A WEEKLY FAMILY AND RELIGIOUS JOURNAL

Vol. xxxviii. July 4, 1901. No. 27

Unless the altruistic element is kept prominent in all teaching, education will degenerate into a private luxury, or a mere instrument of power for personal ends. The final test of the value of every educational system and of the character of every college and university, is the quality and quantity of service rendered to the public, to the world, by those who receive its training. Impress upon the student the nobility of labor, the royalty of service; that he received in order that he may impart; that as he imparts to others so shall he receive; that his education by the State and by the Church places him under the highest obligations to serve his country and his God. This is Christian Education. It is the world's supreme need.

HIRAM COLLEGE

A School for Both Sexes, Located at Hiram,
Portage County, Ohio, Thirty-Five
Miles Southeast of Cleveland.

A SPLENDID LOCATION.

Beautiful Scenery, Pure Air, Excellent Water: An ideal college town, modern, up-to-date, lighted by electricity and having a fine system of water-works.

GOOD BUILDINGS.

The buildings are comparatively new:
(1) Main building commodious and convenient in all its appointments.
(2) A large and beautiful Christian Association building, erected five years ago at a cost of $30,000.
(3) Two excellent ladies' halls well furnished and supplied with modern conveniences.
(4) Music building for the accommodation of our large and growing music department.
(5) A library and conservatory building just completed, the gift of Abram Teachout, and a Warener & Swazey's nine-inch telescope, costing approximately $5,000, the gift of Lathrop Cooley.

LIBRARIES AND APPARATUS.

(1) A large and well equipped chemical laboratory.
(2) Two other laboratories, Physical and Physiological.
(3) A well selected library. Large addition to this library will soon be made.
(4) A good museum.
(5) A large and well furnished gymnasium.

COURSES OF STUDY.

(1) Four Classical Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical.
(2) Four Scientific Courses—Regular, Philosophical, Legal and Medical.
(3) Four Literary Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical.
(4) Five Special Courses—Music, Oratorical, Business, Art, Teachers'.
(5) Special elective course in any variety.

CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS.

We have a strong body of Professors and Instructors, twenty-four in number. They are, for the most part, specialists of large attainments, and are thoroughly abreast of the times.

LITERARY SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS.

Hiram has:
(1) Five literary societies of unusual strength and vigor.
(2) Two Christian Associations that contribute much to the religious life of the school.
(3) Several departmental and social organizations of special interest and value.

EXPENSES.

Expenses are very moderate. Good table board can be had for $2.00 per week; club board for $1.25 to $1.75. Room rent for fifty cents to one dollar. Tuition for four to five dollars per term for each study. The three leading items of board, tuition and room rent may be reduced to about $125.00 for the college year of 38 weeks.

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

Under the auspices of the T. W. Phillips' Loan Fund an industrial department is being established that will assist about fifty young people. It is believed that students admitted to this department may reduce the entire expense of the year, including tuition, to about $90.00, and those who do considerable work may reduce expenses to sixty or seventy dollars. Send for catalogue to

A LESSON IN VALUES.

DOLLAR for dollar, pound for pound, there is more in Ivory Soap than in any household soap. It is easy to find a cheap soap; but to find purity and low price in a single soap is not easy. They combine in Ivory Soap. You can afford to use it in the laundry; you can not afford not to use it elsewhere. It is vegetable-oil soap, in the cheapest form in which it can be procured. You pay nothing for a fancy box, wrapper or perfume. It is all in the soap! It floats.

Civil Government in the Philippines. An order has been issued by the Secretary of War by which the executive authority in the Philippines will be transferred on July 4 from the military governor to a civil governor, and Judge Taft has been appointed to the latter office. It is provided, however, that in those portions of the archipelago in which it shall still be necessary to use troops for the preservation of order, the authority of the military commander shall still be supreme. Gen. Chaffee, who has been in command of the United States troops in China, will have the military command in the Philippines. This order for the establishment of civil government does not indicate that the government heretofore has been entirely military, for the Philippine Commission has for many months been busy organizing local civil governments in various provinces. Up to this time, however, these local governments, though organized by the commission, have been subject to the authority of the military governor. The change which will occur on July 4 has reference to the executive head of the insular government rather than to the provincial governments with which the natives will come most into contact. The latter are already civil.

Volunteers Discharged.

On June 30 four volunteer regiments which had landed a few days before at San Francisco from Manila were paid off and discharged, and the following day three more regiments were discharged. These were the last of the volunteers whose term of enlistment expired July 1. It has been a work of no small magnitude to recruit the regular army as authorized by the army bill, substitute regulars for volunteers in the Philippines and bring the latter back to this country in time to be discharged on the very day when their enlistment expired. It was freely predicted some months ago that it would prove not only difficult, but impossible to accomplish this, and the War Department is entitled to credit for its success. There are now about 40,000 regulars in the Philippines. It is reported that about 500 soldiers who were discharged preferred to receive their travel pay and remain at Manila where they will engage in business. Major General W. R. Shafter has reached the age limit and has gone on the retired list. The department of California of which he was in command has been transferred to Major General S. B. M. Young.

Gen. Chaffee's Report.

The State Department has received Gen. Chaffee's report of the American military operations in China and has made part of it public. The most interesting part is that relating to the looting by foreign troops and to the action of the missionaries in securing indemnity for murdered converts and their property. According to this report, the military operations must have been practically futile as an attempt at punishing the guilty Boxers, for natives were in many cases shot down promiscuously and if here and there a guilty man suffered with the innocent, it was only by chance. The report suggests more strongly than ever that, in regard to the military operations in China during the past year, the Powers would do well to unite in the general confession: "We have done those things which we ought not to have done and we have left undone those things which we ought to have done." The American soldiers are given credit for being as good as the best in refraining from looting, and wherever they were guilty it was in disobedience of their officers' commands. The Chinese are said to have shown less fear of the Japanese than of any other soldiers. Gen. Chaffee's account of the collection of missionary indemnities, especially Rev. Mr.

Tewksbury's activities in that direction, will perhaps stir up a discussion similar to that precipitated by Mark Twain's criticism. If so, the discussion will now be based on something more definite and reliable than the long-distance guesses of a humorist. Gen. Chaffee evidently considers that the action of the missionaries in collecting indemnities was not wise. But he himself granted them a guard of American soldiers when they went about the work, and his specifications, in so far as published, do not indicate that they did anything deserving of serious criticism.

The Allied Third Party.

At a meeting held in Kansas City last week a movement was set on foot looking to the organization of a new political party under the title "The Allied Third Party." It may be considered as essentially an offshoot of the Democracy and, as its name indicates, it hopes to gather together and unite in the bonds of peace several elements which of late have not been co-operating with conspicuous cordiality. The moving spirit of the organization is Mr. Meriwether, recently candidate for mayor of St. Louis on an independent municipal ownership ticket, and one of the cardinal points in the new party's platform is a declaration in favor of public ownership of natural monopolies. Besides this, it calls for an income tax, taxation of railroad franchises, an honest election law—which means either a radical modification of the Nesbit Law or a substitute for it—and several other things which will strike the average honest citizen as being desirable. To what extent this new movement will spread and what effect it will have on the Democratic party, from which it will probably draw most of its support, is still uncertain. Some Bryan Democrats have been prominent in starting the movement, but Mr. Bryan himself declares that he has nothing to do with it. The Democratic organization looks with no favor on the new party, realizing that in so far as it secures adherents it will divide the Democratic forces and increase the probabilities of Republican success. Nevertheless, the new party stands for some sound ideas, as we believe, which if soberly advocated will win the approval of thinking men. Whether the personnel of the new Allied Third Party is competent to give this movement the sane and statesmanlike leadership which it requires, is another question.

Forest Park as a World's Fair Site.

The directors of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company have unanimously chosen the western half of Forest Park as a site for the St. Louis World's Fair of 1903, and this choice has been ratified by the government commissioners. It is little wonder that this selection was unanimously made, for there could scarcely be found in the country a more desirable place in which to build a world's fair. The only objection that has been suggested is that the Fair may permanently mar this part of the park. 668 acres are included in the tract which can be devoted to the Fair and this area can easily be doubled by the purchase of available land to the north, south and west if desired. After this western half of the park has been made into a ground for the Fair, there will still remain 700 acres in the eastern half, which is as much as the city could well use for park purposes. Forest Park is at present the second largest city park in this country, being surpassed in area only by Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. The western part of it is unbroken and unimproved forest which, however beautiful, is rarely visited by those who most need such recreation grounds. If, in planning the buildings, as many of the trees are saved as possible, the Exposition can be given a unique beauty in this respect and can be saved from the aching glare which usually characterizes expositions, and the future usefulness and beauty of the park will not be interfered with.

Boer Reverses. During the last few days more detailed reports have been coming in of the military operations in South Africa during the past month. Most of the newspaper correspondents left the field of war some months ago when it was believed that the war was over and news since then has been slow and scanty. During June there have been a number of minor British victories which in the aggregate are of considerable importance. The invasion of Cape Colony by a few bands of Boers and the rising of a few of the Cape Dutch led to no serious results. A considerable part of Gen. DeWet's ammunition and stores has recently been captured and it is believed that there is scarcely enough forage left in the country for even 17,000 scattered Boer soldiers to live upon. The general trend of the war during the past month seems distinctly in favor of the British. But there have been no victories of sufficient magnitude to silence the pro-Boers at home. The fact that the war is still costing $6,000,000 a week handicaps every effort to win over the Liberals to the support of the government. Lord Milner's stay in England is about at an end and he will soon return to the administration of affairs at the Cape.

An Automobile Race. France and Germany have recently been intensely interested in the automobile race from Paris to Berlin and, strangely enough, this international sporting event has been the occasion of the first exhibition of real cordiality between these two countries since the Franco-Prussian war, thirty years ago. When the crowds gathered to witness the finish, the tri-color was displayed in the Kaiser's capital intertwined with the German ensign—a sight which had not been witnessed before since the new German Empire came into existence at the fall of Paris. The race was admirably arranged. The several hundred contestants were started from Paris early Thursday morning, not in a bunch, which would have rendered accidents inevitable and speed slow, but at intervals of two minutes. The course, which is 1,200 kilometers or 744 miles in length, was divided into three sections, the points of division being Aix-la-Chapelle and Hanover. Each section was made a day's run. The time of each contestant's starting and arrival was taken, and the winner of the race was not necessarily the first to arrive in Berlin, but the one who covered the entire distance in the shortest time of actual travel. The race was won by Fournier, a Frenchman, and the next four places were also taken by Frenchmen, but the French for once were generously cheered in Berlin. The reports which have been received do not indicate the exact time in which the winning machine made the distance, but on the first two days an average of more than thirty miles an hour was maintained for nine hours at a time. This, considering the necessary delays in passing towns and cities, is a remarkable record, and it will help to show the world the possibilities of the automobile when used in connection with such roads as the French and Germans know how to make.

Senatorial Patriotism. A shining example of the style and degree of patriotism which we may expect to see exhibited by men who buy their way into the United States Senate, is seen in the case of the land frauds charged against Senator Clark, of Montana. The Department of the Interior has been investigating the case for several weeks and has collected testimony which is apparently conclusive to prove that the millionaire senator has fraudulently acquired title to 14,000 acres of timber land in his state. The laws of the United States provide that any person may take up a claim of 160 acres of timber land by paying $2.50 an acre, but that the title shall revert to the United States in case any person directly or indirectly secures more than one hundred and sixty acres. The law aims to make it possible for poor men to secure homes, not to minister to the greed of rich men. The evidence now in hand indicates that Senator Clark, acting through agents who were in his employ, had men to take up timber claims for him to the amount of about 14,000 acres. The United States grand jury has brought in indictments against 104 of Clark's men and it is probable that Clark will lose both the land and the money that he paid for it. We do not know whether he will be liable to any further punishment than this, but we hope that he will. It is bad enough for any citizen to steal from his own government, but for an immensely wealthy man, occupying a seat in the highest legislative body, to take fraudulent advantage of an act passed in the interest of the home-seeking poor, is a despicable act not less contemptible than treason. We bear in mind the fact that Mr. Clark has not been legally convicted of this fraud and withhold further opinions on the subject until the evidence is all in. In any court, however, the previous character of the accused is considered in determining the probability of guilt, and Senator Clark's is bad.

Li Hung Chang has issued a proclamation that the Chinese court will return to Peking as soon as the foreign troops have all gone. Empress An prefers to fix the capital in Ho-nan province.

Brevities. It is reported that oil has been discovered at Red Fork, I. T., in quantity and quality which may make it an important oil field. Not enough wells have been sunk as yet to determine the real value of the discovery.

The Louisiana Purchase Exposition has a building at the Pan-American. It will be dedicated July 2, with many prominent westerners in attendance.

Speaker Henderson is now in England and has been enjoying the hospitality of London's highest circles. He was cordially received by King Edward at Marlborough House.

Gen. Gomez is making a visit at Washington. He assures all inquirers that his presence in this country has no political significance, and that his only purpose in coming is to rest, visit his friends and attend to his private affairs.

King Edward's coronation is to occur in June of next year. The King did not give out this announcement to the reporters in the regular twentieth century fashion, but had it announced by fantastically attired heralds at St. James' Palace, Temple Bar and the Royal Exchange.

It is reported that there will be a great shortage in the European wheat crop this year, and the American crop is estimated at 700,000,000 bushels or about forty per cent. above the average in recent years. The time is not auspicious for a general European combination against American commerce.

J. Pierpont Morgan has given a million dollars to Harvard University for new buildings for its medical school. Yale's bicentennial alumni fund of $2,000,000 has been completed. At the commencement of Brown University, President Faunce announced the completion of the $2,000,000 fund which was begun three years ago.

The recent suggestion that the Hawaiian Islands be made a part of California and so be admitted to the privileges of statehood without giving them separate representation in the Senate, does not meet with approval among the Hawaiians. Delegate Wilcox has declared his intention to introduce at the next Congress a bill for the admission of Hawaii to statehood.

M. Waldeck-Rousseau's anti-Catholic bill as amended by the Senate has passed the French Chamber of Deputies by a vote of 313 to 249 and is now awaiting the signature of President Loubet. The bill proposes to limit the right of certain classes of religious organizations to hold property, and its result will be practically to break up the monasteries in France.

The St. Louis City Council has passed over the mayor's veto bills providing for the installation of municipal lighting plants to light the city buildings. The present contract with the Electric Lighting Company expires August 1 and the Mayor's reason for vetoing the bill was that there was not time for the city to put in a lighting plant before that date. It would perhaps be well to appeal to the company to grant an extension of time. If the lighting of the city buildings can be done more satisfactorily and economically by the city itself than by a private company, the question will inevitably rise whether the extension of the arrangement throughout the city might not be equally desirable.

Patriotism and Education.

In blending our Fourth of July and our Educational number in one, we aim to signify our conception of the very close and intimate relation which must ever exist between patriotism and education. In this we are only acting upon a principle recognized by our government from its foundation. Public enlightenment has always been understood as an essential condition of maintaining our present form of government. This is implied in our free public school system, which can be justified only on the ground that self-government must rest on the intelligence of the people. It is obvious that whenever and wherever "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," the governed must have intelligence enough to know what to give their "consent" to, and from what they should withhold it. Otherwise self-government must prove a failure.

One hundred and twenty-five years ago to-day, there was born on this new continent a new experiment in government, based on an entirely new conception of the inherent rights of man. Hitherto governments were based on the idea that the power to rule and the right to rule belonged to kings, or to an elect few at the summit of society, who might confer such power and such liberty upon the people below them as they felt to be safe, or as would not interfere with their royal or inherited prerogatives. But this new government was based on a new conception of man, and was "dedicated to the proposition" that "all men are created free and equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." This reversed the idea of the source of power and revolutionized the whole conception of government. In this new experiment the power belongs to the people, and whomsoever they choose to exercise the functions of government are placed in official positions for a limited time, and to them are given such powers and prerogatives as the people deem wise and best for the public welfare. The people are the rulers and all legislative, executive and judicial officers are their servants to devise and carry out such measures as are deemed necessary to promote the public good. The Old World looked on in amazement at this bold and revolutionary attempt to establish a government "of the people, for the people and by the people." Kings, emperors, czars felt their thrones tremble beneath them. What if this democracy of the Western World should become contagious and spread over Europe.

But these Old World rulers predicted an early failure of this effort at self-government. So far their prophecies have not been fulfilled. Our Ship of State has sailed over troubled seas, has outridden many severe storms and to-day she seems stronger and stancher than when she was first launched. There have been times in our history when the hearts of the strongest have been oppressed with the sense of danger and with fear as to the future. Never was this sense of thickening peril so prevalent as during the dark but heroic days of our own civil war, when the states which had stood together to win their independence were being rent asunder by the force of internal strife. But out of all these troubles the God of nations has brought us, a united people, wiser and stronger, let us hope, by the experiences of the past, and better able to cope with the present and future perils. The great Republic of the West is only in its youth yet and has recently entered upon a wider career, a policy not without its dangers, but fraught also with mighty possibilities of good for the world.

The supreme danger to this young and mighty nation, already extending its lines of influence, of commerce, of education and government to distant lands and peoples, is materialism—an absorption in material power and prosperity to the neglect of those higher things which are essential to the life of nations as of individuals. It is just here that education, in its best sense, has its highest value, and teaching its supreme function. It is education that breaks the bonds of materialism and opens the mind to new worlds of interest and to higher ideals of life. It is safe to say that without the influence of the common schools and of the colleges and universities in diffusing knowledge, in training and developing the mind and in awakening and fostering the higher aspirations of the soul, our free institutions would long since have perished from the earth. "Where there is lack of vision the people perish," and all good things languish. It is the province of education to furnish men of both mental and moral vision, and to supply that wise and capable leadership which, in a popular government like ours, is essential to perpetuity and progress.

Let us lay this old truth on the minds and hearts of all educators with renewed emphasis: Unless the altruistic element is kept prominent in all your teaching, education is in danger of degenerating into a private luxury, or into a mere instrument of power for personal ends. The final test of the value of every educational system, and of the character of every college and university is the quality and quantity of service rendered to the public, to the world, by those who receive its training. Impress upon the student the nobility of labor, the royalty of service; that he receives in order that he may impart; that as he imparts to others so shall he receive; that his education by the State and by the Church places him under the highest obligations to serve his country and his God. This is Christian education. It is the world's supreme need.

The Recent Graduate.

The mother-in-law joke, having already served its generation faithfully and too long, has been relegated to the limbo of cast-off witticisms; but the annual June joke, aimed at the inexperience and self-esteem of the recent college graduate, still flourishes as often as the season of commencements recurs. For example:

"All hail the recent graduate
With spick and span degree
Who tells the solemn sad old earth
Just what he ought to be."

Perhaps the possessor of a brand-new college degree is sometimes—or even generally—a little too sure that he knows just what is the matter with the world and just what it needs to set it right. But it is not in evidence that he is any more confident of his opinions than is the self-made man, or even the man who hopes to be able to call himself a self-made man when he has finished the job.

No, the distinguishing feature of the new graduate is not over-confidence in his own opinions as against every other man's, for he has learned in college, what the self-made man sometimes never finds out, that there are masters who know more than he. He is marked rather by a splendid optimism which leads him to believe that, however far astray the world may have gone, it is perfectly willing to be set right by any one who has a helpful suggestion to make. The rest of us are not less certain of the correctness of our ideas, but we have learned by hard knocks that the more this stupid old world needs our advice, the less is it ready to take it. And so, for fear of a rebuff, we shut up within ourselves the counsel which might be helpful, while the new graduate, who as yet knows but little of rebuffs and differs from us rather in hopefulness than in self-esteem, takes the world into his confidence, tells it what he thinks it ought to be and do—and gets himself laughed at.

But is the joke on him? Are we happier or more useful for having learned how reluctant the world is to be reformed and for having lapsed from enthusiasm into cynicism? There is much child-nature in us all and when the man who has "seen life" tells the newly fledged collegian to wait until he has had as much experience as he has and then he will know what an incorrigible world this really is, it suggests the awful warnings which the big boys always give to the little boys. A fourth-grade school-boy meets a third-grade school-boy and, in reply to a remark by the latter that he likes school, says, "You just wait until you get to long division and you'll be sorry you ever started." And the boy in the next higher grade warns the fourth-grade boy of the terrors of partial payments and greatest common divisor. There is nothing for the small boy to do but just wait and keep as much of his enthusiasm as he can.

It is lucky for our world that the colleges are pouring out every year a few thousand youths who have arrived at man's and woman's estate without having lost faith in the world and in their ideals. They are inexperienced, to be sure, but there is plenty of time to gain experience. They will be gaining experience all their lives. And besides, the life which they have been living in college, while it is different from the life of market and shop and office, is real life, and has brought them into contact with men of real flesh and blood. So they are not always so destitute of the essence of human experience as one might suppose.

The typical commencement "oration" too, is often subjected to undeserved ridicule. Its sweeping generalities about the progress of civilization and the destinies of nations have an unsubstantial ring and seem to lack relevancy. But think of the occasion. The first prerequisite for successful oratory is a fitting occasion. Even the eloquence of Webster would have been of a different quality if, when he rose to speak, it had been not to play a part in an intensely dramatic situation, but to exhibit to an audience of admiring friends and relatives how well "our Dan'l" could speak. A commencement where the graduates are to deliver addresses is an occasion which fosters self-consciousness. It is the most transparent fiction to suppose that the audience is for a moment interested in the themes. In such a situation, the worst of all handicaps to a speaker, it is a wonder that the graduates speak as well as they do and they deserve more credit than they generally get.

So let us have done with our ancient jests at the new graduate and his self-esteem. He thinks no more of himself than you do of yourself and, if his optimism is greater than yours, it will be more profitable to borrow some of it than to ridicule it.

How To Be Happy Though Hot.

A writer in a current magazine warns the man or woman who is going for a summer vacation not to be a "porcher"—by which expressive term is meant one of those individuals who establish themselves on the porch of a summer hotel and never do anything more vigorous than swing in a hammock or impart a gentle and soothing motion to a rocking chair. It is good advice for the person who stays at home as well as for the one who goes to a resort. No occupation is so uncomfortable as a direct and deliberate attempt to be comfortable. Nothing is so tiresome as an effort to rest without doing anything else. No work is so hot as the labor of trying to keep cool.

Comfort, rest and coolness, those three essentials of a satisfactory vacation, are best attained, like true happiness, by indirect pursuit. Forget about them and do something else. Get interested in something, indoors or out, which is different from the things in which you are usually interested, and pursue this new interest as keenly as if your livelihood depended upon it, yet with no more anxiety than if it were a matter of no consequence.

The chief advantage of this prescription for hot-weather happiness—and it is equally applicable to any season—is that it does not require the taking of an expensive or pretentious vacation. It can be applied in your own town as well as at a seaside or mountain resort. There are few of us who can not find new objects of interest without going far afield, and often without going outside of our own shops and offices. If a boy who works in a shoe-factory, for example, should take it into his head to be really interested in the processes of shoe-manufacture and should try to learn all he could about leather and shoe machinery, he would find more relief from the heat in this new interest than in an electric fan. Incidentally, he would be making himself a more valuable, because more intelligent, workman, and would be fitting himself for a higher position at better pay; but far more important is the fact that he would find in his work a happiness which is better than either comfort or pay, because he would be interested in it.

There is a world of difference between interest and anxiety, and blessed is the man who has learned to make the distinction. He who can be interested in something without being anxious about it, has the proper start for a wholesome vacation whether at home or abroad. The "porcher" is a languid dawdler upon whom the summer ennui has gotten so firm a hold that even a yacht race cannot quicken his pulse or brighten his eye. He lacks a stimulating interest in things that are refreshing. At the opposite extreme in temperament is the man who takes his amusements as seriously as he takes his medicines, and if he gets two holes behind in a game of golf is in the same state of nervous collapse as if he were caught "short" in a corner in wheat. He has interest, but it is of that morbid and unbalanced sort which assigns a fictitious value to trivialities, and he agonizes where he should recreate. For neither of these unfortunates is the way open to a comfortable vacation—especially in hot weather. Now is the time of triumph for the mind which can be interested but not anxious, and placid but not stagnant. He who has learned this secret will know how to be happy though hot.

The Book That Sells.

It may be assumed that at least three out of five of the readers of this paper have it in mind to write a book some time; and in the case of the other two it is not improbable that such an ambition slumbers in the limbo of unborn purposes, not yet having crossed the threshold of consciousness and emerged into the light as a recognized plan. The vast sales of recent popular books—one hundred thousand as a first edition, four hundred thousand in six months, and similarly incomprehensible figures in limitless series—have given to the passion for literary productiveness a stimulus greater than it has ever known before. The book-making impulse was strong enough even in the olden days when records were scratched in wedge-shaped characters on clay tablets with carving tools; when a library looked like a brick-yard, and when a literary work was not expected to circulate to the author's profit. How much more do men write books now that there is money in the business. But, alas! wherever money may be made, there money may also be lost. Large possibilities in one direction are usually accompanied by equal possibilities in the other.

So, to the three-out-of-five who feel the ancient stirring of the blood to write a book and who also experience the modern avaricious desire to have it "go," this word of advice is given:

If you want your book to have a big sale, let it be a novel. Stories are easy to read, and you can never get a hundred thousand people to do anything which demands much mental effort. Put enough interest into the romance and enough picturesqueness into the background to overcome the reader's natural inertia. The book that sells is the book that is easier to read than to lay down.

Then, let it be a religious novel. This will awaken the interest of religious people and the preachers will preach about it. It will also please the non-religious, who find it too much trouble to go to church but enjoy the sensation of feeling religious when they can get it without effort or sacrifice. The reading of a religious novel—with a sparkling romance interwoven—is the easiest way in the world of getting this enjoyable virtuous thrill.

Finally, let your religious novel show up the preachers and churches as mere Pharisees and whitened sepulchres, and show that the people who usually get the least credit for being religious have really the best sort of religion. There are several million people of this latter sort in the country and they will all be pleased. They will enjoy the thrill of considering themselves more religious than all the church-goers and preachers, and really the salt of the earth—and all it will cost them will be the price of your book. This last feature will get your book well and profitably denounced in enough pulpits and religious papers to carry it into a tenth edition. The people who are openly irreligious will buy and read it because some preachers have considered it "dangerous."

By carefully following these directions, you can win the approbation or the patronage of the religious, the non-religious and the irreligious—and your fortune is made.

Editor's Easy Chair or Macatawa Musings.

This is a talk for the boys and girls. The old folks may pass it by, if they are really old. We are giving our colleges a hearing this week in a special number. But colleges cannot do much without the young men and young women. Sitting by our study window this morning—the window that looks out towards St. Louis over the great lake, and thinking of our educational number, we felt a great yearning come over us for the boys and girls of this country, and especially for those into whose homes the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST goes weekly as a welcome visitor. We have never been able to quite separate ourselves from the young people, but the mirror, and some other things, remind us that we are old enough, perhaps, to give a little advice to those who are still boys and girls, who linger yet in the old home, and whose minds and hearts are filled with vague longings and wonderings as to the future. Let us remind you, young friends, that you are all rich. You may not appreciate that fact as you ought, but you are rich in the dower of youth. How much that means you may not know now. But it is something so precious that no multi-millionaire in all the world can purchase it for himself. Your life is yet before you. It is morning with you. The dew is on the grass, the air is full of song, and the rosy east prophesies a glorious day. Your step is elastic, your eyes bright, your hearts full of an all-conquering hope. You have become conscious, ere this, of needs higher than those of the body. Your minds hunger for truth and knowledge, and your awakened conscience urges you to make your life a blessing to the world. To such generous-hearted youths—and there are thousands of them—we have an earnest word to speak, as one who has gone on a little way before you, and knows something of the road over which you are to pass.

What are you going to do with your life? What ends will you seek? Will you live for yourselves, or for your God and your fellow men? If the latter—and we are sure this is your purpose—then let us urge you to make the best possible preparation for the service which may be required of you. Do not do yourselves the injustice of supposing that you can render the best service to this age without a liberal education—a thorough development and training of all your powers. This is the fatal mistake which many young men and women of our time are making. They are in feverish haste to be earning something, to make their own way in the world. The feeling is right enough, but it needs to be guided by broader considerations of life, and of the world's needs. No workman should be in such haste to begin his day's work as to enter upon it with dull tools. Why should young people be in such haste to begin their work in the world as to doom themselves to mediocrity all their days, when, by taking a few years in which to prepare themselves, they might stand in the front ranks in whatever calling they may choose? Thousands are making this mistake every year, for lack, perhaps, of a word of advice and encouragement. Young man, if you have to choose between an offer to enter at once some business or professional calling, and entering college, take our advice and waive your salary for the present and go to college. If you regret this choice in the years to come, lay the blame on us. Young woman, if you are called on to choose between accepting an offer of marriage and going to college, do you go to college and get an education first, and a husband afterwards, if you can find some young man worthy of you. If not, you will be in a much better condition to get on without one.

Let us hope that in hundreds and thousands of homes this subject will be discussed this summer between parents and their children, and that a great army of young people will enter our colleges this coming autumn. Parents, teachers in the common schools, preachers, may do much by a word fitly spoken to bring about a right decision. The writer recalls a scene which came under his observation more than two score years ago. It was the noon hour, and the boys and girls were playing about the old log school house, when the teacher of that country school came to a boy in his teens, and taking his arm proposed a walk through the woods. He asked the young man about his plans in life; warned him not to be in a hurry about marrying. "Now, ——— is a sweet girl," said he, "but you do not yet know what kind of woman you will need for a wife. You ought to go to college, and yours will probably be a public life, and it will be time enough later on for you to select a wife suitable to your calling." "College!" It was the first intimation of such a possibility this young man ever had. He acted upon his teacher's advice, and to this day he cannot think of that teacher without emotions of gratitude. It is a duty which all who have the care of the young in any way owe to them, to inspire them with an ambition to make the most of themselves. A sermon on the subject, pointing out the advantages of education, and the increased power for good it puts in one's hands, and the unequalled facilities which are offered in this age and country for securing an education, and the demand for educated men and women, would help many wavering young people to decide this question in the right way. Here is an opportunity for doing good in the world—persuading the young to attend college, and assisting them, if necessary, in doing so—that is too much neglected. It has in it large possibilities of blessing the world.

But after all, young people, it depends upon you. If you do not want an education, all the world cannot force it on you.

But if you do want it, and are determined to have it, there is nothing in the world that is going to prevent you from getting it. Neither poverty, nor ignorance, nor discouragement of friends, nor persecution, nor the allurements of pleasure, shall be able to separate you from the love of learning, nor from that knowledge which alone can satisfy the insatiable hunger of the mind. Of course, it means hard work, and severe mental application. It will involve many hardships and sacrifices, perhaps. But it is worth all it costs. What is silver, or gold, or stocks, or any other form of material wealth, compared with that mental discipline that will enable you to hold communion with the great spirits of all ages, to have some conception of this great universe, and of the wonderful ways of God in nature and in history? That will perish, but this will endure forever, forming a part of your imperishable wealth, which you will carry with you as you go hence to enter upon that higher career of activity and progress in the world beyond, for which this world is but a preparation. Make your plans, young people, to secure the best possible education, and do not procrastinate, for now is the accepted time with you. This is the Easy Chair's message to you from the lake side.

Notes and Comments.

Five Americans broke into a Chinaman's shop one night recently and gave him rather rough treatment. Since the affair happened on this side of the water, however, and since the Chinaman was the victim of the disturbance and not the aggressor, the occurrence is obscurely recorded under the head of "drunk and disorderly" and does not figure under a scare-head as "Another Anti-foreign Uprising."

"The tendency of the religious world," says the Universalist Leader, "is away from specific statement of details of belief in the form of creed." The statement is accurate. The tendency of the religious world is not away from definiteness of belief, as is sometimes said, but against the codification of religious beliefs in the form of creeds to be enforced by authority. There is as much Christian faith in the world to-day as there ever was and there is no general aversion to specific statements of it, only they must not be creedal statements.

Prof. Ladd, of Yale, has an article on "Christian Science and Hypnotism" in Leslie's Weekly. He gives credence to many of the reported cures wrought by therapeutic suggestion and the various schools of healers which employ hypnotism, and says that the cures performed by Christian Science—or such of them as are not frauds or mistakes—are performed by the same means. It is significant that so conservative a psychologist as Prof. Ladd should declare his belief in phenomena which until recently were considered mere vagaries of the Society for Psychical Research.

Occasionally we hear some one bemoan the fact that there is a tendency for religion to become a "mere habit" and therefore a formal and lifeless thing. But why belittle the power and value of habit by that insidious word "mere"? Religion can never become too much a matter of habit. The Christian attitude of mind toward God and man and human duty ought to become second nature—nay, first nature. But there is a great difference between making religion so habitual that it becomes the chief part of the soul's normal constitution, and making religious rites and ceremonies so habitual that the spirit of religion vanishes from them and they become mere mechanical acts. What we want is habitual religion, not the habitual performance of ceremonies in the name of religion.

The gospel of hand-shaking has much truth in it and we always have a warm feeling for any church whose members linger after the service to greet each other and the strangers that are within their gates by a grasp of the hand. But we wonder sometimes whether some churches which are strong on hand-shaking are not deceiving themselves into believing that in this way they are performing their whole social duty. The social side of Christianity must find a far more practical expression than this if the world is to be convinced that the church deserves serious consideration as a social force. Worship and social service are two functions of the church and they are reasonably distinct. There are churches which not only substitute hand-shaking for genuine social helpfulness, but practice it at such a time and in such a manner that it seriously interferes with the devotional spirit which should precede, accompany and follow religious worship. Perhaps when the church learns to be more practical and efficient in the expression of its social interests, it will not need to hold a reception before and after every service—often to its detriment as worship—to demonstrate that it is not a "cold church."

In Mrs. Eddy's recent letter to the Christian Science Convention, an ex cathedra deliverance about things in general and nothing in particular, the following statements occur:

"Sin is a false entity; it is a lie and is unreal and like a mirage.

"There is no other reason why you have not gone to hell while attending these services but that God's hand has held you up."

The juxtaposition of these two utterances is unfortunate, for it reveals one of the numerous defects of Mrs. Eddy's system. If sin is unreal, why should anybody go to hell, whether upheld or not? What need of salvation from an unreality? If sin is merely a mirage, a figment of the foolish imagination, then in reality all men are on the same moral level. Some of us have had personal experiences with sin and know that it is neither a joke nor a mirage, and that it cannot be whistled away like an unsubstantial apparition. We believe, too, that the Scripture which says that "if we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins," is not an idle promise to relieve us of something which does not exist, or even to show us that we never had something which we think we had, but a promise to forgive sins which are as real as the soul of the man who committed them. Christian Science is bad enough as a system of bogus healing, but it is worse as a religious system which, instead of saving men from the guilt and power of sin, tells them that they are all right if they would only think so.

The Training of the Minister

Ministerial Education and the College Course.

By C. B. Coleman.

The quickest way for a man to cross a stream in a new country probably is to swim across. And this is one way savages have used for centuries. But the civil engineer sets about it by turning his back to the stream, sending for tools and bars and bolts until he bridges it. His work is permanent: he can then cross and others after him a thousand times, while the savage still laboriously swims from shore to shore. The quickest way to preach a sermon is undoubtedly to get a pulpit as soon as one decides to enter the ministry, and preach as long as the church can stand it. But the conscientious man does otherwise. At the sacrifice, perhaps, of immediate service, he prepares himself for his life work. He masters the English language and its literature, he learns how to interpret the Scriptures for himself in the light of the best scholarship, he learns something of the history of the past and the problems of the present, he digs his way into the thought of the day. And then he preaches. His sermons come easily, and they sink in deeply. They reach people, they feed and quicken and guide those who hear them. Other things being equal, success lies with the man who gets his tools ready in the beginning of his work.

By all means, therefore, a college education should precede a ministerial course, and not follow it or be mixed up piecemeal with it. For it is the college course which gives the student his tools. It ought to give him command of at least a clear, forcible style in writing and in speaking. It ought to teach him how to think consecutively. It ought to give him something of an insight into modern scientific work, its methods, theories and results. And it ought to give him a view of the world which takes into account the great thinkers, the great races and the great movements of our civilization. If the college course does this, it leaves little time for special ministerial studies, and they ought not, to any great degree, to be crowded into it. The college course suffers usually from the mass of subjects which it takes up, and gives little enough chance to the students to master the really fundamental tools of all intellectual work. Therefore keep it as free as possible from specialized work.

From the standpoint of the effectiveness of special ministerial courses, also, the same principle holds true. Theological studies can not accomplish their purpose, they can not be appreciated, if they are taken up in the beginning of the college course. To study the history of the Christian Church before one understands the general course of events and of thought in the midst of which it has developed is manifestly impossible. To study New Testament Greek without undergoing a thorough course in classical Greek is to waste half of one's time. To study sermonizing before learning how to express one's thought decently in writing, is to heap up piles of sand. For the sake of the efficiency of our ministerial courses let us quit this business of putting the cart before the horse.

The real problem, I suppose, is how to strike the balance between immediate service and preparation for all time. Certainly the kind of education which takes the ministerial student so far afield that he loses sight of the ministry or goes into it without a sense of its real obligations is to be as much deprecated as that other training which turns a man out with material for a few score sermons and nothing else. This former danger, however, can be avoided by personal contact between instructor and student, and insistence upon ideals of usefulness. Moreover, a large place should be allowed for the work of student associations, both formal and informal. In such organizations as the Y. M. C. A. and in the glow of college friendships the practical ends and purposes of those who are studying for the ministry can be strengthened as in no direct class-room work.

The Curriculum.

By Hiram Van Kirk.

Dean of Bible Chairs University of California.

The world is divided on the question of the proper course of study for the education of the minister. The traditional theological seminary with its post-graduate studies and cloister-like life is one extreme, the Bible course running parallel to the whole college course, and coterminous with it, as Mr. Campbell conceived it, is the other. The ideal curriculum must be worked out as a mean between them. A study continual and of long standing is necessary that the young minister may have his mind stocked with Bible phrases, with the materials for religious meditation, with the treasures of Christian truth, that when the time comes as a good scribe instructed in the kingdom of God he may bring out of his treasure things both new and old. For this purpose the random reading of the Bible for devotional purposes will not suffice. There should be a careful study under competent teachers of the history and literature of the English Bible. This would be profitable to every Christian; it is indispensable to the minister.

But this is not a scientific education even in the Bible. The Bible was written in foreign languages. It is the product of the ancient and oriental mind. It must be studied in its original languages and in its historic setting, before its choicest treasures can be appropriated. Such knowledge requires an acquaintance with the classic languages and Hebrew. This is not possible to the young man early in his college course. It requires a liberal education before this superstructure can be built upon. Even if the elements of Hebrew and New Testament Greek are inserted into the college curriculum, the appropriation of the biblical treasures through these instruments requires maturity of judgment and ripeness of experience.

A post-graduate course for the minister, such as is given to the aspirants to the other learned professions, ought not to be neglected by him who seeks to be a worthy workman, rightly dividing the Word of truth. This course need not be scholastic. It certainly should not put one out of touch with the world. It ought to be constructed on the new appreciation of the Historical Method, ruling now in all modern sciences. It should contain sufficient clinics that the young artist may not be wanting the friendly criticism of his masters.

This is a time of unrest on the ways and means of the education of the minister. It may be that the Disciples of Christ will make a permanent contribution to the solution of the problem. It is certain that such institutions as the Bible Chairs and Bible-schools at the seats of great universities are honest attempts in that direction.

Berkeley, Cal.

Student Preaching.

By Prof. Clinton Lockhart, Ph. D.

Professor of Homiletics in Drake University.

In ministerial training no factor is more important than actual preaching. The young carpenter must handle tools. In the dental college every student must have his hours at the chair as well as those in the lecture-room. The pianist would fail if he neglected the instrument and gave time only to the theory of music. Preaching is an art, an acquisition gained only by the most diligent and studied effort.

Fancy the awkwardness of the young theologian who has completed a long classical and professional training without attempting to preach, undertaking for the first time to bring his profound message to the common people. He cannot approach them, and they will not wish to approach him. His thoughts are in one sphere, theirs in another; and these spheres are not even adjacent to each other. The probability is that such a preacher never will get near enough to the people to convert any of them. This is one reason that the preachers among the Disciples have evangelistic success that astonishes their better trained theological neighbors. The preachers among the Disciples begin preaching in the majority of cases before they enter a college of any kind, and continue to preach regularly during their entire collegiate course. In this way they keep in touch with the people and adapt all their learning to the wants of the masses.

The amount of good done by the students during their college years is not inconsiderable. After years of careful observation with preaching students among our own people, I estimate that the average student that preaches will bring into the church about ten souls each year while in college. This will yield 500 souls a year for each college that has as many as 50 preaching students. This might be easily doubled if the students were duly favored with opportunity. What a loss if all these years of usefulness and development were denied him!

But how much time should the student devote to this work? Evidently it will not be well for him to neglect his studies for the pulpit; and yet it would be equally ill for him to neglect preaching for his studies. I am convinced that some students are capable of doing much more than others. Some should preach but one or two Lord's days in each month, while others are able to give every Lord's day to the people with little loss of class-room success. Any rule set by a college limiting the preaching of its students will be arbitrary and injurious. It will be like prescribing by rule how much they shall eat or sleep or work.

It is often urged that a college cannot afford to be badly represented before the people by students of poor preaching abilities. Yes, it is a misfortune to a college to be represented by some students in any capacity; but no rule will ever prevent it. The best preventive in the world is public neglect of poor speaking. The people are not any more eager to have dull preaching than the college; and they have the means of restraining it without adopting some foolish rule that would be as likely to check good preaching as bad. The college can afford to leave that matter with the public, and it can rest assured that its best representatives will win the field.

Some colleges require their students to reach a certain point in their course or a certain success in recitation before they are permitted to preach. The evil of such a law is that it will cut off from the field many of the best preachers attending college. Experience abundantly demonstrates that any rule of that sort in our colleges is as arbitrary and unjust as requiring students to reach a certain age or a certain number of pounds avoirdupois.

Sometimes we read in a catalogue, "No student will be at liberty to preach regularly without permission from the president." That sounds very safe; but it usually turns out either that the president draws no reins on the students at all, or that he makes some miserable blunders at it. Not infrequently he restrains a student on account of awkward appearance or a mistake in grammar who in the pulpit does a work which the president himself could not begin to do. After all, it is success in the work of preaching that counts. The people will put on the restraint.

But suppose that a student does not preach well; is that a good reason for keeping him out of the field? Shall we adopt the good old mother's advice to her son: "By all means, do not go into the water until you learn to swim"? Inexperience will be a good reason for not assuming heavy responsibilities, but not for staying out of the pulpit. It furnishes the best reason for redoubled effort in preaching. The friends of the student in college and out of it should help him into opportunities for favorable experience. This can often be done without discredit to the school and without imposition upon the community where the preaching is done. Let wisdom as well as patience have her perfect work, and this will be easily adjusted.

The College and Religious Development

By BURRIS A. JENKINS.

President-elect of Kentucky University

College students are generally at such an age as is thought to be skeptical. But it is not skeptical. It is simply inquiring. Everything about the students is new, their relationships, their liberties, their methods of study, their environment; old things have passed away. Like a child or a man that is suddenly transferred from an accustomed place to a new and strange, possibly even a foreign—an oriental or a European—environment, the college student goes about gazing at everything, feeling of everything, tasting of everything, and enjoying to the full his new point of view.

This is not skepticism. It is inquiry. The student may think it is skepticism; his parents, teachers and friends may think it; it would be better for all concerned if this spirit of inquiry were recognized in its proper light and if all should say to the student: "Come, thou Thomas, come forward to the most sacred things, thrust thy finger into all nail prints, into all spear thrusts. See, and be thou not faithless but believing." Thomas was never a skeptic. He was a reverent inquirer. Nine-tenths of the college students who are considered skeptics, and who consider themselves skeptics, are not skeptics at all, they are inquirers.

Now it often happens that by injudicious and unsympathetic treatment an inquirer may be made into a skeptic. Here is a college professor, let us say, or, perhaps, here is a whole college, faculty and students, who meet such an inquirer as if he were a blasphemer. The whole eleven of them turn against poor Thomas and would thrust him out. They tell him he is criminal even to question about certain things. Such treatment will inevitably lead to a disturbed conscience in that inquirer; then he will see later that he has a perfect right to inquire, that God made his mind for inquiry, that domination over his mind was never intended by the Creator; then he will declare all his professors and his colleagues bigots and Pharisees and will reject the truth along with those who "hold down the truth." He becomes a fiery skeptic. Happy for the inquirer if there be one Great Master who will say "Put thy finger into the nail prints and believe!"

Then, on the other hand, a different treatment may be accorded the inquirer—or rather, an indifferent treatment. The teachers and the students may say to him: "Let be. What is the use of inquiring about ultimate verities? Your concern is with scientific facts. We know nothing of, we care nothing for, what is beyond." And so, with a coldness of indifference toward the real end of all trains of inquiry, they freeze the inquirer into an ice-house skeptic. Such a college is no true college; for in the college atmosphere, freedom of inquiry is the very soul of studentship, and sympathy with the inquirer is everything.

Either of these two opposite courses may be fatal to the religious development of the student. If he is treated as a criminal for inquiry, he is likely to accept his lot as an outcast. If he is treated with unsympathetic indifference, he is apt to grow indifferent.

A far wiser course may be pursued, and indeed is often pursued, especially in certain smaller colleges which may be termed religious, though not necessarily denominational. After all it is in the small college that the religious welfare of the student is most likely to be properly looked after.

In such a college all questions, of whatever sort, are met with perfect fearlessness. No father objects when his child asks the most searching questions both about the parent and about himself. So, also, our Heavenly Father puts no barrier in the way of our inquiries. We may look about us and ask, "Why is this? What is this for?" The answer may not be always intelligible to us; but answer there always is. The attitude, therefore, of perfect fearlessness is encouraged in the best colleges, and always leads to an even and sane religious growth. The instructor who thus faces all the questions of his students, and encourages them to ask more questions, may not always be able to answer. He may often be compelled to say: "I do not know. I cannot tell." But he will say to his student, "Keep on asking. If you cannot find the answer, let your question wait a year or two or ten, and then ask again." Was it Mark Hopkins or Horace Bushnell who said: "Hang up your question on a peg, take it down next year, and turn it around and around, and if not satisfied, hang it up again for another year or two"? This is the lesson of the suspended mind, one of the surest marks of cultivation.

With fearlessness will go manliness in fronting all life. That college is not most truly a religious institution which in any wise saps manliness of body or of mind. Your average college student abhors anything that he can call namby-pamby, goody-goody, anything that smacks of pharisaism, of attitudinizing, of sham. Emerson used to say that the most unbiased juror in the world is the thirteen-year-old boy, who passes judgment on all men and matters without fear or favor, and expresses his judgment freely. But a yet more unbiased juror is your college student. He is so unbiased as to become biased. He stands so straight up against pharisaism that he leans backward. He is inclined to be a snob, a cynic, a little of a Pharisee himself in denouncing pharisaism and calling for virility. But, after all, he can be brought to recognize true manliness and to put the stamp of approval upon it. If his religious thought is treated in true, manly fashion, he will make it as virile and strong as his biceps.

Sympathy must be added to fearlessness and manliness in the treatment of the religious life of students. Professors should be perennially young. It makes no odds how white a man's hair or beard, so his heart be the heart of a young man. If he loves and understands and sympathizes with young men he may pass his three score years and ten by many years, and still be able to point young men to the path of the just that shines unto the perfect day. It was the old ex-president of Harvard of whom his students used to say, as they passed across the campus at night: "There's the old man's light yet shining! God bless him!" Such a man as that could never be crusty or intolerant with the religious inquiries of any Thomas in the world!

No college is complete in its course, or large in its spirit, which does not give actual place to religion. Religion must not merely be recognized as a subsidiary thing, but as the goal of all culture. There is no true culture which is not crowned with religion. The head of the corner cannot be left out of any completed structure. So those colleges, if there be any, which ignore religion, much less scoff at it, are not true colleges, for they do not complete the training of the student.

Naturally, therefore, an absolute sine qua non of a college faculty is that they should be religious men. This does not mean that they should be members of this or that particular church, necessarily; but that they should be devout and reverent men. There are many institutions in this country in which no care whatever regarding religious matters is exercised in the choice of professors. It is said: "The student, sooner or later, must come in contact with thinkers of all sorts." The reply is: "Surely. But should all sorts of thinkers be set up as the intellectual ideals for young minds? Worship their professors they should not; but worship their professors they will, whether or no. Bow down, intellectually, to any man, they should not; but bow down they inevitably will, till they have learned better. Be careful then of the metal out of which the image is graven!" College professors, no matter what they teach, should be devout and reverent men. There are enough Shalers and Fiskes, of a smaller size, to go around. We are not forced to select still smaller men who cannot see with the wide-open eyes of scientific faith. Let our people take care that their sons and daughters are put in college under religious men and women.

So far then, from the college age and the college atmosphere being a dangerous time and place, the very converse should be true. The college age, with all its restless inquiry, can be made to unfold, and unfold into the largest, roundest and fullest faith. The little college world can be made so wholesome, so fearless, so virile, so sympathetic, so truly religious as to create and foster the most honest devotion, the most manly and womanly religion. Parents ought not to fear sending their children to college. It is the safest place to send them. Take the students of the small religious college and compare them with the same number of young men and women of social life of any little town or city and the college people will measure far higher in moral and religious development.

A Christian University.

By William Bayard Craig.

Man's ignorance crucified the Christ. The ignorance of men aroused the compassion of Jesus. He prayed "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." He organized a school for the instruction of teachers that could go forth and teach the people of the world. From the beginning training schools have been a most important factor in the growth and development of the church.

A reform movement is dominated by new ideas, and if the reform is to be permanent and important, training schools and trained teachers are essential to its ongoing.

The educational effort made will be measured in its power by the strength of the conviction in the heart of the reform as to its world wide interest and value. This is true in science, art or religion.

Protestantism made itself invincible by the great colleges and universities it created. Oxford and Cambridge have been the bulwarks of the established Church of England. Yale and the minor colleges that have sprung up around it have rendered like service to the Congregational Church in this country. The great Methodist Church by the wise and united action of its leaders has made it unnecessary for their sons and daughters to go outside of Methodist influences to secure a fine modern education. Any important and successful religious movement from Rome to Bethany will serve to illustrate the fact to which we call attention.

Our religious movement seems to be an exception to the rule. We have indeed a strong and an abiding conviction of the importance of the ideas we represent, but nevertheless our colleges and universities are inadequate and poorly endowed.

This may be accounted for largely by the failure of Bethany to secure adequate endowment and make itself strong and great while it held the loyal love and loyalty of the whole brotherhood in the lifetime of its great founder. It was expected that Mr. Campbell himself would give a large part of his fortune to the college he had founded. Doubtless too much dependence was placed on that expectation; it failed and that, with the havoc and destruction caused by the war in Bethany's supporting territory, and the further important fact that Bethany was left isolated and "off the railroad" in the development of the transportation lines of the country, made it impossible for Bethany to become the Yale of our movement. Instead of being an inspiration and encouragement to all after efforts in education, it has been the leader of a long series of unsuccessful efforts in college and university building.

Possibly it is all for the best. Possibly it would have been a misfortune to establish the center of our movement so far to the east. The great flour mills are in the midst of the wheat fields, the cotton mills are close to the growing cotton of the south, the lumber mills keep close to the raw material. Our great schools will doubtless develop in the midst of the people who support them.

There are a few plain propositions that seem to be incontrovertible, if they are valid we cannot avoid the obligation of building up our own schools until they are commanding centers in this highly favored land.

1. The teaching and spirit of Jesus must be central and dominant in any college or university or its work is so defective that we cannot be satisfied to use it for the training of our sons and daughters. All knowledge whatsoever must be adjusted to the principles of the Sermon on the Mount or it is fragmentary and defective.

2. The teaching and spirit of Jesus cannot be central and dominant in a university unless the teachers are positively Christian in life and sympathy as well as eminent in the special lines they have prepared to teach. All great educators concede that the contact of the student with men who incarnate high Christian culture is the most important factor in the educational process.

These conditions can only be insured in our institutions.

3. The spiritual barrenness that results from fading religious convictions and frigid enthusiasm is already manifest in great universities that in their earlier history were fountains of inspiration for the students who entered their halls.

In the days when 2,000 students was a maximum of attendance the student had opportunity to meet and know the eminent men of the faculties. In these days when the attendance has doubled in the great universities the professor's influence is submerged, the sentiment of the students controls the life of the institution by the sheer weight of numbers.

Few choose Christ during college days at the great universities. Few among their graduates choose the ministry. The cause we love must suffer if our sons and daughters come home from college indifferent in regard the Christian life and its activities.

Build up our own colleges until they are in every way creditable and competent. Gather into their faculties able men full of delight in the growth of Christ's kingdom. Surround the students with all helpful influences. Gather in our share of the youth of the land. Make Christian education a foremost object of interest and beneficence. Create conditions out of which shall go an ever increasing host of ministers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, et al, who shall delight to use all their resources for the upbuilding of Christian freedom and Christian truth.

We are in the vigor of youth, we have the enthusiasm that loving devotion to the personal Christ has never failed to develop, we are in the full enjoyment of evangelistic power, we have the wealth and the resources, we owe it to protestantism that has pushed us on to the logical end of its own premise, we owe it to our children and to America to build up our own schools that the chief factor in a true culture may be brought to bear on the youth of this age, viz:—Christian freedom and devotion to Him who taught with authority because he knew he taught the truth.

We have laid some good foundations, they will be great benefactors of Christian education who will help us rear creditable superstructures.

The American Christian Education Society and Our Educational Problems.

By F. D. Power.

The first purpose of this general organization is to unite our educational forces and exercise a general supervision over all our educational work. Such is the function of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in its relation to the work of foreign missions among us. Such is also the position of the American Christian Missionary Society in its relation to the work of general home missions. Our schools and colleges have hitherto had no general consideration in our councils, no united effort to bring their claims to the attention of our people. Institutions of learning have sprung up without reference to each other and have relied upon a haphazard method of support as individual enterprises, or the representatives of certain communities or sections. Is it not possible through this general organization to bring the whole cause of education to the front and to arouse our people everywhere to the great importance of endowing our schools and making them worthy in every respect of a great people? If a new spirit of enthusiasm can thus be kindled for education, such as has been already aroused for missions, it will be a point gained of the very highest moment for, after all, at the basis of all our great missionary interests, as of all our church interests, lies this cause. We cannot ignore it and live.

In the second place a specific work can be accomplished by a well organized and efficient movement of this kind. Such a society commanding the confidence of all the friends of education among us, may raise special funds for the education of young men for the ministry, may foster and encourage struggling institutions, may influence the improvement of courses of study and the enlargement of the efficiency and scope of our schools, may encourage the building up of institutions of learning where they are needed and discourage the founding of mushroom colleges where they are not needed, may improve methods of securing funds for college endowment, may take such an oversight of the whole field as to be able to extend a helping hand to every one of our institutions.

The great problem before us is to awaken our people to the claims of Christian education upon us. Shall we take the place that seems justly ours in this field of service? Have we a duty here that is yet undone? Shall we share with our religious neighbors in the work of training youth, of molding the thought of the time; or shall we leave it to others, and so lose a great opportunity? Shall we not only leave the general field to others, but turn over our own children and youth to the training of other schools? This is the question that faces us most seriously and to its consideration our general society should address itself. Upon the solution of this one problem will depend all others and with its removal will come in good time the cure of all that is defective in our educational system. Let the church from one end of the land to the other be quickened to a proper understanding of its duty to this cause. This is the permanent need.

Washington, D. C.

Why I Became a Missionary.

By Bessie Farrar Madsen.

I am trying to recall the heart-life of my childhood, that I may be able to tell why I became a missionary, but I find that the feelings of those days cannot be coldly analyzed.

I have a missionary mother who, though she has never been in a foreign land, has considered wherever she lived her field and herself his missionary there to do his bidding. She dedicated her first-born to the Lord, asking him to use her as he would. He accepted my mother's offering. Mother writes: "I did not realize then what my prayer would bring in answer or what my giving meant."

No one suggested missionary work to me. I had heard no thrilling accounts of life on the foreign field, nor had I read of any distressing need. I can remember standing by mother's knee and reading letter by letter that first chapter of the children's gospel and going sometimes hand in hand with her in comforting and helping those who needed her.

Old Seventh Street Church, Richmond, is indissolubly connected with the memory of those days. I can remember its Sunday-school, its missionary meetings, our Bro.

Tyler's earnest work and Bro. Robert Cave also. I know that these had their influence but I know not how largely it all entered into the "why." I only know as I look back that there was early born in my soul a must—and in quiet times alone in the old garden with my Father I would tell him that I would go wherever he would send me—would ask him to make me faithful in all the little things at home that I might be prepared for the larger work. When I was thirteen I was baptized and from that time this was my center thought. I spoke of it to no one in those days excepting to sister Birdie, who was two years younger than I.

And the years passed on. There is one afternoon that stands out prominently in the heart-history. I was sixteen then. There had been a meeting announced at church for that afternoon—it was a week of prayer—but the afternoon was stormy and dark and no one was there. In the quiet I opened my Bible and read. The Father was very near in the stillness and through the words of Mark 16:15 he spoke to me until I bowed my head and told him that I was ready to go.

I spoke of it that week to Bro. E. A. Cole, who was preaching at the Third Church. He listened earnestly and began helping me in some special Bible study. It was soon after this that Bro. G. L. Wharton told in Richmond of India's need. My heart burned within me for I knew that our Father would send me. I might tell you how gently but how firmly he led me past all obstacles, led me into the preparation needed and then, when his time had come, sent me forth with his precious words in my heart, "Lo, I am with you always."

There were times when other plans were presented to me, when many circumstances said: "Stay and work in the home land." But these did not tempt me; I was so sure that he wanted me to go. Sometimes I wondered why he had called me so far from home, but I knew I would understand after awhile.

As I had grown older the burdening thought of India's suffering need weighed heavily upon my soul and I was eager to start, but the reason of my coming was that from the beginning I felt that it was his wish for me. And in the years on the field this has been my strength. He wants me here, and there hath not failed one word of all his good promises.

I would like to be able to write a wise article on why I became a missionary—one that would fill others with a desire to come. But after all I believe that God deals simply with each soul, and that the best reason any of us can give for anything he has called us to is, he wants me to do it. I begin to understand why he called me. I am in a district where there are thousands who are demon worshipers. I can know something now of their need. I know his love toward them and its wonderful power to save to the uttermost. He is such a wonderful Savior.

The educated man, in proportion to his education, sees the number of laws diminished, till at last it becomes possible to his conception that they are all reducible to one, and that that which lies beneath the innumerable phenomena of nature is the One Spirit—God.—Robertson.

Man and Nature.

By Joseph F. Newton.

Man is the child of Nature. He is born out of her warm heart; he looks upon her beaming face with the wide and startled eyes of infancy; he lives and moves and makes his progress in her presence; he falls down to sleep at last, like a tired child, upon her great bosom. Nature enfolds and unfolds our dawning intelligence; she surrounds us with innumerable influences of which we are unconscious; her vital forces pass into our being, form our body and brain and affect our whole existence. This intimate relation between man and nature began with the birth of humanity on the earth, and becomes each century more intelligent and influential. Nature is the oldest and wisest teacher of our race, our constant companion, inspirer and instructor. She is so much with us that we look upon the stately pageantry of her life as a matter of course. The average man, like the keeper of a Royal Art Gallery, does not appreciate the treasures of truth and beauty with which he is surrounded. In every age there are a few fine spirits who are filled with wonder and worship in the presence of the strange and solemn beauty of the natural order, and who chide us for the dullness of our minds and the dimness of our vision.

Nature was perhaps the first object of human worship. The solemn splendor of the midnight sky, the mystic music of the infinite sea, the delicate scenery which the clouds form and re-form on a summer day, the quiet charm of the woods, the majesty and magnificence of the mountains, the wild fury of the storm and the terror of its flashing wrath, must have impressed the child-man of the early ages with the presence of power and intelligence in Nature. Unable to grasp the idea of the unity of the universe, our fathers conceived of the myriad forces of Nature as so many separate personalities; but through the maze of myths, the crude ideas of Fate and the altars to the "Unknown God," we discern the dim intuition of the unity, eternity and supremacy of God. Man has always believed that he is akin to the great Being behind Nature, and that the one duty of human life is to be at peace with the Eternal. However far back our students of antiquity go in their excavations, they dig up an image of a god, as though to show us that out of the buried ruins of the past come always the emblems of religion. The altars and offerings of all the tribes and races show us that religion is the supreme interest of human thought as it is the eternal motion of human progress.

Patiently and silently Nature teaches man and trains him for usefulness and honor. We are little children watching our Mother at work and learning more of her wisdom as we grow older. All our inventions are imitations of her devices—discoveries of her powers and processes. All our science is a systematic statement of what we have learned of the ways and works of Nature. The beauty of her landscape is reproduced in our art; the melody of her life is recorded in our poetry; her moral order is the basis of our character. Experience teaches us that obedience to the laws of Nature lifts us above drudgery and makes us free and masterful and happy; that disobedience to her commandments is punished with pain and sorrow. Science is eloquent in illustrating the sublime truth that Nature is the ally of righteousness and the enemy of unrighteousness.

There is something impressive in the way in which genius portrays the sympathy of Nature with the sufferings and tragedies of humanity. This cosmic sympathy is proclaimed in all great literature. The biblical record of the curse of the earth because of the sin of Adam; the story of the death of Jesus and the shudder of horror that passed through Nature when it was compelled to witness the crucifixion of Love; the drama of King Lear, in which the tempest of suffering in the mind of the old man excites a tempest in the elements, are examples of this faith in the sympathy of Nature. Perhaps this sympathy of Nature for the sufferings of man is an expression of the pity of God.

That all men have not held this view of Nature we must hasten to confess. The ancient theologians believed that mind is good and that matter is evil; that the white spirit of man is stained with sin when it comes in contact with unclean flesh; that the soul is a jewel set in impure clay, and that salvation is to be attained by opposing natural tendencies and shunning the healthy joys of life as the enticements of the Evil One. Without doubt the morbidness of scholastic theology and the unloveliness of mediæval religious life were due to the unwholesome philosophy which shuts the beauty of Nature out of the thought and life of man. John Stuart Mill's philippic against Nature for her heartless cruelty is one of the most famous indictments in literature. Observing the pitiless severity of Nature in her dealings with man, he concludes that the silent and hidden Power is either hopelessly wicked or helplessly weak. Huxley, in his Romance address, declares that the universe is an immoral organism. According to this view, man lives in an unsympathetic world and must struggle for his existence without the assistance of Nature. His splendid faith that, in a contest so appallingly unequal—man against the universe—man may hope to conquer, relieves the doctrine of its tragic pessimism and rebukes the theological dogma of man's intellectual and moral imbecility.

Between this immeasurable confidence in humanity and the old idea of human weakness and wickedness there is but one choice. Wordsworth gives us another view of the relation between man and Nature. Speaking in gravity from the calmness of his mountain home, he tells us that Nature is the medium when the mind of man meets the mind of God in sweet and holy fellowship. He finds a living Soul behind the silent face of Nature. Walking in that "light which never was on sea or land," he becomes conscious of that "Presence which disturbs him with the joy of elevated thoughts," as it beams in the "light of setting suns, the round ocean and the living air."

Interpreting Nature as modern science has revealed it in the light of eternal religious principles, we conclude that the order of Nature is a school of God for the education of man; that its methods are wise and just and good; that all human progress is the result of obedience to the will of God as revealed in the laws of Nature; that it is our duty to bring ourselves and our concerns into harmony with the life of God in the order of the universe. "The race must become partner in the moral enterprise, fellow-worker with the universe at its ethical task, if its heart of rhythm and soul of fire are to stand fully revealed." Nature is the organ, silent and magnificent, humanity is the choir, vast and myriad-voiced, with its tones of wailing woe and its notes of shouting joy; together they play the grand oratorio in the temple of God.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

I was exceedingly infelicitous in my letter of June 20, in one respect, at least, in my notice of A. B. Jones' book—"The Spiritual Side of Our Plea." The author says that no better example of mere logomachy can be found than in the debate between Alexander Campbell and N. L. Rice on the design of baptism and the work of the Holy Spirit. He gives two quotations as illustrations of this mere war of words. I attempted to reproduce these quotations on page 777 of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but the quotations are so placed as to fail to bring out, strikingly, the point. I will make another effort, requesting the printer to place side by side the following:

"Faith unites us spiritually to Christ and gives us an interest in the plan of salvation, baptism is the external ordinance by which we become visibly united to him and bound to devote ourselves to his service. Baptism is the external sign, faith is the internal grace. The latter unites us to Christ really, the former connects with him formally; but the piety of the heart is, in the word of God, always represented as the great matter. . . . There is a vast difference between the sign and seal of regeneration and regeneration itself, and between the sign and seal of remission and remission itself. The believer is first pardoned, and then receives the sign and seal. Baptism is a pledge, so to speak, that God will forgive the sins of those who comply with the conditions set forth in his word. But the sign or seal is not the thing or document, nor essential to it."

"The outward act, then, is but the symbol of the transition, inward and spiritual, by which our souls are bathed in that ocean of love which purifies our persons and makes them one with the Lord. . . . All outward ordinances (and all ordinances are outward), prayer, praise, the Lord's day, the breaking of the loaf, fasting, etc., have each a peculiar grace or intercommunion with Christ in them. . . . Each of these is a symbol of something more spiritual than itself. Prayer is but the embodiment of something more inward than the heart. But without these symbols spiritual life, health, comfort, can never be enjoyed. Hence to enter the sanctum sanctorum, the inner temple of spiritual enjoyment and Christian life, baptism is essentially necessary, preceded by a vigorous faith and genuine repentance and fixed resolves of obeying from the heart the mandates of the Great King."

Can you now distinguish the language of Mr. Campbell from that of Mr. Rice? What, precisely, is the difference in the thought contained in the above quotations? Which quotation do you endorse and which repudiate?

If Mr. Jones' book does no more than call attention to the fact that there is a spiritual side to our plea his work will not have been in vain. It is important that this fact should be made emphatic. It is absolutely essential to an understanding of the plea.

Mr. Jones might have expressed himself stronger than he has, in his book on this theme. He might have said that our plea is spiritual—intensely and altogether spiritual. To have put the case in this way would not have been a misrepresentation of the plea. The religion of the time in which Stone and the Campbells began their work was largely a matter of form. The noble men whom we fondly call "the fathers" pled for the power of godliness as well as for the forms.

Alexander Campbell said, in his debate with Mr. Rice, that "our reformation began in a conviction of the inadequacy of the popular forms of religion to produce that change in heart and life which the Scriptures represent as essential to entrance into heaven."

The plea of the Disciples of Christ for unity among Christian believers is thoroughly spiritual. It is not a plea for church union, except incidentally—it is a plea for Christian union. It is even more than this; it is a plea for unity. Union may be only outward and formal; unity is inward, spiritual, real. Where this is there will be a manifestation that can be seen, felt, appreciated. If there is not now union among believers it is because there is a lack of real, spiritual unity. All of this is found in John 17:20,21,—the favorite text with our fathers: "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me."

The unity, you see, for which our Lord prayed was similar to that which exists between the Father and the Son. So we read in the book of Acts that those who believed on Jesus through the testimony of his apostles in Jerusalem, were of "one heart and soul." How was this unity manifested? In life. "As many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold and laid them at the apostle's feet; and distribution was made unto each, according as any one had need."

The ordinances, in the teaching of the Disciples, have a spiritual significance as in the doctrines of no other people. Baptism, as an illustration, stands for a great spiritual fact. Only those who have a spiritual experience are proper subjects of this ordinance. This is the reason why we do not baptize infants. They have not the spiritual experience which stands as the essential prerequisite for baptism. Prepare a sermon on the spiritual preparation for baptism and see what you will get out of it. My word for it, such a discourse will remove prejudice as no other single sermon that you can preach.

The Lord's Supper is a deeply spiritual ordinance. Apart from the Christ it signifies nothing. It is as far from being a mere form as you can imagine. By its intelligent observance the communicant is carried into the very heart of Christ's gospel. He is reminded of the fact that Jesus died for our sins, with all that is involved in that tremendous statement. There ought to be an hour's preparation on each Lord's day for the celebration of the Lord's Supper. As a mere form you can attend to it at the beginning of your "Sunday service;" but in this way you miss almost all of its spiritual significance.

Run over every item of what we call our plea and see if it is not thoroughly and profoundly spiritual from first to last. Faith is a spiritual exercise, repentance is a spiritual exercise, the confession of Christ is a spiritual declaration, baptism is an act of spiritual devotion, the Lord's Supper is a deliberate and solemn act of spiritual consecration, and Paul says, "Whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him." This word of exhortation, heeded, will make the entire life religious—but this is our plea.

Reports of Our Colleges

Kentucky University.

Not for thirty years has Kentucky University had the prosperity and the bright prospect that she has this year. The publication last year of a modern catalogue, worthy of the institution and of its high mission, awakened the slumbering interest of her friends. An enrollment of 1108 matriculates is one of the gratifying results that have been realized in the face of the disadvantages that naturally attend an interregnum in the presidency of the institution. Circumstances over which I had no control required me to be acting president until the board of curators could find a gentleman whose age and physical strength would, with the necessary qualifications of scholarship, executive ability, and power as a speaker in and out of the pulpit, give a reasonable prospect of his long incumbency of the office. Such a president we think we have found in Bro. Burris A. Jenkins, of Buffalo, N. Y., recently president of the University of Indianapolis. President Jenkins will undertake his new duties as soon as he is released from his engagement at Buffalo, which will be before the beginning of the next session on Sept. 9. Commencing his work in the first year of the new century, after the interest of the friends of the university has been revived by repeated successes, and when the alumni are ablaze with a new enthusiasm, the new president has before him possibilities of usefulness that might well fire the ambition and stimulate the best efforts of any man. May God give him strength and wisdom to make the most of his opportunity.

Those of us who are in a position to judge, know that the session of 1900-01 closed more brilliantly and more hopefully than did any of its forty-one predecessors. A tinge of regret was cast over the otherwise cloudless sky by the termination, by voluntary resignation, of the official connection of the treasurer, Henry H. White, whose wise service and faithful devotion have made his life a thread of pure gold running through almost the whole life of the institution. Entering Bacon College as a student in May of 1838, he has been tutor, professor, presiding officer of the College of Liberal Arts, president of the university, and, since impaired vision necessitated an end of his labors in the classroom, its treasurer, until a service of sixty-three years has brought him to the eighty-first year of his life and to a well-earned rest. But this is the day of young men. A worthy successor in the treasurer's office has been found in Mr. John T. Vance, a man of proved devotion to the university.

Three excellent classes of nearly equal numbers and together counting sixty-four members were graduated in the College of Liberal Arts, the College of the Bible and the Medical Department. The Society of Alumni was reorganized on broader lines and with larger aims than it has hitherto followed. A strong board of officers was elected, which is expected to work, and to inspire the whole body of graduates to work, for the university. The alumni dinner that came immediately after the commencement exercises of the College of Liberal Arts was a scene of enthusiastic devotion to Alma Mater so delightful as to make all that were so fortunate as to be present look forward eagerly and hopefully to the greater gathering that is assured for next year. An effort will be made to provide for the hospitable entertainment in Lexington of all graduates that may come next June to enjoy the old scenes and to counsel together how we can best strengthen and develop the great possibilities for usefulness of our common mother. Success is in the air. Responsibility for failure, if failure should befall, would lie at the door of the Christian brotherhood of the south and southwest, which is the wide empire that properly and especially belongs to Kentucky University, though her halls are open to welcome, as they have welcomed, ingenuous youth of whatever faith and clime.

Lexington, Ky.,

Hiram College.

Hiram College has just passed its thirty-fourth annual commencement day. Fifty-one years have passed since the founding of the Western Reserve Eclectic Institute out of which Hiram College has grown. Fifty years of history of the institution and the college have been chronicled by the chosen historian, F. M. Green.

Commencement week for 1901 began June 16 with the baccalaureate sermon by President Zollars. These annual sermons are always of a high order. The sermon for 1901 did not fall below the high standard already gained. Monday, June 17, was devoted mainly to the annual farewell meetings of the literary societies: the Delphic, the Hesperian, the Garfield, the Olive Branch, and the Alethean. Wednesday, June 19, the trustees of the college held their annual meeting and the evening was filled by a literary program by one of the societies. Thursday, June 20, was commencement day. For the first time in many years the day opened with a downpour of rain, which lasted nearly the entire day. This diminished the attendance very sensibly at all the public exercises.

The forenoon exercises consisted of orations by chosen representatives of the class.

The afternoon exercises consisted of the addresses by the class professors—Professor Edwin L. Hall speaking for the standard courses, and Professor Charles T. Paul for the literary course—a short address to the class by Pres. Zollars and the conferring of degrees on 10 post graduates, 26 seniors in the standard courses, and 10 seniors in the literary course, making a total of 46. Besides these, the trustees conferred the honorary degree of A. M. on Dr. J. M. Lewis, of Cleveland, O., and LL. D. on J. M. Van Horn, of Worcester, Mass.

The "Annual Address" was given by Rev. Morgan Wood, pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church, Cleveland, on "The Reign of Law." The day finally closed with the alumni banquet, which was well attended, and the public exercises of the Hesperian Literary Society. The year at Hiram has been a prosperous one with 426 different students in attendance. The average term attendance was 345 and the total term attendance 1,036. During the summer President Zollars and Professor Peckham will spend some time at the University of Chicago; Professor Dean will study at Harvard.

Altogether the year has been a good one at Hiram, and the school starts into the 20th century with creditable ambitions and with hopes well founded. The first term of the new century will begin September 24, 1901.

Eureka College.

Eureka College has just closed what all are pleased to believe the most prosperous year's work in its history. There has been an increase in attendance over last year, and already indications point to a much larger increase the coming year. The moral tone of the student body, the high character of the work done and the loyalty of the students to the best interests of the college, are some of the satisfactory features of the past year.

The courses of study have been improved in a number of details as to order, arrangement and methods of work. The faculty has been strengthened by the addition of two men. Professor Charles A. Young is added to the Bible-school. He will begin work Oct 1, and will devote most of his time to conducting Bible Institutes throughout the state, under the auspices of the college. Professor William T. Jackson takes the chair of Physics and Chemistry; he is a graduate of Eureka and Harvard. Some of the teachers will again spend the summer in Chicago University.

Facilities for work have been greatly extended by the liberality of Mrs. Harness-Tuttle of Atlanta, Ill., in paying her bequest of $5,000 for the purchase of books and apparatus. The selections of books and instruments will be completed by fall.

The college and community celebrated "arbor day," at which time Mr Peter B. Wight, of the Municipal Art League of Chicago, and Supt. Joseph Carter, of Champaign, Ill., gave addresses. Mr. Wight also platted the campus, suggesting walks, drives, buildings, flower gardens, etc. Steps have already been taken to beautify in accordance.

Founders' Day was celebrated Feb. 6, Prof. B. J. Radford delivering the address, which was enthusiastically received. The chapel, having been overhauled and beautified, was on that day rededicated.

During the year a number of special lectures were given to the students and citizens. The students are connected with two state oratorical associations, in both of which they won first place this year. This has been their record for three successive years.

A few weeks ago the college received from Mrs. Deborah Bandy, of Danville, Ill., property valued at $25,000, which includes a farm of 200 acres and her city residence property. This is for the endowment of a Bible Chair. Other gifts were made for improvements by Mrs. S. A. Holman, of Peoria, and Mrs. Whitnah, of Canton, Ill., and still others of smaller amounts.

The commencement exercises, Thursday, June 27, were unusually well attended and were of a high order. Dr. Emil Hirsch, the distinguished Rabbi of Chicago, gave the Commencement Day address on the "Responsibility of the American Scholar." Bro. W. B. Taylor, of Chicago, preached an able baccalaureate sermon. The alumni address was delivered by ex-Gov. W. A. Poynter, class of '67, of Lincoln, Nebraska, on "Government." The degree of LL. D. was conferred upon Mr. Poynter. Many alumni, former students and friends were in attendance during the week. The exercises closed with the president's reception at Lida's Wood on commencement evening.

Drake University.

Many circumstances have favored Drake University. The city where it is located has grown in the twenty years since the institution was founded from a village of 12,000 to a city of 70,000. It is the largest and chief mercantile city of Iowa as well as the capital. University Place was a wilderness twenty years ago; now it is a charming suburb with cars every seven minutes and all the latest city improvements.

The growth of the university has been unchecked from its modest beginning until the enrollment now places it among the foremost institutions of the state. Two years ago the tuition receipts were a little over $18,000; last year from the same department the receipts were over $25,000; this year over $30,000. Counting in the receipts from the medical, law and dental departments the receipts this year exceed $45,000. This shows so large a percentage of growth that it places Drake, in this respect, among the most prosperous institutions in the west.

In all departments there were 184 graduates this year, of these 65 were from the law department. The summer schools have a wide reputation and are largely attended. The best available talent is secured for the School of Methods, the teachers of the state will not patronize a school without recognized and conspicuous talent on the teaching force. The conservatory of music has a large patronage from the city where the unusual merit of the faculty is known. The enrollment the past year was an increase of almost 100 per cent. over previous records. The graduating class in the College of Letters and Science was smaller than usual, numbering 19; there will be over 30 next year. Forty-six students were enrolled from Missouri.

A large amount of money was expended the past year in improvements; new laboratories were equipped with all the modern requirements; a new library and reading room; the museum rearranged; the buildings repainted and other betterments accomplished. The year just closed was highly prosperous in every respect except that we are as yet unable to announce the addition to the endowment that we had hoped to secure. Large gifts, and smaller too for that matter, come in slowly to educational institutions among our people as yet, but we work on in hope that they will arouse before it is too late to utilize to the largest extent the magnificent opportunity open to us here.

The past year will ever be memorable for the great meetings conducted by Evangelist

Scoville. Over 1,200 united during the twelve weeks with the three large churches interested; 162 students were among this number. The meeting was memorable not only for the large ingathering but for the high and satisfactory plane on which it was conducted. There was only praise for the evangelist and no complaints. This was clearly indicated when the university at commencement conferred on Bro. Scoville the Doctor's degree.

The baccalaureate sermon by M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, of the class of '91, was a delight to all who heard him. The commencement address was by J. A. Lord. The senior class asked that it be published, a compliment altogether out of the ordinary.

If our people fail to build up an institution of national reputation under the favoring conditions that we enjoy here, we do not deserve to succeed anywhere.

William Woods College for Girls.

No institution in Missouri has greater reason to thank God and take courage than William Woods College, located at Fulton.

It is glad because it bears the name of the man whose generous gift was the chief factor in saving it from financial ruin and whose benevolence years ago gave for its welfare property valued at the time at fifty thousand dollars and whose support in many ways calls for gratitude.

It rejoices because it has succeeded to the honorable record for efficiency and thoroughness established by its predecessors, Daughters College and the Christian Orphan School, and can point with just pride to women filling places of trust and honor in all parts of the state.

It is happy because it owes no man anything but love and has $40,000 in endowment, real estate and money, managed by such men as William S. Woods, J. T. Mitchell, Geo. A. Mahan and James M. Sandusky, and that its plant and equipment is worth nearly fifty thousand dollars and can never for any reason become liable for debt, and belongs in toto, without reserve or equivocation, to the Christian Church of Missouri.

It is filled with hope because it has the assurance of substantial support of some of the best people of Missouri and has just received for the erection of music rooms $2,500 from Mrs. Mary Dulany, of Hannibal, widow of Colonel D. M. Dulany whose donations all told amount to more than $10,000.

It is encouraged because its alumnae fill places of trust and honor and grace Christian homes and are a living proof of the fact that the co education of rich and poor is practical and praiseworthy and that God means by education the unfolding of all the faculties of the soul and the equipment for service of woman, whose mission it is to ennoble and glorify the home and to bring in the universal era of thrift and peace. "Amor omnia vincit," love conquers all things, is the motto of William Woods College for Girls.

Butler College.

The past session of the college—the forty-sixth in its history—has just closed quite successfully. There were enrolled in all departments 396 students, an increase of more than twenty per cent. over last year. The attendance of students has been gradually increasing for a number of years past, although the standard of admission has been raised and the requirements for graduations have been made more exacting. The college is most favorably located, being contiguous to Indianapolis, the center of the state of Indiana and the center of population of the United States. Irvington, the site of the college, is a charming suburban village. Students enjoy the quiet of country life along with all the advantages of city residence. The faculty is composed of young men who have had the benefit of the best university training at some of the most famous educational institutions of this country and of Europe.

Affiliation with the University of Chicago has been found to be highly advantageous in its influence on the work of both students and instructors. The college submits the work of its faculty and students to the inspection of the university and the oversight thus exercised tends to the maintenance of a more uniform standard of excellence. The terms of the affiliation show that the University of Chicago recognizes the undergraduate course at Butler as on a par with its own.

Among new enterprises may be mentioned the Bona Thompson Memorial Library. Though the liberality of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Thompson, Butler College is to be made the recipient of a library building equal in construction and equipment to any in the state. This building is to be erected to the memory of Bona Thompson, deceased daughter of the donors, a graduate of Butler of the class of '97.

In connection with the collegiate department there are conducted a school of music, a school of art, a summer school and a teachers' college-study department, all of which are well patronized.

The college residence is an attractive and comfortable home for young women students. A member of the faculty is head of the residence and has general oversight of the young women living there. It is desired that the residence shall be the center of the social life of the college. The advantages of this home are offered to young women at lower rates than those at which approximately equal advantages may be obtained in private residences.

The Butler Bible College has recently been organized in connection with Butler College and under the direction of Dean Jabez Hall. It is a distinct organization governed by its own board of trustees, which consists of men well known among the Disciples of Christ. While it maintains its separate identity, it takes advantage of certain opportunities accorded it by the directors of Butler College. Its recitation rooms are in the buildings of Butler College; its students have the privileges of libraries, laboratories, gymnasium and other equipment of Butler College; its matriculates are admitted to the classes of the college of arts. The Bible College aims at a high standard in its work, and its supporters are hopeful for its future.

Hamilton College.

Hamilton College was founded by James Hocker in 1868. Its first president was Robert Graham, the distinguished scholar and educator. The history of the college has been one of eminent success from the beginning. The usual ebb and flow of patronage and the vicissitudes which fall to the lot of most colleges have not come to Hamilton College. There has not been a year perhaps in its long and useful history that might not be termed with all truthfulness a successful year. This demonstrates two things. First, the happy selection of Lexington, Ky., as the site of the college; second, that it has always been equipped with a faculty that commended its work to its patrons. Its students are from every part of our own country and sometimes from across the seas.

Last year we had representatives from San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia, from the shores of the lakes at the north and from down along the borders of the southern Gulf. For two years we have been securing places outside of our large building in order to accommodate the number of applications of entrance. Last year we were not by this means able to receive all who applied for entrance, so we hope shortly to enlarge our building and a proposition to that effect is now before the board.

The splendid churches, the other colleges, the hundreds of young men and women, the refined and cultured citizenship of Lexington, make it an ideal environment for the mental and moral education of the young. The Christian brotherhood may well be proud of such an institution of learning as Hamilton College and its third of a century of useful service is a credit to any people.

B. C. HAGERMAN, Pres.

Central Christian College.

The year closing June 6 has been one of the best in the history of this institution. The work done in the seven different departments of the college has been well and satisfactorily done. The courses in the literary department, under the direction and instruction of Prof. J. Breckenridge Ellis, have been tested and from time to time work in them done by enthusiastic students has been published in the Collegian, the college magazine.

The commercial department, Prof. A. G. Alderman, principal, and the shorthand and typewriting departments, conducted by Miss Fanny Martin, have done excellent work, enrolling more students than in any previous year.

The ministerial department had twelve matriculates. The work pursued was sacred history, New Testament, Hebrew, New Testament Greek, psychology, logic, evidences, ethics, church polity, exegesis, homiletics and hermeneutics. One graduate in the English Bible course, Orlo J. Law, Valley Falls, Kan.

The C. C. C. Conservatory of Music, Prof. E. H. Williams, director, is perhaps the best in northwest Missouri. Instruction is given on all instruments throughout the year. Students just beginning or of advanced proficiency may enter at any time. Political economy, ethics, botany and history were taught by Mrs. S. B. Ellis. Her experience of fifteen years gave this department marked prominence and success during the last year. In the department of science, Prof. M. V. Danford, a larger number than usual received instruction.

In the art department, oil painting, water colors, pastel, china painting, drawing, etc., etc., are taught. Miss Mary Greedy was the instructor in charge.

In the elocution department, Miss Elizabeth Hardin, are taught oratory, elocutionary readings, voice culture, Delsarte, physical culture, calisthenics. All students of the college have physical culture drill twice a week free of charge.

The college is in a better condition than ever before. Its outstanding debts amounting to more than $20,000 have all been paid. The picture grows brighter every day. An awakening college spirit is manifested among students, in the college societies, public entertainments, concerts, in the gymnasium, in the class rooms, on the campus, throughout the community, in every message going out from Bethany Heights, in the very breezes that pass over the magnificent buildings surmounting these heights. Twenty-five in the graduating class of 1901.

We admit both sexes on equal terms. Not a saloon curses our city. No healthier location. No college offers more at so low cost. Public lecture courses bring to us the best talent of the platform. Students meet and make the acquaintance of celebrities. For special information or for free catalogue address,

The Disciples' Divinity House.

The attendance of young men from among the Disciples at the University of Chicago during the last year was 49, the largest in its history. Every year witnesses an increasing number. The largest number present at one time was during the summer term of 1900, when there were 38 present.

The colleges were represented in the following order: Drake University, nine; Kentucky University, nine; Hiram College, six; Bethany College, six; Butler College, four; Eureka College, three; Add-Rah, two; Milligan College, one; Christian University, one.

These statistics are simply for the Divinity School. There were as many more students in other departments during the year, making the entire number of Disciples in the university about 100.

An effort was made during the year to raise an endowment fund of $50,000 for the Disciples' Divinity House, with gratifying results. About $6,000 has already been paid in as permanent endowment and about $15,000 subscribed. The matter will be pressed until the amount is obtained. Fifty thousand dollars will, for the present, provide sufficient revenue to maintain the work that ought to be done by the Disciples in the university.

The following courses of instruction were given: "Practical Problems Among the Disciples," by Dr. Willett. "History of the Disciples," by Errett Gates. "The Theology of Alex. Campbell," by Dr. E. S. Ames. These courses are simply supplementary to the regular courses of the Divinity School, in Old Testament and New Testament literature, systematic theology, church history, sociology and homiletics.

The library of the House was greatly increased and enriched during the year by B. B. Tyler in the gift of his entire library, the accumulation of a ministry of many years.

ERRETT GATES, Sec.

Female Orphan School.

The founders of this institution were moved by the spirit of pure and undefiled religion to provide for the education of the poor and unfortunate. Among its incorporators are the names of Alexander Proctor, A. B. Jones, G. W. Longan, L. B. Wilkes, Thos. M. Allen and J. J. Wyatt.

Their first meeting was held at Weston, Mo., June 1, 1869, when a permanent organization was effected. Endowment and building funds were solicited and secured and the school was formally opened in 1873.

On March 8, 1889, the building was burned, but out of its ashes arose the present structure, far better suited to the needs of the school than was the old, and in September, 1890, the twentieth session began with S. A. Hoover as president.

In its history, 178 girls have been graduated. Of its students, more than a thousand have been teachers. In this field alone, forgetting the many happy homes presided over by wife and mother who received her training at the Female Orphan School, who can estimate its beneficent influence? Its history has been checkered with sunshine and shadow, but through all vicissitudes it has adhered steadily to the purpose of its founders, and is now more firmly rooted than ever before in the affection of the Christian brotherhood whose philanthropy gave it being.

The value of the property, including the available endowment, is $40,000. The college building is of brick, modern in design and properly heated, lighted and ventilated. Hallways are wide and airy. Dining-room and bed-rooms are commodious and neatly finished and furnished. A large well-shaded campus, gardens, stock, vehicles and tools complete the general equipment. The objection of inaccessibility, once so strongly urged, has been removed by the building of the Rock Island railroad which gives close connection with Leavenworth, Kansas City and St. Joseph. This connection will soon be made still closer by the building of an electric railway leading from Kansas City through Camden Point to St. Joseph.

With its present endowment the institution cannot meet the calls made upon it. Many are sadly turned away where one is accepted. Surely no institution has a stronger right to press its claim for endowment than has the Female Orphan School, for certainly no work is more worthy than opening the way of life to orphan girls. This call should be heeded by parents who have daughters to educate. Here they will have all the advantages afforded at other and more costly institutions, while every dollar thus expended will help provide for some girl less fortunate than themselves.

