, and thus he missed the greatest conceivable blessing, that of meeting the risen Christ. 25—Witnesses Discredited. 26—Unhappy Days. 27—Practical Evidence. 28—Adoring Exclamation. 29—Faith Without Sight. (Faith based on Christian testimony and not on sight, has been fruitful of the largest blessings of the world.)

Lesson V—Jesus and Peter, John 21, 15-22.

Golden Text: Lovest thou me?—John 21:17.

Topic: The Christ of Love.

Verse Topics: 15—A Decisive Test. (Christ's question aimed at the root of things. Love is the true test of our devotion.) 16—The Greatest is Love. 17—Impressive Repetition. 18—Martyr for Love. (With all of Peter's shortcomings his heart was right and his spirit became Christ-like even to martyrdom.) 19—Glory in Suffering. 20—Voluntary Following. 21—Prying into Future. (Ours should not be Peter's question, but rather that of Paul's—"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?") 22—The Present is Ours.

Lesson VI—The Great Commission, Matt. 28, 16-20.

Golden Text: Lo, I am with you.—Matt. 28:20.

Topic: Christ Our Companion.

Verse Topics: 16—The Farewell Assemblage. A Mountain Retreat. 17—The Royal Appearance. 18—Kindly Declaration. The Powerful One. (The growth of Christianity in the world from its small and humble beginning is most convincing proof of the power of its leader.) 19—The Far-reaching Orders. (It is a personal command applying to "every one that heareth."—Rev. 22:17.) Seal of Discipleship. 20—Instructions for Subjects. Perpetual Presence. (What an inspiring thought that with every "go ye" there is a powerful "Lo, I am with you alway"!)

Lesson VII—Jesus Ascends Into Heaven, Luke 24, 44-53; Acts 1, 1-11.

Golden Text: While he blessed.—Luke 24:51.

Topic: The Ascended Christ.

Verse Topics: Acts 1:1. The Continued Ministry. (Christ's ministry began in person, is continued in the spirit through his obedient followers.) 2—Holy Spirit Dispensation. 3—Pattern Conversation. 4—Promised Power. (The waiting of the disciples was not a season of idleness, but of preparation by prayer and service.) 5—Cleansing unto Holiness. 6—Asked Amiss. 7—Unanswered Prayer. 8—Abounding Power. (God wants us to be strong, not in our own strength, but in the Lord and in the power of his might.) 9—Passing from Earth. 10—Angel Visitors. 11—The Returning Christ. Luke 24:52—The Ten Days' Waiting.

Lesson VIII—The Holy Spirit Given, Acts 2, 1-11.

Golden Text: When he, the Spirit.—John 16:13.

Topic: Christ's Return Through Spirit.

Verse Topics: Disciples in Readiness. (The way to receive a blessing is to be in readiness for it serving the Lord.) 2—The Hurricane Sign. 3—The Sign of Fire. 4—Divine Power Transferred. (The Holy Spirit is the very spirit of God. We all may possess this personal power.) 5—World in Readiness. 6—Astounding Effect. 7—The Changed Lives. 8—Question of Surprise. 9, 10—Rule of Nations. (The harvest truly was great, but the laborers were few.) 11—New View Dawning.

Lesson IX—Jesus Our High Priest in Heaven, Heb. 9, 11-14, 24-26.

Golden Text: He ever liveth.—Heb. 7:25.

Topic: Christ's Work in Heaven.

Verse Topics: 11—The Glorious Outlook. "Looking unto Jesus," the very keynote of this book, is more joyous than the looking unto aught else in the universe.) 12—Contrasted Sacrifices. 13—The Argument. 14—Power of Blood. (Recall various causes besides that of Christ's service, in which persons have given their blood for the betterment of others; and the glory of such service.) 24—Our Heavenly Priest. (He will stand by us before God to the end.) 25—Needing no renewal. 26—Sufficiency of Sacrifice. 27—Death Not the End. 28—Completed Salvation.

Lesson X—Jesus Appears to Paul, Acts 22, 6-16

Golden Text: I was not disobedient.—Acts 26:19.

Topic: Christ's work on earth.

Verse Topics: 6—Chief of Persecutors. 7—The Vine and Branches. 8—Our Living Savior. (We manifest our love or hatred toward Jesus by our love or hatred toward his children.) 9—Hearing Shall Not Hear. 10—Change of Masters. (Do we, like Saul, choose Jesus as our master as soon as we truly learn to know about him?) 11—Damascus is Reached. 12—The Human Helper. 13—Brotherly Love for Enemy. 14—God's Choice. 15—The Changed Life. 16—God's Questioning. (A sense of unworthiness is no reason for our delay in accepting Christ.)

Lesson XI—Jesus Appears to John, Rev. 1, 9-20

Golden Text: Jesus Christ the same.—Heb. 13:8.

Topic: Christ's present glory.

Verse Topics: 9—Tribulation in Exile. 10—The Comforter Present. (When earthly tribulation was present then heavenly comfort came.) 11—Mighty Trumpet Voice. 12—Precious Light Bearers. 13—The Glorified One. (Jesus here still shows himself to be the son and brother and sympathizing lover of man.) 14—Magnify the Lord. 15—Hear All People. 16—Sublime Signs. 17—Reassuring One. 18—Resurrection Hope. He simply speaks of that which shall be true of all who are partakers of his resurrection.) 19—The Commission Given. 20—Mysteries Cleared.

Lesson XII—A New Heaven and a New Earth, Rev. 21.

Golden Text: He that overcometh.—Rev. 21:7.

Topic: The Heavenly Renewal.

Verse Topics: 1—Heavenly Newness. (If any man is in Christ he is a new creature and contributes to new heavenly conditions.) 2—Bride of God. 3—God's Dwelling Place. 4—Devil's Works Destroyed. (We are safe in associating every evil thing in the world with the devil; every good and truly joyous thing with God.) 5—Commission Repeated. 6—The Invitation. (Blessed are they that do thirst for the good things that our Heavenly Father can give.) 7—Condition and Promise. 22—God is a Spirit. 23—The Heavenly Light. 24—"I am the way." 25—No Darkness. 26—Glorious Gospel. 27—God's Pledge. (Our Heavenly Father wants your name and my name to be written in the book of life. Our names will be there if we are willing. Are we?)

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

By Peter Ainslie.

HERE is no more fascinating theme in the scriptures than the resurrection. Like many other New Testament doctrines, it has not as large a place in our present-day thoughts as it deserves, but it is the crown of all things. It is the one tune of the ages and all Divine music has been set to it. It was the consummation of the Master's earthly service. In Him we have read our possibilities. God raised up Jesus from the dead and he has promised to raise us up. The grave is naught beside the resurrection. We may weep at its silent doors, but the day is not far distant when those doors shall be flung flat into the dust and this corruptible shall put on incorruption. God can gather up this wasting body and form it into perfect beauty more easily than are old filthy rags gathered up and transformed into beautiful and spotless paper. All things of worth have their resurrection. I hold in my hands a sapphire. Where did it come from? Once it was clay and formed a beaten footpath, but by freeing itself from foreign substances it became white and then clear and then caught in its bosom the blue rays of the sun and at once it became valuable—its resurrection! Here is an opal. Once it was sand as worthless as the clay, but it arranged itself in parallel lines and caught the blue, red, purple and green of the sun's light and was increased ten-thousand fold in value. This diamond; where did it come from? Once it was soot, but by its own process it exchanged its blackness for the power of reflecting all the rays of the sun at once and it became the most valuable thing in the world. Now if out of such mean things as filthy rags man can bring spotless paper, and if out of clay sand and soot God can bring a sapphire, an opal and a diamond, it ought not to be thought incredible that out of corruption God can bring incorruption. Our resurrection will be like the resurrection of Jesus save that His resurrection was alone and ours will be a great host getting up from their narrow beds together to go to meet the king. He will put robes upon us and with His hand He will set crowns upon our heads. Now we are like soldiers fighting in the battle; then we will be like victors receiving the applause of the populace. Only a night intervenes between us and the resurrection—a little further contest, then a night in the grave and we are up in the morning for a joy that knows no abatement. This body shall live again and then it will be without form or hunger or fear, for the heart will not know how to sorrow nor the eyes to weep and there shall be no more death and the grave shall be absolutely destroyed. Many wonder what kind of bodies we shall have. That is a small thing to be concerned about. God will provide a body of such perfect beauty as we have never dreamed of; and He has thrown already pictures of that body from His royal art gallery into this world; and to be like the raised body of Jesus is enough or like the transformed body of Elijah. Read what Paul wrote—there is a spiritual body, for the material things shall have passed away. Beautiful morning for which the Christian looks!

Our Father, thou hast redeemed us and we trust to thy favor both for keeping and our resurrection through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE SOLID FOUNDATION.

Eph. 2:20. References, Isa. 28:16; Matt, 7:24, 25; 21:42; 1 Cor. 3:10-15.

It is generally supposed that we Americans don't have time to build foundations. We are absorbed in the practical, in the finished product. Whatever may have been true in the past, this charge cannot well be sustained at the present time. The hard-headed business man is learning that the most practical thing is a solid foundation. The truth of this proposition was not at first determined by reflective thought. Disaster, wreckage, in a word, experience tells the story. In this we have the latest conclusions of psychology that "action precedes knowledge." A great building was condemned in one of our large cities recently because the foundation was not sufficient for the weight of the building. The venturesome spirit which is alright when held in proper check, costs us very dear sometimes. In order to save trouble there is an ordinance in most cities which requires that each building shall have a foundation (specifying in detail) which corresponds to the structure which is to be erected.

Walking down one of the principal thoroughfares in Chicago you will see a group of men working away in a most prosaic fashion. You wonder why the passerby stops and gazes in wonder at them. Upon inquiry you will find that it is something that he cannot see which holds him. Ninety feet below the surface there are workmen busy building pillars of concrete upon which the great building is to rest.

"Wiser Than the Children of Light."

Is this still true? Alas, I fear that it is with most people! And yet we should not despair and grow pessimistic. Many men who would not think of allowing material to go into the foundation of a building which had not been thoroughly tested seem to have but little concern about the groundwork of the municipal life. They know but little about the teacher who is helping their children to lay the foundation stones of their future career. Or perhaps he makes adequate provision for his social and intellectual wants, but neglects the moral and religious foundation. He will find that he has rejected the corner stone and sooner or later the weakness of the entire superstructure will be most evident.

The city of Galveston was built upon a receding coast, and for over fifty feet there is nothing but silt. But in rebuilding they are taking every possible precaution. The time is coming when we will exhibit the same wisdom with reference to the immaterial, the eternal interests of life.

A Practical Test.

"Hearing and doing we build on the rock; hearing alone, we build on the sand." We may admire Jesus and give him intellectual homage as one of the great sages of the world, but unless we allow him to take hold of our moral and religious nature we have built our life upon the sand. We may prophesy in his name. We may do many wonderful works, as measured by the world's standard, but the great test is doing the Master's will from the heart.

Paul says other foundations can no more lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ. He knew; he had made the test. Some have tried to build a church upon great reformers. But we see the folly of that. It was not in keeping with the spirit of these great men. Some would build their life upon self-righteousness, but such a character is insecure and disappointing. If we but build our life upon Christ it will be secure from every wind that blows and every storm that beats for it is founded upon the eternal "Rock of Ages."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

By Charles Blanchard.

DOING AS CHRIST WOULD.

Topic June 30; John 15:7-16.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

We have in this simple statement the conditions of #### Spiritual Life.

and the conditions are analogous to those in natural life. The Master uses the vine and the branches to illustrate his meaning. Henry Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" is an application and amplification of this fact illustrated by Jesus. They are natural and therefore reasonable. Yet strange and sad it is to find that multitudes regard the spiritual life as something wholly apart from the natural laws of physical existence and growth. I judge it is in part the result of a misapplication of that Scripture, "The natural man revieweth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." So many have come to consider the conditions of spiritual life as entirely distinct from the natural, and as therefore unreasonable. The spiritual is associated with the miraculous; and hence the conditions are something without the individual, and without which he has little or nothing to do, only to receive. This is the old doctrine of "salvation all of grace"—very comforting to our spiritual laziness!

Abiding in Christ.

The spiritual life is not passive, but intensely active. We see this in the Master's own self-abandon for the sake of others, of whom we have this briefest of all biographies—he "went about doing good." Still many hold, or seem to hold, this passive idea of spiritual life. To guard against this notion, Jesus adds: "Heaven is my father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

The spiritual is not selfish; but our conceptions of it, or our exemplifications of it, oftentimes appear so. Practically men ask, "What is there in it for me?" The majority do not ask, "What would Jesus do?" Or, with startled and subdued soul, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" It is an encouraging sign that many in the churches are coming to ask these questions. Charles M. Sheldon's book, "In His Steps," or "What Would Jesus Do?" has served its best purpose, perhaps, in quickening the Christian conscience by this pertinent inquiry. While there we must abide in Christ and let his words abide in us, for our own salvation and spiritual life as of all life, is fruit-bearing. The Master does not ask of his disciples what he did not require of himself. He imposes on us the same conditions. "As the father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my father's commandments, and abide in his love." And, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you."

The unselfishness of the spiritual is emphasized in this: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." "Even as Christ laid down his life for us, so we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren," is the apostolic comment.

Not Servants But Friends.

Jesus puts the spiritual on the nobler basis of friendship, intimate companionship, self-revelation. "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you my friends; for all things that I have heard of my father I have made known unto you." This is the true basis of the spiritual life. It is true that John and Peter and James and Paul call themselves the servants (slaves) of Jesus Christ; but it is in the sense of unreserved self-surrender and utter devotion of love—the holiest of all friendship—that of self-surrender and self-revelation.

Spiritual Choice.

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain." While this applied especially to the apostles, yet it is true that the worthiest and best in friendship, in love, in the spiritual, is not so much our own choice as that of our friends for us. It is love's way.

A certain religious paper has for the heading of one of its departments, "Religion in general." Somebody says "Religion in particular is what is wanted among the people."

STUDIES IN MISSIONS.

By Chas. S. Medbury.

THE DEPLORABLE IGNORANCE CONCERNING MODERN MISSIONS.

[Supplementary to the C. E. reading courses.]

IT HAS been well said that "information is the panacea for apathy and antipathy" as to the great work of world-wide evangelization. It is the natural thing for human hearts to respond eagerly to the call to partnership in such a work when they know what the work is and the possible outreach of their own lives in it. When men are taught let none be surprised that they give liberally. Rather let us marvel when they do not, for this is the unnatural thing and indicates a stifling of the better impulses common to us all. Underneath all other phases of the missionary problem there is this point of teaching. A people who know of the work and the workers will love it and them and those who love will give! Nor is there a more thrilling theme for the preacher or greater romance for the reader than the unfolding of the work of God through the lives of noble heralds of the cross in the dark lands of the East and destitute portions of our own fair land.

If the churches could but see the fields, understand the difficulties of the workers and share in the joys of gospel victories it does seem that the response to the call for the work would thrill the hearts of Christians.

But let none blame the brother or sister who does not know. Rather censure him who knows and then withholds the information that would thrill the heart.

Call to Conquest of Nations.

Let preachers speak with voices with the ring of old-time prophets when they bring before their people the assured conquest of the nations! No weak and halting—but please-let-me-take-a-collection attitude rather, proudly and in the confidence of the most exalted mission of the earth sound forth the proclamation of the King! The message has dignity—it involves the world's uplifting; it has tenderness—the workers at the front and the souls in darkness with whom they labor cry out for the cheer we may give; it is full of promise—the records of triumph in all lands may well be linked with achievements of the apostles!

God bless the efforts being put forth for the enlightenment of the younger generation. They will surely come to the morrow with more adequate conception of the world-wide obligation of the followers of our Lord. One generation thrilled through and through with the truth that the business of the church is the evangelization of the world would do the work within its day. We have not yet asked or God would give the uttermost parts of the earth for the possession of our Lord.

Those who have lost an infant are never, as it were, without an infant child. The other children grow up to manhood and womanhood and suffer all the changes of mortality. This one alone is rendered an immortal child. Death has arrested it with his kindly harshness and blessed it into an eternal image of youth and innocence.—Leigh Hunt.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.

JESUS OUR HIGH PRIEST IN HEAVEN.

Monday—Hebrews, 9, 1-10.

NEED no earthly tabernacle to assure me of the interest of the Most High in my conflicts and joys and troubles. God Himself has become a partaker of my flesh and blood. He was tempted in all points as I am, though without sin.

I need no golden altar of incense to remind me that my worship and petitions are acceptable to Him. I have heard it from the lips of His Son that "whatsoever I ask in His name" shall be given, and that "the Father Himself loveth" me.

I need no cherubim to tell me of the majesty of God. I have seen Him myself; and the splendor of the heavens has become pale, sun and stars have lost their light, in the presence of His glory as revealed in the face of Jesus Christ.

I need no ark of the Covenant to publish to me the good news that between the Lord and me lasting relations have been established. In my Saviour, God and man are one—His love and mercy are mine; my love and obedience are His.

So the shadows of heavenly things have disappeared; for the fullness of time has come. Inarticulate symbols have given place for me to the Word manifest in the flesh.

Tuesday—Hebrews, 9, 11-18.

The design of my Redeemer's sacrifice is that I may be free to "serve the living God."

When I come into that Holy Presence, when I know that He is near, when I feel that I am face to face with the High and Lofty One, the consciousness of sin oppresses and paralyzes me, and I sink into the dust at His feet.

But I remember Christ's humiliation for my sake, and Christ's blood shed for me, and my fainting spirit is restored. I am unclean; but the great offering of Calvary was presented that I might be able to worship God. Thus my fears are scattered. If my intellect cannot fully explain the Atonement, my conscience and my heart confess its power.

Jesus did not die simply to deliver me from the penalty of my sin. By His Cross I am purged from dead works and all my filthinesses; and now I can serve His Father and mine.

Wednesday—Hebrews, 9, 19-28.

Now once at the end of the ages hath Christ been manifested, to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. This great Epistle insists on the expiatory character of the death of Jesus.

And not this Epistle alone. To the Corinthians, St. Paul writes that "God hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God through Him"; to the Ephesians, that "we have redemption through His blood"; to the Thessalonians, that "Christ died for us." St. Peter declares that Jesus "bare our sins in His own body on the tree," and suffered "the just for the unjust." St. John gives glory to Him who has "washed us from our sins in His own blood."

In heaven itself they sing a new song, saying "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation."

Yes, the death of my Lord in my room is the everlasting reason of my peace with God. When I was yet the chief of sinners, Christ died for me—that is the answer to the deepest need, the anodyne for the most agonizing distress of my heart. Simply to His Cross I cling.

Thursday—Leviticus, 16, 11-91.

I cannot suppose that the slaying of the one goat and the sending of the other into the wilderness actually expiated the offences of the whole people of Israel. Often individual men and women brought far costlier sacrifices for single transgressions, for involuntary transgressions, for transgressions against the merely ceremonial law.

I am driven, as surely many in Israel must have been driven, to recognize and confess its symbolic character. It pointed forward to something better, nobler, fuller, more satisfying; something which could expiate for transgressions innumerable as the sand on the shore and the stars in the sky. Jesus Christ is the Reality of which both of these goats were the shadows. He is the victim slain for me, the sacrifice offered once in the end of the world and never needing to be offered again. Moreover He carries into the wilderness all my iniquities—carries them far and for ever away from me.

Why should I fear? It is a full salvation I have in Him.

Friday—Hebrews, 7, 15-28.

"He ever liveth to make intercession."

When Christ was on earth He lived for others and not for Himself. It is the same with Him in His glorified state. His thought, His care, His labors, His prayers, are for me. Heaven would scarcely be heaven to Him if He were not permitted to carry on there His work on my behalf.

And what intercession can equal His?

It is based on a perfect knowledge of me and a perfect sympathy with me. My experience is not strange to Him, He has passed through it. He has trodden the winepress alone.

It asks the best gifts for me. Let me read the seventeenth of St. John, most wonderful chapter in a wonderful gospel, and I shall know what Christ seeks; my keeping, my holiness, my consecration, my union with other disciples, my home-coming at last to behold His glory.

And its power springs from the atonement He presented for me. The cry of my sins may be for my punishment; but the cry of His blood is louder still, and it is all for my forgiveness, my "sight, riches, healing of the mind."

"I dread the prayers of John Knox," Mary of Scots said, "more than an army of ten thousand men." But who will say for how much the prayers of Jesus should count?

Saturday—Hebrews, 10, 11-22.

I am afraid that I do not think enough of the endless life of Jesus Christ. It is right to dwell often on the cross. It is right to make much of the atoning death. But I must not separate the cross from Him who endured it, the death from Him who bore it; and though He died once, He is alive for evermore. It is not the tree of sorrow and of glory, viewed by itself, that saves me. It is not the transaction of Calvary, considered as an event of the past. It is the person, once crucified, but now exalted, who loved and loves me more than I can tell. It is Christ Himself, delivered for my offences and raised again for my justification.

If death had ended all His activity, what real hope could have been mine? The cross only gave His saving energies larger scope and range. He lives. He always lives. At no instant, in no emergency, am I without a Redeemer, an Advocate with the Father.

Therefore let me draw near with a true heart, in fullness of faith.

Sunday—Hebrews, 12, 18-29.

God revealed Himself to the fathers on the wild heights of Horeb; but I draw near to Mount Zion and see the towers of the temple of the Most High. He approached them in the solitudes of the desert; but I come to the cities of the living God, where the nations of the saved walk in white raiment. At Sinai, the angels were in chariots of fire, awful, appalling; for me they gather as on a day of triumph, their faces bright with love. The men of old had lofty privileges, but I belong to the church of the first-born, and however poor I am my name is enrolled in the archives of heaven. The Lord wrapped Himself in cloud for them; but I am brought close to God the Judge of all and I wait without dread before His face. And the spirits of saints gone into the world of light, saints made perfect at last, are round about me. And instead of Moses, Jesus; and instead of the old covenant, the new and the better; and instead of the blood which cries for vengeance, the blood which appeals to God for grace and mercy and peace.

Who is so favored and so rich as I? What a strength, what a joy, what a spiritual triumph should be mine!

EXPOSITORY HINTS.

Professor R. R. Lloyd.

"That is which is begotten in her is of a holy spirit." (Matt. 1: 18-20.) Joseph, as the narrative clearly shows, believed that Mary had been controlled by "a spirit of fornication." (Hos. 4: 12; 5: 4). The angel, however, assures him that such is not the case. The child is conceived of a spirit that is holy ("a holy spirit"). We must remember, when we come to translate this verse that this epithet, "holy spirit," was not, at this time, the proper name of any particular spirit. It is not used as a proper name anywhere in the Old Testament. Josephus and Philo never use it as a proper name. This being true, we have no ground for believing that Joseph could have accepted it as such. And this angel would undoubtedly use on this occasion words which Joseph could readily understand. Besides, every careful Greek scholar knows that whenever a person or thing is introduced for the first time to the reader's attention the normal, descriptive epithet of that object is employed. In proof of this read Mark 3: 1: "And straightway there was in the synagogue a man in an unclean spirit." Later in the chapter this evil person is called "the unclean spirit" (lit. "the spirit, the unclean," v. 26). Neither of these epithets is a proper name. The former is an indefinite phrase, describing the nature ("spirit") and the ethical character ("unclean") of the person designated.

In accordance with these indisputable facts we ought to render Matthew 1: 18 and 20, as I have done. The reader will undoubtedly feel loath to accept this hint because he has been so long under the domination of the English versions, which have assumed that this is a proper name. None of these translators have ever given us a single evidence in support of their assumption. Bishop Wescott claims that this phrase "marks an operation, or manifestation, or gift of the spirit, and not the personal spirit" (cf. Ju. 7: 39; 1: 33; 20: 22; Mt. 1: 18, 20; 3: 11). Bishop Lightfoot, Dean Vaughan, Prof. Samuel Green and Meyer agree with him. Prof. Bruce says that "Baptize in holy spirit" (Mt. 3: 11) means baptize in "a stormy wind of judgment." (Expositor's Greek Testament.) These scholars clearly see the impossibility of translating the Greek epithet in question by "the holy spirit." But they did not see that the parallel epithets, "an evil spirit" (Judges 9: 23; 1 Kings 16: 14, 15, 16), "an unclean spirit" (Mk. 1: 23; 3: 30), "a dumb spirit" (Mk. 9: 17), are our only sure guides in this case. These teach us that "pneuma hagian" (Mt. 1: 18, 20) should always be rendered "a holy spirit." The meaning, then, of these verses is this, Jesus was begotten in Mary by a spirit—an invisible, thinking being—that is holy.

It is worthy of notice that this epithet is only used three times in Matthew's gospel (twice by the author, 1: 18, 20; and once by the Baptist 3: 11).

"He shall baptize you in holy spirit (or 'in a holy spirit') and fire." (Mt. 3: 11.)

The English versions read "the holy spirit." The Greek text has no article, hence we must not insert one in our translation unless it is absolutely necessary to make good sense. Such a necessity does not confront us here.

As I wrote in a previous hint, we have no evidence that the Greek words which we translate here constituted a proper name in the Old Testament, or in the days of the Baptist. He would not, therefore, use it as a proper name to these Pharisees and Sadducees.

We must also bear in mind the fact that John had no knowledge of the conception of Jesus through "a holy spirit" (Mt. 1: 18, 20); consequently he could not refer to that spirit in the words under consideration. Our present translation makes John teach that Jesus was going to baptize this "brood of vipers"—the Pharisees and Sadducees—in his own Father. Jesus was conceived of "the Holy Spirit" (1: 18, 20), and he is going to baptize these hypocrites in "the Holy Spirit." If this is a proper name of the same person, then Jesus was going to baptize men in his own Father. Such a thought never dawned upon the horizon of either Matthew or John. And we are delivered from such an unintelligible thought by simply adhering to the language of this gospel. All that John teaches is this: These persons will be baptized in a spirit that is holy; hence they will become under its power. Whether this is "a stormy wind of judgment" (Bruce), or some invisible person, may be disputed. The settlement of this matter has nothing to do with my present purpose, namely, to direct attention to the correct translation of the Greek phrase ("pneuma hagian").

The reader will not fail to observe that "holy spirit" is compared to a liquid element.

Berkeley, Cal.

The universal self-delusion is this: when a man has a good thought he fancies he has become what he thinks for the moment. Good thoughts are very good, but, unaccompanied by the difficult processes of character, they are often no better than soap bubbles.—Mozoomdar.

BOOKS...

A Century of Baptist Achievement, edited by A. H. Newman, D. D., LL. D., professor of Church History in McMaster University, Philadelphia; American Baptist Publication Society, 1901. Professor Newman's thought of a retrospect at the close of a great century was a very happy one. Not the Baptists alone, but the general intelligent public will appreciate this valuable chapter in church history. The work could hardly have been done better—either intensively or extensively.

Its thirty chapters may be divided into three parts, as follows: 1st. Introduction. This consists of two chapters—A Survey of Baptist History to 1801 by the editor, and A Survey of American Baptist Forces at the Beginning of the Nineteenth Century. In this first chapter Professor Newman has shown concisely, but clearly, how the denommization has made its way in the face of the fiercest persecution by Romanists and Protestants alike from Reformation times to the opening of the last century.

2nd. The central part in which many competent writers show how starting with the almost universal contempt of the wealthy and cultured classes the Baptists have steadily made their way until at the opening of our new century they command universal recognition and almost universal respect.

3rd. A conclusion consisting of a general survey of Baptist achievement and Baptists and the Twentieth century. The prospect is that the present achievement is only a beginning—a vantage ground for miraculous feats in the future.

But here and there a note of warning is sounded out. If Baptists become intoxicated with success, become self-reliant and allow themselves to be led aside from their great ultimate purpose of evangelizing the world they will suffer humiliation and loss.

The book throughout is characterized by a justifiable enthusiasm. But this zeal has sometimes led to statements that will be called in question by cold-hearted outsiders.

Very properly denominations closely allied with the Baptists are included in the general statistics, making the aggregate more than six and a half millions. Among these kindred denominations are especially the Free Will Baptists and the Disciples of Christ.

Old Fort Schuyler, by Everett T. Tomlinson—The Griffith and Rowland Press, Philadelphia—is a romance of the Mohawk valley. It is full of stirring events which culminated in the storming of Fort Schuyler by Barry St. Leger in 1777. Col. Gansevoort, who was in command of the fort, made a gallant defense, and in conjunction with other patriots helped to establish the independence of the United States. This story is full of movement and color. It has very little plot, and not much artistic skill in the handling of materials, yet it gives a vivid picture of an important historical epoch in the history of our country.

The Religious Condition of Young Men, by James F. Oates and published by Central Department of the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago, is a praiseworthy effort to study the young man from the standpoint of the new psychology. Young men are classified according to age, nationality and occupation. The differences between Christian and non-Christian young men in reference to church attendance, religious beliefs and personal habits are set forth in a series of tables. It lies outside the scope of the book to suggest solutions for the problem; all it attempts is to furnish data which enables one to see what is needed. The array of facts presented affords scope for reflection. The vastness and complexity of the problem are set forth in a very vivid manner.

Prof. George A. Coe, who writes the preface for this little book, truly says that "Christian workers need definite and special knowledge of the class of persons to which they minister." Mr. Oates ought to follow up this fine bit of diagnosis with a companion volume on the treatment of the case. Having shown what is to be done he should give us the advantage of his practical experience in the work for young men and try to tell us how to do it.

Birds of the Bible, by Madison C. Peters, D. D.—The Baker & Taylor Co., New York—is a fresh, unhackneyed and suggestive little book of a hundred and nineteen pages. The general reader will find in it much that is interesting and profitable, and the preacher will find in it many apt illustrations and many faithful homiletical suggestions. We quote from it elsewhere.

Dr. Peters has another book published by the same firm. It is entitled, "Why I Became a Baptist." In this book we have no interest whatsoever. The fact that Dr. Peters became a Baptist and the reasons for his becoming one do not concern us in the least. Our curiosity regarding the subject has not been strong enough to lead us even to open the book. Had the author undertaken to tell us how he became a Christian that would have been another matter.

The Chief's Daughter—A Legend of Niagara, by Paul Carus—The Open Court Publishing Company, Chicago—is a dainty little volume of 54 pages. The illustrations, which are tasteful and striking, are by E. Biederman. The story itself, although brief, is full of color and movement. At the heart of it is a deep lesson. Lelawala, the daughter of Eagle Bird, the chief of the Oniahgahrahs and the Ruler of the Cataracts, in obedience to an ancient oracle, gives herself in sacrifice in the thundering waters. Father Hennepin had taught her that the Lord sought not the sacrifice of life, but a living sacrifice. Disturbed in soul, she goes on to her fate, believing that, although her sacrifice would be the last of its kind, it would not be in vain. That not the form, but the fact of sacrifice is the eternal thing, is the lesson which is taught.

People will marry, and when they marry certificates of marriage is in order. Of marriage certificates there is an almost endless variety. Tastes differ, and happily tastes improve. The large illuminated, loudly decorated scroll with which the newly wedded pair were wont to be presented by the officiating minister has been relegated to the obscure country districts. Publishers are vying with one another to meet the demand for something that be at once ornate and simple. Few attempts to meet this demand have been more successful than that of Mrs. Dora E. W. Spratt in an illustrated booklet entitled "Husband and Wife," which comes from the Griffith & Rowland Press of Philadelphia. "Chaste" is the word that describes it. The illustrations are subdued and tasteful, and the poetical selections which make up the volume have been fitly chosen.

LABORATORY AND PULPIT—The Relation of Biology to the Preacher and his Message. By Wm. L. Poteat, M. A., the Griffith & Rowland Press, Philadelphia. The object which this book seeks to accomplish is not the gratuitous one of mediating between science and religion, for happily the author does not look upon them as at variance. Its object is the saner one of seeking to lead others to see the harmony which exists between these two branches of knowledge. That the task is still necessary in some quarters is but too apparent. There is no bugbear of which some scientists are more afraid than theology; and there is no bugbear of which some theologians are more afraid than science; but devout scientists and scientific theologians are not as scarce as they once were. The three lectures of which this volume is composed, and which were delivered before the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., are the attempts of a scientist to relate some of the generally accepted results of modern science with religious truth. The style of the lectures is clear and crisp, their spirit is eminently candid and fair, and their reasoning satisfactory and convincing. It is a good omen to find such a modern book coming from the center of Southern conservatism.

General Church News

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Rev. A. M. Ringland, D. D., was installed June 17, as pastor of the Presbyterian church at Berwyn.

Since January 1, Washington Park Congregational church has received thirty-seven persons into membership.

Bishop Edsall of North Dakota has accepted his election to the office of bishop-coadjutor of the diocese of Minnesota.

The North Shore Congregational church has voted to increase its pastor's salary and is planning for the erection of a church edifice.

Emmanuel Methodist church, now worshipping in the railroad depot on Randolph street near Forty-fourth avenue, is to occupy the edifice formerly belonging to the Episcopalians.

Children's day was observed in the Sunday school of the Fifth United Presbyterian church, Ravenswood, June 9. The attendance was over 600 and an offering exceeding $100 was taken to assist the new work in Evanston.

The Rev. M. Edward Fawcett, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Elgin, Ill., has resigned to accept the rectorship of St. Bartholomew's parish in Chicago, the resignation to take effect not later than the first of September and sooner, if possible.

South Congregational church, Rev. Willard B. Thorp, pastor, raised on June 9, the last $4,133 of their four-year-old debt, with a surplus of $333, and more pledges to be recorded. The whole amount has been raised since Easter.

Wesley Hospital, erected by the Methodists of Chicago, was informally opened June 17. The building has cost $210,000 and stands at the corner of Dearborn and Twenty-fifth streets. There will be a formal dedication when the last dollar due on it has been paid. The first patients will be received in a few weeks.

The North Side Christian church, Rev. T. S. Tinsley, pastor presents an interesting program of services for this month. On June 23 President McGarvey will ordain the church officers and in the evening will preach on "Are We a Denomination?" On June 27 Prof. H. L. Willett will lecture on "The Right and Wrong Use of the Bible."

The Sixty-third Street Christian church has had encouragement after a season of trial and disappointment. The work was almost broken up, but they moved away a few blocks and it began to grow again. Then they learned that the lots they had wanted for over a year were to be had at half their value. But the only money in sight was $9, raised by a Sunday school class. This inspired them so that on June 2 they lacked only $75 of the $700 required to pay for the lots.

The decennial celebration of the University of Chicago was observed June 15 and days following. The founder, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, and his wife were present and, of course, were enthusiastically received by the students. The cornerstone of the Press building was laid followed by same ceremony for Hitchcock Hall.

The trustees of the German Hospital, a charitable institution maintained by the German Lutheran churches of Chicago, have decided to enlarge the present hospital building on Larrabee street, near Grant place by an addition of seventy-five feet front, which will take up the vacant ground up to the corner. The improvement will cost $40,000.

While on his way to dedicate a church at Winnipeg, Rev. Dr. William E. Fawcett, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church at River Forest, was taken suddenly ill and died. For five years he was minister of Grace M. E. church on La Salle avenue, later of the First Methodist and the Park Avenue churches, so that he has been long known in Chicago.

The Methodist Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Chicago district held its second annual meeting at the Woodlawn Park M. E. church, Woodlawn avenue and Sixty-fourth street, June 12. These officers were elected: Mrs. John Lattimer, Oakland church, president; Mrs. V. Emerson, Englewood church, vice president; Mrs. Monroe, South Park church, secretary, and Mrs. Hubbel, Oakland church, treasurer.

The Rev. Camden M. Cobern of Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, Denver, has received a call to the pastorate of St. James' Methodist Episcopal church to succeed the Rev. Robert McIntyre, who resigned the pulpit of St. James' church some weeks ago on account of ill-health. His throat has troubled him seriously, and on the advice of physicians he proposes to rest. He agreed to continue his work till fall, to give the church time to find a successor.

The sixty-second session of the Rock River annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church will be held at the First church in Evanston, from October 9 until October 15. Evanston Methodists have entertained the conference but once, that was in 1886. Bishop C. C. McCabe, who has recently returned from a missionary tour through South America, will preside. It is expected that more than 350 delegates will attend the conference. The Rock River conference is the second largest in the country, and is the largest in the state. There are more than 300 churches with a membership of 53,250 in the conference. In addition to the regular pastors there are 555 local preachers. The value of the church property runs into the millions, and the salaries of the pastors exceed $300,000. The conference has partial control of Northwestern University, Garrett Biblical Institute, and Wesley Hospital.

The Adventists.

The thirtieth annual meeting of the California conference of Seventh Day Adventists convened June 5 at Oakland, Cal. There has been a material growth in membership and increase in offerings. Over $21,000 has been expended during the year in home and foreign mission work, besides the $40,000 or $50,000 paid to the conference laborers in this conference. Elder W. T. Knox, president of the California Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association, reported on the various institutions operating under the charter of that concern. The principal of these is the St. Helena Sanitarium. Institutions and departments have also been established at San Francisco, Sacramento, Los Angeles and Eureka. The Volume of business reported for the year is the highest in the history of the institution, something over $180,000. The publishing business amounted to over $300,000 for the year. Negotiations are now under way preparing to open another branch publishing house in Mexico, where books and publications will be printed in Spanish.

Baptist.

Six hundred and three students have been enrolled at Ottawa University during the year. The Baptists of Kansas have subscribed $30,000 for an endowment, and $15,000 more has been pledged in the city of Ottawa toward completing the new building. This secures to the college the $15,000 promised by Mr. Rockefeller. Seventeen young men and women graduated June 5.

The Atlanta, Ga., Baptist Woman's Union met June 4 and elected officers for the year. Arrangements have been made to put a matron at the railroad depot for the protection of women and girls arriving in the city alone. Lady missionaries from China addressed the meeting—Mrs. C. W. Pruitt and Miss Lula Whilden. They are soon to return to China and were each presented with a red-letter Testament bearing the inscription, "Lo, I am with you always."

The annual meeting of the Illinois Baptist Education Society, the oldest of its kind in the state, was held at Upper Alton, June 4. The society is in a flourishing condition.

A ministerial conference was held in connection with Shurtleff College anniversary. One of the principal addresses was by Rev. E. W. Hicks of Toulon, Ill., on "The Training for the Ministry Needed For the Present Age."

The forty-third annual conference of ministers and delegates of the Swedish Baptist church in Minnesota was held at Minneapolis, June 6 and 7; 200 delegates were present. The Swedish Lutheran church (Emanuel) was opened for the use of the conference in a mass meeting and this kindly and liberal action was much appreciated. The total adult membership in Minnesota is 5,742 and the Sunday school enrollment 4,865. Treasurer V. E. Hedberg reported that the various churches had raised $46,957.35.

Congregational.

Seventy-five years of church life was celebrated in May by the Trinitarian Congregational church of Concord, Mass. Inclusive of the original sixteen charter members 670 persons have been connected with the church. During the pastorate of Rev. Geo. A. Tewsbury, the present pastor, there have been 140 accessions.

The church at Wahoo, Neb., celebrated the thirtieth anniversary, May 25-27. Two hundred persons have been in its membership; $15,000 has been raised for home expenses and $3,000 for benevolence.

A unique honor has been received by Rev. Justin G. Wade of Oneida, Ill., in a birthday gift, presented by the united Sunday schools of all the denominations of the place. Mr. Wade is a graduate of Chicago Theological Seminary.

Sixty-six persons were admitted into fellowship at the First church, Manistee, Mich., June 2, as a result of the pastor's, Rev. A. M. Brodie, classes and the special services held.

Rev. C. R. Stockwell received thirteen into the membership of the church at Vicksburg, Mich., at the last communion, a partial result of ten days' services led by Evangelist C. C. Smith.

Central church, Topeka, Kas., received fifteen new members at the June communion. Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon wrote a hymn for the occasion, which was sung by the congregation.

During the four years' pastorate of Rev. W. D. Clark at Billings, Mont., 114 have been admitted to fellowship. On Children's day six children were baptized and eight received into the church.

There has been a great revival in Tyler, Texas. A tent was used and the attendance ranged from one to four thousand. Forty-seven persons have joined the Congregational church; some will unite with other churches. The Congregational pastor and people are raising money to buy a lot on which to build a church. They are now worshiping in the court house.

Rev. W. H. Hopkins was installed pastor of the Third church, Denver, May 31. From May 29-June 2, a series of services marked the twentieth anniversary of the church.

Rev. Henry Matson, for thirteen years the librarian of Oberlin College, died May 21, in his 72d year. President Finney's famous autobiography was entirely dictated to him.

The cornerstone of a new edifice for Plymouth church, Des Moines, Ia., was laid June 15. The cost of the church will be about $80,000 and the building will be one of the finest in Iowa. Rev. F. J. Van Horn, D. D., is pastor of the church, and Rev. A. L. Trisbee, D. D., is pastor emeritus.

The Year Book is just out and shows a total of 5,650 churches with 635,791 members. The additions during the year have been 48,602, 27,101 of these being on confession. The Sunday school scholars number 743,634. Benevolent contributions for the year were $2,212,536, and for home expenditure $7,497,930.

The Disciples.

Rev. H. C. Kendrick, who has been in charge at the Ninth Street church, Logansport, Ind., for nearly four years has resigned to accept a call to the church at Hagestown, Md.

Rev. F. O. Fannon of the First church, St. Louis, Mo., has resigned in order to accept a call to the First church, Sedalia, Mo.

The Christian church just completed at Parkersburg, W. Va., is unique. The ground-floor auditorium has a seating capacity of about 600. Just back and above the pulpit is located a gallery with considerable capacity, which can be used as a place of prayer. On a level with the pulpit is the baptistry, and on each side robing-rooms and library-rooms, which are separated from the main auditorium by curtains. On the top of the church is the roof-garden, where the Sunday school will be held, and where, during the warm weather, the regular services, both morning and evening, will be held. The lot, building, furnishing, everything complete, cost $8,000. It was dedicated May 26.

Rev. F. D. Draper has just held a twelve days' meeting at Carbon Hill, Ohio, resulting in twenty-nine accessions.

The church at Kankakee, Ill., where Rev. W. D. Deweese, ministers, reports for the year ending May 31, 1901: Increase by conversion, 74; by letter and statement, 40; total, 114; present membership, 210.

Rev. A. B. Cunningham, minister at Alexandria, Ind., started in upon his second year's work, with the church there out of debt. During the past year a debt of $1,000 has been raised by the congregation, and the mortgage lifted on the parsonage.

One peculiarity of the Vermont Avenue Christian church of Washington, D. C., is the attention given to moral reforms. The church is known as "The White Ribbon Church." From the pulpit and in the Sunday school and the three Christian Endeavor societies special and frequent emphasis is placed upon temperance and good citizenship. Patriotism is taught as a Christian virtue. Over the pulpit the Stars and Stripes are always seen. It is perhaps the only church in the country where "Old Glory" is in evidence fifty-two Sundays in the year.

The returns from Children's day are gratifying. The six days of June show receipts amounting to $7,939.06, or a gain of $35,549.91. There is also a gain of 283 contributing schools.

Vine Street church, Nashville, Tenn., has added fifty to its membership as the result of the three weeks' preaching by Rev. Z. T. Sweeney. About 5,000 persons attended the concluding union service.

The Michigan state convention met at Detroit the last week in May. The report of the work done during the year was encouraging. A number of churches are erecting buildings.

At Taylorville, Ill., Mrs. Caroline Davis has purchased the residence property adjoining the church and has made a gift of it to the church as a parsonage. The church building was the gift of her husband, Henry Davis.

During the four years' pastorate of Rev. W. Walters at Bedford, Ia., 214

FOOD FOR MEMORY.

The Kind That Builds Up the Brain.

It is hard to believe that certain kinds of food will strengthen the memory, and, yet under the condition of the brain depends the character of the mind, and its power to remember, and to exert itself in various ways and a healthy brain can only be maintained by well-selected food.

Now we know that daily use of the brain uses up certain parts that are thrown out through the pores to the outer surface of the skin. This waste is natural and must be made up from food.

Grape-Nuts Food was made especially to rebuild the brain and nerve centers. An experience in Chicago will illustrate.

Mrs. G. H. Baber, 528 South Paulina st., writes: "I had a terrible siege of gastritis, my stomach refused everything in the way of food until I got hold of Grape-Nuts. It was perfectly wonderful and marvelous to see the difference. I began to improve at once. I weighed myself about that time and found that I had 118 pounds to my credit. I gained in weight, strength and health steadily and rapidly, and now weigh 160 pounds and am strong and in better health than ever in my life.

I have lately had a seven months' course of vocal instruction and have memorized 58 songs and most of the accompaniments besides several piano pieces. When I started in it seemed difficult to memorize one, but my memory has been growing better every day and I now find it easy to commit to memory without difficulty.

"I have taken no medicine, but my steady diet of Grape-Nuts Food has given me strength, health and memory."

persons have been added to the membership, and $16,000 raised.

The congregation at Richmond, Ind., will begin at once the erection of a $15,000 house of worship. The old church property has been sold.

The Texas Christian Missionary convention began its sessions June 6 at Waco. The Woman's Board made its report, and the young people's work was shown to be very encouraging as well as that of the women.

The Endeavor convention of the Christian church, meeting in Sedalia, Mo., closed at noon June 12, and in the afternoon the twenty-sixth annual convention of the Missouri Christian Bible School Co-operation began its first session at the First Christian church.

Episcopal.

The name of the diocese of Indiana has been changed to "the diocese of Indianapolis."

A beautiful Episcopal ring has been presented to Bishop Francis of Indiana by the clergy and several laymen.

During the year 870 persons have been confirmed in the diocese of Minnesota, 100 more than in any year since its division.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at its annual convention in Detroit next month, proposes a Sunday afternoon mass meeting, at which the principal speaker will be Vice-President Roosevelt. The formal charge to the Brotherhood is to be given by the new bishop of Maine. Emphasis is to be laid upon conferences for boys. Other young people's organizations are discussing the holding of conventions only biennially, the Christian Endeavor having already taken that step, but St. Andrew men cling to the annual plan. Canada brotherhood men unite with the Americans at Detroit this year.

Bishop William Rufus Nicholson of the Reformed Episcopal church in Philadelphia died June 7. He was born in Greene county, Mississippi, in 1822, and was successively rector in Protestant Episcopal churches in New Orleans, Cincinnati, Boston, and Newark, N. J. In 1874 he became a member of the Reformed Episcopal church, and was consecrated a bishop in 1876. He was also dean of the Reformed Episcopal Theological seminary, Philadelphia.

Lutheran.

The Lutheran Hospital Association, composed of all the Lutheran churches of the synods of neighboring states, have decided to establish a training school for nurses in St. Paul, Minn., in connection with the magnificent hospital now being constructed by them. The hospital is to be completed in a few months.

The English Evangelical Lutheran Synod of the Northwest held its tenth anniversary meetings at Memorial English Evangelical Lutheran church, St. Paul, commencing June 12, and continuing until the following Monday night. The seventh annual Sunday school convention was held June 15.

At the annual convention of the Norwegian Lutheran Free church, at Willmar, Minn., the revision of the liturgy was discussed. It is desired that the necessary changes be made to conform with the requirements of a free church under a republican form of government, especially as regards baptism, confirmation, communion and the church prayer. Resolutions were adopted commending Augsburg seminary and its work and congratulating Prof. G. Sverdrup on the occasion of his twenty-five year jubilee as president.

The Iowa general conference of the German Lutheran synod of North America ended a four-days session June 10 after long discussion of the divorce question. The result was strong resolutions denouncing separations, declaring that, according to the Scriptures, wedlock cannot be dissolved; that divorced parties may not remarry unless cause of divorce is the statutory offense, and then only the innocent person may marry again. Members of the synod cannot remain members of the church if they transgress this rule, and ministers of the church are forbidden to perform marriage ceremonies for divorced persons, except in the case mentioned.

The Danish Lutheran conference in session at Albert Lea, Minn., received reports showing ninety churches in the conference, with 114 church buildings and fifty-one parsonages; the total value of the church property amounts to $292,400, and the collections for missions last year, including the educational institutions and orphanages, amounted to $13,836.

The Norwegian Lutheran Free church in conference assembled resolved that Charley Carmien, a French teacher; P. Vien, a practical farmer missionary, and two deaconesses be sent to the missions of the Free church in Madagascar.

Prof. J. L. Naydahl reported from the Free church book concern that 130,000 copies of books, tracts, etc., had been printed and that the sales amounted to $11,284.80, of which $216.97 represents the profits.

Methodist.

Hale Memorial Methodist Episcopal church at Peoria, Ill., was dedicated June 9 with an elaborate service conducted by the Methodist pastors of the city and a number of visiting clergymen. The new house of worship has just been completed at a cost of over $25,000.

A large number of Methodist churches are providing vested choirs as aids to worship. Among these are the First, of Augusta, Ga.; the First, of Omaha; the Walton Avenue, Pittsburg; the Centenary and the Wabash Avenue, Chicago; St. Luke's, Dubuque, Ia.; the Memorial of Reading Pa., and the First, of Jersey City Heights and First of Stockton, Cal. Calvary, Trinity, Tremont, Metropolitan Temple, the Sixty-first and the Church of the Savior, Indianapolis. The aim is greater dignity in public worship. Adults and children of both sexes are employed, and the vestments are practically the same as are worn by choristers in the Episcopal church.

The board of church extension of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, at its recent annual meeting, reported receipts from collections and for special cases amounting to about $84,000, and contributions to the loan fund amounting to $7,539, making the aggregate of that fund $191,096. Special pleas were made to the denomination for help for the Jacksonville (Fla.) churches recently burned, and for the new property purchased in Havana, and for prospective purchases in Brazil. A call was made for $11,000 for this cause next year.

The cornerstone of the new Methodist Episcopal church of Scottdale, Pa., was laid June 9. Among those who took part in the ceremony were the pastor, the Rev. C. L. E. Cartwright, the Rev. Dr. J. A. Ballantyne, of Tarentum and the clergy of the other denominations at Scottdale. The new church is one of the prettiest in the district and, when completed, will cost $27,000.

THEY DO IT.

People Quit Coffee and Get Well on Postum Food Coffee.

A man in Milford, Ind., says he did not quit drinking coffee because he thought it hurt him, but because he found a morning beverage he liked better in Postum Food Coffee, but to his wonder and surprise he found in a few weeks all of the old symptoms of sickness had left him.

He had been greatly troubled with his stomach and heart, also with what is called "water brash," and dull headaches "which made me very irritable and quick tempered."

All of these symptoms disappeared and he discovered, in spite of all his previous theories that coffee was really the cause of his troubles, and the leaving off of coffee and taking on Postum Food Coffee brought about a perfect cure.

He speaks, also, of Mrs. Josephiené Kelly, living at Elkhart, Ind. Says she was afflicted much as he was, but had become more emaciated than he. So she quit drinking coffee and took on Postum Food Coffee. She is now a healthy and robust lady and willing to make affidavit that Postum Food Coffee saved her.

The gentleman from Milford speaks also of Thomas McDonald as having recovered by using Postum. It can be had at all grocers. A good cup of Postum cannot be made unless it is boiled long enough to bring out the flavor and food value. then it is delicious.

church society in Pueblo will sell their present house of worship and erect a new building to cost $20,000.

Prof. H. M. Hamill has resigned his position as international secretary of the Sunday school field work. He will take charge of the teacher training work of the Southern Methodist church, with headquarters at Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Hamill will do primary work in the same field.

Rev. Richard Fickenscher, pastor of the First German Methodist church of St. Paul, Minn., died June 7, aged 67.

The Methodist Episcopal churches of St. Louis are planning for debt-paying and church extension. The plain involves the expenditure of at least $100,000, and among other things will include the construction of a portable chapel for use by a mission until they are ready to erect a permanent structure. Carondelet, Goode Avenue, Harlan Place, Fry Memorial, Maple Avenue and the Swedish churches, whose debts range from $1,000 to $4,000, will be assisted substantially in wiping out said indebtedness. The churches which will be assisted in rebuilding or building anew are: Maple Avenue, Tower Grove, Bowman and Trinity.

Presbyterians.

The Presbyterian Church of Clay Center, Kas., has just celebrated its thirtieth anniversary. It has now 200 members.

Twelve new members have recently been received into the First Church, Emporia, Kas., Rev. F. J. Sauber, D. D., pastor. It has been decided to place a large pipe organ in the church, which is one of the finest buildings of its kind in the state.

The annual report of the church at Davenport, Ia., shows a membership of 458. For benevolences $7,383 was given, of which $5,000 was an individual gift. For expenses $25,011 was raised.

The First Church, Kansas City, received thirty-six new members at the last communion, making a total of seventy-six in the year just closed. The total offerings of the church amounted to $7,681, of which $1,661 were given to the boards. Dr. Carter's salary was increased. During his pastorate of a year and a half 165 persons have been admitted into fellowship.

The Presbyterian Church in Rock Island, Ill., was rededicated after remodeling May 26. The expense of the improvement, $2,000, was met within a few minutes at the service.

On Children's Day at Effingham, Ill., thirty new members were received, twenty-four being on confession, largely from the Sunday school, but several were heads of families. Eight children were baptized. No special services have been held, but the pastor and Sunday school teachers have been praying concertedly for the conversion of the young, and some spiritual help was received from a meeting in a sister church. An increased interest and activity prevails in all departments of church work.

The trustees of the Central Church, Joliet, have sold the old church property for $15,000, applying the money on the debt incurred in building the beautiful edifice in which the congregation now worships. Through the zeal and enterprise of the ladies the debt has been reduced $1,000 in the last six months. At the June communion sixteen members were received, representing five new families added to the congregation.

Dr. S. R. Lyons has resigned as president of Monmouth College. During the three years of his administration $100,000 was added to the college endowment fund.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Young People's Christian Union of the United Presbyterian Church will meet July 24 at Winona Lake, Ind. Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., will give the address of welcome.

The Rev. Dr. J. Milton Greene of Iowa, the pioneer missionary in Porto Rico under Presbyterian auspices, is to lead the Presbyterian effort which is to be made in Cuba. The Rev. Dr. Greene built up a strong church in San Juan, erecting there the first Protestant church on the island since American occupation. The success of Dr. Greene has been so marked in Porto Rico that there was a general demand that he go to Cuba. Presbyterians, while late in entering that island, are so interested in it that they are sending more money to their board in charge of the work than that board is able to expend. The Cuban Presbyterian plan contemplates missions in all principal centers. Ac-

Dr. J. H. Wiggins of Bonham, one of the most prominent ministers in the Presbyterian Church in Texas and a member of the board of trustees of Austin College, died June 7 at the home of Prof. B. F. Eagleton, a member of the faculty of Austin College.

General.

The eighth annual report of the John Crerar fund shows what great results have been achieved with the $50,000 bequeathed to the Sunday School Union by the Chicago philanthropist. The following is a partial summary of what has been done with the income emanating from this source: It has planted 400 new Sunday schools, reorganized 169 Sunday schools, distributed 4,463 bibles and testaments and $5,231 worth of religious reading, held 5,904 religious meetings, made 60,693 visits to families and traveled 223,750 miles. Some of the immediate results are 2,351 professed conversions, the developing of forty-three churches from the Sunday schools formed and 162 young people going from some of the little Sunday schools to institutions of learning for higher education.

Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists seem to be doing the most of the Protestant work in the Philippines, co-operating with harmony and avoiding all conflicts. Presbyterians and Methodists, having been the first on the field, practically do all of the work in and near Manila, while Baptist work is confined to other islands. The Rev. James B. Rodgers, the first regular missionary to reach the Philippine field, is holding services every night in Tondo, the native quarter of Manila. His congregations are about 1,000 each night. Methodists hold eighteen services weekly for natives, and twelve for soldiers. The average weekly attendance at the native services is 3,000. Presbyterian services have also been established at Iloilo, on Panay Island, and at Dumaguete, the largest town on the Island of Negros. Baptists have missions in the northern part of Panay, at Jaro and in other parts of that island and Negros. Missionaries of that body are working on the translation of the New Testament into Visayan, and two-thirds of the books are translated and ready to be printed.

A summary of the annual expenditure for the churches of the United States and England shows the following:

In the United States—
Maintenance of all churches.	$137,362,200

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS AT OUR SPECIAL NET PRICES

Early Christianity. A Study of Beginnings. By HERBERT L. WILLETT, D. D., Dean of the Disciples' Divinity House and Assistant Professor of Semitics at the University of Chicago.

12mo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.25. Our special net price 94c, postage extra, 11c.

In connection with a series of University Extension Lectures, Prof. Willett has prepared these studies of the Christianity of the First Century. The enthusiastic reception accorded the lectures wherever delivered and the countless demands for their publication, has impelled the author to make a thorough revision and issue them in their present form.

The Fact of Christ. By P. CARNEGIE SIMPSON, M. A.

12mo, cloth. Publisher's Price, $1.25. Our special net price, 94c, postage extra, 11c.

It is the best statement of the claims of Christianity to put in the hands of young men and women who may be sceptical or honestly inquiring, that I know. . . . I do not know any book that can touch it in its adaptation to the needs of students. . . . There are thousands of young men who are in doubt who will be helped by it.

How to Promote and Conduct a Successful Revival. Edited by R. A. TORREY.

12mo, cloth, 352 pages, gilt top. Publisher's Price, $1.50. Our special net price $1.12, postage extra, 14c.

It may confidently be asserted that never before within the cover of any one volume has there been brought such a wealth of material bearing upon Revival work. A glance at the contents and authors assures one of the extraordinary value of this book.

12mo, cloth. Publisher's Price, $1.50. Our special net price $1.12, postage extra, 13c.

For the Pastor's study and the Normal class it is a work of great value. As an aid to private devotion and study it is fully worth the price.

Three Years With the Children. By AMOS R. WELLS

12mo, cloth, 232 pages. Publisher's price, $1.25. Our special net price 94c, postage 9c.

The book gets its title from the fact that it contains exactly 156 talks, or one for every week of three years. Variety abounds. There are talks for every season of the year from New Year around to Christmas, temperance talks, object lessons, stories, exercises for the children, plans for the primary Sunday-school class, illustrations on Bible events. Any one having anything to do with children will find the book useful. A full topical index adds to its value.

The Old Testament and the Monuments. By Prof. IRA M. PRICE, Ph. D.

12mo, cloth, 321 pages. Publisher's net price $1.50. Our special net price $1.35, postage extra 15c.

A valuable and readable summary of all we know of the Monumental Records of Old Testament History, arranged chronologically so as to be read along side of your Old Testament History. Easily the best book on the subject.

Two Thousand Years of Missions Before Cary. By LEMUEL BARNES.

12mo, cloth, 504 pages. Publisher's net prices $1.50. Our special net price $1.35, postage extra 15c.

An exhaustive treatise and comprehensive survey of Christian Missions before Cary. A very important book.

Religious Movements for Social Betterment. By JOSIAH STRONG.

12mo, cloth, publishers price 50 cents; our special net price 38 cents; postage extra 6 cents.

"Those churches are shown to have the most vigorous growth which have been most enterprising in adjusting their activities to the various needs of the new social environment. Contains an excellent account of institutional church work."

Constructive Studies in the Life of Christ. By ERNEST DEWITT BURTON and SHAILER MATHEWS of the University of Chicago.

8vo, cloth, 320 pages; publishers price $1.00; our special net price 75c; postage extra 14c.

A scheme of Bible Studies especially designed for students. It serves as a compendious commentary on the gospels.

A Dictionary of the Bible. By Dr. WM. SMITH American edition edited by N. B. Hackett, D. D., Dr. Ezra Abbott, LL. D. D.

4 volumes, boxed. 8vo, cloth, 3667 pages, 596 illustrations. Publisher's former price $20.00, now $10.00. Our special net price $7.50, express extra $1.00.

Every reader of the leading writers on the Holy Scriptures, has noticed the frequent references to this Dictionary. It has been for years the standard book of its kind. Till very recently the price of these four volumes was $20, and many who desired to own them had to be content with abridgements—usually a very unsatisfactory sort of book to the student. Every such student of the Scriptures who has hungered for this book in its completeness now has it brought within his reach.

A tabulated statement of the expenditures of the churches in all other countries brings the grand total up to $1,009,369,494.00.

The Northwestern University held its commencement this week. Dr. Daniel Dorchester, Jr., of St. Louis preached the baccalaureate sermon.

The First Congregational church of Oak Park will hold outdoor services at 5:30 p. m. in place of the usual Sunday evening service in the church.

Extensive preparations are being made for the convention of the Baptist Young People's Union next month. A large chorus is being trained.

The Lexington Avenue Baptist church will erect a new house of worship this summer. The church was organized in 1890. During its eleven years of life it has acquired about $12,000 worth of property, owning free of debt the splendid corner where its temporary building stands, and 724 people have been received into its fellowship. The present membership is 497. The church has subscribed about $11,000 toward a new building, and of this $3,500 has been paid in cash. Rev. Melbourne P. Boynton is the present pastor.

The Englewood division of the Christian Endeavorers of Chicago and vicinity will hold its rally June 20 at the Cumberland Presbyterian church, Stewart avenue. There will be a chorus of 100 voices. Mr. and Mrs. Strickland are to tell of the Cook County Hospital work. The North division societies met June 18 at the Church of the Covenant.

Central Baptist Orphanage has received a legacy of $1,000 from the Honeysett estate of Janesville, Wis., and other donations, so that $1,225 has been paid of the indebtedness on the building, leaving a balance of $275 and a mortgage of $5,000.

The new Episcopal church of the Good Shepherd, Lawndale, will be opened for service June 30. The new parish-house of the church of the Atonement Edgewater, is rapidly drawing to completion.

Pledges for missions show an unvarying increase in Episcopal churches, those from St. Peter's, after an appeal by Rev. Dr. Rushton Trinity Sunday, aggregating nearly $700.

The Pilgrim Congregational church, Harvard avenue and Sixty-fourth street, has undertaken to wipe out an old debt of $6,000. June 8 $5,000 was subscribed, and the contributions Sunday, June 9, amounted to $1,400, all of which is payable not later than next March. The pastor, Rev. Frederick E. Hopkins, began the second year of his pastorate by encouraging the movement to cancel the debt.

WHEN I WAS A BOY.

Up in the attic where I slept
 When I was a boy—a little boy!
 In through the lattice the moonlight crept,
 Bringing a tide of dreams that swept
 Over the low red trundle bed,
 Bathing the tangled curly head.
 While moonbeams played at hide and seek
 With the dimples on each sun-browned cheek—
 When I was a boy—a little boy!

And, oh, the dreams, the dreams I dreamed

When I was a boy—a little boy!
 For the grace that through the lattice streamed

Over my folded eyelids seemed
 To have a gift of prophecy,
 And to bring me glimpses of times to be

Where manhood's clarion seemed to call,
 Ah, that was the sweetest dream of all—

When I was a boy—a little boy!

I'd like to sleep where I used to sleep
 When I was a boy—a little boy!

For in at the lattice the moon would peep,

Bringing her tide of dreams to sweep
 The crosses and griefs of the years away

From the heart that is weary and faint
 today,

And those dreams should give me back again

The peace I have never known since then—

When I was a boy—a little boy!

DIOGENES, JR., AND HIS SUB.

In the little white mission building, located in the dirtiest and wickedest portion of the city slums, a free supper was in progress. At the long tables sat the mission children, eating as only these ragged, half-starved children of the street can eat.

The door opened, a boy came in, and stood gazing wistfully at the scene before him. A more forlorn bundle of rags I never saw.

"Are you hungry?" I asked.

"Bet yer life!" answered the boy.

The new-comer was soon seated at one of the long tables. And eat! How that boy did eat!

The next Sunday found "Joe" in the mission school. Bright-eyed and restless he sat in his seat, taking a lively interest in everything around him.
 The opening prayer puzzled him extremely. The others bowed their heads, so Joe bowed his. But the minister prayed with uplifted eyes, and soon
 Joe glanced slyly up to the ceiling.

There he spied an open scuttle hole.

"Who is der feller up there that the preacher is a-talking ter?" asked Joe, in a loud whisper.

But in spite of the ignorance, rags and alley slang Joe proved an earnest pupil and always meant well even if his answers were sometimes queer. I remember one day asking the school to tell me something about Zaccheus.
 "He shinned up a sycamore tree," shouted Joe.

After a few weeks I noticed a change in Joe. His face was clean. Even his clothing had begun to improve. Swearing was also a thing of the past. But Joe's slang was as pictureque and varied as ever. One day a starchy theological student visited our school and was called upon to pray. The neat broadcloth and shining patent leathers caused a buzz of disapproval. And when the young man, after a glance at the somewhat dirty floor, began to pray standing, it was too much. With bright, indignant eyes, Joe sprang from his seat. Leaning forward, he pointed straight at the young man and hissed:

"Hay, mister! Git down on your prayer bones! I say, git down on your prayer bones."

In the back yard of a grocery, and securely hidden from prying eyes by old boxes and other rubbish, lay an ancient molasses barrel. This was Joe's castle, and here he had slept for several months. Rather cold quarters for a winter night, was it not?

Fortunately, the winter had thus far been mild. But one evening it turned desperately cold and a blizzard set in.
 I awoke in the night to think of Joe.
 I determined he must not sleep in his queer bed-chamber again. The next morning I fought my way through wind and snow to the mission school.
 But Joe was not there; and with an anxious heart, as soon as my duties were over, I set out to look him up.

The short winter day was already drawing to a close when I reached the place I sought. There what a sight met my eyes. The yard was drifted literally full of snow. Boxes and barrels of rubbish of all kinds had disappeared from sight, and in their place was deep, drifted whiteness. I looked across to where the snow lay highest and deepest.

"Is Joe under there?" I asked myself. "And if there, what of him? Perhaps"—and my soul grew sick at the thought "perhaps he is there—frozen—to death!"

Fortunately, two men with uniforms were passing. Quickly we dug our way through the drifts to the barrel. My heart stood still. Within, half hidden in straw and an old piece of canvas, lay two children. Joe and another boy much smaller than he. The face of the latter was hidden; but he seemed a mere baby, and his curly hair lay in tangled rings all over Joe's face and shoulders. At that moment Joe opened his eyes.

"I say," he cried at sight of me. "I couldn't git ter the mission ter-day.

 Me and Tommy started, but de kid cried and we had ter come back here.
 'Twas cold at first, you bet; but I put up a board to keep de wind out, an' we hugged up close together, and after awhile went to sleep.

The little boy was now awake. He was a handsome little fellow, scarcely five years of age.

We thought best to carry the children to the mission. A rude bunk was soon constructed, and there the children spent the night. The black-eyed boy, poor baby, was to pay dearly for his exposure to wind and snow. Before morning he was very sick, and weeks passed before he was quite strong and well again. He was then adopted by a nice family, and now has a pleasant home.

Who was he? Joe had found him on the street and could tell us little more.
 But soon we learned that Tommy's parents were dead, and that a poor woman had befriended him. But her husband drank, and one night he had beaten the child and turned him out-of-doors. There Joe had found him, crying bitterly and half-dead with cold.

"Yer said at the mission," exclaimed Joe, "that de Feller up in heaven puts down as done ter him every kind thing that we does ter other folks in his name. So I divides dat barrel and my grub wid him every chance I gits. One night 'twas a darkey kid as I took in. Once, though, I divided with a yaller pup. How them angels up there must have laughed!"

Joe chuckled at the thought; and as for me, I wished for hundreds of Christians like Joe. The world needs them.

Winter is over now, but I have no fears for Joe. He is earning three dollars a week in a store, and sleeps under the counter. Affixed to the molasses barrel are the words: "To Rent."—The Boy's Friend.

"Birds of the Bible."

In Deut. 32:2, we read, "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him." Just as soon as the eagles are strong enough to fly the mother eagle induces them to leave the nest by fluttering over them and showing them how to use their wings; and if this does not succeed she will compel them to fly by catching them up and tossing them in the air; if they are in any danger, or if they become exhausted, she will quickly dart beneath them and bear them on her outstretched wings back again to the nest. Then they are thrust out to try their own wings. At first they suffer some rough falls against cliffs and treetops. But ere long the eaglet can fly like the mother bird. There is many a home where the brood so fills the nest that they cannot all nestle there. So the prudent parent stirs up the nest and the sons and daughters must fly out and scratch for themselves. Do not bring up your children to shiftless self-indulgence. Teach them that life means service and that upon the "do-nothing" the stain of dishonor rests. "He who does not teach his son a handicraft trade neglects his parental duty" is an old Talmudic saying well worthy of practical obedience. Benjamin Franklin says: "He that hath a trade hath an estate." Give your sons the best education you can afford. Intelligent, educated mechanics can always find employment at higher wages, for experience has shown that the most successful manufacturers are most careful to secure intelligent workmen. The faculties developed by mental cultivation make the nervous system more vigorous, the touch more sensitive and there is a greater activity in the hand. One of the crowning marvels of America to all travelers of judgment is the fact that so many of our mechanics are intelligent and well read in literature.

Train your daughters to do some useful thing well enough to support themselves if necessary. The rich of today are often tomorrow's poor and the helplessness of many a woman of refinement is something sad to contemplate. W. D. Howells has thrillingly depicted the struggles of an educated and accomplished woman suddenly left penniless. She sets bravely to work to turn her accomplishments to account for self-support. First she tries decorating pottery, but her work is not finished enough to bring her the needed income; then she tries coloring photographs, then writing for magazines, then fine millinery—always with the same result. She can do many things fairly well, but nothing well enough to be well paid for it, till at last she comes down to making cheap bonnets for servants and by that coarser work she manages to eke out a precarious existence, till the novelist, as the only way of extricating her from so trying a situation, is compelled to marry her off. Now this may be fiction, but it is not a stranger to fact. Our great cities are full of heroines of this sort. Let every woman, no matter in how comfortable circumstances her parents may be, master some one thing—and know that one thing clear through—no matter what; let her make her services valuable somewhere; let her know something of what Burns was pleased to call "the glorious privilege of being independent;" how calmly she could then face misfortune. She would not be compelled to marry for a living or to be a burden taken off the hands of parents. A marriage for convenience, a marriage for aught but love—a free and joyful surrender of the heart—is a humiliating stoop to the dust—a mockery that brings a blush to angels.—From "Birds of the Bible," by Dr. M. C. Peters.

A Trait of Harrison.

Benjamin Harrison had opinions about things. He expressed them freely. Rarely would he discuss men, their records, characteristics or their motives. The only exception to this rule was when duty compelled him to learn the fitness of a candidate for office. From his six years in the senate and four years in the White House there is preserved not one recollection of a harsh or bitter remark of personal character. It might be added that complimentary mention of an individual was almost as unusual with him. It was simply a trait with him not to talk about men. There were times, crises, in Benjamin Harrison's career when sharp rivalries or antagonistic relationships might have given provocation for an expression of personal resentment. Whatever Gen. Harrison thought of other men he did not say. The disinclination to talk about a person amounted to almost positive prohibition. It was more marked in Gen. Harrison than in any other public man of the generation. On one occasion when at a public gathering the speeches took a eulogistic character of some man, Gen. Harrison, who had not yet spoken, was seen slipping out of the door. A friend followed and said, "We want you to say something." "I can't," was the reply, and he didn't. Yet Gen. Harrison drew a line sharply and distinctly between the public acts and the personal character of a man. The former he considered legitimate subjects of discussion and criticism. This was illustrated in the speech made to the senate upon the veto messages of the then President Cleveland. That speech is still remembered as one of the most, if not the most notable of the congress. It was far-reaching in its consequences. It was unsparing. But it contained not one word reflecting personally upon the president.—W. B. S., in St. Louis-Globe-Democrat.

Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. It contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per 100; $2.50 per doz., not prepaid; Single copy 25c postpaid.

GOOD
HOUSEKEEPING

A High-Class Monthly Magazine, Conducted in the Interests of the Higher Life of the Household

Two Good Journals for the Price of One

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING occupies a position peculiarly its own, in that it is conducted in the interests of the higher life of the household, for it is devoted not only to practice, but to inspiration—to telling how the everyday affairs of life may be conducted, but always leading upward. Its departments, regular and special, are as numerous as the varied phases of the life of the household. It appeals to either sex, whether of young or of advancing years, and not only helps but gratifies the physical, mental and aesthetic natures of all its readers. The contributors' list for the coming year is a long one, and contains the names of many writers who are already familiar to the public. The following topics and lines of research are samples of what GOOD HOUSEKEEPING is doing for the dwellers in the homes of America:

Successful Kitchens
Solutions of the Domestic Help Problem
The Latest Hygiene
Home Handicraft of Various Kinds
Homemade Christmas Gifts, Illustrated
Truth about Dishonest and Adulterated Food
Famous Cooking Schools Described
People Who Have Uplifted Home Life, Illustrated
New Sources of Income
Tasteful House Furnishing, Illustrated.
'Good Housekeeping Babies'
Disadvantages and Advantages of Country Girls

Advantages and Disadvantages of City Girls
Women's Exchanges
"The Best Way," in all kinds of Housework
Mistakes of Young Housekeepers
Original Recipes from Famous Cooks and Cooking Teachers
The Four-footed Cousins
Fathers and Sons
Household Economics
New Ideas in Fancy Work
Changes and Tendencies in Home Life
New Fashions and Their Wearers
Diseases of Children, etc., etc.

The whole magazine is dominated by a high purpose to be an ever-ready help and inspiration toward making "the higher life of the household" a practical and delightful reality in every family, and a force in social and civic affairs. Each number consists of 96 pages filled to overflowing with original and interesting reading, including many handsome and striking illustrations.

Our Absolutely Unparalleled Offer

By an arrangement just perfected we are enabled to offer this most useful and interesting magazine on the following special and remarkably liberal terms:

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY, One Year, $1.50 }
GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, One Year, $1.00 } BOTH for only $1.50
Total, $2.50 }

We thus offer the two ablest and most representative journals of their class at the price of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY alone, thus giving our readers an opportunity never before offered. Think of it, a handsome illustrated magazine, a year's numbers of which make an elegant volume of over 1150 pages, all of which may be had for a nominal sum by every subscriber, old or new, under this most remarkable offer. This is surely a rare opportunity, and no one should delay or fail to take advantage of it.

A sample copy of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING will be sent to any address on receipt of eight cents in stamps, which should be sent to the publishers at Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, Ill. Remit by postoffice or express money order, check, draft or registered letter to

EDITORIAL.

ETERNAL LIFE.

By Matthew Arnold.

Foiled by our fellow-men, depressed, outworn,
We leave the brutal world to take its way,
And patience in another life, we say,
The world shall be thrust down and we upborne!

And will not, then, the immortal armies scorn
The world's poor routed leavings? or will they,
Who failed under the heat of this life's day,
Support the fervors of the heavenly morn?

No, no! the energy of life may be Kept on after the grave, but not begun!
And he who flagged not in the earthly strife,
From strength to strength advancing—only he
His soul well knit and all his battles won,
Mounts, and that heartily, to eternal life.
—Selected.

THE TEACHING PASTOR.

FROM the beginning it has been understood that he who occupies the position of a bishop, or, as we call him, a pastor, should be "apt to teach." And great indeed has been the influence of the Christian ministry as one of the great educational forces in every Christian land. Not only are there countries where the function of public or general education is exercised by the clergy, or is under their immediate supervision and control; even in those Protestant lands where a separation has taken place between the organized church and the work of secular education, the church still maintains an attitude of sedulous watchfulness over the character, spirit and direction of that work. Hence the ministry of the Church of Christ is compelled to be profoundly and unweariedly interested in the art of teaching.

But this interest in general education is the outgrowth of a special interest. The pastor is himself a teacher. There is a specialized field which has been definitely put under his charge. It is his life work to teach Christianity to his people. It is true that as a preacher he is supposed to pay much attention to the arts of the public orator and to be engaged in a task which is conceived of usually as exhortation and inspiration. In the pulpit he is supposed to be competing at once with the theater, the daily newspaper, the monthly magazine, and the lecture platform, where, by the by, he sometimes becomes his own rival.

Hence it is understood that he must cultivate those powers and arts which will compete with each and all of these counter-attractions. Nevertheless, it remains true that the supreme task of the Christian minister is to be a teacher. In the end, through the long years of struggle, it is the teaching power of the ministry that alone can tell against all the so-called rivals of the pulpit. If the people be unconvinced that the Christian life ought to be, must be, the supreme interest of every rational being, all struggles after pulpit attractions will be in vain. In the end it is the convinced men and women who are kept at church. And the convinced men and women are those who have been taught. They have learned and they know the Holy One of God, the claims and the truths of the Christian faith. If, then, the Church of Christ is to maintain its position of majestic supremacy over the conscience and the heart of mankind, it will be because the pastor of every parish is a teaching pastor.

The Pastor a Student.

It is needless to dwell on the fact implied here, that such a pastor is himself a student pastor. His seminary course did not end, but began, his real student life. It only taught him to study and put into his hands the instruments which all his lifetime he must wield for the discovery of the truth by which his own soul lives, and which he turns into bread for his people. It is almost impossible for a man who is a true student to fail of teaching his people. The system of acquisition will, inevitably almost, become a system of instruction. There are, I believe, three directions in which the true teaching pastor will seek to carry on his work. First of all, he will try to make his pulpit work a means of real instruction to his people. His own mind will dislike the constant change of subject which is implied in choosing scattered themes and texts all over the Bible, and all over the universe almost, at haphazard. He will attempt to interest his people by means of courses of sermons on consecutive subjects, expounding to them the Bible and doctrines of the church. He will find that, if his method is wise, warm, clear, convincing in argument and proof, illustration and application, his people will delight to learn from him.

But he will find that the work of teaching from the pulpit has natural limitations. It never can be as thorough, as minute, as scholastic in method as that teaching can be made which is carried on in a class. Every pastor, therefore, who wishes to leave his mark upon his parish, will seek to form a Bible class for the study of Scripture, of doctrine, of church history, of Christian evidences and so on. In some countries nearly every minister, and in this country every minister of some denominations does work of this kind regularly and earnestly. Here the pastor has his supreme chance as a teacher. He will find always a few, it may be a very few, whom it will be worth his while to work with on some thorough and ambitious plan. The further he can carry them in their grasp of Christian truth, the stronger will be his own hold upon the entire congregation.

Disastrous Results of Injudicious Methods.

It is understood, of course, that we are speaking of the teaching pastor who, in addition to an adequate scholarly training, has enthusiasm and diligence, and above all common sense. There are some men whose entire lack of common sense is ruining their whole ministerial career. They think that to teach Scripture is to discuss higher criticism, to advocate it or to decry it with unmitigated hostility or intolerant approval. They are insufferably conscientious about teaching their people that David did not write any Psalms, that the traditional interpretations of the prophets must be discarded; they wound their people's hearts, shake their people's faith, until they hate the very words science and critical scholarship and modern investigation—words which they ought to love. And then these blunderers tell us in self-defense that they believe in teaching and want to teach their people the latest truth! The ideal teaching pastor is abreast of criticism, a fearless investigator, but after his own fight is over and his own victory won, he is made gentle and tender in the method by which he seeks to lead his people forward. They can be, they wish to be led, but it must be by one who knows that the pedagogic method of the pastoral teacher is as clear in its distinctive principles as that of the kindergartner or the leader of a learned seminar in a university.

Intimate Relation of Pastor to Sunday School.

The teaching pastor will, of course, live close to his Sunday school. Both scholars and teachers, especially the teachers, will be his friends. If he be not the superintendent in name he will be in spiritual reality and real effectiveness. He will seek to have the teaching powers of the school so elevated that as the children pass on into the church in their riper years they will rejoice in the fuller and riper instructions of the pulpit.

But here we come upon a fact which is of vast importance for the church and for many a pastoral career in this and other countries. It is quite clear that in the larger churches of all denominations the work of the Sunday school is growing more elaborate and the grade of teaching is making a higher demand upon both scholars and teachers. As the standard of general intelligence in the community rises the Christian intelligence of the church must also rise. As the public schools give our children deeper grasp of facts, the church must see that the deeper grasp of the Christian facts is put within their reach. But this, in a church of any size, in a community of any intelligence, demands that the teachers of the Sunday school be no less skillful, eager and determined than those of the day school. Ultimately the responsibility for all this high grade of work depends on the superintendent of the school; and we mean to say that in all our large churches he ought to be a fully trained, an ordained, teaching pastor. If one allows his imagination a little freedom to dream over the might be, please God, the is to be, in Bible work, he will see in the forefront of his picture the arrival of the teaching pastor. He is the colleague of the man who preaches, but has found out that his own powers and his own likings go in the direction of teaching rather than preaching. We know of such men, and are persuaded that they abound more and more. Such an one will have, like his pulpitering brother, much else to do in parish work. But he will give himself mainly to the task of teaching. A thorough scholar, trained in college and seminary, and if possible abroad, he will have studied the psychology of childhood and the best modern theories of pedagogic method. He will know every child as well as every teacher. He will guide and inspire the teachers in their work, he will visit the homes of the children. He will find that, to do it thoroughly, it will need as much work to be the teaching pastor of a school of 300 scholars as to be the ordinary general pastor of a church of 200 members. His attention will be concentrated upon two departments—viz., the organizing of as earnest and competent a body of teachers as he can possibly secure, and the personal contact of himself and the teachers with the children in their homes.

How the Church Will Ultimately Conquer.

Ultimately the church is going to conquer the world by conquering the home; and it can only conquer the home by going there more than it does, holding the hands of little children. If Christian nurture is ever to take the place of spasmodic evangelism it can only be in this way. The lambs must be fed with tender, individualizing solicitude. They must be taught and loved and watched and trained by men and women who see and understand that for them this is the loftiest service which they can render to the human race, and the deepest proof of their own devotion to the Savior of the world. If all Christian parents, the parents of the average Christian home, and of those homes which fall below the average in faith and intelligence, are to be taught to train their children, we all see and know that it cannot be merely through general rebukes and exhortations from the pulpit. Some one must do what the pastors of former days did in Scotland and in New England—some one must go into the homes as the teaching pastor of the children. We know that the general pastor of a large church cannot do this. He must preach his powerful sermons, he must fulfill many public functions, he must supervise the general policy and work of the church; give him as his colleague the man who is trained and has consecrated his life to be the teaching pastor. This is the next step in church organization and method, which has been already taken by some congregations and which promises more than one can say for the future nurture of the children of the church.

CONVOCATION AT THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO.

By the Visitor.

The University of Chicago is the youngest of the great schools; and yet is rapidly taking its place in the foremost rank of academic foundations. When one stands on the quadrangles and looks about on the score of massive stone structures already erected; when he marks the influence of the university upon the educational life of the west and the entire land; when he sees the rapidly growing number of its alumni, its increasing volume of publications, and the widening of its plans to take in activities beyond the sea, it is difficult to believe that he sat one day in a car of the Ferris wheel during the World's Fair and, looking down upon a single building which seemed from that height rather diminutive, was told in answer to a question that it was the University of Chicago. Yet much more than these outward changes have been wrought in the ten years since the first corner stone was laid, much that cannot be put into figures, dealing with buildings, faculty, libraries, apparatus, students or alumni. It must be set down in that indefinite column of influence, effect, atmosphere, in which so much that is valuable in human life must be registered.

The past week was one of special interest among the gothic buildings on the Midway. It was the decennial celebration and was held in connection with the thirty-eighth convocation. The University has a way of gaining on her contemporaries in the matter of commencements by a plan of quarterly convocations, which answer to the same need, and afford opportunity to confer the usual degrees. The number of these degrees conferred last week ran up to two hundred and fifty-eight; and when one recalls the severity of the examinations for such honors and the fact that three other opportunities for graduation are offered during the year the amount of work done in the big school may be imagined.

As on the fifth anniversary, five years ago, the founder of the university was present. Mr. Rockefeller seems to have changed but slightly in appearance since that time. The raising of the Founders' flag on the tall campus mast Saturday morning was the signal of his arrival on the grounds. From that time till his departure on Wednesday he and Mrs. Rockefeller were the honored guests of the institution; and the modesty and graciousness with which they bore themselves won them a welcome everywhere.

As on the occasion five years ago, a mammoth convocation tent was spread on the lawn between Kent and Haskell halls; a smaller one to the south served for several of the conferences and for the congregation dinner. On the former convocation day the heat in the tent was most oppressive and the president's feeling allusion to the urgent need of a suitable hall for the purpose was regarded by the audience as a gentle hint to the guest, only less humorous than Mr. Rockefeller's naive remark that he hoped some good friend of the institution would come forward with the funds for the hall. But the five years have brought no hall, and the tent once more did service, on a much cooler day, happily.

But there was one most encouraging feature about stones of new buildings laid. These were the University Press building, Hitchcock hall, an extension of the Snell undergraduate dormitory, the University Commons, the University Bell Tower, the Students' club house, and the Leon Mandel assembly hall. It was, indeed, a feast of corner stones. As some one remarked, the motto of the university appears to be, "When in doubt, lay a corner stone." In addition it must be noted that the Nancy Foster hall for ladies has been enlarged of late and that the men's and women's gymnasiums are about to be begun. These structures, all sorely needed, will be completed before the opening of a new year, and will solve several pressing problems of adequate housing which have perplexed the authorities of the university. Most important of the new buildings will be the Mandel assembly hall, which will at last provide a fairly adequate chamber of session for the large university bodies and will serve the purpose of a public rendezvous until the great chapel is erected, which is to be the crowning feature of the quadrangles. Nor must mention be omitted of the dedication of Scammon court, two blocks east, on which ground was broken for the University School of Education by Colonel Parker.

The addresses and conferences on different scientific and literary themes brought to the university a long list of distinguished men and women. Teachers and students eagerly listened to men whose names were classroom possessions and whose text-books they had long employed.

The convocation exercises on Tuesday were a fitting climax to the gathering of the week. After a few corner stones had been laid in the morning the long procession formed in front of Walker museum, and after defiling about past the president's house, where the senate, trustees and official guests were picked up, along with the founder and the president, the convocation tent was reached and the exercises took place. The heraldry of a university procession is various and puzzling to all but the initiated. The blacks and blues of the doctors of philosophy, the purples of the doctors of laws, the reds of the doctors of divinity and the greens of the medics would afford a sufficiently varied assortment without the university colors, which add the charm of contrast and of association. Here the crimson of Harvard, the blue of Yale, the green of Amherst and the maroon of Chicago mingle with the orange of Paris, the tricolors of the German universities and the blazonries of Oxford and Glasgow. Perhaps nowhere more than in architecture and university dress does the conservatism of the past maintain itself in our present life, and no one who enters at all into the real academic spirit would wish these memorials forgotten.

The address of the founder, full of quiet humor and friendly counsel, was followed by the president's statement. Dr. Harper is not an orator, yet no public speaker who appears on convocation platforms has the art of holding attention that the president possesses. His is the eloquence of fact and of forceful statement. Like Mr. Gladstone, he has a way of making even a budget thrilling. These convocation statements have insistently struck the great educational notes to which a city like Chicago needs to listen, and it has gotten into the habit of listening.

The climax of the great day was reached when the university followed its solitary departure from the plan of conferring only degrees in course, made when President McKinley two years since received his hood from the university by bestowing upon some eight or ten of the distinguished visitors the highest honors within its gift. The glad acceptance of the honorary degrees of the University of Chicago by such representatives of the conservative institutions of Europe, as Dr. Dods and Professor Van'l Hoff, at the very moment when Oxford was conferring her honors upon Dr. Briggs and Professor Brown is a gratifying proof of the comradeship of education which knows no dividing sea.

At five o'clock the congregation banquet was over, the spring quarter was ended and the summer quarter had begun. As twilight deepened into night the echoes of the decennial died away and there remained only the evensong floating across the quadrangles:

The City White hath fled the earth;
But where the azure waters lie
A nobler city hath its birth—
The City Grey that ne'er shall die.
For decades and for centuries,
Its battlemented towers shall rise
Beneath the hope-filled western skies;
'Tis our dear Alma Mater."

An old colored preacher was asked to define Christian perseverance. He answered, "It means, firstly, to take hold; secondly, to hold on; thirdly and lastly, to nebbber leave go." Good experimental theology.

It is a strange meteorological fact that the sun never shines so hot on a baseball ground as on the harvest field.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Missing Link Still Missing.

To say that the address of Dr. Winfield S. Hall on evolution delivered before the meeting of the Y. M. C. A. in Boston was sensational is to put it mildly. Dr. Winfield finds in some unknown creature the common ancestor of man and of the anthropoid ape; but he has no new information to impart regarding this missing link. Meanwhile he builds his evolutionary system upon conjecture.

The Core of the Matter.

In his commencement address at the University of Chicago Dr. Marcus Dods did not a little to clear the air on the question, "What is religion?" He got to the heart of the matter in the words: Religion among men is apt to drift into a sentimentalism that delights in its own emotions and is far more deeply concerned in itself than in the advancement of the world around it. What Christ asks us is not the acceptance of any mental proposition, but simply allegiance to himself.

Race Prejudice.

In his commencement address at the University of Chicago Rabbi Hirsch deprecated the loose talk which is prevalent in the present day, regarding the distinctions of blood and race. Men are being judged not by inward character, but by the color of their skin or the shape of their nose. But to all these outward distinctions the philanthropy of today is happily giving the lie. Philanthropy laughs all bonds of race and color to scorn.

Is the Higher Education Anti-Christian in Its Tendency?

It is sometimes affirmed that our higher institutions of learnings are saturated with infidelity and that their atmosphere is unfavorable to the growth of Christian faith. But what are the facts? According to Dean Hulbert of the University of Chicago, five per cent of the young men in the United States are church members, while the percentage among college men exclusively is fifty-two. This gives the lie to the oft-repeated charge that the educated classes are the foes of religion. It is the ignorant and uneducated who are irreligious. Education and college training do not encourage infidelity.

Theology Should Be Free.

Dr. William Newton Clarke, author of "An Outline of Christian Theology," uttered a timely word on the same occasion. He said that theology in order to be free must not be expected merely to defend the heritage of truth which has been received from the past, but to seek after new truth. The theologian has been expected to confirm and conform. He has been expected to defend old positions, to seek for proofs for the things that have been accepted, instead of making fresh investigations to find out what is true. His one business is to discover the truth that he may hold it up for the illumination of the whole field of life.

The Awakening of a Giant.

The recent war with China has served as a shock to arouse her from the slumber of centuries. She is rubbing her eyes and looking around. When she comes to realize her power and bring it into operation things will happen which will fill the world with wonder and dismay. The Russian savant, Jean de Bloch, has this to say on the subject: "China will be a mighty world power within a generation and the powers have themselves to thank for the prospect. The allied invasion of the Chinese empire has accomplished but one tangible and abiding thing. It has federated that great and patriotic people as indissolubly as Bismarck united the states of the German empire. It has awakened in them a sentiment of aggressive nationalism that bodes ill for the civilizations that have held them in contempt."

A Ruinous Tendency.

Referring to the tendency, very observable in many recent baccalaureate addresses, to eliminate from Christianity its supernatural elements the "Record-Herald" remarks that "if such a tendency becomes universal it must cause profound alterations in church activities. The missionary now goes forth by direct authority of the Divine. That gives him his enthusiasm, his resolution, his persistence, his willingness to meet martyrdom. But there is no demand for such martyrdom in a scheme of universal toleration, and if the new religion should resolve itself into a simple deism the revolution would be felt from turret to foundation stone."

These are significant words. Empty Christianity of its supernatural elements, take from it its special and uncompromising claims, and you rob it of its power as an over-mastering motive in Christian experience, and as the divinely ordained agency for the world's redemption.

Death of Ex-Governor Pingree.

The death in London of H. S. Pingree, former governor of Michigan, removes from public life a picturesque figure. Governor Pingree had upon him the stamp of a strong personality. His political rivals might dislike him, but they could not ignore him. He was a man of tremendous force. To his native force of character was added purity of motive. His sympathies were with the working classes, from whose ranks he had himself sprung. He served for several terms as the mayor of Detroit and was successful in accomplishing important civic reforms. His opposition to trusts and combinations which had for their object the oppression and robbery of the people, was relentless. Although at times willful and erratic, as a man of noble and generous spirit, as a lover of his fellowmen, as a hater of organized iniquity, a pioneer in the path of social progress, he has left behind him a name that will be fragrant in the memories of those whom he lived to serve.

Union and Subdivision of Forces.

Speaking at the Y. M. C. A. jubilee Dr. Francis E. Clark, president of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, said: "I have little sympathy with the cry that the church is broken into fragments when it does its work through the best means at its disposal or assigns to its membership different tasks. Organization and subdivision of the forces of the church have not yet gone far enough to accomplish the largest results." Subdivision of labor within the church, federation of forces among the churches, seems to be the order of the day. The day of division is passing away, and the day of union is dawning. Even if the splitting of the church into fragments served some useful ends in the past in the way of emphasizing neglected truths that service is done, and now the spirit of God is leading the church into oneness of aim and action. But with wider and closer union among the churches must go greater variety of activity. The church must develop intensively as well as extensively.