"Forgetting the past," we look with confidence to the future. The Brother-

Current Literature.

Booker T. Washington's autobiographical articles in the Outlook have been made into a book, under the title Up From Slavery, and a volume of entrancing interest it is. As a story of social and intellectual transformation, his career is even more wonderful than the lives of rail-splitters and canal-boat boys who have become presidents. For here we have a man who started in life as a slave, belonging to a race without legal rights, not knowing even his own age or whether his father was white or black, rising to national reputation and becoming a wise leader of his race.

Booker Washington was a small boy when the end of the war came and his mother, now free, moved from the Virginia plantation to the vicinity of Charleston, W. Va. It was here, after a period of work in the mines, that Booker received his first meager schooling and in that connection he tells how he got his name. Until his first day at school he had never had any other name than Booker and it had never occurred to him that he needed a second name. Besides, he did not know his father's name and the newly freed slaves were averse to retaining the names of their former masters. But when the roll was called that first day in school, he noticed that every other boy had two names and some even indulged the luxury of three. And so, when it came to him, he promptly named himself, in honor of one of the few characters of history of whom he had heard, Booker Washington.

Hearing by chance of a school where negro boys were educated and where he might earn part or all of his way, he came after many struggles to Hampton Institute, whose founder, Gen. Armstrong, was the pioneer in negro education. Here he received the preparation which led to his being called a few years later to take charge of a normal school which was being organized at Tuskegee, Ala. The new school was without buildings, equipment or endowment. Its first session was held in a dilapidated and abandoned church; its second in a stable and a hen-house. But the school was richly endowed in having Booker T. Washington at its head, and in the twenty years which have followed that humble beginning an institution has been developed which gives industrial training in nearly thirty trades and crafts, besides text-book instruction, occupies forty buildings, all but four of which have been erected by the students, enrolls 1,200 students annually and has an annual expenditure of $80,000.

The strong point of the Tuskegee plan, as Mr. Washington has developed it, is that it aims to give the negro the sort of education which he needs to fit him for life in his actual environment; it tries to make him industrious, sober, frugal, clean and honest; it lays more stress on fitting him for citizenship than on claiming his political rights; it calls for unity with the whites in all common industrial interests, but recognizes the propriety of social separateness. The value of the institution which puts these ideas into practice cannot be estimated. It is the most potent factor in uplifting the negro race and the story of the enterprise has never before been so well and fully told as in Booker Washington's autobiography. If the author lays much stress in the later chapters of the book on the recognition which has been accorded to himself in high circles—as, for example, in connection with his speech at the Atlanta Exposition and in the conferring of an honorary degree by Harvard University—the sympathetic reader will understand that this is not a mark of personal pride but is meant to show what general approval the Tuskegee idea has received among the most intelligent and distinguished men. (Doubleday, Page & Co.)

When Prof. Max Mueller, of Oxford University, died a few months ago, there passed away one of the world's most learned men. Seldom has erudition been more encyclopedic than his. "The man who knows everything" was not an unfitting title for him. His recently published Autobiography, upon which he was at work during the last few months of his life continuing until within a few days of his death, although an incomplete fragment, affords a pleasing insight into the life of a man who was both great and good. It is the record of a quiet mind. His attitude toward the noisy world, with its contests and jealousies and its famous men who are so busy being famous that they have little time for doing their work in the world, is well expressed in these sentences: "Let those who love to fight, fight; but let others who are fond of quiet work go on undisturbed in their special callings. I do not stand for utter idleness or sloth. All I plead for as a scholar and a thinker is freedom from canvassing, from letter-reading and letter-writing, from committees, deputations, meetings, public dinners and all the rest."

With his German ancestry, Prof. Mueller inherited a genius for drudgery. Sanskrit and Indo-Germanic philology—a field so arid and forbidding for most of us that we decline to pass through it even with a traveler's haste—became for him a lifelong abiding place, and by this Teutonic patience, as well as by some more graceful qualities of mind less common among German scholars, he made this wilderness of erudition to blossom as the rose. Trained early in life as a musician and possessing a temperament as poetic as it was persistent, it was impossible for him, even as a professor of Sanskrit and translator of the voluminous "Sacred Books of the East," to become the dry-as-dust professor that one thinks of in that connection. He carried lightly and without visible effort the vast weight of his learning, looking at the world and its activities with a genial interest, but holding himself aloof from its conflicts. This fragment of an autobiography, covering only his early years, is the story of the life and views of a young scholar told in a manner which will interest not only other young scholars, but the literary world at large. (Scribners.)

Prof. Sanders of Yale and Prof. Kent of Brown University have edited a series of twelve little volumes entitled "The Messages of the Bible," which are among the most helpful books that any Bible student can acquire. The first of the series, "The Messages of the Earlier Prophets," was issued about three years ago and the last, The Messages of the Apostles, by Prof. George B. Stevens, of Yale, has just appeared. The plan in each of these volumes is to arrange the portions of Scripture which it covers in chronological order (order of events, not of composition) divide them into sections with appropriate titles and introductions, giving the historical setting and presenting a free paraphrase of the text. Prof. Stevens has already shown in some of his earlier works an unusual facility for accurate and illuminating paraphrase, and it is no longer open to question that an intelligent paraphrase is among the best forms of commentary. The present volume opens with essays on the Jerusalem church, Jewish Christianity, early conflicts of Christianity with heathenism, and the anonymous and disputed books of the New Testament. Following these are paraphrases of the apostolic sermons recorded in Acts, and the epistles of James, Peter, Jude and John and the epistles to Timothy, Titus and the Hebrews, to each of which is prefixed a brief consideration of the authorship and date of the epistle in question and the circumstances which called it forth. The other Pauline writings have been considered in an earlier volume. It is a book which will be of the highest value to any one undertaking, either in class or in private, a study of the New Testament epistles. (Scribners. $1.25.)

The two volumes by E. H. Blashfield and Evangeline W. Blashfield on Italian Cities might appropriately have been given some more specific and less comprehensive title. They do not profess to present an exhaustive statement either of the history or present condition of the cities of Italy, much less to serve the purpose of a traveler's guide-book, and there are some important cities which are not even touched upon. They are rather a series of graceful and fragrant essays upon those phases of the Italian cities which appealed most strongly to two artists in the course of a protracted residence in that country. Naturally the topics treated have to do for the most part with Italian art. But no one can consider Italian art with any semblance of adequacy without becoming a student of Italian history and Italian life, and the authors have wisely included much of political, religious and social history with their essays upon the art of former days. In writing of Assisi, for instance, two great characters stand forth, St. Francis the monk and Giotto the painter. But even the artist-authors recognized that the dominant figure was that of St. Francis. The chapters on St. Francis of Assisi and the state of religion in his time show that the authors could write excellent medieval church history if they were inclined to take it up as a serious task. Indeed it may be doubted whether any one who has not an artist's instinct, even if not an artist's training, can be considered qualified to write the history of the medieval church.

The style is open to criticism for its excess of ornament and over-abundance of allusions to history and art, many of which, even to the reasonably well-informed reader, will prove obscure unless he has spent enough time in Italian research to put him beyond the need of the book entirely. Notwithstanding that the thought is obscured by the ornateness of the style—which lacks that classic sense of fitness and proportion of ornament which the authors justly commend in the architecture of old Florence—it is a graceful and pleasing book which will not only give the reader trustworthy information about many matters of Italian art, and present to him many just criticisms and appreciations of it, but better still will stimulate his interest in the subject. (Scribners.)

The present year marks the one-thousandth anniversary of the death of King Alfred of England, a monarch so good, so wise and so fruitful of blessings to his subjects and their posterity that one would be tempted to think of him as a legendary hero were the historical evidence of his existence and character less convincing. Mr. Frederic Harrison recently delivered an address at Harvard College on The Writings of King Alfred. The address was of the nature of a commemoration of the great king who was also a great man of letters. It is Mr. Harrison's judgment that Alfred was the real father of English prose literature. His activity was rather that of a translator than of a creative genius in literature. Yet even the translator in that day must have creative genius for he must create the very language in which he was to write.

It will be remembered that King Alfred was primarily interested in the education of his people and was the founder of many schools. He chose for translation, therefore, books which could be used as textbooks. The most important works which he turned from priestly Latin into forceful, colloquial English prose were Orosius' "History of the World," "The History of the Church in England" by the Venerable Bede, Pope Gregory the Great's "Pastoral Care," a manual for the training of priests, Gregory's "Dialogues" or stories for the people, and Boethius' "Consolation of Philosophy." It is worth while, if one has opportunity, to take a look into some of these books, especially the last and most important. It will give a new view of the wisdom and greatness of Alfred and will afford an insight into that premature revival of learning which he inaugurated in England, but which was submerged again in the Dark Ages not to be restored until the riper times of the Renaissance. (Mac-Millan. $25.)

Few who have followed the experiences of Penelope and her two traveling companions through England and Scotland will fail to take up with eagerness and lay down with regretful satisfaction the final volume of the series, Penelope's Irish Experiences. Kate Douglas Wiggin has apparently never learned the secret of writing dull books, and even in the somewhat hazardous experiment of conducting her heroine and two assistant heroines through a fourth volume of experiences, she has succeeded admirably in making the interest cumulative where its natural tendency is to dwindle. Even the critic with a long-standing prejudice against the Rollo and Elsie books cannot but be glad that the author yielded to the temptation to continue these three characters and bring them into Ireland. Under the circumstances, there was nothing else to do. They were all spinsters when they began their travels. Penelope fell in love in England, Francesca in Scotland, and there was nothing for it but that Salemina should find her long-lost lover in Ireland—which she does in the last chapter, with the assistance of her two friends.

Readers in search of summer literature may take this up with the assurance that the author, under cover of relating certain entertaining experiences, will not attempt to foist upon him any very definite information about the topography, ethnology or archaeology of Ireland. There is a great deal of good Irish spirit and Irish humor in it, but a satisfying lack of guide book information. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.)

Scarcely to be reckoned among the new books, but one which acquires a new interest from the increased popularity of the bicycle as a means of travel, is Allen and Sachtleben's Across Asia on a Bicycle. These two young men made their famous trip around the world by wheel several years ago, before the bicycle had been developed to its present perfection, and when it was even more a curiosity in remote corners of the world than it is to-day. The book deals with the most thrilling part of the journey, namely, that across Asia from Constantinople to Peking by way of Asiatic Turkey, Persia, Turkistan and the Gobi Desert, a part of which route, it is believed, no white man has followed since the days of Marco Polo. Such a journey as this must have abounded in exciting adventures, but the narrative is plain and even prosy. The style has no merits except those of clearness and conciseness. One cannot but feel that, with such splendid and extraordinary material, the narrative might have been made much more interesting without being less veracious, if the authors had had a better sense of values and had commanded a style with a degree of picturesqueness commensurate with the events and scenes with which their book deals. The illustrations are copious and good. (The Century Co.)

Mr. R. A. Torrey has compiled a very helpful book entitled, How to Promote and Conduct a Successful Revival. He has written a number of chapters, and secured the co-operation of many of the best known revivalists in the country, each of whom has written upon his specialty. Louis A. Banks, Marion Lawrence, A. C. Dixon, E. P. Goodwin, D. B. Towner and C. H. Spurgeon are some of his contributors. The principles which underlie all permanent work are dealt with, and many matters of detail as well. Seventy pages of suggestive sermon outlines are appended, the selections being made from preachers who have been unusually successful as soul-winners. Mr. Torrey has produced a book which any preacher or devout disciple can read with pleasure and profit. (Revell. $1.50.)

It was scarcely to be expected that the new record for inanity which "An Englishwoman's Love Letters" established would so soon be broken by another work in the same field. But The Missing Answers to an Englishwoman's Love Letters by an author who, with a sense of shame which is the only commendable feature of her work, conceals her identity, has set a new mark. Henceforth whoever covets the honor of writing the dreariest drivel in the world must beat "An Englishwoman's Love Letters" to qualify for the contest and beat this sequel to win. (Frank F. Lovell Book Co.)

Many of the civilized nations have united in legislation prohibiting the exportation and sale of intoxicants and opium to savage and barbarous races, but the international agreement has not yet been made sufficiently complete to be in the highest degree effective. Until such legislation has been enacted and put into effect by every nation that has ships and traders, there will be need for agitation and especially for the spread of information on the subject. Wilbur F. Crafts, of the Reform Bureau, has issued a volume entitled Protection of Native Races Against Intoxicants and Opium, based on testimony of one hundred missionaries and travelers. It gives the facts in regard to the devastation which liquor and opium have wrought where civilization has introduced them to the child-races of Africa, the Pacific islands and elsewhere. (Revell. 75c.)

A handsome little illustrated book entitled Newfoundland, which comes to us with the compliments of the government of that province, contains much information which will probably be surprising to most readers. The scenery of the island according to the pictures is superb; its natural resources rich and varied, and its facilities for summer sport highly alluring. The population, about 210,000 or five to the square mile, is confined almost entirely to the coast, but the recent opening of a railroad across the island, a distance of 548 miles, has given a strong stimulus to the opening up of the interior and the development of its resources.

An address by Prof. E. B. Wakefield of Hiram College entitled A Survey of Our Diplomatic Relations with England, has been published as a pamphlet. It is a convenient and trustworthy resume of some important chapters in our diplomatic history. Considering the friction in the past between this country and Great Britain and the commercial rivalry, which is bound to increase, the author thinks the present friendly sentiments ought to be crystallized into an arbitration agreement to make war between us forever impossible.

Food and Weather.

Temperature Increased or Reduced by Food.

The old army ration for the tropics has been very sharply criticised for the reason that it consists of articles of food that any person even slightly acquainted with the elements of food knows are not adapted to the needs of the human system in hot weather. Nature shows forth in the selection of food by inhabitants of various countries; for instance, the Esquimaux in a cold climate selects heavy, carbonaceous foods, tallow, bacon and such; while the Hindoo and inhabitants of hot countries turn to the cereals for sustenance.

We should follow this hint of nature, and particularly in hot weather should avoid much butter, meat or any of that class of food. Perhaps a little meat once a day is not amiss, even in hot weather, but the breakfast and luncheon should be made of fruit, one or two slices of entire wheat bread and some Grape-Nuts and cream. Grape-Nuts are mentioned, because they furnish the ideal cereal food in a most palatable and delicious form, in addition to which, they are ready cooked and require no attention whatever from the cook.

A person can pass through weather that may be intensely hot, in a comfortable manner, if the food be properly selected, and the above suggestions can be put into practice with most excellent results.

Our Budget.

—Here's to "Old Glory" Long may it wave!

—The birth of our republic was an event of vast significance, and well worthy of being celebrated.

—Here's a  of greeting and of helpfulness to all colleges and other institutions of learning. May they receive the support which the importance of their work merits.

—Every school house is a bulwark of liberty, every college a fortress of freedom, and every university a citadel of defense against the enemies of republican government.

—Our free schools and free institutions; our colleges and our country; our universities and the union of states; learning and liberty: these stand or fall together.

—Not by bonfires and illuminations, firecrackers and spreadeagle oratory, pyrotechnics and processions, is our national greatness to be perpetuated and promoted, but by virtue and intelligence embodied in honest and courageous citizenship.

—The last of the great annual conventions of the Society of Christian Endeavor convenes in Cincinnati, July 6-10. After this the conventions will be held biennially. One of the best programs in the history of Christian Endeavor is said to be in readiness for the Cincinnati convention.

—J. T. Boone, pastor First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla., writes that they have begun work upon their new church building. They are walking by faith in this undertaking, relying upon their brethren elsewhere to share, to some extent, the burden of their great loss by assisting them in erecting the building. Let us not disappoint them. Send all contributions to J. T. Boone, who will acknowledge same both to the donors and to the home board at Cincinnati. What thou doest do quickly, that they may know what they have to rely on.

—A reception will be held at Cincinnati, July 2, for Bro. and Sister F. M. Rains, on the eve of their departure for a visit to the mission fields of China and Japan. We join with many others in wishing them a safe and prosperous voyage. Bro. Rains has served the foreign society very faithfully for many years, sacrificing his health, even, in his zeal, and we sincerely hope that this journey, while made in the interest of our mission work, may also serve to give him increased health and vigor. We warn Queen An, right now, that she is not to detain our treasurer over there to raise that little indemnity bill which she has agreed to pay to the Powers! We have more important business for him in this country. Neither shall the Mikado lay hands on our Rains that he may assist His Highness in organizing his forces to resist the encroachments of Russia. With this understanding Bro. R. and his good wife have our permission to make this trip!

—E. F. Christian, Linn Grove, Ia., writes an appeal for a mission among the Scandinavians of this country. The brethren in Chicago, he writes, will supply a house, if a preacher can be supported. We have a small Scandinavian church at Minneapolis, and another at Chippewa Falls, Ia. We have preachers among us capable of conducting such a mission, and there is no class of foreigners in this country that yield to the gospel more readily than the Scandinavians, and none make more zealous Christians. This matter, we hope, will receive the attention of our General Home Board. It is a case where home and foreign missions blend. It is doing foreign mission work at home. We shall be glad to co-operate in any feasible plan looking to the opening of such a mission in Chicago.

—Mr. and Mrs. Chapman, missionaries of the foreign society at Constantinople, leave there about July 1 to return to America.

—William Branch of Abingdon, Ill., announces that he is available as a supply for churches wishing a preacher for one or more Sundays.

—Miss Mag Wilson, well known to all the Disciples in Kansas City as the agent of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, has gone to her old home at Shelbyville, Ky., to spend the summer months.

—The dedication of the Children's Home, "In His Name," at Cleveland, O., will occur Tuesday, July 2. An invitation to this event is signed by L. V. Denis, president, and R. H. Timme, secretary.

—Charles Reign Scoville recently gave his illustrated lecture at the East Side Christian Church, Des Moines, of which E. W. Brickert is pastor. The lecture is spoken of in the highest terms.

—N. A. Northcutt, of Kirksville, Mo., writes: "Young Bro. Frank Roberts, a member of my congregation, while very sick made a will last week in which he bequeathed $25,000 to our various missionary societies."

—T. J. Dow, who has been pastor of the church at Iowa City, Ia., for nine and a half years, has closed his work there and after a vacation in Minnesota will be ready to locate elsewhere. His address during the summer will be Cutler, Minn.

—Plans have been completed for a handsome new church at Grand Junction, Col., which will cost about $8,000. The church proposes to do a certain amount of institutional work, at least to the extent of keeping a reading and recreation room open every day and every evening.

—An endowment of $10,000 has been given by Mrs. M. M. Blanks of Lockhart, Tex., to endow a Bible Chair in connection with the University of Texas. It is expected that a building will be erected for this purpose in the fall. J. W. Lowber has for several years been giving Bible lectures in connection with the university and arrangements have been made to have M. M. Davis deliver a course of lectures next fall.

—The annual meeting of the Disciples of the Grand River District, Missouri, including Caldwell, Livingstone, Daviess, Harrison, Grundy and Mercer counties, will be held at Breckenridge, Mo., July 22-24. A good program has been prepared; the topics are suggestive and the speakers capable. It will pay the churches in that district to have a large attendance. Those who expect to attend should notify W. E. Bates, Breckenridge, in advance.

—We are glad to see that the brethren in California are not behind those farther east in the establishment of a summer school. The announcement comes to us of the Santa Cruz Summer School, the sessions of which will extend over four weeks, July 16-August 9. The principal instructor will be Hiram Van Kirk, dean of the Berkeley Bible Seminary at the University of California. Three continuous courses will be given on "The Teaching of Jesus," "The Rise of the Prophets of Israel" and "The Historical Theology of the Disciples of Christ."

—We are pleased to chronicle the marriage of Brother Baxter Waters, pastor of the Christian Church at Lawrence, Kan., and Miss Ruth Linley Myers at Lawrence, June 26, the ceremony being performed by Brother W. S. Priest, of Atchison, Kan. Brother Waters is a graduate of Canton and of Yale Divinity School and was formerly pastor at Central Christian Church in St. Louis. Mrs. Waters is a graduate of Kansas University and also of its Medical Department. Our heartiest good wishes are extended to Brother and Sister Waters.

—On June 23 the First Christian Church at Ellendale, N. D., was dedicated free from all debt by J. G. M. Luttenberger. This is our first and only house of worship in that state. The church was organized by W. V. Balty and the building has been erected after much heroic effort under the present pastor, G. W. Hall. There were four additions in a short meeting held by Brother Luttenberger.

—The church at Sayre, Pa., is making special effort to pay off a debt of $1,500. The members are few and mostly railroad men. The church would be grateful for any assistance extended to it. Sayre and the adjoining towns of Athens and Waverly have together a population of 20,000, a ripe field in which there are but few Disciples. Charles Forster is pastor.

—We are pleased to announce the marriage of Prof. Christopher Bush Coleman, of Butler College, to Miss Juliet Julian Brown, of Indianapolis, on Wednesday, June 26. Prof. Coleman is a graduate of Yale College and of the University of Chicago Divinity School, and is professor of history in Butler College and of church history in Butler Bible College. Mrs. Coleman is a recent graduate of Butler College.

—If our Board of Home Missions can gain $10,000 on the offering of last year between now and September 30th, we will be able to report $100,000 for home missions this year. Will you not send a personal offering to this great work? If your church has not sent in its offering will you not urge that an offering be taken at once to help to win America to Christ and primitive Christianity? Send money to Benjamin L. Smith, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S., Y. M. C. A. Bld'g., Cincinnati, O.

—W. H. Hanna and wife, of Washington, Pa., have been appointed missionaries of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society to Manila, P. I. They left Cincinnati June 21, and will sail from San Francisco on the steamship China, July 29. The voyage will require about one month. No doubt this is a favorable time to plant a mission in Manila, and we congratulate the society upon being able to make a start in that important city at this time. Mr. Hanna is well known in Pennsylvania especially, as a strong preacher. We have some Disciples already in Manila that are known, and no doubt others will be enlisted as the work progresses.

—A public discussion between J. B. Briney of the Christian Church and W. P. Throgmorton of the Baptist Church, will be held at the Free Methodist camp ground near Woburn, Ill., July 9-11. The Baptist representative will affirm the proposition that "the penitent sinner who believes in the Lord Jesus Christ with all his heart receives the forgiveness of his past or alien sins before baptism." Bro. Briney affirms that "Christian baptism when administered to a penitent believer is in order that he may obtain the forgiveness of his past or alien sins." Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free to all who come from a distance on notifying A. Gullledge, Mulberry Grove, Ill.

Eczema

How it reddens the skin, itches, oozes, dries and scales!

Some people call it tetter, milk crust or salt rheum.

The suffering from it is sometimes intense; local applications are resorted to—they mitigate, but cannot cure.

It proceeds from humors inherited or acquired and persists until these have been removed.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

positively removes them, has radically and permanently cured the worst cases, and is without an equal for all cutaneous eruptions.

—N. E. Cory has been called to remain another year as pastor of the church at Mt. Sterling, Ill.

—The Calloway county (Mo.) convention will be held at Auxvasse, Aug. 5-7. Our former announcement of the date was incorrect. Will those interested please note the correction.

—The Bethany Beach Assembly at the new ocean resort of the Disciples of Christ in Delaware will open July 12 instead of July 4, as previously announced. Those who expect to attend should write in advance to R. R. Bulgin, Melville, Del.

—Work on the new West Side church in Springfield, Ill., will begin July 1 and the building will be completed at a cost of $12,000 about the middle of December. The members of the Central Church who are now living in that part of the city will then become charter members of the new congregation.

—The Foreign Society has four hundred orphan boys at one of the mission stations, Damoh, India. The society is feeding, clothing and educating these boys. It requires only fifteen dollars a year for each boy. The Christian Endeavor Societies have assumed the support of almost all of them. It is hoped other societies will join in this Christ-like work. Every dollar of the money should be paid at the earliest possible moment. These boys are a great care to the missionaries at Damoh.

—The Illinois state missionary convention will be held in Springfield Sept. 9-12. J. E. Lynn writes that the Springfield congregation has already begun preparations for its entertainment. The use of Representatives Hall in the State House has been secured for the evening sessions. Gov. Yates will deliver the address of welcome. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, and other representative men from outside the state will be present, as well as some of the best men and women of Illinois. It is not too early for the Illinois churches to begin to advertise the convention and plan for a large attendance.

—Bro. C. Henderson reports that the fifth district convention held in Manhattan, Kansas, June 18-20, was a very enthusiastic and profitable convention, though the number of delegates was hardly so large as last year. Sister C. B. Titus and Bro. W. S. Lowe, state superintendent of missions, were present and helped. Bros. Hutto and Le Baron led us in song. The preachers present were David H. Shields, John Bair, J. A. Clemmens, D. S. Thompson, I. T. LeBaron, I. C. Zumwalt, C. Henderson, J. W. Paine and R. E. Rosenstine. The officers elected for the ensuing year were: R. E. Rosenstine, president; I. C. Zumwalt, vice-president; V. P. C. Henderson, secretary and treasurer; H. H. Huntsinger, Bible-school superintendent; D. H. Shields, C. E. superintendent.

—The sentiments of many appreciative readers are doubtless voiced in these words from Bro. Addison Clark in regard to Bro. Lamar's series of articles on "What Most Interests Me Now:"

By no means, my dear brother, have your readers become weary of your articles. I have just read the last and sighed for more. I have not, in these latter times, read any series of articles that have been to me so delightfully helpful. Then don't keep us waiting for the half-way promised other series. As long as the dear Father gives you strength to wield the pen, let us have a share of the rich thoughts which he has put into your active mind. Profundity, sweetness, freshness, characterize every sentence that you write.

This for other ears: Does any one complain that the labors and writings of old men are not appreciated? Answer the question, why every line that J. S. Lamar writes, now an octogenarian, is largely read by everybody that reads our literature, and you will understand that there is no necessity in the nature of things for such lack of appreciation. Stagnation is death; think, feel, act with soul aglow with love for God and love for men, and the people will hear you gladly.

ADDISON CLARK.

—The following is an outline program of our first twentieth century convention to be held at Minneapolis, October 10-17, 1901:

Thursday evening.—Address of welcome and response. Reception.

Friday and Saturday.—Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Saturday, 10 A. M.—General Board of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society; 2 P. M., General Board of the American Christian Missionary Society; evening, Christian Endeavor session.

Lord's day.—Morning and evening, preaching by delegates in various pulpits; 2:30 P. M., union communion service.

Monday.—Sessions of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

Tuesday and Wednesday.—Sessions of the American Christian Missionary Society.

Wednesday afternoon.—Receptions, college reunions, banquets, visiting and sightseeing Wednesday.—American Christian Missionary Society.

Thursday morning.—Full convention meeting: Our Related Interests, Christian Endeavor, Sunday-school, Benevolent and Educational enterprises; afternoon, sections.

1. Christian Endeavor; 2. Pastors and Evangelists; 3. Sunday-school Workers, 4. Educational Society; 5. Benevolent Association; evening, closing consecration meeting.

To attend this great convention will be a liberal education in all that is best among us. The railroads will give reduced rates. The Minneapolis brethren will do everything in their power to make this our first twentieth century convention the best we have ever held.

Missouri Mission Notes.

In my last "Notes" I called attention to the fact that the minutes of the Endeavor convention at Sedalia had not been forwarded with the minutes of the Bible-school convention for publication, and it seemed as though there was no intention of publishing the minutes of the C. E. part of the convention at all. This, however, was a mistake. The minutes of the Endeavor part of the convention will be published with the rest.

We are having good words from all over the state concerning our state missionary convention which meets at Mexico, Sept. 16-19. The interest in the event seems to be much larger than common, and we are doing our utmost to make it a success. The first twentieth century state missionary convention should be the greatest gathering that we have had for years. We have a large number of preachers in the state who never attend these conventions. This, in many cases, is not because they are unwilling, but simply because they are too poor to bear the expense of the journey to and from the place of meeting. This may seem strange, but nevertheless it is absolutely true. In such cases the churches ought to cheerfully raise the money necessary to defray the preacher's expense in full, and something over, and give it to him with their compliments, and my word for it it will be the best money they have spent during the year. The association with his brethren for three full days; the renewal of old acquaintances; the formation of many new ones; the opportunity to hear the men who are on the program; the enthusiasm that will come from this three days' fellowship with his brethren in the ministry, will send him home refreshed, encouraged and far better able to do the church good service than if he stayed at home. Will not the churches throughout the state take this up as a special thing? See to it that your preacher has the money, and then give him a very pressing invitation to attend the state convention.

We are making a special effort to secure 300 more additional contributing churches during these last three months. Already we have assurances from a number of the preachers

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with you water and let it stand twenty-four hours: a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

throughout the state, telling us to put them down as part of the 300. This is good news to us, but there are so many preachers in the state to whom we have written concerning this matter, who are, as yet, as silent as the grave. We are confident that they intend to come to the front in this matter, but they have not said so, and we are in some doubt and some uncertainty until they do. Brother, you know whether your church has paid its apportionment to state missions yet this year. If it has not, will you not kindly see to it at your next appointment that the matter is brought before the church and either attend to it at once, or appoint some day when you will. The success of the "greatest enterprise on earth" depends upon the heartiness with which the ministers in the state co-operate with us in our endeavors. The receipts for July, we are sorry to say, have fallen short of our necessities nearly one-half. We must have an immediate and strong rally in order that we may come out at the end of the year with such reports as will make the Mexico convention, not only the largest one that we have had for several years, but the happiest one as well.

T. A. ABBOTT.

Wisconsin Notes.

After a siege at Manitowoc the meeting closed with 15 accessions, making a gain of 250 per cent. in the little band there.

"Our plea" is far better understood than it has ever been, and some of the best people of the city are inquiring the way of life. Manitowoc is on Lake Michigan, 170 miles north of Chicago. It contains 12,000 inhabitants, perhaps nine-tenths of foreign parentage. Of course the greater number can understand English. It is an excellent point to do home and foreign mission work. Many Scandinavians attended our meetings. I have promised to visit them every two or three weeks for the present. Am much encouraged at the outlook, and believe by holding on to what we have already gotten and striving to get more we can establish a good, strong, self-supporting church in a year or two.

I expect by the help of God to open up at Merrill soon. This is a town of 1,000 inhabitants in the northern part of the state where we have only two members, a brother and his wife lately from the Baptists.

Add-Ran University.

The twenty-eighth session of Add-Ran Christian University, closing June 5, 1901, was in many respects the most satisfactory in the history of this institution.

The enrollment shows a good increase in attendance over that of the preceding session. The quality of the student body was of a very high order. A quiet earnestness in work and an all round good feeling gave a delightful air to the college life. A deep undertone of feeling which stands for manly conduct and upright life was more thoroughly established as a ruling force.

The faculty, already strong, has been increased by the addition of two new teachers. Add-Ran's teachers have been chosen from five or six of the foremost universities of this country and represent the best phases of thought and life of their respective institutions. Add-Ran University is ranked as an "institution of the first class" by the Texas State Board of Education, and its graduates are received on advanced standing in some of the best universities in America.

Within the last twelve months an elegant and commodious dormitory for young ladies has been erected and paid for at an approximate cost of $9,000. In outward appearance and internal arrangement and finish it satisfies the most fastidious. Substantial improvements have also been made on the campus. Receipts for the session were equal to current expenses and teachers' salaries and other bills were paid promptly except a little shortage on the last month which is amply provided for by uncollected earnings.

T. E. Shirley, the president of the board of trustees, has taken the field to raise money to liquidate the debt of the school and make certain improvements on the buildings. The debt is only about ten per cent. of the valuation of the property, but it is an annoyance and eyesore of long standing, and Bro. Shirley has fully made up his mind to be rid of it. He has had his heart and purse in Add-Ran for a number of years. He gives up a large salary, refuses to accept anything for his services, pays his own expenses and heads the list with $1,000. Yet he is not a rich man. He says he must have $20,000, and those who best know him and the situation entertain no doubt that he will succeed and that in a few months. After that will come endowment. We have many well-to-do brethren in Texas and adjoining states who believe in Christian education. And they are liberally disposed toward all worthy church enterprises whose plans seem sane and practical to them. Add-Ran University is the only institution of learning owned and controlled by the Disciples of Christ in this great southwest. What a great school means to our cause in this immense fast developing territory only needs to be pressed upon the attention of our brethren to elicit a liberal response.

The board of trustees is made up of sound, conservative business men intensely interested in the trust committed to them. They meet twice a year and look carefully after the financial interests and other needs of the school. They are thoroughly progressive, and are set upon seeing Add-Ran endowed and equipped in a manner worthy of a great people.

School of the Evangelists.

This institution has experienced an unprecedented growth during the last two years. Many old debts have been canceled and the earth "has brought forth by handfuls." During the school year 1900 and 1901 recently closed, we enrolled one hundred and twelve students, representing twenty-seven states and countries. A few generous gifts have been received and many of the "old guard" have remembered us with their contributions. It requires about $20 a day to keep us going and growing; and this must come chiefly from our publishing business. Believing that our brethren are generously disposed toward the work, I have sent Bro. Dean L. Bond, of Hudson, Ohio, one of our graduates, out to bring the work before the brethren. He was a student here for about four years and is thoroughly acquainted with the work from the foundation up, and he is thoroughly imbued with the evangelistic spirit which prevails here. He is now at work in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, and the adjacent territory. I commend him to the brethren. He has so far been well received. The brethren can rely on the information he gives, for a part of the work he has been and is.

We are running our enrollment up to 130 this fall. We shall need help. God our Father knows that we work for his cause unselfishly. Our new catalogue will be ready when this is read.

A Stimulant.And a Sorry Friend to Some Systems.

"Coffee acts as a stimulant to me. I can for a time accomplish considerable more work, but then I am dull, spiritless, nervous, weak and irritable. Coffee acts like a slow poison on my father, giving him inward pains and a feeling of being generally upset. Continued use always used to make him ill.

He used to be very fond of the beverage and was in the habit of drinking it two mornings, say, then skipping a few days and taking it two mornings again. If he took it the third morning, he was invariably sick. It is two years now since we had the first package of Postum. We have been using it ever since, to our very great benefit.

A lady friend who is the wife of a prominent clergyman in New Haven (whose name I am not at liberty to give) was a complete nervous wreck from the use of coffee. About a year ago she began the use of Postum and continued in it. Six weeks after starting she had lost all her former nervousness, had grown plump in the face, and her health better than it had been for years. She is a splendid walking advertisement, and is most enthusiastic in the praise of Postum, telling all of her callers its merits and urging them to try it." Kate Austen, Hamden, Conn.

Drury College, Springfield, Mo.

A former student has written as follows concerning the above-named college:

In view of the fact that your correspondent spent four of the happiest and most profitable years of his life at the above-named college, his present duty, which, as he understands it, is to give to your readers some idea of the widespread influence this institution has exercised in its noble work of uplifting young men and young women; the broad sympathy of its management; the wisdom of its teachings, and the immeasurable nobility of the personal work of the man at its head and those who assist him, becomes a privilege.

The site of Drury College is at Springfield, Mo., a city of 25,000 inhabitants on the celebrated Ozark plateau. This plateau is the highest part of the state of Missouri, and Springfield is nearly 1,400 feet above the sea, or 1,000 feet higher than St. Louis, and over 600 feet higher than Kansas City. Here the summers are cooler and the winters are warmer than in either of these large cities of this state. No more healthful location can be found between the Mississippi river and the Rocky mountains. An abundant supply of pure water is obtained from a cluster of springs north of the city.

The college campus, of nearly forty acres, is one of the finest in the country. It is situated nearly midway between the two centers of business in Springfield. Native oaks and planted elms, maples and catalpas furnish delightful shade for all the grounds except those portions reserved for athletic sports and other recreation.

On this beautiful and healthful spot, on the 25th of September, 1873, Drury College opened its doors to all young men and young women who desired to take advantage of a college training.

From the outset it was proposed that, whether the school be large or small, the work done should be thorough. The best graduates of eastern and western colleges were secured as instructors. Three of these have been called back to the faculty of Yale; two to Dartmouth, and one to Beloit.

The college has fulfilled its purpose, in part, by sending its graduates into all the professions, by the equipment of a very large proportion of them for teaching, by training many who could not complete full courses of study for excellent and far reaching influence in home and society.

It is the aim of the college to provide for its students a liberal and thorough education, fully equal in grade to that of the best institutions of the country. While not sectarian in any sense of the word, nor under the control of any denominational organization, Drury is preeminently a Christian college and the molding of broad Christian character is one of her chief aims.

The college buildings are eight in number. Stone chapel, which was erected in 1881, at a cost of $40,000, is, without doubt, one of the finest and most imposing school buildings in southwest Missouri.

The new science hall, which is now under course of construction, and which when completed will be one of the most important buildings on the campus, is to cost $50,000. Half of this amount was given to the college by D. K. Pearsons, the Chicago philanthropist, on condition that the remaining $25,000 be raised by the first of January, 1901.

To what the writer of the above has said a brief addition may be made, to wit:

Fairbanks Hall is a fine dormitory for boys under the charge of Prof. and Mrs. C. P. Howland. McCullagh Cottage, where resides Miss Daniels, the lady principal, affords an excellent home for girls.

Christian College.

Christian College on May 29, closed the most successful year in its history. The commencement week was a veritable "feast of reason and flow of soul." The hospitable doors of the beautiful new college were opened to a large number of guests, and the auditorium of the First Christian Church was filled to its utmost capacity at all the programs given by the college. Dr. J. H. Garrison preached the baccalaureate sermon, and Dr. H. L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, delivered the address to the class of academic graduates, thirty in number. The various exercises showed an excellence in English composition, music and elocution of which any school might well be proud.

The great event of commencement week was the announcement of the re-deeding by Mrs. Moore and Mrs. St. Clair, principals of Christian College, of the splendid school property, worth not less than $100,000, to the trustees to be held in trust forever for a school for girls. This gift assures to the Christian Church of Missouri a college which may and ought to become the greatest school for the higher education of women in the Mississippi valley.

With the State University enrolling more students from the Christian Church than from any other denomination; with the great influence of the Bible College which in September will begin active and aggressive work; with a strong local church, under the efficient leadership of C. H. Winders, and with Christian College putting the impress of its noble work annually upon hundreds of representative young women—Columbia is destined to be the future Mecca of the Christian Church.

Christian College has in hand plans for a handsome new stone building which will combine chapel, library and gymnasium. It is expected that commencement exercises will be held in the new auditorium and several generous gifts have been made toward the securing of this much-needed improvement.

Members of the Christian Church and all of the alumnae and former students of Christian College are asked to help this chapel fund. Members of the alumnae association are asked to send their contributions to the association treasurer, Miss Emma Byrd Montjoy, Columbia, Mo. All other friends should send their contributions to Mr. W. A. Bright, treasurer of the board of trustees, at Columbia, Mo.

The following strong men have been recently added to the board of trustees: T. P. Haley, Kansas City; W. H. Dulany, Hannibal; M. McDonald, Palmyra; J. H. Allen, St. Louis; D. N. Robnett, Columbia. Last year the number of matriculates at Christian College reached two hundred and forty-two. In its splendid new home, with a faculty of unusual excellence, and the new chapel almost assured, every indication promises a most successful year, beginning Sept. 16, for greater Christian College.

Cotner University.

The past year has been one of progress. The faculty has been enlarged, special attention being given to the strengthening of the normal department. Prof. C. S. Jones, a graduate of the State Normal School, and a teacher of much experience, is dean. A dental college has been organized and is in successful operation. The medical college continues to prosper. The college of arts, with somewhat strengthened courses, enjoys a healthy growth. Never were there more promising men and women in the Bible department engaged in preparation for the work of the church than at present. The Bible work of the university holds a first place in relation to all others. This year, beginning August 5, a ministerial institute, under the auspices of the state ministerial association, will hold a session of three weeks in connection with the university, availing itself of its instructors, library and rooms. Prof. C. A. Young will be a special lecturer. Quite a number of able speakers have also been engaged. Prof. Aylsworth will offer special classes each day in pastoral theology and homiletics.

The financial outlook of Cotner is just now a matter of supreme interest. About a year ago its beautiful property, appraised at $137,000, was deeded to the brotherhood of the state free from debt. This year, without endowment, the work has been conducted with increased attendance, but at much financial sacrifice in order to prevent a new indebtedness. A movement is on foot to place at its disposal at once at least a working financial basis. This has already been successfully started in Nebraska. Only smaller sums can be reached in this way. Nowhere in the brotherhood, it seems to me, could the liberal aid of our able well-wishers be better bestowed than in this strategic place, in building up a seat of Christian education. It needs only the aid and encouragement that other like institutions are receiving, to be a blessing and honor to the brotherhood.

Lincoln is not only famous in the political world, but is to be known as a great educational center. The religious peoples are taking note of this and are laying broad and deep foundations for the future. The Wesleyan University, which adjoins us, raises $50,000 this year. All the machinery of the Methodist Church is brought to their aid. The Congregationalists are strengthened by nearly a like amount through an eastern contribution to the endowment of Doane College. It is highly important that Cotner be remembered by its friends if it is to keep pace with the splendid enterprises of this western educational center.

"The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century."

This is a volume to buy. It is at once a most fascinating narrative and a book of reference. We are more interested in recent than in remote history. The story of things half-remembered, half-forgotten is always delightful reading.

Of the writers in this volume some go back almost to the first. They knew the men who sounded the call for a return to the ancient order. Their recollections and impressions are of priceless value. Some of the narratives are couched in an attractive literary style and all of them are written in clear, good English. We are just beginning to study our own history and to appreciate the value of it. The time will come when every book, magazine and pamphlet having a vestige of history in it will be eagerly sought and prized. Here is a book that by its brevity and completeness, is quite suited to the reading habits of this busy age. It would, it seems to me, be well for our Bible-schools to use it as a text book or at least require it to be read.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

"Crying for the Moon"

Has become a proverbial phrase to express the futility of mere desire. There are a great many people who think it is as useless to hope for health as to cry for the moon. They have tried many medicines and many doctors, but all in vain.

A great many hopeless men and women have been cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; people with obstinate coughs, bleeding lungs, night-sweats and other symptoms of disease which if neglected or unskillfully treated find a fatal termination in consumption.

"Golden Medical Discovery" has a wonderful healing power. It increases the nutrition of the body, and so gives strength to throw off disease. It cleanses the blood from poisonous impurities and enriches it with the red corpuscles of health. It is not a stimulant, but a strength giving medicine. It contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor any other narcotic.

Sometimes the extra profit paid by inferior medicines tempts the dealer to offer a substitute as "just as good" as "Discovery." If you are convinced that "Discovery" will cure you accept nothing else.

"I was in poor health when I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's medicine," writes Mr. Elmer Lawler, of Volga, Jefferson Co., Indiana. "I had stomach, kidney, heart, and lung trouble. Was not able to do any work. I had a severe cough and hemorrhage of the lungs, but after using your medicine a while I commenced to gain in strength and flesh, and stopped coughing right away. Took about six bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' then, and last spring I had Grippe, and it settled on my lungs, leaving me with a severe cough. I had the doctor, but he didn't seem to help me any; so I commenced your medicine again and took three or four bottles of the 'Discovery' and two vials of Dr. Pierce's Pellets, and that straightened me up. I feel like a different person. I gladly recommend your medicine to all sufferers, for I know it cured me."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation by curing its cause.

Popular Hymns No. 2

THE ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. Popular Hymns No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the church.

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

SINGING EVANGELISTS will be pleased with the analytical classification, enabling them without reference to indices to find a suitable song on a moment's warning.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations, etc., especially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will not find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Like its predecessors, Popular Hymns No. 2 is an Nebraska Secretary's Letter.

Three additions at Hastings, where H. J. Kirchstein ministers, on the 16th. J. E. Wilson reports one added by letter at Chadron same date.

Good report comes from the Beaver City convention, which I was not able to attend. The program was excellent and the attendance good. The interest was splendid, after the usual manner of that district. O. H. Truman, of Hendley, is re-elected corresponding secretary and A. C. Corbin, of Beaver City, president. The outlook for a crop out in that country is exceedingly unfavorable. The wheat will be only a partial crop, and unless the rains should be more copious the corn crop will be necessarily cut short. This district is a large mission field. Bro. Truman will teach in his home town in order to add to his salary so he may live and stay.

J. W. Walker will leave McCook and the financial reason is strongest. Only a few churches in the district are self-supporting in reality. We should be ready to re-inforce a number of places the coming year.

This is the season of the year for reports from the churches and auxiliaries for the year. Cards will be in the hands of preacher or clerk by the time this is read, and may we not hope for a prompt response? This is the only report that will be called for, and should be filled out complete. The Bible-school and Christian Endeavor statistics should not be forgotten in this report. If the one to whom this report comes has not the items for all, let them be ascertained from the proper officers.

Our rate to the state convention this year will be one and one-third fare for round trip as usual. Certificates of purchase to be taken of the home agent when tickets are bought. Missouri Pacific trains will stop at the grounds. Buy tickets to Lincoln. Watch for the complete announcements.

District No. 6 held a very successful convention at Waco. In point of numbers it was equal to the best, and the general tone was excellent. G. J. Chapman was re-elected corresponding secretary and J. C. Wilson, of Exeter, was elected president. Convention next year was voted to Beaver Crossing. Waco has the neatest chapel-tabernacle-church-house that I know of. It is a thing of beauty and convenience on the inside, and while not artistic without, it is not unsightly. For the cost, a little less than $1,000, it is the best of its kind. This form of structure would solve many a problem in new places, or in communities where it is not possible to build a more expensive building. We have in the state a number of old houses of one pattern, with excruciating seats and cold floors that would be better replaced by this form of tabernacle. Three times the people can be housed on the same money.

The commencement exercises at Cotner are reported to me as most enthusiastic and encouraging. The address of the day by Congressman Burkitt, of Lincoln, is universally spoken of as a masterly effort. The faculty have reason to feel glad for the work done, and its happy completion. Chancellor Aylsworth and his professors should have the active and hearty support of the brotherhood. The effort to increase the number of students to 350 the coming year should be aided by all who can say a word or exert an influence for the school. The best endowment will be increased attendance.

H. G. Wilkinson spent the 23rd and a few days prior in Bluevale in an effort to raise endowment for Cotner. O. A. Adams does mission work at that point. Chapman has been occasionally preaching at Charleston. Motter reports the work in a growing condition at Bradshaw.

A. O. Swartwood closes his work at Waterloo. Will move to Fremont and can be had for supply for congregations within reach. Address him there.

Sister Willard, of Bethany, is practically ready to organize classes in Bible study under the special plan devised by her.

Work Among Students.

The work of the Warrensburg Church is unique in that it is in the center of a region densely populated by Disciples, and that it is at the seat of one of the largest Normal Schools in the southwest.

One-third of the enrollment the past school year came from Disciple families—either members of this communion or preferred it. The last Sunday before commencement I called a meeting of "our students," as we call them. It was a hot afternoon, and other meetings divided the interest, yet 38 counties of the state were represented. My object was to impress upon them their importance as factors in the religious development of Missouri in the years of the immediate future. We talked of where the vacation season was to be spent and what Christian work could be done during the summer. A large county map was hung up before them, and two young men, as the roll of counties was called, and the representatives from those counties stood up, stuck a blue-headed tack for each one inside the county. Then a tack was stuck where each one would spend the vacation or teach next year. Much enthusiasm was aroused by this object lesson in moral factors. They began to grasp the magnitude of the opportunities before them as young men and women. Then, supposing that each one would instruct thirty pupils, we multiplied that number by the number of teachers present, and we had another object lesson in the multiplication of influence.

Dr. Howe, the retiring president, who is a staunch Presbyterian, gave the students a twenty minute address, which was much appreciated. Some were going away never to return to school, and we sang "God be with you till we meet again." It was a great meeting, and it may be a memorable one in our history. It is the plan to hold these meetings semi-annually—at the beginning and at the close of the school year. We will style the meeting "The Students' Christian Convention."

The enrollment of the summer school this year is 400. One fourth of this number belongs to us. No one can question the future of the Disciples in Missouri when he looks into the faces of these fine young men and women—not if he believes in humanity.

Many students make the good confession while with us, and they go home not only graduated but saved, not only with a diploma but a church letter also. The good thus accomplished is many times multiplied in a few years.

The importance of this work from an evangelistic standpoint alone to our cause in Missouri is not small. The fifth Sunday in September we begin a protracted meeting with R. A. Omer to do the preaching. Pray for this, it may mean much to you through some student from your home or town.

I would like to see our people over the state take more interest in work at student centers—especially where the state schools are located. In such places the church must do the distinctively Christian work. It is a wide field, already white for the harvest.

Sunday School Periodicals.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS issued by the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, of St. Louis, are in use in a little over Two Thirds of the Sunday-schools connected with the Christian Church in America, as shown by the statistics in the last Annual Year Book, among which are most of the prosperous and progressive ones. There is no good reason why a large proportion of the other fractional One Third should not also be thus furnished, as we have abundant facilities for supplying all. The list of Publications is complete in every particular, and supplies every want. It consists, in part, of the following:

Three Weeklies

1. Our Young Folks, a large 16-page Illustrated Weekly, nearly four times as large as the ordinary Sunday-school paper, for Sunday-school Teachers, Advanced Pupils, Christian Endeavorers, and in fact for all Working Members of the Christian Church, with a well-sustained department also for the Home Circle, adapted to the wants of the whole family. Single copy, 75 cents per year; in clubs of 20 or more, 50 cents—12½ cents per quarter.

2. The Sunday-School Evangelist for the Boys and Girls of the Intermediate Department, with bright Pictures, Lessons and Entertaining Stories. In clubs of not less than 10 copies to one address, 30 cents per year—8 cents per quarter.

3. The Little Ones for the Little Folks, with Beautiful Colored Pictures in every number. In clubs of not less than 5 copies, 25 cents a copy per year—6½ cents per quarter.

Four Lesson Quarterlies

1. The Bible Student for Teachers and Advanced Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 70 cts.; 25, $1.60; 50, $3.00; 100, $5.50.

2. The Scholar's Quarterly for the Senior Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 40 cents; 25, 90 cents; 50, $1.60; 100, $3.00.

3. The Youth's Quarterly for Junior Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 2½ cents per copy, per quarter.

4. The Primary Quarterly for Primary Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; five copies or more to one address 2 cents per copy, per quarter.

Four Lesson Annuals

1. The Lesson Commentary for Teachers and Advanced Classes: $1.00 per copy, post-paid; $9.00 per doz., not post-paid.

2. The Lesson Helper for the Senior Classes and Teachers: 35 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $3.60 per doz., not prepaid.

3. The Lesson Mentor for Junior Classes: 25 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.40 per dozen, not prepaid.

4. The Lesson Primer for the Primary Classes: 20 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

“The Spiritual Side of Our Plea.”

I heartily welcome this excellent book by A. B. Jones. It is the fruit of a free and able mind honestly seeking to set forth the truth—especially those phases of gospel truth with which the name of Alexander Campbell is commonly associated. In my judgment it is becoming more and more important that the doctrine of this powerful reformer and his coadjutors should be restudied and restated. So far from being exhausted, Mr. Campbell’s influence is just beginning to be felt by religious society generally as a modifying force. Whatever the hasty and arrogant may conclude, it is manifest to sober and discerning minds that the cardinal position which he occupied, and the masterly presentation of the gospel which he made, cannot be ignored by a Christian age which is earnestly seeking for a proper basis of union, and for an intelligible proclamation of the gospel to all the world.

Unhappily, owing to the polemic environment in which he was forced to write and speak, Mr. Campbell was not always properly understood nor truly appreciated even by his own brethren. This seems to have been especially true in many instances respecting his doctrine of the Word and Spirit, and also of the remission of sins. His real teaching on these subjects was much deeper and more truly divine than appears in any disconnected quotations that may be made from his voluminous writings.

Bro. Jones in this fine and able work, has made a valuable contribution to the correction of certain mistakes and the bringing out of much deep and wholesome truth. The work is timely, well considered and valuable. Its most interesting and, as I judge, most important part, is the elaborate discussion of the Word and Spirit.

Bro. Jones’ view of the remission of sins, he insists, is the same as Mr. Campbell’s, and certainly, if the quotations relied upon cover the whole of Mr. C’s doctrine, he makes out his case. For myself, however, I am not quite satisfied with the doctrine as herein set forth; and if it were not so suggestive of a pigmy entering the lists with the giants, I should feel tempted to give my view of the matter, and point out wherein everybody is wrong but me! The brethren, however, seem to be getting on pretty well without my views, and if they will buy and read Bro. Jones’ handsome work, and inwardly digest the same, they will be able to make out a little longer while waiting for the correct view of the whole subject, which maybe they would not like to wrestle with this hot weather! At any rate Bro. Jones’ view is not very dangerous and as for the doctrine antagonized by him, if he has not killed it stone dead, he has left it in such a comatose condition that it can not do much harm—for a while.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have been selling perfumes for the past six months. I make them myself at home and sell to friends and neighbors. Have made $710. Everyone buys a bottle. For 50c worth of material I make Perfumethat would cost $2.00 in a drug store.

I first made it for my own use only, but the curiosity of friends as to where I procured such exquisite odors, prompted me to sell it. I clear from $25.00 to $35.00 per week. I do not canvass, people come and send to me for the perfumes. Any intelligent person can do as well as I do. For 42c in stamps I will send you the formula for making all kinds of perfumes and a sample bottle prepaid. I will also help you get started in the business.

A Handsome Cloth-Bound Volume of 263 Pages, Illustrated with Half-tones from Photographs taken by the Author.

“A ROADSIDE CONVERSATION.”—SPECIMEN ILLUSTRATION.

During the summers of 1898 and 1899 the author toured on a bicycle through England, Scotland, Wales, France, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Italy. Traveling on a wheel, he was able to see Europe as it cannot be seen by the tourist who is whirled over the Continent by train. He has written most delightfully and entertainingly of his travels, of his experiences with odourate officials and unsophisticated peasants, of his struggles with the several European languages, of the customs of the common people, of Alpine scenery, Swiss lakes, etc.

Book Notes.

While The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century is having a good sale—a much better sale, in fact, than is had by most religious works—we marvel that we are not called upon to fill hundreds of orders for it each day. The work is of such great importance and value to the Disciples of Christ, it occupies such a large place in our literature, being the only full, complete, adequate and authentic history of our cause, that it is a surprising thing that every Disciple who reads the announcement of its publication does not straightway and forthwith set himself down and write for it. During the past few years the Disciples of Christ have made great advance as a book-reading people, but there is yet much room for growth in this respect. The great majority of the members of our churches never purchase a book on any religious subject. This is a humiliating fact to contemplate, but it is a fact, nevertheless. The preacher who does his full duty to his people will constantly urge upon them the advisability of reading good books—the best books in all departments of literature. This paragraph will doubtless be read by a great many persons who belong to the class above referred to. There will never be a better time for them to reform than at the present, and there is no better volume for them to purchase, as a starter, than The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. It is a volume of 514 pages, and the price, postpaid, is $2.

So important a volume as The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century is worthy of more than the usual and ordinary announcement, or advertisement. That possible or prospective purchasers of the work may learn, before purchasing, just what the work is, we have issued a "folder" of eight pages, which tells all about the book—its first conception, how it came to be written, sketches of those who collaborated in its production, a synopsis of its contents, the comments of leading men on the value of the book etc., etc. A copy of this will be sent, without charge, to any one who will take the trouble to drop us a postal card and ask for it.

Winston Churchill's new novel, The Crisis, to which reference was made in these notes last week, seems to be taking the whole country by storm, as it has St. Louis. Mr. Churchill was born, raised, and now resides in St. Louis, and the scene of his story is laid in this city, so it is but natural that St. Louisans should be unusually interested in the work. But its popularity is not confined to St. Louis, by any means. A few days ago the writer of these paragraphs was in a small town in a northern state, and while waiting for a train, strolled into the local book-store. Upon the counter were a number of copies of The Crisis. When the proprietor saw my eye rest on them he remarked: "There, sir, is the finest thing I have read in years. I have sold quite a number of copies, too, and that is a remarkable thing for a town of this size, where the most popular form of literature is found in the ten-cent novel." Almost 400,000 copies of Richard Carvel, a former work by Mr. Churchill, have been sold, and the popular verdict is that The Crisis is superior to Richard Carvel. It is a handsome volume of over 500 pages, superbly illustrated, and tastily bound in cloth. We will send a copy to any address, postpaid, on receipt of the regular retail price—$1.50.

Amid the well-deserved popularity of new books, older and standard favorites must not be forgotten. Among these are the "trinity of devotional works," by J. H. Garrison. These three volumes, which are issued in uniform size and binding, are Alone With God, The Heavenly Way and Half-Hour Studies at the Cross. Of the first of these, alone, we have sold over 20,000 copies, and several thousand each of the other two. Few devotional works reach such a circulation. Some day, perhaps, religious works will circulate as widely and be as popular as cheap fiction, but in this year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and one, the religious work that reaches a sale of over one thousand copies must possess genuine merit of the first order. It is because the three works named have such merit that they have had such success. The books are so well known that they need no detailed description. They have given comfort and help to thousands of hearts—yes, tens of thousands. If you do not possess them, you should send for them at once. If your religion is a sham—merely a perfunctory routine of going to church once a week to retain respectability—and your life is unhallowed by prayer and personal communion with God, you will hardly enjoy the reading of these books, though the reading will benefit you. On the other hand, if your Christianity is real, if the love of God fills your heart and life and you are accustomed to secure daily strength from on high by communion with the Source of all strength, these books will be a joy to you. Each volume is issued in two styles—in cloth binding, 75 cents per volume, or $2 for the set of three; in full morocco and gilt, $1.25 per volume, or $3.25 for the set.

A. B. Jones' new book, The Spiritual Side of our Plea, has awakened deep interest among thoughtful men and women in our ranks. It should by all means be read and read again by every member of our congregations who has a mind capable of appreciating the spiritual breadth and depth of our plea, as set forth by the author. Mr. Jones is one of the ablest, most thoughtful and thought-inspiring writers among us, and into his latest work he has put the result of years of study and thought. The volume contains 394 pages, substantially bound. Price, postpaid, $1.50.

A series of articles by a prominent psychologist in one of the popular magazines; the annual convocation of the faithful at Boston and their pilgrimage to Concord, N. H., the home of "Mother;" the promulgation of "Mother's" annual message; the visit of the undertaker to a number of homes where the "All is Mind; Mind is All" system of therapeutics had been adopted; the suit for libel brought against Mrs. Eddy—all these things have tended to bring Christian Science and Christian Scientists prominently before the general public in the secular press, during the past few days and weeks. There are some good people who are vastly worried about the apparent growth and progress of Christian Science, but they are needlessly alarmed. They should recall the shrewd and sound remark of one Gamaliel, something less than nineteen centuries ago, which is as true now, when applied to Christian Science, as it was when originally applied to Christianity. Inasmuch as Christian Science denies the unique Sonship of Jesus (Christian Scientists say this is not so, but it is easily proven by Mrs. Eddy's writings which are authoritative among her followers,) it cannot be of God and must, therefore, eventually come to naught. Meanwhile, those who are brought into contact and conflict with this demoralizing doctrine will do well to obtain two books on this subject. The first of these is Christian Science, by Rev. Dr. McCorkle, which is the most comprehensive, complete and powerful exposition of the fraud, folly and foolishness of Christian Science, its unreasonableness and anti-scripturalness, that we have ever seen. It is a finely printed and bound volume of several hundred pages, which we will send, postpaid, on receipt of $1.25. The second book referred to is Christian Science Dissected, by A. D. Sector. This is a smaller work, in pamphlet form. The author, whose aim was to prepare a book on this subject that the busy man could take time to read and the poor man could afford to purchase, has touched upon fundamental facts and principles, instead of going into details. His argument, or "dissection," is always direct and to the point and, to the unprejudiced mind, must be conclusive. The price is 25 cents.

A GREAT BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

The Young Man from Middlefield

By MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

THIS ENTRANCING STORY of twenty-six chapters ran as a serial in the columns of OUR YOUNG FOLKS during the first half of the year 1900, and was followed with absorbing and ever-increasing interest by the many thousands of readers of that weekly journal. It relates, in the popular author's most charming style, the trials and triumphs of a plain young man from the country, who left his father's farm and went to the great city to fill a position in the lumber yard of his uncle. In his new surroundings he came into contact with a variety of people, every way different from the plain, honest country folks with whom he had formerly associated; but in the midst of his new surroundings, with their many temptations, he maintained his Christian integrity and lived up to the motto he had adopted, to "Make Christ First in Everything."

His good influence soon began to be felt in his uncle's family, among his fellow-workmen, and most of all among the young Christian Endeavorers with whom he associated, whose society was in due time revolutionized.

EVERY YOUNG PERSON should read this charming volume, and it should at once find a place in every Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school Library.

Our next engagement is with Bro. Brannic at Meredosia, Ill.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE, singing evangelists.

IOWA.

Albia, June 26.—A young man made the good confession Sunday night.—R. H. INGRAM.

Iowa Falls, June 24.—Two baptisms yesterday. This makes 12 additions since March 1.—F. D. FILLMORE.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Chickasha, June 24.—We had another fine day yesterday. Four additions, three baptisms. Our church is full of hope and harmony.—JOHN N. STEVENS.

Stillwell, June 21.—Bro. Tabor began a meeting here the first of the month and closed June 16. The meeting was a success, though there were no additions by baptism, for the church was re-united after a long division on the missionary question. As the result of Bro. Tabor's personal work the non-progressives came over in a body. Money was raised to support a pastor half time and Bro. Junius Wilkins, of Kingfisher, O. T., will take up the work at once. It was decided to build a church and a building committee was appointed. We hope to have soon a live congregation in a good house.—J. C. HALLEMAN.

KANSAS.

Coffeyville, June 24.—I began work here Sunday, June 23. Work starts off hopefully with two confessions at first service; good audiences and good interest.—ELLIS PURLEE.

Iola, June 24.—Eight added yesterday; 28 since last report, about half by baptism; 213 added during last 13 months. Begin a brick meeting house soon.—G. M. WEIMER.

Leon, June 24.—We closed the meeting with the brethren here last night with 31 additions in all; 20 of these were by baptism, one from the Baptists, one from the U. B.'s, one from the Methodists, one reclaimed and the remainder by letter and statement. Brother Reeves, a consecrated and godly man, a graduate from Bethany, has just been installed into the pastorate here for one-half of his time, the other one-half is given to Rock, a short distance to the southwest. You may look for encouraging things from these works. His good wife is a preacher's true yoke-mate. My next work is at Gravette, Ark.—E. E. DAVIDSON.

MISSOURI.

Kirkville.—At my regular services at Savannah, Ia., last Lord's day, seven made the good confession.—J. L. HOLLOWELL.

Cameron, June 26.—Three additions to the church last Sunday; nine (9) new scholars in Sunday-school, five in regular school, four in home department.—S. J. WHITE.

West Plains, June 24.—We had four more additions here yesterday. Everything is moving on nicely. E. W. SEWALL.

OHIO.

Nelsonville.—The annual report of the church at this place shows 33 additions to the church during the past year. The church raised $283 for missions and $1,635 for all purposes. All debts are paid and the pastor is called for another year at an increased salary.—C. M. KEENE.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Sumter, June 24.—One from Baptists and one from M. E.'s at this place since last report.—M. B. INGLE.

TEXAS.

Ferrris, June 26.—Fine meeting here; 17 added to date.—JOHN W. MARSHALL.

WASHINGTON.

Delight, June 23.—We have during the present month enjoyed a meeting conducted at Fletcher, Wash., by Bro. J. R. Charlton, of Caney, Kan.; his wife leading the song service. The meeting included three Lord's days, during which he preached 36 sermons. The immediate result was 37 by confession and baptism; four from the Methodists, three from the Presbyterians, one from the Baptists and nine by relation and otherwise.—THOS. M. MORGAN.

Fletcher, June 24.—Closed our meeting here last night. We were here three weeks and had 59 additions; 43 conversions. Organized an Endeavor society with about 40 members. There is a demand for evangelists and pastors in Washington.—J. R. CHARLTON.

...OTHER THINGS GROW IN SUMMER...

Why Should Not
The Circulation Of The Christian - Evangelist

It is not mere idle talk when we say that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is better than it ever was. This is claiming much, for it has always been the exponent of first quality among the religious periodicals of the Current Reformation.

Our Readers have Helped to Make the Christian-Evangelist What It Is, and We Are Depending Upon Their Aid in Improving It Still More.

We are quite certain that our readers believe that individual lives would be better, homes would be happier, and the power of the church would be many times multiplied if the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was read in every home represented in the church. It is upon this ground that

We Ask for the Hearty Co-operation of Every Reader in this Mid-Summer Effort to Double the Circulation of the Christian-Evangelist.

How are we to accomplish this result? Those whom we are most desirous of reaching do not know the helpfulness of our journal. They must become acquainted with its good qualities. Sample copies accomplish this in a very limited degree; it takes several months for one to become interested in and attached to any particular class of reading. Therefore,

We Offer the Christian-Evangelist for the Six Months Beginning July 1, 1901, and Ending December 31, 1901, for Only Fifty Cents.

If you are really interested in this question of good literature, you may induce every family in your congregation (and many of your neighbors who are not church members) to invest fifty cents for twenty-six weeks' reading of the very best quality. Of course, we shall lose money on all such subscriptions, but

These Are to be Considered as Trial Subscriptions and are to be Discontinued Promptly December 31, 1901, Unless Renewed at the Regular Price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents a Year.

The justification of this very generous offer is the fact that those who read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for six months will not desire to part with it after that time, but will renew as regular subscribers. Circulating religious literature is as truly missionary and evangelistic as preaching from the pulpit. Therefore,

We Call Upon Pastors, Sunday-school Superintendents, and all Others Actively Interested in the Advancement of Christian Teaching, Among Us to Engage With Us in the Present Effort to Increase the Knowledge, Piety and Zeal for Good Works of Those With Whom They Have Influence. Who Will Send Us the Largest List of Trial Subscribers?

Two-cent postage stamps will be accepted in payment, but the best way to remit large amounts is by Postoffice Order, Express Order or Draft on St. Louis, Chicago or New York.

The Fourth of July.

With a boom, and a fizz, and a bluster,
And a flutter of flags in the sky,
With soldiers who come to the muster,
And drums that go merrily by,
Comes in the gay Fourth of July.

There are bells ringing out from the steeple,
There are fireworks blazing on high,
There are great, jolly throngs of good people,
There is punk for the children to buy,
On the merry old Fourth of July.

And here and there, just for a wonder,
Is some one who says we might try
To find noises not quite so like thunder,
And let the day softly go by—
Our jolly, dear Fourth of July!

But I am ashamed of such creatures!
When the banners flaunt up to the sky,
And the pin-wheels, and rockets and screechers
Go off with a shout and a cry,
'Tis splendid—our Fourth of July!

—Exchange.

A Little Patriot.

By Auntie Beth.

"O, Tommy, we're going to Spring Grove to-morrow morning, Billy and I, and want you to go with us. We're going to carry a luncheon and stay 'most all day. We'll have a jolly time."

"Yes, I'll go," said Tommy, "if mamma'll let me, and she will, I know, she always wants me to have a good time holidays."

But when Tommy Carr got home, he found his mother sitting in an arm-chair, with one foot in another chair. And when the little boy asked what was the matter, he was told that his good, kind mamma had slipped down and sprained her ankle badly.

"Oh, I am so sorry, Tommy," she said, "especially as to-morrow will be the Fourth and auntie is away, so I am afraid I can't get along without having you help me take care of Freddie."

"Then I can't go to Spring Grove, can I?" said Tommy, "Billy Gray and Percy Clare are going in the morning to stay nearly all day."

Mrs. Carr looked troubled. "I'm afraid I shall have to disappoint you, Tommy," she said, "papa has to march in the procession to-morrow, auntie is away, and how can I take care of little Freddie with this lame ankle? I am very sorry."

Tommy's face was very sober. "I'll have to stay at home," he said. He did not pout or scold but as he stood looking out of the window his mamma saw him rub his fists into his eyes, and she also could see his shoulders draw up as he tried to keep from crying hard.

"Oh come, Tommy," she said kindly, "don't feel bad, you can roll Freddie up and down the sidewalk in the carriage in the morning, and even if Billy and Percy do not care much for the procession, papa says it is to be a good one. You know you're ten years old, and this will be the first time you have ever had to deny yourself on a holiday. Think of the nice time auntie and I got up for you last Fourth of July, and how your little friends came and frolicked and enjoyed the fine treat on the lawn—oh!"

Mrs. Carr stopped speaking after saying "oh" so sharply.

"What's the matter, mamma?" asked Tommy.

"I'm suffering a great deal with this ankle," she answered, "and once in a while a pain darts through it that is so sharp it makes me almost faint, but I'm so sorry for you, dear."

Tommy loved his mother dearly. He had been taught to obey and respect her, and now, here was this dear mamma who always had done so much to make him happy, suffering so much pain that she could not quite keep from moaning.

"Oh, never mind about to-morrow, mamma," he said bravely, "I'll take care of Freddie all day if you want me to. Papa will get me some crackers and little fireworks for the evening, and couldn't I dress the baby-carriage up with flags and pretend I'm a soldier drawing a gun-carriage?"

Way down in his little-boy-heart, Tommy still felt "sorry." Fourth of July only comes once a year and is always a great day for the boys. But he wanted to be kind and show his mamma that he could be her own good little son when the time came that she needed his kindness and help. And it is a very, very pleasant thing to any good, loving mother to have a return of willing love and aid when she has to ask for it.

The next morning, "the glorious Fourth," the sun shone beautifully and Tommy had not known quite how hard it was going to be, staying at home, until his little comrades Billy Gray and Percy Clare came trooping along, their lunch boxes in their hands, epaulettes of gilt paper on their shoulders, paper stars in the front of their caps and make-believe guns held upright.

"I can't go to the grove," said Tommy stoutly, "mamma's hurt her ankle and I'm going to look after brother Freddie."

The other boys were loud in their pity and wondered how Tommy could stand it, having to stay around home on "Independence Day!" And it must be confessed that Tommy felt a lump in his throat as all that flying fringe of gilt paper fluttered about the shoulders of his little mates as the epaulettes, stars, and lunch boxes were marched away.

"But it's for mamma," he said out loud, and the next moment he was admiring the little flags that were waving about Freddie's carriage and also some stripes of red, white and blue bunting that happened to have been in the house, and were given him to help decorate with.

But Tommy started with astonishment when a deep voice close behind him said: "What is it that's for mamma I should like to know?"

And there was Mr. Clarrison, a tall, fine looking man that Tommy knew was boarding at the hotel, it had grown so hot in the city.

The little boy blushed and he didn't know what to say. He didn't think anyone heard him when he tried to comfort his own heart by speaking out loud.

"Oh, you needn't be a bit afraid because I happen to be tall and large," said Mr. Clarrison's deep voice which Tommy all at once thought very pleasant for all it was so much a strong man's voice.

The truth was, the gentleman had seen Billy Gray and Percy Clare go tramping off, and when Tommy said "But it's for mamma," in a shaky little tone, he had an idea of just what it meant.

"Why," began Tommy, "I was going to Spring Grove with those other boys, this morning, but my mamma, she hurt her foot so I had to stay and take care of Freddie. I was just thinking of it, that's all."

"And it did the little soldier good to tell himself that it was for mamma. Wasn't that it?"

Tommy giggled shyly and said, "Yes, sir."

"Well now let me tell you, little mister soldier, that what you are doing to help mamma shows me that you must be quite a little patriot. Do you know what that means?"

Why! Mr. Clarrison's voice had really grown soft, and Tommy wasn't a bit afraid to look up and say: "It means anyone who loves the country, doesn't it?"

"Yes, my boy, and is willing to serve it. You see, I know you must love your mother because you are willing to serve her. We call that being loyal to anyone. And I think that the same stuff a patriot is made of, that is, a man who is loyal to his country, and loves her well enough to serve her, must be in the boy who loves his mother and will prove it by serving her—even when it hurts a little."

Tommy felt happy all over, but was only a shy little lad ten years old, so he giggled softly again as he went on pushing the baby carriage, the tall man beside him.

"Now," said Mr. Clarrison, "you and I have both been disappointed to-day, but things may turn out pretty well after all. I expected to visit a little fellow who lives miles away from here, but the postman brought me a letter this morning saying the boy was going away to spend the Fourth. So you see I had to stay at home too. But then, there was another letter, saying my dear sister would be here this noon. So I shall be very glad to stay and see her. But!"

Mr. Clarrison stopped and smiled so broadly that Tommy stopped and smiled too.

"But," he repeated, "I had bought something for that other little chap that I think I had better give you. So here I go for the hotel."

Off tramped the tall man leaving Tommy in a perfect flutter of expectation and joy.

The hotel was only two streets away, and the child was trying to keep sober and appear like a little man, when Mr. Clarrison came back walking slowly, as it was getting very hot.

"There," he said, putting a box into Tommy's hands, "now have as much fun as you can, but don't forget what makes a patriot or a good little son."

Then he was gone while Tommy was trying to thank him. The next moment the procession came in sight, and Tommy had to wheel Freddie inside the gate, there was such a crowd. As soon as the procession had gone by Tommy went into the house, and lo, there sat auntie! How had she come without his seeing her?

"Oh you were so busy talking with a fine gentleman I slipped right by you," she said, "but mamma has told me about Spring Grove and I think now you can get there in time for the lunch. I've brought oranges and candy and will soon have a nice lunch put up."

But Tommy had his story to tell and seemed to put off opening the box, it was such a pleasure to guess what was in it. At length he raised the cover, and mamma and auntie laughed at the way his eyes opened wider and wider at what he saw.

"Oh, oh, oh!" he cried, "won't those other boys stare when they see me coming along though!"

He lifted up first a pair of real epaulettes of brass with a gold fringe around them, and a sheath pin underneath to fasten them on with, then a little soldier cap with a gilt band around it and three brass letters in front, U. S. A., which he said quickly meant United States Army, and then, oh joy! a little gun that seemed to have a spring at the side, and when he touched it, up flew the shining little bayonet making a tremendously war-like looking weapon.

"Yes, I guess those boys will stare!" he repeated.

"Look out," laughed auntie, but in warning tone. "The good Book says, 'Pride goes before a fall,' don't be too proud of your pretty gifts."

"I think he earned them," mamma said quietly. "I saw a little boy trying to be very brave this morning when his little mates marched off without him."

Tommy was in ample time for lunch at the grove, and a noble feast they made. But Billy Gray offered a new quarter and his jack-knife just for Tommy's epaulettes, and Percy Clare made nearly the same offer for the cap.

"No sir!" exclaimed Tommy, "those were a Fourth of July present and I wouldn't sell them for anything!"

"So you have had a very happy day?" Tommy's papa said to him when bed-time came.

"Happy! I never had such a nice Fourth before, papa."

"And what have you liked best?" his papa asked.

Tommy grew sober and looked shy again for a moment, then he said softly:

"I liked best the names Mr. Clarrison called me, a patriot and a good little son."

"And you weren't happy before that?"

Tommy brightened up. "Yes, I was, papa, I was getting so I felt happy the minute I said, 'It's for mamma.' What made me, do you suppose?"

"Simply because you were doing right, my boy. I am thankful that you found on our Independence day that doing right will make you feel happy."

"But I am so glad Mr. Clarrison called me 'a little patriot,'" said sleepy Tommy. "I liked that!"

I Love Her Yet.

By F. K. Steele.

In the house of morning glories
I watch the door.
Perhaps she'll come—
She always helps the poor.
I see her shadow yonder.
Long days ago—but I forget.
She sleeps beside the porch.
—I love her yet! I love her yet!

I seek her in the evenings,
In the dark and brightest morn.
She was not wont to linger:
She will come soon.
Or must I cross the river
With waters black as jet,
And meet her in the far beyond?
—I love her yet! I love her yet!

Capturing a Passenger.

"I like perseverance in a man—even in a hackman," began Peterson, "and there is one particular Jehu doing business in Washington, D. C., who possesses that quality in the superlative degree.

"When I visited the Capital City I had my mind fully made up to have nothing to do with the hackmen; so when I stepped off the train and a crowd of the gentry began shouting at me, I simply shook my head and passed on. One of them, however, was not to be thus easily disposed of. Dancing around in front of me, so as to block my progress, he vociferated:

"'Hack, mister? Take you to the Washington Monument or the Capitol? Only half a dollar!'

"Again I shook my head.

"'Smithsonian Institution or Treasury Building? Take you to both of 'em for seventy-five cents!'

"Still I shook my head.

"'Arlington and Fort Myer? Drive you over and back for two dollars!'

"As before, I responded with a shake of the head.

"'Navy-Yard or Soldiers' Home? Either place for a dollar!'

"Another shake of the head.

"'Want to go to the White House and see the President? Drive you right there for fifty cents!'

"More head-shaking.

"'Patent-Office or State Department? Same price as the White House!'

"Another shake. Mind you, all this time I hadn't opened my mouth or uttered a word, and from the puzzled look on the hackman's face I thought I had him about discouraged; but as I shoved past him, thinking to make my escape, his countenance suddenly brightened up, and I heard him mutter:

"'By George, I've hit it now! I'll try him just once more!' And then running around in front of me again, he spelled out on his fingers, in the deaf and dumb alphabet, with which I chanced to be familiar, 'Deaf and Dumb Asylum? Take you right to the door for a quarter!'"—Will S. Gidley in Woman's Home Companion.

A GOOD COMPLEXION

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secrets for securing a clear complexion. But all these are simply superficial assistants

It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly, unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood, a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexion clear. When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary, take these tablets and eat all the good wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man and woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and costs but 50 cents per package.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health, and a clear, bright complexion.

Consecrated Song.

Mrs. P. R. Gibson.

Get close to nature's throbbing heart
 Then, poet, sing thy song;
 Mountain and vale will have their part,
 For these to thee belong.

Bird song and rippling rivulet call,
 And low hum of the bee,
 Wild storm-cloud, rainbow, sunshine—all
 These have their charms for thee.

Then sing thy song in touch with these—
 Still something lackest thou;
 These are but nature's harmonies,
 That only teach us how

To find the hidden soul of things—
 The author of all good—
 Then, poet, give thy song its wings
 To lift us up to God.

St. Louis.

"I—aw—understand you called me a milksop," said the little dude, with some show of spirit.

"I did," replied Longley, gazing down at him; "but I was wrong."

"Ah!"

"Yes; I didn't know you were so small. I really should have called you a 'condensed milksop.'"

The most delicate pair of scales in the United States are in the Treasury Department's bureau of weights and measures. So delicate are these scales that they will weigh accurately a ten-millionth part of a gram. They are so sensitive that the warmth given off by the body of a person approaching them near enough to open the glass case or to shift the weights would expand the balance arms and produce an appreciable error in the results. Therefore, they have been so constructed that they may be operated at a distance of twenty feet. The readings are made through a small telescope.

Only the experienced and methodical housekeeper, says the Youth's Companion, knows the agony of the woman whose maid forgets her tray while performing the ceremonious obligations of the house. That the importance of the tray is recognized in Milwaukee is evidenced by the relation, by the Sentinel, of the horror which seized upon a fashionable mistress while listening to conversation in the hall.

The maid had just arrived, and had been solemnly instructed as to the necessity of carrying the silver card-tray when answering the door-bell. It was an "at home" day, and the domestic, in immaculate cap and apron, rushed to the door at the first tinkle. The caller proved to be the most imposing representative of the very upper set.

"Sure, an' she's in," said Mary, affably, in answer to the usual inquiry, and started upstairs. Half-way up she turned and rushed madly back, snatched the card-tray from the table, and holding it out to the astonished visitor, exclaimed:

"And wasn't I after forgettin' me pan!"

Suggested While Reading Senator Ingalls on Death.

J. H. COFFEY.

In the dark realm that we call death
 Democracy holds sway,
 The high and low, the rich and poor
 Alike pass the same way;
 And rest their weary heads upon
 The same damp, chilly bed,
 And find a common level when They join the silent dead.

The wisdom of the wise is left
 On this side of the stream,
 The poet's song is lulled to rest
 And he no longer dreams;
 But lays all where the rich man lays
 His countless millions down,
 Just where the beggar leaves his rags,
 The song and wealth are found.

The proud man gives up dignity,
 The politician fame,
 The man of pleasure sees too late
 His efforts have been vain,
 The man of labor rests from toil,
 The scornful all must yield
 To the last enemy of man
 Upon one common field.

The strong man and the weak alike
 Yield to the last demand,
 And both alike are helpless when
 They reach the border land,
 The victor and the vanquished are
 In every way the same
 And in the grave there is no room
 For what the world calls fame.

Here nature's last decree we see
 In equity complete,
 The lifeless forms of all at last
 Clad in a winding sheet,
 The king and queen and all the brave,
 Grand, mighty men of state
 Are conquered by what seems to be
 The irony of fate.

Alike all hear the trailing robes
 And feel the chilly breath
 And come upon a level when Clad in the garb of death,
 The monarch and his slaves lie down
 Upon the same cold bed,
 And gilded robes are only rags
 Among the quiet dead.

But a glad day of triumph will Dawn on the grave at last
 And nature's sad decree and fate
 Will be things of the past,
 Then all the pure and just and good
 In splendor will arise
 And shine like stars for ever more
 Beyond the distant skies.

Death, then to all the good is but
 A blessing in disguise,
 Another step that leadeth towards
 A mansion in the skies,
 Whose scepter will be broken on
 That glad victorious day,
 Then we will know much better when
 The clouds are rolled away.

Coffeyburg, June 12, 1901.

In a recent after-dinner speech on an occasion when Senator Depew and Bishop Potter were both present, the Bishop said that the situation reminded him of the two oysters which met in a soup tureen recently. Said one oyster to the other:

"What are you doing here? What is this function, anyway?" Replied the other oyster:

"This is a church fair."

"Then," said the first oyster, "if this is a church fair, what do they want with the two of us?"

THE CRISIS

By WINSTON CHURCHILL

This new work by the author of Richard Carvel and The Celebrity, is undoubtedly the novel of the year. Mr. Churchill's first book, Richard Carvel, has reached a circulation of 375,000 copies, and the new book, which every one is reading this summer, promises to exceed that wonderful figure.

THE CRISIS is a story of the days just prior to and during the war of 1861-1865. The scene is chiefly laid in St. Louis. Among the leading characters are Abraham Lincoln, U. S. Grant, W. T. Sherman, Fremont, Lyons, and other historic personages who figured prominently in the great civil war.

THE CRISIS is a great novel. It pictures actual conditions in the Mississippi Valley at the outbreak and during the war more clearly than any work we have ever seen. A very sweet love story runs through it. All the characters are strongly drawn. The work is handsomely illustrated.

With the Children.

J. Breckenridge Ellis.

XVIII.—Family History.

After telling Mrs. Morris that Pete had been found, Edgar returned to the cellar to take the little girl home. Of course he had to wait till the storm was over, so he and Jennie and Linda May and Miss Dollie talked and talked, and had a good time. Pete did not say much because she was so hoarse from lying in the rain, and besides she felt unpleasant. Her cheeks were very red. But you can't think how Linda May enjoyed the scene! It seemed too good to be true—to have her party and all this adventure on the same day. It is always fun to get to stay up late at night. At last the wind quit blowing and the rain got tired, and then as by magic a carriage and two horses and a driver appeared at the sidewalk. Where did they come from? Mr. Edgar Brown certainly had no magic wand in his hand, even if there had been a convenient pumpkin lying around to be converted into an equipage. But when one has plenty of money in one's pocket, who cares for pumpkins or mice? If Cinderella's fairy had had a good bank account, she needn't have had the trouble of lugging her old wand about with her like a valise. So Edgar lifted Pete in his arms, feeling that this was the most precious bundle he had ever carried, and after Jennie was in the back seat, he placed Pete beside her. Then he stepped in front with the driver, and good-night, Miss Dudley! and good-night, Linda May! and I hope you will sleep well; and, in short, they drove away with the wheels squishing through the oozy mud. Madge and Mrs. Morris stood in the front hall waiting for them, and they were so glad to see Pete, and besides, she looked so ill, not one word of blame did she receive. They let Edgar carry her upstairs, and he wanted to go for a doctor, but Mrs. Morris laughed at that; Pete had just taken a bad cold—doctors always make small matters worse (this is what Mrs. Morris said, and I am not responsible).

The next morning Edgar would have liked to go early to see about Pete, but he was afraid of bothering the family; he was a very sensitive young man, anyway. About ten o'clock he dropped around, trying to look as if he had sort of stopped there accidentally. Mrs. Morris came to the door. "I am sorry to give you this trouble," said the young man apologetically, "but I have been feeling uneasy about Pete and I just thought—"

"Oh, Mr. Brown!" interrupted Mrs. Morris. "I am very uneasy. She was about the sickest child last night I ever saw. Dr. Larry just left. He doesn't seem to think much is the matter. He says, though, that she has the bronchitis. She can't speak above a whisper, and her fever is raging. And her throat looks terrible. To think of her slipping out last night to watch Linda May's party over Mrs. Taggart's fence!" The tears came to the mother's eyes as she spoke. They had gone in the parlor. "She is trying at times, Mr. Brown, and I try to act for the best for her. And although she is so bad and reckless, it isn't a bad bad, but sometimes I think it is the sweetest bad in the world." And then Mrs. Morris began to cry. But she stopped at once, saying she was foolish, but her anxiety had overtaken her nerves, and after all, the doctor said it was nothing. When they had talked about Pete a good while, Edgar said, "Mrs. Morris, that tramp who slept in your barn has left the country for good and all. By accident I have learned of your secret, and if I mention it, it is to relieve you of anxiety. That man was not the man he pretended to be. He is not Napoleon Hardcattle, your husband's half-brother. For Mr. Hardcattle married my stepmother a few years ago. I know him, and he is doing well."

"You have been a blessing to us ever since we got to know you," cried the lady, "but this news you bring is the best of all! Since you have heard about that half-brother, I will tell you everything, for I think you may not have heard the best. When my husband was a young man, he was made the guardian of his half-brother, this Napoleon Hardcattle—a wild, dissolute, hardened boy. Mr. Morris could not persuade him to go to school, or to keep from rough associates. But Mr. Morris was much to blame; he was about to be ruined by the failure of a business house, and he was tempted to take his ward's money, which he was able to get possession of in some way that would seem fair to the court—I don't understand legal matters—and Mr. Morris was certain this money would bring him out of his difficulty and he could pay it all back without Napoleon's ever knowing it had been taken. Of course this was very wrong. The money was spent in vain, and Mr. Morris and his half-brother were left without anything in the world. Mr. Morris went to work, and for years toiled as a day-laborer, or however he could, till at last he made his way in the world. But Napoleon became a tramp and went west, and was not heard of again. Then Mr. Morris met me, and before our marriage he told me about this great sin of his youth, and how he had tried by every means to find his half-brother, and pay him back his money. I married him, seeing the excuses that would naturally occur to one who loved him. We were always looking out for news of Napoleon—I never saw him, myself. And it was the wish of my husband's life to atone in whatever way he could for his youthful folly. Before my husband died, he began to lose money, and I was left with the girls in circumstances that are rather straitened. But we can live happily with saving. Then this tramp wrote me a letter saying he was Napoleon; and he knew all about that unhappy time, so I never doubted, once, that he was Mr. Morris' half-brother. I expected him to be a tramp; I felt I owed him the money; but I could not bear for my children to learn that their father, even when a young man—"

"I understand," said Edgar. "And you need never worry about Napoleon Hardcattle; he got rich out west, reformed, and, as I said, married my stepmother. He is a very good sort of a person, and I know if he met you to-day he would tell you that his going west proved his blessing. But I must not keep you longer from dear Pete." Then he offered to do anything for her that he could and they shook hands and he went away, as he should have done. He didn't stop on the doorsteps and talk, and he actually got out of the gate without stopping to say a word. I like this young man. That evening he went to ask about Pete. He met Dr. Larry. "Oh, she is doing fairly well," said the doctor cheerfully; "a touch of bronchitis, nothing more." But when Mrs. Morris met him at the door, she looked deeply troubled. "Mr. Brown, the doctor says she's better, but I know she's worse. I don't believe he knows. Would you mind looking at her?" Mind it! That was what Edgar had desired, only he was too timid to say so. They crept into the sick room. Pete did not even notice them. When they came out, Edgar was pale. "Mrs. Morris, she looks just like my little cousin did before she—" Mrs. Morris asked suddenly, "Did she have diphtheria?" Edgar bowed his head. "Pete has been exposed to it," faltered Mrs. Morris.

What Tired Him.

"The poor dog is tired out," said Mary, as the wagon drove into the yard, and Towser, covered with the dust of the road, dropped lolling and panting upon the grass.

"'Tisn't the journey he had to take that's tired him," laughed the farmer. "He's used himself up by zig-zagging from one side of the road to the other and 'tending' to everything that didn't concern him. He couldn't pass a gate without runnin' through to see what was on the other side, nor see a hen anywheres along the road without feelin' called on to chase her. Every dog that barked started him to barkin', and everything that moved took him out of his way to find out what it was and where it was goin'. No wonder he's tired! But you'll find plenty of human bein's that are travelin' their lives through in just that same way. They ain't satisfied with the bit of road that's marked out for their own feet, but they try to oversee all their neighbors' goin's and doin's and take charge of no end of things that they can't either help nor hinder. They're like old Towser; it wears 'em out. If they'd follow straight after the Master, and not invent so many extra cares for themselves, the way wouldn't be nigh so long nor hard."—Forward.

TEXT:—One of the two that heard John speak and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother. He findeth first his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, we have found the Messiah (which is, being interpreted, Christ). He brought him to Jesus, Jesus looked upon him, and said, Thou art Simon, the son of John: thou shalt be called Cephas (which is, by interpretation, Peter).—John 1:40-42.

This is the great business, after all, greater than anything else that can possibly engage human genius—to recruit for Jesus. And the world is dying and the church is shriveling for want of personal work by the rank and file. God never meant, surely, to save the world by Talmages and Beechers and Moodys or He would have sent more of them.

The Great Fact.

We do not follow "cunningly devised fables;" we have a gospel good news, news of a blessed and transcendent fact: Messiah has come. Thank God for the facts of the gospel, and for the great central fact, the divinity of Jesus Christ. This is not a speculation; either He was or He was not the Son of God. Andrew is convinced of this fact, and he goes straightway to tell his brother of it.

This age has been characterized—mistakenly, we think—an age of doubt. But there are, as there have always been, doubters. It is therefore wholesome to remember that we have beneath our feet the solid rock of facts. God is a fact; Christ is a fact; His divinity is a fact; divine love is a fact. "If the church would be strong in her doctrines, she must be strong in her facts. When she gets away from facts, she gets into dangerous waters. I have no fear of speculation or of controversy so long as there is a clear and grateful recognition of facts."

Private Ministry.

There seems to be no lack in this country of what we may call the public ministry of the word. Thousands of pulpits are occupied by men of piety and learning, who are telling the story of redeeming love. But there are all too few to go from house to house and heart to heart with the same message. There may be an implied or a real impertinence in it, but if it results in bringing men to Christ, it is a blessed impertinence. Is it not the business of every disciple? The world should not grumble when we are about our business. And if it seems to interfere with the world's business, perhaps that is just what it was meant to do. This private and personal ministry has many advantages. It is direct. The public sermon is addressed to a crowd; the private conversation is individual, immediate, unavoidable. And then, it usually requires an answer. Get a man to talking in earnest about Christ and his obligations to Him, and you interest him. He cannot turn the shaft aside to some one else; it pierces him. Would that every church might be blessed with a group of personal workers whose highest joy is this private ministry.

Personal Equipment.

This work requires courage. They who have never tried it think that it must demand great courage to face an audience of a hundred or a thousand, and speak to them; but it takes greater courage to face one! There is the danger of rebuff, of sneering repulse, of proud disdain. You may be misunderstood. You take many chances. But after all great talents are not required. The woman of Samaria at Jacob's well—would you have picked her out of the entire city as the one to awaken the community with the message of Christ? (Luke 19:5.) The chief preparation needed is one that all may have, viz., a personal experience of Christ and His love. Andrew speaks in the first person. He does not say "The Messiah has been found," but "We have found the Messiah." He had followed Christ; he had become acquainted with Him; and now the rapture of that knowledge makes his lips fragrant with the message. Andrew has done enough, if nothing more is ever accomplished; he has brought the "Rock" to Jesus.

Blessed Results.

There is first, the blessedness of regeneration to those whom we win. They pass from death to life. And there can be no greater transition, no higher, purer joy. Then there is joy among the disciples. Who does not thank God when he reads or hears of great revivals, and numerous converts? And there is a new wave of joy among the angels. (Luke 15.) But what of the subsequent life of the convert? Andrew brought Simon Peter, and with him, all that Simon Peter brought on Pentecost and after. There was only one converted when Spurgeon found Christ, but what blessed results followed. How many were converted through Spurgeon's instrumentality! Every church must be a recruiting station, and every disciple a recruiting officer.

Prayer.

We thank Thee, O God, for the gospel, and for the great commission. If we have been neglectful, if we have been dumb, while souls are dying, O God forgive us! Teach us, guide us, help us. Impart unto every disciple a passion for souls. Make us fishers of men. Help us to realize that this is the chief thing; that everything else must be subordinate to the gospel of the kingdom, in the name of Christ our King. Amen.

Beginning of Sin and Redemption.*

How long our first parents abode in their primitive estate of innocence and happiness we do not know. And the conditions of human life before the entrance of sin we may not be able to picture to our minds with any clearness, save that we may be assured it was one of unbroken communion with God, and therefore unalloyed enjoyment of the delights of nature. How large a stock of knowledge was given man to begin his career, we do not know. Doubtless his conceptions of himself, and the world in which he found himself placed, were primitive, and had much of the mysterious in them. But that he knew his Creator, and held sweet converse with him from day to day, is certainly the teaching of these first chapters of Genesis. There is good reason for believing that, while in many respects our first parents lacked the knowledge that has come by the age-long experiences of the race, and their life was rude and much like that of the creatures about them, so far as material comforts are concerned, they yet enjoyed a higher spiritual experience than that of their children. They were monotheistic, and no idol altar stood as a token of the wandering of the soul of man from its true home in the heart of God.

Upon this fair scene sin entered, and we have the story of its introduction in this lesson. Its form is that of the allegory, or the legend, and not plain history. This seems manifest, from all the features of the narrative. It is difficult to see how it can be understood as a plain, unadorned record of actual events. All ancient literature, with few exceptions, was of this nature, and our modern method of writing history was of far later date. We shall not, therefore, seek to find in each circumstance of the story some particular revelation, pressing the tale into the mold of an exact and literal chronicle; but rather to gather from it as a whole the fundamental facts about sin, such as we may verify in our daily observation and experience.

The first temptation to sin came by way of the restriction placed upon man's will by the higher will of God. That there was the best of reasons why man should not eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil the sequel showed; yet the only reason given him for abstaining was that God forbade him to eat of it. Only when the human will is subordinated to the divine, can life be full of peace and joy for man. The ideal of the kingdom of God is that his will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven. It needed but a suggestion to make to spring up in the hearts of our first parents a desire to do that which had been forbidden. Had they spurned the suggestion, and rested satisfied with the consciousness that they could trust the Lord in the things they did not understand, they might have avoided the dread fate that came upon them through disobedience. But the enemy suggested to them, "You will yourselves be as gods, knowing good and evil," and the temptation was too strong for them to put aside, without a greater effort of the will than they were ready to put forth.

The temptation presented to these two dwellers in Eden seems to have in it the elements of all future ones. "When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat: and she gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat." The threefold description of this fruit reminds us of the triple temptation of our Savior in the wilderness, which appealed to his hunger, to pride and ambition; and also of the well-known description of the world's seductive power, by the apostle John, as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the

The Reformation of The XIXth Century

A Series of Historical Sketches, dealing with the Rise and Progress of the Religious Movement inaugurated by Thomas and Alexander Campbell, from its Origin to the close of the Nineteenth Century.

Edited by J. H. Garrison

This great work, which has been eagerly awaited for some time, is now ready for delivery. It is truly a notable work—a splendid addition to the literature of the Disciples of Christ. It is the only complete and modern history of the current reformation, and therefore should at once find a place in the home of every earnest and zealous Disciple.

This history is divided into eight periods, as follows:

Introductory Period	- - - - -	Chas. Louis Loos.
Period of Organization	- - - - -	B. B. Tyler.
The Turbulent Period	- - - - -	W. T. Moore.
The Transition Period	- - - - -	T. W. Grafton.
Period of Revival of Home Missions	- - - - -	Benj. L. Smith.
Period of Foreign Missions	- - - - -	A. McLean.
Period of Woman's Work	- - - - -	Lois A. White.
Lessons from Our Past	- - - - -	J. H. Garrison.

Chas. Louis Loos was personally and intimately acquainted with the fathers of the reformation, and associated with them in their work. His statement of the origin of our movement, and of its early connection with the Baptists, is the most satisfactory which has yet been made. B. B. Tyler has for many years been an untiring student of the history of our movement. W. T. Moore was an active and prominent participant in the events of the period beginning with 1861. His sketch of Alexander Campbell is a masterpiece, and is alone worth the price of the book. T. W. Grafton, in his "Life of Alexander Campbell," and "Men of Yesterday" has shown his ability as an able historian. Benj. L. Smith, A. McLean and Miss White have been most conspicuously identified with the enterprises of which they write. The closing section, by J. H. Garrison, is the address delivered by him at the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, October, 1899.

"The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century" is a handsome volume of 514 pages, bound in cloth. It is an addition to that list of books which, whatever other books he may have, every earnest Disciple of Christ should possess. This history is not only a volume full of facts and information, but a story of absorbing interest.

pride of life. To this triple attack Eve first yielded, and Adam speedily followed her example, thus showing at the beginning the contagious character of sin. No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself; and with equal truth it may be said that no man sinneth to himself. Our yielding makes it easier for our neighbor to yield; while our fidelity will breed like steadfastness in him.

The result of their sin was the inevitable one, which comes to us to day when we turn away from following after God. They were ashamed and afraid—ashamed before each other, and afraid of God. Oh, the awful first real consciousness of sin! How it burns in our souls until we feel that the fire can be seen and felt by every one we meet. Happy the child of God who takes warning by this first exposure of his fearful faithlessness, and sets himself at once to conquer the rebellious will, and keep pure and true the lustful and wayward heart. And how true to nature, as we read it in our own souls, is the effort of Adam and Eve to shift the responsibility from self to another. "The woman gave me, and I did eat." "The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat." Yes, but Adam, why didst thou listen to the voice of the woman, when God had already spoken to thee? And Eve, why didst thou consent to the counsel of the serpent, when thy Maker had shown thee the way of life! It is ever safe for us to turn away from any voice, however pleasant it may sound in our ears, when it seems to counsel us against the way the Lord hath bidden us to follow.

The curse of sin falls heavily upon its victims. The deceiver is debased to crawl upon the earth, and to feed upon the very dirt, as a sign of the degradation which his own nature has suffered, in its utter rebellion against all good, and its jealousy of those who are innocent. The man and woman who to-day seek to win souls away from holiness unto sin shall find that they have degraded themselves the more in the act. Their portion in eternity shall be with the devil and his angels, where the bitterest element in their agony shall be the consciousness that their influence was used ever against the interests of the human race, which, made in the image of God, was purposed for the eternal enjoyment of his presence and love. While Eve and her husband also bear the bitter fruit of their yielding to the tempter, there is hope held out to them, through the infinite grace of their Creator. The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head, thus destroying his power to harm, though the contest shall be so strenuous that the Victor himself shall feel for a moment the sting of the serpent's bite. In this promise we see the first faint glimmer of hope for the fallen race, a hope which we have seen fulfilled in the ministry of our Savior, Jesus Christ.

TOPIC FOR JULY 14.

Individual Work for Christ.

(Acts 8:26-40.)

This New Testament incident is the ideal for all personal workers for the Master.

First of all, the Spirit was back of the worker. There are those, more's the pity, who undertake personal work for Christ whose fitness for that work is limited to a large self-esteem, and a certain degree of aptitude in prying into other people's affairs. The Spirit should fill the heart of every personal worker for Christ, the Spirit which begets lowliness, kindness, care for the feelings of others.

Second, this worker for Christ did not thrust the subject of religion upon the man to whom he was to talk. He opened that subject only by a tactful reference to what the man was reading. There are those workers who assail a person to get him into the kingdom much as a painted Indian assails a traveler he would make prisoner. It is the careful, cautious introduction of the subject and the tactful handling of it that will win.

Third, when the subject was once opened, however, this worker kept hold of the matter firmly and vigorously until he had finished. The best way to drive a nail is to keep hammering until the nail sinks, head and all, into the wood, and then to clinch it on the other side.

Fourth, when his work was done, this worker turned away and went to deal with others. Much time is spent by some of us in looking over the work we have just completed, and congratulating ourselves upon it. Work while it is called day!

All in all, it is the work of Philip that counts in this world, the steady, regular personal work. The public service is necessary; all the combined forces of the kingdom are necessary; but it is the hand to hand picking work that really counts in this effort to build up the kingdom. Let us talk about right living and about living close to Christ. But most of all let us live what we talk.

Cheap Excursions to Utah.

While there are tourist rates to Salt Lake City and Ogden and return in effect every day, a special opportunity is afforded to visit the World's greatest sanitarium and health and pleasure resort through a series of cheap excursions to leave Chicago, St. Louis and Missouri river points July 1st to 9th inclusive, and September 1st to 10th inclusive, at rate of $40.00 from Chicago, $36.00 from St. Louis and $30.00 from Omaha, Kansas City, St. Joseph, etc., etc. On July 10th to August 31st inclusive, round trip rate to St. Lake and Ogden will be $44.50 from Chicago, $39.50 from St. Louis and $32.00 from Missouri river stations; proportionate rates from intermediate points. These dates and rates are subject to change.

No place in the universe presents such a complement of attractions as Salt Lake City. It is the place of the great Mormon Temple and Tabernacle; the seat of ecclesiastical authority of the Saints and the home of their prophet. It is quaint and curious and picturesque in environment. The summer climate is incomparable. There are cool mountain and lake resorts near by, the greatest of which is Saltair Beach on Great Salt Lake. Here you can float upon the surface of the water almost a mile above sea-level. Within the limits of the city are Warm Sulphur and Hot Springs, parks, drives and beautiful canyons. Furthermore, the trip to Utah by way of Denver and Colorado Springs over the Rio Grande Western Railway in connection with either the Denver & Rio Grande or Colorado Midland railroads is one of unequalled splendor. The scenery is the most magnificent in America. Send two cents postage for copy "Salt Lake City—the City of the Saints," to Geo. W. Heintz, General Passenger Agent Rio Grande Western Railway, Salt Lake City.

The Two Archers.

Love and Death are both depicted as archers. When Love sets his arrow in a woman's heart and she turns and follows, seeking healing of her hurt, could there be aught sadder than that she should be led by very Love into the ambush where Death, arrow on string, waits to plant his deadly shaft in her breast? Yet so it is. Time and again Love proves to be Death's decoy. And often when the grim archer fails to inflict mortal hurt, he leaves the suffering woman to creep through life like a broken-winged bird.

Why does love lead to suffering? Many a woman has asked that question piteously and passionately. She has forsaken father and mother to cleave unto her husband in the belief that so she was achieving woman's highest happiness. But instead of happiness she has found misery, struggled with it until struggle seemed useless, and at last has come to accept her misery as the "cross" laid upon women who love and marry.

There is no real reason why almost every wife and mother should not enjoy sound health. The causes of her misery lie in diseases which affect the delicate, womanly organism. Disagreeable drains are carrying away the vital force. Inflammation has lighted its fire for slow torment. Ulceration is eating into the tender tissues. Female weakness is making life a daily martyrdom. Is it any wonder that the nerves are racked, that appetite fails, and night, which should bring rest, brings only restless and troubled dreams?

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures the womanly diseases which undermine the general health. It dries the drains, puts out the fire of inflammation, heals the ulcerated tissues and cures female weakness. In a word, it makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"Favorite Prescription" is a true temperance medicine. It contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, or other narcotic.

Sick and ailing women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free of charge. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. In a little more than thirty years Dr. Pierce, assisted by his staff of nearly a score of physicians, has treated and cured over half a million women. Write, without fear or fee, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.

HAD GIVEN UP HOPE.

"It is with feelings of sincere gratitude that I again write to you," says Mrs. Harry A. Brown, of Orono, Penobscot County, Maine. "I wrote to you concerning my health last Spring (I think it was in June), and you advised me to take your Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' which I did according to directions, and continued taking them for five months. I took nine bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' six of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and four vials of Dr. Pierce's Pellets. My disease was displacement and ulceration of the uterus, and I was in a terrible condition with pain and weakness, and had given up all hopes of ever being well again. Had doctored with four different doctors within four months, and instead of getting better was growing weaker all the time. I decided to try your medicines, as I had heard of the many cures resulting from their use. I bought five bottles and felt so much better after using them that I kept on until I am as well as ever in my life, and to Dr. Pierce all the praise is due.

"Before I began taking your medicine I only weighed 120 pounds. I now weigh 160 pounds. I gained forty pounds in six months. I shall doctor no more with doctors, as it is only a waste of money. No matter what my trouble is, I shall write to Dr. Pierce every time. I am now in perfect health, thanks to Dr. Pierce."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the paper-bound book, or for cloth binding send 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

QUEEN ESTHER

By M. M. DAVIS. A charming little volume by one of the most popular preachers and pastors in our brotherhood. Taking the story of Esther as given in the Scriptures, he skillfully enlarges, supplying detail and incident, until he makes a romance of absorbing interest. The book is beautifully printed and bound, is illustrated and contains 132 pages. The price is 75 cents.

AMERICA OR ROME

By J. L. BRANDT. During the past few years there have been issued a great many volumes dealing with Romanism, but none of them have equaled this volume. He deals with Romanism in all its phases, but gives special attention to political Romanism. This is a work that should be read, re-read, and carefully studied by every patriotic American. It is a volume of 530 pages, illustrated with 55 engravings, handsomely bound in cloth and gilt. The price is $1.50.

AYRES.

Mattie L. Ayres was born in Bourbon Co., Ky., March 3, 1867, died June 15, 1901, in Butler Co., Kan., aged 34 years, 3 months and 12 days. She was married to E. P. Reynolds at Marshall, Mo., in 1890 and moved to Butler county, Kan., in the same year. She entered the church of Christ at Arrow Rock, Mo., in 1889, and was faithful until death. Her husband says she never spoke an unkind word to him. She also leaves one little boy about nine years of age who will sadly miss her. We laid her body to rest at Latham, Kan., Lord's day afternoon. "Asleep in Jesus."

C. W. YARD.

SCOTT.

George Edgar Scott was born in Vernon county, Missouri, July 24 1873. He was married to Miss Amie Patterson Sept. 5, 1898. He lived in his native state the greater portion of his life and for some years before his death was engaged in farming, mining and the manufacture of brooms. He became a member of the Liberty Baptist Church at the age of fourteen and tried to live a true Christian life. He was a member of the Lamar Baptist Church when he died. He was a man of many sterling qualities: an obedient child, devoted husband and a good neighbor.

WHISTLER.

Died at his home in this city on the 17th of June of apoplexy after an illness of seven hours, Dr. Lee M. Whistler, in the 62nd year of his age. He was born in Hartford county, Maryland, and lived in that state and Delaware until 10 years ago, when he moved to this city, where he built up a large and lucrative practice. He was a skillful physician and loved his profession. He suffered with his patients and rejoiced with them in their recovery. His warm and generous nature won for him many friends. He was a devoted Christian, an elder in the Bethany Christian Church of this city. When he moved here, he had a large family, all Christians except the youngest and on the very first Lord's day after their arrival they all united with the church and entered at once upon the active service of the Master. He was a good and true friend and all ranks and conditions of life unite in their sorrow for his death and their sympathy for his stricken family.

W. W. IRELAND.

Grantville, Ind., June 24, 1901.

YORK.

My beloved father, W. D. York, died June 17, 1901, at Cozad, Neb., in the 77th year of his age. He obeyed the gospel under the preaching of James Mathis in an early day, and remained a faithful and consistent member of the Christian Church until his death. He removed to Illinois, where he lived more than twenty-five years a useful citizen and an elder of the church, loved and respected by all. He was conservative and considerate. His home was always the welcome home for preachers, and he always enjoyed their company. He leaves a widow, one daughter and four sons to mourn his death. Two of his sons are Christian ministers.

P. F. YORK.

California the Mecca of Every American.

A certain advertising agency employs a significant phrase in its own advertising, namely, "The time to advertise is all the time." So in reference to visiting the Golden Gate state. The time to go is either spring or summer, fall or winter or between seasons.

The many trans-continental lines of railway now in operation afford, not only cheap fare, but superior service and quick time. Some are better than others in this respect. Surely no system has surpassed the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain in providing for the comfort and convenience of the traveling public. Especially has the passenger department of this great system exerted itself in preparing for the Epworth League convention to be held in San Francisco from July 18th to 21st. They offer a choice of two routes, with an innumerable number of advantages as to stop-overs at points of interest, with a list of diverse routes in the far west which will no doubt puzzle many a "tenderfoot."

The very low rates offered to the Epworth League are open to all. Many who have waited long and patiently for opportunity to visit the land of sunshine and flowers will do so at this most opportune time. Tickets are good going from July 6th to 13th, with a final return limit of August 31st.

NOTES

The total enrollment, all departments, last year, 1,764, not counting the Summer Schools, 1,140.

Notable material improvements of the past summer: Completion of Auditorium; new portico and other improvements to Main Building; new Pharmaceutical Laboratory; new rooms for Business Department, new desks, etc.; new Bacteriological Laboratory; 3,500 square feet of cement walks; renovation of Gymnasium.

In faculty equipment, the most notable thing has been: 1. Complete reorganization of the Department of Music, under the leadership of Mr. Frederic Howard, of New York; 2. The Bible College has been greatly strengthened by the addition of Dr. Clinton Lockhart; 3. The Medical Department has been completely merged into the organic life of the University. The first and second years are now taught in the Science Hall on the Campus; 4. The Des Moines College of Dental Surgery has become an affiliated department. It will add eighty students to the College roll; 5. The addition of many new teachers to the faculty of the University.

The University has made a steady and rapid growth in the twenty years of its history. It is expected the enrollment will reach 1,900 the coming year. The location in Des Moines, with its state and city libraries, its courts, hospitals, churches, societies, etc., is excellent in every respect. Send for general catalog, 200 pages, free.

Hawaii's First Year as a Territory.

On July 14 Hawaii will celebrate the first anniversary of the organization of its territorial government. It would not be fair to judge the islands or their inhabitants by the achievements of so brief a period, but it is worth while nevertheless to note their experience in this year of representative government. The right of suffrage was restricted by a property requirement—ownership of property worth $1,000 or an income of $600 a year. But this did not prevent the least intelligent element, the Home Rule Party composed of anti-annexationists, from getting control of both houses of the Legislature. The session was marked by a degree of turbulence and by a glaring lack of intelligence which would be discouraging if it were to be considered as a fair representation of Hawaiian legislative capacity. Many of these vigorous advocates of Home Rule were illiterate and it is reported that one member introduced a bill to regulate the ebb and flow of the tide. Gov. Dole held as firm a rein over the Legislature as possible and prevented most of its vagaries and absurdities from reaching their consummation. Angered by his repeated vetoes and by his well-deserved rebuke for wasting time in irrelevant debate, the Legislature petitioned the President to recall Gov. Dole. The trouble with the Hawaiian legislators and those who elected them is that they do not know how to govern. They mean well enough, but they are as incompetent in the presence of an actual responsibility as a high school debating society would be in attempting to discharge the functions of Congress. They will probably learn better in a few years, if some wise measure can be adopted to keep them from ruining the plant during their apprenticeship. So far as industrial and commercial conditions are concerned, Hawaii's first year of territorial government has been a prosperous one.

Opening of the Indian Lands. The President's long-awaited proclamation opening the lands of the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache and Wichita tribes for settlement by whites has been made public. The reservation will be opened on August 6, the last day allowed by the act of Congress. The plan of opening contains some important new features, the chief of which is the substitution of a drawing by lot in place of the race for claims, as at the opening of the Cherokee strip. Two land offices are established, at El Reno and Lawton, where applicants will register and prove their eligibility. The registration will begin July 10 and close July 26. Beginning July 29 and continuing until August 5, drawings will be made and claims will be assigned by lot. On August 6 the reservation will be opened for actual settlement and homestead entries will be made at the local land offices within the next sixty days. Attempts are still being made by injunction to delay or prevent the opening of the reservation, but there is little probability that these attempts will meet with any success. There will doubtless be many more applicants than claims and the lucky ones will be notified by mail. There are about 12,500 tracts of 160 acres each which can be secured under the homestead laws. The new method of opening has not prevented a considerable number of "sooners" from swarming into the territory in the hope that their prior presence on the ground will enable them to establish a claim. Many of them are men who cannot be convinced without violence and they will probably make trouble, but there will be less difficulty in effecting a just settlement and punishing the interlopers under the new method than under the old. The old plan, however, of lining up at the edge of the strip, awaiting the pistol-shot which announced the moment of opening and making a dash for claims, was picturesque even if not peaceable.

The Troubles of British Liberalism.

The Liberal party in England is apparently in the throes of dissolution. It will not dissolve, but for their lack of a leader and a definite policy it will have an uncomfortable time between now and the end of the Boer war. Most of the Liberals are opposed to the war, but none of them can suggest any reasonable way out of it, and a policy of pure negation, as American politicians know, is not conducive to harmony within a party. At present there are signs of a defection under the leadership of Mr. Asquith, who thinks the government acted unwisely in some of the preliminaries of the war, but is in sympathy with the Chamberlain program for fighting it out. He resents Mr. Harcourt's attempt to read him out of the Liberal party, though he is in substantial agreement with the Conservatives on every point of their present policy. There are not a few Liberals who believe with Mr. Asquith that the war is unfortunate and unwise but that England's position is just and that patriotism demands that the war be fought through to a finish. The possible defection of these "Liberal Imperialists" is comparable to the withdrawal of the Liberal Unionist faction which rejected Gladstone's home rule measure. The difference is that what was left of the party in that case had a definite policy and a capable leader. In this case it has neither. This threatened break-up of the opposition has been accompanied by a similar cleavage in the Conservative party. The new war taxes have cooled the ardor of some, and others, while theoretically approving of the war, have come to the conclusion that the price of victory is too great. Altogether, the web of British politics is decidedly tangled. The Conservative party can only go on doing what it has been doing without success for the last two years, in hope that the end will come soon; and the Liberals can do nothing but denounce it as all wrong without suggesting a better course, and wait for a leader to come to the front who has something positive to offer.

John Fiske.

The sudden death of Prof. John Fiske, historian and lecturer, on July 4, leaves a wide gap in the ranks of American scholarship. He had already produced much, but, at the age of fifty-nine with boundless energy and apparently unlimited physical endurance, he seemed only at the zenith of his power and activity. The boyhood of Prof. Fiske exhibited a degree of precocity which can be compared only with Macaulay and John Stuart Mill and, like them, the extraordinary promise of his early attainments was fulfilled in his mature development. In two fields he has performed noteworthy service. In his two little volumes, "The Destiny of Man" and "The Idea of God," he gave to theistic evolution as clear and convincing a statement as it has ever received. His chief work, however, was as a historian. Since severing his connection with Harvard University twenty years ago, he has had in preparation a series of works on American history. About seven volumes of this have already been published, beginning with "The Discovery of America" and ending with "The Critical Period of American History," i. e., the formation of the Constitution. For solid historical scholarship combined with vividness of presentation, these works are without a superior in their field and have few equals in the domain of history. The completion of the series down to date, which would require five or six more volumes, would have given us undoubtedly the best history of America in existence. Prof. Fiske was to have participated in the celebration of the one thousandth anniversary of the death of King Alfred at Winchester, England, in the present month, and his address on this occasion was looked forward to as an event in Anglo-American scholarship.

Washington Memorial Institution.

For many years there has been a general feeling that our public educational system would not be complete until there was organized at Washington a great national university, which would have behind it the resources of the federal government and would afford equipment and conditions as nearly perfect as possible for advanced graduate study. It has generally been assumed that such an institution would be exclusively a post-graduate school for the training of specialists. Last month, with very little noise and ceremony, a plan was inaugurated which virtually meets these requirements so far as scientific work is concerned. The fact may not be generally realized, but our government has the greatest plant in the world for scientific investigation. The maintenance of it costs $10,000,000 a year, a sum nearly equal to the total endowment of our richest university. By act of Congress, the heads of departments and directors of bureaus and laboratories have been authorized to admit student workers for advanced graduate work of a practical sort. No degrees will be granted and no tuition charged; in some cases the students will even receive pay for what they do. It is the expectation that students who are working for advanced degrees can come here for a period and on returning to their own universities get credit for the work done here. The list of directors of the Washington Memorial Institution, as this new scientific school is called, includes many of the best known educators in the country and every name in the list has a national reputation. Among the university presidents on the board are Pres. Hadley of Yale, Pres. Northrop of Wisconsin, Pres. Harper of Chicago, Pres. Pritchard of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Ex-Pres. Gilman of Johns Hopkins. The plan which is being put into operation is doubly commendable since it not only provides an institution of the highest order for strictly specialized scientific work, but also utilizes economically the vast equipment of the various federal departments so that the greatest possible educational value is received with the least possible extra expenditure.

The Congo Free State. While the troubles in South Africa are still unsettled, a set of complications has arisen touching the Congo Free State in central and west Africa. By agreement of the European Powers which participated in the Berlin Conference in 1885, a vast territory, including most of the Congo valley and touching the west coast of Africa at the mouth of the Congo River, was set apart as an independent state under the absolute sovereignty of Leopold II, King of Belgium. With the exception of certain conditions stipulated by the Powers, including freedom of trade and navigation and the abolition of the slave trade, Leopold is more absolute in the Congo Free State than the Czar of Russia is in Russia, and even these conditions are successfully evaded. There is no connection between Belgium and the Congo Free State except that they have a common monarch. The extortionate taxes on rubber and ivory which are demanded from the natives do not go into the Belgian national treasury, but enrich the king's private purse. At the time this arrangement was made, Leopold not only agreed to bequeath his rights in the Congo to the Belgian government but promised to allow annexation before his death. The Belgian parliament is now ready to annex and has so voted, but the king, having found in his African subjects a rich source of revenue, has no mind to allow this revenue to be transferred from his private purse to the general treasury. Leopold is a keen trader and has apparently never looked upon the Congo State in any other light than as a source of revenue. It is one of the worst governed parts of the earth's surface. The dispute between the king and the parliament is a purely commercial question as to whether the king or the government shall get the millions that are being extorted from the inhabitants of the Congo Free State.

Privateers or Pirates.

It is reported that ex-President Kruger is considering the advisability of issuing letters of marque commissioning privateers to prey on British commerce and that certain friends of the Boers threaten to fit out privateers whether letters of marque are issued or not. It really makes little difference. It is not likely that the Powers would recognize Mr. Kruger's right to issue letters of marque as a de facto ruler, and it is equally unlikely that they would in any case respect commissions authorizing this irregular and antiquated form of naval warfare. As the civilized Powers now interpret the rules of war, privateering practically amounts to piracy, and there is not a respectable navy on the sea that would not co-operate in suppressing it regardless of sympathy for its supposed beneficiaries.

Resignation of Mr. Dawes.

Charles G. Dawes, controller of the currency, has resigned his office to become candidate for an Illinois senatorship which will be vacant when Senator Mason's term expires. Since the senatorial election does not occur until January, 1903, and the legislature which is to choose the senator will not be elected until about sixteen months from the present time, it will be seen that Mr. Dawes proposes to take a long run before making his jump for the senatorial seat. His resignation is the result of pressure brought to bear not only by Senator Mason, who will probably be his rival in the contest, but also by those who considered that his avowed candidacy while holding office was an embarrassment to the administration. It is an open secret that the administration does not wish Senator Mason to be re-elected and the influence which emanates from Washington will be against him if he enters the contest.

Prince Hohenlohe.

The second chancellor of the German Empire, Prince Clovis Hohenlohe-Schillingsfuerst, died last Saturday at the age of eighty-two. He had only recently retired from his high office, in which he was succeeded by Count von Buelow. He had been intimately connected with Bavarian and German politics for more than sixty years and took a prominent part in the events preceding and following the organization of the German Empire in 1870. Succeeding Bismarck as chancellor, he has never been considered a vigorous character in that capacity and it has been the popular opinion that the emperor was virtually his own chancellor. His retirement from office was due partly to old age and partly to disapproval of the emperor's aggressive policy in China.

Free Trade for Porto Rico.

The Porto Rican legislature has passed a resolution calling the President's attention to the fact that it has now made provision to meet the expenses of the government by internal taxation and requesting that, in conformity with the Foraker law, he issue a proclamation abolishing the fifteen per cent. tariff between that island and the United States. Gov. Allen has given his approval to this resolution and the President has signified his intention to issue such a proclamation inaugurating free trade on July 25, as the Porto Ricans request. This is the day on which the island first came under the American flag. Commerce between Porto Rico and the United States has nearly doubled in the past two years.

Brevities.

Gen. Wood is recovering from an attack of typhoid fever at Havana.

Civil government in the Philippines begins with $4,000,000 in the insular treasury—not a bad sum to set up housekeeping on.

Minister Wu made a Fourth of July address in the very cradle of liberty, Independence Hall, Philadelphia.

A train was held up in Montana a few days ago and the robbers secured $30,000. So long as such events continue to transpire, the East can never be persuaded that the West has ceased to be wild and woolly.

J. P. Morgan and his associates, who own the Northern Pacific with connections to the Atlantic Coast and recently bought the Leyland Line of transatlantic steamers, have now succeeded in girdling the globe by purchasing the Glen Line which runs from London to Tacoma via the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean Sea.

The United States Minister at Constantinople is to make a demand on the Sultan for the $90,000 which he owes to our government and the demand is to be backed up with war ships. This announcement is made in good faith, but it has a strangely familiar sound. It appears as regularly as Standard Oil dividends, but the Sultan still holds on to the $90,000.

The strike of the Amalgamated Association of steel workers is believed to be about at an end. It is the last phase of the machinists' strike of two months ago. The nine-hour day has been granted by nearly all of the mills, but the demand that all non-union mills be unionized has been received less favorably. The dispute is now between the Amalgamated Association and the United States Steel Corporation, of which Mr. Schwab is president.

It is stated by the Philadelphia Press that a million dollars was spent in the recent session of the Pennsylvania Legislature in buying votes for franchise legislation. Some individual votes brought as much as $35,000. The franchise manipulators must have been caught "short" or they never would have paid such prices. There is not a purchasable man in the Pennsylvania Legislature who is worth any such sum, but a bull market sometimes carries prices to an unreasonable figure.

An anonymous donor is reported to have given $100,000 to establish a professorship of the Chinese language and literature at Columbia University on the ground that our increasingly intimate relations with China demand a better acquaintance with her language and her classics. Courses in this department are not likely to be overcrowded and will not be pursued for general culture, but they may be of great service to the prospective missionary, merchant or consular representative in China.

Bearing Witness to the Truth.

History furnishes no sublimer example of heroism than the incident in the life of Jesus in which He is confronted by Pilate and demanded to answer whether indeed He be a King. The Roman governor held in his hand the power of life or death. The answer of Jesus is that He was born into the world that He might bear witness to the truth. He was there a prisoner at Pilate's bar because He was faithful to that mission. If He had kept silent, instead of speaking the truth that was in Him, He might have avoided this fate. But it was no part of his program to save His life at the expense of the truth. He must accomplish his mission, come life or death. As we look back now across the chasm of the centuries at that pale Figure, declaring the purpose of His mission to the Roman governor, and heroically facing death rather than swerve from the truth, our hearts go out to Him in unstinted admiration—yea, in adoring worship.

What were some of the truths to which Jesus bore witness? There is, first of all, the truth of God's fatherhood. He taught that the earth contains but one family, and God is its Father; that He loves all men irrespective of race, nationality or degree of civilization. This truth was most offensive to Jewish pride and exclusiveness. They expected their Messiah to champion the cause of the Jews as against the Gentile world. But Jesus testified to the universality of God's fatherhood. He also bore witness to a spiritual kingdom founded on truth and righteousness, the character of whose citizenship is described in the beatitudes. These qualities of citizenship—the poor in spirit, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, meekness, lovers and makers of peace, pure in heart, enduring persecution for truth's sake—were diametrically opposed to the popular conceptions of the times. He also emphasized the internal as against the external, and made purity of heart an essential condition of seeing God. Not ceremonies and outward ordinances, but a purified heart and an obedient spirit were the essential things. This, too, laid the axe of reform at the root of Jewish teaching. Jesus laid supreme emphasis upon the life hereafter, or the life of the soul, attaching little importance to the life of the body. Men were taught to fear, not him who has the power to destroy the body alone, but Him who has the power to destroy both soul and body.

These were all unwelcome truths. No one knew that better than Jesus. They were, however, necessary truths. Humanity could not reach its true goal, nor God's purposes concerning men be realized, until these truths become recognized as fundamental in the life of the world. He declared it to be His mission to bear witness to the truth, not by word alone, but by the life which He lived, by the deeds which He wrought. "Every plant," He declared, "which my heavenly Father hath not planted, must be rooted up." This, of course, brought Him into direct antagonism with the religious authorities of His time. His name was cast out of the synagogue as evil. He was denounced as a heretic, an overthrower of kingdoms, a fanatic, and even as in league with Beelzebub. Strange treatment, this, for One who came to teach the world the truth! And yet, has it not been the fate of all reformers since the world began?

And this brings us to the practical point of this article: It is quite possible for us to admire the heroism of Jesus while we are false to His example in the sphere in which we are called to serve Him. We need not argue that Jesus expects us also to bear witness to the truth according to the measure of light which we have. Are we doing that? Are preachers, editors, teachers and public officials in the state, loyal to this example of Christ? Do we allow considerations of personal ease, popularity or pecuniary reward to determine what truths we shall utter and what we shall withhold from the public? Is there not a vast amount of what is known as "playing to the gallery," even in religious journalism and in the pulpit, to say nothing of the secular press and the political rostrum? We think no one who is a careful observer of what is going on in the world can deny that such is the case. It is this fact that fetters all progress, whether in the sphere of education, religion, politics or business. If Christ's church would be true to the example of its Founder, it must also bear witness to the truth, and only by so doing can it accomplish its mission in the world.

A little reflection will suffice to show that the cause of Christ is best subserved and the progress of his kingdom most speedily advanced by each disciple of Christ, in his station in life, bearing witness to the truth as God gives him to see it. This is necessary, not only in the public positions in Church and State, but in the private callings of life. We are coming, happily, to ignore the distinction, which once prevailed too largely, between what have been known as the secular and religious callings. It is now seen and realized, more than ever before, perhaps, that one may serve God acceptably in every calling which ministers to any legitimate want of men. It should be the supreme aim of every one wishing to live the Christian life, to so use his calling, whether it be a public or a private one, as to make it bear witness to the truth. This can be done in the home, on the farm and in the shop, as well as in the pulpit, in the editorial office, on public platforms, or in legislative halls. Have we any right to call ourselves Christians—that is, followers of Christ—unless we are, according to the measure of our ability, thus bearing witness to the truth in all our relations in life? If we answer this negatively, as it seems to us we must, then this question of witness-bearing for the truth becomes one of supreme, practical and personal importance to every one of us.

The difference between temperance and asceticism is not the difference between partial and total abstinence from things harmful. But asceticism looks upon the cutting off of a habit or a pleasure as virtuous in itself, while temperance seeks its reward in the increased value of what remains. "The measure and value of our temperance," says Pres. Hyde of Bowdoin College, "is not the indulgences which we lop off from the branches of life here and there, but the beauty and sweetness and worth of the fruit which is borne by our lives as a whole." It is the pruned vine, not the pruning-hook, which bears fruit.

"The Value of Miracles."

We print elsewhere a brief article under the above title. Its author assures us that he has no desire to discuss the subject at greater length and that he will decline to be drawn into controversy; he presents simply a statement of his own belief which he hopes may be helpful to others.

In saying that Christianity does not rest solely or chiefly upon the New Testament miracles for the proof of its claims, he is clearly within the bounds of conservative Christian thought. It is unquestionably true that for most of us belief in the miracles follows, rather than precedes, belief in Jesus and becomes possible only when we have seen that his character and life were divinely perfect. No testimony would be sufficient to convince us that God had miraculously attested the divine Sonship of one whose life was immoral.

How many readers of this paper are there who have investigated historically the evidence of the miracles said to have been wrought by Mohammed? Few, if any. Yet most of us feel justified in rejecting the claims of the prophet and flatly denying the miracles which are ascribed to him. We do this not because the evidence is historically weak—though it is weak—but because the life of Mohammed, even according to the claims of his admiring followers, was not the life of an inspired prophet. The historical evidence which attests the miracles of Jesus is strong; yet not one believer in a hundred stops to consider it. He knows the character of Jesus and accepts the rest on that ground. We reject the miracles of Mohammed and accept those of Jesus, not because the latter are supported by stronger historical testimony, but because they are evidenced by a character and teaching which were still more miraculous.

It may perhaps be true that, if Christ were coming to-day in this scientific age, he would not work miracles. But even if there were far stronger reasons than there are for assuming this, still there would be no excuse for an attempt to eliminate from the New Testament the accounts of the wonders there recorded. The suggestion betrays a gross misconception of the nature of the Bible. It is a record of things that have occurred and a mirror of the actual religious experiences of certain men in certain periods. We can no more make over the record of their experiences to suit our more scientific ideas, than we can make over the experiences themselves after the lapse of these nineteen or more centuries.

It was not incumbent upon the New Testament writers to describe the form in which revelation would probably be made in the twentieth century, but only to report the revelation as it was actually made in the first century and to exhibit the effect which it produced upon themselves and the men of their time. It is for us to find the abiding essence of that revelation and allow it to have the fullest possible effect upon ourselves and the men of our time. But however slight may be the evidencing value of the miracles in these days, there would be no more justification for eliminating from the New Testament the record of their usefulness in the first century, than there would be for revising the accounts of Cæsar's battles by substituting Krag-Jørgensen rifles and thirteen-inch guns for his antiquated javelins and catapults.

A Worthy School.

No educational number is large enough to contain an adequate presentation of all of our schools which are worthy of extended treatment. We therefore devote considerable space in this number to one of our colleges which, aside from its general efficiency as an educational institution, presents some unusual and noteworthy features. William Woods College for Girls is the outgrowth and successor of the Orphans' School of the Christian Church of Missouri. The new name is better than the old, for it not only gives recognition to one of the most generous friends of the institution, but it also indicates that it is an institution of collegiate dignity.

One of the weak points of our educational system is the lack of adequate provision for rendering financial assistance to those students who need it. This is one of the problems which we must soon take up seriously and it is not less important than the problem of college endowment. William Woods College is an institution which solves this problem in a somewhat unique manner. It is not pre-eminently or exclusively a school for orphans, but rather a college which sets apart a generous portion of its income for defraying the expenses of students who need financial aid. This is equivalent to having a students' aid fund—something which several of our schools have but not to an adequate extent.

There are two ways to help such a school as this: by endowment and by patronage. Those who patronize the school can have the assurance that they are getting their money's worth and are securing the advantages of a first-class school. Those who give their money for its endowment not only help to provide for the maintenance of teachers and for all the numerous expenses incident to such an institution, but help to render its advantages available to many young women who would otherwise be unable to enjoy them.

Notes and Comments.

The carping critics who have condemned Mr. Carnegie's recent gift to the Scottish universities on the ground that it is "pauperizing education," exhibit a misconception of what it is that gives worth and dignity to education. Certainly the value of education is not measured by the price that is paid for it or by the difficulty of getting it. If it were, we would do well to close our public schools and state universities, and raise the tuition of all the colleges so that the students' fees would pay all running expenses. There is not a first-class college or university in the country in which the students pay more than twenty-five per cent. of the actual cost of the instruction which they receive. The only way to pauperize education is to pauperize the educators by meager and insufficient salaries, which will not allow them to do their best work. Let the millionaires come on with their endowments and we will take the risk of being pauperized. Who's afraid?

Now that the Sunday-school lessons are again dealing with Genesis, we shall doubtless have a revival of the weary discussion about "Genesis and geology," with inconsequential attempts to point out the discrepancies between the two and the equally futile attempts at reconciling them. The type of mind which considers this feat important one way or the other, may as well engage at its earliest leisure in an equally edifying attempt to prove that Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and "The Century Atlas" are either antagonistic or give each other mutual confirmation.

Speaking of the relation between science and religion, the Interior shrewdly says: "It has been said of our immense iron-clads that they carry heavy armor to resist the heavy shells that never reach them, and heavy guns to pierce the heavy armor of other ships that they never hit. And when we listen to a lumbering preacher belching pulpit-thunder against scientists that he can't reach, who reply to him with arguments that go wide of his own proper and legitimate defenses, we wonder how long a kind providence will spare them to burst our ear-drums with their senseless cannonade, and how soon the Master of all will sink them to the deep depths of learned oblivion and relieve the world of all their roar and smoke and vexing of the seas." So when the apologists have temporarily ceased from making claims about Genesis which are of no consequence, whether true or false, and when the "scientists" have ceased for a little from passionately denying what nobody has any religious interest in affirming, there will be peace for a space so that we can hear again the whisper of the still, small voice.

Few passages of Scripture have been more abused than "Touch not, taste not, handle not." In writing these words the Apostle Paul was not giving a command, but was describing those ordinances of the Jewish law which he condemned as no longer binding. He had been saying (Col. 2:16): "Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat or in drink or in respect of a holy day or of the new moon or of the Sabbath." These things, he says, are a mere shadow; they are rudiments. If ye be dead with Christ, why not have done with such ordinances which command to "touch not, taste not, handle not"? We have long grown accustomed to hearing this used as a text for temperance addresses, and now a writer cites it as authority for having nothing to do with the denominations. The same writer quotes the words of Revelation 18:4, "Come out of her [Babylon] that ye be not partakers of her sins," and makes it an injunction to flee from the "Babylon of sectarianism." The Presbyterian General Assembly has just decided to reconsider its old verdict that the Roman Catholic Church is the Babylon here referred to, and it is certainly hard for them to find themselves within a month classed as a part of that same Babylon. We believe in temperance and we believe in coming out from sectarianism, but it is not necessary to wrest the Scriptures to find proof-texts in support of these beliefs.

"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a religious divine to behold his fellow-creatures as they are." It might be a good idea, then, for ministers to spend three months each year disguised as workmen to see men as they are. Better still, they might come down from their ecclesiastical high-horses and stay down, and see men as they are all the while.

Editor's Easy Chair

Macatawa Musings.

It is the glorious Fourth. Edgewood-on-the-lake is draped with the American flag in various sizes, in common with many other cottages. What a starry flag it is getting to be! And each star represents a sovereign state—sovereign in its own sphere of rights and prerogatives—and yet all under the supreme sovereignty of the United States. The whole is greater than any of its parts. That is one of the lessons taught by our civil war. We have just counted the stars on one of the little flags and find there are now forty-five. As it is a late edition it probably contains the full number, especially as Congress is not now in session. There are a few territories waiting to take their places as states and to shine as stars in the galaxy of American commonwealths. These should be admitted to the dignity of statehood as soon as they are prepared to assume such responsibilities. But what about our insular possessions? Ought they to become an integral part of our American union and take their places in time as stars on our beautiful flag? That question, we are aware, is loaded with politics. Probably we are not now competent to decide it. If, however, one free and independent citizen may be permitted to express his opinion, subject to modification by future developments, we would say, let us limit the union of states to the American continent, and to people of our own language and civilization. Let us nurture our island possessions and train them in the ways of freedom, and when they are capable of caring for and governing themselves, set them up to housekeeping as free and independent governments, in the family of nations. Such a policy would seem to best comport with our national dignity, safety and world-wide mission of benevolence. If this be politics, let it be charged to the Fourth of July.

Lake Michigan to-day, as if in honor of the Fourth, has donned her beautiful robe of many colors. Green and purple are the dominant shades, with many modifications of these, presenting an ever-shifting panorama to the eye. A gentle breeze from the south, increasing with the day, is raising white caps out on the wide expanse of lake and brings a cooling balm on its wings from over the water. It must be a hot day inland, for only this lake breeze seems to make life comfortable here. The unusually hot weather of the past week has served to rapidly increase the population of this place. The boats and the railway trains land many people here each day now. These for the most part are old habitués of the place, for people never seem to weary of coming here once they get started. But there are many new faces who have come on the word of their friends to see for themselves what manner of summer resort we have here. Judging from the number of inquiries we are receiving from readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the Disciples of Christ are likely to be largely represented this season as usual. If we may be permitted to answer several inquiries before they are sent, we would say that hotel accommodations are good, at from $10 to $15 per week. There are a limited number of rooms to rent in private houses, and parties can secure meals at hotel or at other private houses. There are cottages still to be rented all the way from $75 to $200 for the season. It is about as good luck to come on and make your arrangements after you get here.

Eleven years ago we landed at Macatawa Park, after a stormy voyage across the lake on the night of the third. It was a cold day and there was no room for us in the small inn which was then here. We succeeded in renting a small cottage at a large price and remained for the season—the first St. Louisans to discover the place and to summer here. It was a comparatively small settlement then to what it is now. There was something in the atmosphere, the scenery, the society, the fishing, which got hold of us and we have been coming here ever since. Now it is like a second home to us. The coming of so many friends has greatly added to the attractiveness of the place. We feel that Macatawa Park has probably added several years to our life. On the second day of this month the heads of the household at Edgewood-on-the-lake celebrated their thirty-third wedding anniversary. For the benefit of any bachelor who may read these lines we will add that we are thirty-three times as glad now that we got married, as we were at the time, and that we have thirty-three times greater appreciation of the wisdom of our choice now than we had then. The celebration was very quiet. Bro. and Sister Hallack furnished the launch and we the lunch, and the wedding tour consisted of a ride up Black Lake beyond Point Superior, where we fished awhile, ate supper, including ice cream served in wooden dishes, under the shade of the trees, and back home again in the gloaming. It is our purpose to round out a half century of married life—if we live long enough.

Among the arrivals since our last record is an interesting personality from the western part of Missouri, who bears the familiar patronymic of Jones, whose ancestors doubtless came originally from Wales. There are several Joneses in Missouri, but this one wears his classical degree of A. B. in front. He is a little gray, and sometimes imagines he is getting old, but whose comes against the sharp edge of his logic will agree that age has not dulled his reasoning faculties. He is the author of a recent book which sums up the net results of his religious thinking on several important questions. If you have not read "The Spiritual Side of our Plea," you are probably doing yourself injustice. This Jones is devouring new books continually, and lives in the highlands of religious thought. He seems to have no idea about stopping learning and growing. We persuaded him a few days ago to descend from his aerial heights long enough to take a bath—we mean, of course, a plunge in Lake Michigan. When we succeeded in getting him arrayed in one of our extra bath suits he surveyed himself, and, with an injured look, asked, "Do you pretend to tell me that I am to walk out of this room and down to the lake-side in this garb?" We assured him that such was the custom here, and that his dignity would suffer no permanent injury by conforming to the custom. When once in the water he enjoyed it like a porpoise, but confessed to us, rather shamefacedly, that it was the first time he had ever gone in swimming with women! He has rented "Earl Villa," on the heights near the Auditorium, and his family will be here in a few days. Bro. Earl sails for England in a short time.

The friends of the Bible College at Columbia, Mo., will be glad to learn that Charles B. Newnan, pastor of the Central Christian Church at Detroit, Mich., for the past eight years, has agreed to take up the work there with the beginning of the next session in September. Bro. Newnan is a native of Missouri, a graduate of Christian University, and a preacher of recognized ability and power. He has for several years been giving special attention to Bible study and Bible teaching, having conducted a Bible club in Detroit for three years, and having for a number of years conducted a Bible Institute in connection with Fountain Park Assembly. He is now to give his entire time to this work for the benefit of the students of the University of Missouri, in connection with Bro. Moore, who will give a part of his time to the same work. He will take a special course in the summer school of the University of Chicago this summer. He is an enthusiastic student of the Bible, and has an unusual faculty of imparting to others what he has learned. He ran over from Detroit recently and spent a day with us at the Park, and we greatly enjoyed our fellowship with him for the day. This is the beginning of an enlargement of the work at Columbia, which, we believe, will result in realizing to a good degree what the friends of that enterprise have had in view from the beginning. Bro. B. B. Tyler's recent congratulation over the fact of our having an "adequate endowment" for that work needs qualification. We need at least $200,000 to carry out our plans. We have one-fourth of that amount. But the rest will come now that the permanency of the institution is assured.

Questions and Answers.

A brother gifted in the art of multiplying questions, sends us a list of 21 interrogation points, the substance and import of which may be stated thus: May we, the churches known as Christian, or Churches of Christ, unite with other churches in evangelistic and other services and be true to the doctrine we hold and teach as religious reformers?

We cannot possibly do the work we have been sent to do without manifesting the spirit of unity toward all who love and serve Jesus Christ. We know that in the past it has sometimes been very difficult and, under certain peculiar and exceptional circumstances, perhaps impossible, with proper self-respect, to unite in union evangelistic services. These have been the exceptions to the rule, however, where very narrow men were at the helm. When any union meeting is carried on in a manner which commands the respect and good will of the community, it is altogether advisable to co-operate with it on a basis of entire equality with other co-operating churches. More than that, our churches might much more frequently than has been the case in the past, take the initiative in planning these union meetings, and in securing the right kind of an evangelist and in inviting all Christian people to co-operate. If some of them should object, on the ground that the subject of baptism would generate differences of opinion, why not propose to substitute, for any sermon on that subject, Bible readings in which all the Scriptures bearing on the subject should be read, the congregation bringing their Bibles and participating in the reading. The evangelist need not add a word of comment. Those who would object to that course might be omitted from the co-operation. This plan would be a test of confidence in the scripturalness of the teaching and practice of the various churches. One of our most successful evangelists, we understand, feels that to be the most successful method of presenting the subject in his meetings.

As to other kinds of union service, there is temperance work, care for the poor, down-town missions, caring for orphans, and all movements looking to social progress and the moral welfare of the community, in which Christian people might well manifest their unity by working together as brethren. There ought to be much more co-operation among the churches in establishing higher institutions of learning, and there must be in the future, if Christian schools are to hold their own with state institutions. Why should not all Protestants in the city of St. Louis, for instance, patronize Washington University? What need have Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc., to establish a university or college at Des Moines, Ia., or contiguous thereto? Isn't Drake University capable of serving the educational needs of that entire community? As a matter of fact all these institutions do contain students of various religious denominations, and there is no reason why they should not contain more, rather than that new institutions be started to struggle and starve.

Much depends upon the spirit which we manifest toward other religious bodies, as to the possibilities of united effort. A pharisaic spirit never was and never will be successful in promoting unity. Those who imagine themselves to be upon a lofty pedestal and talk down to others, are not likely to find them in a co-operative mood. If we assume that we have nothing more to learn, and that to the extent other people differ from us they are wrong, we may pride ourselves on our "glorious isolation," but as promoters of union we would be a colossal failure. Such sentiments as "Let each esteem others better than himself;" "Look not every man upon his own things, but also upon the things of others;" "Be not wise in your own conceit;" "In honor, preferring one another," are worth more in any union movement than the clearest intellectual apprehension of truth. If we are true to our mission we must show the spirit of unity as well as the scriptural basis.

The Study of Bird-Song

By Olive Thorne Miller

In this month of July begin—for lovers of bird song—"the melancholy days, the saddest of the year," for before it passes the song season is over. There are, it is true, two or three faithful ones who do not desert us entirely. As Thoreau says, "Some birds are poets and sing all summer." Such are the happy song sparrow, the cheery robin and the dainty indigo bird. But all the thrushes have fallen to silence; orioles and bobolinks have subsided into demure heads of families, devoting themselves exclusively to training the rising generation, with thoughts already beginning to turn toward the long journey before them.

Bird song has not been so thoroughly studied as it deserves, but enough is known to make it deeply interesting. The old notions that birds are limited to two or three expressions, and that all of the species exactly reproduce the notes of one another, have long been exploded among those who have given serious attention to our little brothers. Mr. Cheney, who studied the matter critically, and has given us a book of bird songs carefully reduced to our musical scale, recognizes a great difference between individuals of the same species. "I find more and more that birds extemporize," he says, "and that those of the same species do not sing alike." This must be the experience of every close student who has a musical ear.

Besides the fact that very early two birds of a species sing the same song, it is interesting to note that many of them—most, indeed, that I have studied—have certain different, well-defined utterances, which may be classed as: The love song, the common song (of great variety), the whisper song, the flight song.

The love song is that which blesses us on the arrival of the birds in wooing mood. It is ecstatic, and probably the best a bird can do. To enjoy it one needs to be not only up early in the morning, but in the fields promptly with the opening of the season. For when the bride is won, the home established and the singer settled down to entertain his mate and await the time when the cherished shells give up their precious contents and nests are "brimming over with the load of downy breasts and throbbing wings," the song becomes the calmly happy, characteristic and greatly varied utterance which we may call the common song. It is then that the bird has leisure to vary, change and elaborate his theme, and it is a particularly interesting time to study him.

Sometimes one may be so happy as to overhear what I have called the bird's whisper song. One must be very near and very unobtrusive, for it can be heard only at the distance of a few yards, being delivered with nearly or quite closed beak, and by no means intended for the public ear. There is a dreamy, rapturous quality in this song which differentiates it from all others. It seems to be addressed no more to the mate than to the world at large, but to be simply a soliloquy, an irrepressible bubbling over of his joy of life, and it gives emphatic denial to the opinion held by some persons that a bird lives in constant terror of his life. No one who has heard that song can resist the belief that it comes from a serene and joyous spirit. Birds are always alert, but it is unthinkable that they are always in fear.

The flight song is perhaps more rare, and certainly different. Not all birds are known to indulge in that particular form of expression, but discoveries are constantly being made, and not infrequently another name is added to the list of birds known to have a flight song. This utterance, while unlike the others, usually introduces strains from the common song, or the family call, which readily identifies the singer. The oven bird, for example, while pouring out his rhapsody, sailing about over one's head often in the dusk of late afternoons, interpolates an occasional "teacher! teacher! teacher!" which proclaims him at once. The bewitching little Maryland yellow-throat, while delivering himself on wing, cannot refrain from betraying "wichita! wichita! wichita!" which is equivalent to shouting his name.

While songs differ with individuals, with seasons, with emotions, and even with age, there is still always a certain family quality by which one may recognize the species. Rarely do two robins arrange their simple notes in the same way, yet one never fails to recognize the voice of a robin. It is the same with orioles, thrushes and all others. There is sometimes a sort of family resemblance in the songs of two or three robins of a neighborhood, which suggests the thought that they may be brothers and have learned from one father. I once knew two Baltimore orioles who were exceedingly friendly with one another and nested near together who sang exactly the same notes, but it was the only case I ever met with.

It is easier to learn to identify birds by their call notes and their notes of alarm and warning than by their songs. These are about the same in all of a species. All robins say "tut! tut!" and all give the cry called a "laugh," as well as other common sounds; all phoebes shout the beloved name from the barn roof, and all least flycatchers jerk out "chebec" by the hour; the olive-sided flycatcher tribe to a bird draw out their "see-here" from the top of a tree, and so with many others. But all of these birds are capable of more elaborate and varied songs. I have heard them in the case of those mentioned, and perhaps most of the birds we credit with having only the loud call notes with which we are familiar have times and seasons of indulging in quite different utterances.

Though song is dropped off during July, and by the middle of the month life in the tree-tops goes on nearly in silence, bird affairs have not lost their interest. The world is still full of little family groups under training—learning "sky-science and wings' delight," and what is of equal importance to them, becoming familiar with the products of earth, and their respective values from a gastronomic point of view. Also at this time many birds are still setting. Some on a second brood; some whose first attempts came to grief; and some who are always late in setting up their homes. Among the latter two are especially noteworthy, that model of elegant manners, the cedar bird or cedar waxwing, in daintiest of silky plumage of Quaker hue, and the charming goldfinch "all black and gold, a flame of fire swinging on his purple thistle."

I know no bird who so fully expresses the joy of life as this tiny fellow-creature, and his flight, as he goes bounding through the air, uttering a joyous note with every wing-beat, is pure ecstasy. Often, when he has apparently no desire to go anywhere, he will fling himself upon the air with vehemence, make a wide circle and return to his perch, or bound straight up ten feet or more and then drop back, pouring out his delicious notes, evidently because he is so brimful of bliss he cannot contain himself. Then his songs, especially his morning songs, which come after other birds have finished theirs, have a quality of rapture which cannot be expressed.

The goldfinch has a wonderful variety of songs and calls, and he and his mate an apparently endless number of conversational notes, all in the tender, sweet voices of the family. He is one of the few birds who sing in chorus. No bird pair that I know is more attractive in its family life, the little matron so timid and clinging, with such an appealing call, the small spouse so tender and attentive, so different from his usual jolly manners, and fully impressed with his responsibility as head of the family. They always remind me of a boy and girl play-marriage, a sort of a David and Dora Copperfield affair. It is not because they are small; some birds less in size are fussy and important, others bluff, and seemingly rather indifferent, while in one or two cases, notably the humming bird, the nest-maker appears to be independent of her mate and able to manage her domestic concerns without aid.

Truly the more intimately we know these instructive tribes of the air, the more heartily shall we agree with the poet, who exclaims:

"How like are birds and men!"

His Promises.

By Mrs. P. R. Gibson.

I know that my Redeemer lives,
Since He has walked and talked with me,
His presence still sweet comfort gives,
As long ago in Galilee.

When storms of life are raging sore,
And heart and hope and comfort fail,
Above the angry billows' roar,
His "Peace be still" then calms the gale.

To the sad heart in grief's dark hour
This message comes to cheer and bless—
A promise sure, we feel its power—
"I will not leave you comfortless."

When the path of duty leads
In such a straight and narrow way,
The soul dismayed its weakness pleads,
"Lo! I am with you," hear Him say.

"I know that my Redeemer lives,"
Before His presence death shall flee—
While this His word such comfort gives,
"That where I am there ye may be."

Hinderances in Mission Fields.

By G. N. Shishmanian.

It is not possible to enumerate the hinderances that almost daily confront the faithful laborers of Christ in mission fields, but for an insight into the task we will mention some of them as suggested by personal experience in the Turkish field. These hinderances rise from the following three sources: First. From the attitude of the government towards foreign missions. Second. From the diversity of languages and religion of the people. Third. From the inadequate preparation of the laborers in the field.

First. The Turkish government has never been friendly towards American missionaries, but dreading to refuse the friendly requests of the English and American representatives in Turkey, reluctantly they are allowed certain privileges and freedom to prosecute their missionary labors among the people. While the press is comparatively free for Mohammedans, the publication and distribution of Christian literature is not permitted without the consent and approval of the government.

The non-Mohammedan people of Turkey are not permitted to open, build, or repair church or school buildings without a special grant of permission from the government, which means no permission at all unless the lion and the eagle are in sight. The missionaries, being English or American citizens, are permitted to travel in the empire by obtaining a Turkish passport from the government, but the same being denied to the non-Mohammedans, especially to Armenians among whom is the mission work most successful, native helpers are often of no help to the missionaries.

Second. Though the language of the country is Turkish, the different nationalities have their own separate and distinct languages used among themselves, and their own national religion, under one religious head called Patriarch, Rabbi, or Chief, who has the oversight of the churches, schools, hospitals and cemeteries of his respective nation. No religious freedom is permitted to the individual members of these different nations, not even intermarriages are allowed, the penalty for such an offense being the forfeiture of national rights, even at his death the remains of the offender are not permitted to be buried in the grave of his fathers. The American Protestant missionaries, at the beginning of their work in Turkey three quarters of a century ago, heroically met these crystallized different nationalities, and by patient labor and at an enormous expense succeeded in overcoming the hinderances and made hundreds of converts, mostly from the Armenians. For several years their converts were subjected to a cruel, heartless persecution, until a joint, piercing look from the lion and the eagle into the face of the Sultan caused him to grant the unique concession, recognizing the missionary converts as a distinct and separate body called "the Protestant Community of Turkey" with an appointed Chief over them, with equal rights and privileges granted to other nationalities.

Third. It is not enough, though very important, that the missionary to a foreign field be a perfect master of the languages of the people. He must carefully study and respect their time honored customs to the best of his ability. The missionary to a foreign field, as the representative of the Church of Christ, must have means enough to take his stand in a manner consistent with his office, and within the reach of all classes of the people to whom he is sent, taking it for granted that he possesses the qualifications of a bishop described by Paul in 1 Tim. 3:1-7.

And above all this queer composition of a missionary, he must be a man of faith and firm convictions, that he may not be a hinderance to his own work by the least appearance of compromise, and under all circumstances able to say, "I have preached righteousness in the great congregation, lo, I have not refrained my lips, O Lord thou knowest." For such a one there can be no hinderance that cannot be overcome if he is supported liberally by the necessary means, confidence and the earnest prayers of the people of God who sent him.

Academy and College.

By R. E. Hieronymus,
President of Eureka College.

As a people the Disciples of Christ have insisted on biblical names for biblical things. Perhaps in the fullness of time we shall come to call educational things by educational names. Whether or not we have or need a university is another question. Certainly we have some colleges that are academies and ought to be called such. The remarkable growth of universities is forcing us to define our college position more clearly. On the other hand the multiplication of high schools and the raising of their standards is also compelling us to determine our real position in the educational world.

But the university has not displaced, will not displace, the college, nor will the high school entirely displace the academy. There are at least four classes of persons that will continue to seek training in an academy: First, those who are not convenient to a good high school. It is evident to all that this number is growing smaller year by year. Every city, nearly every town, and many townships have well equipped high schools. Second, those who have been prevented from taking the high school course at the usual age. They feel out of place in the average city school because nearly all the pupils are so much younger. Third, there are many parents who prefer to have their children under the influences that should dominate a good academy, but do not usually prevail in the ordinary high school. Fourth, those who are seeking better library and laboratory facilities and more experienced teachers than are found in most high schools, particularly in the smaller cities and in the towns. Still other classes will occur to readers, such for example as prefer to "go away to school" rather than be trained at home, such as are drawn through friendship for others, and such as go for the better religious influence. From these various classes will come in the future many students to our academies provided we equip them properly.

The course in the academy should be fully up to the standard of the best high schools. A certificate, or diploma perhaps, should be granted upon the completion of the course. This will help to keep the work of the academy and that of the college separated in the minds of all. The standard should be as high as possible. Every encouragement to scholarship here will be felt in all the later work.

The advantages of such an institution are readily seen. Young people are thrown in contact with the collegiate students and early form a desire to continue their course throughout the full four years of collegiate work. The constant association with more advanced students is in itself helpful and inspiring. It ought to become a popular thing to endow and fully equip high grade academies in connection with most of our colleges.

The Value of Miracles.

By H. W. B. Myrick.

The late profound thinker, G. W. Longan, once wrote in an article published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: "The New Testament would be just as valuable to me, and my faith just as strong, if the miracles had all been left out." And again: "I do not accept Christ because of the miracles, but I accept the miracles because I believe in Jesus."

In an article in the same paper, 1889, Bro. W. B. Berry said: "It is evident that the miracles cannot have the same value for us that they did to those who witnessed them."

And I say: Miracles do not prove or substantiate the truth; on the contrary, it requires the truth to prove or substantiate miracles. A miracle is not a prop to hold up the truth, but is, and ever has been, a load which truth has to carry.

At the time (apostolic times) miracles, and the word miracle in the original means merely a "wonder"—at that time a sign or a wonder helped the prophet or teacher and carried conviction to the hearer. It was an unscientific age, a superstitious, unreasoning age, and "wonders," however produced, were an ally to the truth. Not so now. As Bro. Berry said: "Miracles do not have the same value for us that they did for them." If Jesus Christ were coming today instead of then we may be sure that to this thoughtful, science-loving generation very few, if any, miracles would be tendered. Prof. David Swing well said: "Thoughtful persons perceive that Christianity makes its progress now, and wins its victories, without the help of miracles." No one preaches about these things. A sermon based on a miracle would be an archaism in the year 1901. If Christianity had no other basis or foundation than the miracles of the loaves and fishes, or any of the others recorded, it would not stand a week.

I believe the New Testament would be just as valuable a book, and that Christianity would thrive and conquer as well, probably much better, if every miraculous occurrence as recorded were eliminated from its pages. I predict, in fact, that revision in the future, possibly within this century, will take that form, and the account of "wonders," useful in their day, will be removed from the pages of the New Testament, leaving us the holy character, Jesus, as a model, and his ethical teaching as a system of right and true living. So mote it be. [See editorial on page 869.]

From Calcutta to the Himalayas

By W. M. FORREST.

If the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST allows its "Easy Chair" to move about at will from Michigan to South Florida, and its "English Topics" to be written sometimes from London and sometimes from the Mediterranean, why should not the Calcutta Letter be privileged to roam at large occasionally? Taking it for granted that such privilege will not be denied, this letter is written more than one thousand miles away from the capital of India and at an elevation of nearly eight thousand feet higher than that city.

A long railway journey in this land of strange sights is an interesting thing. In company with my wife and little son I set out from Calcutta on the evening of April 1st. Although the distance we were to travel was more than a thousand miles, and over several different railways, we were able to get a through car. Indian railways have no sleeping cars, but it is possible to engage in advance accommodations in the regular coaches without extra charge. The cars are divided into compartments, like the English coaches, and have long seats running lengthwise of the car. In first class coaches there are two such seats; in second class there is a third seat in the middle of the compartment, and parallel with the two at the sides. As these seats are six feet in length and well cushioned, and it is usually possible to reserve an entire seat for the night, it makes a very comfortable berth.

On the first night of our journey we had two men in our compartment who occupied the upper berths, long narrow shelves which let down from the sides of the car. They left us early in the morning, and after that we had the whole compartment to ourselves to the end of the journey. The uninitiated reader might suppose that a compartment about ten feet long by eight feet wide, containing three seats six feet long, and having a good sized toilet room attached, might not be uncomfortably crowded by four adults and a child. But he knows not the conditions of Indian travel. Every passenger is likely to be accompanied by so large and varied a collection of baggage that it does not take very many of him to fill a car. The railways give free carriage to only a small amount of luggage in the baggage car. But, as ordinary hand baggage is free, it is marvellous what some passengers take the liberty of including in that category. Eight or ten pieces, varying from good sized trunks to lunch baskets, are the common accessories of a traveler. He enters the car followed by a troop of coolies, each bearing some article of his property, which they proceed to pile up in the compartment. Hence, a few such passengers fill a car so full that there is little space left for sitting, and less for moving about.

In part, this is a necessary nuisance. Whether visiting, staying at a hotel, or traveling, everyone in India has to supply his own bedding, hence everyone must be accompanied by a large roll of blankets, sheets, etc. Then it is often best to carry some refreshments for a long journey, and a jug of water free from cholera germs is indispensable. We had remarkably little luggage with us, from the Indian standpoint. Yet, in addition to two huge trunks and a suit-case in the baggage car, or "brake-van," we were encumbered with a mammoth roll of bedding, another of wraps, two hand bags, a lunch basket, a water jug, two fans and an umbrella. Hence we were glad when our fellow passengers removed themselves and their belongings.

As the day advanced it became intensely hot, for we were crossing the plains beneath the burning sun. But the heavy venetian blinds shut out the glare and some of the heat, and the tatties helped cool the air. A "tattie" is a thickly woven mat of dried grass that is fitted into the window. Outside the window is a scoop-like frame to catch the air and force it through the mat. On the roof of the car is a tank of water, with a pipe leading to the tattie; by pressing a button the water may be made to flow over the mat. Then the hot air comes through the moist grass, evaporation takes place, the air is rendered cool and fragrant, and life in the car is made endurable. And so we sped on our way over the glowing plains to the cool hill regions.

Many places of interest were passed and many strange sights seen during the day's journey. We passed over the sacred Ganges at Benares and entered that holiest of cities, world famed on account of its myriad shrines and great pilgrim gatherings. In the afternoon we reached Lucknow, awaking memories of mutiny days. The sight of the cemetery, where a handsome marble monument represents an angel watching over the victims of the terrible siege, recalled the horrors of former days, and awakened thanksgiving that better times have come. All along the line, village after village was seen, collections of mud huts whose thatched roofs make them look like large straw stacks. India is distinctively agricultural. The great majority of its three hundred million inhabitants are farmers. But one sees none of the spacious and beautiful farmhouses such as abound in the rural districts of America. As in ancient Palestine, the tillers of the soil live together in villages, and the houses are like the people—wretchedly poor.

The laborers could be seen at work with their rude implements in many a field—men, women and children toiling side by side. When Mark Twain was in India, and traversed the same route to Benares and beyond, he claimed that he saw no women at manual toil. It suited his humor to contrast European and Indian civilization in that respect, to the disadvantage of the former. He ventured to think that if we work at it long enough we may get the people here as highly civilized as certain districts in France, where he witnessed women at hard labor superintended by the lords of creation. Perhaps the funny-man's eye had not learned to detect women in a land where both sexes array themselves in flowing garments. Certainly, in all parts of India that I have visited, women are seen doing all kinds of hard labor, even to the work done by our hod-carriers who toil up long ladders with heavy loads of brick or mortar. But it seems that Mr. Clemens has recently determined to see nothing but what is a reproach to Christian civilization; and men usually see what they are determined to see.

After our second night's journey we awakened to find ourselves among the foot hills of the Himalayas and fanned by cool breezes. About seven o'clock we reached the terminus of the railway, at the beautiful town of Dhera Dun, about three thousand feet above sea level, and about twelve miles from our destination. We were soon loaded into a tonga with our lighter luggage. A tonga is a rough looking two-wheeled cart, with two seats and a cover over it like those of our old-time "prairie schooners," the whole drawn by two lean and scraggy ponies. We sped along a broad, shaded road that was lined by hedges of roses, back of which were seen comfortable looking cottages. Five miles of such traveling took us to a hotel in Raj Pur, where we had breakfast, and exchanged the tonga for vehicles better adapted to the steep roads that lay beyond.

Our luggage was tied on the backs of coolies, about eighty pounds to a man. My wife and little boy took seats in a dandy, a vehicle shaped not unlike a boat. At each end it was suspended from a cross bar similar to the single-tree of a wagon, and each bar rested upon the shoulders of two coolies. As in the seven miles from Raj Pur the road rises over four thousand feet, there were eight men to a dandy, to serve in relays of four. We mounted a sorrel horse. That is neither the majestic, nor the editorial, nor yet the plural pronoun. But something unusual is needed to indicate the importance of that act and to help maintain my dignity; hence the plural form of the pronoun will be used while speaking of myself on that horse. We grew up in a city; we never received instruction in the noble art of horsemanship; we had not been astride of a horse for many years. The horse seemed to know that; even the boy who had charge of the horse soon took cognizance of it. That boy followed the horse and took it back to the hotel when we reached our destination; he usually held to the horse's tail to facilitate his own locomotion. Whenever we were passing through crowds of men and desired to sit our steed in a dignified manner, that perverse lad managed to induce the horse to go at a jog trot. We found it difficult to move in unison with the animal, our hat had a tendency to leave our head, our feet wandered from the stirrups. Dark faces about us were wreathed in ill-suppressed smiles; we felt broad grins penetrating our back from our vicious jockey.

Fortunately the road was so steep that walking was the only practicable gait for the horse during most of the journey. Up and up we went, along many a dizzy precipice, around many a "horse shoe bend," up and up until at last we stopped before a low white cottage nestling down by the road-side behind a green hedge. Our equestrian trials were over.

At last we found ourselves in Landour, of which we had so often heard our missionaries speak. The sweltering heat of the plains had been exchanged for the cool mountain air that demanded heavy clothing and fires by day, and thick blankets by night. The tropical fruit and palm trees had given place to pines and cedars, to rugged oaks and rhododendrons resplendent with their flaming scarlet blossoms. The-flat sandy plains, stretching away to the horizon, had vanished, leaving in their stead majestic Himalayan ranges rising height above height until lost amid perpetual snows and clouds. Here, then, we rest for a season, and prepare for the work of another year.

Buying Up Britain.

All England is astonished at the prodigious commercial and industrial aggressiveness of America. Mr. Pierpont Morgan is here, promising or threatening to buy up our lines of steamships and our railways. He is making our capitalists sit up. We in England think not a little of our lovely little country. We think much more of our mighty empire. And we are still more conceited of the grand Anglo-Saxon race, which includes the American people. May I say that the British mind is given to taking large views. Even our Tory writers, with all their narrow political theories, constantly descant on the grandeur of your American outlook, and I notice that they do this unconstrainedly and generously, because more and more this racial solidarity is felt to be the supreme factor in international relationships between Britain and America. But America cannot, after all, buy up Britain. For this reason, that Britain is part of the biggest of empires. Our great colonies are all self-governing and they will all stand by the mother country. This sad war has proved that. England may fail in this or that, or succeed in this or that matter, but her interests—commercial, sociological, industrial and political—are now not insular but imperial. A magnificent empire is unpurchasable. If we sell a line of ships to America we shall proceed to build another with the money. If American millionaires take a fancy to our railways they can have any one of them at a price. Everything material on this earth can be bought. Everything that man ever made is always for sale. But the railways will stay here. We never trouble about the ownership of anything so long as we can use it. Curiously, while we hear all sorts of evil prognostications about the decline of England, her population has increased; her trade is going up; her losses in many directions always seem to be splendidly compensated by larger gains in other quarters, and her extent of territory appears to grow automatically without any design on the part of either people or government to add an acre to the stupendous extent of the empire. The fall of Britain may be a predestined chapter of her destiny; but people are under a dark delusion who imagine that her end is anywhere within sight, excepting in the imagination of the pessimist soothsayers. The "decline and fall of England" has been, ever since I can remember anything at all, the darling subject of contemplation to certain amiable minds. But I have not yet seen any decline or fall of my country; I have only witnessed the decline and fall of lots of these miserable prophets, the croaking ravens of vain vaticination. One of the brightest of present-day signs is the increase all round of the evangelical churches of all spiritual types. Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists, Presbyterians, are all growing steadily in numbers. Christianity is not decaying. Protestantism is not declining. The things that strengthen England and make her great are flourishing nobly. There are giant evils in our midst, but the forces of righteousness and truth are massing in formidable array for the coming conflict for Christ.

New European Literature.

Among the new books which are being attentively read in England are one English and one French, to which I call attention. The English volume, in which I have myself been deeply interested, is Mr. Diosy's "New Far East." I have no doubt that this will be widely read in America as well as here. It is a masterly and eminently readable survey of China and Japan as they are to-day. I will not say much about the book, but I wish to refer to something which Mr. Diosy this week has been saying to an interviewer. He takes a deep interest in missionaries and their work, though most of us would not agree with some things he has written any more than with certain lively pronouncements of that lively American, Poultney Bigelow. But some of Mr. Diosy's opinions are valuable. He said to his interviewer: "What I want to see in Japan, in China and India, is the lay missionary—Europeans who shall go out as tradespeople, or professional men, and live the Christian life. That will affect the easterns favorably towards the gospel more than anything else on earth. The missionary question is a very pressing one in China. The so-called anti-Christian troubles are mere passing riots compared with those that we may live to see. Just wait till the number of Christians in China becomes large enough to seriously affect the vested interests of such important trades as the makers of incense sticks and the carvers and founders of graven and molten images. THEN! ! !"

Zola's New Infidel Book.

Now I want to make reference to a painful display of literary depravity. Surely that French genius, Zola, must be the most willfully perverse of living authors. We were all ashamed of his first works. Mr. Vizitelly, of London, was imprisoned for a year for the crime of publishing English translations of several of them. But Zola not only mended his ways as an author, but he made every Christian proud of his action in the Dreyfus case. He became the foremost humanitarian hero in the world. And now he has put forth a book, "Travail," which is enough to sadden and depress every reader excepting an actual atheist. For this new and massive novel is one of the class of books called fiction with a purpose. And the purpose is most vicious. The work is a fearful blast of malediction against Christianity. The object of "Travail" is to glorify the future of the race by exalting man at the expense of God, who is altogether eliminated in the style too familiar in France. Human reason is to be all and in all. Man will by reason of his own upward ascent attain to infallibility. Science will advance and conquer. Altruism is Zola's new god. Work is not to be toil at all. It is all to be an unalloyed delight. Everything will be good and everybody will be happy, because everybody will forget self and consider others, so that the happiness of each man is to rest in the happiness of others' Prisons will vanish. Armies will be but a dream of the wicked past. Lawyers and law-courts will be extinct. Now, the great obstacle to this natural and ethical millennium is the Church of Christ. Therefore, that institution must be smashed. There is to be no such institution as marriage. Love alone is to be the guide. When lovers are tired of each other their alliances must be dissolved. The modern churches are to disappear as did the old heathen temples. "Travail" represents the people as overjoyed when an old priest is killed by the falling in of the roof of his old church while he stands at the altar. This famous Frenchman does not discriminate. For no infidel ever discriminates. It is all very well to say that Voltaire, Paine, Ingersoll and Garibaldi simply felt alienated by the popish or sectarian deprivation of the pure sanctities of religion. I know that such apologies are made for Victor Hugo, Hume, Gibbon, Shelley, Byron and Bolingbroke, as well as for Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant. But such criticism misses the mark altogether. The arrogance of unbelief in determined skeptics is of course intensified by antagonism to Rome; but the essence of modern infidelity—of the intellectual form—is hatred of the simple, pure, supernatural religion of Jesus Christ. Let us tell the truth about this matter of opposition to the faith of the gospel. Let us not drivell into apologetics for which the infidel would not thank us. Zola knows well enough what evangelical religion means; and he fiercely rejects it. He regards Christianity in any and every form with an appalling hostility and a venomous malignity; and the chief aim in "Travail" is to show this spirit. I fear that we are on the eve of a terrific outbreak in Europe of atheistic intellectualism. This book is a trumpet-blast which gives a signal. The doctrine of Zola is altogether epicurean, with a nasty blend of ferocity. He wants us to believe that if men and women have only to work two hours a day at pleasant labor, if they have plenty to eat and drink, if they are allowed unlimited license in their associations, universal peace and love will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

Things that I Lament.

I am longing, with multitudes of Christians, to witness the termination of the sad war in South Africa. Bitterly do we regret its continuance, even though numbers among us cannot understand the theory that England is to be entirely blamed and the Boers are altogether innocent. I am glad to record that considerable sums are being sent by kind-hearted people of all classes for the benefit of the Boer women and children. There is nowhere any spirit of unkindness to the foe. The Boers will enjoy self-government. All Englishmen agree in that. It will be only in a nominal sense that their independence will be lost. Dutch and English and all other white races will enjoy equal rights. I lament the vast magnitude of the drink traffic in this country. We seem no nearer to prohibition, that splendid ideal in the view of all of us here who belong to the advanced temperance party. I lament that our own pure white flag of unsectarian Christianity conquers only very slowly. I lament our slow progress. Many of us lament that we do not see the highest ideals winning rapidly everywhere. We lament the long ascendancy of Toryism and the exclusion of Liberalism and, of many of the noblest causes for which our predecessors—the noble old pioneers—struggled in bitter conflicts. We lament that the reaction has for a whole generation held sway in Old England. But our lamentations will all ere long be turned into joy. Soon an honorable peace will be concluded. The war is not over, but it is waning. The Boers will be among the best friends of the British. They themselves appealed to the sword and they have lost. They must submit, having been defeated. But they will not be ungenerously treated. The south has to submit to the north. History repeats itself. I am echoing in brief the reflections of that Dutch missionary in South Africa, the Rev. Theophilus Schreiner, brother of Olive Schreiner. He ought surely to know; and to such men, Dutchmen and Christians, I am content to defer.

"Forever."*

Cantate Domino.

By Mettie Crane Newton.

In Schwarzwald's deep and mystic shades,
'Mid copse and fell and mossy glades;

Softly a riv'let winds along,
Murm'ring ever its tuneful song.

It sings its sweet and joyous lays,
Alike in bright and darksome days;

When sunlight gleams among the trees
Dance to the music of the breeze;

When nymphs disport among the flowers,
And dryads woo in fairy bowers;

When moon and stars their vigils keep,
While suns decline in nightly sleep,

And all the voices of the night
Infuse the senses with delight.

Nor does it cease its gladsome song,
When winter winds blow cold and strong.

White-vested in its robe of rime,
Listen and you will hear its chime,

Like the bell-bird that never stays.
In cold nor heat, its silv'ry lays.

The rain that beats the Felberg's top,
To it, is but a helpful drop.

The wind that bends the stately pine,
Lashes to foam the sleeping Rhine.

Is stilled into a gentle breeze,
Like the soft murmuring of leaves.

And so it sings forever on,
Secure alike in sun and storm.

Oh, all ye souls, arise, be strong!
Learn of the rivulet its song.

No care nor strife, envy nor hate,
Nor any ills of adverse fate,

Can touch the singer or the song,
If to the Lord the notes belong.

Then let your joyful anthems rise
Like sacred incense to the skies.

Let love divine forever be
The keynote of your melody;

And burdened hearts will catch the strain,
And you will not have lived in vain.

*In the Black Forest (Schwarzwald) of Germany, there is a small stream that poets have named "Forever," on account of its uniform and continuous flow.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

There seems to be a veritable epidemic of credulity. Some years ago Denver had an attack superinduced by the presence of a simple-minded German shoe-cobbler named Schlatter. No one in Denver cares now to talk about Schlatter. But wait awhile! Here is another. His name is not Schlatter; but Truth—Francis Truth. A Denver paper of recent date says: "Another week of wonderful work has been done by Francis Truth." The notices, thus far, in our papers, read like paid-for advertisements. Francis is a good advertiser. He is working his scheme up in good style. If now the railroads, hotels and boarding houses can be induced to offer special rates to the unsuspecting and over-credulous this boom will become a great success. The papers do not fail to say that this man restores the sick to health without financial remuneration; but at least one person who went to him for treatment reports that Francis expressed a readiness to use his divinely given powers in bringing health to this afflicted one for twenty dollars. In almost every notice in the papers, the fact (?) is noted that arrangements for the erection of a sanitarium are well under way, to which the physically afflicted from the ends of the earth will be invited, and where they will be cared for and restored to health free of expense. The reports of cures read like quotations from a patent medicine almanac. Here are samples:

"Mr. Charles Phillips, who came from Portland, Ore., to be treated for consumption, is probably one of the most notable cases the healer has had. According to the report, Mr. Phillips has had consumption for nearly four years and when he first went to Truth was so far gone as to be unable to stand on his feet. He is now strong and well and has on several occasions taken walks of two or more miles.

"Mrs. Barbara Hipp, of 1896 Marion street, it is said is entirely cured of the stiffness resulting from an accident three and one-half years ago, when her hand was broken.

"Mrs. F. W. Bell, 810 Curtis St., was afflicted with rheumatism for three years, together with asthma and an unusually hard case of nervous prostration. Owing to Mrs. Bell's age, 55 years, her troubles have become serious, but since taking the healer's treatments her health is fully regained and she feels as well as ever."

This "ad" goes on to say that "hundreds of other cures have been reported and at any time of day a person goes to the house he can find numerous people who have been healed." Meantime the business of the "funeral director" continues good.

The credulity of the people is remarkable. Tom Jones is a spiritualist. He is a reasonably successful business man. Thirty years ago he lost, by death, a daughter. Two or three years ago, Tom, as is his custom, visited a medium. The spirit of the child was called in. Christmas was near. The fond parent asked the little girl what she desired for a Christmas present. She said that she would like to have a diamond ring. The father said that she should have it. Mr. Jones procured a ring and returned to the medium. He sat at the table with the good woman. The ring was placed on the table. The lights were extinguished. After a time the gas was lighted. The ring was not on the table! Tom Jones knows that his daughter, who has been in the spirit world for thirty years, has the ring!

Have you ever attempted to name the frauds who have successfully worked their healing schemes in our day? See how many you can name.

Joe Smith, of course, comes to your mind—the founder of Mormonism. The Westchester (N. Y.) prophet had a successful career in the early part of the last century. He was sent to the penitentiary. Doubtless you have heard of T. J. Shelton, and his exploits at Little Rock, Ark. The Westchester prophet claimed to be the Messiah and Shelton claims, I believe, to be a sort of incarnate deity. He is honest enough to say that he is making money. John Alexander Dowie and Mary Baker G. Eddy come to your mind. Before Mrs. Eddy there was Cullis in Boston. Do these persons perform wonders? Indeed they do. Do you think they perform cures? I have not a doubt of it. Can you explain how it is done? I cannot. If the wonders wrought by Jesus of Nazareth proved that he was what he claimed to be, why do not the wonders wrought by the persons named, and scores of others, prove that they are what they claim to be? They do no such works as Jesus wrought. There is a world of difference between the miracles of the Christ and the many modern wonders of which I am speaking. Run over the miracles wrought by the Son of Man and these modern wonders and note the differences. Add to the names mentioned above the spiritualists and the relics and shrines of the Romanists. Almost every community has its share of fakirs coming and going. No sooner has one humbug passed on than the people are ready for another. Isn't this wonderful? The credulity of the people is one of the most wonderful wonders of this wonderful time.