CHICAGO NOTES.*Circus Methods.

Rabbi Hirsch charges some of the Chicago churches with adopting "the methods of the circus and continuous variety performance." There is too much truth in the charge.

A Just Tax.

The ruling of the board of assessors to tax all property not in actual use for religious or educational purposes is eminently just. No property from which revenue is derived ought to be exempt from taxation.

Resignation of Dr. Noble.

After a pastorate of twenty years Rev. F. A. Noble, D. D., of Union Park Congregational church, tenders his resignation and a dismissal council is called for the 25th inst. Thus closes a pastorate of more than ordinary influence and fruitfulness.

A Church Trust.

The Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones advocates the application of the trust principle to religious work. He says that unless churches combine they will continue to wage a losing battle against iniquity and vice. Combination is all right, but are they waging a losing battle?

Chicago Commons.

The formal opening of the new quarters of the Chicago Commons at Grand avenue and Morgan street will take place July 1st. To complete the building it will be necessary to raise $10,000 by September. A kindergarten, a mother's club and a small residence will be maintained near the old home, 140 North Union street.

Pulpit Buffoonery.

At a church door on a fashionable avenue there is to be seen a large poster announcing that "The Mark Twain of the Pulpit" will hold forth on certain evenings during the week. Then follows the exhortation "Come and be saved." "Come and laugh" would have been only less appropriate than "Come and weep." A comic preacher is a melancholy object.

Rapid Growth of the University of Chicago.

It is difficult to believe that such a large institution as the University of Chicago has been built up in ten years. The conditions of the times have made this result possible. We live in a fast-moving age. But the marvelous thing is that along with such rapid growth has gone the development of dignity and strength.

Baptist Union.

The eleventh international convention of the Baptist Young People's union will be held July 25 to 28 in this city. The Coliseum has been secured for a meeting place. A large attendance is expected.

This meeting will mark the close of the first decade in the history of the organization. A four days' programme has been arranged, the addresses and exercises being based upon the keyword "Kingship."

A Temperance Victory.

In Hyde Park, as elsewhere, eternal vigilance and effort are the price of protection from the encroachments of the liquor traffic. Hyde Park is a prohibition district, but in every possible way the saloon has attempted to invade it. The Protection Association has just won a signal victory, the Supreme court of Illinois having decided in the most emphatic manner to uphold the prohibitory law as binding and operative.

Union of Domestic.

One of the most recent movements in the way of the organization of labor is the formation of a union by the sixty thousand domestics employed in the homes of Chicago. The leaders in that movement declare that "the time has come for the girls to throw off the yoke of slavery and fight for privileges enjoyed by other women." Various opinions have been expressed regarding the practicability of this movement; to laugh it out of court, as many seem inclined to do is not wise. It is a sign of the times, and there is no telling to what it may yet grow.

A New Society.

Every new movement crystallizes into a society. One of the latest is the H. P. E. society, which, written in full, reads the Higher Practical Educational society. Its promoter is J. W. Gossard and its objects are: 1. To co-operate with God in practical relations. 2. To bring out the latent good existent in every man. 3. To inculcate cleanliness as a moral right. 4. To show that present failure is largely due to lack of opportunities to associate with successful people. 5. To emphasize the necessity of economy and business method. 6. To strengthen and uphold good physical, mental and moral habits. 7. To readily take up a wholesome occupation.

There is nothing startling or strikingly original in all this, but everything helps.

The Pastor's Bible Class.

Prof. Marcus Dods, the famous Scottish preacher, author and teacher, said a few remarkable words at the University of Chicago the other day on this subject. Practically every minister in Scotland conducts his own Bible class, whose members are from seventeen to seven or eight and twenty years of age. He usually values this as much as any part of his work. Dr. Dods gave his own striking experience during his Glasgow ministry. In his class he had many men who were extremely sceptical and would not join the church; but in time, and through the work of that class, they were all brought in. He spoke also of the experience of Dr. Alexander Whyte, the greatest Scottish preacher living. He values his Bible class above his pulpit. He meets with 800 men on Sunday and 800 women on Tuesdays. He takes in a wide range of subjects, not confining himself to Bible study. When he takes a bag of books away with him on his vacation it is to prepare not for his pulpit, but for next winter's Bible class.

LIFE'S FIELD.

We must not hope to be mowers,
And to gather the ripe gold ears,
Until we have been sowers,
And watered the furrows with tears.

It is not just as we take it,
This mystical world of ours;
Life's field will yield, as we make it,
A harvest of thorns or flowers.

"If I can stop one heart from breaking,
I shall not live in vain;
If I can ease one life the aching,
Or cool one pain,
Or help one fainting robin
Unto his nest again,
I shall not live in vain."

CONTRIBUTED.

INWARD FIRES.

My heart would sing for joy!
A friendly hand is reached,
And lights earth's dull annoy!
Kindness is at me flung,
Better than song e'er sung
Or sermon ever preached.

'Tis not the gift I prize:
It is the heart behind.
O men and women! rise
To understand how more
Is Love than golden ore!
Too long men's souls are blind.

With nobleness meet all!
Thou hast undreamed return
In lifting feet that fall,
In rescuing the faint:
No artist-hand can paint
The fires that inward burn.

And inward fires alone
Are those that warm us long.
Nought outward can atone
For sinking in the sea
Love's opportunity!—
Thus sings my heart its song.

James H. West.

"AT THE DOOR."

By James M. Campbell, D. D.

THE story is told of a man who went to a certain fashionable church and met with a cold welcome. Every one seemed to look at him askance and make him feel that he was an intruder. "Whose church is this?" he timidly asked a gentleman who sat near. "Jesus Christ's," was the reply. "Oh, is he in this morning?" was the rejoinder. Alas, that the absence of the spirit of Christ from those who confess his name should so often afford ground for questioning whether or not he has a place within his own church!

In the book of Revelation there is a striking representation of Christ as outside of his professing church. Making his final appeal to his slumbering church before the breaking of the storm which the book of Revelation describes, the risen Christ exclaims: "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him, and he with me." (Rev. 3: 20.) The force and meaning of this text are completely lost if it is taken to describe the approach of Christ to the individual soul. The picture represented is that of Christ as the door of his church. He finds the door shut and barred against him. The Laodecean church, with all its loud profession and self-conceit, had denied him a place in its midst. A Christless church! a church from which Christ is excluded! A church in which Christ's will is not consulted nor his ways followed, a democratic church, in which the spirit of independence has degenerated into independence of Christ; a worldly church, outwardly prosperous but spiritually impotent; a self-satisfied church, which wanted nothing and needed everything—such is the church before whose closed door Christ is represented as standing.

His action bespeaks his interest. He takes the initiative. With condescending love he comes to the church from which he has been expelled and sues for readmission. He is urgent and importunate. To wake his slumbering church he uses hands and voice. He knocks and speaks. He calls attention to his presence and then tells his errand.

But, great as is his desire to get inside his church, he will not force an entrance. The bolt has been fastened from within, and the hand that placed it there must withdraw it. A free response must be given; and to obtain it Christ appeals to every motive. For, as he will not stay in any church where he is not wanted, he will not come to any church where he is not welcomed.

From the church he turns to the individual. When the church as a whole will not receive him he says: "If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come to him and sup with him, and he with me." The opening of the heart is man's, the entering into it is his. He enters the spirit-home the moment its doors are thrown open, bringing with him spiritual entertainment. The guest becomes the host. For when Christ comes he comes as a king, bringing his own rich entertainment with him and sharing it with us.

In times of spiritual declension seldom is there a concerted movement on the part of the church to receive Christ. A work of revival generally begins with the coming of Christ into the lives of solitary saints. And happily, if there are churches that can be satisfied with everything but Christ, there are always to be found souls who cannot be satisfied with anything but Christ. They pine when he is absent from them. They long for a realizing sense of his presence. They want him in their business, in their pleasures—they want to make him regnant in the whole circle of their social activities. And when in response to the appeal of Christ they open the door and let him in, their spiritual life receives instant enlargement, and they become new centers of spiritual power within the church to whose fellowship they belong.

The overshadowing idea in this dramatic representation of the present attitude of the unseen Christ is his unquenchable desire to gain possession of his church, that he may make it pure, unselfish and fruitful, by filling it with the fulness of life. He knows how beggarly will be its condition without him. For its own welfare he seeks to control its life. He seeks to bless it and to use it, or rather he seeks to bless it by using it for ends the highest and noblest. With the same longing desire with which he seeks to get entire possession of his church, which he has purchased for himself, he seeks to get entire possession of the hearts which he has formed for himself. Happy the church, happy the heart that opens to him. Heaven begins when he is received.

HOW THEY TAKE IT.

The pessimist stubs his toe
Or bumps his pate,
And raises a wail of woe
And curses fate.
The optimist views the hod
That struck his head
And rises and praises God
That he isn't dead.

WHY NOT A REVIVAL?

William B. Millard.

THE first and greatest need of the church of to-day is a great revival of religion. This one need includes all others; for when a wave of Christian enthusiasm sweeps over a church, quickening its members into new life, all problems find immediate solution and all difficulties are swept aside.

In view of the fact that there is tremendous need of a revival why is it that the office of revivalist seems to have fallen into disfavor among our churches?

The answer to this question, I believe, lies in the fact that we have made great progress in theology, but have not made a corresponding advance in our evangelistic methods. Modern scientific study has thrown a flood of light on the sacred writings, so that we understand them and their teachings better than our ancestors did; but the ordinary evangelist of to-day takes little or no heed of this increase in knowledge. He preaches as his fathers preached. He is trying to win men whose minds are filled with twentieth century ideas by addressing to them an eighteenth century appeal.

Within the limits of a newspaper article it is possible only to mention, without stopping to discuss, a few of the points at which the theology of the study has outstripped the theology of evangelism.

The popular conception of God has been greatly modified within the last fifty years. The old-fashioned preaching represented God as seated in the heavens upon a great white throne, judging the quick and the dead. This conception was thoroughly anthropomorphic. Now we emphasize the words of Jesus that "God is a spirit." We believe with Paul that "in him we live and move and have our being." We believe that Tennyson is a true teacher in saying, "Closer is he than breathing, and nearer than hands or feet."

While no school of thought ever intentionally placed limitations upon the idea of God, the old school emphasized his transcendence, while the new school emphasizes his imminence. The old theology was filled with imagery which often conveyed the impression that God was a kind of great man, with limitless powers, who was localized somewhere in the universe. Modern theology declares that God is a spirit, filling all space. One view represents God as external and superior; the other as internal and all-inclusive.

Our understanding of Jesus and his work has been enlarging. The old view was that he came to save his people from the consequences of their sins; now we are beginning to appreciate the far larger fact that he came to save his people from their sins. Formerly the thought was made prominent that he came to provide the undeserving with a passport to heaven; now, without denying the former, we urge the view that he came to help us to live "soberly, righteously and godly in this present life." We used to say that Christ came to save man's soul; now we say, rather, that he came to save the whole man, body and soul.

Another point at which our views have undergone a modification is in regard to punishment for sin. Punishment used to be regarded as an infliction; now we look upon it as a consequence. The old theology represented God as wreaking vengeance upon the guilty; now we believe that the sin itself, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. Jonathan Edwards produced a tremendous impression when he preached his famous sermon on "Sinners in the hands of an angry God," for he voiced the prevailing belief; but such a sermon would get no response to-day, for people no longer believe that God, in a fit of anger, casts his erring children into hell.

In place of the old, mechanical view of punishment, imposed and inflicted from without, modern theology believes punishment to be the natural consequences of sin. If a worm devours the heart of a tree the tree perishes without any special edict from God. If the worm which dieth not, which we call sin, eats into the heart of one's life the life becomes blasted and withered in the natural order of things. Punishment, then, is not a special visitation of God's displeasure, but the unerring consequences of violated law.

Our belief in the inspiration of the Bible is not what it once was. According to the old view the Bible being the direct utterance of God, through holy men of old, every part was considered of equal importance and equal value. In every dispute if an appropriate text of Scripture could be quoted it was supposed to close the discussion; for when God has spoken who shall gainsay it? But the church found that this claim proves too much. If isolated texts, removed from their setting, are to be regarded as oracles of God a man can prove anything in the world by a judicious shuffling together of texts. Indeed, our Lord found that "the devil can cite Scripture for his purpose."

Do we believe that the Bible is inspired? Most assuredly. It is the inspired and inspiring record of the wonderful way in which God has led and educated and developed his people. It is rich in great truths which the still small Voice has whispered into the hearts of saints and prophets. But the divine message comes through humane channels; it is given "in divers portions, and in divers manners," and it is given progressively along the line of an historical development. In the Old Testament we have only the rudiments of the truth. The final word comes from the lips of the Christ.

The observation and experience of the Christian people of this generation will bear out the saying that, in our evangelistic efforts, we have made our appeal, almost exclusively, from the old point of view; God, the great, far away Judge, to whom we must render up our account at the close of life; Jesus, the Advocate, who will, on the Judgment Day, intercede in our behalf; fire and brimstone, the means of punishment which is to be visited upon the guilty. In support of these points, a string of proof texts is quoted with an air of absolute finality.

The trouble with that kind of an appeal is that men have come to feel that it is not an accurate statement of the case. It does not exactly square with the facts as we now understand them. And when we so frame our appeal as to arouse reasonable doubts the power to convince and persuade is lost. Too long have we been trying to apply our new theology through the old evangelism, and we have secured about the same results which our Lord predicted for those who put new wine into old bottles.

As the first and greatest need of the church is a great revival, so our first and most important duty is to prepare ourselves for a revival. Let us take down the harps of our evangelism from the willows, where they have been hanging, and tune them up into harmony with the celestial music as we hear it to-day. Let us stop the discord between the truth that is addressed to the understanding and the exhortation that is address to the heart.

The new appeal must have a heroic note running through it. Let us not merely say, "Jesus paid it all," let us not tell men simply to jump into the ark, that it is all easy, without money and without price; for that may be made an appeal to selfishness, and selfishness is the root of all sin. Rather let us call on men to come and suffer for righteousness' sake; to sacrifice money, time and ease for the kingdom of God. Let us preach a gospel for the living rather than for the dying; a gospel that shall be heroic and unselfish, rather than comfortable and easy. Let us tell men that they must work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, and not encourage them to think that Christ will do all the work. Let us tell strong, healthy people that "every man must bear his own burden," and not merely declare the comforting thought that they may cast their burdens on the Lord. When the central thought in our appeal is to give, and help, and sacrifice, expecting nothing in return, then we will be appealing to the Christ-like instincts which slumber in the human breast. And then will our revival come.

HIGHER CRITICISM AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Chas. M. Fillmore.

IN JULY the Sunday schools will begin their regular seven-year course of the study of the entire Bible, starting with the first chapter of Genesis. Since last the Sunday schools studied Genesis, Biblical criticism—higher and lower—has come into public notoriety as never before. Beyond doubt, in July tens of thousands of people will ask, "Who wrote the book of Genesis?" and "When was it written?" What shall we answer? Some will say that Moses originally wrote every word and every syllable at the direct dictation of God. Others will affirm that, while Moses is the author, his work, under the guidance of God's spirit, was somewhat in the capacity of an editor, since it was entirely original, because he incorporated into the text some documents which he found already in existence. Others will affirm that, while it is Mosaic in substance and spirit, it is composite in character, the original Mosaic document having been edited, revised and modified in various ways during various periods subsequent to Moses. A very few may go to the extreme of asserting that it is wrong to call it a Mosaic document at all, because it is uncertain whether Moses wrote any of it, or even any of the Pentateuch, unless it be the ten commandments, and even that is doubtful.

The next question that has been brought into dispute by modern criticism is concerning the historicity of events and personages in the patriarchal age. Were Adam and Eve actual individuals, or are they idealized characters, typical of primitive humanity?

Are the sketches of Noah, Abraham and other patriarchs real biographies, or are they somewhat uncertain and mythical? Is it true, in the language of a noted critic, that these biographies contain only "a substratum of actual personal history," that "the sacred writers aimed at something higher than the bare production of primitive history," that "the sacred authors of these stories" must be granted "a license of dramatic and ethical expansion" of the bare and meager facts concerning the patriarchs handed down by tradition, so long as they use that license in achieving "the creation of types of character essentially historical?"

Another question analogous to this pertains to the literary character of at least the early chapters of Genesis: Is the third chapter plain, historic narrative, or is it figurative? Did a snake maintain an argument with a woman, or is this a parabolic or poetic creation similar to the stories of "The Good Samaritan," "The Prodigal Son" and "Dives and Lazarus"?

Question of Inspiration.

Finally, the question concerning the inspiration and revelation of the book must come under discussion. It will be claimed by some that if Moses did not write Genesis; if all the details recorded concerning Abraham are not actual facts in the personal life of that individual; if the serpent did not really talk with Eve—then there is no inspiration or revelation in Genesis—if discredited in part, it is wholly discredited. In answer to this the critics maintain that it is altogether a matter of definition of terms—that they believe in inspiration and revelation, though not of the kind advocated by the conservative traditionalists. The traditionalist virtually asserts that "All Scripture (meaning everything found in the generally accepted canon from Genesis to Revelation) is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine," etc. The higher critic says "Every Scripture inspired of God is profitable," etc., and asserts that there are some things in the commonly accepted canon which have no right to claim the authority of the impelling power of God's spirit.

On the question of revelation, the difference stated in a sentence is, "Does the Bible contain numerous revelations from God?" or "Is the Bible itself, as a whole, in each and every part, a revelation from God?" The higher criticism claims that the historic and scientific statements in the Bible, as well as many other things in it, are not matters of revelation, but that "by revelation is meant a truth or truths received from God into the minds of men, not by the ordinary methods of inquiry, such as observation and reasoning, but by a direct operation of the Holy Spirit." "Revelation, in the strictest sense of the term, is that body of truth which is made known to man in a special way, because the ordinary methods of finding truth would not suffice. Broadly speaking, then, the revelation in the Bible is precisely that which, apart from the Bible, not only would not, but could not, have been known."

The Proper Attitude.

This, we believe, is a brief statement of at least some of the matters that are likely to come before many of us in the discussion of the Sunday school lessons during the next six months. A most practical question for us, then, is: "What shall be our attitude with reference to these questions raised by the critics?" Various positions are possible:

1. The questions raised by critics may be ignored entirely.
2. Their teachings may be mentioned with only contempt and ridicule; and the critics, one and all, be branded as agnostics, rationalists, atheists and dangerous men generally, to be carefully avoided.
3. Their claims may be accepted and promulgated as the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

4. Their deductions may be treated as partially true and partially false.

What is the right attitude to assume? The matter cannot be wholly ignored. In this day of the general spread of knowledge, there are certain to be some people in the Sunday schools, especially in the Bible classes and other adult classes, who have learned of these things from the papers or magazines, from the pulpit or lecture platform, or from some other of the numerous avenues of public information. The would-be teacher who ignores them will find himself ignored as an ignoramus.

The time has also passed, if it ever existed, for treating the matter lightly. There are earnest, intelligent young people in our congregations whose inquiries concerning these matters cannot be brushed aside by a wave of the hand, a knowing arch of the eyebrows or a contemptuous shrug of the shoulders. Nor will a sneer, a joke, mere ridicule, nor vociferous denunciation take the place of calm reason. Thoughtful, cultured men and women will require more than somebody's ipse dixit to convince them that Moses wrote every word of the Pentateuch as a stenographic amanuensis of Jehovah. One must be able to give a good and satisfactory reason for the faith that is in him if he contends that the third chapter of Genesis is literal rather than allegorical, and that Eve held a conversation with an actual snake. Nor will it do to bunch the critics in an indiscriminate mass and label them all as infidels, atheists, agnostics and iconoclastic subverters of the faith. In the first place, it is not true, for some of the most devout men of faith and piety are among the critics. In the second place, it is the height of folly to make an impression upon a community that the scholarship of the world is tending toward infidelity or agnosticism, when the opposite is the real truth.

On the other hand, we must beware of the Athenian itch. The newest theory is not per se the truest reality. Novelty is not an infallible criterion of truth. The converse is more likely to be the case. He who shuts his eyes and swallows everything the higher criticism drops into his mouth will be likely to suffer from mental indigestion.

The True Aim.

The true disciple of Christ has but one aim, that is to know the truth that he may do it. If criticism, higher or lower, shall discover any truth, it is the imperative duty of every follower of Jesus to accept that truth and walk in its freedom. Truth, like gold, often lies hidden deep, and can only be dug out by great labor and severe sacrifice. But it is worth all it costs of study and toil. Healthful mental food must be obtained by the sweat of the brain—"Study to show thyself approved unto God," and to your intelligent fellowmen; and study also to keep your own self-respect. Place first principles first; put faith in Christ before belief in the existence of Jonah.

One of the best things about the place of the study of Genesis in the present scheme of lessons is that it is begun immediately after eighteen months' study of the life of Christ. The correct place from which to study the Old Testament is on the mountain top at the feet of Jesus. From the very necessity of the case too much of our Sunday school study is like that of a miner, prospecting a little at one spot, then moving on to another and another. Occasional nuggets of truth may thus be found. But all truths are correlated. The isolation of a truth is the misapplication of a truth. He who studies only single facts and does not see the sequence of events will not understand the providence of God. He who spends his life farming a ten-acre tract of some barren mountain of Kentucky will have a meager conception of the beauty of its blue-grass region or of the greatness of the world outside that state. If one would understand any part of the Bible he must first of all get a right conception of the Bible as a whole. The book of "Revelation" completes the circle begun at Genesis. The first Adam is an unsolved mystery without the second. The story of the garden of Eden is a fable containing no moral without a Paradise to come. The third chapter of Genesis pictures a long, dark night, without a star or hope of dawning, till we find the fourth chapter of Matthew. The blood of righteous Abel would cry from the ground in vain but for the blood of the atonement.

Independence of opinion and freedom of discussion should not be lamented or suppressed, but rather encouraged, so long as those who differ are honest and candid, sincere seekers after truth, who keep their minds open to conviction. Let us be slow about casting the odium theologicum upon all who differ from our own opinions.

We need not fear for the safety of the Old Book. It has withstood many bitter, determined attacks from all kinds of enemies without and traitors within, and today it is more impregnable than Gibraltar. Do not defend it. It needs no defense. It is its own best defense. Your duty is to teach it. But be careful lest in your mistaken zeal you sow seeds of distrust in the hearts of your pupils.

BACCALAUREATE WISDOM.

The University of Chicago.

"Religion and the Higher Life" was the theme of Dr. Harper. He urged the graduating students to adopt an individual religion broader than any church—a simple, reasonable, tolerant, idealistic, ethical and comforting religion to meet the demands of the higher life. He recommended the essence of Christianity as such a religion.

"In my use of the word religion," he said, "I am not thinking of the church. The church is only the outer shell, which takes on a different form and can be destroyed, while religion is imperishable. Positively we may say that religion may be called the elder sister of art, science, philosophy and ethics, constituent elements of the higher life. In art the imagination and the emotions have fullest sway; in science, the intellect and judgment; in morality, the will. In religion these faculties must be held in even balance."

Of the religion best adapted to the needs of those whose sympathies are in harmony with the newer life he said: "It will be simple. It must be reasonable. It must stand the test of investigation. It must make no false and pretentious claims. It must be a religion of toleration. It must be characterized by idealism, or the artistic soul cannot endure it. It must be ethical. It must also be a religion capable of furnishing comfort in time of trouble, for this is what art and science cannot do, and this, after all, is the greatest demand of the human soul. The religion of Jesus answers all these tests."

Armour Institute of Technology.

Dr. Gunsaulus spoke on the subject "The Evolution of Human Character and the Evolution of Machinery."

"In some profound way," he said, "what occurs in the development of human character may be found to occur in the evolution of that machinery which is part of the expression of human character and career. Life's engine is character. It is character after all that draws the train of human influence along. The almost inexplicable thing called character is both engine and engineer. It is both the operator and the instrument."

"Every human being finds himself called upon to carry heavy loads from one period of life to another as soon as he begins life as a responsible being. Each man has to repeat within himself in the development of his life engine what the mind of man did by experiment and study on those coarse beginnings which are today in force in the locomotive."

"We do not know how much progress we make in doing a noble thing, no more than did the inventor know how he helped on the steam engine. We do not know how far we go when we make a step in character. We only know that we go farther than we think and God goes with us. In the growth of private character the idea to be aimed at is to get the greatest result from the least expense of effort. But it takes long years to get that. Character building goes by slow but steady advancement."

The University of Michigan.

President Angell of the University of Michigan chose for his theme "Environment and Selfhood," and in opening his address he said that during the last half-century two very different ideals of life have been cherished. One idea made man a kind of creative thing, capable of shaping his environment and not to be shaped by it. With regal will he is to choose his path and trample down all obstacles between him and his goal. He is to mold society if strong enough and to be a virile, independent personality.

This ideal comes in part as a reaction from certain stern theological and philosophic dogmas, which virtually made man the helpless victim of destiny or fate and doomed him to grind day by day in a prison house of a world.

The second ideal—man adapting himself to environment—he said, substitutes prudence for heroism, though it may save us from serious mistakes. But it does not always attain such heights of achievement and glory as are reached sometimes by the uncalculating and self-reliant audacity of the man who sets out with unquailing spirit to carve his way over or through all barriers.

Young men are not to be swept away by the dream of a day or the temporary gust of public opinion.

Man has a higher function than to be a weather-cock. He may be called upon like our Lord to confront his age rather than to be subservient to it, to defy the terrible power of hostile public opinion at all cost, to die as a martyr to truth and a friend to mankind.

Harvard.

President William De Witt Hyde of Bowdoin college delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the senior class of Harvard University. His sermon was full of advice to young men, and helpful in every way. In it he showed the difference between life in the college and life in the outside world, outlining the difficulties which young graduates will meet and giving them rules by which their lives may be guided successfully.

"First," he said, "give your best. Show yourself to be better than all others who are working with you. Don't seek for snaps or try to fill a government position which a hundred other men could occupy as well as you."

"Secondly, don't take anything that you can't pay for at the full price. In college words, 'don't swipe.'

"Thirdly, be brotherly. When you go out into the world do not make the mistake that some swell-headed fellows do when they come to college. Get in touch with the rank and file. Never look with indifference or condescension upon those in lower walks than yourselves."

"Fourthly, be self-sacrificing. Model your lives after Christ. The Christ of the twentieth century is not the same as the sectarian Christ of the nineteenth century or the dogmatic Christ of the seventh or the official Christ of the thirteenth, of the metaphysical Christ of the fourth, or even a Christ after the flesh which Paul had already outgrown in the first. He is pre-eminently the social Christ, and as such is greater than all that has gone before. Consecrate your lives to him and renew day by day your devotion to what is generous, brotherly and best in life."

North Western University.

The Rev. Daniel Dorchester, Jr., of St. Louis, speaking on "Individuality," said, in part:

"Everything in this world is a part of something else. Mutual dependence is everywhere. In society, for example, there is a binding force which brings people together for mutual help and protection. No man can live by himself and grow better, for development is a matter of association."

"Strictly speaking, no man is self-made. That is a popular phrase that is incorrectly used. Every man is made partly by the society in which he moves."

"Members of this graduating class will find that the goal of life is a shifting one. You will not always strike where you aim. You will find it a difficult matter to attain any high object you may aspire to. External influences are acting on us continually. But, above all, remember you must be yourselves before you are anybody. You must have an individuality before society will want you to be a part of its machine. A great personality will always include the multitude."

Brown University.

The 121st annual baccalaureate sermon at Brown University was preached by William H. P. Faunce, D. D., president of the university. His text was from a portion of Genesis i., 28: "Replenish the earth and subdue it and have dominion over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."

Dr. Faunce said that the class of 1901 was fortunate in entering upon practical life at a wonderful period of the world's history, when great events are transpiring, great problems need solving and when educated men are more than ever needed to take the places of leadership. He spoke of the difference between the old-time college education, which strove to turn out men of one pattern only and ruined many in the effort. The modern college tries to assist its students along the lines of their special aptitude.

Every college graduate should be a minister. And a minister does not necessarily mean a clergyman. His ministry should be an endeavor to help all mankind.

Oberlin.

President John Henry Barrows, D. D., of Oberlin College delivered his third baccalaureate sermon. His subject was "The Nobility of Man" and the text Matthew xii., 12: "How much, then, is a man better than a sheep?" He said in part:

"No one but Christ can fully answer this question and show the immeasurable superiority of him who was created in God's image. The question was originally put to bring assent to the benevolent teaching that it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day. If even a scrupulous Pharisee would on that day pull out of a pit a sheep that had fallen into it he ought to deem it right to help a fallen man at that or any other time.

"The working principle of Christianity is the superiority of man to laws, forms, service doctrines, externalities. Christianity puts the highest possible estimate upon personality, upon the individual's soul. It is for the purpose of building man up into mental and spiritual power and fullness that churches, days, truths, colleges have been given or organized.

"It is important to emphasize in these days of opulence and luxury the fact that man with his intellectual and moral greatness is akin to God and that his personality is more sacred than things and institutions."

Wisconsin University.

"The University and the State" was the subject of the baccalaureate address by Acting President E. A. Birge. Dr. Birge briefly reviewed the progress of the university since its establishment fifty years ago. Among other things he said:

"There are those who sneer at technical studies as furnishing bread and butter education. Surely, of all ignorant sneers, this displays the deepest ignorance. If the growth of the doctrine of evolution during the past forty years has impressed any truth upon the mind, it surely should be that the winning of bread and butter, that the struggle for the material conditions of living has been the force behind the long and slow development of life and civilization. Out of it have come those powers of the senses and of the mind which in turn underlie our spiritual existence."

Cornell.

At Cornell the baccalaureate sermon was preached by Rev. B. L. Whitman of Philadelphia. He said in substance that man is a part of a world of reality. In this world each constituent part is called to do its work, and hence man must do his share. Man desires to live not so much because he fears the uncertainty of the life beyond as that he desires to live this life out. In the struggle for existence he is always looking to his own betterment and he secures this result in two ways—viz.: by the process of addition and of subtraction. The former is the usual method employed and frequently the process of subtraction is neglected. Man should subtract all the animalism from him. He should be able to determine what to leave behind and what is the best in life to take with him for his own good. The personal element is the strong factor in determining in each individual case what this world shall mean. Each man will judge it from his own standpoint of view.

Hillsdale College.

The sermon was delivered by President G. F. Mosher, who spoke on "The Enlargement of Life." He said in part:

"Jesus Christ said he came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. His coming was not for a religion or a creed primarily, but to give life. Christ came to give a larger physical life.

"It is a strenuous age and strong men are needed. We are exhorted to present our bodies as a living sacrifice. He came to give a larger political life. Not larger in territory, necessarily, but larger in its real purpose and scope.

"Christ came to give intellectual life. The highest ideal of life is in advance of a mere pursuit of riches. Man cannot live by bread alone. Intellectual development tends to broaden and elevate the man. We must know the truth, stand for it, live for it, and die for it if necessary, but have positive convictions."

Beloit College.

President Edward D. Eaton took for the text of his baccalaureate address John 8: 32: "The truth shall make you free."

He said: "Truth made man free because it removed all unbelief and superstition. It gave a broader outlook of thought and thus opened up to the mind a view of unexpected brilliancy. Truth offered an inner harmony with the universe and brought man to a realizing sense of his place and part in it.

"If truth is to make us free it must be loved with passionate ardor for itself and not for what it may bring us. It must also have a moral tendency, for the good only are sure of God's full revelation of truth. No man who blurred his vision with evil can ever hope to receive the blessing vouchsafed by truth."

Ohio State University.

Rev. Charles S. Murkland preached the twenty-fourth annual baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Ohio State University. Rev. Mr. Murkland's topic was "Ye Are the Salt of the Earth."

He referred to the admirable way in which the progressive education of the present day fits young men and women to meet the requirements of life, but impressed upon his graduating auditors that it does not do to rely entirely upon it for a successful business or professional career. Education, he said, must be re-enforced by earnest and intelligent effort and must be guided at all times by a thorough Christian spirit. Otherwise the graduates who leave college with the confidence and hope of youth will find themselves trampled under foot by the nervous energy of those whose vigor and constancy of purpose keep them always in the front ranks of industry, commercial and professional pursuits.

Northwestern College.

President Kiehoefer delivered the baccalaureate sermon at Northwestern College, saying in part: "The human life is founded in faith. Objectors to faith do not understand their position nor the wonderful element of life they would conceal. Faith is the implication of life; without faith life is impossible. Knowledge is the apprehension of reality. We are constantly translating faith into knowledge; mind translates what it has believed into knowledge. Faith is not a mystical element, but is implied in our very constitution. All our mental powers stand and act by faith."

THE PROBLEMS OF HUMAN DESTINY.*

M. E. Harlan, LL. D.

2 Tim. 4:7. "I have fought the good fight. I have kept the faith."

John 18:37. "To this end was I born and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth."

That we are here in the world for a purpose is evident. That we are going somewhere is equally certain. These two facts make enchanted ground of the whole battlefield of life. During this brief period between the "coming" and the "going" man acts his part of a deathless drama "with suns for lamps and eternity for the background." To Robinson Crusoe there was no impressions on the sand half so interesting as the footprints of his man Friday. There are no footprints like the footprints of the race. There are no heart hungerings like those of man. There are no wrestlings like the wrestlings of human affection. There is no destiny like the destiny of the soul. The greatest created thing is man—half dust and half deity. To neglect either half is suicidal. The anarchy of self is the maddest insanity. Of all earth's creatures, man is the only one that will never cease to be. The lower forms of life scarcely breathe till they pass on and out forever. Their birth and death are so close together that they join hands in the mad revelry of mortality. The robin is born in the spring and matures and leaves for his winter home in three short months; but man is so wonderful in destiny and is in possession of such endless capabilities that it takes thirty years to mature him. And then he is not completed, for when you remove the scaffolding you then learn that what you saw was only the unfulfilled prophecy of what he really was to be. That youth who climbed high up the natural bridge in Virginia and carved his name above all competitors found it impossible to descend the tortuous way, and was forced to climb out over the dizzy top, was much like those climbing the mountain of life. There can be no stepping downward. It is either to heaven as the goal or an irreparable crash and wreckage in the abysmal depths. Even one pause to look at the bottomless abyss may be the first movement in the descent to death. To be privileged to live and get the most out of life should move to matchless melody the divinest chords of human gratitude. Any man who is content to fall even one degree behind his best endeavor is unfit to rule in the kingdom of manhood. To fail is the fiercest hell. To succeed is the supremest joy. As Joseph Cook has said, "Life is no joke, but a reality from the cradle to the grave." On life's stage are acted tragedies too serious for laughter—tragedies which cost the life blood of the soul. Golgotha is the pivotal point in every human history.

Every young man and woman stands at the threshold of a mighty kingdom, across whose border there is more than Paradisaical splendor. The first Paradise was a location. The true Paradise is a condition. To live up to the limits of our possibilities is Paradise. To exist is not to live. A stone exists but patient it becomes the vampire of death. Sometimes does not live. To live is unrivaled exultation. "To know, to love, to achieve, to confer happiness, to alleviate misery is rapture. The greatest crime and the severest penalty known to human law is the sacrifice and forfeiture of life." In living purpose and direction play a more important part than rate of speed. Many people go fast enough, but in the wrong direction. We measure our time in motives, not months; in heart throbbings, not by the ticking of the clock. Says Emerson, "We do not count man's years till he has nothing else to count." If this is life, then how to live becomes a most serious problem.

The View Point.

In the solution of life's problems much depends upon the viewpoint. High on the dome of an Italian cathedral are some noted paintings. They are a standing witness to the genius of the man who drew them. Without knowledge of art, however, those beautiful designs may appear to the untrained eye but coarse paint spread by the clumsy hand of some careless student. There is but one spot under the great dome where you can catch the master's idea. That spot is marked on the richly laid floor by the cross of Christ, in whose honor the paintings were designed. So, compared with what it might be, life will be but a coarse daub unless you view it from the cross of Christ. Viewed from the cross, there is just enough shading of the dark and discouraging to give the jewel of hope the most gorgeous setting. Before you take another step forward ponder the problem well, or your seeming forward step may be the beginning of an endless retreat. You stand today where in your lives prophecy and history meet. If thus far you have been true to yourself, then there is no reason why you should be either a croaker or a pessimist. If you are either, you are in the wrong world and will fail. This is love's fair morning, and you will be left to beat out your life against your own self-imposed relentless gates of gloom, or sit unheeded through your long chilly night of a living death. Briefly stated, the pessimist's theology is this: This is the worst possible world, and this is the worst possible moment of this worst possible world. He finds his greatest pleasure in being miserable, and is happy only when he is most unhappy. Back into the face of God's holy harbingers of hope he throws with rash impiety all the prophecies of victory, and substitutes his god of dust and despair. With foul breath he would extinguish the light of the world, and then from out his dark abyss would cry aloud, "All is darkness and I must grope my way alone." He would drive from all the great thoroughfares of life the chariots of love, and then complain that he must go a solitary way.

The life of the pessimist is a long nightmare. He laughs at virtue and says it has its price. Kindness and courtesy he calls hypocrisy and deceit. He curses law as organized infamy and the tool of tyranny, and brands the church as organized greed.

"Count o'er the joys thine hours have seen,
Count o'er thy days from anguish free,
And know, whatever thou hast been,
'Twere something better not to be."

Pessimism has no encouraging dividend to declare on any of life's investments. It is the child of declining hope. It is a contagious disease, to scatter the seeds of which is a crime against humanity. To the normal mind it is an affectation. To the chronic it ripens into that nameless character that by self-appointment becomes a kind of town clock, by which all are to regulate their consciences. Sometimes it appears as a well-developed crank who is so narrow between the eyes that, when he holds before him the smallest truth, he cannot see around it on the vast ocean, from whose expanding beach he has gathered but one grain of sand.

*Synopsis of Baccalaureate Sermon delivered at Drake University Commencement.

Christ an Optimist.

Over against these deformities we are glad to place the religion of Christ. Christ was an optimist, not of the kind that would not see evil, but seeing it and fighting it, he threw his shining lance of truth straight as an arrow at the mark. When Christ entered the world, all forces had combined to make it one of the darkest periods of history. Think of it! He who had not an evil thought stood under a storm swept sky made lurid with the lightnings of dire disaster that for 4,000 years had been gathering force, and there, friendless and alone, became the chief character in the sublimest and yet most pathetic tragedy known to man. It was a time when desolation and despair had become drunken in the wild carnival of blood. Herod, the ruler in Christ's own city, not satisfied with slaying the "innocents" at Bethlehem, ordered that at his own death his nobles should be slain that there might be universal grief at his departure. Prisoners were forced on the stage, dressed most gorgeously, and in the midst of their acting flames would burst forth from beneath their feet and leave them writhing in the agony of death on the stage, to the delight of the assembled multitudes.

But even at such a time, when the very clouds seemed to rain defilement and the earth oozed out the slime of death; when virtue was the exception and vice the rule, Christ stood in calm serenity and sang the song of victory. He told his followers that truth would yet free the world and that the kingdoms of this world would become his kingdom. And as an optimist facing the future, he heard the muttering of the receding storm, and saw the radiant, cloudless morning; and with a word of good cheer on his guileless lips, he wrapped his robes about him and quickly swept from the gloom of Golgotha to the sweet serenity of an endless victory. Behold the march of victory through these 1,800 years and believe your God! We have just closed the most eventful century in the world's history. Through the fight of faith we have been winning territory for our King.

None but a jaundiced mind can read the eventful history of the perseverance of God in trying to make something of man and be a pessimist. Some of us have been so busy with the perplexity that lies next to us that we have failed to see the gradual ascent of the race. Some small peninsula may have sunken, but the great continent has risen. And in the rarer atmosphere of the altitude of faith our horizon broadens and we at least begin to catch the inspiration of his view, into whose kingdom all the kingdoms of the world will eventually be merged. If man did begin with his ladder resting in the mire, its top presses the stars. If history can trace the descent of man from Eden, faith, with unerring certainty, can trace our journey to the future Paradise that "awaits the people of God." It is ours to have hearts large with the hopes of Christ, the greatest optimist known to man.

History and experience are replete with the fact that the best fruit from the tree called manhood can be raised only near the temples of Christ's religion. Faith is the keen eye of purpose, without which the soul is blind and cannot see afar off. Christ's words are to become our working motto: "To this end was I born." In the midst of all our work or play let us ask the question: "Was I born to this end?" If not, then struggle back to some high purpose before you become a failure, for, like Christ, you should ever be about your Father's business. Your mind, your brush, your pen, your voice, your muscle, must not be prostituted, but used for the same general purpose for which Christ used the cross—to bless and glorify man. Let your every act lend force to the thought that:

"Every hope that rises and grows broad
In the world's heart, by ordered impulse Streams from the great heart of God."

In all your plans do not forget that life itself is much greater than your life work. Your profession should be a contribution to your life. Your profession is incidental. Purpose is everything. Between Saul—the mere intellectual student of Gamaliel—and Paul—the great apostle to the Gentiles—was the holy vision of an unconquerable purpose.

In solving life's problems infidelity cannot aid you, for at best it is but a negation. Agnosticism is a kind of Job's comforter, for, according to its own admission, it does not know, and, as if in mockery, it grimly shakes its empty and purposeless head and says: "Nothing!" Every laudable aspiration human hearts crave has been answered in the life of the Galilean Commoner. If you ask me for the complete solution of your life's problems, I point you to him who, by the well-known process of elimination and inclusion, leaves man in the full possession of his best estate.

Here in the United States, where lies the sphere of your life labor, is to be built up one of the world's greatest empires. In this work of empire-building you are called to take a part. You stand today facing hitherto undreamed-of possibilities. The prize within your reach is well worth every effort it will cost you to gain it. Never before has the world called so loudly for educated men and women. I congratulate you on your privileges. Seize hold of your golden opportunities. Fight the good fight of faith. Press forward to your appointed place in life's broad realm and be thankful that you have such a goodly heritage for the taking.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

People make a great mistake when they attempt to estimate the guilt of sin by the painfulness of its punishment. The most painful diseases are not always the most fatal; nor are these sins which are most quickly followed by the sharp stroke of suffering necessarily those which war with most fatal effect against the soul. Rather those sins are to be feared which act upon the moral nature like a dull narcotic, robbing it of its power to discern the evil, and to feel that pain and abhorrence which a pure nature must feel at the touch of what is morally loathsome.—S. ## BIBLE SCHOOL.

GOD THE CREATOR OF ALL THINGS.

Lesson for July 7, 1901.

Golden text: Gen. 1: 1. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

Studies in the Old Testament.

Let us not think, after our long series of lessons on the life of Christ, that in Genesis we are taken from the realm of the eternal Son. The same apostle who throws much light on our Lord's work, when he had taken the form of flesh, gives knowledge of him "before the world was" (John 17: 5), when he "was in the beginning with God," and stating that "without him was not anything made that was made" (John 1: 2, 3).

The Book of Genesis.

Genesis is a Greek word, and means origin. This book contains a distinct statement of the orderly progression of creation, setting forth not a framework of scientific truth, but clothing in common language adapted to common minds the story of the beginning of the world and of the human race.

Purpose of the Book.

Let us fix in our minds the purpose of Genesis. It was not to impart scientific knowledge or general history, but to set forth an intelligible account of God's relation to the human family in order that man might become "wise unto salvation" (II Tim. 3: 15). This is made plain if we will but observe the remarkable narrowing process shown in the book. The heaven and earth at first appear, but the earth alone is taken as the scene of the Bible story. Chaos passes from view, the waters shrink, life in its lower forms become but an incident, and man, dear to God because like him, stands forth single and alone in the account. The fall is given with great minuteness, because it relates to salvation from sin; while the history of a thousand years is summed up in a bare catalogue of names. By the same process of elimination Cain, Ishmael, Esau were passed over with a word, while faithful Noah and Abraham are given prominence, the latter as the father of a nation in which the hope of a world in a Redeemer was to be fulfilled. The same discriminating process is apparent throughout the sacred record to the last book, inspired writers choosing the essential fragments, avoiding much. See John 20:30, 31.

Authorship.

By the Jews the authorship of Genesis has always been ascribed to Moses. Yet there are plain internal evidences that portions are made up from very ancient documents written by different authors. This is not difficult to perceive by any reader of the English Bible. The most simple mark of such diversity of documents is found in the use of the name of the Most High and a difference in style and method. In what is known as the "first document," chapter 1 and to chapter 2, verse 3, the term in Hebrew is uniformly Elohim printed "God" in our Bibles. In the "second document," taking in from chapter 2: 4 to the end of chapter 3, and containing a second narrative of creation, the term in Hebrew is Yehovah Elohim rendered "Lord God" in English. Chapter 4 is the "third document," and here the term is Yehovah only, and rendered "Lord" in our Bibles. For Moses, as compiler, to quote from pre-existent documents, no more invalidates his inspiration than similar quotations in the New Testament, for example as in Acts 17: 23, 28, 29.

V. 1. Creation of Matter. "In the beginning," the meaning is "of old, in the former duration." The reference is to an indefinitely remote period, possibly millions of years in past eternity, when the Son had glory with the Father, John 17:5. * * * "God," from the same Saxon root as good. The existence of God is assumed as being more patent to the reason of man, who instinctively acknowledges a supreme being, than is the origin of the universe. Do we find the eternal Son whom Thomas recognized as "my God" in this verse? Most plainly so, by Col. 1:16, 17; Heb. 1:2; John 1:2; 1 Cor. 8:6. * * * "Created." He did not produce His creations whether matter (as here), life (verse 21) or spirit (verse 27), out of anything outside of His own fullness. Creative power with God may have been like a man's power to produce sound with the vocal organs, or to move the eyes or to use the hand. God spake the word and it was done. Heb. 11:3; John 1:2; Ps. 32:6. * * * "The heaven and the earth." "Worlds." Heb. 11:3. Doubtless the whole system of which our earth forms a part—sun, planets with their satellites. See Job 38:4-7.

V. 2. Chaos and the Spirit. "Earth was waste and void" (R. V.). It is the stage of the mineral, not the organic, kingdom, preparatory for the next higher plane of the vegetable system, which alone is capable of feeding on inorganic matter. * * * "Spirit of God." The spiritual, not the natural, is the great source of all power and existence. God is spirit. * * * "Moved" or brooded over, wooing to order and beauty. Adapting the creative material of the earth by successive steps to the uses of living creatures. The secret of the unrolling earth is found in one word—motion. Light, heat, electricity, are modes of motion.

V. 3-5. First Day. Divine Days. "And God said." Inasmuch as every one of the six days' works opens with "and God said," it is widely assumed that the first day's work should begin with verse 3. Between the created matter and its adaptation to created life there is a chasm representing untold ages in the narrative, clearly perceptible in the Hebrew. * * * "Let there be light." These are the first recorded words of God. God, who is "light" (1 John 1:5), is the source both of material and spiritual life forever. Neither the word "created" nor "made" are used, inasmuch as "light" obviously had a previous existence. The dense mists and clouds surrounding the globe may now have been diminished to show the presence of light where darkness before had brooded. * * * "And the evening and the morning." Evening is mentioned first because the darkness preceded the light. * * * "Were the first day." The term "day" is frequently used to designate indefinite periods of time. 2 Pet. 3:4; Luke 19:42; Joel 2:2; I Sam. 3:2. The seventh day of God's rest from creation continues yet. Day may have been understood to be a natural day of 24 hours to the men of the Mosaic age, but the natural day will serve to illustrate the idea of an incomprehensible period.

V. 6-8. Second Day. Separation of Waters. "The firmament." The expanse of air above us. * * * "Waters above the waters." Evaporated waters which rise as atmospheric moisture or float in the form of clouds. The quantity of water thus suspended is beyond calculation. It is the source of rivers. * * * "Waters...under the firmament." God spake, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther, and here shalt thy cloud waves be stayed." Job. 38:11.

V. 9-13. Third Day. Clothed Continents. "Earth... seas." The dry land appears and is clothed with vegetation for man and animals. The psalmist possibly hints at the process in Ps. 104:6-8: * * * "Grass...herb...tree." The next stage in the preparation for man—the vegetable kingdom—was a preparation for the higher animal kingdom; growing plant organisms living on mineral products on which animals cannot live. * * * "Yield after its kind." Indicating the doctrine of species.

V. 14-19. Fourth Day. The Clearing Skies. "Lights * * * to divide it from night." It is assumed that with the rising of the heavy mists the air was so fully cleared that light and darkness and the heavenly bodies, appeared in their natural order. In our own time clouds preceding a storm are heavy sometimes so as to make it difficult to believe there can be a bright sun overhead. * * * "He made two great lights." Not "created" but "made." This word is frequently used to signify appointed. The rainbow was later made or constituted a sign, though it existed before. * * * "The stars also." They are referred to as signs in the heaven.

V. 20-23. Fifth Day. Origin of Life. "Created." The same word as in the first verse now is used for the second time in the narrative. * * * "Let the waters bring forth abundantly." The earliest life was that of the marine or reptilian age. It included fish and mollusks, as well as great sea monsters, of which latter, bones remain and are shown in museums in this day.

V. 24-31. Sixth Day. Age of Mammals. The waters and the air are new peopled; earth animals alone are wanting. The order is first, the creation of the higher animals of the dry land; second, the creation of man.

V. 26. Divinity Reproduced. "Let us make man in our image." A plurality of persons is indicated. This was the last and crowning act of creation by which the earth and eternity were to be peopled with true sons and companions of God, partakers of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1:4) and to share the glory of God with the first begotten Son forever (John 17): * * * "In our image...likeness." As God is a spirit this likeness cannot refer to physical appearance. The likeness is one in the realm of intellect to conceive of God and receive a revelation from him, memory, will power, moral power, conscience, immortality. No greater honor can be thought of than that which God put upon us in making us above all his other creatures, children in his own image. * * * "Have dominion over." Man is the crown of creation.

V. 27. Superlatively Favored. "So God created man." While man truly was formed out of dust, his essential nature, which was Godlike was created by divine inbreathing. The glory of Christ is that He and the Father are one; the glory of man is that he is made in the divine image. * * * "Male and female." The narrative of woman's creation appears in chapter 2:21-24. * * * "Created he them." The plural pronoun is used to show that woman is included in man's creation in God's image.

V. 28. The Family. "God blessed them." He blessed them far beyond any of his other creatures. * * * "Be fruitful and multiply." If it was "very good" that man was created, it likewise was good that the human species should be multiplied. * * * "Replenish...Subdue earth." This is a commission to man; and has been called the Colonists Charter. Man is to master the earth's forces. All progress is in harmony with this law. The subduing of the wild parts of the earth has been the basis of the right of property. * * * "And have dominion." Supremacy among God's inferior, although stronger, creatures. The horse and ox are stronger than man. What, then, has man for defense and power among creatures that are stronger and specially armed? He has the spirit of God within him; therefore, all others obey him. Ps. 8:6-8.

V. 29. Divine Gift to Man. "Behold, I have given you...herb...fruit." It is observed that flesh food is not mentioned here. See Chap. 9:3 and Rom. 14:1-6; 1 Tim. 1:4. One of the unexplained mysteries is the relation of man and brutes under the sinful conditions of earth. See Isa. 11:6-9; Rom. 8:21. * * * "It shall be for meat"—this means for food. But the providence of God, in giving perpetual seed time and harvests, is essential; if these for one year were withheld all mankind would perish.

V. 30. Provision for Animals. "To every beast...green herb." The food supply of all animals is based on vegetation.

V. 31. Divine Approval. "Very good." It has been good in detail; in the sum total it is superlatively good, being perfectly adapted to the end designed.

Chap. II., V. 1. Completed Work. No chapter division should appear here, but at the beginning of the "second document," at verse 4. The present arrangement of the Bible into chapters and verses is not according to the original, neither is the chronology in the margins authoritative, but is the guesswork of scholars. * * * "Were finished." The work of creation was complete. Now begins the seventh day, the work of redemption. * * * "All the host of them." The phrase indicates orderly arrangement, as an army.

V. 2. The Hallowed Rest. "Seventh day ended his work"—had carried out his plans of creation. He had still to exercise his developing and sustaining care. * * * "He rested on the seventh day." The first thing appointed after man's creation was the day of rest. Of this day only it is not said, "and the evening and the morning were"; an indication that the seventh day, like the others, is a long period in which we now are living and the end of which is known to none but God. See Heb. 3:18 to 4:11, relative to the "rest of God."

V. 3. Sabbath Blessing. "God blessed the seventh day." Hallowed it to the good of the soul he now had created and for its religious development. In our own day the day of rest is one of spiritual activity for ourselves and in behalf of others. It is necessary for spiritual health. It is the soul's chance. But besides, physical law demands that we rest one day in seven. Moses spake in Ex. 20:8 of the Sabbath as an old institution to be remembered and observed. The observance of one day in seven through thousands of years as a rest day is a remarkable testimony to the influence of God's word and law in guiding the affairs of men. * * * "Because in it he rested." If God the Father thus rested and commands his favored children to rest, how can we disregard his desires and be true children?

As we contemplate the process of creation through period after period, covering millions of ages doubtless, and all in preparation for the one creature made in God's own likeness, can we fail to see the importance of our existence here? And with a future in preparation as momentous in results as the past has been, shall we not have the greatest regard to share in such results which are to be ours if we choose?

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

By Peter Ainslie.

WITH this text we stand under the archway of beginnings. It is the morning of the world. There was the first poem and God was its author. The sky, with its blue and gold, and the earth, with its mountains and rivers and its carpets of emerald, did not spring into existence without a maker any more than the poetry of Virgil or Dante or Shakespeare or Milton could have sprung into existence without those poets, or if similar poetry, it could not have been written without similar poets. There is no place to talk about chance here. No man has ever said that Shakespeare's plays sprung upon pages of white paper and a mind did not conceive neither did a hand write; they have tried to say that Bacon wrote some of his plays, but why should Bacon have written such masterpieces under Shakespeare's name and have left upon his own doorsteps deformed children? The claim is absurd. Yet men look daily upon the master poem of the world, which is creation, and deny that they was even so much as a Master Poet. They do not say that there was some other person than God who created. That would be more reasonable, but they deny that there was a creation, and, if a creation, that some things fell together and out of them some others were made. It reminds me of a man convicted of crime and in his despair he tries to prove that the judge and court are greater criminals than he is, and he plays the part of a fool—just as every other man does when he blurts forth that things came by chance and there is no God.

God is the creator and all the things he made were good. He made not a single bad thing and when his good is turned into evil it must be remembered that not God, but Satan, has turned the color and brought decay. Satan tried to capture the entire world and his ambition almost reached the goal, but God redeemed his handiwork and the creator became the Redeemer, so that up under the very eaves of creation stands the cross and the open door of the tomb, declaring that although creation may decay and find a grave, that grave has been opened and its door has been left open and no man can fasten it. Not only shall there be a resurrection of the body, but there shall be a new heaven and a new earth. The beginning of the end is the resurrection of the body. Paul tells us clearly in his letter to the Romans the order of the restoration. Man was the last that was made and he is the first that is redeemed. His redemption is a guarantee of the redemption of the heaven and the earth. The Redeemer, who is God, is as great as the creator, who likewise is God. The poem of the beginning shall be restored in its perfect beauty and then we shall read: After ages God re-created the heaven and the earth.

O Lord, we are still thy handiwork and some day we shall be thy glory through Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRAYER MEETING.

OUR COUNTRY.

Psa. 147: 20. References: Psa. 144: 15; 33: 12; 16: 6; Deut. 32: 7-13.

THE time was when it took courage and an enlarged vision to speak of this, now the queen among the nations, as "my country." But today more than twenty million people are proud to be members of this great commonwealth. We occupy a unique place among the nations. Though the youngest, we stand erect with the sinews of the giant—"time's noblest offspring in the last." God's overshadowing presence has been with us from the landing of the Mayflower until the present day. "He hath not dealt so with any people." The supreme desire of our forefathers who laid deep the foundation of our nation's greatness was to worship God and do his will. Hear them as they give their pledge: "With firm reliance upon the protection of divine Providence we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor."

Resources.

While we would not overestimate the value of large areas and a vast domain, yet it is a very important factor in the building of a great state. Little did Malthus know of the latent resources of the new world when he sounded the note of alarm in his "Law of Population." The lamented W. E. Gladstone said that we have "a natural base for the greatest continuous empire ever established by man." If we could take up America and lay it down on the face of Europe, the latter would be almost if not wholly concealed from view. Our soil is not excelled in productiveness and our mines are the richest in the world. We are sending our manufactured products to every quarter of the globe. We are "becoming the mighty workshop of the world." It has been estimated that with our agricultural resources fully developed we could sustain and enrich a population of 1,000,000,000 people. "America holds the future."

Perils.

Most people are familiar with that powerful book by Josiah Strong bearing the same title as our subject. It should be read and reread. We cannot do better than give the title of a number of chapters:

"Immigration," "Romanism," "Mormonism," "Intemperance," "Wealth," "The City."

America has been an asylum for the oppressed of all nations. In this we rejoice. But she has also become a dumping-ground for the nations of the old world. The paupers and criminals of the most menacing type have been brought here. It is the old question of the lion and the ox. Too much ox means a sick lion. More foreigners than we can Americanize and Christianize means our dissolution.

Passing over three of the greatest perils, we are confronted with the problem which wealth and the city present. What a commentary is our present grasping, greedy civilization upon the words of Jesus: "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!" We have been charged with being "too beastly prosperous."

Master and slave in the old sense has passed away, but that we have these two classes in a different form and under another name we cannot deny. And especially do we see this in the city. The slum and the boulevard are the complements of each other. They must rise or fall together. The city is the strategic center. Here vice of every kind flourishes, and here Christianity is put to the test.

Our Bulwarks.

What of the future? Which is our means of defense? Is ours a rising or a setting sun? When we see the storm cloud which threatens us we cannot but ask these questions. While there is cause for alarm we cannot despair so long as we have faith in an ever-present God. The home, the school and the church—these are the bulwarks of a free people. Guard well the home life of the republic; make the public schools the best in the world, and work and pray for the union of God's people with Christ as the head and the future is secure.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

By Charles Blanchard.

GOD AND COUNTRY.

Topic July 7. Ref., Deut. 4:5-10; Ps. 22:4, 5.

BEHOLD I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord, my God, commanded me, that ye should do so in the midst of the land whither ye go in to possess it." These are a part of the patriotic words of Moses before he resigned his leadership to Joshua. No nobler utterances can be found on the pages of history than the words of our lesson. Read them! Read what I may say in commendation or comment if you find time, but take time to read over again the lofty appeal of Moses, the prophet, patriot, statesman, the law giver of the civilized world.

"In the Midst of the Land."

We are living in the midst of the goodly land of our inheritance. We are the heirs of the ages. The ends of the earth are looking into us to show the possibilities of a government of the people, for the people, by the people. Our grandfathers endured the unequal conflict of a seven years' war that the principle of a government by representatives chosen by the people themselves might be instituted among men. They triumphed by the might of right, enthroned in courageous souls of patriotic soldiers and statesmen with loyal womanhood behind them. They wrought with wisdom from above. The God of Freedom laid bare his arm to war for the welfare of the human race. Let us firmly believe this—as who that reads the romantic story of the American Revolution does not? Yet in the glamour of the golden age in which we live, with its material marvels and its multiplied wealth of worlds at our command, we may be puffed up with pride and forget the day of “small things” with large meanings. We are growing away from the events of our early history. We are in danger of forgetting the humble, yet patriotic, origin of our institutions of freedom. We may forget the high destiny which is ours—a chosen nation, as I most surely believe, for the working out of the problem of the world’s redemption.

Our fathers of a generation gone gave up a sacrificial offering upon the altar of human freedom that slavery might be abolished, and that the government by a free people should not perish from the earth. Free twentieth century has dawned upon an expectant world. The morning stars of destiny are singing together. Let the sons of God, who are also the sons of freedom, shout aloud the nation’s anthem, prophetic and full of praise:

God grant that we may be such men as they,
And stronger, in the freedom which we hold,
On whom the burden and the heart of day
Are fallen to bear aloft the starry fold!

“For this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. For what nation is there so great, that hath God so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon him for? And what nation is there so great that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this love which I set before you this day? Only take heed to thyself and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart from thy heart, all the days of thy life; but teach them unto thy sons and thy sons’ sons; specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb, when the Lord said unto me, Gather me the people together and I will make them hear my words that they may learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth and that they may teach their children.” This, I believe, is not less than to Israel of old, when they were about to enter into the goodly land of promise. We need, especially, to remember the day of our nation’s birth, as Israel the day when they stood before the Lord in Horeb to receive the law.

God’s Message to Us.

The Declaration of Independence is one of the loftiest utterances of the mind of man, aspiring after the freedom which is the birthright of the race. We can ill afford to forget the day forever consecrated to freedom by our ancestors. Not in noisy demonstration only, but with reverence and gratitude shall best be kept sacred the holy day of the world’s new birth of freedom.

What use for the rope if it be not flung
Till the swimmer’s grasp to the rock has clung?
What use is eulogy’s blandest breath,
When whispered in ears that are hushed in death?
No! No! If you have but a word of cheer,
Speak it while I am alive to hear.

STUDIES IN MISSIONS.

[Supplementary to the C. E. reading courses.]

REASONS FOR MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

By W. J. Wright.

OD has ordained that the world should be saved through missions and missionaries. He has not provided that men should know him and Jesus Christ whom he sent, save through the “foolishness of preaching.” A heathen philosopher once said that nothing which was of interest to man could be a matter of indifference to him. Missions, however, are of interest to God. Every Christian should therefore inform himself concerning them.

The risen Christ having “all authority in heaven and on earth,” himself a Missionary, made his disciples the same. “Go, preach, teach,” said he to his followers. No Christian can afford to be ignorant of his Master’s will and commands.

Missions are the best application of the “Golden Rule” to be seen in our times. Fancy yourself in the heathen’s place when rumors of the blessings of the Gospel had reached you, but as yet no direct tidings of him had come. Times innumerable the heathen have appealed to us and challenged us to send the Gospel to them. But because they need it, whether or not they want it, we should send it.

Missionary enterprise is an effort to induce the entire church to act the Good Samaritan. Ignorance, superstition, priestcraft, cruelty and filth constitute the robber band which has stripped, robbed and wounded two-thirds of the human race. In their condition lies our chief opportunity. We ought not to be ignorant of it.

Missions civilized Europe, and her progress toward general enlightenment is due to the story of the cross. With such mighty success and far-reaching results already to their credit, none can afford to be ignorant of missions. The best parts of American civilization came from Europe and are the direct results of missionary effort. To know our own history aright we must be informed in missionary history.

Missions represent the heroic element of Christianity. From the time of the apostles to the present, the aggressive, out-reaching force of the church as displayed in missions produced the heroes. To know a great host of those “of whom the world is not worthy,” study missions.

We are debtors to this movement for practically all that is valuable in or about us. Take from us all that missions have directly and indirectly brought to us and you put us on a level with the savages of central Africa. To see the pit from which we were dug, and to get a clear vision of those who did the work, we must study missions.

Missions appeal to the best that is in man. They enlarge his vision and thus prevent him from becoming self-centered; they teach us the practical aspects of the “Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man”; they give new impetus to the Gospel, new purpose to prayer, new motives to service; they enlarge the gifts of the church; they tend to make us “grow up into him in all things who is the Head, even Christ.”

They develop the church at home. Think of the work being done at home through mission bands and other agencies for the redemption of the world. And notice that those who are the workers in these societies are they who are developing in ability to do all kinds of Christian work. They are the workers in all departments of church life, and their leavening power tends to leaven the entire lump.

The mightiest movement in the world today is the missionary movement. No matter what is being done with armies and navies; no matter what legislation is seeking to prevent or to bring about; no matter what schools, colleges and universities are doing at home, or what are the triumphs of the crowbar and spade amid the scenes of ancient civilizations in other lands; no matter what our inventions, enterprises, pleasures; no matter how vast the combinations of capital and stupendous the commercial undertakings growing out of them—greater than all these, as the sun is greater than a tallow candle, is the business and "divine enterprise of missions," which aims at the subjugation of all men of our own and all future times to the will of God through the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.
JESUS APPEARS TO PAUL.

Monday—Acts 22, 1-16.

Paul bases his argument on personal experience. He does not reason the matter theologically. He does not adduce from Old Testament Scripture proof after proof of the divinity of the Nazarene. He does not overwhelm his hearers with his eloquence. He chooses a different mode.

And a better. Simply and clearly he tells the story of the change which made him a new man. That was his message to his countrymen. That was the method by which he sought to gain their souls for his Master.

He was right. The Christian is the best evidence for Christianity. He is its fruitage, its result, its workmanship. I may not be able to point to a conversion so striking as that of St. Paul. I may not have entered the kingdom by the same gate. But is my soul filled with a new hope? Is my life rescued from sin? Then I am an epistle of Christ.

Tuesday—Acts 9, 1-9.

I cannot gauge the Savior's love. Saul the Pharisee was alienated in thought and will and love from the Son of Mary, who is the Son of God. He hated Jesus as an impostor, a charlatan. But though he had reviled the Nazarene and turned his back on him, he could not provoke Christ to cease caring for his soul. And neither can I provoke him. There will come a time, no doubt, when "the wrath of the Lamb" is kindled. But not yet, not yet. The Redeemer still "shows forth all long-suffering." And thus he wins me for himself and for his Father.

It is just as impossible for me to set boundaries to the Savior's power. What could revolutionize Saul the persecutor but Almightyness itself? What can revolutionize me but the energy of a supernatural Hand? Outward reformation will not do, nor the most careful discipline and training. It is the Lord Jesus Christ alone, through his Gospel and Holy Spirit, who can give me a spiritual beauty and a spiritual health which spring from within.

Wednesday—Acts 9, 10-22.

The true Christian alone is able to feel the profoundest compassion for those who are perishing. So soon as Paul is himself the captive of Jesus Christ he becomes a chosen vessel, to bear his Savior's name "before the Gentiles and kings, and the children of Israel." So soon as his own heart is at rest, "straightway in the synagogues" he proclaims the Son of God.

Outsiders have noticed often that an evangelical theology prompts men and women to the most untiring efforts for the salvation of others. Why is that? It is because those who have that theology, not in their hands but in their hearts, understand best what they are in their shipwreck and poverty, and what Christ is in his restoring grace. They judge of their brother's need from their comprehension of their own. They are eager to press Jesus on his acceptance, because they feel what great things he has done for themselves.

Thursday—Galatians 1, 11-24.

I learn that the Christian takes the lowest view of himself. Think of Paul, years after his conversion, still remembering how he persecuted the church of God, and made havoc of it. So William Carey chose to portray himself as "a guilty, lost and helpless worm." So Andrew Bonar, within a few months of his death, wrote, "I was in pain because of the discovery of my shortcomings." Let me be as humble.

I learn that the Christian never ceases cleaving intensely to Christ. Not with flesh and blood does Paul confer, but with his Lord; with him it must be faith, strong, whole-hearted, unflinching, all the days of his life. So, because there are fearful possibilities of evil in me still, let me confess that I require the omnipotent strength of Jesus to keep me.

And I learn that the Christian loves Jesus passionately. He preaches the faith he once destroyed. He belongs in every faculty and power to the Lord his Healer. Let me know myself ruined and dead without Christ, let me think of him yearning over one leprous and polluted, and I shall never weary crowning him who has redeemed, and is renewing me, with the crown of my devotion and my obedience.

Friday—Ephesians 3, 1-12.

Conversion introduces to service. When the mystery is made known to Paul, he preaches among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. Now he cannot refuse to go into the city and through the wilderness and over the sea. Now he is ready to spend and to be spent. Now he will fight the good fight, and will keep the faith which his Savior and his King has committed to his care.

Before any word is spoken for Christ, or any work is done, before I set out to run his errands and to advance his kingdom, I must have an experience like that of Paul. I need to come into personal contact with the Lord, and to be summoned by himself to aid his cause. First, the interview with the Master, and then the undertaking of labor for him and the carrying of his cross—that is the only true order.

Saturday—1. Timothy 1, 12-17.

The son who appears to stay at home with God, may really be worse than the prodigal in the far country. Saul the Pharisee was now in his own judgment, as he had always been in his Lord's, a more blameworthy man than the publicans and harlots with whom once he would not have exchanged a word. He was "the chief of sinners."

It may well be that I am guiltier than the drunkard and the profligate. Everything has been against them, and everything has been in my favor. Their inherited constitution, their present circumstances and surroundings, their deep-rooted habits—these things fight, like the stars in their courses, in opposition to them.

But Jesus accomplishes most wonderful changes. The blind receive their sight; the dead are raised up. He renews even me.

Sunday—Acts 16, 16-34.

An American naturalist says that the human brain is full of birds. The song-birds, he holds, might all have been hatched in our hearts, so well do they express our feelings. Robin, thrush, lark, mocking-bird, nightingale—they give utterance to our love and sadness and hope and joy. It is very beautiful to find my nature tenanted by these sweet minstrels of the air. But God pictures it more sadly. He shows me that it is a nest of every unclean and hateful bird. The fierce hawk, the croaking raven, the devouring vulture, the birds of tempest and discord and death—these are typical of my passions; these brood within me; these fly forth from me to pollute and injure and kill.

But Christ, who changed the heart of the jailer of Philippi, makes all things new. He expels the evil tenants and invites the songsters in. He throws the arch of the rainbow across the cloud so big with storm. Since I cannot save my own life, he takes the task on himself. And how blessedly he achieves it! Let me be an heir of death before I am an heir of the City of God afterward. He is the Lord my Righteousness, the Lord my Everlasting Light.

A SAMPLE OUTLINE BIBLE STUDY.

As an illustration of the thorough work that is being done in some churches in Bible study, we present the following outline, prepared by the Rev. Joseph Selden, D. D., of Greenwich, Conn., for use in his midweek service. It is of interest for its own sake as a piece of scholarly work and it is of special value as supplemental to the Sunday school lessons in the Old Testament which begin on the first Sunday in July.

OUTLINE STUDY OF THE LITERARY HISTORY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

1. As indicating the date of composition, note references in the Old Testament to earlier writings, as the source of the sacred history. Num. 21:14; Josh. 10:13; I Kings 14:19; I Chron. 29:29.

Such references to historical writings earlier in date than the books of the Old Testament are frequent.

2. Incidental allusions, showing the record to have been made long subsequent to the events narrated.

Gen. 36-31—written after the establishment of the monarchy in Israel. Gen. 14:14—compared with Judges 18:29. I Sam. 27:6—There were no "Kings in Judah" until after the secession of the northern tribes. II Kings 25:8:30—compare with Jeremiah 52:12-34. Evil Merodach began his reign B. C. 561.

3. A study of the historical books shows:

[1] There are no allusions to the Levitical system in Judges, Ruth, I Sam., II Sam. In I Kings 2:3 is found the earliest mention of a written law subsequent to the death of Joshua. The story of the discovery of the Book of the Law of God in the day of King Josiah [II Kings 22:8] shows that a complicated system of religious rites was at that time—B. C. 621—unknown. [2] The forms of worship observed by the spiritual leaders of Israel throughout the entire period previous to the exile, are seen to disregard the explicit terms of the Levitical statutes. During the earlier period, there was no central sanctuary to which the people came for worship; Gilgal and Shiloh were as sacred as Jerusalem. In I Sam. 3:3 the boy Samuel is pictured as sleeping at night in the Temple of Jehovah in Shiloh where "the Ark of Jehovah was."

The prophets utter frequent protests against the priestly claim of sacredness for Levitical system, and disclaim its ancient origin. Amos 5-25; Jeremiah 7:21-23.

4. The earlier historical books show unmistakable evidence of their composite structure. Examples of duplicated narratives:

The Story of Creation. Gen. 1:1-2:3 and Gen. 2:4-25. Gen 20 compare Gen. 26.

The Record of the Flood. Gen. 6:5-8; 7:1-5; 8:20-22; 9:18-27. Compare Gen. 6:9-22; 7:6-8:19; 9:1-17, 29. Each group of passages gives a fairly complete account of the flood, the accounts in general running parallel, but compare 6:19-20 and 7:2-3.

In the Book of Judges compare 1:1-2:5 and 2:6-23 [Josh. 24:29-31]. Note that Judges 1:11-15 places the capture of Debir after and Josh. 15:15-19 before the death of Joshua.

Analysis of the earlier books of the Old Testament shows their composite structure, the sacred writings making free use of ancient historical documents distinguished by such literary peculiarities as the exclusive use of the divine name "Elohim" in one and "Jehovah" in another, and still more clearly by the prophetic or priestly point of view of their writers.

5. The following conclusions may therefore be received in confidence, as established by the consensus of the Biblical scholars of the first rank in Europe and America.

[1] The books of the Old Testament are, as a rule, composite literary structure—that is, they are not the work of a single group of writers. And, while they contain authentic records and traditions reaching back to remotest antiquity, they evidently received their present literary form late in the history of Israel.

[2] The most authoritative spiritual messages of the Old Testament are to be found, not in the Levitical statutes, but in the utterances of Jehovah's special representatives—the prophets.

[3] The supreme and imperishable value of the Old Testament, for us, is not in its formal rules of life, but in its disclosure of the power, truth and grace of Jehovah, the holy character of God being progressively revealed to us as we study this story of his dealings with men. In a word, the Old Testament is not only the record of a revelation made to men long ago; it is the medium of a personal revelation to ourselves to-day.

Books of Reference.

On the literary structure Old Testament: Gladden's "Who Wrote the Bible?" "Ladd's "What is the Bible?" Bruce's "The Chief End of Revelation," Lyman Abbott's "Life and Literature of the Hebrews," Smith's "Modern Criticism and Old Testament."

On the history contained in the Old Testament: Kent's "History of the Hebrew People," Willett's "The Prophets of Israel," Price's "The Monuments and the Old Testament."

When Henry Timrod, the poet, lay dying his sister whispered to him, "You will soon be at rest." "Yes," he answered, "but love is sweeter than rest." In spite of the weariness of the way, in spite of death, the stout heart clings to its own. It is not rest that we crave; it is the good the soul gets glimpses of, it is the dearest dreams come true. We pant for fullness of life. Thought wants its own; the heart wants its own, and is distraught till its purest desires are met. Everywhere, through all the degrees of being, there is a trembling into life, as a harp is responsive to every breeze. Brave Timrod, with the last darkness rushing on him, knew full well that "love is sweeter than rest."

LITERATURE.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

HOSE who become acquainted with the man Stevenson through the writer Stevenson come to cherish for him something akin to personal affection. No man ever revealed himself more fully in his writings and no man was ever more successful in converting his readers into personal friends. The writings of Stevenson are a commentary on his life. But his life was greater than anything he ever wrote. No romance he ever penned is so full of interest as his own brave and beautiful life. The closer men came to him and felt his human touch the more were they drawn to him.

When at Mentone he met and made the acquaintance of Andrew Lang. Referring afterwards to this first meeting Mr. Lang says: "I will not deny that my first impression was not favorable. He looked as in my eyes he always did look, more like a lass than a lad, with a long, smooth oval face, brown hair worn a greater length than is common and large lucid eyes. Here, I thought, is one of your aesthetic young men, though a very clever one. He had just written his essay, "Ordered South," on reading which I at once saw that here was a new writer, one who could do what none of us could rival or approach. I was instantly sealed of the tribe of Louis, an admirer, a devotee, a fanatic if you please." Notwithstanding the frailty of his health he never showed any sign of depression or discouragement. Edward Gosse, speaking of him at this time, says: "The gaiety of Stevenson was his cardinal virtue. A child-like mirth leaped and danced in him; he seemed to skip on the hills of life; he was simply bubbling with quips and jests; his inherent earnestness and passion about abstract things were incessantly relieved by jocosity. I cannot recall any of his jokes and written in cold blood they might not be funny if I did. They were not wit so much as humanity, the many-sided outlook upon life. He never complained; this, no doubt, though we were not aware of it, added to the charm of his presence. He was so bright, so keen and witty.

In 1879 his health visibly began to run lower and he used to bury himself in lonely French and Scotch places "tinkering himself with solitude," as he used to say. His pen, however, was not allowed to lie idle. Tales, essays and magazine articles followed each other in quick succession and brought him into favor with the public and the critics. But he was not satisfied with the result of his work. His ambition was to write a novel. He says: "I had written little books and essays and short stories and got patted on the back and paid for them, though not enough to live upon. I had quite a reputation; I was the successful man; I had passed my days in toil, the futility of which would sometimes make my cheek to burn, that I should spend a man's energy upon this business and yet not earn a livelihood, and there shone ahead of me an unattained ideal. Although I had attempted the thing with vigor not less than ten or twelve times I had not yet written a novel. All—all my pretty ones had gone for a little, and then stopped inexorably like a schoolboy's watch. In McClure's Magazine for September, 1894, he gives an interesting account of the writing of "Treasure Island." It was in 1888 that he set himself to this work. It was to be a boys' story. His stepson, Loyd Osborn, was home from school for the holidays; he had a boy at hand to try it on. It is a pleasant picture he draws of his reading aloud each day to the family his morning's work. Perhaps the most pleasing thing is the interest shown by his father in the progress of his work considering how bitterly opposed he was to his son's choice of a profession. Stevenson writes: "I counted on one boy, I found I had two, in my audience. My father caught fire at once with all the romance and childishness of his original nature. His own stories, that every night of his life he put himself to sleep with, dealt perpetually with ships, roadside inns, robbers and commercial travelers, before the era of steam. He never finished one of these romances, the lucky man did not require to! But in 'Treasure Island' he recognized something kindred to his own imagination; it was his kind of picturesque; and he not only heard with delight the daily chapter, but set himself to collaborate. When the time came for Billy Bone's chest to be ransacked he must have passed the better part of a day preparing, on the back of a legal envelope, an inventory of its contents, which I exactly followed; and the name of Flint's old ship, the Walrus, was given at his particular request." All went well for a time until the volume was half written; then the material seemed to run out; he had nothing more to say. It was being published as a serial in "Young Folks." The proofs of the first chapters were already coming in. What was to be done? To quote his own words: "I was more appalled than I can depict in words. I was thirty-one; I was the head of a family; I had lost my health; I had never yet paid my way; I had never yet made two hundred pounds a year. My father had quite recently bought back and cancelled a book that was judged to be a failure; was this to be another and last fiasco? I was indeed very close on despair; but I shut my mouth hard, and during the journey to Davos, where I was to pass the winter, had the resolution to think of other things. Arrived at my destination, down I sat one morning to the unfinished tale, and behold it flowed from me like small talk; and in a second tide of delighted industry, and at the rate of a chapter a day, I finished 'Treasure Island.' I passed a landmark I had written "The End" upon my MS., which I had not done since 'The Pentland Rising' when I was a boy of sixteen, not yet in college."

For the next few years he led a nomadic life, leaving everywhere in his wake devoted hearts that had become irresistibly fascinated by this bright, graceful humanist and artist. Perhaps no one was quicker to make deep friends when the true metal was found, or surer to grapple them with hooks of steel. A witty, ever-ready talker, a charmingly responsive listener, he was the best of company even when he was in his bed prison. California, southern France, the Adirondacks were each and all visited in search of health, but gave only temporary relief to the invalid. In 1888, when the air of the latter place proved too harsh for his weak lungs, he chartered the yacht Casco and sailed away for the South Seas with his wife and stepson, Loyd Osborn, never to return. After trying Hawaii and other groups, he chose a home on a mountain side several miles from Apia, the chief city of Samoa. Here he busied himself with his art and with the management of his plantation and the natives whom he employed and who formed part of his household. He exercised the same fascination over the natives of Samoa that he did over all with whom he came into contact. He enjoyed a singular degree of authority among them, owing to his kindness, justice, and a sympathetic understanding of their ways and characters. He was a man whose versatility and extraordinary sympathy made him immediately an intimate with the most alien humanity. He saw the familiar where other people would have discovered only the preposterous; and he was always not only observer, but friend. The Samoans are said to hate work and to change masters very often. Stevenson's men not only stayed with him, but worked well and took less wages than most. His explanation of this is that the Samoans rather enjoy discipline; they like however to be treated as gentlefolk. They like to be used with scrupulous justice; they like a service of which they can be proud. This, he says, we endeavor to give them by "trying" all cases of misdemeanor in the most serious manner with interpreters, forms of oath and so forth. We have a tree at Christmas for all hands, a great native feast on my birthday, and try in other ways to make them feel themselves of the family. No Samoan works except for his family. The chief is the master; to serve another clan may be possible for a short time to get money for a specific purpose. To insure permanent service in Samoa I have tried to play the native chief with European variations, just now it looks as if I was succeeding." In the missionary work which is being done among the Samoans Stevenson was especially interested. The Rev. W. E. Clark of the London Missionary Society, who from the first was one of the most valued friends of Stevenson in Samoa, says of him: "He was an observant, shrewd, yet ever generous critic of all our religious and educational organizations. His knowledge of native character and life enabled him to understand missionary difficulties, while his genial contact with all sorts and conditions of men made him keen to detect deficiencies in men and methods, and apt in useful suggestion." He lived a busy life in the far-away land, but he found time to keep up a constant correspondence with loved friends in the home land. He loved his native country; he once wrote that to be born a Scotsman he thought was the happiest lot on earth. How hard it was for him to be an exile comes out occasionally in some of his letters. To Sydney Colven he writes: "The truth is I was far through (if you can understand Scots) and came none too soon to the South Seas, where I was to recover peace of mind and body. No man but myself knew all my bitterness." Again he writes: "Did you see a man who wrote the 'Sticket Minister' and dedicated it to me, in words that brought tears to my eyes every time I looked at them? 'To R. L. Stevenson of Scotland and Samoa I dedicate these stories of that grey Galloway land, where above the graves of the martyrs the whaups are crying, his heart remembers how.' Ah, God knows it does! Singular that I should fulfill the Scot's destiny throughout and live a voluntary exile and have my head filled with the blessed beastly place all the time." In another letter, in which he urges Colven to visit Samoa, he says, "And then you will see Vailima, for it is beautiful, my home and tomb that's to be; though it's a wrench not to be planted in Scotland, that I can never deny. If I could only be buried on the hills under the heather and a table tombstone like the martyrs where the whaups and plovers are calling." One of the most potent lessons of Stevenson's life lies in the fact that life for him had been a fight, not only towards gratifying an ambition to be a literary man, but for very existence itself. Courage to work when work meant exhaustion, courage to hope when hope seemed to go ever further before, and courage to go on without a moment's begging of quarter were his; and while he found at Vailima that his physical power was at its best, even then to most men the bitterness of the struggle would have warped and nullified the best of talents. Not so with Stevenson. Nothing seemed to daunt him. Four novels came to the world from his tropical home and his letters to his friends were brimming with startling literary projects and astounding tasks he had set himself.

In January, 1893, he was laid up with a severe attack of influenza complicated with hemorrhage of the lungs. It was during this sickness that he began St. Ives, dictating it to his stepdaughter, Mrs. Strong. In a letter to Mrs. Strong's little son, Austinthen, at school in California, he wrote how he had to play dumb man for three days and dictate a story in the deaf and dumb alphabet. In August of the same year in one of his lively humorous letters to Colven he makes mention of having "a smart but eminently brief hemorrhage" and then goes on to tell of his beginning "Weir of Hermiston." In June he writes of a cold which prostrated him for two weeks, but adds cheerfully: "I have never borne a cold with so little hurt." During the next few months, however, his letters seemed to give his friends just cause for anxiety. He seemed at times to feel painfully the strain of literary work, which was wont to be his chief delight and pastime, the old invincible spirit of inward cheerfulness was in some measure beginning to give way, although to those around him his charming habitual sweetness and gaiety of temper were undiminished. His last day on earth was a fitting conclusion to his life. After a morning of happy work and pleasant correspondence he was seen gazing wistfully at the mountain summit he had chosen to be his burial place. Towards the evening he was talking gaily with his wife and trying to reassure her under the sense of coming calamity which oppressed her when the sudden bursting of a blood vessel laid him almost in a moment unconscious at her feet and in two hours there passed away in the forty-fourth year of his age one of the most loving and loveable, one of the tenderest and bravest men that ever lived, who, while here, endeavored by pen and presence to make the earth brighter for his being in it. A band of sorrowing natives cut a way through brush and forest to the high tomb and bore to it their loved Tusitala, their story teller, now forever silent. His friend, the Rev. W. Clark, read the service at the grave, at the head of which now stands a stone on which is engraven the following epitaph written by himself:

"Under the wide and starry sky
Dig the grave and let me lie;
Glad did I live and gladly die,
And I lay me down with a will.
This little verse you grave for me,
'Here he lies where he longed to be,
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter is home from the hill.'"

JUBILEE OF THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Several features of interest combined to make this great gathering of men unique and inspiring. The attendance of delegates and corresponding members numbered 2,000, and the general attendance was very large. At one session Mechanics' Hall, Boston, which seats 4,600, was filled to overflowing, and at another there were not less than 4,000 people. The delegates came from all the countries of Europe, and from India, Japan, Australia, Hawaii and South Africa. A remarkable historic and educational exhibit occupied a large hall adjoining Acres of wall space were covered with photographs and charts showing the progress and development of the various activities connected with the work of the association, physical, social, reading rooms, work for boys, employment bureaus, etc., in addition to the definite religious work and Bible study. The history and growth of each state and local association was likewise illustrated.

The opening service held in Trinity Church, Boston, was stately and impressive. A significant feature was the co-operation in such a place of four or five denominations in the leading parts of the service—Bishop Mallicieu of the Methodists, Samuel Capen of the Congregationalists, a representative of the Baptists, and the sermon delivered by Chas. Cuthbert Hall, a Presbyterian. The session devoted to the Army and Navy work of the Y. M. C. A. was undoubtedly the most enthusiastic. The great hall was packed. General Joe Wheeler, Admirals Watson and Higgins, and Lieut. Hobson were among the speakers, and Miss Helen Gould and Mrs. Russell Sage, who have been active in the Ladies' Auxiliary, were present. The college evening was another notable event. Booker T. Washington, Patton of Princeton, and Northrop of the University of Minnesota made addresses. The young men's meeting on Sunday afternoon, led by Fred B. Smith of Chicago, was such as is rarely witnessed. It was one that those present will not forget. Two thousand five hundred men were present, one hundred and fifty of whom made confession of their acceptance of Christ as their Leader and Lord. The farewell meeting on Sunday night was devoted to the foreign work of the association. Young men are sent into the key cities of South America, Ceylon, Japan, India and China, and the work done through them was set forth with such effect that within the space of twenty minutes $15,000 was subscribed for this branch of the work alone. A thrilling forecast of the day when "all men shall know the Lord" was given when representatives of nineteen different nationalities gave each in his own tongue the same verse of Scripture. A fitting close to this celebration of the founding in the United States of this great work for men was the visit on Monday to Plymouth, the birthplace of the nation. Dr. Alexander McKenzie of Cambridge, Mass., then made a magnificent address, and fresh inspiration for future work was drawn from the place of those early struggles for religious truth and freedom to worship God.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Rev. Maurice Grigsby was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Elwood, June 12.

Twenty-six persons united with Bethel Congregational Church, Windsor Park, on June 2, fifteen on confession.

Rev. J. P. Courtney has been released as pastor of Garfield Boulevard Church (United Presbyterian) on his own request by Chicago Presbytery.

Knox College has conferred the degree of doctor of divinity upon Rev. Stuart M. Campbell, pastor of the Emerald Avenue Presbyterian Church.

The Congregational church at Wauwatosa, Wis., one of the oldest of the denominations in the Northwest, has called Rev. A. R. Thain, D. D., of Oak Park, to its pulpit.

St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Kenwood, is being removed by the purchaser of the lots to the rear, but will be used for services till the new edifice is ready for occupancy in the early fall.

The North Englewood Congregational Church is about ready for dedication. About fifty have been added to the church membership and the Sunday school has grown steadily during the building period.

A farewell reception to Rev. F. A. Noble, D. D., and wife, was given June 21, by the Union Park Congregational Church, to mark the closing of his pastorate of twenty-two years. Dr. Noble was presented with $5,000 as a parting gift.

The First Presbyterian Church of Austin, having paid off all its indebtedness, celebrated its thirtieth anniversary by dedicating its beautiful stone building Sunday, June 23. The Rev. John Henry Barrows, D. D., preached the sermon.

Rev. C. E. Morse of the Millard Avenue Congregational Church has resigned and accepted a call to the Covenant Congregational Church, West Polk street and Claremont avenue. He will enter upon his new duties immediately.

During the summer months the services of the First Unitarian Society of Chicago will be held at Memorial Chapel, corner of Fifty-seventh street and Woodlawn avenue. During these months the Church of the Messiah at Twenty-third street will be closed.

Mr. Edward Goodman, who for forty-eight years has been actively connected with "The Standard," the Baptist organ of the city and the Northwest, has retired from further service. Since 1895, Mr. Goodman has been president and treasurer of the corporation publishing the paper.

Regular services with weekly sermons by a "university preacher" began last Sunday at the University of Chicago. For the first six weeks Dr. Marcus Dods of Edinburgh will preach. E. Benjamin Andrews will have charge for the second six weeks of the summer quarter.

Rev. Jesse J. Kolmos, pastor of Bethel Congregational Church, Chicago, takes twenty-six into membership the first of the month. Fifteen come in on confession of faith.

In the Rock River Methodist Conference the conversions during the past winter are stated to be 2,293 and the accessions to the churches 1,757.

The pastor of the South Side Tabernacle (Presbyterian), Rev. Reuben E. Fleming, though recovered from serious illness, finds it necessary to take a few months' rest. He has gone to Hillsdale, Mich., to remain until September 1. The pulpit will be supplied by Mr. R. D. Kearns, a student in the McCormick Seminary.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Church at Evanston, held a week ago, showed a good condition of affairs. The church now numbers 403 members, the largest in its history. Receipts for all purposes, exclusive of benevolence, were nearly $7,000. Including the amount paid for support of the Sunday school, the beneficences exceeded $2,100.

At the Baptist ministers' meeting Jenkin Lloyd Jones, pastor of All Souls' Church (Unitarian) gave an interesting and convincing address June 17, on the need of co-operation among Christians of all denominations and types of belief in the common war against civic evils, the saloon, immorality, the materialistic spirit, indifference to spiritual things, and other enemies which all encounter.

At the present time the Salvation Army operates in Chicago eleven English-speaking corps, seven Swedish corps, one Norwegian and one German corps, three slum posts, four working-men's hotels and one working-women's hotel, one home for fallen women, one slum nursery, one salvage warehouse, three salvage stores and one bureau for tracing missing relatives and friends.

A host of delegates is expected at the eleventh international convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, which meets in the Coliseum July 25-28. This gathering marks the close of the first decade of the organization. The addresses and exercises are to be based upon the keyword, Kingship. In the list of speakers appear the names of Rev. William M. Lawrence, D. D., Rev. John L. Jackson, D. D., of Chicago, Rev. J. B. Gambrell, D. D., of Texas, Rev. O. W. Van Osdel of Washington, Prof. C. L. Williams of Ohio, Rev. H. C. Applegarth, D. D., of Massachusetts, Rev. R. J. Willingham, D. D., of Virginia, and Rev. F. P. Haggard of Assam. The convention sermon will be preached by the former general secretary, Rev. E. E. Chivers, D. D., now of New York city. The president of the organization for the past ten years has been Mr. John H. Chapman of Chicago.

Organization of the People's Church of America was completed last week by the election of a board of seven directors as follows: Dr. H. W. Thomas, president; Professor John F. Eberhart, vicepresident and treasurer; Percival Hunter, secretary; John P. Altgeld, George W. Bowman, W. W. Ormsbee and Jenkin Lloyd Jones. Work will be begun in September toward establishing people's churches throughout the country.

Five of the city Presbyterian churches, West Division Street, Olivet, Onward, Avondale and the Eleventh, have joined in the tent movement, and each will have two weeks' use of the tent secured for services during the summer months. At the first Sunday evening service, June 9, at least 500 attended the meeting under the care of Rev. F. R. Rosebro and the West Division street congregation, more than five times the average attendance in their church across the way.

At the First Methodist Church, Clark and Washington streets, Dr. J. P. Brushingham has decided to depart from the usual summer custom of downtown churches and to remain with his charge and fill his pulpit during the heated term. Last Sunday he began a series of special Sunday morning discourses upon "Great Problems of Life." The first topic will be "Bishop Merrill's Doctrine of the Divine Fatherhood: Can We Accept It?" The church quartet will continue with Dr. Brushingham, taking no vacation during the summer.