Have you seen "Quo Warranto"? It is a book written by Henry Goodacre. It is a story of psychic phenomena. It bears the imprint of "The Abbey Press," 114 Fifth Ave., New York. It is an interesting book. If you are interested in the matters mentioned in this letter it will pay you to read Mr. Goodacre's book. He explains that the writ of Quo Warranto is a very ancient common law, high prerogative writ, in the nature of a writ of right for the crown against the usurper of an office or franchise whereby the authority of the usurper was inquired into, and the right determined. It commanded the respondent to show by what right (quo warranto) he exercised the franchise, not having a grant of it, or having forfeited the right by misuse or nonuse. Then follows the writ setting forth the complaint of "Humanity" as plaintiff against all institutions, churches and persons, Greek, Roman Catholic, Mormon and Protestant, who practice psychic phenomena in the name of God.

Mr. Goodacre does not confine his attention to cures effected without the use of medicine. Mind-reading comes in for consideration also, and other occult phenomena. The author agrees, I should say, in his solution of the phenomena which he considers, with Mr. Hudson in his "Law of Psychic Phenomena."

If you will refer to the case first quoted as showing the healing power of Francis Truth, and read it again I will tell you a true story. Mr. A. D. Freeman—this is not the man's name, but it answers my purpose—was supposed to be dying of consumption in Denver. The case was hopeless. Restoration to health was absolutely impossible. Mr. Freeman must die. He therefore, determined to return to Ohio and die among his friends and kinspeople. I was so fearful that he would die on the way that I wrote to his father, in advance of the young man's departure from Denver, to write to me at once upon the arrival of his son, if he should live to complete the journey. How anxiously I waited for a letter! The son lived to reach home. He seemed to feel better than when he left Denver. I heard from Mr. Freeman again the other day. He has gained in weight twenty-five pounds. He was never in so good health as at the present time. He is at work every day. Life is now a luxury. Is not this quite equal to the story told above about Mr. Charles Phillips who came from Portland, Oregon? And this is a true story!

Denver, Col.

New York Letter.

By S. T. Willis.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Brighton Beach has instituted a free bus service between the hotels at Brighton Beach and Manhattan Beach and the church for the convenience of the guests at the hotels. The walk is a long and sunny one and many would prefer to stay away from church services rather than walk so far in the heat. It is believed that some of the guests will be induced to go to church because of the comfortable means of transit provided. The free bus scheme is mentioned here as a suggestion to other churches similarly situated. Many summer boarders might be brought into closer touch with the churches near them if only the churches would make an effort to bring them into vital union with their interests and services. Christian people on their vacation should not lose sight of the fact that they are still Christ's, though absent for a time from their accustomed places of worship and work.

Among other things of general interest in the report of the joint commission to revise the canons of the Episcopal Church, the one on "Prohibited Degrees," if adopted, may cause some discussion and trouble. In England the question of the "deceased wife's sister" has given the law-makers no little concern, for in that country marriage to a sister-in-law is prohibited by the canons of the church. The new laws proposed by this commission prohibit marriage between persons standing to one another in the following relations:

A man may not marry his mother, step-mother, daughter, stepdaughter, daughter-in-law, sister, sister-in-law, grandmother, step-grandmother, grandmother-in-law, granddaughter, step-granddaughter, granddaughter-in-law, aunt, aunt by marriage, niece, niece by marriage.

A woman may not marry her father, stepfather, son, stepson, son-in-law, brother, brother-in-law, grandfather, step-grandfather, grandfather-in-law, grandson, step-grandson, grandson-in-law, uncle, uncle by marriage, nephew, nephew by marriage.

A sharp contention is going on in some of the daily papers of Gotham on the question of the Bible and religion in the public schools. In this discussion, Roman Catholics and Protestants are arrayed against each other with such animus that it is evident that the issue is very much alive. The Romanists advocate the use of the Bible in the schools provided none but the Catholic version be used and provided that no one teach it but the priests. In other words they are willing that the Catholic doctrines and precepts be taught and no other. The Bible as history and as literature should be taught in all public schools regardless of opposition by sectarian bigots. For no education is complete without a knowledge of the great King Liber, and his matchless charms and deathless power. It is not the business of the state to teach religion. No, certainly not. Wherever it has been tried failure has shown the folly of the attempt. But the state can and should teach the Bible as literature and history, for as such the Bible has no equal in the English tongue.

At the anniversary of the Christian Scientists in Boston recently, the Rev. Mary Baker G. Eddy had her special messages read to the assembly. In these she sets forth anew her claims of healing and prophesies the universal triumph of her teaching. She says again and again there is no such thing as real sin; what we call sin is a false entity. She claims that there is no power that can heal but the power of the mind. She also puts forth as a new doctrine "the motherhood of Deity." Here in New York the progress of this cult is astonishing, as no doubt it is in many other parts of the country. People are asking why it is that "Christian Science," "Zionism" and such fads are attracting so much attention. In a word: They succeed in gaining adherents because they appeal primarily to the bodily ills of men, with the promise of healing. In a country like ours, the success of these movements indicates a widespread ignorance of the Bible, of its real teachings, its spirit and its claims. There never was a greater demand in our country at large for knowledge of the Bible than to-day.

Time for the vacation is upon us and the question of the summer services must be met. In large, rich churches where the resources are sufficient to demand the best talent as supplies, the question is not a grave one, but in congregations of ordinary means the problem frequently is serious. The hard-worked, tired pastor should have a vacation; it is due him and it is due the church for which he labors. But the poor congregation is not always financially able to employ a substitute to take the pastor's place while he is away. Some churches therefore, close the services altogether, and others have fewer of them. It is best to keep all the regular services open to the public right through the vacation season if practical; but if by doing so they drag and no good can be accomplished, it is better for all to take a rest and start in with renewed vigor in the fall. In New York many of the churches have one service each week, and many of them close altogether in the vacation season.

"A Worker's Dream" tells this story: I sat down in my own chair, wearied and worn with my work and soon I fell asleep. Suddenly a stranger entered the room carrying about his person measures, chemical agents and implements. Extending his hand he said: "How is your zeal?" Instantly I conceived it as of physical proportions, and putting my hand into my bosom brought it forth and presented it for inspection. Placing it in his scales he carefully weighed it and said, "One hundred pounds." Then I felt much satisfaction; but he took the mass, broke it to atoms and put it into his crucible and put it into the fire. When the whole was fused he set it aside to cool; afterward he turned it out, struck it with his hammer and it fell apart. Then he severally weighed and tested the parts, making minute notes as he proceeded. Having finished, he gave the notes to me with a look of mingled sorrow and compassion and simply said, "May God save you!" and left the room. The notes read as follows:

Our Conventions as Promoters of Missionary Spirit.

By A. L. Ward.

We have reached a point in our history at which our great annual convention has become an important factor in our further growth and usefulness. Its work, however, is not that of directing the churches ecclesiastically, for we need no such directing agency; nor can it give its attention largely to the question of organization, consolidation, and methods of raising money. All of these are of great importance, and the churches have the right to demand efficiency on the part of every organization and every secretary. But the convention must give itself almost wholly to creation of enthusiasm for the salvation of the whole of mankind. The hearts of the churches must be stirred. To do this not only must the facts be laid bare but the final authority and example of Christ must also be declared. While stating the needs of the world, we must not forget that Christ said, "As the Father hath sent me so send I you," and "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

To these conventions the returned missionary comes as a voice out of the darkness declaring the crying need of the world and the great work already accomplished. Other prophets catch up their cry and carry it back to the churches. This is what must be before we shall be able to reach the dead church conscience. Nay, more, we must have a whole multitude prophesying the wonderful works of God. The great need of the hour is to carry this back to the churches. Enthusiasm for the spread of the kingdom of God must be in the heart of every disciple of the Master. A great convention is the best possible means by which the pastors, the natural bearers of this message to the churches, can be reached and aroused.

William Woods College for Girls, Fulton, Mo.

History of the School.

William Woods College is the legal and logical successor to Daughters College, which had a brief history of one year, having succeeded to the Orphan School of the Christian Church of Missouri, which came into being by virtue of a resolution passed at the convention held in Jefferson City in the year 1900 and by a charter secured from the Secretary of State.

For years the institution has been burdened by a debt which threatened its existence. After a long, hard struggle, when the school was about to perish, a number of generous donors came to the rescue. Chief among these was Dr. W. S. Woods, of Kansas City, who had before given a house and lot in Kansas City, valued at the time at fifty thousand dollars. In consideration of this generosity and the pledged support of this donor, the board of directors changed the name from Daughters College to William Woods College for Girls.

The charter provides that the purpose of the corporation shall continue the same. All funds bequeathed to the school will be kept inviolate and the will of the donors protected in law. In the future, as in the past, the institution will stand for helpfulness to every orphan and dependent girl who aspires to rise to usefulness and to become a factor in promoting the highest welfare of the race. The will of God that the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak will continue to be the soul of this school. A noble, self-supporting, Christ-inspired womanhood is the high goal to which all prayers and labors shall tend. We point with pride to the subjoined tabulated statement covering ten years' work, prosecuted under the most trying circumstances. If the facts and figures of missionary work be the fingers of God, we know that the table, rightly understood, will reveal the hand of God in preserving this school and making it a blessing. Firmly trusting in his strength and accepting his providential guidance, we confidently expect an enlargement commensurate with the greatness of the work and the riches of the people who love the Lord.

A careful study of the facts and figures elsewhere tabulated reveals the marvelous possibilities of the school. It must be very gratifying to its friends to know that the success achieved under such adverse conditions is a prophecy of far greater results in the future.

The plant with all equipment is worth more than $40,000, the endowment in real estate and loaned money is about $40,000, its patronage last year was over one hundred and thirty, at one time the capacity of the building being taxed to the utmost.

The curriculum is now arranged on the same plan as that of schools which articulate with the university of the state of Missouri, giving its students choice of studies leading to the degrees, Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Literature and Bachelor of Science.

The department of music has recently been made very happy by the gift of $2,500 by Mrs. Mary Dulany, of Hannibal, for the construction of rooms for music classes. This will increase the capacity of the school so that more than one hundred girls can be accommodated in the boarding department.

In instrumental music, art, vocal culture, elocution, expression and all that are known as extras, special care is taken in selecting the best teaching talent. While all the departments are ably conducted, it is not making invidious distinction to refer to the fact that Mrs. Anna Heuermann Hamilton is associated with the American College of Musicians of the university of the state of New York and has power to confer degrees from that institution.

Since the school has not endowment large enough to make it wholly benevolent, it relies upon the patronage of rich and well-to-do people to yield the necessary funds to secure the highest efficiency. It rejoices in the patronage of some of the wealthiest people in the state. It points with just pride to the high positions held by its graduates in the schools and homes of the state.

J. B. JONES, Pres.

Commendations.

It affords me pleasure to say that I have known Prof. J. B. Jones, of Fulton, Mo., president of William Woods College, for more than thirty years. When in college he was a fine student, sober, industrious, conscientious, of good repute with professors, other students and citizens. His worth has increased with advancing years. He is a capable scholar, a thorough teacher, and with sleepless vigilance watches over the girls entrusted to his care. As an old school man, the writer of this appreciates his responsibility and knows of none to whom he would so willingly entrust the education of a child. Bro. Jones' family is like himself. His wife, the daughter of Bro. John Rogers, one of the strongest of our pioneer preachers, is eminently qualified to preside over the domestic concerns of a large school. The faculty of the college is fine and the equipment good. William Woods College is unrivaled in its class.

W. A. OLDHAM,

Pastor Christian Church.

Carthage, Mo.

It gives me much pleasure to note the bright prospects of William Woods College for Girls. I have known personally for years some of the men connected with the school, and their names are a guarantee of success, and an assurance that girls committed to them are in the safest hands. J. B. Jones, the president, is known, loved and honored throughout the whole church, and W. S. Woods and J. T. Mitchell are not only men of sterling worth morally and intellectually, but they are eminently successful as business men. I only mention these three because I know them personally.

M. M. DAVIS,

Pastor Central Christian Church.

Dallas, Tex.

I take pleasure in saying that I consider Prof. J. B. Jones eminently fitted for the high position which he occupies at the head of a large school for young ladies. His education is ample, his experience has been successful, and his industry is un-failing. Few men are so well qualified in every way for the work in which he is engaged. I speak from personal knowledge, having known him from his earliest manhood.

J. W. MCGARVEY,

Pres. College of the Bible.

Lexington, Ky.

On account of the civil war disturbing our public schools, I had to send my oldest children away to school when they were quite young, and for twenty consecutive years I had children in boarding schools—Jacksonville, Ill., Canton, Boonville and St. Louis, Mo., and the East—so I feel that I have had quite a little experience along that line. I attended many of their commencement exercises and was fairly well pleased with all of them. Since the beginning of the school I have had orphan children in your school at Fulton, and have attended its commencement exercises, and I am pleased to say that in all of its different departments I regard it as far superior to any school I have heretofore patronized, and I most cheerfully recommend it to all persons having children to educate. In fact, since it has been under the management of yourself and your good wife, I think it as nearly perfect in every respect as it is possible for such a school to be.

W. H. DULANY.

Hannibal, Mo.

Having known President Jones well and favorably for many years, and being somewhat acquainted with the work that the institution over which he presides has been doing, it gives me great pleasure to commend both him and it to the esteem and confidence of the general public. Knowing President Jones and his most excellent wife as I do, I have no hesitancy in saying that a better environment for girls away from home can not be found than the one furnished by William Woods College at Fulton, Mo. The course of instruction is excellent, while moral and religious influences are all that could be desired.

J. B. BRINEY.

Moberly, Mo.

MY DEAR BRO. JONES:—I congratulate you on the splendid year's work of William Woods College for Girls, and on the fact that you close the year out of debt. With the plant and equipment we have the brotherhood of Missouri ought to fill your fine building with pupils and furnish you an ample endowment fund, such as would afford every facility for enlarging your work from year to year. I know of no school among us where a better work is being done than in William Woods College.

W. F. RICHARDSON,

Pastor First Christian Church.

Kansas City, Mo.

I am well acquainted with the work and management of William Woods College and am glad to say that it is one of the best schools of its kind in the country. President J. B. Jones is an eminent scholar, an able teacher and a man of unusual executive ability. He is assisted by a body of competent teachers. The school is now on a better footing than ever before and I believe that an appreciation of its merits will be indicated by a very large attendance next year.

LEVI MARSHALL,

Pastor First Christian Church.

Hannibal, Mo.

Having been for four years a patron of your school, I desire to say that it has proved thoroughly satisfactory, and to parents desiring to educate their daughters I highly commend this school.

R. S. HARVEY.

Current Literature.

July Magazines.

The article on "Working One's Way Through College" in last month's Century, is followed up in the current number by an article on "Working One's Way Through Women's Colleges." It appears that there are fewer actual occupations open to college girls than to college boys and they are compelled for the most part to depend upon the college public to furnish patrons for their industries, while the self-supporting student at Yale or Harvard has the whole city as a field for his operations. But they exhibit vast ingenuity in finding wants and filling them profitably, and the list of remunerative employments includes occupations as diverse as giving dancing lessons, blacking shoes and catching frogs for the laboratory. There is a brief article on "The Millenary Celebration of King Alfred" at Winchester, England, by Louis Dyer, who also writes on King Alfred in the Atlantic Monthly. One of the most important addresses at this Winchester celebration in the present month was to have been made by Prof. John Fiske who died a few days ago. Mr. Cleveland's second and final paper on the Venezuelan boundary appears in this number.

Louis Dyer writing in the Atlantic Monthly on King Alfred, maintains that that monarch is really entitled to all the praise which legend has given him. "Alfred literally and ideally performed the whole duty of a king; he fought the battles of his people and also rightly judged them." History does not substantiate the claim that he was the real founder of Oxford University, yet the stimulus which he gave to education was among the influences which after the lapse of years brought into being that oldest English seat of learning. "Aspects of the Pan-American Exposition" is the title of a very appreciative article which gives great praise to the designers of the Buffalo fair. It is characterized as putting electricity on the stage—a stage of 350 acres with $10,000,000 worth of settings. William DeWitt Hyde has an article on "The Cardinal Virtues" which, although dullness might be expected in an essay on ethics, is probably the most fascinating article in the magazine. The reconstruction article this month is on "New Orleans and Reconstruction" and its author shows how blunderingly it was done. In fact, the reconstruction was carried on about as unwisely in Louisiana as anywhere and the study of the process helps one to understand why the South has been solid so long.

Christian Science is getting rather more advertising in the magazines than is due to it and a great deal more refutation than it needs. T. J. Hudson's article on that subject in Everybody's Magazine for last month has called forth a reply which is published in the same magazine for this month in connection with Mr. Hudson's second article. It would have been better, perhaps, for the defendant to wait until the first writer was through. But, after all, it is of little consequence, for the reply has no substance. The writer relies on his good temper and sweet spirit to prove his position, and says, in effect: "Behold how we love our enemies and how gently we deal with our persecutors. Our doctrine must therefore be true." This sort of self-conscious sweet-spiritedness is of the same quality as the pride of humility not infrequently seen among the unco guid. Besides these articles on Christian Science in this magazine, one is announced for the August number of Ainslee's and there is one in the current number of the North American Review. Booth Tarkington has a very clever little story exhibiting an Indiana farmer's opinion of L'Aiglon—and why. Other articles are on "Photography as a Fine Art," "The Life of Our Soldiers in the Philippines" and "The Real Abdul Hamid," besides stories. Altogether Mr. Wanmaker's magazine is coming up rapidly.

Mr. Richardson, of the American school at Athens, writes in Scribner's of "A Tour in Sicily." It is a pleasing combination of cycling adventures and learned archeology. It is a pleasant experience to read after a man who knows his archeology so well that he is not oppressed by it and can be gay even in the presence of the hoariest monuments of Sicilian architecture. John La Farge presents another section of his "Diary in the Pacific" illustrated by his own masterly drawings of types of the Pacific Islanders, who form wonderfully favorable subjects for his pencil. Mr. Seton-Thompson's "Krag, the Kootenay Ram," which is finished in this number, puts the reader into sympathetic touch with this illusive creature and exhibits his point of view and idea of life as successfully as the author's other writings have done with grizzlies, antelopes and field mice. Following up his essay on Oratory, Senator Hoar writes of famous orators whom he has heard, beginning with a debate in the House of Commons, participated in by John Bright, Lord Palmerston and Mr. Gladstone.

Alfred Austin, the poet laureate of England, has an eight-page poem in the North American Review under the not too alluring title "Polyphemus." The poem is more pleasing than the title, but still it lacks those qualities which make most people read poetry. It is free from imperfections of form or imagery, but lacks the something which most of his poems lack. "Polyphemus" reminds one somewhat of Matthew Arnold's "Empedocles on Etna." Perhaps it is the setting which first suggests the comparison, for both are located in Sicily, one in the age of myth and the other not long after it. This recent poem is perhaps as good as the older one, though far less pretentious. But then, who ever reads "Empedocles"? It lacks that same something. The article by Dr. J. M. Buckley on "The Absurd Paradox of Christian Science" carries its gist in its title. It is clear and convincing and entertaining withal. Mr. H. G. Wells' "Anticipations," which are continued in this number and will be continued again in the next, quite make one regret that he cannot hope to enjoy the blessings of the twenty-first century with all the improvements in domestic economy which the writer foresees.

Dr. Rodgers, of Manila, writing in the Missionary Review of the World on "Religious Conditions in the Philippines," refutes the popular notion that the Filipinos, though hating the friars, are sincerely attached to the Catholic Church and would resent any attempt at evangelization on the part of Protestant missionaries. In the words of one of their own number, "The Filipino people are Roman Catholic because they have never had the opportunity of being anything else. Their fidelity to the church is that of ignorance and not of deliberate choice." The native priests have naturally imbibed many of the vices of the Spanish friars and if the latter are not returned to the parishes the former will be unable to maintain the ecclesiastical organization.

The Review of Reviews is always more valuable for its brief paragraphs and summaries, which are too numerous to mention, than for its long articles. Some of the more important of the latter this month are on "Count Tolstoy in Thought and Action," "Preserving the Hudson Palisades," "The Washington Memorial Institution," "The Russian Problem in Manchuria" and "New Phases of Polar Research." The writer of the latter article thinks it rather probable that with the improved equipment of recent years the North Pole will be reached within the next two years by one of the expeditions now on the way or to start this summer.

A new story by Ralph Connor, entitled "The Man from Glengarry," begins in the July number of the Outlook. It is a story of Canadian lumber camps and starts off with the proper swing. Hamilton W. Mabie, writing of the Buffalo Exposition, praises it especially for its harmony and unity of design and for its color effects.

New Husband.

Quite an Improvement on the Old.

"I have been compelled to stop drinking it," I said to the friend who asked me to strengthen up on a cup of her good coffee. "Well," she said, "that needn't bother you, for I have Postum Food Coffee here, which completely cured a friend of mine of sick headaches." I tried her coffee and it was very good, but when I tried to make it at home, I was disappointed. I soon found that I was not making it correctly, but by putting in two heaping teaspoonfuls of Postum for each person and letting it boil twenty minutes, it was delicious.

I had at that time been an invalid for several years, but did not know my trouble was caused by coffee drinking, of which I was very fond. I immediately began to feel better after leaving off coffee and using Postum, and stuck to it. One day I met a lady who was troubled the same as I was, and whose appearance on the street really shocked me, for she was so emaciated. She exclaimed in surprise at my improved appearance, and wanted to know what I had been doing. She asked me if I had had a healer of any kind. I said, "Yes, I have allowed Postum Food Coffee to work the almost complete miracle of curing me."

My husband has been absent in Georgia for some time, and has been in wretched health, having been in the hospital twice for indigestion. I wrote him to stop using coffee and try Postum, told him also just how to make it. Yesterday I received a letter from him in which he says, "I am feeling very much better, thanks to you and Postum. I sleep better, eat better, and in fact, my dear, am quite an improvement on the old husband." Alice L. Gilson, 805 Park Ave., Salt Lake City, Utah.

Our Budget.

—The theory of the sun's losing its heat gradually has created no consternation during the past fortnight.

—The probable congelation of the earth a million years hence has not even produced a shiver in these parts.

—And yet life is tolerable, and the world's work goes on in spite of torrid days and breezeless nights.

—Protracted meeting season is now at its height, in some of the states, and many converts will be made with the thermometer near the century mark.

—A. L. Platt, who has been pastor at Brazil, Ind., for two years, has resigned. The official board has passed resolutions of regret and appreciation.

—F. B. Sapp passed through St. Louis and visited this office recently on his way from California to Gladesville, W. Va., where he will spend a short vacation visiting his parents.

—Morton D. Adams, who for nearly eighteen years has been a missionary in Bilaspur, India, under the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, has returned home on a furlough. His present address is 154 Hawthorne Street, Cleveland.

—Lewis O. Lehman has closed a pastorate of two and a half years at Long Point, Ill., and will locate with the church at Chandler ville, Ill. The church which he is leaving gave him a public reception and testimonial of esteem before his departure.

—The Adams Street Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla. has secured a lot on the corner of Clay and Church Streets and will soon remove to a temporary building erected on that lot. The name of the church henceforth will be the Church Street Christian Church.

—The farewell reception to Bro. and Sister Rains at Cincinnati on the 2nd inst., was a very pleasant occasion. They will go by way of Denver, Colorado Springs and Salt Lake City and will visit the California state meeting at Santa Cruz. They will sail from San Francisco, on the "Doric," Aug. 2nd. Bon voyage!

—In connection with the South Kentucky Bible-school, especial praise is given to J. B. Briney's series of lectures on "Christian Evidences." H. D. Smith suggests that they ought to be widely heard among our churches and that schools, Endeavor societies, Chautauqua assemblies and churches would do well to secure the delivery of this series.

—Virginia Disciples are requested to take note of the following: In view of the fact that the church at Tazewell believes that the interests of the state work would not be best served by holding the state convention at that place this fall, it has been decided to change the place of the meeting to Richmond. The date is unchanged, Oct. 29-Nov. 1. This announcement is made on the authority of E. N. Newman, Secretary of the Virginia Christian Missionary Society.

—The receipts for foreign missions during the month of June amounted to $36,576.71. During the same month last year $2,048 was received for famine relief. Omitting the famine relief, the gain in the receipts over last year for the month of June amounts to $2,898.25. There was a loss, however, of 57 contributing Sunday-schools. It is hoped that enough schools will respond during the month of July to make up much more than the loss of 57 during the month of June. During the first nine months of the current missionary year the receipts for foreign missions amounted to $137,855.92, or a gain of $5,286.28. The friends of the work should keep constantly in mind the earnest effort that is being made to reach $200,000 this year.

—Bro. Thompson, of Pine Bluff, Ark., is convalescing from a severe attack of typhoid fever.

—J. G. M. Luttenberger lectured at the Devil's Lake (N. D.) Chautauqua during his recent visit to that state, and also at the Music Hall at Fargo.

—John L. Brandt, of Valparaiso, Ind., preached last Sunday for the First Church, St. Louis, from which F. O. Fannon has recently resigned.

—I. J. Spencer decided not to accept a call to Chicago. He will remain with the Central Church in Lexington, Ky. The Central Church has almost finished paying off the debt of $27,000—principal and interest—on its beautiful new building. The congregation felt that for him to leave would be detrimental to its progress.

—The Christian Church at Morgantown, W. Va., the seat of the State University, wishes to secure a young man for pastor who will take charge of a church and do work in the university. He should be prepared to enter the senior class or to do graduate work. Address Prof. D. W. Ohern, Morgantown, W. Va.

—The congregation at Lovington, Ill., is erecting a new church which will be completed about Nov. 1, at a cost of $10,000. The pastor, F. C. Overbaugh, presents the case in the local paper and makes a general appeal for assistance. Why not? A good church is one of the most valuable improvements that a town can have. It raises the value of real estate as well as the moral tone of the community.

—The Maxinkuckee Assembly, of which J. V. Coombs is president, will be in session from July 24 to August 12. The program shows the names of thirty-seven lecturers, among whom are Z. T. Sweeney, Frank Regan, C. C. Redgrave, Chaplain Bruner, W. J. Lhamon, Prof. Alfred Dickie, A. McLean, A. L. Orcutt, L. L. Carpenter, Mrs. Carrie Nation, W. E. Harlow and Prof. B. C. Dewese. Brother Scoville will conduct a two days' evangelistic congress in connection with the assembly.

—At the annual meeting of the American Medical Association recently held at St. Paul there were noteworthy discussions of the effects of alcohol on the human system and its value as a food and as a medicine. Prof. Atwater's theory of the positive value of alcohol was severely criticised and unanimously condemned. The American Medical Temperance Association which met in connection with the above passed resolutions repudiating Prof. Atwater's conclusions as erroneous, dangerous and unwarranted by the evidence resulting from his own experiment.

—G. W. Terrell, of Unionville, Mo., has moved to Albany, Mo., and will preach for the church there. During the summer he will act as the authorized agent and solicitor for Central Christian College. Churches and individuals to which he goes are requested to receive him cordially and grant him facilities for presenting his work. Central Christian College needs and deserves more adequate support, and the money is in the state and in the hands of those who profess to be interested in all Christian enterprises. Help Brother Terrell to get it.

—One feature of the religious work which should be done in connection with the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo has not yet received sufficient attention. Remembering the fact that the Mexican and South American visitors to the Exposition are Spanish in language and Catholic in religion, it seems appropriate that the work and spirit of American Protestantism should in some way be represented in the Spanish language. It is proposed to open a bureau for this purpose in a prominent position where the Bible Society, the Tract Society and the various mis-tionary and other religious organizations may be represented, especially by their literature. There is a need for the distribution of evangelical literature in Spanish. Such work may sow valuable seed which will assist in future Protestant missionary work in the Latin-American republics. An appeal for funds to support this work is made and endorsed by many ministers of different denominations and of national reputation. Contributions should be sent to Mr. Frank M. Threadgill, 121 W. 87th Street, New York.

—We have received from Bro. J. Z. Tyler an illustrated pamphlet of 45 pages, entitled Recollections of my Richmond Pastorate. To these Recollections, which embrace an account of his entrance upon the work at Richmond, with the local conditions then existing and a number of interesting episodes connected with this pastorate, are added brief sketches of his pastoral relations with other churches, thus bringing the brief autobiographical sketch down to date. These Recollections will be found not only interesting to the churches with which he has held pastoral relations and to his many friends throughout the country, but to many others, and especially to pastors. Anyone who reads this sketch of Bro. Tyler's life will not be at a loss to account for his present physical condition. Of him it may be said, as it was said of his Master, that the zeal of his Father's house has consumed him. The writer chanced to be at Richmond at a time when Bro. and Sister Tyler had returned there for a visit, many years after the close of their pastorate, and can bear witness to the remarkable manifestation of Christian love and sympathy shown by the entire church. It was beautiful and touching to note the high esteem in which he was held by the old and by the young. If the character of the Richmond church has been determined, in any large degree, by the long and successful pastorate of Bro. Tyler, he is not without a crown of rejoicing and of glory even here, for it is one of the very best churches in all our great brotherhood, as the present able and beloved pastor, Carey E. Morgan, would gladly testify. This pamphlet contains an excellent picture of Bro. Tyler at the age of fifty, together with many of the prominent men of the Seventh Street Church, Richmond. It also contains a picture of Bro. Tyler at twenty-four, the age at which he entered upon the pastorate. The price of the pamphlet is fifty cents, and the Christian Publishing Company will be glad to receive orders for it, and forward same to Bro. Tyler without any expense to him. Aside from the merit of the work, the condition of Bro. Tyler's health, well known to our readers, makes it highly desirable that the pamphlet should have a large sale.

Christian Endeavor Convention.

[Editorial Correspondence.]

The twentieth annual international convention of the Christian Endeavor Society is now in session at this writing in the city of Cincinnati. The trustees held their business sessions on Saturday. On Saturday evening the great Music Hall, in which our jubilee convention was held, was crowded to hear the introductory addresses of welcome with the responses, and the president's address and secretary's report. Governor Nash, who was to have given the welcome in behalf of the state, telegraphed his regrets and sent his secretary of state to make the address of welcome, which he did in a very creditable way. Other local speakers, representing the committee and the city, voiced a hearty welcome which was responded to by representatives from Canada, China, Japan and the United States.

A huckeye gavel was presented to President Clark, who made a brief speech in accepting same. The address by President Clark was characteristic in striking the keynote of Christian Endeavor, and showing its adaptation to the needs of the twentieth century.

There were our needs which the church of the twentieth century felt, and which Christian Endeavor could supply: (1) A more strenuous, aggressive Christian life; (2) better prayer-meetings, not a substitute for them; (3) a more thorough organization for efficient work and (4) greater unity among Christians of various denominations. Each of these points was elaborated and enforced with great vigor and clearness. Christian Endeavor, he said, had no infallible pope, no second Elijah, and no inspired mother. It rested its claims on its adaptation to the needs of the church to-day.

Secretary's Baer's report was full of encouragement. There has been a net increase in the number of new societies the past year of 2,000, with a total membership of almost 100,000 members. The work in China and in South Africa has suffered from the effects of the war in these countries. Hereafter biennial instead of annual conventions will be held. The present order of the religious bodies in this country according to their numerical strength in Christian Endeavor is given as follows: Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Disciples of Christ, Baptists, Cumberland Presbyterians, Methodist Protestants and Lutherans.

A field secretary has been employed to devote his whole time in the field to Christian Endeavor. There is no thought of any backward step in this work. Christian Endeavor has come to stay, and blessed is the church that avails itself of it as a training school for Christian workers. More than a half million dollars was given to missions last year by a little more than 8,000 societies which reported. There are 26,000 "Comrades of the Quiet Hour," and 160,000 young people united with the church last year from the ranks of the Endeavor societies.

In the morning nearly all the pulpits of the city were filled by visiting preachers. The afternoon was crowded by special meetings. There were three great meetings in the afternoon addressed by distinguished men—one on temperance, one on Sabbath observance, and one on missions. The one on temperance was held at the Central Christian Church, and was addressed by three specialists, George W. Bain, Mrs. Anna Howard Shaw and Oliver W. Stewart. Each of these spoke 25 minutes, and we never heard three abler addresses in the same length of time. Mr. Bain is persuasively eloquent and tender, Mrs. Shaw is clear and comprehensive, and Mr. Stewart is logic on fire. He discussed the delicate question as to how Christian workers and voters could be saved from their present attitude to the liquor traffic. The three addresses, covering different phases of the temperance problem, ought to be printed and circulated among the people by millions.

At night the pulpits were again filled by the visitors. We heard Charles M. Sheldon at the Central Christian Church. The great auditorium was packed full, with hundreds of people standing, to hear this plain, unpretentious man talk simply and sanely about how to minister to the world's needs. It is not his eloquence or logic that draws people, but the fact that he is trying to practice what he preaches, and that he possesses the mind of Christ in a large degree. Sunday was a great day. The weather was delightful and large audiences greeted all the speakers, and the air was electric with the spirit of reform.

Monday, as we write these lines, the program is going on at Music Hall and at the Central Christian Church, which is one of the centers of the convention work. Dr. Chapman, of the "Quiet Hour," is sick at Winona lake, and his part of the program is omitted. Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins and Rev. Cornelius Woolfkin are conducting such meetings each morning. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of England, and Rev. J. F. Carson, of Brooklyn, are giving a series of special addresses, the one on prayer and the other on the Holy Spirit.

A splendid program is being carried out, and while the attendance does not equal that of many other of its predecessors, we have never attended a more profitable convention in the history of Christian Endeavor.

Disciples of Christ are well represented here, and several are on the program. Among many others present are such well-known preachers as F. D. Power, A. B. Philpott, J. Z. Tyler, George Darsie, J. E. Pounds, Prof. H. L. Willett, W. S. Giltner, O. G. Hertzog, and J. T. Boone, a host of younger men and laymen not a few.

St. Louis made application for the convention of 1903, and the matter was referred to the executive committee. Other features of the program including the "Disciples' Rally" will be reported in our next. This record must be closed here to catch this week's issue.

The Case of C. M. Wickham.

To the Disciples of Christ in Iowa and other states.

Greeting:—It becomes the sad duty of the board of the Iowa Christian Convention to report upon what seems to them a very serious situation in Sioux City, Ia.

For several weeks there have been two congregations in that city. Each is claiming our recognition and co-operation. Four months ago these two were one and the future looked fair.

This division originated from charges against the pastor, C. M. Wickham. These charges were brought by two of the official board of the congregation. They were as dark and black as ever were brought against the moral character of any minister within the knowledge of the Iowa board. The trial was before a congregation more than half of whose members had been brought in by the accused within the previous year. The jury consisted of those twenty-five or more years of age who had heard all of the trial. At the close of a long trial there were 48 of these, 28 of these voted for his acquittal and 20 for condemnation.

There were four prominent brethren from outside the city who heard all the testimony. Three of these united in a published statement declaring him guilty and utterly unworthy of the confidence or countenance of the churches.

Before this trial began the president of the Iowa board went to Sioux City at the call of the officials, not all joining in this call, and spent three days. His effort to get the trial before an unprejudiced committee of brethren, mutually chosen, was a failure. The accused refused to the last. Our president then filed his protest as a part of the proceedings and they were published in the Sioux City papers.

We are not a court of appeal or of first hearing. We are not permitted to brand a man with guilt or to certify his innocence. All this work must be left to a properly chosen committee. Such a committee in this case was refused. Our duty is to shield churches from unworthy preachers and worthy preachers from badly managed churches, in so far as these can be done by a body thus empowered.

All the evidence of this long trial, taken by an expert shorthand court reporter, is on file in Sioux City. It is accessible to any or all of our congregations. We advise no congregation in this or any other state to employ the said C. M. Wickham without first going to Sioux City and fully examining the records of this trial.

Since the said C. M. Wickham has protested any action on our part, claiming that it will be detrimental to him and his work, we pledge ourselves to co-operate with him in bringing his case before a competent committee, chosen one by himself, one by us and the third by these two. We agree to be bound by the findings of this committee and to publish its findings as widely as these are published.

Washington Notes.

A Baptist minister in Washington does not seem to be giving much heed to the advice of the Chicago Record-Herald in its editorial, "Why Not Preach the Gospel?" Here are some of his themes as announced in the Saturday papers: "An Upset Mother-in-law," "The Story of a Washington Woman and Her Parsnips," "Why a Young Irishman Made a Fellow Feel His Fists," "Some Old Maids get Married and Make Folks Hopping Mad," "She Poked His Ear."

It is said that this preacher manages to get a full house by the announcement of such themes, and then preaches to them the straight gospel. For fifteen years now he has followed this method, has baptized hundreds of converts and has with one exception the largest Baptist congregation in the city. His experience seems to disprove this assertion of a writer on Homiletics: "It is a mistake to try to win attention by sensational themes. The method does not pay in the long run. It is much like hanging a whisk of hay before a donkey's nose, he gets discouraged by constantly failing to reach it."

F. D. Power and wife start July 22 for the Pacific coast where Bro. Power will make addresses at the California state conventions at Santa Cruz and Long Beach. Bro. Power was called 26 years ago to be pastor of the Vermont Avenue Church of this city. During these years his parish has been gradually expanding until now it covers the whole country.

E. B. BAGBY.

City and Country.

Coming in from work in the garden, where I had been busy all the morning, my wife called my attention to "A Bit of Country Road," by the assistant editor of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. I had been too busy during the fore part of the week to read even some of the best pieces in the number. I found it really interesting. It seemed so much like a bicyclist's description of this part of Ohio would be. The roads would be about the same, and the hills, and the people. Some of the names sound familiar, and I wonder why there should be a "Hillsboro" and a "DeSoto" in Missouri. I have in my memory the original Hillsboro, the county seat of Highland county, O., and DeSoto, Ia. But having never visited the "Campagna, near Rome," nor seen the little town called "Bonne Terre," these names sound less familiar to me.

There must be food for thought, as well as recreation, in such tours in the country. And it is noticeable that we like the independence enjoyed in these country places. True, we must labor without much compensation and deny ourselves many of the luxuries, even of literature, while our dwelling is in the land of hills and dales, of "main roads" and by-ways, and "paths" made by the hogs and the cattle.

I never rode a wheel, but I have taken little trips over the country, among the hills and down the valleys. I always liked to see people at their homes. They appear more natural and they show their education. So it is when we go from the country into the city. Country people are often surprised to find the citizens so "clever," so plain-looking, so "common." On the other hand, on going from the city into the country, persons of culture have found people to be polite, generous, hospitable and intelligent.

My chief thought is that it is a good thing for the country people and the citizens to "call" on one another and get better acquainted. Let the rural visitor be himself, not like Peter Cartwright, in Boston, and let the city brother try and make his brother from the country feel as comfortable as possible in his presence. Let all class prejudice be removed, and let no one be envious at his more wealthy or more honorable brother, provided there is humility, condescension and love. And let not the poor man affect to be what he is not.

W. PINKERTON.

Gillespieville, O., June 22.

California Notes.

Great preparations are being made all over the state for the grand hegira of the Disciples to Santa Cruz, the mecca of California Christians. The summer school of Bible study will begin on July 16 under the management of Dean Van Kirk, of Berkeley Bible Seminary. A week or more will be spent with the summer school work before the state convention assemblies. Other neat and permanent cottages are being put up at "Garfield Christian Park," and brethren and sisters from mountain and valley are preparing to soon take up their most delightful abode by the sounding sea. A number of new workers in the state will meet us for the first time. We may not have Bro. J. O. Davis with us; he dropped into work for the Hollister church something over a year ago, and one of the most intelligent and winsome daughters of the golden west gathered up his heartstrings. He has not yet returned from a visit to his Missouri home.

Our Sacramento Valley district evangelist, Bro. Bounell, is doing a good work at the valley city, Marysville. Judge Murphy, who for all these years has been judge, lawyer, elder and often preacher, is now rejoicing that he will have a good house to worship in.

Bro. Evans, a new man to most of us on the coast, has proved himself in his Red Bluff field to be a faithful workman. The old building is replaced by a most excellent new one and the people crowd its aisles.

Bro. Lowe seems to be bishop of the Bakersfield oil country. The oil developments have brought into the valley all classes of people, but Bro. Lowe is prepared to meet them and show them one of the neatest churches and a faithful congregation.

Bro. Burton, since entering the evangelistic field, has had a number of successful meetings. He is now in Los Angeles helping Bro. Ward.

Bro. Glen McWilliams has also proved himself to be a successful evangelist. He has just closed a grand meeting at Fortuna, where Bro. Markle is laboring for one of the best congregations in the state.

Bro. Sanders is pushing the conquest through the busy streets of Eureka and his ministrations are greeted by that stirring young city of Humboldt Bay. The great red-wood camps will hear the great message from him.

Bro. Meeker, of Madison, will be retained to hold and storm the fort as he has done during the successful year past.

Bro. Dixon has been called to Vacaville. He places his family at Santa Cruz till the brethren can build a house for him.

Bro. LeMasters is working up the people about Williams and Maxwell.

Bro. J. M. Gilstrap, the itinerant dentist and gospel preacher, has been doing a fine work at Fowler. He has his own tent, works at his dental work and preaches the gospel day and night. He is known as a deeply consecrated and bold defender of the faith.

The annual C. E. state union just closed one of the most interesting meetings of its history at Santa Ana. Large attendance; fine program; great enthusiasm.

Bro. L. O. Fergusson is doing a great work at Modesto.

We extend the hand of greeting to Bro. G. K. Berry on his return to the Pacific coast, and to the editorial staff of the Pacific Christian.

We are furnishing our "booklet" on "The Model Christian Endeavor Society" at 5c; 25c per doz. Its publication was ordered at the state convention.

"Pleasant Dreams"

Cries the young maid to her mother, as she retires to rest. The mother smiles, but sighs. She knows that the pains that rack her will not stop for darkness, and that if she sleeps her dreams will only be echoes of the sufferings of the day.

Why not sleep soundly and rise refreshed at morning, with strength and courage for the day's duties? Weak, nervous women, sufferers from backache, bearing-down pains, and other womanly ailments, have found a perfect cure in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It heals the womanly diseases which cause the pains and nervousness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"I deem it my duty to express my heartfelt gratitude for having been the means, under Providence, of restoring me to health," writes Mrs. B. H. Munn, of Springhill, Leon Co., Fla. "For nearly two years I suffered from female weakness so I could not stand on my feet any length of time; could scarcely walk at all. Appetite was much impaired; I had bearing-down sensations; can't express how badly I did feel. Had tried several kinds of medicine which did me little or no good. At last decided to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I had not taken all of two bottles before I saw it was benefiting me, so I continued to take it until I had taken seven bottles, when I felt entirely cured. Did not feel a touch of my old complaint. It has been over a year since I took your medicine, and I can truthfully say that my health has been better for the last year than it had been for four years previously."

"You may publish this as a testimonial."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

SINGING EVANGELISTS will be pleased with the analytical classification, enabling them without reference to indices to find a suitable song on a moment's warning. The rich variety and power of the solo and special song department, selected specially for his use in revivals, will be joyfully received.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos, with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will not find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed, unless it be to keep in the style.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Popular Hymns No. 2 contains 256 songs.

The forty-eighth year of Roanoke College was a successful one. Students were enrolled from 14 states, Porto Rico and Korea. Among the four Koreans was Prince Euiwha, second son of the Emperor. The college has a curriculum with elective studies, well adapted to suit the wants of all students. For a copy of the catalogue, with the June Collegian, address the president, Dr. Julius D. In the beautiful country between the Allegheny and Blue Ridge Mountains at Boteourt Springs, is Hollins Institute. For fifty-eight years the name of this fine old school has been associated with the highest standards of mental and moral training for women; and the number of eminent women who have graduated there is proof positive of the soundness of their principles.

It has been the policy of the school to substitute for the stringent system of espionage in vogue at most girls' schools such surroundings and refining, elevating influences as might be found in the first Virginia homes.

The climate is equable, being neither extremely hot nor cold, making it safe for pupils from any part of the country. Sulphur and chalybeate springs in the grounds are an important factor in securing that vigorous health so universal at Hollins.

Much attention is given to physical exercise in the fine, bracing air; and the best of medical attendance is accessible at all times. The south should be proud to own such an institution and give it generous support.

The American Revision Committee have completed their work of revision of the Holy Bible, and it will be published by Thomas Nelson & Sons, New York, in August. The committee state that they have, besides incorporating the appendix in the text, bestowed much time in rectifying the errors, inconsistencies, oversights and infelicities which have been detected. Moreover, inasmuch as the American revisers, in preparing the appendix of 1885, aimed to reduce the differences to the lowest limit, they waived the larger part of their preferences, many of which they regarded as of decided importance. This new edition will embody a considerable part of these emendations which represent the deliberate preferences of the whole American committee but which were not put into the appendix. Furthermore, carefully selected marginal references and concise topical headings have been added.

"Henderson's Picturesque Gardens" is the title of a new and magnificently illustrated garden book which should have a wide distribution among lovers of fine gardens and artistic homesurroundings. There are over three hundred superb illustrations in it, made from photographs taken in the prettiest gardens of the world, portraying lawn, garden and landscape effects, plant and tree groupings, summer-houses, arches, columns, festoons, etc., picturesquely draped with vines, as well as numerous other garden embellishments.

The text matter, by Charles Henderson, entertainingly describes the various illustrations, giving as well the names of such plants, trees, shrubs, bulbs and seeds as are used to form the various combinations.

The book is elegantly gotten up and certainly will prove suggestive of many improvements and embellishments on established home grounds, and for those planning new lawns and gardens it must be of inestimable value. It is published by the well-known seedsmen and florists, Peter Henderson & Co., 35 and 37 Courtlandt St., New York.

Dr. Pierce's Free Bureau of Information at Buffalo, N. Y., was organized as a public-spirited enterprise for the best interests of Buffalo and its Pan-American guests. There is absolutely no charge, fee or gratuity for any service rendered by the bureau either to visitors or to householders.

This Free Bureau is located in a beautiful old mansion at Buffalo, at 652 Main Street, just opposite the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of which Dr. R. V. Pierce is chief medical director. It is fitted up with reception-rooms, wash rooms, dressing-rooms, parlors, and all conveniences for out-of-town visitors.

It includes a postal department where guests may receive mail, and writing rooms with facilities for the writing and mailing of letters. There is also an identification department where strangers may meet friends, or in case of accident may be identified and their friends notified.

In connection with this Free Bureau Dr. Pierce issues a free guide book to the Pan-American, Buffalo and vicinity. This book contains maps of Buffalo and the Exposition, together with much information most useful and necessary for the guidance and direction of strangers in a strange city.

Bro. J. Fraise Richard, reference to whom was made in our news columns a few weeks since, has sent an advertisement of the educational institution of which he has recently assumed the presidency, namely: The Modern Normal and Business College at Fayette, O. His college is a combination of and successor to the following named schools:

1. Normal Music and Business College, organized in Fayette in 1880.
2. Modern Bureau of Correspondence, organized in Washington, D. C., in 1890.
3. Modern Correspondence Normal, organized in New Philadelphia, O., in 1895.
4. Modern Normal College, organized in Washington, D. C., in 1892.

Superior advantages are offered at exceedingly low rates. The location is said to be very fine and the instruction thorough. The full term opens Sept. 3.

Book Notes.

In "Our Budget" of this issue will be found a notice of Recollections of my Richmond Pastorate, by J. Z. Tyler. We desire, also, to call attention to it in this place. Bro. Tyler is very widely known, both in and out of our own brotherhood. During a busy life he has done a great deal for the cause we all love, and though now he is an invalid, not able to perform active service, there are tens of thousands of his friends who earnestly pray that he may be restored to health, and permitted to go on laboring for Christ and the church for a score of years yet. This booklet that he has just issued is very handsomely gotten up, and it is as interesting as it is handsome. Every pastor, and especially every pastor of a large city church, has many strange experiences. Bro. Tyler was no exception to the rule, and some of his experiences he relates in a most interesting fashion. The price of the booklet is Fifty Cents. Bro. Tyler has himself published this booklet, and to him will go all the profits from its sale. The Christian Publishing Co., however, will gladly receive orders for copies. These orders must be accompanied by cash, as both the cash and the order will immediately be forwarded to the author and publisher.

The young people of a certain congregation desired to indicate the esteem and affection with which they regarded the pastor of that congregation, and decided to make him some kind of a present. It was easy to decide that but not so easy to decide the next question, which was, What shall this present be? The discussion was long drawn-out, but at last there arose in their midst a level-headed person who remarked: "Our pastor was, as you all know, a member of the ministry of another religious body until quite recently, when he came among us. He has not yet had time to secure the standard books of the literature of our people. I suggest that we present him with The Campbell Library, as offered by the Christian Publishing Co." And it was even so. The good sense of the suggestion was recognized at once. There are many, many other pastors who would like to have this set of books, but who do not feel that they can spare the price, which is $10. This, however, is a small sum for a number of persons to raise, between them. Any Y. P. S. C. E. could collect that amount in twenty-four hours, and make glad the heart of their pastor. This hint is thrown out for the benefit of Ladies' Aid Societies, Endeavor Societies, etc., etc., all over the country.

If you are quietly looking for a first-class volume for summer reading, permit us to call your attention to Wheeling Through Europe, by W. E. Garrison. This book, issued last summer, has been a pronounced success. The author's account of his experiences in various parts of Europe makes a most entertaining narrative. Mr. Garrison, during three summers (1898, 1899 and 1900) visited every country in Europe, and visited them, too, in a way that few travelers do. Traveling on a bicycle, almost exclusively, he was able to get away from the railroads and the beaten paths to which most tourists stick closely, and see things that few tourists see. Moreover, the author is a skillful photographer, and a camera was his constant companion while abroad. The book is beautifully illustrated with full-page, half-tone plates, made from his photographs. The volume is printed on best book paper, and tastily bound in appropriately designed cover (cloth). The price of the book is $1.00.

We trust every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST read carefully in last week's issue of the paper A. B. Philputt's estimate and recommendation of The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. If any overlooked it, let them turn to page 851 of our issue of July 4, and read it. Dr. Philputt is one of our most scholarly men, and his estimate of a book is worth considering. He says: "This is a volume to buy. It is at once a most fascinating narrative and a book of reference. . . . Of the writers in this volume some go back almost to the first. . . . Their recollections and impressions are of priceless value. . . . Here is a book that by its brevity and completeness is quite suited to the reading habits of this busy age. It would, it seems to me be well for our Bible-schools to use it as a text book." And Dr. Philputt is but one of a host of our leading men who enthusiastically endorse this new book. The general sentiment of these men is that The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century is the most important addition to the literature of the Disciples of Christ since the publication of The Old Faith Re-stated, which was issued ten years ago. It is certainly a work that should be in every intelligent Christian family. 514 pages; cloth; price, $2.00.

In his remarks concerning The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, extracts from which are quoted in the preceding paragraph, Dr. Philputt makes an excellent suggestion. Says he: "It would, it seems to me, be well for our Bible-schools to use it as a text-book or at least require it to be read." This suggestion we respectfully refer to the professors in our colleges. Another suggestion that might be made is this: This volume might, with profit, be taken up, read and studied by the more advanced classes in our Sunday-schools and by the Christian Endeavor Societies in our churches. For example, a Sunday-school class of adults might purchase from three to a dozen copies of the book, depending on the size of the class. The volumes could be passed from one to the other, until all had read it. Each Sunday, ten minutes of the recitation hour might be devoted to questioning on the facts of our history. The same plan could be followed by a Christian Endeavor Society. At a trifling cost to each member several copies of the book could be purchased, until all were familiar with the history of the Disciples of Christ. Then at the regular meetings of the society, or at a series of special meetings the several periods of the history could be gone over and discussed. The result would be that the young people would have an extensive knowledge of the history of our reformatory movement, and, having such knowledge, would be firmly grounded and established in the faith. We will gladly make special prices for copies purchased for such a purpose, and we invite correspondence from S. S. teachers and superintendents and C. E. officials on the subject.

This reference to Christian Endeavor societies leads us to once more remind our readers that the Christian Publishing Company is the headquarters, among the Disciples of Christ, for all manner of supplies for the Y. P. S. C. E. If your society is needing pledge cards, membership application cards, invitation cards, pins, badges, large wall pledge, blackboard, topic cards, or anything else that a C. E. society ever needs or uses, write to us about it. We handle the best, at fair prices.

We are constrained to once more urge all the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to buy and read Winston Churchill's great novel, The Crisis. Time was when religious people did not read fiction, or, if they read it, they did it on the sly. Happily that time has passed. Many a writer of fiction has done more with his pen to regenerate and uplift mankind than many a preacher. Of recent works of fiction none, we believe, is better than The Crisis. The primary object of a work of fiction is to entertain, and this The Crisis does, and does most notably; but it does more than that. It has a positive historical value. It gives to the present generation, born since the close of the War of the Rebellion, such a conception of antebellum conditions in the Mississippi Valley, and especially in St. Louis, as is given in no other book of which we are aware. Especially vivid is the account of political conditions just before the outbreak of hostilities, when feeling ran high, when neighbor was set against neighbor and brother against brother. Mr. Churchill, however, writes without any partisan bitterness, and no sensible, fair minded veteran of the late unpleasantness, no person who had sympathies, however strong, with either North or South, can find cause for complaint in the work. The Crisis seems to be taking the entire country by storm, and ere the summer is over the man or woman who has to confess that he, or she, has not read Churchill's book will feel as awkward as he who has not perused David Harum or heard warbled that musical monstrosity and lyrical nightmare, The Blue and the Gray. We will send a copy of The Crisis, postpaid, to any address, on receipt of regular price, $1.50.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

ARKANSAS.

Hebron, July 3.—There were two confessions at my last appointment here.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

IDAHO.

Orofino.—The camp meeting at Nez Perce City was a success: 21 added and Evangelist Bro. Stevens put in the field. We will build one or more churches this year.—J. S. HOGUE.

Troy.—In a three days' meeting here we had 8 additions: 4 by letter, 2 from Baptists and 2 by obedience. Organized an Endeavor Society. I will preach here once a month.—W. B. ROSE.

ILLINOIS.

Bloomington, July 1.—An excellent meeting has been held here by Charles Reign Scoville, resulting in 246 additions, which was a great success considering the counter attractions. The State Sunday-school Convention was held during the meeting and the commencement exercises of the college and high school came at the same time.—CORA ARNOLD.

Decatur, July 8.—Three more added at Edwards Street Church here yesterday.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Elkville, July 4.—Work opens up with bright prospects here. Bro. R. H. Robertson of DuQuoin, and H. G. Bennett, of Carbondale, were the speakers at our installation service, Tuesday evening, July 2. Bro. H. E. Tucker, the other Jackson county preacher, was prevented from attending.—H. J. REYNOLDS.

Mattoon, July 1.—Twenty-one added at regular services since last report.—A. O. W., minister.

Milford, July 8.—We had two confessions here yesterday.—Z. MOORE.

INDIANA.

Anderson.—Miss Josepha Franklin was at the East Lynn Church here last Sunday morning and evening, June 30. The day was exceedingly hot and yet we had large audiences. It was a day of education in mission work with us and we shall expect to reap fruits from it in years to come. Miss Franklin will start back to her field in India about Sept. 7. She has been invited to speak in England on her return, which she will do. Miss Franklin feels a special interest in this little church as it stands near her old home place.—R. B. GIVENS, minister.

Brazil, July 2.—I will resign my work here August 11. This completes a two years' pastorate, during which time an $18,000 church has been built and 248 added to the church.—A. L. PLATT.

Indianapolis, July 8.—I delivered four lectures on Christian Endeavor at the Summer Assembly of Drake University, Des Moines, Ia. The assembly was a success. On July 5 I baptized at the Morris St. Church, this city, Quincy Lee Morrow and wife. Bro. Morrow is national evangelist of the Prohibition party and has spoken in every part of the union. He has been an ordained minister in the Methodist Protestant Church for ten years. He is a valuable acquisition. He and his wife took membership with us here. Yesterday we had our second quarterly reports. During the past quarter there was raised by our congregation for all purposes $530.81, and since the first of the year over $1,000. There were 77 added to the church the past quarter.—B. L. ALLEN.

South Bend, July 3.—Sunday, June 30, was observed as South Bend day by the Christian Church in that city. At present there is but one Christian Church there and the city is growing very rapidly. The pastor therefore advocated the organization of another church as soon as possible in one of several very inviting sections of the city. The suggestion met with hearty approval and the board at its regular meeting on Monday evening following took action looking in the direction of the pastor's suggestion. The First Church will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary this fall. It has a membership of 530 and is well equipped for such an enterprise as it contemplates. There were eight additions during the month of June; three by baptism.—P. J. RICE.

Terre Haute, July 2.—Just closed a few days' meeting at Fontanet with several confessions.—L. V. BARBRE.

Wabash, July 1.—We held our second anniversary meeting with the Wabash Christian Church, June 30. Total of all money raised in the two years $5,600, of which $835 went for various missionary objects. Additions, 62.—W. T. GROOM.

IOWA.

Council Bluffs, July 1.—One baptism last night.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Des Moines, June 24.—Two additions by confession and baptism at Norwalk June 24.—J. H. RAGAN.

Maxwell, July 1.—I am spending the vacation time with the church at Maxwell, Ia., at which place I am regularly engaged. Nine additions since taking the work four months ago.—G. E. ROBERTS.

Schaller, July 2.—My first month with this church closed with four additions, three being confessions. Also $11.50 raised last Lord's day for home missions.—W. T. HACKER.

Pleasantville, July 3.—We had the best Children's day exercises this year of all in the history of this church. A photograph was taken of the beautiful decorations and of seven little girls in white. Our C. E. report given at the Pella Christian Endeavor Union June 26 and 27, was the best in the county. Pleasantville was assigned three county offices, viz., president, corresponding secretary and superintendent of the junior work of the county. I have been called by this congregation to remain the fourth year.—FORREST D. FERRALL.

KANSAS.

Atchison, July 8.—Yesterday I began my second term of two years as chaplain of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home with an increase in salary. The past two years have been to me a delight in this work. There are about 160 children in the Home and chapel is held Sunday afternoons at three o'clock. We are pegging away on our church debt and hope to pay off the remaining $1,000 of the mortgage this fall.—WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

Horton, July 1.—June 23, one confession: one from the United Brethren June 30, five confessions, all boys of our Sunday-school.—L. H. BARNUM.

Leavenworth, July 1.—Three more additions here yesterday.—S. W. NAY.

Leon, July 3.—We have just closed a meeting at this place with 29 additions, 20 baptisms and nine by letter and statement. Bro. E. E. Davidson, of Missouri, did the preaching. The church is greatly strengthened and built up by this meeting.—W. E. REEVES.

MISSOURI.

Carrollton, July 6.—Report for year ending July 1: Gain, by baptism, 65; by letter and statement, 64; total gain, 129. Loss, by death, 7; by letter, 21; total loss, 27; net gain, 102. Present membership, 474. Total receipts, $3,259.18. Total disbursed for missions, $503.94.—E. H. KELLAR, pastor.

Grand Pass, July 1.—Just closed a two-weeks' meeting at Blue Lick, Mo., resulting in 30 additions. Organized a congregation and set them to work.—J. I. ORRISON.

Joplin, July 1.—During June we received 15 additions as follows: 8 by letter; 1 restored; 1 by statement; 1 from denominations and 4 by confession. Our confessions were made yesterday on Decision Day in our Bible-school. The walls of our new building are now going up. The contract calls for its completion by Sep. 21.—W. F. TURNER.

Kirksville, July 5.—Two additions last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Mt. Vernon, July 6.—Our great tabernacle here is full every night notwithstanding the excessively hot and dusty weather. Last Sunday night I spoke to 1,000 and during the day to more than 2,000. We are having additions almost every service—three confessions last night. Bros. Nicholson, of Aurora, T. W. Cunningham, of Kansas City, King, of Monette, Clark Smith, B. F. Hill, of California, Mo., have been attending. We are delighted with our tabernacle that seats 800. We will be here 10 days and then go home after an absence of 11 weeks. Begin a tabernacle meeting for the Baptists at Monon, Ind., on the 20th.—H. C. PATTERSON.

St. Louis, July 7.—Twelve added at Compton Heights yesterday, two by confession, five by letter June 30. One confession at railroad Y. M. C. A. (Union Station) at 3 P. M. yesterday.—J. N. CRUTCHER.

St. Louis, July 8.—We have had 13 accessions to the Ellendale congregation since May 1. Have succeeded in paying off the debt on the church property amounting to $762. All departments of the church are getting along reasonably well.—L. B. COGGINS, pastor.

Warrensburg, July 8.—Had two additions at Lee's Summit yesterday, making three since last report. Also one at Osceola.—KING STARK.

NEBRASKA.

Ord, July 1.—Evangelist J. S. Beem has closed the series of meetings at Burwell. Three additions the first three weeks and a crowded house each night. Fourth week we had 19 additions and eight the two following weeks.—H. H. UTTERBACK.

NEW YORK.

Tonawanda, July 3.—Bro. J. H. Hughes, of Chico, Cal., who has been filling the pulpit of the North Central Church, has returned to his western home. He received into the church on last Sunday evening Rev. R. L. Johnson and wife from the M. E. Church. Bro. Johnson is a faithful and godly man, and is ready at any time to receive a call, address him at North Tonawanda. The church at Logansport, Ind., has tendered the writer a unanimous call to be their minister. I have resigned here to take effect Aug. 3. All applicants please address Eld. A. A. Bellenger, of 51 Grove St., Tonawanda. The western New York preachers and their wives were called in to help J. P. Lichtenberger and wife celebrate their ninth marriage anniversary last Saturday evening.—A. M. HOOTMAN.

OHIO.

Minerva, July 1.—Yesterday was observed by our Sunday school as the second annual missionary rally. Our offering was $101.—GUY HOOVER.

Brilliant, July 2.—Another added last Lord's day. Our Children's day was a success, the school now being on the roll of honor.—WILLIAM STIFF.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Oklahoma City, July 2.—Five additions last Lord's day and two the previous Lord's day. Have adopted plans for our new church house. The building will seat about one thousand people. Bro. H. H. Ball, of this congregation, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Stillwell, I. T. Bro. Ball has been teaching for a number of years, but will now devote himself to the preaching of the word.—S. D. DUTCHER.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Armour, July 3.—We closed a four weeks' meeting last night. Six confessions. G. W. Elliott, preacher. A congregation of 35 members was organized, all but six having been members of the Christian Church before coming to Dakota. Preparations are being made to build a tabernacle.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN.

TEXAS.

McKinney, July 5.—We have just closed a successful meeting with 71 additions. We had engaged Bro. J. V. Updike, but at the last moment he was called home. I had just returned from a meeting at Greenville with 93 additions and so felt like going on alone. We secured Bro. Updike's singers, Bro. and Sister Geo. H. Webb. Our three weeks' meeting was more largely attended and better supported than any in the history of the church.—R. R. HAMLIN.

WASHINGTON.

Delight, July 2.—Six more confessions at the water at the close of Bro. Charlton's meeting at Fletcher, making in all 59, 43 of whom were immersed. Bro. Tiller, of Missouri, is in a meeting at Fairview, with two by baptism and one by relation.—T. M. MORGAN.

South Ky. Bible-school.

The first term of the summer Bible-school was held at South Kentucky College in Hopkinsville, Ky., June 16-28. The attendance was very satisfactory. No better place in all the regions round about could have been selected. The program was exceptionally strong. The success of the school was due largely to Harry D. Smith, the pastor of the Hopkinsville church. J. B. Briney, of Moberly, Mo., was the principal. We hope that the brotherhood will have the pleasure of reading the masterful addresses he delivered on "Christian Evidences."

C. A. Young, of Chicago, delivered six lectures on the minor prophets. The man who has the world weighing upon his heart was with us and gave us three addresses. A. McLean has a wonderful grasp of world-wide missions. J. L. Hill, of Madisonville, Ky., conducted the course on Homiletics; W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, on "Church History;" and J. W. Mitchell, of Earlington, Ky., presided at open parliaments on "Church Hymnology," "The Sunday school" and "The Prayer meeting." W. H. Ligon, of Hanson, Ky., preached two great sermons. J. L. Hill and J. L. Gordon delivered popular lectures to large and appreciative audiences. J. W. Gant discussed "South Kentucky Work."

During the school the "South Kentucky Summer Bible-school Association" was organized, with W. H. Pinkerton, president; J. L. Gordon, vice-president; H. D. Smith, secretary and treasurer, and E. J. Willis, R. L. Clark and J. L. Hill, directors. A strong program will be prepared for the next session. J. B. Briney will again be the principal. The success of the school is practically assured. All announcements will be made later on by Harry D. Smith, secretary and treasurer.

To the good people of Hopkinsville and to the instructors, the thanks of the students were rendered. ROGER L. CLARK.

COMMENDATIONS.

Having sent my daughter two years to your school, I take pleasure in recommending it to any one having girls to educate. I consider this a fine school in all of its departments.

L. TULL, M. D.

Carrollton, Mo.

As I have had three daughters to graduate from William Woods College during the administration of President J. B. Jones, I commend it without reservation to all who may wish to secure for their daughters the most thorough instruction and training.

N. H. GENTRY.

Sedalia, Mo.

I have visited Wm. Woods College for Girls, have seen the work done in its class-rooms, have noted its facilities and excellent organization, and have for many years known its president, Jas. B. Jones, and I can most heartily commend this school as well disciplined, well taught and well directed in every respect.

CLINTON LOCKHART,

Professor at Drake University.

Having sent my daughter to your school for three sessions, I can cheerfully and conscientiously recommend the school to others having daughters or other relatives to educate as a desirable place to send young ladies. Its faculty and curriculum are abreast of the times, moral tone good, location healthy and surroundings in general pleasant and agreeable.

C. B. SWIFT.

Galena, Mo.

William Woods College for girls is worthy of the highest confidence; it stands easily in the front rank of its class. Not only is it meritorious because of the comprehensiveness and thoroughness of its work, but because of its benevolent features. It offers to orphan girls an opportunity for higher education which otherwise would be denied them. After nearly ten years' acquaintance with the school and its methods and results, I feel that it is impossible adequately to speak its praise. The public who are able to pay for their tuition find here every needed advantage, and the deepening and sweetening of life which must result from the atmosphere of such an institution.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Two Religions.

I.

A woman sat by a hearthside place
Reading a book with a pleasant face,
Till a child came up with a childish frown
And pushed the book saying "Put it down."

Then the mother, slapping his curly head,
Said "Troublesome child, go off to bed;
A great deal of Christ's life I must know
To train you up as a child should go."
And the child went off to bed to cry
And denounce religion—by and by.

II.

Another woman bent o'er a book
With a smile of joy and an intent look,
Till a child came up and joggled her knee,
And said of the book, "Put it down—take me."

Then the mother sighed as she stroked his head,
Saying softly, "I never shall get it read;
But I'll try by loving to learn His will,
And His love into my child instill."
That child went to bed without a sigh
And will love religion—by and by.

College Men in Politics.

A writer in Ainslee's has collected statistics in regard to the number of collegians who have become successful in political life. Twenty-four men have reached the high office of president of the republic and, during more than half of the life of the country, college facilities were very difficult indeed. Yet fifteen of these chief executives have been college men, and only three quite without what we call academic training, while all, save two, of the non-graduates were members of a learned profession. The college education does not appear to have interfered with men seeking the highest political distinction.

In the present cabinet of President McKinley there are eight members. Six of these are college men, one, himself a non-graduate, was a professor in a college when he entered the cabinet. The remaining eighth man finished his education at an academy, which likely as not ranked in scholarship with many of the colleges that confer degrees in all the dignity of a Latin text that many a recipient would be stumped to put into literal English. The administration of Mr. McKinley, himself not a college man, though the graduate of a law school, is mainly conducted by men of college training.

Out of eighty-six members of the Senate forty-four are college men; out of three hundred and sixty members of the House of Representatives, one hundred and sixty-eight were graduated from college. The number of college men in each branch would be increased fully twenty-five per cent. if we added in those who were indefinite and suspicious in their personal statements. Cynics may scoff also as to Congressmen and underrate their success. But they are decidedly successful men. They do not seem so large to us, who live in the great cities and have accustomed our eyes to look without blinking upon the mighty men of finance that handle millions with no more concern than the country boy unties his bag of marbles to engage in a game for keeps. Yet in that same country these Congressmen are big men—head and shoulders above the others who engage in the affairs of the communities in which they live. They feel that they have succeeded, and their success is recognized by the people among whom they live. And we see that a surprising proportion of them have been to college. Although knowing the actual standing of these men at their homes, and not being influenced by the disregard of metropolitan sneerers, I confess that I was surprised at the showing, and I do not hesitate to say to the youth who would go to Congress that he will further his chances enormously if he will go through college and bear a sheepskin to his home, even though he may never be able to read its Latin text.

Needed Inventions.

The more inventions are made in this inventive age, the greater is the demand for other inventions. One that is much needed, says a writer in Everybody's Magazine, is a practicable rotary engine. Nothing has stood more in the way of the attainment of great speed than the absence of a true rotary steam engine. With road-beds such as modern engineering has provided for our railroads, rails of steel, and smooth running cars, there would seem to be almost no limit to the speed at which trains might run with safety, but for the vibrations produced by the oscillating steam engine. Although skilful mechanics have balanced these moving parts as perfectly as was possible, the locomotive engineer will tell you that long before his engine reaches a speed of a hundred miles an hour, its great mass is in a quiver from end to end and ready to fly from the tracks upon the slightest occasion. On high-speed steamships the vibrations of the engines are not only a source of great discomfort to passengers, but threaten the strength of the vessel itself. Although the inventor's quest for it has been long and arduous, the practicable rotary steam engine still remains an "uninvented invention." The nearest approach to a solution is that offered by the steam turbine, and the use for that must be limited.

The fortunes of Mr. Carnegie, the Rockefellers, the Armours, and all their associates were founded on just such observations. The cost of refining kerosene oil is paid to-day from the despised sludge acid which used to foul our rivers and harbors. The old waste of the slaughter-houses brings in as much to-day as the flesh of the animals killed.

Nature has waste products still waiting for use. Prairie wire-grass was one of these. It is now made into handsome furniture and furnishings. Corn-stalk pith is made into fillings for war-ships' hulls, to close water-tight the holes made by an enemy.

Find a substitute for the elastic Para rubber, and your fortune is made. Celluloid and oxidized linseed oil are fair substitutes for some purposes, but nothing has yet been found that possesses the true elastic properties of rubber from Para. There is still "nothing like leather" for shoes, but the inventor may find a substitute to his profit.

The automobilist is waiting anxiously for a satisfactory power to drive his carriage. The same power would solve the vexed question of cross-town cars in New York. The Metropolitan Street Railway Company is spending thousands in experimenting with compressed air and storage battery cells, but these are only makeshifts. Steam railroads need a similar power to operate independent cars for suburban service.

Liquid air and acetylene gas both offer new fields for the inventor. Although liquid air can be made for perhaps five cents a gallon, as yet not a single commercial use has been found for it. Mr. Pictet, of Geneva, a pioneer in the liquefying of gases, has proposed to use the process for separating the nitrogen and oxygen of the air, and marketing each of these for special purposes. A factory in New York has the same objects in view. Carbonic-acid gas, frozen out of the atmosphere, would also be a product of the process.

A Parable.

A certain prince went out into his vineyard to examine it; and he came to the peach tree, and he said, What are you doing for me? and the tree said, In the spring I give my blossoms and fill the air with fragrance, and on my boughs hang the fruit which presently men will gather and carry into the palace for you; and the prince said, Well done, good and faithful servant. And he came to the maple, and he said, What are you doing? and the maple said, I am making nests for the birds and shelter for cattle with my leaves and spreading branches; and the prince said, Well done, good and faithful servant. And he went down into the meadow, and he said to the waving grass, What are you doing? and the grass said, We are giving up our lives for others—for your sheep and your cattle, that they may be nourished; and the prince said, Well done, good and faithful servants that give your lives up for others. And then he came to a little daisy that was growing in the hedge-row, and he said, What are you doing? and the daisy said, Nothing! nothing! I cannot make nesting places for the birds, and I cannot give shelter to the cattle, and I cannot send fruit into the palace, and I cannot even furnish food for the sheep and cows—they do not want me in the meadow; all I can do is to be the best little daisy I can be. And the prince bent down and kissed the daisy and said, There is none better than thou.—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

Active Brains.

Must Have Good Food or Nervous Prostration Surely Follows.

It is a lamentable fact that American brain workers do not, as a rule, know how to feed themselves to rebuild the daily loss occasioned by active mental effort. This fact, coupled with the disastrous effects of the alkaloids contained in tobacco, coffee and whiskey, makes a sure pathway towards nervous prostration.

The remedy is simple enough. Employ the services of a food expert, who knows the kind of food required to rebuild the daily losses in the human body. This can be done by making free use of Grape Nuts, the famous breakfast food, which contains exactly the elemental principles which have an affinity for albumen and go directly to rebuild the gray matter in the brain, solar plexus and nerve centers throughout the body. Follow your selection of food up with a dismissal of coffee, tobacco and whiskey for fifteen days and mark the difference in your mental ability, which means everything to the average hustling American, who must have physical and mental strength or he falls out in the race for dollars.

My Prayer.By Frank Abram Powell.

I thank thee, Lord, for thy rich grace
Imparted day by day;
I thank thee for thy spirit sent
To guide me in the way.

O grant me more and more each day
To know thy holy will;
The saving work thou hast begun
Wilt thou, O Lord, fulfill?

O, may I seek and find thee, Lord,
Though thou art ever near;
Take thou my hand and lead me on
And I shall never fear.

Increase my zeal and courage, Lord,
And gird me with thy might;
Anoint my eyes that I may see,
And lead me in the light.

Illumine thou my life, O Lord,
With wisdom from above;
O, clothe me with thy righteousness
And fill me with thy love.

Fair But False.By P. B. Hall.

In a fairy story a young man was looking for a beautiful maiden whom he had sung out of an alabaster casket, into which she was placed by an evil charm. His love for her was so great that he quite forgot to heed the caution given him about the maiden of the Alder, and when he met her he saw a face so charming that he did not question but that she was the lady of the marble. He was easily enticed into the trap set for him by this fair but heartless woman, and nearly lost his life at the hands of the terrible Ash.

One thing about this maiden of the Alder was very peculiar. She would not permit him to see her back till after she had stolen from his head a wreath of beech leaves while he slept. When he awoke he saw her back, a horrible, hollow, deathly thing. At the recent libel suit brought by Mrs. Josephine C. Woodbury against Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the "Mother of Christian Science," the back of the fair maiden of the Science Cult was for a moment turned to the public gaze, but only for a moment, revealing to the glance what a full view would be like. Christian Science is a kind of Veiled Prophet, and Mrs. Eddy is the embodiment of all the peculiar tenets of the delusion.

Mrs. Woodbury was asked as a witness, "What is the universal belief of Christian Scientists about Mrs. Eddy?"

"That she is infallible: that 'Science and Health' is infallible."

"What other belief about Mrs. Eddy?"

"That she is to Christian Science what Jesus Christ was to Christianity, that she was especially selected by God."

"Anything else?"

"There is a belief that she is the woman in Revelation with a crown of stars on her head, one foot on earth, she being in a position to bring the light that will supersede Christianity."

Mr. William G. Nixon was Mrs. Eddy's publisher for more than three years. On the witness stand he testified that he was a Christian Scientist at the time he was Mrs. Eddy's publisher but that he was so no longer. He was in hopes that counsel for Mrs. Eddy would ask him why he was no longer a Christian Scientist, but they were not so easily entrapped. When asked privately to explain what ever induced him to become a Christian Scientist, and how he came to lose faith in it, he said:

"I was drawn into the movement, like others, because I believed that Christian Science had the power to heal. I was never healed of anything myself, but I had friends who attributed their cures to the Science. When I became a Christian Scientist I firmly believed that it could do in the way of healing diseases all that Mrs. Eddy said it could.

"Mrs. Eddy's 'Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures' was published by me on a royalty. The volumes cost 47 cents to produce, and sold from $3 to $6, according to the binding. Thus, if Mrs. Eddy's recent published statements be correct—that she has sold over 200,000 volumes—she must have cleared from $300,000 to $400,000 net on the sale of her 'Science and Health' alone.

"And if her other published statement is correct—that she has personally taught 4,000 Christian Science pupils, all of whom must have paid $300 each, and many who paid more—she has cleared over $1,200,000 in her lessons to pupils. We would roughly estimate that she has taken in in round numbers $2,000,000. As Mrs. Eddy is a very matter-of-fact woman in all material matters except her theory that there is no matter, and has invested in land extensively, she can easily be rated now as a very substantial millionaire."

"But what caused you to lose your faith in Christian Science?" he was asked.

"My knowledge of the inside workings of the publication of the Eddy works forced upon me the overwhelming conclusion that the whole thing was but one gigantic money-making scheme. I lost all faith in the theory itself from having become acquainted with its innumerable failures to cure disease. I also lost all confidence in Mrs. Eddy as the divine revelator of any spiritual message. I still had confidence in the well-known psychic law that many persons afflicted with supposed constitutional troubles would get well if only sufficient confidence could be aroused in them to make them get up and bestir themselves, take exercise and stop thinking of illness.

"But I saw that those cures were the result of natural laws irrespective of any Christian Science. I saw that the only honest persons in the movement were those who were blinded by the same delusions which tricked me into the fold in 1889.

"Mrs. Eddy dares not, in my opinion, go through the ordeal of a cross-examination. She is old and feeble, in spite of her constant teaching to the contrary. Concord is only a two hours' trip from Boston. According to her Christian Science teaching, she cannot be ill, or old, or feeble, and should have nothing to fear. Yet she will not come to the trial, hoping that by staying away she may win, because the burden of proof is on Mrs. Woodbury. If she should dare to show herself in court it will, in my opinion, be her undoing. She will never give the public an opportunity to see how near she is to dissolution and collapse."

Instinct of Bees.

By F. K. Steele.

Although red clover blossoms contain much honey, the honeybee never disturbs the flowers, because the tube of the flower is too deep for the tongue of this bee to reach the nectar at its foot, so it contents itself with the blossoms of the white clover. But the bumblebee attends to the honey crop in the red clover blossoms. The tube of the weigela is narrow and deep and much honey is found in it. The honeybee can do nothing with it. It is not as smart instinctively as the big bumblebee. But it waits around until the bumblebee shows it a thing or two. The bumblebee cannot get its head in through the opening of the flower any more than the honeybee. What the former does is to climb up on the top of the tube, always on the top, and cut a slit into the tube, then thrust in its tongue and lick every drop of nectar.

The honeybee soon finds this out and follows in the bumblebee's footsteps.

The snap dragon is a very difficult flower for any insect to enter, one would suppose, for there is no outward opening in sight, yet the bumblebee understands the situation, for it alights on the lower lip with its head and scrambles in, hiding more than half of itself inside the tube. The honeybee or any other insect has not yet caught on so far as I have observed. The coral and Japanese honeysuckles have thin tubes opened by the bumblebees in the same sort of fashion as the weigela.

A New York woman married recently a French count who turned out to be a horse doctor. It is not often, however, that these foreign matrimonial alliances turn out so well. This woman, for instance, might have married a horse doctor who turned out to be a French count.

The following clever translation from the French is taken from The Literary Era for June. The translation is by Owen Wister:

ADVICE TO AN ABSINTHE DRINKER.

Pour slow the emerald liquor in your glass—
Two fingers only—not a drop the more.
Take up the water-bottle then, and pour
The liquid crystals light as on the grass
Soft April shower drops patter as they pass
Raise high your hand and, slowly, as before,
Increase the stream till lo! a precious store
Of milky opals in a molten mass.

Set down your glass—your task is near complete.

Gaze on it as a miser on his gold
Lift it up again, and delicately hold
Its perfume to your nostrils; then, at la t—
To crown the toil of preparation past—
Delay not! Cast the whole into the street!

PETE.

XIX.—Doctors.

Mrs. Morris continued, "There is a case of diphtheria in the north part of town,—Mrs. Venner. Pete went there for flowers before I learned of it. But could Pete have taken the disease without the doctor's knowing?" "I can only say," answered Edgar Brown, "that the moment I saw Pete, I was reminded of my little cousin who died of diphtheria. Let us hope this is bronchitis."

"Madge had bronchitis last winter," said Mrs. Morris, "but it was not like this. Yes, as you say, we must trust to the doctor. Surely he knows better than we." So Edgar took his departure. He went right downstairs and off the premises, without keeping anybody standing at the door while he tried to think of something to say that nobody could want to hear. What a singular young man! When he had nothing to say, he knew it and didn't try. In the meantime Madge and Jennie had been stopped from school. Jennie and Mrs. Morris took turn about sitting up at night with Pete, and in the daytime they needed a good deal of rest, so much work fell on Madge. Miss Dollie Dudley came a part of each day and received the company, and saw that the flowers were watered, and was otherwise useful. Pete appeared in a semi-unconscious state day and night, and she was very restless. Once she seemed to awaken from a slumber. It was night and her mother sat by the bed. "You are always here," said Pete, stretching out her hand. "Don't talk, dear, it hurts your throat so dreadfully."

"But they's things I want to say, mamma. Mamma, am I going to die?" "Why no, my little darling, mamma couldn't spare her little one." "Youkkud spare me better'n Madge or Jennie, 'cause I was always so bad, wasn't I, mamma? Looked like the bad part was just me, and when I was good, I was a-being another person, and I didn't feel natural to myself. Mamma, I wish I could of been made diffurnt, but I couldn't, could I?" "My dear little girl," said Mrs. Morris, putting her arm about Pete's disheveled head, "I wouldn't have you different for the whole world. Don't you know mamma loves you just as you are, with all her heart? There isn't a trait or a piece of you that isn't dear to me." "Do you, mamma? Then uf I had of been a good girl, oh, how you would of loved me! But it's kept you pretty busy punishin' me ever since I got big enough to be shut up in a room without any supper, hasn't it, mamma? Mamma, if I die, I don't want you to put 'Pete' on my tombstone. It don't sound proper for dead folks. Put me Prudence like I am in the Bible. Oh, how my throat hurts!" "My dear little girl, you must not talk any more, it is making you worse. But don't think of dying. You must live for my sake, won't you, Pete? It would break my heart to lose my bad sweet winning little darling,—my baby!" "Well, I'll do what I can for you, mamma. I don't want to die, either. It's a lonesome feeling. My throat hurts awful, but I'll hurt it worse to say you're the sweetest mamma a-going. Let me tell you what I think of Dr. Larry." Mrs. Morris wiped the perspiration from Pete's brow. "Well; and then if you love me, Pete, don't talk. It tears my nerves to hear you." Pete gasped for breath and whispered brokenly, "He don't know Beans!"

Edgar came twice every day to make inquiries. One evening he found Mrs. Morris almost desperate. "Oh, Mr. Brown, I can't endure it! To see her getting worse and worse straight along and Dr. Larry all the time saying it is nothing serious. I don't believe he understands the case. I never had him before, and he doesn't understand my children. My doctor is in Europe; at least he has been, all summer. They look for him home this week, but I'm afraid he will get here too late. If he were just here I would be perfectly easy! Then I should know all would be done that could be done. But when Dr. Larry comes with his serious look and important airs,—I oughtn't to talk so, but I can't help it,—and when he looks at Pete and says she is doing 'fairly well'—"

"I feel like wringing his neck," interrupted Madge, who stood near. "Oh, Mr. Brown, you are everything else, why wasn't you a doctor? I'd be, when I'm grown, only I'd have to be a woman-doctor and I hate um. If Dr. Wells would only come back in time—"

"Dr. Wells!" exclaimed Edgar. "I heard his name mentioned at my hotel this afternoon. The landlord said to give the south room to Dr. Wells. He must have come on the four o'clock train!" Then there was great excitement, you may be sure. That evening just as soon as it was possible, Dr. Wells, fresh from Europe, probably with the dust of London still sticking to the bottom of his boots, stood in the sick room; and Dr. Larry and his solemn look and important airs had vanished from the Morris home. Had Dr. Larry not spent most of his time at his medical college playing football, it might not have been thus. Solemn looks are all right; you expect a doctor to look solemn, just as you expect a preacher to nearly crush your hand when he shakes; but these are merely external qualifications. Taken alone they make neither good physicians nor interesting ministers. Edgar waited in the parlor for Dr. Wells to finish his diagnosis. How long it seemed! Madge crept into the room and waited with him. Their hearts thrilled with alternate fear and hope; their excitement was too oppressive for speech. At last they heard the doctor's boots squeaking down the stairs, and the rustle of Mrs. Morris' dress. The two entered the parlor. Then Mrs. Morris turned to the doctor, and said, "Can she get well?" "Madge," said the doctor, "will you run out and play awhile?" Madge knew what that meant, but she went; and oh, what do you think; this is the worst thing we have found Madge doing yet; she listened at the door!

"Mrs. Morris," said Dr. Wells, "your daughter has diphtheria, and I have been called in, I am afraid, when—after it is too—and yet there is one possible—barely possible—almost impossible chance; just one. It is a chance so slight that I hesitate to mention it. Because, I fear it is too late." "But doctor, Dr. Larry said it was only a mild bronchitis," faltered the agonized mother. Dr. Wells blew his nose violently; this was as far as professional etiquette would allow him to go. "I know of only one remedy, now," he said. "That is anti-toxine. There is none in Mizzouryville. If you send to Kansas City, it couldn't get here in time. Every instant is precious. If I can't get the anti-toxine by morning, your child will die. In Creekville, fifteen miles from here, lives Dr. Norton, and I know he keeps anti-toxine in his house. Young man," he added turning to Edgar Brown, "my horse and buggy are at the gate. I cannot leave the patient. Will you go?" Edgar was already at the door. Mrs. Morris hurried with him to the gate. There stood a horse fresh from the livery stable. Edgar jumped in the buggy. Mrs. Morris seized his hand and kissed it. "A mother's prayers go with you!" she faltered. It was ten o'clock.

Traveling in Private Cars.

Private railway cars have always been associated in the popular mind with great wealth, says the World's Work, but a plan has been developed which makes it possible for even a vaudeville actor or a business man in ordinary circumstances, or anybody else reasonably well-to-do, who wishes to make a display or to enjoy the luxury of travel, to own a private car built according to his own specifications. A car-refitting company in New York City buys old Pullman coaches, tears the inside furnishings out, and refits them according to the wishes of its customers. Whatever kind of private car a man may wish he may order—parlors, handsomely carpeted, sitting-rooms, dining-rooms, sleeping compartments, smoking-rooms—all with equipment more or less perfect according to the price. And cars are refitted in this way and sold for prices varying from $1,500 to $15,000.

Very handsome and serviceable cars have been built from the old "castaways," and the man of modern means can travel privately and comfortably in a home of his own. It is an interesting evidence of American manufacturing thrift and of the growth of wealth.

Seeking for Higher Things.*

TEXT: If then ye were raised together with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated on the right hand of God.—Col. 3:1.

When faith is weak, and our zeal burns low, and the way of life almost enters an eclipse, is it not because we have forgotten our great purpose? Disciples are all too prone to think that conversion is a complete and isolated transaction; instead of that, it stands related to a career of growth in grace and knowledge. We must leave the elements, the first principles, and go on toward perfection. If we have been baptized into Christ and raised with him,—

What Then?

"Seek the things that are above." Most Christians have a sincere admiration for celestial things, they may even desire them, but do they seek them? Too sadly often, this is just what we will not do. We seek other things,—food and raiment, comfort and luxury, fame and power, and we seek them with feverish anxiety. But our new birth has lifted us into a new realm, and we must not fret about these gross things. The disciple must keep his place in the ranks of toilers, to be sure; he must earn his daily bread, as well as pray for it, but with all the ardor of his soul he must seek the things that are above.

In a word, conversion sets us at the beginning of a new career. It is an end greatly sought, the end of the life of sin; but it is the beginning of the life of heroic faith. We are prepared now for something better and sweeter than we have ever known. Many a serving, fretting Martha needs to hear the word of the Master, calling her to things higher. We are done with the old life, let us take up the new. As Whittier sings,

"Onward and upward still our way,
With the joy of progress from day to day."

Treasures in Heaven.

When the Master forbade the laying up of treasures on earth, "where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal," he doubtless had in mind the vain and foolish efforts that were sometimes made in that day to secrete wealth by hiding it in the ground or stowing it away in some corner of the house. But the warning is as well fitted to our methods of hoarding as to theirs. Money has its place, but that place must always be subordinate. Not treasures in railroad stock or bonds, but treasures in heaven are to engage our thought and effort. Treasure there is safe from molestation.

Some one has said, "The money I save goes into my pocket; the money I give goes into my character." So we may use wealth in such a way as to make it add to our heavenly treasures. But why "treasures in heaven"? No doubt this phrase refers to the spiritual riches that are ours, but it seems also to hint something as to conduct. The Master would have us rich toward God; he knows that "where our treasure is there will our hearts be also"; and so, to bring our hearts into the right state, to have them set on higher things, he exhorts us to secure this celestial wealth. He who is pure, and humble, and contented, and faithful, is rich, whatever his earthly lot.