Convocation Sunday in connection with the decennial anniversary of the University of Chicago, was a notable day. Dr. Harper's baccalaureate address on "Religion and the Higher Life" was fitting and helpful. A Bible service at 8:30 a. m., was devoted to the wisdom literature of the Scriptures, with addresses by President Harper, Prof. R. G. Moulton and Prof. Shailer Mathews. A prayer service for candidates of degrees and members of the faculties was held at 10:30. The vesper service had an elaborate program. The music was furnished by the university band, choir and chorus, the Quadrangle Chorus, and singers from the choirs of the following Baptist churches: Immanuel, Normal Park, Lexington avenue, Englewood, Hyde Park and Calvary and the Englewood, St. James and Oakland Methodist churches, with three soloists. The addresses were devoted to the general theme, "Is Religion Progressing?" discussed by Dean E. B. Hulbert, Dr. Marcus Dods, Dr. E. G. Hirsch, and Dr. E. B. Andrews. The Sunday services closed with a union meeting of the Christian associations of the university, with thoughtful addresses by Rev. Ernest M. Stires and Miss Jane Addams on "The Obligation of the Christian College Student."

Baptist.

The sixty-fifth annual conference of north Indiana Baptists opened June 17 at Mishawaka, Ind. Three hundred delegates were present. Rev. Messrs. J. W. Conley, D. D., of Oak Park, Ill., E. W. Lounsbury, D. D., and C. E. Hewitt of Chicago were among the speakers.

Rev. D. A. Brown has just entered on his work as pastor of the First Baptist Church of Salt Lake City.

The Milwaukee association met in Wauwatosa and had a helpful meeting. The Sunday School problems and possibilities were discussed. Some of the other subjects under consideration were: "The Training of Young Christians," "Ought Our Churches to Make a Distinction in the Form of Letters of Dismission?" "Is Committee Organization Helpful?" "The Prayer Service of the Church," "What is the Greatest Need of Our Country Churches?" "The Attitude of the Church Toward Reform Movements."

At Red Oak, Ia., one hundred persons have united with the Baptist Church during the three and a half years' pastorate of Rev. J. A. Shaw. The prayer meetings are well attended.

Forty-seven have been received into the church at Eau Claire, Wis., during the year, thirty-eight by baptism.

The German Baptists are not strong in Minnesota, numbering about 800, yet in the last ten years they have gained over fifty per cent.

Three schools are now operated in Indian Territory by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, expending on them $10,668.24. Additional equipment is much needed.

The American Baptist Education Society offered a gift of $15,000 to Ottawa University on condition that $45,750 be raised in the state. It has been done, with a good margin.

Wilson Avenue Church, Cleveland, O., was dedicated June 16. Three services were held. President Strong of Rochester, N. Y., preached in the morning. The church is a beautiful structure, built after the English gothic style of the Tudor period. It was erected in front of the old chapel with a cruciform outline. The auditorium is a spacious one, being about fifty feet square. The cost of this edifice was $20,000, exclusive of furnishings and fixtures.

The First Russian Baptist minister was ordained June 3 at Anamoosa, N. D.

The Seventeenth annual meeting of the Red River Valley Association met at Cavalier, N. D., June 4-6. "The Apostolic Mission Spirit" was the topic of the sermon and there was a valuable discussion of "Evangelistic Methods, What Shall They Be?"

Rev. E. P. Tuller, the newly elected pastor of the First Church, Detroit, Mich., preached his last sermon as pastor of the Second Church, Lawrence, Mass., on May 26. He gave the hand of fellowship to eleven persons, eight of whom had been baptized the previous Sunday evening. Mr. Tuller thus ended nine years of fruitful ministry, during which 481 persons had been received into the church, 290 of them by baptism, making the present membership of the church 796, the largest in its history. During this pastorate the church debt has been entirely removed, and nearly twice as much money has been given for benevolent purposes as during the twenty years previous.

The annual conference of the Free Baptist Church of South Dakota and Minnesota concluded June 16 at Sioux Falls, S. D. The subject of discussion was "Applied Christianity," and addresses were made by Rev. S. E. Very, Deleron, Minn.; Rev. J. J. D. Batson, Crystal, Minn., and T. H. Smithers, Huntley, Minn. Rev. R. R. Keenan,

FAMILY FOOD.

Crisp, Soothsome and Requires No Cooking.

brought to her attention on a visit to

A little boy down in N. C. asked his mother to write an account of how Grape-Nuts Food had helped their family

She says Grape-Nuts was first Charlotte, where she visited the mayor of that city who was using the Food by the advice of his physician. She says, "They derive so much good from it that they never pass a day without using it. While I was there I used the Food regularly. I gained about 15 pounds and felt so well that when I returned home I began using Grape-Nuts in the family regularly.

"My little 18-months-old baby shortly after being weaned was very ill with dyspepsia and teething. She was sick nine weeks and we tried everything. She became so emaciated that it was painful to handle her and we thought we were going to lose her. One day a happy thought urged me to try Grape-Nuts soaked in a little warm milk.

"Well, it worked like a charm and she began taking it regularly and improvement set in at once. She is now getting well and round and fat as fast as possible and on Grape-Nuts.

"Sometime ago a number of the family were stricken with LaGrippe at the same time, and during the worst stages we could not relish anything in the shape of food but Grape-Nuts and oranges, everything else nauseated us.

"We all appreciate what your famous food has done for our family."

editor of The Free Baptist, reported the circulation increasing, and a gift of $2,000 toward a permanent endowment, which will be increased to $10,000 as soon as possible.

The members of Bales Avenue Baptist Church, Kansas City, called a mass meeting of Baptists of the city for Sunday afternoon, June 16, to protest against Rev. W. J. Williamson, the pastor of the Bales Avenue Church, accepting a call to the Third Church, St. Louis. As an inducement for Dr. Williamson to remain, the congregation decided to build a large, new church edifice. Dr. Williamson has built up from small beginning a church that is now the largest Baptist congregation in the city and the second largest in the state. It has founded five missions, two of which have become churches. Bales Avenue Church has now fully 1,000 active members. The church building at Twelfth street and Bales avenue, which the congregation acquired in 1895, has been twice enlarged. It is frequently crowded to standing room at the hours of worship Sunday morning and Sunday evening. Dr. Williamson has, however, finally decided to resign and accept the call to St. Louis.

Congregational.

The Rev. Frank Fox, pastor of the First Church, Kansas City, Kan., has been elected mediator of the Kansas association and president of the State Endeavor Union. He is a graduate of Chicago Theological Seminary.

At Lee Center, Ill., where Rev. W. C. Barber is pastor, the attendance at the services is growing to such an extent that the capacity of the present church is overtaxed.

Dr. C. W. Hiatt, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, O., has been presented with $1,000 by his people to defray the expenses of a trip abroad for himself and wife.

Rev. F. D. Kelsey, Central Church, Toledo, O., plans to have the church endowed with $200,000, and so enabled to do its downtown work. The workers needed besides the preacher are, according to Dr. Kelsey's plan, an assistant to do pastoral work, a woman visitor, a Sunday School superintendent who should give his entire time to the work, and a private secretary.

Rev. C. H. Seaver of Garden, Mich., travels nearly thirty miles and preaches three times each Sunday. He is the only Protestant pastor in a territory of more than twenty miles square in which there are a dozen hamlets. His work is proving a blessing.

On Children's Day Rev. Victor F. Brown, pastor of the First Church, South Milwaukee, received eleven young people into the church from the membership of the Sunday School, all on confession, making a total of twenty-nine additions to the church since the first of March.

Rev. Mr. Murman of Forest Heights Church, Minneapolis, devotes the last Sunday evening of each month to a question service, which is proving very popular.

The church at Plainview, Minn., received into membership on Children's Day nine persons, making thirty-four received during the first year of the pastorate of Rev. Frank H. Anderson; twenty-four on confession.

At Round Prairie, Minn., the people live, on an average, more than three miles from the church building, and yet ordinarily more than fill it. In the last month twelve have been received into the church, mostly on confession. During Dr. J. F. Locke's pastorate the membership has increased from nine to sixty-nine. There is a strong C. E. Society and a growing Sunday School.

Plymouth Church, Des Moines, Ia., has voted to invite the National Council to meet with them in 1904, and the invitation is unanimously endorsed by the State Association.

Rev. Miner W. Fairfield entered into rest June 2, aged 78. He had been in ministerial service forty-five years, having been pastor of the Second Church, Oberlin, First, Oak Park, Ill., and in Romeo, Lansing, Ypsilanti and Muskegon, Mich., and other places. He was for ten years president of Olivet College, Michigan.

Rev. Campbell Morgan arrived from England June 19, to take charge of the Northfield extension work. He will reside in Baltimore.

June 11, 1901, at Genoa Junction, Wis., Mr. Alexander E. Cutler was ordained to the Congregational ministry. Sermon, Prof. W. D. Mackenzie, D. D. Other parts, Rev. W. W. Sleeper, Rev. P. M. Snyder, Rev. H. W. Carter, D. D.

Yankton College has just closed the nineteenth year of its history with a most successful commencement program. Twenty-five took diplomas from the academy and twelve from the college course, each class being the largest thus far in its respective department. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered by President H. K. Warren. Rev. Thos. J. Dent of Aberdeen gave the annual address before the Christian associations, and Rev. F. Newhall White, D. D., of Sioux City, gave the commencement address, his seven years of missionary labor in Japan yielding him much of the material for his masterful handling of his subject. The college has every dollar of indebtedness paid. Plans are already on foot for the erection of a commodious gymnasium building. Four South Dakota pastors were made new members of the Board of Trustees of the college. Two of these—Rev. D. J. Perrin and Rev. E. Fenn Lyman—are sons of the college; another is Rev. Geo. S. Evans, who recently closed a very successful pastorate at Hudson, and has sought a more difficult but strategic field of labor at Centerville; the fourth is Rev. L. E. Camfield of Ward Academy fame.

The Disciples.

Rev. F. M. Rains, treasurer and financial secretary of the Foreign Christian Mission Society, purposes a trip abroad, sailing from San Francisco August 2, to be gone five months.

Burriss A. Jenkins of Buffalo, N. Y., has accepted a call to the presidency of Kentucky University.

Rev. W. W. Denham of Mishawaka, Ind., has been called to remain there another year. During his ministry with that congregation the mortgage indebtedness has been reduced from $3,000 to $1,250, which is now fully provided for, and the church property has been greatly improved.

Rev. H. L. Willett delivered a series of six lectures on the Bible, at Ada, O., last week under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

At the state meeting at Waco, Texas, it was reported that the new girls' home at Add Rann University was built and paid for. Mr. T. E. Shirley gave up a salaried position as a railroad man, to work for this university without recompense, but his road refused to give him up and granted him temporary leave of absence till his work was done.

Disciples of Christ in the East have organized the Atlantic Christian League. It is a part of the plan of the Disciples to gain a foothold in the eastern cities. Members of the league are to pay $1 toward the erection of each new church which is made possible by these efforts. The pro-

The Author's Experiences.

U. S. Consul Pike, of Port Louis, Mauritius, has written a charming book upon this gem of the ocean, the home of Paul and Virginia.

Col. Pike, whose New York address is 43 Exchange Place, had a curious experience with coffee and the beverage almost destroyed his eyesight.

He says, "Speaking of coffee, my first warning against its use was insomnia followed by depression, and despondency. The nervous system was in such a condition that I could not attend to business, and to my distress I discovered that my eyesight was becoming more and more imperfect every day. From my knowledge of the symptoms of coffee poisoning, I concluded to leave off the coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee in its place.

The results were astonishing. Gradually my eyesight recovered, and the nervous condition and depressed feeling disappeared. I have now been using Postum in place of coffee for several years and am in perfect health.

"My family of six persons discarded coffee some time ago and use Postum. I would not be without it. It is a most valuable addition to the breakfast table and should be in every household."

moter of the plan is E. L. Kelland of Newark, and the headquarters of the organization are to be there. As a reason for such league it is pointed out by its officers that fully one-fourth of the 100 largest cities are within this Atlantic territory and not a Disciples' Church in one of them.

The Fourth Christian Church of St. Louis, Mo., was dedicated June 23. The seating capacity has been almost doubled by the recent enlargement, which cost $5,000.

The forty-second commencement of Kentucky University was held June 7-13. There were twenty-six graduates from the Bible College. An endowment of $27,000 has been raised for this college and it is hoped to make it $50,000 by January 1. During the past session 1,100 pupils were enrolled in the different colleges of the university.

The Bible School convention at Sedalia, Mo., was a successful one. The report of the board showed faithful work in the field and the treasurer's report showed a larger amount of money raised than ever before. The program was a very good one. Both the board and the secretary were continued for another year of service. The first day was given to the Endeavor Society. The report of Claude E. Hill, the superintendent of the Endeavor work, indicated that there were now 400 societies with 14,400 members. These gave $8,400 for church work and $2,900 for missions. There were 400 additions from the associate members to the church and there was a gain of nine new societies. Following is the record of the Bible School work for the year: Bible schools organized, 68; churches organized, 20; protracted meetings held, 48; additions, baptisms, 279, by letter 306, otherwise 261, total added 846, and $4,296.65. The evangelists also raised $7,023.65 for church building, making for the two purposes, $11,960.11. There was also $5,461.79 for various other purposes. These five evangelists visited 446 places to do this work, were employed 1,703 days and preached 1,606 times. This, if not the largest year's work, is one of the best ever reported at a Bible School convention.

Episcopal.

At the diocesan convention of Central New York the report of the committee on Sunday School work was received with much interest. A very general effort has been made to introduce the graded system, but only with partial success, on account, principally, of the difficulty of securing a proper series of Sunday School lessons adapted to that purpose, and the impossibility of finding a sufficient number of competent teachers. About fifty per cent of the confirmation classes comes from the Sunday School. Sixty-eight schools report forty-eight different text-books or leaflets in use.

There have been 1,564 confirmations in the diocese of Connecticut during the past year, an increase of 200 over the year previous.

The Rev. Walter C. Clapp, rector of St. John's Church, Toledo, O., and the Rev. A. L. Byron-Curtiss, rector of St. Joseph's Church, Rome, N. Y., have accepted their appointments as missionaries to the Philippines. Their work will be done under the direction of the Bishop of Shanghai, who has the oversight of the Philippine work.

St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, for the first time in its fifty years of life, has no debt upon its building, it having been wiped out by the efforts of Rev. Geo. H. Moffett, who has, besides, raised some $23,000 for the purchase of the Sisters' Houses and repairs to the church and clergy house.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the parish of the Church of Our Savior at Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, was celebrated May 26. The parish has changed rectors but twice in that period. The Rev. Z. R. Phillips has recently accepted a call to the rectorship.

The vestry of St. James' Church, Fresno, Cal., have adopted plans for a new church to cost $12,000, of which $3,000 has been subscribed. It will be of brick, to seat between 400 and 500 people, and the people, under their new rector, the Rev. H. S. Hanson, hope to raise the necessary funds by July 1.

The Bishop of Duluth visited the Indian mission at Twin Lakes June 10, and consecrated the little church. Six persons were presented for confirmation June 12, 13 and 14 the bishop was in attendance at the Indian convocation at White Earth. In the same missions on the previous Sunday he preached and confirmed five persons.

Beginning with this fall, the diocese of Los Angeles will have a diocesan school for boys located in the Montecito valley, about two miles from Santa Barbara. The school will be under the direction of the Rev. Alfred H. Brown, and will be a boarding and day school. Only a small number of boys will be admitted during the first year. A faculty of four masters, all graduates of eastern universities, will assist the head master.

Minneapolis Episcopalians have arranged to provide a residence for Bishop Edsall in Minneapolis; this will not be his personal property, but the house of the coadjutor bishop of the diocese.

Lutheran.

The English Evangelical Lutheran Synod of the Northwest, meeting in St. Paul, closed June 18, after an unusually busy session. The committee on synodical statistics reported 21 congregations with 2,223 communicants and a gain of 148 communicants outside of River Falls and Ellsworth, which had made no reports. There had been 252 confirmations and 253 baptisms, of which 232 were infants and 21 adults. There are 30 Sunday Schools. The congregational gain during the past ten years has been .333 per cent. The congregational expenses for the year were $27,329.84.

Salem English Evangelical Lutheran Church, Minneapolis, was dedicated June 17.

Upwards of 3,000 people gathered June 16 to witness the laying of the corner stone of the Theological Seminary at St. Anthony Park, Minn, for the United Norwegian Lutheran Church. The building is already under roof, but a big hole had been left for the block of granite. Sixteen men were ordained the same day. Prof. M. O. Bockman has been elected president of the seminary for life.

The United Norwegian Lutheran conference reports a total membership of 252,176, of which 134,309 are communicants. There were 3,427 Sunday School teachers and 42,518 Sunday School children. During the past two years the church has raised $262,000 for various purposes, including its contributions to foreign missions and the charitable institutions.

Methodist.

Rev. Dr. William A. Quayle enters this week on his new duties as pastor of the Grand Avenue Church, Kansas City. It is probable that a new edifice will be erected several blocks further south and east.

The Centenary Southern Methodist Church, St. Louis, will make repairs and improvements in its edifice to cost $30,000. In the parsonage adjoining the church on the west the wall will be torn out and it will be made an institutional meeting place. Halls, rooms where poor children can be taught sewing parlors and meeting chambers will be put in so as to make the congregation better prepared to cope with the downtown evangelist and missionary situation. Murray Carleton, president of the transit company, one of the staunch supporters of Centenary Church, has agreed to duplicate every dollar contributed, and as a result of this stimulus a neat sum has been raised.

Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, Albany, N. Y., was recently destroyed by fire, but other churches offered the use of their edifices to the homeless congregation, among them the Jewish Temple Beth Emeth, where on a recent Sunday ten children of Christian parents belonging to the Methodist Church, were baptized. This is worthy of note as an indication of a broad, kindly spirit.

The corner stone of the new African Methodist Episcopal Church at Butte, Mont., was laid June 10. The pastor, Rev. Jordan Allen, by his own exertions, secured the greater part of the stone for the foundation by working in the quarry, and he also did a great portion of the work of excavation.

The McTyeire Church at Jacksonville, Fla., is to be at once rebuilt.

The Methodist Church South is building an edifice for the Foochow University in China. Its probable cost will be $30,000 and subscriptions for this school amount to $100,000 including the cost of the building above named.

It was announced at a meeting held June 17, in Manhattan, that the sum of $275,000 had been raised as the result of the movement in aid of metropolitan Methodism, whereby it is expected $1,000,000 will be obtained to pay off the mortgages and other bets of the various Methodist churches in Greater New York. The movement was started two months ago.

Presbyterian.

Presbyterians have built a fine church in San Juan, Porto Rico, and have worshipping in it a congregation that completely fills it. They are now to undertake the erection of churches at Mayaguez and Aguadilla, at both of which points there are pastors stationed with flourishing congregations and Sunday Schools. They report marked interest in religion on the part of Porto Ricans, Bible sales being the largest ever known in proportion to population.

The Presbytery of Winnebago celebrated its fiftieth anniversary in the Memorial Church, Appleton, Wis., June 25.

The Rev. D. Irwin Conkle of Clyde, O., is rejoicing that the debt of $1,400 has been lifted. Seventeen have been added to the church on profession in the past year. The Sunday School has a net gain of thirty.

The work in the church in Chippewa Falls, Wis., is very encouraging under the charge of the Rev. J. George, D. D. Two years ago the church was in debt over $1,200. This has been nearly all paid.

Rev. Herbert W. Reherd became pastor of Bethany Church, Detroit, Mich., March 1, 1901. Since then twenty-nine have united with the church.

A joint conference of Alton and Springfield Presbyteries was held at Blackburn University Carlinville, Ill., June 10-11. "The Church and Education" was one of the topics discussed; "The Pulpit Seen From the Pew," another.

One of the oldest ministers of the United Presbyterian Church, Dr. Andrew Morrow Black, entered into rest June 13 at the age of 87. Forty-two years of his life were spent in teaching.

Rev. W. C. Somers, for over fifty years a minister of the Gospel, passed away June 14. For some thirty years his home was in Kansas.

Rev. W. H. Patterson has resigned as pastor of the Second United Presbyterian Church, Des Moines, Ia., after seven years of service there.

The United Presbyterian Church at Sparta, Ill., the largest congregation of the denomination in the state, having 500 members, has called to its pastorate, Rev. J. Knox Montgomery of Charlotte, N. C., who was its pastor five years ago.

The quarter-centennial of the United Presbyterian Church at Burlington, Ia., was celebrated June 12. The present membership is 109.

General.

The American Sunday School Union announces that since March 1 the missionaries of this society in the northwestern district, with headquarters in Chicago, have accomplished the following in the needy places and for the children who were not being cared for by any other agency: They organized 157 new Sunday Schools, having 3,991 scholars; reorganized 195 schools, having 5,983 scholars. They aided other and old schools in 229 cases, where there are 17,321 scholars; delivered 2,248 addresses, distributed 680 Bibles and Testaments, made 21,989 visits to families, circulated $1,079 worth of religious literature and traveled 99,910 miles.

The twelfth session of the college students' conference began June 21 at Lake Geneva, Wis. The gathering is modeled after the Northfield conference and is annually growing larger. The attendance at Lake Geneva in 1900 was 433 students with professors from 160 institutions in fifteen states. These men represented thirty-two church denominations, and the institutions from which they came enroll not less than 45,000 students. One hundred and fifty of them are preparing for distinctively religious callings.

The annual meeting of the Actoes' Church Alliance at the Berkeley Lyceum, New York, was well attended. Bishop Potter presided. The second year of the society's existence has been most prosperous. It counts now 1,573 members, and has grown sufficiently important to attract attention wider even than its membership.

"Broadly religious rather than in any sense distinctly theological" considerations moved the consistory of the First Reformed Church, Brooklyn, to invite the Sunday School of the Jewish Temple Beth-Elohim to participate in a Sunday School parade. There was an exchange of courtesies between these two congregations at the recent jubilee celebration of the Temple, to which many Christian clergymen were invited, some delivering addresses. The comity shown here is significant, says the Churchman, of a growing feeling of religious brotherhood and community of ethical effort, even among those of wide divergent faith.

just been enabled by some generous gifts to extinguish its debt of $68,000. This association is doing a splendid work. The past year 629 services were held with a total attendance of 42,463, an increase over the previous year of 26,059.

The Bible classes are well attended most striking feature of this work is the Shop Bible classes; these are held in many of the large factories at the noon hour; 280 classes with a total attendance of 17,475 is the record for the year. In the educational classes were 1,116 men; 436 boys are enrolled in the junior department.

Woman and Home.

ONLY A BABY'S GRAVE.

Only a baby's grave,
Some foot or two at the most,
Of star-daisied sod, yet I think that God
Knows what this little grave cost.

Only a baby's grave,
Strange how we moan and fret
For a little face, that was here such a space.
O, more strange could we forget.

Only a baby's grave.
Could we measure grief by this.
Fresh tears were shed on our baby dead,
I know how they fill on this.

Only a baby's grave,
Will this little life be much
Too small for His diadem,
Whose Kingdom is made of such?

Only a baby's grave,
Yet often we come and sit
By the little stone, and thank God to own
We are nearer heaven for it.

Cinders and Tears.

Fanny and I were hurrying through the dusty streets. She was carrying a bundle of laundry; I was taking a bundle of copy to the editor.

Suddenly I stopped short in the wind, blinded by a flying cinder that had struck full against the eyeball and then tucked itself away under the lid. The pain was intense. Instinctively my hand went up, but it was arrested on the way and firmly held.

"Please, Miss Hester, just let it be a minute."

"But it hurts—awfully! Maybe L can turn the lid and get it out," I cried, trying to unclasp her fingers.

"No, you can't. Of course it hurts, I know. But just stand here a minute and keep your eye shut—the tears are coming. Be patient, Miss Hester; just a minute now, and it will be out."

And she was right. After a brief space of intense pain, tears flowed, and with them the cinder flowed out. We gathered up our bundles and went on.

"A simple remedy, Fanny. I never did that before."

"And you 'most always have trouble, don't you?"

"Yes, indeed," calling to mind several occasions when "something in my eye" had caused me much misery and inconvenience.

"Mother taught me that ever since I was little. She used to hold my hands until I was able to control them for myself. It counts for more things than eyes, too."

"What things?" I asked, willing enough to draw out my friend, whose homely, practical illustrations had been of service to me before.

"Oh, hurts and things I don't suppose you get many of them, miss; but any one who works as I do gets many little cuts. People don't mean to be unkind. But there are mean things—sharp words and cross looks—like cinders, flying about 'in the air,' people say, and now and then I catch them, through my eyes and ears, into my heart."

"And then what do you do?"

"Rub my eyes with my elbows," you know. Keep my hands away from the hurt. It is easier to get angry when people find fault or snub you just because they don't know any better. If I'd let you rub that cinder in, Miss Hester; you might be blind still. So mother taught me to be patient, to shut my eyes, stand still, keep my hands down, let the tears come, and then—why it's all over, you know."—Michigan Advocate.

Judicious "Letting Alone."

"Tell me," I said to one of the most charming women I know, who seems to have made a wonderful success of her ten years of married life, "how you manage to do everything so easily, and to do so much more than other people, and to make every one around you comfortable and happy?"

She blushed at my praise, as she answered: "I am so glad to hear you say that: for, if I am successful now, I have had to buy my knowledge with some bitter experience. You know what a nervous man my husband is. How could it be otherwise, with the strain he is under in his professional life, when from the beginning he had to do everything for himself and make his way by hard work and struggle? Well, when we were engaged, I didn't understand him at all. People may say what they please about the engagement being the happiest time of one's life; I argue it isn't I was always worrying John with little exactions, demanding of him reasons for this and that, interfering with him and not respecting his time or his individuality. Fortunately for me, his love stood the test of my tactlessness during our engagement, and the first year or so of our married life, but his health didn't. He was nervous and restless—poor thing! He had so little rest or freedom with me. Then Dorothy came, and during those early peaceful weeks of her life, when I had time to think, I began to see things in their true light, and I made a few resolutions, which I have tried hard to keep ever since. Certainly things have been happier since I determined to let John alone."

I waited for her to go on, and watched the pretty little wifely light in her eyes.

"I don't think there could ever be a real difference of opinion between John and me on the big things of life; but one doesn't have to confront big things very often, and it is in the little things that the rub is apt to come, and where a wife can worry her husband to death unconsciously by her pettishness. Well, this was the result of my resolutions: I try not to interfere in any way with John's business, not to demur when he is obliged to go away often and to be often late at meals, and not ask him why, frettingly, when he finally makes his appearance, but to wait until he chooses to tell me. When he chooses to sit up late, as he does night after night, reading or writing, when I feel he is not prudent, according to my standpoint, I make myself keep quiet and not nag him with advice to go to bed, and I try not to worry him about his particular economics and extravagances. Very often he does what seems to me foolish and unnecessary, but I have learned to respect his judgment enough to give him the benefit of the doubt, or, at any rate, to keep from telling him my opinion when it is not asked. I have also learned never to ask him to do errands down town, or take any time from his business for me; and, more than all, I try never to worry him with any of the tiresome domestic problems that are continually arising."

"Wise little woman," I murmured, thinking of the many men who come home from a wearying day down town to find a wife who is waiting to pour out a tale of woe of the day's grievances, which are exaggerated as they are related; and yet these same wives would feel it hard if they had to listen, night after night, to the recital of their husband's business troubles and be shown his incapacity to manage his business as they show their lack of ability to regulate theirs.

"Yes, it works well in many ways," she went on; "for on his side John shows the same respect for me. At the beginning of each month he puts a sum of money into the bank in my name for all household expenses. I never have to account to him for a cent of it; he never questions the wisdom of any change I choose to make in my department; in fact, he leaves me alone in my domain as absolutely as I do him. Consequently, when we are together, we always talk about things outside of the house, of interests that are educating, and we are very good company to each other, I assure you."—Harper's Bazar.

Farmer John.

By Charlotte Archer Raney.

"My dear Mary, there is perfect accord between Farmer John and myself," said the white-haired old wife, swaying softly back and forth in the sweet morning sunshine and smiling as she rocked.

"We are of one mind on all fundamental questions, and in no case do we come to an open difference of opinion. Now, you seemed surprised a few moments ago when I gave the advice John asked for and he went promptly out and did the very opposite thing. You see, my dear, he did not really want advice—he simply wanted help to make up his mind. I did not care in the least on which side of the yard he planted that May cherry-tree, but I see now that it is going into the one spot on the whole lawn that exactly suits the needs of its being," and the old lady glanced complacently out at her husband as he firmed the rich soil around the roots of the young tree.

The young matron had opinions of her own on most questions—opinions which she felt were as good as any one's opinions, and there had been times in her life when the quiet ignoring of her opinions had caused friction of wills in the household, and some heartache besides. This the old lady knew and grieved over.

"Mary, all men are alike in a general way. I accept as a token of love and respect my husband's sweet little habit formed early in our married life of conferring with me about all the small affairs of the home. The great affairs of the farm he is able to manage without my help. He knows just what is wisest and best to do, and does it promptly. But it is a great pleasure to Farmer John to go through with the form of consulting me, and I should miss something very pleasant out of my life if he were to suddenly stop coming to me with all the sweet and varied interests of the home."

"But why do you advise him, auntie, when you know you can give him no help?" said the young woman with some asperity.

"Oh, but, my dear child, I do help—I help him to make up his mind! And after all," an earnest look taking place of the mischief in her eyes, "I think his plans are nearly always better than mine, anyway. Where my advice is really best, Farmer John is swift to see and take advantage of it. And where he can not see, why make myself and him, too, uncomfortable by insisting on my way. There are very few women who get their own way and happiness at the same time."

A CLEAN-CUT OPINION.

William J. Long, County Judge of Thayer County, Nebraska, thus expresses his views: "I have used Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer in the family for about twenty years. We have raised thirteen children, and never had a doctor bill except for the setting of a broken limb, which the Blood Vitalizer could not set. It meets, however, all other emergencies, and my wife says she cannot keep house without it."

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer has demonstrated its merits in thousands of happy homes. It relieves the mother of many anxious hours and wakeful nights when kept on hand as a family remedy. Not to be had in drug stores. Special agents sell it. If there are none in your neighborhood write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 S. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

HIRAM COLLEGE

A school for both sexes, located at Hiram, Portage County, Ohio, 35 miles southeast of Cleveland.

A SPLENDID LOCATION.

Beautiful scenery, pure air, excellent water. An ideal college town, modern, up-to-date, lighted by electricity and having a fine system of water-works.

GOOD BUILDINGS.

The buildings are comparatively new. Main building commodious and convenient in all its appointments. A large and beautiful Christian Association building, erected five years ago at a cost of $30,000. Two excellent ladies' halls well furnished and supplied with modern conveniences. Music building for the accommodation of our large and growing music department. A library and observatory building just completed, the gift of Abram Teachout, and a Warner & Swazey's nine inch telescope, costing approximately $5000, the gift of Latrobe Cooley.

LIBRARIES AND APPARATUS.

A large and well equipped chemical laboratory. Two other laboratories, Physiological and Physical. A well selected library; large additions to this library will soon be made. A good museum. A large and well furnished gymnasium.

COURSES OF STUDY.

Four Classical Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Four Scientific Courses—Regular, Philosophical, Legal and Medical. Four Literary Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Five Special Courses—Music, Oratorical, Business, Art, Teachers' Special elective courses in any variety.

CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS.

We have a strong body of Professors and Instructors, twenty-four in number. They are for the most part specialists of large attainments and are thoroughly abreast of the times.

Literary Societies and Religious Organizations. Hiram has five literary societies of unusual strength and vigor; two Christian associations that contribute much to the religious life of the school. Several departmental and social organizations of special interest and value.

EXPENSES.

Expenses are very moderate. Good table board can be had for $2.00 per week, club board for $1.25 to $1.75. Room rent for 50 cents to $1.00 per week. Tuition for four to five dollars per term for each study. The three leading items of board, tuition and room rent may be reduced to about $125.00 for the college year of 38 weeks.

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

Under the auspices of the T. W. Phillips' Loan fund an industrial department is being established that will assist about fifty young people. It is believed that students admitted to this department may reduce the entire expense of the year, including tuition, to about $90.00, and those who do considerable work may reduce expenses to sixty or seventy dollars. # Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. It contains 182 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

Statement of Principles—

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

on the same page, but in such a manner as not to increase the bulk of the book. The King James version is the basis, and this version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with foot notes. These notes give all the words and passages of the Revised Version where it differs from the King James Version. This combination feature is exceedingly valuable, as it gives all the advantages of two separate books with the convenience of one and also saves time as the two readings are always right before the eye. It contains all the

to the study of the Bible prepared by the most Eminent Biblical Scholars. It is embellished with a complete series of fifteen New Maps—the newest and best engraved maps of Bible Lands, embodying the results of the most recent investigations and discoveries. It is printed from large, beautiful, clear, new type and all proper names are divided into syllables and every vowel is marked and the syllables inflected, showing the sounds and accents as they are given in every standard dictionary, thus enabling the reader to properly pronounce every word. This feature is a great improvement and a strong recommendation for this Bible over others. This is the only Self-Pronouncing Combination Teachers' Bible and is unquestionably the best edition of the world's best book.

Our Fine Art Combination Bible.

This Bible is the same as the one described above, having the Self-Pronouncing and Combination features and all other helps and in addition is profusely illustrated and embellished with numerous phototype engravings from the paintings of the world's greatest masters, all drawn and engraved by the best artists, to illustrate the teachings of our Lord. They are printed separate from the text and make one grand panorama of pictorial embellishments that are as instructive and pleasing as they are ornamental and accurate.

The growing demand for a wisely and faithfully illustrated student's Bible has been fully satisfied by the introduction of our fine art edition of the Teachers' Bible. It combines every valuable feature of the usual teachers' Bible, with a wealth of descriptive and pictorial illustrations so superb as to distinctly separate this Bible from all others and place it in a class by itself. In artistic beauty it stands without a rival.

Each illustration is a speaking sermon, a gem of art, the handiwork of a master. The wonderful pictures not only beautify this sumptuous volume, but actually interpret and make more clear the grand old truths of the Sacred Word. This beautiful edition of the Bible is indispensable to all students and teachers.

Notice the Prices.

This incomparable galaxy of Illustrations has cost the publishers many thousands of dollars, and the preparation of this Combination Bible, with all its "New Helps," has involved the labor of a large number of the most eminent Biblical scholars and scientists of the world.

THE FATHERLAND.

"Know ye the land?—On earth's 'twere vainly sought—
To which the heart in sorrow turns its thought;
Where no complaint is heard, tears never flow,
The good are blest the weak with vigor glow,
Know ye it well?"

For this, for this
All earthly wish or care, my friends, dismiss!

"Know ye the way—the rugged path of thorns?
His lagging progress there, the traveler mourns;
He faints, he sinks—from dust he cries to God—
'Relieve me, Father, from the weary road!'
Know ye it well?"

It guides, it guides,
To that dear land, where all we hope abides.

"Know ye that Friend?—In him a man you see;
Yet more than man, more than all men is he;
Himself before us trod the path of thorns,
To pilgrims now his heart with pity turns,
Know ye him well?"

His hand, his hand
Will safely bring us to the Fatherland."
—From the German of Claus Harms.

RESIDENT FORCES WITHIN THE CHURCH.

TO ACCOUNT for the continuous and progressive changes observable in nature scientists have to posit the existence of resident forces. In like manner, to account for moral progress the existence of resident moral forces has to be assumed. But in both cases, instead of speaking of resident forces, it would be more correct to speak of a resident force. The force resident at the heart of things is God; and the name given to that aspect of God which represents his power and energy is the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit resides in the world; but in a special sense he resides in the church. He makes the church his home—his permanent abode. Believers are the temple of God; and the church is the habitation of God in the Spirit.

Mark, the Holy Spirit is a resident—not an occasional visitor tarrying only for a night. We do not require to plead with him to come; he is always with us. At the time of his departure Jesus said: "I will make request of the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter that he may abide with you forever."

Electricity is a resident force. It has always been present in the world, but until recently men did not know of its existence. There was just as much electricity in the world in the days of Abraham as there is today; but men knew nothing of this mighty force, and hence were not able to use it. God has always been in his world, but men did not know of his presence. They thought of him as dwelling apart in some distant heaven. Christianity is the manifestation of a present God. It tells us that God is here; and that he is available to us.

Now the abiding presence of God is realized through the Holy Spirit. When we say that God is here we mean that he is here in the Spirit; and when we say that Christ is here we mean that he is here in the Spirit; and when we say that Christ is in his church we mean that he is present in his church in his Spirit. It is in this way that we must interpret his words, "Where two or three are met together in my name there am I in the midst of them." "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age." The risen, living Christ is with us in the Spirit. The Spirit gives us not a dead Christ, but a living Christ who is with us day by day. The Spirit makes his presence real. The Christ is ever with his church; the source of its life and power. All the forces for good within the church come from his living and life-giving presence. In the Book of Revelation he is represented as walking in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. The seven branched candlestick is the church—and in its midst Christ ever walks, replenishing it with the oil of his grace that it may burn brightly and give light to those who sit in darkness and in the region of the shadow of death.

An Active Operating Force.

The Holy Spirit is present in the church as an operative force. He is not latent but active. He is ever working in and through his church. After Pentecost the disciples went everywhere preaching the Word, "the Lord working with them."

When the church is at work the Holy Spirit is at work. The church is his agent, and possesses something of his ceaseless energy. The end for which the church is indwelt and controlled by the Holy Spirit is that it may carry to completion the work of Christ.

In the Vatican of Rome there is a Gothic facade which represents the church as a ship into which men are being brought that they may be saved out of the world. The church is the instrument for saving the world itself; and it is a flexible instrument, being ever ready to change its methods to the changing conditions of human life.

The Holy Spirit is present in the church as a dynamic force—a force that drives or propels all its machinery. The promise of Jesus was "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." The object for which the disciples were to tarry at Jerusalem was that they might be imbued with power from on high.

The church as a dynamic force possesses redemptive energy. It has from the Spirit, who dwells within it, power to bless, power to heal, power to cast out demons, power to deliver men from the slavery of sin. The fount and origin of its redemptive activity is the Holy Spirit; and just in proportion as it is filled with his presence and quickened by his power does it fulfill its real mission.

The Holy Spirit is present the church as a vital power. He is the soul of the church, the structural power that shapes its outward life as the brain shapes the form of the skull. As there is a power resident in the seed which produces the future plant, so there is a power resident in the church which accounts for all its growth and development.

Power of Personality of the Church.

The church is not an organization, but an organism. It is the body of Christ, the medium through which he manifests himself—the medium by which his glory is unveiled before the eyes of men. The power of the church is the power of the living personality that dwells within it. It has vital power because Christ has vital power; it has creative power because Christ has creative power. It possesses the life of its founder; it is filled with the qualities which he possesses. It is a living and life-giving force; through it the divine life flows into the world.

The Holy Spirit is present in the church as an ethical force—a power working for righteousness. He inspires to spiritual aims and activities. The church in which he dwells does not expend its energies in material ministries—it does not suffer from divided interest. Upon the redemption of men all its energies are centered. The secularization of the church is the greatest evil of today. The church, by seeking to gain the world, has lost its soul.

The measure of the power of any church is the measure of its dependence upon spiritual forces. If it depends upon outward attractions it will fail—as it ought to fail. The more unworldly the church is the greater is its influence over the world. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual." Mrs. Browning has said that it is folly to think of public baths doing for the souls of men what only the blood of the Lamb can do.

A church is not weak because small numerically; it is weak only when it leans upon an arm of flesh. A church is strong just in proportion as it uses the divine power resident within it. When a church is weakest then it may be strongest; for it may be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. God often takes weak churches to confound the mighty, and churches that are not to put to nought churches that are, that none should glory in his presence.

THE VISITOR.

JUNE is the month of roses and brides; and through the entire thirty days the air is filled with the fragrance of marriage flowers and the sound of wedding bells. It is a world-old story that of growing affection, plighted love, a bridal gathering, old shoes and rice, a journey somewhere—anywhere to be away and alone—and then the quiet settling down to the serious business married life—serious, yet delightful, and when rightly begun and happily carried on, growing more delightful with advancing years.

The Visitor has had the privilege of attending several weddings of late, and has been impressed with several things. One is that the man is a most insignificant part of the machinery of a wedding; necessary, perhaps, but a sort of necessary evil. He has nothing to say about the arrangements. That is the bride's business. All he is to do is to stand around and look pleasant, and be ready at the appropriate moment to play his inconspicuous part in the transaction, of which the bride is the bright and fascinating center. It is her day, not his. He may have been a very agreeable creature before, and may as a husband prove all that his most admiring friends predict. Nevertheless he sinks into eclipse beside the central attraction. Then, too, it may be confidently affirmed that he will be scared within an inch of his life, while the woman will be the picture of calmness and confidence. He has been told repeatedly to walk in quietly and slowly when the Lohengrin March begins, but he strides in all oblivious of orders, and looking like a mutineer about to be shot. When the bride arrives and the final moment comes, he pulls himself together with the air of a dental patient who has refused to take gas, and awaits the worst. If there is a response of any length which he repeats after the minister, he usually makes a mess of it, and if the ring is used, he generally fumbles it and makes a false pass, like a rattled quarter-back. But a woman never does any of these things. She walks in slowly with an air which distinctly informs the public that she is fully prepared, and has thought out every part of her program. She knows just what to do; she steadies the man by her quietness, and when he tries to put the ring on her thumb she helps him out with a grace that saves him from confusion. The Visitor was charmed the other day with the self-possession of a bride whose husband-elect, in his distraction, had taken her right hand in his left and was standing in the attitude of a small boy holding the hand of his sister and looking anxiously for some one to tell him what to do next. The bride saw the blunder and repaired it with a deftness which left not above three or four aware that all had not been in accord with the rubric. The Visitor is willing to concede that he would do no better on a like occasion. Indeed, he remembers the time when he played the part, or at least so much of it as consisted in going through the preliminaries. But what happened after that is a blank. He only knows that when, like the prodigal son, he came to himself, he was told it was all over. This proves how easy it is to practice upon a man in such moments of aberration. Once let him be gotten into this state of mind, and he will promise anything. It was touching to read but a few days since of a young man and woman who made one of an indefinite number of couples going from Chicago to that much-sought Gretna Green across the lake—St. Joseph. The account stated that on the way from the boat to the preacher's house the young man broke down and begged to be taken home to his mother, and it required the combined and resolute efforts of the girl and a policeman to bring him to the fatal spot.

Another feature which interests the minister is the fact that the bride always wants a long service, the groom a short one. He knows that it will be at best a sufficiently hard ordeal; but she rejoices in prolonging the service. Every part of it is a source of enjoyment to her, from the "Dearly Beloved" to the benediction. She wants the long service, with introduction, explanation, admonition, questions, responses, sponsor, ring, pronouncement, prayer and all. The man would be glad to escape with a title of it. He wants her, and accepts the wedding as the means of securing her. She wants him, but she wants the wedding, too, and she wants it just as impressive as possible. In this she is right. And he respects her wishes, because he feels that her judgment is better. Besides, he is helpless.

Another interesting thing is the desire each woman expresses for a service that is "different." They all inquire if you use the Episcopalian service, and say that they like that, only they want it somewhat modified. What they mean is, that they like the fine old forms of that church, which has given most attention to forms, but they do not like some things in that service, and they rather wish a personal and individual note to be struck in the form used in their particular case. Most wish to have the charge beginning "I require and charge you both" modified so as to be robbed of what seems an element of harshness, and all without exception insist that the minister shall omit the "obey" from the promise. Just why this last should be so it seems hard to see. The fact that it has been but a harmless fiction for a century should have made the women generous enough to allow it to remain as a sop to Cerberus. Why not allow a man that one small privilege? It costs nothing and he will soon enough find the real seat of authority, but he might at least be given the privilege of cherishing the legal fiction till the awakening comes.

But the wedding, after all, will mean even more to the older ones who witness it than to those whose union it celebrates. Only those who have known through years the rare joys of that elect comradeship which a happy marriage brings can understand the solemn joy foreshadowed in the answer to the simple words, "Do you take this woman to be your wedded wife? Do you promise to love her, to cherish her, to care for her in sickness and in death, and, forsaking all others, keep you only unto her so long as you both shall live?" The Christian ideal of married life is the holiest possible in the human experience and the appropriate symbol of the union of Christ and the church. Only as this ideal is realized can marriage be the holy covenant it was designed to be, and the "honeymoon" be lengthened into a cycle of years marked by deepening love, truer unity of heart and brain, the adjustment of natures to each other by experiences of prosperity and adversity, of joy and sorrow, and most of all, united by the hands of childhood stretched to each for protection and love. The torch of Hymen may thus light an altar fire of affection, devotion and blessing, which shall give both warmth and light, the light that groweth more and more until the perfect day.

JOSEPH COOK.

HERE have been few more picturesque characters before the public eye in the present generation than Joseph Cook, who has just passed away at his summer home in Ticonderoga, N. Y. He was known as plain Joseph Cook; for like Beecher and Spurgeon he discarded titles. He did not need them.

Joseph Cook was a mighty man of valor. To him might be applied the description which Carlyle gives of Cromwell, "a battle-axe of the Almighty." The giant blows which he dealt against vaunting unbelief resounded through the land. Physically he was a Colossus; temperamentally he was "a galvanic battery on two legs;" intellectually he was a Niagara. Before the impetuous onrush of his oratory everything had to give way.

The greatest achievement of his life was the Boston Monday Lectureship, from the platform of which he discussed from year to year the questions of the hour, dealing especially with the supposed conflict between science and religion. He felt himself to be appointed by the grace of God Defender of the Faith; and he was taken very largely at his own estimate throughout the English-speaking world. His name became a household word, and his oracular utterances were received in religious circles as final statements of truth.

It is not difficult to account for his marvelous influence. He was what Dr. Chalmers would have called "a man of weight." His force was tremendous. Added to that he was spectacular and dramatic—somewhat bizarre and bombastic, it is true, but never small even in his extravagances. A ponderous man, his gambols were the gambols of an elephant and were of great interest to the spectators. His oratory was somewhat florid, and his emphasis was often the emphasis of overstatement, but there was no discounting the power of his orotund voice. In its gentler tones it was like the rumbling of the approaching storm; in its louder tones it was like the artillery of heaven in full play.

A marked element in his power was his ability to sense "the psychological moment." He had the knack of alighting upon the very themes which were calling for solution in the popular mind. He had also a way of arousing in his hearers the anticipation of still more wonderful things than those which he was announcing. Hence his utterances were always waited for with the keenest interest. But the expectations which he awakened were never quite fulfilled.

It was of necessity that he should break down before his time. He worked at high-pressure speed. He was prodigal of his energy. In his Boston Lectureship he exhausted himself physically and mentally, bringing on utter bankruptcy. Perhaps it is just as well that it was so. His spirit of abandon was the secret of his power. By losing his life he saved it.

As might have been expected his fervent utterances did not stand the test of cold type. His written word was not equal to his spoken word. His message was for the moment, and had to be taken as it effervesced in public speech. But it was honor enough that he should have reached such a vast multitude of minds by the way of Ear-gate. It is given to but few to be great writers as well as great orators.

It is hard to sum up the influence of such a man as Joseph Cook. He was one of those large figures which demand perspective to take in their proportions. The impress which he made upon his day was profound. And it was wholesome. The singleness of his purpose and the purity of his motives were never questioned. His heart qualities were scarcely less conspicuous than his head qualities. He was a zealous reformer; the champion of every good cause; a fearless preacher of righteousness. Above all, and as explaining all, he was a devoted servant of Jesus Christ. His passion for humanity and for truth was second only to his passion for Christ. He was good as well as great; or rather he was great because he was good; for goodness is after all the highest greatness.

A LITTLE PARABLE.

I made the cross myself whose weight
Was later laid on me.
This thought is torture as I toil
Up life's steep Calvary.

To think mine own hands drove the nails!
I sang a merry song,
And chose the heaviest wood I had
To build it firm and strong.

If I had guessed—if I had dreamed—
Its weight was meant for me,
I should have made a lighter cross
To bear up Calvary.

THE WORD MADE FLESH.

WHEN the fulness of the time came"—the time to which all the ages ran up—the time in which all past times attained their completion—"God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, that he might redeem them who were under the law." The coming of Christ in the flesh was the center point in the world's history. It was the greatest event in all time, the event in which the divine purpose of grace brightened into full noon.

The incarnation was not a sudden irruption of the divine into the human; it was not something which took place as a strange incident in the history of redemption. It was the culmination of an organic process of spiritual development; the ripening of the fruit of the tree of revelation; the widening of the channel of communication between heaven and earth which had already been established, that room might be made for the outflowing of the rising tide of divine love and life which could no longer be kept back.

All that is essential in Christianity existed as an unseen spiritual force before it was crystallized into historic form. Upon the incarnation historic Christianity is founded, but Christianity as a spiritual life, as the life of God in man, is founded upon the existence of the mediating Word, through whom, before the incarnation, God kept himself in unbroken connection with the children of men. The redeeming love which dwelt eternally in the heart of God before descending to earth in the garments of flesh found secret inlets into the heart of man. Many a step was taken in the approach of God to man before the creative Word became the redeeming Word. The Word was made flesh, not to express God for the first time, but to give to the character, the love, the saving purpose of God, full and perfect expression.

All previous revelations of God to man presupposed the incarnation. To that goal they led up. Manifestations of God to man suggested as their climax the manifestation of God in man. Until that end was reached God could not bring himself into vital contact with humanity. The incarnation was necessary to the perfect self-revelation of God, and would in all probability have taken place if man had not sinned; but sin gave to it a new purpose and end. The revelation of God in humanity became urgently necessary for the redemption of humanity. Christ became man that he might redeem men. He was born a Savior. The aim of his advent was to win a rebel world back to divine allegiance, to reunite man to the source of his true life; to restore in man the defaced image of God; to lead man out of the dark cave of evil into the sunshine of righteousness and joy. The incarnation is therefore something more than an important part of the continuous revelation of God in humanity. It is a special revelation of God through a human life, for the special purpose of saving the world.

Stripped of theological mystification, the doctrine of the incarnation is in substance this: The descent of the divine into the human; the visible manifestation to humanity, and through humanity of the indwelling Deity. In the Incarnate Christ God comes under the conditions and limitations of human life, bringing himself within the little horizon of our knowledge, advancing within speaking distance, putting himself within easy reach, making his presence tangible and his help available. Jesus is Immanuel, God with us, and God for us, God beside us, and God on our side. In him the Absolute receives a center. The unknown is disclosed, the invisible becomes visible, the incommunicable is communicated. In outward form the Eternal Life is expressed, in a living person the infinite glory is focalized, in a glowing sun the Universal Light is centralized. He who had communicated himself to man now communicates himself as man; he who had revealed himself in the common life of humanity now reveals himself in a common human life. Through every word and deed of Jesus the Christ the Eternal Father makes himself known. When Jesus speaks it is God who speaks through human lips; when Jesus weeps it is God who weeps through human eyes. What is Jesus in the totality of his human life but the Word of divine communication, the manifestation of God to the world and for the world? What is he but a great tear-drop from the Infinite Heart? What is he but the visible hand which the invisible God reaches down from heaven for man's deliverance? What is he but God's great and growing gift of himself to the world?

"In that sweet name of Jesus, Immanuel, God with us," exclaims Gerard Tersteegen, "the tender and overflowing love of God has made for itself a new way into the very depths of our hearts, and has come unspeakably close to us poor children of Adam. Since then the kingdom of God is so near at hand, nay, has come within us, we need make no wide circuit through much knowledge and laborious effort to get thither, but we may enter at once by this new open and living way into the sanctuary of inward and eternal communion with God."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Religion of Amity.

From his retreat in Brighton, Herbert Spencer, the eminent philosopher and scientist, brooding over the warlike spirit of the times, exhorts the nations to cultivate what he calls "the religion of amity." He says that "whatever fosters militarism makes for barbarism; whatever fosters peace makes for civilization. There are two fundamentally opposed principles on which social life may be organized—compulsory co-operation and voluntary co-operation—the one implying coercive institutions, the other free institutions."

Dark Things.

The cloud burst in the Pocohontas coal region in West Virginia on Sunday last was not attended by the large loss of life which was at first reported. The total number of the dead will, however, reach 100; and that is surely a terrible calamity. Regarding these devastations of nature it is not wise to dogmatize. Dispensations of Providence we dare not call them. All attempts to trace these catastrophies to moral grounds in those upon whom they come are checked by the words of the Master, "Think ye that the eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell and killed them were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell ye nay; but except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish."

An Assumption of Authority.

The annual message of Mrs. Eddy, the founder or "mother" of Christian Science, is a literary curiosity. It contains many pious platitudes to which almost everybody would assent, but its peculiar features put a tax upon human credulity. The claim is made that "the greatest discoverer of this century" is a woman; and that upon her discovery hangs "the hope of the race." Her word is as the word of God, "the Bible and science of health, with the key to the Scriptures is the pastor of every church." What an assumption of authority! And as to the declaration "Sin is a false entity, it is a lie, and unreal like a mirage," what shall we say? Perhaps we had better say nothing.

A New Standard of Character.

President Hadley, of Yale University, speaking of the changed ideals with regard to character, pointed out the significant fact that moral qualities have come to be the determining factors by which the value of a life is estimated. He says: "We live in a world where the man who would be successful in serving himself must at the same time be occupied in serving others. We no longer respect the pirate, the libertine, or the soldier of fortune. The careers which appeal to ambitious men are careers of large public service, whatever may have been the underlying motive with which such service was rendered."

Self-Reservation.

In a recent number of Harper's Monthly the celebrated artist, J. J. Benjamin-Constant, writing under the title "My Portraits," tells of his experience in painting the portrait of Jay Gould, the New York millionaire. During the execution of the work Mr. Gould never displayed the least curiosity concerning it. When it was completed he gave it about two minutes of attention. Says the artist: "He posed in silence, his eyes fixed on a paste button as the center of his attention. I could feel the entire abstraction of vision in his sombre, preoccupied mask, whose lines and features betrayed the burden of the man's colossal fortune. He had a pale, yellowish complexion, dark eyes, square forehead, and beneath the beard one perceived a firm mouth with a jaw of iron. Over all this hovered that haunting expression of sorrow. The poor envy the rich; with this image before them they might bear more easily the weight of their poverty. Wealth here below is not always synonymous with happiness." How true! We know what a man possesses and we envy him; if we knew how little he enjoys we would pity him.

CHICAGO NOTES.

At the close of the school year over 13,000 graduates went out from the public schools of Chicago. Of these 1,200 were from the high schools. The value to the community of such educational results is beyond computation.

Derby Day in Washington Park has come to outrival the English Derby in Epsom Downs. It is to those that constitute "the feathery foam of fashion" the great social function of the year. Betting, extravagance in dress, display of equipages, lavish expenditure of money are its predominant features. Its growth in popular favor is not a hopeful sign.

Rev. Johnston Meyers, of Chicago, is undoubtedly correct in asserting that one reason why many people in our churches are going after Christian Science, Theosophy, and other strange doctrines, is that they are looking for something the church is not affording them, namely, a heart-felt religion. It is on the spiritual side that our religious life is weakest.

Newberry Library secures a treasure trove in the form of philological library of 15,000 volumes, collected by Prince Lucien Bonaparte, and recognized as the finest of its kind in the world. This collection represents not only a vast outlay of money, but the life work of one of the most renowned philologists of the day. The books are in many languages, and cover a wide range of subjects. The price paid for this collection has not been divulged.

The surest way to win popular sympathy for a new religious movement is to make martyrs of its adherents. The four emissaries of Dowie's Zion who were pelted with rotten eggs in the classic town of Evanston while delivering their message of woe, left declaring that it was the wickedest city on the face of the earth. They were wrong. There are worse places than Evanston; but it is not wise for any town to allow its hoodlum element to repress free speech.

Preaching on "The Religion of Play," at the Stewart Avenue Universalist Church on Sunday last, Rev. R. A. White made the statement that every modern church ought to have pool tables, tenpin alleys and billiard tables for the use of the members. He contended that "the most vital problem before the church to-day is its attitude toward amusements, and that the good theater offering amusement and instruction ought to receive the support of the pulpit and church people." Modern amusements, he claimed, "are educating the people for good or evil ways faster than the churches or schools." What a travesty upon the church! The impression conveyed is that the church is an amusement shop, a rival to the theater, that its business is to provide entertainment for the community. The prevalence of this idea has helped in no small way to drag the church down from its place of power. That innocent, wholesome amusement ought to be provided goes without saying. That the influence of the church ought to be given to the meeting of this want also goes without the saying; but that the church itself should go into the amusement business is a different matter. Amusement ought to be provided by the home and by the regular social agencies in the community. The business of the church is to provide religious instruction and inspiration; and to do this as it ought to be done will task its energies to the utmost.

Moodyisms.—Many a backslider never slid very far forward.—Everything in the world but the human heart obeys God.—A man can do more business if his head is cleared by prayer every morning.—Many think it is the Bible that says "Do as the Romans do."—A purpose in the head and not in the heart doesn't last long.—"Policy" was not in the dictionary that Daniel studied.—A man cannot live for God in any age or country without enemies.—Many people seek an experience instead of Christ.—If I could understand the Bible, I should give up the idea that it was divine.—Satan gets people into the cradle of an excuse and rocks them to sleep.—God doesn't whisper into the ear of an infidel the secrets of heaven.—Many join the church who never joined Christ.

CONTRIBUTED.
I WILL PRESS ON.

My path is dark; thick-crossed with thorn and brier,
 My cheeks are bleeding, and my hands are torn;
 The morning sun drops, free, his golden fire,
 But I, hidden, apart, am chill, forlorn.
 Oh, why could I not other way have gone?
 But here my feet are set—I will press on!

The sound of laughter and a rippling tune
 Greet me from neighboring path, just out of sight;
 And fragrance as of dewy fields in June,
 Steals now to taunt me, then takes sudden flight,
 In scorn of air the sun shines not upon;
 Yet Wisdom placed me here—I will press on!

I will press on, through shadows dark and cold,
 With heart and hands aching from wounds unhealed,
 For maybe soon—ah, is desire too bold?—
 My path may open into blossoming field.
 But if this way breaks not till sun is gone,
 Since Love has led me here, I will press on!
 The glory swift departeth, the light will not last:
 The summer soon is ended—the harvest soon past.
 A drought is on the beauty, it dims and grows old
 And the pilgrim feels a pining that never may be told,
 Crying, O for my country—its breath and its bloom!
 Now blessed are the homesick, for they shall come home!

THE PRESENCE UNRECOGNIZED.

By James M. Campbell, D. D.

SEEKING to awaken the curiosity of the people who thronged around him John the Baptist said, "In the midst of you standeth One whom ye know not." (John I:24). "Who is he?" they would naturally ask. "Do you refer to Jesus of Nazareth? We know all about him. He is the carpenter, the son of Mary, and brother of James and Joseph, and Judas, and Simon; and are not his sisters here with us?" (Mark VI:3.) They thought that they knew him; and yet they did not, for they saw him only from the outside. It is not strange that so many failed to recognize him when he was on earth, seeing he lived so much above the common thought of men? Every great man, just in proportion to the measure of his greatness, is unrecognized.

Even those who were the beneficiaries of his grace did not always recognize him. The impotent man whom he healed at the pool of Bethesda wist not who it was that healed him. Sometimes we recognize him only after the vision of his Presence has fled; and looking back upon an experience the full meaning of which we did not understand at the time, we exclaim with Jacob, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." How many priceless blessings have come to the children of men from the hand of the unknown Christ? He has been moving through the centuries scattering blessing broadcast over this sin-cursed earth. He is now in our midst. He is not merely looking at us out of the pages of the New Testament, or looking at us over the battlements of Heaven, but standing before us looking deep into our souls. It is his voice that speaks through conscience; it is his touch that opens our blinded eyes, and heals our wounded hearts; it is his hand that dispenses the mercies manifold which we enjoy; it is his power that directs and controls the great spiritual movements of this age. The living, the eternal Christ even now "standeth in the midst of us." Alas, that we should ever be blind to the glory of his presence!

But whether we recognize his Presence or not, nothing can alter the fact that he is really here. Not long ago the presence of electricity was unrecognized. Men lived in the presence of that mighty force; they saw its effects; and yet they did not suspect its existence. What good did it do them in their ignorance? Consciously none; actually much. Though they knew it not, that beneficent force was in constant operation on their behalf. One day they woke up to the recognition of this omnipresent force, and what happened? They saw that the powerful friend who had been working unweariedly on their behalf could be made still larger use of. And so they said, we will harness this power and make it serve us. We will make it light our dwellings, propel our cars, drive our machinery. And now electrical experts like Edison and Tesla fill our minds with wonder and awe as they tell us of the hitherto undreamed of possibilities which lie within this newly-discovered force. Electricity was as truly here in all the fulness of its power when men did not know of it as it has been since they have known of it. But what a difference even a slight knowledge of its presence, and nature, and of the laws of its operation, has made? And so, if men would only wake up to a sense of the Presence of Christ, and put themselves into right relation with the mighty moral power emanating from him, what marvellous things would follow!

It is not for the Presence, but for the revelation of the Presence that we are now to wait.

"Present we know thou art,
 But O! thyself reveal."

Open mine eyes to the vision of thy glory, which is before me for the seeing!

A revelation of the Presence will bring two things: It will bring a sense of the soul's immeasurable need, together with a sense of Christ's infinite help. A sense of the divine Presence is always accompanied by a sense of sin. When a sinful man is brought into the Presence of the pure and merciful Christ, he will abhor himself in dust and ashes, even when rejoicing in the light of hope which shines through the gloom. Not, however, unless he is unprepared to change guilt into penitence will he seek to hide himself from the Presence of the Lord in the trees of the garden. The God who is revealed in Christ is not an awful Presence before which the sinner quakes with fear, but a gracious Presence before which he rejoices with trembling.

In the doctrine of the Presence the manifestation of God in a human way is extended into the present. The greatness of God makes the thought of his personal interest in the events of our daily life a difficult thing to grasp; but in Jesus Christ God is seen pitching his tent among us, that he may be near to help. A clergyman trying to console a hard-pressed man ventured to say something about God's help. The man looked him sharply in the face and asked, "Does God know?" Whereupon one who stood by asked with blended bitterness and scorn, "Does God care?" Yes, he both knows and cares. The gods of Olympus lived in perpetual sunshine looking down with supreme indifference upon the strife and tumult of life. The God who is manifested in Jesus dwells among us, suffering with us in our afflictions, and rejoicing with us in our joys. There is nothing concerning us which he does not know; nothing in which he is not interested; nothing in which he does not share. He does not come to us merely in startling providences, but also in the ordinary events of life; he is not with us merely upon great occasions, but also in the most colorless experiences; he is not with us merely in times of spiritual elevation, but also in times of deepest depression. Dr. Doddridge dreamed that he was transported into the spirit world, and taken into a room the walls of which were adorned with a series of frescoes in which his life was delineated from infancy to old age. What astonished him most was the discovery that the whole of his life had been spent under the supervision of his Lord; and that in all the good that had befallen him all the way he had traveled, and in all the work he had done, Christ had been his constant guide and protector, his inspiration and his strength.

What comfort is his who, having come to recognize the immediate action of Christ upon his life, can say, "Thou hast beset me behind and before and laid thy hand upon me." (Ps. CXXXIX:5.) "Thou hast been behind me in my past; thou wilt be before me in my future; thou art in contact with me in the present." It is well to look back to Christ; but more important is it still to look up to Christ, and see in him a present helper and Savior. The recognition of his Presence is the dawn of spiritual life.

A BASKET OF SERMONIC CHIPS.

Rev. Sydney Strong, D. D.

LIKE now and then to do a little thinking that is not for preaching. I set out the other day to think about the birth of the soul. I had read Jesus' rebuke to Nicodemus: "Art thou a teacher of Israel and understandest not these things?" and I said, "I have been a preacher for sixteen years and am I able to tell others about the birth of the soul?" So I turned away from scholars and sought to ascertain what I actually knew about spiritual birth.

George Eliot once said: "It is wrong to say, 'I have a soul'; it is correct to say, 'I have a body.'" She would have us say, "Men are souls and have bodies." I think it is nearer the truth to say that men are bodies and souls. Body and mind and soul are all curiously and wondrously woven together to make the man.

What is the soul? Tell me what the body is and I will tell you what the soul is. Roughly stated, the body is the organized physical life; the mind is the organized intellectual life; the soul is the organized spiritual life. A soul is born when spiritual life takes on a definite, organized, individual form.

There are four births which should occur. A man ought to be born physically, mentally, morally, spiritually. Here are four men, A, B, C, D. All four are born physically—on that day when physical or animal life took on a definite, organized, individual form. In a few years a mental birth should occur. But D does not make it—i. e., his scattered intellectual life does not become organized. He is non compos mentis, an imbecile. In a few years a moral birth should occur. But C does not make it. He will not conform to the rules of righteousness as found in society. He is non compos moralis—i. e., an incorrigible. In a few years a spiritual birth should occur. A and B are left in the race, but in only one, A, do the signs of life, faith, prayer, belief in God, take on a definite, organized, controlling form. He is the only one that has passed successfully through the lower births and now is a spiritual creature. He still has physical, mental, moral life, but, differing from the others, is controlled by the Spirit of God. He has entered and lives in the kingdom of God.

Nicodemus had reached the moral birth. He heard the solemn word, "Except a man be born again, born spiritually, he cannot see the kingdom of God." The life processes that issue in birth begin far back, in childhood, in babyhood, in the cradle, yes, are prenatal. The child-prayers taught, the atmosphere of peace and love in the home, the work of Sunday and day school teachers, all these influences have been at work, through the years. Then comes the day—if happily it comes—when all the spiritual life that has been floating about in solution comes, as it were, to a head, and issues forth a separate, individual, organized, spiritual life.

The evidence of birth is control. We know that the soul is born when the controlling power in the man is spiritual, when the Spirit of God, in love and unselfishness, reigns.

The birth of the soul is brought about by the union of two lives. The heart of man is opened in faith and the love of God is allowed entrance. This union brings forth a new creature, a spiritual man. The love of God assumes control and the spiritual—not the physical, intellectual or moral—is in command.

Our theologians are sharply divided on the question "Are all men sons of God?" They are, and they are not. There is no man born of woman but what has in him the signs of promise of divine life; no man sunk so low in brutality and vice who has not some spark of the life divine; no man beyond the hope of redemption. But no one can put his hand upon the inheritance of sonship before he has passed through the gates of spiritual birth. Every one is a son, but he may be a prodigal son, without the riches of the inheritance.

No sooner does a birth occur than a struggle to retain the birthright begins. This is true of every birth. Hands are reached up from below to pull down and destroy. Paul felt it. He must strive to keep his body under, lest he become a castaway. The problem of life is partly to secure the spiritual birth, but chiefly to retain the advantage gained. Conversion to Christ is easy compared to following him up the heights. The hardships and trials and temptations and battles come after enlistment. Many start, few hold fast. Many are called, few chosen.

Reversion to former stages is our temptation. Of the millions who today are living the life of animals, nearly all have walked the celestial heights, have seen God; but they have been dragged downward, have reverted to their first birth. It is the mighty power of temptation we need to fear.

The soul-life must have proper environment to grow and prosper. Environment is generally given a material significance. To my mind "environment" and "grace" are synonymous. "By grace ye are saved" means ye are saved by a spiritual environment. God must be round about us. Our food must be the "bread of life." The atmosphere must be pure. Entertainments, amusements, companionships must be calculated to edify—i. e., to build up the soul-life. Grace is the same as environment, and it is the source of saving power.

How may the birth of the soul be brought to pass? "I desire it," says a man. "My heart is not at peace, my sins overwhelm me, the sorrows of death compass me about. Tell me how I may enter through the gates of birth in the kingdom." Let me give you a word: You know you are more than animal. No matter how much you have wallowed in mire, something within calls you higher. You now and then catch a glimpse of spiritual life. Hope of immortality stirs your bosom. When Daniel says that only one thing is needful—viz., to possess God, you give assent. What to? Why, summon and bring together at the very heart of your being all the spiritual life you have, then open that heart to God. Turn from the lower to him and his spirit that broods over us and within us will meet your spirit and in you will begin the new creature. That is birth.

The parable of the sower I sometimes call the parable of the four births. Some seed fell upon the roadside; it came to naught; some fell in shallow hearts; it sprang up, but quickly fell back. Some fell among thorns; it grew, but after a while cares of the world, etc., choked it. Other seed fell in good ground and brought forth abundantly. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

THE WORTH OF A MAN.*

Prof. John E. McFadyen.

MAN is worth what he is, not what he has; and that is true both of this world and of that which is to come. While he lives he may win and lose everything but one—his own personality. That is always his; ultimately it is all that is his. In that lies his worth, if he have any; not in the abundance of the things which he possesses and can lose. And when he dies he loses what he has, but he remains what he is. He who is unjust will be unjust still; he who is holy will be holy still; but he who is wealthy will be wealthy no more. It is a painful tribute to the commercialism of our age that a rich man is said to be worth so much when he dies. If he is worth no more than what he left he is worth nothing; and in the other world which, with all his foresight, he has forgotten or ignored, he will start a bankrupt, if he start at all. Or will he not rather be too weak to start on this new, strange journey, too weak even to stand; able only to vanish like the chaff which the judgment wind of God drives to and fro—his withered soul shriveling up before the fierce heat of God's judgment fire? All the gold of all the mines will not purchase him peace or pardon, or redeem him from the fate of those who have trifled away their gifts or opportunities.

Worth so much! to whom? Who was the better for what he was worth? Society? Was he himself the better for it, or was he only the richer? Could he face the silence? Could he see the Unseen? Did his presence lighten and darkness, cheer any loneliness? Was any heart sorer for his passing? Was "his soul well knit, and all his battles won"? Unless there was some divine idea in him, which he represented and incarnated, unless he was a worthy man, unless, that is, there was something in him we could worship—for worship is tribute to worth—he was worth nothing, though he had billions.

Reward for Service.

Will there ever come a day, we sometimes ask, when men will get what they deserve? The dreamers of dreams comfort us with the vision of a world to come in the distant days, when inner worth will be fairly measured, and fitly rewarded with its due share of the world's good things, its honor, fame and gold. Is that God's way? Not always have the benefactors of religion won their $5,000 a year. Many of the greatest of them were roasted alive, had their tongues slit and their heads hacked off; "others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder." Great poets have received for little poems a blank check, to be filled in as avarice prompted; and greater poets have received for lasting work the indifference, even the scorn, of their own generation. Great painters have received thousands for devoting their genius to trivial and unworthy themes; and greater painters have given the world their finest work for nothing. There may be some world where worth and wages correspond and the genius is the millionaire; but it is not ours. Fools have been made emperors and cowards generals; knaves have presided over the administration of justice, and traditionalists over schools of learning and religion. Folly and wickedness have reaped wealth and power and fame. While philosophers have been laughed at, philanthropists have been mobbed, explorers have lost their lives in swamps and snows, inventors have been ridiculed, reformers have been pilloried, apostles have been beaten with rods, stoned, shipwrecked, "in perils of rivers, in perils of robbers, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren, in hunger and thirst, in fastings, in cold and nakedness." "Often," says St. Paul. Yet worth is worth, as God is God. "It cannot be valued with the fine gold of Ophir," nor need it be; for every man has what he deserves just in being what he is. A true man's native power, his goodness, his worth, is his dearest satisfaction; he craves no more than the privilege of exercising the gift that is in him, of doing his work and being himself. Let us see that our hearts and minds are set upon the unseen things, which alone will stand the shock of death and the ruin of worlds.

LETTERS
TO THE BOOKLOVER.
WORKS OF THE LATE JOSEPH COOK.

My Dear Friend:

Those of us whose memories as students and readers go back to the seventies remember with peculiar feeling their discovery of Joseph Cook. Let me give you my own memory. I was a student at a well-known university, and passing through that fierce conflict which for a certain class of minds is inevitable. Living in a quiet Christian home, where religious weeklies had not yet arrived, and where even the echoes of controversy did not often enter, I found myself in my college life surrounded with controversy. The air was thick in that dark old quadrangle with the battle cries of young warriors. The amazing confidence of those who swore by Darwin and Spencer, Tyndall and Huxley, who accepted frankly the destruction of the Christian faith, is amazing to look back to, but it was hard to meet and fight at the time. The drift of thought among the leading minds of the day seemed to us to be against Christianity. It looked as if the religion of our fathers stood behind us defeated and discredited. One of the most brilliant and widely read men of my own year said that he did not think Christianity could live among educated people longer than twenty-five years. In spite of all this, something held some of us in the grips of the faith which was being despised and rejected all round us. We read our Spencer and Fiske, our John Stuart Mill and Matthew Arnold, our serene Emerson and turgid Carlyle, and yet dared to believe that Jesus Christ had been raised from the dead. There came to our succor two men whose works, though very different, united in confirming our faith. The one was D. L. Moody and the other was Joseph Cook. It is of the latter I wish to write a word or two to-day.

I remember the circumstances quite well under which the first copy of the Boston Lectures reached my hands. We students were soon all reading them and getting our own out of them. We were, of course, amazed at the form in which the argument for Christianity was put. Nothing exactly like that can be found in the history of public discussion. The rhetoric was unusual, to put it mildly; the purple patches were sometimes a little dazzling, and the favorite catch-words were not always made more telling by repetition. Then the bold printing of the argument in numbered sentences and paragraphs, exactly as they had been delivered, at once gave an appearance of scholasticism and a flavor of popularity to a kind of discussion which, when scholastic, has not been interesting, and when popular has too often not been scholarly. In spite of, and partly by reason of, the unusual form of these lectures they arrested attention everywhere.

It is possible, of course, to claim too much for Mr. Cook. He was not an original thinker, although he expressed his thinking in a most original way. He was not a specialist in any one line of scholarship, although he had studied with considerable thoroughness in several of the most important branches of theological and philosophical science. But it is also possible to make much too little of him. He was a man of very great intellectual gifts. His was a keenly analytic mind, quick to seize the main points in an argument. And his was a vivid imagination which put him in sympathy with the human and practical element in religion.

The vocabulary which his wide reading had put at his disposal was used with true American dash and freedom. Deeper than all these there lay his religious experience, which was at once fervid and practical, evangelical and mystical. Thus qualified by nature and grace, Joseph Cook, after a period of prolonged study in Germany, appeared in the prime of life in Boston. After an experimental year, which, however, revealed his power, he was taken in charge by a large committee of ministers and laymen. Under their auspices he continued for nearly twenty years to deliver his Monday lectures through the winter season. A large number of them were published in successive volumes by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. This week I have reread a number of these lectures, some of which I had not looked at since I read them over and over till I could almost repeat them in those far-off student days. I was not disappointed. Allowing for the distance of time, and the discussions which have intervened, I could not but admire the boldness and the resourcefulness with which the lecturer met the peculiar conditions of his day. Take, for example, his courses on the relation of science and religion—"Biology" and "Hereditry." It is true that the debate has now swept past most of the points with which he was so much concerned. But we must do full justice to the fact that at that date Joseph Cook, in the heat of the controversy, did not denounce Theistic Evolution. And we are glad to see that he was one of the first to note and emphasize the most vital fact that the Darwinian theory of evolution was from the first opposed by many leading evolutionists. He puts very clearly the manner in which Darwinism was beginning to be spiritualized even by Darwinians themselves. I also dipped again into the volumes on "Orthodoxy" and "Transcendentalism." One of the strongest things which Joseph Cook did was the very thorough demolition of that most inconsistent thinker and brilliant writer, Theodore Parker. Some of the most damaging criticism known to me in the history of literature is contained in this discussion on Parker. With certain of Professor Paine's pages in his "Evolution of Trinitarianism" in mind, I turned to his lectures on the doctrine of the Trinity. I was not surprised to find that Professor Paine's account of Joseph Cook's position is unreliable and his criticisms fall away from a close scrutiny. Joseph Cook did indeed define the use of the word "Person" in reference to the Trinity so as to make it much less than the word individual. But he did not go to the length of denying that there is any real and eternal distinction between the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. He took special trouble, in view of the accusations made by Freeman Clarke, which were exactly those reproduced by Prof. Paine to mark his position out in distinction from Unitarianism on the one hand or modalism on the other. My own feeling is that Joseph Cook was at his best on ethical subjects. His volume on Conscience is the most original and the most convincing. Some things in it deserve to live as permanent contributions to the literature of that supreme topic.

Altogether when I survey Joseph Cook's work I thank God and take courage. He did much to persuade the men of our generation that Christianity is too glorious in its fundamental doctrines, too real in its present living power, too evidently the greatest work of God—the very salvation of mankind—to be overwhelmed by a change in scientific interpretations of nature or by the supercilious cynicism of a few cultured men of letters in New England. He, in his last hours, made very solemn and real that contact by the individual soul with God in Jesus Christ, which is the final assurance of the truth of Evangelical Christianity. To him this work of the Divine Spirit upon the conscience at the cross was the wonder of wonders, the most sure work of God himself, the most clear testimony to the Person of Jesus Christ.

To many booklovers in America, Joseph Cook gave a wider outlook. His habit of running over the great names of those who in various lands and many generations had stood for the life of faith, was itself an inspiration, even if it was not of final value as an argumentative method. For it is good to know how great the book world is, and how mighty is its power over the higher, the real life of men. Hence my joy in calling myself,

Ever yours,
A BOOKMAN.

THE RECOVERY OF SPIRITUAL POWER.

By Rev. Joseph H. Selden, D. D.

THE fundamental problem of the church in the present day is the recovery of spiritual power.

We must not leave out of view the out-reaching work of the church. The sweep of the Master's command is world wide. The great commission is the fundamental law of the church. The less favored classes have a special claim upon us. Were our Lord visibly present in our midst, occupied, as of old, in the ministry of personal salvation, none of us would move his great heart with a deeper and more tender concern, and I verily believe among no other class would he find a more cordial welcome, than would be given by the self-respecting toilers, so seldom represented in our congregations.

However, the work that lies immediately before us and is most urgent in its claim is intensive rather than extensive. There can be no satisfactory spiritual advance for the community until the church herself finds a new life. "Tarry ye in Jerusalem," was Jesus' command to the little group gathered about him on the summit of Olivet—the world their field, the discipling of all nations their divinely appointed task; "Tarry ye in Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power," the first business of the church, confronted by grave responsibilities, is to secure a more adequate equipment for her work of ministry. Speaking from the standpoint of the preacher, two counsels may here be given.

If we are wise we shall concentrate our endeavor upon the reawakening in our hearts and the hearts of those whom we seek to win to Christ of an appreciation of the value of spiritual things. I have been repeating here the familiar excuse for the shortcomings we lament. "We are a very busy people." But the essential difficulty is not the want of time; it is the want of a due sense of proportion. In the ceaseless stir and bustle of these crowded days we have almost lost our perception of what is really worth while.

A Scriptural Illustration.

There is a story in scripture pertinent to our discussion. It tells of a certain king of Israel, who, after a hard-fought battle in which he was called to contend against superior forces, was returning homeward victorious, rejoicing over the unlooked for success of his arms. His attention was arrested by a strange figure at the roadside. A man crouching in the dust, with torn garments stained in blood, lifted his wounded arm pleading for pity. In answer to the king's questions he told his story. In the thick of the conflict a soldier entrusted a prisoner to his care, bidding him guard him as his life. "While thy servant was busy here and there he was gone." The judgment of the king upon the flagrant dereliction from duty was instantly rendered. In sternest accents he defines the penalty for such folly and sin. The crouching figure arises, bares his face, uncompromising in its severity. Lo, the prophet of Jehovah! "You have spoken your own condemnation, O King, your victory is dearly bought; engrossed in the conflict, elated by the greatness of your success, the commands of the Most High have been forgotten, and that which is of supreme importance overlooked and neglected."

The men of our generation are open to a condemnation no less severe. The warning words of Christ have been forgotten—"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth." Material comforts we have a right to desire; we have no right to make things the goal of life. God has put within us rare capacities—of knowledge, of friendship, of unselfish devotion, and in the development of these spiritual capacities our life finds its end. The men of our generation are not too ambitious. The cardinal error is found in the material standards by which they measure success. Here lies the explanation of that encroachment of business on the spiritual life which has brought about the conditions we are here considering.

Need of Nobler Ideals of Life.

What is needed, therefore, is a quickening of the appreciation of spiritual values. We must in some way be delivered from the "Despotism of Mammon" and be brought face to face with eternal realities. We must learn the truth of Christ's words that none is rich save he that is "rich toward God," and that for every man the spiritual life is supreme in importance and claim. We are agreed that a new and nobler ideal of life is a primary condition of spiritual efficiency for the church. How can the adoption of such an ideal be effected? The only motive power competent for such a spirit transformation is found in the personal influence of Jesus.

Christ's Kingdom Extending.

The enthronement of the Son of God over all the life of the world, in my heart of hearts I believe to be a task not beyond achievement. Everywhere may be seen tokens of a turning toward him; many who scout the claims of the church, many who refuse to credit her with the capacity to deal in any large and helpful way with the evils that vex the peace of society, speak the name of Jesus in the accent of loving confidence. Men of affairs impatient of impractical subtleties, are deeply impressed with the clearness of Christ's vision, and his comprehensive grasp of the principles of right living. Theology, as Fairbairn has shown so convincingly, reveals "a new feeling for Christ." The masters of this "greatest of all sciences," discarding the traditional interpretations of scripture, are making their way back of the doctrinal formula framed in the ages of controversy to the simple gospel of Christ.

It is the hour of the church's opportunity—she owes the world of our day spiritual leadership. The time has come for a fresh study of the life and words and works of the Master of us all. The church must show that she has not forgotten the meaning of "disciple;"

that she has broken with the rule of mere tradition, and with open mind, untrammelled by prejudice, is seeking a first-hand knowledge of the gospel; above all, that she is not repeating the unspeakable folly of those who say, "Lord, Lord," yet refuse to obey his explicit commands.

The conditions we have been studying are very serious, but the solution is not far to seek. During the first missionary conference at Northfield a body of Christian Japanese assembled at Tokio sent their greeting and this message, brief but inestimably rich in suggestion—"Make Jesus King!"

That word from men born in gray twilight of a heathen land furnishes us our watchword.

Make Jesus King! The spiritual power we need, the spiritual power we crave waits on the enthronement of Christ in the hearts and lives of those who bear his name.

THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK.

Carey E. Morgan.

PROPOS to the tardy arrival of so many people at the church services, it might be well to recall the Unitarian divine of the last generation, in Boston, famous for his lack of punctuality, of whom a brother minister once said: "Dr. G. is a good man and will undoubtedly have a part in the second resurrection, but it is very certain that he will not be in time for the first."

Maltbie Babcock, whose silver tongue will never again plead the Gospel of righteousness, life and love, in his Carnegie hall speech before the Ecumenical Conference in New York city last spring, raised the question as to where Paul would be today if he were here with us. "He would be in the thin red line in the foreign field, at the forefront of the battle, where it meets the great black broad line. Paul did not say it that way, but in effect he said: "It is my ambition to fight where no one else has ever drawn the sword; let me be the first runner to go ahead with the news of life. Let me build where no one else has ever built." In the midst of an eager and impassioned plea for breadth of love and loyal obedience to the great commission of Jesus Christ, Dr. Babcock made a telling and tremendous impression with this admirable sentence: "See Jesus before he goes to his Father's side, with his hand outstretched and pointing to the uttermost parts of the earth. Let the church never forget that gesture. To the uttermost parts of the earth! I tell you, fellow Christians, your love has got broken wings if it cannot fly across the ocean."

Those who think that everything in the Old Testament and in all heaven and earth besides is a type of some spiritual reality must have been represented at Chautauqua, when Dr. J. N. Buckley, who was in charge of the question box, was asked: "Do you think the great pyramid a prophecy of the coming Christ?" Dr. Buckley's reply, which was followed by prolonged applause, was: "I answer with the speculation of a man who found a boot on the shores of the Mediterranean marked 'J,' and concluded that it belonged to Jonah and was cast off by him in his struggles when he got on shore."

I was once asked by one of these mystic interpreters what Jacob's staff stood for. I felt safe in telling him that it stood for a walking-stick. If the Christian religion were not divine it would have been overwhelmed long ago by the crudities and irrational theories and speculations that have been put upon it.

Bishop Leonard gave the clergy of the diocese of Ohio his opinion concerning the preaching of civics, economics, politics, etc. "The world of busy toilers, tired out men and women of six days labor in the marts of merchandise want on the Lord's day some instruction, guidance and inspiration on the subject of sin-fighting and sin-killing. I am strained to think that the plain men and women of today are like their progenitors and ancestry; that they want Christ for the feeding of their souls."

The Record-Herald, speaking on the same point, said: "Unless the Christian religion is for the soul of man, for his spiritual uplifting, there is nothing to it. No church can long subsist upon biology, literature or art. Lectures on geology never called forth the gentle ministrations to the poor and lowly that mark the earthly career of the Master. We can find no solace for bereavement, no consolation for the vicissitudes of life from the Silurian or Devonian ages. There is little food there for man's spiritual nature. The pulpit must preach hope, faith, charity, love, unselfishness, immorality. If it preach not these things, but wanders away after bugs and boulders and sensationalism, it is of no service to Christianity."

The editor of the Interior, commenting on this, points out the fact that the Author of Christianity found texts in birds, flowers and stones. It seems to me, though, that this fact does not annul the contention of either the bishop or the Record-Herald editor, for our Lord made use of these things not to teach science or politics or art, but religion. That is a legitimate use to make of them, and is not found fault with by anybody so far as I know.

IS IT WORTH WHILE?

Is it worth while that we jostle a brother,
Bearing his load on the rough road of life?
Is it worth while that we jeer at each other,
In blackness of heart that we war to the knife?
God pity us all in our pitiful strife.

God pity us all as we jostle each other;
God pardon us all for the triumph we feel
When a fellow goes down 'neath his load on the heather, Pierced to the heart. Words are keener than steel,
And mightier far for woe than for weal.

Were it not well, in this brief little journey
On over the isthmus, down into the tide,
We give him a fish instead of a serpent,
Ere folding the hands to be and abide Forever and aye in dust at his side?

Look at those roses saluting each other,
Look at the herds all at peace on the plain—
Man, and man only, makes war on his brother,
And laughs in his heart at his peril and pain,
Shamed by the beasts that go down on the plain.

Is it worth while that we battle to humble
Some poor fellow mortal down into the dust?
God pity us all! Time oft soon will tumble
All of us together, like leaves in a gust,
Humbled, indeed, down into the dust.

OUR PULPIT.

THE VICTORY OF FAITH.

By Prof. W. Douglas Mackenzie, D. D.

John 16:33. These things have I spoken unto you that in Me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.

1. John 5:4. This is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith.

1. Cor. 15:57. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord, Jesus Christ.

Man Is Engaged in a Universal Battle.

Christianity is in line with every other religion in the world when it assumes that man is engaged in a warfare that lasts a lifetime. Christianity does not create the warfare, but finds it and deals with it. The kind of war in which men engage may be misunderstood, the tactics employed by the human spirit may be very poor, the prospects of victory may be swallowed up in the terror of the assaults of the enemy; but, however all that may be, the central and fundamental fact is that man, as soon as he becomes religious, becomes conscious of war.

This war is something more than a struggle conducted by him in the effort to obtain food for the sustenance of his daily life. It may include the struggle for existence; it may deal with it; but this war, of which man's spirit is conscious, does not merely consist in the effort to obtain food and to live as comfortably, and as long, as possible in the animal life. If that were the case the ideal man would be represented, for instance, by the South African Zulu under the British Government. The South African Zulu, as under the control of a strong hand, is released from the terror that filled him when he lived in his simple tribal life, when a club might shatter his skull at any moment, when he was sent out year after year to carry on a warfare with neighboring tribes that might end his life. Now he is prevented from indulging in any pastime that involves his life in danger. He is allotted garden ground of the richest kind. He is allowed to have his flocks and his herds as large as he can make them, and the soil is so fruitful and the flocks and herds so productive that he has no care. If the victory of life is to have enough to eat and enough of sunshine to keep warm, and enough of this kind of comfort to live easily as long as possible, the great victor in this life is the South African Zulu. But we all at once recoil from that view. There is something that shocks our moral sense, our feeling of the fitness of things, if we for a moment dare to say that that is an ideal human existence. We all know that that is just the existence of the animal and that there is that in man which must engage in another warfare and obtain an altogether different victory.

The real battle in life, then, is not just the ardor of your daily effort to maintain your business. That may be simply a higher development of the Zulu's effort to stretch out his hand and pluck the ripe fruit and enjoy its luscious juices. The real battle of life consists in the intentions, the spirit, the motive, the ideal which you take to your daily business. It is the self-sacrifice, the devotion, the diligence, the entire spiritual life which you carry into that ardent pursuit of your business. That is the region of the battle with which your manhood is concerned; that is the battlefield where you are gaining or losing the day, where victory is to be yours, or defeat written across the whole years of your life.

The great difficulty, in a city like this where the battle for physical existence appears to be the main one, is to get people to look upon the other and see what is the real and chief struggle of their daily life. As they go down town in the morning hanging on to the straps of their street-cars and go out in the evening hanging on to the straps again, they find that in hanging on to the straps and holding on for dear life they are engaged in another struggle than the physical, and their attitude even to the neighbor who is jostling against them, or who is driven against them, the very feelings with which they regard him are the signs of the other battle, the conditions of the other victory and the other defeat. That is the real battle where the real victory or the real defeat is to be met. Jesus recognized this and said: "In the world ye shall have tribulation." The Apostle John recognized this and the necessity that we must, as he says, overcome the world. The Apostle Paul recognized this over and over in his terrifically deep insight into the facts of the case and gave thanks that the victory is secured on certain conditions. What, then, are we to say about this warfare that is said to be between us and the world? It is said to be between us and the world because every man wakes up to find himself in a condition of things where he seems to be drawn on to lose his faith in God and to lose his sense of honor. Somehow or another the constitution of things is against us from the beginning. The little growing child finds that there is something in the very body it has inherited, in the very home it lives in, in the very school it goes to, in the very demands that are made, or the temptations addressed to it day after day, something which is drawing it into evil impulses, evil thoughts, evil words, into selfishness, into gloom of spirit. The little child finds itself guided by its Christian parents in this warfare from the very beginning, and as the child passes into youth the area of the battlefield simply extends itself. As his own nature expands he knows that there are other mighty impulses and appetites within him whose strength and power he had never dreamed of. He finds that out into the world they carry him, making the world a larger world and the battle a fiercer battle. All the strain of it is heavier upon his will because there is more to fight against. As the youth passes on, carrying all the world that surrounded him in the child forward into manhood, again it brings an extension of the battlefield. He must feel as if there were a kind of organizing of the very conditions of life for the purpose of drawing and driving him on into the defeat which is sin and which is the loss of God.

Christ the First Victor.

Jesus says that He has met this enemy; that He has engaged in this warfare, and he says: "I have overcome the world." There you and I may listen to the voice of the only one that ever fought that battle and came out able to say those words. Never in the history of man did there arise any other spirit that confronted the world with the depth, with the sincerity, with the devotion, with the intelligence, with the strength of Jesus Christ, for none ever saw so fierce a struggle and won the right to say: "I have overcome the world." In what way had He overcome it? In two ways: One of those He refers to in the preceding verse in the Gospel of John, where He says: "Nevertheless I am not alone. The Father is with Me." "The Father is with Me." The man who manages to live through life and at the end says "The Father is with Me" has gained the victory. The man has won his fight who, after all, looking back over the extent of the battlefield and the stages of the fierce struggle, finds that it has not dragged him away from God. If he has moved nearer and nearer and nearer to the living God Himself and at the end can say, in the very hour of his dying: "I am not alone. I go alone into the darkness; alone down the valley; nevertheless, I am not alone. The Father is with me;" that soul has gained the victory for which life is worth living and death is worth facing. Jesus gained the victory, saying, "The Father is with Me," and the Apostle John echoes those words when he says, "This is the victory which has overcome the world, even our faith." Jesus Christ maintained that faith in His Father; a faith of intimacy, a faith of inward reconciliation, a faith of permanent love, a faith of constant service, a faith which feared not that it would ever pass beyond the reach of the Father's arm into a darkness where the Father's eye could not follow, a faith which never feared lest anything should intrude between itself and the living God. If only a man's faith is strong enough it is beyond the reach of the enemy. The man with a faith like that of Jesus lives in a region far beyond the range of the enemy, gains the victory because the enemy cannot reach the citadel where his faith is—in the heart of God! Jesus gained the victory not only because He thus lived in the continuous possession of that undying faith in His Father, but because He went on giving Himself in love unto men. He was open to all the race temptations arising from social circumstances. He had to face the temptations—when He went out into His own unexampled and marvelous career—to go into the wrong paths. He has Himself told us in that wonderful story of the wilderness of temptations how fiercely the battle went in His soul time after time, when it seemed as if He must go in this direction and saw it was wrong and must go in that direction and saw it was wrong. Against the wrong He had His own battle; as against the wrong you and I have our battles. But He went right on in that straight road of the humblest love for his fellowmen, and went on in that love even after it met the very hate of those upon whom it was directed. He went on loving to the very end. All hate he met with the patient serenity of that supreme faith, because only the man who has the uttermost faith in God can ever give the uttermost love to the hearts that hate him. Jesus went on with that uttermost faith in God, giving that unsurpassable and invincible and unwearied love unto men. He was willing to love those men and loved them in the very hour when they put Him to every form of injustice and ignominy; and as He lay upon the cross, lay there being nailed to it, looked at the men who did it and the darker faces of the men who willed it, standing beyond the circle made by the military officers, and prayed, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." Do you think that prayer came out of a heart that did not supremely and perfectly and most patiently love those men in the very height and consummation of their hatred and its purpose? He loved them unto the end, even the enemies that made an end of Him. I have overcome the world, He says, I have overcome the world. It has matched its strength against my faith in God; it has matched its strength against my love for man, but I have overcome the world. The first human spirit that ever won that victory said these words when Jesus, with the cross drawing near, knowing all that was without Him coming upon Him, and all that was within Him going out to His sure victory, said to his disciples, "I have overcome the world."

There is, then, a battle; it is a universal battle, and Jesus alone of the sons of men has gained the victory.

Christ's Victory Our Victory.

Christianity, Christian experience, is the share which we have in the victory of Christ. So Christ, alone of all the sons of men, won this battle of a human life and triumphed in the possession of this victory, and we all share in his victory. He is ours; we are His. To the man who has faith in Him and goes out to live, to pray, to work, to be in earnest about everything with that faith in Jesus Christ, Jesus says, "In Me ye have peace. In me ye have the victory." The man who has that faith in Jesus Christ is one with Jesus Christ. This Christ is now the universal life and Lord of the world, available for every human soul, present within the heart's speech of every human spirit, ready to arm us for the fight, to arm us with the victory already gained. "Thanks," the Apostle Paul says, "be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." And, "This is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith," says the Apostle John, the faith that we have in Jesus Christ. Across the hot brow of the world, it has been said, Christ has passed His cooling hand. Ah! but also right down within the weak heart of the world Christ has poured His spirit's strength. Out a man can go from the presence of that Christ armed with His power. "In Him I have my life's victory." "Be of good cheer," said Jesus, "I have overcome the world." "Thanks be unto God," let us reply, "who giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ, our Lord."

My friends, I do not know that there is any other way of conducting this warfare in which you and I are every day engaged except by asking ourselves, Can I go forward with an absolute and unwavering faith in my Father? Can I go forward in an ever-widening and deepening love for my fellowmen? The man who goes forward with these principles of life growing in his heart is already victorious. The enemies are fleeing every day and he can watch the temptations recede. He can watch the disbanding hosts turn their backs upon him. He can say to himself, "I love and I trust and my soul is kept secure; I love and I trust and the foes are growing weaker; I love my fellowmen and I trust my living God and I know that the man who loves and trusts is invincible." There is nothing in the universe that can destroy that man's life. God made the universe to produce that very victory, to reach that very result. Out of all history God gathers the one richest treasure ever His heart thought of and His eye foresaw; the rich treasure of hearts like yours, my dear friends, hearts like yours, that say, "I trust in the living God and I love my fellowmen." That is what God has been working for all through the ages; what He is looking for all through the years. As they die He gathers the treasures to Himself, as their life story passes into the soil of the past He gathers that which shall remain forever, His own wondrous and choicest joy, the soul that trusts to the very end and loves to the very depths, in Jesus Christ.

A true Christian living in the world is like a ship sailing on the ocean. It is not the ship being in the water which will sink it, but the water getting into the ship. So the world, with its love of pleasure, getting into the hearts of Christians, has ruined its millions.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

BEGINNING OF SIN AND REDEMPTION.

Sunday-school Lesson for July 14, 1901.

Golden Text: Where sin bounded, grace did much more abound. Rom. 5:20.

1. Now the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden.
 2. And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden:
 3. But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die.
 4. And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die:
 5. For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.
 6. And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her; and he did eat.
 7. And the eyes of both were opened, and they knew that they were naked; and they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves aprons.
 8. And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the cool of the day: and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the garden.

 9. And the Lord God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou?
 10. And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself.
 11. And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?
 12. And the man said, The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.
 13. And the Lord God said unto the woman, What is this that thou hast done? And the woman said, The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.
 14. And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life:
 15. And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

Purpose of the Lesson.

The main lesson here is the very practical one of self-control. It is a picture of the working of evil longings in the human heart. How good it was of our heavenly Father, at the very beginning of his Word, to set forth with the utmost clearness this invaluable lesson. Every one is surrounded by "that which is good" and "very good." Chpt. 1: 31; Matt. 5: 41, Jas. 11: 17. Yet in the midst of this, we, too, as in the case of our first parents, are tempted by that which is not good and a choice must be made. Even Jesus was tempted. Several things stand out clearly: First, Satan approaches man from the standpoint of friendly concern and never in his true hideousness. He approaches through others. He shows himself interested in that which is along the line of our desires and which seems to be for our good. He appeals to our sense of sight and of taste and to our ambition. The lesson especially shows that Satan is cunning and gains the souls of men step by step.

No time need be wasted over a question that engages some Bible students, as to whether that part of the lesson regarding the serpent and some other features is actual history, or whether it is in the nature of a parable like that of the Ten Virgins. Enough to say that the main object for which this story was given was that it might cover spiritual instruction. It is a picture not only of the moral genesis of the race, but of the moral genesis of every individual soul. Its moral teachings he that runs may read.

Time.

Satan's plot to ruin man through temptation, seems to have been carried out soon after man's creation. The date in most of our Bibles is put at about 4000 B. C., but this is a human calculation, which must not be accepted as authoritative. The place of the temptation was the beautiful Garden of Eden mentioned in Chapter 2.

Friendly Tempter. "The serpent." The real tempter could not be an animal. The serpent obviously was used by the devil as his tool; or else is brought into the narrative to illustrate the devil. Sin existed in some rebel spirits before it blighted Eden. Jude 6; John 8:44. * * * "Serpent was more subtle." Temptation comes like a serpent. It lies by our path low and hidden like a serpent. A serpent approaches noiselessly and is not easily seen. It finds its way everywhere, over or under every barrier, into every secret place. The serpent is the symbol of earthly wisdom. Matt. 10:16. * * * "He said unto the woman." The woman instead of resisting the temptation (James 4:7) listened. Right there was the devil's entering wedge. Notice that she listens to words which show the speaker is a foe to God. To listen to the offers of sin is to be lost. * * * "Hath God said . . . shalt not eat?" As love to God is the basis of our devotion to him, the tempter would begin his attack by destroying this love, through making God appear to be a tyrant. Observe that he adroitly lays stress upon the exception instead of the rule—his object being, even as in this day, to make obedience seem unreasonably hard. An appeal to bodily wants and appetites is still Satan's most common course of attack. Prov. 20:1; Matt. 4:2,3.

V. 2. Parleying with Evil. "We may eat." Eve's intention by referring to the largeness of her opportunity seemed to be good; but merely to listen to temptation and to discuss it is dangerous. This is because we are dealing with one who is a liar, and a deceiver, and weak human flesh with its natural inclinations towards evil, is certain to come out the worse for the parleying. There was no lack of good in the garden; life was large and free and the really needful things abounded. It is so now. But we are to practice self-control in the use of that which is good.

V. 3. Restriction. "But of fruit . . . midst of garden." The tree of knowledge of good and evil is mentioned in chapter 2:9. It was evidently a moral test. Moral choice implies two alternatives. Man can be trained in virtue only by resisting evil. Satan not God tempts us; God tests us. * * * "Ye shalt not eat." This was God's command. It was the best for their welfare as all of God's commands to us are best for us. Every life has its forbidden trees. It often is for man's spiritual gain that he is deprived of that which he desires. Deprivation teaches self-control. * * * "Neither touch it." They were neither to "touch, taste or handle." The only safe course is to take eyes and thought off from that which is evil. Prov. 23:31; Isa. 55:7. * * * "Lest ye die." God had said (2:17): "Thou shalt surely die," or more literally "dying thou shalt die"; thou shalt begin to die. Notice how Eve, influenced as she was by evil, greatly modified God's truth. How common that practice is to-day.

V. 4. The Lie: No Harm. Serpent said, "Thou shalt not surely die." His aim was to destroy faith in God by declaring his word a lie. Without remonstrance the woman listens. The words uttered were a half truth and the more delusive on that account. Death was not to be instant, but gradual. Yet it was to come surely. The most immediate result was death of the spirit. Sin worked a separation from God the source of life.

V. 5. "All These Give Thee." "For God doth know." The woman continues willingly to hear God defamed as if unwilling that man should have the best. "Your eyes shall be opened." He comes to everyone precisely as he did to Jesus (Matt. 4:9) with his great false promises, "all these things will I give thee." He excites his listener's curiosity with visions of knowledge and happiness now unknown. How this tallies with Satan's ways toward every human heart. * * * "Shall be as God's." Here the concealed fangs strike in the poison of pride, promising elevation almost equal to deity. * * * "Knowing good and evil." An offer of the good that he may win to that which is evil.

V. 6. Self-Gratification. "When the woman saw." She had listened, gazed, considered instead of controlling and resisting the evil desire in her heart. What a lesson in this for us. * * * "Was good for food." An appeal to the animal side of human nature, like many a present day temptation "which seemeth right." Prov. 14:12. * * * "Pleasant to the eyes." Now the aim is toward the higher sense of beauty, "the lust of the eye," a most common form of temptation. * * * "To make one wise." Appealing now as in verse 5 to ambition, "the pride of life." 1 John 2:16. * * * "Took and did eat." She chose to gratify self, a root from which all evil proceeds. We do not mean to fall into evil ways but only to taste; if Satan can work on our curiosity to that extent he wins. * * * "Gave also to husband . . . he did eat." Another step in the fall is that of leading others to sin. Now Satan, instead of a serpent uses a person—his common course—to cause the fall of another. But Adam was more to blame than Eve. He sinned with eyes wide open. 1 Tim. 2:14. Perhaps this was because he saw that death did not instantly follow the eating.

V. 7. Shame in Sin. "Knew were naked." Spiritual nakedness, for their innocence was gone; they had lost the soul's garment of righteousness. * * * "Sewed fig leaves together." But sin is something real and deep; no easy process, no mere covering of leaves can effect a restoration, nothing but pain, suffering and blood. However, a sense of sin is a step towards the light. * * * "Made themselves aprons." They sought by their own efforts to cover their sin and shame. How fruitless is such an attempt, yet how often tried.

V. 8. The Evil Conscience. "Cool of day." Some think from the original reading that a fearful tempest took place with the fall filling Adam and Eve with alarm. Verse 10; Job 37:4,5. * * * "Hid themselves." They tried to hide from their Father and best Friend. So Jonah ran way from God. John 1:3. Sin separates from God; and evil conscience creates coldness toward God. In Rev. 6:16 there is an awful picture of sinners seeking to hide from the Lamb.

V. 9. Love Calling. "God called unto Adam." Adam was now lost. God was seeking him for the living spirit is not come to condemn the world but that the world might be saved. * * * "Where art thou?" A question like that to Cain, Chap. 4:9, designed to awaken conscience. It is a question to everyone of us.

V. 10. From Peace to Fear. "I was afraid." There is no confession of sin but an evasion pointing merely to his fear and shame. Was that a happy feeling? * * * "I was naked." Have we no reason to be ashamed of our nakedness before God? Have we gladly done his will and his work? Have we loved him with all our heart, and soul, and strength, and might as is His due?

V. 11. Seeks Confession. "Who told thee." God graciously would open the way for confession, repentance and a return to him.

V. 12. Excuses for Self. "The woman whom thou gavest." How easy to bestow blame on everyone but on self. First God and circumstances are blamed. Adam blames the woman, blames the Giver of the woman; and the woman in verse 13 blames the serpent. How clearly this shows the progressive nature of sin. Almost every prisoner claims he is innocent and a victim to adverse circumstances.

V. 13. The Truth Out. "And the woman said." She, too, lays the blame on another. * * * "Beguiled me." He beguiles, by presenting to our face only that which seems fair and good, and never showing the evil that is sure to follow (Prov. 23:32), lest everyone would flee.

V. 14. A Horror to Man. "Cursed above all cattle." In a lower sense the words seem to imply that some change was to come upon the serpent because it had been made the instrument of evil. Sin degrades everything it touches.

V. 15. Promised Victory. "Enmity between." As we are taught that the flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh (Gal. 5:17). There is an inveterate dislike by the human race for the serpent, the symbol of man's curse. Even a hunter who is fearless before a panther or a mountain lion will shrink at the sight of a serpent. According to Dr. Todd in India alone in 1877, 16,777 persons died from serpent bites. * * * "Between thy seed and her seed." The children of the wicked one and the children of the kingdom as shown by our Savior, Matt. 13:38,39. The conflict is constantly on. It is a warfare in which evil spirits and wicked men are against Christ and His church. * * *

"Shall bruise thy head." It is not a warfare without bruises and suffering; the trail of sin is marked all through the Bible with blood. In this conflict man shall receive injury but in the end the serpent's head shall be bruised. The final victory shall be with man through self-control by help of the Son of Man. * * * "Shalt bruise his heel." The serpent wounds the heel that crushes him. This was true in the life of Jesus; it is true in every victorious life. Christ came to show us how to win the battle against temptation. Matt. 4. To succeed we must be filled with His fullness (John 1:16) and hide His word in our hearts, Ps. 119:11. The redemption of God is a redemption by incarnation that is the divine life living in our lives. 2 Pet. 1:4. Jesus says, "I am the life." Christ in you is the hope of glory. Col. 1:27; John 15:4.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

By Peter Ainslie.

WE know sin by the establishment of law; we know grace by the exercise of pardon. Sin has played havoc with the human race and we have but to lift up our eyes to read its traces in all life—the saddest picture that ever hung upon this old world! But by its side comes grace. Sin abounded, but grace has superabounded. Grace does not simply restore mankind to what they formally were in the Edenic garden, but it goes far beyond that. Mankind were placed in their primeval innocence—the garden was only the starting point—and then they were to go upwards, but sin entered and they went downwards. Now then, by grace—by God's own favor—mankind is not only to be restored to their former purity—not only to be without sin, but to be glorified unto the Father. Like this: My friend steals from me one dollar and he has sinned. He is a rogue. He has wronged me and made himself despised in his own eyes, and he has broken up our friendship, for having wronged me; he avoids me and my confidence in him is shaken. In course of time he acknowledges his wrong and asks my pardon. Several years ago he took from me a dollar; now I give him a thousand dollars. The one dollar represents sin and the one thousand dollars represents grace, and yet the disproportion is far greater than that of this illustration.

Sin had its garden of Eden and redemption had its garden of Gethsemane. The entrance into Eden was beautiful—perfect purity, perfect beauty, perfection in sky, on earth and human life, but the way out of that garden was with tears and heartaches and hasty foot steps were made beneath bent shoulders. The way into Gethsemane was under the dark shadows of the night, and its darker shadows of the cross with tears and sobs that almost broke the heart of Jesus, but they led him out of the garden and unknowingly to take the sting out of the world's heart of pain. The world's curse begun in Eden; the world's triumphal procession begun in Gethsemane. In the former, the lights went out and man's pathway went out into the dark; in the latter, the lights were made ready for the world-wide illumination.

If man could write—but no man ever can write—the history of sin, it would make up the saddest lines that ever came from human pen. All our pains, sorrows, fears, disappointments, sadness, tears—everything that makes us uncomfortable, up to death itself, is the rightful product of sin. Sorrows, tears and death have certainly abounded. Now then, all that is good, that partial peace, that living hope, that loving joy, that sense of happiness, that realization of pardon, that ever-living life with God, that practical love among us, that unsuppressed sympathy, and everything that is good in this world is the rightful product of God. These are but the seeds that shall some day make a world-wide harvest to the glory of him who hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel.

Our Father, we can only thank thee. Thou art so good and gracious, and praises be to thy name forever. Amen.

RECRUITING FOR JESUS.

John 1:40-42. References, John 1:35-51; 4:29; Luke 19:5; Acts 16:13-15.

What a beautiful scene is this in the early life of Jesus' ministry as he summons his first disciples. The people were in expectancy. There was a vague feeling throughout the world that a deliverer was soon to come, and that a new era as to be ushered in. John the Baptist had announced his coming. He had pointed him out as the lamb of God, who should take away the sins of the world. He had come with a Divine commission. His purpose was not to give men a system of theology, but to give them life. He founded no institutions; he left no written record, only as it was deeply written in the experiences of those who loved him. It was his personal touch—the impartation of new life—that lifted men up and drew them to him.

Who Were There.

He was supremely interested in men and women. It made but very little difference what their previous occupation or habit of life had been, if they had willing minds and receptive hearts. As individuals he chose them out of the mass in order to establish a new society, a social order wherein dwelleth righteousness.

His first choice was Andrew, a fisherman. He was never a conspicuous character in the apostolic college. So far as we have any record the most important work that is accredited to him was the finding of his brother Peter, who became the "first among equals." Andrew became convinced in his own mind that Jesus was the Messiah. His next thought was to find his companion in the flesh. Knowing his strength as well as his weakness, he doubtless felt that Jesus could find an important place for him in his kingdom. At least, Christ saw in him one who was capable of a great work. He gave him a new name and set before him a high ideal. He who was the impulsive and impetuous was to become the bold and courageous, the rock apostle. In Zacheus, the despised tax-gatherer, Jesus saw one who could become of great service to him. There were many things against him; his stature, his business, his reputation. But Jesus looketh not upon the outward appearance, but upon the heart, and he alone judgeth righteously. The people said that man is a sinner, but it was the lost that Jesus came to seek and to save.

Women played no unimportant part in the kingdom that Jesus came to make real. He took every possible opportunity to proclaim his mission and call people away from their sordid self to their "soul-self." He cared little for his reputation. His only thought was the doing of the Father's will. The Jews and the Samaritans were "at outs," but this did not influence Jesus in the least. He first talked with a woman that much of our pharisaical Christianity would scorn to notice. He did not hurl anathemas against her, but he enriched her life with spiritual truth. Doubtless the later work of Philip among the Samaritans was very largely due to the seed sowing of Jesus.

In the vision Paul saw a man calling from Macedonia, but his first recruit was a woman. She was in business away from home, but had time on the Sabbath day to go aside that her spiritual nature might be satisfied. The result was that she received a far greater blessing than she could have hoped for; not only she, but her household became obedient to the faith.

If we are but willing to be used by Jesus in whatever way he may choose our life cannot be a failure. We may be forgotten, but what of that, if we can lead one soul to him like Peter, or if we can form the nucleus of church like unto that which was at Phillipi.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

By Charles Blanchard.

INDIVIDUAL WORK FOR CHRIST.

Topic July 14: Ref. Acts 8:26-40.

"The Angel of the Lord."

HE expression "the angel of the Lord" occurs frequently in the Scriptures, especially in the Old Testament. It indicates some manifestation of the Divine Presence, not always in the same form. The word angel means "messenger." Remembering this, we can better understand the meaning of this somewhat familiar expression.

The Bible makes little of the messenger, but much of

The Message.

Let us note several things in the message to Philip. It is direct, explicit, imperative. "Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert." Nothing could be more explicit than this. Yet how short and simple it is. God leaves some things to the wisdom of his servants. He reserves something for future revelation. Let us be glad and hopeful in this. It is one of the inspiring things in all true evangelization. Surprises of grace come to all His faithful ministers. Heralds of the hope of the Gospel, take courage! The desert road holds its surprises still for all who, like Philip, arise and go!

"He Arose and Went."

I like that. Philip was a model evangelist—and endeavorer. He could be depended on. He didn't have to be coaxed or coddled. He didn't know just what the Lord wanted him to do, but he arose and went. All who walk by faith and work by faith, and all who do any worthy thing must do it in the divine way—must be willing, like Abraham, to go out not knowing whither they go; or like Moses, who endured as seeing him that is invisible; and like Paul, who went bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem not knowing the things that should befall him there save that the Holy Spirit witnessed in every city that bonds and afflictions remained.

Walking by Faith with Eyes Open.

But while Philip went by faith, he kept his eyes wide open. There is no premium on spiritual stupidity—or any other sort! Who would do the Lord's work must be alert, active, "wide awake," is the world's way; nor should the children of this world be wiser or more wide awake than Christians called with a holy calling, yet called to use whatever of power or wisdom or strength may be theirs for the defense and confirmation of the Gospel. Paul says, you remember, that he was set for the defense and confirmation of the Gospel; and he also tells us that he became all things to all men that by any means he might win some. We must be wise, wide awake, winning. Such men were Peter, Philip, Paul. Let us learn the secret of personal work from this story of Philip and the Ethiopian eunuch.

Open Eyes and Open Ears.

Philip not only had open eyes but he had open ears. His ears were open to hear the eunuch read, and what he was reading. At the same time his ears were open to hear what the Spirit said. We need the double sense of hearing. No man can do his best work who does not cultivate the sense of spiritual sight and sound. At the same time we need to keep our ears open to know what men think and say, what they read and how they understand. This is the human side of salvation. And for us it is perhaps the more important. The angel of the Lord commands, the spirit directs; but Philip is left largely to his own consecrated common sense as to how to approach the rich man from far Ethiopia—a stranger, riding in his chariot, busy with the perplexing problem of the prophet's meaning, and with the still more serious problem of his personal salvation.

"A Hopeful Subject."

This Ethiopian eunuch was what is called "a hopeful subject." The phrase means something. He had been up to Jerusalem to worship. He had the spirit of reverence and regard for religion which is the first condition of salvation. He was a serious, reflecting man. He was a reader of the Scriptures. There is little hope for those who will not read and reflect. He confesses freely, humbly, almost passionately, his ignorance. He wanted help, guidance. No marvel he was saved! God will send his angels and his servants a thousand miles and along desert roads to save such a man. He does it! Our man is worth saving. Let us learn this. Go to him; join ourselves to him; listen to him; question him; teach him; begin with him where he is; lead him up to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world; take his confession; baptize him; let him go on his way rejoicing! You can trust such.

STUDIES IN MISSIONS.

[Supplementary to the C. E. reading courses.]

WHO SHOULD BECOME MISSIONARIES?

A. McLean.

ALL are not qualified for this service. All do not have sufficient health and education and linguistic ability and other indispensable qualifications. They can render the work efficient service, but not on the mission field. They can send and support those who go. A missionary should have—

1. Robust health. The climate and the work are more trying than at home. After reaching the field one has to take several years to prepare for the service. This involves the expenditure of a considerable amount of money. It follows that whoever goes out ought to have a reasonable prospect of remaining on the field for a term of years. Besides, one's usefulness depends very largely upon one's physical condition.

2. Ability to master a new language. This is very necessary. The natives are certain to discredit anyone who cannot speak their language easily and accurately. Men who are unable to master a new tongue are a hindrance to the mission. A missionary should be able to hold his own in the use of the vernacular in any discussion that may arise.

3. Scholarship. The missionary is certain to encounter scholars in India and Japan and China. If he cannot meet them on their own ground he will not be able to command their respect and to win them to Christ. Furthermore, he must be able to start and carry on training schools. Evangelists and teachers and helpers of various grades must be prepared. The most effective missionaries from the time of Paul to the present time were men of liberal culture.

4. Faith in God and in the Gospel. The world is lost. It cannot be saved by education or by commerce, or by intercourse with a so-called Christian nation. The one divinely-appointed instrument for this purpose is the Gospel. If one does not believe this most thoroughly one ought not to become a missionary. The nations need the Gospel more than they need anything else. Every other blessing follows its acceptance.

5. Common sense. The missionary has to deal with all classes and conditions of men. He has to deal with government officials, with other missionaries, with native helpers, and with converts from heathenism. With the wisest management there will be more or less misunderstanding and conflict. New problems are ever arising. In many cases one has no precept or precedent to guide him. One needs all the practical wisdom that one can command.

6. Love. The missionary must love the people among whom and for whom he is to labor. If he feels no genuine interest in them, and no earnest desire to do them good, he will not be able to render them much assistance. He should love those for whom Christ died. Not only so, but he should have the warmest affection for those with whom he is joined as a yoke-fellow. He should be willing to take the second place; to prefer his associates in honor before himself.

7. Ability to lead. The mission field needs many-sided men. It needs wise master-builders to lay foundations. The work must be carried on very largely by the natives. The most that the foreigner can do is to make some converts, and train the best of them for the work of the ministry. From the very first the thought of self-support and self-propagation must be kept in mind. The notion that anyone will do for this service, provided he is pious, is a mistake. The best are none too well equipped for this divine enterprise.

8. Consecration. The work on the mission fields is difficult. It is far more difficult than the work at home. It is a perpetual conflict with ignorance and superstition. The romance soon wears away. If the missionary is not constrained by the love of Christ, so that he does not count his own life dear to him, he will soon grow weary of the task and desire to abandon the field. If he has the apostolic spirit he will find the work one of the most joyous ever committed to man. Cincinnati, O.

Not long ago a popular preacher in the course of his sermon said that, after surveying the cross on which Jesus died, and all that it revealed and implied, he felt constrained, in deepest sincerity, to pray the prayer, "God be merciful to me a Christian!" This is a prayer not a few can offer and should offer to the prayer-hearing God. Christians need mercy as well as those who have not as yet given themselves to the Lord.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.

A NEW HEAVEN AND EARTH.

Monday—Rev. 21, 1-14.

It is good to meditate at times on immortality and heaven; good to ponder these glowing chapters of the Revelation; good to look forward to the eternity in which the first things, the dark things, the sad things, shall have passed for ever and ever away.

Thus I know that my beloved dead, who left me trusting in Jesus, have not fell into an endless and unbreakable sleep. They live just now unto God. They will live by and by with God, body and soul linked together once more; and He shall wipe away every tear from their eyes.

And thus I am convinced that I too, if my hope is in Christ, can never be permitted to sink into nothingness.

It is God's will that His children should be with Him in His heavenly house. Therefore let me lift up the head; the hour of redemption draws nigh.

Tuesday—Rev. 21, 15-27.

In the last city, the city of God, all will be worshippers. The inhabitants will look up and will recognize God's existence, His government, His watchfulness, His faithfulness, His grace. They will breathe continually the atmosphere of the spiritual, the divine, the infinite, the eternal. Skepticism, and unbelief, and forgetfulness of Father and Son and Holy Ghost, will be gone.

In the last city, the city of God, all will be brothers. It will be a society in which there is a new spirit and a new law—the law and the spirit of love. Antagonisms, burdens, tears, will have vanished; selfishness and greed will be unknown; the sorrow which man causes man will never be felt. It is a picture surpassing fable; but it is true.

In the last city, the city of God, all will be saints. Its foundations are precious stones, sapphire and sardonyx and amethyst and emerald, the qualities which are pure and just and Christlike.

Am I one of the heirs of God's city? Am I striving to make others its citizens too?

Wednesday—Rev. 22, 1-9.

If I am to see His face there, I must be sure that I have seen it here. If His name is to be on my forehead ere long, it must be in my innermost soul just now!

It is my best hope for many who have been taken away from earth that they have been "saved so as through fire." So feeble and flickering was the lamp of grace, so tentative the hold on the great verities of the gospel, so faltering the testimony of the conduct for Christ, that the abundant entrance is utterly wanting. For these men and women I can only trust, dimly, wistfully, that they have reached the throne in some scanty and furtive and precarious way.

But for myself let me rest in nothing but the bright hope and the sure promise. Let me know in whom I have believed. Let God and the Lamb be my supreme portion here, in this present time. So, at last, I shall have nothing more to do but to commit my departing soul into the hands of my Lord Jesus, strong and tender hands which will not let the soul slip from their embrace. Yes, I would leave nothing on the conscience, nothing in the life, to be an anxiety in the hour of death.

Thursday—Rev. 22, 10-21.

"Blessed are they that keep washing their robes, that they may have the right to come to the tree of life." So my Christian history is to be a perpetual washing of my robes.

There is the washing for pardon; that should be repeated every day. Nothing can be more dangerous than to fall into the habit of letting any committed sin pass in silence. There is to be no morbid self-scrutiny indeed. But yet the tablets of memory and the tablets of conscience must be cleansed every evening. And I can do this in one way only, by what the Bible calls "the blood of the Lamb"—by the application of my Savior's atonement in earnest faith to my individual heart and soul.

And there is to be the washing for purity; that will follow and result from the other. When I see that the clouds and stains are removed my whole life is made holier and better.

And this is the road by which I travel to Paradise with its Tree of Life.

Friday—Isaiah, 65, 17-25.

"The child shall die a hundred years old"—the verse is a puzzling one. But none the less it is a true one.

For, however many my years are, I may continue, in the best and most desirable sense, a little child. The more Christlike men and women become, the nearer they grow to absolute childlikeness. It is with them as it is with the ripe corn in the autumn; the corn bends its head down again to the ground out of which it sprang in the spring. Just so the saints of God, in their maturity, in their noblest and wisest and heavenliest estate here on earth, resemble most the children—resemble them in their trustfulness and teachableness and lowliness. Though I should be a hundred years old, I can covet and possess no sweeter and wholesomer heart than the child's heart.

Saturday—Rev. 7, 9-17.

Professor Milligan says that the Apocalypse is the revelation, in the case of the members of Christ's body, of the three ideas which St. John had already beheld exemplified in Christ himself—the ideas of conflict, of preservation, and of triumph.

There is conflict. I read of armies and battles, of the bow and the sword and the warhorse, of mighty struggles between light and darkness. The Christianity of these chapters conducts me through tears and blood, through suffering and the cross.

But there is preservation, too. Out of the great tribulation the soldiers come. The servants of Jesus are protected by Him who walks among the seven golden candlesticks.

And there is triumph at the close. "Therefore are they before the throne of God, and He that sitteth on the throne shall spread His tabernacle over them." Death and Hades and Satan are cast into the lake that burns with fire. But the saints—and may I be of them—shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

Sunday—Rev. 20, 11-15.

This vision of all the dead come to life once more—how solemn it is, how impressive, how awful! I shall stand before that great white throne, to be judged according to my works. And how shall I fare at His bar from whose face the earth and the heaven flee away?

It will all depend on my relationship to Him now.

Is it a relationship of distrust and opposition? Or is it a relationship of faith and obedience and love?

In the one case, the future is summed up in that word of inexpressible sorrow and untold gloom—"the second death." I may not, cannot meanwhile, penetrate into such a horror of great darkness. May the very thought of it impel me to flee from the terrible reality to the Savior who will in no wise cast me out. Then over me the storm will never break.

But, in the other case, the future is "the life which is life indeed." The life of happiest thralldom; for "His bondmen shall do Him service." The life of undimmed and unbroken vision; for "they shall see His face." The life of perfect likeness; for "His name shall be on their foreheads." The life of noblest royalty; for "they shall reign for ever and ever."

Ah, Lord, let this life be mine.

EXPOSITORY HINTS.

THE SPIRIT.

Prof. R. R. Lloyd.

"Then Jesus was led up into the wilderness by the spirit." (Mt. 4:1.)

The phrase "the Spirit" is not a proper name of the spirit that descended upon the Savior. It is, however, a sample of the usual mode of referring to an object that has already been introduced to the reader. When an object is first presented to his attention its normal descriptive epithet is used ("a spirit of God"). The second reference to it usually omits the modifying epithets ("of God") and in their place it uses the definite article ("the"). This usage may be seen in 12:28 ("if I in a spirit of God") and 12:31 ("but the blasphemy of the spirit").

This epithet ("the spirit") is used in 5:3 of the spirit of any believer. ("Happy are the poor in respect to the spirit.")

In 26:41 it denotes the individual spirit of each of the eleven apostles ("the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak") and in 27:50 it designates the human spirit of Jesus ("But Jesus gave up the spirit"). We now clearly see that this phrase is used three times of the human spirit and once of a spirit that was given by God to Jesus. The reader will observe that Matthew does not give us any information respecting the relation of the human spirit of Jesus to the spirit which descended upon Him at His baptism. We would like to know what became of this spirit. Had he left Jesus before he gave up his human spirit (Mt. 27:50; Mt. 15:37)? When he came Jesus already possessed a human spirit. Did the other leave him before Jesus cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me" (Mt. 27:46; Mk. 15:34)? Was the departure of this spirit "in" whose power Jesus preached (Mt. 12:17-21; Lk. 4:18-19) and cast out demons (Mt. 12:28; Lk. 11:20) the occasion of his uttering this great cry? To his enemies He seemed another Samson shorn of his power. They reviled Him as one who had possessed power and had lost it. ("Others he saved, himself he cannot save." "Let him descend from the cross and we will believe upon him.") Were his arrest and crucifixion made possible by this departure? And is Jesus represented by Matthew and Mark as believing that the absence of this spirit is the evidence that God had "forsaken" him? There are many things in their narratives that might favor this. The reader will recall the fact that only these two evangelists record this cry; hence it is unscholarly to interpret their records by the data peculiar to John or to Luke. John has some thoughts which make it difficult to harmonize his narrative of the last days of Jesus with those of Matthew and Mark. This difficulty is no doubt due to the meagerness of our information rather than to any inherent imperfection in the narrative.

PLEASANTRIES.

Professor — met an individual of weak intellect. "Pray," said the scholar, "how long can a person live without brains?" "I dinna ken," replied Wull, scratching his head; "how auld are ye yoursel'?"

"Pretty children you are for a minister to have!" reprovingly exclaimed a Somerville minister to his children, who were misbehaving at the table; and four-year-old Dorothy spoke up, "Better change your business, pa."

"Ah," sighed the poet, "I shall be satisfied if I can produce but one line that will make the world better." "Say," said the poet's wife, "just come back here and try your hand at stringing this clothesline, will you?" —Richmond Times.

"Here, my little fellow," said a benevolent old gentleman to a weeping boy, "I wouldn't cry that way if I were you." "How did you cry when you were a little boy?" asked the weeper during a temporary cessation of tears.

Perry Patetic (in the road): "Why don't you go in? De dog's all right. Don't you see him waggin' his tail?" Wayworn Watson (at the gate): "Yes, an' he's growlin' at the same time. I don't know which end to believe."

The Unenlightened Goat.—"Oh, my dear daughter" (to a little girl of six), "you should not be frightened and run from the goat. Don't you know you are a Christian Scientist?" "But, mamma" (excitedly), "the billy goat don't know it."

Lawyer.—Well, aunty, what can I do for you?" Aunt Ebony.—"I want a deevo'ce from ma husban'." "What has he been doing?" "Doin'?' Why, he done got relig'n, an' we ain't had a chicken on-de table foh a month."—New York Weekly.

It is reported that Pope Gregory XVI. offered his snuff-box to a cardinal, who declined it, saying, "No, your Holiness, I have not that vice," to which the Pope replied, in a thoroughly human way, "If it had been a vice you would have had it."

Madge Got Things Twisted.—The pastor of a certain church in Sixteenth street, on leaving his study, which is in the rear of the church, one day last week, saw a little girl friend of his talking to a stranger. "What was that man saying to you, Madge?" he asked, as he came up to her. "Oh," said she, "he just wanted to know if Dr. C. wasn't the preacher of this church." "And what did you tell him?" asked the pastor. The little girl drew herself up with an air of great pride. "I told him," she answered with dignity, "that you was the present incumbrance."—Washington Post.

BOOKS...

"Reconstruction in Theology." By Henry Churchill King, Professor in Oberlin Theological Seminary, New York. The Macmillan Company. This is a very bright and attractive statement of the case written with excellent judgment and good taste. We needed to have from one who is in the main sympathetic towards historic evangelicism an account of the circumstances in which evangelical theology finds herself today—and no one has faced the task as bravely and successfully as Professor King. In the first part our author is careful to describe the existing need for what he calls "reconstruction in theology." Here he is very careful to make it clear that it is not mere radicals or rationalists that feel this need, but practically all earnest Christian men who are aware of the changed intellectual viewpoint of our day. He goes on to summarize these changes for us and to account for them in the light of science, philosophy and historical investigation. This leads Professor King to discuss miracles, evolution, higher criticism, the doctrine of Scripture, on all of which his language is cautious and his tone judicial. The last hundred pages or so are concerned with the one idea which seems to have most influenced Professor King's own mind, and from whose influence he expects most for theology. This is the "interpretation of all strictly theological problems in terms of personal relations." That evolution cannot explain personality is of course affirmed; and our author very carefully explains the guiding principles under which "personal relations" must be followed into all the theological mysteries.

In the last part of this discussion the hazardous task of applying this idea is attempted. The ideal of human relations to God is shown to be "friendship." This is not a strong part of the book, though very carefully worked out. Then the person of Christ is approached again with this guiding thread in hand. Here it becomes clear to the student of Professor King's very earnest pages that he has learned much, and much of the very best, from the followers of Ritchl. Their magnificent apologetic method he has made his very own, as the frequent apt quotations from Hermann abundantly show. But it is surprising to see where he stops. It is impossible to assume that our author has here given us his full statement of the person of Christ. That could only be given in connection with a doctrine of sin and atonement. We hope that Dr. King will some day show us how his very fruitful conception of personal relations really works out into an evangelical statement even of the person of Christ. Especially do we hope that he will show us what forensic relations are if they are not personal, and how personal relations between man and God in Christ can be described for theology without what is nicknamed "metaphysics."

The fact is that a good many are trying to persuade us that an ethical interpretation of the person of Christ is possible without a so-called metaphysical interpretation. We believe that the doctrine of personality is metaphysical, and that we cannot affirm ethical personal relations except on the basis of prior personal relations which are named metaphysical. We expect one who is at once a philosopher and an exegete,—alas! not a common combination in our country—as Dr. King is, to work through this problem for us.

"The Mormon Monster, or the Story of Mormonism, Embracing the History of Mormonism; Mormonism as a Religious System; Mormonism as a Social System; Mormonism as a Political System; With a Full Discussion of the Subject of Polygamy," is the complete title of a portly volume of 372 pages by Edgar E. Folk, A. M., D. D., and published by Fleming H. Revell Co. It is a perfect storehouse of information regarding the Mormon problem. While unsparing in its exposure of the evils of Mormonism it is singularly free from rancor or prejudice. The author of necessity occupies the position of a prosecuting attorney, but he evidently tries to be fair to the accused. What the accused would say on this point is another matter. Twenty-eight illustrations lend interest to the book. The cover is "decorated" with a frightful looking octopus.

"The World Nearing Its Final Catastrophe," written by John Williams, and published by F. W. Thorp, Whiting, Ia., is a pamphlet of 24 pages in which is sounded a clarion note of warning to this present evil age. One section is entitled "The Sovereignty of Satan." We would have liked the pamphlet better had its note been the Sovereignty of Christ; but despite its rather gloomy outlook it is earnest and well meant, and has in it many good and useful thoughts.

"The Old Evangel and the New Evangelism," by Charles Aubrey Eaton, Fleming H. Revell Co., is a passionate plea for a return to the old paths. Every page glows with zeal. The writer feels upon him the burden of the Lord to testify against a worldly and slumbering church. The background of his picture is too dark, and the spark of hope which is kindled in the first chapter on "The Church Expectant" soon fades out. This is the kind of book which one dislikes to criticise—for it is a heart book, and there are in it many helpful and quickening thoughts—especially along the line of "the need of a revival"; but when "the revival we need" is discussed the treatment is disappointing. Too little regard is paid to the changed conditions of thought and life. The distinction seems to be forgotten between preaching the old evangel with the old accent, and preaching it with a new accent. We can no more go back to the old forms of statement than we can press the oak back into the acorn. Before the old evangel can bring the new evangelism it must be translated into the terms of the present. But if the zeal of God which the writer displays be not always according to knowledge, the zeal itself is a good thing, and it will pay to read the book in order to experience something of its contagiousness.

"The Ten Commandments," by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan—Fleming H. Revell Co.—is a series of studies which were written at the request of D. L. Moody. And they were well worth the writing and printing. They are pungent and searching, and grapple with the conscience. What they lack in largeness of sweep they make up for in intensity of feeling. They contain occasional strained and fanciful interpretations of Scripture, but in the main the interpretations given get to the heart of the matter. Often there are flashes of spiritual illumination which reveal hidden depths of meaning in familiar texts. No one can read and ponder these studies without spiritual profit.

True Gentleman.

"I beg your pardon!" and with a smile and touch of his hat, Harry Edmon handed to an old man, against whom he had accidentally stumbled, the cane which he had knocked from his hand. "I hope I did not hurt you."

"Not a bit," said the old man. "Boys will be boys."

"I am glad to hear it," and lifting his hat again, Harry turned to join his playmates.

"What do you raise your hat to that old fellow for?" asked Charley Gray. "He is old Giles, the huckster."

"That makes no difference, said Harry. "The question is not whether he is a gentleman, but whether I am one; and no true gentleman will be less polite to a man because he wears a shabby coat or hawks vegetables through the streets."—A True Republic.

If fate has denied to any woman a home, a husband and a baby, let her take up art, or medicine, or blacksmithing, as she chooses, and try sincerely to make the best out of her life that she can. But to claim that these are nobler occupations than her own craft—the high calling of wifehood and motherhood—is the most shallow and dangerous of cant.—Ladies' Home Journal.

General Church News

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

The district rally of the West Side Baptist Young People's Union at the Fourth Church was not so largely attended as some have been, but a high spiritual tone characterized the meeting. "Co-operation, the Need of the Hour," was the theme, addresses being made by Dr. J. K. Wheeler, Rev. Messrs. C. H. Snashall, W. S. Abernathy and H. E. Norton.

The Baptist and Presbyterian ministers and their friends had their ninth annual excursion July 2 on the steamship "Christopher Columbus." The topic of the program on the outward bound trip was "The American Republic in the Twentieth Century."

Dr. J. H. Hollingsworth has accepted a call to the Columbia Church, Ohio, and is on the field. The Columbia Church dedicated a $16,000 edifice last summer and has a fine parsonage.

Dr. D. B. Purinton has resigned the presidency of Denison University to accept that of the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown.

July 1 the Methodist and Congregational ministers and their families and friends went to Milwaukee on the "Christopher Columbus."

Dr. C. R. Henderson of the University of Chicago, and Mrs. Henderson, sailed for Bremen June 25. They hope, after a restful voyage, to settle at Leipzig for six months' study.

The Tenth Presbyterian Church, the Rev. D. E. Long, pastor, continues its record of accessions, sixteen having recently been received to membership.

The Rev. Henry Alfred Duboc, priest-in-charge of St. John's mission, died suddenly, after a very brief illness, in St. Luke's hospital, June 11. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Coxe in 1873 and priest by Bishop Watson in 1890. He was sometime rector of St. Philip's and Trinity churches, Trenton, Mo.

The Church of the Covenant has engaged the Rev. W. E. Biederwolf to preach during the summer absence of the pastor, the Rev. Dr. W. S. P. Bryan, beginning July 7. Mr. Biederwolf preached during the special services conducted in March by the north side group of churches, after which more than one hundred and fifty persons united with these churches. The Church of the Covenant has received about sixty-five persons into membership in the past two months, and by a generous gift has been enabled to extinguish the last remaining indebtedness contracted in the erection of the church twelve years ago.

The Disciples Divinity House, University of Chicago, has received $5,000 from Mrs. Ellen M. Thomas, of Frankfort, Ky., for the endowment fund to be known as the "Ellen M. Thomas Endowment Fund."

The First Methodist Church at Riverside was dedicated June 30. It is a frame structure of attractive design and cost $7,000. Rev. F. C. Taylor is the pastor.

Rev. Dr. William Fawcett in his last will, made at Albert Lea, Minn., where he died suddenly while on his way to Winnipeg, Canada, left $5,000 to the Methodist worn-out preachers' fund and $1,000 to Upper Iowa University at Fayette, Ia.

The North Shore Congregational church will occupy one of the finest locations on the Sheridan Road. Nearly $18,000 has now been raised and ground for the new building will be broken next fall.

Secretary A. N. Hitchcock has lately received for the American Board of Foreign Missions (Congregational) a fine property in Chicago valued at $150,000, subject to an annuity which, however, by the average of the last seven years will be fully covered by the income.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of Grace M. E. church of Kensington the name of the church was changed to St. Stephen M. E. church of Chicago. This step was taken because of the confusion arising from two Methodist churches in Chicago bearing the name Grace.

The receipts of the treasurer of St. Peter's parish last year, $22,000, include a present of $5,000 from Mrs. Potter as the nucleus of an endowment fund. It is somewhat remarkable that this fifteen-year-old parish has the largest Sunday school in the Chicago diocese, with eleven officers, sixty-three teachers and 710 enrolled pupils, an average attendance of 80 per cent, and a Lenten offering of $251.

At the South Park Avenue M. E. church the Ladies' Aid Society has just liquidated a floating indebtedness of $3,500. The current expenses of this church are met each month and no deficit is expected at the close of the conference year. The net increase in the membership has been about seventy-five and benevolent collections are up to requirements. At its last session the official board extended to the pastor, Rev. Dr. Henry Irving Rasmus, a vacation of six weeks, which he expects to spend on the Pacific coast and in attendance at the Epworth League convention.

Rev. Arthur J. Francis, pastor of the Congregational church is south recovering from a prolonged illness. He is to have two months' leave of absence for a trip to England.

A Sunday school building in memory of Sidney Evans, son of Henry J. Evans, is to be erected by the Warren Avenue Congregational church. Mr. Evans has given the church $10,000 toward the building, which is to cost $17,000. The site of the Sunday school structure will be west of the church. Work will be begun early next month.

The new Church of the Good Shepherd, Lawndale avenue and Twenty-fourth street, was formally opened for worship June 30. The Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, bishop coadjutor of the Episcopal diocese of Chicago, preached the sermon in the morning. The church is built of vitrified brick and after the Gothic style of architecture. It has a seating capacity of 500 and cost $20,000. Work on the structure was begun a year ago.

Summer work at the Moody Bible Institute is under full headway. The special feature for July and August will be the 11 o'clock lectures from Tuesday to Friday of each week by Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., of Boston, on the Old Testament major prophets. These lectures are expository, dealing not with questions of authorship, but with the text itself. Music work, both vocal and instrumental, always emphasized by Mr. Moody and under the general charge of Prof. D. B. Towner, will be conducted by a corps of three teachers.

Official announcement has been made of the gift of $1,000,000 to the People's Church of America for the purpose of extending religious work throughout the country along the lines followed by Dr. H. W. Thomas in Chicago. One of the requirements of the donor was that taxes be paid by the People's church the same as secular institutions. The plan is to establish preaching services in the opera-houses and theaters of the cities, to have services under the care of a settled minister and to have as occasion may offer the great preachers of the different denominations give sermons; and when it is best, or possible, to organize permanent or independent People's churches; not to weaken, but by increasing the general religious interest, to help all the churches. It is said that it will not be the purpose to antagonize the old theology, but to teach the larger and better faith and hope of the new for those who cannot accept the old. The executive committee is composed of George W. Bowman, John F. Eberhardt and Jenkin Lloyd Jones.

The Kedzie Avenue Norwegian-Danish Methodist Episcopal church was dedicated June 23.

Rev. Washington Adams Nichols, for thirty-seven years a resident of Lake Forest and one of the oldest Congregational ministers in the United States, died June 25, in the hospital, aged ninety-three. He was a graduate of Amherst College and Andover Theological Seminary, and in 1885 became pastor of the First Congregational church of Chicago. Later he opened a school for boys in Lake Forest.

During Dr. F. A. Noble's pastorate of Union Park Congregational church he received into the church 2,400 persons and dismissed about the same number. It had 600 members when he came to it. He leaves it with 800. He has married nearly 1,000 couples. When Dr. Noble assumed charge the church was burdened with a $55,200 debt. During the twenty-two years of his pastorate the average contribution of the church has been $30,000 a year for current expenses and benevolences, or $660,000 for the whole time. In 1893 the church gave $33,000 for benevolences alone. Today there is not a cent of indebtedness standing against the church. Two missions have been established.

Baptist.

During the past twenty years the Baptists in Iowa have increased their membership nearly 50 per cent. They have added three associations and thirty-three churches to their number, and the value of their church property has about doubled.

The Mayfield Sanitarium is rejoicing over the payment of its debt of $18,200. A praise service was held by the Baptists of St. Louis June 17, when the mortgage notes were burned.

Rev. R. H. Kerfoot, D. D., corresponding secretary of the Home Mission Board, died June 23 at his home in Atlanta, Ga. He gave up his professorship in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville to serve the Board of Missions.

At the University of North Carolina, an institution 112 years old, the graduates march to the chapel on commencement day at 9:30 a. m. and hold a half hour's service of prayer and consecration. An unique feature at this university is the presentation of a bible with the diploma to each graduate. Governor Aycock, who is a Baptist, presented them this year. No wine or intoxicant of any kind is served at either the president's reception or the alumni lunch. According to the law, no liquor can be sold within four miles of the university.

A somewhat unusual and unique service was enjoyed in the First church, Racine, Wis., Sunday evening, June 2. Rev. D. B. Cheney baptized ten men, among the number were two brothers and a father and two sons. A large number of men were present at the service, and at the close of the sermon several requested prayer for themselves. Several other young men are awaiting baptism. June 2 Pastor Cheney entered upon the nineteenth year of his ministry.

Rev. A. H. Dent of Carroll, Iowa, has accepted the call of the First church of Osceola, Mo., and began his work there June 16.

The First church of Ogden, Utah, has just celebrated its twentieth anniversary. Over 500 persons have been baptized in it, and as many more received by letter. It has many pastors, but has never been long without one. Rev. W. G. Evans is now closing his third year's pastorate with this church, the influence of which has been marked in the city's growth because of its steadfastness to principles and the positive character of its leading members.

The First church, Grand Forks, N. D., has been reaching a large number of young men during the past six months; five were baptized during May. Rev. J. F. Mills and his wife have made much personal effort to get in touch with the young people at the university.

There are now twenty-six organized Baptist churches in New Mexico with an approximate membership of 1,000. The Home Mission Society has spent $100,000 in New Mexico. There is scarcely a self-supporting church there yet, but as with other frontier states, the bread cast upon the waters will return an hundred-fold. The Mexicans are very ready to accept the truth. Three Baptist churches are now building houses of worship.

A revival meeting at Silver City, N. M., has resulted in about twenty-five additions to the church membership.

Clouderoft church, New Mexico, is probably one of the highest in the world, being at an elevation of 9,000 feet. The church has bought and paid for two lots and is raising money for a new building.

Rev. James L. Ryan has been with the church at Fairbury, Ill., one year, has baptized twenty-one persons, and thirty new members have been added to the church.

Congregational.

Rev. James G. Merrill, D. D., has been chosen to succeed Dr. Cravath as president of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

Commencement at Beloit College was notable for two announcements: The addition to the endowment fund of $350,000, of which Dr. D. K. Pearsons said, "No college ever did such quick work in my day;" and President Eaton's decision to stay with the college, which was received with universal joy. He is to have a year's leave of absence in Europe.

The church at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., has just completed its new edifice at a cost of nearly $40,000. Of this all but $8,000 have been raised. It is hoped to have the church free of debt before its dedication in August. It is a very attractive building.

The one hundred and seventy-fifth year of the church at Merrimac, Mass., was completed May 19, when the new pastor, Rev. James W. Flagg, was installed. The church has 400 members. Over 300 have been added to it during the last three pastorates covering a period of twenty-five years.

After an active ministry of thirty-five years, Dr. James G. Vose retires from the pastorate of Beneficent church, Providence, R. I., on the installation of his successor, Rev. Asbury E. Krom.

The Education Society has elected Rev. E. S. Tead to the secretaryship vacated by the election of Rev. C. O. Day to the presidency of Andover Seminary. He has been pastor at Prospect Hill, Somerville, Mass., for seventeen years and an active director of the American Missionary Association for several years.

Joseph Cook, the well-known lecturer and orator, has entered into rest. He died at Ticonderoga, N. Y., where he was born. He studied theology for four years at Andover Seminary and was licensed to preach, but was never ordained.

Carleton College closes its year with $150,000 added to its endowment. President Strong desires the trustees to find a successor for the presidency, though he will retain it until such search is satisfactorily concluded. Prof. A. H. Pearson, for more than fifteen years connected with the college, has resigned and taken up missionary work at Guadalajara, Mexico.

Minnesota Congregationalists have raised $7,000 for home missions during the current year. A large part of this, however, went to pay the debt of the National Home Missionary Society.

The First church of Walla Walla, Rev. Austin Rice, pastor, supports a home missionary worker in its own country and stands ready to help by personal work wherever needed. By such means three church buildings have been erected outside of the city limits, two other churches have been organized and are worshiping in school houses, and six Sunday schools at other points have been maintained for various periods. The first church has constructed for its own use a beautiful $10,000 edifice.

The trustees of the Bible Normal College have decided to transfer its location from Springfield, Mass., to Hartford, Conn., so that it may be near the Hartford Seminary, and each institution, while retaining its individuality and management share in the advantages of the other's equipment. The Bible Normal College is now under the presidency of Rev. David Allen Reed and has five university trained instructors in bible study, pedagogics and psychology, practical Sunday school work and missions.

The Andover anniversaries had some notable features this year. The necrology presented at the alumni meeting included no less than thirty-three names, beginning with Dr. Elias Riggs of the class of 1832, the veteran missionary, and ending with a member of last year's class, Mr. Flood. A bronze tablet of Prof. Park was presented and placed in the seminary chapel. Of the graduating class two are under appointment for Turkey and Japan and two for home missionary service in Nebraska and Florida. The Society of Inquiry celebrated its nineteenth anniversary; over 200 of its members have become missionaries.

The new Congregational church building at Nome, Alaska, has been opened, and is very satisfactory. The volunteer labor has been given so freely that it has saved many hundreds of dollars. On several occasions men going past on the street have stopped and said, "I'll work," and have fallen into line for a hard day's labor.

A gift of $400 for the Home Missionary Society was made recently by a member of the church at Morris, Ill., on the pastor's solicitation, and another gift of like amount for the American Missionary Association. Rev. T. S. Oadams, pastor of this church, delivered an illustrated lecture on "Bonnie, Scotland" June 20, and thereby raised $100 for a widow and five children of the church.

The church at Wilton, Conn., celebrated its one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary June 12. At roll call all but eleven of the 176 members responded.

The District.

A summer institute lasting nearly three weeks, Aug. 5-24, will be held at Bethany, Neb., under the auspices of the Nebraska Christian Ministerial Association. Rev. C. A. Young of Chicago will lecture twice daily throughout the session, giving studies in the major and minor prophets. W. P. Aylesworth, chancellor of Cotner University, will conduct a class in homiletics and pastoral theology, and there will be special lectures by Rev. Messrs. Sumner T. Martin, L. A. Husong, F. W. Emerson, L. P. Bush, J. W. Hilton, W. T. Hilton, D. A. Wickizer, Prof. Alvin Evans and others.

Rev. A. B. Houze of Riverside, Cal., has accepted a call to the church at Little Flat Rock, Ind., where he was pastor three years before going to California. During his two years' ministry at Riverside 125 have been added to the church and missionary offerings increased.

The District Christian Woman's Board of Missions convention held Friday, June 21st, at the West End church, St. Louis, was well attended and well managed. There are eleven auxiliaries in the city, with a total membership of 304. All of them maintain Junior Mission Bands, circulate the Missionary Tidings, and seek to leaven the churches with missionary zeal and knowledge.

Rev. O. A. Bartholomew has accepted the work of city superintendent of missions in St. Louis and will enter on his new duties as soon as the West End church can be supplied with a pastor in his place.

In several places in Texas meetings are being held with large attendance, resulting in many additions to the churches. At Greenville, ninety; Sherman, forty-one; Gainesville, fifty, and Waxacachie almost a hundred.

The fourth annual camp meeting of Northwest Texas begins July 25 at Seymour and will continue eleven days.

In Carter county, Kentucky, a twentieth century movement has been made for mission work. A joint stock company, to evangelize the country, has been formed, shares being fixed at $5 each. Over ten shares have already been subscribed.

Benjamin L. Smith, corresponding secretary, reports 4,500 additions to the various mission churches this year and forty new churches organized.

The West Jefferson Street church, Fort Wayne, Ind., has just paid off $5,700 of its indebtedness.

A meeting held at Lewisville, Minn., resulted in thirty-eight confessions and baptisms.

At Bowling Green, Ky., the year ending June 1 showed a record of ninety-nine additions during the year, sixty-five by confessions; $1,000 expended for repairs; over $3,000 given to missions and benevolences; all this above running expenses. A $600 lecture course was successful. A woman's missionary society of eighty members; three C. S. societies; three children supported in India; a young people's bible class well attended; good Sunday school and prayer meeting.

Des Moines churches are stirring. The Central church has raised the pastor's salary $600. The pastor of University Place church received from his congregation a horse and buggy and road cart, and is to have an assistant pastor. The East Side church paid off a $1,200 debt and raised the pastor's salary $200.

The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions convened at Asheville, N. C., June 6-12. For the work in Korea, where a new missionary is to be sent, $4,700 was appropriated. Four women are already working there. It was a thrilling sight to see twelve women on the platform, all going out for the first time to missionary work—four to China, three to Brazil, two to Mexico, two to Cuba and one to Korea. This year shows the largest offerings yet—$118,809.67, $40,000 of which is to be used in the schools abroad.

In connection with the forty-sixth annual commencement of Butler College were held the inaugural exercises of the Bona Thompson Library building. Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Thompson having presented to the college a beautiful triangular lot, 206 feet on each side, will erect upon it a stone, fire-proof library building as a memorial to the deceased daughter, who was a member of the class of '97.

At Franklin, Ind., an appeal has been made for a new church building and $15,000 was pledged June 9. A $20,000 building will be erected in a more central location.

Meetings lasting for a month at the Morris Street church, Indianapolis, have brought sixty-five additions to that church and twenty-six new members into the Christian Endeavor Society.

The camp meeting at Dayton, Wash., ended June 17, after a ten days' session. The average attendance every evening was 500 to 600 and 1,500 on Sunday. Most of the preaching was by Rev. Mr. Eshelman of Tacoma, formerly state senator. Twenty-two additions to the church are reported.

Episcopal.

The diocese of Massachusetts is to be divided on condition that a fund of $100,000 is presented to the western half for the endowment of the bishopric. Half of this sum is already pledged.

The corner-stone of the parish house of Grace church, Orange, N. J., was laid June 17, by the bishop of the diocese of Newark, with impressive ceremonies. It is being erected by Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Broome in memory of their daughter and will be known as the "Alice Broome Memorial. The building will be 100 feet long and thirty-six feet wide and will be devoted to the work of the Sunday school and of the missionary and charitable societies of the parish.

The Rev. Preston G. Nash, secretary of the Diocesan Missionary Society and editor of "Our Diocesan Work," died at Richmond, Va., June 10. He was ordained deacon in 1882 and priest in 1883, by Bishop Whittle. He became rector of Christ church, Richmond, in 1891. For four years he had charge of the mission chapel of St. Paul's church, Richmond.

Trinity church, Irvington, N. J., was consecrated June 29, the fifteenth anniversary of the ordination to the ### FOOD AND WEATHER.

Temperature Increased or Reduced by Food.

The old army ration for the tropics has been very sharply criticised for the reason that it consists of articles of food that any person even slightly acquainted with the elements of food knows is not adapted to the needs of the human system in hot weather. Nature shows forth in the selection of food by inhabitants of various countries; for instance, the Esquimaux in a cold climate selects heavy, carbonaceous foods, tallow, bacon and such; while the Hindoo and inhabitants of hot countries turn to the cereals for sustenance.

We should follow this hint of nature, and particularly in hot weather should avoid much butter, meat or any of that class of food. Perhaps a little meat once a day is not amiss, even in hot weather, but the breakfast and luncheon should be made of fruit, one or two slices of entire wheat bread and some Grape-Nuts and cream. Grape-Nuts are mentioned because they furnish the ideal cereal food in a most palatable and delicious form, in addition to which, they are ready cooked and require no attention whatever from the cook.

A person can pass through weather that may be intensely hot, in a comfortable manner, if the food be properly selected, and the above suggestions can be put into practice with most excellent results.

priesthood of the venerable rector of the parish, the Rev. William T. Webbe, D. D.

The Rev. Willis H. Barris, D. D., died at his home in Davenport, Iowa, June 10, aged eighty-three years. He was graduated from Allegheny College in 1839 and from the General Theological Seminary in 1850. He was settled at Iowa City and at Burlington, Iowa, and in 1866 became professor in the theological department of Griswold College, holding the position until the closing of the college.

The Rev. John Adams Jerome died at his home in Philadelphia June 18. On Sunday, June 16, he officiated morning and evening at St. James' church of Kingsessing. He was born in Boston, Dec. 3, 1824; graduated from the Alexandria Seminary in 1851. During the years of his ministry Mr. Jerome had many charges in the New England and Middle states, and was for three years during the civil war chaplain in the U. S. A., stationed at the Fairfax Seminary hospital. About twelve years ago he became assistant secretary of the Evangelical Educational Society and faithfully performed his duties to the last days before his death.

The endowment of St. Ann's church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has now reached the sum of $68,707.10. An offering of $10,000 has lately been received from an unnamed donor.

The Bishop Coxe Memorial Hall was dedicated June 18 at Geneva, N. Y. It is for the use of Hobart College.

There are now seven colored priests and one deacon at work among the colored people in the diocese of Washington, D. C., with two deaconesses from the New York Training School.

Lutheran.

A conference of the Norwegian United Free church and the synod of the Norwegian Lutheran synod was unable to reach a satisfactory basis of agreement on doctrinal matters. According to Prof. Schmidt, the representatives of the United church held "divine grace to be conditional," while those representing the synod, on the other hand, emphasized "God's promises of absolute, unconditional grace."

The Evangelical Lutheran synod of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan and portions of Minnesota and Nebraska opened June 19 at Winona, Minn. The annual report of President Von Rohr showed prosperous growth during the past year. Not only without exception had every congregation in the synod grown in membership, but twenty-five new churches had been formed and the ministry increased by fifteen. Mr. Von Rohr reported a total of 143 students in the Northwestern University at Watertown, Wis., and thirty-five in the Theological Seminary at Milwaukee. The synod was reported to be doing a good work among the Arizona Indians, where three missionaries are in the field. The schools at San Carlos and Fort Apache are regularly attended by a great number of Indian children. Much missionary effort has been put forth in Wisconsin and Northern Michigan by twenty-one missionaries. In the South negro schools have been organized and eighteen missionaries are constantly employed. The debt on the institutions of the synod has been reduced from $46,000 to $20,000. The book concern in Milwaukee is solidly established, and the synodical paper, the Gemeindeblatt, has a circulation of 10,000. The present number in the ministry in the synod includes 218 ministers and professors and 90 male teachers in the parochial schools. The number of congregations is 340.

The Minnesota district of the Norwegian Evangelical Church of America met in synod at Twin Valley June 22. The district has 109 pastors, 407 congregations and numbers in all 54,200 souls, of which some over 30,000 are communicant members. Seven churches have been dedicated during the past year and twelve new ministers installed.

Methodist.

The church at Mattoon, Ill., erected in 1872 has been entirely destroyed by fire. It was valued at $10,000, but had an insurance of $5,500. A new church will be erected at a cost of $30,000.

There will be about 600 hymns instead of 1,100 in the new Methodist hymnal now being prepared by Matthew Simpson, son of Bishop Simpson; Prof. C. T. Winchester of Wesleyan University, Middletown; Prof. C. M. Stuart of the Northwestern University, and others.

The new church at Brazil, Ind., costing $40,000, was dedicated June 23. Two thousand people were in attendance, many coming from Terre Haute and other neighboring cities and towns. The amount due on the building was readily raised by subscription.

An attempt was made to blow up the First Methodist Church at Manhattan, Kan., June 22. It is believed to be spite against the pastor, Rev. J. M. Miller, who was elected mayor last spring and who secured the conviction and imprisonment of six men who kept saloon joints.

Rev. John Edwards has withdrawn from the M. E. Church, resigning his charge of Snyder Avenue Church, Philadelphia, and intends to accept a pastorate in the Reformed Episcopal Church.

Presbyterian.

The Winona Assembly and Summer School opened June 30. From that date to August 9 this school will offer forty-eight courses, presided over by twenty-two instructors from eighteen universities.

The Presbyterians have thirty-nine missionaries in Mexico, 150 congregations, nearly 5,000 church members and upwards of 10,000 adherents. The mission press, located in the City of Mexico, issued last year three and a half million pages of Bible literature. A theological seminary has been established in the suburbs of the capital, Mr. W. B. Jacobs of Chicago having presented it with a site, two acres in extent.

Rev. R. B. Taylor has just welcomed another large accession to the First Church, San Diego, Cal., thirty in all, thirteen of them by confession of faith. This makes a total addition of eighty-six since January 1, when Mr. Taylor first took up this important work.

The Rev. Aquila Webb has just been installed as pastor of the First Church of Los Angeles, Cal.

At its recent meeting the Presbytery of Cairo appointed a committee on a Forward Movement within its bounds. It was felt that something quite special should be done during the first year of the new century to increase the interest, add to the power, uplift the spiritual life, and, if at all possible, add to the number already in the church. The committee was instructed to consider the whole matter of special meetings in the several fields, the use of a tent, and act in the meantime, if the way should open up.

Twenty-two members were received into the church at Estherville, Ia., at the last communion, eighteen of them on confession of faith and four being baptized. Special meeting were held

A STIMULANT.

And a Sorry Friend to Some Systems.

"Coffee acts as a stimulant to me. I can for a time accomplish considerable more work, but then I am dull, spiritless, nervous, weak and irritable. Coffee acts like a slow poison on my father, giving him inward pains and a feeling of being generally upset. Continued use always used to make him ill.

"He used to be very fond of the beverage and was in the habit of drinking it two mornings, say, then skipping a few days and taking it two mornings again. If he took it the third morning, he was invariably sick. It is two years now since we had the first package of Postum. We have been using it ever since to our very great benefit.

"A lady friend who is the wife of a prominent clergyman in New Haven (whose name I am not at liberty to give) was a complete nervous wreck from the use of coffee. About a year ago she began the use of Postum and continued in it. Six weeks after starting she had lost all her former nervousness, had grown plump in the face, and her health better than it had been for years. She is a splendid walking advertisement and is most enthusiastic in the praise of Postum, telling all of her callers of its merits and urging them to try it."—Kate Austen, Hamden, Conn.

the last two weeks in May. Since January last this church has received seventy-one members.

Dr. McLeod, pastor of the Pasadena church, Cal., is to have an assistant in the person of the Rev. Benjamin V. Bazata of the Alhambra church, where he has been pastor five years and has done good work.

Taikio College, Mo. (United Presbyterian) rejoices in another handsome gift from David Rankin, Esq., who has given it $50,000 and offers a like sum provided $50,000 be raised by the college within two years.

Rev. Chas. F. Richardson has resigned as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Great Falls, Mont., to accept the position of synodical missionary.

General.

It has been decided that the movement for the federation of churches in Detroit, Mich., shall include only evangelical churches. It was felt that if the object of the federation was only moral and civic purity, all churches should be included, both evangelical and unevangelical, but when that was voted down and it was determined to include spiritual work, the vote stood 53 to 29 to limit the membership to evangelical churches. A constitution was adopted and referred to the churches.

The growing demands of the Society of Christian Endeavor necessitate the calling of the Rev. C. E. Eberman to the office of field secretary for the United States. Since 1893 Mr. Eberman has been pastor of the church of the Movarian church at Lancaster, Pa.; he is president of the state C. E. Union and a trustee of the united society.

Y. W. C. A.—The conference for young women in colleges and cities of the middle West is to meet for the eleventh time at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, July 2-12, under the auspices of the American committee of Young Women's Christian Associations. The program this year includes Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, Mr. Robert E. Speer, Mrs. Howard Taylor of China, Dr. W. F. Oldham, Miss Annie M. Reynold, world's secretary of the Young Women's Christian Associations; Miss Agnes Gale Hill, national secretary of India. The Bible teachers will be Dr. W. W. White and Miss Mary Babcock. Last year 400 young women gathered at this conference.

Mrs. Ballington Booth, in a recent address, gave some particulars of the work of the Volunteers of America among ex-prisoners. The work began five years ago, and nearly 1,700 men have passed through the two homes where released men may stay until they obtain employment. Seventy-five per cent, to her knowledge, are leading honest lives, and only 5 per cent of the remainder, so far as she knows, have returned to criminal life and been again imprisoned.

Gospel services are being held again this season in the Boston and Maine Railroad station at Haverhill, Mass., under the management of Mr. Tapley, the ticket agent. At the opening service 250 people were present. The local livery keepers offer to drive clergymen to the station free. Congregational, Baptist, Universalist and Methodist pastors took part at the first service. Y. M. C. A. men and the Salvation Army corps were present. Good music, including organ, cornet and violin, as well as the voice, was a prominent feature.

Rev. Campbell Morgan desires that he be not regarded as the successor of Mr. Moody. He expects to be in this country at least six years. His endeavor will be to create new centers for Bible study by persons already members of churches. He will speak at the Christian Endeavor convention at Cincinnati, then returns to Northfield for the conferences, after which he will come West.

TRAINING FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.—The Bible Teachers' College at Montclair, N. J., is helping to meet the need for Sunday school teachers better trained in knowledge of the English Bible and more competent to teach it. Many from distant points are taking the full course of lectures. Dr. Marcus Dods, Presidents Patton of Princeton, Weston of Crozer and Barrows of Oberlin have been among the speakers. A feature of the school so far has been Dr. Wilbert W. White's prelude each day on some phase of prayer or Bible study.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The eighty-fifth annual report states that during the last year this society distributed 580,000 volumes in the United States and 973,000 in foreign lands, maintaining branch printing offices in Syria, Turkey, Siam, China and Japan. The Boxer outbreak in China involved the destruction of over 100,000 of its publications; nevertheless the distribution of Bibles (or portions of it) has fallen off less than one-eighth in a year of trial.

Foreign Missionary Items.

The China mail brings word of the safe arrival at Shanghai of the Rev. L. J. Davies (Presbyterian), returning from Lake Forest to Chinanfu. Cablegrams from the West Shantung Mission have announced the complete payment of the indemnity for loss of property at Chinanfu, $4,000 in gold; also a payment of one-half the indemnity at Wei Hien, with promise of complete payment there also, these actions being those of the governor, Yuan Shih Kai.

The far-famed Moravian mission in Greenland, established in 1733, a triumph of faith and patience, has been transferred to church of Denmark, as being in a better position for carrying on the work. At the farewell service 800 Greenlanders, conveyed by 250 boats and rayaks, assembled at Lich-

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the Christian Century.

tenau for public worship, and 423 communicants sat down at the Lord's table. There are six missionary stations and thirty-three out-stations, which had eight missionaries and thirty native helpers.

The annual report of the Marattu mission (Congregational) in India says a total of 8,662 persons are receiving instruction and training in the 158 schools of all grades. The 162 Sunday schools report a total attendance of 9,544. A staff of 499 Indian Christians, including twenty-eight ordained, settled pastors, are laboring day and night among their countrymen. A baptized community of 8,714 converts is scattered in 373 villages.

King Khama, the Christian chieftain in Africa, is still holding his own in his tribe of Bamangwato, but he has been strongly beset by many of the chieftains near him because of his resolute hostility to the drink traffic. His enemies have affirmed that he was "destroying his town for the sake of forbidding the drink." Khama has challenged his enemies to prove this, affirming that his government is wise and prosperous, and that those who have tolerated the drinking customs have lost their independence and their towns are demoralized. He writes to them, "Have you any towns, or have you any people, or have you any countries? Answer me. I am happily a government man and I have seen nothing to hinder me in my own country. Can you show me a great town of drunkenness which is either rich or righteous?"

Here is good news from Japan: "At the beginning of the year it seemed that Tokyo would be the last place to expect a revival. But we are now witnessing such an awakening as was never seen here before. Simultaneous meetings have been held nightly since the 12th inst., in six different churches and at the beginning of this week a seventh church was added within the ward and on the same night a spontaneous revival, unplanned and unexpected, began in a church in another district, the preacher finding his audience room crowded as he entered for his Sunday evening service, an unprecedented thing at that place. After the sermon thirteen men and three women confessed their faith in Christ as their Saviour. The seven churches are filled every night. Unbelievers are flocking to hear the Word of Life. From the very first night conversions have occurred in increasing numbers. On Sunday night, May 19, 104 persons declared for Christ. At present writing (May 20) nearly 400 souls have been gathered into the Christian ranks."

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS AT OUR SPECIAL NET PRICES

Early Christianity. A Study of Beginnings. By HERBERT L. WILLETT, D. D., Dean of the Disciples' Divinity House and Assistant Professor of Semitics at the University of Chicago.

12mo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.25. Our special net price 94c, postage extra, 11c.

In connection with a series of University Extension Lectures, Prof. Willett has prepared these studies of the Christianity of the First Century. The enthusiastic reception accorded the lectures wherever delivered and the countless demands for their publication, has impelled the author to make a thorough revision and issue them in their present form.

The Fact of Christ. By P. CARNEGIE SIMPSON, M. A.

12mo, cloth. Publisher's Price, $1.25. Our special net price, 94c, postage extra, 11c.

It is the best statement of the claims of Christianity to put in the hands of young men and women who may be sceptical or honestly inquiring, that I know. . . I do not know any book that can touch it in its adaptation to the needs of students. . . There are thousands of young men who are in doubt who will be helped by it.

How to Promote and Conduct a Successful Revival. Edited by R. A. TORREY.

12mo, cloth, 352 pages, gilt top. Publisher's Price, $1.50. Our special net price $1.12, postage extra, 14c.

It may confidently be asserted that never before within the cover of any one volume has there been brought such a wealth of material hearing upon Revival work. A glance at the contents and authors assures one of the extraordinary value of this book.

The Teachings of the Books, or the Literary Structure and the Spiritual Interpretation of the Books of New Testament, by Herbert L. Willett and James M. Campbell

12mo, cloth. Publisher's Price, $1.50. Our special net price $1.12, postage extra, 13c.

For the Pastor's study and the Normal class it is a work of great value. As an aid to private devotion and study it is fully worth the price.

Three Years With the Children. By AMOS R. WELLS

12mo, cloth, 232 pages. Publisher's price, $1.25. Our special net price 94c, postage 9c.

The book gets its title from the fact that it contains exactly 156 topics, or one for every week of three years. Variety abounds. There are talks for every season of the year from New Year around to Christmas, temperance talks, object lessons, stories, exercises for the children, plans for the primary Sunday-school class, illustrations on Bible events. Any one having anything to do with children will find the book useful. A full topical index adds to its value.

The Old Testament and the Monuments. By Prof. IRA M. PRICE, Ph. D.

12mo, cloth, 321 pages. Publisher's net price $1.50. Our special net price $1.35, postage extra 15c.

A valuable and readable summary of all we know of the Monumental Records of Old Testament History, arranged chronologically so as to be read along side of your Old Testament History. Easily the best book on the subject.

Two Thousand Years of Missions Before Cary. By LEMUEL BARNES.

12mo, cloth, 504 pages. Publisher's net price $1.50. Our special net price $1.35, postage extra 15c.

An exhaustive treatise and comprehensive survey of Christian Missions before Cary. A very important book.

Religious Movements for Social Betterment. By JOSIAH STRONG.

12mo, cloth, publishers price 50 cents; our special net price 38 cents; postage extra 6 cents.

"Those churches are shown to have the most vigorous growth which have been most enterprising in adjusting their activities to the various needs of the new social environment. Contains an excellent account of institutional church work."

Constructive Studies in the Life of Christ. By ERNEST DEWITT BURTON and SHAILER MATHEWS of the University of Chicago.

8vo, cloth, 320 pages; publishers price $1.00; our special net price 75c; postage extra 14c.

A scheme of Bible Studies especially designed for students. It serves as a compendious commentary on the gospels.

A Dictionary of the Bible. By Dr. WM. SMITH American edition edited by N. B. Hackett, D. D., Dr. Ezra Abbott, LL. D. D.

4 volumes, boxed. 8vo, cloth, 3667 pages, 596 illustrations. Publisher's former price $20.00, now $10.00. Our special net price $7.50, express extra $1.00.

Every reader of the leading writers on the Holy Scriptures, has noticed the frequent references to this Dictionary. It has been for years the standard book of its kind. Till very recently the price of these four volumes was $20, and many who desired to own them had to content with abridgements—usually a very unsatisfactory sort of book to the student. Every such student of the Scriptures who has hungered for this book in its completeness now has it brought within his reach.

Woman and Home.

WOMAN AND HOME.

Yes, God has made me a woman,
And I am content to be
Just what he meant, not reaching out
For other things, since he Who knows me best and loves me most has ordered this for me.

I am not strong or valiant,
I would not join the fight,
Or jostle with crowds in the highways
To sully my garments white;
But I have rights as a woman, and here I claim my right.

The right—ah, best and sweetest—
To stand all undismayed
Whenever sorrow or want or sin
Call for a woman's aid,
With none to cavil or question, by never a look gainsaid.

The fleet foot and the feeble foot
Both seek the selfsame goal,
The weakest soldier's name is writ
On the great army roll,
And God who made man's body strong,
made, too, the woman's soul.
—Susan Coolidge.

A Bright Prospect.

By the late Bishop W. X. Ninde.
Why, friends, the very glory of existence here springs from its connection with a future life. And the high distinction of Christian revelation is that it sweeps away the mists from that future life; that it makes the coming world thrillingly real, filling it with life and beauty. When a man thoroughly enters into this thought and faith—feeling about him more and more the breath of that higher world and more and more growing in its blessed anticipation—then will his manhood burst the cerements of that stifling tomb where worldly or infidel thought had prisoned him, and find freedom, expansion and power unknown before. I do not wonder that millions have found in this faith the grandest impulse and the sweetest solace of their lives.

For myself I may not complain of this present world. The world has dealt gently with me. I dread it, but I cannot hate. God has made it beautiful. With all its sorrow and sin, it is a glorious world. We call our earth
"a vale of tears," but still we love it.
I love its sunny days and its calm, refreshing nights. My heart clings to its happy homes and its genial friendships; but ah, my eye has caught the bloom of that enchanted isle that Chalmers speaks of. I've had Pisgah views of the promised inheritance, and now, like the old Scotchman, "I'm wearing awa' to the land o' the leal."
From the neighboring heights Mahomet looked down on Damascus, resting like a pearl on the bosom of the desert. He turned sadly away. "Man," said he, "can have but one paradise;

mine is above."

And so when the bowers of earthly delight would tempt our runaway souls a voice within startles with the cry: "Away, away! for this is not your rest." And why should we listen?
We have talked of a perfect life. The land we seek is the very realm of perfection. Perfect purity is there:
"There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie." Perfect joy is there: "In thy presence is fullness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore." Perfect beauty is there: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty God hath shined." The waters of the river of life are clear as crystal. There's not a withered leaf on the trees of life and their fruits shall never fail. The blight of disease and death's rude summons are unknown in those favored regions, where
"Age hath no power o'er the fadeless frame,
Where the eye is fire and the heart is flame."

Politeness.

It has been customary to give the French the credit of being the politest people on earth. I am not willing to allow them this distinction.

It may be that in their own social circles there will be more bows, forced smiles, regulation gestures, etc., than among any other European people. But there is also more rude pushing and scrambling for advantage in public places, thrusting aside the old, weak, and poor, than is to be seen elsewhere.

In the city of Lyons, when I was riding after dark in a horse-car, a pretty, modest young girl came in alone. She looked to me like a day governess returning home after her day's work. No sooner was she seated than a young man arose, walked the length of the car, and sat down beside her. At once he began a style of remark really insulting, coming as it did, from a stranger. The young girl was distressed, shrank away from him as far as she could, and answered not one word.

I looked to see some gentleman or lady rebuke the man and protect the young creature, but no one seemed to notice. The man's talk became worse;
I could endure it no longer; so I sprang to my feet, pointed to the place he had left, and said in French: "Go back to your place! Leave my daughter in peace!" I felt just then as if I was mother to every unprotected girl in the world.

I sat by the young girl. She thanked me, with eyes full of tears. When she left the car, as she did very soon, the man made an apparently involuntary movement to follow her; but my look was fiercely upon him and he subsided.—Mary Clement Leavitt, in The Christian Endeavor World.

The Right to Sleep.

A certain infidel not long ago referred to the Christian as being the one who lived in the constant fear of death and hell. The fact is, he is the only man in the world who hasn't any reason to fear either one. While the Christian can't waste his time, because he alone has discovered its possibilities, he is the only one who knows what actual rest means. The virgins whose lamps were well provided for lay down and slept. They could afford it. To know that the future is provided for is to know what it means to rest in the Lord.

What a vast proportion of our lives is spent in anxious and useless forebodings concerning the future, either our own or those of our dear ones.
Present joys, present blessings, slip by; and we miss half their sweet flavor, and all for want of faith in him who provides for the tiniest sunbeam!
. . . Why cannot we, slipping our hand into his each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path,— thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace, and home?—Phillips Brooks.

Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. It contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

Statement of Principles—

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

on the same page, but in such a manner as not to increase the bulk of the book. The King James version is the basis, and this version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with foot notes. These notes give all the words and passages of the Revised Version where it differs from the King James Version. This combination feature is exceedingly valuable, as it gives all the advantages of two separate books with the convenience of one and also saves time as the two readings are always right before the eye. It contains all the

Standard and Latest Helps

to the study of the Bible prepared by the most Eminent Biblical Scholars. It is embellished with a complete series of fifteen New Maps—the newest and best engraved maps of Bible Lands, embodying the results of the most recent investigations and discoveries. It is printed from large, beautiful, clear, new type and all proper names are divided into syllables and every vowel is marked and the syllables inflected, showing the sounds and accents as they are given in every standard dictionary, thus enabling the reader to properly pronounce every word. This feature is a great improvement and a strong recommendation for this Bible over others. This is the only Self-Pronouncing Combination Teachers' Bible and is unquestionably the best edition of the world's best book.

Our Fine Art Combination Bible.

This Bible is the same as the one described above, having the Self-Pronouncing and Combination features and all other helps and in addition is profusely illustrated and embellished with numerous phototype engravings from the paintings of the world's greatest masters, all drawn and engraved by the best artists, to illustrate the teachings of our Lord. They are printed separate from the text and make one grand panorama of pictorial embellishments that are as instructive and pleasing as they are ornamental and accurate.

The growing demand for a wisely and faithfully illustrated student's Bible has been fully satisfied by the introduction of our fine art edition of the Teachers' Bible. It combines every valuable feature of the usual teachers' Bible, with a wealth of descriptive and pictorial illustrations so superb as to distinctly separate this Bible from all others and place it in a class by itself. In artistic beauty it stands without a rival.

Each illustration is a speaking sermon, a gem of art, the handiwork of a master. The wonderful pictures not only beautify this sumptuous volume, but actually interpret and make more clear the grand old truths of the Sacred Word. This beautiful edition of the Bible is indispensable to all students and teachers.

Notice the Prices.

This incomparable galaxy of illustrations has cost the publishers many thousands of dollars, and the preparation of this Combination Bible, with all its "New Helps," has involved the labor of a large number of the most eminent Biblical scholars and scientists of the world.

This beautiful, large type, Self-Pronouncing, Combination Teachers' Bible, French seal, "Divinity Circuit," linen lined, round corners, carmine under gold edge, extra finish, publisher's price, $5. This Bible and The Christian Century for one year for only $3.

GOD SAVE THE PEOPLE.

When wilt Thou save the people?
O God of mercy, when?
Not king and lords, but nations,
Not thrones and crowns, but men!
Flowers of Thy heart, O God, are they;
Let them not pass, like weeds, away—
Their heritage, a sunless day.
God save the people!

Shall crime bring crime forever,
Strength aiding still the strong?
Is it Thy will, O Father,
That men shall toil for wrong?
"No," says Thy mountains; "No," Thy skies.
Man's clouded sun shall brightly rise
And songs ascend instead of sighs.
God save the people!

When wilt Thou save the people?
O God of mercy, when?
The people, Lord, the people,
Not thrones and crowns, but men!
God save the people; thine they are,
Thy children, as thine angels fair;
From vice, oppression and despair,
God save the people!

—Ebenezer Elliott.

THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

THE perpetual problem of the Christian religion is the person of its founder. It is a mistake to suppose that the Church can ever get beyond that controversy. As long as there is a hostile world, as long as the intellect of man is swayed by a changing experience, so long will there be in the Church and outside of it a hundred, a thousand, differing estimates of Christ. This is no mere tribute to the greatness of Christ, it is the result of it. Because the Christian life is most real and most divine, and because Jesus Christ is its constant creator and sustainer, it is inevitable that about his name the inquiring minds of men should gather, fascinated though they differ, unwearied with the problem, though long generations have bent over it a patient brow.

To-day much of the discussion has been made obscure by confusion over the use of the word "divinity." Many now maintain that they believe in the divinity of Christ and not in his deity, as though these words were originally different in meaning. They maintain also that belief in his divinity is all that the Church has any right to demand. What is meant by his divinity? The theory rests upon the premise that all that goes out from God as his creation may be viewed on one side as possessing in its very nature something of his nature, and on the other as bearing upon its character the impress of his character. So far as it does this, any portion of the universe or of history ought to be called divine. This leads to a doctrine of degrees of divinity. The flower is more divine, as we may hold, than the molten lava. The human child is more divine than the fledgling in its nest. Humanity is more divine than all the rest of nature because man has more of God's nature and character in him. But Jesus was the first and only perfect man in whom the divine ideal of a human life was attained. Him God "sent" and selected and anointed with his spirit to be the clearest manifestation of himself. To him therefore the title "Divine" can be given in a unique and lofty manner in which it can be applied to no other son of the human race.

There are differences, very great differences, too, among defenders of this theory of Christ's divinity as to the way in which God is revealed in or through Christ. The differences seem to arise partly from differences of religious fervor, and partly from the intellectual thoroughness with which this view of the person of Christ has been grasped and thought through. Such a writer as Herrmann of Marburg in his beautiful book, "Communion with God," dwells almost wholly on the single fact that God is revealed in Christ; that to see and know, to trust and love Christ is to see and know, to trust and love God. On the other hand, we have the position of one like Prof. Paine of Bangor, who says of Jesus, that "He professed only to be, just what he was, a plain unlettered Galilean peasant, learned only in the holy scriptures of his own Jewish people, and using these scriptures only to enforce and illustrate the religious intuitions that absorbed his soul." He was and is the mediator through his example and his teaching. "The parable of the prodigal son has been the mediating bridge over which many a soul has crossed to find itself at home in the Father's house." That is to say, Jesus was divine because he surpassed the rest of men in his own knowledge of God and personal goodness; and he became the mediator of this experience through his teaching. Men learn from him how they may go and kneel with confidence at the Father's feet.

We acknowledge, of course, the wide space that separates Herrmann from Prof. Paine, but they hold in common the general view of Christ's divinity which we are describing. If we press upon such writers the further questions that arise regarding the person of Christ, we shall find some remarkable and suggestive facts. Two theological writers are known to us who accept the historical reality of the miraculous birth of Christ, but say that the miracle has no meaning for them and no place in their view of Christ's person!

This is one of the most curious and interesting intellectual tangles in which any writer or thinker ever found himself involved.

But as a rule those who adopt the view of Christ's divinity which we have tried to describe fairly, maintain two defensive positions as against the catholic or evangelical doctrine. They believe in an ethical and not a metaphysical union of Jesus with God; and they decline to consider the fact of Christ's pre-existence as having any bearing upon his mission. Whether he existed in any real fashion before his birth at Bethlehem, is, they say, a matter which may be omitted from our consideration of his work and his gospel. The key words to their position are "ethical" and "metaphysical." Any inquiry regarding the character, the personal experience of Jesus as a man upon earth is said to be ethical in its scope. Any inquiry as to his relations to God other than those of trust and obedience, love and service, are said to be metaphysical. And any inquiry as to whether he began to be only when he was born as a man, or whether he really came into our world from outside it, is also metaphysical. Because they are metaphysical these inquiries are said to have nothing to do with religion, which is concerned only with personal, ethical relations. Let us keep, we are told, to the concrete, to the historical, to the experiences of actual persons, and within those limits let us be content to find the whole of religion, the entire gospel of the grace of God.

Our objections to this whole way of putting the question of the divinity of Christ may be summed up in two statements: (1) It is impossible to think on religion without metaphysics, and there is no religion without thinking. The very doctrine of "divinity" which we have seen defended as being non-metaphysical, rests on certain metaphysical assumptions regarding the relations of God to his universe and to man. Even Prof. Paine has things to say about the personality of God, which are saturated with metaphysics. Any one who is familiar with investigations into the origin of religion knows how deeply metaphysical thinking is embedded in even the feeblest efforts of primitive man to feel after, if haply he might find, the Most High. The cry that we must not have any metaphysical doctrine of Christ either means that we must limit his person to his highly-endowed humanity, or it is impotent because an inconsistent cry. Moreover, we might ask why, if Christ existed before his human birth, we are asked to accept the preposterous statement that that is a matter of small account. If there is positive evidence in the New Testament, and there is, that he was conscious of having literally entered into our humanity, of having come forth from the Father into the world, who shall dare to say that he can treat this fact as a matter of indifference? We do not say for his theology, but first of all and last of all for his religious attitude towards Jesus Christ, this fact that Christ pre-existed in relations of real being to God and the universe must be of transcendent importance to any man of any age.

(2) Our last statement brings us to the fact that the New Testament is built upon or grew out of the view of his person which is by some called metaphysical. Take his eternal personal relations to God out of the picture of Christ which Paul, and John, and Peter, and the writer to the Hebrews have set forth, and how completely must everything else be altered! If any one doubts that the difference would amount to the abolition of the distinctive features of Catholic Christianity, let him read any recent description of Christianity from the other standpoint. With Prof. Paine's book on "Trinitarianism" or Harnack's "The Essence of Christianity," let him compare an exposition of Paulinism or of the Johannine theology. He will soon see that with the doctrine of the Incarnation the age-long views of redemption and sin, of pardon and renewal, must be most profoundly and thoroughly transformed. At last all new views have to stand the test of the Christian consciousness. That consciousness has been formed for nineteen centuries by the faith that Christ existed in eternal relations to God; that when the Son of God was sent into the world in the likeness of sinful flesh, the most sublime act of condescension which we can conceive was performed; that when he became obedient unto the death of the cross he bore our sins, or was made sin for us, who knew no sin; that this overwhelming act of his at once established forever his righteousness and revealed most perfectly his unspeakable love.

Any change in our statement of the divinity of Christ, which aims at being more than a personal vagary, which would convert a world to God, the living God, must deal then with something far more profound and far more sure than the individual scholar's idea of the philosophy of history. It must face that conception of an incarnation, a redemption, a pardon, which has ruled the mind and heart of man for all these generations and rules it to-day more widely than ever.

And lastly, any interpretation of the divinity of Christ which would compel us to read the New Testament with the constant feeling that its central teaching about the person of Christ, which is the central fact, is wrong, has a tremendous task before it, for it must be able to justify itself by arguments not only fitted finally to shake the authority of these records, but fitted also to raise a new authority before the world more august, more convincing, more evidently the voice of God than these ancient pages. But who has found that authority?

Calvin objected to the use of the terms "person" and "trinity" in reference to the Godhead; and when his orthodoxy was impeached for not using these terms, he defended himself by saying that he had sworn to the belief in one God, and that he preferred the simple scriptural expressions to those of the schoolmen.

OUR SCOTTISH GUEST.

By the Visitor.

WE have had in the past few years several eminent men from the land of the thistle and the heather, who came to bring us messages of good will and to tarry with us for a night. Among such one easily recalls the names of Principal Fairbairn, Henry Drummond, A. B. Bruce, Professor Denny, Dr. Stalker, George Adam Smith and Dr. John Watson; and though of this number the first and last are living out of Scotland, Dr. Fairbairn being the honored head of Mansfield College at Oxford, and "Ian Maclaren" the popular pastor of a Liverpool church, yet Scotland claims them both, and they repay the claim with loyalty and affection. With the memory of such names fresh in mind, one is likely to have a high standard set for all visiting Scots, but our latest guest from beyond the Tweed is worthy of high honor, even in such distinguished company, and both in his own land and with us has proved himself a master workman as a Biblical teacher and preacher.

Marcus Dods is best known on this side through his frequent contributions to the Expositor, the British Weekly, the Bookman (the English journal of that name), and other leading British publications, and by his contributions to permanent Biblical literature, in such volumes as the Genesis in the Expositor's Bible, the smaller volume on Genesis in the Handbook Series, and the recently issued commentary on John in the Expositor's Greek Testament. Upon the face of a man who has not only taught a wide circle through such instruments, but holds the chair of New Testament Exegesis in the historic Free Church College in Edinburgh, it is a pleasure to look; and the privilege has been granted at last by the recent visit of Dr. Dods to this country, during which he has delivered lectures in Harvard and the University of Chicago, and which he is just closing with a short engagement at Chautauqua.