But One Thing.

Over and over again we read the words, now in this form and now in that, which Jesus addresses to Martha. "But one thing is needful" (Luke 10:42). He is dealing with the great principles that govern life and decide destiny. The gospel is marked by great simplicity. It is not dark and mysterious, an abstruse philosophy, to be known only by the learned. It lies in a single word, a single fact, a single principle. You are surrounded by many things, and entertain many plans, and harbor many desires. But after all, one thing, and only one thing is required. And that is love; you must love the Lord God with all your heart and your neighbor as yourself.

*Prayer meeting topic for July 17.

The tendency all around us is toward the complex. We multiply our wants and they demand a greater variety of food, and grow by what they feed upon. Church machinery becomes intricate and cumbersome, and many a busy pastor is distracted, like poor Martha, with much serving. Let us seek the spirit; let us lay hold of the life; let us get the one thing needful. If we are to secure this, we must aspire; we must cultivate the divine presence. It is only they that hunger and thirst after righteousness that are to be filled. Do you feel the gnawings of hunger? Are you parched with thirst? "High hearts," writes James Martineau, "are never long without hearing some new call, some distant clarion of God, even in their dreams, and soon they are observed to break up the camp of ease and start on some fresh march of faithful service."

Prayer.

O God, Thou hast made us, and not we ourselves. Thou hast called us to glory and honor and immortality, and invested us with eternal life. Awaken afresh within us a quenchless thirst for righteousness and true holiness. May the days and years, the tasks and diversions, the sorrows and discontents, yea, even our very vices, become stepping stones to higher things, till we rise into the beatific Presence, and sit down on the throne. Amen.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have been selling perfumes for the past six months. I make them myself at home and sell to friends and neighbors. Have made $710. Everyone buys a bottle. For 50c worth of material I make Perfume that would cost $2.00 in a drug store.

I first made it for my own use only, but the curiosity of friends as to where I procured such exquisite odors, prompted me to sell it. I clear from $25.00 to $35.00 per week. I do not canvass, people come and send to me for the perfumes. Any intelligent person can do as well as I do. For 42c in stamps I will send you the formula for making all kinds of perfumes and a sample bottle prepaid. I will also help you get started in the business.

Cheap Excursions to Utah.

While there are tourist rates to Salt Lake City and Ogden and return in effect every day, a special opportunity is afforded to visit the World's greatest sanitarium and health and pleasure resort through a series of cheap excursions to leave Chicago, St. Louis and Missouri river points July 1st to 9th inclusive, and September 1st to 10th inclusive, at rate of $40.00 from Chicago, $36.00 from St. Louis and $30.00 from Omaha, Kansas City, St. Joseph, etc., etc. On July 10th to August 31st inclusive, round trip rate to St. Lake and Ogden will be $44.50 from Chicago, $39.50 from St. Louis and $32.00 from Missouri river stations; proportionate rates from intermediate points. These dates and rates are subject to change.

No place in the universe presents such a complement of attractions as Salt Lake City. It is the place of the great Mormon Temple and Tabernacle, the seat of ecclesiastical authority of the Saints and the home of their prophet. It is quaint and curious and picturesque in environment. The summer climate is incomparable. There are cool mountain and lake resorts near by, the greatest of which is Saltair Beach on Great Salt Lake. Here you can float upon the surface of the water almost a mile above sea-level. Within the limits of the city are Warm Sulphur and Hot Springs, parks, drives and beautiful canyons. Furthermore, the trip to Utah by way of Denver and Colorado Springs over the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY in connection with either the Denver & Rio Grande or Colorado Midland railroads is one of unequaled splendor. The scenery is the most magnificent in America. Send two cents postage for copy "Salt Lake City—the City of the Saints," to Geo. W. Heintz, General Passenger Agent Rio Grande Western Railway, Salt Lake City.

The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Eaut.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

We leap over a vast period of time between our last lesson and the present one, according to the chronology of Usher, used in our authorized version, about 1,650 years. He places the flood at B. C. 2348. But the chronicles of this early portion of human history are very uncertain, and we can only know that a considerable time had elapsed after the temptation and fall of our first parents. The race had degenerated till God could say of them that "the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." The sad lapse of Eve, followed by that of her husband, furnished an example too readily imitated by their children. Their first-born, Cain, became a murderer, his anger against his gentle brother Abel being the result, the Apostle John tells us, of his own wickedness, which made him jealous of the gracious character and consequent acceptance with God of the young victim of his rage. Lamech in his turn kills a young man, and justifies himself by the example of Cain. God must needs enact a distinct law against murder when he has ushered Noah and his family into the renovated earth and require that the law shall be executed by men. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man" (Gen. 9:6).

Nine generations appear between Adam and Noah. Human life, still so near its fountain head, and spent under more natural conditions, seems to have been prolonged far beyond its present term. Men lived not for decades but for centuries. Adam lived for 930 years; Seth for 912 years; while Methusaleh reached the enormous age of 969. He would thus have been for 243 years a contemporary of Adam and died just before the coming of the flood. All the facts of the beginning of human life on the earth could therefore have been transmitted to Noah through but one link between himself and Adam. That is, provided we accept the theory that these names stand for persons, and not for families or tribes, as many scholars believe to be the case. Noah was 600 years old when the flood came. His father, Lamech, had died five years before, and his grandfather, Methusaleh, as already stated, in the same year with that great catastrophe. Shem, Ham and Japheth were his three sons, and with their wives formed the remnant of righteous souls who shared with him the deliverance from destruction by the waters of the flood.

"And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Who shall say that the divine love is not expressed in the Old Testament? Where can we find a truer expression of the sorrow of a Father over his wayward children? It is sometimes objected that God could not change his purpose without sacrificing his immutability. But, in the words of Isaac Errett, "The immutability of God is shown, not in always doing the same things, but in always acting on the same principles." Sin must ever bring ruin, and righteousness result in good. Any promise of blessing must presuppose obedience to the law of God. To sow to the flesh and reap eternal life would be contrary to the very nature of things, and therefore impossible with God.

Noah stood practically alone in the midst of a sensual, scoffing world. He alone recognized the claims of Jehovah and sought to live a life of holiness. "While altar after altar of the families of apostatizing saints crumbled into ruins, and the smoke of sacrifice no longer rose to bear witness to faith in God through the sin-offerings of the contrite in heart, the fire never went out on Noah's altar; it sent up at last the only column of smoke that told of faith still living among men. . . . His altar fires never died away until quenched in the waters of the deluge." While he was preparing the ark men looked on with indifference or contempt. All his warnings of the impending destruction were unheeded. "They ate and drank, married and were given in marriage, until the day the flood came and took them all away," is the graphic picture drawn by the Master himself. Noah, the "preacher of righteousness," proclaimed the tidings of woe for over a century, in the ears of a deaf world, and succeeded only in saving his immediate household. But it was much to have done this. Happy the preacher of the gospel to-day who can lead into and safely keep within the fold of the Good Shepherd all the members of his own family.

The flood prevailed over the earth for a year. Noah entered into the ark on the tenth day of the second month of his six hundredth year, and seven days later the flood began. He did not emerge from the ark until the twenty-seventh day of the second month of the following year, when the ground was sufficiently dry for the occupants of the ark to finally leave their place of retreat. It is doubtless true that this flood was not universal but merely of such extent as to destroy the human race, which then occupied but a small portion of the surface of the globe. This is now accepted by nearly all students of the Bible. The evidences of the extension of the flood over that portion of the earth believed to have been the home of the race at the beginning are as numerous as those that prove other portions to have escaped such an overwhelming. The word "earth" in the Bible narrative bears the same variety of meanings as our word "land," which may mean a larger or smaller portion of the surface of the globe.

The saved family, emerging from the ark, at once erected an altar and offered to the God who had preserved them their grateful sacrifice. This was accepted of God, who "smelled the sweet savor," in the expressive language of the Old Testament writer and entered into covenant with Noah and his seed, never again to destroy the earth with a flood. And this, too, "though the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth." Not even human sin shall ever again cause the destruction of the race, while the curse pronounced upon the ground shall not be repeated, and man shall find himself in larger measure the master of nature about him. The seasons shall come and go in their unvarying round, and man shall be enabled to rest confidently upon the stability of natural law and carry forward his work of mastering the earth. The beautiful bow that spans the sky, formed of mingled sun and cloud, shall be a token of the unfailing kindness of him who "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

Every Lady Should Compete For This Prize.

The "HENDERSON ROUTE" is publishing a book of smart sayings of little children under the age of five years, and in order to get data for this publication they are offering two prizes. For the smartest saying a prize of ten dollars in gold will be given, and for the next smartest saying five dollars in gold.

In order to receive recognition all sayings forwarded must be accompanied with the full name, address, and age of the child.

A competent committee will have the contest in charge, and the winners will be promptly notified.

All sending in sayings will receive a copy of the book without cost, when published, which will be handsomely bound and contain, in addition to the interesting sayings of the wee tots, a select number of fine half-tone pictures of children.

Address all letters to Mr. L. J. Irwin, General Passenger Agent, "Henderson Route," Louisville, Ky.

TOPIC FOR JULY 21.

A Strong Weak Man.

(Judges 16:20-30.)

It is often possible for a very small thing to take away our strength. This truth is vividly conveyed in the story of Samson, by the fact that his hair—frail, silky, flimsy threads—was the seat of his power. His hair gone his strength was gone. And is it not very true of all of us that the seat of our strength may be in a very small matter? Is it not true that the loss of a very little thing will reduce us to weakness and incompetency?

There is a certain day in the week when you are unable to accomplish anything worthy. You are uneasy, unhappy, incompetent. You can do nothing. You are unable to work. What is the reason? Possibly you cannot tell at all. Possibly after careful thought you remember an unkind word you spoke early that day, or a little lie you told, or some act which was not worthy of you. It was only the hairsbreadth of a sin; but in that very hairsbreadth was the loss of a whole day's usefulness, which eternity could not repair. And so doth conscience make cowards of us all.

Who knows, then, how many strong men are hampering their whole lives by some one weakness. Here is a man who could be most valuable to the world but that he has some secret sin that, instead of struggling to put down, he cherishes. He is a shorn Samson. He is a weak strong man.

And then, on the other hand, sometimes a weak man turns, and by silent, even blinded meditation, through long days and even years, grows into a strength that the world is compelled to recognize. I know of such a man who had brought his family to want and woe through his drinking; and who at last turned, roused himself like a Samson after sleep, and lifted himself with his might to one of the highest positions in the gift of a great state. Here was a strong weak man.

And so, no doubt, there are many of us who think ourselves very weak, but who, if we cared to arise and exert ourselves, could do great things. We say, "O, I am of little worth. I am nerveless. I am not large in any sense. I am a very feeble creature." That is a mistake. Not one of us but is strong. It may be we are weak strong ones, but nevertheless we are strong weak ones.

Gideon said, "O, Lord, I am not strong. I am the least of the least family of the least tribe. Don't call on me for any great service." And the Lord replied, "Arise, thou mighty man of valor."

Moses would have hid himself; and he begged God to select some other. But God removed every objection and called upon him to do a great work.

Paul at Antioch sought to avoid the call, "Go far hence to the Gentiles." Paul urged upon the Lord that he was better fitted for the smaller work at Antioch, the narrower sphere. But God answered: "Arise, for I will send thee far hence to the Gentiles."

Is the voice of God calling you, fellow Endeavorer, to some task much larger than you are willing to undertake? Be a strong weak one and arise and do his will. Or is he calling you to do the task you have in hand in a much larger way than you have yet done it? Then stir and be a strong weak one, and make the task worthy of him who calls you.

HUGHEY.

Francie Etbel Hughey was born June 10, 1885, in Adair county, Mo., near La Plata, and died June 6, 1901, in Helena, Mont. Her father, George W. Hughey, had preceded her to the other world, having died Nov. 18, 1893. However, her step father, Bro. A. J. Lemkie, loved her as his very own and joined the mother and sister and other relatives and friends in their deep sorrow. Sister Francie was baptized at 10 years of age and always lived an earnest, faithful, Christian life, and was loved by those who knew her. She was a member of the church and Sunday-school here in Helena and president of the King's Daughters' Circle and treasurer of the Christian Endeavor society. Her funeral services were conducted by the writer.

NORTHCUTT.

Jesse W. Northcutt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Northcutt, was born in Hannibal, Mo., and died at Prescott, Arizona, June 17, 1901, aged 25 years, 9 months. His life was very promising and he had already made great attainments. Before he was 21 years of age he was admitted to the bar of this city. He was studious and ambitious for success. He was kind to all and had a host of friends. Realizing that disease was undermining his physical strength he went west a few months ago with the hope of regaining health. But the fond hopes of himself and parents were not realized. Soon he sent for father and mother to be with him. They hurried to him in time to see his young life go out. In early manhood he confessed Christ and for several years contributed to the interest and profit of the prayer meeting and Sunday-school. The service was conducted at the Christian church by the writer. The large attendance showed the esteem in which he was held. The sorrowing parents and brother have the sympathy of the whole community.

PLYE.

Sister Belle Pyle, born July 8, 1842, entered into rest June 12, 1901. Baptized by J. D. Benedict, March 24, 1859, her church life spans the history of the church here. She was held in high esteem by the community and did many deeds of kindness. Her life was shortened by her care through many weeks of an afflicted sister. Her sister, Emeline Douglass, came from Warrensburg, Mo., to attend her in her last sickness and kind and loving hearts and hands ministered to all her wants.

THOMAS.

Isaac Taylor Thomas, one of the oldest and best known old settlers of Hancock county, Illinois, died at his home near Hamilton, Ill., May 29, 1901, at half past five, aged 75 years, 4 months and 6 days after a long illness. He was born Jan. 23, 1826, in Nelson county, Ky. Removed with his parents to Adams Co., Ill., at the age of 3 years. He was married Mar. 22, 1849, to Miss Louisa Nichols, of Adams Co., Ill. Two years ago they celebrated their golden wedding. To this union nine children were born; seven of whom with their mother and seven grandchildren survive him, all of whom were present at his funeral. Hare, Laura, Naoma and Mrs. Mattie Houch, of Hamilton, Ill., Thaddeus and Henry of Elvaston, Ill., and Mrs. Ella Weber of Ferris, Ill., Pearl and Georgie having preceded him to that better land. He came to Sonora township in 1852 with his family where he has resided on the same farm ever since. He joined the Golden's Point Christian Church forty years ago, and has lived a faithful member ever since. He was a liberal giver to the church and attended long as his health would permit. He has been in poor health for five years and all that time he spent the most of his time reading his Testament. He was amongst the last of our old pioneers who are so rapidly passing away. He had been a

TULLEY.

John Canon Tulley was born August 12, 1838, in London, England. In one of the best schools in London he led in classes of pupils older than himself. In 1847 the family settled in McHenry county, Ill. Bro. Tulley graduated in the high school in Waukegan, Ill., when 18. After teaching school a couple of years, he was offered the position of principal of the school where he graduated. He taught school in Auburn, Ill., and in Montgomery county. He was immersed in 1860, and immediately began to preach. He married Loretta Moore in 1862. He served two terms as superintendent of schools of Montgomery county, and by his wise sale of school bonds placed the school system of the county on a permanent and efficient basis. He had before him a brilliant prospect as a rising lawyer and politician. He chose, however, the ministry. He was pastor in Litchfield, Ill., six years; Clinton and Wapella, Ill., one year; Charleston, Ill., four years; Union City, Ind., four years; New Albany, Ind., six years; Winchester, Ky., three years and Central Church, St. Louis, Mo., two years. He was an organizer, leader and teacher and developed the working power of the church. In our ministry, in our conventions and work, he was recognized as a strong man. He lived in Paducah, Ky., where he died, 14 years, and by force of character, without the appliances of political chicanery, he was elected county judge. Persons of all parties, churches and ranks united their tributes of honor and affection

It contains wood-cuts and biographical sketches of prominent workers, Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons, and Endeavor Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, Outlines of Work, etc. This Magazine has called forth more commendatory notices than any other periodical ever issued by our people. The Sunday-school pupil or teacher who has this publication will need no other lesson help, and will be able to keep fully "abreast of the times" in the Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. work.

TERMS—One copy, per year, 75 cents; in clubs of ten, 60 cents each; in packages of ten or more to one name and address, only 50 cents each. Send for Sample.

As a citizen he was always a leader for what was right and a power for good. In the church his work and life were a benediction. Every place where he lived was made better by his influence. Bro. Tulley died June 25, and was buried with honors by the county and city officials, the societies of which he was a member, and the city in which he lived.

CLARK BRADEN.

California the Mecca of Every American.

A certain advertising agency employs a significant phrase in its own advertising, namely, "The time to advertise is all the time." So in reference to visiting the Golden Gate state. The time to go is either spring or summer, fall or winter or between seasons.

The many trans-continental lines of railway now in operation afford, not only cheap fare, but superior service and quick time. Some are better than others in this respect. Surely no system has surpassed the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain in providing for the comfort and convenience of the traveling public. Especially has the passenger department of this great system exerted itself in preparing for the Epworth League convention to be held in San Francisco from July 18th to 21st. They offer a choice of two routes, with an innumerable number of advantages as to stop-overs at points of interest, with a list of diverse routes in the far west which will no doubt puzzle many a "tenderfoot."

The very low rates offered to the Epworth League are open to all. Many who have waited long and patiently for opportunity to visit the land of sunshine and flowers will do so at this most opportune time. Tickets are good going from July 6th to 13th, with a final return limit of August 31st.

I CONFESS I look round on civilized society with many fears, and with more and more earnest desire that a regenerating spirit from heaven, from religion, may descend upon and pervade it. I particularly fear that various causes are acting powerfully among ourselves, to inflame and madden that enslaving and degrading principle, the passion for property. For example, the absence of hereditary distinctions in our country gives prominence to the distinction of wealth, and holds up this as the chief prize to ambition. Add to this the epicurean, self-indulgent habits which our prosperity has multiplied, and which crave insatiably for enlarging wealth as the only means of gratification. This peril is increased by the spirit of our times, which is a spirit of commerce, industry, internal improvements, mechanical invention, political economy, and peace. There is danger that these blessings may by perversion issue in a slavish love of lucre. I am no foe to civilization. I rejoice in its progress. But without a pure religion to modify its tendencies, to inspire and refine it, we shall be corrupted, not ennobled by it. It is the excellence of the religious principle, that it aids and carries forward civilization, extends science and arts, multiplies the conveniences and ornaments of life, and at the same time spoils them of their enslaving power, and even converts them into means and ministers of that spiritual freedom which, when left to themselves, they endanger and destroy.

The Ohio Democratic Convention.

The meeting of the Ohio Democrats at Columbus to nominate a state ticket was the occasion for a contest between the McLean and Johnson factions of the party. When it came to a count of delegates, the former easily outnumbered the latter and the ticket was virtually dictated by McLean. The ticket is headed by the name of James Kilbourne, nominee for governor. When Mr. Johnson was elected mayor of Cleveland, it was announced that he had his eye upon the Ohio governorship, a seat in the United States Senate and the nomination for the presidency on the Democratic ticket in 1904. The convention in which he hoped to take the first step toward realizing this ambition showed that, popular as are the public ownership and quasi-socialistic ideas which he represents, his following is not yet strong enough to carry the state. The platform, as adopted by McLean's convention, includes some of Johnson's ideas, such as a direct vote for the granting of franchises, the prohibition of railroad passes for state officials, taxation of franchises, and the election of United States senators by popular vote. The introduction of these Johnson amendments was almost a necessity, for aside from them there is not a positive plank in the platform. No reference is made to the leadership of Mr. Bryan or to the Chicago and Kansas City platforms. When this topic was broached in the committee, the ex-candidate was bitterly denounced and a minority report of the platform committee endorsing Mr. Bryan's leadership received only six votes out of 950 delegates. By repudiating those planks which have been the prominent features of the recent Democratic platforms, the convention found itself in the position of an enthusiastic and able assembly with nothing to advocate, and the adoption of Mr. Johnson's admirable doctrines was almost a necessity. So, after all, the defeat of the Johnson faction was not so serious. McLean had the delegates but Johnson had the principles, and McLean had to devote his men to the advocacy of Johnson's ideas because he had no positive program of his own. A resolution of want of confidence in the federal administration is painfully inadequate as a state platform, and that was all McLean had to offer. A few more victories like this would ruin him.

The Steel Strike.

The battle between the Amalgamated Association of iron, steel and tin workers and the United States Steel Corporation has begun. The conferences last week between the capitalists and the labor leaders began hopefully but ended in complete failure to reach an agreement. The Amalgamated Association accordingly issued an order to its men to quit work on Monday morning, July 15, and the order at once became effective in the union plants of the American Sheet Steel Company, the American Steel Hoop Company and the American Tin Plate Company. About 74,000 men, whose wages aggregate $200,000 a day, have struck. The dispute is not about wages or hours, but is what the Amalgamated Association has pleased to term a matter of principle. Most of the mills employ only union labor and recognize the union in every respect, but some employ non-union men. The Amalgamated Association wishes the Steel Corporation to unionize these non-union mills. The Steel Corporation has gone so far as to say that it will allow these mills to unionize themselves if they please—that is, it will allow the workmen to organize and join the Amalgamated Association if they wish—but it refuses to compel them to do so or to discharge those men who refuse to join the union. The attitude of the Steel Corporation on this point will strike most persons as reasonable and just. It is not likely that public opinion will approve of a strike, the sole object of which is to enforce the principle of compulsory trades-unionism. A million dollars a week is too high a price to pay for the enforcement of a rule which, if enforced, would be of very doubtful advantage even to its advocates. On the first day of the strike the stock of the United States Steel Corporation exhibited a tendency toward a panicky decline, but the price was speedily restored by heavy purchases by J. P. Morgan and his associates. The nature of the strike, being for the sake of a "principle" rather than for any concrete and particular grievance, renders it the more difficult to settle by arbitration or compromise. It may be that it will assume much larger proportions before a settlement is reached.

Japan's Birthday Anniversary.

Last Sunday Japan celebrated the forty-eighth anniversary of the event which may be considered the birthday of that country as a modern nation, and it is a matter of special gratification that the important part which the United States played in that event has been so freely and gratefully recognized. Prior to 1853, Japan had been a hermit nation. Dutch traders had some slight concessions and the Chinese were admitted, but no other foreigners were allowed to trade in Japan and there was not a foreign consul in the country. On July 14, 1853, Commodore Perry, who had been sent into the east with an American squadron, landed at Kurihama. He had been given treaty-making power with considerable latitude for the exercise of his own discretion. As the result of his somewhat imperceptive and eminently effective diplomacy, a trade treaty was concluded between Japan and the United States in May of the following year. The European nations at once followed this example and made similar treaties, and from that day to this Japan has been the progressive nation of the Orient. On the anniversary of Commodore Perry's peaceable invasion, a celebration was held which included the unveiling of a statue of Perry at Kurihama. The principal address of the occasion was delivered by the Japanese prime minister and there was a naval display participated in by four American warships under Rear Admiral Rodgers and three vessels of the Japanese navy. It is not often that a nation learns so promptly to thank its alien benefactors who have helped it against its will.

Polar Research.

There are always plenty of people who consider the expeditions in search of the North and South Poles a waste of money and effort and a criminal sacrifice of life. While the so-called Temperate Zone is being visited with a season of equatorial weather, it may seem to the sweltering public, however, that polar research has some advantages over the warmer and less perilous occupations at home. There appears to be a renewed interest in Arctic and Antarctic explorations and never before was there so general and so well-grounded an expectation that one or both of the Poles will soon be reached. One may almost predict that within a year or two these expeditions will be racing with each other and it will be a question, not whether one of them will reach the goal, but which one will get there first. Four Arctic expeditions are now either actually in the field or on the point of starting and one or two more are preparing to start next year. Two elaborately prepared expeditions have started for the Antarctic regions and there are two more which will probably not get away until next season. All of these are marked by an elaborateness and expensiveness of equipment which would have amazed such pioneers as Greeley, Franklin and Hayes. The expedition of Mr. Baldwin is probably more expensively equipped than any of its predecessors. It was announced a few days ago that Baldwin's ship, the "America," had reached Tromsø on the northern coast of Norway whence it will proceed via Franz Josef Land toward the Pole. Baron Toll, a Russian, is exploring the region of Bennett Island, north of Siberia, and Capt. Bernier, the Canadian who will start next year, will approach the Pole from the same direction. Lieut. Peary has been in the Arctics since 1898 working toward the Pole from the north of Greenland. The third annual relief expedition under the auspices of the Peary Arctic Club is about to start north under the command of Herbert L. Bridgman. Capt. Sverdrup, who commanded Nansen's ship on his famous voyage, is exploring the north coast of Greenland. Altogether, there is considerable probability that some of these expeditions will actually reach latitude 90 degrees, where every direction is south. The Pole will probably have no commercial value when they get it, but so long as men spend lifetimes studying fossils and insects with purely scientific interest, and risk their lives in climbing ice-clad mountain peaks which have certainly no more commercial value than the imaginary points at the ends of the earth's axis, so long is it probable that men in whom the spirit of adventure is united with the scientific impulse will continue to seek the Poles until they find them. Probably some of us will live to see a tourist route established with Thomas Cook as its patron saint and Baedeker will add to his series of guide books one on the North Pole and its Environs.

An Ill-Paid Consul. The United States Consul at Cape Town, Mr. Stowe, has resigned his post. He likes the position and is an efficient consul, but cannot live on the salary, which is about one-third of what the other leading nations pay their consuls there. No one feels like complaining that our president is paid only about three per cent. of what the King of England receives, but it does seem that in our consular and diplomatic service a little less penuriousness might be a decided advantage. There is scarcely a diplomatic post which can be accepted by a man who has not an independent income with which to supplement his salary. Some of the consuls are well enough paid, but most of them receive far less than men of equal ability can earn in other walks of life by equal diligence. This is one reason why there is so little permanence and continuity in our consular service. Those who weather the storm following a change of administration have to come home presently to earn a living. The United States Steel Corporation, in recognition of the value of his services, has offered to supplement Mr. Stowe's salary by a sum which would make it equal to that of the best paid consul in Cape Town, for his work there has increased the importations of American steel into South Africa. The department of state has declined the offer, but is urging Mr. Stowe to retain his position until Congress meets, when an effort will be made to have the salary increased.

A Flying-Machine that Flies. "The problem of aerial navigation has been solved" again. This time it has been done in Paris, and it looks more than ever as if the inventor, whose machine has been heralded as the long-sought practical airship, has at least made a valuable contribution toward the solution of the problem, even if he has not actually solved it. M. Santos-Dumont, a Brazilian, brought his machine to Paris to compete for the Deutsch prize of 100,000 francs which a Parisian club devoted to the study of aerial navigation offers to the builder of the first airship which, starting from St. Cloud, shall circle three times around the Eiffel tower and return to the point of departure, making the journey at the rate of twenty kilometers (about thirteen miles) an hour and without stopping en route. M. Santos-Dumont did not fulfill these conditions exactly. He circled the tower at will, made more than the speed required and returned to his starting point, but a trivial accident, the breaking of part of his steering gear, compelled a descent for a few moments during the flight. The descent and the new start were made with a degree of ease which, it is said, still further demonstrated the operator's control over his machine. This airship is a cigar-shaped balloon with a screw propeller and a rudder. The inventor's chief merit lies in his discovery of the method of developing comparatively large horsepower without great weight. He will probably try again for the prize.

The National Educational Society. The fortieth annual meeting of the National Educational Society was held in Detroit last week. It was an important gathering of the most prominent educators in the country and the resolutions which it adopted are valuable indications of the trend of opinion among the authorities on that subject. The following are in substance some of the opinions embodied in the resolutions which the association adopted. The problem of elementary education is regarded as the most important of all, for it is intended not for the chosen or gifted few but for all. It is recommended that the Bureau of Education, of which William T. Harris is head as United States Commissioner of Education, should be given enlarged powers extending over the new possessions. Public schools in the rural districts should be made the center of the intellectual life of the community by the establishment of public libraries, extension courses and literary and social meetings for old and young in connection with them. The subjects taught in elementary schools should include those which will develop the ethical, physical and aesthetic nature of the pupils as well as the intellectual. While the liberality of wealthy men is appreciated and their gifts to educational institutions should be encouraged, it is to be remembered that popular education rests upon the whole people and should find in them its chief support and control. The public school system should be a unit from kindergarten to university, and private institutions should co-ordinate with it so far as possible. Compulsory education is approved, for it is only giving to the child protection against ignorance as it in other ways protects him against abuse and neglect. No one should be given a teacher's certificate of any grade who has not had specific training for the work of teaching. A somewhat heated debate was provoked by the report of the committee on the national university. The Society finally voted to maintain its former position in favor of the establishment of a genuine national university. A committee of twenty-one was appointed to plan for the representation of educational interests at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in 1903. It was suggested that a much larger space ought to be devoted to educational exhibits at the St. Louis Fair than at the World's Fair of 1893.

Brevities.

The National Universalis Convention held its annual session last week at Rochester, N. Y.

A claim of half a million dollars damages has been presented to our government through Minister Wu for the maltreatment of Chinese at Butte, Mont. Has the Boxer movement been transplanted to our soil?

Mr. Carnegie has announced that, after the trifling benefactions that he has already bestowed, he still has $280,000,000 to give away. This looks like the widow's cruse on a larger scale than was ever before seen.

The rush for the free Indian lands has begun. Several thousand homeseekers were registered at the El Reno land office on the first day of registration. It is estimated that there will be not less than 50,000 applicants for land, or four times as many applicants as there are tracts to be assigned.

A. B. Kittridge, who has been appointed to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Kyle as United States Senator from South Dakota, is called "the silent man." It seems a little queer, considering the pace that Mr. Pettigrew has set, to have a silent man representing South Dakota, but then with a few more Pettigrews the whole Senate would of necessity be reduced to an aggregation of silent men. They wouldn't have a chance to be anything else.

The report of Gen. Miles, as general in command of the army, has been made public. The most notable feature of its contents is the correspondence between Gen. Otis and Gen. MacArthur prior to the time when the latter succeeded to the command in the Philippines. Gen. MacArthur favored making generous concessions to the Filipinos and suggested a general amnesty. The suggestion was sharply resented by Gen. Otis, and considerable friction was developed between the two.

The English Liberal party presents a more united appearance since its meeting last week—what we would call a caucus. A resolution of confidence in the leadership of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman was enthusiastically adopted with the approval and vote of Mr. Asquith. The attitude of the Liberal Party toward the war, as stated by the party leader, is that the war must be prosecuted to a victorious conclusion, but that complete amnesty should be offered to the Boers to induce them to make a peaceable settlement.

It seems that the improbable is about as likely to happen as anything else. Most of the accidents which are recorded in the daily press are accompanied by circumstances so unlikely that, as works of the imagination, they would be called implausible and lacking in verisimilitude. One of the most impossible of these actual accidents was this: Some children whose father was a builder were playing in the cellar and found some dynamite. Not knowing the nature of the substance, they fed it to a pet frog which they had. The frog experienced no inconvenience from his strange meal until one of the children tipped over a chest of tools on him. The fall of the tool-chest exploded the dynamite (together with the frog) and blew a chisel through the floor and into the head of a woman upstairs. In this case the woman may fairly be called a victim of an unforeseeable calamity.

The True Foundation.

It is Jesus Christ. It has been the fundamental mistake of religious builders in all the Christian centuries to improvise other foundations. But "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." If there is anything supremely valuable and enduring in the plea we have been making for religious reformation, it is in the emphasis we have placed upon this truth and the practical use we have made of it. And yet it would not be true to history, nor to the present condition of things among us, to say that all who have professed adhesion to this plea have clearly understood or fully accepted this fundamental position. We need not cite instances from the past to show the truth of this statement. Everyone can recall the facts.

We are more concerned with present conditions. We are living in testing times. Never was the faith of men called upon to pass through a more trying ordeal than it is passing through to-day. The chief danger is, not that Christ will be overthrown, not that His claim to be the Son of God, in a unique sense, is in danger of being disproved, or the integrity of the Bible discredited, but that men will place their confidence in certain theories and traditions which they have inherited, which cannot stand the test, and in yielding their faith in these, will yield their confidence in Christ and the Bible. We have felt for years that the greatest danger to the faith of Christians is the failure of many to discriminate between what is fundamental and enduring, and that which is temporary and incidental.

One of these theories which has come down to us from the past is that the Bible, being dictated by the Holy Spirit to men who acted as amanuenses, was absolutely infallible in every minutia of chronology and of historical reference. We have heard men of fair intelligence declare that if there could be found within the lids of the Bible an historical inaccuracy or chronological error, they would yield their faith in its entire contents and place it on a level with other books, if not below them, because the latter make no claim to inspiration. Neither Mr. Ingersoll nor any other infidel or agnostic ever made so damaging a statement, and one so likely to undermine the faith of men, as that. It is laying "another foundation." It is a purely human foundation. It is a false foundation. It would be a false foundation if the theory were true. The Bible makes no such claim for itself, and no intelligent advocate of it to-day will make any such claim for it. What the Bible does claim for itself, and what intelligent believers in its inspiration claim for it, is that it is an authentic record of God's revelation to men, and that it contains all that is necessary as a guide in matters of religious faith and duty.

Here we stand on solid ground. The Bible has stood this test and can stand it. It presents Christ to us in prophecy, in actual history, and as embodied in his church. He is the foundation. Building on Him, no beating storms of the future will undermine our structure. Men's theories will come and go in the future, as they have in the past, but Jesus Christ remains, "the same, yesterday, to-day and forever." The importance of accentuating this fact until it is thoroughly apprehended by the young Christians, especially, of our time, can scarcely be exaggerated. And yet, whose attempts, no matter how reverently, to cause men to place their confidence in Christ rather than in some theory of inspiration or of revelation, will be sure to arouse the antagonism of honest but misguided men who have completely identified their theory of the Bible's infallibility with the Bible itself and with Christian faith. Recently we made some editorial comment with a view of helping our readers to make this just discrimination and to place their faith on the immovable and unchanging Christ. Here is one brother's appreciation of our effort, which came to us on a postal:

"I am determined to believe in the Bible, in spite of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, as I would not know of an infallible Christ were it not for the blessed Book."

This good preacher has not hurt our feelings in the least, even though he has advertised our alleged disloyalty to the Bible to all the postal clerks along the route. It is not the first time we have been charged with infidelity. What we are anxious about is, that when this good brother and his children, and those whom he teaches, come to find out that there are unimportant historical or chronological inaccuracies in the Bible, no matter how they came there, they may not surrender their faith in "the blessed Book," but will be able to see that it is all that it has ever claimed to be, "profitable for doctrine, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work." The closing part of his statement, that he would not have known of an infallible Christ without the Bible, is a substantial quotation from the very article he criticizes, in which we stated that the Bible was an infallible guide to Christ, who is an infallible Savior.

We only refer to this incident by way of illustrating the truth which we are seeking to impress. We deem it to be of the greatest practical importance. We think the errors of the kind mentioned in the Bible have been greatly exaggerated. They are of no especial consequence. They can scarcely be called even spots on the sun. It is the false theory that is doing the harm, and the fact that men have substituted this theory for the living Christ, the only true Foundation.

A Twentieth Century Convention.

The great convention of Christian workers which has just closed its sessions at Cincinnati had too large a program and too many speakers of international fame to permit any detailed account of its proceedings in these columns. It was characteristic of Christian Endeavor that its themes were present century and even present day topics. The general thread of the entire program, on which was strung the various speeches and conferences, was the needs of the twentieth century. There was, for instance, "The Twentieth Century Home," "The Twentieth Century City," "The Twentieth Century Christian Endeavor Society," and "The Twentieth Century Church." Subordinate to this general theme and yet closely related to it were the special meetings of a devotional and instructive character and for the emphasis of modern reforms.

It would be impossible to exaggerate the importance to the cause of Christ of bringing to bear the best thought of the age on these great and vital topics. The Christian Endeavor movement from the beginning has been able to lay its hands upon the ablest men of the country in every distinctive line of Christian work. Because of its interdenominational character it is able to do, in this respect, what no other organization on earth can accomplish. For this alone, if for no other reason, the United Society of Christian Endeavor has vindicated its right to live and to be a vital factor in moral and social reform. The very fact that the leading workers in all the great Protestant religious bodies meet and mingle together in fraternal fellowship, each learning of the other and each recognizing the other as a co-worker in Christ, is itself a mighty influence for the promotion of Christian unity and Christian co-operation which, after all, is the practical side of Christian unity. An organization that has the capacity to command the best talent of the nation and of the world to give its best thought on the supreme topics of the hour and to gather an audience of impressionable minds from the young people of the nation to hear these utterances and to do all this in the spirit of Christian brotherhood, giving supreme honor to Christ, assuredly has a most important function to perform in the development of the twentieth century. It is no doubt wise that these conventions should hereafter be held biennially instead of annually, as has been determined, but it would be a distinct loss to the religious life of this country for such conventions to be discontinued.

Our readers have a right to ask: What were some of the great notes emphasized in this Christian Endeavor convention? We can only mention a few of the most dominant.

1. The home: its sacredness and value. Splendid emphasis was laid upon the family relationship, on the influence of the Christian home, on the value of early religious training, on the necessity of maintaining a Christian atmosphere in the home and on securing the proper kind of reading and of example as means and methods of family culture. One could wish that every parent in the land might have felt the deepened sense of responsibility which this emphasis created in the minds of those present. We are in danger of having the home life of the nation deteriorate, as in other nations, for the insidious foes of the home are at work here as elsewhere. Intemperance, fashion, the demands of modern society, worldliness, the haste to be rich, luxury and idleness—these are some of the deadly bacilli that are eating the life out of the American home.

2. The value of Bible study. In no convention which we ever attended was more solemn and repeated emphasis laid upon the daily and systematic study of the word of God. Daily Bible studies were conducted by men who are making that their life work and vast audiences assembled to hear these Bible lectures. One of the very ablest addresses at the convention was on "The Power of the Bible," by the Rev. A. J. Lyman, D. D., Brooklyn, N. Y. It was an intelligent, up-to-date, reverent treatment of the Bible, such as lifts it above the power of hostile criticism. No man came before that convention to air his doubts and flaunt his intellectual difficulties. Men of faith stood before these upturned faces to tell what they believed and what they knew of the truth of the Bible and the power of Jesus Christ.

3. The common priesthood of all Christians, and the common duty of all to preach the gospel. This important truth received much needed emphasis in many addresses and conferences. It was made very plain that the church of the future was not to rely upon a few ordained men to do its preaching, but that it must train the rank and file of its members to point sinners to Christ and guide the lost into the way of salvation. The broad line of distinction between the clergy and the laity was deprecated as something artificial and unscriptural. We know nothing that is more needed in order to effectiveness in church service than to get the members to realize their personal responsibility in the work of winning men to Christ.

4. Prayer and personal consecration. It would be expected in a Christian Endeavor convention that these scriptural truths should receive proper emphasis. In special meetings and in many of the regular addresses they were held to be fundamental to all Christian power and growth. If anything can counteract the tide of worldliness that is sweeping into the church, it is this habit and power of prayer and of individual consecration to Christ and his work. While much stress was laid upon these duties, we never saw any convention more free from everything that could be called "cant" or mere pious platitudes. The effect of these meetings was to make one feel that he would pray more and more sincerely, and to live a life more fully devoted to Christ.

5. Practical Christianity. This was one of the supreme notes of the convention. If we believe in Christ let us carry Him with us into all our business and social relations and ask His help in solving all our problems. All life was held to be sacred and Christianity must be carried into all its ramifications—its commerce, its government, its social life, its political life, its amusements, and whatever enters into our complex civilization. Much emphasis was laid on the duty of good citizenship, which is one of the prime features of Christian Endeavor.

6. Antagonism to the liquor traffic. We have already referred in a previous article to the splendid addresses on moral suasion and legal prohibition at the Sunday afternoon temperance meeting. In many of the other addresses this same topic was discussed and always, with one single exception, in the same way. The exception was an utterance that fell flat on the audience. It is clear that the Christian Endeavor hosts of the future may be relied upon to antagonize the saloon and its deadly work more and more until their ballots shall represent the most enlightened conscience on that subject.

Finally, it was beautiful, and a fact full of encouragement, to note the supreme emphasis that was laid on personal allegiance to Christ, and the necessity of seeking to do whatsoever He would like to have us do. If this is not the thread that is to lead us out of the maze of our denominational confusions into the larger and freer life in Christ, it would be difficult to say what is that thread. An organization whose pledge commits its young people to personal loyalty to Jesus Christ is in line with the best thought and the best life of the twentieth century, and has a mission in the world. Christian Endeavor will live and prosper as long as it is true to this principle and pledge.

Notes and Comments.

An article purporting to tell "how to get a good church" appears in a Methodist exchange. A more pertinent inquiry would be how to make the church which you have good.

An Illinois county paper prints as a motto under its name, "Published not for love nor fame nor favor, but for cash." There is nothing like a plain statement of a business proposition to remove the possibility of misunderstanding.

The abandonment of co-education by the Armour Institute of Chicago is notable as indicating that the opinion of educators on this question is not all one way. It will be remembered that the president of Northwestern University, where co-education has been practiced with apparent success, recently expressed doubt of the ultimate desirability of the method.

Discussion is again started up as to whether the name of our nation, the United States of America, should be followed by a singular or plural verb. We were under the impression that the Civil War decided quite definitely that the several states form a nation which is one and inseparable. Let the verb agree with the Union, which is in the singular however numerous its constituent parts may be.

A long article on "Campbellism" in the Herald of Gospel Liberty issues in the conclusion that the Disciples of Christ are "drifting away from Campbellism." This is gratifying. If our esteemed contemporary will exhibit a corresponding "drift" away from the habit of holding us responsible for all the misinterpretations of our position by small men and will bear in mind that the theological tenets of Mr. Campbell, which it sees fit to call "Campbellism," neither are nor ever have been any essential part of the teaching of the Disciples of Christ, we will be still more grateful. It is one of our advantages that we can drift as far as we please from "Campbellism" or any other ism and still be quite at home.

A friendly critic, whose communication appears in another column, fears that we underestimate the value of handshaking. Not at all. We like it. But we do not think that it constitutes the whole duty of man. The church, as we said before, has two functions: worship and social service. Excessive handshaking at the wrong time sometimes interferes with the first and is often substituted for the latter. We know there are times when a hearty grasp of the hand is the best service that can be rendered to a man. But again there are cases which demand more strenuous treatment. The Good Samaritan did not shake hands with the man who had fallen among thieves and then go on his way criticizing the unsociability of the priest and the Levite.

We print elsewhere a criticism on a recent article in which a contributor urged the necessity of preparation before undertaking the work of the ministry. It saves time and promotes efficiency to spend a few years in getting ready, he said, just as it saves time in the long run to build a bridge across a river instead of swimming it every time. Our correspondent does not deny the superior efficiency of the bridge, but virtually asks, what is a man to do who can't build a bridge? Why, swim, of course. Pioneers in a new country can't stop at first to bridge every river and the advocates of a new cause cannot erect a bridge of scholarship over every stream that bars their progress. Those who can't build can do pioneer service by swimming. But the bridge-building period comes sooner or later, and the Disciples of Christ have reached it.

The Sunday-School Times has either seen new light recently on the subject of conversion or has found a happier mode of expressing itself. In answering a correspondent who wishes to join the church but does not feel that he has been "converted", its editor says: "It can safely be said that in the last two centuries more harm has been done to the cause of Christ and to the Christian Church by individuals worrying over the subject of conversion [in the sense of something which must be waited for and passively experienced] than there has been of good through all efforts to be converted. If any Christian would look at the Revised New Testament he would find that 'turning about', as a plain duty for whoever is on the wrong track, has taken the place of 'be converted' in the New Testament. That fact ought to help a great many." It will. And perhaps it will help some of those who were puzzled and troubled a few months ago by the editorial in the same paper which said that man had no part in his own salvation except to resist and let the Lord do the rest. The plain duty of 'turning about' is certainly something for a man to do toward his own salvation.

How those pro-canteen arguments, which some of the papers are so glibly reciting, do get tangled with each other! First they say that the anti-canteen law will stop enlistments, for the men will not serve if they cannot get drink. Then they say that there is more drunkenness without the canteen than there was with it. If this is true there is no apparent reason why the thirstiest recruit should shrink from the service. It is noticeable that the people who have always defended the license system as the best protector of virtue and promoter of temperance, are the very ones who describe in lurid language the carnival of crime and drunkenness which has been going on in the newly established "outside" saloons at the army posts since the abolition of the canteen. But these "outside" saloons are under the same general license law which they have been extolling as the best regulator of the liquor business. Behold how effectively the regulator regulates! If half of the stories are true, the license system is everlastingly condemned out of the mouths of its own friends. As a matter of fact these stories about the increase of drunkenness and disorder at the army posts are lies, but it shows how clumsily the friends of the canteen are conducting their case.

Editor's Easy Chair

Macatawa Musings.

The Easy Chair has been on an excursion into the hot belt, which didn't prove to be very hot after all. The great Christian Endeavor Convention is worth suffering for. Even if the heat had been what it was the week previous it would have repaid us for the discomfort; but it was greatly modified, and was really very pleasant. What a delightful thing it is to mingle in fraternal fellowship with the consecrated men and women of other religious bodies and learn how much after all their hearts beat in unison with your own, and how genuine is their faith in and love for the same Master! And yet it helps us to realize how much sectarian walls, in the past, have deprived us of, in the way of Christian fellowship, and is a prophecy of the good time coming when these walls shall separate us no more forever. Some of us can remember the time when fellowship was largely limited by denominational lines. That was the era of denominationalism, pure and simple. The walls were too high to see over, much less to step over. But we have grown out of that into an era of interdenominational fellowship. We have learned to recognize each other as followers of the same Lord, children of the same Father. We are learning from each other, and learning about each other and we are surprised and gratified to find how much alike we are. May not this interdenominational fellowship lead to an era of undenominationalism in so far, at least, as denominationalism offers any barrier to Christian fellowship and co-operation? We shall be quite content when there shall be taken out of our present denominationalism all that is contrary to God's will, and that hinders the progress of his kingdom. We believe that process is going on, and that Christian Endeavor is one of the providential agencies for carrying it forward to the full realization of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers.

One of the pleasant episodes of the convention, indicating its spirit, occurred at the Grand Hotel, where many of us were stopping. One evening after the guests had returned from the exercises at the halls and were gathered in the rotunda of the hotel, a few young people began singing some of the familiar hymns. As they sang the number of singers increased, and as they came forward the circle was widened to give them room in it. One minister present from the far west made it his business to bring up groups of Endeavor guests and have them join in with us. When the circle embraced about all present, except the employees of the hotel and other guests not Endeavorers, this minister suggested that Charles M. Sheldon make a selection. When that was sung, Booker T. Washington was asked to make a selection. When we had sung his favorite, Canon Richardson was called on to name a selection, and then Bishop Fallows, etc., till nearly all the old familiar hymns were exhausted. Then some one suggested that we close with "God be with you till we meet again," and that Dr. Power, of Washington, close with a benediction and a prayer for God's blessing on the hotel managers, employees, and guests. The song was sung, the benediction was uttered and all hearts seemed to feel the presence and power of God. It has seemed to us, on reflection, that that scene was a symbol of what God is doing for His divided church in our day. Some escaped the bondage of ecclesiasticism and began to sing the songs of Christian freedom and of unity in Christ. Others came and joined the circle, which is ever widening, as Christ Jesus, the center and magnet, is drawing all men unto Him. What a glorious circle of believers are even now singing the same songs, and working together, hand to hand and heart to heart, for the enthronement of Christ in the heart of the world! After a while may we not hope the whole church universal will join in the chorus, and there will not be a single discordant note to mar the divine symphony!

The Rally of the Disciples of Christ occurred at the Central Christian Church on Tuesday afternoon. There was a large company present, John E. Pounds, our national superintendent of Christian Endeavor, presided, and after some introductory remarks, introduced Bro. F. D. Power, who made a good speech on "Our Debt to our Country." Bro. Power addressed a Sunday afternoon meeting on "Sabbath Observance" in which he gave some needed instruction on the Sabbath and Lord's day question. The Rally was also addressed by Sister Moses, whose address was read by Miss Pounds, and by C. S. Medbury, on "The End of Christian Endeavor." These, too, were both strong addresses. Benj. L. Smith made a brief and enthusiastic talk on the Minneapolis Convention, and introduced Dr. Thomas, of Minneapolis, who, with Dr. Brown and Prof. Hay of that city, was present to forward the interests of that convention. Dr. Thomas told something of what the committee was doing and what the people of Minneapolis, of Minnesota and of the northwest were looking forward to and urged a large attendance. It is certain that no committee has ever showed more enterprise than the local committee at Minneapolis is manifesting. They feel that very much is involved in the success of that convention, and the brotherhood should respond to their zeal and efforts, in one of the largest conventions we have ever held. Bro. Rains, who sails soon for China and Japan, addressed the Rally, insisting "we are the people," in his own happy way, and introducing Bros. Faris and Adams, our recently returned missionaries from Africa and India, who were received with the Chautauqua salute, and feelingly spoke to us of their joy in witnessing such an assembly. Bro. Wharton also was introduced and made his salaam. Bro. J. Z. Tyler was present on the platform, but did not speak. He is about the same as respects his physical condition, while his "inner man" seems to be renewed, day by day. We were called away before the social hour, following the addresses, and were thus prevented from meeting many of the brethren whom we would have been glad to greet.

Once during the sessions of these conventions the trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor always dine together, with the local committee as their guests. At our annual banquet at the Grand, in Cincinnati, Dr. Clark was presented with a "Loving Cup," of generous dimensions, by Dr. Hamlin, in behalf of the trustees, as an expression of their brotherly love and their appreciation of his wise leadership. Dr. Clark responded in a very happy speech, disclaiming the credit which had been generously accorded to him. But what an admirable leader Christian Endeavor has had these twenty years past! How level-headed, modest, wise, resourceful, patient, courteous, aggressive, cautious, fearless, humble, hopeful, helpful! Long may he live to lead on to nobler conquests, "for Christ and the Church," the mighty hosts of young people who have pledged to do "whatever Christ would like to have them do." He seems to us to be one of the men whom God has raised up to do a special work, and who, in a marked degree, is under divine guidance. Booker T. Washington, who made one of the great addresses of the convention, is another such man. Coming from Cincinnati to Chicago on the same train with him, we had the opportunity of talking with him concerning his work as teacher and lecturer, and found him to be a modest, unpretentious man, who is wholly unconscious of being or doing anything great, but the motive of whose whole life is the unselfish ambition to help others. The Lord multiply the number of such, for the sake of our poor, sinning and suffering world! Charles M. Sheldon, with whom we came in closer personal contact than ever before, belongs to this class of men who live for the benefit of their fellow men. He is one of the humblest and most lovable men we have ever met, filled with a consuming desire to make the world better. We believe the twentieth century will witness the multiplication of such men, whom God will use to bring in a new era of righteousness and truth in the earth.

These lines are written at the lake-side, where the peaceful plash of placid waters, and the soft sighing of western winds through fragrant forests woo the wearied wanderer to rest awhile and refresh his soul with the nurture which Nature gives to all her children. It is good for man to mingle in the multitudes of the world's worthy workers, and come in touch with the teachers and toilers who are seeking to save their fellow men and lift them to higher levels of life. It is good, too, when the captains and the kings depart and the shouting and the tumult cease, to come back to the green groves, beside the far-stretching waters of the lake, and listen reverently for that stiller voice by which God speaks to the soul that has ears to hear.

On the steamer at Chicago, on our return trip, we met Bro. J. H. Hardin and wife, heading a delegation of ten from Liberty, Mo., to Macatawa. And so the colony grows. On last Lord's day, A. B. Jones preached to the audience which gathered in the auditorium in spite of the cold weather.

Bro. Bennett and wife, who are here from Illinois, are efficient helpers in the religious work at the Park. In common with many other sections of the country, this locality is needing and hoping for rain.

A Sunday in Wittenberg

By MORTON H. PEMBERTON

A tour of Germany would not be complete without visiting the old town of Wittenberg, the place where Martin Luther lived and taught and labored so long and hard.

It is evening time, and the sun is just going down; the chimes of the church bells and the almost noiseless tread of a few passers-by, are all that disturb the solemn stillness of the hour. I feel that to-day I have been walking upon holy ground, for I have walked in the same rooms and upon the same streets where the feet of Luther and his beloved Melancthon have touched. Who would not feel a thrill of reverence and calm delight in the presence of so many things which tell of Luther and the terrible times in which he lived?

This morning we arose bright and early and went for a long walk through and around Wittenberg. It was a beautiful May morning, and one could have hoped for no more quaint and picturesque scenery. Although Wittenberg is an old, old town, the spirit of progress is still with her, and many handsome buildings register 1890 and more. But the old town and the old streets, its historical buildings and churches remain as in the days of old, and no hand will tear them away as long as the name of Luther is engraved upon the memory of human hearts.

Instead of the little town of 3,000 inhabitants, as in Luther's day, Wittenberg is now a thriving little city of about 17,000 inhabitants. The little winding River Elbe weaves its way around one side of the town, and the smooth but slightly undulating land gives it an ideal setting. Shady groves and beautiful walks are on every side, but a visitor does not care to linger long among trees and waters and nature's charms in Wittenberg, for during almost every moment of the walk something seems to be whispering in the ear the name of Luther, and one wishes to hasten to see its historical treasures.

As it was not yet time for services at the churches, we went first to the old Augustinian monastery where Luther lived from 1508, when he was called as a professor in the University of Wittenberg. Later the Elector of Saxony, Luther's faithful political friend, gave him this portion of the monastery, known as Luther's house. Luther's rooms are now used as a museum, and are filled with relics of the great reformer.

In the study-room the old writing-table where Luther worked stands defiant of time, though its splinters and rough edges are beginning to tell the story of its early day. The large iron stove that warmed Luther's blood can yet hold the flames of many fires. The same window panes, with a broken one here and there, still let in the sunlight, and one can feel sure that by these old windows stood the devout and brave Luther. The same planks remain in the floor of this study-room, and we can also feel sure that to and fro upon this very floor often walked the restless reformer, after the manner of men who think, with his blood boiling with indignation as he thought of Tetzels selling indulgences to sin in the name of God.

On a shelf near the table is Luther's old drinking goblet, from which he must often have quenched his thirst when he returned from hours of lecturing and preaching, for it must be remembered that Luther preached more than once a week, and his sermon was more than twenty minutes long. Besides Luther's lectures in the University, he often preached once and twice a day in the church for days in succession. The original pulpit from the Town Church where Luther preached, and the old sand-clock have been brought to the Luther rooms and are exhibited together, for it seems that a clock was as necessary an attachment to a pulpit in those days as in modern times.

There is also in his study the double chair where Luther is said to have spent so many moments with his beloved wife, Catharine von Bora. In a glass case is some needlework done by the hands of his wife. In the museum of art at Leipsic is a very fine picture of Luther, his wife and his five children. It is a beautiful little family group of Luther sitting at this table in these plain rooms, with a musical instrument in his hands, his wife sitting on the other side of the table, and the children standing near by with their eyes upon the father and mother.

In other rooms are a number of modern paintings of historical events in Reformation times, such as Charles V. at the grave of Luther, the Diet of Worms, the translation of the Bible, Luther's betrothal, and Luther fixing his theses on the door of the church.

Luther's library, together with a large collection of other famous editions of books of the Reformation period, makes a very interesting collection. In a glass case are preserved Luther's early translations of the Bible in his own handwriting. I might add for the benefit of the young that we saw Luther's engagement ring, for according to German custom, the man wears a ring as well as the woman.

Just a few doors from Luther's house is the old home of Philip Melancthon. When I saw his old death bed I thought of the time when Luther knelt down by the side of it and begged his faithful Melancthon not to die, because he could not spare him, not knowing that the weak body of his gentle friend Melancthon would rally and last longer than his own powerful frame. Out in the back yard under a large tree is an old rock table bearing the name Melancthon, which was inscribed by himself under date of 1551. Here upon this crumbling rock desk, under the shade of this tree, worked Luther and Melancthon at the translation of the Bible.

A few feet from Melancthon's house stands the old Wittenberg University, which is now used as barracks for soldiers. The University of Wittenberg was in Luther's day one of the first universities in Germany. In 1817 it was incorporated with the University at Halle, which is now regarded as one of the best in Germany, especially for students of theology.

As the church bells were then ringing, we went first to the church where Luther nailed his ninety-five theses—a great massive building of stone with two high round towers, more like a cathedral than a church. The outside of course bears the marks of time, but the inside is of most costly, beautiful and elaborate finish. In 1892 the interior was restored, and at that time the Emperor of Germany and many representatives of royalty were present at its celebration. There are nine beautiful colossal statues of reformers by famous sculptors, Luther and Melancthon occupying the chief places; also twenty-two medallions of friends and protectors of the Reformation. The altar is elegantly arranged with a beautiful figure of Christ in the center. A few fine pictures with others of moderate merit add greatly to its general artistic finish.

The old wooden doors to which Luther nailed his ninety-five theses were burned in 1760 during the war with Austria, but in 1858 Emperor Frederick William IV. replaced them by massive iron doors bearing the original text of the theses. It was easy to imagine the defiant reformer standing before this door and nailing to it those immortal declarations which were to be read not only by those who passed by this church, but by the whole Christian world.

A short distance from the church is the place where Luther burned the Pope's bull. It is at the edge of the town under a massive oak tree which still lives to tell the story of the bold deed. An iron fence surrounds the old tree, and upon its trunk is affixed the metallic German inscription, "Dr. Martin Luther verbrannte an dieser Stelle am 10 Dec. 1520 die Papstliche Bannbulle." It had been but a short time since the brave John Huss had been burned at the stake for similar declarations, and friends were urging Luther to forego his vigorous and defiant opposition, but Luther listened to nothing but the divine voice of truth within him, and, thanks to his brave friends, he lived to see the precious fruit of his labors.

Another interesting building is the old Town Church where Luther preached, and where for the first time in 1521 the Holy Communion was administered in both kinds. The old church was built in the 14th century and though its great massive stone walls have crumbled somewhat, the inside is perfectly restored and is as beautiful an interior as we generally find in a European church.

A few steps from the old Town Church is the market place with a courthouse built in the 16th century, and in front of it are two bronze statues, one of Luther and the other of Melancthon. On the corner of the market place is the old home of the famous painter, Lucas Cranach, who also used his talent as a cartoonist unfriendly to Roman Catholicism, and was of much help to Luther in arousing the minds of the people against the abuses of the Church of Rome.

Well may the little town of Wittenberg preserve the earthly relics of the sainted Luther and cherish his memory in their hearts, for the world never had a better, braver, nobler friend.

The Gospel of Christ.

By J. H. Smart.

Whenever we cease to preach the pure gospel of Christ, if we ever do, spiritual disaster will come to us in our churches and in our mission fields. If we have any good reason for an existence as a separate religious people, it is because we have, from the beginning, preached the simple gospel of Christ as it is recorded in the Bible. Our purpose, in all these years, has been to follow the book of God in the proclamation of the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us in this great work, has blessed us above all other religious bodies. Two years ago a leading evangelist of another church said to the writer, "The reason your people have advanced so rapidly in the past few years is, your preachers, as a rule, have not gone crazy over the higher criticism, and they have been loyal to the word of God." His conclusion was a correct one, I think. We have had a few among us, however, who have given too much of their time to the higher criticism; but nearly all of our evangelists and pastors-preachers have been content to preach the old gospel as preached by Peter, John and Paul, and to leave the results with God, who gives the increase; and God has led us on from victory to victory. Why should he not give us the victory? Have we not been doing the work God wants done, and have we not been using his own means for the accomplishment of it?

There is absolutely no hope in sectarianism for the conversion of the world to Christ. Those who read the signs of the times correctly see this. The great masses of the people are tired of sectarianism, and will not have it. They want to know what God says, what God wants them to do and to be! Just recently I saw a wonderful demonstration of the failure of sectarianism in the case of an evangelist who claimed not to be sectarian, whose business is to go over the country and hold union meetings. He does not know the difference between the law of Moses and the gospel of Jesus Christ. For he represented David as praying to Jesus, and the Old Testament children of God as being Christians. He professes to be a great Bible man; but he happens to find in the Old Testament the most of his references which he uses to tell sinners what to do to become Christians! When he does quote from the New Testament the epistles are cited to tell alien sinners what they must do to enter the kingdom of heaven. He does not know that the twenty-one epistles of the New Testament were all addressed to baptized believers. The Book of Acts was scarcely ever quoted to tell a sinner how to find the way of life. It was pitiful to see him mix things up so no one could tell what he was trying to do! It is sad for one who claims to be a preacher of the gospel of Christ, earnest and zealous, not to know what the gospel of Christ is. Quoting Scripture promiscuously, and sandwiching in between these quotations death-bed stories which never occurred, is not preaching the gospel of Christ. No wonder many people become disgusted with Christianity (thinking this to be Christianity) and join the ranks of infidelity. Then it is a fearful thing for one to preach something for the gospel of Christ, which is not the gospel of Christ at all. See Gal. 1:8, 9.

The common people are hungering for the old Jerusalem gospel, and if the genuine article is given them in the spirit of our Savior they will gladly accept and become disciples of the Nazarene. If we, as a people, are wise according to God's wisdom, we will continue to give this old gospel to the world. It is the only thing in God's world that will save sinners who are willing to believe it. For the gospel of Christ is the power of God to save men. See Rom. 1:16. We, as a great restoration movement, will continue to grow, and to grow with a marvelous rapidity, just as long as we preach this New Testament gospel; and if we ever become ashamed of it and sidetrack it for human wisdom, or for the æsthetics of civilization, we will most certainly have Ichabod written on our banner.

Who Should Go as a Missionary?

By Chas. Louis Loos.

This is a most important question; for, under God, the fortune of missions depends supremely on the kind of men sent forth into the fields. Great, therefore, is the responsibility of those to whom the selection of these men is committed.

What, then, are the proper qualifications of the missionary?

First, is an intelligent and entire consecration to this holy service. This implies a correct understanding of the purpose of these missions, and a good knowledge of the field and its life and labors. The chief object of gospel missions—let us well understand this—is not to lift up heathens from their low estate to a higher civilization, with all the immense blessings in personal, domestic, social and national life that belong to it. These, as necessary effects, are certainly not to be overlooked nor lightly esteemed in missionary enterprises. The soul and life of missions, however, is the salvation of our race from sin. This is the one supreme motive of the gospel, so clearly and so powerfully set forth by Christ and his apostles. All else is secondary. This the missionary must hold as the great purpose and inspiration of his heart.

If, with a clear understanding of the object of missions, and of the field and its life, and after mature reflection and examination of heart and much earnest prayer for divine guidance, the missionary aspirant finds that he is ready to give himself joyfully to this service for life, he then has the important primary qualification, without which all else is unavailing.

This precludes all mere immature, impulsive enthusiasm, and the sentimental charm of the heroism and romance of missions, which are too unsubstantial and transitory to endure successfully the life in the foreign fields, as much experience has proved.

Another and kindred essential quality is a genuine piety, which surrenders all that we are to the will of God, and leads to a holy life. Nowhere is the presence of this virtue, as an example and power of life, more needed than in the foreign mission field. Mere pietistic religiousness is not true piety; its unsoundness and weakness will soon be revealed everywhere.

And with this is identified that holiest grace of the Christian soul—the love of God and his Christ. This most potent force will constrain the missionary to glorify the Father and the Son, by bringing the knowledge of the Great Salvation, at the cost of every sacrifice, into the darkest regions of the earth.

The missionary's mind and heart should be rich in the knowledge of the Word of God; for this is the inexhaustible source of all we can know concerning the world's redemption. Herein must lie his strength as a teacher and preacher of the gospel to men. And we would urge, with all the force that is in us, that he who is to plant the Christian faith in heathen lands must be in his convictions and teaching sound in all that appertains to the essential elements of the doctrine of Christ. The power and safety of his ministry will lie in this: that he teaches the true Christ and his true doctrine; not a Christ, some Christ, but the one and only Christ whom the New Testament reveals to us. And not some doctrine of Christ, but the doctrine of him which in the fullest and clearest manner Jesus himself and his apostles have taught. This doctrine, this gospel, alone is the power of God unto salvation to all mankind. Let the missionary boards take this earnestly to heart.

The best judgment and all human experience have abundantly taught us that missionaries in foreign fields should be men of strong and clear heads, and of good education. To cope masterfully with all the difficulties and all the great problems of foreign fields, requires men of an excellent order of mind, men rich in knowledge and intellectual training.

The ability readily to acquire a foreign tongue is essential to a missionary's qualifications. For, to be very imperfect in the use of the language of the people among whom he labors, to be obliged to use an interpreter, often leads to serious misunderstandings, and shuts him off from direct and effectual communication with the minds and hearts of his hearers.

Our Lord said that his messengers should be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." Nowhere are these qualities of greater value than in the midst of the pagan world. At home, in the bosom of strong Christian communities, serious errors on the part of the minister of the gospel can be easily met and corrected. Not so in the depth of heathenism, where the churches are weak and the enemy strong. To deal prudently with pagan communities, governments, institutions, religions; to treat properly fellow missionaries; to act rightly towards the boards at home—all this demands great wisdom on the part of the missionaries. "Harmlessness" is of inestimable value. A man who is intractable and stubborn in his temper, who has in him the passion of having his own way, may work incalculable mischief in the foreign field. But humility and gentleness; a disposition to "esteem others better than himself"—these are properties of mind and heart that are really indispensable in the missionary.

Men afflicted with race and social prejudices are necessarily unfit for the mission field; they have not the spirit of Christ in them.

Finally, the climates of most heathen lands, and the general great ignorance and disregard of the laws of health prevailing everywhere in them, demand that the missionaries sent forth into them shall be men and women of sound bodies and vigorous health. The plainest common sense dictates this rule.

Mission boards cannot allow themselves to be indulgent in this respect. It is a serious burden on missions and boards to have invalids in the fields.

Kentucky University.

The Reign of Law in our Colleges.

Howard T. Cree.

Many will be found to agree and perhaps as many to disagree with James Lane Allen in his "Reign of Law." Those who take issue with the gifted Kentuckian bemoan the thrust he makes at religion by the overthrow of his hero's faith, and more especially the injustice he has done a certain college by the attitude of an unsympathetic professor, who chiefly changes the current of the young man's life.

Burris A. Jenkins, in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, sagely remarked: "College students are generally at such an age as is thought to be skeptical. But it is not skeptical; it is simply inquiring." The new environment begets an earnest inquiry into the things around him. The frequent and sometimes foolish questions of the child in his early years, after all, reveal a God-given impulse. How else can the child know of the world into which he has come, and how best to conduct himself with reference to the laws, unless he questions concerning it? So also with the student in the college.

He finds factors at work in the world and laws prevailing of which he never before dreamed in the quiet of his home. To know these laws, to understand them in their working, is his aim. If he questions carefully and to the point of almost wearying his professor, is this attitude of mind to be despised?

One who appreciates his own inability to cope singly with the great forces of life, and more especially of religion, is less liable to make a shipwreck of his faith than he who thinks he needs no aid, but unassisted and alone can steer through any sea. The disciples prayed to their Master to deliver them from the storm on Galilee, saying: "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" Is this question not at all apropos with reference to the disturbed and troubled mind of the student as he sits in the presence of his professor?

He who essays to answer all questions for himself and solve all difficulties, must sooner or later meet with that beyond his powers, and find himself wandering in the labyrinthian mazes of hidden mystery. Sad the fate of the egotist who finds a philosophy whose utterances he cannot gainsay and by reason of this surrenders the faith of former years. How much better had he been taught there are questions to be pigeon-holed for future reference; that his attitude is to be that of a learner standing before the great questions attempting a solution, even though he fail in his efforts at an acceptable answer.

Who so well qualified for revealing to the student this proper attitude as the professor? Let the student be made to understand the limitations of his own powers, that all the truth in its infinite reach cannot be grasped by a finite mind. The touch must be one of loving sympathy. Doubtless for this very reason an American statesman expressed his idea of the best university as that of a log in the woods with a professor at one end and a pupil at the other.

Has there not been a "reign of law" in some of our colleges that is to be regretted? Has there not been too much of the law of dogmatic assertion by professors, and too little of an appreciation of the real difficulties of the inquiring student? The laws of life will continue to reign as they have since the beginning. Instead of teaching that these laws are fully understood in all of their bearings, is it not better to show the student the method of patient inquiry and the wisdom of willingness to wait?

The Hymn They Sang.

Matt. 26:30.

By Aaron Prince Aten.

Which one of the holy college
Was the poet with pen of fire
Who wrote for that evening's service
The hymn for the holy choir?

What thoughts of infinite beauty,
Inspired by the life of love,
Flowed out on the parchment freely
To carry their souls above?

Who started the song that morning
When the midnight feast was o'er?
How many joined in the chorus
That the breezes upward bore?

With a cadence purer and sweeter
Than the earth before had known,
Did the Master lead the music
That floated to heaven's throne?

What hands touched his in the circle,
And felt the ecstatic thrill
That comes from His presence only,
The spirit with joy to fill?

O song, in the bright hereafter
May thy sweet, sad tones be heard;
And the voices that sang that morning—
By them shall our hearts be stirred!

New York Letter.

By S. T. Willis.

Concentration and aggressive effort seem to be the watchword of the Disciples of Christ in many centers of population. We are learning a lesson that we should have learned many years ago, for much of our energy has not been made the most effective possible, especially in cities where our plea is not strongly represented. One of the most recent centers to take steps toward organizing for aggressive work is Troy, N. Y., and vicinity. Five congregations there planning co-operative evangelism are the River and Jay Street Church, Troy, of which George B. Townsend is pastor, the Lansingberg Church over which R. W. Stevenson presides, the congregation at Eagle Mills ministered to by E. J. Butler, the church at Poestenkill of which Bro. Wheeler is pastor and the one at Pittstown where Leslie Moody is the preacher. Some of these are among the oldest and most historic congregations in the east. James A. Garfield did some of his first preaching in this section and to some of these country congregations. His name is still honored by many of the older disciples of the community who heard him preach when he was a young man. But as a preacher of the gospel Dr. W. A. Belding is most honored in this section of the country, where he has spent the greater part of his long and useful life. The Dr. was present at the public meeting on June the 27th in the church in Troy and was one of the most interested in the object of the meeting, when it was my privilege to address this the first public meeting of the Troy Union, on "Coworking with God." The churches were represented by their several pastors and others. The cause of the Disciples in this part of the state is in a flourishing condition, and the outlook is bright with promise. We confidently expect to hear encouraging reports from the Disciples' Union of Troy and vicinity. This co-operation should certainly result in both the planting of new congregations and the greater spiritual development of the old ones.

Bro. E. C. VanZandt has for years had charge of the Bible-school at Troy. He uses the following, which some choose to call his catechism, as a drill in his Sunday-school every Lord's day:

1. What must a sinner do first to be saved?

Ans. Believe on Jesus as the Son of God and his Savior.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16:31).

2. What is the second step?

Ans. Repent of his sins and forsake them.

"Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts 2:38).

3. What is the third step?

Ans. Confess with his mouth before men, his faith in Jesus.

"For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Rom. 10:10).

4. What is the fourth step?

Ans. Be baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins.

"Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 22:16).

5. What salvation does this give?

Ans. Forgiveness of all past sins.

6. What must one do to be finally saved?

Ans. Continue to obey Jesus.

"To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality—eternal life" (Rom. 2:7).

The Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell, an Episcopal divine of Brooklyn, recently preached a sermon on "The Evolution of Immortality," in which he takes the position that Jesus did not teach a universal immortality, but offered eternal life only to those who did his will. He says Jesus' teachings were not so much theological as biological. His appeal was always to the instinct of living, saying, in effect, "if you will do thus and thus you can secure for yourselves a life so prepotent that what you call death can not ruin it." Dr. McConnell declares that no individual can ever become potentially immortal until one reaches a point to know good and evil. He also says the psychic life, called the soul in man, is simply the same as instinct in the beast, and affinity in the germ cell, and unless this psychic life in man is capable of reaching some higher stage so that it can subsist in spite of the disintegration of the body, man is not any more immortal, inherently, than the animal or the plant. He is simply "immortable," that is to say, capable of becoming immortal. He says that God only is immortal, and man may by doing good so develop the psychic life as to enable him to survive, for a time, in some other state independent of the physical body. It seems this is evolution run mad.

Every-Day Religion

By John Augustus Williams

The tendency of much of our modern preaching is to divorce religion and morality, by failing to emphasize properly the moral teachings of the scriptures, especially of Jesus and his apostles. As a consequence of thus putting asunder what God has joined together, religion has come to be regarded in the popular mind as the observance of certain forms and ordinances, the experience of certain emotions, or the acceptance of certain dogmas written or traditional.

Another consequence is that the world appropriates many of the beautiful lessons of our Scriptures, for which they give no credit. They sit at the feet of Jesus, and learn of him and yet disown him; they borrow his wisdom, but do not acknowledge him. And the church carelessly acquiesces in such plagiarism!

Under this defective view of religion, one zealously performs all his supposed Christian duties. He is always in his accustomed seat at church, joins in the prayers and songs with fervor, listens, perhaps wakefully, to the sermons of the day, partakes of the supper with due solemnity, drops his small coin into the so-called charity box, reads his Bible in the afternoon, and spends the intermediate hours in a Sabbatical rest. But when the week days come, he lays aside his religious duties, and hastens to his fields, or shop, or office, with little thought that his religion has anything to do with the business of every-day life.

Such a man is not necessarily a hypocrite or a formalist; he is a sincere religionist under the delusion that religion has but little to do with the practical affairs of daily life, with sale and barter, stock and bonds, or the toil and strife for bread. He may be frugal and industrious, neat and orderly, cautious in speech so that he gives no offense to patrons, and, in his dealings with them, observe strictly as a maxim of business that honesty is the best policy. But in his view, all this is but worldly prudence; these are useful virtues, but profitable only as business principles, and not to be ranked as Christian graces.

In the opinion of such religionists, a man may be negligent of dress and person, careless of his money, slothful in his business, fond of ease, and violate continually the maxims of prudence, and still be a very religious man. If on the other hand, he should practice all these worldly virtues, and yet speculatively doubt the metaphysical deity of Jesus, or the eternal damnation of the heathen, or the verbal inspiration and inerrancy of the Jewish scriptures, or if he should fellowship as Christians the unimmersed, or affiliate with outside societies, whether open or secret, his religion is at once suspected, and his salvation is doubtful.

But are such virtues as neatness and order, economy and industry, really Christian graces, and constituent elements of religious character? If so, the popular conception of religion must be enlarged, and the Christianity of Jesus be studied anew. Let us then learn of him, and from his own example, which best defines his doctrine.

He upbraided, he was angry, he rebuked, and he wept; but, if I remember correctly, he complained but once, and then because they brought him no water to bathe his dusty feet. We cannot conceive of him as being careless in attire, or neglectful of personal neatness. We read, indeed, of the robe he wore, which was more graceful than common, because without seam, being woven throughout. Even the pagan soldiers would not rend it, but cast lots to preserve it entire.

Should we have entered into his carpenter's shop, when he worked at his trade, I cannot think that we would have seen any untidiness within. No rust gathered on his polished tools; no rubbish accumulated about his benches; and no disorderly heaps offended the eye. It must have been a model of order and neatness and convenience.

One will thus express his character in everything he does. We may read a farmer in his fences and furrows and ricks, in every trace of axe or knife, in his barns and domestic animals. If he is a Christian he will unconsciously put his religion into everything, and his smallest work will express the dominant elements of his character.

The most eventful moment in the history of Jesus was when, having suffered death and lain three nights in the sealed sepulchre, he awoke from death to be glorified as the Lord of man. Even in that moment of sublimest triumph, while angels waited without to escort him to the throne of his glory, he lingered to put his empty tomb in order, folding up his useless grave clothes, and putting them aside in separate parcels so that everything was tidy when his disciples came to look upon the place where they had laid him.

And how impressively did he inculcate the grace of economy! After he had generously fed the multitudes from his exhaustless resources, he directed them to gather up carefully all the fragments so that nothing should be wasted.

So have I seen a Christian mother in the face of her observing children put by the fragments of a bountiful breakfast, and then, carefully gathering up the crumbs, cast them kindly to the birds. And I have seen a like Christian housewife collect the remnants after a day's sewing, and put them all away in her scrap bag. I have seen her patch and darn, turn and cut down old garments from child to child, until the very shreds and tatters grow beautiful at last in a carpet or a quilt, and all this, too, not from poverty, but from principle. Such economy is not wholly a work of the flesh. There may be as much religion in a good woman's cupboard as in the baskets that the disciples filled after their feast in the wilderness. There is often more religion in a wife's scrap bag than in the embroidered motto, "Praise the Lord," sometimes displayed on the walls of our homes.

The wise man, Proverbs 18, declares that the wasteful man is a brother to him who is slothful in his business. Both are sinful wasters—one is wasteful of time, the other of bread, one of the staff of life, the other of the stuff of which life is made. These twin vices, extravagance and idleness, are almost national sins. An average American farmer will waste enough to support a European family, and our young men often squander enough time to acquire an education or to earn a competency.

These vices are usually born of a silly pride that despises labor and yet loves display. Poverty does not cure it; for we often meet with men that are poor, proud and lazy. As a people, we are sometimes sorely punished for these national sins, by what we call "hard times," for since nations have no souls they are punished only in this world.

The remedy for hard times is not in legislation, but in reform. If our curbstone politicians would turn their whittling jack-knives into reap-hooks, and the young man with the bat become a man with the hoe, wages and capital, trade and currency would regulate themselves. Said Dr. Franklin when writing from England, almost in despair of his country, "The sun of liberty has set, now let the colonies light up the candles of economy and industry."

But such reforms should begin with ourselves. We sometimes begin to save by reducing our charities, or our church contributions, and our faithful minister, or the poor around us, are the first to feel the effects of our selfish retrenchments.

As to the twin grace of industry, our Scriptures distinguish between an industrious man and a merely busy one. "I hear," says Paul, "that there are among you Thessalonians, some who do not work, but are busy-bodies." Industry is profitable labor, working with system, according to a plan and for a useful end. One who is simply busy, is a restless, bustling, perhaps a nervous, fretful creature, ever active, but doing nothing. He will rouse his household from their unfinished sleep, rush from house to barn, and from barn to field or forest, pull awhile at every oar, begin and leave off a dozen undertakings, and lie down at night weary, but with little or nothing accomplished. He is a busy man, but not an industrious one, for his labor is not productive. Such a man is not indolent or lazy, he is simply idle. Indolence, says Solomon, puts his hands in his pockets and will hardly take them out even to eat. Idleness wastes energy, indolence has none. Indolence may move, but only as a door on its hinges, it never goes. Idleness is always going, but it never gets there. Indolence is a snail, idleness is a butterfly, but industry is a bee. Indolence will let the boiler cool down and the boat drift along with the current, idleness will fire up and then turn the steam on the whistle, or waste it in noise upon the air, industry will direct the subtle energy upon the wheels, and the stately craft moves from port to port with the commerce of the land.

Our young men and young women are not lazy, but they are too much given to idle employments. They have fine brain and nerve and muscle. They delight in many avocations, but they have too few vocations, many amusements, but few industries.

But may not our young people have some amusements? By all means, they may and should have them. But they should be only recreations, when amusement becomes a vocation, it is injurious and sinful. How often are our daughters busy with accomplishments that are idle? They can embroider, but can they make or mend a garment? They can freeze the cream, but can they, like Jael of old, churn it and bring forth the butter in a lordly dish? They can ice the cake and make the sherbet, but can they bake a loaf, and distill the cup for a father's breakfast? These things they ought to do and yet not leave the others undone.

All this may, however, be our own fault. Their fine temperaments demand employment, and we give them nothing to do. The milestones will revolve, but if the hopper is not kept full they will grind each other.

Thompson, the poet, wrote the "Castle of Indolence," and he dwelt in it. Being asked once why he did nothing, he answered that he had nothing to do. For the lack of something to do, many of our young men rush into dissipation and sometimes into crime, and when society can no longer endure their idle follies, they are sent to the state's prison to learn at last what should have been taught them at first—some useful trades. Industrial education and training would be the salvation of many of our young men and young women. Better for them than the ordinary Sunday-schools is brave, old-fashioned work.

Examples, written for our admonition on such subjects as these, abound in the Scriptures, and add much to their beauty and value. When Solomon was repairing the breaches in the walls of the city, his attention was drawn to a young lad at work among the stone-masons. "And Solomon took note that the lad was industrious." This is the first occurrence of the word in the Scriptures. The young man was the only son of a poor widow. His industry was the solid foundation of his subsequent good fortune. When the king needed a reliable officer in his revenue department, he selected this industrious youth and put him in an office of profit and trust. On Solomon's death, his only son and heir ascended the throne. But he had been raised in a palace in idleness and luxury, and the people refused to be ruled by him. The ten tribes revolted and chose the industrious young man to be their king, and he reigned over Israel as Jereboam.

Moses, who had been providentially watched over and guided by Jehovah for the first forty years of his life, seems to have been neglected by Jehovah during the subsequent years while living idly and contentedly with his wealthy father-in-law in Midian. But when at last he aroused himself and led forth the large flocks of Jethro to the distant valleys of Sinai, the bush began to burn and the angel of the Lord communed with him.

In an important crisis in the history of Israel, an angel descended and searched through the land for some hero to deliver the people from the oppression of the Midianites. Such a man, in those evil times, was hard to find. But the angel heard, amid the silence of an idle and discouraged people, the sound of a solitary flail, as Gideon threshed out his grain behind a wall. He seemed to be the only young man at work. The angel approached and said: "Jehovah be with thee, thou man of valor;" and he girded upon him the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, and Israel was redeemed.

When Samuel was sent to the house of Jesse, in Bethlehem, to anoint one of his sons to rule over the kingdom in the place of Saul, a feast was made ready, and seven sons of Jesse, in holiday attire, presented themselves as guests. Samuel at once concluded that a king could certainly be found among these handsome sons of Jesse. But an angel warned him not to judge men by outward appearance; none of these was fit to be a king.

The prophet, in perplexity, asked if there were no other sons. "I have one more," replied Jesse, "who is not at the feast to-day. He is out in the fields at work tending the flocks." The industrious lad was sent for, and he came bounding into the presence of Samuel with the smell of the pastures on his lips, and the flush of the summer sun on his cheeks. "He is the chosen one," whispered the angel; and the consecrating oil was poured on the red locks of the only son of Jesse that was found faithfully at work on that holiday.

And lastly, when Elijah would find one qualified to succeed him as prophet in Israel, he traversed the land till he found a young man industriously plowing in his fields—holding one plow himself and superintending twelve others at the same time. He looked no further, on his shoulders the mantle of prophecy was thrown and Elisha became the prophet of Israel.

And thus, if we read the Scripture closely, we may learn that God has never called to any important mission nor has any angel ever visited an idle or an indolent man.

Judging Others.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

We are frequently told by the editors of religious papers and also other people that one has no right to judge others. This is a most unwarrantable deliverance. While it is true that the Bible in one place says, "Judge not, lest ye be judged," it also does demand that we shall judge people. The fact is, the Bible speaks of personal judgment from different standpoints. The words which I quoted have reference to harsh, rash and unrighteous judgment. This is what Christ means. But he also says: "Judge righteous judgment." This is his commandment. I have just been reading an editorial in the Watchman concerning the late Colonel Ingersoll, in which occur these words: "It is not, to be sure, for any man to judge his brother." This is an astonishing remark. Again, the editor says: "We are to be careful not to judge others, whether living or dead." Still further he says: "We have no right to judge Col. Ingersoll." I say that these are amazing statements. They are contrary to Bible teaching. That editor says that one ought to condemn Mr. Ingersoll's teachings and his works but not the man himself. This is absurd. Such a view would make Mr. Ingersoll irresponsible for his wicked course. It is equivalent to saying that one may condemn the acts of a murderer, but not the murderer himself. The editor says: "We do not know what peculiar disadvantages anyone may have labored under which have powerfully influenced his moral attainment. We lack the requisite knowledge and sympathy to pass judgment upon the character of others." These words seem to be an apology for not passing judgment upon Mr. Ingersoll. Are we to understand, then, that Mr. Ingersoll can acquit himself of responsibility for his teachings and for his soul-destroying work when he appears at the bar of God, on the ground that he labored under certain "peculiar disadvantages" when he was young, which caused him to commit the evil that he did? It is folly to so assert. The truth is, we do have a right to judge Mr. Ingersoll and to condemn him for his grossly wicked course, right in the face of great light.

Sunset Before Rain.

By G. E. Ireland.

The brilliance of an Oklahoma sky, its quivering heat tempered all the day by a gentle breeze, is subsiding into the softer glow of eventide. In the broad west an imperial highway of gold opens a vista whose distant point seems in another world. The sun, like a king, is mounting his chariot for the descent of the western slopes. On the south dark purple masses, with blackening brow and muttered thunder, roll sullenly from the emblazoned gold of the setting sun, like armed and gloomy warriors paying reluctant homage to their chief. Far up the sky shoot and poise arrowy gleams of light, a canopy fit for the retiring king. To the north spreads an expanse of richest hues. In its midst a lagoon of pale green is encircled by rocks of purple glinted with gold and tipped with white, like snow-capped hills of earth, while fantastic islands float in the emerald waters. And now, form and color and magic movement and scintillating flash are centering in the west. The pathway of light grows more radiant. From the dim distance advance tremulously new roseate tints, as if some orb yet more celestial shone from far heavenly places, with crimson glory flooding the spacious floor and tinting each lofty pillar of this Gateway of the Sun. Oh, it needs no straining of the eye—or of the fancy—to discern just beyond that beauteous glow the fair portals of "Zion's love-lit halls," the home of our souls:

"Jerusalem, the golden,
When sun sets in the west.
It seems thy gate of glory,
Thou city of the blest."

The yellow sheen of the wide-spreading harvest fields is losing its luster; the whirl of the reaper is silenced; the calm of evening falls, like softest mantle, over prairie and garden and home. The robes of the fast-fading sun disappear softly in the darkening west, and, as if he were reluctant to leave the world he has blessed all the day long, he breathes an evening promise of "showers of blessing." His attendant lightnings quiver on the dark mountains of cloud and the thunder scarce more than murmurs, as if the most relentless of Nature's forces have caught for the hour the gentle spirit of the passing day. Ere the shining of his latest smile has wholly faded, herald rain-drops fall lightly on plant and tree, whose whitened lining, upturned by the zephyr's breath, greets eagerly the coming rain and the tired worker from the field sinks to sleep amid the melody of refreshing showers.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

Denver is now especially interested in the liquor problem. There is, of course, in Colorado an Anti-Saloon League. The superintendent of the league said something not long ago that offended a man who has a seat on a judicial bench and who is manifestly in sympathy with the worst elements in the town. One of the ministers also in a public discourse said something that displeased this fellow. The superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League and the pastor were arraigned for contempt. The decision was a foregone conclusion. The minister and the superintendent were reprimanded by the fellow who is called "judge." But to annoy those good men by hauling them up three times before reaching a decision and then to reprimand them did not satisfy the malignity of this narrow-minded ignoramus, he opened upon the ministry in general in the following choice language:

"Instead of following in the steps of the meek and lowly Nazarene, guided by prayer and love, they go stalking through the world like assassins in the dark, taking refuge behind a thin veneer of assumed respectability which is nothing less than a hideous hypocrisy hiding behind the cloth of a revered profession. The reputation of any person who dares express a view contrary to their ideas, and even the sanctity of the abode of justice are but trifling baubles, and with a prayer on their lips these anointed ones go forth charging corruption and base motives without even an attempt to ascertain the falsity of their utterances."

When the cases against the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League and the pastor for contempt came up a number of free born American citizens were in the court-room as spectators. The "judge" had a suspicion that they were Christians in sympathy with the men at the bar. Their presence enraged him. In the audience were women and this is what the "judge" said in his wrath:

"We are presented with the spectacle of many very good people of both sexes packing this court-room whose visages bear the unmistakable determination that they are here not with a Christian spirit in their hearts; it is the spirit of coercion and intolerance, one which might have been expected in ages past and of people of less intelligence and fewer protestations of righteousness."

The foregoing speeches were, of course, uncalled for and served to make manifest the spirit of the "judge." In an injunction case, brought by the saloon-keepers who were violating the law, the ruling of the "judge" was so evidently in the interest of the lawless classes, coupled with the treatment of the pastor and superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, that the reputable portion of the town is thoroughly indignant, and there was such a rattling fire from the pulpits yesterday as probably never before was heard in a town of a hundred and fifty thousand people.