How He Looks.

In build and appearance Dr. Dods is typical of the best class of Scotchman; tall, broad-shouldered, a man who must have been unusually strong and athletic in his youth, and who maintains still a bearing that speaks of matured force of body and intellect now coming to its ripest value with years that streak with gray the thick, waving hair and the side beard, shaved back far enough to reveal the fine, firm mouth and strong chin. One notices also the strong accent, and the half-closed eyes which produce at first the impression of languor; but that soon passes into recognition of keen discernment concealed behind the kindly glance that combines often with a smile of singular sweetness to win the close attention and regard of his hearers. It is a face whose lines would be called severe; but which, like a Scottish lake, will lose the last suggestion of ice in the smile of spring. It is that mingling of strength and sweetness, suggesting a strong nature made tender and graceful by splendid discipline, and withal illumined by a master passion, the love of Christ and of mankind, that makes Dr. Dods an ideal teacher and preacher, a veritable prophet of righteousness. Such a man always has a theme that finds his hearers. He reaches them with the certain instinct of a searcher of consciences.

Source of Power.

I had repeated opportunities of watching his audiences, and they were of all classes, sometimes young, sometimes mature; yet the manner and effect were always the same. It might be a formal lecture on the teaching of Paul, or a Bible narrative—the sick man at the pool, the woman who touched the Saviour's garment, the Last Supper, the parable of the vine—told with the utmost simplicity and applied with marvelous power to the living present, with constant appeal to the soul to waken from whatever sleep held it fettered. It made us wish to be ever a preacher, standing between two worlds, speaking the quickening words of the cross, from the living to the dead, and the effect was no less interesting. Whatever the audience, the appeal was felt. The response was instant. The word was like a flame of fire, and it lighted in many hearts altar fires that will not soon die out.

Estimates of Men.

Dr. Dods is one of that great company whose religious life comes out of the struggles which issued ecclesiastically in the disruption a half century ago, and intellectually in the new thought on the Bible and theology, which is even a later product on the same northern soil. Of this second movement William Robertson Smith was the leader, the champion and the master, but the price he paid in the loss of favor and place because of his belief in the newer learning regarding the Word of God was not too much to pay for the splendid results since attained and the rare body of men who have entered into his labors. Dr. Dods holds in highest reverence the three men whose names have been familiar in Free Church circles in recent years: William Robertson Smith, Professor A. B. Davidson and Principal Rainy. In speaking to me of Bruce, whose work was so similar to his own in many ways and who has just entered into the larger life, he used words of warm appreciation. Bruce was an exegete and an apologist; Dods has not gone into apologetics, but is a rare biblical interpreter. Bruce was a strong preacher, as is Dods, and the last published work of Bruce was his commentary on Hebrews, while Dr. Dods has now on the blocks the volume on Hebrews in the Expositor's Greek Testament, that work of scholarship which is destined to do for this generation what Alford did for a former one. His comparison of Bruce and Davidson was to me most significant. "Davidson," said he, "was always right; Bruce was always suggestive." I spoke to him of the disappointment felt by many that the article by Bruce on Jesus in the Encyclopædia Biblica was so negative, and asked him if he thought it was possible that the editors, Canon Cheyne and Sutherland Black, had used only a portion of what was written, taking the parts that would best harmonize with Schmiedel's radical treatment of the same theme. All he would say was, "It is possible."

As Touching Biblical Criticism.

In matters relating to biblical criticism and theology Marcus Dods is in line with the majority of scholars in those disciplines. He feels that criticism is inevitable and necessary, and sees no reason why any should oppose the method or be thrown into panic by it. He remarked on the surprise he felt at finding American thought so much slower to accept the valid results of biblical criticism than British, and that some religious papers in this country thought it necessary to warn their readers against a method as inevitable and desirable as daylight. Nevertheless, he believes criticism, like every other process, is liable to run to fantastic and violent extremes, and of such tendencies he regards some of the articles in the Encyclopedia Biblica, above referred to, as examples. He regrets that a work of such admirable scholarship in most regards should be marred by elements of radicalism and conjecture from which there is sure to be well-nigh universal dissent, and which largely modify the value of the work as a whole. He expressed himself as strongly of the opinion that the preaching and journalism needed to-day, and proving their value by the growing demand for them, were of the sort which combined the scholarly foundation and the scientific temper with a vital emphasis upon the great verities of the Gospel, and issued in an evangelical and urgent message to men to accept the authority, the teaching, the character, and the programme of Christ.

THE CONQUERING CHRIST AND A CONQUERING CHURCH.

THE world needs leaders; the Church has a leader. Of him in whom the hope of Israel was fulfilled it is said: "Behold I have given him a leader and commander to the people"—one to plan the campaign and to animate with courage for the conflict. The thought that we have a skillful, resourceful and efficient leader is inspiring. Napoleon at the head of his army was considered by the Duke of Wellington to be equal to 50,000 men. Some one has said that an army of sheep led by Napoleon would have been transformed into an army of lions. With the captain of salvation at our head we ought to march to battle with shouts of victory.

Christ is leading his Church out to scenes of conflict. The Church is not an army of occupation, it is not to act forever on the defensive. It is an army of aggression, and when the trumpets sound is to go forth to battle against the hosts of sin.

We have lingered upon the text, "He leadeth me into the green pastures and beside the still waters;" we have thought of our privileges until we have forgotten our duties; we have forgotten that we rest for a time in green pastures that we may recruit our strength for active service. We are not merely to enjoy religion, we are to spread it; we are not merely to live respectable lives, we are to live useful lives. We are to find in the worship of God inspiration and strength for the service of man.

Christ not only leads his people out from the fold to the field of battle; he leads them on from one conflict to another. He does not want us to close our eyes to difficulties; he does not want us to underestimate the strength of our antagonists; he does not want us to imagine that we can go on without opposition or without temporary checks. He wants us to count the cost; he wants us to remember that the redemption of the world is no easy matter; that as it cost him the cross it will call for much sacrificial blood from us, but he wants us also to remember that the final issue of the conflict is sure—because at his command and in our possession there is power adequate for the redemption of the world.

Enough has already been done to give ground for hope. Christian optimism is based upon an intelligent appreciation of what Christ has already accomplished. In spite of all opposition his kingdom advances. "In to-day already walks to-morrow." Turning prayer into prophecy we can say, "His kingdom will come and his will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

The Church of to-day has to regain the element of hope. It has again to become a waiting Church; its posture, however, is not to be that of waiting for Christ, but that of waiting on Christ. It is to expect great things from him. It is not to falter in the face of difficulty and opposition. When the command rings out, "Speak to the children of God that they go forward," every soldier of Christ is to grasp his sword and hasten to the fray.

Christ is leading his Church to victory. It is going forth with him conquering and to conquer. Some one has divided the Church into the Church militant, the Church triumphant, and the Church somnolent. The Church somnolent is the Church defeated; the Church militant is the Church triumphant.

"Sure I must fight if I would win, Increase my courage, Lord."

Nor can we fight by proxy; we cannot purchase substitutes. Each one must go to battle, and there is no discharge in this war. We yield up our swords when we yield up our spirits.

The promise that we are to go forth conquering and to conquer—victory succeeding victory—does not imply that we shall win at once. The struggle against evil will be fierce; it will have to be renewed again and again, but at the last it will end in victory.

In the Epistle to the Hebrews Christ is represented as seated on the right hand of the Father, "from henceforth expecting until his enemies be made his footstool." Upon what is his hope of ultimate triumph based? Upon three things: (1) Upon the promise of the Father, who says, "Sit thou on my right hand until the victory be secured." (2) Upon the power of his mediatorial sacrifice. "This man after he had made one sacrifice for sin forever, sat down from henceforth expecting, etc." His expectation of ultimate triumph lay in the power of his sacrifice to conquer the souls of men. (3) Upon the co-operation of his people. His expectation can be realized only through the agency of his Church. He is calmly waiting until his Church, by the proclamation of that gospel which tells of his sacrifice, will conquer the world, bringing it into subjugation to his sway. Shall he wait in vain? Shall his expectation in us be disappointed? What are we doing to fulfill his expectation? In the words of the popular hymn may each one answer:

"Surely the Captain may depend on me, Though but an armour bearer I may be."

A tremendous drag has been put upon the wheels of human progress. Care has been taken that the world will not move forward too fast. Good is seldom done without some harm accompanying it. The tares grow with the wheat. There is no gain without loss. Every improvement in machinery throws some workman out of work. Through much tribulation the kingdom is entered.

Man reaches the fulness of his power and dies. After he has learned to do some particular thing he is not permitted to do very much of it. When Thoreau learned to make a good lead pencil, he said, "Why should I make any more?" He was about half right. While he ought, of course, to have used the skill which he had acquired for useful ends; yet after all the greatest thing is the development of power. Life is more a school of training than it is a work shop.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

CHICAGO NOTES.

Down Grade!

A bull fight in America! Such is the humiliating fact. Omaha has the unenviable notoriety of introducing this brutal sport which has done so much to disgrace the Spanish nation. Let us hope that the expression of public condemnation will be so emphatic that such a cruel and barbaric spectacle shall never be repeated.

June Gifts to Colleges.

It takes more than money to make a college or university, but it takes money and a good deal of it. During the month of June the amount of money given to educational institutions in the country was unprecedentedly large, amounting in all to over twelve million dollars. The largest sum, $5,000,000, was given for the founding of Washington University, St. Louis; Brown received $2,000,000, Yale $1,667,000, Harvard $1,462,070, and other twenty-one colleges sums ranging from half a million to twelve thousand dollars. While the lion's share of endowments has gone to the big schools a fair proportion has gone to the smaller institutions. With increase of wealth will come increase of equipment, and with increase of equipment ought to come increase of efficiency.

"Vacation Religion."

Speaking on the above subject, Dr. Minot J. Savage said in a recent sermon: "I have not a word to say against Sunday amusements. There is no reason whatever in the Bible or in ecclesiastical history, or anywhere else, for the existence of the puritanical or ordinary American Sunday. It is absurd and childish to think that there is anybody up in heaven who is going to be angry with you for doing on Sunday anything that it is right to do on any other day in the week. Set apart Sunday morning for communion with God. Then use the rest of the day for recreation, walking, sailing, driving, playing golf or anything that will make you better physically. Do not dissipate, however, for that is not recreation."

The answer to that is, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Break down the sanctity of the rest-day by transforming a holy day into a holiday and the rest-day as a social institution will not long survive.

"The Ethics of Loot."

In the Forum for this month there is an article by Rev. Gilbert Reid, D. D., an American missionary, on the subject of "The Ethics of Loot." It is one of the kind of utterances which mantles the cheek of a self-respecting Christian with a blush of shame. Its tone is jaunty, its ethics low. Evidently Dr. Reid has been encouraged by the defense that has been made of looting the Chinese to deliver his soul on the subject. "Personally," he says, "I regret that the guilty suffered so little at my own hands." He goes on to say, "Owing to the fact that two of the missions, both connected with the American Board, succeeded in occupying the palaces of two princes, there arose an opportunity—the only one of a lifetime—to put up for sale looted goods." "The troops of the different nationalities secured their rest through 'change of occupation.' To them the question was not so much which Chinaman was the worst, but which house was the richest." The characterization of this article by the Record-Herald as "ill-timed and ill-toned, and as utterly helpless in its insensibility to moral obligations" is too true. Oh, the pity of it!

From one of the city pulpits on Sunday last came the exhortation, "Oh, editors of America, let me entreat you, be more kind, gentle and considerate to our public men. Empty the vitriol from your ink-stands and pour in the milk of human kindness and love." Good advice; albeit lacteal fluid would make rather poor writing material.

The University of Chicago has enrolled a larger number of students this quarter than during the opening week of any previous summer quarter. The total reaches 1,468; and in as much as a large number of students enter the University at the beginning of the second half of the summer quarter, the number will be considerably increased before the close of the session.

A Chicago Board of Trade man has surprised his friends by retiring from business when only fifty years of age. Having accumulated a fortune he has decided to give the younger men a chance. For a man to retire from business in middle life is a mistake. Every man should make the most of his powers. And it is better to wear out than to rust out. The happiest men are those who die with the harness on.

Something stronger than lacteal fluid would be needed properly to characterize the following announcement which appeared last week in one of our dailies: "Pie-eating contests, apple ducking, greased pole climbing, and kindred sports are to be the attractions this evening at an entertainment to be given by the choir of _____ church." When a church cannot be run without this sort of foolery, it had better close its doors.

The coming of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan to Chicago to take up evangelistic work along the lines pursued by Mr. Moody has been looked forward to with the keenest interest. His opening services in the Chicago Avenue Church have produced an excellent impression. Mr. Morgan belongs to the moderate wing Keswick school of preachers. As a speaker he is graceful and forceful. As the friend and successor of Mr. Moody he will receive a warm welcome.

Full of years and honors Rev. Franklin W. Fisk, D. D., president of the Chicago Theological Seminary, "fell on sleep" yesterday morning. For forty-three years he was connected with the Seminary as professor. He was a man whose presence radiated sunshine. His influence upon his students was profound. Many of them will read of his going with moistened eyes. Not into the Seminary only, but into the life of the city, he put the strength of a rich and ripened manhood.

At the pastors' conference held last week at the University of Chicago, one of the subjects discussed was "Revival Services." The Rev. P. H. Swift, while deploring the use of the professional evangelist and maintaining that the revival ought to be developed from within the Church itself and be led by the pastor, advocated the free use of advertising and special music. The Rev. Francis Perry did not believe in the emotional phase of the revival so much as in the ethical. All wanted a revival, but each one wanted it to come in his own way.

CONTRIBUTED.
HIS PRAYER.

The way sometimes is dreary
 And the gloom sometimes is deep;
 The cup is often bitter,
 And the path is often steep;
 But there's one who kneels at night,
 In his little robe of white,
 And asks the Lord to bless me,
 Just before he goes to sleep.
 The burden oft is heavy,
 There is little chance to rest;
 Through the day I hear the murmurs
 Of the weary and oppressed—
 But at night he still is there
 To repeat his little prayer,
 To appeal to God to bless me—
 And I know that I am blessed.

CULTIVATING THE PRESENCE.

By James M. Campbell, D. D.

THE Practice of the Presence of God the Best Rule of a Holy Life" is the title of a little book which is made up of the thoughts and letters of Brother Lawrence, a lay monk of the seventeenth century. This godly man endeavored to walk habitually as in the divine presence. His office as cook in the monastery of the bare-footed Carmelites at Paris was one for which he had a natural aversion; yet he made drudgery divine by importing into it a heavenly spirit. He applied himself diligently to outward things, and while his hands were busy with uncongenial tasks his spirit sat in heavenly places with Christ. Imbued with a habitual sense of God's presence he seldom felt the need of stated prayer. Although he retired to pray according to the direction of his superior he did not want such retirement, nor ask for it, because his business did not divert him from God. "The time of business," said he, "does not differ from the time of prayer, and in the noise and clatter of the kitchen, when several persons are at the same time calling for different things, I possess God in as great tranquility as if I were upon my knees at the blessed Sacrament." To one who lived thus in the presence of God communion was unbroken, and the whole of life was a prayer.

The sense of the divine presence is something that has to be cultivated. It comes to those who eagerly long for it. Here as elsewhere the promise holds good, "Seek and ye shall find."

"Transfigured in his glory, fair
 The whole world stands, one house of prayer—
 One anteroom of heaven;
 For surely though we know it not
 His presence is in every spot,
 To those that seek it given."

"If a man love me," says Jesus, "My Father will manifest himself to him, and we will come and make our abode with him." Love makes the vision real. The vision is given to them "who love his appearing."

The question now before us is how can we come into full and vital realization of the presence of Christ, so that we may enter into oneness with him and find in him the well-spring of our strength, and hope, and joy.

1. By meditation. Meditation must alternate with activity. We must go apart from the multitude, breaking connection with the external world, separating ourselves from outward things which divide the attention and disturb the mind, "entering the silence" and opening the soul to the spiritual and the eternal. "Separate yourself," says William Law, "from all common thoughts and make your heart as sensible as you can to the divine presence." Let nothing interpose between your soul and the world of spiritual realities. Enter into thy closet and close the door, shutting yourself out from the noisy world and shutting yourself in with God, so that you may be alone with him. "Be silent before him;" be all ear and his voice will be heard in the stillness.

Profitable meditation does not consist in going apart by ourselves, but in going apart with God. Recognizing the need for seasons of pause in busy lives, Jesus said to his disciples, "Come ye apart and rest awhile," not "Go ye apart by yourselves," but "Come apart with me." He wished to accompany them that they might commune together upon the things upon which the inner life is nourished. He wished also to commune with them. "When I have drawn thee into the desert place there will I speak to thy heart."

Meditation implies the fixing of the mind upon a definite object. The mind must not be allowed to wander into vacancy. The Old Testament saint who said, "I have set the Lord always before me" knew something of the resolute effort required to keep up to the highest level of meditation. The presence is illusive, but it grows upon those who believe in it and make it the object of their devout contemplation. It is an increasing light to those who keep their gaze fixed upon it. Dwell upon it intently and steadily and it will burn itself into the soul and reflect itself in the life!

2. By prayer. That is, by the conscious outgoing of the soul to Christ, "winged by desire, and impelled by a sense of need." Prayer is something more than meditation. It is the reaching up of the heart to one who is bending over us, that we may hold open and direct communion with him, and that he may make communications of himself to us. The time when man holds personal intercourse with the Lord has well been called "the bridal moment of the soul;" or, as a Jewish mystic puts it, "It is the time when heaven and earth kiss each other." It is the time when the spirit of man finds its true centre of harmony and rest in "the Father of spirits."

Prayer implies divine accessibility. For if God be so far away that we cannot reach him, why should we pray to him? Direct access is possible because he is near. He brought himself near to us through Christ. He is bringing himself near to us in Christ. His present method of approach is in Christ, through the Spirit. The Spirit is called the Paraclete, which literally means one who is called to the side of another, to act for him, and to help him in every way possible. Through his mediumship God is revealed in Christ as the great All-Presence to whom we are to pray.

The doctrine of the presence accentuates not only divine accessibility, but also divine personality, thus establishing a rational basis for prayer. For whatever else prayer is, it is personal contact with a personal God. We cannot pray to an abstraction or to a divine principle, but only to a living being who holds to us the relation of personal friendship. This is the God whom Christ reveals; a God who knows and loves; a God who hears and answers prayer. How greatly the blessings which he bestows are enhanced in value when received directly from his hand. They are the tokens of love that nothing can exhaust. "Grandly he offers, meanly we receive." He gives according to his great love, we receive according to our little faith.

As prayer grows from an emergency act to a habit and from a habit to an attitude of the soul, there may be less formal petition than there once was, but there will be a more distinct sense of divine presence, a more abiding confidence in the divine goodness. But even when prayer is occasional rather than habitual, the soul that prays, the soul that walks and talks with God, the soul that has communion with the source of life, the soul that opens itself completely to God is filled at once with his peace, and joy, and strength. Speaking out of a glad experience all praying souls can say with Archbishop Trench:

"Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take!
What parched grounds revive us with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise and all the distant and the near Stand forth in sunny outline brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!"

Prayer availeth; therefore, "let us pray."

3. By developing the power of spiritual apprehension. Faith is spiritual vision. It is "the assurance of things hoped for, the proving of things not seen." We see what we want to see; what we are prepared to see. The artist sees things in nature which from other eyes are hid. The spiritual man has a revelation of things which eye sees not, and ear hears not, and which enter not into the heart of man. When Mary brought her first-born son into the temple for "purification and redemption," the aged Simeon saw in the helpless babe the one whose hand was to break the fetters of sin and bring deliverance to the race. There was nothing in the appearance of the babe to arrest attention. There was no nimbus of glory around his head. To look at he was just an ordinary peasant child, yet the anointed eyes of Simeon saw in him the Prince of Peace, the King of Glory. He saw what he was prepared to see. It was not the sunset of life that gave him mystical lore. The vision came not from age, but from the anointing of the Holy One. So to those who look for him, and long for him, and hope for him, Christ now appears. The soul's eyes grow strong by looking, and to those that tarry for it the vision comes.

4. By cultivating the habit of referring everything to Christ. We are all influenced by the unseen dead. The dead yet speak. We are often swayed by their judgments. We find ourselves trying to solve our knotty problems in the light of their superior knowledge. With more certainty we turn to the unseen Christ, seeking to know his will, asking him to solve our doubtful questions. We "inquire in his temple." We sit at his feet anxious to be taught. We want to know his mind about everything. Assured that in some way he can communicate his mind to us we ask when in perplexity, "Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?" What a great privilege it would be esteemed to meet one of the master minds of the world and ask him questions. How much would we prize one hour with the Apostle Paul to propound to him some of the questions which vex and perplex us! Do we realize sufficiently that the way to Christ is always open, and that we can go to him at all times and consult him about the things which baffle our wisdom? Abraham Lincoln once said, "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom and that of those about me seemed insufficient for that day." When we come into this condition, how blessed it is to know that Christ is anxious to guide us. Our communication with him is direct. He is ready to give, and we are capable of receiving, definite instruction. If all outward voices are stilled that the inward voice may be heard, we shall hear him say, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

We must also cultivate the habit of bringing ourselves into the clear light of his presence, that we may hear his verdict upon our lives. Our work must be held up for his inspection and approval.

"The long bazaar will praise—but thou, Heart of my heart, have I done well?"

—Kipling.

What boots it who may praise if the "well done" of the Master be not won!

5. By obeying the heavenly vision when it comes. The vision that waits for us as we return from the call of duty is always a brighter one than that which we left. Never does the face of Christ look so beautiful to us as when we come to lay down at his feet the sheaves which we have gathered in the harvest fields of life. Because he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision of which he could speak, which came to him at the beginning of his Christian career, Paul afterwards was caught up into the third heavens, "and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." Unto those who improve what they have, shall more be given. To those who do his will as far as they know it, the deeper mysteries will be revealed. It is not sufficient to be receptive, we must also be responsive. Standing within call, ready for orders, is the most advantageous position in which to see the face of the King, and to hear his voice. Doing the things which he has bidden is the best way to gain a clearer and stronger sense of his presence.

THE CHIEF END.

By Edward Scribner Ames.

THE strictly scientific spirit puts great stress upon the discovery and description of matters of fact. It purposely refers the question of the value and ultimate meaning of the fact to philosophy and theology. Science has been so prolific of facts in the last half century that the philosophers have not been able to properly assort, classify and organize the materials. In the meantime there is much confusion for everyone and not a little despair. Science in its marvellous achievements has wrought with wonderful disinterestedness. No phenomenon in nature is too small or remote or obscure to escape its patient, minute and repeated observation. The scientist lingers for months and years over the structure of the earth worm or the spectrum of a single star, and in the end is satisfied to tell simply what he has seen. This spirit has extended also to the treatment of history and literature, but with growing consciousness of its limitations. It is important to pursue the study of words, of grammar and syntax, and all the means and externalities of expression, but when literature is held to these processes alone it looks like a dissected flower. How surprised Shakespeare or Milton would be to see himself under these linguistic microscopes.

This matter-of-fact spirit shows its inadequacy more clearly in literary products. It sets for the task of the writer the mere description of people and events by the photographic process. In order to escape the dullness that must follow the application of such a rule to the commonplace, the writing of our day has turned to fields sufficiently exceptional to hold attention by their very novelty. The extreme has been reached in the realism of the French school, where the last resort was to treat disease, abnormality, degeneracy and immorality in minute and vivid description. This substitution of the fact for its meaning has eliminated the older standards of value and introduced no others. The diverse civilizations—religious and social customs of the world are presented "just as they are" and with the implication that it would be unartistic for any one to venture an opinion as to their relative worth. Side by side with the aggressive missionary policy in the Church and expansion in the state there is a strong protest from cultivated people that it is proper merely to understand foreigners, not to reform them. In this view there is no conviction of ultimate truth, of standards of right and wrong. It is based upon the lingering agnosticism which assumes that only phenomena can be known, but nothing final or absolute. Pessimism is its natural accompaniment.

There are many signs of protest against this colorless view of the world. Wordsworth anticipated the tendency and prescribed a remedy. Poetry and religion shall be taken as interpreters of the facts of life. It is necessary, he held, that the student should complement his narrow analytic view of portions of the universe by a wider imaginative grasp of it, so that the man of science may command a vision—

"Through all the mighty commonwealth of things, Up from the creeping plant to sovereign man."

To the poet the world is not a chaos, but an ascending order crowned at its summit by humanity. To physical science there is no scale of values because it is devoid of spiritual judgments. It is only for the sentient, moral being that a world of values exists. The watch is no unity to itself. If thrown under a hammer or cast into a furnace or scattered part by part round the earth, there would be no violation of physical law. It would be only the owner's loss. In the same way the physical universe is nothing good or bad, great or small, to itself, but to its sentient self it is shot through with longings, hopes, fears, joys and sorrows. This sentient nature appears most clearly to man in man himself. Whatever skies, landscapes, fossils, flora and fauna may be, the supremely interesting thing to mankind is man himself. Therefore, man is the explanation of nature, its interpretation and its interpreter. Not man as animal, but man as revealed in the poets, sages, heroes and saviors of the race, and in the social order which they advance.

In spite of its impartial attitude the results of scientific inquiry have given man a loftier station in the world and confirmed his supremacy more certainly than theology was ever able to do. It has shown his superiority to the lower forms by proving that in the stages of his growth he embodies every one of those forms within himself, and transcends them all. It reveals his kinship with every phase of animal life and also his emergence into far higher realms. In the progress of history it reveals an unfolding society whose explanation is only to be found in the spiritual ensigns borne aloft in its art, philosophy and religion. The best spirits of every age have joined with Plato in conceiving the true hierarchy of the self, and therefore of society, when he said: "The right way is to place the goods of the soul first and highest in the scale, and, in the second place, the goods of the body, and, in the third, those of money and property." The science of ethics, which from Socrates to the present time has made the question of the chief end of life, or the highest good, its central problem, has in all its variation of detail held fast by one supreme ideal, namely, the welfare and furtherance of human life. Socrates made the discovery—the greatest ever made—that human nature is universal as well as individual. By his searching questions he found that when men think round a problem they disclose a common nature and a common system of truth. In modern ethics the human interest is still supreme. Mill and Bentham formulate it as happiness, Kant as duty, Green as self-realization, Spencer as development, Paulsen as purposeful activity. The common and essential element in all these views is that the world gets its meaning and interpretation through the inner and spiritual nature of man. Even pessimism identifies the problem of life with man's well-being. It is because the world seems to him not to further that end that the pessimist despairs and inveighs against the order of things.

It is in the progressive realization of this supreme and comprehensive idea of human well-being that modern culture is to find its true value and inspiration. If it seems too vague or too distant one may reply that it is not so indefinite as the end upon which the strict scientific spirit relies. Science commends itself on seeking no end beyond itself. Knowledge for knowledge's sake is its motto. And yet is there not a lingering hope that the scientist's task will prove useful or ornamental to some human interests? Think of the paleontologist at work in the sandstone beds of the Connecticut valley. He discovers certain three-toed foot-marks which he says were left by a gigantic animal walking the shore of the sea there in the mesozoic age, millions of years ago. But is that all he cares to know? Does not his weary search gain a tinge of color from the thought that those foot-prints might enable him to find some hint of the path along which for countless ages the forms of life on our earth have been ascending? It is likely that there are about as many scientists who literally pursue science for its own sake as there are Christians who are willing to be damned for the glory of God. It has been said that this old test of piety was never really accepted, "except by those who felt sure in their heart of hearts that God would 'credit' them with their willingness, and set more store by them thus than if in his unfathomable scheme he had not damned them at all." In like manner probably he who pursues knowledge for its own sake cherishes a lingering hope that at last, perhaps when he is dead, science will return to human life with a blessing, bearing in its genial warmth the memory of the scientist himself. Bacon's insight was true when he declared, "knowledge is power." His dream that by the mastery of nature's secrets this world would become a veritable paradise for human society is to-day in process of fulfillment. His error was not in the conception itself, but concerned rather the time and toil necessary to realize it. The motives are already at work in the new idea of society, which promise to direct the vast attainments of learning, mechanical inventions and industrial development toward the alleviation of human suffering, the training of human wills and the beautifying of human character. These motives are seen in the movements for associated charities, for prison reform, for public and private education and for artistic and religious culture. They demand that every one shall duly regard the personality which is in the slave, or criminal, or child, or in one's self, and prize it as of more worth than the whole world. Such an ideal includes both egoism and altruism. It lifts classicism above cynicism, saves a narrow scientific spirit from social and moral anesthesia and rescues commercialism from materialism.

THE RIVER OF GOD.*

Prof. John E. McFadyen.

THE great lyric, which we call the forty-sixth Psalm, presents us with magnificent confusions, and with a no less magnificent order. First, a world in ruins; the earth dislodged from the pillars on which she rests, the mountains torn up by their roots and flung into the heart of the sea, the sea itself raging and foaming, its proud swelling shaking the very mountains; sea and land have left the bounds appointed for them, and have crossed into each other's domain; in all nature, nothing but confusion confounded. Then comes a confusion worse confounded. Instead of angry nature, there are cruel, threatening men; instead of foaming seas there is the roar of nations, foaming out their warlike fury against Jehovah and his people; instead of mountains hurled into the sea, there is the blustering of worldly kingdoms. They come to the fray with cruel weapons of war—bow, spear, shield, chariot—armed with deadly hate and pride. Was it any wonder that in the midst of such turmoil Israel should feel in distress? Will such a proud sea not sweep away everything which it overwhelms? But there is a river whose streams can make glad, as well as a sea whose waters can devastate.

Israel stands firm in a world where everything else is in flux: stands, because her confidence is in Jehovah. Though distressed, she is not in despair; so far from being in despair that she looks out to the future with the sublimest confidence. "We will not fear." The God whose grace has saved her from these furious floods can save her from anything. "Jehovah sat as king at the flood; yea, Jehovah sitteth as king forever." So "we will not fear," not even though the mountains that are round about Jerusalem—mountains whose fixity another Psalmist took as the symbol of the security Jehovah was to his people—be torn up and hurled across the plain into the depths of the great sea. Whence came this brave paean of joy? Was it not from the certainty of God's grace, the certainty that "there was a river whose streams made glad the city of God"?

The beauty and the insight of this verse are not truly felt till we realize how destitute the Holy City was of everything that could have given birth to such a thought. In the words of a German traveler, "While other famous cities owe their power to natural conditions, such as commanding sites on seas and rivers, Jerusalem is distinguished precisely by the absence of all such natural advantages. She stands there alone in the wilderness, built on hard, rocky soil, with no rich pastures, with hardly a field, without a river—indeed, with hardly a spring—far from the great paths of commerce. She is what she is, without a peer, only through the divine revelation of which she was the scene."

This riverless city has become the city "without a peer" because of her unseen river, the river of the grace of God, the river of the water of life. The desert, with its monotony and dreariness, was never far away. Rocks and bare hills stare at you everywhere. Through the dusty city ran no refreshing streams—none but one, the river of the God who was in the midst of her; a stream that could only be seen by the eye of faith, a very powerful faith, for there was nothing in the landscape to suggest it. But if there was nothing in the landscape, there was in the history—in the recent deliverance. For the song is supposed to be a triumphal ode on the deliverance of Jerusalem from Sennacherib and his Assyrians. The river of God that flowed all unseen through the town had saved it from destruction. Those who had eyes to see it, and who were refreshed by the breezes that blew from it, feared not though the mountains plunged into the sea. Mountains might reel; but the people were safe so long as the river was there. That was the pledge that the night was already far spent, and God would help them "at the turning of the morning."

Oh, the joy of the eyes which see the sights that they saw! That, in the dreary, dusty city—under siege, it may be—within whose walls is so much pain and misery, and on whose streets walk anxiety and sorrow, yet see through it all the silver line of the river of God. It is from the far days of the world's infancy that the tale has come down to us of a beautiful garden with trees many and fair, and a river flowing through it. The time of cities was not yet: and when they came, they brought so much siege and weariness that it was the fewest who could see God's river there. But the river is there, and one day—how far away we know not—river and city will alike be fair. Every gate of the city will be a precious stone, and in the midst of the street thereof will be the river of the water of life, and there shall be no curse any more.

PLEASANTRIES.

"Once in a while," said Uncle Eben, "a man compliments hisself on habbin' patience when he's simply too lazy to make a kick."

"I don't like our minister's sermon last Sunday," said a deacon who had slept all sermon time to a brother deacon. "Didn't like it, brother A.? Why I saw you nodding assent to every proposition of the parson."

One of the church letters read at the annual meeting of the Philadelphia Association contained this: "We are spiritually dead, but we thank God that things are with us as they are." The Rev. Dr. Murdock turned to the Rev. J. T. Beckley, D. D., and said: "That reminds me of a young man who arose in my meeting when I was a young pastor and said: 'Brethren, I am a great sinner, and I am determined to hold out to the end.'"—Richmond Religious Herald.

When Dr. Creighton had been offered the bishopric of London, he hesitated some time before accepting it. One of his faithful Peterborough parishioners grew so anxious to learn his decision that one day she asked Dr. Creighton's daughter what he had decided to do.

"Well, I don't know," the young lady replied; "all I can say is that papa is in the study praying for guidance, and mamma is upstairs packing the trunks."—Standard.

AMOS, THE PEASANT-PROPHET.

Frederic E. Dewhurst.

HERE are three types of men who have most profoundly influenced the spiritual history of mankind; the priest, the prophet and the philosopher; sacerdos, seer and sage. The first is the defender of the existing order; he accepts institutions as they are; venerates those customs and ideas which have the touch of antiquity upon them; dreads innovation; hates to see a profane hand placed upon the sacred and venerable things. He does not scrutinize over-closely their present character or usefulness, but loves them for what they enshrine and perpetuate, and feels himself living in all the past of the race with them.

The prophet is the seer; seer, not into the future, so much as into the heart of things, into the elemental center of the universe, penetrating the incrustations of civilization, and predicting the future only as he sees that future along the lines of fundamental and eternal law. He is the engineer following a vein of precious gold; his only question being—Where does the vein lead? He will follow up or down, put his pick to the rock and blast an opening anywhere if only with undivided attention he may follow the one thing which is to him of worth. Adamantine walls of custom, layers of tradition, stratified accumulations of venerable ideas may go, if only he do not lose the clew to the precious vein.

The philosopher gives a hand to each of the two; he deliberates and reflects; he says—"This is good, but that also is good." He reveres what the past has accumulated and preserved, but not because he is a conservative. He hails the signs of progress, but not because he has an inborn passion for the elemental things. His province is to find the tokens of the universal in the thoughts and deeds which march through history and to place on the universal quality in each of them the seal of value and permanence.

Each of these types has its distinguishing virtue and its corresponding vice. The virtue of the priest is his reverence for the past; his vice is an excess of caution running into cowardice and resistance of progress. The virtue of the prophet is his courage and boldness; his vice, iconoclasm and failure to grasp the historic spirit. The virtue of the philosopher is his calmness, his serene spirit, his judicial wisdom; his vice, a frequent lack of interest in the concrete, throbbing realities of life. But taken altogether, the conserving of the past, the progress out of the past into the future, the selective judgment which sees the universal in the moving pageantry of life—these are the influential forces in human history. Therefore, some are called to be priests, some to be prophets and some philosophers.

Of these three types, the prophetic is by far the most interesting, just because it represents that boldness of innovation and that fearless courage which effect changes in human history. And of all nations who have had a great history none has been so profoundly and constantly affected by the prophetic influence as was Israel by her prophets. That peculiar and precious possession which we know as spiritual monotheism was the outgrowth of Israel's experience under the hand of the prophets. They evolved that result out of the nation's life by centuries of eager, severe and even drastic teaching. In some instances these prophets represented the culture and education of their time; they were "university men," whose culture had not flattened out their courage or their instinct for reform. Sometimes they worked within the lines of the priestly guild, were themselves "ordained," or had "taken orders," but more frequently they had not, for the good priest is not likely to be the great prophet. Sometimes, again, the prophet was self-appointed, or shall it be said, God-appointed, remembering the saying of Emerson that in the highest sense "self-reliance is reliance upon God"?

To this latter class belonged Amos, the peasant-prophet, the herdsman of Tekoa, whose story is told in the booklet which bears his name. In the northern kingdom of Israel, ruled over by the dynasty of renegade kings, was Bethel, the religious capital, the residence also of many of the wealthy people, the center of luxury and of ease. Samaria was the political capital, but Bethel was the point to which the Israelites came for their periodical religious festivals. "Religious" festivals they were; but we must not import this term "religion," which is itself a product of history and spiritual experience, into the seventh century B. C., without a word of explanation. Upon what were the throngs of people, gathering at Bethel for the great religious festivals, intent?

By the confession of her own historians and prophets these festivals were occasions of mirth and jollity; the sacrifices offered were not as solemn atonements for the purpose of propitiation, but rather as gifts which the Deity shared, eating with the people who were "the guests of God." Therefore, the wine flowed freely, the dancing waxed in merriment and license and the religious festival became a mad riot of sensual and licentious extravagance, and all this by the express sanction and direction of the priests and in the name of Jahveh, whom they worshipped at Bethel, and the other centers, under the form of a bull.

We will, therefore, imagine ourselves present at the autumn festival at Bethel in the year 760, a year that marks the zenith of Israel's political supremacy, of her material prosperity and success. She is at the flood-tide of her glory. Jahveh, her divinity, has been good to her; he has been her God of battles and has overthrown her foes. She was now again the ruling nation between the Nile and the Euphrates. Her rich men were getting richer, that sure evidence of the favor and blessing of God! They dwelt at Samaria in houses of hewn stone and palaces of ivory. They reclined upon couches of ivory with damask curtains and ate daily "lambs from the flock and calves from the midst of the stall." The festival would be kept, therefore, with more than usual fervor and hilarity. The din of the merriment, the shouts of the feasters, the dancing, the drunkenness and the carousals reach an excess undreamed of before. The welkin rings with the lusty merriment of this religious festival, when lo! a stranger in peasant's garb and with an austerity of countenance ill-befitting the hilarity around him, forces his way through the crowds and hushes them to silence almost before they know what has happened. In the cadence of a familiar funeral dirge he begins a series of prophetic "dooms:" he intones judgment against the surrounding nations. Damascus, Gaza, Tyre, Edom, Ammon and Moab in turn fall under the dirge-like sentence of this stranger with the solemn face. And the Israelites are stirred to sympathetic approval of this divine judgment on their foes.

But all this is to Amos but as the prelude to the great funeral requiem. The lightning of his wrath touches the neighboring nations only to strike Israel at last with the full intensity of the gathering storm.

Thus saith Jahveh:
For three transgressions of Israel
And for four I will not reverse it;
Because they sold the righteous for money,
And the poor for a pair of sandals;
Who pant for the dust of the earth on the head of the poor
And turn aside the way of the afflicted.
They stretch themselves upon pledged garments,
Close to every altar,
And drink the wine of the amerced
In the house of their gods.

And what is the effect of all this upon the religious revellers? What could it be but consternation, amazement and wrath? What greater evidence of atheism than the denunciation of the land which Jahveh loved and which he defended with tutelary care? And Amaziah, the priest, whose preserves were encroached upon and whose occupation gone, if such insane charges as these of Amos were believed, was the natural mouth-piece of the popular thought. With ill-concealed sarcasm he approaches Amos and exclaims: "Oh, Seer! Go flee to the land of Judah and there eat bread and prophesy there; but prophesy not again at Bethel, for this is the King's chapel and the royal court."

But Amos, nothing daunted, pitting his prophetic mission against the priestly unction and authority, declares: "I was no prophet, neither the disciple of a prophet; but I was an herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit and Jahveh took me from following the flock and said to me, go prophesy to my people Israel." Amaziah is compelled to listen to the peasant with his divinely appointed mission to the bitter end. This mission may be summed up mainly in the one word, ethical. It charges the religion of Israel with injustice and inhumanity. With the material idea and worship of God which Amos saw at Bethel, the utterly unspiritual, even sensual expressions of the religious life he does not primarily concern himself. It is the social injustice, the wrongs inflicted by the rich and luxurious people who flock to the festivals and are counted by the Amaziahs, it is this which gives the sting to the arrows of the Tekoan prophet. He declared that Israel was like a basket of summer fruit, ripe for destruction.

Hear this! ye that pant after the needy
That ye may destroy the poor of the land, Saying, When will the new moon be over
That we may sell corn?
And the Sabbath
That we may open out grain?
Making the ephah small,
And the shekel great,
And falsifying the balances for deceit.
That we may purchase the poor for money,
And the needy for a pair of sandals
And sell the refuse of the grain.

It is noteworthy that this clear ringing word of the peasant prophet, unsophisticated and uncorrupted by king or priest, is one of the earliest influences in Israel toward the transformation of her religion into a religion of righteousness. The ethical wedge was driven mightily by him into the gaping crevices of a cult which differed little from the nature-cults around it. These messages uttered at Bethel at different times with fervor, indignation and inspired earnestness were, after his return to Tekoa, written out and preserved in the form in which they still exist among the minor prophets.

There is no testimony or record of the effect of these messages of Amos upon the men of his time. No one knows whether any of the rich revellers at Bethel was moved to reform. Seldom is the prophet "acceptable" in his own day and place. But the influence of Amos in the history of religion is assured. In that vast evolution of religion from a sensuous worship of the creative forces of nature to that religion which recognizes God as spirit, and worships him in spirit and truth, Amos, the peasant prophet, holds a place which makes the world debtor to him forever.

Golden Text: Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord. Gen. 6: 8.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

Time and Times of Noah.

According to dates in most of our Bibles the flood ended 1,650 years after the creation of Adam. This chronology is not authoritative. We know, however, that the world grew populous chiefly in western Asia and perhaps in northern Africa. Along with the increase of inhabitants the earth was filled with increasing violence, of which the murder of Abel was the forerunner. The description of the wickedness reached in Noah's time, as given in Chap. 6: 5, is amazing: "Every imagination of the thought was only evil continually." Although these were days of the striving of the Spirit of God (Chap. 6: 3) it is evident that there was little or no mixture of good present, save as found in one line and family, that of Noah. A few names only of the holy seed are distinguishable down the ages amidst the growing wickedness. Even the godly race seems to have been led away by intermarriage with the irreligious (Chap. 6: 2), the former doubtless, according to the usual rule, sinking to the level of the ungodly. True worshippers grew fewer and fewer in numbers until at last but one family of the righteous remained. But God determined to give the race a new chance. This he did by withdrawing his gift of life from the wicked, through the means of the destroying flood, and by preserving as the leader in the purified world, Noah, the best man in the world.

Form of the Narrative.

Common methods of speech are used for conveying spiritual ideas. The hand, the eye, and the heart of God, for instance, are spoken of as if he were a man. God is a spirit but his attributes could hardly be expressed except in the terms of flesh and be understood. Where the account speaks of "All the high hills that were under the heaven were covered," this does not necessarily imply that the whole earth was submerged in water. When Jesus said that the Queen of Sheba "came from the uttermost parts of the earth," it does not mean that there were no parts beyond. As every Bible student knows the word translated earth (Chap. 7: 19) often appears in a limited sense, as in Ex. 10: 15, Gen. 41: 56. That language is an accommodation to human weakness of comprehension is the very principle at the bottom of the Savior's parabolic teaching. As to the universality of the flood, doubtless it extended as far as the earth was inhabited. But we have to remember that it is primarily and distinctively with mankind in his relation to God, and not with a physical creation, that Genesis is concerned.

V. 1. Ark of God's Grace. "God remembered." Speaking after the manner of men, for God never forgets. Even the sparrows are not forgotten before him. Luke 12:6. * * * "Noah." Noah, like his ancestor Enoch, walked in righteousness with God. Chap. 7:1. That was the secret of his strength in an age of unspeakable wickedness. He was like a tree planted by the rivers of water when all around was withered or dead. Ps. 1:3. He was a preacher of righteousness (2 Pet. 2:5) and he is called just and perfect. Noah was a man of faith (Heb. 11:7), obeying God, pursuing a course through 120 years (Chap. 6:3-22) wholly contrary to human experience and public opinion. He dared to stand alone in the right regardless of the ridicule and hate of men. Still, he was not faultless (Chap. 9:20, 21); but we who live in the light of God's full revelation and the pattern of his Son should not judge him severely. Rather let us ask, Do we live up to our light as well as Noah did? His children were his converts. * * * "Every living thing...in the ark." Noah had made the ark when commanded. Chap. 7:5. Along with the idea of relief for Noah is conveyed the awful penalty upon the wicked. Because God's sentence against sin had been long delayed it was none the less certain. * * * "Made a wind." A wind that promoted rapid evaporation. Every farmer understands the power there is in even an ordinary wind for absorbing the earth's moisture.

□ V. 2, 3. Abatement of Water. "Rain was restrained." He who caused the water to flow and the fountains of the deep to give forth, could by his word cause them to cease.

V. 4, 5. Deliverance in Sight. "Seventh month, seventeenth day." This was the day when the ark rested on the mountains. The beginning of the rain was in the second month and the seventeenth day. Chap. 7:11. * * * "Mountain of Ararat." A region nearly in the middle of Armenia. It is not supposed that the ark rested on either of the peaks now called Ararat, as Ararat was a country, not a mountain.

V. 6, 10. Winged Messengers. The story of the flying birds, verses 6-12 inclusive, is most charming, even to little children. Let it be read to them. * * * "Sent forth a raven." How the faith and patience of Noah must have been tested while waiting for the end of his sojourn in the ark. * * * "Went forth to and fro." From the marginal note it appears that the raven continued to return to the ark, but was not taken in. * * * "Sent forth a dove." The dove was sent forth several times. The first flight was of short duration, as no land was in sight. Verses 8, 9. On the second flight, seven days after, the olive leaf was found. Verses 10, 11. The third time the bird did not return. The dove may be likened to the soul which finds no rest or satisfaction until it return to the ark of God from which it sat out. The raven has been compared to the carnal heart which takes up the world and feeds on the pollution it finds there.

V. 11, 12. The Olive Leaf. "An olive leaf." The leaf showed that the waters had subsided sufficiently to permit vegetation to spring forth. It was a sign that the earth had been restored to man, and this became an emblem of peace between God and the world. The olive branch has since been taken as the symbol of peace, and the dove the symbol of the Holy Ghost, the Comforter. * * * "Returned not again." At last the waters had so fully abated that the dove returned not to the ark.

V. 13, 14. The Dry Ground. "Second month." By comparing this date with that of Chap. 7:11 it appears that Noah was in the ark a full solar year and ten days.

V. 15. God's Silence Broken. "And God spake." Noah often had talked with God. He was constantly listening for the divine voice, which seems to have been silent for above a year. During his long imprisonment in the ark Noah was awaiting a heartening message. How God spake we do not know. We can always hear God's voice as he speaks to us in his written word.

V. 16. The New Command. "Go." How full of significance is this little word! For Noah to receive a command was to obey. Christ left a standing "Go" before he ascended on high. Mat. 28:19; Rev. 22:17. * * * The ark was a large transport made for floating rather than a ship. It had neither sail nor rudder. Assuming twenty-one inches for the cubit the ark would be 525 feet in length, 87 feet 6 inches in breadth and 52 feet 6 inches in height. The ark is frequently taken as a type of Christ. It at least furnishes an illustration of spiritual truth. (1) It was the one hope of the world. (2) It was a refuge from a danger in which the world did not believe. (3) There was but one ark. (4) The ark stood for full salvation from the flood as Jesus stands for full salvation from sin. Mat. 1:21. (5) It was a divinely planned refuge. (6) It had but one door. * * * "Thy sons." These were Shem, Ham and Japheth, of whom the last named appeared to have been the eldest. Chap. 10:21.

V. 17. Animals for Use. "Every living thing." When created they had been called good and they still were needed by the new race. Later (Chap. 9:3) the use of animals was permitted for food.

V. 18. Disembarkment. "Noah went forth." His heart filled with gratitude and his mind with admiration for God's marvelous dealings. What a clean place the new earth must have been, now that all the wicked had been swept away.

V. 19. The Released Herds. "Went out of the ark." Instinctively seeking the earth from which they had been so long absent.

V. 20. A Life of Worship. "Noah builded an altar." Here we have an insight into Noah's character. His first thought when he finds himself once more on solid ground is a thought of God. He built an altar before he built a house. He sought God before he explored the land. He sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Matt. 6:33. Do we? While sacrifices had been offered long before, this is the first record we have of the erecting of an altar. * * * "Burnt offering." Noah realized that he was sinful. His offering was an acknowledgment of guilt, but it was primarily an expression of thanksgiving for his great deliverance.

V. 21. God's Solemn Pledge. "The Lord smelled a sweet savour." The meaning is that the act of sacrifice was well pleasing to him. The offering presented was accepted. It was pleasing to God because it was an expression of love and gratitude. * * * "Said in his heart." An inward resolve of his will. In the next chapter (verse 8-17) we have an account of the Rainbow Covenant which God made with Noah. * * * "Will not again curse." The minds of Noah and his children could be free from the fear of another deluge. * * * "Neither smite...everything living." The world has never been so wicked since the flood as it was before, for new influences have come in working for redemption. The rainbow was appointed as a perpetual token of divine propitiousness. When we look upon it we ought to remember his covenant of mercy.

V. 22. A Bright Picture. "While the earth remaineth." Out of the fatal deluge grows the beautiful picture of the fruitful earth. But we have an intimation that the earth shall not always remain. 2 Pet. 3:7. * * * "Seed time and harvest." Providing for the needs of man. If the earth's seed time and harvest should fail but once all mankind would perish. But here is God's assurance that fills us with rest and certainty as to our daily bread. The future of the world's food supply for unknown ages to come is not locked up in a delicate little seed, but in God's promise. God's covenant stands between the world and starvation. Seed time and harvest carry with them lessons of opportunity and responsibility in the spiritual realm. In the New Testament the seasons frequently are so applied, and the seed and its bread serve to illustrate the seed of the Word and the Bread of Life.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

By Peter Ainslie.

One of the loneliest men that ever lived in this world was Noah. Perhaps Jesus suffered most from loneliness, because He was more divine, but Noah had less sympathy from men than even Jesus, for a few did gather around the latter in simple faith; but, excepting his own household, Noah did not make a single convert during his one hundred and twenty years of continuous preaching. He grew away from the world as he grew toward God. Things that bound him to this world were broken as new motives and deep experiences bound him to God—a lonely man on the earth because he had found companionship in heaven! I think it was Fairbairn who said: "The man who stands up and speaks for God ought to spend his days in company with God." Noah was God's messenger. He found favor in God's eyes. He lived in God's company. His life is a lesson in service. It was very simple and it may be written out in one word—just this: Obedience. He obeyed God, and that man who obeys God now transfers his citizenship from earth to heaven. Paul said that "our citizenship is in heaven." John urges us not to love the world, and then declares that if we do love the world, the love of the Father is not in us. Jesus taught that we can not serve both—this world and God. Then it was the unworldly life that made Noah prevail with God. But now was not that faith? He believed and so he obeyed. Religion after all is very simple. It is just taking God at what he says and doing what he commands and willing to do things his way.

From the worldly point of view, Noah did a very foolish thing to build that great ark and take his family and all those wild animals in there, but God could certainly keep one man and that man's family on an earth that God himself created. It was no more difficult for God to keep Noah in the dangers of the flood than a hundred years before the flood came. God is able to keep a man anywhere. He has proven that often enough without even raising the question. Paul said: "I know that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him." Are you timid about God's ability to keep you? Is he not keeping you now? No one of us can keep ourselves. We cannot increase our stature nor lengthen our days. We are in God's hands, and our chief lesson is "Thy will be done in me."

For his obedience, God gives to Noah the whole world—a world washed from sin—and Noah at once sets up a sign board that pointed to Calvary. He built an altar and the blood of the beasts was a type of the blood of Jesus. Outward cleansing was not enough; only the blood of the Son of God could cleanse the human heart. But the world, new as it was, represented the promise, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth"—not this sinful earth, but the new earth that shall come forth in the consummation of all things. It shall be owned absolutely by those who obey. Then we learn that to give up what we have, to believe God and do what he has told us to do, will enable us to find grace in his eyes through the blood of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Thou art good, O Lord. We bless thee for thy love. Save us by thy grace, through Jesus. Amen.

SEEKING FOR HIGHER THINGS.

Col. 3:1. References: Matt. 6:31-34; Matt. 6:19-21; Luke 10:38-42.

It belongs to the common-place to say that we cannot have everything we want, and yet there is no more significant fact in human experience than the necessity of choice. Many people are absorbed in the lower things of life, thinking that when the time comes they can instantly transfer their affections, forgetting that where their treasure is—where they have made their sacrifice—there will the heart be also. If a man is concerned in ministering unto his body and forgets his soul, he will find that his spiritual nature will become atrophied and waste away.

It would seem that argument or persuasion should not be necessary in order to induce a man to seek the things of eternal worth; but the passion for the things of this earth-life are so strong that oftentimes he does not appreciate the hold that they have on him until it is too late.

What Is the Significance?

It is well that we remind ourselves that seeking for higher things does not imply that we are to get out of the world and live the life of an ascetic or a stylite. Seeking for higher things means to seek the Christ life. If we have died to the world and been raised together with him, surely we should seek only those things which are like unto him. It would seem that, viewed from purely a commercial basis, it would appeal to more men. And yet no man can attain unto it who is not moved by some higher motive. We must seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. We must seek for eternal interests. We must lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven. God has given us the fundamental law of the moral and religious life. This is the life that he would have us live in order that store and shop, factory and farm, may become permeated with his spirit and his teaching.

A Life of Trust and Self-Forgetfulness.

How few of us are willing to put God's promises to the test? Our way seems to be wiser than his. How have we been reading the plain declarations of God's word, "Seek ye first ease and comfort, houses and lands, and stocks and bonds, and then if you have any time or inclination, seek the kingdom of God"? This is the most dangerous rationalism to which the Bible has ever been subjected. A change of emphasis is needed. The very genius of the Christian religion demands that we get to the very heart of the social and ethical teaching of Jesus. Behold, the sublime self-forgetfulness of the harbinger as he points to Jesus, saying: "He must increase, but I must decrease." We sometimes become alarmed at the great power of evil, and that we are doing so little to stop its ravages. The explanation is to be found, not in our inability, but in the fact that we are setting our affections on things which are below.

Willing to Be Consumed.

Variety was once introduced into a prayer meeting by representing the Church as an engine. And the members were given opportunity to tell which part they would like to be. One desired to be the whistle to wake up the sleepy land; another would be the bell to clang out, "All-aboard;" another, the drive-wheel; some, the safety-valve, and still another the head-light. The man who did most (he was giving $1,200 out of a $2,000 salary) was not saying anything. The pastor turned to him and asked what he would prefer to be: "Oh, anything," he said, "if the fireman wants a shovelful of coal let him throw me in." How many in our churches are willing to be consumed for the glory of God? We must be willing to spend and be spent that this world may be saved.

All that man needs will be bountifully supplied when he orders his life in accordance with the divine will. It will be a life of blessedness, because it is Christ-centered, spirit-filled life. The gift of the Holy Spirit will no longer be a figment of the imagination in a tingling of nerves, but a divine and ever-present reality.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

By Charles Blanchard.

A SETRONG, WEAK MAN.

Judges 16: 20-30. Topic, July 21st.

THIS story of Samson, the strong man, is one of the folk-tales of Israel. It has in it the elements of romance, dear to the hearts of children and primitive peoples. Samson was one of the judges of Israel. We are told that "he judged Israel twenty years." His name is also mentioned among the heroes of faith, in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews. So, notwithstanding the glamor of romance surrounding his name, and which is clearly revealed in the Bible narrative, he stands out as one of the remarkable historical figures of the early history of Israel. We need to read beneath the surface to get the deeper meaning of the story. The romance is simply the setting. There is nothing inconsistent with right reverence for the Bible in recognizing this element of the romantic in the early records of the race. It helps us to get into the atmosphere of the story and of the times.

Nor is this higher criticism, but plain common sense, applied to the reading of the Bible, just as we read any other record of the romantic period of the world's history. Don't make over-much of the romance, neither rob the story of half its charm by too literal interpretation of its marvelous statements. There is even a playful element in the story. Samson was something of a joker. Perhaps, however, this was from bad association with Delilah. And herein lies much of its moral value, as of its romantic interest.

Wherein Was Samson's Strength?

It was not in his hair, as the narrative may lead one to understand. This is the surface idea, and the popular notion. His strength was in his religious fidelity. He says he was a "Nazarite unto God." In his faithfulness to the vows of the Nazarites, which included total abstinence from wine and strong drink, lay the open secret, in part, of his great physical strength. When he, after much persuasion and playing with temptation, permitted the coquettish Delilah to cut off his seven locks of hair, his strength went from him, because he had broken his vow to God. This is the lesson for all strong men or weak men, for us as Christians and endeavorers. Fidelity to religious convictions, in the keeping of pledges and the performance of our religious obligations, is one of the sources of true strength. To trifle with sin, to dandle with duty, to permit ourselves to sleep in the lap of the Delilahs of delight, however sweet or fascinating or flattering, is to play with destiny and to lose at last.

Strong in the Spirit of the Lord.

Samson was strong in the spirit of the Lord, which moved him at times to deeds of daring and valorous achievement. In that age physical strength was the one thing beyond all else that could be appreciated. So the spirit of the Lord was manifest in that way. But we should have better conceptions of spiritual things. Samson's temptations were sensual. So are ours, in varied forms. Most men have one or more Delilahs, especially in the middle of July! To perish with our tempters or tormentors is not a noble vengeance. The spectacular is not spiritual.

STUDIES IN MISSIONS.

[Supplementary to the C. E. reading courses.]

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

By Charles A. Young.

All great movements for the amelioration and salvation of the human race are to be traced to God. The significance of the Student Volunteer Movement cannot be grasped unless we realize that God guides and governs history. The roots of this movement strike deep amid Calvary's rocks, at the foot of the cross. To understand its visible historic sources we must study modern missions and evangelism from the time of Carey, the cobbler missionary, to Moody, the evangelist. It was inaugurated at Northfield, Mass., in 1886. At that time one hundred young men signed the following pledge: "I am willing and desirous, God permitting, to become a foreign missionary." Mr. Stevenson says the four-fold purpose of this movement is:

1. To awaken and maintain an intelligent and active interest in foreign missions among all Christian students.
2. To enroll a sufficient number of properly-qualified student volunteers to meet the successive demands of the various missionary boards of North America.
3. To help all intending missionaries to prepare for their life work and to enlist their co-operation in developing the missionary life of the home churches.
4. To lay an equal burden of responsibility on all students who are to remain as ministers and lay workers at home, that they may actively promote the missionary enterprise, by their intelligent advocacy, by their gifts and by their prayers.

The Student Volunteer Movement is a recruiting agency to all our mission boards.

The Student Volunteer Missionary Union of Great Britain was organized in 1892 as an outgrowth of the Student Volunteer Movement. The purpose of the movement on both sides of the Atlantic is the same. They both have the same pledge for the students: "It is my purpose, if God permit, to become a foreign missionary." In America the movement has enrolled about five thousand volunteers. When it is remembered that the policy is conservative, no one being enrolled who does not feel impelled by the spirit of the Master to offer his services, and that this number represents the very flower of educated young manhood and womanhood in the best colleges and universities of America, it is quite significant. Equally, if not more significant, is the fact that fully one-third of these volunteers have already gone to the foreign field.

In Great Britain about two thousand students have enrolled. Of this number nearly six hundred have already gone to the foreign field under fifty different missionary societies. The famous Cambridge seven has multiplied marvellously, like the loaves and fishes in the hands of Christ. Only the divine missionary who taught us to pray the Lord of the harvest that he would "send forth laborers" can measure the significance of the Student Volunteer Movement.

1. Our higher institutions of learning are becoming permeated with the spirit of missions wherever there are volunteer bands. Even the non-volunteers feel the glow of their enthusiasm for evangelizing the world and carry some of it to their home churches.

2. It means more intelligent service in missionary effort. Information means inspiration; inspiration means consecration, and intelligent consecration means whole-hearted service.

3. It is significant that we no longer have to beg for competent missionaries for the foreign field. Dr. George Smith said: "Missionaries rather than money has been the great want up to the present generation." Now one board testifies: "We have ten offers for service in the foreign field where we had one previous to the organization of this movement."

4. The volunteers have greatly increased the liberality of the churches. A noble band waiting for the boards to send them out is a constant stimulus to larger giving.

5. More significant, however, is the fact that the churches are learning through these volunteers that they must send their noblest and best, their most consecrated and highly educated sons and daughters to the foreign field.

EXPOSITORY HINTS.

"And he saw a spirit of God descending as a dove coming upon him." (Mt. 3:16.)

HIS revised translation is justified by the fact that it is a literal and exact rendering of the Greek phrase. There is no evidence here to indicate that "spirit of God" is a proper name. The writer evidently desires to teach that this was "a spirit that came from God"; hence belonged to him. The language is fully honored when thus translated and interpreted. The precisely analogous phrase, "an angel of the Lord" (Mt. 1:20) favors my claim. Had our author desired to write "the spirit of God" he could have easily inserted the article as he did in writing "the angel of the Lord" (Mt. 1:24; cf. 1:20).

The reader will observe that Matthew makes no effort to identify this spirit with the being called "a holy spirit" in 1:18, 20, and he leaves no tenable ground for our identifying them. By thus following the evangelist we shall relieve our thoughts of many needless perplexities. This spirit comes upon Jesus at this time because he is about to begin his service for God in public places. He therefore needs the wisdom and power which only such a being can give. "The beloved son" of God (3:17) must be able to speak divine thoughts with divine unction and authority. Divine deeds in a godlike temper and manner he must perform.

The spirit, after coming upon him, enters into him, and thus governs his whole being (Mt. 4:1) from this hour onward. Inasmuch as the Savior is not said to have been filled with the spirit from his birth, the "spirit of God" descends upon him at this auspicious moment. Baptized by the most godlike man of his age, crowned by a spirit from God, and attested by the voice of God himself (three witnesses), Jesus starts forth on his sublime mission.

Observe that, while this "spirit" rests in dove-like form upon Jesus, God himself is represented as still in heaven (3:17) and speaking therefrom. What bearing has these facts upon my interpretation, and upon the relation of this particular spirit to God?

SAYINGS OF JESUS NOT RECORDED IN THE GOSPELS.

An American scholar, Mr. J. H. Ropes, has published at Leipzig a very careful book on the sayings of Jesus not embodied in the canonical gospels, but preserved either in oral tradition or in some of the gospels which are no longer extant. The Guardian gives an account of Mr. Ropes' results, and the following is a list of the sayings which he retains as genuine, with their authorities:

- i. Acts xx. 35. ii. St. John vii. 53; viii. 11. iii. I Thess. iv. 15-17. iv. Rev. xvi. 15.
- v. "In whatsoever state I find you, in that will I also judge you." (Justin Martyr.)
- vi. "Ask for that which is great, and that which is little shall be added to you." (Clem. Alex., Origen.)
- vii. "Prove yourselves tried money-changers." (Clem. Alex. Apelles, Clem. Hom. Didascalia, Pistis Sophia.)
- viii. "(Woe to him) who has saddened his brother's spirit." (The gospel according to the Hebrews, as quoted by Jerome.)
- ix. "Never be joyful save when you look upon your brother in love." (Ib.)
- x. The Lord saith—"Ye shall be as lambs in the midst of wolves." But Peter answering saith unto him, "But what if the wolves tear the lambs in pieces?" Jesus said to Peter, "Let the lambs not fear that the wolves can hurt them after their death; and do you not fear those who kill you and can do no more to you, but fear him who, after you are dead, hath power over soul and body to cast them into hell." (Clem. Rom. ii. c. 5.)
- xi. This consists of a long insertion in the history of the rich young man:

"The Lord said to him, How sayest thou, I have kept the law and the prophets, for it is written in the law, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, and lo, there are many brothers of thine, sons of Abraham, covered with dung and dying of hunger, and thy house is full of many good things, and yet not one goes out from it to them." (The gospel according to the Hebrews as quoted by Origen.)
- xii. "I shall select for myself the good, those good whom my father which is in heaven hath given me." (The gospel according to the Hebrews as quoted by Eusebius.)
- xiii. "She hath gathered it from the hire of a harlot, and to the hire of a harlot shall it return. (c f. Micah i. 7, Deut. xxiii. 18.) From folly has it come and to the place of folly shall it return." (The Talmud, where the context implies that the meaning is that Christians are to have nothing to do with the price of sin, or with anything that is evil.)
- xiv. This is an addition of several verses in Codex Bezae and the Latin and Syriac versions to St. Matt. xx. 28. In the main they correspond in thought to St. Luke xiv. 8-11, but they contain one verse not found there.

"Ye seek from being small to grow great, and so that from being greater ye grow less."

Here is an actual pleasantry. When my youngest boy was quite a cub, he came into the house, crying. "What is the matter?" said the oldest sister. "That fellow out there hit me in the nose." "Well, why didn't you hit him back?" "I hit him back first," quoth the little pagan.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.

JESUS APPEARS TO JOHN.

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."
—Hebrews 13, 8.

Monday—Rev. 1: 1-8.

He "loveth us." I thank the Revisers for the present tense. The love of the past, of Bethlehem and Calvary and the Resurrection, lives on unexhausted and unlesened. There is no change in the tender affection of my Lord. As truly, as strongly as he loved St. John, he loves me, who am less than the least of all saints.

He "hath loosed us from our sins by his blood." It is a wonderful emancipation, an ineffable enfranchisement, which his sacrifice has procured for me.

He "made us to be a kingdom." So he is not content when he has broken my fetters. He might have left me, liberated indeed, but a pauper, a beggar, a bankrupt. But that is not his way. He clothes me in the purple robes of royalty. He sets on my brow the crown of righteousness, the crown of life, the crown of glory.

Tuesday—Rev. 1: 9-20.

It was the Lord's Day on the lonely island of Patmos, washed by the surging waves of the Egean Sea. Perhaps St. John's memory was carrying him back to the golden days when Jesus had been with him, enriching him with his peace. The present seemed poor in comparison with the past.

But John was to have more than happy reminiscences. Christ met him again. His bodily eyes saw him. His ears heard the Master's words and tones. At first it appeared a changed and more distant Jesus, marvellously transfigured. But there was no change in reality.

Is not the story filled with precious significance for me? I have my barren and rocky Patmos deserts. In my life there are dreary places, quiet intervals, episodes of dullness and drudgery, insipid tasks I am loth to renew, trodden paths I am weary to walk. There I can feel the powers of the world to come, and see the images of glory, and hear the eternal music.

Wednesday—Daniel 7: 9-14.

Here is the religious philosophy of history. The four great beasts emerge from the sea, and reign in succession. What they have in common is that they are beasts—brutal, rapacious, destructive. But they have their day; the dominion they exercise is taken from them; it is transferred to one like a Son of Man. The brute kingdoms are followed by a human kingdom; the rule of selfishness and violence by the rule of reason and love; and this last is to endure forever. The lion, the bear, the leopard, the terrible beast with the iron teeth—at length each of them disappears, each of them is vanquished, before the Son of Man.

So Jesus is bearer of victory to our beaten company. He is the prince who overcomes all that overcomes us.

He fulfills the assurance on the smaller scale when he saves me. Then the sceptre is wrested from the brute. Then the new man commences to reign. The weight is lifted from conscience. The will is liberated from slavery.

But the assurance has a larger fulfillment. One in my nature is destined to be judge and king of all. The government of the beast will be gone everlastingly, and men and women will bear the likeness of him who is both their brother and their Lord.

Thursday—Daniel 10: 1-9.

Sometimes the coming Lord is painted in the Old Testament as the bearer of good tidings, the Saviour who scatters blessings far and near.

But sometimes, as in this vision of Daniel, the coming Lord is painted not as benefactor, but as soldier, who has enemies to face and a fierce fight to endure. There are hosts marshalled against him. His face, as he goes to battle, is as the appearance of lightning. The voice of his words is as the voice of a multitude.

And it is with the disciple as with the Lord. While I keep a glad face, because I have been marvellously blessed, I must see with clear eyes the antagonism I shall encounter. Opposition and hostility will meet me, exactly in proportion as I am faithful to the captain of my salvation. Christianity has its soldierly qualities, and I must contend earnestly for my king.

Friday—Mark 1: 1-9.

For a little, during that supreme night on the spur of snow-clad Hermon, the divine nature of Jesus shone through the veil of his flesh. Peter and his brethren no longer saw the bondservant; they saw the King in his beauty. And I, too, need to look on the countenance of the King.

Just now the tendency is to lay stress on the humanity of the Saviour. Many books are written, which reproduce him as he lived and moved and taught on earth; and there is roused in me as I study them a tender sentiment and emotion.

But I require a helper who is none else than God—my case is so desperate, my burden so heavy, my sin so great. I enter into life only when I behold the glory of the Lord, glory as of the only-begotten from the Father.

Saturday—Hebrews 1: 1-12.

Higher than the angels, cherubim who know and seraphim who burn, is my Lord Jesus Christ. He descends to me from the throne of God—the throne which is for ever and ever. He is in the world but not of the world. He is God manifest in the flesh.

And if that is the creed of my heart as well as of my head, what joy there is in it! My deepest, saddest, uttermost necessities are met by him. Power to forgive sins? Yes, beyond question, that is his. Able to ransom many, and to ransom me? Yes, I may be certain of it. Mighty to rid me of every corruption, and to purify me as God is pure? Yes, he who carries the sceptre of uprightness will see to my ultimate coronation. I should be singing Luther's hymn:

Sunday—Rev. 4.

For St. John a door was opened in heaven. He had foretasted of the joys reserved for him, the full and everlasting and passionless renown. So, too, St. Paul was caught up into Paradise, and heard words which it is not lawful for a man to utter. And other Christians since have had their moments of ecstasy and delight, when the gates of the Celestial City seemed to be opened to them and they trod the streets of gold.

But from all such prelibations and prophecies God will lead me, if I am his child, to the transcendent reality itself. It is a reality which may be summed up in one word, the word "Christ." I shall cast my crown before his throne. I shall say, "Worthy art thou, O Lord!"

Christ should fill my whole horizon in the present world. He will do so most unquestionably in the world beyond the grave.

"The Body of Christ. An Inquiry Into the Institutions and Doctrine of Holy Communion," by Charles Gore Canon, Westminster, New York. Charles Scribner's Sons.

Any work by Canon Gore is sure to deserve the attention of students and even of devout Christians generally. This latest book has grown out of controversies which are raging in the Anglican church regarding the priesthood, the Lord's Supper and the forms of public worship. It is with the Lord's Supper that Mr. Gore is dealing here. As a high churchman he has been supposed by some to go a long way with those Episcopalians who would fain see the mass restored, and who take Romanist views on transubstantiation. But this work shows him to be a very clear-headed thinker and careful scholar on this as on other subjects. He repudiates the authority of the mediaeval church, which he believes to have witnessed a great doctrine in this theological work. He attaches great importance to the justice and teaching of the early Fathers down to Augustine. And he would use them as giving us the background against which we may most accurately interpret the references to the Lord's Supper in the New Testament. This method leads him to begin his study with the famous description of the celebration, which was given by Justin Martyr. It is interesting to note that our author attaches importance to the witness of Comparative Religion. For it is true that ideas of sacrifice, of communion, gathers from the very first, even from the life of Jesus about this central ceremony of the church's life; and we cannot hope to understand these unless we understand what sacrifices meant to the ancient world out of which both the Old and the New Testaments arose. The battle must be waged over Mr. Gore's second chapter on "The Gift and Presence in Holy Communion." It is the very life of Christ and that in His human nature, which is communicated to us in this ceremony. It is His body which we receive, "only not now in its material particles, but in its spiritual principle and virtue." This is attached to or identified with the elements of bread and wine, when these have been consecrated by the act of the church's faith. They become truly His body and blood, but not so that there is local identification. Canon Gore here makes one great point, which upsets him completely from the modern Romanist position when he sees that the consecration is the act of the community. And when he discusses the possibility of the elements becoming in a real sense Christ's body and blood he makes splendid use of the philosophical doctrine of technology. Of course the elements are not to be worshipped as being Christ, for Christ is already present apart from these. In the early church, Jesus-worship had not arisen as it did later and lasts to our day, so that the Fathers knew nothing of the adoration of the elements. Having given up or denied so much that has been dear to Romanist theorists, Canon Gore might have been expected to depart also from the notion that the Lord's Supper is a sacrifice. It is true that he finds the fact of sacrifice first of all in the giving of the elements and in the accompanying offerings by the people, and, above all, in the presentation of themselves as living sacrifices to God. But he seeks about for something more, and at last he is persuaded that it is found by putting it in the following way: "What, according to this teaching, especially constitutes the eucharistic sacrifice is the fact that the eternal sacrifice is made present to faith in the midst of the worshiping church."

The book before us can hardly indicate Canon Gore's final position. He is evidently moving and moving, it would seem, away from the distinctively sacerdotal towards the far deeper and far higher view identified with the name of Calvin. But when one has read such discussions one feels again how inadequate is that view of the Lord's Supper which makes it only a memorial celebration. Canon Gore has put his finger on the living fact when he insists that it is the faith of the community worshiping which consecrates these elements, and that for the faith of the receiver they must be the channel of divine grace.

Modern Criticism and the Preaching of the Old Testament," by George Adam Smith, D. D., LL. D., New York, A. C. Armstrong & Son, 1901. Pp. 314. Price, $2.00.

The eight lectures covered in this volume constituted the Lyman Beecher lectures at Yale university for last year, and with certain additions which could not well be given in their delivery, they are now given to the public. The task which Professor Smith sets himself is the consideration of the place which the Old Testament occupied formerly in the preaching of the church as compared with the neglect which it suffers to-day. It is not difficult to see wherein this fact finds its cause. The Old Testament is less akin to the Christian spirit, and finds by no means so ready a response in the heart of the church as does the New. This would perhaps be sufficient to cause the New Testament to receive larger consideration at the hands of both ministers and Biblical students; and yet it is not the sole, nor most important, reason for the neglect of the older portion of the Scriptures. The main cause for that lies in the uncritical character of the study which has been given to these earlier books, and the promise which criticism holds out of making intelligible and useful the Old Testament to a degree not hitherto enjoyed is the reason for such a subject as that which Dr. Smith has chosen. He does not attempt a defense of criticism. Such a defense is unnecessary. Those who understand its purposes do not require that it should be defended; and for those who do not understand it, and whose attitude is that of persistent and unreasoning antagonism, no defense would be worth the while. He sets himself rather the much more necessary task of showing the particulars in which criticism has made the Old Testament of real and permanent value, such as could not be apprehended under the old methods of its study. This is done in the review of the place which the Old Testament has occupied in the work of the great preachers of the past, and then in the consideration of such themes as the proof of the divine revelation in the Old Testament, the spirit of Christ in the Old Testament, the hope of immortality in the Old Testament, the preaching of the prophets to their own times, and their influence upon the social ethics of Christendom, concluding with a chapter on the Christian preacher and the books of wisdom.

Professor Smith always writes interestingly. No one who has read his "Historical Geography of the Holy Land," his volumes on "Isaiah and the Minor Prophets," or his "Life of Henry Drummond" will need to be assured upon this point. It is much to say that a man who has written so well does not fall below his standard in the present work, a standard including both the elements of careful, laborious, accurate research and of high literary strength and beauty, which gives the message a larger impressiveness and a greater sense of urgency. These are the characteristics of the work, which is now attracting the attention of preachers and scholars the world over. It reveals what perhaps none of his earlier works have so well set forth—his own deep interest in the problem of preaching as related to the life of the church and to the social and political questions of the times.

To those who have read Black Rock and the Sky Pilot, a book from Ralph Connor will be looked forward to with feelings of delight. After appearing in serial form in the Outlook, "The Man of Glengarry" will be published in Autumn by the Fleming H. Revell Co. The plot of the story is laid in the region between the Ottawa River and the St. Lawrence. The story itself will deal with frontier life.

General Church News

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

Rev. Charles A. Young of Chicago has been called by Eureka College Disciples to the position of Bible Institute Conductor.

The Roseland Presbyterian church has paid for its new site, and $4,500 has been subscribed towards the erection of the new church.

Humboldt Park Christian church have decided to build a neat little chapel at once. They have one of the most desirable lots in the community.

Rev. N. A. Porter of Frederick, Kan., has been named pastor of the Hamlin Avenue Methodist Episcopal church, and will enter upon his new work July 14.

Rev. Dr. Franklin Woodbury Fisk, D. D., founder and late president of the Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational), entered into rest July 4, at the age of eighty-one.

Irving Park Christian church has secured a grant of $3,500 from the Church Extension Board, which will enable them to complete their building. They now have the Sunday School room.

Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, who is visiting in Chicago, spoke before the weekly meeting of Baptist ministers last Monday on "The Twentieth Century Ministry."

The Disciples church at Austin has decided to erect an edifice which will be used as a church and a Y. M. C. A. headquarters. It will contain four storerooms, which will be rented, and prove a source of income.

The church at Franklin, Ohio, was dedicated June 30. During the last eight years an indebtedness of $33,000 has been paid off and now the only obligation is on the site, for $5,000. The church was built in 1893.

North Division Christian Endeavorers will hold a rally July 16 and a picnic Aug. 3. The former will be in the Gross Park Congregational church, and the subject will be "Convention Echoes." The picnic will be held in Lincoln Park. St. Paul Division announces its rally for July 30 at the Cragin Congregational church Fifteenth street and Armitage avenue.

The West Division Christian Endeavorers are using a large tent at West Adams and Morgan streets for evangelistic purposes. Milford H. Lyon, state evangelistic superintendent, is the speaker, and G. H. Williams conducts the singing. The tent seats 1,200, and meetings are held every evening except Sundays, when they will be in the afternoon at 4 o'clock. Bicycles will be checked free. During the last month Mr. Murray, superintendent of seamen's work, distributed 500 magazines, 890 papers and 10 libraries.

Six chapel cars are now in use and by their use ninety churches have been organized and seventy-five pastors settled. The library of each car is stocked with Bibles printed in all the various tongues which are spoken by the foreign settlers of the West. This supply generally includes Bibles in about a dozen different languages, and they are freely distributed. Each car has a good organ. Some have phonographs which will reproduce the voice of Ira D. Sankey singing "The Ninety-and-Nine," or perhaps some pulpit orator.

The forty-second annual camp meeting at Des Plaines will open July 17, and continue in daily session until Monday, July 20. The services will be in charge of Presiding Elders H. G. Jackson, C. E. Mandeville and J. M. Caldwell and Evangelist D. W. Potter. Among the speakers at the gatherings are Bishop Merrill, Bishop Thoburn, Dr. Charles J. Little, Dr. M. S. Terry and Joseph H. Smith. Rev. T. K. Gale will conduct the children's meetings and Rev. C. V. LaFontaine the young people's services. Professor E. Miller will have charge of the music.

The Second Congregational church of Oak Park, two years ago, undertook the support of Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Nelson, missionaries at Canton, China. Finding their work in China much hindered for lack of proper buildings, the church has within the last few weeks raised $2,500, which the American Board will duplicate, to provide the necessary equipment for work. The Woman's Board of Boston will probably add $2,000 to the amount raised. The Rev. Sydney Strong rejoices that he is the home pastor of a church which takes such good care of its foreign pastor.

More than 6,000 Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists and Congregationalists attended services at the second annual camp meeting of the Pentecostal Union of Chicago at Stewart Ridge, One Hundred and Twenty-third street, in West Pullman. Seven services are held each day. They will continue until the close of the meeting, Sunday, July 14. The morning services were conducted by D. W. Potter, president of the Des Plaines Camp Meeting Association. The afternoon services were in charge of Rev. G. A. McLaughlin, editor of the Christian Witness, and the evening sermon was preached by Rev. J. S. Glasscock.

Baptist.

Rev. C. G. Cressy, pastor of the church at Hastings, Minn., has resigned.

Rev. J. R. Harrison, a minister for forty years, passed away June 25, in Virginia. He held pastorates at Hollins Institute, Roanoke and Richmond, Va., and St. Joseph, Mo. He was the founder of the Southwest Virginia Institute of Bristol, Tenn.

Rev. W. D. Bolton, who for the last two years has been pastor of the Carondelet Baptist church, St. Louis, has resigned that charge in order to accept a call from the Baptist church at Bowling Green, Ky. Mr. Bolton's new congregation has 325 members.

The thirty-fourth annual meeting of the Church and Sunday School Convention of the Missouri Valley Baptist Association met with the Norborne church, June 28-30. Topics discussed were: "How Can Our Weak Churches Be Strengthened?" "The True Mission of the Sunday School"; brief talks by the Sunday School superintendents on "Our Success the Past Year—How Can We Hope to Improve in the Coming Year?" "Why Should I Be a Missionary Worker?" and "The Duty of (a) a Pastor, (b) a Superintendent, (c) a Deacon, and (d) a Church Member."

Congregational.

Fourteen children were baptized in the church at Charlevoix, Mich., on Children's Day.

2. The church could not hold the number who sought admission in the evening.

The twenty-eighth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Josiah Sims at Nevada City, Cal., was celebrated June Services in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Sunday School of the First church of Portland, Ore., were held June 24.

Rev. N. S. Bradley begins his seventh year of service at Cadillac, Mich., with a $200 increase of salary, with the church out of debt and the outlook hopeful.

Prospect Avenue church, Kansas City, is much encouraged by a pledge of $5,000 given by sister churches. It expects to raise a similar amount on its own field.

The three years' pastorate of Rev. W. H. Medlar of Alexandria, Minn., shows outward results in ninety-four additions to the church; net increase 76; benevolent offerings, $4,018; raised for all purposes, $13,192.

Rev. W. B. Williams, first pastor of the First church of Charlotte, Mich., who is over eighty years old, but still preaches occasionally, has had the degree of doctor of divinity conferred upon him by Olivet College.

The fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the First church, Portland, Ore., was celebrated June 15-23. About 1,642 people have been members of the church, 700 uniting on profession. The present membership is 625.

The Congregational churches in Kansas City have bought a tent seating 400. It will be pitched near each church a few weeks at a time, the local pastor to have charge, but the workers to be drafted from all the churches.

At Webster Groves, Mo., the Sunday School has added a second wagonette to the one already employed to collect children for the Sunday School. An interesting feature of Children's Day was the giving of twenty-three Bibles to children who had reached seven years of age.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Wm. Edward Park, D. D., at Gloversville, N. Y., was celebrated June 16-23. During the twenty-five years the church has-raised for all purposes $199,000. Dr. Park has received into the church 633 persons of which 351 were by confession.

The handsome church at Petaluma, Cal., was dedicated June 28. Its cost is $10,000, and it is free from debt. The interior is finished in white cedar and Oregon pine. The church was built during the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. Goodell, who recently became pastor of the Market Street Congregational church of Oakland.

An occasion of unusual interest to Congregationalists in Lincoln, Neb., and vicinity was the gathering at Butler avenue June 25 for the double purpose of celebrating the release of the church from all indebtedness and the ordination to the work of the ministry of Miss Laura H. Wild, who has been supplying the church for some time.

The American Missionary Association is about to erect a church at Fajardo, Porto Rico, to seat about 300. The association has educational work at Santurce and Lares, designed to train teachers for the public schools, but its special missionary effort is in the extreme eastern end of the island, with headquarters at Fajardo, the largest town on the coast, and mission stations at Humacao, Luguillo, Naguabo and one or two other places. It is expected that a fine state normal school will be located at Fajardo, hence its selection for the new church, for which a fine site has been secured, and upon which work will begin at once. The region is very thickly populated. Two new missionaries are to be sent in September, both Spanish-speaking, making a Congregational force on the island of eighteen.

The Disciples.

Mitchell Park church, St. Joseph, Mo., has had additions every Sunday since May 1.

The church at Grand Junction, Colo., where Rev. M. A. Thompson ministers, is contemplating building a new $8,000 house of worship. The plans have been drawn up.

Rev. Howard Cree of Kentucky will succeed Rev. James McAllister as pastor of Central church, St. Louis, on Oct. 1st.

Rev. J. B. Sweeney has been in Gainsville, Texas, a little over two years, and during that time an even 500 have been added to the church.

Rev. W. H. Hanna and wife will sail July 29 from San Francisco for Manila as missionaries of the Christian church.

At Mattoon, Ill., 304 persons have been received into the Christian Church in the space of two years and three months.

About $5,000 was raised in cash and pledges on Dedication Day at Wilkingsburg, Pa. The building which was bought from the Presbyterians, will be remodeled somewhat.

A beautiful frame church building was dedicated June 23 at Central Park, Mont. It cost $1,541.80, and is for the Christian congregation organized last January.

The South Dakota state convention was held at Sioux Falls June 20 and 21. W. S. Lennon, state evangelist, spoke on "The Needs and Resources of South Dakota."

The Foreign Missionary Society has 400 orphan boys at one of the mission stations, Damoh, India. The Christian Endeavor societies have assumed the support of nearly all of them.

Eureka College has received from Mrs. Deborah Bandy of Danville, Ill., property valued at $25,000, which includes a farm of 200 acres and her city residence property. This is for the endowment of a Bible Chair.

An endowment of $10,000 has been given by Mrs. M. M. Blanks of Lockhart, Texas, to endow a Bible Chair in connection with the University of Texas. It is expected that a building will be erected for this purpose in the fall.

Rev. Joseph Lewis has entered upon his second year at Bakersfield, Cal., with a generous increase in salary. During the past year twenty-five were added to the membership, and seventy-five to the Sunday School. All departments prosper.

The Board of Church Extension has helped to build thirty-five churches in Washington and Oregon at an expenditure of about $20,000. Dr. G. W. Muckley has been national secretary of the board eleven years and has lifted its funds from $35,000 to nearly $300,000.

The Central Christian church, Terre Haute, Ind., with their pastor, Rev. Q. E. Sellers, have established two missions in the suburbs and have just closed a meeting preparatory to organizing a third. Nineteen were added to the church as a result of this meeting.

At Isadora, Mo., a neat church edifice was dedicated June 30. Last December a church of forty-two members was organized by Rev. T. W. Cottingham of Kansas City. The new building cost $1,500; the last $200 was raised on the day of dedication, with a surplus of $36. There have been eight new members added to the church within two weeks.

Another church organization is being built upon the north side of the river in Spokane. Dr. J. M. Ailen, formerly pastor of the Central Christian church in that city, will be pastor of this new work. A lot has been purchased and the old building of St. Joseph's Catholic church, which will be removed to the new site. This will be called the Dean Avenue Christian church. For the present, services are being held in the Swedish church on Broadway.

The Christian churches of Polk county, Ia., united in an annual convocation at Chautauqua Park, Des Moines, June 30. Some twenty churches were represented. The program began with a model Sunday school, presided over by H. H. Slayton. The orchestra of the Central and the University churches were united for the occasion. The attendance was over 1,000. A communion service followed the Sunday school. The afternoon service was largely attended. Dr. Charles Reign Scoville preached.

ACTIVE BRAIN.

Must Have Good Food or Nervous Prostration Surely Follows.

It is a lamentable fact that American brain workers do not, as a rule, know how to feed themselves to rebuild the daily loss occasioned by active mental effort. This fact, coupled with the disastrous effects of the alkaloids contained in tobacco, coffee and whisky, makes a sure pathway towards nervous prostration.

The remedy is simple enough. Employ the services of a food expert, who knows the kind of food required to rebuild the daily losses in the human body. This can be done by making free use of Grape-Nuts, the famous breakfast food, which contains exactly the elemental principles which have an affinity for albumen and go directly to rebuild the gray matter in the brain, solar plexus and nerve centers throughout the body. Follow your selection of food up with a dismissal of coffee, tobacco and whisky for fifteen days and mark the difference in your mental ability, which means everything to the average hustling American, who must have physical and mental strength or he falls out in the race for dollars.

Episcopal.

A clericus of the clergymen of the Northwest was held June 25-27. Some forty visiting clergymen were in attendance, mostly from the jurisdiction of Spokane and the dioceses of New Westminster and British Columbia. Discussions of important topics alternated with pleasant social gatherings and excursions.

An Episcopal church is to be built in Manila this summer. A site has recently been purchased. There is in hand toward the building $10,000. Episcopal services in Manila have been thus far more largely attended by army and navy officers and the American official class. Some natives have been reached.

The synod of the diocese of Springfield, meeting June 25, decided to petition the general convention to divide the diocese along the line of the Illinois Central railroad. The diocese of Springfield after the proposed division will contain twenty-eight counties, with a population of 851,622, seventeen parishes and 3,252 communicants. The missionary district will comprise thirty-two counties, with a population of 729,901, four parishes and 874 communicants.

St. Mark's parish, Berkeley, Cal., is to commence at once the erection of a church as a memorial of Bishop Kip. It is to be built in the style of the Spanish Renaissance after the cathedrals of old Spain. The materials are to be cement on expanded steel. It will have a seating capacity of 800 and will cost $15,000.

Rev. Otto J. Scoville, an Episcopal clergyman who was educated as a Presbyterian at the McCormick seminary, Chicago, and filled pulpits at Independence, Iowa, and elsewhere in that state and Wisconsin, died recently at Salem, Ore., aged forty-three.

St. Peter's church at North Lake, Wis., has been rebuilt by the family of the late Col. Joseph McC. Bell as a memorial of their father, and was consecrated June 29 by Bishop Nicholson.

The twentieth anniversary of the ordination to the priesthood of Rev. William Elmer, rector of St. Philip's church, St. Louis, were held July 7.

Lutheran.

Rev. Socrates Henkel, D. D., widely known throughout the south, died at his home in New Market, Va., June 20. He was pastor emeritus of Emanuel Evangelical Lutheran church, New Market, Va., at the time of his death, having been in active service forty-five years. He was editor-in-chief of "Our Church Paper," the recognized organ of the Evangelical Lutheran church in the south.

Rev. Ingvold Esteinsen, one of the most widely known pastors of the Norwegian Lutheran church in the Northwest, died at the family residence, in St. Paul, June 27, after an illness of about two months.

Rev. William A. Passavant of Pittsburg died suddenly of apoplexy July 1 at Jumonville, Pa. He was widely known as a philanthropist, having devoted his life to the endowment of hospitals. He established Passavant hospital in Pittsburg; Passavant hospital, Chicago; Passavant home for epileptics, Rochester, Pa.; Passavant Memorial hall, Jacksonville, Fla.; Milwaukee hospital, Milwaukee, Wis., in all of which he was a director. He was buried at Pittsburg.

The Danish Lutheran congregation at Albert Lea, Minn., have granted their pastor, Rev. J. J. Kildsig, a four months' vacation, which he will devote to the raising of funds to pay off the indebtedness of the denomination's educational institutions.

Methodist.

A new Methodist church at Bluffton, Ind., was dedicated June 30 and freed from debt by subscriptions of $7,000 made at the service of dedication.

Rev. A. A. Whitman, pastor of Allen Temple, Atlanta, Ga. (African M. E. church), and one of the best known negro writers of the state, has just died of typhoid fever. He was the author of a volume of poems which has attracted attention. The membership of his church was over 600.

The First M. E. church of St. Paul, Minn., rejoices over the payment of the debt incurred in building improvements. The Rev. Dr. Cowgill, the pastor, secured most of the subscriptions in the course of his pastoral visitations.

Presbyterian.

The North Avenue church of Atlanta, Ga., was dedicated June 23. It is one of the handsomest church edifices in the city and cost $50,000. The congregation was organized as a church in December, 1898, with 115 members, and the Rev. Richard Orme Flinn called as pastor.

The Rev. Charles O. Powers, a member of Platte Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian church and pastor of Mount Zion church, South St. Joseph, Mo., and the Green Valley church, died at his home June 26.

For Bellevue college, Neb., a new building was dedicated June 12. It was named after Walter Lowrie, secretary and treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, and built by the gifts of two friends of the college, as a home for girl students.

The Old First church, Springfield, Ohio, Dr. John Clark Hill, pastor, at the June communion, received twenty-three persons on confession. This is the result of the personal work campaign that the church entered upon about eight weeks ago. There were no extra meetings, but there was quiet, earnest, direct, personal work done by a band of workers, each of whom made a pledge to endeavor to add one on confession at this communion. The plan of work was that pursued by the Central church, Rochester, N. Y., and given in detail in literature furnished by the National Gospel Campaign committee, New York.

The Sunday school annex of the First Presbyterian church of Guthrie, Okla., was dedicated June 30. Rev. C. S. Miles, pastor of the church, officiating. The Sunday school, the largest in the territory, having outgrown the church building, three months ago decided to build an annex, containing primary and other class rooms and gallery, and completed and furnished it at a cost of $1,000, dedicating it free of debt.