By the ruling of this "judge" in the injunction cases Denver is now a wide open town. The depraved element is in control. No effort is being made to compel saloon-keepers to obey the law. But this cannot last long. The vicious element has overreached itself. Its "judge" rendered a too faithful service. The people are aroused and something will be done.

Denver is all right. Colorado is all right. The population of Denver is made up of persons of superior intelligence and character. The same is true of the state of Colorado. There is a bad element in Denver as there is a bad element in your town. For a time in Denver this wicked element is in the ascendancy—but it is only for a time.

God has made, does now make, and will continue to make, the wrath of man to praise him. God is God. To all who love him he causes all things to work together for good. Righteousness will prevail. Truth will triumph. Virtue will be victorious. Such incidents as are mentioned in this letter are apparently needed now and again to stir up alike preachers and people. While we sleep the enemy sows tares.

The arraignment—the vicious arraignment—of the ministers in the language above quoted has done me good. It sent me to my Bible to study the ministry of the great preachers of the olden time. It is an interesting study. I do not find in the Bible the name of a single man conspicuous as a preacher who at all meets the requirements of this pious and profound "judge"—not one. Run over the list, beginning with Noah, "a preacher of righteousness," Elijah was not a Miss Nancy kind of a preacher; nor was his successor, Elisha. Nathan, the court preacher when David was king, was bold, practical, personal. The preaching of Isaiah was rugged, straightforward, strong, severely personal, intensely practical, sublimely eloquent. He preached on questions of state and openly charged the rulers of his day with murder. "Your hands," he exclaimed, "are full of blood." Daniel's discourses are not of the green pastures and still water kind. He told the king of Babylon to his face to "break off thy sins of righteousness and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor." Contempt proceedings were instituted by and by and an opinion was handed down which sent the preacher to the lions; but the decision of the inferior court was reversed by the Judge of all the earth, the preacher was vindicated and the king was compelled to issue a proclamation in which he vindicated Daniel and declared his faith in Daniel's God. Ezekiel met with a request to prophesy smooth things; but Ezekiel went right along rebuking sin and proclaiming that "the soul that sinneth it shall die."

Study the sermons of Amos. Contempt proceedings were instituted against him and he was told to leave the country. Amos said that he would return to his home when he was ready to do so. He went home at his leisure. The discourses of Amos are simply terrific. John the Baptist was not a sissy kind of preacher. He called the bigbugs who came out from Jerusalem to his revival meeting in the wilderness of Judea "a brood of vipers." He so rebuked Herod that he was sent to jail. By and by the preacher lost his head, but he kept a clear conscience. The preacher was a great man; the king was the small man. The Denver "judge" reminded the preachers of "the meek and lowly Nazarene." At the moment he did not think of the terrible philippics in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew. There is nothing equal to them in the sermonic literature of the world.

"It is an insult to the meek and lowly Nazarene to quote him on the side of a weak, inoffensive, quiescent attitude toward the evils that are demoralizing society. To stand back and say nothing and let public officials alone who are derelict to duty and never speak for fear of offending somebody is very far from exemplifying the virtues of courage and heroism that characterized the meek and lowly Nazarene. Jesus Christ was no bending willow by the brook side, gently playing with the summer zephyrs and languidly listening to the murmur of the waters, but a stalwart oak on the rough mountain side that knew how to grapple with the storm. It is no evidence of companionship with the meek and lowly Nazarene to be too mild to have any force, too refined to have any fire, too soft to have any sand."

Chaplains in the Navy.

By Edward B. Bagby.

Ex-Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

"If the President is short of chaplains for the navy I should like a job," is the request that comes to me from a preacher in a western state.

I called recently at the department and asked if there were any vacancies. "None," was the answer, "but there may be one in July."

"How many applications have you for the place?" The clerk shook his head and held his hand some distance above the floor, as much as to say, "They can be measured but not counted."

When a preacher has wrestled for some years with factions, official boards, fickle-minded congregations and the gaunt demon of poverty, it is not strange that a United States chaplaincy should be attractive.

The chaplain has an appointment for life, begins with the rank of captain, is as independent as a graduate of West Point or Annapolis and will never need to bother about his salary. The army chaplain receives $1,500 annually for five years, with a 10 per cent. increase for every additional five years of service.

When he is put on the retired list his salary is the same as that of a regular army chaplain retired. So that he receives a larger salary than when in active service and considerably larger than if he were depending upon a Board of Ministerial Relief.

The navy chaplains fare even better than this. They begin on a salary of $2,500 annually for the first five years and then enjoy an increase to $2,800. This, however, is to compensate them for the discomforts of a sea voyage; for when they are on shore duty they draw $500 less a year.

"The Roman Catholic priests who are now serving as chaplains in the United States army and navy will number two to every one of any other denomination," is a statement that recently appeared in public print. I have taken pains to inquire as to the truth of this assertion and find it without foundation. Of thirty-three chaplains in the army there are eleven Methodists, seven Episcopalians, six Presbyterians, four Roman Catholics, two Baptists, one Lutheran, one Congregationalist and one who is recorded simply as Christian. In the navy there are nine Methodists, five Episcopalians, three Catholics, two Baptists, two Presbyterians, one Disciple of Christ, one Unitarian and one Universalist. Our representative in the army is Jno. B. McCleery, stationed at Fort Logan, Colorado. Among sixteen recently designated for appointment to army chaplaincies is the name of Thos. J. Dickson, one of our Kansas City preachers.

In the navy we have Carroll Q. Wright, who has the rank of commander, and is now on the Massachusetts and has been since last June at Tompkinsville.

The officials at the navy department speak in the highest terms of praise of the services of Chaplain Wright. The fact is, the record of all our brethren who have served in this capacity has been so creditable that I have thought that if the President were ever "short of chaplains" he would apply to us for men for "the job."

Receiving the Unimmersed and Christian Union.

By I. D. Smith.

The writer was much interested in a communication several weeks ago in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, from the pen of a Baptist signing himself "Truth Seeker." The subject treated was that of receiving the pious unimmersed into Christian and Baptist churches. I, however, was greatly surprised that the editor passed the article by with what seemed to me such indifference, and still much more so when I found that, after many weeks had elapsed, the article had not even been noticed by any of our other scribes. Twenty-five or even ten years ago such an article in one of our leading journals would have caused considerable comment, and have been severely criticised. Since pondering over the matter, I have come to the conclusion that a very great change is coming over our people, regarding this subject, and that the time may not be very far distant when immersion will not be allowed to stand in the way of Christian union or membership in our churches.

The writer knows by personal contact with many of our preachers, and especially many of the younger ones, that one of the main questions now agitating their minds is that of receiving into their churches godly persons who, as yet, are unprepared to receive Christian immersion. Our ministers find such persons in every community—persons whose Christian lives are above reproach, who are captivated by our plea, but who, as yet, are not prepared to take this one step, on account of the training they have had from their youth up. Such persons, it is claimed, will much more readily see the whole truth and obey it, if taken into full fellowship at once, and put to work for the Master, than if held off at arm's length, as we have been in the habit of doing. The advocates of this course claim to have no intention of abandoning immersion, or of ceasing to give it its proper place in their preaching. It is not a matter of giving up any truth, but of how to best reach the end we have had in view from the beginning of our movement.

It may not be known to any considerable extent in the brotherhood, but the writer knows it to be a fact that what was advocated by "Truth Seeker" is already being practiced in a number of churches in the brotherhood, and that, too, by preachers of no ordinary reputation. The number, as yet, who have actually opened their doors for the reception of such members may not be large, but it is the writer's conviction that the practice will grow, and become common among us—unless the best of reasons can be given for discontinuing it. If such a practice is unscriptural we surely have plenty of men who are amply able to make the fact clear to all reasonable minds. The writer, with many others, is seeking for light on this subject.

Christian union is now pressing itself upon the religious world as never before. The time is now upon us when men and churches are going to act instead of theorize, as they have been doing in the past. People who love our common Lord are going to ignore many differences in order to get together, and allow the differences to take care of themselves. It is a growing conviction among our people, as well as others, that Christian union can only be brought about by our meeting other people half way. If we are not prepared to concede something to our religious neighbors for the sake of union, what becomes of our more than eighty years' advocacy of Christian union?

In conclusion: What would be the result if even one-half of our churches should go ahead and receive into their fellowship all the pious unimmersed persons who wished to unite with them? Would such churches cease to be churches of Christ? Or would the brotherhood cease to recognize them as such? With our independent ideas of church government, would anybody call such preachers and churches to an account, or have the right to do so? If our plea concedes the right to Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians and all such to do as they choose in these matters, why not concede the same right to our own (the Lord's) congregations, which we have always claimed to be independent of each other in an important sense?

[We were not aware that any of our churches, much less any of our prominent preachers, were in the habit of receiving the unimmersed into full fellowship. It is true, the question is not whether we will excommunicate such churches and preachers—for we have no ecclesiastical court—but whether they have not obviously and avowedly cut themselves off from full co-operation with us. We shall still be glad to have any such church or preacher co-operate with us in missionary enterprises and otherwise, but they must certainly know that in doing so they are working for the advancement of a plea which they no longer believe.—EDITOR.]

The First Twentieth Century Convention.

By Simpson Ely.

Never was there a more auspicious time nor a better place to make known the grandeur of Our Plea for New Testament Christianity than will be afforded by our great national conventions next fall at Minneapolis. This first century is to witness a great tidal wave of influence from the religious world in our favor. The shibboleths of our fathers are fast becoming the watchwords of the religious bodies about us. "Back to Christ," "The Christianity of Christ," "Down with Creeds," etc., are common expressions now in most unusual quarters. We must greet these influences in a very hospitable way, and how can we do this more effectively than by making the Minneapolis conventions the greatest in our history?

Ohio has set a high mark—but not too high—by resolving to send two thousand people to the convention. Iowa is right on the border and should do as well. Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska will send large delegations. Let them come from the east and from the west and from the north and from the south and let it be "a great day and a high day" for the Lord.

Des Moines, Iowa.

Variety.

By R. J. Tydings.

Reader, did you ever think what an infinite variety there is in all nature? Look at humanity, we see faces by the thousands, sometimes in one day, and each face has an individuality of its own—each is a special work of the Maker of us all. It is said that among the countless billions of grains of sand along the "sea-beat shore," no two grains can be found exactly alike in every particular when subjected to a searching inspection through a powerful magnifying-glass. In a great bin of wheat where at a casual glance all seems to be sameness in the countless grains contained therein, it is said there can be found some difference, however minute, yet a variety among all of them. Out among the hills, trees, rocks and vegetation of all kinds by which we are surrounded, no two specimens are alike. Surely there is a master hand back of all this handiwork!

Once there was a great general recruiting an army to go forth on a most important campaign in the interest of his country. Each recruit, as he enlisted, was called into a private audience with the general, who had a special, personal talk with him, which always impressed the recruit that there was something now of an especial nature existing between himself and his commander entirely different from any tie that might exist between the general and any other soldier. He was thus especially impelled from that personal talk with his general, from certain words said, from certain impressions and inspirations gained in that interview, to do his utmost in the coming struggle.

So it is with all mankind. Our Maker has made us all different from each other. He has by his distinct and separate work in the formation of his creatures, paid especial attention, had a direct and personal interview, as it were, with each one, thereby establishing a special tie between himself and each human soul. This should inspire and stimulate us to do our utmost in harmony with his will in the struggle of life.

Following the example of Senator Beveridge, a party of congressmen has recently sailed for Manila on an army transport, and will spend a few weeks in learning all about the Philippines and at the same time having a pleasant vacation. The party includes Congressmen DeArmond and Joy of Missouri, Mercer of Nebraska, Gaines of Tennessee, Green and Jack of Pennsylvania, and Weeks of Michigan, and Senator Bacon of Georgia.

Current Literature.

A very creditable book of travels has been issued by one of our Kentucky preachers, R. H. Crossfield, under the title Pilgrimages of a Parson. It is tastily gotten up and the binding, which is copied from "Stringtown on the Pike," is appropriate and well done. The writer gives a somewhat detailed narrative of his trip including its stops and starts, and the itinerary is marked out with sufficient definiteness so that it may be helpful to one who is planning a similar trip through Europe, Egypt and Palestine.

We suggest that the time has about come when detailed description of the sorrowful and humorous aspects of seasickness may well be omitted from books of this kind. The subject is not good literary material except for writers of the very first order. The writer, of course, assures us that he knows nothing about seasickness except what he learned from observation. It is always so. Everybody is sick but, "me and the captain." The pilgrim who is making his first voyage sometimes does not at once understand that those very funny anecdotes and sayings about seasickness, which he hears on board and repeats to his readers, are not new but are part of the equipment of every transatlantic vessel and have served for a generation to cheer or nauseate the passengers of every ship that sails the sea.

The only specific criticism that need be passed on this otherwise excellent book is the author's undue fondness for superlatives, which are not always employed with discrimination or accuracy. For example, the Vatican Library is said to be the largest in the world; a few pages later it is stated that the library of the British Museum is the largest in the world. The Vatican Palace is said to be the finest in the world; Raphael's "Transfiguration" the most famous and valuable painting in the world; the crown jewels in the Tower of London the most valuable collection of gems in the world. In saying that the theater of Dionysus at Athens seated 40,000 spectators, the author probably confuses it with the Stadion. The theater probably held not more than 3,000. A similar spirit of exaggeration pervades the description of Turkish repression in Constantinople. The Turkish government is arbitrary enough, to be sure, but he must be a timorous person who would say: "If you see an amusing sight you dare not laugh; if a pathetic scene, you dare not cry." If one conforms to passport regulations, which are less troublesome than in Russia, the well-behaved traveler is not in the slightest danger of having friction with the government. (Published by the author, Owensboro, Ky. $1.25.)

By introducing as the heroine in The Crisis a grand-daughter of Dorothy Manners, the heroine in "Richard Carvel," Mr. Winston Churchill explicitly challenges comparison between the two stories. The comparison would have been inevitable anyway. The opinion has been expressed in some quarters that a better book was to have been expected from the author of "Richard Carvel." On the contrary, it is to us a matter of surprise and gratification that the writer of a story with so many weaknesses as that unduly popular novel exhibited should produce one of such strength as "The Crisis."

It is a story of the Civil War and the author has shown not only a sense of the picturesque in his use of the war as a background for the story, but has shown an unusual grasp of the history of that period, the causes which led up to the war and the social forces which played a part in it. Indeed the war is not only the background, but also the foreground and the middle distance of his picture. It is the very warp and woof of the story. In choosing St. Louis as the chief scene, Mr. Churchill has not simply been moved by the local pride of a St. Louisan but has shown a true appreciation of the important part which the Mississippi Valley played in the opening of the war. Here the westward moving streams of Puritan and Cavalier emigration met and mingled. Hither came the Carvels of Virginia and the Brices of Massachusetts. Here all shades of sentiment in regard to slavery and states' rights were represented. Friendships as strong as life grew up between men who were presently to fight each other to the death. Such a field as this furnishes the novelist a far better opportunity for social and historical analysis than any of the purely northern or purely southern communities which were more homogeneous in their opinions and sympathies. If Mr. Churchill had done nothing else than call attention to the part played by Missouri and Illinois at this time, he would have performed a notable service.

The introduction of Lincoln as an important character in the story was a risky undertaking. Such a towering figure refuses to be incorporated wholly into the story and made subordinate to it. It cannot be treated as John Paul Jones and Charles Fox were in "Richard Carvel." But, though the figure of Lincoln seems always above and outside of the story, its introduction is justified by its vivid and accurate portrayal.

The romance is, of course, good. The hero and heroine are absolutely perfect and there is enough uncertainty with regard to the outcome to keep the reader in a state of pleased expectancy until the end. It is said that Mr. Churchill has in mind a series of novels, somewhat loosely connected, dealing with important periods of American history. If so perhaps we may look for a tale of Reconstruction next. (Macmillan. $1.50.)

A few months ago we reviewed a book of sermon charts by Z. T. Sweeney and stated that it was the author's expectation to issue these in large form suitable for use before a congregation. This has been done and a roll has been prepared containing six large charts, three feet three inches by five feet. They are lithographed and clearly printed so that they can be seen and read by a large audience. Preachers who are in the habit of using charts or wish to make the experiment can undoubtedly use these to great advantage. They are clear in plan and vivid in presentation. They are not a substitute for a sermon and are not intended to take the place of the preacher's brains, but they suggest an attractive arrangement of material and will hold the eyes and interest of the congregation. The subjects are the great cardinal doctrines and fundamental principles of Christianity. They can be made the basis for some wholesome, and at the same time interesting, doctrinal preaching. (Christian Publishing Company. $5. Six charts mounted on a roll.)

Mr. A. J. Arthur has taken his poetic pen in hand in an ambitious effort to trace the course of events by which the cosmic processes evolved our present world and all that in it is out of the monads and things which were on hand in the beginning. Lingering Echoes is the title of this epic of creation in one hundred and eighty pages. The author's evolution is thoroughly theistic. It may save words and give the reader full assurance of his orthodoxy, together with a taste of the flavor of his poesy, to quote, almost at random, a few lines. First, the following describing the condition of the earth shortly after the original vapor had condensed into terra firma:

"During the forming of this mist, damp silence reigned.

It was in this age vegetation existence gained. And through the quaint little monad life still higher ran,

And while æons rolled, evolved the primitive man."

Then, to guard against any suspicion of ruling out divine activity in this process, this assurance is given:

"If I should anywhere the idea seem to advance

That creation was brought about by sporadic chance,

Listen more closely, I do thee earnestly implore,

For creation came through laws, from heaven's very door."

There are plenty more lines in the volume quite as good as these—and some possibly worse. (Published by the author, Salem, Mo. $1.)

The United Society of Christian Endeavor has published The Endeavor Hymnal. It is a book of 317 hymns chosen especially for Endeavor societies, but suitable also for prayer-meetings. Most of the hymns are of a popular nature, but jingles have been successfully excluded. Many classic hymns by the earlier writers are included. The arrangements are for the most part simple. (United Society of Christian Endeavor. In quantities, 25c.)

Keep Cool.

From Proper Hot Weather Food.

People can live in a temperature which feels from ten to twenty degrees cooler than their neighbors enjoy, by regulating the breakfast.

The plan is to avoid meat entirely for breakfast; use a goodly allowance of fruit, either cooked or raw. Then follow with a saucer containing about four heaping teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts, treated with a little rich cream. Add to this about two slices of entire wheat bread, with a meager amount of butter, and serve one cup of Postum Food Coffee.

If one prefers, the Grape-Nuts can be turned into the cup of Food Coffee, giving a delightful combination. By this selection of food the bodily energy is preserved, while the hot, carbonaceous foods have been left out. The result is a very marked difference in the temperature of the body, and to this comfortable condition is added the certainty of easy and perfect digestion, for the food is readily worked up by the digestive machinery.

Experience and experiment in food and its application to the human body has brought out these facts. They can be made use of and add materially to the comfort of the user.

Our Budget.

—M. F. Ingraham is about to close his seven years' ministry at Wapella, Ill. The field will be open for a successor about Oct. 1.

—The assembly at Bethany Beach, Del., the new Atlantic coast resort of the Disciples of Christ, began June 12.

—W. D. Cunningham has resigned at California, Pa. He and his wife will go to Japan in September.

—C. P. Leach, of Moulton, Ia., has accepted the pastorate of the Church of Christ at Iowa City and will take up the work Sept. 1.

—A. J. White, of Manhattan, Kan., is ready to locate as pastor with a church where there are good schools. He could hold one or two meetings first.

—J. B. Sweeney has been called to remain with the church at Gainesville, Tex., next year at an increased salary. During the past 29 months 500 have been added to the membership and the church now numbers 700.

—G. A. Hess will close his pastorate at Greene, Ia., August 6, and will be open for engagements after that date. The church at that point will also need a pastor. Any one wishing to apply may address Mrs. Belle Weston, clerk of the board.

—On July 21 Milo Atkinson, a recent graduate of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., will be ordained to the ministry by S. W. Crutcher, at Harrisonville, Mo. Just 13 years ago this same church, with the same preacher and the same elders, ordained F. G. Tyrrell.

—The Sunday-schools of West Plains and the surrounding region met at that place July 12 for their annual picnic. The West Plains school was awarded a prize hanner. It has been increasing ever since the meeting that was held there in March and now numbers 213.

—J. W. Hilton, who has spent the past two years in raising money to clear the indebtedness from Cotner University and during the last year has been working for his Master's degree in the State University, has returned to his pastorate at the East Lincoln Church where he begins his fifth year.

—Bro. George E. Jones, of New Haven, and Miss Edith E. Weir, of Chamois, were married at the Moser Hotel in St. Louis last week by T. A. Abbott. Bro. Jones is one of our promising young ministers and is at present pastor of the church at New Haven. We extend our congratulations.

—John B. Givens, who is at present studying in the Disciples' Divinity House of the University of Chicago, has declined a call to the Seventh and Garfield Church, Kansas City, Kan., and will remain for the present at the university. He is preaching for the mission at West Pullman.

—The annual convention of the churches of the Tidewater district, Virginia, will be held with the Antioch church, Bowling Green county, August 6-8. Special railroad rates have been secured. Delegates wishing to avail themselves of these rates should write to J. L. Hill, 1111 E. Main Street, Richmond.

—The Southeastern Virginia district convention will meet at Petersburg, August 8-11. It is especially desired that the churches will send full delegations and that as many preachers and Sunday-school and Endeavor workers as possible will attend. Important matters in regard to state and district evangelization will come before the convention.

—At the recent state Christian Endeavor convention in California, Santa Cruz was a candidate for the next convention. By way of electioneering they presented to each delegate on the train a basket of strawberries containing the card, "Santa Cruz wants the convention in 1902." It will be a crying shame if they don't get it after this exhibition of enterprise.

—The conference for Christian workers at Northfield, Mass., will be held August 1-18. The Northfield summerschool for Bible study, including conferences and Bible lectures, is in session June 14 to Sept. 2. The Christian public is especially invited to attend the nineteenth annual conference in the first weeks of August. Many speakers of international prominence will be present.

—The convention of the first missionary district of Kansas was held at Valley Falls June 25-27 and in spite of heat and many absentees it was considered a success. Bro. Charles Polson was ordained to the ministry during the convention. A resolution was passed recommending that each preacher in the district hold a missionary meeting at some weak point during the year. The next convention will be held at Seneca.

—The churches in Adams and Union counties, Ia., will hold their annual convention at Corning, Ia., August 19-22. Entertainment will be furnished to all. The program contains the names of B. S. Denny, W. B. Crewdson, W. W. Wharton, C. Durant Jones and others. There will be Bible study each day. Churches in Adair county are invited to join in this convention. I. H. Fuller sends the announcement.

—T. Nelson Kincaid, of Hot Springs, Ark., writes that he met a brother on the street recently who spoke approvingly of the Christian Home and offered to be one of a hundred to give $100 each for it. The proposition was accepted and two others have since been secured. This leaves only ninety-seven and it ought to be easy to find these. If you want to get your name in this list there is no time to be lost. Write promptly to Bro. Kincaid at Hot Springs.

—The total receipts for church extension for June were $430.91, a loss of $1,484.94 over the same time last year. At the last board meeting the following loans were granted: F Street Church, Louisville, Ky., $300; Fourth Avenue Church, Columbus, O., $1,000; Jackson, Tenn., $2,000; Marlow, I. T., $300; Covington, Ind., $1,000; Greenville, Mo., $500; Elwood City, Pa., $1,000; Farmington, Wash., $200. The board has received $500 more on the annuity plan from A. W. and Carrie Wilkes, of Chester, Neb., making $2,500 received from them.

—Among the recent appointees of the Foreign Society are Miss Nellie Daugberty, of Vermont, Ill., a recent graduate of Eureka College, who will sail in September for China, and Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart who will return to Thibet as soon as a suitable man and wife can be found to accompany her. Mrs. Rijnhart has already had four years of experience in this field and her book, recently reviewed in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, is one of the best missionary narratives of modern times. She will spend some time with the churches and conventions in the interest of the new mission.

—A number of ministers of Ft. Worth, Tex., have contributed to the Register of that city statements of their opinions in regard to the trend of the present day pulpit. C. McPherson, pastor of the First Christian Church, answers the question by dividing congregations into several classes: the ox-cart church, the political church, the society church, the rival church, the church of scholasticism, the church of a little shrine, the listless church, and the live and loyal church which eschews fads and does the Master's work.

—The receipts for home missions show a constant gain over last year's receipts and there is reason to expect that the goal of $100,000 will be reached by Sept. 30. The receipts for the nine months ending June 30 show a gain of $1,886.13 in contributions from churches over the corresponding period of last year. The total receipts for these months show a gain of $27,556.51 over the same period last year. There is still needed a gain of $10,000 in the receipts for the remaining three months.

—The church at Sac City, Ia., of which D. F. Snider is pastor, has paid off its debt of $450 and burned its mortgage with great rejoicing. The church has 150 members and it was felt that the raising of this debt was a large undertaking. Their rejoicing in the success of the effort is in proportion to its difficulty. The church is now in a flourishing condition and has a promising future before it.

—The First Christian Church, of Lincoln, Neb., has passed through some severe trials and is now entering into a new epoch. It is straining every nerve to build a house on the valuable lots which it has secured and it needs the sympathy and help of friends elsewhere. It is expected that this summer and autumn such a building will be erected as the funds in hand may warrant and that it will be ready for use by Dec. 1. Contributions for this purpose should be sent to T. F. A. Williams, Room 55, Burr Block, Lincoln, Neb.

—Lowell C. McPherson, one of our missionaries at Havana, Cuba, writes: "We have recently baptized 13, making 26 baptisms in Havana. Our acquaintance among Cubans and Spaniards is growing both in numbers and friendship. After all, the surest way of winning people to Christ is to make friends of them. The work in Havana has had a constant growth. We are able to speak a very little in Spanish. We are teaching also. There is no better regular English-speaking congregation in the city than ours and when we become more proficient in Spanish we hope to make better progress." Bro. McPherson will visit his friends in Buffalo, N. Y., a few days during the present month.

—Does any one know of a Disciple who has been longer in the church than Grandma Carle, of Wapella, Ill.? She was 93 years old on July 7, and attended church that day as usual. She was baptized by Thomas Campbell in Salt Run, O., in 1826. That was while Alexander Campbell, then a young man of 38, was publishing the Christian Baptist and before he had begun the Millennial Harbinger. The separation of the Disciples of Christ from the Baptists had scarcely begun at this time. Grandma Carle has been a charter member of three congregations, the last being the church at Wapella, which was organized about 35 years ago.

—A debate will be held on August 19-22 and 26-29 at Lamar, Mo., between W. W. Blalock, of the Christian Church, and D. E. Scoles, Seventh Day Adventist. The four propositions to be discussed are as follows: 1. The Bible teaches that the Law written on tables of stone and given to Israel through Moses is now in force and is binding upon Christians in all ages. 2. The Bible teaches that the seventh day Sabbath is binding upon Christians in all ages. 3. The Bible teaches that the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, is a sacred day and should be so regarded and observed by all Christian people. 4. The Bible teaches that those who live and die in sin will exist in eternal punishment in a conscious condition. Bro. Blalock affirms the third and fourth.

—We are pleased to announce the marriage of David H. Shields to Miss Fannie Arline Dodge at Salina, Kan., July 11. Bro. Shields is pastor of the church at Salina.

—The Franklin Street Circle Church, Cleveland, W. W. Sniff pastor, has opened an annex of three rooms on the second floor of an adjoining building. These rooms are to be used for Sunday-school purposes and will be connected with the main auditorium of the church by a bridge. The owner of the block says that more rooms are at the disposal of the church whenever it needs them. The formal opening of the annex occurred on July 10, at which time an address was made by S. H. Bartlett.

—By way of reminding our readers again of the Bethany Assembly and its attractions as a place for a summer outing, we print the following card from L. L. Carpenter: "For your outing, you can do no better than to attend the great Bethany Assembly meeting to be held on the beautiful grounds of Bethany Park near Brooklyn, Ind. Half-fare tickets on all railroads in the Central Traffic Association. Buy tickets to Bethany Park, Ind.,—not Brooklyn. They will land you at the gate of the Park. Bethany Assembly has the most beautiful grounds of any resort in the central or western states. It is a national institution. Rest, recreation, innocent amusement, religious instruction, social enjoyment, etc., all combined at Bethany."

—A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico, Mo., writes that he was recently called to Kansas City by telegram from an officer of the Forest Avenue Church, which said: "Our church debt paid in full. Come and rejoice with us Sunday night." He went and there was no lack of rejoicing. Speeches were made by T. P. Haley, W. F. Richardson, O. P. Sbrout, B. M. Easter, F. L. Bowen and A. W. Kokendoffer. When this church was dedicated June 28, 1896, pledges were made covering the entire indebtedness but in the hard times of that year more than $5,000 of these pledges evaporated. Brother Kokendoffer, who was pastor of the congregation for over ten years, was instrumental in securing pledges for over $4,000 before going to Mexico, Mo., last May. The complete obliteration of the debt removes a great burden from the church. It has no pastor at present but is considering several strong men and an announcement on the subject will soon be made.

—G. E. Ireland preached the dedicatory sermons at Pond Creek, Okla., June 30. The congregation at Pond Creek, the county seat of Grant county, numbers about sixty members. Through the difficulties and discouragements incident to Christian work in a new country they have faithfully held on their way. They have recently built a neat, commodious house, well adapted to all present needs and purposes. The dedicatory services were well attended but were perhaps not marked with the intense local interest which such occasions usually awaken in the east. Oklahoma is a hard field, so far as stirring up the general public is concerned. The appeal for money did not raise all that was needed but brought as much as was expected. Our own brethren, who had already given liberally, were ready to pledge again, but outsiders did not come to the help of the church very readily. But the brethren have given so generously and arranged financial matters so well, that all is in shape for easy handling and payments when due. This is the home of Hon. William Garrison, a brother of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He is an elder and a pillar in the church. He was formerly a member of the Kansas legislature and more recently in the senate of Oklahoma. On the official board of this church are two preachers of long standing and high repute: J. W. Hopwood and J. H. Decker. These veterans, though one is now engaged in farming and the other in business, are frequently preaching the word, as opportunity offers. This church needs an able, consecrated, hustling, "westernized" pastor. Such would find a promising field in this new and thriving region.

"The Training of the Ministry."

I cannot be content until I comment on the article entitled "The Training of the Ministry," by C. B. Coleman. The writer starts by likening the man who starts in the ministry without first obtaining an education to the savage crossing a stream by swimming. He says the quickest way to cross a stream is to swim as the savage, but the best way is to first build a bridge as the civil engineer. The quickest way for a man to preach is to get a pulpit and preach as long as the church can stand it.

Where men and women are straying away from God and all that is good, dying in sin, it would be like a man who saw a friend drowning and made a boat before trying to save his friend who must surely be dead long before the boat was complete. So it is with us, if we waited to preach the gospel till we could get a collegiate education we never would preach the gospel of Christ for a man with a wife and four children who has no means only his hands and heart by which to maintain them can not think of going to college.

I presume the brother's advice would be get your education before marriage. But I never heard the simple gospel preached till we had solved the problem by reading the word and finding the plain way unaided, for us to sit down and wait for a college course, or a college educated man to come and preach for the people who live from hand to mouth, would be like making the boat before saving our friend from a watery grave. And yet this is an assured fact, for men and women are surely drowning in sin all around us.

We do not wish to be understood to say that we would not prefer a college education, for that is our highest wish, while our work may be crude yet we shall work with the tools we have and try and improve as we get farther on.

It has been ours to see the best educated men fail in this line and vice versa. What God wants most is men with strong wills and a determination that knows nothing like failure. May God help us who have not the advantages of a college course, to press on to the mark of the prize of the high calling of God.

Iowa Notes.

Cal Ogburn is holding a good meeting at Luther in spite of the hot weather. There were 14 added by confession and two from the New Lights when last heard from.

A meeting was held at Chariton with Evangelist Harlow and Pastor C. F. Sanderson. The immediate results were 28 additions.

Lawrence Wright is at Dumont. A local paper says that he is there erecting a tabernacle and will hold a meeting.

THE CRISIS

By WINSTON CHURCHILL

This new work by the author of Richard Carvel and The Celebrity, is undoubtedly the novel of the year. Mr. Churchill's first book, Richard Carvel, has reached a circulation of 375,000 copies, and the new book, which every one is reading this summer, promises to exceed that wonderful figure.

THE CRISIS is a story of the days just prior to and during the war of 1861-1865. The scene is chiefly laid in St. Louis. Among the leading characters are Abraham Lincoln, U. S. Grant, W. T. Sherman, Fremont, Lyons, and other historic personages who figured prominently in the great civil war.

THE CRISIS is a great novel. It pictures actual conditions in the Mississippi Valley at the outbreak and during the war more clearly than any work we have ever seen. A very sweet love story runs through it. All the characters are strongly drawn. The work is handsomely illustrated.

A few months ago I heard that our brethren had a lot and foundation at Earlham, and that it was thought to be a good mission field. I began to investigate the matter and went out last week to look the ground over. I found that a short meeting was held there in 1883, and a lot bought and a foundation for a new church building was started. The work was neglected and no further meetings held.

The lot was bought and paid for by one man, who intended this to be his donation to the church if the enterprise was continued, but when it failed, and after waiting three or four years, he sold it and put the money where he thought it would do good. To-day we have a few brethren at Earlham but not one dollar's worth of property in one of the richest communities of Iowa.

Arrangements were made to begin a meeting at once, but since these distressing hot days have come upon us we will likely call the meeting off for the present.

R. H. Linnville and the North River congregation under his pastorate, are taking a great interest in this work. Bro. Linnville has about $75 subscribed for the meeting and the outlook for a new church was very promising.

We are working for a closer co-operation among the churches so that these leakages can be prevented. We must not let this hot wave interfere with our missionary work. Send in your statistic cards and a good offering for the I. C. C.

We must begin to plan for our state convention. Don't forget the time, Sept. 9-13, at Cedar Rapids.

Correspondence.

Texas Letter.

J. H. Marshall, of Oklahoma City, Okla., and Mrs. La Petta McGlasson, of Sherman, Texas, were married by the writer in Sherman at high noon of June 25, 1901. Bro. Marshall is one of our rising young evangelists, and the bride is a worthy woman of sterling worth, in every way capable of making him a good wife, and of helping him to realize the good of his holy ambition. Immediately after the marriage the happy pair left for Oklahoma City, where, strange to say, the groom has an elegant home in waiting for them.

Mrs. M. M. Blanks, of Lockhart, has given $10,000 for a Bible Chair in connection with our State University at Austin. Ground will be purchased and a building erected as soon as possible. This liberal hearted woman has already been a helper of Add-Ran University, and she will still help it further. Her son, Joe Blanks, one of the directors of Add-Ran, partakes of his mother's nature, and gives liberally to the school. A few more people like these, and our educational interests will be cared for. The name of Mrs. Blanks must henceforth be associated with the names of Mesdames St. Clair and Moore.

The railroad record of Texas is encouraging. During the first half of last year we built 133 miles. During the same period of this year we have built 294 miles, which makes a total of 10,316 miles in operation. There are 710 miles under construction, and 1,000 miles chartered and projected which may be regarded as substantial projects. This record for the first six months of 1901 is better than that of any whole year since 1888, when 316 miles were built.

It will be good news to our readers to hear that the railroad company for which Bro. Shirley has worked for twenty-nine years, refused to give him up. You will remember that he offered his resignation that he might, without salary, or even traveling expenses, enter the field as financial agent for Add-Ran University and wipe out her debt. The road gives him an indefinite leave of absence and urges his return at the earliest possible day.

Dr. H. L. Willett, of Chicago, is to be chief lecturer at our Lectureship this fall. We are glad to have him come to Texas. He may count on a cordial welcome and a fair hearing.

J. B. Sweeney is to continue at Gainesville another year. This is wise for both preacher and people. During the 29 months of his work there, there have been just 500 additions.

E. W. Brickett, of Des Moines, has been called to Houston as the successor of J. C. Mason, and it is understood that he will accept. The church has waited long to find the right man for this very important field, and we trust it has not waited in vain.

Prof. E. L. Barnham, of Add Ran University, has been called to the presidency of the Female Orphan School at Camden Point, Mo. We regret to lose him from Texas, but heartily commend him to the good people of Missouri.

The extremely hot, dry summer is having a depressing effect on our people. The outlook in the spring was good for abundant crops. But the "green bug" destroyed most of the small grain. Then the drought and heat came and almost destroyed the corn and grass, so that what promised to be a year of plenty will prove to be a year of want. Fortunately the cotton crop, though injured, is by no means destroyed, and it, after all, is our grand staple.

Texas is playing a new role of late. Ordinarily she has looked elsewhere for great combinations of capital. But it would seem that that day is about to end. A lumber company with a capital of $10,000,000 has been organized, and an oil company with a $30,000,000 capital has just been launched. This latter company appears as the avowed enemy of the Standard Oil Company. At least so say the newspapers.

Drippings From the Pacific.

I greet the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST once more from the land of the pioneer—the weary foot-soldier in the search for a happy home on earth. Washington was recently the northwest corner of our glorious land, but now it is as far to the northwest corner from here as it is to the southeast corner. Indeed, we are told that when it is 5 o'clock P. M. on the most western island of Alaska it is 9:30 A. M. the following day at Eastport. Me. Surely Uncle Sam is enlarging the place of his habitation and spreading abroad his curtains. But as he lengthens the cords so must he strengthen the stakes.

One hundred years ago the great American desert was purchased from France. To day it is a paradise—its hills and plains waving with fruits and flowers and golden grain. Instead of the thorn comes up the fruit tree, and instead of the brier the golden grain. The people go out with joy and are led forth in peace. The mountains and the hills break forth into singing, and all the trees of the field clap their hands.

The wild beasts have ceased to be a terror, and the noble red man has been corralled and tamed. What but the brain and heart and hand of the Christian pioneer could work such transformation?

Thousands of people are coming to Washington this year. The climate here is delightful—no cold winters or hot summers. No cyclones nor heavy thunder storms. The prospect was never better for an immense crop of fruit and grain.

I have recently returned from the camp-meeting of southeast Washington, which was held at Dayton this year. Bro. J. T. Eshelman, of Tacoma, Wash., did the preaching. There were about 25 additions, mostly by confession and baptism. I also attended our state convention at Ellensburg last week. There were about 40 preachers and delegates in attendance. Only 57 additions, 35 by primary obedience, were reported by our state evangelist, Neal S. McCallum. His time was spent mainly in encouraging the congregations already organized. Evangelizing does not tell here like it does in the Mississippi valley. Society is yet unsettled and unorganized. A new state board was selected and new plans for future work adopted. New men are coming into the state who are adding strength to the work. Sister Louise Kelly was present and did some fine work in the interest of C. W. B. M. She will always be a favorite with the Washingtonians. G. W. Muckley was also present in the interests of Church Extension. The home board was represented by W. F. Cowden. It was my pleasure to renew the acquaintance of Dr. J. M. Allen. R. E. Dunlap, W. W. Pew, F. Walden and Stephen Sherwood, with whom I labored in the central states. Dr. Allen seems as young and full of life as when I sat at his feet in dear old Eureka College in 1872-75. A new church has recently been organized in north Spokane, of which Dr. Allen is the pastor.

I have in my congregation here an old saint, Mrs. Elizabeth Poulson, who is now 97 years of age. She has been a Disciple of Christ 70 years. She is hale and hearty, retains her sight and hearing, has a remarkable memory, reads everything she can get hold of that is good, and talks like an apostle. I am gathering items to write her history.

The cause prospers at Waitsburg. Five additions last Lord's day, four united and one confession and baptism.

Do you have a feeling of undue fullness in the stomach, belchings, or sour or bitter risings? These are but a few of the symptoms of the diseased stomach.

The worst thing which can be done for the stomach in such a case is to take some tablet or powder which merely gives temporary relief from discomfort. The best thing to do is to begin the cure of the disease by beginning the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It makes the "weak" stomach strong, and puts the body in a condition of vigorous health.

"I was troubled a long time with dyspepsia, torpid liver, and constipation," writes Mrs. Julia E. Deal, of Oswalt, Fredell Co., N. C. "Could scarcely eat anything at all; would have attacks of pain something like colic, and sometimes it seemed as though I could not live. I wrote to Dr. R. V. Pierce, stating my condition, and in a few days received a kind letter of advice, telling me to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I took four bottles, and one vial of Dr. Pierce's Pellets, and now I can eat anything I want and it don't hurt me. I have not been in bed a day since I took your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I have not since felt any symptoms of disease. I have not taken any medicine in twelve months."

Iowa Notes.

Our summer campaign is on. Meetings in three new fields are now in progress and in a few days the work will be opened up in three other places where we are not known.

J. P. Martindale is holding a meeting at Goldfield and hopes to organize a congregation and erect a new building.

Lawrence Wright has just returned from Montana where he held a meeting with 51 additions that will result in the organization of a new church; a goodly sum of money was pledged to erect a new building. We loaned Bro. Wright to our Montana brethren for this meeting only. He is back in Iowa for the summer and he expects to organize two churches before the snow flies. He will erect his tabernacle and begin his first meeting at Dumont next Tuesday, the 9th inst.

Geo. C. Ritchie will begin a tent meeting at Wellman July 9. This is also a new field and we expect the usual results.

This week we send out statistic cards. See that the card is filled out and returned promptly. We are anxious to have a complete report this the first year of the new century. In case you cannot give the exact figures do the best you can, a partial report is better than no report.

Your secretary spent a week at Moravia, reorganized the church, organized a Bible-school and arranged for a pulpit supply. We have some excellent people at Moravia, and under careful leadership they will soon be in position to do a good work.

I spent a few days at Finchford last week. Finchford is an old congregation and under the leadership of Father Watson in its earlier days laid the foundation for a strong church. Isolated as they are, they have been a prey to all sorts of preachers, some of them unworthy men and some belonged to the denominations. In spite of this fact they have accomplished a good work; they now have an excellent Bible-school under the leadership of G. A. Evenson, and the only criticism that I have is they use Cook's literature. We were rained out two evenings but on Sunday I attended five services, preached three sermons, made one short talk, taught a class in the Bible-school and kept fairly comfortable while many who did not go to church thought it was dreadfully warm.

The program for our state convention is about ready for the press and it is a good one. Keep the time and place in mind, Cedar Rapids Sept. 9-13.

Upper Ohio Valley Notes.

C. M. Oliphant publicly resigned his charge at Wheeling, W. Va., last Lord's day.

Allen Gordon has been employed by the church at Martin's Ferry, O., for the summer. After two years of good work, Bro. H. Tilock was forced to leave this field on account of sickness in his family. Mr. Gordon is a student at Bethany.

The exercises at the laying of the corner stone of the Wheeling Island (W. Va.) Christian Church were conducted by Prof. J. C. Keith of Bethany College, Sunday afternoon, July 7. Everything went off very nicely. T. J. White, the pastor, has worked energetically for this young congregation. It has a most promising outlook.

J. B. Smith, who is pastor of the church at Moundville, W. Va., is just beginning his tenth year. The work has grown slowly but surely under his quiet influence. The church has given him the month of August for a vacation.

W. M. Long, of Bethany's class of '99, is pastor of the church at New Martinsville, W. Va. The work is in the midst of a field enjoying an oil boom and has a good outlook.

Old Bethany's friends will doubtless rejoice when they hear the reports made at commencement time were most encouraging. Among others was the report of Treasurer W. H. Graham which showed that there was $41,000 cash and $10,000 in stocks, mostly bearing 7 per cent. (this last contributed by the Olivers of Pittsburg), in the hands of the Fidelity Trust Company of Pittsburg, which has the endowment fund in charge.

The work in Steubenville, O., is prospering under the care of J. W. Kerns. They have a large Sunday-school and frequent additions.

McMechen, W. Va., has recently employed V. H. Miller, a Bethany graduate this June, for all his time.

Quaker City, O., is looking for a pastor.

The Bellaire, O., church rejoices in a year of steady growth. Apportionments have all been met and the work is in a good, healthy condition. The pastor preached the Memorial Day sermon for the G. A. R. and addressed the Orangemen the Sunday preceding.

C. M. WATSON.

Missouri Notes.

Being urged by the church and college at Albany and from several other considerations, I resigned at Unionville to accept the work at Albany. I never formed a stronger attachment in the same length of time than I did for the church at Unionville. I commend them earnestly to some worthy preacher that can live on a small salary.

My work has just commenced at Albany as pastor of the church and agent at large for the college. Our college property, I am told, is worth about $30,000. It is for the Christian brotherhood of the state to say what shall be its fate. The college is in the midst of a vast unoccupied territory and is greatly needed. It has seven courses, including a ministerial course. Our young preachers are already in the field. We need your money and your children. As your agent I am coming after both. When you help Central Christian College you are helping your own, for it is the property of the Christian Church of Missouri. Bro. J. C. Wyatt, of St. Joseph, recently gave me one hundred dollars for the college. Other brethren and sisters gave smaller sums.

Bro. Joe Wingate, one of our curators, lives at Perrin. I stepped off of the train just in time to see the flames consume his store and residence. All that he had on earth was devoured in a few minutes. It was beautiful to see Bro. John Shoemaker and others with their pocket books rally to his aid. These calamities, in developing our sympathies and liberality, are blessings in disguise.

If Bro. Capp leaves Plattsburg, there is some talk of Bro. W. A. Oldham's succeeding him.

"Bishop" Watson, an old-time friend, is serving successfully a young and growing congregation in St. Joseph.

The church at Dearborn is without a minister. They have some splendid people there. Independence and Liberty, I am sorry to learn, will soon lose two of the best preachers in the state.

Several fine preachers live in Albany: Bros. J. D. McClure, J. H. Coffee the poet, R. A. Gilcrest and Hulett. G. W. TERRELL.

LIFE OF GEN. W. T. SHERMAN.

It may be difficult to believe, but it is nevertheless a fact, that we are offering the Memoirs of Gen. W. T. Sherman, written by himself—a magnificent volume of 954 pages, printed in large type on the best book paper and bound in finest cloth binding, for Seventy-five Cents, prepaid. This is the standard life of Sherman, published by the Chas. L. Webster Co. We have come into possession of a number of copies, which we offer thus cheaply. The regular price is Two Dollars. Our special price is and we pay the postage. This is truly a phenomenal bargain, such as is seldom offered. The volume is illustrated, and the story of the experiences of the great soldier in California in the early days, in Mexico, through the great Civil War, and in the days of peace, is as interesting as a novel. Hand-Shaking.

MR. EDITOR:—Your paper is a great help to me. In your Notes and Comments of July 4, on hand-shaking, you say that it is carried too far. In my five years of membership I have never seen it, but on the contrary the complaint of the masses is that there is too little of the social side. When one is in trouble of any kind and meets an upright, honorable man and receives a warm shake of the hand, there are very few things that will make him feel better. We need more hand-shaking in the church and in our everyday life. We would need fewer socials and have more Christian members.

B. T. YATES.

Gainesville, Texas.

[We agree entirely with our friendly critic that hand-shaking is a good and useful thing. As we said in the paragraph to which he refers, we believe in it. What we object to is substituting it for other forms of social service which are equally necessary and somewhat more strenuous, or engaging in it at such a time and in such a manner that it interferes with worship.—EDITOR.]

Missouri Mission Notes.

We are having some of the very warmest conventions Missouri has ever had; but while the weather is dry the proceedings are not dry at all. I am just back from the Platte District Convention at Weston, and I am happy to say that it was one of the best that district has had for a number of years. We missed the presence and help of J. H. Hardin and S. J. White, always great factors of success in making a convention go; but we had M. M. Goode, C. M. Chilton, J. A. McKenzie, R. H. Fife, T. H. Capp, E. B. Redd, J. M. Vawter, E. C. Davis, R. C. Watson, J. W. Ellis, W. A. Morrison, E. H. Kellar, Prof. Barrum and T. A. Abbott, and they were sufficient for every emergency. The singing under the leadership of Bro. Fife was especially good, the chorus he had trained did gloriously. Then the entertainment was as fine as any church in Platte district ever did, and that word of praise cannot be excelled. The work mapped out for this next year was: 1. A concentration of financial effort to help Mitchell Park congregation, St. Joseph, build a house of worship. 2. An effort to organize the counties for aggressive evangelistic effort. The next convention meets with the First Church St. Joseph, March 10-12, 1902.

The board has concluded to put Bro. Lampton, for one month, in the field to visit the churches of northeast Missouri in the interest of our state work. I am sure this is a wise move and I am still more sure that the churches will give him the very heartiest welcome. Will not the preachers, especially, give him their co-operation? Remember that he is the representative of our state convention, honored of all for his ability and faithful service. We bespeak for him the most loving co-operation.

Again we call attention to the list of conventions for this month as far as known to us now. Clinton District, Pleasant Hill, 17-19; Atchison county, Rockport, 22-23; Holt county Forest City, 22-23; DeKalb, Prairie Garden, 24-25; Grand River district, Breckenridge, 22-24; Montgomery county, Bellflower, 24-26; Hickory county, Wheatland, 29-31. It will be seen that there are five in one week; of course no one man can attend them all, but we will do our best.

The unprecedented and wholly unexpected drouth in the state, resulting in a large reduction in our receipts, makes a special appeal to the friends of state work throughout the state imperatively necessary; not looking at all for such a difficulty, having every prospect of the largest income we have had for years, your board made appropriations accordingly. To let them drop now would be disastrous to the work and also to the men who have been called from other fields to enter these under your board's direction. We ask, therefore, for a redoubling of the effort to secure a contribution from every church. The emergency is a large one, it will take heroic measures to meet it, but we have confidence in our brethren that they are the very ones to say, "This God-given interest must not suffer." We call upon our friends everywhere to come to our assistance now.

T. A. ABBOTT.

Disciples in the University of Chicago.

The Disciples of Christ have their usual number of students in the university this summer. In the Divinity School alone there are 30, the Baptists alone exceeding that number with 64. The following students of the Divinity School come from the Disciples: F. W. Barber, C. G. Brelas, C. S. Early, J. B. Eskridge, Errett Gates, J. P. Givens, J. H. Goldner, F. F. Grim, H. H. Guy and Mrs. Guy, T. R. Hotelling, Austin Hunter, H. E. Luck, P. W. McReynolds, F. O. Norton, F. N. Atsuke, W. C. Payne, Prof. G. A. Peckham, G. E. Pike, A. W. Plose, G. A. Rogan, H. B. Robeson and Mrs. H. B. Robeson, C. J. Sharp, W. G. Smith, C. F. Stevens, Amos Torell, C. L. Waite, E. P. Wiles, Pres. E. V. Zollars.

There are as many more students in other departments of the university, making the entire company of Disciples about 75.

The present term closes July 27, followed by what will prove to be the even more attractive second term, which closes August 31. We are expecting a larger number of Disciples in attendance during August. It is not too late for pastors and teachers to make up their minds to come.

A reception was held on the evening of July 2 in Haskell hall. Dr. Willett was master of ceremonies. Short talks were made by Errett Gates, W. C. Payue, H. H. Guy and E. S. Ames.

One could wish to report all that was said, but the remarks of H. H. Guy are peculiarly noteworthy. He said in part:

"The physician who does not want to be considered behind the times feels it necessary to return to the lecture-room now and then to get in touch with the new discoveries in medicine, the new methods and the new machinery and to advance himself in the general knowledge of his profession. Why should it be considered less necessary for the minister, who from the very stress of circumstances is denied the opportunities of the study, to spend some time in pursuit of knowledge in some institution of higher learning? In the case of younger men a longer and in the case of older men a shorter period. I feel that one year in seven should be given to the preacher to spend as he may see fit and a part of that year, at least, should be spent in putting himself in touch with the higher intellectual life of the times. This should be a time when he could company with the great and successful men of the age and gain inspiration for his life's mission. It should be a time when he could brush up his rusted mental machinery. Life in the academic halls is supposed to prepare men to think for themselves, to form the student-habit, but alas, how many pass from the influence of the lecture room who have never learned the lesson of close application to mental tasks. It is not a strange thing, therefore, that such men should be changing from one pulpit to another, that they should soon find their congregations limited to the faithful saints who attend to their church duties in spite of the sermons of the pastor. It is well, therefore, for the minister to keep in sympathetic relations with the spirit of his age and to do this requires that the student habit shall be conserved and there is no better way of doing this than to return now and then to the halls of learning."

A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM!

Which Enabled Many a Person to Abandon Crutch and Cane.

Trial Box FREE!

Have you got rheumatism? If so, try "Gloria Tonic," the remedy which cured men and women in every locality who have suffered almost beyond human endurance. Mr. J. W. Blackstone, of Bourbonnais, Ills., calls it the "Queen of all Cures." Even prominent physicians in this and other countries endorse and prescribe it. Rev. C. Sund, of Harrisville, Wis., testifies that "Gloria Tonic" cured two members of his congregation, one who had suffered 18, the other 25 years. Rev. W. Hartman, of Farmersville, Ills., writes: "Five boxes of 'Gloria Tonic' cured Mr. A. Kulow, a member of my congregation, who had suffered day and night."—Mr. E. S. Kendrick, P. O. Box 13, North Chatham, Mass., after using liniments for 18 years, writes: "I am convinced that it will cure any case." Mr. B. H. Marshall, Plain City, Ohio, writes: "I am 76 years old, and had it not been for 'Gloria Tonic' I would be no more among the living." Mrs. Mary E. Thomas, of No. 9 School Street, Nantucket, Mass., writes: "From my childhood on I have suffered from rheumatism, have been cured through 'Gloria Tonic' at the age of 33 years." Mr. N. J. McMaster, Box 13, Plain City, Ohio, writes: "'Gloria Tonic' cured me after prominent physicians of Columbus, Ohio, called me incurable."

"Gloria Tonic" in Point Pleasant, W. Va., cured Mr. R. A. Barnett, 77 years old, after suffering 15 years.—In Wabash City, Ind., it cured Mrs. Elizabeth Crabbs, 79 years of age.—In Perth, Miss., it cured Mr. J. C. Chapman, after suffering 30 years.—In Odessa, Mo., it cured Mrs. Marion Mitchell, who had suffered 12 years.—In Burlington, Iowa (R. C. No. 3 Agency Avenue), it cured Mrs. M. S. Leonard, after suffering 25 years.—In Elmherst, Ills., it cured Mrs. Nicolina Brumond, age 80 years.—In Otis, Ind., it cured Mr. Christian Krantz, after suffering 22 years.—In Gift, Tenn., it cured Mr. L. Nelson, a merchant, after suffering 20 years.—In Bolton, N. Y., it cured Mrs. Jos. Putney, 83 years old.—In Durand, Wis., it cured Mrs. Nellie Brees, after suffering 20 years.—In Manila, Minn., it cured Mrs. Minna F. Peans, after suffering 14 years.—In Craig, Mo. (P. O. Box 134), it cured Mr. John N. Kruser, 76 years old, after suffering 15 years.—These are a few of the many thousand testimonials of recent date. Every delay in the adoption of "Gloria Tonic" is an injustice to yourself.

No matter what your form of rheumatism is—acute, chronic, muscular, inflammatory, sciatic, gout or lumbago,—write me to-day sure, and by return mail you will receive the trial box of "Gloria Tonic," also the most elaborate book ever gotten up on the subject of rheumatism, absolutely free. You get the trial box and the book at the same time, both free, so let me hear from you at once, and soon you will be cured. Address,

WHY?

Why do you, who live in the Mississippi Valley, send to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or even to Chicago for a desired volume, when you can secure it much more quickly and just as cheap in St. Louis? This is a question that is very difficult to answer. We can supply you with any book that you wish—any respectable book, that is; French novels and blood-and-thunder-seven-buckets-of-gore-to-the-chapter romances are barred—no matter where or by whom published. Our business is by no means confined to the books we ourselves publish. Our catalogue contains only our own publications, in the main, but we can sell you any book you wish to purchase.

For a New Church Buiding in Port Arthur, Ontario.

Three years ago there was but one Disciple to my knowledge in New Ontario, a territory nearly as large as Great Britain and Ireland. Think of a territory covering 132,000 square miles with only one Disciple to represent our great people! We have now about 100 people in my colonies, on free grant lands. My plan of colonization for evangelistic purposes has succeeded.

Disciples are constantly finding their way to this great country. They are coming from all parts of the continent. Nearly all of them arrive in Port Arthur, from this point I send them out and put them on land of their own. We have several families in Port Arthur now who are willing to assist in the organization of a congregation.

The four leading sects are, in their order of strength, Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, Church of England. The Disciples are hardly worth considering. The Roman Catholics comprise 41 per cent. of the population. We have over 18,000 public schools in Canada with over a million pupils. We have 17 universities and over 50 colleges. The government is educating 10,000 Indian children. We have 100,000 Indians. The children in the schools of the northwest speak 21 languages. In the province of Ontario we have the best school system in the world, taking the award at the World's Fair at Chicago. Canada has spent 200 millions on railways and 75 millions on 70 miles of canals. We have 17,000 miles of railway, representing a capital of nearly 900 millions. Canada has one of the longest continuous stretches of inland navigation in the world—2,384 miles, from the St. Lawrence to Port Arthur, the head of Lake Superior. We have the largest wheat field in the world. Forty-five per cent. of our people are engaged in agriculture. The drink bill per head is less than half of what it is in the United States. Vancouver, in British Columbia, is midway between London and Hong Kong. Port Arthur at the head of navigation on Lake Superior is midway between Vancouver and Montreal. We are geographically situated in the center of the North American continent.

I am asking the great brotherhood to contribute about $4,000 towards the purchase of a lot and the erection of a building in this most important town. Port Arthur is destined to become the Chicago of Canada; she is now the silver gateway to the golden west. Foreigners are coming to our door. Fifty thousand immigrants came in 1900; 7,300 Doukhobors migrated from southern Russia to Canada northwest in 1899, the greatest modern exodus of any one people in a body to the continent. We have an unlimited mission field.

Now, brethren, assist me in this work. I am a fixture here. I do not require any of your money, I am self-sustaining. I have recently been honored by the Dominion Government with a position which will assist me in my mission work in many ways. I will contribute of my own means and give my service free in order to establish the church at this point. The lot has been secured, now I ask you, my brother, to help erect this place of worship.

R. A. BURRISS.

Port Arthur, Ont.

Those who have purchased and read The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century are most enthusiastic in their praise of the book. It should be borne in mind that this book is not merely a reprint of the articles that ran through the Christian-Evangelist during 1899. The several authors have completely revised, rewritten and amplified their contributions, adding a great deal of entirely new matter. We urge all our readers to send at once for this volume. It will give them a clearer and better understanding of the origin, growth and triumph of our cause than they can otherwise gain. Price, postpaid, $2.00. Christian Publishing Co.

The Spiritual Side of Our Plea

— By A. B. JONES —

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

IOWA.

Des Moines, July 8.—Notwithstanding the intensely hot weather our church attendance is very good. Two confessions yesterday, four since last report.—E. W. BRICKERT, pastor East Side Church of Christ.

Guthrie Center, July 11.—There were three additions at Monteith last Sunday. I preach every Sunday afternoon in county school house.—D. L. DUNKLEBERGER.

KANSAS.

Leavenworth, July 8.—Three more additions here yesterday.—S. W. NAY, pastor.

Leavenworth, July 11.—Another confession at prayer-meeting last evening.—S. W. NAY.

Nortonville, July 9.—I began work with the congregation at Nortonville one-half time March 25; devoting the other half to Pleasant Grove, six miles out. There have been 12 added to the Nortonville church and three to the Pleasant Grove church since coming to them. About $50 has been raised for missions.—J. B. LOCKHART.

MISSOURI.

Buffalo, July 9.—Two additions at Urbana since last report, one by statement and one from the Baptists.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

Grant City.—Isadora, a village in Worth county, is rejoicing over the dedication of a church June 30. It is the result of the work of Bro. T. W. Cottingham, of Kansas City, who organized a church of 42 members last December, and started a movement which resulted in the erection of a $1,500 building. On the dedication day we raised more than was necessary to liquidate the debt. At the evening service there were four additions, two by confession, making a total of eight additions in two weeks. The church has a bright future before it and I predict for it a good record, not only in local work but as well from a missionary point of view, for it was a missionary effort that started them, and they feel and talk that it was the Nodaway Valley district that made them what they are.—W. H. HARRIS.

Huntsville, July 15.—Two more additions yesterday, one by letter and one from Presbyterians. Though the weather has been exceedingly warm we have not abandoned a single service. House full last night.—LOUIS S. CUPP.

Kirkville, July 11.—There were two addi-

5 BOOKS for $1.00

The following works are paper-bound booklets. Each is a valuable treatise on the subject to which it is devoted—concise and dealing with the fundamental facts rather than microscopic detail. The price of each work singly is 25 cents. We will send the five books, postpaid, for One Dollar.

Christian Science Dissected.

By A. D. Sector. This work, issued last summer, has already had a very large sale. It is bright, breezy, clear and convincing—just the thing to put into the hands of one who is inclining toward "Christian Science."

Sabbath or Lord's Day.

By D. R. Dungan. Is it the First Day or the Seventh Day of the week that Christians should observe as a day of rest and worship? This book answers the question conclusively.

Facts About China.

By W. Remfry Hunt. The author has lived in Central China for many years. His book is full of facts about Chinese customs, language, government, religions, commerce, geography, etc.

The Liquor Traffic.

By S. W. Crutcher. Mr. Crutcher has spent years in fighting this traffic, and in this book tells of his experiences with manufacturers and dealers of whisky in the church and out.

The Lord's Supper.

By N. J. Aylesworth. This work is a defense of and custom of observing the Lord's Supper every Sunday. It is an able, convincing argument.

WARNING.—If you wait until you can go to the postoffice and buy a money order, you may never send for these books. Just send a one-dollar bill; it is safe, convenient, and saves you five cents.

tions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Lamar, July 15.—Four baptisms since last report. Our C. W. B. M. and Y. P. S. C. E. each support an orphan child in India. On June 9 the writer ordained Bro. Geo. L. Willis to the work of the ministry. We are now in a union meeting. Five churches are working together, the pastors preaching alternately.—W. W. BLALOCK.

St. Louis, July 15.—Three additions yesterday at the Fourth Church.

NEBRASKA.

Ulysses.—J. W. Hilton reports for June seven baptisms, four by letter and four by statement as the total of additions to East Lincoln congregation. Bro. Hilton has finished his school work, and settled down to the ministry in earnest. H. C. Holmes is settled at Fairbury and reports eight additions to the church the first three Lord's days. C. C. Atwood is now at North Platte, and when these lines are read, will doubtless have the state tent going in an effort to establish the cause in that city of 4,000 people. The church at Geneva was reorganized on Tuesday evening, July 2. Evangelist Ogden had been at work four weeks. One baptism resulted from the meeting.—W. A. BALDWIN, secretary.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Ellendale, July 9.—Just closed a short meeting, assisted by J. G. M. Luttenberger, of Dorchester, Ill. Four added. Church debt of $400 lifted and church dedicated. We have the only church building among the Disciples in the state. Our work is prospering.—G. W. HALL.

OHIO.

Gibsonburg, July 11.—One confession and baptism at regular prayer-meeting here last night. Just organized a Bible-school at Quinshan Church of Christ. Work at both places in fairly good condition. I came here April 1, 1900.—MELVIN L. PEDEN, pastor.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Orangeburg, July 8.—One baptized at Sumter, a French Catholic, since last report. Am in a meeting now with Bro. W. H. Brunson at Evergreen Church near Walterboro with six confessions to date.—M. B. INGLE.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Christian Science is abroad in the land, seeking whom it may devour. It is the most stupendous fraud of the Nineteenth Century, yet so shrewd are its advocates, and so thoughtless is the average man and woman, that tens of thousands have been deceived.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DISSECTED

is an antidote for Christian Science. It is a book by A. D. SECTOR, which tells what Christian Science is, in the plainest of language. Mrs. Eddy is shown to be a conscious fraud and a conscienceless charlatan and pretender. The book contains 62 pages, neatly printed and bound.

Book Notes.

We believe the forthcoming volume, entitled The Witness of Jesus, embracing a series of discourses by Alexander Procter and a brief sketch of his life, will be a most agreeable surprise to the brotherhood. Few if any among us knew that he had left behind him any record of his characteristic thought in the form of sermons or addresses. We have come into possession, however, of more than twenty of these sermons, stenographically reported, which are being carefully edited and are now going into type as rapidly as they can be prepared for the printers. It will be a book which the thousands of friends of Bro. Procter and many who never knew him personally but only by reputation, will be delighted to possess. They will not agree with everything he says, but they cannot fail to be stimulated by his thought and delighted by his spirit. Further announcement will be made when the book is nearer completion.

It is putting it very modestly and mildly to say that scores of complimentary letters and eulogistic reviews of The Spiritual Side of Our Plea are being received by the author and the publishers. We cannot, of course, publish a tenth of these, but can only occasionally select one man's opinion of the work to present to our readers. John Shackleford, formerly of Lexington, Ky., but now living in Tacoma, Wash., writes to the author: "I have read your book, The Spiritual Side of Our Plea, with much interest. You have stated the great plea with marked clearness and force. I am in perfect accord with the general spirit and purpose of your book. Your elucidation of the mind of Mr. Campbell, both as to the design of baptism and the operation of the spirit in conversion, I think is conclusive. Considering the voluminous writings of Mr. Campbell and the loose way in which much of it was written, you had a somewhat difficult and delicate task, but you have been ever fair and candid, never evasive, and you have presented Mr. C's doctrine with as great force as he ever presented it himself. I believe that no man can gainsay you here without misunderstanding and misrepresenting Mr. C. Your closing chapter is the very declaration and proclamation of the gospel of peace."

In a year or two from the present time, a number of persons who read this paragraph will happen to get hold of Winston Churchill's great novel, The Crisis, and will read it with pleasure and delight. After reading it they will certainly exclaim, either aloud or mentally, "Why did I not read this a long while ago?" The Crisis is the novel of the year. We believe that no greater work of fiction—and precious few worthy of comparison with it—has been published in a decade. Mr. Churchill is a young man, but his work gives no evidence of that fact. It rather bears all the marks of the skillful, experienced, trained literary genius. Three summers ago David Harum was the volume that one saw in the street-car, on the sitting-room table and at the summer resorts. This summer it is The Crisis that everyone is reading and talking about. The writer of these notes repeats the statement recently made, viz., that of the hundreds of works of fiction that he has read during the past fifteen years, not one has delighted and interested him more, and not half a dozen have been anywhere near so pleasing. The volume is most handsomely printed and bound, is illustrated, contains over 500 pages, and will be sent by us to any address on receipt of the regular price—$1.50.

Among the hearty and enthusiastic commendations of our recent publications which we are constantly receiving, The Young Man from Middlefield is by no means neglected or overlooked. For example, here is what is said of this book, the latest story by Jessie Brown Pounds, by our well-beloved M. M.

Davis, in The Christian Courier: "The Young Man from Middlefield is the title of one of the most charming and helpful stories I have ever read. I always expect something good from Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, but this time it was nothing short of delightful. The plot is good and the tone pure, and from beginning to end it deals faithfully with the practical questions of life. . . . It is just such a story as all young people should read. There is nothing unhealthy or trashy about it; and yet it is full of the dramatic and pathetic, and has not a dull chapter. So interesting was it to me that I found it difficult to lay it down until I had read the last word." The Young Man from Middlefield is a handsome volume of 257 pages, well printed and bound. It is just the thing to serve as a birthday gift. The price is but 75 cents.

Brother Slowwit is the pastor of the church at Dullville, Mo. Bro. Slowwit has some excellent points. One of them is that he reads good books, and endeavors to keep up with the progress of religious thought by purchasing, from time to time, the best works given to the world by the ablest scholars and thinkers. We said he had many good points; as a matter of fact, about his only failing is that his mind is so completely occupied by great things that he, absentmindedly, often makes laughable blunders regarding smaller affairs. We can readily conceive of him imitating Sir Isaac Newton's "break" of cutting a large and a small hole in his kitchen door that both his large cat and his kitten might pass in and out at will. As we have said, he buys books, but instead of securing these books in the quickest, most sensible way, he frequently forgets himself and sends away off to Boston or New York or Chicago for a book that he can purchase just as cheaply in St. Louis, a hundred miles from his home. It seems strange that a man with as much brains and good solid sense as Brother Slowwit should send over a thousand miles and wait a week for a book that he can buy for the same price within a hundred miles, and can secure in twenty-four hours. It is even stranger when we remember that he reads THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and has again and again read the announcement of the Christian Publishing Co., to the effect that it will supply any book published, for the regular price. Is the moral of this paragraph plain?

The Seventh Day Adventists—most excellent people they are, conspicuously honest and worthy of imitation in their daily walk and conversation,—are almost as tireless and persistent propagandists and proselyters as the Mormons and Christian Scientists. They are shrewd in argument and controversy, and frequently succeed in shaking the convictions of persons not thoroughly well-informed concerning their peculiar doctrines. Especially is this true in regard to the observance of the "seventh day" as the day of rest and worship. To all those who have come into contact with the propagandists or the literature of this zealous people, we strongly recommend Sabbath or Lord's Day, by J. R. Dungan. It is an argument for the observance of the "first day of the week"—an argument which proves, to the satisfaction of every fair-minded and unprejudiced person, that the day on which our Lord rose from the dead is the day which his followers should observe as their day of worship. The price of this booklet is but 25 cents.

Special Catalogue No. 31 is yours for the asking. The expenditure of one cent for a postal card may save you several dollars in the price of books. Now is the time to secure a supply of literature for summer reading

Popular Hymns No. 2

THE ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. Popular Hymns No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the church.

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

SINGING EVANGELISTS will be pleased with the analytical classification, enabling them without reference to indices to find a suitable song on a moment's warning.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations, etc., especially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will not find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Like its predecessors, Popular Hymns No. 2 is an

If He Should Come.

If the Lord should come in the morning
As I went about my work,
The little things and the quiet things
That a servant cannot shirk,
Though nobody ever sees them,
And only the dear Lord cares
That they always are done in the light of the sun,
Would he take me unawares?

If my Lord should come at noonday,
The time of the dust and heat,
When the glare is white and the air is still
And the hoof-beats sound in the street;
If my dear Lord came at noonday,
And smiled in my tired eyes,
Would it not be sweet his look to meet?
Would he take me by surprise?

If the Lord came hither at evening,
In the fragrant dew and dusk,
When the world drops off its mantle
Of daylight like a husk,
And flowers in wonderful beauty,
And we fold our hands and rest,
Would his touch of my hand, his low command,
Bring me unhopd-for zest?

Why do I ask and question?
He is ever coming to me,
Morning and noon and evening,
If I have but eyes to see.
And the daily load grows lighter,
The daily cares grow sweet,
For the Master is near, the Master is here,
I have only to sit at his feet.

A Square Yard of Woods.

The city boy and the town boy, like the city rat and the country rat, were good friends. When Egbert was in the city, Harry took him to museums; when Harry visited Egbert, they played golf and tennis. One day Egbert said to his little guest:

"Have we ever walked in North Woods?"

"No," answered the city boy; "but I do not like the woods,—nothing but bushes and brambles and roots to stumble over. I like to sit under a tree sometimes, when the sun is hot. Central Park is a pretty place, especially the ball field, but"—

"Don't you like to find things?" inquired Egbert, "plants and bugs?"

Harry laughed.

"No, thank you. I would rather collect stamps any day."

"I'll tell you what we will do," proposed Egbert. "Let us each measure a square yard of woods, and see who can find the most things in his 'yard.' Whatever we find we must learn about."

Harry thought he would rather go to the links.

"Oh, no!" said Egbert. "You do what I want you to do this morning, and I will be your slave this afternoon. Will you? All right! Get on your wheel."

"Humph!" said Harry, kneeling before his yard, "there is nothing here but tough weeds, rotten wood, a yellow beetle, and some stones."

Egbert was jotting down something on a piece of paper, yet his yard was no richer, apparently, than Harry's. The words he wrote were: "White oak, moss, wood anemone, common blue violet, dirty gray pebbles, a brown stone printed with a scallop shell, a black thousand-legged worm, a nest of big black ants, a big black beetle, a piece of paper, a horn button, and some red-topped toadstools." He packed into a little basket as many samples as possible. The live things he left in peace, except the beetle, which he caged in a pill box.

Harry looked at his friend's list of findings, and did not say a word. His thoughts were: "Wish I had looked more carefully, and that I knew more about the woods."

"Papa must be told what we have been doing," said Egbert. And papa listened to every word that the little boy had to say.

"Why," said papa, "you came upon a managerie, and a forest, and a flower garden, and a quarry, all in that one spot,—didn't you, old fellows? The little white oak—it was but two feet high, was it?—grew from a sweet acorn no larger than the end of my thumb. When you are an old man, that smooth, green trunk, which you can snap off with your fingers, may be sixty feet high, and as thick as Harry is long. Then its bark will be rough and grayish-white. The white oak is a contented fellow, loving alike valley, plain, and mountain. Just think, your little oak friend is cousin to the famous oak of Abraham, away over in Palestine! The head of that old, old giant is ninety feet, and his trunk twenty-three feet, around. Yet once he was an acorn baby that you could eat in one bite.

"The shy, white-starred anemone is the 'wind-flower' of the Greeks, who believe that it often grew in windy places. Do you know the pretty Greek story of the violet? Juno was not friendly to a princess named Io, so Jupiter changed Io into a cow, and the earth showed its love for the beautiful girl by giving her violets for food. The green velvet we call moss is lovely enough as it is. If you were to place a single tuft of it beneath the microscope, you would open your eyes very wide, Harry, for underneath the leaves are tiny boxes with lids, and in these boxes are seeds. When the time comes, the lids fly off and the seeds scatter.

"Split open the pebbles, and within them you will see, perhaps, some clean, shining quartz crystals, instead of rough stone. The red stone marked by the shell is a fossil. Thousands of years ago, the stone was soft mud on the bottom of a great ocean. A scallop shell pressed against the mud, and the marks tell the story, even though the ocean moved from North Woods long, long ago.

"You would enjoy a visit to the ant village, but you are too big to enter Insect Lilliputia. If you could go in, you would be led through galleries and winding passages into the nursery, where nurse-ants fondle white larva babies. Ants build houses, make roads, keep slaves, milk cows, and go to war. I wish you would start an ant diary. Find an ant colony, and watch it from day to day. Wise men have spent years in the study of these wise, swift insects.

"What Egbert calls 'toadstools' are mushrooms, that are good to eat if well cooked. Please do not eat any mushrooms (all toadstools are mushrooms, by the way,) without first showing them to me, for certain kinds are poisonous. Some day I may tell you how to distinguish them. Tennis? Very well, Harry. I will play against you both, and win."

In this papa was right, because Harry played poorly. Harry was thinking: "All those curious things in a square yard of woods! I'm going to find out more about the ant and the beetle; and the rest of the things are worth looking up, too,—even the pebble and the piece of paper. Dear me! how many wonderful, common things we do not see, or stop to think about!"—Sunday School Times.

Bees and Alfalfa.

The introduction of alfalfa into Kansas has made the state richer by one million dollars. But the discovery that the honey-bee can feed on alfalfa blossoms has added another million. Bees and alfalfa are an ideal combination. Experiments have been made by raisers of honeybees and they report most favorably upon the blossoms of the alfalfa.

Alfalfa contains a certain degree of sweetness not found in either the sweet clover or white clover. Every stock-breeder knows that in-and-in breeding will cause a deterioration in the strain of stock. Infusions of new life are required to give a new life and vigor to the breed. As it is with animals so it is with plants. Cross fertilization must take place to keep up the standard. It was once supposed that within each flower are the necessary means for assuring the formation of the embryo within the seed. The truth is that many plants, instead of endeavoring to facilitate self-fertilization, are so constructed as to prevent it. Alfalfa is of this class. The pollen or fertilizing agent must be carried from one blossom and placed where it is needed in another to insure a full crop of seed, and some foreign agency is depended on to accomplish the purpose. In the case of alfalfa, currents of air are unable to carry the pollen and accomplish the cross-fertilization, and most insects do not carry it. Here is where the bee is useful. The alfalfa blossoms offer the bee a sweet drop, and in return for the favor the bee leaves a few grains of pollen, unconsciously brought from another blossom. So the exchange goes on, to the mutual profit of the owner of the alfalfa and the keeper of the bee.—Saturday Evening Post.

Hard to Break.

But the Coffee Habit can be Put Off.

"I was a coffee user from early childhood but it finally made me so nervous that I spent a great many sleepless nights, starting at every sound I heard and suffering with a continual dull headache. My hands trembled and I was also troubled with shortness of breath and palpitation of the heart. The whole system showed a poisoned condition and I was told to leave off coffee, for that was the cause of it. I was unable to break myself of the habit until some one induced me to try Postum Food Coffee.

The first trial, the Food Coffee was flat and tasteless and I thought it was horrid stuff, but my friend urged me to try again and let it boil longer. This time I had a very delightful beverage and have been enjoying it ever since, and am now in a very greatly improved condition of health.

My brother is also using Postum instead of coffee and a friend of ours, Mr. W., who was a great coffee user, found himself growing more and more nervous and was troubled at times with dizzy spells. His wife suffered with nausea and indigestion, also from coffee. They left it off and have been using Postum Food Coffee for some time and are now in a perfect condition of health." Grace C. M., Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Otto and His Auto.

'Tis strange how fashion makes us change
the objects we admire;
We used to sing the tireless steed, but now the steedless tire.

So Otto bought an auto, so as not to be antique,

But the thing was autocratic,
As well as automatic,
And the auto wouldn't auto as it ought to,
so to speak

He thought to get an auto-operator for the work,

And first he tried a circus man and then he tried a Turk,

For he knew the circus man drove fifty horses with success,

And if a man be shifty
Enough to manage fifty,
It's palpable enough he ought to manage one horse-less.

As for the Turk, 'tis also plain, deny it if you can,

He ought to run an auto, since a Turk's an Ottoman.

'Twas all no use, so Otto moved to Alabama, purely

That he might say, "I'm Otto,
From Mobile, and my motto:

'A Mobile Otto ought to run an automobile surely.' "

Then Otto sought to auto on the auto as he ought to,

But the auto sought to auto as Otto never thought to,

So Otto he got hot, oh very hot! as he ought not to,

And Otto said, "This auto ought to auto, and it's got to."

And Otto fought the auto, and the auto it fought Otto,

Till the auto also got too hot to auto as it ought to

And then, Great Scott! the auto shot to heaven—so did Otto—

Where Otto's auto autos now as Otto's auto ought to.

Forty Dollars' Worth of Temper.

Whoever wishes to hear a solemn, almost tearful oration on the evils of losing one's temper should apply to a certain scientific gentleman in Washington, of whom the Youth's Companion tells a tragic story.

He had a negro servant who exasperated him by his stupidity. One day, when he was more stupid than usual, the angry master of the house threw a book at his head. The negro ducked and the book flew out of the window.

"Now go and pick that book up!" ordered the master.

The negro started to obey but a passer-by had saved him the trouble, and had walked off with the book. The scientist thereupon began to wonder what book he had thrown away, and to his horror discovered that it was a quaint and rare little volume on mathematics which he had purchased in London and paid fifty dollars for it.

"The next time I feel that it is absolutely necessary to throw things," he exclaimed, in his sorrow, "I'll choose something less expensive."

But his troubles were not over. The weeks went by, and Time, the great healer, had begun to assuage his grief, when, strolling into a second-hand book-shop, he perceived to his great delight a copy of the book he had lost. He asked the price.

"Well," said the dealer, reflectively, "I guess we can let you have it for forty dollars. It's a pretty rare book, and I dare say I could get seventy-five dollars for it by holding on a while."

The man of science pulled out his wallet and produced the money, delighted at the opportunity of replacing his lost treasure. When he reached home he sat down at the table to gloat over his find, and a card dropped out of the leaves. The card was his own, and further examination showed that he had bought back his own property.

"Forty dollars' worth of temper! Huh, I think I shall mend my ways!" he was overheard to say. His daughter, who tells the story with glee, declares that the negro servant is positively worried over the sunny disposition of her father. He fears that the worthy man must be ill.

The Telephonograph.

The telephone is wonderful enough by itself and so is the phonograph, but when they are united, as they have been by a recent invention, in the telephonograph, the result is a genuine scientific miracle. The Saturday Evening Post in telling of the new machine says:

"When a business man happens to be absent from his office there is no reason why he should miss any telephone messages that come while he is away, inasmuch as a new contrivance will keep them for him and repeat them to him when he gets back. It is a telephone with a phonograph attachment, and is adjusted for work by simply slipping an ordinary wax cylinder on the mandrel. By and by a ring comes in the business man's absence, and a 'hello.' The machine (and this is the most wonderful part of it) is set going simultaneously, and replies, 'Hello!' Then the message comes and is taken down on the cylinder.

"After a while the man comes back to his office, and a pointer on the 'telephonograph' (as the machine is called) indicates that there is a message for him. He turns a switch, which brings into action the reproducing stylus, and putting the receiving tubes in his ears, listens to the communication. Of course, if he fails to understand it, the machine will repeat it.

"If desired, he can put a cylinder on the machine that, in case he is called up during his absence, will give an answer stating that he will return at a certain hour."

Change-Making Machines.

Machines that handle coins in a wonderful way, counting them and actually giving change automatically, are now coming on the market, says the Saturday Evening Post. They are new inventions, and have just been patented. One of them has pieces of money arranged in separate compartments in trays, and on top is a series of keys. A purchase of thirty-five cents, say, being made, the key numbered thirty-five is struck, and instantly the apparatus throws out sixty-five cents in change (supposing that a dollar has been received from the buyer), a tablet with the number thirty-five being uplifted at the same instant, and thirty-five cents added on the register inside.

A cashier is in charge of the machine, but the latter does all the thinking. In another contrivance of the kind there is a separate receptacle for each denomination of coin up to a dollar. The placing of a coin in its proper place sets the mechanism, so that when a key is pressed corresponding to the amount of the purchase, the difference is thrown out. There is no bother about counting the change, which is always right.

Other machines, which are much more simple, are for the sorting of coins, and are intended to be used where a stream of small change is continually flowing in. The pieces of money are thrown indiscriminately into a kind of hopper and sort themselves—a performance that saves the cashier an immense deal of trouble. In one or two cases the mechanism for automatically giving change is combined with the sorting device, reducing the labor of the person in charge very materially, and at the same time doing away with all possibility of mistakes in reckoning.

Only Nuts.

Driving a boy to the fount of learning is like driving a horse to water—easy. But making either the horse or the boy drink—that is a different matter. If they won't, they won't. Mr. McClure, the well-known publisher, was once crossing the Atlantic with his seven-year-old boy, says the Christian Endeavor World, when the following amusing and suggestive incident took place.

The boy was given his choice of the vast, varied menu of the White Star. The boy, bewildered by the variety, hid his face in his father's side, and whispered, "Nuts!" Not another thing would he have for dinner; and nuts he had, and nothing else.

Later in the evening, as they paced the deck together, McClure told the writer of his intention to have his boy taught everything a human being could learn. He should go both to Oxford and to Cambridge, and to two foreign universities as well, so that he should be thoroughly versed in every branch of knowledge.

His friend said, "Suppose, when you try to stuff four universities full of miscellaneous learning down his throat, he flatly refuses to swallow anything but nuts?"

McClure stopped in his walk and put his hand on the speaker's arm. "I never thought of that."

Mrs. McKinley and Gen. Grant.

Brigadier-General Frederick D. Grant recently returned to this country from the Philippines on leave of absence, and told how eager many of the Filipinos are to observe American holidays, to wear American clothes, and to honor the American government.

The resemblance of the General, in appearance, to his famous father is very striking, and especially when he is in military uniform.

General Grant has just passed his fifty-first year and is himself a graduate of West Point. His career has been curiously varied. He was for a time a Colonel of cavalry; afterward he was United States Minister to Austria; still later he became one of the Police Commissioners of New York City; during the war with Spain he was once more a Colonel; then he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and recently was advanced to the same rank in the regular army.

In connection with his appointment to his present rank a pretty story is told that illustrates the kindly heart of Mrs. McKinley.

As the President and she sat talking one evening, Mr. McKinley told her that he had that day decided to give General Grant this last advance, and Mrs. McKinley expressed her pleasure at learning of the intended promotion, and added:

"Don't you think, dear, that it would be nice to send a note to Mrs. Grant, telling her that you had decided to appoint her son? It would be much nicer for her to get it direct from you than to read the official announcement in the papers. I can imagine how a mother would like to know of her son's promotion."

The President agreed, and, going to a writing-table, he penned a little note stating that, at Mrs. McKinley's request, he wrote to tell Mrs. Grant that he would take pleasure on the following day in appointing her son "Fred" to the rank of a Brigadier-General in the regular army.

Mrs. Grant, the venerable and beloved widow of the great soldier and statesman, was greatly touched by Mrs. McKinley's thoughtfulness of her.—Saturday Evening Post.

A newsboy had directed a stranger, at his request, to the nearest bank, and when asked how much he wanted for his services, said, "a quarter, please."

"A quarter! Isn't that pretty high for directing a man to the bank?"

"You'll find, sir," said the youngster, "that bank directors are paid high in Chicago."

"Is he a criminal lawyer?" "Well, I should hardly call him a criminal, though some of his practices come very close to felonies."

"I am Elijah," says "Dr." Dowie. One difference that suggests itself is that, whereas Elijah was fed by the ravens, Dowie is fed by the gulls.

A gentleman, seeing "This cottage for sail," painted on a board, politely asked a woman in front of the house when the cottage was to sail. "Just as soon as the man comes who can raise the wind," was her quick reply.

"That enemy of yours says you are owned by a certain corporation."

"Again my enemy wrongs me," said the practical politician. "I value my liberty too highly to sacrifice it. I am not owned by the corporation he refers to. I am simply leased to it for a term of years."

"Why did you place such a tough fowl before me?" asked the indignant lady patron of the waiter in a down-town restaurant.

"Age before beauty, always, you know, madam," was the gallant reply.

And, then, womanlike, she smiled and paid her bill without a murmur.

Papa—There, there! You needn't kiss me any more. Tell me what you want. Out with it.

Daughter—I don't want anything. I want to give you something.

Papa—You do? What?

Daughter—A son-in-law. Jack asked me to speak to you about it.

A negro recently died at Atchison, Kas., and there was great curiosity to hear what the minister would say in his sermon, as the dead man had frequently been invited to join the church and refused. The parson said: "Is this man lost? I don't know, but I do know that if he is lost I didn't lose him."

Teacher—Can any little boy or any little girl in this class remember the longest sentence he ever read?

Billy—Please mum, I can.

Teacher—Well, Willie, tell the rest of the class the longest sentence you ever read.

Billy—Imprisonment for life.

A bright Boston boy asked permission to give a problem to the class in arithmetic, and this is what he gave:

"My aunt has eight children, and she doesn't like to favor one above another. She was at the market the other day, and she bought eight apples for them, one apiece; but when she got home she found she'd lost one apple. All the same, she divided the apples so as to give each child the same number. How did she do it?"

The class hadn't got along to fractions, and the boy insisted that his aunt knew nothing about algebra. So the puzzled teacher finally asked: "Well, how did she divide the seven apples so as to give each of the eight children an equal number?"

"She made apple sauce."

PETE.

XX.—A Race With Death.

It was a bright moonlight night. The roads were in a beautiful condition, for it had been just long enough after the storm for them to dry without getting dusty. Edgar Brown dashed through the town which was retiring for the night. As the horse flew up the road, he saw lights extinguished and the glow on bedroom window-shades vanish. A few doors slammed. He heard someone unfastening a dog that had been chained up all day. Then Mizzouryville was left behind and the young man was on a broad country road, bounded by rolling farms. The air blew fresh and fragrant upon his face; it was in the first days of October. He thought little of the surrounding scene. He remembered how white and gasping little Pete lay upon her pillow, and how he must reach Creekville and get back with the medicine by morning. If anything should prevent his return, then she would die. Her life depended upon him. But what could happen? He ought to be in Creekville by half-past eleven. Perhaps he would be detained there twenty minutes. So he should be back with the medicine by two at the furthest. This would give him four hours to go thirty miles, with a stop at Creekville. Five miles an hour is a good rate for a horse under ordinary circumstances, but here was reason for utmost speed. The moon was almost full, and like most good things, it had come late. But now its brilliant light showed the beaten road like a far-away path of white paper. Edgar knew the way well. During his stay in Mizzouryville, while trying to drive the memory of his old sweetheart from his mind, he had ridden every day, going miles and miles. He had been to Creekville and he knew where Dr. Norton lived—that was the physician who had the necessary medicine.

About half way between Mizzouryville and Creekville flows a wide creek, called Castile. The road approaches it through a thick wood, so it is always dark, and when the moon shines, the trees look ghostly and the stream black and mysterious. In the midst of this wood a narrow wagon-bridge spans the stream. As Edgar came in sight of the tide, for the first time since leaving Mrs. Morris' house he slackened the speed of his horse.