Rev. John Copeland has resigned as pastor of the First Presbyterian church, St. Paul.

NEW HUSBAND.

Quite an Improvement on the Old.

"I have been compelled to stop drinking it." I said to the friend who asked me to strengthen up on a cup of her good coffee. "Well," she said, "that needn't bother you, for I have Postum Food Coffee here, which completely cured a friend of mine of sick headaches." I tried her coffee and it was very good, but when I tried to make it at home, I was disappointed. I soon found that I was not making it correctly, but by putting in two heaping teaspoons of Postum for each person and letting it boil twenty minutes, it was delicious.

I had at that time been an invalid for several years, but did not know my trouble was caused by coffee drinking, of which I was very fond. I immediately began to feel better after leaving off coffee and using Postum, and stuck to it. One day I met a lady who was troubled the same as I was, and whose appearance on the street really shocked me, for she was so emaciated. She exclaimed in surprise at my improved appearance, and wanted to know what I had been doing. She asked me if I had had a healer of any kind. I said, "Yes, I have allowed Postum Food Coffee to work the almost complete miracle of curing me."

My husband has been absent in Georgia for some time, and has been in wretched health, having been in the hospital twice for indigestion. I wrote him to stop using coffee and try Postum, told him also just how to make it. Yesterday I received a letter from him in which he says, "I am feeling very much better, thanks to you and Postum. I sleep better, eat better, and in fact, my dear, am quite an improvement on the old husband." Alice L. Gilson, 805 Park avenue, Salt Lake City, Utah.

AN UP-TO-DATE SUNDAY SCHOOL

A WORKER'S MANUAL.

A TREATISE ON SUNDAY SCHOOL MANAGEMENT
BY A SKILLED WORKMAN—A CHRISTIAN EDUCATOR OF RIPE EXPERIENCE,

E. A. FOX,

General Secretary the Kentucky Sunday School Association.

This bright little book had an interesting origin. The author realizing the need for an authoritative treatise on the subject, outlined what he considered to be a model, up-to-date Sunday School. This outline was sent to the leading Sunday School workers of the United States for criticism. Almost without exception, the author was highly complimented, and few changes were suggested. This outline, improved by the valuable ideas thus secured forms the basis of the book. It furnishes an epitome of

The Very Latest and Best Methods in Sunday School Work.

with well developed plans for inaugurating and using them, adapting it to the use of the busy superintendent and teacher. No Sunday School worker can study this manual without catching new angles of light on the problem of successful Sunday School management. Get this valuable little volume, follow its suggestions and your Sunday School is certain to be attractive and successful.

The representations by denominations were: Methodists, 136; Presbyterians, 63; Congregationalists, 55; Baptists,

The Teachings of the Books

Or THE LITERARY STRUCTURE AND SPIRITUAL INTERPRETATION OF THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The work of collaboration by Herbert L. Willett and James M. Campbell. It has been widely and favorably reviewed in the religious journals of this country and Great Britain and is now in use in many classes organized in colleges, seminaries, churches and other groups of Bible students. Several pastors have written that they are using it in normal classes on the study of the New Testament. Others that they are following their work in their prayer-meeting services. While from many quarters have come reports of the helpful use made of the book in family and private devotion and study. Price, postpaid, $1.25. The thirtieth annual convention of the McLean County (Ills.) Sunday School association opened June 27 in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, Danvers, Ill. The attendance was very large. Mrs. M. F. Bryner gave an address on blackboard talks, and State President Mills of Decatur spoke on "Sunday School Grit" and "The Sunday School Teacher's Opportunity."

The ministers of Bay City, Mich., have formed a committee of one hundred to see that the laws and ordinances governing the city are enforced. It was an open secret that every saloon was to remain open July 4 in spite of the liquor law. Evidence against open saloons was to be taken with a view to prosecutions later.

Foreign Missionary Items.

After his return from England the native pastor at Yenije, Turkey, enlisted his congregation in the building of a public bath, to be a source of income for the support of evangelical work in the village. For several years the young men had been collecting money from the culture of silk worms so that a fund of $600 was ready in hand, generous subscriptions from the Yenije people swelled the sum, and in addition these same young men pledged themselves to provide all the stone and sand that might be necessary. They nobly redeemed their pledge, often working far into the night and with lanterns on the mountains after a day of hard labor in their fields. "The villagers too caught the enthusiasm and united with our people in drawing the heavy carts of stone through the streets, often keeping everybody awake far into the night by their vociferous shouting."

Henceforth students of private schools in Japan, as well as of government schools, can enter the higher government schools on competitive examination. Rev. George E. Albrecht, D. D., says that "this last step of the educational department renders void the 'department instruction' passed two years ago discriminating against religious schools. In fact, this instruction still stands, but it has no actual force. Christian schools have now all the privileges they have asked for, and we can well thank God and take courage."

E. M. Gordon from Mungeli, India, writes: Twenty-eight were admitted to the church recently. Of this number six were lepers, six were from among the orphans and the remaining sixteen were people from the neighborhood, whom we had assisted in the famine, but who are now independ-

Note the net prices on the few sample bargains we offer. No old books, but the newest and best books from the best publishing houses in the country. We will supply any books you may want at a special net price—at a great reduction from the publisher's list price. Write us about the books you want and get our price before you order.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS AT OUR SPECIAL NET PRICES

Early Christianity. A Study of Beginnings. By HERBERT L. WILLETT, D. D., Dean of the Disciples' Divinity House and Assistant Professor of Semitics at the University of Chicago.

12mo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.25. Our special net price 94c, postage extra, 11c.

In connection with a series of University Extension Lectures, Prof. Willett has prepared these studies of the Christianity of the First Century. The enthusiastic reception accorded the lectures wherever delivered and the countless demands for their publication, has impelled the author to make a thorough revision and issue them in their present form.

The Fact of Christ. By P. CARNEGIE SIMPSON, M. A.

12mo, cloth. Publisher's Price, $1.25. Our special net price, 94c, postage extra, 11c.

It is the best statement of the claims of Christianity to put in the hands of young men and women who may be sceptical or honestly inquiring, that I know. . . . I do not know any book that can touch it in its adaptation to the needs of students. . . . There are thousands of young men who are in doubt who will be helped by it.

How to Promote and Conduct a Successful Revival. Edited by R. A. TORREY.

12mo, cloth, 352 pages, gilt top. Publisher's Price, $1.50. Our special net price $1.12, postage extra, 14c.

It may confidently be asserted that never before within the cover of any one volume has there been brought such a wealth of material bearing upon Revival work. A glance at the contents and authors assures one of the extraordinary value of this book.

THE HOLY SPIRIT IN A REVIVAL, R. A. Torrey
THE PASTOR AS AN EVANGELIST, Rev. William Patterson

The Teachings of the Books, or the Literary Structure and the Spiritual Interpretation of the Books of New Testament, by Herbert L. Willett and James M. Campbell.

12mo, cloth. Publisher's Price, $1.50. Our special net price $1.12, postage extra, 13c.

For the Pastor's study and the Normal class it is a work of great value. As an aid to private devotion and study it is fully worth the price.

Three Years With the Children. By AMOS R. WELLS

12mo, cloth, 232 pages. Publisher's price, $1.25. Our special net price 94c, postage 9c.

The book gets its title from the fact that it contains exactly 156 talks, or one for every week of three years. Variety abounds. There are talks for every season of the year from New Year around to Christmas, temperance talks, object lessons, stories, exercises for the children, plans for the primary Sunday-school class, illustrations of Bible events. Any one having anything to do with children will find the book useful. A full topical index adds to its value.

The Old Testament and the Monuments. By Prof. IRA M. PRICE, Ph. D.

12mo, cloth, 321 pages. Publisher's net price $1.50. Our special net price $1.35, postage extra 15c.

A valuable and readable summary of all we know of the Monumental Records of Old Testament History, arranged chronologically so as to be read along side of your Old Testament History. Easily the best book on the subject.

Two Thousand Years of Missions Before Cary. By LEMUEL BARNES.

12mo, cloth, 304 pages. Publisher's net price $1.50. Our special net price $1.35, postage extra 15c.

An exhaustive treatise and comprehensive survey of Christian Missions before Cary. A very important book.

Religious Movements for Social Betterment. By JOSIAH STRONG.

12mo, cloth, publishers price 50 cents; our special net price 38 cents; postage extra 6 cents.

"Those churches are shown to have the most vigorous growth which have been most enterprising in adjusting their activities to the various needs of the new social environment. Contains an excellent account of institutional church work."

Constructive Studies in the Life of Christ. By ERNEST DEWITT BURTON and SHAILER MATHEWS of the University of Chicago.

8vo, cloth, 320 pages; publishers price $1.00; our special net price 75c; postage extra 14c.

A scheme of Bible Studies especially designed for students. It serves as a compendious commentary on the gospels.

A Dictionary of the Bible. By Dr. WM. SMITH American edition edited by N. B. Hackett, D. D., Dr. Ezra Abbott, LL. D. D.

4 volumes, boxed. 8vo, cloth, 3067 pages, 504 illustrations. Publisher's former price $20.00, now $10.00. Our special net price $7.50, express extra $1.00.

Every reader of the leading writers on the Holy Scriptures, has noticed the frequent references to this Dictionary. It has been for years the standard book of its kind. Till very recently the price of these four volumes was $20, and many who desired to own them had to be content with abridgements—usually a very unsatisfactory sort of book to the student. Every such student of the Scriptures who has hungered for this book in its completeness now has it brought within his reach.

ent of our aid. Quite a number of promising young men are coming forward. The conditions here are more encouraging than they have been before in the history of the station. The church now numbers about 130, and is increasing continually. The church is slowly and surely taking hold of the idea of independence and self-support. The members are paying their own minister and take great pleasure in doing this. The fact that we have so many young people in our church here is a matter of special thankfulness, for they are much more susceptible to Christian teaching and more able to adapt themselves to new conditions than those who have spent the first part of their life in heathenism and ignorance.

Church-Going in Scotland.

One of the important subjects dealt with by both Presbyterian assemblies in Edinburgh during the month of May was the increasing aversion shown by the people generally to attend church. The non-church goers are mostly found at both ends of the social scale, the wealthy and the working classes; the great supporters of the church, now as always, are the middle classes of the community. The recent government census returns show that none of the churches in the land are increasing in membership in the same ratio as the population, and the church reports deplore a great decrease in church attendance and in the number of Sunday school teachers and scholars. Dr. Howie of Glasgow, the convener of the home mission committee of the United Free church, states that the estimated best church attendance in all denominations in Glasgow per 10,000 of population is 1,711; in Dundee, 1,635; in Aberdeen, 1,751. Applying this to the present population, Dr. Howie brings out in his report that there are in Glasgow and its suburbs at this time no fewer than 462,000 people who do not go to church; in Dundee, 82,000, and in Aberdeen, 72,000. Figures of the same kind are not available for Edinburgh, but the proportions would probably be not very different from those of the other large towns of Scotland.

INDIA LETTER.

This is the "dull season" in India—about like August in America. From May 1 until the monsoon sets in, which at most of our stations occurs about June 15, we have the hottest season of the year. During the day the thermometer gets up to 110 degrees or 120 degrees in the shade, and the nights are correspondingly hot. During this period all the schools are closed and everyone who can, goes on a vacation. The heat is very trying even to those born in the country. Consequently, all new missionaries who are not yet acclimated, and all the old ones who are unwell or who can get away, leave the plains for a short vacation.

Landour, Mussorie, may be called the summer headquarters of our mission in India. Just now there are twelve missionaries and missionaries' wives assembled here for periods ranging from six weeks in the case of older missionaries to several months for the new ones. It is safe to say that the older missionaries have the better time. To them it means a complete cessation from their work for a short time. But to the new ones it is only a change of location, for their chief work, the study of the language, must go on with increased energy, that they may be prepared for more work when they return to the plains.

The scenery is indescribably beautiful. The station is about 7,000 or 8,000 feet above sea level, on a spur of the Himalayas—"the abode of snow." Off to the south may be seen the comparatively low-lying range known as the Siwalik Hills, whose name is familiar to all students of geology. In the opposite direction are lines of snow-clad peaks, towering 28,000 feet or more in height. Among them are the mountains in which the sacred Ganges and Jumna have their origin. The nearest ranges to the north are dotted over, clear up to their summits, with native villages and with fields of wheat just ready to harvest. Six or seven miles away, to the south, extends a broad flat plain, about 4,000 feet lower than we are.

Many of the missionaries here have seen long years of service. The Rev. I. S. Woodside, of the Presbyterian Church, has spent half a century in India. Dr. Valentine has been here for a generation. His work now is the carrying on of a medical school for the training of native physicians. One of our helpers, John Punna, at Timurni, near Harda, is from Dr. Valentine's school. Dr. Valentine says that he is exceedingly hopeful concerning the prospects of mission work in India. Old missionaries, he says, are the most enthusiastic. Those who have newly come out, seeing the tremendous power of heathenism and the smallness of the Christian force contending against it, are sometimes almost discouraged. But those who have spent years in the country have seen conditions far worse than they are now, and knowing what has already been accomplished, are confident in the ultimate triumph of the Gospel.

News comes from Damsh that Bro. Rambo has succeeded in obtaining a tract of 400 acres of land to be used for orphanage purposes. Most of this land is jungle,—grown up with bushes of from six to twenty feet high—such as an American farmer would probably call brush. Part of the land is suited for agricultural purposes and will be farmed by some of the older boys in

HIRAM COLLEGE

A school for both sexes, located at Hiram, Portage County, Ohio, 35 miles southeast of Cleveland.

A SPLENDID LOCATION.

Beautiful scenery, pure air, excellent water. An ideal college town, modern, up-to-date, lighted by electricity and having a fine system of water-works.

GOOD BUILDINGS.

The buildings are comparatively new. Main building commodious and convenient in all its appointments. A large and beautiful Christian Association building, erected five years ago at a cost of $30,000. Two excellent ladies' halls well furnished and supplied with modern conveniences. Music building for the accommodation of our large and growing music department. A library and observatory building just completed, the gift of Abram Teasdale, and a Warner & Swazey's nine inch telescope, costing approximately $5000, the gift of Lathrop Cooley.

LIBRARIES AND APPARATUS.

A large and well equipped chemical laboratory. Two other laboratories, Physiological and Physical. A well selected library; large additions to this library will soon be made. A good museum. A large and well furnished gymnasium.

COURSES OF STUDY.

Four Classical Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Four Scientific Courses—Regular, Philosophical, Legal and Medical. Four Literary Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Five Special Courses—Music, Oratorical, Business, Art, Teachers' Special elective courses in any variety.

CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS.

We have a strong body of Professors and Instructors, twenty-four in number. They are for the most part specialists of large attainments and are thoroughly abreast of the times.

Literary Societies and Religious Organizations.

Hiram has five literary societies of unusual strength and vigor; two Christian associations that contribute much to the religious life of the school. Several departmental and social organizations of special interest and value.

EXPENSES.

Expenses are very moderate. Good table board can be had for $2.00 per week, club board for $1.25 to $1.75. Room rent for 50 cents to $1.00 per week. Tuition for four to five dollars per term for each study. The three leading items of board, tuition and room rent may be reduced to about $125.00 for the college year of 38 weeks.

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

Under the auspices of the T. W. Phillips' Loan fund an industrial department is being established that will assist about fifty young people. It is believed that students admitted to this department may reduce the entire expense of the year, including tuition, to about $90.00, and those who do considerable work may reduce expenses to sixty or seventy dollars. the orphanage. Two of the boys farmed a small tract of land last year.

Miss Mildred Franklin of Harda, has been suffering from malarial fever for more than a year. She is now in Landour enjoying the benefits of its spring-like climate, and hopes to return to the plains free from the disease. Mrs. Lohr of Bilaspur, is also here on the same mission,—recovery from malaria. She had not planned to come here, but at the close of the school season was so run down by fever that the change was necessary. She has lately taken charge of some village schools near Bilaspur and is meeting with much success. She hopes that some of those in attendance may be led to Christ.

While we are all here, we are not neglecting the assembling of ourselves together. There is a Union Church here, whose pulpit is supplied during the season by missionaries present from the plains, but in addition to its services we are having two meetings of our own each week; a Thursday afternoon prayer meeting, and the observance of the Lord's Supper on Sunday morning. These meetings are a source of much joy and spiritual blessing to us all. In a few weeks our little assemblage will break up, and each will return to labor in his own vineyard.

TRADE.

I have a magnificent spectacular production, consisting of fifty-two fine-art oil paintings, each painting 10x15 feet in size, covering 8,000 feet of canvas (canvas if bought today would cost over $1,500). These paintings were painted by a great European artist, costing $75,000. They are the original, only ones of the kind on record. It took five years to complete this wonderful work. They are easily placed in position, moved by light machinery, easily handled, and make a fine presentation to the audience. It's a drawing entertainment; instructive and most pleasing. People give it the highest praise. These paintings are magnificent in the extreme. It is necessary to see them to realize their beauty and grandeur. The subject of this great work is, "St. John on the Isle of Patmos," starting with the twelve apostles, life size, going through fifty-two immense paintings, which are thrilling, most beautiful and beyond comparison. They were given in the principal cities of Europe and some cities of America. Fourteen nights in one of the opera houses of Chicago, the last night the proceeds being $1,159. They can be handled by anyone, and are a fine business enterprise. It brings large profits, draws great crowds. Fine advertising matter goes with them. They are checked as baggage on railroads, with some excess. They are nicely boxed and weigh about 600 pounds.

I will trade for land or good town property. Good reasons for trading. Please address F. Howard Sweetman, Singing Evangelist, Sioux City, Ia.

Dark Day in New England.

The "dark day" in New England occurred on May 19, 1780. The day dawned as usual, but about 9:30 a. m. the darkness came on, the cattle returned to their yards and the fowls went to roost. The people took their mid-day meal by candle light, and later in the day the darkness grew less. The legislature of Connecticut was in session and one member moved to adjourn, as to him it was evident that the judgment day had come. Another member, before this motion was put, remarked: "The judgment day is coming, or it isn't coming. If it isn't coming, we have nothing to fear; if it is coming, I wish to be found doing my duty. Therefore I move that the candles be lit."

Woman and Home.

My Father's House.

My Father's house has many rooms,
And each is fair;
And some are reached through gathered glooms
By silent stair;
But he keeps house, and makes it home,
Whichever way the children come.

Plenty and peace are everywhere
His house within;
The rooms are eloquent with prayer,
The songs begin,
And dear hearts, filled with love, are glad,
Forgetting that they once were sad.

The Father's house is surely thine,
Therefore why wait?
His lights of love through darkness shine,
The hours grow late.
Push back the curtain of thy doubt,
And enter—none will cast thee out!
—Marianne Farningham.

"I have lived to know that a wiser hand than mine has guided my life, and that I have never had a prayer which was unanswered. But God may answer No as well as Yes. You have to say No to the wee tots in the kindergarten when they ask for favors which would not be good for them. I can truly say as I look back over the years of my pilgrim way that God has always chosen the very best things for his child. My favorite song is,
"I know not the way I am going,
But well do I know my Guide;
With a childlike faith I hold the hand
Of the mighty Friend at my side."
—Mrs. Margaret Sangster.

At the commencement of Columbia University President Low announced the gift of $100,000 for the purpose of endowing a chair of Chinese language and literature. The gift was anonymous and was accompanied by a letter which was, in part, as follows:

"For fifty years or more I have refrained from whisky and tobacco, and enclose you a check which represents the interest on my savings, without condition, except that I reserve the privilege of increasing the amount. In making the gift I am moved chiefly by the appreciation of the importance of the object to be attained. Take it as an old man's view of the costs of the habits mentioned."

The ever-recurring problem of domestic service is to meet another effort at its solution in the establishment of an industrial school for the training of the mountain white girls on practical lines that shall fit them to be trained help in our homes. At Monte Vista, amid the foothills of the Alleghenies this new venture is inaugurated. The tuition is free, and to cover this and other expenses (school buildings, factories, etc., etc.), life memberships are being sold, which entitle the purchaser to the privilege of getting girls from the school and a free lot of one-quarter of an acre for a building site, as it is the purpose of the board of directors to open a winter and summer resort as one means of support for the school; other means will be the erecting of canning and preserving factories, knitting mills, poultry and dairy farms.

Growing Away From Our Loved Ones.

Not going away from them, but growing apart from them, which is surely the sadder experience! When those we love leave us for a journey, for an exile, or for heaven, our hearts bridge the chasm between us with a hope of future gladness when we shall meet again. But when there comes "the little rift within the lute, that by-and-by shall make the music mute," we have no such consolation. What so unsatisfactory as a patched-up friendship? What so impossible as the healing of an intangible, unconfessed wound?

Love can survive a good honest quarrel, and flourish more thriftily sometimes when a summer storm has cleared the sultry atmosphere and swept away the cobwebs, but woe to love when the frost of indifference settles blightingly upon it, or when two who started by being all the world to each other end by revolving, like ivory balls, in orbits of their own.

Sometimes this torpor of love, which is simply a slow death, falls upon wedded hearts, and then the home suffers. Sometimes brothers and sisters allow the crowding cares of life to separate them. Sometimes friends give each other up, and lose the strength and help and mutual support which comes of congenial intercourse, simply through sheer indolence, inertia, or selfishness. It takes a little time and trouble to go and call or make a visit. To write a letter requires exertion. So the friend is neglected, and naturally, after a while, the friendship becomes like a worn-out tree, which no longer offers sweet fruit for plucking.

It is inevitable that as we go on in life changes shall come to ourselves, our homes, our friends, and our work. Youth is full of fiery impulses, of generous ardor, and of quick decisions. Middle-age moves more cautiously and with less enthusiasm. The evening of life is calm, serene, tolerant, and patient. As a rule, we make friends easily and often when we are young. In maturity we are apt to grow cautious and careful. But we need, as we advance in years, to cultivate our friends, to be careful to show them attention, and to prize at their true worth dear ones who have

Joe's Way and Bob's.

"If something would only turn up," sighed Joe,
"I could make a success of life I know. And I wouldn't live just for myself—Everybody should have a share of my wealth."
He might have won both wealth and esteem,
But he wasted his time in an idle dream.

"I'll turn something up," said Bob, with a smile,
So he tramped o'er the city for many a mile;
Asking for work at office and store,
Until, at last, he reached the right door.
The work was hard and the pay was slim,
But hard work meant promotion, and that suited him.

The time that Joe was dreaming away
Bob kept on working, and made it pay.
Joe feels that Dame Fortune has cheated him,
For Bob's cup with good things she's filled to the brim.
With the poor and needy he shares his cup,
As Joe will do—when something turns up.
—The Boys' Industrial School.

Filipino Wings.

When General Young's cavalry took San Fernando de Union, they defeated there several hundred insurgents under Tino. The enemy retreated, leaving behind their dead and wounded, the American soldiers pursuing them for some distance picking off stragglers.

Suddenly some of our men saw, as they themselves afterwards told me, a mounted insurgent officer galloping after fleeing men. A volley from the American cavalymen brought down the Filipino's horse, but the rider regained his feet unhurt. So sure were the Americans of his capture that they ceased firing, expecting him to surrender at once. But to their surprise he ran towards a stone house on the beach and therein disappeared.

From this building a sand embankment extended for at least a mile up the beach, finally losing itself in a thicket of bamboos. This was one of the numerous trenches thrown up by the insurgents.

Suddenly the head and shoulders of a man were seen to move rapidly along the ridge of this embankment. So great was its speed that before the soldiers had time to open fire the figure shot out of sight into the distant bamboos.

A thorough search of the house was instigated, but not a soul was found within. The insurgent officer could certainly not have escaped by means of a horse, for the Americans had passed through that same house but ten minutes before, and any horse would have been seen. Besides, no native pony could ever have attained the speed with which that figure had shot along the beach behind the trench. The mystery remained unsolved.

Some months afterwards as I was telling this story to my native friend, Ignacio Villamor, whose brother Blas I knew to have been Tino's adjutant at San Fernando, he commenced to laugh immoderately.

"Yes," he said, "my brother told me of that incident. Your soldiers were certainly outwitted that time."

"But how did the man escape?" I asked.

"On a bicycle," laughed Villamor.—Albert Sonnichsen.

A Siberian Picture.

Describing her recent journey across Siberia, Mrs. F. E. Clark says, in The Christian Endeavor World: "If the Siberian village was of any size, there was always a little church painted blue and green, a combination of colors which theoretically you would disapprove of, but practically, among the green trees and under the blue skies, the little blue and green churches were very picturesque, harmonizing prettily with their surroundings, and brightening up the little villages with a touch of color.

"Often the steamer stopped at one of these little villages; and then every man, woman and child would come down to the shore to see the travelers. The women and girls brought their arms full of bottles of milk or kvass, loaves of bread, eggs, sour cream, and other delicacies. The men stood ready to catch the rope that was thrown ashore and tie to a post, or to help put the gangplank ashore, or to stare at the boat and its occupants, or to help with the wood which the steamer burns instead of coal; while the old parish priest with his long gown and his crucifix, and his long curly hair hanging over his shoulders, stood superintending the whole business with a benevolent expression, as if he were just waiting till the hubbub should be over to say, 'Bless you, my children!'"

Mother Goose in School.

According to the Chicago Chronicle, Professor McClintock, of the Chicago University, has been telling the teachers of his city that the Mother Goose rhymes are a scientific vehicle for conveying knowledge. It is with no disrespect to him that we quote what the funny man of the Chronicle proceeds to suggest as adaptations of some familiar verses.

"Tom, Tom, the banker's son,
Stole a million and off he run;
He spent the rocks
On gilt-edged stocks,
And now he owns five city blocks."

The following, it is suggested, would impress on the plastic mind a commercial tendency of our age:

"Sing a song of six bits,
Pockets full of 'dust,'
Four and twenty oil-wells
Joined into a trust;
When the trust was ready,
The wells began to spout,
And those who put their money in Began to take it out."

Or this, to inculcate careful dealings in the markets:

"Baa, baa, black sheep,
Have you any wool?
Well, I should say so—
A warehouse full.
But I don't care who Sells or buys—
I am going to hold it
Till the prices rise."

Faithful Service.

"High hearts are never long without hearing some new call, some distant clarion of God, even in their dreams; and soon they are observed to break up the camp of ease and start on some fresh march of faithful service." This is one of the fine statements not often quoted, of the late Rev. James Martineau. It is the privilege of the Christian teacher to sound this new call and to create the inspiration in the "high hearts," now resting in the "camps of ease" and quickening them for the onward march. The responses are oftentimes encouraging to the faithful minister, and he rejoices when his leadership is acknowledged and followed. Every faithful minister has the assurance that the divine voice of duty, voiced by one who would sincerely and prayerfully do good to his fellows, always finds an answering response in due time. No voice, however feeble, lifted up for the truth, ever dies amidst the confused noises of time. Through discords of sin and error, woe and death, it rises a deathless melody to blend with the great harmony of a reconciled universe.

In answer to the question, What is the difference between Elijah and Dewie? someone has wittily replied: That whereas the former was fed by ravens the latter is being fed by gulls.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kansas, in another column. This is a company of very high standing, vouched for by leading banks throughout the country. Their home banks say the company's methods of doing business are all that a customer could ask. They prove by the most skilled physicians and thousands of wearers that their Brace is the best of cures for ailments peculiar to women and girls, and for abdominal weakness, backache, lung troubles or general weakness of either sex. It cures after everything else has failed. Their book of plain, common sense reasoning which is fully illustrated is sent free in sealed envelope to all who ask for it. They refund the purchase price to any who are not pleased with the Brace after 30 days' trial. We suggest that you write to them for full information at once.

Where It Really Is Hot.

Away down South in Georgia they are having hot weather, but they don't get mad about it. Frank L. Stanton explains the case thus in the Atlanta Constitution:

Too hot for thinking,
 Too hot to write,
 Too hot to quarrel,
 Too hot to fight.
 Too hot for talkin',
 For ridin' or walkin',
 But the world's out o' sight—out o' sight!

Too hot for dreamin',
 Ey day or by night;
 Too hot for schemin',
 For wrong or for right;
 Too hot for sighin'—
 For livin' or dyin',
 But the world's out o' sight—out o' sight!

Feminine Dress.

Women are more like flowers than we think. In their dress and adornment they express their nature as the flowers do in their petals and colors. Some women are like the modest daisies and violets—they never look or feel better than when dressed in a morning wrapper. Others are not themselves until they flaunt out in gorgeous dyes, like tulip or rose. Who has not seen women just like white lilies? There are women fit only for velvets like the dahlias; others are graceful and airy like the azaleas. Now and then you see hollyhocks and sunflowers. When women are free to dress as they like, uncontrolled by others and not limited by their circumstances, they do not fail to express their true characters, and dress becomes a form of expression very genuine and useful.

"I need oil," said an ancient monk. So he planted him an olive sapling. "Lord," he prayed, "it needs rain that its tender roots may drink and swell. Send gentle showers." And the Lord sent a gentle shower. "Lord," prayed the monk, "my tree needs sun. Send sun, I pray thee." And the sun shone, gilding the dripping clouds. "Now frost, my Lord, to brace its tissues," cried the monk. And behold, the little tree stood sparkling with frost. But at even-song it died. Then the monk sought the cell of a brother monk and told his strange experience. "I, too, have planted a little tree," the other monk said; "and see! it thrives well. But I entrusted my little tree to its God. He who made it knows better what it needs than a man like me. I laid no condition; I fixed not ways or means. 'Lord, send it what it needs,' I prayed; 'storm or sunshine, wind, rain or frost. Thou hast made it, and thou dost know.'"

IMPRESSED UPON HIS NOTICE.

The various features for which the Lackawanna Railroad has become noted are involuntarily impressed upon the notice of the passenger, who realizes the luxury of hotel or club appointment in the electric lights, the smooth-running journals of the wheels, the extraordinary cleanliness made possible by the use of anthracite coal, avoiding all dust and nauseating smoke, the consciousness of being always on time—which comforts force an ease of mind and body most favorable to the enjoyment of the unsurpassed scenery through which its lines pass. It is but the natural sequence that the Lackawanna is prosperous in like degree to its excellence of service and its warm friends are equal in number to its whole list of patrons, for once to test its service means an ardent admirer and friend earned for the road.—Van Etten Breese.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

Nothing since the World's Fair, at Chicago, in 1893, has elicited the widespread interest that is manifest, all over the world, in the Pan-American Exposition, which is to be held in Buffalo from May 1 to November 1, 1901.

The purpose of the Exposition is to illustrate the progress of the countries of the Western Hemisphere during a century of wonderful achievements, and to bring together into closer relationship the people composing the many states, territories and countries of the three Americas. Acting under proper authority the President of the United States has invited all the republics and colonies of the American Hemisphere to join in commemorating the close of the nineteenth and beginning of the twentieth century by holding this international exposition on the Niagara frontier.

For this important event, the Nickel Plate Road has issued an attractive, descriptive folder pamphlet, elaborately illustrating the Pan-American Exposition, the buildings and grounds.

The Nickel Plate Road is the short line between Chicago and Buffalo, and affords competent train service from Chicago to Buffalo, New York City, Boston and all points east, with trains of modern equipment, on which no extra fares are charged; also dining car service of the highest order. It affords meals in its dining cars on the individual club plan, ranging in prices from 35 cents to $1.00.

Our Great Combination Offer.

A UNION OF POWERFUL CHRISTIAN AGENCIES.

The Christian Century and Christian Melodies

THE BEST CHRISTIAN PAPER

For the Home Education.

BEST CHRISTIAN SONG BOOK

For the Church Inspiration.

TWO of the most potent agencies affecting the condition and work of a church, in addition to the personal work and influence of the pastor, are religious papers in the homes and inspiring song services in the congregation. The religious paper is the pastors' ablest assistant. A good Christian paper in the homes of the church relieves the pastor of more than half his burden. Every wide-awake pastor recognizes the value of religious papers and gladly aids every effort to place them in the homes of the congregation for which he ministers.

The plan of churches supplying their members with religious papers is becoming quite popular and is destined to be a great boon to the churches that adopt it. We desire to encourage this plan. No paper in the brotherhood has made such rapid strides and come into prominence and favor so rapidly as has THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY. It is wide awake, newsy up-to-date, helpful, and has the most scholarly and well chosen editors and contributors of the brotherhood. It is the peer of any paper among us, and is recognized by many as

The Best Family Christian Paper.

Church Services, Sunday Schools and Endeavor meetings should be made attractive and delightful. Nothing adds more to the interest and effectiveness of these services than the inspiration and power of new soul-stirring songs. No song book has ever been produced that so completely and admirably fills the requirements of our churches as does Christian Melodies. It has songs suitable for every occasion and for every department. It is especially well adapted to Evangelistic, Sunday School and Endeavor services, as well as for regular church purposes. It contains many fine solos, quartets, etc. has many of the most popular hymns that have been in use, besides the large quota of up-to-date songs by the ablest writers. Its extraordinary merit is attested by its unprecedented reception. Everyone who uses the book is delighted with it. From every quarter come words of highest praise and commendation. The testimony of musicians, singing evangelists, and all who have used it, is unanimous in pronouncing it without exception or reservation the best all purpose book that has been produced. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. The selling price is $25.00 a hundred, $3.00 a dozen, not prepaid. Single copy, post-paid 30 cents. Already hundreds are enjoying the benefits of these powerful agencies in Christian work, and we hope to supply a still larger number and add 10,000 new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY through our most Remarkable Premium offer, whereby churches may obtain

Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. It contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style of binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

Boards, $20, Limp Cloth, $17.50 per 100; $2.50 per doz., not prepaid; Single copy 25c postpaid.

Statement of Principles—

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

on the same page, but in such a manner as not to increase the bulk of the book. The King James version is the basis, and this version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with foot notes. These notes give all the words and passages of the Revised Version where it differs from the King James Version. This combination feature is exceedingly valuable, as it gives all the advantages of two separate books with the convenience of one and also saves time as the two readings are always right before the eye. It contains all the

to the study of the Bible prepared by the most Eminent Biblical Scholars. It is embellished with a complete series of fifteen New Maps—the newest and best engraved maps of Bible Lands, embodying the results of the most recent investigations and discoveries. It is printed from large, beautiful, clear, new type and all proper names are divided into syllables and every vowel is marked and the syllables inflected, showing the sounds and accents as they are given in every standard dictionary, thus enabling the reader to properly pronounce every word. This feature is a great improvement and a strong recommendation for this Bible over others. This is the only Self-Pronouncing Combination Teachers' Bible and is unquestionably the best edition of the world's best book.

Our Fine Art Combination Bible.

This Bible is the same as the one described above, having the Self-Pronouncing and Combination features and all other helps and in addition is profusely illustrated and embellished with numerous phototype engravings from the paintings of the world's greatest masters, all drawn and engraved by the best artists, to illustrate the teachings of our Lord. They are printed separate from the text and make one grand panorama of pictorial embellishments that are as instructive and pleasing as they are ornamental and accurate.

The growing demand for a wisely and faithfully illustrated student's Bible has been fully satisfied by the introduction of our fine art edition of the Teachers' Bible. It combines every valuable feature of the usual teachers' Bible, with a wealth of descriptive and pictorial illustrations so superb as to distinctly separate this Bible from all others and place it in a class by itself. In artistic beauty it stands without a rival.

Each illustration is a speaking sermon, a gem of art, the handiwork of a master. The wonderful pictures not only beautify this sumptuous volume, but actually interpret and make more clear the grand old truths of the Sacred Word. This beautiful edition of the Bible is indispensable to all students and teachers.

Notice the Prices.

This incomparable galaxy of Illustrations has cost the publishers many thousands of dollars, and the preparation of this Combination Bible, with all its "New Helps," has involved the labor of a large number of the most eminent Biblical scholars and scientists of the world.

This beautiful, large type, Self-Pronouncing, Combination Teachers' Bible, French seal, "Divinity Circuit," linen lined, round corners, carmine under gold edge, extra finish, publisher's price, $5. This Bible and The Christian Century for one year for only $3.

THE AUDACITY OF JESUS.

NO feature of our Lord's work is more astonishing than its boldness. His was a solitary voice, unheralded by any words save those of the rough prophet of the Jordan, who had spoken of "the coming One." But this constituted the slight introduction to the world into which Jesus came. His home was in a remote part of the country, distant from the center of intellectual and religious activity at Jerusalem, and while he had received the training of the home circle and the synagogue school at Nazareth, he was without that experience in the university at Jerusalem which would have entitled him to the bearing of a rabbi and the reverence of his countrymen. He came as a peasant, with none of the insignia of authority, and yet he spoke with confidence of himself and taught with a self-assurance which must have been astonishing to a degree in the eyes of those who were accustomed to see all pretense of teaching power buttressed by citation of authorities and exhibition of credentials.

Jesus' audience consisted actually of the few people who were gathered by his work and whose numbers increased until he was pressed on every side by eager listeners. In that following of his, however, there were represented the three great national factors of the world's life in that period, the Jew, the Greek and the Roman, and it was to these three types of mind, and all that they represented, that Jesus addressed himself. Above the heads of the actual audience, made up of peasants, fishermen, tradesmen, women and children, Jesus saw the far-stretching horizon of the world, with all of its social and spiritual needs, and to it he addressed himself, though he spoke apparently only to his immediate hearers. When we consider this larger audience, the wonder grows that he should have used such authoritative tones. He might indeed have assumed to teach the simple minds of casual listeners in Judea and Galilee, but when one thinks of the waiting world to which he was apparently evermore conscious of speaking, the wonder grows that he should have dared so much.

For there was the Jew, with his ancestral pride and prejudices growing out of the splendors of the temple and the law. An illustrious line of prophets, priests, sages had prepared him to believe in the superiority of his faith to that of all others. He was essentially concerned with religion, not because that was a primitive impulse of the Semitic race, but because the circumstances of Israel's life had led to the narrowing of all activity to the religious field in times subsequent to the loss of the old and cherished political power. Since the exile the Jews had been a church rather than a nation, and a church it was which emphasized with increasing insistence the glories of the Building and the Book. The orthodox Jew practiced his austerities, performed his ablutions, paid his tithes and offered his sacrifices in the spirit of a man who had found the ultimate way of holiness, and was sure that no man could teach him further. He was proud of his position and of himself, and least of all was he likely to listen to a Galileean peasant, speaking with improving tones and demanding repentance.

But the Greek was also in that audience, and the few of his race who listened from time to time to the words of Jesus were only representatives of a large and influential circle, whose relation to the life of the times was close and commanding. The Greek was the lover of truth for its own sake. His was the life of the intellect. His was the privilege of lighting not only the fire of his own mind, but of carrying the torch which illumined the intellectual life of the world. All that pertained to human thought he regarded as his possession. Human thought has never reached sublimer heights of power than in the age of classic Greece. If it be true that an earlier age had exhausted the resources of human development on the physical side, it was equally true that the Greek touched the outermost points of intellectual expansion. For clearness of thought, keenness of perception, analytic ability and artistic skill he remains unapproached among the nations. Philosophy, poetry, art and architecture were his passion. His language was the crowning triumph of the art of expression. It was the language of the philosopher, the poet, the orator. If the Jew was proud of his ancestry and his religion, the Greek was proud of his eminence in the realm of thought and beauty. On the surface of things he had nothing yet to wish for. All things were his own.

By his side stood the Roman, the most commanding figure of the three, though the latest to appear. He had little whereof to boast in those fields that made the Jew and the Greek respectively conspicuous. All that Rome possessed of philosophy, art, literature or even language, he had borrowed from abroad, because he was the world-ruler of his time. It was his to organize and command. He had laid his hands upon the dismembered fragments of the world and had wrought them into an articulate unity that is the marvel of history. His was the passion for order and law, and even war itself was subordinate in his program to the symmetry and discipline of an ordered state. What had the Galileean to offer him? His life was apparently complete. That which he could not devise for himself he could secure from subject nations. He need not mourn that his was not the genius of invention or intellectual creation. The world could do his work and was glad to receive in return his approval. He was proud of his place and of his history, and it was a pride not less than that which burned in the hearts of Jew and Greek.

It was to these three men as representing the organized and active world of the age that Jesus addressed himself, and it was in tones of perfect authority and perfect quietness that he spoke when he said to them "Come unto me." The boldness of such an invitation becomes more astonishing as one reflects upon this representative and far-lying audience. If it could have been maintained that the Jew or the Greek or the Roman was unsuccessful in their respective quests, there might have been ampler justification for the attitude of Jesus, yet each had obtained his wish. He was successful in his own way. Each had attained the end of his ambition.

But Jesus knew that which has become the open secret of the world, that neither the Jew, the Greek nor the Roman could be satisfied with the things possessed. Neither the formal religion of the first, the intellectual supremacy of the second, nor the political power of the third was enough to give satisfaction to a human life. It was the very fact, perhaps, that each had reached the end of his appointed course and found that he had exhausted his specialty that made tragic that brooding sense of inadequacy which was stealing over the world. It was not that any of these peoples were fully conscious as yet of their limitations. Religious revival still made itself felt in Pharisaic circles. New intellectual pursuits were constantly devised among the Greeks, and fresh opportunities of conquest presented themselves to Roman eyes. Nevertheless, the field was practically exhausted. Already they were rattling their staves against the sides of a universe apparently explored to its utmost limit.

In this fact lies the significance of Jesus' call to all these men. He knew the limitations of their creeds and programs. He understood that they could not be satisfied with their schemes of perfection, and from all these fields of activity in which their life had developed he called them away, not to another scheme, but to himself; to his full and perfect life, to his vision of truth and beauty, to his consciousness of power. And in this fact lay the justification of his seeming audacity. Nor is that boldness less striking or less justified in our own day. The Jew, the Greek and the Roman are with us still in their modern representatives. The Jew of the first century is once more seen in the formalist, legalist and religionist of any creed or cult that rests in forms or symbols, orthodoxies and definitions, whether Buddhist, Mohammedan or Christian, so called. From all these Jesus calls men to himself, and the vital power of his redemptive life. The Greek of today is the intellectualist, with his scheme of culture, his small philosophy, his dialects and criticisms. From these brilliant but arid levels Jesus calls men to himself, not to a new philosophy, but a new life. And the present-day Roman, the man of affairs, the organizer of trade and promoter of vast industries, the artisan building his life into this majestic modern world, Jesus speaks in the same imperious tones. It is to these ruling spirits of the time, proud of their success yet at heart proud of their limitations and unsatisfied purposes, that he presents the sublime motive of a complete and rewarding service.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF MANHOOD.

WE know vaguely that the highest views of human nature are the gifts of the Christian spirit. But it is well for our faith that we should sometimes make our vague and commonplace assumptions clear and definite. Can we put our finger upon the time and place where the final value of each human being for God was first strongly grasped by a human mind? It was when Simon Peter startled himself and Cornelius with the two great words: "Stand up; I am also a man," and "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons." In the one saying he affirmed his own sense of fellowship with Cornelius in a common humanity; in the other he affirmed that every righteous man stood on a level before God with every other righteous man; he disclosed the fellowship of all men in the grace of God. Peter did not see it all, all at once, that day, any more than Saul of Tarsus understood everything in the very hour when the scales fell from his eyes in Damascus. But the door was opened and he had passed out forever from the atmosphere of exclusiveness into the freedom of the new humanity.

There are three facets to that one saying, "I also am a man," each of which may flash upon us in the hour of the distinct moral and spiritual experience. The first comes when some one who has lived in a fancied security of an isolating superiority suddenly sees all differences vanish. Down he falls among other men, and the words are forced, at first, with bitterness, from his lips, "I also am a man." Perhaps he is found in some sin which the ordinary run of men commit, but from which he thought himself exempt. Perhaps it is the still deeper discovery that some privilege, national or ceremonial, on which he rested his religious hopes, has no value before God. The letter is the experience of the Jew, the Mohammedan, sometimes of the more ignorant Romanist, when the consciousness of sin has seized him. Down he must come among us all, kneel beside us all and cry aloud with us all, "I also am a man, a sinful man, O Lord."

The second experience comes upon those who have been living at the opposite end of the human scale. They may have belonged to some submerged section of society, serfs and slaves in America or Africa, low-born outcasts of India, to whom the rights, perhaps even the name of man has been denied. Dogs they were, accursed and despicable, ashamed to stand in the same sunshine with those who scorned and crushed them. When the gospel messenger comes to them his wondrous word is this: "Thou also are a man." "God is no respecter of persons," such an one is told, and behold he begins to live with a new consciousness. The upper castes complain, as they do, for example, in India, to the missionary, that these dogs now look and walk and work like men! It is the birth hour of manhood that has come upon them. Each has learned the magic saying, "I also am a man," and the glorious truth has thrilled him with a new joy, a new confidence, a new outlook over time and into eternity, which make his conscious manhood shine out before the eyes of all.

There is a third deep, solemn hour into which some men pass, when these words are their main comfort. When shame has swept over their hearts, when dread and doubt have darkened their sky, and they feared to name the love of God, some men have suddenly remembered that they belong to the race. There is such a thing as belonging to a guilty race; there is such a thing as crying out with the despair of one who finds himself enmeshed in the history and the fate of mankind. But here, just at hand, is the spring which flings open another door and all heaven's light bursts upon the soul. For God's gift of life, of love, of salvation, is to the race; Christ is the Son of Man; he died for all; therefore all died. "I also am a man" means not only that we have sinned, but that we are redeemed, not only that fear has seized, but that life may fill us.

It is a great plea to make before God, "I also am a man," and it is a great claim with which to go out among men, giving us inexhaustible rights and laying on us endless responsibility. Out of this consciousness all manliness may arise before God, and among men, the manliness which stands for self-respect, sincerity and love.

Dr. James Martineau, in his book entitled "A Way Out of the Trinitarian Controversy," gives the following excellent definition of the Trinity: "What God is in himself; what he is as manifested in the universe and history brought to a focus in the drama of redemption; what he is in communion with our inner spirit; these are the points of view described in the persons of the Trinity."

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

By the Visitor.

IT IS twenty years since the first convention of Christian Endeavor was held in Portland, Maine, and the story of these years reads like a romance. From a single society to a vast organization with sixty thousand societies and nearly four millions of members is the record of a period only long enough for a boy to come to his majority. Nor does this phenomenal growth show signs of ceasing. During the past year there have been added to the list two thousand new societies with one hundred thousand members, or as many as the organization gained in the first seven years of its existence.

When one says that the convention held in Cincinnati last week was a great gathering, perhaps the best in the history of the Endeavor movement, he must remember those wonderful conventions of former years with their hosts of enthusiastic attendants, ranging in numbers from forty to sixty thousand, as at Boston, Cleveland, Washington, and even San Francisco, where not less than twenty-five thousand wearers of the "C. E." pin registered, and double that number of pilgrims assembled. But while the numbers at Cincinnati did not reach these levels, for reasons among which the chief was unquestionably the severe heat, yet the entire history of the movement may be scanned without finding a convention superior in spirit, earnestness and results. From the first there was a pervading expectation of great things, and in this no one was disappointed. It was not in vast throngs, nor magnificent decorations, nor thrilling addresses that this quality inhered, though all these were features of the occasion. It was the consciousness of the divine presence and blessing in an unusual degree which made appropriate the patriarch's words, "This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

Christian Endeavor is changing somewhat in character, and this is well. Growth involves change. A boy does not grow in size alone; he changes in character. There are those who complain that Christian Endeavor is not what it used to be; that it is losing its enthusiasm, and is about to decline. It is probably true that a certain hilarity and noisiness which it was once known to possess are giving place to more sober and vigorous elements of character. A boy gets over his shouting period. When he becomes a man he puts away childish things. Christian Endeavor is passing through the normal changes that mark any living organism. There is first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear.

Important Changes.

Among the changes that have taken place in the past year is one of great importance. Objections have been made to the pledge as involving obligations which not all would care to take. While it has been felt among the workers in the society that the pledge was one of the distinctive and most effective features of the plan, yet it has been decided that any group of young Christians may adopt any form of pledge or covenant which contains the essentials of loyalty to Christ and the Church, and use this instead of the historic pledge of the Society. This is an important step, and is wise at this time, after experience has shown the value of the original covenant. Liberty may be accorded now, where it would have been unwise at first.

Another new feature is the principle of inclusion and unity, whereby societies of other names and character may be received into the ranks of Christian Endeavor, retaining their old name and adding the new. Thus in Canada a large number of Methodist societies which before maintained a separate existence, owing allegiance only to the denominational organization, have now become "Epworth Leagues of Christian Endeavor," and as the result of this change the Methodists actually stand first in the Endeavor ranks in the province.

A third feature is the biennial convention. Hereafter the international conventions will be held once in two years and will alternate with the state conventions, which will also be biennial. This change has long been in contemplation. A fourth is the employment of a field secretary, who will devote his entire time to organization and convention work. At the same time the World's Christian Endeavor Union is sending out a missionary secretary to labor in Europe and Asia. These are all signs of growth and promise great things for the future.

The convention met in Music Hall, where two years since the great jubilee convention of the Disciples of Christ was held, and many remembered, while President Clark was delivering his convention address on Saturday night before a vast audience that packed the great building, that he had spoken from the same platform two years before to an equally large gathering. This great central hall, usually called Springer Hall, was named for the occasion "Auditorium Endeavor." The south wing, usually called Floral Hall, was known as "Auditorium Ohio," while the north wing, commonly called Power Hall, was designated "Auditorium Williston." In addition several of the largest churches in the vicinity were called into requisition for overflow and special meetings. If any names in the long list of speakers were to be singled out for particular mention perhaps they would be G. Campbell Morgan, Floyd W. Tompkins, Chas. M. Sheldon, W. S. Ament, Samuel B. Capen, and Booker Washington; but all who had part, men and women alike, deserved equal honor, and exemplified the familiar words, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

That was a rather pointed story that the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst told in his pulpit recently to illustrate the fact that no man could come into close contact with the universe without having the idea of the maker come into his mind. The late Robert Ingersoll, while in Mr. Beecher's study, at one time, saw a large globe standing on his table—a globe that showed in elegant outlines the contour of the earth's continents and seas.

"That's a fine globe you have there, Mr. Beecher? Who made it?" was Mr. Ingersoll's inquiry.

"Oh, nobody," answered Mr. Beecher.—Boston Transcript.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Christian Endeavor Convention.

At the Christian Endeavor gathering held last week in Cincinnati the leading thought was "The Twentieth Century Christian Endeavor Society." The look of the young people was wisely turned not to the past but to the future. There was an absence of the spirit of self-satisfaction which puts a fatal arrest upon all progress. No time was wasted in bandying compliments, or in cackling over what has been accomplished. The pressing problems of to-day and to-morrow absorbed all the interest and attention. The program was bewildering in its extent and variety; but the keynote of the whole series of meetings was found in President Clarke's address on "Advanced Steps for the New Year." This great society with nearly four million members has to be counted in among the mightiest of the forces that make for the world's betterment.

The Cost of War.

War has become such a terrible thing that civilized nations are bound to give greater pause in the future before entering upon it.

Before the war was declared between the Boers and the British Oom Paul predicted that "all the world will shudder at the butcher's bill," and the English people are beginning to appreciate his meaning. The total number of casualties to the British army in South Africa up to the 31st of May was 66,197, of whom 19,648 died; 369 officers and 3,819 men were killed in action; 116 officers and 1,288 men died of wounds; 241 officers and 9,426 men died of disease, and nine officers and 714 men are missing, their bodies never having been recovered. The remainder have been discharged for wounds, sickness and other disabilities.

The financial cost of the war up to the 31st of May, in round numbers, was $755,000,000, which is an average of nearly $1,500,000 a day. The public debt of Great Britain has been increased $575,000,000, and the revenues have been increased $275,000,000 a year by adding to the tax on incomes, on sugar, molasses, glucose, coal and other articles.

Death of Professor John Fiske.

The death of John Fiske, the famous historian, at the age of 59, takes from us one of the foremost men in the realm of letters. His versatility was remarkable. He was conspicuous as a linguist, as an art critic, as a student of science, philosophy and history. But it was in these two last named fields that he won his laurels. His work as Professor in Harvard was secondary to his work as an author. His books as they came from the press were eagerly waited for by a number of thoughtful people who looked to him for light and leading. In his scientific and philosophic books there was a steady development from agnosticism to theism. But in theism he could not rest. The heart hunger of the man cried out for what science and philosophy failed to give. In his last book "Through Nature to God" in discussing "the everlasting reality of religion" he bases his belief in a future life upon the correlation between human needs and divine supplies.

Wonderful things are told about his precocity as a child; but fortunately he was not one of those precocious children who burn out early and disappoint parental hopes. He is said to have read Shakespeare through before he was eight; to have completed Euclid and trigonometry at twelve; to have acquired a reading knowledge of Greek, Latin, German, French, Spanish, and Italian by the time he was seventeen, and passed on to Sanscrit and Hebrew at eighteen. These marvelous endowments continued in exercise to the very end.

Professor Fiske was an imposing personality. He stood over six feet high, and weighed upwards of 300 pounds. In his personal habits he was somewhat lawless; for physical exercise he had neither time nor inclination; dietary restrictions he set at nought; and there can be little doubt that his disregard of natural laws helped to shorten his days.

Large as was his literary output, one cannot but regret that he did not concentrate his vast energies and affluent stores of learning upon the production of a continuous history of the United States. No man in our day was more fully equipped for this important task. Yet for what he has given us we are profoundly thankful. The world is richer for the treasure which he has left us.

Future of Religious Journalism.

In the Forum for July, H. W. Horwill discusses the future of religious journalism in America and England. He seeks to find out from a study of present tendencies whether the increasing attention given by secular journals to religious questions will be likely to lessen the influence of the distinctly religious journal. He rightly holds that the religious journal will always have a place and mission of its own; not as a news gatherer, but as an interpreter and leader of religious thought. Mr. Horwill is convinced that the hour of opportunity for religious journalism in America has come. But the opportunity will be missed unless there is a radical modification of traditional methods. The day of the denominational journal is gone. The tendency to inter-denominational fellowship creates in itself a demand for a medium of inter-denominational fellowship. A free religious press, a press which is not under the dictation or control of any ecclesiastical party, a press that can afford to be outspoken on the burning questions of the hour is certainly a desideratum. Worthily to fill that place will be The Christian Century's best endeavor.

CHICAGO NOSES.

Out of deference to public sentiment the La Grange Golf Club has refused permission to play on its links on Sundays. This recognition of the rights and convictions of others is commendable. As some one has said, the right of a man to swing his arm stops where another man's nose begins.

At a meeting held on Sunday last in Quinn Chapel Mrs. Josephine Yates took the position that the colored people must work out their own salvation, heavily handicapped as they are in the race of life by social prejudice. This is also the position of Booker T. Washington of Tuskegee Institute. They will win only what they merit. But in their upward struggle they need and ought to receive the sympathy and help of the more favored race to which they were so long in subjection.

In addition to the extensive work which it is now doing throughout the city the Visiting Nurses' Association has just established a new home for crippled and convalescent children in Winnetka. Here the sick children will get freedom and fresh air. In connection with this organization there are fourteen regular nurses, and a score more of emergency nurses who have been kept exceedingly busy during the recent hot spell. The work of this association is limited only by the means placed at its disposal. It is never able fully to meet the enormous demands made upon it. Nowhere could a better opportunity be afforded for an investment of money than in this noble charity.

A sporadic and foolish movement which has received more notice than it deserves has found expression in a new organization entitled the "White Boxers." The aim of this new organization is to deprive the alien and lower orders of men, especially the Mongolians and the Ethiopians of advantages that will finally place them in a position superior to that of the Caucasian. The colored people of the city appear to be excited over this new display of racial discrimination. But without cause. This country is not going back on the doctrine of equal rights. And in the great race struggle the law of the survival of the fittest will determine the final result.

Apropos of the hot weather, Professor Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, believes that from a scientific point of view it is as inexcusable for people to be prostrated or killed by heat as it would be to suffer from cold. He holds that it is as practicable to construct a house to keep out the summer heat as the winter cold. We place furnaces in the basements to expel the cold from the rooms above; why not place refrigerators in the attic to drive out the heat from the rooms below? The theory looks plausible; but why do not some of our inventive geniuses hurry up? For some of us this new ministrant to physical comfort may come too late; yet we are glad to be assured that it is on the way.

One of the younger city pastors, the Rev. Edgar B. Wylie of Summerdale Congregational Church, has given up his life as a sacrifice to the cause of Christ. He had a hard field. Ten years ago he began preaching in the railroad station house. Gradually he gathered around him a group of Christian believers. A church was formed, consisting principally of working people. After years of heroic struggle a comfortable church was built costing upwards of $10,000. That building, with the living body of believers which it houses, is the preacher's monument. Worn out with incessant toil he became an easy prey to pneumonia, which hurried him to the tomb. While we mourn the shortening of such a useful life we rejoice that it was so grandly sacrificial. Worldly men show the same consuming zeal in business. "They do it to obtain a corruptible crown; we an incorruptible."

Vacation School work has been resumed. And a blessed work it is. The children that are gathered into these schools are from the densest portions of the city. No books are used, but the little ones are taught such practical things as physical culture, manual training, sewing, drawing, singing, and simple gardening. Bathing facilities are provided; and there is an excursion to the country once a week. In one department there are thirty blind children who are instructed in nature studies through the sense of touch; in another department are twenty-four deaf mutes under competent teachers; a third department consists of crippled children. These unfortunates are gathered up in a bus every morning and taken home in the same way at the close of the day. The saddest thing about this good work is that only a small proportion of those who clamor for admission into these vacation schools can be taken care of.

CONTRIBUTED.
THE LARGER LIFE.

Let there be many windows in your soul,
That all the glory of the universe
May beautify it. Not the narrow pane
Of one poor creed can catch the radiant rays
That shine from countless sources. Tear away
The blinds of superstition: let the light
Pour through the windows broad as truth itself
And high as God . . . Tune your ear
To all the wordless music of the stars
And to the voice of nature, and your heart
Shall turn to truth and goodness, as the plant Turns to the sun. A thousand unseen hands
Reach down to help you from their peace-crowned heights,
And all the forces of the firmament
Shall fortify your strength. Be not afraid
To thrust aside half truths and grasp the whole.

—E. Wheeler Wilcox.

LIVING IN THE PRESENCE.

James M. Campbell, D. D.

IT is our privilege to live continually in the Presence. But let the distinction be carefully noted between living in the Presence, and living in the consciousness of the Presence. To live in the continuous consciousness of the Presence is a sheer impossibility. The mind must necessarily be taken up with a multitude of mundane things which compel us to withdraw our thought for the time from a contemplation upon the things of the unseen realm. And just in proportion to the diligence which we give to the daily tasks which are concerned with outward things, will the distinct consciousness of the Presence be absent. Are we therefore to conclude that the Presence is fitful, and that it has gone from us? By no means. As we breathe the atmosphere without being aware of the fact; as we walk in the light of day without thinking of the sun, so we may breathe the atmosphere of the Lord's Presence, and walk in the light of his countenance without thinking distinctly of him. The Indian sage, Ramakrishna, exclaims, "Thou seest many stars at night in the sky, but findest them not when the sun rises. Canst thou say that there are no stars, then, in the heaven of day? So, O man, because thou beholdest not the Almighty in the days of thy ignorance say not that there is no God." God is just as near when his presence is obscured as when we rejoice in the light of his countenance.

Modern philosophers speak of a sub-consciousness in which past experiences are treasured up. If we believe in the existence of this deeper region lying below the line of ordinary consciousness we can see how the experience of the past may become the conservator of the faith of the present. The Christ who has once manifested himself to us may still be with us, although we are not conscious of his presence. It is a great advance when we walk by faith rather than by feeling. We can then live in the Presence even when the thought of the unseen Christ does not rise distinctly into consciousness. There is no reason to utter the wail,

"Sometimes I catch sweet glimpses of his face,

But that is all;

Sometimes he looks on me and seems to smile

But that is all.

Sometimes he speaks a passing word of peace

But that is all,

Sometimes I hear his loving voice

Upon me call."

—Bonar.

What more ought one who walks with Christ by faith to expect? If moments beautiful and rare are given when the vision breaks upon us, let us rejoice; but when the vision fades, and fade it must, let us not mourn. It is good to be on Tabor, but it is not good to tarry there too long. When we come down from the mount we are to remember that the reality of which we caught a glimpse never changes. And having seen the glory of the Lord we are henceforth to shape our lives according to the pattern shown us on the mount. The experience of Christ's presence which came to Jonathan Edwards as he was meditating one day in the woods was never repeated, but its influence upon his after life was as pronounced as was the vision of the risen Christ upon the life of Saul of Tarsus; but by that experience his faith in the perpetual Presence was confirmed, and his whole after life was shaped.

Bearing in mind the distinction between living in the Presence and living in the consciousness of the Presence, let us now consider some of the things which come from living in the Presence.

1. A restraint will be put upon wrong doing. Those who live in Christ's sight will live carefully. They will check the unkind word before it leaps from the lips; they will repress the cruel criticism before it drops from the pen. Like Moses they will endure things otherwise unendurable, "as seeing him who is invisible." A single look into the face of Christ will break the spell of temptation, and shame us out of sin. In his presence unholy passion will be quenched; unholy ambitions will be withered up; unholy purposes and desires will perish. To keep evil in heart, Christ has to be kept out of the thoughts.

2. The deepest springs of holiness will be unsealed. Those who enjoy the satisfying and sanctifying companionship of Christ will become like him. By the transforming touch of his personal influence they will become assimilated to his holy character. They will receive from him a new conscience, and a new heart. Nourished by his grace their inward strength will be constantly renewed—the battery being recharged as fast as the power is used up, the lamp replenished as fast as the oil is consumed; bathing in his love they will be made clean; experiencing the virtue and efficacy of his outflowing and inflowing life they will be made whole; dwelling in his presence they will reflect his image. Their whole life will afford evidence of their responsiveness to the divine appeal, "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

3. The soul will find a fixed center of rest in the midst of the storms of life. When the storm rages the sweet assurance of the Savior's brooding presence will bring the peace which passeth understanding. Under the shadow of his wing the fluttered soul will nestle down securely. In the sunshine of his love no trouble can long prevail. "In his presence is fullness of joy." All foreboding is quelled in the heart of him who believes the promise, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." (Exod. 23: 14.)

It is said that when the monk who opened for Dante, the wanderer, the doors of the monastery of Santa Croce, asked him, "What seek you here?" he gazed around with restless, hungry eyes, and slowly answered, "Pacem!" When Christ is found, peace is found. Listen to him as he says, "In this world ye shall have tribulation, but in me, peace." "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." For the weary heart of man there is rest in his love, rest in his will, rest in his service.

At the time of his departure Jesus said: "I will not leave you orphans, I will come unto you." "Forlorn and desolate you will not be; for although you see me not I will be near to comfort you." "A little while and ye behold me no more, and again a little while and ye shall see me." "Now ye have sorrow, but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." The soul that believes that these words of promise have been fulfilled has found its true haven of rest.

4. The soul will be filled with the inspiration of hope. The time when the presence of Christ seems most real; the time when he lives most clearly in our thoughts, and desires, and choices, is a time when all things seem possible. The blessed hope of the world's redemption burns brightly when the Presence is kept in view, but it speedily expires when the Presence is lost sight of. If, instead of waiting for Christ, we were to wait upon him; if, instead of trying to read the signs of his coming we were to begin to read the signs of his presence, the hope that now burns low would be fanned into a soaring flame. If Christ be present why should not the heart bound with hope? Are not all agreed that in his presence hope is to find its long-delayed fulfillment?

5. The soul will be roused to strenuous endeavor. The Presence is dynamical. It is both an impulse and a power. It urges and it enables. It is impossible for those who live in the Presence to live in idleness. They will be allowed no rest until they go forth to minister to others. And it is impossible for those who live in the Presence to live at a "poor dying rate." Strength will be given them for every duty. Paul, at the time of his first trial before Cæsar, when forsaken by friends, said, "The Lord stood by me, and gave me power" (II Tim. 4: 17). The Lord gave him power not only to pass through that ordeal, but to prevail over every difficulty, and go on fulfilling his mission of proclaiming to the world the message of salvation which had been committed to his trust. To live in the Presence is to live within the sphere of Christ's vivifying influence, to be inspired by his example, to be endured with his strength and patience. Those who live with Christ, live in him, and from him, and for him. In them he is made visible and operant. In them his life is continued. For them to live is for Him to live.

THE NORMAL CHURCH.

A. B. Jones.

IN the New Testament, Christian life and activity are presented to us in three phases—the individual, the congregational and the corporate. The sacred writers emphasize the individual and the corporate, but not the congregational. We emphasize the congregational but not the corporate; and herein obtains a notable difference between us and the New Testament.

In our individual capacity we are exhorted, each man for himself, to exercise a personal faith and to render unto Christ a personal obedience. We are called upon to "work out our own salvation," to "make our calling and election sure." We are warned that "every one of us shall give account of himself to God." So direct and personal are the appeals made to men all through the Scriptures that we are made to feel that every man is left to struggle for salvation just as if he were the only

Christian on the earth; and, within certain limitations, this is the case. There is opportunity here for great diversity in the development of individual peculiarities, and of original gifts in man. These personal differences are as marked in men, in Christian men, as are the differences in the trees of the forest. The oak, the walnut, the ash, the cedar—how diversified their forms, and yet how typical of the diversities in men!

Corporately considered, these men are put into relation with each other as the children of the Lord, and associated organically as the church of God. Viewed simply as Christians, as members of the body of Christ, these differentiating peculiarities disappear, and we no longer see men as trees walking, but rather as the stars of heaven smiling down upon us, all looking alike; the accidental differences, whatever they may be, are all lost in the presence of the blaze and glory of a sublime unity.

The dominant law of the universe, and that which constitutes this system of things by which we are surrounded a universe, is the law of unity. This law asserts its supremacy, and at the same time declares the wisdom of a supreme intelligence in the following points: Unity in variety, unity in liberty, and unity in glory.

Unity in Variety.

A superficial view of this material world gives to the mind an impression of a boundless diversity and endless confusion. But it is here the scientist finds his domain, and the sphere of his operations. With a discerning and penetrating eye he looks beneath the surface, and discovers amid this great variety a "law of unity," and establishes those classifications of objects that give birth to the various sciences of material things. Under his magic touch individuals group themselves into species, species aggregate into genera, and genera by the same principle form higher and yet higher associations until we reach the lofty conception of the universe, made radiant by the presence and the glory of God.

The simpler forms in which this law of unity in variety manifests itself are familiar to us all. By its authority we speak of a swarm of bees, a school of fishes, a flock of birds, a herd of cattle, a tribe of Indians, the English, German and French races. While every bee and bird and fish and man is definitely stamped with his own individuality, of which, in some form or other, he is sensible, yet his very life and being are so dominated by the law of unity that he clings to his fellows with the same tenacity that he clings to life itself.

This tendency manifests itself in the higher forms of civil society when men voluntarily associate themselves together under the compact of governments. Unity of citizenship is the ideal toward which a progressive civilization is tending. In this respect our own government is projected upon a grand scale and is a model for the world. Men of every variety and type of nationality, language, and complexion are here made homogeneous as citizens by the force of those immortal truths enunciated in the Declaration of Independence—"all men are created equals, and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights" The unifying power of these principles breaks down all the accidental and artificial distinctions previously existing, and secures unity of citizenship to that heterogeneous mass of humanity that is immigrating to our shores. The duty to pay taxes, the right to vote, the right to seek office at the hands of the people, the right to seek redress of wrongs in the courts, the right to choose our own vocations, and all that properly enters into a just idea of a citizen of a righteous government, are here meted out alike to every man. Had we some sort of an optical instrument for viewing solely the citizenship of a man—an instrument that would so operate as to exclude every element of character except those that make the man a citizen of this government—looking through this instrument all men would appear precisely alike. And could we photograph them as they pass under view, and place these photographs in a gallery there would be no differences; to the most artistic eye they would be pictures of the same identical object—the American citizen. The law of “unity in variety” is here operating upon the higher plane of man’s social nature.

But there is yet a still higher plane on which this law operates. The highest form of corporate life is found in the moral and religious sphere. Christianity is a great moral force intended to revolutionize mankind. Its work is radical and thorough. It turns darkness into light, sin into righteousness, death into life. Its effects on fallen human creatures are styled in the Holy Scriptures “Conversion,” a complete turning around; “regeneration,” being born again; “new creation,” something wholly different from the old man. The idea of gathering from the hedges and highways of the world the lost and fallen of every moral type; of cleansing and purifying them by the gospel of Jesus Christ, of associating them together in the common fellowship of the church under the inspiration of the “Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of Man,” is the sublimest illustration of the great law we are now considering, the law of “unity in variety,” of which we can conceive. “There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither bond nor free; there is neither male nor female”; all national distinctions are dropped, all social irregularities are forgotten, and all sexual differences are lost, “for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.” We shall dwell on this thought in our next article with a view to giving it the emphasis which its importance demands.

HOW JOSEPH COOK SEEMED TO ME.

Simeon Gilbert, D. D.

JOSEPH COOK was one of the unique personalities of his generation. He was one who had given him a distinctly providential mission. The consciousness of this mission wakened and utilized all there was in him and of him. “This one thing I do,” he could say of himself as truly as Paul did. He had conferred on him, I believe, all the customary academic degrees. Yet no one ever thought of applying them to him, any more than to Henry Ward Beecher or Phillips Brooks. He made for his own name his own “degree.” And in his public address he never appeared at his normal advantage except before the largest audiences and on the most magnificent occasions.

That Joseph Cook’s phenomenal physical strength did not break down sooner, in view of the tremendous strain put upon it during those twenty years of his great public Lectureship, is the occasion for wonder. The Boston Monday Lectureship was only the beginning of it. While those lectures, as published in full or in part in various newspapers, were being read by the million, he was rushing up and down the land, east and west, repeating these and other lectures to large audiences all over the country.

There had been from boyhood to his full-orbed young manhood, something prodigious in the passion with which he gave himself to the all-consuming business of preparation. Though aware all those eager years of strange powers stirring within him, this fact impelled the more strenuous endeavor.

The well-selected school library which came into his possession when about ten years of age was, at the time, an eye-opener to him. However beyond his years some of the books were, he devoured them, and henceforth let his mind and spirit grow by that which it fed upon.

But the soul of the precocious and dreamy boy did not feed on the books alone. He had been born on a farm in the same house where it was his happiness to spend his last days. It was in a singularly beautiful and picturesque valley, with mountains on either hand and just between two lakes, Champlain and Lake George. From the first Nature, with her infinitely varied aspects of power and beauty, had held his susceptible spirit in her kindest keeping. It is easy to discern in the outcome of his later life lessons of deepest import which he then learned from the beautiful, the tender, the august moods of nature there under the shadows of his own “sky cliff,” from whose point of outlook he loved to watch both the lakes at their times of greatest loveliness. The boldest wing of the boy’s imagination had its own verge and room for growth.

While still a student in Phillips’ Academy at Andover, his distinction was unmistakable. There was a splendid physical basis, the perfect health and wholesomeness, the broad, ruddy face, the superb brow and the wonderful eyes of the boy, and such high principle withal, pointing clearly to rare achievement, along some line of original action.

Joseph Cook’s years of study in Yale and in Harvard, at Andover and in the German universities constituted the grand preliminary battlefield of his life. In them he was tested to the very foundation of his being. He never needed that any one should bid him “tarry in Jericho till his beard was grown.” He did not run until he was sent. When he did go, it was because from his inmost soul he felt that he had to. God’s own ordaining hand, he knew, was upon him. After a few years in the work of preaching, Joseph Cook presently felt, as John Wesley had said, that “the world was his parish.”

The creation of Joseph Cook’s Boston “Monday Lectureship” must be accounted one of the most original individual achievements of the time. To have succeeded in maintaining it as he did every winter throughout those nearly twenty years was something to wonder at. It is not likely that there was any other man in America who could have done it. Nor could he ever have done it except at just that particular point, that peculiar juncture in the evolution of scientific and religious thought. He had the spiritual sense to see the hour, and with the power of the Highest consciously upon him he boldly strode forth to meet the challenging exigency.

Joseph Cook’s mission was that of a tremendously forceful and thought-compelling emphasis. The originality of it was in the timeliness of it. And in the strategic timeliness of it was the secret of its effectiveness and value. Just then the “two seas” of modern thought met. The new thought of evolution was producing a revolution. The supreme danger was that while the new thought was still in its partialness and immaturity, from its first connection with material facts and forces, the spiritual would be overridden, pushed aside, ignored.

It was Joseph Cook's sublime, devout and courageous championship of the Spiritual in Man and in the World which gave such memorable distinction to his mission and his message.

No doubt there was a hugeness in his manner. Something that was mammoth in his method. It is not important either to affirm or to deny that he may have had a personal foible or two of his own sort. The fact remains that after all the thunder and the lighting of Joseph Cook's wholly unique lecture career, the atmosphere of modern thought was perceptibly clearer, broader, more rational, more truly scientific, as it was more spiritual.

Looking forth upon the entire life just now finished, it is again clear that the child was father of the man; that the man was the child of his own age, and one of the elemental factors in the new and larger-minded epoch of human thought which signalizes the new century.

Pre-eminently Joseph Cook was a man who was not afraid. The contagion of his manful, spiritual courage, touched into power alike by his conscience and his faith, was among the wholesomest dominating influences of the time.

A MODERN PARABLE.

Wm. H. Matlock.

DID you never, in walking in the fields, come across a large flat stone, which had laid, nobody knows just how long, just where you found it, with grass forming a little hedge, as it were, all around it, close to its edges—did you not, in obedience to a kind of feeling that told you it had been lying there long enough, insinuated your stick or your foot or your fingers under its edge and turned it over as a housewife turns a cake, when she says to herself, "It's done brown enough by this time?" What an odd revelation and what an unforeseen and unpleasant surprise to a small community, the very existence of which you had not suspected, until the sudden dismay and scattering among its members produced by your turning the old stone over. Blades of grass, flattened down, colorless, matted together, as if they had been bleached and ironed; hideous crawling creatures, some of them coleopterous or horny-shelled; turtle-bugs one wants to call them; some of them softer, but cunningly spread out and compressed like Lepine watches * * * black, glossy crickets with their filaments sticking out like the whips of four-horse stage coaches; motionless, slug-like creatures, young larvae; perhaps more horrible in their pulpy stillness than even in the infernal wriggle of maturity. But no sooner is the stone turned and the wholesome light of day let upon this compressed and blinded community of creeping things, than all of them which enjoy the luxury of legs, and some of them have a good many, rush round wildly, butting each other and everything in their way, and end in a general stampede for underground retreats from the regions poisoned by sunshine. Next year you will find the grass growing tall and green where the stone lay; the ground-bird builds his nest where the beetle had his hole; the dandelion and the buttercup are growing there, and the broad fans of insect angels open and shut over their golden disks, as the rhythmic waves of blissful consciousness pulsate through their glorified being."—From "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," by Dr. Holmes.

It would make an interesting literary and religious puzzle to stop right here and ask the reader to interpret for himself the meaning of the stone incident; but Holmes relieved us of this necessity, and of all blunders, by noting down the moral value of the images. He has declared unto us the parable of the stone.

The Parable Explained.

"There is meaning in each of these images—the butterfly as well as the others.

"The stone is ancient error.

"The grass is human nature borne down and bleached of all its color by it.

"The shapes which are found beneath are the crafty beings that thrive in darkness, and the weaker organisms kept helpless by it.

"He who turns the stone over is whosoever puts the staff of truth to the old lying incubus, no matter whether he do it with a serious face or a laughing one.

"The next year stands for the coming time. Then shall the nature which had lain blanched and broken rise in its full stature and native hues in the sunshine. Then shall God's minstrels build their nests in the hearts of a new-born humanity. Then shall beauty—Divinity taking outlines and color—light upon the souls of men as the butterfly, image of the beautified spirit rising from the dust, soars from the shell that held a poor grub, which might never have found wings had not the stone been lifted.

"You never need think you can turn over any old falsehood without a terrible scattering and squirming of the horrid little population that dwells under it."

It was not my intention to comment on the images of the parable; they are sufficiently striking. Ancient error, weighting down and crushing blind, struggling humanity would make a masterpiece on canvas or in marble. Only Angelo's imagination could reproduce it vigorously. But of what period of human history was the poet thinking that he should see humanity so overcome and like unto a dead body, bleached of all its color? Was the struggle ever quite so hopeless? But there is nothing pessimistic about the general image. Holmes sees the "blanched and broken nature rise in its full stature and native hues in the sunshine." He hears the songs of God's minstrels coming forth from the heart of a new-born humanity. The ultimate picture is that of victorious humanity bearing aloft the staff of truth, which it used to pry its way out from under the oppressive mass of error heaped upon it by the preceding generations.

THE LITTLE RIFT.

In Love, if Love be Love, if Love be ours,
Faith and unfaith can ne'er be equal powers;
Unfaith in aught is want of faith in all.

It is the little rift within the lute
That by and by will make the music mute,
And, ever widening, slowly silence all;

The little rift within the lover's lute
Or little speck in garnered fruit,
That, rotting inward, slowly moulders all.

It is not worth keeping, let it go.
But shall it? Answer, darling; answer no;
And trust me not at all or all in all.

OUR PULPIT.

RELIGION AND THE WEATHER.

Edward Scribner Ames, Ph. D.

If the things we talk about reveal our interests, then it is evident we are deeply concerned with the weather. It is an unailing point of departure for our conversation. With strangers it is good parleying ground upon which to prepare for more serious social and business transactions. A non-committal salutation, such as "Fine day, isn't it?" may elicit a response which determines whether to present the purpose of one's mission then or to wait for a more propitious day. It frequently happens, too, on such days as these of July that the weather rises to a prominence worthy of independent treatment. An extreme of heat or cold, of wind or flood, makes the elements conspicuous on their own account and leads to the gravest problems of science and religion. The past week has achieved that distinction. In the thunder-storm on Monday eleven persons in our city were killed by one stroke of lightning. Every day has recorded a long list of those dead or prostrated by the heat. On Tuesday in New York city alone there were two hundred and seventy-two deaths and four hundred prostrations.

Events like these, as well as the more normal and constant phenomena of the weather, have always appealed to the religious consciousness of man with great power. Indeed it is held by many scholars that it was precisely these phenomena which first awakened that consciousness and thus gave rise to religion. Early man, it is said, saw that the sun and rain and wind helped or hindered him in his search for food. The sun set his plants growing or burned them up, the thunder-storm revived them. Therefore he sought the favor of these powers by making known his wishes through prayer, and by offering propitiation in sacrifice. There arose for him also the intellectual craving to understand these heavenly powers, and the aesthetic desire to enjoy them, and the moral need to league himself with them. In this way, to the child race, the sky, sun, rain and wind became divine beings able to supply his wants or to defeat his plans.

The highest form of religion to-day presents the essential element of that first thought of the powers of nature, for Christ himself teaches us that God animates and guides them all. In Matt. 5: 45 Jesus says: "Your Father which is in heaven maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." These words are used in this passage to emphasize the fact that God loves all men impartially for he sends the sunlight and the showers upon the bad as well as the good, but it reveals just as surely the conviction of our Lord that these phenomena are the agents of the Divine Will. It would certainly be very difficult for us to believe that God had anything to do with any part of this world if he had no hand in such an important factor as the weather. Scarcely any other feature of man's environment is more significant. God has used the climate as the means of differentiating the races of man. The ancient writers accounted for the color of the Ethiopians by saying that the sun had burnt them black, and modern anthropologists support that view by showing that the main line of black races stretches along the hot and fertile regions of the equator.

A writer in the current issue of the Journal of Ethics shows how the weather affects conduct. His observations are based upon the statistics of New York City. It is, of course, admitted that many things enter into the cause of any event, but when there is constant and corresponding fluctuation between two sets of phenomena, some casual relation may be held to exist. We cannot for a moment suppose that a low state of barometer ever drove a man to suicide, but it is a fact that suicide is three times as prevalent during conditions of low barometer as during high. Suicide and drunkenness are much more frequent at 10 degrees (Fahrenheit) than at 85 degrees. The saloon evidently gets its victims in large numbers not only because human nature is vicious and wicked, but also because it enjoys warmth and comfort. Better-heated tenements, warmer clothing and more nourishing food would certainly be good agents of the temperance cause. The effect of temperature and humidity upon the nervous system is familiar to school teachers. They can often trace the change from a docile, studious school to a fretful noisy one in the change of weather. In our practical affairs we expect fair days to make men accessible and generous and open to consider new problems favorably. Sidney Smith went so far as to say that very high and very low temperature establish all human sympathy and relations. "It is impossible," he said, "to feel affection above 78 degrees or below 20 degrees Fahrenheit."

In view of all these diverse effects which depend upon the weather, the saying of Jesus that God sends the sunshine and the rain becomes more difficult to understand. It is easy to ascribe fair weather to God, but what about cyclones, and hail, and water spouts, Galveston floods and the drouth which causes Indian famines? The days seem divine enough which smile upon us to make us happy and generous and eager in life's pursuits, but what of the heat and cold and damp and wind which drive men to insanity, suicide, and drunkenness?

There seems to be but one answer: God sends all the days. He sends the sun and the cloud. He is all in all. The ancient psalmist ascribed all the powers of nature to him. The thunder is his voice, the wind his breath, the clouds his chariot, and the light his garment. To the Hebrew, the one supreme power in the universe is God. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, the young lions seek their meat from God. "Thou openest thine hand," said the psalmist, "and they are filled with good. Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." And again, "God looketh on the earth and it trembleth; he toucheth the hills and they smoke." The conviction at the heart of all this imagery and metaphor is that Jehovah is the one and all-inclusive, eternal reality. In his providence all events transpire. His hand is in all our ways whether they be in the light or under the cloud.

But although God sends all the sun and the rain, the effects which these produce in our lives are not independent of ourselves. We are co-workers together with God in determining how the seasons and incidents of nature shall affect us. The man who has foresight, carefulness, and energy learns to turn God's rain and sunshine and even his lightning into benefits. The improvident, thoughtless man, the really bad man, fails to gather a crop even in a good season under favorable skies. The temperate man who has proper food and sleep and exercise and who uses properly the shelter and resources which thrift and watchfulness afford, can endure the extremes and vicissitudes better and gain from the even course of nature far more than one who is improvident, ill-kept, over-worked and dissipated. What is food to one may be poison to another, and the reason is found in the character and conduct which have been slowly acquired. How the heat affects me to-day depends on what I did yesterday or last winter or perhaps years ago. Our world of nature is determined very much by what we are, by what we have made ourselves. If we have neglected the physical system until it has lost vigor and resistance, a little rise in temperature or a drink of lake water may be sufficient to bring prostration or typhoid fever. If one has worked his brain and nervous system to exhaustion, the summer heat may cause insanity or suicide. God maketh his sun to shine upon all alike, but its effects are as varied as the things it touches. Upon the sensitive plate of a camera it makes a picture, through a burning glass it lights a flame. It makes the rose red and the lily white. It purifies the running brook and upsets the stagnant pool. The sun and rain fall alike upon all classes of people. Some always find the weather good, good for something, others always find it bad. The latter class never find a day which just suits. There seem to be some Christians like that. Sundays are particularly bad for weather. In the fall it is too windy; in winter, too cold; in spring, too wet, and in summer, too hot.

But, after all, in order to appreciate with Jesus the providence of God in nature, one must free himself from his own personal whims and selfish interests. He must take a larger and more disinterested view. It is a mark of the child and savage to suppose that the whole world is subject to his wish or fancy. The savage seeks to gain the favor of the gods for his personal comfort. Alas! how much savagery and childishness lingers in human nature still. Our prayers are yet too individual and self-seeking. We are like the two countrymen of whom Lucian tells in one of his dialogues. One pours into the right ear of the god a petition that not a drop of rain may fall before he has completed his harvest; while another peasant, equally importunate, whispers into the left ear a prayer for immediate rain, in order to bring on a backward crop of cabbages.

One cannot appreciate nature so long as he is conscious of himself and of his petty personal interests merely. He must learn to lose himself in pure artistic or scientific contemplation. He must think of the heat and rain as they affect not only the city but the growing corn in the field; as they affect not this or that farm or crop alone, but all the agricultural interests of the world; as they affect men not on this day or that but through the years and centuries. When nature is viewed thus in cycles and in her vastness, her blessings are more apparent. The sunlight enables all to live. Very few perish in the heat. The rain brings the harvests to the world. Very few die in the flood. The wind purifies the air for all. Very few die in the tempest. God's ways are not intelligible when judged only by individual days or moments, but the poet with larger vision truly sings:

"The year is with thy goodness crowned,
Thy clouds drop wealth the world around
Through thee the deserts laugh and sing
And nature smiles and owns her king."

This large comprehension of nature teaches many of his best spiritual lessons, such as resignation, dependence and reverence. We often understand life best in disaster and defeat. Success and power have a tendency to blind us to the true proportion of things. The history of Israel is typical. Each time the nation came to prosperity, they became proud and self-sufficient. They lost sight of God. But when famine and misfortune overtook them, then, says the psalmist, "they returned and inquired early after God. They remembered that God was their rock and their redeemer." In the storm with its darkness, in the winter with its frost, in the summer with its drouth, man through all his history has felt that anxious awe and utter helplessness which belongs to his weakness when opposed by the superior powers of nature. But through all that long-checked history of the race there has been growing up the confidence that these powers of nature are at heart friendly and worthy of trust. For civilized man the terrors which appalled his ancestors have largely vanished, while the assurances of good will and sympathy between nature and himself have multiplied. Primitive man, as his mythology abundantly shows, saw in nature a constant war between the demons and the heavenly powers. He trembled at the raging forces of the elements and at the titans piling up their cloud-castles against the sky as if to storm the heavens and destroy the earth. He saw the weapons of the heavenly warriors flashing and heard in the thunder their cry of battle. Then the dark army of the clouds dissolves, the fruitful rain streams forth, the bright heavens grow clear again, and the bright and living powers have victoriously held the field against the destructive powers of darkness and death. Because these beneficent powers seemed to fight for him and for his world as well as for their own, he trusted them, sought their protection and longed to league himself with them in mutual friendship and helpfulness. They became to him his guardians and masters, the ruling power of his life and action. Today these heavenly warriors are seen to be marshaled under one great commander and guide. The world for us has become far more than ever before a world of order and law. Its secrets have been discovered and their terrors laid. The calm eye of knowledge surveys the eclipse, and cloud, and gathering darkness, and there is no fear. But has the charm of nature faded with the passing of its giants and sprites? Rather has it come to be truly seen as the manifestation, the "garment" of God. There are still mysteries in nature, but no evil spirits; there are tragedies and struggles, but no utter hopelessness. The light in the cloud has been discovered, and men cannot forget the vision. The beauty of the rainbow arches over the flood, and the calm joy of the presence of God spreads over the west at sunset. Christ slept in the storm at sea. Was not that restfulness the expression of his complete trust in that presence

"Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns
And the round ocean and the living air"?

In conclusion, let us recognize how this Christian view of nature may aid in the cultivation of the religious life. Jesus clearly saw in the sunlight and rain the providence and moral character of God. What a fascination the mountains and lakes had for him. Like the lily and the sparrow, they spoke to him of God. How constantly we miss that message! We allow our physical comfort and common interests to come between us and the deeper joy of communion with the spiritual life of the world. We fret and worry lest the storm keep us from a day of pleasure or for fear the heat may turn the markets against us. But can pleasure or wealth compensate us for the loss of spiritual vision? Happy is he whose windows catch the changing glory of the evening sky, whose soul bounds upward at the majestic movement of the storm cloud, whose heart is quieted in holy calm at the sound of the gentle rain. Happy is he who finds in the changing moods of the outer world the same restless, moving, aspiring, living presence which is also in the mind of man. He alone truly knows the meaning of the sun which shines and the rain which falls over all the earth.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

GOD CALLS ABRAM.

Sunday-school lesson for July 28, 1901. Gen. 12: 1-9.

Golden Text: I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing. Gen. 12: 2.

1 Now the Lord had said unto Abram. Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee:

2 And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing.

3 And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.

4 So Abram departed, as the Lord had spoken unto him; and Lot went with him; and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.

5 And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came.

6 And Abram passed through the land unto the place of Sichem, unto the plain of Moreh. And the Canaanite was then in the land.

7 And the Lord appeared unto Abram, and said, unto thy seed will I give this land: and there builded he an altar unto the Lord, who appeared unto him.

8 And he removed from thence unto a mountain on the east of Beth-el, and pitched his tent, having Beth-el on the west, and Hal on the east: and there he builded an altar unto the Lord, and called upon the name of the Lord.

9 And Abram journeyed, going on still toward the south.

stars and other objects was deified. The name of Ur or Hur, Abram's birthplace, signified fire or light, and this place became a center of idolatrous worship. The land was wholly given over to polytheism, and shocking immoralities were associated with the worship of the innumerable gods, the offering of human sacrifices being not unknown. Observe that idolatry, whatever be its form, is the religion of sight and sense in opposition to that of faith. The conditions and surroundings in Ur when Abram was born, and in which he lived until the age of 70, therefore, were hostile to monotheism. His own family no doubt was infected with the idolatry of the times.

A Great Lesson in Faith.

But even in Ur witnesses for the true God were not wanting. The Eternal Word with his promise of redemption; the influence of Noah's godly life; the strivings of the Spirit of God; direct theophanies, Acts 7: 2; the witness of nature (Ps. 19: 1-6); all these were present as lights in the darkness. They testified of God. To Abram, therefore, even as unto us, "faith came by hearing and hearing by the word of God." Rom. 10: 17. Day by day he heard in his soul what he recognized as the divine voice, saying "Follow me," "Get thee out of thy country." When the time of choice and action as set forth in today's lesson fully came, his grand decision was made intelligently, deliberately, and promptly. He heard the call, and he believed God regarding the unseen advantages which the future presented. In his case, as in every other, faith lent substance to things future. Heb. 11: 1. As Dr. Dodd says, "Faith makes even eternity as real as time and gives substantial existence to that new and limitless future." Abraham's faith was counted unto him for righteousness; he rejoiced to see Christ's day, and he saw it and was glad (John 8: 56). He recognized the one true God when no one else did, and denied himself to follow the divine leading.

V. 1. The Call of God. "Lord said unto Abram." This first call we are told came before Abram had left Ur. Acts 7: 2; Neh. 9: 7. God is constantly calling his people to action in righteousness. Every inspiration felt by man to a higher life, or to some righteous act, is a call of God.

* * * "Abram." God called Abram to found a family and a select nation because he was the best man for the purpose. As his after life showed he possessed besides faith, humility, courage, self-sacrifice and gentleness. God always calls those whom he can use for great things. * * *

"Get thee out of country." Abram was tested as to whether he loved his worldly surroundings, better than he loved God. This is the test that comes to us all. Matt. 4: 8, 9.

* * * "From thy kindred." Besides turning from his country he must leave friends and relations, who do not choose to go with him. His brother Nahor stayed back in Haran and became the father of the Arab tribes. * * * "I will show thee." This was the first of seven promises which follow.

V. 2. Inducements to Faith. Now follow six "exceedingly great and precious promises." 2 Pet. 1: 4. The first of these refers to temporal blessings, the others to spiritual.

* * * "Of thee a great nation." How improbable that must have sounded seeing Abram was now 75 and childless. He lost a country but gained a better. We have the promise of a hundredfold recompense when, for Jesus' sake, we give up things dear to us. Matt. 19: 29. * * * "I will bless thee." Of Enoch it is said he "walked with God"; of Noah, he "found grace in the eyes of the Lord," but of Abram alone the expression of intimacy "he was the friend of God." Isa. 41: 8; Jas. 2: 23. But we, if we are found faithful, are called "brethren." Heb. 2: 11. * * * "And make thy name great." To millions of Christians, Jews and Mohammedans few names have been so widely regarded as great. God honored Abram by devoting more space to his personal history than to the whole world's previous history through centuries. His name is great not because of military, or legislative, or literary deeds but because of his simple religious Reckoned as B. C. 1996, about half way between Adam and Christ. Noah lived to within 72 years of Abraham's emigration from Ur, which it is assumed occurred four centuries after the deluge. Abram was 70 years old when he migrated.

The Centuries After the Flood.

After the deluge, Noah's descendants left the highlands of Ararat and settled on the fertile plains of the Euphrates and Tigris. Here they increased rapidly, cities were built (Chap. 10: 11) and civilization flourished, as archæological remains abundantly show. But, with time and prosperity, the world again grew wicked as is seen in Chapter 11. Instead of obeying God's command to subdue the earth (Chap. 1: 28) by spreading over its surface, the people in time wickedly conspired to unite in open rebellion against God, by building to their own glory a city and a tower. "Let us build * * * let us make us a name," said they. Chap. 11: 4. God broke up their evil confederation, dispersing them by the confusion of tongues. After this they fell wholly away from worshipping the true God, and bowed down before natural objects. The power manifested in the storm, the sun, the moon, the influence, as the breathing type of faith in the one true God. * * * "Thou shalt be a blessing." Through his example and influence Abram has been a medium of blessing to the world for thousands of years.