The bridge, he thought, had a curious look. There was something about it unusual. When he came nearer, he saw that a tree had been dragged across each end of it. That meant that the bridge was unsafe. Evidently the recent storm that followed Linda May's party had done it a damage. Edgar groaned. He was obliged to turn his horse about and retrace his way through the woods nearly a mile before he reached the other and longer road to Creekville. This meant that he would have at least four extra miles to travel. So he could not hope to get back to Mizzouryville till at least three o'clock. The horse was showing white patches of sweat. As he drove past broad farms, each meadow held up a mirror that the moon might delight in her beauty. From these round looking-glasses (called in less poetic language ponds) came the persistent music of frogs who could not stop trilling long enough to sing. Sometimes Edgar heard a shrill shivering high in the air, as if a spirit had got caught up there in the cold and was trying to warm her poor chilly body with moonbeams. But whenever he looked for the cause of this shuddering sound, all he could see was great cottonwood trees with the breeze tangled in their branches. Along the roadside the golden brown stalks of the sourdock nodded to each other from their cups of spreading leaves, and the goldenrod burned dim in the misty air like lamps turned down for the night. The air smelled of the mists that lay like veils in the low places; and of the nightshade and other pungent weeds; and of the breath of cows; and of the slumbering earth; and of the leaves, now growing red and brown and yellow. He heard the tinkle of a bell, the barking of a dog, far away, and the crowing of lonesome cocks. And so he entered Creekville and drew up before Dr. Norton's house. He knocked loudly, but it was some time before the doctor appeared. Edgar gave him the note that Dr. Wells had hastily written, and Dr. Norton brought out a tube of anti-toxine. Edgar placed the precious medicine carefully in his pocket and sprang into his buggy.

"Your horse looks about played out," observed Dr. Norton. Edgar did not wait to reply; he had Pete's life to save. He did not spare the horse on the homeward drive, and even when he was covered with foam and panting violently Edgar dared not pause to give him rest. He was about two miles from town when he came to a cornfield at a turning of the road. Here the road slanted sideways so you felt as if the buggy must tip over if you didn't sit heavy. Around the corner was a locust grove which had been allowed to stand in the field because a ragged ravine ruined the ground for corn. In this grove burned the fire of a camper. Edgar's horse, rounding the corner at a great rate, came suddenly upon the glare of the fire, and taking fright jumped down the shelving slope of the road. The buggy was turned over. Edgar jumped out as it reeled, and falling upon the rocks sprained his ankle. The horse dashed down the road, dragging the buggy. Edgar started in pursuit but the agony from his ankle caused him to fall to his knees. The top of the buggy caught in a hedge. The horse, now mad with terror, plunged and kicked and then as in an instant freed himself of the buggy and ran for town, the harness hanging in tatters. All this time Edgar had kept one hand upon the pocket that held the medicine tube. He watched the horse out of sight, with groans of despair—not from his pain but from the knowledge that he could not get to town. After all his ride and when so near success, here he lay helpless, while his little friend was at the point of death. Could he crawl those two miles? At the first movement his pain brought a cry from his white lips. "Hole on there, gent," said a voice; it was the camper, who had been sitting by his fire alone, smoking a pipe. "Things is hap'ning here so consecutive that I can't keep up with the story. Wait and I'll see if I can help—why, it's Mr. Brown! And it's what you get for your treatment of me! Didn't 'spect 'to meet Nap this way, did you? Now you're low and I'm high. You're down and I'm up. But I don't bear you no malice. Lemme see where you're hurt You pore old horseless Lazarus, I feels like Dives a-waiting on you! And you tried to drive me out of the country! Good thing for you I'm here, ain't it? Nap comes in pretty good sometimes, don't he?"

SABBATH OR LORD'S DAY

By D. R. DUNGAN, author of "On the Rock," "Moses, the Man of God," etc. It is a powerful argument against Adventism, and the observance of the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week, as the day of rest and worship. Dr. Dungan is a man well versed in the Scriptures, and gifted with sound sense and good judgment. He is a strong and convincing writer. This work should be placed in the hands of those who have been disturbed by the teachings of Adventists.

The Terms of Discipleship.*

TEXT: Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. Matt. 16:24.

There can be no disciple without a Teacher or Master. Our thoughts are employed on the conditions or terms of discipleship, but our hearts are engaged with Him to whom we are disciples, Jesus the Christ. His name we have confessed, and Him will we serve and honor. May it not be said, without presumption, that God has given to us a somewhat clearer knowledge of this great subject than to many others? And with that knowledge goes responsibility.

Self-Surrender.

The very first step to discipleship is self-surrender. It is implied in the word, disciple; it is required by our Master; it is illustrated in the lives of Christians everywhere; and it is a fundamental part of the gospel. Sin is selfishness. It consists not merely of isolated acts of transgression; it is a principle at work in our members, and can be overcome only by the introduction of an opposite principle. The opposite is unselfishness or sacrifice. And so the cross of Christ is the divine antidote for sin. As soon as one has renounced himself, as Ian Maclaren puts it, he has ceased from sin; just as, when the light enters, the darkness departs.

It is easy to conceive of an external and formal obedience to the gospel without this absolute surrender of the life. Has this been our method? Or have we sought to bring our wills into harmony with God's? For ourselves, and for our friends, and for the world, there is no other way but the way of the cross. The old nature must die, with all its desires and appetites. We must put to death our members that are upon the earth. As "strangers and pilgrims," we must "abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul." Deny the animal, enthroned the angel; deny the flesh, and exalt the spirit.

The Obedience of Faith.

But this is not a matter of mystery. As soon as the will is subdued, as soon as we see in Christ our Lord and Master, there are certain definite acts by which we are to express our submission to Him. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:16). Read over carefully the simple commands of the gospel, and you will find faith must be followed by confession and that by baptism. Repentance comes in the spirit of self-renunciation, and the determination to abandon sin. Differing as churches do on these matters of detail, there are none but will acknowledge that he who believes with all his heart in Jesus Christ, sincerely repents of his sins, confesses his faith before the world, and is baptized into Christ, has thus become His disciple, has the forgiveness of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit.

As Mr. Campbell once said, "the obedience of faith" is applied to the gospel, to distinguish it from the obedience of law; and we are required to perform certain acts, in order that thereby we may have an assurance of forgiveness not otherwise to be obtained.

Steadfast Continuance.

"Then they that received his word were baptized. . . . And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and in prayers" (Acts 2:41,42). Thank God for the teaching of the apostles. There are many strange voices in the world to-day, and there is danger that the very elect shall be moved from the simplicity that is in Christ. Here is our refuge: to continue steadfastly in the teaching of the apostles. No modern apostle can for a moment compare with Paul and Peter and John. They represent Christ; they speak for Him; they knew His will.

Here and there we see men slip away from the living oracles, as if they were tired of them, but the faithful disciple still finds that the word of God is sweet to his soul. He is saying with Jeremiah, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them"; and this is not an occasional feast, but a daily privilege. Examine yourself; are you continuing in this blessed teaching, and in prayer, and in fellowship? For it is as necessary to continue as to begin.

A Righteous Life.

"Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world" (Titus 2:12). Never did the world wait more eagerly for the testimony of godly living. The disciple of Christ in business is watched narrowly. As a citizen, a neighbor, a father, a capitalist or a laborer, he is scrutinized by unfriendly critics. There is no substitute for a godly character. Without a constant struggle to develop and maintain it, we cannot continue to be disciples; we cannot find at last an abundant entrance into the paradise of God.

Prayer.

Help us, O God, to make known to all men everywhere the conditions of salvation. May

The Young Man From Middlefield, by Mrs Jessie Brown Pounds, which ran as a Serial in OUR YOUNG FOLKS during the first half of the year 1900, has been issued in book form, making a handsome volume of nearly three hundred pages. It was read with absorbing interest by a multitude of young people as it appeared from week to week in the columns of this journal, and many of them, we doubt not, will be glad of an opportunity to obtain a copy in this more convenient form. It should find a place in every Sunday-school, Endeavor and Family library. Price, in fine cloth, $1.00 per copy, postpaid. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

God Calls Abram.*

It might have been supposed that the lesson of the Flood would for all time preserve the descendants of Noah and his sons from abandoning the worship of God. But such was not the case. Human nature was weak and sinful, and the steps of man speedily turned again into the paths of evil. Even righteous Noah was tempted by the fruit of the vineyard which he had planted, and became drunken, to his own shame and the lasting dishonor of one branch of his descendants, the children of Ham. A few generations later, the presumption of the growing human family is seen in the arrogant proposal to build the Tower of Babel, resulting in the confusion of human language, and the scattering of men abroad over the face of the earth. By the time of the birth of Abraham, ten generations after Noah, idolatry had become so prevalent that the hope of the race lay in the separation of a chosen seed from among the nations to whom God might reveal himself more clearly, and through whom he might preserve a purer form of religious faith and worship.

According to the language of Stephen, in his famous address in Jerusalem as recorded in the seventh chapter of Acts, the first call of God to Abram came while he yet lived in Ur of the Chaldees, a city on the lower Euphrates. Whether Abram had ever worshiped idols, or was from the beginning a believer in the one true God, we may not certainly know. But it is certain that he promptly heard the call of Jehovah, and turned his back upon the superstitions of his people. Such was his influence over his family, that his father, Terah, gathered such of the household as were willing to share the journey, and started for Canaan. They went as far as Haran, some six or eight hundred miles north of Ur, in the district known as Mesopotamia, where they halted and remained for some years. Whether Terah found himself too feeble for the longer journey into Palestine, or whether his faith failed him at the crisis of the enterprise, we do not know. At any rate, they stayed there for five years, when again the call came to Abraham, and leaving his father in Haran, he took his way across the weary stretch of desert that lay between the upper valley of the Euphrates and the Lebanon mountains on his way to the land of promise.

The call to Abram was a test of his faith. "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto the land that I will show thee." He is not even told where he is to go, save that God will guide him. Yet his faith is encouraged by numerous great and precious promises. "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing, and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse, and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Never did such issues rest upon the life and faith of mortal man. And who can read history, or look about upon his own world to-day, without seeing how richly God has fulfilled these promises? The children of Abraham are in every land, and the revelation of God which they transmitted has been the chiefest treasure of the noblest nations, while in the Messiah whom they gave to the world the blessing of God is visiting all nations, and uplifting the lowliest of earth's inhabitants. Nearly one-half of the human family revere the name of Abraham to-day, as the "Father of the faithful."

The faith of Abram stood the test. "So Abram went, as the Lord had spoken unto him." The writer of the epistle to the Hebrews tells us that "he went out, not knowing whither he went." He took with him his wife, Sarai, afterwards called Sarah, and Lot, his nephew, with a great company of servants and followers whose numbers we do not know. But they must have been many, for some years later he was able to muster three hundred and eighteen trained men, capable of fighting under his leadership. The journey from Haran into Canaan would consume some weeks, or possibly months, for they must needs travel slowly, so as to allow the flocks and herds to graze along the way. Perhaps they passed through Damascus and thence followed the eastern bases of the Lebanon range of mountains, and crossing over the Jordan south of the Sea of Galilee, came finally to Shechem, the fertile valley lying at the base of mounts Ebal and Gerizim, in Samaria. After a long pilgrimage through the desert and along the base of the mountain range with its scattered vegetation, it would seem to the weary travelers like entering Paradise to come into the lovely valley of Shechem with its streams and fountains, its olives and figs, its wheat and barley fields. Here God gave to Abram the welcome assurance that this was the land of promise, which was to be the inheritance of his descendants. And, although Abram himself never acquired the full possession of any of the country, save a place to bury his dead, he doubted not the promise of Jehovah nor murmured at his providence.

"And there he builded an altar unto the Lord." Yes, and at Bethel and at Hebron and at every place where he tarried as a sojourner in the land of promise, he built an altar for worship and sacrifice. What an example to parents of this year of grace in the glorious Christian era, is this of faithful Abram. "Christian parents! ye who look back to Abraham's time as the 'starlight age,' and rejoice that you now bask in the beams of the Sun of Righteousness, where is your altar? Shall this homeless pilgrim dot the land with altars to Jehovah, and you be praiseless and prayerless in your settled homes?" Oh, for a revival of family worship, when the ruined altars shall be restored and the incense of loving praise go up to God from every hearthstone! Such a revival would give new life to our churches, new hope to the state and new enjoyment of religion to the individual believer.

But "the Canaanite was yet in the land," we are told, and Abram soon found that he could not hope to dwell undisturbed by these troublesome neighbors. He makes his way southward through the land, staying for a short time at the place afterwards famous as Bethel, or the House of God, where for centuries there was preserved an altar to the God of hosts. With the coming of this pilgrim from the banks of the Euphrates, a new sound was heard amid the hills and vales of Canaan, even the name of Jehovah, the ever-living God, whose pure worship and holy teachings were for ages to come to put to shame the licentious rites and gross superstitions of the gods of the corrupt Canaanites. The hero of faith had come and even Canaan should feel the power of his presence.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A GOOD COMPLEXION

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secrets for securing a clear complexion. But all these are simply superficial assistants.

It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly, unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood, a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexion clear. When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary, take these tablets and eat all the good wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man and woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and costs but 50 cents per package.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health, and a clear, bright complexion.

*Lesson for July 28. Genesis 12:1-9.

Christian Endeavor

Burris (A. Jenkins.)

TOPIC FOR JULY 28.

Missions—True Philanthropy. (Gal. 6:1-10.)

If Christianity is the highest and best religious truth, then it is evident that philanthropy calls for the free distribution of it. To keep it back would be to act against the principles of philanthropy.

"If a man be overtaken in any trespass," the whole world is, in its own consciousness, overtaken in sin and wrong. Our duty, then, to the world, if we are spiritual, is to restore the world to the sense of forgiveness.

"Bear ye one another's burdens" is an obligation that extends not merely to men of white skins, but men of black and brown. The white man's burden is not the only one we are to share; but also that of the negro in Alabama, the Hawaiian in the South Seas.

"Let us not be weary in well doing," but keep on assaulting the stone walls of heathenism and trying to batter down its Gibraltars. For we shall succeed in due season if we faint not.

"Work that which is good toward all men"—the universalism of Christianity, the effort to do well towards all, world-wide sympathy, these things are all to be found in this phrase.

These are the only clauses in this Scripture passage that can be said to be missionary by any sort of interpretation.

But there are plenty of other good texts of Scripture that are missionary. The gospel is shot through and through with missionary spirit, as threads of gilt are woven in tapestries. The gospel is, at heart, love for man. Love for man dictates the proclamation of such good news to all. Love for man is, in another language, philanthropy.

The humanitarian motive, or the motive of philanthropy, is in itself enough to lead us to missionary work. We have, in this day, lost the old Calvinistic motive of saving men from eternal destruction, imminent and fiery, for their ignorance of Christ. But we have gained a better motive of saving men from sin, of purifying their lives, cleansing their homes, giving them clear water to drink without typhoid germs, and taking care of their sick. To look out for people in this world and teach them how to live in it is a pretty good way of preparing them for a life to come. At all events it is a beginning.

This humanitarian motive, this attempt to do good to men and women for love of them, is a growing spring of action. It does not cut the nerve of missions. Far from it. It only develops the missionary enthusiasm. Those who most keenly feel the degradation of the world, and most earnestly desire to lift men up to a higher and sweeter and holier life, are the ones who will wish to send the gospel to the ends of the earth. They are the true philanthropists.

Every Lady Should Compete For This Prize.

The "HENDERSON ROUTE" is publishing a book of smart sayings of little children under the age of five years, and in order to get data for this publication they are offering two prizes. For the smartest saying a prize of ten dollars in gold will be given, and for the next smartest saying five dollars in gold.

In order to receive recognition all sayings forwarded must be accompanied with the full name, address, and age of the child.

A competent committee will have the contest in charge, and the winners will be promptly notified.

All sending in sayings will receive a copy of the book, without cost, when published, which will be handsomely bound and contain, in addition to the interesting sayings of the wee tots, a select number of fine half-tone pictures of children.

DAVIS.

On April 25, I was called to Gallatin to preach the funeral of Annie Eliza Davis. She was born Oct. 7, 1847. Three of her brothers were preachers of the gospel, viz.: N. Rolla, of Maryville, Mo., R. N., of California, and Joseph, who died a number of years ago. She became a Christian at the early age of 13 and her entire Christian career was given to the service of the Lord and humanity. She taught in the public schools for more than twenty years and was very successful, not only in training the mind, but in developing the moral and spiritual nature as well. As a teacher she believed that education involved the development of the soul as well as the intellect. She spent six years of the latter part of her life in California. During these years she was actively engaged in C. W. B. M. work, and the cause of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in California owes much to her consecrated efforts. She gave the last four or five years of her life largely to the family of her brother's widow. She was confined to her bed for about two months before the end came, and when it came she was the same thoughtful, trustful, happy woman she had been during her active life. Thus this noble woman lived and died. Like Paul she could say: "To live is Christ, but to die is gain." W. G. SURBER.

EVANS.

James Lester Evans was drowned while bathing in the Cedar river at Waterloo, Iowa, July 2, 1901. Lester was one of our noblest young men, and lived a life of honor, truth, and soberness, always serving the Master. He was baptized by his father, C. E. Evans. The family, consisting of father, mother, and three brothers, moved to Waterloo only a few months ago. Lester was 19 years of age. JOE S. RILEY.

FAIRLEY.

Mrs. Malinda J. Fairley was born in Knoxville, Tenn., March 3, 1831, married Cornelius P. Fairley, May 4, 1848 in Zanesville, O., and soon after moved to Princeton, Mo. She was the mother of seven children, three of whom survive her: D. B. and C. W., of Colorado Springs, and A. L., of Princeton, Mo. The father died in 1863 from disease contracted while serving in the Union army. Sister Fairley came to Colorado Springs in 1884. Four years ago she suffered a paralytic shock from which she never recovered. She passed quietly to her rest at the residence of her youngest son, C. W., with whom she had always made her home in Colorado Springs, Sunday night, June 23, 1901, aged 70 years, three months and 20 days. A service was conducted by the writer, and the body was taken to the old home at Princeton, Mo., for final interment. Sister Fairley became a Christian in her girlhood, and was ever active, benevolent and exemplary in all her relations in life. J. P. LUCAS.

Colorado City, Col., July 1.

MITCHELL.

Died, at her home in Ashland, Ill., aged 80 years, Mrs. Rebecca Crow Mitchell. Funeral services were held in the Christian Church before a large audience, the sermon being preached by the writer. Sister Mitchell was born June 9, 1821, and was the daughter of William Crow, a Baptist preacher. October 9, 1841, she married Washington A. Mitchell, with whom she lived over half a century, Mr. Mitchell dying one year after their golden

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?

A large interrogation, truly! It would be difficult to frame a more fundamental question than this, which has been chosen as the title of the new book by W. J. Russell. No more valuable volume for young people has ever been issued. What is Your Life? is easily worth $10,000 to any young man or woman who will faithfully follow its teaching. The general scope of the book is shown by the titles of some of the chapters: "The Value of Time," "The Body and Good Health," "Character Building," "Good Books and Good Reading," etc. The volume is not only helpful and profitable, but is also interesting and entertaining. Mr. Russell has avoided that didactic, dogmatic, prosy style so usual in works of this class. He has written in a bright, lively vein. His book will be read by young people who would refuse to read the average volume of advice to the young.

wedding. Four children, C. C., W. I., A. J., and Anna Mitchell, remain to cherish her memory and mourn her loss. She united with the Baptists in youth and later became a member of the Christian Church and remained a faithful member until her death. In her long and earnest life she made hosts of friends and will be greatly missed in the home, the church, the community.

C. E. SMOOT.

California the Mecca of Every American.

A certain advertising agency employs a significant phrase in its own advertising, namely, "The time to advertise is all the time." So in reference to visiting the Golden Gate state. The time to go is either spring or summer, fall or winter or between seasons.

The many trans-continental lines of railway now in operation afford, not only cheap fare, but superior service and quick time. Some are better than others in this respect. Surely no system has surpassed the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain in providing for the comfort and convenience of the traveling public. Especially has the passenger department of this great system exerted itself in preparing for the Epworth League convention to be held in San Francisco from July 18th to 21st. They offer a choice of two routes, with an innumerable number of advantages as to stop-overs at points of interest, with a list of diverse routes in the far west which will no doubt puzzle many a "tenderfoot."

The very low rates offered to the Epworth League are open to all. Many who have waited long and patiently for opportunity to visit the land of sunshine and flowers will do so at this most opportune time. Tickets are good going from July 6th to 13th, with a final return limit of August 31st.

Cheap Excursions to Utah.

While there are tourist rates to Salt Lake City and Ogden and return in effect every day, a special opportunity is afforded to visit the World's greatest sanitarium and health and pleasure resort through a series of cheap excursions to leave Chicago, St. Louis and Missouri river points July 1st to 9th inclusive, and September 1st to 10th inclusive, at rate of $40.00 from Chicago, $36.00 from St. Louis and $30.00 from Omaha, Kansas City, St. Joseph, etc., etc. On July 10th to August 31st inclusive, round trip rate to St. Lake and Ogden will be $44.50 from Chicago, $39.50 from St. Louis and $32.00 from Missouri river stations; proportionate rates from intermediate points. These dates and rates are subject to change.

No place in the universe presents such a complement of attractions as Salt Lake City. It is the place of the great Mormon Temple and Tabernacle, the seat of ecclesiastical authority of the Saints and the home of their prophet. It is quaint and curious and picturesque in environment. The summer climate is incomparable. There are cool mountain and lake resorts near by, the greatest of which is Saltair Beach on Great Salt Lake. Here you can float upon the surface of the water almost a mile above sea-level. Within the limits of the city are Warm Sulphur and Hot Springs, parks, drives and beautiful canyons. Furthermore, the trip to Utah by way of Denver and Colorado Springs over the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY in connection with either the Denver & Rio Grande or Colorado Midland railroads is one of unequalled splendor. The scenery is the most magnificent in America. Send two cents postage for copy "Salt Lake City—the City of the Saints," to Geo. W. The unusual healthfulness of the climate, and the educational advantages, makes the Mary Baldwin Seminary for young ladies, Staunton, Va., the popular school that it is. Twenty thousand dollars has been expended on the property during the past year in new buildings and other improvements which will add greatly to the comfort and convenience of the students. With increased facilities and a generous endowment, the seminary offers greater inducements than ever before to those in search of a classical education. The watchword of this institution is Progress.

Madison Institute is represented in our advertising columns again this year as usual. It is one of the very best of schools for girls. The name of J. W. McGarvey, Jr., now appears as its principal. Herein is ample promise that the school will maintain or even surpass its former high standard. Bro. McGarvey brings to it a long and successful experience in school work of various kinds. The ten teachers who are to co operate with him have been carefully selected, thus forming an exceptionally strong faculty. In addition to the usual advantages there is added this year the illustrated lectures on Bro. McGarvey's recent visit to Palestine, Egypt and Europe. These will be frequent and free.

Richmond, Ky., the home of Madison Institute, is favorably located. The healthfulness of the place could have no greater commendation than the fact that but one case of serious illness has existed in the school within ten years. Our columns have not infrequently contained references to the beauty of the location of the institute. Interested parents will make detailed inquiry about it.

OPPORTUNITY

I DO not know if, climbing some steep hill
Through fragrant wooded pass, this glimpse
I bought:
Or whether in some midday I was caught
To upper air, where visions of God's will
In pictures to our quickened sense fulfill His word. But this I saw:
A path I sought
Through wall of rock. No human fingers wrought
The golden gates which opened, sudden, still,
And wide. My fear was hushed by my delight.
Surpassing fair the lands; my path lay plain;
Alas! so spellbound, feasting on the sight,
I paused, that I but reached the threshold bright,
When, swinging swift, the golden gates again
Were rocky walls, by which I wept in vain!

NOTES.

The total enrollment, all departments, last year, 1,764, not counting the Summer Schools, 1,140. Notable material improvements of the past summer: Completion of Auditorium; new portico and other improvements to Main Building; new Pharmaceutical Laboratory; new rooms for Business Department, new desks, etc.; new Bacteriological Laboratory; 3,500 square feet of cement walks; renovation of Gymnasium. In faculty equipment the most notable thing has been: 1. Complete reorganization of the Department of Music, under the leadership of Mr. Frederic Howard, of New York; 2. The Bible College has been greatly strengthened by the addition of Dr. Clinton Lockhart; 3. The Medical Department has been completely merged into the organic life of the University. The first and second years are now taught in the Science Hall on the Campus; 4. The Des Moines College of Dental Surgery has become an affiliated department. It will add eighty students to the College rolls. 5. The addition of many new teachers to the faculty of the University.

The University has made a steady and rapid growth in the twenty years of its history. It is expected the enrollment will reach 1,900 the coming year. The location in Des Moines, with its state and city libraries, its courts, hospitals, churches, societies, etc., is excellent in every respect. Send for general catalog, 200 pages, free.

Current Events.

Will Protection Be An Issue?

The recent trouble between our government and Russia, which has grown out of a natural and inevitable interpretation of our tariff law by the Secretary of the Treasury, gives rise to renewed questioning of the wisdom of the law itself. It is useless to criticise Mr. Gage for ordering a countervailing duty on sugar. No convincing argument has been brought forward to show that he could legally avoid doing so. If Russia's retaliatory tariff harms our trade, that does not prove that Mr. Gage interpreted the Dingley law wrongly, but it may indicate that the law is not perfect. It suggests, too, a reconsideration of the whole question of protection. The efficiency of the tariff as a means of raising revenue has been abundantly proved in the last few years, but the principle of protection is not so easy to reconcile with some of the positions which our government has taken. Protection and expansion do not seem adapted to be permanent comrades, nor does protection seem to be wholly consistent with the demand for the commercial "open door" in the east. So long as we were pre-eminently an importing nation and American manufacturers had no higher ambition than to supply the home market, we could protect our infant industries and laugh at threats of retaliation. But now that we are pre-eminently an exporting nation, retaliation may be a serious matter. Besides, the favorite old argument about "infant industries" has become too mirth-provoking to be effective in debate. It may be that the changed conditions of the present will bring the tariff question again into the political arena and make it an issue of the first magnitude.

The Chinese Indemnity.

It is a relief to note the announcement that the Ministers at Peking have agreed upon the amount, the method and the time of payment of the Chinese indemnity. The amount is 450,000,000 taels at 4 per cent. China is to pay 23,000,000 taels a year, which at first will do little more than pay the interest. A sinking fund will be established with the balance, and the bonds will be liquidated about 1940. The money is to come from the salt tax, the maritime customs, and the likin or internal transportation tax. Our government has from the first opposed any increase of the import duties and accordingly protested against demanding an indemnity which would require such an increase. The tariff averages now about five per cent. ad valorem, and it would seem that this might be doubled without seriously injuring any interest. The Japanese government caused a stay in the proceedings by requesting an increase in the indemnity allotted to it because it cannot dispose of four per cent.

bonds at par and will lose about fifteen per cent. But to prevent delay and a general increase for the others, Japan has withdrawn this request. It has been suggested that the Ministers of the Powers decide upon the disposition of Manchuria while they are together, a suggestion which Russia resents, ostensibly out of consideration for China's rights, but really with a view to her own interests there. There will probably be no need now for the ministers to adjourn to the Hague.

Postal Reform.

A periodical spasm of reform strikes the postal authorities about once in each administration and the abuses of second-class postal rates always form the chief theme for discussion and attempted legislation at such times. Mail matter of the second class includes periodicals published quarterly or oftener and having a definite list of paid subscribers, and the publishers of this class of matter are given a rate of one cent a pound. The service costs more than this, but the importance of encouraging the spread of intelligence through the circulation of newspapers and magazines makes it worth while for the government to pay the deficit. But under cover of this low rate other publications are entered which are not second-class matter within the meaning of the law. Books issued serially do not cease to be books and ought to pay the book rate of one cent per ounce, but the publishers save thousands of dollars annually at the expense of the government by entering them as second-class matter and sending them at the lower rate. Most of the measures proposed to remedy this and similar abuses have been so sweeping as to interfere with legitimate periodicals. This was the case with the Loud bill. But the Postmaster-General has recently issued three orders which, if thoroughly enforced, ought to save the government several million dollars a year without working hardship to any genuine periodical. These three orders prohibit the granting of second-class rates for novels published serially and for large almanacs; for newspapers which are essentially advertising schemes or which secure subscribers by offering premiums to the approximate value of the subscription price, thereby making the subscription merely nominal; for the return of unsold copies of periodicals by news agents. It is hoped that by the application of these rules a sufficient saving will be effected to permit the introduction of the one cent letter rate at least for local letters. There has been a notable increase in the number of stamps sold during the past year. The total number for the year was more than five billion, of which three and one half billion were two-cent stamps. We are told—and it seems credible—that these would make a ribbon three inches wide three times around the world.

Parcels Post.

Another much-needed reform in our postal service is a method of sending packages by mail at a reasonable rate. There is no reason why the post office department, with its full equipment for the service, should leave to the express companies practically the entire business of carrying small parcels of merchandise which it could do more cheaply and with more convenience for the public. All the principal European countries have a domestic parcels post service, by which an eleven-pound package can be sent from one part of the country to another for from eight to twenty-four cents, and smaller ones in proportion. By international agreement low rates are made from one country to another. The United States is a party to such an agreement by which parcels can be sent from Germany to this country cheaply, but not from this country to Germany at the same rate. For example, an eleven-pound package can be sent from any post office in Germany to St. Louis (or any other point in this country) for fifty-eight cents. The same package if sent from New York to St. Louis could not go by mail, for the limit of fourth class mail matter is four pounds. It would have to be sent by express and would cost $1.46. The advantage of the German merchant who has retail customers in this country over the New York house doing a mail business is obvious. If the reform contemplated in regard to second class matter shall encourage the department to experiment with a parcels post it will be doubly worth while. The subject was taken up in the last Congress by Mr. Bromwell, of Ohio, who pointed out the commercial advantages which would accrue from the establishment of a parcels post similar to those of England and Germany.

Petty Annoyances.

It is not a matter of surprise, or of much regret, that the attempt to collect money for the use of seats in a New York park provoked such stubborn opposition that the plan had to be given up and the concession to the owner of the seats revoked. There was a lively suspicion—as there always is about anything done by the New York city government—that the removal of the free seats from the park and the granting of this concession to a private company was a political job. Whether it was or not, the arrangement was something which the average American has no mind to endure. When he wants to sit down in a public park, he does not want to be bothered by a collector approaching to demand two cents for the privilege. He feels that a public park is his park and he no more expects to pay for a seat there than in his own parlor. But aside from the sense of ownership, and even more universal than that, is the American's dislike to being annoyed by these petty charges. In the Paris Exposition there were thousands of chairs owned by a concessionaire, and whoever sat down in one was straightway approached by a collector who for two cents issued a ticket entitling one not only to sit where he was as long as he pleased, but to sit in any other chair in any part of the grounds on that day. Most Americans would have preferred to have the two cents added to the price of admission. But that was not the French way. The custom of tipping involves the same principle. There is not much difference in actual cost between a $4-a-day hotel with no tips and a $3-a-day hotel where one is expected to pay another dollar a day in tips. Yet the average American leaves the latter with the sensation of having been robbed. He has not been robbed; he has only been annoyed. So long as this view of matters is dominant, it is not likely that any attempt to collect rent for the use of a park chair will be successful in this country.

A New Treaty Project.

It is reported that Lord Pauncefoot, who is now in England, is conferring with Lord Lansdowne of the Foreign Office, and hopes to be able to bring back to Washington in the fall a draft of an isthmian canal treaty which will be acceptable to the Senate as well as to the administration. It is useless, he says, to submit a treaty which the Senate will reject. The British ambassador particularly desires to crown his diplomatic career with this achievement. It is, of course, impossible to do more than guess at the concessions which Great Britain may make toward the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, but evidently it is beginning to be felt that the existence of the canal for commercial use is too important to be interfered with by the fear that America will control it in a possible war. Several other treaties are also pending between the United States and Great Britain, most of which are for reciprocity with the British West Indies.

Riches and Success.

Mr. Rockefeller recently admitted in a public address, with commendable frankness, that he was glad he was rich and that he was probably happier as a rich man than he would have been as a poor man. This is a refreshing concession as compared with the usual hypocritical commonplaces of the rich men who talk about the cares and sorrows of wealth, but tenaciously hold all they have and reach out eagerly for more, meanwhile looking down upon everyone who is not rich as a failure in life—as if riches constituted the only mark of success. If there is one thing more wearisome than the plaint of the moralizing millionaire about the hardships of his lot—a lot which he could escape any day if he really wanted to—it is the attitude of the rich man who lectures to the young or writes magazine articles on How to Succeed. Such deliverances may usually be boiled down into about this: "Fix your eye on me, young man, for I am the true and only type of genuine success. I started without money and I now have stacks of it, all of which I have gained by my own unaided effort, through industry and genius, in spite of the opposition of a hard and cruel world. If you are looking for a sample of success gaze upon me, for I am the real thing.

Follow in my illustrious footsteps and you, too, may reach the same shining goal, which is the only goal worth trying to reach. But never forget that life is a failure unless you get money and plenty of it, as I have." This was the gist of an address recently delivered by Mr. Schwab, the man who draws a million dollars a year in his pay envelope. Being probably the only man in the world (kings barred) who ever received that salary, it is, perhaps, natural for him to take that view of the case, especially since he has not held his high position long enough to be quite accustomed to the dizzy height. It was a relief to note that, when Mr. Rockefeller recently addressed his son's Bible-school class in a New York Baptist church, he did not try to tell them how to succeed in getting rich, but, while frankly admitting that he found wealth very pleasant and would not care to change his condition, he laid emphasis upon the truth that getting money is not necessarily success and is certainly not the only kind of success.

The Weather.

It is not likely that we can tell our readers anything about the weather which will be news to them, but it is useless to attempt to overlook this topic which is by all odds the most important and most absorbing of the week. So far as the heat is concerned it is an inconvenience and a discomfort, but since there have been remarkably few prostrations it is not really a serious matter. But the accompanying drought is serious and is becoming more so. In such a case newspaper reports, even when true in detail, inevitably convey an exaggerated idea of the damage that is being done, for the most startling reports are given the most prominent place. There is no question, however, but that the long-continued drought has almost destroyed an unusually promising crop of corn in many states. The Department of Agriculture, which was conservative in admitting the extent of the damage, now states that corn is suffering severely in nineteen states. It is noteworthy that the very frequency of droughts in Colorado, necessitating irrigation, has saved the state from the ill effects of this dry weather. The drought has produced a natural corner in corn, which requires no manipulation, and is sending the prices steadily up.

Progress of the Strike.

Strictly speaking, the strike of the steel workers has made no progress at all since its initiation on Monday of last week. The men who went out at that time have stayed out and a few more have joined them. The advantage of the strikers lies in the fact that they are holding their own in the face of bold predictions that workmen would be imported and the striking mills operated with a loss of only a day or two. The imported men have not appeared in any considerable numbers and the mills at Wells-ville and McKeesport, the most important points, have not been supplied with non-union men, as the operators expected. The strike appears to command the quite general sympathy of all branches of the Amalgamated Association and also of the Federation of Labor, whose immense membership will contribute to the support of the strikers. President Shaffer of the Amalgamated Association takes a hopeful view of the situation and encourages the men to enjoy their summer vacation. This hot weather is a poor time for mill work anyhow. He says: "There were not enough men in the country to run the mills before the strike; so all you need to win the strike is—don't work." Very attractive advice when the thermometer is at 107° in the shade. Mr. Shaffer deserves credit for counseling the men to preserve order and sobriety; not to drink and not to fight, especially if the trust tries to break the strike by importing non-union men. If the Amalgamated Association can conduct a strike in which the strikers will not appeal to force when non-union men are imported, it will deserve success whether it attains it or not.

The Desertion of Mr. Towne.

That Mr. Towne, who deserted the Republican party in 1896 and rallied the silver Republicans of the western states to the support of Bryan, has abandoned the free silver doctrine, is perhaps not a piece of political news of the first magnitude; but it is significant in connection with the recent action of the Ohio Democrats. "Free silver as an issue is absolutely dead in the West," says Mr. Towne. "I do not believe it will be mentioned in the Democratic platform or campaign of 1904. The feeling among Democrats in the West is that they want to win and they do not care a rap what kind of a platform they have so long as it brings victory." The latter remark is probably more or less unjust, but if so it shows how complete is Mr. Towne's desertion of his adopted party. A Democratic paper, in commenting upon his second change of political faith, says that it is of no consequence to the party, for Towne is "only a sort of Webster Davis anyway"; that the Republican party lost little when it lost Davis and will gain little when it recovers Towne. These are cruel comments but they complete the picture. We know now what Mr. Towne thinks of the Democracy and what the Democracy thinks of Mr. Towne.

Brevities.

Director-General Buchanan, of the Buffalo Exposition, visited St Louis last week to confer with the directors of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. A director-general for the latter has not yet been chosen.

The Epworth League Convention was held at San Francisco last week. From the time of the founding of the Christian Endeavor Society, in 1881, until 1889 the Methodist young people co-operated with that Society. But in the latter year the leaders of the denomination, fearing the unifying tendency of Christian Endeavor, organized the Epworth League, which has since had a marvelous growth.

South Carolina protests against paying to the federal government the internal revenue tax which is collected from all wholesale and retail liquor dealers. In South Carolina liquor is sold only at dispensaries conducted by the state. The state becomes, therefore, a liquor-dealer and there is no apparent reason why it should not pay taxes as such. Even if, as the state claims, it is a legitimate exercise of the police power, the supreme court is not likely to allow this to interfere with the collection of the federal revenue.

May We Pray for Rain?

We see that Governor Dockery of Missouri has issued a proclamation, calling upon the religious people of the state to pray for rain. An instance is cited where Governor Hardin issued such proclamation during his administration and the drought was broken in three days. This raises the old question as to whether prayer has any legitimate relation to the processes of the material world. It is always said by those who doubt the efficacy of prayer for blessings that come through natural laws, that the world is under the government of fixed and immutable laws, and that it is folly to expect that these laws will be affected by our prayers. Rain, they say, depends upon the conditions of the atmosphere, the direction of the wind, and other causes known and unknown to us. What is the use to pray for rain in the absence of these conditions?

But does this reasoning close the case against prayer for rain, or other material blessings which come to us under the operation of physical laws? There is something to be said, it seems to us, on the other side. Christians believe in a personal God, who is behind all natural laws, and who is the source of such laws. He ministers to man's material needs through these laws, which are but the outgoings of His infinite will. Science has not yet discovered all the laws and the conditions which govern the weather. Meteorological conditions change and upset the calculations of the weather bureau and the weather prophets. There are unknown forces at work here which elude the investigations of science. Who is wise enough to say that none of these forces or conditions are of such a nature as to be modified by spiritual force? We know, as a matter of fact, that while the human body, like everything else, is under natural laws, yet it is powerfully affected by the condition of the mind, by the decisions of the human will. This will be freely admitted, but it will be said that the human mind or spirit dwells in the human body, and the relation is so close that the condition of the mind naturally affects that of the body. But who is prepared to say that God does not dwell in His world, in an even more intimate relation to all its processes, than the human spirit dwells in the body?

When we come to look the doctrine of the divine immanence square in the face—the doctrine of God's presence in all the processes of the natural world as well as in the ongoings of human history, now recognized by the best thought in both science and religion—the idea of prayer for rain loses the apparent absurdity it may take on in the eyes of a superficial thinker. This is especially true when it is remembered that this God who is present in His world and in whom we live and move and have our being, is our Father, and that He uses natural and spiritual laws alike for the benefit of His children—His intelligent creation. Is it a thing incredible that this Infinite and Eternal Being revealed by Christ as our Father, hearing the cries of His children for relief from drought, should by His will so influence the operation of these natural laws by the introduction of a higher law, as to accomplish the end desired in bringing the needed rain? Why may not prayer itself be that higher spiritual force which, through the will of God, may effect the needed change? There is too much in this wide realm that we do not know for any one to be dogmatic as to the uselessness of prayer. Besides, it can not be displeasing to the Infinite Father for His children to call upon Him in every time of affliction and need for His aid.

It remains to be said that, of course, the withholding of rain for a time may accomplish more for man's higher good than would the giving of the early and the latter rains in their season. This is always the case when it leads men to recognize their dependence upon God, and to look to Him in penitence and prayer for His continued blessings. Unbroken prosperity, it would seem, is not good for any of us. We incline to forget God, and our hearts become proud and haughty. It is far better for us that adversity, in some form, should humble us, and bring us to realize our dependence upon God, than that we should be permitted to go on in prosperity and forgetfulness of God to the destruction of our higher interests. We should, therefore, make our prayers for rain and for every other material blessing in the spirit of submission which cries, "Not my will, but thine be done!" Subject to this condition, we see no reason why those who believe in God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, should not pray for rain.

In addition to all this, we have the scriptural examples of prayer for material blessings, and even for rain. The case of Elijah is cited by a New Testament writer, James, as an encouragement to prayer. If it be said, this was under the old dispensation, when material blessings were offered as a reward for obedience to God, our reply is, that we have much more encouragement to pray for whatever we need, in the light of Christ's revelation of God, than the Jews could have had before Christ's coming. Christ manifested a tender regard for man's material wants. He healed the sick, he fed the hungry multitudes, he ministered to all man's wants. In all this He was revealing the Father, who cares for His children, and who may be asked for whatever good thing any of them may need, with boldness and confidence.

The Real Issue.

The Christian Commonwealth of June 27 contains an interesting discussion between the Rev. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, London, and Dr. W. T. Moore, founder and editor of that paper. The question they discuss is: "Can Baptists and Congregationalists Unite?" The subject was recently discussed by Dr. Parker in his address as chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. The interview took place on the lawn of Dr. Parker's residence at Tynehome, Hampstead. Dr. Moore aims to represent the Baptist position, and not, as we take it, to express his own opinions. The interview was reported by a stenographer, verbatim. The contest centers about the question of baptism, and particularly infant baptism, for Dr. Moore seems to concede for the Baptists that they would waive the question of exclusive immersion provided the Congregationalists would abandon infant baptism and substitute for it infant dedication. The discussion is chiefly interesting as indicating the point of view of Dr. Parker and those for whom he speaks. One of his statements is: "I would baptize all little children. I would enlarge the word 'baptism.' I would separate it from mere water." Again, in answer to Dr. Moore's question: "Did not Jesus give distinct and specific instruction with respect to this matter of baptism, and did not his disciples continually practice according to his instruction?" Dr. Parker replied: "I deny that he ever gave any instructions about baptism." Again, Dr. Moore says: "But Congregationalists consider baptism in some form a divine institution." To this Dr. Parker makes the following astonishing reply: "I think not. I never heard of it. I would repudiate it." Mr. Paul Moore then asked: "Then why do they have the ordinance, Doctor?" Dr. Parker: "Simply because they believe that Jesus Christ adopted infants—recognized infants."

Dr. Moore: "But did He not command baptism?"

Dr. Parker: "Never."

Dr. Moore: "Did he not say, 'Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost'?"

Dr. Parker: "He did—but without water."

Dr. Moore then referred to the practice of the apostles, but Dr. Parker was not convinced that either Christ or his apostles gave any divine sanction to baptism in water.

We do not know how far Dr. Parker represents Congregationalists and other pedobaptists, but we submit that if this is a fair statement of their position there is a question between us to be discussed that lies far back of baptism. It is the question of the credibility of the New Testament record as conveying to us the words and the will of Christ. This involves another question, as to the authority of the apostles, or their equipment by the Holy Spirit to make an authentic record of Christ's teaching, and to carry out His will in the establishment of the Church. The question of baptism should never be named with Dr. Parker and those who agree with him, until this primary question as to whether baptism is a divine institution or a human expedient is settled. Of course, if it is a mere human fancy, every man has a perfect right to decide whether he will be baptized himself, or whether he will teach baptism to others, and what kind of a ceremony he will call baptism. Dr. Parker is right, if his premises are right.

We have for some time been inclined to think that the real point of difference must lie back there in the relation of Christ's authority to the institutions of His Church. We hope Drs. Parker and Moore will hold another discussion covering that ground. The man who can take baptism in water out of the commission which Christ gave to His disciples has settled the baptismal controversy by destroying baptism as an ordinance resting on the authority of Christ. But along with baptism goes the Lord's Supper and some other things we have supposed had the divine sanction. It is no longer a question as to what Christ meant when He commanded His disciples to baptize believers, but whether Christ ever gave any such command. We hold that He did. Dr. Parker denies. This is the issue.

Some of the comments on the interview between Drs. Parker and Moore are quite as suggestive as the interview itself. Rev. Wm. Pierce, for instance, speaking from the pedobaptist point of view, says: "Dr. Moore has no notion what infant baptism means to us; and I am bound to believe, therefore, that I do not comprehend what adult baptism means to the Baptists." This is frank and, we are inclined to think, very true also. Very few people have the faculty of putting themselves in another man's position and looking at a question from his point of view. Back of that, however, lies the original question as to the teaching of the New Testament on that subject, provided we are going to continue seriously our contention that the New Testament is our rule of faith and practice. Mr. Pierce further says: "Dr. Moore proposes, in good earnest, that if we give up our baptism, the only baptism that to us has any meaning and can by any means be defended in the spirit and teaching of a non-ceremonial faith, . . . then we shall be tolerated in a united body." That is to say, infant affusion is the only "baptism" that has any meaning to Mr. Pierce and those for whom he speaks, and is the only baptism that can be defended "in the spirit and teaching of a non-ceremonial faith." To the extent that this view prevails among pedobaptists, union with those who accept believers' baptism only would seem to be quite impossible. The man to whom the baptism of a penitent believer is no baptism has completely drifted away from the New Testament point of view.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, writing on the same subject, suggests a less objectionable view. He thinks union is impossible on the lines of the discussion between Drs. Parker and Moore; but he asks: "But why cannot those who agree in accepting the Congregational method of church government unite on that basis, leaving the question of baptism an open one to be decided by individuals, whether for themselves or others. Why should there not be a baptistery and a font in every building; not in the church or auditorium, but in some hall or room specially devoted to the rite; and let every family or individual make private arrangements with the minister of the church or with some other minister, for the administration of the rite according to conscientious conviction?" Impracticable as this scheme would prove to be in most cases, it at least has the merit of binding no one's conscience or stifling no one's voice on the subject of baptism. It occurs to us, however, that, until there is a more general agreement than at present exists between Baptists and pedobaptists on the subject of baptism, it were better, in the interests of both truth and freedom, that the bodies should remain separate, cultivating the most amicable relations and co-operating in all possible ways for the furthering of the kingdom, and waiting and working for that time when a clearer knowledge of Christ's will, and a larger charity, will remove this obstacle to a closer union.

It is sometimes said—and truly—that the pulpit is not the place for doubts and negations but for positive truth. There are those, however, who consider that nothing is "positive" except fiery doctrines with which men sometimes obscure the gospel. But really, heaven is as positive as hell, and love is as positive as hate.

Notes and Comments.

President G. Stanley Hall in a recent address before the National Educational Society expressed the opinion that children ought not to be taught to read and write until they are at least eight years old, and that nature-study should be substituted for book-study during the first year or two of the child's student life. It does seem a shame that our system of education, as a rule, takes no advantage of the natural curiosity with which childhood regards all visible and tangible things and, instead of making his question-asking proclivity the point of departure for an intellectual discipline, stops his questioning about things that interest him and sets him to learning his letters out of a book, before he can possibly have any reasonable interest in books or letters, or any understanding of their value to him. President Hall's idea seems sensible, even if it would not develop precocious geniuses like John Stuart Mill, who began Greek at three, or John Fiske, who could read and write seven languages and had read most of the standard histories before he was old enough to go to college. The common schools are not for the geniuses, but for the average, normal child.

It is an oft-repeated assertion that college life is dangerous to religious faith and that the state universities are particularly perilous. The facts do not bear out this assertion. In the Missouri State University during the past year more than fifty per cent. of the students were members of churches, while less than ten per cent. of the young people in the whole country are church members. There is probably not a college in the country which has a Y. M. C. A. in which the membership in proportion to the number of students is not larger than the membership in any town or city in proportion to the number who are eligible to membership. There is freedom of thought at a university, but there is nothing so safe as freedom for young persons of college age, and nothing so dangerous as unreasonable repression. A freedom with wise guidance is what the college ought to give and what most of them, we believe, actually do give. There is no safer place for a young man or woman, either morally or religiously, than in college.

A certain Baptist paper fears for the preservation of the faith because another Baptist paper says that Adam, as described in Genesis, was a "naked, untutored son of the forest—in short, a savage," and thinks that this characterization dishonors both Adam and his Maker. In repudiating the charge that Adam was a savage it quotes as proof the statement that he was created in the image of God. But are not all savages in the image of God? John G. Paton, who has devoted his life to trying to convert the savages of the New Hebrides, will probably tell you that they are, and that that is the reason why he wants to save them.

It is said of a certain church that "no strangers are allowed within its doors." How inhospitable that sounds. One is shocked, too, to learn that it is one of our churches and one of our most prominent. It may be further explained, however, that no strangers are allowed in the church because as soon as anyone enters the church he ceases to be a stranger and is made to feel as much at home as if he had belonged there all his life. After all, perhaps this sort of exclusion of strangers is not so bad as it sounded at first reading.

A writer in an exchange says that in Russia, with the exception of Finland and Poland, no religious service can be held except by a priest of the Russian-Greek Church. The statement is not quite accurate, for there are Anglican churches here and there in the larger cities for English-speaking worshippers. It recalls, however, a curious sign posted prominently in the vestibule of the English church in Moscow: "All persons not personally known to the rector who wish to participate in the communion service are requested to give him satisfactory evidence before the service that they have not been baptized in the Russian Church, as it is unlawful to administer the communion to any such." In a land where everybody is baptized in the established church in infancy, this naturally puts a stop to any missionary work among the natives.

The recently published Congregational Yearbook gives the number of members in the United States as 635,791, a net gain of 5,118 during the past year. This gain of less than one per cent. is not great, but it is nearly four times the gain for the previous year. There was a loss of about 10,000 in Sunday-school membership and 5,000 in Christian Endeavor membership.

Editor's Easy Chair

Macatawa Musings.

This is a genuine Macatawa day with the trade-mark blown in the bottle. This is more than could be said of the weather for a week or two past, with occasional exceptions. Much of the weather we have had here, of late, seemed to have been imported from the interior, remote from sea or lake. This has enabled us to sympathize, in a measure, with those who were trying to live, work and be happy with the thermometer soaring above the century mark. But, as we have already intimated, to-day witnesses the return of weather we have become accustomed to associate with this place. It is bright, breezy and bracing. We have had no rain, but the dark storm-cloud which bounded the lake horizon last night was, no doubt, doing duty some place where its services were needed. It has awakened hope that our time may come soon. We tried to imagine this cloud-chariot as pouring out its liquid treasures upon the thirsty corn-fields of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Nebraska and other states southwest, west and northwest, where it seemed to be moving. But clouds are deceptive, both as to distance and contents. What downpours of rain we have all witnessed without any clouds, to speak of, during a wet season, and what portentous storm-clouds have failed to yield the precious rain during a protracted drouth! Then again, our neighbor's farm, a few miles distant, has been visited with refreshing showers, while ours is passed by, or vice versa. We can well understand the demonstrations of joy with which the people of Wichita recently welcomed a copious rain. There are few things more beautiful in this world, containing so many beautiful things, than a generous summer rain, "in a dry and thirsty land where no water is," and where the young corn and vines, and the orchards, are being blighted with the drouth. May all our readers be favored with such a sight before it is too late for the willing soil to make some response.

The old saying that "God made the country and man made the city" is one of those half-truths which pass current among men as whole truths. God did, indeed, make the country, but did He not make the city, also? If the city be the result of the evolution of human society; if it has come under divine providence to supply certain wants of men which could not otherwise be supplied, then the city, too, has its origin in the will of God. The only difference, as respects authorship, is that God made the country without man's agency, but He has used human agency in the making of the city. He has also used human agency, however, in beautifying the country, in subduing the wilderness and making it subserve man's needs. If you take out of the country its farms, orchards, gardens, meadows and grazing herds of cattle, sheep and horses, which man's hand has subdued, it would lose much of its attractiveness. Man is God's agent for subduing and beautifying the earth and making it a second Eden. The city has its place in this development of higher civilization, but it, too, must be subdued, its lawlessness curbed, its sources of crime and misery removed, until it shall serve the social, industrial and intellectual ends for which it exists. There is not so much difference, then, between the city and the country as to their authorship, and one may choose the one or the other, according to his taste or his occupation in life. However essential the city may be to meet certain wants of our complex civilization, it is at least highly desirable that one should escape its limitations for a season, occasionally, and breathe the freer, not to say purer, atmosphere of the country. On the other hand, we can conceive that it would be highly beneficial for those who habitually live in the country to make occasional visits to the city and remain there long enough to understand the modes of life which there prevail, and to avail themselves of such benefits as life in the city may offer. But for this season of the year give us the mountains or the sea-side, or the lake-side, or anywhere that is far removed from the city and "the maddening crowd's ignoble strife," where there is not only "boundless contiguity of shade," but all those scenes and sounds in which the lover of nature delights.

But, after all, it is not so much where a man is as what he is that determines his enjoyment. The meanest and poorest place on earth has its beauty and its mystery if we have only eyes to see, ears to hear and hearts to understand the seemingly commonplace things that are about us. This is the great service that education may do for us—putting us into such relation to the world in which we live as to enable us to understand some of nature's secrets and laws, and to have an eager desire to know more of them. Then religion comes in and gives us a higher interpretation of nature and its meaning, enabling us to look up through nature to nature's God with loving and adoring homage. With an educated mind, and a heart in which dwells the love of God, one may see beauty and find enjoyment everywhere. In the crowded city he will study man and see in him and his work the crown of God's creative activity. He will study the laws growing out of man's social needs and see in these a marvelous advance upon the cruder laws and customs of the past. In the country, far removed from the busy haunts of men, he is permitted to look at greater depths into the mystery of his own being, to gaze with awe upon the splendor of rising and setting suns, or upon the majesty of the starry heavens in the deep silences of the night. One finds a balm here for many a wound he has received in the fiercer conflicts of life. There is something in the voices of Nature which calms and soothes the restless spirit, which brings tonic to the nerves and fits us for resuming once more our wonted activities. As our own poet laureate, whose harp has long since been attuned to heavenly harmonies, has sung:

"If thou art worn and hard beset
With sorrows that thou wouldst forget,
If thou wouldst read a lesson that will keep Thy heart from fainting, and thy soul from sleep,
Go to the woods and hills. No tears
Dim the sweet look that Nature wears."

Macatawa Park is becoming populous. The hotels are well filled, the cottages are nearly all occupied; several new ones are in process of erection, and everywhere there are signs of activity and growth. Macatawa has not yet attained its full growth. We sometimes wish it had. But it would be selfish for a few to desire to monopolize a place which God, in his goodness, has prepared for a blessing for many. Last Lord's day was an ideal Sunday at this place. A large audience gathered in the afternoon at the preaching service to hear Prof. Lloyd, who gave a most interesting and instructive discourse on the conversion of Saul. This was preceded by the Sunday-school, which was well attended, and was superintended by J. S. Hughes. In the evening, at early lamp-lighting, one of the largest crowds gathered on the beach that we have ever seen there for an evening service. The people sat or reclined on the sand, turning their hands into hour-glasses as they listened to the speeches and participated in the familiar songs. Several impressive talks were made, which cannot have failed to leave a lasting impression upon the many minds and hearts of those who gathered there. The waves lapped very gently on the shore, forming a sort of undertone to the music of the singers, and high above us the stars looked quietly down as if they were eyes of witnessing angels. Many gather at this beach service who do not go to the auditorium, and who, perhaps, do not attend church at home. No one can tell what influences for good go out from these meetings, which have become one of the characteristic features of religious life at Macatawa Park. The Macatawa Park Assembly begins its sessions the first Lord's day in August and holds over the following Lord's day. Prof. Lloyd, of Oakland, Cal., will give the Bible lectures this year, as last, in the forenoon, and there will be popular lectures at night. We hear of many of our friends who are coming later in the season, and as some who are here now close their vacation with July, we hope they will find room. The summer is rapidly passing and already our thoughts are turning to the great autumn conventions. We are glad to hear the notes of preparation for the great national rally at Minneapolis in October. Let us send up strong delegations from all the states, so that the "Twin Cities" will be abundantly satisfied with the multitudinousness of the gathering, as well as with its other features.

Questions and Answers.

Is the doctrine of the personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit consistent with the personality of the Spirit?
Truth-Seeker.

The Scriptures clearly teach the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the believer. If the word "personal" is an obstacle in your way; if you can more easily accept the fact that the Holy Spirit is in you, by omitting that word, omit it until your thinking has given you a conception of personality that is not inconsistent with the idea of the Holy Spirit's being in every believer at the same time. By the personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit we understand that not a mere influence from Him is in the believer, but that He Himself is carrying forward in such believer a definite work, a progressive sanctification, involving intelligence, will, affection—the attributes of personality. This is the great fact to be accepted, and let no self-imposed difficulty involved in our idea of personality hinder us from receiving and enjoying this fact. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" (I Cor. 6:19). But it may be objected that this passage does not affirm that the Holy Spirit dwells in us personally. Very well; then accept it as it reads and form your own conception of how He dwells in you. If you do not need the word "personal" to explain your understanding of how He dwells in the Christian, do not allow it to stand in your way. It came into use no doubt to antagonize the word-alone theory, and the view of the Holy Spirit as an influence or emanation from God. See to it that in omitting its use you do not allow the fact, so clearly taught, to be explained away.

The New Testament idea is that conversion is the beginning, not the culmination, of Christian life, and that He who has begun a good work in us who believe will carry it on until we have been transformed into the image of Christ. When Christ ascended to His Father He promised to send the Holy Spirit, who should represent Him and carry on this work of bringing us into entire conformity to the divine will. This is the mission of the Holy Spirit to Christians—to perfect them in holiness and to equip them for effective service in the world. Whatever may be our philosophy or metaphysics on this subject, it is of vital importance that we open our hearts to the Holy Spirit, and seek His presence, His quickening power, and all that He is able and willing to do in us, for us and through us.

Royalty and Democracy

The First Australian Federal Parliament

By W. C. MORRO

Australia is a most democratic country. There is a close affinity between the youths of Australia and the young Americans. But, notwithstanding its democracy, it is a part of the great British Empire and this at times involves the crossing and intermingling of royalty and democracy. They met each other under most happy circumstances in the city of Melbourne during the opening days of the month of May when the Duke of Cornwall and York, the heir to England's throne, was sent by the imperial government to open the first Parliament of the Australian Commonwealth. Leaving England in March, the royal yacht of the vice-regal party, escorted by a convoy of warships, having touched at various ports of England's colonial possessions, finally dropped anchor in Port Philip's Bay on Sunday, May 5. The landing, however, was not made until Monday, this being the date previously fixed, and for which the combined efforts of government and people had, for several weeks, been preparing the city. Every device had been used in decorating, and Melbourne, the largest city of Australia, was truly en fete. Venetian masts, from which were suspended streamers, flags and garlands, stood on either side of the roadway, at frequent intervals. Handsome arches spanned the streets at important points, while every building, both public and private, along the line of march had been decorated under governmental supervision, and in the principal streets ferns, palms, and other semi-tropical plants increased the beauty. Added to this was the superb weather of an ideal autumn day of sunny Australia. This island continent plumes itself on its sunshine and cloudless days, but this day was certainly above reproach. Thus, most auspiciously, began the most historic week of Australian history.

In addition to the ceremony of the opening of the first Australian Federal Parliament, the government had arranged various functions and entertainments to which representative and public men were invited. The writer, as president of the Victorian Conference of the Churches of Christ, received such an invitation and is thus enabled to write of this meeting between royalty and democracy. Ten days were given up to the festivities and throughout this time the people thought not of business, but of sight-seeing and pleasure. At night the city was a blaze of illuminations; in the daytime there were processions and various amusements for the multitudes.

The historic function, the inauguration of Australia's first national legislative assembly, came on Thursday, May 9. At exactly twelve o'clock, the royal party entered the Melbourne Exhibition building, and the recently elected members of the first Parliament were summoned to present themselves before his Royal Highness. In Sydney, at the inauguration of the Commonwealth in January, there had been some friction between the Church of England Primate and the Roman Catholic Cardinal as to which should take precedence, and to avoid a repetition of this the prayers, which had been specially written for this occasion by Lord Tennyson, Governor of South Australia, son of the late Poet Laureate, were read by Lord Hopetoun, the Governor-general. After the Duke had read the commission from his father, the King, and had delivered a short address, the Parliament was declared empowered to organize and proceed to business. This ceremony was witnessed by 12,000 people.

The spectacle of greatest magnitude was a military review on May 10. Democratic as Australia is in many things, the imperial spirit of the mother land has so far invaded it that there has been no neglect of armament either on land or sea. A great impetus has been given to the military spirit by the South African War. One of the courses of study in the state schools is military tactics, and the khaki dressed cadets of Victoria alone are numbered by thousands. At this royal review fifteen thousand soldiers marched past the Duke's stand—men of splendid physique and well trained, equal to the very flower of the British army. Yet one can but wonder why all this should be necessary. Australian soil has never been stained by the blood of international warfare, and there is no immediate prospect of such a calamity befalling it. The great body of the people are inclined to peaceful pursuits. There are no schemes of conquest in the nation's policy, and it seems somewhat singular that so new a country, and one which has as yet a population of but 4,000,000, should have already equipped and ready for service at short call, a larger body of troops than the ordinary standing army of the United States through a century of its history.

Australia has become a nation, and the people here have been for some time acquiring national characteristics peculiar to themselves. In many things they have broken away from the old world traditions and methods, yet it seems that the military spirit is one of the relics of monarchical Europe which has been planted in this sunny southland. The Federal Minister of Defence is vigorously pressing the claims of his department upon the attention of Parliament and every indication points to a provision for its needs on a liberal scale. Witnessing so many soldiers calls to one's mind England's great and far-reaching power. If she should be embroiled in a great war, she has a daughter under the southern cross who would gladly furnish provision for man and beast, and voluntarily add to this a quota of troops organized from men of the same stamp and equally hardy as those from the plains of Western America.

In the harbor of Melbourne the warships of various nations rode at anchor. Quite a fleet from the British navy was present as escort to the "Ophir," the royal yacht. In addition there were war vessels of Germany, Holland, Russia and, probably the most popular of all the foreign vessels, the United States Cruiser "Brooklyn." It was the only warship present that had passed through its baptism of fire. It still bears grim marks of the conflict at Santiago. There was considerable satisfaction to the Americans in Melbourne in being afforded the opportunity of visiting this vessel and in seeing her blue-jackets on the streets, but more perhaps in the knowledge that as a class their conduct was not discreditable to their native land.

The Parliament inaugurated with so much pomp and splendor has entered upon its duties. For fully two weeks the debates have been in progress, the principal issue being that between protection and free trade. Another burning question is, shall Australia be for whites alone or shall the Kanakas of the Pacific Islands, the Chinese and other colored races of Asia be permitted to enter and claim citizenship in the Commonwealth? Factory legislation and other issues which are elsewhere considered almost socialistic will come forward in due time for consideration. Old age pensions, woman's suffrage, and various other progressive experiments, which these islands of the Pacific have been bold enough to try and prove successful, will beyond doubt be speedily enacted by the Federal Parliament. Good has certainly accrued from some of these measures, but their benefit is sometimes exaggerated. I was recently much surprised to read in an American magazine that at the inauguration of the Commonwealth in Sydney last January there was not seen a drunken man, a ragged woman, nor a hungry child. The same mail that brought me this magazine also placed upon my table a paper giving the per capita drink bill of New South Wales, of which Sydney is the capital, as $16.87, so it is evident no such millennial condition prevails there. Yet no student of current history can afford to neglect the national development of the Australian Commonwealth.

Melbourne, Victoria, Australia.

To the Loser.

So you've lost your race, lad?
Ran it clean and fast?
Beaten at the tape, lad?
Rough? Yes, but 'tis past.
Never mind the losing—
Think of how you ran;
Smile, and shut your teeth, lad—
Take it like a man!

Not the winning counts, lad,
But the winning fair;
Not the losing shames, lad,
But the weak despair;
So, when failure stuns you,
Don't forget your plan—
Smile, and shut your teeth, lad—
Take it like a man!

Diamonds turned to paste, lad?
Night instead of morn?
Where you'd pluck a rose, lad,
Oft you grasp a thorn?
Time will heal the bleeding—
Life is but a span;
Smile, and shut your teeth, lad—
Take it like a man!

Then, when sunset comes, lad,
When your fighting's through,
And the Silent Guest, lad,
Fills his cup for you;
Shrink not—clasp it coolly—
End as you began;
Smile, and shut your teeth, lad—
And take it like a man!

The Student Volunteer Movement.

By J. E. Lynn.

There has always been a vital relationship existing between institutions of learning and the cause of Christian missions. The first missionary to the Gentiles was a product of the University of Jerusalem. The great Jesuit missionary leaders came from the seats of learning. The churches of New England received their first impulse to foreign mission work from a few zealous students in Williams College.

1. The Student Volunteer Movement is significant in that like many other great missionary awakenings it is distinctly, as its name indicates, a student movement. It came into being fifteen years ago (1886) at Northfield, Mass., at the Moody Summer School. A fervent spirit of prayer and consecration was manifest that year. During the two weeks' session one hundred men signed the brief yet comprehensive Student Declaration, "I am willing and desirous, God permitting, to become a missionary." The movement born of the spirit of God rapidly spread through the colleges of the land. Many volunteers were enrolled. Several Student Missionary Conventions characterized by great spiritual power were held; at Cleveland in '91, Detroit '94 and again in Cleveland in '98. These meetings were attended by hundreds of students and were in every way most notable gatherings.

2. The movement is significant because it has become world-wide in extent. In America there are Student Volunteer Bands in one thousand institutions of learning, enrolling five thousand persons. About two thousand volunteers have already gone to the foreign field. Forty-two thousand are enrolled in the classes for the study of Christian missions. In 1887 a representative of the Volunteer Bands of America went to England and inaugurated a missionary campaign among the student bodies of that country. The movement there has made most gratifying progress. Seventeen hundred students have been enrolled and of these five hundred and sixty-six have already sailed to their fields of work.

Through the efforts of Mr. Luther Wishard and Mr. John R. Mott the movement has been carried round the world and many Christian students in India, China, Japan and other missionary countries have been led to devote their lives to the preaching of the gospel. Some of the most remarkable student gatherings ever held have been among the Christian students of these lands.

3. This movement is very significant because of the purposes it has in view. The purposes kept constantly in view in volunteer work among American students are four: To awaken and maintain among students an intelligent and active interest in foreign missions; to enroll volunteers to supply the demands of the missionary board; to develop the missionary life of the churches; to so enlighten and enlist all students in the cause of missions that those who remain at home as ministers or business or professional men may by their gifts and prayers be lifelong advocates of the cause.

Through the agency of the Volunteer Bands more and better equipped candidates have in recent years been offering themselves for the foreign field than ever before and it has enabled the missionary boards to raise the standard of efficiency for missionary recruits. One board says: "We have had ten offers for service in the foreign field where we had one previous to the organization of the Volunteer Movement." It has put the whole cause of missions on a higher level. People are beginning to see that missions do not mean simply to subscribe a dollar or two "to a list" but rather means to give our best educated young men and women, our sons and daughters, to this important cause.

Eugene Stock, editorial secretary of Church Missions of London, says of the Volunteer Movement that "it is the most striking sign of missionary awakening in recent years," "and," he adds, "like so many other good things we owe it to America."

Is The Golden Rule Practicable?

By N. J. Aylsworth.

There has recently been some adverse criticism of the "golden rule" as an impracticable and utopian formula which cannot be applied to present conditions. In support of this criticism the following extract from Huxley's "Evolution and Ethics" has been published in several papers lately:

"Moralists of all ages and of all faiths, attending only to the relations of man toward one another in an ideal society, have agreed upon the 'golden rule.' 'Do as you would be done by.' In other words, let sympathy be your guide, put yourself in the place of the man toward whom your action is directed, and do to him what you would like to have done to yourself under the circumstances. However much one may admire the generosity of such a rule of conduct; however confident one may be that average man may be thoroughly depended upon not to carry it out in its full logical consequences; it is nevertheless desirable to recognize the fact that these consequences are incompatible with the existence of a civil state, under any circumstances of this world which have obtained, or, so far as we can see, are likely to come to pass.

"Strictly observed, the 'golden rule' involves the negation of law by the refusal to put it in motion against law-breakers; and, as regards the external relations of polity, it is the refusal to continue the struggle for existence. It can be obeyed, even partially, only under the protection of a society which repudiates it. Without such shelter the followers of the 'golden rule' may indulge in hopes of heaven, but they must reckon with the certainty that other people will be masters of the earth.

"What would become of the garden if the gardener treated all the weeds and slugs and birds and trespassers as he would like to be treated, if he were in their place?"

In the first place, the "golden rule" has not been applied by moralists to weeds, nor, except with some important restrictions, to slugs and birds, but rather to our treatment of our fellow men.

When I was a boy my parents chastened me for wrong-doing, and I have since been grateful to them for it. If I were to be a boy again, I should earnestly request that the same course be pursued. When therefore, I chastened my own children, I did just as I would be done by in the same circumstances. That is, the "golden rule" does not interfere with government in the family—the very place where love and sympathy most abound. If it does not interfere here, why should it in the state? If it would paralyze government anywhere it certainly would be most manifest where sympathy is strongest, but in the family it produces no such result.

The "golden rule" means that we shall treat others as it is our present wish that we be treated in like circumstances, not that we shall treat them as we should desire to be treated if we possessed their wishes. Were this the meaning, the rule should run thus: Do to others what they want you to do to them. It is surprising that any one should so construe the "golden rule," and yet Prof. Huxley's criticism has no force apart from such construction. We are to act from our present wish, not from what we may imagine we should wish after becoming very different persons from what we are now.

This is certainly what Christ means by the "golden rule," as is abundantly evident from his own life. When he bade the rich young man sell all he had and give to the poor, he did not say what the young man wanted to hear, but he did say what he then felt he would wish to have said to him under similar conditions. When asked to settle an inheritance dispute between two brothers, he did not answer as he would wish to be answered if he possessed their desire, but as he then felt he would wish to be answered in similar circumstances. When he scourged the money changers from the temple he did not consult their wishes. Persons who are freeing to death do not want to be kept awake, but if I should treat a friend who was freezing, very roughly, to keep him awake, I would be doing just as I would be done by. I once knew of a man who, from the bite of a rabid animal, was affected with paroxysms of violent madness, in which he would plead that his wife should come to him. In his lucid intervals he directed that these pleadings should not be listened to, saying that his desire was to harm her; and when he felt his ravings approaching he would request to be bound to the bed with thongs—and thus it was until he died. His attendants who restrained him from injuring others did what he wished them to do. If I should ever become a criminal I should not then desire to be restrained from criminal acts, but it would certainly be my present wish that it should be done.

Doing as we would be done by applies not alone to the criminal, but also to his victim. To see a woman attacked by a ruffian and not go to her rescue would not be doing as we would be done by.

I want what is right and desire to wrong no man, and when I restrain another from wrong-doing I require of him just what I demand of myself. The ruling element in society is, presumably, the right-loving element, and in demanding right-doing from others they impose the same restrictions that they apply to themselves. The officer who lets the criminal have his way is not doing as he would be done by to the community, nor, if he is a righteous man, to the criminal himself. What we need most in our government is law-makers and officers who have more of the "golden rule" in their hearts. There would then be no more peculations, and no more wronging of the people in any way.

Absolute selfishness among the people of any government would at once dissolve it into anarchy, and all government or social order has its origin in some feeling of fair-dealing; but fair-dealing is but another name for doing as you would be done by. Even robbers cannot get on together without doing to one another as they would be done by, to a certain extent. So far is it from being true that the "golden rule" is incompatible with government by the state, that no government is possible without its application, and that government is best which embodies it most perfectly.

The worst of all skepticism is that which denies the practicability of love.

The Liberal Mob.

It is a matter for unspeakable regret that in Britain an age of hopeless political division has set in, and that the very men who should be looked to for the reintegration of unity and the reconstruction of the grandest party the nation ever saw, should be the representatives of revolt. Mr. Asquith was a few years ago the real hope of the genuine Liberals. The ragged Radical wing has never been a practical unit. It never had a leader. Its ablest men have been the most erratic and the most unreliable. But Mr. Asquith was at once moderate and judicial on the one hand, being a barrister in full practice, and enthusiastic and progressive on the other hand. He is now pursuing exactly the same preliminary path which led Mr. Joseph Chamberlain into the ranks of the Conservatives, although that statesman was at the beginning of his career much more pronounced than Mr. Asquith has ever been. It is clear that Mr. Asquith intends to shatter the ranks of those Liberals who thought they had found some mode of unifying the scattered sections of advanced British politicians. His opinions may or may not be right, reckoned by the usual criterion of Liberal doctrine. But it is a canon of political philosophy that a statesman should consider in his utterances how he may best promote the power and influence of his party. Mr. Asquith has gone out of his way to deliver at a meeting a vehement manifesto in favor of Liberal imperialism and in favor of the government policy with regard to the war. Now, the Tory government did not in any sense need his help. It is a sad fact that jingoism still rules almost despotically in this country. If this spirit is on any ground excusable, surely it is not the business of leaders of the Liberal, humane and enlightened party to add fuel to the flame of passion and to turn our political life into one long carnival of brutal boasting and delirious delight in war. The present position of Liberals is simply humiliating to any Christian patriot. They are the only section to which the nation can look for any scheme of advancement along the lines of democratic welfare. Without them all legislation must be inspired by class-selfishness and plutocratic avarice. We are about to witness a fierce and protracted struggle in the Liberal ranks between the followers of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the appointed leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, and the jingo imperialists who will hotly abet the theories of Mr. Asquith. So that in our national councils confusion will be worse confounded.

Signs in the East.

The opening up of the Orient is one of the most instructive of the signs of the times. Too many observers have of late been distracted from the near to the far east. Whatever may be the course of events in China, Manchuria, Japan, Mongolia, Tibet, Burmah or Siberia, it still remains that the pivot on which the international history of the near future will turn is situated in the Turkish empire and its tributary dependencies. The recent announcement from Palestine respecting coming railway development is full of interest to keen observers of incident after incident in the east. It appears that the always recalcitrant Sultan has absolutely refused to give an English company the concession for the railway from Accra to Damascus. This concession was formerly given to the same company, but ran out before the line was built. The Turkish government is willing to pay for the mileage actually completed, and it will itself construct the rest of the line, which it is intended to carry on to Mecca. Two things gleam forth in this oriental incident. One is the bitter hostility of the Sultan to England, which has been intermittently displayed ever since the agitation on behalf of the Armenians. The other is the steady preparation for the surely approaching crisis in the Turkish empire. Arabia is in chronic unrest. Macedonia, Servia, Albania and Bulgaria are all fermenting with the elements of revolution. And the Sultan has only one friend. Unfortunately for himself, as the future will certainly demonstrate, that friend is the Kaiser. The close and servile friendship of the German emperor for the cruel obstructionist of all reforms in the east is the one blot on the policy of that enlightened ruler of the mighty nation which has in its resurrection from medievalism astonished the world. The opinion is current all over the continent that Lord Salisbury desired the deposition of the Sultan at the time of the Armenian massacres, but that he was thwarted by the Kaiser. England is not likely to be forgiven. All her enterprises in the Sultan's dominions are blocked, while German schemes are being favored. The idea that the Turkish government will finish the railway is farcical. Turkey is dependent on other sources. But the important point is that such enterprises are to be pushed forward, no matter who may be behind them. The party whose purposes are most favorably affected by such undertakings is Russia. The whole Russian nation is set on the possession of the holy places at Jerusalem, and this object is never lost sight of. But Britain cannot and will not allow control of the highways to India, of which there are several, to pass into the grip of any other Power. Thus complications are ahead, of which no man can predict the course or issue.

A New Holy War.

A mighty campaign is projected for next winter. It is refreshing to hear of programs for a truly holy war. This country is not to be given entirely over to the people who delight in physical force and in the making of history along ensanguined lines. The greatness of a nation depends on its capacity for the development of collective spiritual life. Britain has led the world since middle ages in all the ethical moral evolutions. Even if America should snatch up the lead, still the priority of influence will be in the old Anglo-Saxon line. The stronger daughter will eclipse the old mother. That is all. The glory of the Anglo-Saxon religious life is the Sunday-school.

A scheme is being organized which will give a new impetus both to Sunday-school life and work, and also to the evangelization of the rising generation. Of course vast numbers of our young people are trained without attending the Sunday-school. Some are too respectable. The Sunday-school is not a patrician institution. It is eminently plebeian. But many children are too low down in the social system. Their parents are practically so pagan that they have no desire to see their offspring influenced by any spiritual uplifting. The question has arisen, what can now be done to stir new vigor in the Sunday-schools, which have been showing some symptoms of decadence, and also to bring the gospel to bear on the masses of the unevangelized children? A strong committee is being formed to plan a great national interdenominational mission for the young. The mission will cover England. It will be the grandest attempt of the kind ever proposed. The idea springs out of the campaign with which the new century started. But that great mission was concentrated on congregations, and it had no special reference to the young. It is likely that the nation will be profoundly moved by this magnificent scheme for bringing multitudes of boys, girls, youths and maidens into the kingdom. This is the age of the young. It is the day of universal education; but education in England is not sufficiently allied with religion, although it is largely made the battle ground of contentious bigots.

Critical Extremists Challenged.

Some powerful challenges have been leveled against the biblical critics of the extreme Destructionist school. There is a sane and Christian school of higher critics, and all Christendom is under profound obligations to its representatives. There is also a sane and Christian doctrine of evolution. But what most people understand by higher criticism is the outrageous recklessness of Wellhausen; and what is popularly meant by evolution is the series of hypothetical dogmas which transcend even Darwinism itself. No student should pay exclusive attention to either the higher critics or their opponents. At any rate he should not rank himself on either side until he has fairly studied at least some of the most representative works on each side of this amazing controversy. Such books as Stanley Leathe's "Law in the Prophets," Low's "Biblical Criticism" and Baxter's "Sanctuary and Sacrifice" will give him a fair mastery of the moderate, scholarly and judicious views of the opponents of Wellhausen in English. Germany has of late produced some trenchant replies to neologians, but these are not necessary for the English or American student, at any rate till he has seen works written in English. One fatal habit is to be noticed on the part of the destructionists. They superciliously ignore whatever their adversaries have to say, no matter how expert those may be in Hebrew or in archæology. Arrogance is always disheartening. Replies to the extremists are plentiful. Some of these are consummate specimens of erudition; but rejoinders on the part of the extremists are exceedingly rare. This trick of contempt will not do. A higher critic pope is as obnoxious as a lower critic pope. Each may be found. One problem has just been propounded by a Scotch writer which seems to be sufficiently formidable to deserve at least the respectful consideration of destructionists, like some of the gentlemen whose views are aired in the new and most audacious literature of negation. It is a favorite position with these exponents that the greater part of the Mosaic literature, ritual and history was an invention and imposition, a mere forgery of first-captivity times. Now the problem is to explain how by any moral and intellectual possibility could an intelligent people have a radically false view of their own history forced into their consciousness. If these Jews began worship with a burnt and whittled stick, no wily magician could charm them into the belief that this origin really meant Mount Sinai, with its thunderings and lightnings, its divine presence and its sublime moral code. This would be a miracle of silly credulity. Human beings cannot act so. The higher critical view of Hexateuch origin is a still greater example of intellectual impossibility. But some of us recollect how, years ago, by the Tugingen school, the same theory was propounded to account for the origin of the gospels. But it was, during the controversy which then raged, proved that the gospels, with all their supernatural elements, were in circulation throughout the whole Christian church within 150 years after Christ's death, and this was sufficiently regarded as a proof of the credibility of the supernatural elements in the gospel.

Paul's Portrait of a Preacher

By F. D. POWER.

I.

A portrait is a likeness of some one done in oils, water color or crayon, engraving, photograph or sculpture. It may be small head size or head size, three-quarter size, kitkat, small half-length, or whole length, Bishop's half-length or whole length. A portrait may be also a picture in words with more or less detail of figure.

Paul's portrait of a preacher may be either a picture of Paul himself or the outlines of this character as sketched by Paul. Cowper sings:

"Would I describe a preacher such as Paul,
Were he on earth, would hear, approve and own.

Paul should himself direct me, I would trace
His master-strokes and draw from his design.
I would express him simple, grave, sincere;
In doctrine uncorrupt, in language plain,
And plain in manner; decent, solemn, chaste,
And natural in gesture; much impressed
Himself, as conscious of his awful charge,
And anxious, mainly, that the flock he feeds
May feel it too; affectionate in look,
And tender in address, as well becomes
A messenger of grace to guilty men."

Every line and color and tone and point and effect in Paul's portrait of a preacher may be seen in Paul himself. Paul is the master preacher, as well as the epic hero of the church of Christ. He pictures himself as "least of all the apostles, not meet to be called an apostle," yet no man can look upon this apostle to the Gentiles without feeling, here is a high and princely type of man, a man who is as unaccountable as his Master. For the whole entire man—preacher, thinker, worker, citizen, gentleman—we may safely challenge the history of the world to produce his counterpart. Miracle of a man, such a preacher that no thought of preaching in its noblest sense can even remotely occur to us without at once suggesting Paul. Observe now some features of this portrait. A good portrait will always follow you with its eyes and command your attention.

First we shall see his spiritual character. Over all this man's face as revealed to us, we see his great spirituality. The Scriptures insist that ministers should be holy men of God, that they should be taught of God, that they should be consecrated to God, men living in their work, living for their work. What does our apostle say to his young preachers? "A bishop must be blameless—sober, just, holy, temperate." "In all good things shewing thyself a pattern of good works, that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you." "Flee also youthful lusts, but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace." "Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine, continue in them." "Keep thyself pure."

A novice in religious life is not qualified for this holy work. A babe in grace and knowledge cannot be a teacher of babes, much less a guide of fathers. The school of adversity, discipline, above all experience in the word of God and in prayer, are needed that the man of God, or the minister of God, may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. The first ministers of the gospel were prepared by their Master's retirement for a whole night of prayer to God. The first missionaries to the Gentiles were sent forth with the same holy preparation. The greatest and hardest preparation of a minister is within, and by searching the Scriptures, by prayer, by meditation, by the indwelling Spirit of God he must be made ready. Let us not forget the Apostolic Order: "We will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the Word." "Exercise thyself unto godliness," is the word of this great preacher to his preachers. "O man of God, follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness." A man's life is the life of his ministry. Chaucer paints in imperishable lines the good man of religion when he calls the preacher "the person of the town," of whom it is said:

"Christ's lore and his apostles twelve
He taught, and first he followed it himself."

Goldsmith gives the picture the same coloring, when he declares:

"Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
And e'en his failings leaned to virtue's side,
But in his duty prompt to every call
He watched and wept, he prayed and felt for all;

And as a bird each fond endearment tries
To tempt his new-fledged offspring to the skies,
He tried each art, reprov'd each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way."

Again in this portrait we behold a studious face. Its lines show thought—deep, earnest, laborious thought. "Give attendance to reading," he says to Timothy, and when he is "Paul the aged," sends for his books and parchments, which Carpus had doubtless borrowed and had not returned. Does he not quote poets and philosophers showing the breadth of his study? Does not Stephen mention to the honor of Moses that he was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians? Could a preacher possess the knowledge of an archangel, might he not use it to the advantage of man and for the glory of God? Does not every expansion of the mind increase its power and comprehension and render it more capable under divine teaching of exploring those things that angels desire to look into? Preachers' lips must speak knowledge—they must not babble. The preacher, like David, must prepare with all his might for the house of God. Books, books, books he must have if he lack for bread. Beaten oil and not crude he must bring to the sanctuary. "Let no man despise thy youth," says Paul to Timothy, and that they may not "give attendance to reading." Should the question ever come to you, "Art thou a master in Israel and knowest not these things?" Paul's portrait of a preacher shows the man of mind. Διδάκτικός he must be, "apt to teach." The gospel must be committed to faithful men "which shall be able to teach others also."

A young man with thoughts of earning his living by the pulpit went to his pastor and asked if he did not think the Lord had called him to the ministry. "Well, William," said the good man, "if the Lord ever called you it must have been on the first day of April!" A student in Oberlin asked the president if he could not take a shorter course than that prescribed by the institution. "O yes," was the answer, "but that depends on what you want to make of yourself; when God wants to make an oak he takes a hundred years, but when he wants to make a squash he takes six months." How can any man feed sheep if he has nothing but husks, or sticks, or stones? He may minister to goats, but sheep must have better pasture.

The Mission of Tears.

By Mrs. P. R. Gibson.

The mountains lift, above the mist
That lies in valleys low,
Their foreheads bright reflecting light
From early morning's glow.

The flower lifts up its tiny cup
Bathed in the tears of night,
With rainbow hues the sun bedews
And fills its cup with light.

From night's embrace earth's shining face
Is turned to sun-lit sky.
O, soul of mine, heaven's light is thine—
The day-star from on high.

The storm sweeps by athwart the sky,
And leaves the rainbow there,
Then why cast down? What seems God's frown
Is but his tender care.

O, bless the storm that drives thee home
To his own loving breast.
He is thy light, thy sunshine bright—
In him is peace and rest.

A Survey of the Pan-American

By BURRIS A. JENKINS.

The Message of the Pan-American.

James Russell Lowell once returned from Europe with some photographs of sculpture which he placed before his classes in Harvard and asked the men to guess at the size of the figures. Every man said they were of heroic proportions. Then the professor revealed the astonishing fact that the pieces were but a foot and a half, each, in height. So noble were the conceptions, so large the treatment, so perfect the execution in every detail, that the impression made was one of great size.

Something of the same sort may be said of the Pan-American Exposition. As compared with the Chicago World's Fair it is small. But it should not be compared with the World's Fair any more than a small Corot should be compared with a gigantic Michael Angelo. The two are not comparable, either in size or purpose. The Pan-American attempts something altogether different from what the World's Fair attempted; and the Pan-American succeeds, in a very large measure, in what it attempts. Those who come to it with a strong picture of the white city in their minds, and determined on comparisons, will go away dissatisfied. Those who come with minds ready to learn the message of the artists, and content to drink in that message, will almost surely be satisfied.

It is a great artistic purpose which is back of the rainbow city. Previous expositions have not tried what this has tried, viz., to combine both form and color to carry to the world the message of a hemisphere in such wise as to suggest both the transient and the permanent in the appearance of the buildings. The World's Fair was without color, and it sought to convey solely the impression of permanence. It was massive, severe, cold, grand.

The Paris Exposition, like all the European attempts, sought to convey the idea of temporariness. Surrounded as it was by noble permanent buildings, it would have been folly to simulate permanence. But the Pan-American, in a new country, where there is so much of the transitory, seeks to convey the notion of permanency together with the use of color.

The First View.

Now to approach the main gate with this preparation. Let me warn you that this visit with me will not be a systematic and studious pilgrimage of art. It will be rather a rambling, desultory, look-at-what-you-like stroll. If you want the thoroughgoing conscientiously laborious estimate of things, you must go to next neighbor. For one, I do not believe in sweating over an exposition any more than one can avoid. We are contracting the exposition habit in our country—a good habit, no doubt—but if we go at an exposition a year in the extremely studious fashion of the average doer of things, we shall add to our bicycle-face, and dollar-face, the exposition-face. Heaven forefend!

Now we saunter up the avenue of elms along Lincoln Parkway. We approach the great pillars of the main gate—be sure to enter first by this gate—with their winged victories by Herbert Adams from the Dewey Arch, New York. Past these we wander along the edge of the park lake, the towers of the rainbow city glinting through the trees. Noticeable enough is the great blue dome of the government building, with its gilded cupolas.

Soon we are beside the great white statue of Washington. It is Daniel French's statue, an artist whose many works we are proud of, and who has set forth our revolutionary history in enduring bronze and marble. The original of this statue is in the Place d'Jena, Paris. It represents Washington standing high in his stirrups, with his sword drawn and held high aloft as if pointing to the top of the dome of heaven. His left hand holds his chapeau and bridle-rein. While you walk round this statue, thrilling at its nobility, your back is brought toward the exposition itself.

Then you turn about to continue your progress, when suddenly you see opening before you the great Causeway, stretching from the White Washington clean across the canal bridge, across the Triumphal Bridge through the Court of Fountains to the Electric Tower at the farther end. It is a noble view, glowing with subdued color, large in size, great in conception. Indeed, the whole exposition, practically, is before you, and the view is as large and satisfying, I believe, as that of any former exposition. The Paris Exposition was scattered; the World's Fair was gigantic; but the Pan-American is compact. The effort was made to bring as much as possible into as small area as was consistent with its all-American purposes. There are no long walks from court to court, building to building. Everything is in easy reach.