V. 3. Partnership of Faith. "I will bless them that bless thee." The cause of Abram and of God was one. They were partners in the redemption of the world. We, too, are partners with God. 1 Cor. 3:6, 9. Acts 9:4. * * * "Curse him that curseth thee." His enemies were God's enemies. * * * "In thee." Through Abram's line the Savior was to appear. * * * "All families be blessed." This crowning promise is fulfilled in the coming of Christ and in the blessings he was to bring. Luke 2:10, 11. But from being the chosen race through whom the world's redeemer was to come, the example of the Jewish race in industry, morality, literature, law and religion has been an inestimable benefit and blessing to the world. Not the family of Shem, Abram's ancestor, alone; but in the end the families of Noah's other sons, Ham and Japheth, were to be part-takers of the benefit.

V. 4. Faith's Venture. "Abram departed." "By faith he obeyed and went out not knowing whither he went." Heb. 11:8. That was the proof of the faith of Abram, which the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation so warmly commend. He was willing hereafter to walk by faith rather than by sight. 2 Cor. 5:7. He was willing to forsake home, country, father, to make and venture on an entirely new course of life. His was unlike the faith of the rich young ruler (Mark 10:22) who would venture little in following Jesus. Is our faith that of Abram's? * * * "And Lot went." Lot was Abram's nephew. His father Haran was dead. Chap. 11:27, 28. After the company made its start from Ur it stopped for some years at Harau (Charran, Acts 7:2) far from the promised land. Why this was done is not clear. Here an affliction came in the death of Abram's father Terah. After that he was ready to go. Chap 11:31, 32. Some Christians who make a good start in following the divine call get no farther than Haran, and there they stay. But sometimes affliction moves them on. * * * "Seventy and five years old." Abram lived to be 175 years old. Noah lived to be 950 years. The limit of life seems to have rapidly lessened.

V. 5. Rewards of Faith. "Abram took Sarai his wife." Sarai, meaning "My princess," afterwards changed to Sarah, "a princess"; a broader term. * * * "Lot his brother's son." Adopted by Abram who up to this time had no children of his own. * * * "Substance . . . had gathered." This indicates that there had been activity during the stay in Haran. Taking his substance with him would tend to make Abram more contented in the new abode. He was blessed temporarily. With Paul he found that "godliness is profitable in all things." The Gospel does not lead to poverty. It is the prodigals who become poor. See Ps. 37:25; Matt. 6:33; Luke 15:14. * * * "Into Canaan they came." Canaan was named after a son of Ham, some of whose descendants settled here. Although a fair land it was filled with wicked people who defiled the land, and for this reason were cast out to make room for the chosen family. Lev. 18:24, 25. His near neighbors in Sodom were wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly. Chap. 13:13. If God in wisdom made choice of Abram as leader of his people, he no less in wisdom chose Palestine as the land that was to become the seat of sacred events. This strip of land was unique in being central to the world yet in a sense isolated. It lay at a corner near where three continents and six ancient states met, yet was shut off by deserts, mountains and sea from such contact with other nations as must have proven injurious. Thus all things pointed towards the one issue, the crowning blessing: The seed of the woman.

V. 6. Trials of Faith. "Passed through." The actual toil and discomfort of a great journey of some 450 miles overland now took place, which must have been in strange contrast with the ease of life in the fertile old country of Ur. * * * "Unto Shechem." A city in the very center of Palestine built by the Hivites. Its situation was between Mt. Ebal and Gerizim, a most beautiful spot even in this day. * * * "Plain (or Oak. R. V.) of Moreh." Probably an oak grove in the fertile valley, owned by one Moreh. * * * "Canaanite was then in the land." Here was a fresh trial of faith, in the presence of things that defiled. The Canaanites were more wicked and idolatrous than the people of Ur. The Christian convert also finds the Canaanites in his promised land. These must be subdued and cast out. 2 Cor. 10:3-5.

V. 7. The Gift Outright. "The Lord appeared." A different expression from that in verse 1. It would indicate a special appearance. The Lord always appears in the hour of need. Isa. 41:8-10; Acts 16:25; Rev. 1:10. * * * "Unto thy seed will I give this land." To Abram's descendants. First God did "shew" Abram the land (verse 1); now it is to become a gift. * * * "Builded an altar." Abram took his religion with him when he traveled. A godly man's first thought is of an altar. Matt. 6:33. Abram allowed neither his riches nor his ungodly neighbors to interfere with his devotions. It was a grand sight in the heart of old heathendom: one man against the world. Thus he declared his faith in God's promises.

V. 8. Tent and Altar. "He removed." The meaning is "he plucked up his tent pegs" in repeated encampments as the journey proceeded, after the manner of Bedouins. * * * "Bethel," or Luz, a place ten miles north of Jerusalem. * * * "Pitched his tent." The spot chosen was a few miles removed from Shechem near Bethel, or Luz. Hai was five miles southeast of Bethel. * * * "Builded an altar." The second one referred to. Wherever Abram had a home for shelter God must have an altar for sacrifices. * * * "Called upon . . . Lord." The sacrifices offered were accompanied with prayer. Abram communed with God.

V. 9. The Journey. "Journeyed . . . toward the south." The South appears as a proper name in the R. V., meaning South land, the Negeb, or dry region, on the road to Egypt. Abram found anything but smooth living in Canaan. Besides the iniquities of the Canaanites, there now was famine in the land which caused him to change his abode to Egypt where plenty prevailed. God's friends are sure to find a way from the land of famine to the land of plenty.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

By Peter Ainslie.

WHATEVER God promises to do, he will do. His word cannot be broken. He is always faithful. It is enough for him to say that he will do a thing. To take up his promises and then to question whether he will keep them is a step toward infidelity. The danger part of the contract is our end, not God's. "I will bless thee" bears all the comfort that the heart needs. He may not bless us as we expect or as we want. Unless we are very spiritual, his blessing will come in just the opposite from what we expected, for God's ways and our ways are very different. It is only by a large knowledge of God that we get to know his ways, really a lifetime companionship. It takes us a long time to learn the habits of man, whom we associate with constantly. With some it takes years. Now God cannot be found out in a day, especially is this true, since in nearly everything we are opposite from God. We have to give up our former thought and start into a new line of thinking. It is the new creature that begins to know God. Pain and joy are mingled in the same cup. In everything God blesses his children.

His promise to Abraham was that he would make his name great. This was so in the lifetime of Abraham and it is marvelously true today. We need not mention the 200,000,000 Mohammedans, who hold his name with tender sacredness, for God hardly included these in his promise. Their esteem for Abraham adds nothing to God's glory. It is all a mockery, but for nearly two thousand years Abraham's name was a tower of strength for Jewish fidelity, and on the establishment of Christianity his greatness rose to nobler heights. His name shall yet be a great factor in bringing all Israel to the knowledge of Jesus as the Christ.

Alexander, Cæsar, Napoleon and Frederick may have had "great" affixed to their names, but such greatness passes away like mists and shadows. Abraham was really great, made great by simple faith in God and obedience to his commandments.

God gives to us that we may give to others. "Go home to thy friends and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee" was the order of Jesus. You have been blessed. Now bless your friends. Blessings cannot be kept within our own hearts. Unused they rot within us. Let the roses bloom every year and never cut them and they will gradually become inferior, but cut them when in full bloom—use them—and each year they become more beautiful. Wordsworth said that we live by admiration, hope and love. Nurse the opposites of these and you become narrow and mean and unhappy. Put all yourself to work. Use all that is in you. Jesus emptied himself. Hold back nothing. Remember the Master's example and that we are his. One of the prayers in the French monasteries ran like this: "O, my God, grant that I may be of some use to some one." If you carry the light, hurry to light all the lamps that have gone out around you. This is the mission of the Christian.

Our Father, in mercy thou hast remembered us and thy blessings upon us we desire to bear to others through Christ. Amen.

THE TERMS OF DISCIPLESHIP.

THE importance of this question can not be overestimated. The answer to it—how simple! And yet with all our progress and advancement of which we so proudly boast how inadequate is our appreciation of fundamental spiritual truths. If we are to answer this question in a formal way we must enrich the content so as to make it dynamic in our present work-a-day life. I fear that some of the most vital things in Jesus' teaching are so flippantly spoken that they become "mere phrases" without meaning anything of eternal worth to us. We talk about self-denial, cross bearing, following Jesus and rendering obedience unto him. Are they so many words made up of so many letters or do they carry with them something of the potency of their historic association?

Meaning of Discipleship.

Discipleship can only be fully understood as the real, living, personal Christ takes hold of us. We must do something more than copy Jesus. He is more than an example. He is not an abstraction, a theory, or even a principle, but he is a person incomparable in the life of the world. In him we find the freest, fullest and most perfect expression of the life of God. We must have participation in God as he is present in this great central character of history so that his life may take root and grow within us.

That which constituted him a Savior is necessary in order to discipleship. Had he been overcome by the temptation of the Evil One; had he turned away from a life of sympathy and service; had he avoided Calvary we could not conceive of him as the world's Redeemer. How, then, can we become members of his Kingdom if we do not become free channels of the Divine grace?

The Law of the Perfected Life

is a paradox. We save by losing and we lose by saving. There must be a denial, a losing of the lower, sensuous, unreal self which thrives best in the atmosphere of pride and self-glory and hungers after pleasure and power. But he who is willing to give up these external goods, to sacrifice the carnal desires, he it is who saves the true self and finds the abundant life. The transitory and insufficient must be given over if we would have that satisfying portion, that inner blessedness.

There may be instances where God would have a rich man give up his all and engage in some humble, serviceable work. But the normal Christian life is the complete giving of self, and the holding of whatever we have of talent, time, or money as stewards ready at any time to give an account of our stewardship. We must take up our cross and follow him. And it has been wisely said that a cross is not only to be borne but it is to be crucified upon. The old man must be crucified and buried in order that there may be a resurrection of the new man, with new aspirations and new powers.

Too many have stopped on the threshold; others have thought of Christianity as most beautiful—that is to be dreamed about. But when we come to talk about continuing steadfast in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship or about living soberly, righteously, godly in this present world, they beg to be excused. They did not understand that these belonged to discipleship. In the early church closeness to Christ made them close to one another. What a charming picture we have of pure, sweet fellowship in the second chapter of Acts. The peculiar expression belongs to the past, but more of that spirit of brotherliness and love one for another is the great need of the world to-day.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

By Charles Blanchard.

TRUE PHILANTHROPY.

Topic July 28. Ref. Gal. 6: 1-10.

TRUE philanthropy is based on the recognition of brotherhood. There is no real benevolence without it. Paul recognized this when he said: "Brethren, if any man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

The Real Problem.

The real problem of philanthropy is the restoration of the weak and fallen—not the giving of dole to the poor, or the feeding of the tramp at the back door. The latter is much easier done, and the trouble for us soon over. But it does not help, but rather hinders, in the solution of the problem of the restoration and reformation of the pauper and criminal classes. Most of us feed the tramp because it is the simplest way to rid ourselves of the responsibility we feel toward the unfortunate, and it salves our consciences, and in a measure satisfies our religious sense of duty toward the weak brother. There is a sort of fellow feeling in this that does some credit to our common humanity. There is some real religion in doing good unto another because we remember our common weakness. Paul says we are to consider ourselves lest we also be tempted. Brotherhood is largely based on this sense of our human weakness, and our mutual need of sympathy and of support.

The self-sufficient man is about the meanest and most useless man in society—or in the church. He is the one the apostle has in mind when he says: "If any man think himself to be something when he is nothing he deceiveth himself." He is the one who says of the poor and unfortunate and weak brother, "It's his own fault. He isn't to be pitied. I don't believe in upholding such folks"—and he doesn't. He is the modern pharisee—just like the ancient. He thanks God, if he ever is thankful at all, that he is not as other men. He is sufficient of himself and in himself. He comes as nearly living unto himself and dying unto himself as it is possible in this world. When he does get into the church and try to do anything it usually takes the form of censor of the community in general, and the weak members of the church in particular.

The Double Law.

The law of Christian activity is two-fold. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." This is the law of love and of unselfish benevolence; of that love that seeketh not her own; that recognizes the mutual need of sympathy and help; that does good unto all men; but especially unto them that are of the household of faith. It is the law of true Christian brotherhood. It is the law of Christ, and can never be improved. It is the basis of all real brotherhood. All others are mere travesties of the idea of fraternity. But there is another part to this law of Christ. "Every man shall bear his own burden." There is noble independence in this. It is a part of the law of liberty. Freedom and fraternity are the basis of brotherhood. Right recognition of our own moral and spiritual obligations, along with the spirit of genuine philanthropy toward all men, is the Christian conception of life. The millennium will come with the practical working out of this two-fold law of the Christian life.

STUDIES IN MISSIONS.

[Supplementary to the C. E. reading courses.]

THE ARMY NOW IN THE FIELD.

F. M. Rains.

THE whole missionary army now on the foreign field from Christian lands numbers 15,440. This consecrated host is Christianity's standing army on the frontiers of the world. Students of missions have classified this army as follows:

1. Ordained Missionaries. Meaning, of course, those who have been formally ordained by some Christian body for the Christian ministry. Many were ordained for the special work of foreign missions. Others were regularly ordained for the ministry in Christian lands and were afterwards sent to the foreign field. The whole number of regularly ordained missionaries in all lands is 5,063.

2. Medical Missionaries. The whole number is 702. Of this number 484 are men and 218 are women. These give themselves to the healing of the bodies of men, that they may gain an open door to the hearts of the people. It has been said that "China was opened to the gospel at the point of the lancet."

3. Lay Missionaries. That is, unordained men in the field. Some of these preach. Some are teachers. Many are valuable assistants in different departments of the work. Many are colporteurs and do effective missionary service in the distribution of Bibles and Christian literature. Large printing establishments belonging to mission stations are manned by this class.

4. Married Women. Without question, these are entitled to numbers on the muster rolls of the missionary forces of the world. They have joined their husbands in a work of peculiar consecration. Side by side they labor with their husbands and bear a notable share in effective service. Home-making is one of the most valuable missionary agencies in the presence of a heathen community. This division of the army numbers 3,567.

5. Unmarried Women. Their work is chiefly evangelistic and educational. They can enter zenanas and harems where men are not permitted to go. Their work tells mightily among women and children. They do their work chiefly in connection with some Christian family. The number enrolled is 3,403.

This aggressive army of the Lord is recruited from different countries, as follows: England, 5,136; United States, 4,110; Germany, 1,515; Scotland, 653; Scandinavia, 332; Australia, 313; all other countries, 1,548.

The five great mission fields of the world are China, India, Japan, South America and Africa. The army is scattered on these chief battlefields as follows: China, 2,461; India, 1,865; Japan, 723; South America, 778; Africa, 1,168.

These five fields contain nearly one-half of the whole force. The others are stationed in smaller fields and in the islands of the sea.

Besides the army of missionaries gathered from the four quarters of Christendom the whole force will not be complete without mentioning the native home-guards or native workers in the foreign mission fields of the world. This auxiliary army now outnumbered the great standing army. They have been converted from the worship of idols and trained in efficient service in all the activities of the Christian life. They may be tabulated as follows:

1. Ordained native workers, numbering 4,053.
2. Unordained native workers—preachers, teachers, Bible women, and other helpers, who number 72,999; a grand total of all native workers of 77,338. This home-guard on the foreign field will prove a mighty factor in the future evangelization of the world.

The whole amount of money raised annually for the support of these two wings of the army is $19,126,120. Cincinnati, Ohio.

"What means the lugubrious wail that too often bursts from the circle of the Missionary's friends? Pathetic plaints are penned about laying their bones on a foreign shore by those who never thought of making aught of their bones at home. (Bone dust is dear nowhere, we think.) And then there is the never ending talk and wringing of hands over Missionary 'sacrifices.' The man is surely going to be hanged, instead of going to serve in Christ's holy gospel: is this such service as He deserves, who, though rich, for our sakes became poor? Bishops of the masculine gender assume the piping phraseology of poor old women in presence of him before whom the Eastern Magi fell down and worshipped, ay, and opened their treasures, and presented unto Him gifts—gold, frankincense, and myrrh. They will give their 'mites,' as if what they do give were their 'all.'"

REVIEW.

Monday—Luke 24, 1-12.

The angels in the sepulchre—they are symbolic of the blessings which Jesus by his death and resurrection has brought me.

Here is buoyant vitality where I expect powerlessness and lethargy and slumber. The angels are always young, always strong, always ready and eager and obedient. So Jesus, who died and rose again, girds me, when I trust in him, with fresh vigor and energy.

Here is good hope where I expect despondency and gloom. The angels never despair; even in a grave their faces are bright and their message is one of courage and cheer. So Jesus, who has emerged a conqueror from the trouble and darkness, dispels the shadows and sadnesses which haunt me. He puts a new song on my lips, a new light in my eyes, a new hope in my heart.

Tuesday—John 20, 11-18.

There stood the Lord of death and life, with Mary in the garden. He had come fresh from bearing her sins and mine. He had come from those unfathomable and unknown sorrows of his soul, which went to make the ransom of my soul. He had come out of the unseen world "in the power of an endless life." And he was "that same Jesus."

He is the same in his personality. He keeps the very body which was torn by the Roman scourges and nails, the very soul which was exceeding sorrowful unto death. He is today the old divine-human Savior whom Galilee and Jerusalem knew.

And he is the same in his character. He remains unalterable in faithfulness, in patience, in love. During the three years of his ministry he was very tender with his doubting and mistaking followers; after his resurrection he was just as tender; at this moment he is governed by the ancient compassion and grace. How good it is for me that I deal with such a Lord! He forbears and forgives. He suffers long and is kind. He crowns me with his love.

Wednesday—John 20, 19-29.

I cannot set free by my own act and word my brother's soul. For a week the apostles had reasoned with Thomas. But it was of no use. He remained an obstinate doubter, a stubborn questioner of the manifold witness to the great fact of joy. Mere evidences may be convincing in the abstract, but I cannot sway the heart and will of others by them. Let me take home the solemn thought that only divine grace can bless my friend.

Yet, let me go on bearing my witness, unshaken, unceasing. My certainty will insensibly touch and move him, even if it is insufficient to vanquish him. My happiness will stir and kindle his longings, even when he persists most steadfastly in clinging to his needless gloom.

Thursday—John 21, 15-22.

Let me quote the words of one of the greatest of modern preachers, Adolphe Monod: "No other religion presents anything which resembles this invitation to give God the heart. Give me thy observance, says the God of Pharisaism. Give me thy personality, says the God of Hegel. Give me thy reason, says the God of Kant. It remains for the God of Jesus Christ to say, Give me thy heart. With him, to give the heart to God is not merely an obligation of piety; it is its root, its beginning, its middle, and its end. It is the unmistakable feature of a genuine conversion. Faith, works, grace, holiness, the new creation all are there."

Friday—Matthew 28, 16-20.

Every revelation Christ gives me is meant to be communicated. He does not show himself to me that I may understand abstract truth. He shows himself that his light may guide my feet, that his lessons may shape my practice.

One error which has haunted the Church is that of an impractical orthodoxy. I take Christianity as a system of truth to be believed; I accept all the articles of the creed; I find in Scripture the food of real and sweet feeling. But there I stop. Nay, but such knowing and such feeling are not enough. Having received, I must give—I must be always giving.

And, of course, there is the opposite error—that of an unintelligent practice. People say, "You need attach little importance to Christian doctrine; the only thing worth minding is Christian life." But again I am wrong. I am pitting the child against the parent. I am wrenching the blossom from the stem. My life must be based on doctrine. I must learn in order to do, and to be, and to teach. I cannot be an apostle till I have been a disciple.

Saturday—Luke 24, 44-53.

The disciples were right; they returned to Jerusalem with great joy. Joy is the only temper which befits me, when I think of my exalted and glorified Lord.

For now I have an advocate in the presence of the Father. "Day and night my Jesus makes no pause." He takes my feeble and unworthy prayers, and removes from them whatever is faulty and sinful, and infuses into them his own surpassing grace; and then presents them to God. And they are a sacrifice of a sweet smell, fragrant, welcome, victorious.

And now I have an unfailing benefactor at the right hand of the Majesty on high. And he teaches me in my ignorance, strengthens me in my conflicts, comforts me in my sorrow, empowers me in my service, bears witness with my spirit that I am a child of God.

Sunday—Acts 2, 1-11.

May the Holy Spirit teach me to speak with new tongues.

Sometimes the tongue of instruction. There are many round about me who need to be enlightened in divine and eternal things—the children, the young disciples, the men and women who have not had my opportunities, those both at home and abroad who are perishing for lack of knowledge.

And sometimes the tongue of admonition. For there are souls in danger of going down to death. I should reprove faithfully and yet tenderly, with earnestness and with love. But I must be helped for the work by the Divine Spirit—for no task is so delicate and so difficult.

And often the tongue of consolation. Always there are multitudes requiring to be comforted—hearts weary, heavy-laden, breaking, broken. Let me be a succorer of such; let me speak to them the word in season.

These are the tongues I covet from him.

The material part of us ought to keep growing thinner to let the soul out when its time comes, and the soul to keep growing bigger and stronger every day, until it bursts the body at length, as a growing nut does its shell.—George Macdonald.

LITERATURE.

LONGFELLOW AND HIS SONGS.

E. L. Powell.

Additional beauty and attractiveness are given to the productions of Longfellow by the purity of the life he lived—the loveliness of his Christian character. Mr. George William Curtis, once wrote: "It is the felicity of our first great literary epoch which is ending, and among whose beloved names are Irving, Bryant, Hawthorne, Emerson and Longfellow, that the lives of its masters were irreproachable. And so must be the lives of the masters of the literary epoch next to come. The days have gone by when a great author, a real leader of thought, can live the life of a Marlowe, Wycherly or Byron. The Rosettis and Swinburnes and Whitmans were born a century too late to succeed in turning us backward to the caves and ditches which beset our ancestors."

Another writer, in an essay truly admirable, says: "The world has ever refused to crown with its choicest laurels the brow of genius alone, unless it were as pure as it was broad. The writers whom history today names its greatest are not its Lucians, Voltaires, Heines or Byrons, despite their power and brilliancy, but its Virgils, Dantes, Schillers and Miltons, because of their purity and moral elevation." The soul of Longfellow was a hallowed temple in which dwelt holy images—ennobling thoughts—a temple guarded by the true, beautiful and good. His was consecrated genius, his were sanctified talents. From the altar of that genius ascended no strange fire, but the light of heaven; his talents were glorified by using them for the happiness and cheer of his race. We delight to commune with one so gifted and yet so good; so grand, and yet so simple; so rich in mental treasure, and yet so humble in spite of his spiritual affluence. Milton tells us "that he who would not be frustrate of his hope to write well in laudable things, ought himself to be a true poem, that is, a composition and pattern of the best and honorablest things." We admire, then, Longfellow's songs all the more because his own life was a poem so tender and beautiful, so strong and grand. The influence of that life is with us at this hour. To use his own verse:

"Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.
So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men."

Such, then, is the character of the man whom, as a poet, we wish to study, and some of the characteristics of whose writings we wish to consider.

It is impossible to read very many of his poems before observing that he is pre-eminently the poet of the heart. The human heart with its hopes and fears, its joys and sorrows, its aspirations and despondency, is the sanctuary which he seeks to consecrate and glorify with the incense of his genius. He does not enter into the realm of metaphysical poetry; he is not one of those "bards sublime" whose "mighty thoughts suggest life's endless toil and endeavor," but his are "simple and heartfelt lays," gushing from his heart as "showers from the clouds of summer, or tears from the eyelids, start." His thoughts pass through his own heart, gathering beauty and strength by their passage, and so enter into our hearts as comforting angels. Hence it comes to pass that Longfellow's poems are:

"Such songs (as) have power to quiet
The restless pulse of care,
And come like the benediction
That follows after prayer."

As we read, the jar of nerves ceases, discord passes into harmony, and the darkness with which life robbed itself is scattered by the "light which never shone on land or sea." He soothes the wounded heart with strains which seem to come from the silent land, so full are they of hope and cheer. With his simple lay of "Resignation," he enters the house of mourning, and tells the sorrow-stricken ones that "what seems to them but sad funereal tapers may be heaven's distant lamps"; and with all the warmth of a loving nature bids them be "patient and assuage the feeling they may not wholly stay." He speaks in inspiring strains to the faint-hearted, bidding them—

"Fear not in a world like this,
And you shall know ere long.
Know how sublime a thing it is
To suffer and be strong."

He pours a flood of sunshine into the despondent heart, causing it to look up through its tears at the splendor which is about to dawn. He brings relief to the burdened heart by giving utterance to its pent-up emotions—thus expressing for us those feelings we could not express for ourselves. Who that has read his poems has not felt this quieting, stilling influence upon his emotional nature? His are songs of hopefulness, songs of healing, songs of helpfulness, because they come from his heart and reach our hearts. In youth we love him for he kindles within us the desire to be "heroes in the strife," which is being waged "on the world's great field of battle." When we grow old, and the hand becomes palsied, and the cheeks hollow, and the voice broken, and the knees tottering the cheerful strains of the poet sound in our ears in his "Morituri Salutamus," telling us,

"That age is opportunity no less than youth itself, Tho' in another dress, and as the evening twilight fades
away,
The sky is filled with stars, invisible by day."

And when our faces are turned to the lonely cemetery, he transfigures its gloom by the power of Christian imagination, into "God's acre," causing us to regard it as a place of sunshine, beauty and rest—temporary residence for the body, made lovely by the presence of the angel of the resurrection.

"Into its furrows shall we all be cast,
In the sure faith that we shall rise again,
At the great harvest when the archangel's blast
Shall winnow like a fan the chaff and grain."

Yes, sweet poet of the human heart, thou dost enrich our natures with hope and cheer and help. Thy presence with us is sunshine. We love thy companionship because thy words "drop as rain and distil as dew" on the troubled hearts of us all. With thy Christian wand, thou dost place an aureole on the brow of every sorrow and evoke an angel of light from the bosom of every cloud.

The poet of the heart, he is also the poet of the home. Not only in the bustle and business of the world do we hear his voice, but in the quiet of the home circle, when the world is shut out, and we commune with our hearts and are still.

"When the day is done, and the darkness falls from the wings of night,
As a feather is wafted downward, from an eagle in its flight," and there comes to us "a feeling of sadness and longing," then when the troubled heart yearns for something "to soothe its restless feeling, and banish the thoughts of the day"—then we turn to Longfellow and bid him welcome to our firesides as "dear guest and ghost." No poet so truly belongs to the home. The lamps are lighted. The shadows from the "fitful fire-light dance upon the parlor wall." Then we gaze with him into the cheerful fire, and "the forms of the departed" rise before us—dear forms clothed with all the sacredness of absence and long separation. We see their faces in the blazing coals, we hear their voices coming from the dim unknown, and the very room becomes sanctified by their presence. Or perhaps it is "The Children's Hour," and we open the door of our chamber that in communing with them we may commune with that "heaven which lies around us in childhood." Or we stand with our poet in the "ivied casement" and watch the glorious stars climbing the heavens, choosing with him the "bright planet, Mars," with whom we hold sweet converse:

"O star of strength, I see thee stand
And smile upon my pain;
Thou beckonest with thy mailed hand,
And I am strong again."

And so the poet comes near to us in our homes, sitting with us by our windows as we look up at the glorious face of nature, imparting to us his spirit of communion, or looking on us with loving eyes as we frolic and romp with "grave Alice and laughing Allegra, and Edith with golden hair," or with pensive countenance gazing with us into the memory-awakening fire from which spring the forms that have gone out from among us, but are yet of us. Surely Longfellow is the presiding genius of the pure, hallowed, and consecrated home-circle, and we should give him the central place on our parlor tables. Well may he present the modest request:

"Therefore I hope as no unwelcome guest,
At your warm fireside when the lamps are lighted,
To have my place reserved among the rest,
Nor stand, as one unsought and uninvited."

It is a natural consequence that the poet of the human heart should be a universal poet, one who does not sing for a nation merely, but for the world. The human heart is the same in all climes; and all hearts not devoid of sensibility and emotion respond to the touches of the poet, even as a well-tuned instrument to the skillful touch of its master. The vibrations from the chords struck by our poet echo around the globe, for the chords he strikes are those of human life, and in the issuing music all will join who have longings and yearnings, hopes and joys. What a grand proof it is of the brotherhood of man, when a master hand can touch a chord to which the heart of universal man becomes responsive. Longfellow is not an American poet more than an English poet, nor an English poet more than a poet belonging to the race. Because of this fact, England honored him, as well as America, giving to his bust a place in Westminster Abbey, among those illustrious ones upon whose brows have been placed the only crown of immortality which history can bestow—the immortality of fame.

Having said thus much with reference to Longfellow as a poet, let us notice some of the prominent characteristics of his writings. They are marked, most assuredly, by gentleness and tenderness. If it be legitimate to contrast the productions of two men whose spheres of thought scarcely touch each other, as they move in their respective orbits, I may say that Milton's verse rolls like a grand organ peal, echoing and re-echoing through the chambers of our souls, while the verse of Longfellow suggests the music of the aeolian harp, soft, and sweet and low. Milton's strains are the notes of roaring, dashing cataract, as it goes thundering on its way, while Longfellow weaves into his songs the music of the murmuring brook to which we love to listen in hushed stillness. Longfellow's poetry was written to comfort and heal. It was needful, therefore, that his touch should be tender, that his music should be like the waves "breaking on the strand, soft and low." Hence, in reading Longfellow, the quietness of the home-circle is needed, or the deep stillness of night, or the lovely repose of a summer evening, when, like Isaac, we go out into the fields to meditate. To use another's language, "His notes were not the 'warlike sound of trumpets loud and clarions,' but rather 'the Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders.'"

We observe again that his writings are characterized by a profusion of beautiful imagery. Both in his prose and his poetry we meet with many instances of glowing analogy, and striking symbolism. Under the power of his imagination the beautiful is robed with greater beauty, and the commonplace is glorified, for imagination can change "the bearded goat to a bright capricornus—no longer an animal on earth, but a constellation in heaven." It would be very easy to adduce many instances of his imaginative wealth. Speaking of the "vapory clouds," he says "their snow-white skirts were often spotted with golden tears, which men call stars"; or again, "the cloistered stars, that, nun-like, walk the holy aisles of heaven," or still again "the stars, like living cars of light, for gods to journey by." And who does not remember that most felicitous allusion in one of his longer poems, where he sings of these same heavenly hosts?

"Silently, one by one, in the infinite meadows of heaven, Blossomed the lovely stars, the forget-me-nots of the angels."

Flowers are transmuted by his touch to "stars in the firmament of earth," graves to the "footprints of angels," blushes to "luminous escapes of thought." The thundering avalanche becomes "the sermon of the Alps," and the Alps themselves the "apostles of Nature." The wind through the mountain passes he compares to the "inextinguishable laughter of the gods." Throughout all his writings these gems are scattered with the utmost prodigality. What images of beauty in that one masterpiece, Evangeline! The old man of seventy winters—strong, hearty and hale—is "the oak that is covered with snowflakes." Evangeline's beauty is most strikingly expressed by the statement: "When she had passed, it seemed like the ceasing of exquisite music." Nothing to this poet was commonplace. Even the owl became to him "the hooded monk who chants the midnight mass of nature." In communing with every aspect of nature he found pleasure, for to him every aspect suggested images of loveliness and beauty.

We can but notice the deep religious tone which pervades his writings. Especially do we mark this in his communings with nature. Like Wordsworth, Longfellow felt the presence of a spirit in nature—

"Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns
And the round ocean, and the living air."

PLEASANTRIES.

Nature to him was the garment in which the Invisible robed his mysterious loveliness. God was everywhere, and nature, in all of its aspects spoke to his soul of the Great Creator. Hence to him nature was a loving teacher whose lessons were for healing and comfort:

"If thou art worn and hard beset
With sorrows that thou wouldst forget,
If thou wouldst read a lesson that will keep Thy heart from fainting, and thy soul from sleep,
Go to the woods and hills. No tears
Dim the sweet look that nature wears."

To the religious poet, there is a soul in every flower and every star. All the world gives to him eloquent teachings.

"Oh what a glory does this world put on
For him who, with a fervent heart, goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well-performed, and days well-spent!"

To him every sound is melody, every mood of nature is joy-giving, and all the world about him is a mirror reflecting the glory and greatness of nature's God. Who is the poet?

"He walks with God upon the hills!
And sees each morn the world arise
New-bathed in light of paradise;
He hears the laughter of her rills,
Her melodies of many voices,
And greets her while his heart rejoices.

"She to his spirit undefiled,
Makes answer as a little child;
Unveiled, before his eyes she stands,
And gives her secrets to his hands."

Only he who is in communication with God can pluck out the heart of nature's beauty. Without God, nature is a blank on which is written a language harder to interpret than Egyptian hieroglyphics. Longfellow was a Christian, and he saw everything in the light of the Father's beauty and love, and hence

"All the many sounds of nature
Borrowed sweetness from his singing;
All the hearts of men were softened
By the pathos of his music."

And now we take leave of this sweet singer whose strains we may well feel assured will continue to cheer and happily the sad and weary-hearted of all ages, whose presence will ever be a benediction, and the influence of whose life "no tongue nor pen can tell."

"Dying, he left a memory like the breath
Of summers full of sunshine and of showers,
A grief and gladness in the atmosphere."

Louisville, Ky.

Do your part, and Christ will do his. Do not lie back in the devil's lap, and expect that any good will ever come to you there, but spring up and out, and away and forward, and Christ will meet you. He is always going about looking for you. Have no doubt about that. He "came to the place, and looked up, and saw him." It is the same to-day, My hearer, you are getting a personal call to a personal Saviour. He said to him, "Zacchæus, be quick, and come down. I am wanting to stay with you." That is the Gospel.—John M'Neil.

"This one," said the old critic of the young ministers, "he's na sound! But that one he's a' sound!"

Doctor: "I will leave you this medicine to take after each meal."

Mike: "But, docthor, will yez be koind enough to leave the meal, too."

"I presume you carry a memento of some sort in that locket of yours?"

"Precisely, it is a lock of my husband's hair."

"But your husband is still alive?"

"Yes, but his hair is all gone."

At a dinner of the Literary Society, Lord Houghton once said, with reference to a statue that had been lately found near Athens, that, when the Demarch telegraphed to the Lord Mayor of London, "Phidias recovered," the latter replied, "Glad to hear it, but didn't know he had been ill."

A speaker at the Free Church temperance demonstration said the petty quarrels of temperance workers reminded him of a little boy he had heard of, who, when saying his prayers, happened to have his eyes open, and, looking over to the corner of the room, saw his brother misbehaving himself; whereupon he continued his petition as follows: "And now, O Lord, will you kindly excuse me till I go and kick my little brother!"

Old Gentleman.—"Do you mean to say that your teachers never thrash you?"

Little Gentleman.—"Never! We have moral suasion at our school."

Old Gentleman.—"What's that?"

Little Boy.—"Oh, we get kep' in, and stood up in corners, and locked out, and locked in, and made to write one word a thousand times, and scowled at, and jawed at, and that's all!"

A minister had a negro in his family. One Sunday when he was preaching he happened to look in the pew where the negro was, and could hardly contain himself as he saw the negro, who could not read or write a word, scribbling away most industriously. After meeting he said to the negro, "Tom, what were you doing in church?" "Taking notes, massa; all de gemen takes notes." "Bring your notes here and let me see them." Tom brought his notes, which looked more like Chinese than English. "Why, Tom, this is all nonsense." "I thought so, massa, all the time you were preaching it."

Mr. Moody sometimes came off second best in an encounter. He did so with his daughter on the subject of dancing. Mr. Moody, as may be imagined, heartily disliked the ball room; but he seems to have been unwilling to deprive his daughter of this means of amusement. One morning, however, when the young lady came down rather late for breakfast, and looking perhaps just a little tired after the previous night's terpsichorean delights, she was greeted by her fond parent with a rather quizzical "Good morning, daughter of Satan." With a merry twinkle in her eyes she replied demurely enough, "Good morning, father." Mr. Moody went on reading his morning paper.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

With greetings from President McKinley, Governor Nash, and other prominent men, expressed by telegram or letter, the international convention opened in Music Hall, Cincinnati, amid the brilliance of electric lights, national flags, and the Endeavor colors of red and white.

The keynote of this great gathering of the young people of the various denominational churches was unity of purpose, unity of effort, for Christ and his Church. Dr. Francis E. Clark, its founder, in his opening address, emphasized this thought. "The Church of the twentieth century," he said, "needs to be more united. Not only are the great industrial forces of the land uniting, but the devil is marshaling his forces at the beginning of the twentieth century as never before. The saloonkeeper and the distiller are closing up their ranks and combining their evil geniuses to debauch the youth of our land. The spirit of gambling and speculation was never so rampant, and this evil never presented a more united front. Political corruption in some of our states does not even think it necessary to apologize when it steals the people's money, so united, so powerful, and brazen has it become. Who will stem this tide? Who will oppose the united front of evil? Surely an organization which has found its way into forty denominations, and into every country beneath the sun, an organization which has united 3,500,000 young people of every kindred and tribe and people and tongue and color and creed, has some reason to think that it was called into being by God for this purpose.

"The Church of the twentieth century needs more strenuous religious obligation; it needs the testimony and petition of the prayer meeting; it needs more complete and perfect organization; it needs larger brotherhood and more substantial unity. These are not local and temporary needs. They take in the sweep of the century and the width of the world."

John Willis Baer, the general secretary, in his annual report said: "In 1891, the close of the first decade of Christian Endeavor, there were 16,274 societies. In this year, 1901, we must employ the same numerals, though differently arranged, to tell our numerical strength, for the 16,274 societies have become 61,427. The nearly 1,000,000 members have become nearly 4,000,000! This growth is marvelous, and nothing comparable to it can be found in history.

"The interdenominational fellowship, which has been from the first a blessed fruit of Christian Endeavor, has during the last year been fostered as never before. The Presbyterians lead in the United States; then come the Congregationalists, Disciples of Christ, Baptists, Cumberland Presbyterians, Methodist Protestants, Lutherans, in order named, this list supplemented by a large number of other denominations, forty in all. In Canada, with its more than 5,000 societies, the Methodists lead, almost all their local societies being called Epworth Leagues of Christian Endeavor; the Presbyterians are next, and Baptists third. The largest number of the more than 7,000 Christian Endeavor societies in Great Britain are Congregationalists, with the Baptists only a few behind, and the Presbyterians coming next. In Australia the Wesleyan Methodists lead in numbers the 4,000 societies under the Southern Cross.

"One of the most gratifying facts to report is its steady growth in foreign and missionary lands. Nothing shows the adaptability of Christian Endeavor to every climate and country more than the fact that there are national Christian Endeavor unions in the United States, Canada, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, France, Spain, Germany, South Africa, India, China, Mexico, and Japan, and that Christian Endeavor leaflets and constitutions may now be found in Chinese, Japanese, Malagasy, Persian, Arabic, Turkish, Bulgarian, Armenian, Siamese, German, French, Italian, Greek, Spanish, Swedish, Dutch, Norwegian, Welsh, Australian, Hungarian, Coptic, Mexican, Portuguese, Indian, the many dialects of India and Africa.

"More and more is Christian Endeavor becoming an evangelistic agency for Christ. In all, 169,000 young people have in the last twelve months joined the Church from the ranks of our societies."

Among the "best things" accomplished during the year, Secretary Baer reported that a larger number than ever of the societies have adopted some systematic and proportionate plan for giving money to the cause of missions, to their home churches, and to other benevolences. The two-cents-a-week pledge plan for each member works well wherever it has been tried. From 8,526 societies $504,461.88 has been contributed to the Lord's work.

Sunday and each succeeding day of the convention opened with "quiet hour" meetings conducted by Rev. Floyd Tomkins of Philadelphia and Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin of Brooklyn. Evangelistic and temperance meetings for men, women and children were held simultaneously Sunday afternoon. One of the points of interest on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were the addresses of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan at the Central Christian church on Prayer. At noon each day evangelistic services were held in the tenement and factory districts of Cincinnati. Work for Endeavorers during the twentieth century was the main topic of the evening meetings on Monday, Samuel B. Capen of Boston speaking in relation to their duty in municipal politics, Rev. Frank Dixon of Hartford, on the saloon problem, and Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon of Topeka on "The Daily Paper of the Twentieth Century." "The standing question in its business and editorial management," he said, "should be, What is the best thing for the best interest of the city? What will promote the welfare and happiness and morality of the entire family?" He asserted that goodness is news, and could be made intensely interesting news.

Tuesday was largely given to denominational conferences, but the three great auditoriums were open for discussions on "The Twentieth Century Church." Dr. John Henry Barrows of Oberlin, Dr. Gonsaulus of Chicago, Amos R. Wells of Boston, Rev. Wm. P. Hall of New York, Booker T. Washington of Tuskegee, Rev. Johnston Myers of Chicago, and Rev. Wayland Hoyt of Philadelphia were the leading speakers.

The closing day, July 10, was occupied mainly with the topic, "Twenty Years of Christian Endeavor." Its interdenominational character was emphasized by Rev. Harland E. Freeman, who said:

"Other evangelical agencies have done much in arousing Christian fellowship, but the Endeavor movement has had this as one of its distinctive features and has attained to a splendid success. It has been discovered that

KEEP COOL.

From Proper Hot Weather Food.

"People can live in a temperature which feels from ten to twenty degrees cooler than their neighbors enjoy, by regulating the breakfast.

The plan is to avoid meat entirely for breakfast; use a goodly allowance of fruit, either cooked or raw. Then follow with a saucer containing about four heaping teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts, treated with a little rich cream. Add to this about two slices of entire wheat bread, with a meager amount of butter, and serve one cup of Postum Food Coffee.

If one prefers, the Grape-Nuts can be turned into the cup of Food Coffee, giving a delightful combination. By this selection of food the bodily energy is preserved, while the hot, carbonaceous foods have been left out. The result is a very marked difference in the temperature of the body, and to this comfortable condition is added the certainty of easy and perfect digestion, for the food is readily worked up by the digestive machinery.

Experience and experiment in food and its application to the human body has brought out these facts. They can be made use of and add materially to the comfort of the user.

a far deeper interest in one's own church and a more willing service is secured by agreement in essentials rather than a disagreement on non-essentials." At the farewell meetings in the evening, Rev. J. Campbell of Baltimore and Rev. Floyd Tomkins of Philadelphia were the speakers.

EFFECT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL WORK IN JAPAN.

The days of harvest have indeed begun in Japan. Five hundred conversions in ten days are reported from Tokyo, forty at Kobe in connection with one series of meetings and smaller numbers elsewhere. The claims of Christianity are quietly but steadily being recognized in vital fashion.

It is interesting to note that this ingathering in Japan is the result of special evangelistic services planned by the Japanese Evangelical Alliance and heartily approved by the General Missionary Conference when it met last October. The movement has been carried on by the co-operation of Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians (English), Methodists and Presbyterians. American Episcopalians held aloof. The purpose was to make a special effort to preach the gospel in all parts of the empire during the first year of the new century. It was not intended to supersede the ordinary services, but to make one united interdenominational effort to carry the gospel to as large a number as possible. It was confidently believed that, as "in union there is strength," such a movement would be more powerful and effective than the separate work of each body.

The first four months of the year were occupied in organizing for work in the various parts of the empire. In Tokyo, the campaign began May 12 in a great business section of the city. It was widely advertised. The daily program was usually a prayer meeting at 3 p. m., whence went out bands of workers for street services and for inviting the people into the meetings. At six special services were held for children and at seven o'clock, the general preaching service began, in seven or eight different churches or chapels. May 26, at a special prayer meeting, over 700 people were present, mostly Christians. It was a remarkable meeting.

One most encouraging feature of this movement is the fact that so many of the converts have heard the truth for two, five, ten or even twenty years, and are therefore, not yielding to some sudden impulse on hearing the truth for the first time. The names and addresses of the converts and inquirers have been taken, so that they may be properly guided and instructed, and may become themselves helpers and guides of others.

BAPTIST WORK IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Fargo, the metropolis, was the gathering place of the Baptist workers of the state, and June 26-30, the time. The Ministerial Union discussed "Pastoral Visitation," as a fruitful and practical topic, the laymen adding their word. "The Preaching for the Times" was the subject treated by Rev. L. A. Clevenger of Minneapolis, Minn., who said, "The preacher must meet the needs of the times, rather than the supposed wants of the people."

At the State Convention "Baptist Expansion," the theme of an earnest talk by Rev. J. F. Mills, of Grand Forks, excited a lively discussion. The consensus of opinion favored the rapid self-support of churches which for many years had been receiving support from the state convention treasury, so that the money might be used for new work.

Reports of the foreign work within the state were particularly interesting. Rev. William Paul, of Fessenden, a veteran German preacher, brought greetings from the German Baptists of the state, of whom there are 1,000.

Dr. O. A. Williams gave an interesting account of his visit with Dr. Shanafelt to the Russians of the state and of a gift of $1,000 from New York with which to alleviate the material want among these poverty-stricken people. A church has been organized, called "The First Russian Baptist Church of Liberty."

In the report of committee on state missions it was stated that the number of baptisms was greater than for any previous year except one. About $200,000 have been expended in the state by the Home Mission Society. It was stated that "the fundamental principle of Baptist state missions is not the establishment of Baptist churches, but to preach the gospel."

The Sunday school and the home and foreign work of women for women each had its time and place on the program, as also did the Young People's Union.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

At the regular Friday morning missionary meeting of the Presbyterian Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, two ladies who are going out as missionaries were introduced: Miss Ricketts who goes to China, supported there by the Hyde Park church of which she is a member, and Miss McPherson who goes to Brazil under the care of the Lake Forest church.

Rev Charles M. Sheldon of Topeka, Kas., well known as the author of "In His Steps," is to preach at the South Congregational church, on the remaining Sundays in July.

Doremus Congregational church, Rev Charles R. Ashdown, pastor, has received twenty-three new members in the last six months, mostly men. The treasurer's report for that period shows an increase in regular contributions of sixty per cent, besides gifts to foreign missions and $150 spent in alterations and decorations. The pastor's salary has been increased.

Rev. Henry W. Stough has resigned the pastorate of the Third Congregational church, Oak Park, to take effect October 1. He will take up the work of Rev. Harold Sayles as an evangelist, the latter having gone abroad for a year in the interest of mission work.

Some weeks ago the Rev. H. C. Scotford, D. D., pastor of the Englewood Union Evangelical church, was asked to take charge also of Trinity Congregational church. He did so, and union services are now held each Sunday at the Evangelical church. The plan seems to be working well and the congregations are increasing.

Rev. Chas. Scadding, of Emmanuel parish, La Grange, recently completed the fifth year of his rectorate, and at a reunion commemorative of the event, interesting details of the parish's flourishing condition were given. Among other things, it was stated that, in that period, $45,000 had been raised; and so much of the debt paid off, that only $8,000 of mortgage, drawing 5 per

HARD TO BREAK. But the Coffee Habit Can Be Put Off.

"I was a coffee user from early childhood, but it finally made me so nervous that I spent a great many sleepless nights, starting at every sound I heard and suffering with a continual dull headache. My hands trembled and I was also troubled with shortness of breath and palpitation of the heart. The whole system showed a poisoned condition and I was told to leave off coffee, for that was the cause of it. I was unable to break myself of the habit until some one induced me to try Postum Food Coffee.

"The first trial, the Food Coffee was flat and tasteless and I thought it was horrid stuff, but my friend urged me to try again and let it boil longer. This time I had a very delightful beverage and have been enjoying it ever since, and am now in a very greatly improved condition of health.

"My brother is also using Postum instead of coffee and a friend of ours, Mr. W., who was a great coffee user, found himself growing more and more nervous and was troubled at times with dizzy spells. His wife suffered with nausea and indigestion, also from coffee. They left it off and have been using Postum Food Coffee for some time and are now in a perfect condition of health."—Grace C. cent interest, remained on the splendid plant, valued at $80,000, and including church, parish house and rectory all of them fine structures of stone or brick.

The Tabernacle church Sunday school (United Presbyterian), Ravenswood, celebrated its eighth anniversary July 10. One hundred and thirty-seven scholars are on the Golden Roll of Honor for one year of perfect attendance.

The third quarterly meeting for the fiscal year of the northwestern branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Methodist church was held at Emmanuel church, Greenwood and Oak boulevards, Evanston, July 12.

Rev. Edgar B. Wylie, the earnest, young pastor of the Summerdale Congregational church, succumbed to an attack of pneumonia, July 6. The completion of the new building was accomplished largely by his untiring efforts and it is probable that he overtaxed his strength. Mr. Wylie had been pastor at Summerdale for ten years, having more than once refused offers of preferment because he thought he was needed where he was. High testimony has been borne to his devotion, zeal and perseverance.

Baptist.

The baptisms reported by the Minnesota associations for the past year aggregated 1,200, 100 more than the preceding year.

In less than four years, twenty pastors in Cleveland have moved. During the last ten years the Cleveland Baptist Association has grown from 4,300 to 6,000, a net increase of 170 a year.

The church at Princeton, Ill., has recently dedicated its house of worship and cleared itself of all indebtedness, $2,610 having been raised since April 1. Five years ago this church abandoned all methods of raising money except by praying, giving and tithing.

There are over 70,000 Swedes in Wisconsin and the Baptist work among them is vigorous and successful. They have twenty-six churches now and over 1,200 members.

Rev. F. A. Beyl, of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, has accepted the call of the church at Mason City, Ill.

Superior Street Baptist church, Cleveland, was struck by lightning and burned on the evening of July 4. The property was valued at $20,000.

Rev. P. W. Longfellow, has resigned the pastorate of the church at Eau Claire, Wis., to accept the call of the Wauwatosa church. He leaves the church united and in good condition. During his three and a half years' pastorate there have been 155 additions, and $2,200 have been raised for missions. Two well established missions have been maintained. The church and missions are entirely out of debt.

The First Baptist church of St. Paul, Minn., has called Rev. B. P. Stout as assistant pastor. He is at present doing evangelical work at Hazelton, Pa., but will take up his new duties in St. Paul, October 1.

The eleventh annual convention of the Young People's Union of Texas opened July 9 at Bonham. Thirty-seven new unions have been organized during the year.

Rev. W. L. Casnett, pastor of the Second Baptist church of Clarksburg, Mo., died July 8. He had been the minister fifty years.

Congregational.

A noteworthy piece of history is that of the little church at Colesburg, Ia., which, having but one remaining member, had added to it by his efforts forty-two others on confession.

The largest gain in membership by the Congregational churches in Iowa for the year past, was that of Plymouth church, Des Moines, which received ninety-nine new members. The church at Woden added nineteen to its eleven members, while the McIntyre church grew from thirty-five to sixty-eight.

Since 1892 the contributions of the Iowa churches to the national home missionary work have been over $27,000.

During the present year four home missionary churches in the state of Washington have come to self-support.

By a unanimous vote the members of the Congregational church of Leavenworth, Kas., have refused to accept the resignation of the Rev. Ralph Newman, pastor of the church.

At Marseilles, Ill., the problem of a Sunday evening audience during the summer has been solved by the assistance of an orchestra of seven instruments.

Rev. D. Leppert, pastor at Olmstead, Ill., received twenty-eight into fellowship at the last communion service. More than 1,000 people were present.

The young people of Westminster church, Kansas City, are assisting in the maintenance of the Mattie Rhodes Day Nursery and the women are supporting a lady missionary of the Woman's Board of the Interior, auxiliary to the American Board. The benevolences of the church members have aggregated over $60,000 the past year. Rev. William P. George is pastor.

In the two years during which Rev. H. H. Cole, now resigned, has been pastor at Douglas Island, Alaska, the debt on the church has been raised, a comfortable parsonage built and paid for, the Sunday school enlarged by four new classes, the Boy Cadets and Junior Society of Christian Endeavor organized, seventeen new members received into the church, and over a ton of books, magazines and papers distributed to miners and families.

Congregations continue up to 400 in the new and substantial church building at Nome, Alaska. The care of the hospital has been assumed by a corporation formed for that purpose.

Governor Leslie M. Shaw and Minister Edwin H. Conger took part in the laying of the corner stone of Plymouth church, Des Moines, Ia., July 3. The Governor spoke on "The Influence of Religion Upon the State." He said that the responsibility resting on the Church of Christ "is enough to bring every believer in the Book of books, every follower of the Man of Galilee, to his knees." Minister Conger cited the telling fact that during the siege of Peking, the only man who gave up all hope of rescue was an atheist.

Rev. Milo N. Miles who had been active for many years in home missionary fields in Illinois and Iowa, entered into rest July 4 at Des Moines.

The Disciples.

Rev. R. F. Thrapp of Pittsfield, Ill., has been called to the pastorate of the church at Jacksonville, Ill.

Rev. Walter S. Priest has been re-appointed as chaplain of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Atchison, Kas., for a two-year term, at an increased salary. There are about 160 children in the Home.

Thirty-eight persons have been added to the Compton Heights church, St. Louis, since May 12 when Rev. James N. Crutcher began work there.

The church at Carrollton, Mo., reports by Rev. E. H. Kellar, pastor, 129 received during the year—sixty-five by baptism; present membership is 474. Total receipts for the year, $3,259.18, of which $503.94 was for missions.

Rev. Charles B. Newnan, pastor of the Central church, Detroit, Mich., for the past eight years, will give his entire time after September 1 to Bible teaching at the Bible College, Columbia, Mo.

The department of music in the William Woods College for girls, at Fulton, Mo., has received $2,500 from Mrs. Mary Dulany of Hannibal, for the construction of rooms for the music classes. This will increase the capacity of the school so that more than 100 girls can be accommodated in the boarding department.

The Adams Street Christian church, Jacksonville, Fla., has secured a lot on the corner of Clay and Church streets and will soon remove to a temporary building erected on that lot. The name of the church henceforth will be the Church Street Christian church.

Rev. I. J. Spencer will remain with the Central church, Lexington, Ky., which has almost finished paying off its debt of $27,000. The congregation felt that his going would be a hindrance to its work.

The church at Lovington, Ill., is building a new edifice at a cost of $10,000. It is to be completed November 1.

The summer School of Bible Study at Santa Cruz, Cal., began July 16. The state convention follows.

Rev. Chas. Reign Scoville has been holding services at Bloomington, Ill., which have resulted in 246 additions to the church.

Rev. A. L. Platt has resigned his charge at Brazil, Ind., after a two years' pastorate during which an $18,000 church has been built and 248 added to the church.

Rev. John M. Helm who has been at Vanceburg, Ky., for several years, has accepted a call to the Clifton Street church, Louisville.

Rev. F. M. Tinder, pastor at Carlisle, Ky., was elected state president of the Kentucky Christian Endeavorers last week.

The church at Sac City, Ia., of which Rev. D. F. Snider is pastor, had the pleasure of burning the mortgage on the church building, June 30. The indebtedness was $1,450—a good deal for 150 people to raise.

After long and faithful service, Rev. W. G. Conley has resigned his professorship in Kentucky University in order that he may give his entire time to his work as pastor of the Chestnut Street church, Lexington, Ky.

The Platte district meeting was held at Weston, Mo.; about 100 delegates were in attendance. It was decided that the different churches of this district shall assist in the undertaking to build a new church for the Mitchell Park Christian church congregation of St. Joseph, Mo., of which Rev. Mr. McKenzie is pastor. A lot was recently bought for $1,500 near the present site and it is hoped to begin work on the new building by fall. It will require about $5,000 to build the church.

The summer Bible school at Hopkinsville, Ky., was very successful and had a good attendance. Rev. J. B. Briney was the principal. He delivered a series of ten lectures on "Evidences of Christianity" and two on "Evolution." The lectures of Rev. C. A. Young of Chicago on the minor prophets were much appreciated. There were many good things on the program.

Episcopal.

The Good Samaritan hospital, established by the Episcopalians of Oregon, has treated 1,417 patients during the year, 229 entirely free. The Nurses' Training school has forty pupils. A home for nurses is now being built, which will be fireproof and will accommodate fifty nurses.

Rev. D. E. Loveridge of Oregon has just completed fifty years as a clergyman. He has never had a vacation, and in all that period has never been one week without a parish.

The fiftieth anniversary of the ordination to the priesthood of five clergymen: Rev. Drs. Thos. Gallaudet, Wm. W. Olssen, Philander K. Cady, and Rev. Messrs. J. S. Spencer and W. S. Coffey was commemorated at the General Theological Seminary, New York, June 29, by a service and a dinner. Silver loving cups, subscribed for by the clergy of the diocese, were presented to the five clergymen who were all ordained at the same time, in the same place and by the same bishop. At a service held in St. Matthew's church the same day Dr. Gallaudet, who has been the founder in this country of church services for deaf-mutes, was presented with an illuminated address and $1,200 in gold.

A new and beautiful two-story open pavilion has been erected on West Coney Island at a cost of $5,000 for the reception of sick mothers and babies

St. Peter's parish, St. Louis, the Rev. William Short, rector, has just completed the renovation of its church, badly damaged by fire last December. Immediately after the fire the rector called the congregation together in the church with its scorched timbers and blackened walls and made an appeal for $35,000 to raise the debt of the parish. To the surprise of all, the amount called for was quickly pledged. Within sixty days over two-thirds of this amount was collected and paid on the mortgage. Today, the church stands renewed, more beautiful than before, with new carpet, new cushions, and practically clear of debt. The insurance amply covered repairs.

Rev. Dr. E. T. Perkins, rector emeritus of St. Paul's church, Louisville, Ky., died July 6.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas March Clark, Episcopal Bishop of the diocese of Rhode Island, celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday on July 4. He is the presiding Bishop of the House of Bishops, and, while he is somewhat feeble, he still retains his intellectual vigor and activity and keeps close watch upon church affairs.

Methodist.

Rev. H. M. Hamill has resigned his position as field secretary of the International Sunday School Association, to take charge of the teacher training work of the M. E. Church, South, at Nashville, Tenn.

Rev. William Court, pastor of the Cabanne church, St. Louis, Mo., will sail next October for Japan, as a missionary of the Southern Board of Missouri. His appointment is to the teaching staff of the Palmore institute—named in honor of Dr. W. B. Palmore, of this city—and the Kwansei Gakui college, in Kobe, Japan. Mr. Court graduated from the Vanderbilt university a year ago, coming directly to St. Louis to become pastor of the Cabanne church. His efforts in building up the congregation and in providing for a new church building have been so successful that a brilliant future as a pastor was predicted for him. He and his wife are, however, enthusiastic in the cause of foreign missions and greatly rejoice in their new appointment.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Brighton Beach, N. Y., has instituted a free omnibus service between the hotels at Brighton Beach and Manhattan Beach and the church, believing this will induce some of the guests to attend church, as the walk is a long and sunny one.

The South Dakota Epworth Assembly which met at Huron, July 5, was a helpful one. Prof. E. L. Parks, D. D., of Atlanta, Ga., conducted a Bible study and preached. Mrs. Anna E. Smiley of Lowell, Mass., superintendent of the Junior League, gave a talk on the work being done by the mercy and help department, and also conducted a school of methods. The jubilee singers gave a concert and Prof. Pearson of the Cumcock School of Oratory, Evanston, Ill., gave a lecture recital. A missionary conference was conducted by R. E. Diffendorfer.

Bishop McCabe has just returned from six months' travel in South America. He traveled over 19,000 miles and visited the presidents of Uruguay and the Argentine republic, pleading for religious liberty. He considers that the spirit of intolerance is being wiped out in South America.

Presbyterian.

The United Presbyterian congregation at Prosperity, Ill., have taken down the large brick church erected thirty-four years ago, and will rebuild at Tilden, a mile distant from the former site.

At New Jefferson, Ohio, Rev. W. H. Clark has recently received fourteen new members into the church, twelve by profession, and has baptized ten. A new parsonage has recently been purchased, and the church has been newly painted and repaired.

On the evening of July 2 the Rev. A. P. Higley was installed as pastor of Knox Presbyterian church, Cincinnati. Mr. Higley was a graduate of McCormick Theological Seminary in this year's class. He is also a graduate of Wooster University.

Dr. Frederick J. Tooker of East Orange, N. J., has been selected by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions to go as medical missionary to the Province of Honan, China. He will sail about the middle of August. Dr. Tooker is a graduate of Princeton in the class of '94.

At Immanuel church, Los Angeles, Cal., Rev. Dr. H. K. Walker welcomed fifty-seven to membership June 23, eighteen being on confession of faith.

Rev. John Gordon, D. D., has been elected Dean and acting President of Tabor College, Rev. Richard C. Hughes, D. D., having resigned to accept the presidency of Ripon College.

Dr. John Leroy Taylor has notified the church at Wyoming, Ohio, that on the completion of the twelfth year of his pastorate, August 25, 1901, he will ask them to accept his resignation. He has been remarkably successful in this church, having received 289 new members during the past twelve years. The Wyoming church ranks first in its benevolence as compared with any other church in the Cincinnati Presbytery, and during the past two years has paid off its entire indebtedness.

Rev. W. H. Jordan has just completed a pastorate of five and a half years at Grundy Center, Ia. During that period 130 persons have been received into the church, and a new edifice has been erected at a cost of $15,000, making this one of the best equipped fields in Iowa. The congregation gave the pastor and his wife a farewell reception and presented him with a purse of $51 and Mrs. Jordan with a set of solid silver spoons.

The First church, Sioux City, Ia., Rev. J. C. McClintock, pastor, has cleared off a debt of $13,700 which existed at the beginning of the present pastorate, five years ago.

Rev. Charles P. H. Nason, D. D., pastor of the Second church, Germantown, Pa., has been appointed consul to Grenoble, France, and his resignation of the pastorate will go into effect September 1. In 1899 he served as acting pastor of the American church in Paris.

Rev. Dr. D. C. Hossack who for the last two years has been editing the Presbyterian Review, has just entered on the pastoral charge of Central Presbyterian church, St. Louis. His previous pastorates have been in Canada, the last at Parkdale, Ontario,—the largest Presbyterian church in that country, with a membership of 800 and a Sunday school having an enrollment of over 1,000.

A Presbyterian synod has been organized in Mexico of the missions under the boards of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches of the United States. This Mexican synod will be independent of the synods in this country, although the missionaries laboring there will still be supported by the boards. As each church is organized, it will belong to the Mexican synod and be under its control.

E. A. FOX,

General Secretary the Kentucky Sunday School Association.

This bright little book had an interesting origin. The author realizing the need for an authoritative treatise on the subject, outlined what he considered to be a model, up-to-date Sunday School. This outline was sent to the leading Sunday School workers of the United States for criticism. Almost without exception, the author was highly complimented, and few changes were suggested. This outline, improved by the valuable ideas thus secured forms the basis of the book. It furnishes an epitome of

The Young Men's Christian Association of Kansas City, Mo., is being increasingly felt in the community as a spiritual force. Within two years it has added to its membership over a thousand young men.

Union revival services have been held in Harlan, Ia., a great blessing resulting. W. A. Sunday of Chicago was the preacher. On the last night of the meetings ninety-three, mostly adults, confessed Christ. Five churches united in the services.

At Andover, Ohio, a union service has been held on the first Sunday evening of each month during the year, all the churches joining.

At the first of the Northfield conferences no less than 600 young men from seventy colleges and schools were in attendance, the largest delegation being from Yale. John R. Mott was the director of proceedings and Rev. Campbell Morgan gave daily addresses. President Seth Low of Columbia university and Dr. Alexander McKenzie were among the prominent speakers. Classes for Bible and missionary study were under the supervision of Prof. E. I. Bosworth and Rev. Harlan P. Beach.

Federation is rapidly progressing among the churches. New York, Ohio and Rhode Island have taken it up as states and organized, and the New York State Association of Congregationalists sent $100 from its treasury to advance the work of the state federation, while a similar gift of $50 was made by the Reformed Synod of Albany. Local federation has been accomplished in Jersey City, Troy, Albany, Schenectady, Amsterdam, Syracuse, Toledo, Detroit and Chicago. Other cities are moving in the same direction.

Foreign Missionary Items.

The first news from the members of the Shaowustation of the Foochow mission, China, since their return to their station after the outbreak of last year, comes in a letter from Miss Frances K. Bement. She says: "Some people objected to our coming on the ground that there would be no place for us to live. We found the East Gate house in even better condition than we had hoped. We were very thankful for the three feet of floor across one end of two rooms on which we ladies were able, with the addition of a few boards, to put up our beds and be quite comfortable even if we had no doors, windows and not all of the wall. With the thirty or forty workmen who are here every day there is quite a hum of industry, and the house is very nearly as good as it was before the trouble, and promises to be a little better in a few respects. In spite of the pouring rain, thirty of the Christians came five miles down the river to meet us and sang hymns as we passed by, assuring us that Christianity still had a foothold in Shaowu. I found my girls' school in good working order, the forty girls have had five added to their number, making a school of forty-five, over thirty of whom have unbound feet. We think this unparalleled anywhere in China, where unbinding the feet is not compulsory. There seems to be more interest in education in every direction. The boys' school here has over forty pupils who are coming very regularly and the boys' boarding school has nearly thirty boys. Some of the women have been gathered into a Bible class which meets five afternoons in the week. Over twenty come very regularly and are learning to read the Bible."

On the Nile at Asyut, is the only Protestant Christian college in Egypt, sustained by the United Presbyterian church of the United States. "It began," says a correspondent of the United Presbyterian, "thirty-six years ago in a donkey stable, the boys at one end and the donkeys at the other." The college now shows an enrollment of seven hundred students from all but one of the fourteen provinces of Egypt, and last year fifty candidates for admission were turned away for lack of room. The whole record of the United Presbyterian mission in Egypt is a notable one. Forty-seven years have passed since the first missionary landed; now there are 6,500 church members, fifty native preachers, and 14,000 pupils in the schools. The Egyptian churches raised last year $75,000—or $1.14 for every dollar contributed by the churches in America for the expenses of the mission.

Woman and Home.

Most of us are tempted to wait for some great occasion in which to give ourselves in heroic sacrifice for the world's blessing. But it is not to such emergencies we are usually called. It is in the common highway of human experience in ordinary shop, or street, or home we have our chance to be heroes. The British Weekly recently quoted a stray poem clearly enforcing this truth:

Not on some lone and lofty hill apart Did Christ the Savior render up His heart
For man upon the cross of love and woe;
But by the common road where to and fro
The passers went upon their daily
ways
And, pausing, pierced Him with indifferent gaze.
And still the crosses by life's highways rise
Beneath the blinding glare of noonday skies;
Still with the wrestling spirit's anguished cry
Blends the light mockery of the passer-by.
While scorners, gathered at the martyr's feet,
With railing tongues the olden taunts repeat.
We may not go apart to give our life
For men in some supernal, mystic strife.
Beside the common paths of earth doth love
Look from its cross to the still heavens above.

Getting on in Life.

Twenty years ago a discouraged young doctor in one of our large cities was visited by his old father, who came from a rural district to look after his boy.

"Well, son," he said, "how are you getting along?"

"I'm not getting along at all," was the disheartened answer. "I'm not doing a thing."

The old man's countenance fell, but he spoke of courage and patience, and perseverance. Later in the day he went with his son to the "Free Dispensary," where the young doctor had an unsalaried position and where he spent an hour or more every day.

The father sat by, a silent but intensely interested spectator, while twenty-five poor unfortunates received help. The doctor forgot his visitor, while he bent his skilled energies to this task; but hardly had the door closed on the last patient when the old man burst forth:

"I thought you told me that you were not doing anything," he thundered. "Not doing anything! Why, if I had helped twenty-five people in a month as much as you have in one morning I would thank God that my life counted for something."

"There isn't any money in it, though," explained the son, somewhat abashed at his companion's vehemence.

"Money!" the old man shouted, still scornfully. "Money! What is money in comparison with being of use to your fellow men? Never mind about money; you go right along at this work every day. I'll go back to the farm, and gladly earn money enough to support you as long as I live—yes, and sleep sound every night with the thought that I have helped you to help your fellowmen."

"That speech," I said to a friend of mine—one who has spent many years as a conspicuously successful teacher—"went into the bones of the young doctor's life and strengthened him for a life of unselfish usefulness."

"Ah!" said the professor, "that one speech was worth years of text-book teaching. And yet it was made without an instant's preparation."

"Far from it," I answered quickly. "It had taken sixty years of noble living, struggling against sin and self, pressing forth in paths of righteousness, bearing the cross, following hard after the Perfect Man, to prepare that old Christian to make this speech. Then the moment came, and he was ready to teach the glorious lesson."—Sunday School Times.

Honoring Her Son.

Perhaps the first person to believe in the genius of Robert Louis Stevenson was his mother. She was devotedly attached to him throughout his life, and realized his value to the world long before the world gave him a hearing. It was her lot to live to mourn his death, but she was comforted in her trouble by the sympathy of the whole English-speaking world.

Some time after his death a great memorial meeting was held in Edinburgh. For his mother, says the author of "Stevenson's Edinburgh Days," it was a gala day. She started for the Music Hall not too early, feeling sure of a seat with a "reserved ticket" in her hand. She had declined to sit on the platform and preferred to be a simple unit in the audience.

The crowd was beyond expectations. Mrs. Stevenson arrived to find every passage blocked and a mass at the main entrance clamoring for admittance.

She feared that she, with them, would be turned away, but as a forlorn hope she appealed to a policeman.

"It's nae use, it's fu'," he said, "the reserved seats were a' ta'en an hour ago by folks that had nae tickets and they wadna gang out."

"I must get in!" cried Mrs. Stevenson, roused out of her usual calm. "I've a right to get in. I am Robert Louis Stevenson's mother."

"Ay, you've the best right," the policeman replied, and turning to the crowd he cried:

"Mak' way, there. She maun get in. She's Robert Louis' mither."

People who had thought themselves packed too tightly to move somehow packed closer and let Mrs. Stevenson squeeze past.

Breathless, hustled, and for once with her mantle and bonnet a little awry, much against her will, the crowd pushed her to the platform. There she hastened to take a back seat, and a few minutes later she heard the orator of the day, Lord Rosebery, say with an emphasis which the audience understood well, "His mother is here."

Anna Blake's Missionary Work

Anna Blake read carefully two or three times the slip of paper in her hand: "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face, whither he himself would come."

"Miss Hammond must have made a mistake. She surely did not mean that for my verse. I don't see what I am to do. It doesn't seem to teach anything."

She read the verse again, and as she slowly repeated the last words a ray of light came.

"Why—yes—perhaps that is it. I'm sure I've read that verse dozens of times, but I never thought of getting any practical lesson out of it. Jesus sent his disciples before Him to those places whither He Himself would come. Perhaps He sends us that way now; perhaps He'll send me into some place to prepare the way for His coming."

"I think, wife," said Mr. Blake that afternoon, "we ought to let Anna go to Colorado this summer. Too close application at school is taking all the roses from her cheeks, and a few months among the pines up in the mountains would freshen her up amazingly. I imagine it is rather a rough life these ranchmen lead, and she may not find everything congenial at Cousin John's; but as they seem willing to have her come, I guess we can spare her this summer. She has too much good sense to fret much over uncongenial surroundings," concluded the fond father.

"I have felt all along that it would be well for her to go," said Mrs. Blake; "and yet I have felt some hesitation about sending her alone to such a place. They seem to have no Sunday or anything else that is good in the vicinity of Cousin John's. Still, if you think it best we will let her go."

"Anna will always carry Sunday with her wherever she goes," replied Mr. Blake. "She may be able in a quiet way to do missionary work, and at the same time to drink in health with the mountain air."

So it was settled between her parents that Anna's summer would be spent among the Colorado mountains; and two weeks later found her at the mountain ranch of her father's "Cousin John."

How strange everything appeared to the eyes of the girl whose life before this time had been bounded only by Illinois prairies! Cousin John's house was built out of logs. It was papered with old newspapers, and the only pictures that adorned the walls were such cuts as happened to be in these papers. The outbuildings were small low affairs, the two horses almost filling their little box of a stable. But here were the mountains and huge boulders, and apparently limitless acres of pine trees, and not far from the house a mountain brook famous in that region for its trout.

"It's the nicest place to dream in!" Anna wrote to her mother the day after her arrival. "One can't help seeing visions and dreaming dreams amid such surroundings. I am sure I shall have a very happy summer."

But when Sunday came she longed for the home church, and Miss Hammond's helpful teaching.

"Don't you ever have any kind of service here on Sunday?" she asked of Mrs. Wheeler, Cousin John's wife.

"Sometimes a preacher comes along and has meeting up to the school-house, but there's nothing regular. Some of 'em started a Sunday school once, but it didn't last long. There's children enough in the neighborhood, but nobody seems to know much about Sunday schools up here, and the school kind of died out after a while."

Anna took her Bible and walked down to the brook and seating herself on a large rock turned to the lesson which she knew Miss Hammond and the girls were busied with at home at that hour. After an hour of faithful, prayerful study, she closed the book, and leaning back against the old pine which grew beside the rock sat thus for some time thinking. Suddenly her verse came to mind.

"He sent them into the places whither He Himself would come. I wonder if He sent me into this neighborhood because He wants to come here, too. What can I do for Him here?"

"Is it your father you're talking about, miss?"

Anna started at the sound of another voice than her own, for she had thought herself quite alone. Turning quickly she saw four little ranch children who had approached unobserved, standing not far from the rock, their curious eyes fixed on her face. The eldest, a bare-footed, bare-headed, sun-browned boy who carried an immense bouquet of mountain lilies, proved to be her questioner.

"Why, no," she answered, smiling, "it was not my father. Come and sit down here and let me arrange your flowers for you. How lovely these mountain lilies are! Will you give me a few of them to press?"

"Have 'em all, Miss, if you want. I jest picked 'em 'cause I didn't have much of anything else to do. Bushels of 'em up yonder if you want more."

"Thank you," said Anna. "Are these three little midgets your sisters?"

"Two of 'em is. That littlest one's Mr. Grover's Susie."

The little gypsy-like children were all seated on the rock by this time.

"And have you any brothers and sisters, Susie?" Anna asked, as she threw one arm about the little figure that had nestled close beside her.

"Only just baby, and he's a brother, and I'm all the sister he's got."

Anna smiled at this quaint reply, and then the children were further questioned, until soon all were talking as familiarly as if they had never met as strangers. By and by, when Susie had concluded a long story of the wonderful acts of her baby brother, Anna told the story of the Infant Jesus—all about the star and the wise men, the wicked king and the flight into Egypt.

"That's a good story, Miss," said the sun-browned boy, when the shadows had lengthened and Anna said she must go home. "Tell us some more, some time, if we come here again?"

"Certainly. I want you to come every Sunday afternoon this summer, and bring just as many other little folks with you as you want to."

Good-bys were said, and Anna went home with a full heart.

"If that is what papa calls missionary work," she said, as she crossed the flower-dotted field, "I am sure it is very sweet to be a missionary."

And so the Lord found an efficient helper in Anna Blake that summer in His work in the Rocky Mountains. The little ones came Sunday after Sunday all through the warm months, to the old rock, and Anna met them there with Bible stories and sweet songs until every child in the neighborhood was brought into the circle, and many went to their homes to sing the Gospel to the older people, some of whom seemed to have quite forgotten that ever a Savior died for them.

"I can't keep the tears from my eyes whenever I hear Susie sing, 'I think when I read that sweet story of old,'" said Mrs. Grover to a neighbor one day. "It is one of the songs I used to sing when I was a girl and lived in the States. Seems like I've forgot all them things since I came out here, and just turned to an out-and-out heathen. I am glad that ever Anna Blake was sent here to teach Susie what I ought to have taught her long ago."

In the early autumn Anna went back to her Illinois home, but the Christ had come into the mountain neighbor-

A school for both sexes, located at Hiram, Portage County, Ohio, 35 miles southeast of Cleveland.

A SPLENDID LOCATION.

Beautiful scenery, pure air, excellent water. An ideal college town, modern, up-to-date, lighted by electricity and having a fine system of water-works.

GOOD BUILDINGS.

The buildings are comparatively new. Main building commodious and convenient in all its appointments. A large and beautiful Christian Association building, erected five years ago at a cost of $30,000. Two excellent ladies' halls well furnished and supplied with modern conveniences. Music building for the accommodation of our large and growing music department. A library and observatory building just completed, the gift of Abram Teachout, and a Warner & Swazey's nine inch telescope, costing approximately $5000, the gift of Lathrop Cooley.

LIBRARIES AND APPARATUS.

A large and well equipped chemical laboratory. Two other laboratories, Physiological and Physical. A well selected library; large additions to this library will soon be made. A good museum. A large and well furnished gymnasium.

COURSES OF STUDY.

Four Classical Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Four Scientific Courses—Regular, Philosophical, Legal and Medical. Four Literary Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical. Five Special Courses—Music, Oratorical, Business, Art, Teachers. Special elective courses in any variety.

CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS.

We have a strong body of Professors and Instructors, twenty-four in number. They are for the most part specialists of large attainments and are thoroughly abreast of the times.

Literary Societies and Religious Organizations.

Hiram has five literary societies of unusual strength and vigor; two Christian associations that contribute much to the religious life of the school. Several departmental and social organizations of special interest and value.

EXPENSES.

Expenses are very moderate. Good table board can be had for $2.00 per week, club board for $1.25 to $1.75. Room rent for 50 cents to $1.00 per week. Tuition for four to five dollars per term for each study. The three leading items of board, tuition and room rent may be reduced to about $125.00 for the college year of 38 weeks.

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

Under the auspices of the T. W. Phillips Loan fund an industrial department is being established that will assist about fifty young people. It is believed that students admitted to this department may reduce the entire expense of the year, including tuition, to about $90.00, and those who do considerable work may reduce expenses to sixty or seventy dollars. ### Father's Kneeling Place.

The children were playing "hide the handkerchief." I sat and watched them a long while, and heard no unkind word and saw scarcely a rough movement; but after a while little Jack, whose turn it was to hide the handkerchief, went to the opposite end of the room and tried to secrete it under the cushion of a big chair. Freddie immediately walked over to him and said in a low, gentle voice, "Please, Jack, don't hide the handkerchief there, that is father's kneeling place."

"Father's kneeling-place!" It seemed like sacred ground to me, as it did to little Freddie; and, by and by, as the years roll on, and this place shall see the father no more forever, will not the memory of this hallowed spot leave an impression upon the young hearts that time and change can never efface, and remain as one of the most precious memories of the old home? Oh, if there were only a "father's kneeling place" in every family! The mother kneels in her chamber and teaches the little ones the morning and evening prayer, but the father's presence is often wanting; business and the cares of life engross all his time, and though the mother longs for his assistance and co-operation in the religious education of the children he thinks it is a woman's work and too often leaves it to her alone.—Sydney Advocate.

Sophia had been praying for twelve years to become a foreign missionary. One day she had so prayed and the heavenly Father seemed to say:

"Sophia, stop; where were you born?"

"In Germany, Father."

"Where are you now?"

"In America, Father."

"Well, are you not a foreign missionary already?"

Then the Father said: "Who live on the floor above you?"

"A family of Swedes."

"And who above them?"

"Why, some Switzers."

"Who in the rear?"

"Italians."

"And a block away?"

"Some Chinese."

"And you have never said a word to these people about my Son? Do you think I will send you thousands of miles to the foreigner and heathen when you never care enough about them at your own door to speak with them about their souls?"

"I HAVE GROWN LIKE EVERYTHING

since mamma gave me the Blood Vitalizer," is the quaint expression used by Theresa Syll, a little girl in Gardnersville, Nevada, in a letter which she personally wrote to the proprietor of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. It seems that even the little ones realize when a remedy possesses merit and does them good. Not a drugstore medicine. Sold only by special agents or the proprietor direct. The following note is from Brother Lowell C. McPherson of El Vedado, Havana, Cuba, dated July 9: "My Dear Brother: I enjoy reading the Century. As I read the Sunday school notes by Brother Elias A. Long, I recall to memory the large Bible class he conducted so efficiently in my church in Buffalo, N. Y., where he was a constant blessing and strength to me, his pastor. But he was a pastor to his pastor in those days. I often crave for the church of Christ an increasing army of business never such as has been my pleasure to know. They have made many a preacher strong in his work by standing by him in prayer and counsel. May God bless the consecrated, sensible, Christian business men, and may our preachers appreciate them more and more. We have recently baptized 13, making 26 baptisms in Havana. We have many friends among Cubans and Spaniards."

Christian Melodies

BY PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK

Professor Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, the author of CHRISTIAN MELODIES, is one of the leading and best known gospel song writers in the world today. His songs have been sung the world over in almost every town. Some of his songs have been translated and sung in all languages. He has the advantage of many years of experience as a musician and song writer, and has put the best productions of his life time, as well as the best songs of the principal song writers of the country, into CHRISTIAN MELODIES. This certainly insures for this book the greatest variety and the best quality of songs.

A Book of the Rarest Musical Gems

This is the universal pronouncement of all musicians who have used or examined this new and popular song book. All responses from those using the book are enthusiastic praises. "Best book of the kind I have ever seen." "The more we use it the better we like it." "Gets better all the time;" etc. These are samples of expressions received. No other book on the market approaches it as an all-purpose church song book. It is mechanically perfect, neat, artistic and durable. It contains 192 pages and 227 songs.

FAC-SIMILE OF COVER, REDUCED.

PROF. WM. J. KIRKPATRICK.

THE CHOICEST SONGS OF THE CENTURY

Every song writer has a few favorite songs—or those which he regards as his best—and which make for the author his reputation. Every musician has also his own peculiar style. A book written principally by one man does not excel, as it has no variety of style and but a few very good songs. In CHRISTIAN MELODIES, eighty leading song writers have contributed their favorite or best songs. This insures not only a collection of the most excellent songs, but also the greatest variety of style. This is why people never grow tired of the songs in CHRISTIAN MELODIES. Besides its large number of the latest songs it contains a great many of the old songs that have become popular favorites and never die.

No expense was spared in the production of this book. The best songs were secured regardless of their cost. Many very good songs were rejected because not good enough. No other book shows such care and judgment in excluding the inferior and including only the best. No cheap devices or make shifts, such as rivets were used in binding. It is a hand sewed book, which is the best and most expensive style or binding. If you want the most popular, best wearing and most satisfactory all-around song book get Christian Melodies, pronounced by all who have used it, "A Book of Gems." It is the best and cheapest.

Statement of Principles—

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

on the same page, but in such a manner as not to increase the bulk of the book. The King James version is the basis, and this version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with foot notes. These notes give all the words and passages of the Revised Version where it differs from the King James Version. This combination feature is exceedingly valuable, as it gives all the advantages of two separate books with the convenience of one and also saves time as the two readings are always right before the eye. It contains all the

to the study of the Bible prepared by the most Eminent Biblical Scholars. It is embellished with a complete series of fifteen New Maps—the newest and best engraved maps of Bible Lands, embodying the results of the most recent investigations and discoveries. It is printed from large, beautiful, clear, new type and all proper names are divided into syllables and every vowel is marked and the syllables inflected, showing the sounds and accents as they are given in every standard dictionary, thus enabling the reader to properly pronounce every word. This feature is a great improvement and a strong recommendation for this Bible over others. This is the only Self-Pronouncing Combination Teachers' Bible and is unquestionably the best edition of the world's best book.

Our Fine Art Combination Bible.

This Bible is the same as the one described above, having the Self-Pronouncing and Combination features and all other helps and in addition is profusely illustrated and embellished with numerous phototype engravings from the paintings of the world's greatest masters, all drawn and engraved by the best artists, to illustrate the teachings of our Lord. They are printed separate from the text and make one grand panorama of pictorial embellishments that are as instructive and pleasing as they are ornamental and accurate.

The growing demand for a wisely and faithfully illustrated student's Bible has been fully satisfied by the introduction of our fine art edition of the Teachers' Bible. It combines every valuable feature of the usual teachers' Bible, with a wealth of descriptive and pictorial illustrations so superb as to distinctly separate this Bible from all others and place it in a class by itself. In artistic beauty it stands without a rival.

Each illustration is a speaking sermon, a gem of art, the handiwork of a master. The wonderful pictures not only beautify this sumptuous volume, but actually interpret and make more clear the grand old truths of the Sacred Word. This beautiful edition of the Bible is indispensable to all students and teachers.

Notice the Prices.

This incomparable galaxy of Illustrations has cost the publishers many thousands of dollars, and the preparation of this Combination Bible, with all its "New Helps," has involved the labor of a large number of the most eminent Biblical scholars and scientists of the world.

This beautiful, large type, Self-Pronouncing, Combination Teachers' Bible, French seal, "Divinity Circuit," linen lined, round corners, carmine under gold edge, extra finish, publisher's price, $5. This Bible and The Christian Century for one year for only $3.

The Fine Art Combination Self-Pronouncing Teachers' Bible, same binding and style as above, publisher's price $6, and The Christian Century, for one year, for only $3.50.

EDITORIAL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

The Christian Century is published in the interests of essential Christianity. It is the organ of no party; the advocate of no ism. While welcoming the ascertained results of modern Christian scholarship, it stands for the great evangelical verities which are the foundation stones of the Christian system. It seeks to be tolerant in spirit, practical in aim, and warmly sympathetic towards all the present day problems of religious thought and life. It also aims at being at once a clearing house and medium of communication between the different denominations, so that they may by free and fraternal expression of opinion become better acquainted with one another and may be led to join forces in more aggressive work for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

THE TIDES OF THE SPIRIT.

WE borrow this phrase from Dr. James Martineau. It is used by him to express the ebb and flow which characterize the movements of God in his self-manifestation to the children of men. Out of the silence of eternity rise up waves of energy which come rolling in upon this world. These tidal waves of divine life sweep through nature and through history. Their progress is not constant; they advance and recede; and, as Dr. Martineau remarks, "the more spiritual they are the more marked is this fluctuating character."

In nature there is constant flux and reflux. The laws of nature are uniform, but her operations, yea, her very moods are changeful. Winter succeeds summer, day changes into night and night into day; drought is followed by flood and calm by storm.

The same is true with regard to the movements of God in history. The tides of the Spirit swing back and forth through the centuries, making fluctuations in the moral life of man. The sons of God marry the daughters of men, the race degenerates and a flood comes to cleanse the sin-stained earth. This representation is set at the beginning to the Bible as an illustration of the usual way in which new moral epochs are brought in. The Jewish nation forgets God. Their religious life becomes hollow, their light grows dim, their testimony for righteousness grows faint, they become an unfruitful and unprofitable vineyard; the judgment of God falls upon them; their holy city is destroyed and they are scattered to the ends of the earth. But their fall proves to be "the riches of the world," for with the destruction of the old comes the inauguration of the new; with the ebbing of the tide of Judaism comes the inflowing tide of the Spirit at Pentecost. Later on we have the dark ages when Christian forces got to the lowest ebb, but these were followed at the Reformation by the tide of the Spirit, the force of which is still unspent.

So it has ever been and so it ever shall be. We know that God is always present; we know that his energy is in constant operation. We are accustomed to speak of him as immanent, as the indwelling life of the world; not coming upon it from without, but working upon it from within. His glory is ever breaking through; his outflowing power is ever cutting for itself new channels, and it is these tides of his Spirit, these outgoings of his power, which constitute the great epochs of history. They are the new starting points from which the progress of the race is measured.

In a very marked degree ebb and flow have characterized the life of the Church from the beginning to the present. Many will have it that we are now at ebb tide; that a time of reaction has set in; that there is a general decline of interest in religion. While questioning the latter statement we have to admit that there is a very perceptible decline of interest in some forms of religion. The church has lost its grip upon the working classes. The services of the church are not as largely attended as they were a few years ago.

In the general assemblies of the United Free church and of the Established Church of Scotland, held in May last, the decrease in attendance upon public worship was deplored. The statistics showing the extent and ratio of decrease were regarded as alarming. Some measure of comfort was taken from the fact that the condition of things a century ago was inconceivably worse, but the tide of the Spirit swept over the land, reviving dormant life and leading to the taking up of neglected duties. And we know something of the spiritual deadness which prevailed in England before the tide of the Spirit swept over it at the time of Whitfield and Wesley. In this country, too, when religion had become formal—partly from the enforced attendance in church in the colonial days, partly from the influence of the modern French infidel school, and partly from the Socinianizing influence which found expression in the Unitarian movement under the preaching of such men as Edwards, Nettleton and Finney the tide of the Spirit flowed over the land and the heritage of the Lord was revived.

The present reaction is only temporary. No reaction can be permanent while the Spirit of God lives and works. Power to react belongs to the present order of things. The momentum that causes the pendulum to swing in one direction causes it, when it comes to the point of rest, to turn and swing in the opposite direction. The sap that recedes to the root of the tree in winter will come surging up again in spring and will find its way to every branch and leaf bud, and not more certain is this return of life in nature than is the return of life to the soul of man and to the Christian Church.

It is in the spiritual realm as it sometimes is in nature; the inflowing tide is "too deep for sound or foam." Or it is as it is in this land of ours in spring. Up from the Gulf of Mexico comes a soundless tide of new life; wave after wave of living green, of flowers and of fruit. This tide of life keeps moving onward and upward until it breaks upon the coast of Labrador. And just because the tide of the Spirit comes in this same quiet way its movement is sometimes unobserved.

When the tide is on the ebb some things that we prize may be carried out to sea; but let us not be afraid. This flux and reflux is better than stagnation. It is God's way of purifying the thought and life of man. As we wait and pray and work, the time for the turning of the waters may be at hand; and before we know it the insweeping tide of the Spirit will lap the shores of life, bringing freshness and beauty and making the desert places blossom as the rose.

A NEW FORM OF WAR.

ANOTHER conflict between labor and capital has been precipitated. There were certain preliminary skirmishes which have culminated in what promises to be a strike of vast dimensions. That it will be fraught with commercial disaster and with much suffering among the working classes involved no one doubts. Already the men are losing in wages about $150,000 a day. A further question is, Will the result be worth the struggle? Evidently those who have entered upon the struggle think so.

The two parties in the struggle are the United States Steel Corporation on the one hand, and the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers on the other. The number of men who have already gone out is over 70,000, and it is estimated that if the strike goes on it will ultimately involve 218,000 men.

While the smoke of battle lasts it is difficult to decide as to the merits of the points of dispute. Both parties make their appeal to the bar of public opinion. The officials of the Steel Corporation say that their conferences with the men failed "because the Amalgamated Association did not recede from its original position, which was that the three companies interested should sign for all the mills without regard as to whether these mills had in the past belonged to the Amalgamated Association or not." The reply of the Association is that the scale should have been signed for all the mills owned and controlled by the company; that concession being regarded as reasonable and just.

In connection with this "eternal" labor question there are many things upon which we will conscientiously differ, but there are a few fundamental principles upon which we ought to be in practical agreement.

And first we ought to recognize the equality of human rights; that is, the rights of men, as distinguished from the rights of the privileged classes. That there has been too much class privilege and class legislation we must all admit. If capital has its rights, so has labor; if labor has its rights, so has capital. And these rights are not antagonistic or exclusive. All men are bound together by common interests. In the framework of society each part is necessary to the welfare of the whole. The war of labor against capital is insane. The hand needs the head, and the head needs the hand. They are interdependent; and never will there be harmony between them until each recognizes the rights of the other.

There must be also a recognition of the principle of individual freedom. Today we are in danger of drifting back into the rudest and crudest form of despotism—the divine right of the strongest. For the old exploded doctrine of the divine right of kings we are substituting the doctrine of the divine right of majorities. Now, despotism is despotism whether yielded by one man or by a million of men. And of all the forms of despotism the world has ever witnessed, that of the mob is the worst.

There are two things for which we must strenuously contend: (1) The right to freedom of contract. This is an essential principle in business. No man, or combination of men, has a right to say to another man whom he shall employ or discharge or how he shall conduct his business. As well might the members of one household claim the right to regulate the affairs of another household. We claim for the employer of labor liberty to manage his own enterprise without the interference of those who are without. We boast that this is a free country; but if freedom of contract be taken away, one of the pillars of a true democracy is removed, and the very existence of our national life is brought into jeopardy. The walking delegate must go; and with him that relic of barbarism—the boycott. (2) We claim for the workingman freedom to work at what price he chooses, and for whom he chooses. It is inconsistent with the doctrine of personal liberty that any combination of laborers should interfere with individual laborers, and dictate to them the terms upon which they are to work, or prevent them from working at all. Every man has the right to dispose of his labor as he may think fit; which is only another way of saying that he has the right to think and act for himself.

Mark, we have nothing to say against Trades Unions as such. They have their legitimate uses. They have justified their right to be in the good which they have accomplished, for they have undoubtedly helped to keep up wages. Labor has an undoubted right to combine to protect its own interests. We have no fault to find with labor organizations so long as their members concern themselves with their own affairs; they have a right to say what terms they will refuse, and what terms they will accept; but when they go outside of their own ranks and coerce others to come to their terms, when they have recourse to intimidation and force they become instruments of tyranny.

To forcibly prevent a man from working on terms which he is willing to accept, is to reduce him to bondage; and this country has shed too much precious blood already in the sacred cause of freedom, calmly to allow this new form of industrial slavery to continue in its midst.

But because we believe in God we believe in progress, and full of suffering as the present industrial war is, and must needs be, we believe that its final issue will be the completer emancipation of man.

THE VISITOR.

ONE of the curiosities of our time is the large and apparently growing use of initials as abbreviations of the names of societies, organizations and people. One hardly knows whether to regard this as due to the pressure of time which makes it impossible to go the length of writing or pronouncing the full name, or only a certain careless indifference to correct usage, which will be outgrown as better standards of proper procedure prevail. The difficulty in most cases arises from the easy confidence with which people fancy that all the world is as much concerned in their particular organization as they are, and is therefore fully informed as to its character, name and popular designation. Yet there are some of us who have not that encyclopedic knowledge which gives immunity from perplexing doubts when we are confronted with a list of initials rather than a proper name.

The Visitor picks up his daily paper and is greeted with the cheerful intelligence that the A. O. U. M. is to hold a picnic at Frog Lake, that the Y. W. C. T. U. is planning an excursion to Milwaukee, that the S. P. C. is about to unite forces with the S. P. N. C. A. and the S. P. C. C. in an organized forward movement, that the M. W. V. held a reunion last week, that the A. S. C. E. A. is rapidly enlarging its membership, that the J. C. E. session of the Y. P. S. C. E. was unusually interesting, that the Y. M. C. A. has joined with the Y. W. C. A. in an effort to form an S. C. U., and that the A. B. H. M. S. is to imitate the methods of the A. B. C. F. M. in its extension work. Now all this is most interesting, and one should not complain after such a graceful array of alphabetic variety if he is inconvenienced by so small a matter as total ignorance of what is meant. Yet there is a certain element of disquiet in it after all. What assurance have we that some of these mysterious orders of people may not be about to break loose and do us grievous injury? Who will arise up and allay our fears that in our ordinary business in life we may not suddenly run against an F. A. M. A. or find ourselves in the street car sitting right beside a B. Y. P. U.? It is this reflection that gives us pause. Mysterious crimes are so frequent now that one cannot be too cautious about associating with G. A. R.'s and C. L. S. C.'s.

Then, too, the Visitor is compelled to consider another aspect of the matter. If he could be content to take the I. O. O. F. and the W. C. T. U. for what they appear to be upon the surface, and accept the mystery as one of the necessary evils of a universe only partially ordered by divine Providence, it would not be so bad. But unfortunately he is so constituted that one of these sections of the alphabet acts as a challenge to him, and he forthwith finds himself hurried off into a frantic effort to solve the puzzle. There is not only the baffling character of the signs, but the boundless opportunity for ambiguous decision. Does S. P. C. C. stand for Society for the Promotion of Christian Culture, or Society for the Prevention of Chronic Complaints? Does A. B. C. F. M. mean the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, or the Aerated Bread Company's Family Market? Does U. P. stand for the United Presbyterian church or the Union Pacific railroad? This is really a serious matter, and the Visitor ventures to affirm that a closer inquiry into the causes of insanity will disclose a large percentage of the cases as due to this species of alphabeticism. In the case of titles bestowed upon men the matter is not so trying. You may be at a loss to know what A. O. Q. M. G. or F. R. S. L. or K. S. M. S. G. signify when they follow a man's name. But it is a comfort to feel that they are located in this manner, that the man is responsible for them, that he alone must bear the burden, and that in cases of extreme perplexity you can write to him and ask him what his trouble really is. Moreover, we grow familiar with these titles thus bestowed, so that they no longer wholly elude us. The Visitor has now ceased to misread "D. D." as "drunk and disorderly," and he presumes that we shall content ourselves with the abbreviations of academic and honorary degrees. But the other question is more serious. The Visitor never sees the letters W. U. T. C. without wondering whether it is the Western Union Telegraph Company that is meant, or it is merely a dislocation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The same practice prevails in church notices. We read that at the N. W. M. E. church the S. S. will be held at 9 a. m., the J. E. L. at 3, the W. M. E. M. S. at 4:30, and the P. M. on Wednesday evening. This is no doubt comforting to the saints, but perplexing or even exasperating to the sinners. An institution if it be of any value should be worthy of a name, and to call a Sunday school an S. S. and a prayer meeting a P. M. is to exhibit not merely a careless irreverence but a total misapprehension of good usage.

The same thing may be said of proper names. It is the general custom in America for men to initial their given names and sign themselves J. H. Smith, G. W. Thompson, or H. M. Brown. Yet if a name is worth wearing at all it should have the courtesy of recognition. Names should have a value as memorials. Some association, family or otherwise, has dictated their bestowal. Frequently the family name is perpetuated in the Christian name of a child. Between the brevity and carelessness of writing J. B. Black and the fitness, taste and courtesy to the public involved in signing oneself habitually James Bothwell Black, or even James B. Black, there can be no comparison. The cultured man writes his name; the careless man signs his initials; the illiterate man makes his mark. As a people grows older and more refined it esteems less the short and easy shifts of language, and cultivates not indeed the useless survivals, but the large considerateness which honors language as a necessary instrument of thought, and as possessing certain rights which not even the most rushing and heedless age has the license to disregard.

Wm. Pitt in Parliament said: "I have no fear for England, she will stand till the day of judgment." Edmund Burke answered, "What I fear is the day of no judgment."

THE PRESENCE.

The series of articles from the pen of Dr. James M. Campbell on the doctrine of the Presence, which have been running in the pages of the Christian Century for the past few months, will be concluded in the present number. The opportuneness of this subject is our justification for the large space which we have given to it. For whatever view may be held touching the manifestation of Christ in the future, the loss will be irreparable if the fact of his Presence be questioned, or the sense of his Presence be weakened. No greater need presses upon the Church of today than that of gaining a realizing sense of the real and abiding Presence of her living Lord. Questions regarding the inspiration and infallibility of the story of his earthly life are of secondary importance in comparison with the question of his spiritual Presence. Has the Christ who dwelt for a time among men gone away leaving only a fragrant memory of his fleeting visit? Or, has he come back "in another form" to dwell among us as our living, reigning and redeeming Lord?

What answer has Christian experience to give to these momentous questions? Is it not the testimony of every Christian that he has found Christ; that he has had personal dealings with him; that the unsearchable riches of his grace into the possession of which he has come, have been ministered not by a dead, but by a living hand? However he may have reached it, the conviction within him is deep and unshakable that the Christ he has come to know is not in a distant heaven; but that he is with him in the thick of life's battle; that he is ever breathing into him the breath of his own life; and that it is by his efficacious help that he is enabled to walk in the Christian way. Back of every possible experience of the saving and sustaining grace of Christ is the implicit belief in the reality of his Presence. For before he can be received he must be seen; before he can live in us he must be discovered as the living Christ; before we can live in him he must stand before the soul as the object of our adoring faith. As the Christ of history he is the object of devout contemplation, as the Christ of the future he is the object of hope; as the Christ of the present he is the object of faith, and hence the source of experience.

A considerable amount of interest has been manifested in the articles of Dr. Campbell and several interesting communications have been received on the subjects which they discuss. They are, however, held over for the present, inasmuch as it is our intention before long to have a symposium upon the general subject of the second coming of Christ.

NEW BIBLE REVISION.

After nearly six years of painstaking labor a committee of Bible scholars, consisting of five bishops and five priests of the Protestant Episcopal church, has presented, in a pamphlet of upwards of 300 pages, what is practically a new revision of the Holy Scriptures. This committee was appointed in 1895 "to consider and report what marginal readings in its judgment it would be well for the general convention to authorize for permissive use in the public reading of the Scriptures that the people may have larger and more accurate knowledge of the Word of God."

The object of the commission has been to give an intelligible meaning to every part of the Bible. Even in minor corrections the element of instruction has been the primary thought. The hope is cherished that this work will aid in encouraging regular private study of God's Word, as well as in promoting edification in the public services. The translation of the original and the St. James' version are placed side by side, so that "the church will have a Bible which on the one hand retains a version around which the loving regard of the people so largely centers, and which at the same time contains all such alterations in the rendering of the text as are necessary for its intelligent use."

With regard to only three passages in the New Testament has the commission felt called upon to make any critical note. In these cases the commission has simply stated the fact, now universally recognized, that the passages in question are not found in some of the earliest manuscripts. These passages are the verses explaining the healing water of the pool at Bethesda (St. John v., 41), the Ethiopian eunuch's profession of faith before his baptism (Acts viii., 37), and the doxology at the end of the Lord's Prayer in St. Matthew vi., 3. St. John v., 7-8, is given in the commission's margin without the clause as to the three heavenly witnesses, which clause is absent from all but the latest Greek manuscript, and is generally recognized to be no part of the original text.

Among the changes which, it is believed, will excite discussion in certain circles is the 19th verse of the 21st chapter of Job, speaking of the evildoer. In the original it reads: "God layeth up his iniquity for his children; he rewardeth him and he shall know it." The revised version reads: "Doth God lay up a man's iniquity for his children? Let him recompense it unto the man himself that he may know it." This winnowing, sifting process with regard to the written word is sure to go on. But let no one be alarmed as to the final result. The good wheat of truth is there; and that will remain, and in it men will forever find the true food for their souls.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF EDUCATION

The National Council of Education, which has just adjourned, made sundry important deliverances. In the first place it reaffirmed its position in favor of a national university; the report of the committee in favor of a non-governmental institution at Washington for the advanced study of the sciences and the liberal arts, which was presented by Dr. William R. Harper of the University of Chicago, having been voted down. But perhaps its most revolutionary deliverance came from Dr. G. Stanley Hall, which was to the effect that "women should be educated for wifehood and motherhood." In that simple matter-of-fact statement there was surely nothing essentially revolutionary. It was the way in which he put the matter, and enforced it, that did the mischief. The point which evoked the strongest protest was the declaration that "it is the physical and not the intellectual woman who is the leader of the world." Among other things he said:

There are some species of animals the distinctive features of which are that the females grow and the males deteriorate. Might not this be so among human beings if our girls are not trained for wifehood and motherhood?

Against the suggestion that the higher education of woman unfits her for wifehood and motherhood there was a loud and somewhat angry protest. And the protest was well taken. But the point which lay at the bottom of the whole discussion, and which should not be lost sight of is—What is the kind of intellectual training which will best fit the woman of today for her true place in life? That is one of the most vital questions which the leaders in education can consider.

CHICAGO NOTES.

Chicago is one of the places that has not reported a shirt-waist preacher. It has follies enough without that. In a neighboring town a preacher is said to have appeared in his pulpit in a shirt waist, which was "a dainty creation in white without unnecessary frills." The philosophy of clothes would be a profitable study for some preachers in the present day.

It is well for people like the Board of Trade man who spoke of giving up business in mid-life, to remember that very few men who spend an active life in business pursuits, have resources in themselves with which it is possible to occupy the fag end of life. It is not enough to have something to retire on, one must also have something to retire to. Besides, to give up business is to kill the cow that gives the milk with which others may be fed.

We publish today an authentic report of a sermon by Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, of Topeka, Kansas, delivered on Sunday last in the South Congregational church. Dr. Sheldon is in the city for a few weeks studying some aspects of the social problem in order to gather material for a new story. He is deeply in sympathy with the mission of the Christian Century and is interested in its success. He has promised to contribute to its pages.

The location of the Field Columbian Museum in its temporary quarters in Jackson Park has diminished its value very much to the public. It is a Sabbath day's journey to get to it. It is gratifying to know of the possibility of its early removal to the Lake Front Park, the park commissioners having given the founder of this institution the liberty to select any site he chooses within their jurisdiction. The exhibits of this museum are of great educational and historical value and they ought to be put within easy access to the people.

A useful and graceful gift was made last week by Marshall Field, Chicago's leading merchant, to his native town of Conway, Mass. The gift consisted of a $100,000 library building, 6,000 volumes of books and an endowment fund of $52,000 invested in gilt-edged securities. The building is a memorial to Mr. Field's parents. It is fifty years since Mr. Field left his native town and his return to it on this occasion he describes as one of the most pleasant events of his whole life. No doubt of it. What pleasure can be compared to the luxury of doing good! And this, thank God, is not confined to millionaires.

One of our dailies reports:

Amid the blare of bugles, the rattling of artillery accoutrements and the cheering of the society folk who filled the boxes, the Lake Forest open-air horse show ended its two days' run last night just as the sun passed below the edge of the trees that surround Ferry field, and the building fund of the Episcopal parish of Lake Forest was more than $3,000 better off than it was three days ago.

It would be interesting to know how much worse off spiritually the Lake Forest Episcopal church was by its connection with that affair. But there are those who think it quite a legitimate thing to take even the devil's water to turn the Lord's mill. Still the question will arise, Does the Lord want it?

A beginning is being made to utilize the excellent bathing beach which stretches from Lincoln Park to South Chicago by erecting a chain of bath houses at suitable points for the children of the poor. A plunge in the cooling waters of the lake is surely one of the things to which the tens of thousands of the boys and girls who live in the crowded parts of the city have a right. The summer days ought not to be allowed to pass without ample provision being made for their relief and comfort. Health Commissioner Reynolds, who is interesting himself in this good work, believes that if the people of the city only knew of the importance of this enterprise the means would be forthcoming at once to carry it out.

A movement is on foot to extend the usefulness of the public school buildings, by making them the centers of the social life of the neighborhoods. It is proposed to throw them open to the public, using their assembly halls for lectures and other educational purposes in the evenings; making them, in a word, the centers of neighborhood guilds, and providing them with gymnasium apparatus, and whatever will minister to the physical and mental well-being of the people. This is a good idea, and the experiment is well worth trying. But many people will wonder why greater use cannot be made of our costly church buildings which remain closed up six days of the week. We have yet to learn that churches were made for the people, not the people for churches.

An opportunity to make application of the above principle is offered by the appeal which has just been made by the officers and members of the recently organized Christian Builders' Union to the churches of the city for the use of rooms in which regular meetings can be held. The members of the union all belong to the churches; and they believe that the holding of their meetings in church buildings, instead of in unsavory halls connected with saloons, would conduce to the moral advancement of their members. The response to this appeal ought to be hearty and immediate.

But lest Chicagoans should be exalted overmuch here comes Dr. W. T. Harris, United States commissioner of education, who at the National Educational Association held last week in Detroit said:

Chicago is the great storm center of the country. It is the place of the whirlwind, tornado and fire. It has a morbid tendency that is always manifesting itself in trying to find something disturbing and threatening in things as they are. It amounts to a hysterical mania.

This characterization is not to be taken too seriously, yet in the main it may be accepted as a left handed compliment. Chicago cares little what is said of her, so long as she is allowed to occupy "the center of the stage." And, besides, she has the saving grace of being able to laugh at her own foibles. She knows that she will outgrow them in time.

The Presbyterian Hospital is being seriously hampered in its work for want of room. Its growing reputation draws to its doors scores of patients who are either turned away or put upon the waiting list.

New buildings are imperatively needed if this noble institution is to fulfill its purpose. For the past three months none of its 250 beds have been vacant. Its capacity ought to be doubled to meet the increased demand. The board of managers ask for two fire-proof structures which will cost $225,000. Of this amount Mrs. Cyrus McCormick has offered to provide $40,000. The Presbyterian Hospital has made for itself such a good name because of the excellency of its medical staff, and the efficiency of its nurses, that the money necessary for this enlarged equipment will no doubt soon be forthcoming.

Among other visitors who are making a study of the social conditions of Chicago are Professors Macy and Wyckoff of Iowa College. Things are not as bad as they expected to find them. Everywhere are evidences of a remarkable reformation. They say: "When we came here we expected to see something like what we saw in London, Paris and other European cities; but wherever we turn we find better conditions. Chicago has been maligned. It should be proud of its institutions, proud of its police force. The levee which we expected to find does not exist. The great problem is the saloon. To it crime and evil conditions generally are to a great extent to be directly traced. But the fact that the saloons are in a great measure regulated by the police shows that Chicago is on the high road to improved civic and social conditions."

The Monday Ministers' meetings have always been looked upon as of value as religious clearing houses. They have also been supposed to register the religious thought and life of the city. Evidently the Rev. J. A. Rondthaler, pastor of the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian Church, looked upon them as an overworked institution. He surprised his ministerial brethren at last Monday's meeting by saying:

If ever there comes into existence a society for the prevention of cruelty to ministers, one of its first missions should be to prevent herding them on Monday morning and dosing them with the epsom salts of theology and the ipecac of philosophy.

It is right that the ministers should get together every week, but Monday is a poor day to listen to heavy arguments. If a minister is not tired on Monday, he has not worked as hard as he should on Sunday. We should come together on Monday in a spirit of loving fellowship and talk about simple subjects. Over the doorway of the meeting-room should be written: "No shop talk allowed here." Condemnation comes easy on Monday. Things that are quite passably orthodox on Tuesday and Wednesday are rank heresy on Monday.

He is partly right. Besides being a place for the swapping of sermons the Monday meeting ought occasionally to afford some rebound from the tension of the previous Sunday.

Professor Maximovitch Kovalevsky of the University of Moscow is delivering a course of lectures on Russian history and institutions at the University of Chicago. These lectures are delivered on the recently established Crane foundation, and will continue on Wednesdays and Fridays until July 26. The ground covered includes a preliminary sketch of the development of Russian political institutions; a birdseye view of the different people inhabiting the empire; the inner state of old Moscow under the first dynasty; the Russian Czardom under the first two Romanoffs; the reforms of Peter the Great and the state of Russia under his immediate followers; Catherine the Second and the reordering of Russian provinces and city organizations; the reforms of Alexander I. and the creation of the council of state and ministers; the emancipation of the serfs under Alexander II.; the system of provincial districts and city self-government as created by Alexander II.; Russian universities and press legislation—how far the freedom of conscience is recognized in Russia; the political situation of Poland and Finland in the Russian Empire.

The literary and historical congress of the African Methodist Episcopal church is now in session in Quinn chapel. About sixty ministerial delegates are present. Among them are some of the leading educators and preachers within the color line. A single look at the intelligent faces of many of the delegates would convince the most skeptical that the colored race is rising. At the close of the opening session Bishop Abraham Grant, as presiding officer, gave the keynote of the assembly in the words:

There are several important matters for this congress to take up. We must consider our relation to the industrial conditions in the country; our condition as compared to other days; and whether the progress made by the race is at the bottom of the antagonism which is just now at its highest.

The Ingersoll Memorial association has been formed for the purpose of erecting to the memory of the famous agnostic a temple and hall, costing not less than $100,000. The movement does not seem to awaken any marked enthusiasm. Agnosticism is not very prolific in the building of temples. Why should it be? Why should people be expected to make sacrifice for a negation? In the man Ingersoll there was much to admire. He was genial and generous, he never took himself half so seriously as his opponents took him. The Christianity which he first caricatured and then lampooned was a Christianity which most Christians repudiate. And the "cardinal virtues" which he upheld were precisely those for which Christianity stands. He plowed with a stolen heifer. We have no objection whatever to a memorial temple being erected in Chicago to his name if, as its promoters say, it will "encourage morality, disseminate knowledge, popularize science and education, advance the cause of free thought and secularism and promote the cardinal truths and virtues." Substitute religion for secularism and you have in these words the program of the church. Many would think better of the church if they knew it better.

BROTHERHOOD.

By E. S. Martin.

That plenty but reproaches me
Which leaves my brother bare.
Not wholly glad my heart can be
While his is bowed with care.
If I go free, and sound and stout
While his poor fetters clank,
Unsatd still, I'll cry out,
And plead with Whom I thank.

Almighty: Thou who Father be
Of him, of me, of all,
Draw us together, him and me,
That whichever fall,
The other's hand may fail him not—
The other's strength decline
No task of succor that his lot
May claim from son of Thine.

I would be fed. I would be clad.
I would be housed and dry.
But if so be my brave heart is sad—
What benefit have I?
Best he whose shoulders best endure
The load that brings relief,
And best shall be his joy secure
Who shares that joy with grief.

IN-DWELLING LIFE.

Thou life within my life, than self more near,
Thou veiled Presence infinitely clear,
From all my nameless weariness I flee
To find my center and my rest in Thee.

Take part with me against these doubts that rise
And seek to throne Thee far in distant skies!
Take part with me against this self, that dares
Assume the burden of these sins and cares!

How can I call Thee, who art always here?
How shall I praise Thee, Thou of all most dear?
What may I give Thee, save what Thou hast given,
And whom but Thee have I in earth or heaven?

THE PRESENCE UNVEILED.

James M. Campbell, D. D.

HEAVEN is the unveiled presence of Christ. To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord. When Paul expressed a desire to depart and be with Christ, instead of relinquishing the hope by which his spiritual life had been nourished, he merely pushed the time of its fulfillment a little farther forward, transferring it from this side to the other side of the river. His hope in its essence was undestroyed; it only changed its form. He believed that death would bring him into the presence of his Lord, all the future manifestations of whose glory he would behold, and all the future triumphs of whose kingly power he would share.

The changed aspect of death which has come in virtue of the completion of Christ's redemptive work, is one of the things which Christians seem slow of heart to believe. When the conquering Christ ascended up on high, leading captivity captive, death was abolished, Hades emptied and closed, and heaven opened. There is now no long term of waiting in the gloomy underworld. At the moment of death the beatific vision breaks upon the soul. Sudden death is instant glory. The words, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth," imply that a change for the better has taken place with respect to death. "From henceforth" it is a blessed thing to die in the Lord. Since Jesus died and rose again, and became the first-fruits of them that slept, death is not what it was before. It is a vanquished foe, stingless and harmless.

It is a privilege inexpressible to be living after the resurrection and return of Christ. We who live in this Christian age enter into the possession of all the benefits of his victory over death. Death is no longer going into exile; it is going home—going to the Father's house of many mansions which Christ has gone to prepare. It is falling asleep in earth and waking in heaven. It is not going down to the clods of the valley, or going out to wander through the pale realms of shade, but going up to be forever with the Lord.

"There is no death, what seems so is transition."

"Whosoever liveth and believeth in me," says Jesus, "shall never die." He shall merely be "changed." Death shall be "swallowed up of life." Death instead of being destruction will be the sprouting of the seed, the bursting of the chrysalis, the emergence of the soul out of the bondage of the flesh into the glorious liberty of the heavenly life. It will be the exchange of the earthly tent for the heavenly mansion, the exchange of the natural body for the spiritual body, the exchange of drags for wings. Every one who feels this resurrection life already stirring within him can say with Victor Hugo, "I am tadpole of an archangel."

Our friends who have fallen asleep in Jesus have not gone to be tenants of the tomb; they have gone to be with Christ, and are now in his keeping. The new life which they have attained is one of unending and unclouded fellowship with their exalted Lord. Because he lives they live. Why then should we go to the grave to seek them there? Why seek the living among the dead? The place to find the living is among the living.

There is no friend of mine
Laid in the grave to sleep;
No grave, or green or heaped afresh,
By which I stand and weep.

Who died! What means that word,
Of man so much abhorred?
Caught up in clouds of heaven, to be Forever with the Lord.

Thank God! for all my loved,
That out of pain and care
Have safely reached the heavenly heights,
And stay to meet me there.

—The British Weekly.

And thank God for the hope of sharing in the self-same heritage, the hope of beholding with open face the blessed Presence "whom we now obscurely see, through a veil that hangs between." In the unveiling of the Presence Christian hope culminates. To see Christ is to see the glory of God. To be with Christ is to be in heaven.

The unveiling is sometimes gradual. That the transition may not be too sudden the veil is partially lifted before death seals the eyes. The dying saint exclaims:

I hear a voice you cannot hear,
Which says I must not stay;
I see a hand you cannot see,
Which beckons me away. —Tickell.

Who shall say that he is deluded when, with the light of heaven in his eyes, he declares that he has seen the Lord? When the silver cord is loosening, the two worlds mingle into one, and the dying Christian is partly in heaven before he is altogether out of earth. As the things of the world recede, the things of heaven draw near. A sphere is entered into which earthly friends cannot follow. And what more natural than at this point of separation there should come to the departing soul a vision of the glorified Redeemer such as was given to John, in Patmos? The unaccountable thing would be that Christ should not come to receive his own unto himself.

A familiar example of the manifestation of Christ to a dying saint is found in the case of Stephen, the first Christian martyr. It is said that "he being full of the Holy Ghost looked up steadfastly into heaven and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God" (Acts 7:55). But think of the crass literalism that sacrificing the spirit for the letter, attempts to draw from these words an argument for the absence of Christ. Stephen saw Jesus in heaven at God's right hand. Where is heaven? Where is the right hand of God? In some distant star, or in some spiritual sphere which touches closely upon earth? It is clear that from the council chamber where Stephen stood, heaven's open gate was not far distant. So near was heaven to earth, and so near was the glorified Christ to his suffering servant, that immediately after Stephen was able to commit his departing spirit into his hands. As the stones thrown by his murderers fell upon the martyr like a shower of hail, muttering the prayer, "Lord, receive my spirit," he fell asleep in the arms of eternal love. A moment more and he was with the Lord in Paradise.

To one who sees the face of Christ the face of death loses its terror. Death is not to him a dark valley, but a shining pathway leading up to the heights upon which rests the light that never fails. When the Psalmist said, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil; for thou art with me" (Ps. 23:4), he was not thinking of death at all. John Bunyan is right in representing the valley of death-shade not as death, but as one of the dark and dangerous places this side of death, through which every pilgrim must pass on his way to the celestial city. In the margin of the Revised Version the expression, "the valley of the shadow of death," is rendered "deep darkness." The Christian in dying does not always, does not generally, pass through "deep darkness." This is oftener the lot of those who are left behind. He passes out of darkness into light. He passes from twilight into noonday; from faith to sight; from hope to fruition; from tribulation to rest; from defeat to victory; from humiliation to glory; from the veiled to the unveiled presence of his Lord.

THE NORMAL CHURCH, II.

The whole body fitly joined together and compacted.—Eph. 4:16.

A. B. Jones.

WITH every man who duly considers and respects the authority of the New Testament Scriptures, Christian unity must be held essentially in these three particulars: "Unity of the body," "Unity of the faith," and "Unity of the spirit."

I. Unity of the body. By this is meant that the visible Church on earth should be organically associated together as one body. In discussing the subject of Christian unity the Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, fourth chapter, says, "There is one body." And again he says, "The whole body joined together and compacted." If this does not mean that in the normal church all Christians are corporately associated in one church, and as he elsewhere says, "members one of another," then some new code of laws for the interpretation of Scripture must be discovered. Of the correctness of this interpretation the New Testament abounds in corroborative proofs. Its positive inhibition of "schisms" and "divisions" as damaging and sinful, as well as its positive injunctions of unity in "the Church which is his body," all point plainly to this conclusion.

The Savior said, "On this rock I will build my church," not churches. And the Divine One prayed "For them which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one," and he is said to be, "The head over all things to the Church." Concerning this unity of the Church the inspired writers speak in terms that cannot be mistaken. "From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working of every part, maketh increase of the body." Let us give attention to the style of this language—"fitly joined together and compacted." Stones loosely thrown together in a heap have neither strength nor beauty; but when "fitly joined together and compacted" by the hand of a skillful mechanic they have both. "Fitly framed and knit together" is the way the Revised version puts it. Humanity as a thread is knit together, stitch by stitch, soul by soul, into one seamless body, the "Church of God." The idea of this unity in the normal, corporate existence of the body of Christ is also intensified by the Apostle Paul in his Epistles to the Corinthians and the Romans where the Church in the aggregate is compared to the human body and its members, the eye, the ear, the hand, the foot, etc.—"So we being many members, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another."

Violations of Unity.

That this principle of unity is violated by the denominationalism of the day is too clear to call for argument; and that it is violated in the intense form of democratic church government, which widely exists, is equally clear. What is the difference between the sin of denominationalism—denominations without organic, co-operative function and life, and the sin of democracy—independent congregations without organic, co-operative function and life? It is only the difference between a hundred large divisions in the body of Christ and a thousand small ones. Let us be understood. It is not denied that the New Testament presents to us the congregational feature of the Church, but this is only an incidental fact. We read of the "churches of Asia," and of the "churches of Galatia," and in a still broader view, of the "churches of Christ."

As a matter of convenience in meeting together for worship it is necessary to have these separate congregations; but the Scriptures nowhere emphasize this congregational idea as an essential and fundamental one in the life of the Church. We are nowhere exhorted to "maintain the congregational idea," to "guard the independency of the separate congregations," to "be jealous of the idea of associated church work." Had it been practicable for all Christians to have held membership in the first church in Jerusalem and to have gone up to Mount Zion every Lord's day to worship, I suppose there would never have been another congregation. This incidental, congregational feature of the Church of Christ, in the style of New Testament thought, is entirely lost in the broader and grander lesson of the "one body" which obtains in the sacred writings, and which is emphasized with great force and in great variety of forms. We make no plea for an ecclesiasticism, but only for the unity of the Church of Jesus Christ as set forth in the Scriptures of the New Testament.

In the nature of things, as well as in the Word of God, the individual Christian has reserved personal rights and liberties in matters which in nowise affect the interest of the local congregation of which he is a member; and the local congregation, in like manner, has reserved rights and liberties in things lying strictly within its own limits, and which, in the nature of the case, do not involve the interests and the standing of other congregations or of the Church at large.

But in all questions of a general character, in all public enterprises, institutions, and agencies representing the common faith and the common liberality of the Church of Christ, both the individual and the local congregation should be subordinated to the idea of the "unity of the body."

The Unity of the Faith.

"There is one faith," says the Apostle Paul; and we are exhorted to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." What is that "one faith?" This is an important question; probably there is none more so in the line of our discussion. The outward life depends largely, if not wholly, on the inward convictions; hence the "unity of the body" depends upon the "unity of the faith;" and without the latter we cannot hope to realize the former.

By the "unity of the faith" we understand a oneness of belief; that is, all Christians must believe the same things. There is a certain faith essential to Christian character, and without this a man cannot be a Christian, in the New Testament meaning of that term, whatever else he may be. And it is to the Scriptural idea of this subject we must come. What then are these necessary things of Christian faith? Here again we need our optical instrument, an optical instrument for the mind's eye, an instrument that is so constructed as to exclude every foreign element and bring clearly to view the items and only the items of necessary Christian faith. Looking through such an instrument into the souls of men, we would in every case see precisely the same objects; and could we photograph this Christian faith in a thousand different men no man could distinguish one from the other. They would be as identical as are the several pictures which the artist makes from the same negative.

In that picture neither the peculiarities of Episcopalianism, Presbyterianism, Methodism, Baptistism nor any other ism could ever be found; nor would any question of mere human expediency ever obtrude itself there. All questions, too, of speculative theology, all denominational dogmatics concerning the mysterious nature of the Godhead; concerning the atonement; concerning the operation of the Holy Spirit—whether before or after the word, or concurrent with the word; concerning the remission of sins—whether before or after or concurrent with baptism, would be forever excluded. While correct notions on all these subjects are desirable, and would bring their reward, yet that they are essential items of the "one faith" cannot be accepted without rendering the sublime, scriptural idea of the "unity of the faith" an impossibility and an absurdity. In essentials there must be unity, in non-essentials there may be differences. What a splendid optical instrument that will be that will bring out in clear outline these essential items of Christian faith and exclude the differing non-essentials! The world is waiting to applaud the inventive genius who will produce such an instrument.

"SUBJECTIVE BARRIERS TO TRUTH."

George Luther Cady.

IT HAS been one of the beautiful dreams of those who possessed truth that all that was needed for its acceptance was that it might be perceived. The dream is as false as it is beautiful. The young propagandist starts out with a truth which he knows to be resting on God as its foundation, but he finds that the world is not tumbling over itself in a mad scramble to possess it. Many a man has had the heart taken out of him and his faith in humanity shaken because he has found that truth has no easy path to victory, but must fight for its life through interminable and almost insuperable obstacles. The cynicism he is often cursed with as the only result of his labors would have been prevented if he had taken a good course in psychology, for he would find that truth must not only be "perceived," but "apperceived" or classified with the knowledge which he already possesses or rather possesses him. Here stands a body of truth and here stands the mind—the problem would be very simple if the mind were only a tabula rasa, but that mind is already written upon from infancy—nay, from before infancy; the door to that mind is already crowded with facts, and supposed facts, through which every new truth must run the gauntlet. Truth comes to every man not as from an open heaven, but as through highly-colored windows—colored by the ideas, prejudices, opinions and customs which make us just what we are. No man sees face to face, but all through a glass darkly. Truth is judged not by its objective value, but by the subjective state of the mind. The subjective element is the ultimately determining factor against which the forces of truth or error, however great, are massed in vain. Prof. Patrick in an article on "The Psychology of Prejudice" (Pop. Sci. Mo., 36, p. 633) says: "All knowledge is the result of the union of two factors, one objective and one subjective. To know anything is to refer it to something known before. Knowledge is classification. The class is within us; the thing to be classified is without. We see things not as they are, but as we are."

The reason that no two men see alike is that no two men have the same set of ideas already in the mind with which to "apperceive" the new idea which presents itself. A group of men are looking at Pike's Peak; one thinks of the silver and gold that fills its bosom—he is a mineralogist; another of the strata of rocks and wonders at the upheavals of the unmeasured past which made it possible—he is a geologist; another is amazed at the skill of the cogwheel railroad—he is an engineer; another sees only the light and shade which cover it and the varied colors which the others could not see probably even if they were pointed out—he is an artist; another sees behind it the hand of its Maker and is silent before the majesty of such a power—he is a theologian and a worshipper; each has seen the thing which his mind has been trained to see and which the facts of his mind are most able to classify.

Here is a man who has been raised among beer-drinking parents and you could just as easily convince a cow that it is wrong to eat grass or a dog that it is wrong to gnaw a bone as to convince that man that it is unethical for him to follow the customs of his ancestors, while I, raised among total abstainers and with a mother who never went out without the white ribbon on her breast, could never be convinced but that the whole liquor business is born of the devil, and I shall probably go down to my grave hating it and praying God for an ever-increasing capacity for hatred.

Or here is an old soldier who carries in his body the scars of the great conflict, in his veins the fever, and in his bones the rheumatism, still remind him of the damp nights out on the southern fields and bid him never forget the cost of defeating a party of men who were bent on destroying the Union. It is next to impossible to convince him that there can be any virtue in the Democratic or any vice in the Republican party. I well remember hearing old Prof. Barrows (father of President Barrows) in Olivet, while speaking in a prayer meeting on the night of Cleveland's first election. His great, deep voice filled the room, his dimmed eye lighting up flashed out from under his shaggy eyebrows, as he said, "If Cleveland is elected this country will run red with blood!" The dear old man had been through those trying days when Democrat stood for disloyalty, and he, always one of the most uncompromising of abolitionists, had suffered for the sins of his country, and the thought of a Democratic president refused to be classified or to be associated with the facts that had made up his past.

The bubbling buoyancy and irrepressible optimism of Emerson is to be charged not more to his faith than to his good digestion. He says: "In good health the air is a cordial of incredible virtue. Crossing a bare common, in snow puddles, at twilight, under a clouded sky, without having in my thoughts any occurrence of especial good fortune, I have enjoyed a perfect exhilaration. I am glad to the brink of fear." But let another man with poor digestion, with nerves all on the outside, with constant fear that feet wet from these same snow puddles will precipitate ancestral lung disease, how much of the "exhilaration" or gladness will he experience? Many a time have I studied over the problem of life and evil until the brain was all in a whirl, hope languished and faith limped; then I have dropped my books, taken my golf sticks, breathed my lungs full of God's good ozone, felt the blood coursing through every vein, saw the sunset casting its halo over the hills, and when I came back it was easy to sing with Browning,

"God's in His heaven,
"All's well with the world!"

Nowhere is the subjective element more prominent or persistent than in religion. What with self-interest, inherited convictions and prejudices, religion has a sad fight for life! Simply because it is the province of the Christian religion to make old things pass away and to make all things new, religious apperception is most weak. Prof. Romanes gives an explanation of the fact that women are in the majority in the Church. He says: "Women as a class are in all countries much more disposed to Christianity than men. I have no doubt that the larger part of the explanation would consist in the passions of women being less ardent than those of men. Now nothing is so inimicable to Christian belief as un-Christian conduct. This is essentially the case as regards impurity; for whether the fact be explained on religious grounds or on non-religious, it has more to do with unbelief than speculative reason. Consequently woman is, for all these reasons, the 'fitter' type for receiving and retaining Christian belief."

If one were to ask the average church member why the Gospel proceeds so slowly in its triumph he would be met with a criticism of the pulpit. However much may be said (and more than enough could be said) about the weakness and worldliness of the ministry, no one would be so rash as to point to the minister to account for the failure of the immediate ministry of Him who cried "How often would I—but ye would not!" Jesus himself refused to rest under such an explanation and spoke that marvelous parable on the barriers of the subjective life and "apperception"—the Parable of the Sower and the Soil. Jesus knew that He sowed the good seed in vain in soil hardened by preconceived notions of how the Messiah must come, or corrupted by passions, self-interest and prejudice already in full possession. Even the preaching of Him who could say "I am the Truth" was powerless when confronted by such subjective barriers. Ought not this to make us more patient in the sowing and more self-scrutinizing lest we nullify the truth?

I thought the shining sun was dark,
And dark the bending skies;
Alas, I find the darkness all
Is in my blinded eyes.

I thought my fellow men were cold
And from me stood apart;
Deceived was I—the coldness all
Is in my frozen heart.

No music in the rippling brook
Nor in the breeze I find;
The brook and breeze are not to blame—
No music's in my mind.

No beauty beams in all the fields,
In flowers, shrub or tree;
Yet not in them, but in myself
Is the deformity.

I ask not that the outer world
Another face may wear;
But that myself, myself be changed,
I make my daily prayer.

Strange coincidences sometimes occur in the choice of texts for sermons. Rarely does a preacher find his selection more incongruous and more an occasion of laughter than in the following instance:

Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, during a July outing on the island of Ventnor, had arranged to preach there on a certain Sunday. The Thursday before his engagement, while on an excursion to Carisbrooke, he fell from one of the old castle walls, broke an arm, and dislocated his elbow. He, of course, could not meet his appointment, and Rev. Dr. Halley preached in his stead.

Not knowing the nature of Dr. Dale's illness, he innocently announced as his text Psalm 34:20, "He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken."

This was too much for the gravity of the congregation. A ripple of laughter ran through the congregation. The reverend doctor was made uneasily conscious that something was wrong, but he could not discover the cause of the merriment until he had finished his sermon and left the pulpit. He was acutely distressed on learning what he had done, especially when he found that some of the people supposed the choice of his incongruous text had been intentional.

LETTERS TO THE BOOKLOVER.
DOCTRINE AND POETRY.

My Dear Friend:

I have just laid down the daily paper which contains the report of some things which Prof. O. L. Triggs of Chicago University has said. This is the teacher who some months ago made himself famous by comparing the brain power of Rockefeller with that of Shakespeare. The report says that on this occasion he disparaged the entire hymnology of the church as being unpoetical, and asserted that orthodoxy and poetry are incompatible with one another. As these assertions are made now and again by various kinds of people and as they deeply concern every Christian man who is a true book lover, I think it worth while to consider the two main positions thus described.

In the first place, Prof. Triggs apparently asserts that pure literature and especially poetry ought not to be appreciated by orthodox people; or conversely orthodox thinkers cannot produce pure literature or poetry. He seems to have said after naming half a dozen modern poets that "all are heterodox or Unitarian in their teachings." My first impulse would be to suggest to any one who makes this assertion a course of reading in the biographies of literary men. One might recall such names as Milton, Samuel Johnson, DeQuincey, Wordsworth, not to speak of Browning and Tennyson, and ask whether these bright stars in the firmament of pure literature are accurately described as "heterodox or Unitarian." One would much liked to have heard an impromptu opinion from Samuel Johnson on Prof. Triggs and his doctrine. It is true indeed that John Foster wrote an elaborate essay inquiring why evangelicalism was disliked by men of taste. But the evangelicalism of which he thought is not to be confused with the fundamental orthodoxy which one would ascribe in spite of Prof. Triggs to such a man as Browning.

There can be little doubt that poetry of the higher kind has always depended upon the possession of faith, the enjoyment of an outlook towards the infinite. The men who believe that all reality is included within the reach of the five senses and is traversed within the span of a human life have never proved themselves inspiring teachers nor thrilling poets. I need only to remind you of the pitiable poetry of modern pessimism; it is forceful, passionate, full of imagery. It has many of the claims to permanent value which belong only to best literature, but it is not true in its fundamental teachings. It is narrow in its conception of man; bitter in its reflections upon the history and the destiny of man; and therefore it fails and must fail to hold the attention and the admiration of mankind. But some one will say, is it not true that orthodox doctrines cannot be made the subjects of poetical consideration? On this I might easily write a separate and long letter for I believe it could be fully proved that some of the noblest poetry in the English language has been quickened by the contemplation of those facts which orthodox doctrines describe. I suppose it is orthodox to believe in the dogma of immortality, and one thinks of Wordsworth's Ode. I suppose it is orthodox to believe in Incarnation, and one thinks of Milton's ode on "A Nativity." I suppose it is orthodox to believe in the Deity of Christ, and one thinks of Browning's "Epistle of Karshish." And as one believes in the atonement and thinks of the cross, of all the allusions to it in a world of poetry, of the emotions it has quickened and the lyric outbursts which have arisen in the contemplation of it, one feels convinced that even the dogma of an atonement has proved itself a fountain of sweetest song.

In the second place I have space only for a few words on the opinion attributed to Prof. Triggs regarding the element of poetry that is to be found in the hymns of the Christian Church. He seems to hold the very narrow opinion that unless a verse can be called thoroughly poetical, it ought to be named doggerel. The one hymn which he seems to have discovered as possessing poetical element is Newman's "Lead, Kindly Light." Of course he condemns Watts; and yet that Watts had his high moments I must maintain. I think it was Matthew Arnold who said that the famous hymn "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross" was the finest hymn in existence, and true poetry. To think for a moment only of the great hymns in the light of their poetical quality is to recall one after another which moves in a very atmosphere of feeling and imagery; and these are the two essentials of poetry. Read over such hymns as "O Worship the King" or "Dismiss Me not Thy Service Lord" or "Here, O my Lord, I See Thee Face to Face," and tell me whether these hymns which the church loves are not also poems of the purest water.

The fact is that a hymn is written not for the sake of poetry, but the poetry is sometimes used in a hymn for the sake of the hymn. There are many of the greatest hymns which will outlast all the poetry—all the love lyrics that our literary epicures can produce next year—which have not a single metaphor in them, but they serve the sublime end of a hymn which is to express or to create a religious emotion. It may take the form of a prayer or of a meditation; it may be hortatory or it may be didactic; but if in fitting and musical language it stirs or utters a religious act of the soul, it is a true hymn. Some of us "ministers" who desire to exercise literary taste sometimes employ false canons of criticism upon the hymns we select for our congregations. In some churches the tendency in recent years has been very strong towards the use of hymns which are called poetical, but which in their vagueness, in their sentimental weakness, cannot compare for power with the grander and more rugged doctrinal hymns of the church.

I am yours faithfully,

Rev. James Learmouth says: "I like the story that is told about two frogs. They found themselves in a pail of milk, and they could not jump out. One turned faint-hearted, and said to the other: 'Good-bye. I sink, I die.' Said his chum: 'Brace up, you duffer, keep jumpin,' and see what turns up.' So they kept on jumping up and down all night, and by morning, so the story says, they had churned the milk into butter, and so they escaped safe to land. I do not say that is a true story, but the spirit of it is true. The frog was right. If you realize that you are working for God, when you are at school or running the errand, you will also feel that you must never give in, nor give up—you must 'overcome.'"

THE STRUGGLE FOR A BLESSING.

Charles M. Sheldon, D. D.

"And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day."—Genesis xxxii., 24.
"And Jacob said I will not let thee go (verse 26) except thou bless me."
"And he blessed him there." (Verse 29.)

In the entire realm of literature there is perhaps no more strange, exciting, dramatic picture than this which we have just read from the thirty-second chapter of Genesis. Jacob had just left his father-in-law, Laban. He had been with him twenty years. In that time by his industry and shrewdness he had become a rich man in the wealth of those days which was counted by flocks and herds more than by cash money.

There had grown up a feeling of jealousy on the part of Laban at the sight of Jacob's success. When Jacob noticed it he made his plans to leave the country of Padan Aram, where Laban lived, and go back to his old home in Canaan.

He was afraid to let Laban know of his plan and went away by stealth. On the third day Laban found out his departure, and in anger, because Rachel, Jacob's wife, had stolen the idols out of her father's tent, he pursued after Jacob and finally overtook him. Then followed a scene between these two rugged herdsmen, a scene which at one time almost promised to become a conflict of blows as well as words. Finally Laban agreed to a treaty or covenant of peace which was signed after the manner of those days by the erection of a heap of stones and the swearing of the oath. "The Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from another."

After this had been done, Jacob offered a sacrifice and there was a feast of reconciliation. Early the next morning Laban and his people took peaceful leave of Jacob and went back home.

So far all had gone well with Jacob, in spite of the fact that he had not always been a man of high and noble principle. The age in which he lived accounts for some of the transactions of those times—transactions which now in the light of Christian teaching would be characterized as decidedly shrewd, even to the verge of business dishonesty, and no doubt there are plenty of shrewd, cunning Jacobs today. However, the now wealthy herdsman had escaped from his father-in-law, who had certainly made Jacob work for his wages, and Jacob had avoided a battle with him. But a greater danger confronted him. Years before Jacob had wronged his brother Esau. In plain English, he had, by a trick in which his mother had assisted him, cheated his brother Esau out of his rights as the first-born son. When Esau realized what had been done he made his plans to kill his brother. So Jacob was obliged to run away from home in fear of his life. For twenty years he had been an exile in Syria. During all that time he had not dared go home for fear of Esau. Now, then, as he turned his face southward and drew nearer the scenes of his boyhood, and the recollection of the great wrong he had done Esau came upon him with greater vividness, he was terribly afraid. He remembered Esau's wild, lawless character. He thought what a revenge Esau would have in capturing, after the fashion of those times, all the hard-earned cattle and the property so painfully acquired during those twenty years of labor, and even Jacob's wives and children, after killing him and his followers. With this fear in his heart he sent messengers on ahead to meet Esau, who, Jacob had ascertained, was only a few miles distant. The messengers returned with the alarming news that Esau was coming on to meet Jacob and four hundred men with him.

"Then Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed" (verse 7). What could be expected from this wild Arab Bedouin of the desert with his company of four hundred lawless followers except an onslaught that would result in certain death for him and his small body of servants. But he was not so terrified that he did not do what he believed would pacify his brother. Like a prudent general he divided his little company. Then he prayed to Jehovah for protection. Then he picked out a large number of cattle, and camels, bunched them in droves and sent them on ahead as a present to Esau. After that, he took his wives and servants and sons and sent them across the ford, or ravine, which probably had a stream of water running through it at the time. But Jacob himself remained on the bank of the ravine. The night was already partly spent. The narrator of this romance of the early life of the human family gives us no glimpse of the outward features of that memorable scene. Whether it was starlight or cloudy, whether it was a night of profound stillness, or hoarse with chilling winds that swept through the ravine, the writer does not stop to tell us. The narrative goes on simply to say, "And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the break of the day."

Around this verse and the account which follows learned men have written much to explain what the story means. Some think Jacob fell asleep and dreamed that he wrestled with a man. Others think that his fear of Esau caused him to imagine that one of Esau's men stole upon him in the night and attacked him, and hence the story. Still others, while accepting the spiritual teaching of the narrative, deny that Jacob actually wrestled with a real being. Others again stick to the literal statements and believe that in some way, not explained, Jacob actually had a struggle that night with a real person and that this person was the Divine Being, called in our text "a man," in verses 28 and 30 "God," and in Hosea 12, 3rd, "the angel." My own opinion is as follows:

First of all we must remember this was a great crisis in the life of Jacob. It makes little difference that he had been a bad man in some ways, at present he was in sore distress and fear and he had repented him of the evil done his brother and asked the Divine Being for help.

In the second place we must remember it was the age of the childhood of the race, when God was still teaching men certain great truths through outward, physical object lessons.

In the third place we need to remember that the divine power may adapt itself to any form of expression in order to make an impression on the heart and mind of a man, and that because it is unusual it is no evidence that it could not occur.

In the fourth place we must remember the end which God had in view in subjecting Jacob to this test. The means employed are not the subject of discussion so much as the end attained. As long as we are finite we shall always wonder at God's use of means. The end in view in this case, it seems to me, is so plain, so necessary, so far reaching that the mind which stops to criticise the means loses the very kernel of the entire truth, misses the whole teaching of this remarkable story of the wrestling Jacob.

So, then, it is my opinion, that on that night by the ford Jabbok back in the early annals of human history the man Jacob really did wrestle with a real being, who was in a real sense the divine Person, known in Old Testament language as "a man," or "the angel of the Lord," and even as "God" himself. It was, I believe, the Divine Being, who afterwards was manifested to the world as Jesus Christ, the incarnate God, who wrestled with the man Jacob that night. And the whole object of that struggle which went on until day began to break over the hills of Moab, was to teach, not only Jacob, but the entire race for all time, that divine blessing sometimes comes out of persistent, long continued, faithful, courageous struggle with the divine power. And Jacob said, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me."

"And He blessed him there."

In passing on, therefore, to an application of this great truth of "blessing the result of wrestling with God," let us bow our hearts in thanksgiving to Him who thus early in the history of mankind left us so great a witness to the fact of the power which man has to prevail with the Almighty.

1. First of all let us notice the fact that God sometimes tests men to find if they are worthy to endure and struggle. He lets them get into trouble and perplexity and when the crisis comes He sometimes seems to fight against the man instead of for him. The Christian is not miraculously delivered out of sorrow and trouble and anxiety. The test comes for him when at the crisis of his life he seizes on the Divine and wrestles with him for victory.

After men have come up to difficulties, or they have faced doubt and the dark waters have seemed to go over their souls—then in the dark they are aware of one who is testing their strength and courage and persistence. Will they hold on until the blessing comes? Ah! That is the test supreme! The divine power has seized on them. Will they grapple with it to prevail, to claim the blessing, to demand it and so win the struggle? I say it is the man who has come out of this wrestling with the Divine, where just they two have been alone, who goes to meet the enemy of his soul when day springs, with peace and courage in his heart. As a prince, such a man has power with God and men and will prevail. The test, the test of a man that God sometimes uses! He knows best. Purest gold comes out of the fire. Strongest hearts come out of struggling for the blessing, not content until the blessing is bestowed.

2. There is a lesson here for men who are fighting for the victory over tremendous sins and evils in their lives. If they will only keep at it they will prevail. Men give up too easily. They do not claim the blessing long enough and hard enough. They do not wrestle until the break of day. They give up in despair and go down to defeat in the dark. If there is a soul here this morning who is in the clutches of some great fear or evil, remember, dear soul, the divine power is mightier than your trouble. Do not let him go until the blessing is given. Oh, how easy men give up! How lazily they fight their besetting sins! How quickly excuses are made for wrongdoing! How shamefully men fall back on the sins of their grandparents and even go back as far as Adam and blame him for their own weakness and errors! Shame on us that we do not use the power we have with God! Is it not true that no matter what weakness and imperfections we have, we can overcome them with the help of the Almighty? How far have we a right to blame our tendencies, our sins, on our ancestors, or our surroundings? It is a question whether too much of that has not been done. Take our criminal population. It has been the teaching and training of men for years that the hereditary influence to crime and sin was so great that very little, if any, blame could be attached to the law breaker. And so he was in many cases almost entirely let out of responsibility for his actions. There is at the present time, I am happy to believe, a swing of the pendulum away from this teaching. A recent notable contribution to medical and criminal science flatly contradicts much of the sentimental, weakly teaching along the line of transmitted tendency. It says that by far the larger proportion of all criminals have a definite, fixed purpose and method in their crime, and could, by the exercise of the will, which has been theirs to use, rise above this environment and become useful and honest citizens. That is, in other words, as Bishop Vincent says, in his lecture on "Tom and His Teachers," the human being can seize on a divine power outside of himself and outside of his environment and by dint of struggle compel for himself a blessing from the divine in the world. How much better it is for us to teach this doctrine to the world than the old, depressing, hopeless doctrine of survival of the fittest, that left men largely at the mercy of their ancestors and their local surroundings, and coolly and heartlessly left God all out of the account. Here is a young man just beginning to drink and indulge in some small vice that will ruin his health. Don't say to him, "Poor fellow, you can't help it. You must sow these wild oats and get over it in time perhaps." Appeal to the power that lies all outside of his weakness—the divine power that will test the wrestling powers of the young man's manhood, but will also give the blessing of victory. If a boy is thrown into bad company he can be better than his company. If he is exposed to great temptations he must be taught that there is a way of escape provided. If his surroundings are peculiar he must remember that so are his advantages. If the night is dark he must feel the presence of the strength of God and wrestle until the break of day. O friends, we don't claim the blessing that might be ours. With all heaven on our side, we let hell march in and spike our guns and take our fortress and make us prisoners, and we never call upon the reserve troops. Shame on the world for shrinking behind its weaknesses and its inherited vices and its easily besetting sins, when if it had wrestled mightily with God it had before this have prevailed and gone singing over the ravine as the sun rose.

3. There is a lesson here for the Christian disciple. It is a lesson of hope. God wants us to keep at it. There are certain things which nothing but time can accomplish, nothing but persistency can bring about.

It takes time to see results. It takes time for things to grow. "We must not weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." There is not a single promise in the Bible for the lazy Christian or the Christian who takes a Sunday school class for two or three months and then gets discouraged and gives it up, or the church member who has a spasm of good resolutions about the first of the year and then loses his temper the first time he is asked to do something hard for someone in need, or the Christian disciple who is all the time finding fault because everything is not all right at present. But there are plenty of promises for the patient, the long-suffering, the persistent, the faithful, the every-day-in-the-year Christians. God has always blessed effort that had a definite end and aim. Your nervous, irritable, changeable, fickle, never-do-anything-long-at-a-time Christians always miss the blessing. They have not learned to say, "We will not let thee go except thou bless us."

What is the lesson taught the church of Christ? Are we putting out our greatest strength? President Gates, formerly of Iowa College, recently said that Christianity is as yet only playing at the problems of the world. And I believe he is right. The church is not in earnest yet. Christianity has not yet braced itself with persistent, not to be denied struggle with the Divine for the blessing. We do not claim the full stretch of the promises. We do not ask God for great enough things. We do not mean it when we pray. How many members of this church have been as eager this last week to save some lost soul, or relieve some desponding creature, as they have been to make money, or avoid the loss of it? What is it that most of us are eager for? What is it that we will give most time to? Where are we willing to sacrifice the most in order to accomplish the most? What are the most valuable things in the thought of the discipleship of this church? I am only raising the question. Do we want the blessing? Do we want it enough to fling our whole strength into it? And can we expect God to bless us until we do? In this struggle with the Infinite we get what we ask for if we are in earnest, and we don't get it unless we are. Oh, for the church of Christ to rise to her opportunity and privilege! There never was so great a need of prevailing with God. He ever stands ready to grant our great desires. The little, insignificant, trivial remedies which men are suggesting for the relief of the world's want and trouble and despair and unrest and sin would be laughable if the whole situation was not so terrible. We prescribe remedies for indigestion when what ails us is heart disease. The trouble with this old world is its awful selfishness. The remedy for it does not lie in a few legislative enactments, but in the regeneration of human nature, the complete union of the human and the divine in sympathy and purpose to build up the kingdom of God on earth. And this regeneration cannot be brought about except through the Spirit of God as men are willing to have him work in them. And this Spirit is given to those who ask. "Ask and it shall be given you." But we don't ask. It is not yet supreme with us. What do you think could resist the pressure we could bring to bear if, as a Christian community, we would unite to say to God we will not be content until our son, our neighbor, our friend, our companion, our city is saved? We will not cease our importunity until our desire is granted. "We will not let thee go except thou bless us." Yes, there is the test. Do we want the blessing enough to wrestle for it with all our might? Are we ready to endure? Do we care to sacrifice ease and physical pleasure and indulgence in order that souls may be saved? If we do, the blessing is ours.

The prevailing power of man with God is the most hopeful fact in the world today. The church that wants a blessing can get it. The man who wants a blessing can get it. The world is waiting again as it waited in the times of the Reformation for the holy arm of the Most High to be made bare in the sight of the nations. Still, now, as then, he works through men to save men. He is testing. And sifting. And in the process of his wonderful designs he is longing to have the church fling herself, with eager fury of desire, into the wrestling that prevails like a prince. Is she ready to do that? Is this church prepared to wrestle with the Angel of Jehovah and prevail?

Again I would place the picture of the wrestling Jacob before you. Do we want the blessing? Do we feel the awful need of it? Do we really mean it when we pray for the salvation of men? Will we sacrifice time and money and pleasure to get it? Are we ready to struggle through the darkness alone? Then, if we are, the time will come when the east shall begin to pale with the coming Sun, and the Angel who has tested our strength, with infinite condescension for our weakness, but with mysterious reverence for our humanity, will say, "Let me go, for the day breaketh." Then we will reply, with him who cried out luminous years of history ago, even after feeling the great power of God, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." And, as then, for he is the same forever, the Lord will bless us there, and as we pass over to meet our enemy the Sun shall rise upon us and we shall go our way in peace.

ABRAHAM AND LOT.

Lesson for August 4, 1901, Gen. 13: 1-18.

Golden Text: Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. Matt. 7: 12.

2 And Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, into the south.

3 And Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold.

4 And he went on his journeys from the south even to Beth-el, unto the place where his tent had been at Beth-el and Hai;

5 Unto the place of the altar, which he had made there at the first; and there Abram called on the name of the Lord.

6 And Lot also, which went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents.

7 And the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together: for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together.

8 And there was a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle; and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land.

9 And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren.

10 Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

11 And Lot lifted up his eye, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered everywhere, before the Lord destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the Lord, like the land of Egypt, as thou comest unto Zoar.

12 Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan; and Lot journeyed east: and they separated themselves the one from the other.

13 Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom.

14 But the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly.

15 And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward:

16 For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever.

17 And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered.

18 Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it: for I will give it unto thee.

19 Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the Lord.

A CHICAGO TEACHER'S NOTES ON THE LESSON.

Elias A. Long.

The Nations: Abram in Egypt.

The time of this lesson is commonly reckoned at about B. C. 1918. Chaldea and Mesopotamia, Abram's native place, as well as Assyria, were at this time ruled by an Elamite dynasty. (Chapt. 14: 1, 4.) Egypt is of especial interest from the fact of Abram's recent return from that land. Egypt is supposed to have been ruled at this time by the famous Hyksos or Shepherd-Kings who appear to have been invaders from Canaan and Arabia. For 500 years or more they had held the Egyptians in bondage. Abram evidently needed no interpreter before the reigning king, and this by some is taken as indicating that the king was of Semitic blood like himself.

A Lesson on Moral Choice.

The present lesson is one of the most practical in the Bible. It treats of human choices; and of their significance and influence on the chooser and on others. Shall we, like Abram, make our choice to keep close to God and his altar or like Lot shall we choose to pitch our tent towards worldly Sodom? Each of us, young and old, is called continually to make some such decision. Let us from this lesson learn to discern the consequences of choice whether of companions, of pleasures, of business or any other matter. Let us be warned by Lot's choice, that what may appear "as the garden of the Lord" (V. 10) may turn out to be the very seat of Satan (Rev. 2: 13), and destructive to that which is most precious and eternal. Let us not forget that we are liable to deception in the great decisions of our lives.

V. 1, 2. In Egypt. "Up out of Egypt." Up from the lands of the Nile near the sea-level to the hills of Canaan. The length of Abram's residence in Egypt is unknown. But Egypt brought special temptation to Abram; it was his first altarless experience, for it is not said that he there erected an altar. Abram had yet to learn some lesson about clinging close to God. Fearing for his life, which doubtless was in great peril from the fierce shepherd kings (Chap. 12: 12), he was "overtaken" (Gal. 6: 1) by the sin of making a deceptive statement about his wife, who in fact was his half-sister. Gen. 20: 12. His sin is recorded, but it is not condoned. We should not forget, however, that Abram had been raised in idolatry. The whole of his life was a struggle against unrighteousness, and he conquered and grew in holiness. Let not Abram be judged by our light, but by his. * * * "Abram was very rich." Not as the world to-day counts riches, but as compared to neighboring sheiks. The account in Chap. 14: 23 shows that Abram had a certain aversion to earthly riches, even when they came to him by right. To possess a hundred tents and a thousand each of sheep and goats was, for an Arab sheik, considered rich. See by verses 8-9 the kind of a rich man Abram was. His prosperity certainly did not interfere with his growth as a saint of God.

V. 3, 4. Return to the Altar. "Even to Bethel." Abram's return direct to Bethel is a seeming admission that his Egyptian trip was a mistake. * * * "Place of altar." The altar appears to have been first in his thoughts. He loved it. He would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of his God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. Ps. 84: 10. By means of the altar he proclaimed the one true God to all who were about him. * * * "Call on... Lord." This implies that public worship was reestablished, for Abram now had a numerous camp. It also may indicate a condition of humility and contrition for his acts in Egypt, with a desire for a closer walk with God.

V. 5, 6. Rival Shepherds. "Lot also." Lot, Abram's nephew, had many good traits, but his conduct was too much influenced by the company he kept. When he was near Abram and God's altar he appears to have been safe. Lot's great peril was in not fearing evil surroundings. * * * "Land was not able to bear them." With increasing flocks the shepherds had to spread out; there was a shortage of pasture and water. Prosperity breaks more saints than adversity. Luk. 8: 14.

V. 7. Works of Flesh. "A strife." Prosperity, without spiritual guidance, tended as it often does, to strife about property rights. "Now, the works of the flesh are manifest... variance, emulations, wrath, strife." Gal. 5: 20. Privation could not separate uncle and nephew, but prosperity did. * * * "Canaanite and the Perizzite." Canaanites were descendants of Canaan, the fourth son of Ham. The origin of the Perizzites is obscure. These people are mentioned to show why the vicinity of Bethel was crowded. They must have been pleased to see strife between the new comers. Jas. 3: 16.

V. 8. The Walk of Faith. "Let there be no strife." The true child of faith is always a peacemaker. Abram had never heard of the Sermon on the Mount, with its blessings for the peacemakers and its golden rule, but he had received wisdom from above (Jas. 3: 17) that was "peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated without partiality." This was his guide. * * * "Between me... thee... herdmen." When the voices of the herdmen were raised in strife, Lot began to regard himself as an injured man. How easily quarrel is fomented by others. * * * "We be brethren." Then let us act like brethren, for we need the love and the strength that grows out of union. Abram also felt that he was a light in the heathen world before the Canaanite and Perizzite. Through faith he set his affections on things above. He sought "a city which hath foundations." Col. 3: 2; Heb. 11: 10. Just as we have faith in God's pledge to provide all needful things, it is impossible for us to be greedy and selfish. How is this applicable to those in the church and in the Sunday school?

V. 9. Fruits of the Spirit. "The whole land before thee." Abram now willingly offers to give up his rights for the larger good. To a man of faith in God's exceedingly great and precious promises, nothing in this world is large enough to afford a basis for strife. He that kneels conquers. All things work together for good to them that love God. Rom. 8: 28. * * * "I will go to the right... to the left." Abram walked by faith, not by sight. He was unselfish, generous, and condescending to one younger and less deserving than himself. He had the best of grounds for taking first choice. (1) He was the head of the tribe or clan. (2) To him, not to Lot, the whole land had been promised. (3) Lot went with him (v. 5), not he with Lot. (4) He had been the making of Lot.

V. 10. Walking by Sight. "Lot lifted up his eyes." Lot walked not by faith, but by sight. Seeing the well-watered Jordan valley to the east, it did not take him long to size up its value for his purposes and to make that his choice. * * * "Well watered everywhere." The Jordan wound its way through meadow lands and groves. This river is here mentioned for the first time. * * * "Before... destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah." The reference to these cities would indicate that their location was north of the Dead Sea and easterly from Bethel. * * * "Garden of the Lord." The fame of the paradise of Adam lingers in the memories of the race. * * * "Egypt." The land resembled the fruitful Nile valley in Egypt, the richest and most fertile land then known.

V. 11. A Ruinous Choice. "Then Lot chose." Lot wanted to make money; to do this he was willing to trade on his uncle's generosity by selfishly choosing the best. Common decency and gratitude should have led him to refuse his uncle's liberal offer. The opportunity to grasp a "good thing" was too tempting. With it came visions of wealth, luxury, ease, while, as too often is the case, he minimized the perils of sinful and worldly surroundings. The choice was made perhaps twenty years before Sodom was destroyed. * * * "And journeyed east." It is a sad thought that he journeyed away from God's altar and the influences of the godly. We nowhere read of his erecting an altar to show that he was a follower of God.

V. 12. Moral Risks. "Dwelt in the cities of plain." He dwelt where his choice took him. With eyes set on wealth he risked the moral consequences. * * * "Pitched tent toward Sodom." From disregarding his benefactor Abram and moving away from the altar, his next step was to form associations with the wicked. This he did, not because he really loved wickedness, but evidently because the cities of the plain afforded him a good market. His course of ill-doing was progressive. First he settled toward Sodom. Soon we find him living in his own house within Sodom. Chap. 19: 2. After he had lost all, as recorded in Chap. 14: 12, he again returned to Sodom. At last we see him as a prominent man (Chap. 19: 9), having a place as judge in the gate of Sodom. Chap. 19: 1. Still, it is due to him to say that no stain rests against his personal purity in early life. After a while his moral sense seems to have become blunted. We see by Chap. 19:9-10 that he risked his own life for the sake of the laws of hospitality. He is indeed counted as "righteous," although we would never know as much had not an apostle told us. 2 Pet. 2:8. With others of the ancients Lot is to be judged by his own light, not by ours. For us to keep bad company and to indulge in doubtful pleasures is to pitch our tent toward Sodom. This God has commanded us not to do. 1 Cor. 5:9-11; 2 Thess. 3:6-14; Psa. 1:1; Prov. 1:10-16.

V. 13. Contagious Conditions. "Wicked and sinners exceedingly." Here we have the full truth regarding Lot's peril. He did not hesitate to subject himself and family to moral contagion more hazardous than leprosy or smallpox. He allowed, as so often now is the case, the supposed advantages of time to influence him more than the certainties of eternity; did not sufficiently think of the dangers to his family. He little dreamed that soon his wife would be a victim to the conditions in Sodom and that his daughters would marry men in that wicked city. The causes of the sins of Sodom are stated by the Prophet Ezekiel as "pride, fullness of bread and abundance of idleness," those modern parents of vice. Not ten good men could be found in Sodom, including Lot himself. Gen. 18:32. * * * "Vexed his righteous soul." The sad part of this history is that Lot meant no evil. Personally he had been a man of good intentions and felt secure against the dangers of sin for himself, but as after history shows, he was mocked by his own family and his soul day by day was "vexed with the filthy conversation and unlawful deeds of the wicked"—the very men whom his daughters had married. 2 Pet. 2:7-8. Like many prosperous men in modern times, he was blind to the awful effects of his crime on his own children.

V. 14, 15. Reaping as Sowed. "After that Lot was separated." Of what Lot lost in that separation from Abram, as he and his family reaped the snares of the world, the record is terrible. (1) He lost the company and influence of Abram and of the altar. (2) He lost his property, first by war, then by flame. (3) He ruined his family, his daughters having married Sodomites. Chap. 19:14. (4) Lot was taken prisoner and carried to the east (Chap. 14:11-12), later to be restored by Abram. (5) He became despised and dishonored. Chap. 19:9. (6) He nearly lost his own life by violence in Sodom. Chap. 19:9. (7) He was unable to shield his family from corruption and violence. (8) He suffered torments of mind from the filthy deeds and language of his neighbors and sons-in-law. 2 Pet. 2:7-8; Gen. 19:14. (9) He was overtaken by gross sin. (10) He became the dishonored father of a race that were enemies to God. Chap. 19:37-38. (11) His name sinks out of sight. (12) Instead of obtaining "an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom" (2 Pet. 1:11) he was "saved as through fire." * * * "Lift up now thine eyes." As for Abram, so far from losing anything by his generosity, God gave him assurance that the whole land would be his. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. 5:5. * * * "All the land thou seest." The promise first given at Shechem is now renewed. * * * "To thee will I give it." Abram seemingly got the worst of his bargain with his nephew, and probably he now needed the comforting promise from God to support him against the murmuring of his own shepherds, who may have upbraided him for the liberality shown towards Lot. * * * "Forever." This was a part of the promise not before stated. It shows the greatness of God's promise.

V. 16. Incredible Increases. "Seed as the dust." The Hebrews are numbered by millions today and Abram's spiritual children no man can enumerate. Gal. 3:7-29.

V. 17. Gift Confirmed. "Walk...in length...breadth of it." Lot looked only to the east, making a narrow choice; Abram looked in all directions and made a choice of all that was in sight—for his posterity. Let us endeavor to see the full extent of our promised possessions by the eye of faith. The apostle Paul could do this. Rom. 8:28; 2 Cor. 4:18.

V. 18. The Hebron Altar. "Removed his tent." This was the first act after God had confirmed his promises. * * * "Hebron." A place twenty miles south of Jerusalem. Here Abram made for himself the nearest approach to a home which God permitted him to make in this world. Here he died and was buried. It likewise became the home, and the tomb, of his family in future days. * * * "Built altar." This is the third altar mentioned as having been built by Abram. Wherever he settled he built an altar as a monument to his faith in the true God. Thus all along his pathway he became a light-giver to the world.

FIVE MINUTES' SERMON ON THE GOLDEN TEXT.

By Peter Ainslie.

Call this the golden rule and certainly it is a very happy way of living, but it is harder to work every day actions by it than to work the most difficult problem in geometry by the printed rule. Human actions cannot be added, subtracted, multiplied or divided near so easily as we can figures. Living acts are harder to get into line than dead numbers. We say that such a thing ought to be done a certain way. If it were a sum in arithmetic, a few minutes would decide it and done once it is all right thereafter. But it is not so in life. We may know that this is right and the other is wrong and we may go the right way today, but tomorrow we go in the opposite. The goodness of yesterday is largely undone by the folly of today. We reply by saying, "I meant to do it that way," but the fact that we did it the other way makes it frequently as though we had intended to do it just the way we did. So, after all, human life is hard to set to the correct standard. However, because it is difficult is no reason that we should cease to try, for all things of worth are attained through difficulty.

The rule is very simple. It is this: Everything that you would like people to do to you, you do to others. You appreciate people's thoughtfulness for you, are you as thoughtful of others? You appreciate courtesy and common politeness extended to you. Do you always extend these things to others? You would like for some one to carry your market basket, but would you carry another's basket? You would like for some one to loan you a little money for a few days; would you willingly loan your money to another? You like for people to always speak to you kindly, but do you always speak to others kindly? When you ask a favor of a friend you object to that friend complaining, but do you always keep from complaints when friends ask favors of you? You are perhaps in trouble and you think it strange that people do not come to see you, but do you go quickly to see others when they are in trouble? The world treats us just about the way we treat it. If you love, you will be loved; if you serve, you will have servants. They may not be the same people always and frequently you may be disappointed in misplaced confidence, but love and service will come back to you at some time and in some way, and perhaps from a source that you did not expect. We are our own standards and we must not complain if things go otherwise, but we must first ask, what have I given, what model have I set up? The tides will have brought us what we bid for. Love and serve and see if these things do not come back to you in great measure.

O Father, it is thy strength and we ask for it that we may do for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Lord, let me not be too content
With life in trifling service spent—
Make me aspire!

When days with petty cares are filled,
Let me with fleeting thoughts be thrilled
Of something higher.

—Maltbie D. Babcock.

PRAYER MEETING.

Fred'k F. Grim.

THE BODY OF CHRIST.

Rom. 12: 4, 5. Reference I Cor. 12: 12-31; Col. 3: 15-17.

THE prevailing Jewish conception of society was that of a kingdom; not spiritual and democratic as Jesus proclaimed it, but materialistic with a Hebrew aristocracy and all other peoples as their subjects. Jesus was compelled to use the common class distinctions of his times, but never as their defender; rather to criticize and revolutionize. He gave a new content to their old forms and current phrases, which saved them from desuetude and decay. His purpose was to bring the individual into a new social relationship, with love for God and love for man as a common bond of fellowship; "to put the saved soul back into a saved society for whose salvation he himself had been saved." In both his teaching and his life he maintained the most delicate poise between the individual and the group, recognizing the rights and duties of both and beholding them in their true relationship.

Not An Aggregation but An Organism.

The organized means for bringing in the reign of the kingdom; of peace on earth and good will among men is an ecclesia, a church. Paul with his usual keenness of intellect has represented "the called out" under the figure of the body, with Jesus Christ as the head. If the Church is but an aggregation of individuals, atomistic in its character, as some would have us think, then it is doomed to foreseen and inevitable failure. While Christ saves us as individuals he saves at the same time and of necessity as members of society.

An appreciation of the Church as a structural organic unity is the great need at the present time. In breaking away from ecclesiasticism we are liable to the same danger as were those who rebelled against political despotism. With a recognition of the rights of the individual came the usual perversion through the centuries until in the time of the French revolution we see it in its wildest extreme. Religious anarchy, an intense individualism, which we see at least in many local congregations is no more to be justified than political anarchy.

The mere bringing together of certain kinds of food will not constitute a man; they must be taken into the body, digested and assimilated. So the mere bringing together of certain individuals will not constitute a redeemed society, of which the body of Christ is the visible expression. They must be brought in contact with the New Life, transformed and made to articulate one with another as a part of the organism.

Relation of a Member to the Body

or of an individual to the whole must not be overlooked. We are members of the body of Christ, each having a different office—an untitled office for the most part, but none the less an office—all are one in Christ and members one of another. Consequently one member has no right to do anything that will injure another member. How absurd it would be even to attempt to think of one hand in conflict with the other, or one foot attempting to go in one direction and the other in the opposite. Perchance the foot thinks it has too much to do; it has to bear the whole burden so it refuses to move. The eye becomes proud and refuses to co-operate with the organ of hearing. Suppose that different members of the body take sides; a first-class quarrel ensues and the result is a total destruction of the body. How foolish you say; and so it is. The members of our physical bodies do not do anything of the kind, only members of society, only "church members."

Paul has not failed to remind us that if one member suffers, all must suffer. One member may do much to raise or to lower the spiritual vitality of the entire body.

If Christ but dwell within our hearts by faith; if we recognize that he is the one who should guide and direct us in all things; if all that we do in word or deed be done in his name, then shall we have a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

By Charles Blanchard.

GAINING BY LOSING.

Topic Aug. 4: Ref. Mark 10:28-30. Peter's Question.

PETER'S question is ours, only we cannot say as he did, "Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee." "What shall we have?" It is a fair question. We have a right to ask it. And Jesus has given an explicit answer. "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left houses or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mother, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life."

Many ask "Will it pay to be a Christian?" It is not the highest motive. But I believe, truly, it pays to be a down-right, four-square and face-to-the-front Christian. I don't think it pays to be any other sort. Yes, I believe it pays financially. The really in earnest disciple will rejoice, with the great apostle, to "spend and be spent" for the Gospel's sake; and with Paul can say, "I have all and abound." And again, "I have learned in whatever state I am therein to be content." To have learned this is to be rich, since contentment with Godliness is great gain. And then the one who is genuinely Christian will have less thought of self, will spend less on self, and will have more to give for the cause of Christ. Those who have practiced tithing testify that it pays financially, in the system it begets in keeping accounts, and in the economic habits it cultivates. To be a Christian means to be temperate in all things, and nothing pays so large dividends in money saved as the habit of temperance. So it is not an accident that Christians are ordinarily more prosperous than those who are not Christians, as a class, are better off physically, financially, morally, spiritually. To be sure, many who are not Christians, some who are anti-Christians, are prosperous in business. They fare sumptuously every day. But multitudes—much more than the "submerged tenth"—do not prosper, largely from the lack of habits of temperance and economy which the Gospel instills. Nothing would pay the laboring classes so large dividends on earnings saved, or well spent, as to become actively and practically Christian in character and conduct.

It Costs Something.

I would not have you think otherwise. There is nothing good but costs a good fair figure. The one who will not give, who will not work and save that he may have to give, is simply not Christian. Many break down in the beginning of their Christian life by failing to form fixed habits of systematic giving. Not a few fall away when they find it costs continually to be a Christian and an endeavorer. It costs something—many things—houses, lands, fathers, mothers, wife and children, brothers and sisters; but we gain more in enlarged association—redeemed fellowships—with eternal life!

STUDIES IN MISSIONS.

[Supplementary to the C. E. reading courses.]

WHY I BECAME A MISSIONARY.

By M. D. Adams.

I BECAME a missionary as the consequence of my becoming a subject in the kingdom of Christ. Note that it is subject and not citizen, and kingdom and not republic, democracy or commonwealth. In an earthly government I never want to be anything but a citizen; but in things heavenly I can never be anything more than a loyal subject. Jesus is my king—I am his unworthy subject. His parting order was, "Go ye and make disciples of the nations."

There is no alternative, for loyal hearts, but to obey.

It is the passion of my heart that King Jesus should triumph over all his enemies, and the boundaries of His kingdom be widened to the uttermost parts of the habitation of man. This is desirable not simply for the sake of a hero's dominion, but because of the righteousness of Jesus' reign. The nations of the earth are his. They belong to the travail of his soul. Shall he not have the dominion which he has purchased with his blood? There are thousands of men at the present time, in arms and upon battlefields, and many thousands of new graves have just been made and thousands are maimed for life, and women widowed and children made fatherless, for the sake of the triumph of their sovereign. In this struggle for conquest no price has seemed too high to pay for the end sought. The sacredness of home and country have been violated, and justice and mercy forgotten, and human history stained by the cruelty of men to men, and treasures poured out unstintingly. All this great price has been paid that one country might triumph over another. I too have a king. His crown is the brightest and best of the ages. His dominion is by right unquestionable. His conquest brings no tears of bereavement, no forgetting of justice and mercy, no violation of country and homes; but, on the other hand, blessings unspeakable come from his reign. He has put down infanticide and sutteeism in India. He is dispelling the darkness of idolatry by the light of the worship of the living God. He is destroying the narrow bigotry of caste, and establishing the brotherhood of man. He is ennobling womanhood and saving the childhood of India, and how many rescued from famine can now call him blessed. A transformed India, redeemed from horrors unspeakable, is now being produced by the power of my King. Why should I not become a missionary if thereby I may in any measure hasten the day of his triumph?

I may not stay to see the day
When the great Saviour shall bear sway
And earth shall glitter in the ray
That cometh from above.
But come it fast, or come it slow,
'Twill come at last, I surely know,
And heaven and earth shall feel the glow,
And men shall call it Love.

It has been a conviction of my life that the preaching of the Word was essential to the enlightenment and conversion of the heathen. This Word, I have been taught, is the sword of the Spirit—the seed of the kingdom. With confidence in the vitality of the seed, I became a missionary that I might sow it in the soil of heathen minds.

I also had a conviction that the heathen needed Jesus, and were lost without him. This conviction has now become knowledge absolute; for I now know that men are lost, for time, to God's glorious purpose in creating them; and I do not believe there is any transforming power used in the world to come that will save him for eternity. I therefore became a missionary that men might be saved through Jesus Christ.

While these great truths, the authority of Christ, the triumph of Christ over all his enemies, and the Gospel the divinely appointed means of conquest, and salvation only through Jesus, have been the predominating influence, I also recognize that the missionary spirit among my brethren had much to do in causing me to become a missionary. I remember when this missionary spirit did not exist to any great extent. I have seen and felt its rising tide. It has worked as a transforming leaven. I have now been in India nearly 18 years and am soon to return to America; but not because I would not be a missionary, had I my life anew to choose again, this most blessed calling.

THE QUIET HOUR.

[The International Bible Reading Association Daily Readings.]

By the Rev. Alexander Smellie, M. A.

GOD THE CREATOR OF ALL THINGS

Monday—Genesis 1, 1–12.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."—Genesis 1, 1.

That God is the Creator gives weight to every communication which he makes to me.

Suppose I am still careless about him and opposed to him. He reproves me in his holiness. He condemns me as my righteous Judge. And yet he pities me with all a father's unquenchable compassion. He is my counsellor and my friend. These are the accents in which he addresses me. But how powerful and how moving his voice should be, when I remember that it is my maker, and the maker of all things, who is bidding me turn and live!

Or suppose that I am one of his saints, and yet am disquieted and cast down. But why should I be so? My help comes from the Lord, who made the heavens and the earth. The very things which seem most hostile and most perilous to me have been called into existence by him. Sickness, pain, poverty, distress—they come at his bidding; they are his creatures and his servants. I need not be afraid, whatever alarms or threatens me; he who is my Saviour has formed and can control evil as well as good.

Tuesday—Genesis 1. 14—25.

What sacredness the thought that God is the Creator should stamp on every object in nature!

I go forth amid all the glories and the beauties of the earth, which he has so marvelously framed. He is there; it is with him I walk; in his works I see something of himself. Thus there is a tongue in every breeze; there is a voice in the song of every bird; there is a silent eloquence in every green field and quiet wood. They speak to me about my God. In a measure they reveal and interpret him. He made them. He made them what they are. He made them for me. Thus the sights and sounds around me should be means of grace.

And, if he is Creator, I must be careful how I use nature's gifts and bounties. The wheat, the corn, the vine, this piece of money, this brother or sister. He formed them, and formed them for gracious and holy ends. My hand should be arrested, my mouth should be shut, my spirit should shrink back in awe, if ever I am tempted to abuse and wrong them. Let me tell myself: "They came from God, and they are meant to be employed for God; for his pleasure they are, and were created." I move through a world mystic, wonderful.

Wednesday—Genesis 1. 26—2, 3.

Man is the crowning work of God. It only accentuates the miserable issues of my sin, to think that the Father intended me to be the very climax of his creation.

How guilty I am! I was made, not to be a slave, not to be a servant, but to be the dear and cherished son of God. But I have taken my own way, and trampled his wishes under foot, and broken his bands asunder. How heinous and black is my rebellion! "How sharper than a serpent's tooth" for him to have so thankless a child!

And how degraded I am! I was meant to carry God's lineaments on my face, God's knowledge and righteousness and holiness in my character. But I am altered terribly for the worse. I have wandered far enough away from Paradise. The fine gold has become very dim. The image of the Lord has vanished.

And how wretched I am! I have banished myself from God, who is my home. I am an exile in a dreary foreign land. I can find nothing to compensate me for what I have forfeited. God made me for himself, and I am restless without him—restless and weary and ill at ease.

Thursday—Psalm 8.

I was made to have dominion over the works of God's hands; over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth.

It looks liker a poet's dream than a narrative of what once was actually true. In the savage parts of the world my fellows today maintain a desperate struggle with wild beasts and with the unfriendliness of nature. I, too, am often made to feel that nature is too strong for me. What can I do, face to face with the tempest, with the earthquake, with the icepack, with the tropical sun? I am at their mercy; I am helpless in their hands. It may be an ignorant triumph which they win over me, but it is a triumph all the same.

Ah, but if I trust in Jesus Christ, I shall have the ancient government restored. Meantime I have the assurance that all earthly things are working together for my good; and mine is the promise that, in the end of the day, I shall sit down with him on his throne.

Friday—Isaiah 40. 21—31.

If God is Creator of all, how foolish and how sinful is idolatry! Let me have no idols in my heart, no substitutes for him who fashioned me and who deserves alone my loyalty and my worship.

If God is Creator of all, how vain and how ineffectual is the pride of man! The strongest cannot contend with him. The wisest cannot outwit him. The loftiest must bend and bow to him. He "bringeth the princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity." Let me cast away every weapon of rebellion.

If God is Creator of all, how safe and how happy is the heart that leans upon him! "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; they shall walk, and not faint." Let mine be this consummate security and sublimest joy.

Saturday—Job 38. 1—14.

Humility should be one grace which springs up in my heart, as I think of the majesty and might of my God. Where was I when he laid the foundations of the earth, when he determined the measures thereof and stretched the line upon it? And who am I that, face to face with him, I should exalt and uplift myself? Mine should be the meek and quiet spirit, which takes the lowest room, which confesses that its very victories are impotence, and its very righteousnesses filthy rags, which acknowledges that I can never walk, or work, or war alone.

But trustfulness should be another grace which flourishes in the soil of my heart, as I think of the greatness and glory of my God. He who shuts up the sea with doors, he who stays its proud waves, he who commands the morning and causes the dayspring to know its place—he is my Father, my Saviour, my Comforter. Since he is my Shepherd, I will fear no evil, I will go from strength to strength.

Sunday—Psalm 104. 1—12, 19—24.

Let me walk through the world with an open eye. So many there are who never see its wonders and its delights. They live in a palace furnished with a variety of richness, a magnificence, a sweetness, which throw Nero's Golden House on the Palatine, and Boabdil's Alhambra in Granada, altogether in the shade. But they are blind to its marvels. I would have my vision purged and enlarged.

And let me walk through the world with a believing mind. Some there are who are atheistic and sceptical in the universe which carries the print of God's finger everywhere—on each grain of sand, each blade of grass, each beam of light. They are as senseless as one who should go through a factory, with its looms and wheels, and should say, "I do not believe in man." I would be wiser than they.

And let me walk through the world with a joyous soul. Too many there are who are filled with uncertainties, misgivings, and glooms, doubtful in heart and sad in face. But God feeds the young lions which roar after their prey, and he will not forget either my temporal or my spiritual needs, he will give me richly all things to enjoy. So I would be strong and of good courage.

General Church News

A SIMULTANEOUS MISSION IN THE UNITED STATES.

Plans are now being made for a united effort, at the beginning of next year, for the presentation of the gospel by special services in as many of the cities of this country as possible. The movement is similar to that in England last winter and has been endorsed by leading ministers. Excitement is to be avoided.

One man will have charge of the meetings in one city and with him will be associated a prudential committee. Each city will be divided into districts and a church well located in the center of that district will be chosen. Local organizations will be perfected in each of these districts. For evangelists, some of the city ministers and others from neighboring cities will be selected in order to save expense and also to emphasize the belief—a late one—that there are ministers in local pastorates everywhere who can do quite as good evangelistic work as the professionals. For the general work there will be a few well-known evangelists. Among them will be Rev. Dr. G. T. Purves, Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, Rev. R. H. Conwell and some are coming from England, among them Rev. John McNeill.

So far Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists and the Disciples of Christ have come into the plan. Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit, and a number of smaller cities are at this date included in the plans. The meetings will be held in the churches and not in halls as in England, the conditions being different there, owing to the distinction between the churches of the Established Church and those of the Dissenters.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL CO-OPERATION IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

In southern India there is an association which includes in its membership 350 missionaries, representing all the different missionary societies working in that land. Much advantage accrues therefrom, as in the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom and united action can accomplish that which would not be feasible for one society working independently. Opportunity is afforded also for interchange of information and comparison of methods. Committees are appointed to do certain work and make particular investigations which will be of value to all the missionaries, as, for instance, the preparing of a common statistical form that the returns of the different missions may have a uniform basis, inquiries into the disabilities to which native Christians are subject under the laws, different laws being in force for Hindus, Mohammedans and Christians, regarding marriage, divorce, guardianship of children, use of wells, tanks, etc.

A board of management composed of representatives from several different missions, conducts examinations of new missionaries in the Tamil and Telugu languages and in centres more than 600 miles apart, which are found to be more impartial and satisfactory than when conducted by one mission alone.

There is also a board of arbitration to assist in settling differences between missions or individuals representing different missions. Such names as those of Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, Dr. William Miller of the Madras Christian college, Rev. E. Sell of the Church Missionary society, and Dr. McLaurin of the Baptists are guarantee of satisfactory results.

Annual missionary conferences are conducted by the association while the missionaries are recruiting during the hot season. Practical topics and methods are discussed, and the experiences exchanged are a fruitful source of helpful suggestion and inspiration. The days are well nigh past when men and women on foreign fields work independently and in a spirit of rivalry with Christians of other names than their own. They have grown wiser—shall we not say, they have learned more of the spirit of the Christ. "One is your Master and all ye are brethren."

CHICAGO AND VICINITY

The Sunday school of Chicago Avenue church has a membership of about 1,900. Last year they contributed nearly $900 for the famine sufferers in India besides supporting twelve boys in mission schools, one Bible reader and three other missionaries.

The Fourth Baptist church has now reduced its debt from $25,000 to $12,500. Seventy-five members have been received since October 1. Dr. Kittredge Wheeler is the pastor.

On Sunday, July 7, the Avondale Presbyterian church, Rev. C. B. Beckes pastor, observed "Honor Day," at which time a class of seven graduated in the first series of the "Loyal Sunday-school Army Normal Work." There were two hundred graduates in this new scheme of Sunday-school endeavor in the state of Illinois this year, and this was the only class in Cook county.

The Episcopal diocese of Chicago is taking its place among those conspicuous for the staying powers of its clergy; and thus doing its share in removing the stigma of changeableness. Of the ninety-six clergymen upward of forty have been in this diocese ten years or more; sixteen for fifteen years or more; six from thirty to thirty-five years; while three have for more than forty years been canonically connected with Illinois. And yet the Rev. E. A. Larrabee, ordained twenty-five years ago this month, in the first year of Bishop McLaren's episcopate, is the only clergyman who has been a city rector for fifteen years.

Ingleside Avenue Methodist church contemplates erecting a $10,000 building. Rev. A. D. Traveller preached in the old church Sunday morning and evening, July 14, and raised $5,000 toward the new edifice.

Rev. D. K. Campbell has completed his first year as acting pastor of the South Chicago Presbyterian church. Thirty-nine have been received into church fellowship, twenty-six on profession of faith. During the year provision has been made for a debt of $1,700, the Presbyterian League coming to the rescue. Plans are made to raise the basement floor and make the rooms acceptable for use, at a cost of several hundred dollars.

Rev. Roy B. Guild of the Leavitt Street Congregational church is preaching at the East Los Angeles (Cal.) church, having arranged a six weeks' exchange with Rev. Chester P. Dorland, pastor of the last named church.

Emmanuel Methodist Episcopal church, Oak Park, will dedicate its new place of worship August 11. Meanwhile the railroad station at S. 44th ave., and W. Randolph st., is being used for services. Rev. John G. Armstrong is the pastor.

GOOD CURE.

Nature's Way to Regain Health.

A man may try all sorts of drugs to help him get well, but after all the "food cure" is the method intended by Nature.

Anyone can prove the efficacy of the food cure by making use of the following breakfast each morning for fifteen or twenty days.

A dish containing not more than four heaping teaspoonsfuls of Grape-Nuts, enough good, rich cream to go with them, some raw or cooked fruit, not more than two slices of entire wheat bread, and not more than one cup of Postum Food Coffee, to be sipped, not drunk hurriedly. Let this suffice for the breakfast.

Let one meal a day consist of an abundance of good meat, potato and one other vegetable.

This method will quickly prove the value of selection of the right kind of food to rebuild the body and replace the lost tissue which is destroyed every day and must be made up, or disease of some sort enters in. This is an age of specialists and the above suggestions are given by a specialist in food values, dietetics and hygiene.

Dr. Manley S. Hard of Chicago has been making a tour of Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and New York in the interest of the Methodist Church Extension society. He has received enough money to build five churches on the western frontier.

The Washington Park Congregational church, Michigan boulevard and Fifty-fourth street, Rev. Frank D. Burhans, pastor, is heading a movement for the establishment of the first church for colored Congregationalists in Chicago. The first meeting was held in the auditorium of the Washington Park church Sunday afternoon, July 21.

The forty-second annual camp meeting of the Chicago, Chicago Northern, and Chicago Western districts of the Methodist Episcopal church opened at Desplains July 17 and will continue until Monday, July 29. The presiding elders of the three districts—Rev. Drs. H. G. Jackson, C. E. Mandeville, and J. M. Caldwell, with D. W. Potter, evangelist, have general charge of the religious services. Bishops Merrill and Thoburn and other noted preachers take part.

The Evanston Avenue Methodist Episcopal church celebrated its tenth anniversary, July 16. A thank offering of $500 was raised as a nucleus for a $16,000 fund with which to build an addition.