Statuary in the Causeway.

On either side, down the main approach, are the great bronze columns surmounted by eagles with folded wings. There are also duplicates of the Victories from the Dewey Arch. Then we approach next to the Fore-court, where are great bronze Buffaloes, by Frederic G. Roth, of Buffalo. These groups the sculptor called "Idyls of the Prairie," and, indeed, the name is not ill-chosen. The great bull-bison, in each piece, lies chewing the cud of prairie-dreaming, while the cow rests her head upon his shaggy shoulders.

At the guard-houses, on the approach to the Fore-court, we come upon a noteworthy piece of work by Maximilian Schwarzott, of New York. These are the groups called "The Fighting Eagles." In one group on one side, the two great birds are contending for the carcass of a deer, and great is the strife. On the opposite, or west, side of the causeway, the victorious bird is stretching his wings over his dying enemy. And it is of interest to us to learn that the sculptor used as his models eagles that were captured on his place in the Catskill mountains.

Other bits of sculpture there are which we cannot pause over. The warning has been given that this would be a stroll, not a careful prospecting journey. We must pass by the Buffalo and the Moose by Henry Merwin Shrady, of New York, a young man under thirty, graduate of Columbia College in 1894, who became well-known through his first group "The Charge of the Light Battery."

The Triumphal Bridge.

Passing along the Triumphal Causeway—symbolic of the national attributes of the United States, and of the national welcome to all visiting peoples—we pause before the great pylons of the Triumphal Bridge. It is a noble structure! Some say that, next to the Electric Tower it is the greatest feature of the exposition. But for my part, I am not sure that I would except the Electric Tower. This bridge is imposing beyond compare. At the four corners rise the four pylons, which are really towers, 40 or 50 feet at the base, to a height of 116 feet. Above these rise the gigantic equestrian figures, each one 46 feet in height, making a total loftiness of great majesty and sublimity. The towers are colored to suggest stone, and the statues are pure white. Karl Bitter has risen to the occasion in the conception and the execution of these figures. The horses are the largest ever carved—each 30 feet in height—and their dashing, rearing figures are impressive, indeed. Each of the four pylons bears a horse, and each horse a youth with banner and lyre or shield. Underneath the horses' feet are masses of trophies suggestive of the symbols of despotism and tyranny which have been trampled down by the United States in their struggle to be free. One of these figures, Power, bears a shield and standard emblematic of the power which such a struggle engenders. Another, Peace, bears a lyre and standard emblematic of the fruit of victory. The other day the standard of "Peace" was sprung by the high winds and there was fear that the colossal mass of staff might fall. A man was sent aloft to stay the actually waving banner. As he crawled up over the horse's tail, he looked from below like a mere fly on the great white surface. The banner of Peace still stands.

On the inner side of the four pylons, where they may be seen from the bridge, are the figures of Justice, Tolerance, Liberty and Brotherhood. These pieces will surely arrest your attention and are worthy of it.

The Electric Tower.

Now turn the eyes down the long vista of buildings toward the Electric Tower, the dominating feature of the whole. Between it and the observer who stands on the Triumphal Bridge lies the Court of Fountains, with its bandstands to right and left, and with its low bronze columns surmounted by the bunches of dead incandescent lamps which, even in daytime, are ornamental.

It is a well known fact among architects that a tall shaft like that of the Electric Tower seems to depress the ground on which it stands. Hence, it is necessary that such a shaft should stand upon an elevation. Now as a matter of fact, the ground when surveyed before the architects laid their plans, was found to slope toward the north where the tower was to stand, instead of rising, as it should have done. There was nothing for it but to fill and elevate the site of the tower. But the Necessary dirt for filling was difficult to obtain on this wide flat plain, and so it was necessary to make an artificial site built upon spiles driven into the ground. That lofty iron and steel structure, therefore, 350 feet in height, rests upon a vast platform built upon these spiles, which elevate the site ten or twelve feet. It was an expensive work of engineering.

As we note the coloring on all the buildings and domes and towers and columns along the wide causeway, we see the definite plan of the Director of Color, Mr. C. Y. Turner. Mr. Turner tells us that: "This is the first time to my knowledge that a general scheme of color has been undertaken and carried out in any exposition, and it is our sincere hope and belief that the result will warrant the time, labor and expense given to it, and give great pleasure and possibly influence the art of our country in the future." It is noticeable that the colors are deepest and intensest near at hand, and gradually shade away toward the great slender obelisk in the distance, the Electric Tower, which is of a very light ivory hue, enriched in the capitals, brackets, stars, pinnacles, etc., with gold and surmounted with the airy, graceful Goddess of Light done in gold. The panels of the tower are done in the brightest, freshest, most delicate blue-green that could be made, which is intended to suggest the hue of the waters of Niagara, as they pour over the cliff. The fountain, too, which gushes out of the side of the tower, an image of the cataract, is also of this blue-green tinge. It is the Falls which light this wonderful tower and all the Rainbow City, and so it is the Falls which the architects have sought to suggest in all the details of the tower.

The criticism has been made upon the tower that it is too severely plain both in design and color. Its simple and classic kind of renaissance might better give place, some have said, to a more florid, fanciful, ornate style. All the other buildings of the Pan-American are in those late versions of the renaissance style which were widely employed by the Spanish American countries. It might possibly have been better if the tower, too, had been more in keeping with the rest in design. And yet the architect of the tower, Mr. John Gulen Howard, gives us his idea in these words: "As regards the architectural design of the Electric Tower, it may be called essentially American. As in the other buildings, use has here been made of the classic and renaissance forms, and certain influences may, perhaps, be pointed out by the critic, but the tower cannot be said to have been designed in any strictly defined traditional 'style.' It shows the trend of thought in this country and may be taken as an example of modern American architecture."

As for the effect of the tower at night, it challenges comparison with anything that ever has been done.

A Few of the Buildings.

Now to turn away from the view down the great Causeway and direct our eyes to the individual buildings on either hand. We glance naturally at the low, graceful, curving pergolas, which stretch to eastward and westward from the Triumphal Bridge. They are adapted from the old Pompeian trellis, but on a larger and more elaborate scale. Under their vine-covered roofs are restaurants and lounging places, from which the music of the bands may be heard.

At the ends of these pergolas the eyes are caught by a dome at either side. To the east is the Government Building; to the west the Music Hall. The former lifts its blue dome above its columned portico which recalls to our minds the Capitol at Washington. It seems to be expected nowadays that every structure reared by our government for exposition purposes shall suggest the Capitol. But aside from the portico this building is rather more, we are told, like the great Cathedral of the City of Mexico.

The Temple of Music, on the west side, is, to be more exact, just opposite the Ethnology Building on the east. The ground plan of the Music Hall is square, being 150 feet on a side. Its dome, fashioned after that of the Pantheon at Rome, is 180 feet in height. The hall is profusely decorated with pilasters, with sculpture in relief, and with lavish color. It seats 2,200 people and possesses one of the largest organs built in America. Recitals on this organ are given by eminent organists daily.

Next to the Government and Ethnology Buildings on the east comes the Manufactures and Liberal Arts, which is 350 by 500 feet. There is a large interior court with a cloister extending around it. On the side of the building fronting the Court of Fountains the facade is kept low in order to give the greater value to the Electric Tower; but on the side next to the Mall the facade is much more imposing. There is a 130-foot dome surrounded by four towers. At the corners of the building are pavilions surmounted with domes.

The Stadium and the Plaza.

And so one might go on describing the various buildings, the Agricultural, the Electricity, the Bazaar Building, the Acetylene Building, the Machinery Building, the Horticultural Building, and so on. But it will be sufficient to pause for a moment at the Stadium, the great arena where the field sports and outdoor exhibitions are given. It is a vast structure, built in the shape of a horseshoe surrounding a field and track. It seats 12,000 people and is modeled on the great amphitheatre at Athens where were anciently held the games of the Pan-Athenea. The structure is, therefore, classic in lines, with rows of colonnades. It is pure white in color. Here have been seen baseball games, the show bull fight, gymnastic exhibitions, great outdoor concerts and illuminations.

Hard by the Stadium is the Plaza, a great open square on the opposite side of the Electric Tower from the Court of Fountains. It is, in fact, a continuation of the Grand Causeway. The Plaza, as its name implies, is thoroughly Spanish in atmosphere. All around it are restaurants and pavilions, with the Propylæa forming the northern boundary much as the peristyle at Chicago formed the lakeside boundary of the grounds. In the midst of the Plaza is a sunken garden, surrounded with a terrace. In the midst of the garden is a band stand.

The Midway Pleasaunce, which has its beginning just off the Plaza, is naturally rather nondescript in architecture, though an attempt has been made to preserve the Spanish-American atmosphere to a certain degree.

The state, foreign and other auxiliary buildings are worthy of attention. Particularly the New York State Building, a handsome Doric structure done in pure white Vermont marble, and intended to abide as the Buffalo Historical Society Building, is a gem. The New England States Building is an old colonial made to represent red brick stenciled in white and with a great portico with columns. The Illinois State Building is a combination of the classic and renaissance styles. The Honduras building, a pavilion, Spanish, with cupola treatment of roof, the Chile Building of steel and glass, the Cuban Building with dome—all these will catch the eye. The Louisiana Purchase or Missouri Building will naturally attract the western readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Little enough space has been left in this ramble for detailed mention of the groups of sculpture and for the art gallery. A separate article must, therefore, be reserved for these subjects.

Buffalo, N. Y.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

It may do you good, my dear old friend, to know that while you are suffering from the intense heat you have the heartiest sympathy of some who are more fortunately situated. One year ago I was in New England. How hot it was! A little later I was in Illinois, Indiana and Iowa. Can I ever forget the heat? But it is more intensely hot this year than it was last year. This summer I am in Colorado, in sight of the eternal snow on the Rocky Mountains. The temperature in Denver is simply perfect. As I write the mercury in my thermometer stands at eighty. There is a good deal of difference between eighty degrees Fahrenheit and one hundred and five. This, according to the papers to-day, was the average temperature in Kansas yesterday. A difference of twenty-five degrees in the temperature is not to be laughed at by those who are broiling, baking, roasting, burning, in a temperature of a hundred and five in the shade. Come out to the Rocky Mountains and cool off! Come!

Tens of thousands are doing this. Do not, I pray you, read this statement as an hyperbole. It is no exaggeration. From the beginning of time there has been no such passage of tourists through Denver as in this year of grace 1901. Fourteen special trains in one day, this week, passed over the Denver and Rio Grande road carrying tourists. Ninety-nine per cent. of them spend some time in Denver and Colorado Springs. Come out! It will do you good to look on banks of snow in July and August. Does not the very thought of it make you feel better?

More and more do I appreciate the wisdom of W. Bayard Craig, B. J. Radford, A. I. Hobbs, W. F. Richardson and others, who in the years that are gone preached in Denver. They were wise men and good. The evidence of their prudence is all about me. There is less prejudice against the Disciples of Christ in Denver than in any town in which it has been my privilege to reside and work. Why is this? The men here named and referred to were wise in their words and Christian in their conduct. Every man of them is spoken of respectfully and sometimes in a spirit of real reverence. You know the men of whom I speak. They are not trimmers, trucklers, time-servers. They are men of convictions. Their faith is definite. Their beliefs are clearly defined. They know what they believe and why. When they were in Denver they declared the truth as they saw it, in the spirit of him who said, I AM THE TRUTH.

Have you ever thought of how much we are ourselves to blame for the prejudice which exists against our teaching and practice? Spend a little time, please, on this hint.

As a result of the wisdom and character of the men who laid the foundations of our work in Denver there is here a wide open door for effective work. A concrete illustration or two may not be amiss.

When B. O. Aylesworth, now president of the Colorado State Agricultural College, was pastor of the Central Christian Church, in Denver, he was president of the ministerial alliance of the city. A Disciple of Christ is now president of this association. There are three union Sunday-school teachers' meetings, each week, for Bible study, under the auspices of the superintendents' union, conducted by a Disciple of Christ. Last Monday night 98 persons were present; Thursday evening the attendance was 30 per cent. better than it was the week before, and 60 were in the Saturday afternoon meeting. What do you think of this for the middle of July? The Bible studies in the Rocky Mountain Chautauqua, in Glen Park, Palmer Lake, fifty miles south from Denver, are conducted by a Disciple. The presiding genius at the Boulder Chautauqua—Homer T. Wilson—is a Disciple. The treasurer of the Arapahoe County Sunday-school Association, R. E. Pierce, is a Disciple, a member of the South Broadway Church. This congregation had, at one time, the largest Sunday-school of any denomination in the state. The regular attendance is now above 250. The Young Men's Christian Associations of Colorado are planning to spend a week in August in Glen Park, in Bible study. One of "our brethren" has been invited to participate, as a teacher, in these studies. Not unto us who are in Denver now, not unto us, but unto the good men who have preceded us, be the honor for this delightful condition of affairs. I almost forgot to tell you that "one of our preachers," i. e., a Disciple of Christ, has been invited to address the Methodist ministers' meeting at an early date, on any subject on which he may desire to speak. I have had an intimation that he will speak on, "Emphasis in Preaching: Where ought it now to be placed?" What do you think of this?

I note what you say about preachers' sons. It affords me pleasure to observe that you do not believe to be true the statement that the sons of ministers are worse than the sons of other professional men. I suspect that the statement is begotten in ignorance and brought forth in malice. I am sure that out of your acquaintances you can readily recall illustrations showing the utter unreliability of the statement. See if you cannot do so.

Joseph Addison, Samuel T. Coleridge, William Cowper, Ben Jonson, Oliver Goldsmith, Alfred Tennyson, James Russell Lowell, Oliver Wendell Holmes and John Keble, among the poets, were sons of ministers. John Mason Neal, the son of a minister, translated "Jerusalem the Golden." James Montgomery, another preacher's son, wrote "Hail to the Lord's Anointed" and was not Charles Wesley one of the nineteen children of the Rev. Samuel Wesley? Beddome, Chandler, Cox, Caswell, Tate, Ware and other famous hymn writers, were sons of ministers. And how about the great preachers? Was not the father of Henry Ward Beecher a minister? I believe that the father of Jonathan Edwards was a preacher. Am I in error in the thought that Frederick W. Farrar is the son of a preacher of the gospel? It seems to me too that I have heard that the father of Charles H. Spurgeon was a preacher, and I am certain that both of Mr. Spurgeon's sons are ministers of the word. John Wesley's father was a Church of England clergyman and Lyman Abbott is the son of a preacher. This is enough for the present along this line.

What is the record of ministers' sons in the republic of letters? Matthew Arnold, the essayist, was the son of a clergyman. Bancroft, Froude, Hallam and Parkman, in the department of history, were ministers' sons. William T. Stead, of whom I am sure you have heard, is the son of a preacher. Joshua Reynolds and Sir Christopher Wren, artists, were sons of clergymen. Some of the most famous men in law in our own time and country have been ministers' sons. Not to go into this matter exhaustively I will name Stephen J. Field, David Brewer and David Dudley Field. Henry Clay was a preacher's son and so also was Edward Everett. The father of Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, was a preacher. Samuel F. B. Morse and Cyrus W. Field belong to ministers' families. And finally, Grover Cleveland is the son of the Rev. Richard Falley Cleveland, a Presbyterian minister. Denver, Col.

Religious Fighters.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

Because Paul said, "I have fought a good fight," it seems to be taken for granted by quite a large number of religious people that they have the moral right to fight, with unsparing vengeance, anything and everything which does not tally with their ideas of propriety. And these religious fighters are not contented with making fierce war on the opinions and practices with which they do not agree; they proceed to pummel those who maintain such opinions and practices.

These fighters differ very materially from Paul. He fought against false doctrines, against evils, against sinful systems; at the same time he fought for the truth, for the gospel, for righteousness. But he did not attack honest men who, although mistaken in some of their views, were trying to live for Christ.

Paul never descended to the low level of flinging epithets at those men who were not exactly orthodox in all respects. He never publicly held up to scorn the men who did not agree with him. He fought a "good" fight, which was an honorable, manly, Christian fight. But our religious fighters, such as I am aiming at, delight in maiming those who do not chime in with them, those who do not sing songs to the same metre that they themselves do. I take some religious papers whose editors have on their fighting outfit every week. Much of the time they fight at the President of our land, just because he is not that kind of a temperance man that suits them. In fact, they say that he is not a temperance man in any respect. They say that he is a drinking man, "a wine-bibber," and, of course, he is "the friend of publicans and sinners." These fighters are twin brothers of those who fought against President Lincoln, under one pretext or another, until he died, and then, some time afterwards, they had nothing but kind words for him. And, for a restful variety, our fighting Christians will aim their guns at some college president, whose administration is hardly plumb, according to the notions of the fighters, and what a resounding noise their firing makes! The pious shooters would like to "fire out" the college president, but still he remains, doing the best that he can, even without the perfect and Solomonic wisdom of the mighty fighters.

What would become of these valiant men if they could not fight somebody or something with all of their might? Blessed are the peace-makers!

Curious Nesting Places.

By F. K. Steele.

An old man in the month of April began spading up his garden, as the sun beamed down upon him, he became too warm and he removed his coat and hung it on the top of a grape stake. Here it remained all day, and in the evening, as the chill shades of night approached, he took the coat from the grape stake to put it on, and found one of the armholes filled with little sticks, examining them closely he found a nearly finished nest made by a friendly pair of house wrens which he had occasionally noticed near him through the day. A neighbor showed me a nest yesterday filled with young birds, resting upon and among rag carpet balls which were in an outhouse used as a general storage, wash house, wood shed and in constant use all the time. Here the wrens felt secure and safe. There were no cats, their greatest foe, on the premises. The dogs they did not mind and when the children would run their hands in the nest and feel of the young birds, the old ones did not mind that very much. An old hat fastened securely in a crotch of a tree or a tomato can nailed to the trunk are good quarters for a couple of young wrens to begin housekeeping in. They will furnish such places with all the paraphernalia requisite to hold their eggs and their young and they will show their happiness and contentment by frequent bursts of song and much switching of their long tails.

Ian Maclaren tells a story to support his assertion that the difference between the French and the English is really a matter of temperament. "It is to you impossible," said a Frenchman to me, "that a general should weep in public at a stain on the honor of the army, but pardon, it is to us impossible that a general should be sponging himself in his bath when his men were being crushed on Spion Kop for want of reinforcements. If you will have the goodness to pardon the emotion, we will try to understand the bath." Of course, I privately declined to believe that the general in question was occupied with his morning toilet while his men were being slaughtered on the top of the hill, but the conversation affords at least an illustration of an incompatibility between the two people.—The Standard (Baptist).

Current Literature.

Dr. Lyman Abbott's recent volume, The Life and Literature of the Ancient Hebrews, has been much praised in some circles and much criticised in others. The vigorous expressions of approval and disapproval which it has called out are equally eloquent testimonials to the strength of the book. Whether it is true or false, whether helpful or harmful, it is at least a vigorous piece of work. If one disagrees with Dr. Abbott in regard to his position, one will at least concede that he has stated it clearly, forcibly and eloquently. The author makes no attempt to minimize the differences between the two types of thought with regard to the Old Testament, and he unhesitatingly allies himself with the new school, which considers that the divine guidance which was given to the Hebrew people both in their history and in their writings is not inconsistent with an evolutionary view of their development.

It is to be borne in mind, however, that the book can scarcely be considered more than the statement of an hypothesis, not of a proved theory. The author himself says of the evolutionary school of biblical interpretation, to which he belongs, that "it assumes that the laws, institutions and literature of the ancient Hebrews were a gradual development in the life of the nation, not an instantaneous creation nor a series of instantaneous creations." Such an assumption is certainly as justifiable as the contrary assumption that the guiding hand of Jehovah was manifested by a series of special creative acts. It is perfectly legitimate to take either assumption as an hypothesis and to work it out into a complete theory of interpretation. Each of these, like any other hypothesis, must be put to the test by seeing whether or not it will account for all of the known facts. It is the purpose of the writer of this book to show that his hypothesis does account for the facts and that it does not imperil spiritual faith.

We are not prepared to say whether or not Dr. Abbott succeeds in the first part of his undertaking. Such a brilliant treatise may be plausible but by itself can scarcely be convincing. There are too many facts to be considered which in the nature of the case cannot all be taken up in such a book as this. But we believe that he has accomplished the second part of his purpose—namely, to show that the conclusions of the evolutionary school when applied to the study of the Bible do not imperil Christian faith. The literary and scientific study of the Bible deals with the secondary causes which have brought it into being, not with the primary cause; just as geology deals with the secondary causes which have given our earth its present form, not with the great First Cause. There were once those who considered it atheism to say that the fossils were not placed in the rocks as fossils by the hand of God in the year 4004 B. C., but that they first lived as plants and animals, then died and were embalmed in the hardening slime which made their rocky case. All this, it was said, was a denial of God's creative activity, and Christian faith was held to be endangered by the theory. It is quite conceivable that our view of the origin of fossils may be entirely altered as scientific knowledge advances; but, whether true or false, it is not likely to be seriously considered hereafter as a menace to Christianity. So with regard to the theories of the origin of the Old Testament. The literary student finds there certain phenomena and explains them as best he may by reference to such secondary causes as he can find. As a scientific student he has nothing to do with the First Cause—the divine inspiration which was the basis of all that was distinctive in Israel's life and literature. We do not believe that there is any danger to faith in such a book as this. It denies many old theories and substitutes many new ones, but neither the old nor the new theories, whether true or false, are the foundations of Christian faith. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.)

High on the list of notable recent books that are not worth reading, is Mr. Henry James' The Sacred Fount. It is painful to have to make such a statement about a book by so distinguished an author, for an adverse criticism upon one who has an established position in the realm of literature may easily become, in the mind of the public, an adverse criticism upon the critic himself. But, after all, the literary critic might as well shut up shop if his occupation is to be confined to praising the celebrities and clipping the wings of the literary fledglings lest they fly too high. We say it again and deliberately that "The Sacred Fount" is not worth while. Not that it is rubbish—far from it. But it is a nut with a very small kernel of interest and a disproportionately hard and thick shell of obscure verbiage.

The idea embodied in the book, so far as the reviewer could make it out, is that, when two people associate with each other habitually on terms of friendly intimacy and intellectual companionship, one of them makes drafts upon the other's "sacred fount" of youth, vitality, buoyancy and brilliance, while the other lapses correspondingly into a state of abnormal stupidity and intellectual decrepitude if not actual senility. Mr. James conceives of a house-party made up of a considerable number of unusually intelligent people—mostly uncongenial to each other apparently, except by twos and threes—who spend a considerable time together at somebody's country estate. They ramble around the place, indulge in innocent flirtations and converse vacuously and endlessly, while two or three of the party, who have conceived this glorious "sacred fount" idea, speculate as to the surreptitious intimacies which may account for the increasing intelligence and mental vigor of some members of the party and the dullness of others.

The idea in itself is not so bad, but unfortunately it offers the largest opportunity for the play of Mr. James' peculiar and involved style. Words cease to have their ordinary meanings—sometimes cease to have any. One reads on and on, deceived by the orderly recurrence of subject and predicate into thinking that it is intelligible English, and presently discovers that the past few pages are a total blank. As a penance, the reading of "The Sacred Fount" would be effective—though cruel. As a respectable and harmless book to be avoided by all who do not care to find a road through fiction to brain-fag and paresis, it is without a peer.

The Changing View-Point in Religious Thought is the somewhat misleading title of a collection of miscellaneous papers on various present day religious topics by Henry T. Colestock. The volume takes its title from the first of the twenty-four essays which it contains. The papers indicate a liberal mind and an honest desire for truth, but they do not represent theological thinking or writing of strictly the highest order. Most of the papers were evidently sermons, and one, the first, was a thesis for a degree in the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. The author's reiteration of that somewhat hackneyed phrase "point of view" as representing the most essential prerequisite for the advance of religious thought, has a somewhat academic flavor. One remembers that this particular phrase is perhaps more in evidence at the University of Chicago than at any other spot on the planet. The demand for a new point of view, however, represents a good deal of real truth and the insistence that what is needed for progress in religious thought is not so much new truth as a new and fresh vision of the old truth from a different angle, has a flavor of sound conservatism. Mr. Colestock's book, however, is not otherwise overburdened with conservatism. His "point of view" is that of the new theology, with emphasis upon the ideas of divine immanence and the universal Fatherhood of God. The best feature of the book is its true note of spiritual aspiration. (E. B. Treat & Co. $1.)

One who is seeking illustrations by which to establish the efficacy of prayer, will do well to read a little book by H. Clay Trumbull, editor of the Sunday-School Times, entitled Illustrative Answers to Prayer. It is a series of narratives of personal experiences in each of which it is clear to the author that the hand of God guided him through a difficulty or a danger in an especially providential manner. Any one or any two such instances are always open to explanation on the score of coincidence, but it is a greater strain upon one's credulity to believe that so many things could just happen than to believe that they were in reality answers to prayer. Food Cure.

Nature's Way to Regain Health.

A man may try all sorts of drugs to help him get well, but after all the "food cure" is the method intended by Nature.

Anyone can prove the efficacy of the food cure by making use of the following breakfast each morning for fifteen or twenty days:

A dish containing not more than four heaping teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts, enough good, rich cream to go with them, some raw or cooked fruit, not more than two slices of entire wheat bread, and not more than one cup of Possum Food Coffee, to be sipped, not drank hurriedly. Let this suffice for the breakfast.

Let one meal in the day consist of an abundance of good meat, potato and one other vegetable.

This method will quickly prove the value of the selection of the right kind of food to rebuild the body and replace the lost tissue which is destroyed every day and must be made up, or disease of some sort enters in. This is an age of specialists, and the above suggestions are given by a specialist in food values, dietetics and hygiene.

Our Budget.

—Corn burnt up? Then how about your wheat? Most of those who mourn the loss of their corn have no time to be thankful for good wheat prospects.

—Is your church dried up? It need not be. Try shirt-waists and short sermons.

—A long sermon on a hot day is a sin against the eternal fitness of things. Here is one case in which heat ought to contract.

—St. Louis has had hotter weather and more of it during the past week than ever before since the weather bureau was established. It is a genuine pleasure to witness the breaking of a world's record, but it always involves some inconvenience whether it is a matter of temperature or a yacht race.

—The Fountain Park Assembly, at Remington, Ind., will hold its seventh annual session Aug 17-Sept. 1. The program contains many well-known names, including John L. Brandt, John S. Sweeney, G. P. Coler, Mrs. Lulu Tyler Gates and E. S. Ames.

—A Chautauqua Assembly is to be held at Shelbyville, Ill., July 25 to August 4. The program is an exceptionally good one. On the list of speakers we notice the names of Gen. O. O. Howard, Sam Jones, Gen. John B. Gordon, Eugene V. Debs, Dr. A. M. Collins, William Drummet and Maud Ballington Booth.

—We are very sorry to announce that Bro. Carey E. Morgan, of Richmond, is ill with typhoid fever. It is believed that he is improving and on the road to recovery. He will have the good wishes and prayers of a vast multitude of friends and of those who know the value of his work, that he may be spared to continue it.

—Bro. James McAllister, pastor of the Central Christian Church, St. Louis, is spending his month of vacation, from the middle of July to the middle of August, in seeing the Pan-American Exposition and in visiting at Pittsburg and Detroit. His pulpit was filled last Sunday by the assistant editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—The First Christian Church, St. Louis, has extended a call to John L. Brandt, of Valparaiso, Ind. The pulpit has been vacant for several weeks since F. O. Fannon resigned to go to Sedalia. The executive committee of the central board of the St. Louis churches has unanimously approved the call to Bro. Brandt, but no answer has yet been received from him.

—The Christian Endeavor World makes mention of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, of Washington, D. C., for the success of its social features. One recent plan was a series of six socials. The membership of the church was divided alphabetically into six groups called "Centuries," each having a centurion and a committee of fifteen, and each century held a social for the entire congregation. The virtue of this scheme was that it divided the burden of work and expense among all, instead of leaving it upon the faithful few as usual.

—Miss Madge L. Kent, of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, a graduate of the School of Pastoral Helpers in last year's class, has been employed as assistant to G. H. Farley of Pleasantville, Ky., who preaches for three country churches. This experiment of having a pastoral assistant for country churches will be watched with great interest and it may be that here will be found a solution to some of the problems which have hitherto baffled those who have studied the needs of the country church. The originators of the School for Pastoral Helpers expected the young women who were trained to go to city congregations but this new departure suggests that the plan may have wider application than even its boldest advocates have imagined.

—R. E. L. Prunty, of Brookfield, Mo., publishes a little paper called The Advertiser, devoted to the general interests of the town.

—Frederick F. Wyatt, pastor of the church at San Angelo, Tex., expects to do considerable evangelistic work hereafter, though he will retain his pastorate for a time at least.

—M. W. Yocum closes a four years' pastorate at Sullivan, Ind., Sept. 30. Churches interested in knowing his record may address the board of that church, S. R. Eagle, correspondent.

—C. A. Lacy, of Norman, Okla., has bought C. E. Millard's apparatus for giving illustrated songs and will use it hereafter in his work as a singing evangelist. Bro. Millard is getting a more elaborate outfit and expects to continue in the same line of work. His address is Maysville, Mo.

—The debate to be held at Lamar, Mo., between W. W. Blalock and D. E. Scoles, as announced last week, has been postponed until July 29. We don't blame them. A debate is usually productive of heat enough, even in the winter time.

—A young man who wishes to attend the Missouri State University at Columbia would like to make arrangements to preach for some neighboring church or churches. He is twenty-six years old and can give good references. Address, box 137, Everly, Ia.

—A. E. Corey has resigned his work at Honolulu, H. I., and sailed for China on June 27. We understand that the Foreign Society expects to keep him there as a permanent re-enforcement to our corps of Chinese missionaries.

—The receipts for foreign missions show a gain of $988.40 for the week ending July 18, as compared with the same week of last year. This is due largely to the increased contributions from Sunday-schools. Let the other schools that have not sent in their offerings make haste to do so.

—In the book of Revelation J. S. Hughes has found a mine of inexhaustible riches. He has revised his book for the third edition. The introduction to the new edition is said by one who ought to be a competent judge, to be alone worth more than the present book in the splendid new setting which it gives to the closing book of the New Testament Canon. Two or three chapters are re-written, confirming more clearly his interpretation of the book. He has a special offer to make to advance subscribers to the book, which makes it worth while for those interested in the book to address him at once at Macatawa, Mich.

—The annual report of the missionary board of the Tidewater district of Virginia gives a splendid showing for the work of J. T. T. Hundley as district secretary and field agent. The amount of money raised was more than twice the amount for the previous year. Every church in the district has a preacher except two. The secretary has held several meetings and has settled troubles in a number of churches. The board, however, notes a distressing lack of co-operation from the churches. The board recommends that the district evangelizing fund be abolished; that the district educational fund and work be continued; and third, that efforts be concentrated toward making the state work aggressive and successful.

—The Fifth Christian Church, St. Louis, which is located in the heart of the brewery district in the southern part of the city, is contemplating a move—not to escape to a place where it can command a different constituency but to find a location more convenient for the constituency to which it now appeals. The great breweries, Lemp's and Anheuser-Busch, press upon it on all sides. All the people of this region work in the breweries and it is to these same people that the church proposes to continue to appeal, but it wishes to get into the heart of the district where they live rather than where they work. The congregation is contemplating the purchase of the building owned by St. Luke's M. E. Church. The central board has appointed a committee to investigate this and other property and assist the congregation in securing a desirable location on the most reasonable terms.

—George C. Stoll, who has been for some time a resident of St. Louis, and has been from time to time supplying vacant pulpits both of our churches and others, has been appointed field secretary of the Anti-saloon League of Missouri, beginning August 1. The Anti saloon League is one of the most vigorous and practical temperance organizations and has done much to secure the enforcement of existing laws in this and other states.

—The Illinois State Convention will meet in Springfield, September 9-12, and this is to ask all Illinoisians to plan to come. If you begin in time you will get there. In fact we go where we very much wish to go and we wish to set you wishing to attend this great meeting. Come, bring a large delegation and see that your minister attends. He will be worth more than it costs to send him if you will do it. The cause needs his presence and yours. The program committee has spread a good feast. Come and enjoy it. Rates will soon be announced.

J. FRED JONES, Sec., Bloomington.

—According to a circular of information recently issued by the Missouri State University, the requirements for entrance to that institution have been raised. Since 1894 the basis of admission has been twelve units—a unit being one year of full work in one subject. Under the new regulation fourteen units will be required, as follows: English, 3; mathematics, 3; history, 2; foreign languages, 2 (if Latin is chosen 3 units must be offered); science, 1. The three remaining units may be chosen from the following list: A fourth unit in English, a fourth in mathematics, a third and fourth in history, three units in Latin, Greek, French, German and Spanish; one each in biology, sociology, botany, chemistry, physics, physiography, physiology, drawing and shop-work. A reasonable time will be allowed to the list of approved secondary schools, whose candidates are admitted to the university without examination, to reconstruct their courses in accordance with this new requirement.

—The China Missionary Alliance, having its headquarters at Shanghai, has issued an authoritative and official statement signed by a representative of each of the great missionary boards, in answer to the two principal criticisms which have been leveled against the missionaries in connection with the troubles of the past year in China: First, that the Boxer uprising was caused chiefly by resentment at the interference of the missionaries with Chinese affairs and customs; and second, that the missionaries have exhibited a spirit of greed and selfishness in their attempts to secure indemnity for losses of the missionary boards and of native converts in the Boxer uprising. The statement is a complete and convincing vindication of the course of the missionaries to any one who has not prejudged the whole matter adversely. Of course it does not prove that the missionaries have never made mistakes in their dealings with the Chinese, but it does prove that the uprising was an anti-foreign and not an anti-Christian movement, and that the missionaries have acted with wisdom and unselfishness in their efforts to secure compensation for losses actually suffered.

"The Value of Miracles."

A recent editorial in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, commenting on an article with the above heading, makes, among many fine points, this one: "It [the Bible] is a record of things that have occurred and a mirror of the actual experiences of certain men in certain periods. We can no more make over the record of their experiences to suit our more scientific ideas than we can make over the experiences themselves after the lapse of these nineteen or more centuries." This, to my mind, is the foundation principle upon which the value of miracles to me now rests. Miracles are matters of experience because of this "certain period." There could have been no statement of the epoch of Jesus in other terms. The account of the physical creation must differ as essentially from a treatise on vine culture as primeval creation differs from natural growth. The life of Jesus cannot be separated from the miracle of it. The church could not have had a birthday without a previous begetting. There could have been no ordinary period without first an extraordinary. The value of miracles in the time of Christ is to me now their evidential worth. The miracle of Christ's appearance to Thomas has the same value to me that it had to him, the difference in our experiences being only, Thomas saw our risen Lord and I believe that he saw him. The conditions differ as to time. Thomas actually saw the Lord and therefore believed. I believe, and believe only, because Thomas with others did see him.

In G. W. Longan's masterpiece, covering forty-eight pages, in the "Old Faith Restated," the depths have been sounded and the fact made pre-eminent that the ground on which we accept Jesus is his appearance to his followers after his crucifixion. Upon this supreme fact is based the absolutely incontrovertible proposition that Jesus is the "Creator of a new religion." The supreme value of miracle to me is that it is the only possible evidence of creation permissible to reason.

HENRY SHADLE.

The Arkansas Convention.

The following condensation in regard to the work done in Arkansas from June, 1900, to June, 1901, may be of interest to your readers.

The most convenient arrangement for the comfort and business of a convention that the writer has ever found was at Ft. Smith. Bro. Edmonds and his coworkers deserve much credit for these conveniences. The attendance was not up to the average. This was largely on account of location. The attendance from the northwest part of the state, whence we expected to draw the principal part of our attendance, was cut off for various causes. Elreka Springs and Fayetteville were interfered with by the death and funeral of Bro. Christian.

The reports were very encouraging, especially from the cities where we have been assisting. Caddo Gap District had a good report.

For other districts we have large hopes, though the failure of Bro. Clark's health, and his final death, disarranged matters very much in the southwest district. Bro. Ratliffe has taken the field in this district and we have hopes of efficient work. Fourteen preachers have been assisted financially during the year. More than six and one-half years' work has been done this year, or more than the work of one man for six and one-half years. Sixty-three places were visited by the corresponding secretary and probably as many more by others receiving help. Three churches have been built and occupied, and five are in course of construction. Four churches have been organized; 136 were baptized, and 140 added otherwise. In this work was used $1,814.36 of missionary money. Raised for building, preaching, etc., $5,458.40.

All the preachers present agreed to hold a meeting during the year, for the strengthening of some weak place. The attendance of Bro. Richardson, of Kansas City, Bro. Harvot and Bro. McLean added much to the interest of the convention.

E. C. BROWNING.

To-day and To-morrow.

Kansas is a great state to-day, but will be a greater one to-morrow. Her broad prairies and pushing, intelligent people are the envy of the world. The Christian Church has led all other churches in the state in its increase and development. "Kansas for Christ," is our cry. We have been for years planning and working to make the Church of Christ the great religious force of the state. This is a noble purpose, but it requires on our part a systematic, persistent effort. All our churches and members in the state should be imbued with this great purpose. All of our state departments are working assiduously to this end. Their labors increase from year to year, and more and more money is required for the work as it enlarges on our hands. We are doing more this year than we did last. The expenses of the central office have been reduced to a minimum. Weak, distracted and disheartened churches are being helped, reorganized, their difficulties adjusted, and new pastors located. This is a much needed work and it is being faithfully accomplished by our efficient state superintendent. Our C. W. B. M. state organizer is also doing excellent work among the women in our churches. She has organized nine new auxiliaries, reorganized two old ones, and added 141 new members. The Bible Chair work has been inaugurated at our state university, with Prof. Wallace C. Payne in charge. Our work is growing and Kansas is reaping the benefits.

Our work is a great work, but it will take a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together to succeed. Many of our churches are already enlisted, but some yet seem indifferent. Are you helping? Is your congregation helping? Let us all unitedly do what we can for the Lord's cause in Kansas. We have been responding to other missionary calls generously, now let us give our own Kansas missions a grand old boost.

W. C. T. U. Flower Missions.

It is not by those who love flowers or have made them their particular study that the comforting results of their usefulness are most realized but by those who have visited hospitals, prisons and homes of the suffering and poor. These understand more fully the cheering influence of flowers. From the costly and elaborate floral tributes for the great of earth down to the simplest flower by the wayside sent or given by loved ones, no act, no offering can ever be more acceptable.

If music and poetry have tendency to refine tastes and soften hearts, surely the value of flowers should be recognized. How evident it is that Jesus the Christ loved the clinging vines and flowers, often giving from them to those around him valuable lessons.

Miss Frances Willard always advised the distribution of flowers in connection with temperance work. For a long time there had been no definite plan in Louisville, Ky., my former home, for the distribution of flowers in connection with the W. C. T. U., but the needs, with work, had so increased that our temperance friends, with Miss Jennie Cassidy, saw the need of having some definite plan for a flower mission. We often met at Miss Cassidy's home and she was soon made president of the flower mission. Miss Cassidy's means, which were ample, were bestowed wisely. The Jennie Cassidy Infirmary in Louisville was part of her work. How full of instruction and inspiration, for a woman who could neither walk or sit, but had been confined to her couch since her early youth from a fall, but had assisted greatly in causing hospitals, prisons and homes of the poor and suffering to be brightened by her generous gifts, kind words and flowers. It is with no little comfort and pleasure that I recall the hours spent in the company of those gifted and saintly women and the earnest and impressive manner of both Miss Cassidy and Miss Willard. Although neither of them would be marked for eloquence, we felt that few women or men could speak like them. The most resistless eloquence is born of the deepest feeling. Miss Francis Willard first met Miss Jennie Cassidy at her home in Louisville. They became and continued warm friends until the Lord claimed one, but they were not long separated. Both these useful women are together again now enjoying the promised blessing to those whose lives were spent in doing good, and where there is never failing health and youth.

Correspondence.

An Open Letter to the Endeavorers.

DEAR FRIEND:—I write to you concerning the observance of Forefathers' day, as I am very anxious for its observance. Some of the Endeavor societies have let this day go by, thereby missing an opportunity for instruction, growth and usefulness. If there is anything that would add strength and earnestness to the work at this time, it is an increase of knowledge concerning the early history of our movement. Our pioneers were heroes and no one can afford to be ignorant concerning them or their work. They wrote history which the hand of time will never blot out. He labors most intelligently who knows what has been done by those who have labored before him. He understands the growth of to-day best who knows what kind of seed was sown yesterday. The young people must know the history of the church to which they belong, before they can attain the highest possible efficiency. Forefathers' day will furnish the best opportunity of the year for acquiring such knowledge.

Nor is a study of the fact the only valuable feature of Forefathers' day. We must study the present and plan for the future also.

Our fathers did a great work, but we may do greater, for our opportunities are larger and more abundant than theirs. Our fathers gave their time almost wholly to the work of home missions. The abundance of their success is proven in the number of our churches in the United States. Every church we have was started by missionary effort within the last seventy-five years. The record is one of which we may well be proud, and its largeness has challenged the admiration of the world.

Many doors are open to us which were not open to our fathers. People of all tongues come to us, as though they were seeking for the truth we have. A larger per cent. of the inhabitants we have in our cities are Germans, or people who understand the German tongue, and we have hardly begun to preach to that great race. The beginning we have made in Cleveland should be followed by larger work, and similar work should be begun in other cities.

There are very great opportunities before us in the newer country of the west also. The American Christian Missionary Society has given to the Endeavorers a choice field in Indian Territory. This appeals to our hearts as the work in a foreign field, and to our practical business sense as the work in the home field. The country is new, and so the work can be easily established. The country will fill up rapidly and so we will not have to wait long for permanent results.

The soil is rich and so there will ultimately be a large population. What field could be more inviting than this? Surely we have been greatly favored. Shall we show ourselves unworthy of the trust placed in us?

Then let all the societies plan to observe Forefathers' day with song and prayer and study. Let papers be read concerning the pioneers of the Disciples of Christ. Let some one speak of the work among the Germans, and some one else concerning the work in the Indian Territory. And let a worthy offering be made, worthy of our history and of our opportunities. Send to Benjamin L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. building, for literature concerning the day and the subjects to be considered then, and when he sends it use it to the best advantage, and I am sure the proper observance of Forefathers' day will bring large returns both for the local society and the cause at large.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. POUNDS,

National Superintendent for the Disciples of Christ.

Ohio Letter.

The resignation of M. L. Bates at Newark to accept a call from the church at Warren is worthy of more than a passing notice. His pastorate at Newark has been remarkable in several ways. When he took hold of the work five years ago there was a little discouraged band of 40 members with a Sunday-school of 25, and $7,200 debt on the property. To-day he leaves a church of 450 resident members, a Sunday-school of 300 and an effort is being made to bring the debt to $3,000 before he leaves. This $3,000 is non-interest-bearing and for five years. To have stayed with Newark and kept it growing, as was possible, would have necessitated an enlargement of the property, and hence some additional debt and an obligation to stay till this was paid. After much thought and counsel it was thought best to leave it now. Bro. Bates is one of the wisest and most conscientious men in our ministry and the Warren Church is to be most heartily congratulated in securing him for a pastor. He will not leave Newark till his successor is on the ground which, by the way, ought to be the rule instead of a rare exception.

The district conventions of this fall will begin in No. 8 at Ridgeway, Aug. 7. Secretary Bartlett will give an illustrated address on Ohio, showing pictures of churches and preachers and maps of the state. This is a novel way of getting missionary facts before the people. But why not? Things seen will stick better than things heard.

A. W. Fournier has resigned at Irondale.

A. A. Brown, of Kentucky, has become a buckeye by adoption and taken the churches at New Paris and Campbellstown.

The Northeast Ohio Ministerial Association will meet the first week of September at Medina. R. Moffett is president and F. M. Green secretary. An unusually strong program is in preparation.

D. W. Besaw is in a meeting at Wellston. The church there has been greatly revived by J. L. Smith, of Jackson, who visited them on Sunday afternoons.

H. L. Atkinson is supplying the pulpit at Euclid Ave., Cleveland, for J. H. Goldner, who is taking work at Chicago University.

George Anderson has resigned at Glenwood after a few months' pastorate and will return to his native land, England, to engage in business. We are very sorry to let him go.

Two good lots have been purchased for a home for the new West Side Church in Columbus. An effort will be made to get the home at once.

I will take a vacation in holding a two weeks' meeting at South Perry, Hocking county. This is a new field entirely, a small inland town with only a weak M. E. Church. Dr. Irwin and wife are faithful Disciples there and through their solicitation the meeting will be held.

W. W. Winbiger has taken the church at Sabina. He held a successful meeting there last spring.

Now is the time to begin planning for the trip to Minneapolis in October. Ohio ought to send at least 100. Such a trip is an education in itself. The tuition from Ohio will be only about $20. Go! C. A. FREER.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

It has continued to improve until now I can work at almost all kinds of house-work. I had scarcely any appetite, but it is all right now. Have gained several pounds in weight. I would advise all who suffer from chronic diseases to write to Dr. Pierce."

Society of Alumni of Kentucky University.

[As Kentucky University, with a new president, is entering upon a new era in its history we gladly give space to the following communication from the executive committee of the Society of Alumni. It is addressed to the alumni of the university, but may profitably be read by all who are interested in the welfare of the institution.—EDITOR.]

DEAR FRIEND:—We address you as an alumnus of Kentucky University, and congratulate you and the rest of our alumni upon the dawning of a new era in the life of our alma mater. Her past record is one of which we all have a right to be proud. Her children are scattered over this and other lands, and among them are many who have given lustre to her name. You may count among your brethren alumni, men who have won national and international distinction in literature, in medicine, in statecraft, in the pulpit, in commerce, at the bar, and in every calling where intelligence and character are at a premium.

We realize, however, that we are living in an age of progress, and we must not be satisfied with the record we have made. Kentucky University has a valuable property in the way of grounds and buildings; she has, too, a very respectable endowment, and a superior faculty. But present demands require improved facilities. New buildings are needed, new departments of study must be introduced, and our faculty must be strengthened by additions to it. With this in view the curators have determined to push the claims of our college mother as they have not been pushed for thirty years.

As our leader in this advanced movement they have chosen Burris A. Jenkins, of Buffalo, N. Y. President Jenkins is a man of rare attainments. He was brought up in Missouri; he attended Bethany College, where he was a leader in every good work, and drank in to the full the spirit that hangs about that historic institution; he then attended Yale University two years, at the end of that time taking the degree of A. M.; then two years were devoted to special work at Harvard, where he received the degree of B. D. Before his residence in Harvard, he married Miss Mattie Hocker, of Lexington, Ky., a graduate of Wellesley College, and a young woman of superior attainments; enthusiastic in all that pertains to college work, she is eminently fitted to be the wife of Kentucky University's president.

President Jenkins, in addition to being a man of culture, is full of enthusiasm and of most pleasing address; he makes friends readily, especially among the young; he is in touch with many of the leading educators of the day; and he comes to us with the determination of making this his great life work. We are glad to say his election has met with the universal approval of the student body, both those who are in attendance now and those who have formerly attended. The meeting of the alumni on commencement day was very enthusiastic and every speech was filled with hope for the future of old K. U. It was determined to receive into our organization every graduate of the various colleges of the University, every graduate of the Bible College, and every student who has attended the institution as long as two years and has been out one.

The enthusiasm of that meeting must not be allowed to die as mere sentiment. This is the time for action. President Jenkins has a right to look to us as to no others for support. We must rally to him and make him know we are with him for the building up of the University. You will be informed from time to time of the work of your alma mater, and we shall look to you for your assistance. At present all we ask is your help in crowding the halls of the college next session. The attendance last college year was more than eleven hundred. This year we must go far beyond that. We are especially anxious to see the attendance in the College of Liberal Arts and the Normal College increased. The session begins September 9th. Will you not look out for every young man and every young woman of good moral character and earnest purpose who desires an education, and secure, if possible, his or her attendance at your alma mater? You need have no anxiety about the result. The instruction given is up to the old standard; the moral influences in the institution are the best; the college spirit is high, our students won many laurels in athletics last session, and our representative was awarded the first prize in the Southern Interstate Oratorical Association, held last May in Austin, Texas. Send us as many young men and women as you can to enjoy these advantages and to give us an additional reason for increased endowment. We ask every alumnus to send at least one new student and as many more as possible. If you desire any information about courses of study, etc., write to President Jenkins, Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. Do not put this off till September, but begin at once to work for K. U.

Formal Remission Again.

There are some who assert that the sinner is really pardoned the moment he exercises faith in Christ, and formally pardoned when he is baptized. If this be true, the Bible is to me an unintelligible volume. It is not God's way of dealing with men as portrayed in Holy Writ, as I understand it.

Naaman, captain of the host of the King of Syria, was a leper. Through the medium of a captive girl he learned of a prophet that could heal him of his leprosy. By faith in the girl's message he goes on a journey to see the prophet and is told to "wash in Jordan seven times." When he dipped himself seven times in Jordan "his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child and he was clean."

This is plain and easily understood. But let us suppose that Naaman was really cleansed of his leprosy before the dipping in Jordan and only formally cleansed then, who could understand Bible language? We would have a most loathsome disease entirely removed and the man ignorant of it until a mere formal washing occurred.

Jesus on one occasion found a blind man. He made clay of spittle and anointed the eyes of the blind man with the spittle, and told him to go wash in the pool of Siloam. The man obeyed, washed and came seeing. According to the Bible narrative no one has any difficulty in determining when blindness was removed and the man could see. But suppose his sight was really restored at some time before the washing and merely formally restored when he washed in the pool, who could understand it? We would have a man that a moment before was blind seeing everything about him perfectly and entirely unconscious of the restoration of his sight until a formal washing took place in the pool of Siloam.

R. B. McCALLEY.

[Our readers need not fear that the discussion of real and formal remission—already too long protracted, perhaps—is about to be renewed in our columns. It is not. We publish the above at the request of Bro. McCallely with no purpose of re-opening the controversy. It may be worth while, however, to call attention to the fact that an illustration never proves anything, and that an analogy is not a demonstration—especially when there is no authority for considering the analogy really analogous. If the remission of sins is as purely a physical effect as the healing of leprosy and blindness, doubtless it is really accomplished by a physical process. And if a man has the evidence of his senses to tell him that his sins are forgiven, as he does to tell him that his eyes are open, it is of course unnecessary to have any ordinance or ceremony to give such assurance. At least one man, however, who was cleansed of leprosy was commanded to show himself to the priest and do those things which the law commanded, that he might be formally cleansed of the leprosy which had already been really cured.—EDITOR.]

California Comments.

It gives me pleasure to say amen to what Bro. Clark writes of Bro. Lamar's articles. As this is a day of bookmaking, why not have these articles published in pamphlet or book form?

"The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century"—what a grand book that must be! How helpful it will be to all classes of readers. To the older members of the church, it will be the old life lived anew. What holy companionship. What blessed fellowship.

To know personally such men as Loos, Tyler, Moore, Smith, McLean, Garrison and such a beautiful character as Lois A. White, the writers of this book, is one of the glories of Christian fellowship. One of the charms of our holy religion is that it leads us to set our affections upon people and not on things that perish.

The outlook for our cause on the Pacific coast is truly more encouraging than for years. Our people, especially the ministers, have been giving more attention to the spiritual side of life, and this is bearing fruit.

It would be a grand thing if "The Spiritual Side of Our Plea," by A. B. Jones, could be put in every Christian home. The letter of the gospel without the spirit is just as deadly as the letter of the law. In our fight for forms it is not surprising that we lost sight, to some extent, of the Spirit.

Our state meeting gives great promise this year. A royal welcome is awaiting our brethren from the east. With F. D. Power, F. M. Rains, G. W. Muckley and others added to our home force, there will be an array of talent never surpassed at our annual gatherings. We hope to make our power felt on this coast as never before.

The brethren of the coast are looking forward to the Bible-school to be conducted by Prof. Hiram Van Kirk with great expectancy. This supplies a real need on this western coast.

Our work with the church here is fairly prosperous. Since beginning the first of March, 44 have been added to the church and a splendid hearing secured. Bro. W. B. Berry and his paper, The Pacific Christian, are constantly growing in favor with the coast brotherhood. Never has the paper given more universal satisfaction than at present.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

Topical Outlines of the Midweek Prayer-meeting Themes are still in active demand. Every Church should have an abundant supply. Price 25 cents per dozen copies. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

5 BOOKS for $1.00

The following works are paper-bound booklets. Each is a valuable treatise on the subject to which it is devoted—concise and dealing with the fundamental facts rather than microscopic detail. The price of each work singly is 25 cents. We will send the five books, postpaid, for One Dollar.

Christian Science Dissected.

By A. D. Sector. This work, issued last summer, has already had a very large sale. It is bright, breezy, clear and convincing—just the thing to put into the hands of one who is inclining toward "Christian Science."

Sabbath or Lord's Day.

By D. R. Dungan. Is it the First Day or the Seventh Day of the week that Christians should observe as a day of rest and worship? This book answers the question conclusively.

Facts About China.

By W. Remfry Hunt. The author has lived in Central China for many years. His book is full of facts about Chinese customs, language, government, religions, commerce, geography, etc.

The Liquor Traffic.

By S. W. Crutcher. Mr. Crutcher has spent years in fighting this traffic, and in this book tells of his experiences with manufacturers and dealers of whisky in the church and out.

The Lord's Supper.

By N. J. Aylesworth. This work is a defense of and custom of observing the Lord's Supper every Sunday. It is an able, convincing argument.

WARNING.—If you wait until you can go to the postoffice and buy a money order, you may never send for these books. Just send a one-dollar bill; it is safe, convenient, and saves you five cents.

A GREAT BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

The Young Man from Middlefield

By MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

THIS ENTRANCING STORY of twenty-six chapters ran as a serial in the columns of OUR YOUNG FOLKS during the first half of the year 1900, and was followed with absorbing and ever-increasing interest by the many thousands of readers of that weekly journal. It relates, in the popular author's most charming style, the trials and triumphs of a plain young man from the country, who left his father's farm and went to the great city to fill a position in the lumber yard of his uncle. In his new surroundings he came into contact with a variety of people, every way different from the plain, honest country folks with whom he had formerly associated; but in the midst of his new surroundings, with their many temptations, he maintained his Christian integrity and lived up to the motto he had adopted, to "Make Christ First in Everything."

His good influence soon began to be felt in his uncle's family, among his fellow-workmen, and most of all among the young Christian Endeavorers with whom he associated, whose society was in due time revolutionized.

EVERY YOUNG PERSON should read this charming volume, and it should at once find a place in every Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school Library.

SIZE AND PRICE.—One handsome volume of 257 pages, beautifully printed and substantially bound in cloth, price 75 cents per copy, prepaid.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Clarksville has good reports during the hot term; a hundred and five last Sunday.

During this extreme heat make your general exercises above the ordinary, having first-class music, good recitations, attractive programs all round, with brief and pointed recitations, short, precise reviews and more good music.

A. C. Hart, of Arlington mission, St. Louis, surprised the entire school one sweltering hot afternoon with a cooler of lemonade, and it was quite an incentive to all.

Hannibal, with Pastor Levi Marshall and J. W. Mounce, did as usual this year, remitting their $100 pledge in full when made, as did Herbert Bland for Grayson, R. H. Waggoner for Sixth and Prospect, W. R. Berry, Ionia, Miss Anna May for Breckenridge and M. P. Smith for Smithton.

Others are just as prompt in their quarterly responses, as for instance, Miss Mattie Bandon for Lexington, Miss Maud Mann for Slater, J. A. Gordon for Marshall.

The first Sunday in October is to be Missouri Bible-school Rally Day, as per the circulars sent your schools last week. Heretofore we have been going at it in the hop, skip and jump style, one school having one time, another a different date, but after this, all our schools are urged to make this the day when the campaign shall be opened for fall and winter work. The returning tourists will need it, the stay-at-homes will enjoy it, the school will be quickened and all will enter on the fall work with buoyant spirits. Mt. Cabanne has been leading in the fall rallies for years, but many others have been following in the way, and this is to enlist all our schools in such a day and time. Command this office for any assistance possible.

Shelby county workers are going to divide the county and have two rallies in October, one of them reaching about half of the schools of the county and the other reaching the other half. The rallies will be held on Sunday, will include some feature from every school in a given territory, and will give an enthusiasm to all the county.

The county Bible-school superintendents this year are to make special efforts toward working up delegations from every school in their respective counties, and the superintendent, outside of Nodaway, bringing the largest number of delegations, and the largest number in each delegation, to Maryville, is to be publicly honored at that time.

Salem, Randolph, has improved wonderfully, now having one of the best Bible-schools in northeast Missouri. Their growth is over a hundred per cent., and Mrs. Annie Fleming is justly proud of the school and of their Children's day, held the fourth Sunday in June.

The Randolph-Macon system of colleges, of Virginia, presents an organized plan of education which gives to educational work the advantages of consolidation now so fully recognized in the industrial field. It lessens expenses and compounds efficiency. Parents who contemplate sending either son or daughter to a Virginia school, will be wise to consult the catalogue, which may be had by addressing Chancellor Wm. W. Smith.

The Randolph-Macon Woman's College, which is a part of the system above referred to, has made a splendid record. Started in 1893 with 36 boarders, it had 215 last year and some applicants turned away. Such growth is significant.

What Is Your Life? the new volume of Essays by William J. Russell, is a volume that every young man can read with profit. It is written in the charming style for which the author is famous, and touches on a great variety of practical themes. Price $1.00 per copy. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

Alexander Campbell's Theology

By W. E. GARRISON. This book is a scientific statement according to the historical method of the religious and philosophical influences which molded the theological teaching of Mr. Campbell. Here are some extracts from reviews:

J. J. HALEY: "This book marks the beginning of a new epoch in our literature. . . . I heartily commend it to the perusal of thoughtful men and women."

F. D. POWER: "A distinct and noteworthy contribution to our literature. It is a clear and comprehensive statement of a very important theme."

ERI B. HULBERT: "Readers whose desire it is to understand the theology which Mr. Campbell elaborated will find in this treatise exactly the information they are seeking."

A handsome volume of 302 pages, bound in cloth. Sent postpaid on receipt of price, $1.00.

The Spiritual Side of Our Plea

By A. B. JONES

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

The Reformation of The XIXth Century

A Series of Historical Sketches, dealing with the Rise and Progress of the Religious Movement inaugurated by Thomas and Alexander Campbell, from its Origin to the close of the Nineteenth Century.

Edited by J. H. Garrison

This great work, which has been eagerly awaited for some time, is now ready for delivery. It is truly a notable work—a splendid addition to the literature of the Disciples of Christ. It is the only complete and modern history of the current reformation, and therefore should at once find a place in the home of every earnest and zealous Disciple.

This history is divided into eight periods, as follows.

Introductory Period	- - - - -	Chas. Louis Loos.
Period of Organization	- - - - -	B. B. Tyler.
The Turbulent Period	- - - - -	W. T. Moore.
The Transition Period	- - - - -	T. W. Grafton.
Period of Revival of Home Missions	- - - - -	Benj. L. Smith.
Period of Foreign Missions	- - - - -	A. McLean.
Period of Woman's Work	- - - - -	Lois A. White.
Lessons from Our Past	- - - - -	J. H. Garrison.

Chas. Louis Loos was personally and intimately acquainted with the fathers of the reformation, and associated with them in their work. His statement of the origin of our movement, and of its early connection with the Baptists, is the most satisfactory which has yet been made. B. B. Tyler has for many years been an untiring student of the history of our movement. W. T. Moore was an active and prominent participant in the events of the period beginning with 1861. His sketch of Alexander Campbell is a masterpiece, and is alone worth the price of the book. T. W. Grafton, in his "Life of Alexander Campbell," and "Men of Yesterday" has shown his ability as an able historian. Benj. L. Smith, A. McLean and Miss White have been most conspicuously identified with the enterprises of which they write. The closing section, by J. H. Garrison, is the address delivered by him at the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, October, 1899.

"The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century" is a handsome volume of 514 pages, bound in cloth. It is an addition to that list of books which, whatever other books he may have, every earnest Disciple of Christ should possess. This history is not only a volume full of facts and information, but a story of absorbing interest.

ILLINOIS.

Chapin, July 18.—Two, a husband and wife, made the good confession and were baptized at my regular appointment at Manchester last Lord's day.—IVAN W. AGEE.

Chicago, July 17.—Closed our 26 days' meeting at Bloomington, Ill., the last week of June with 246 added to the church. This was just two more than our largest meeting in Illinois, held at Springfield with Bro. Lynn, in 1899. Bro. Gilliland has the new church project well on the way. Lot is purchased, plans submitted and $10,000 subscribed. He will go with the new organization and the future for our people in Bloomington looks very bright. The other mission expects to organize a church soon also. This is a thriving city and there is plenty of room. This meeting closes our work for this season. In the five meetings held since our return from abroad the last of December, we have had 1,609 additions to the five churches. Let no man think these things "just happened." I shall bless the Lord for every remembrance of the heroic efforts of these splendid pastors and noble churches. Bro. F. A. Thomas had charge of the music in two and Bro. DeLoss Smith in three of the meetings.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

Mill Shoals, July 15.—I filled my regular appointment at the Frame, in Wayne county, over the second Lord's day in July. Five additions, all by confession and baptism.—LEW D. HILL.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, July 19.—Commenced my third year at the Seventh Christian Church of Indianapolis on July 1, with all departments in good shape and work moving off nicely. About 75 additions have been made in two years and about $2,000 paid on church debt.—N. H. SHEPPARD.

IOWA.

Des Moines, July 16.—Closed a four weeks' meeting at Luther, Ia., last Sunday night with 20 additions; 16 confessions.—CAL OGBURN.

Guthrie Center, July 16.—Had two added here last Lord's day.—D. L. DUNKLEBERGER.

New Sharon, July 17.—We have just closed a meeting of 19 days. Bro. W. E. Harlow did the preaching and Miss Manda Murphy led the singing. Results: 21 baptisms; three by letter; a general awakening.—H. J. CROCKETT.

KANSAS.

Leavenworth, July 15.—One more addition here yesterday.—S. W. NAY.

KENTUCKY.

Covington, July 19.—Baptized three after prayer meeting Wednesday night. We have had 29 additions at regular services since April 1. None previously reported.—GEORGE A. MILLER.

MISSOURI.

Aurora, July 15.—Had three additions Sunday by obedience. Have had 10 in the last four weeks at the regular services, all by baptism. Audiences holding up well through the hot weather.—M. J. NICOSOX.

Moberly, July 19.—There were two baptisms at our prayer-meeting service, Wednesday evening; seventy-two accessions in a little over 12 months at regular services. Our congregations are large all through the intensely hot season, and the people are harmonious. We expect a large ingathering the coming autumn and winter.—SAMUEL B. MOORE.

Mt. Vernon.—We have just closed a great meeting that will be long remembered. H. C. Patterson, of Indianapolis, was the evangelist and the writer conducted the singing. We began June 16, and closed July 17. One week before our tabernacle meeting began the other churches of the city organized and began an opposing meeting. However the mammoth tabernacle was filled to overflowing in three nights. The opposing force came down town a few blocks from us and held services on the street, but all efforts thereafter failed. The great crowds, from 800 to 1,000 people, gathered in the old tabernacle every night. The result was the denominations in Mt. Vernon completely snowed under. The result, 56 were added to the church, nearly all adults and nearly all by confession and baptism. We were blessed with preachers of our own kind from the very start of the meeting and many came from Marionville, Greenfield, Aurora, Pierce City, Monette, Miller and Verona. Words cannot express our appreciation of Bro. Patterson and we want another tabernacle meeting in just one year from now. The Mt. Vernon church is falling in line with the best churches of the southwest.—C. E. BROWN, pastor.

OHIO.

Brilliant, July 15.—Another addition yesterday (July 14). We are now cleaning and recarpeting our meeting house.—WILLIAM STIFF, minister.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Guthrie, July 18.—Last Sunday I visited the church at Oklahoma City, S. D. Dutcher, pastor. We had a splendid meeting. The house was crowded. They are building a new church building which, when finished, will be the finest in the territory. I expect to be with them in a meeting as soon as the new building is completed.—C. E. MILLARD, singing evangelist, Maysville, Mo.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Somerset, July 15.—Our work moves steadily forward. Six baptisms the past month besides several other additions. The church is growing in the grace of liberality. Our offering for foreign missions in March was $94, about 35 per cent. above any previous offering for the same purpose. The offering for home missions was $91, 40 per cent. above the best former record. The receipts on Children's Day were $121, a trifle less than last year's offering. Our organizations are all active. The Young Men's Guild is doing good work among the young men. A public reading room is sustained and the patronage is increasing. We have also a prayer band at work holding cottage meetings in the country districts. We are thus preaching from house to house and getting into social and spiritual touch with the people.—E. P. WISE.

WISCONSIN.

Milwaukee, July 16.—Six added since last report.—C. M. KREIDLER.

Book Notes.

We urge our friends and patrons to remember that the business of the Christian Publishing Company is by no means confined to the books which we ourselves publish, or to the works listed in our catalogues, or to those which we advertise, from time to time, in these columns. We do a general book business, and can supply, at the regular price, any book in print, no matter where or by whom published. We solicit correspondence regarding any desired volume. If you see, anywhere, an advertisement, review or notice of any book, and decide to purchase it, send your order to The Christian Publishing Company.

Hot? Well, yes, it has been somewhat that way of late in certain sections of the country—these sections, when united, stretching from Maine to Southern California and from Portland, Ore., to Key West, Fla. It has been too hot for many kinds of work for all save the hardiest and strongest men and women. It has been too hot for the people who are on their vacations to give much time to out-door sports, and they have inclined, rather, to recline in the shade, and read. Summer is the time for reading, anyhow. In most lines of business the hot months form the "slack season," when business is not nearly so brisk as during the autumn and winter. The business man does not have to remain at his office or store after night to keep up with his work, but may hie him homeward at five or six o'clock and spend the evening as he pleases. If he be wise he will spend some of the evening hours in reading. It need not be necessarily any particular line of literature that he must read in order to deserve our classification of "wise," but he should avoid trash and read the best in whatever line he selects—science, poetry, fiction, history, biography, theology or travel. No man has time to read even one half the good books in any branch of literature, but every man can find time to read the best, and this he should do.

It has been quite a long while since we have said anything to say of the General Catalogue of the Christian Publishing Company. From the rate at which orders for this book have been received, we know that a majority of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have secured the catalogue, but for the sake of those who have neglected to take advantage of our offer to send a copy free to anyone who desired it, we wish to once more state that this catalogue is a handsome booklet of 100 pages, beautifully printed on fine paper, and put in an attractive cover. It is a descriptive price-list of all our publications, including books, pamphlets, tracts, periodicals, Sunday-school supplies, church supplies, Christian Endeavor supplies, etc., etc. The book is profusely illustrated with half-tone cuts of the leading writers, preachers, teachers and editors of our brotherhood, and also with many cuts of books. It is by far the handsomest catalogue ever issued by any publishing house of the Disciples of Christ. But the best thing about this catalogue is that its prices are generally very much lower than ever before. If you have not a copy you should at once secure one and keep it handy for reference.

Several months ago we made a certain special book offer to our patrons which proved very popular, and which we have kept standing. It is our offer of Five Books for One Dollar. The five books thus offered are: Sabbath or Lord's Day, by D. R. Dungan; Christian Science Dissected, by A. D. Sector; My Experience With the Liquor Traffic, by S. W. Drutcher; The Lord's Supper, by N. J. Aylsworth, and Woman in the Home, the Church and the State, by W. H. Middleton. These are paper-bound volumes containing in the aggregate, 600 pages. Each volume is a clear, concise, comprehensive treatise on the subject indicated by its title. The price of each of these booklets, purchased singly, is 25 cents, but we will, until further notice, send all five, postpaid, on receipt of only One Dollar.

Among the phenomenal book bargains offered by this company during the past two years few have been more attractive to our patrons than T. P. Haley's historical work, entitled The Dawn of the Reformation in Missouri. Besides a general history of the beginnings and progress of our cause in Missouri, the volume contains a great many independent and separate sketches of pioneer preachers and pioneer congregations. The book abounds in incidents, anecdotes, reminiscences, etc., which make it not only a valuable historical work, but also a very entertaining volume. It is bound in cloth and contains 589 pages—a large and handsome volume. The original price of the work was two dollars, but we are now offering it, until further notice, for Ninety Cents, postpaid.

Another very popular bargain offer, made some time ago and still standing, is Prison Life in Dixie. Within a few weeks of the announcement of our special price of this thrilling story for only 50 cents, we sold hundreds of copies. Fortunately, we had a large supply, which is not yet entirely exhausted. The author of this book, J. B. Vawter, was a soldier under Gen. W. T. Sherman during the famous "march to the sea." While on a scout he was captured by the enemy and was sent to Andersonville, where he spent several months, eventually escaping. He describes in a graphic manner his experiences in the army, his capture, the horrors of Andersonville, his escape and his final success in reaching the lines of the Union army. A number of illustrations add to the interest of the volume. This book has been commended in the most complimentary terms by such well-known journals as the New York Tribune, etc. It is well bound in cloth and gilt. For the present we will send a copy, postpaid, to any address on receipt of the price—50 cents.

Every preacher in our brotherhood who endeavors to be an intelligent proclaimer of "our plea" should, without further delay, secure and study, as faithfully as he studied his text books at school, The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. Indeed, Rev. A. B. Philpott, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, and one of our best-known preachers, urges that the volume be adopted as a text-book in our Bible Colleges. It is one of the most valuable and helpful books that a preacher can read and absorb, being a complete and authentic history of the inauguration, progress and triumphs of the great reformation begun by the Campbells—Thomas and Alexander. The man or woman who purchases this volume with the determination, as a matter of duty, to thoroughly master its contents by reading and re-reading, will speedily discover that he has no irksome task before him. The authors of the work have given us a reliable history, full of facts, but they have avoided the dull and dry textbook style, and the result is a narrative of absorbing interest as readable as the choicest fiction. He who begins to read the book—even though he but picks it up because there is no other volume at hand and he wishes to kill time for half an hour—will certainly not be content until he has read every chapter. This is not the perfunctory praise of a publisher who has something to sell and is anxious to exchange it for the currency of his patrons. We feel that The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century is a great book, the most valuable addition to our literature in the past ten years. We are proud to be the publishers of such a work and we are anxious that it shall be generally read by our people, for their sake and the sake of our cause, as well as for the stockholders of the Christian Publishing Co.

stimulating their minds with that which is wholesome, elevating and helpful, or are they poisoning their hearts and lives with the printed and paragraphed filth that is being belched and vomited forth from thousands of presses and hundreds of publishers in this country? Are they devoting their evenings to clean fiction, true tales of exploration and adventure, well-written history, etc., or is it One-Eyed Wilson, the Scourge of the West, or Terrible Tom, the Boy Avenger of Bloody Gulch, or A Maiden's Mistake, or So Fair but So False,* or some other gems from the plentiful supply of blood-curdling nonsense and sewer-skimmings that is at the disposal of every boy or girl who possesses a dime? You don't know what your children read? Then you are culpably and criminally—almost—neglectful of your duty as parents. You had far better be ignorant of what your boys and girls eat. You may depend upon it that your children—those over ten or twelve years of age—are reading something, good or evil. If you do not select their books and papers they will do it for themselves, and, innocently perhaps, may damn themselves eternally in the selecting. It is impossible for us to speak too strongly in this connection. This very day there are tens of thousands of boys and girls in this fair land whose ruin is being almost assured by the reading of books unfit even for the eyes and minds of mature persons. It is not necessary to speak more plainly. Parents, if you would keep your children from vile, demoralizing literature and its evil results, supply them with good literature. Do not make the mistake of interpreting "good literature" to mean only tracts, the Bible and books of sermons. No normal boy or girl will willingly devote a great deal of time to the perusal of sermons. Give them clean, pure stories, simple histories of their own and other countries, children's or young people's books of science, biography and travel, and see with what pleasure they will be read by the boys and girls. In this matter of securing the best books for the young—those issued by other publishers as well as those issued by us—we are at your service. Write to us freely, giving us some idea of the age, natural tastes, etc., of your children and we will gladly recommend to you the best writers and the best books in any special line. This will cost you but little trouble; even the purchasing of a number of books will not tax you heavily, as children's books are very cheap, but the trouble and the expense to you may result in the changing for the better of the life and character of your son or daughter. Is it not worth while?

A Swarm of Bees.

"Listen, boys! What's that?" and Johnny Gates dropped his marbles and sprang up to look. Paul Anson was the first to see a small black cloud approaching, only a little above the level of their heads. "Swarm of bees," he said, tersely.

"Let's swarm 'em and get 'em," said Billy Parker, and Tommy Harris was at once bidden to get pans or pails or anything to make a noise. So Tommy darted into the house, and came back in a minute with a tin bucket and several pans, and they began such a banging and clashing that all the mothers in the block came to their windows to see what was the matter. The bees, too, were dazed by the noise, and after hovering about uncertainly for a short time, settled slowly toward the sidewalk.

"They're going to swarm on the sidewalk," said Frank Brice. "Put that bucket down, bottom up, and maybe they'll swarm under it."

They did as he said, and then stepped back a little way to see what would happen.

The bees settled to the sidewalk, not far from the bucket, with a great buzzing and fuss, and after some time they began to crawl under the bucket, at first one by one, but soon in a wide black stream.

The boys watched delightedly, without saying a word, until all the bees were out of sight. Not a sound came from under the bucket.

"Now, what shall we do with them?" asked Tommy.

"Sell 'em!"

"Keep 'em and get lots of honey. My father's got three hives of bees now. I'll take them to him, and then when they make some honey, I'll send for all you boys to eat some," Frank said.

"My!" said Tommy. "You talk 's if they belong to you!"

"Well," said Frank, "if I hadn't thought to put that bucket down, I guess we wouldn't have got them!"

"Who brought the bucket, I'd like to know?" said Tommy.

"Who thought of getting pans and things? Not you, Tommy Harris!" said Billy.

"I saw them first, anyway!" Paul declared.

"Yes," said Johnny, angrily, "you saw 'em 'cause I heard 'em and said to listen!"

There is no telling what might have happened if Miss Ray, the boys' teacher, had not just then come around the corner.

"Why, boys, what is the matter?" she asked, looking down into the flushed faces.

Not a boy had a word to say—not one word.

"What have you under the bucket?" she asked, pleasantly.

"A swarm of bees," said Billy.

"Oh!" said Miss Ray, "how fine! Did you swarm them yourselves? And what are you going to do with them?"

Once more the boys all looked at the ground, and said nothing.

"I'd like to see them," said Miss Ray. "Could I peep under? I suppose you have to lift it up soon."

Johnny went up cautiously and lifted the edge a little to look under. Then he boldly lifted the bucket.

There was not a bee in it! A crack in the board walk just under it told where the bees had gone. The boys looked at it and then at each other, sheepishly enough.

Miss Ray looked from one to another of the little group. Her face was sober, but there was a little twinkle in her eyes. As she bade the boys good-night, they suddenly remembered things they must do, and the little group vanished as quickly as the bees had done.—Fannie L. Brent, in Youth's Companion.

"What You Are."

A little boy was on the scales, and, being very anxious to outweigh his playmate, he puffed out his cheeks and swelled up like a little frog. But the playmate was the wiser boy. "Oho!" he cried, in scorn, "that doesn't do any good; you can only weigh what you are!" How true that is of us bigger children, who try to impress ourselves upon our neighbors and friends, and even upon ourselves, and, yes, sometimes upon God Almighty, by the virtues we should like to have! It doesn't do any good. You may impose upon your neighbor's judgment, and get him to say you are a fine fellow—noble, generous, brave, faithful, loving; but if it is not deeply true, if you are not generous, brave and loving, these fancied qualities are not moving him to be generous, brave and loving. "You can only weigh what you are."—Wellspring.

Planting Flowers.

It is too late in the season to plant flowers for this year but the lover of flowers begins to plan for next year as soon as this year's seeds are in the ground and it is worth while to consider some of the principles which shall govern the arrangement of growing flowers. A bulletin published by Prof. L. H. Bailey, of Cornell Agricultural College, contains the following suggestions, as quoted by the St. Louis Journal of Agriculture:

"Where to plant flowers is really more important than what to plant. In front of bushes, in the corner by the steps, against the foundation of the residence or out-house, along a fence or a walk—these are places for flowers. A single petunia plant against a background of foliage is worth a dozen similar plants in the center of the lawn.

"But the person may want a flower garden. Very well; that is a different matter. It is not primarily a question of decoration of the yard but of growing flowers for flowers' sake. It is not the furnishing of a house, but the collecting of interesting and beautiful furniture. The flower garden, therefore, should be at one side of the residence or at the rear; for it is not allowable to spoil a good lawn even with flowers. The size of the garden and the things to be grown in it must be determined by the likes of the person and the amount of time and land at his disposal; but a good small garden is much more satisfactory than a poor large garden. Prepare the land thoroughly, fertilize it, resolve to take care of it, select the kind of plants you like; then go ahead."

Be Honest in your Games.

By F. K. Steele.

The playing of games teaches us honor. How? If we cheat in the game it is dishonorable. How many of us are satisfied to play a fair game? If we cheat or take an unfair advantage in the smallest matter in the game, it is dishonorable. Cheating is a way of lying practically. Most lies are theoretical lies. They are spoken in words by the lips. But to cheat is a theoretical lie carried out in practice. If we cheat in games of amusement we will cheat in the great game of life. If we are known to cheat in games of amusement, this obloquy follows us all through life. We cannot shake it off. It sticks to us. We may gain money thereby but we have lost our integrity, and if we have lost our integrity, which is worth more to us than any one thing in the world, we have nothing. This shows how important it is to begin life right. When children play games—play them honest and fair. Do not cheat in the smallest thing. "Cheating works never thrive," is an old adage and when children are known to cheat in their little games, these children are shunned by the other children who play honest and fair. Further cheating brings on strife and crime. How often we read in the papers where one man rose against another—shot him, ran a knife into him—because he cheated in the game.

Signs of Paralysis.

Can Be Discovered in Time.

"Numbness of the hands and arms, with premonitions of paralysis, kept by me while I was using coffee. I finally discovered that it was caused by coffee; when I quit the coffee and began drinking Postum Food Coffee the numbness ceased entirely and I have been very well ever since. At that time I was unable to sleep, but now I sleep perfectly.

Husband was also troubled from lack of sleep while he was drinking coffee, but now he uses Postum Food Coffee with me, and we both sleep perfectly. Our little boy had peculiar nervous spells and I stopped the use of coffee with him and have been giving him all the Postum Food Coffee he cared for. He is perfectly well now.

My sister was troubled with nervous headaches while she used coffee. She found how greatly improved we were from discontinuing it and using Postum Food Coffee, so she made the change, and is now rid of her nervous headaches. "We are naturally strong advocates of Postum," Mrs. J. Walford, Castalia, Erie Co., Ohio.

In your Room.

Wash delicate things — handkerchiefs, laces, doilies etc. (things which one cannot send to the ordinary wash.) in Pearlline's way, viz: Soak, rinse, squeeze — directions on each packet. Spread smoothly while wet, on a mirror or window pane.

When dry they require no ironing. Grand advice for bachelors, maidens, boarders and hotel guests, and for fabrics too delicate and valuable to risk to others' hands.

Pearline is trust-worthy for washing and cleaning where ever water can be used.

Avoid Imitations

MARION HARLAND

in her book "First Aid to the Young Housekeeper," says there can be little doubt of the saving in effort by use of most washing - powders and, if a trust-worthy powder be used, of the saving to the fabric, over the old soap - rubbing way of washing. Users and imitators, both, have proved Pearline trust-worthy.

Bumblebees as Topers.

Continuous drone of the bumblebee moving wings balance it in the small round hole giving entrance to the nursery and nest in rail or board. The lulling sound of the summer to all save the small bumblebee is the boy's natural voice. He is the doer of daring deeds, for the black-head's sting is as sharp as the needle of a sewing-machine, and the white-head's zigzag bluster, though he is, is eye-blinking and glib.

The money I ever earned was by the sale of "white-heads" at a cent a dozen. The covering of barns and wooden sheds is often badly pierced and the black-headed female makes the small hole made by the entrance to a circular boring. After a meter, from four to six inches in lengthwise of the timber, the decay of the timber follows. Hence, the farmer is often put to the renewal or repairs. Hence the loss of dead bumblebees.

He is believed in making work instructive to his boys: pulling weeds, botanizing; picking stones from fields a lesson in mineralogy; killing terpillars and hurtful insects a lesson in entomology; but paddling for a real, financial reward. He gets as much as ten cents a day!

The bumblebee does not do anything else. He wears a small patch of white upon his forehead as a mark. He is the gentleman of the field. Last spring I discovered that the idlest he got on sprees and on a sequence. On and about my numerous wistarias—beautiful, first introduced into this country by Professor Caspar. The long purple panicles are all lovers of spring's choicest

When I heard the familiar hum I meant wealth. It was even so. I seized a bit of board, my arm returned, and my arm was slaying. I traced the sound of the wistaria twined about a post like a snake, and spreading its manybranched top as a vast flower-covered umbrella. Above the pendulous racemes hummed several bumblebees. Upon the flowers were many more, probing to the honey-sacs with their long tongues, and gripping with desperate greediness the purple chalice. The sight was strange to me, for the insects were in various stages of intoxication. Upon the ground were dozens (from early habit I reckon bumblebees by dozens) dead, dying, drunk, helpless; some waving their many legs and buzzing as they lay—feet up—their farewell song to life. They were all white-heads (males). There was not a black-head to be seen.

I watched the bacchanalian feast in astonishment. The wistaria was an insect grog-shop; the "white-heads" its chosen patrons. The tiny nectar goblets of the seductive flowers contained their death draughts.

In many places and often I sought and watched the wistaria and its crowd of humming revelers. Everywhere the story was the same—debauch, death. Strange to say, where the wistaria grew I never saw a female bumblebee. Perhaps they left their dissipated lords. Perhaps they shunned the neighborhood of the slums their lords frequented. Be that as it may, the planting of the wistaria will soon relieve the farmer of the pest. But from killing the bumblebees loss may arise—the red clover will not be so well fertilized.—Chautauquan.

The Goods-Box Habit.

The goods-box habit is one of the most insidious vices which prevail in small towns. It has counterparts equally objectionable which flourish in the cities. It may be described in general terms as the habit of conspicuous idleness, or of loafing in public places. People who amount to much are never addicted to this habit in any of its forms.

"The languor of the soft spring days carries me back in memory to the beginning of my professional career," said ex-Senator Chandler the other day, as quoted by the Saturday Evening Post.

"There used to stand in the streets of Portland, not far from my office, some dry-goods boxes which were much sought by citizens when the weather was fine and time hung somewhat heavy upon their hands. When the 'spring feeling' was strongest on me, I used to think, from my perch on one of these boxes, that life would be a doleful grind if I must go back to my desk and work. Since then I have learned that there is such a thing as a habit of duty.

"When a man has once acquired it he can no longer sit quiet on a dry-goods box and sun himself. He must always be doing something, or he is uncomfortable; and enforced leisure is more irksome to him than the hardest of labor. I acquired the duty habit forty years ago; and a balmy spring day, though it never fails to call up memories of my youthful love for a loaf in the sunshine, inspires me with no temptation to repeat that experience."

A very bright four-year-old had been told in the kindergarten of the beauty and value of diamonds, but no one in her family had any to show her. She was told that Mrs. Taylor, an elderly and amiable friend, had some diamonds which she could see. Margie had gone to Mrs. Taylor and asked to be shown her diamonds. Quite a handsome ring was put in her hand for inspection, and she studied it intently for a few minutes, turning it in all lights; then looking up earnestly in Mrs. Taylor's face, she asked, "Which is the diamond, the brass or the glass?"

A little girl, the daughter of a clergyman, was ailing, and, in consequence, had to be put to bed early. "Mamma," said she, "I wish to see my dear papa." "No, dear," said her mother. "Papa is not to be disturbed just now." Presently came the pleading voice: "I want to see my papa." "No," was the answer, "I cannot disturb him." Then the four-year-old parishioner rose to a question of privilege. "Mamma," said she, "I am a sick woman, and I must see my minister."

A Scientific Grandpa.

"See grandpapa, my flower," she said,
"I found it in the grasses;"
And with a kindly smile the sage Surveyed it through his glasses.

"Oh, yes," he said, "involucrate
And all the florets ligulate.
Corolla gamapetalous—
Compositæ—exogenous—
A pretty specimen it is,
Taraxacum dens-leonis!"

She took the blossom back again,
His face her wistful eye on.
"I thought," she said, with quivering lip,
"It was a dandelion."

The End of Bohemia.

The lament that, among other picturesque things, picturesque Bohemia is passing away appears to be well founded. Forces have been in operation in the modern social fabric that have affected the solidarity of Bohemians. They constituted a more distinct group apart when the irreconcilableness of the commercial and the artistic standards of excellence was accepted—though perhaps unconsciously—as an axiom. For it is on this irreconcilableness that the most of Bohemianism really rests. It is a state of mind into which many persons come who, having the artistic standard in respect of the thing which they may happen to do, and believing that it conflicts with the standards of work of the practical world, would like to avoid the discomfort growing out of this antagonism by going just in the opposite direction from the practical man. That is the essence; the free-and-easiness of Bohemianism is only incidental, a derivative.

But the newer idea is gaining ground that the practical and the artistic standards of excellence are not necessarily antagonistic. The world increasingly believes that there is no call to separate, either as to demands made or as to rewards given, those whose labors are idealistic from the practical workers. On the one side all idealistic folk are expected more and more to conduct themselves in as orderly and decently conventional a manner as other members of society; on the other side the feeling is growing that there is no good reason why the pursuers of practical affairs should have money returns proportionate to the energy expended, and idealistic laborers only fluctuating returns in no demonstrable ratio to the work done. The medieval poet's complaint of the Empty Purse may still be sung; but while the old-time writer—or actor, or painter—had perforce to be content (unless he were the chance protege of princes) with that purse, his successor objects more decidedly to its emptiness, and finds himself on his rights in so doing.—Scribner's Magazine.

"Sure, Pat, and why are ye wearin' yer coat buttoned up loike that on a warm day loike this?"

"Faith, yer riverence, to hoide the shirt oi haven't on."

Johnnie: "I wish I was Tommy Jones."
Mother: "Why? You are stronger than he is, you have a better home, more toys, and more pocket money." Johnnie: "Yes, I know; but he can wiggle his ears."

"You know you said before election that you were a friend who would divide his last dollar with me." "That's right," said Senator Sorghum, blandly; "that's right. But it's going to be a good many years before I get down to my last dollar."

"I shall soon be your new mamma," said a governess to her little charge. "I am going to marry your father, Freddy, dear, I wonder if you are glad?" "Hurrah!" exclaimed Freddy, "that's a perfectly splendid idea. Who thought of it first, you or papa?"

Lady Passenger: "Do you know, captain, I have never been able to understand how you find your way across the ocean." Captain: "Why, by the compass. The needle always points to the north." Lady Passenger: "Yes, I know. But supposing you want to go south?"

A young Irishman once went to a kind-hearted old squire for a recommendation. An elaborate one was written and read to him. He took it with thanks, but did not move. "What's the matter with it?" roared the squire. "Oh, nothin', sorr," said the lad quickly. "Well, then, why don't you go?" "Sure, sorr, I thought on the stringth of a recommend like that you'd be wantin' to hire me."

A small boy gave his teacher much trouble by his persistent use of the expression "have went." By way of impressing upon his mind the proper form of the verb, she kept him in one afternoon and left him in the school-room saying: "While I am out of the room you must write 'have gone' fifty times." When she returned the boy was gone. On his paper was written "have gone fifty times," and below this, "I have went home."

A correspondent of the Advance, writing of a journey in Alaska, tells of visiting an Indian hut where, in bargaining for some Alaskan souvenirs, he discovered some peculiar ideas of comparative values. Pointing to a totem the man was carving, "How much?"

"Two dollar fifty cent."

"Oh! Too much. How much basket?"

"One dollar fifty cent."

"Too much." Then turning to the mother, "How much for baby? Give you fifty cents." And with little show of reluctance the baby was handed over. But the purchaser hastily backed out.

to start right into them and see where we come out. Mary B. Chastain, New York: "I wish you could come to New York and see how pretty Central Park is, and the Museums of Natural History and Art. One day I went over to Staten Island on the ferry and when we came back, we went to Trinity Church, passed through the graveyard, and went down to Wall Street, to the Sub-Treasury building. In front of it is the place where Washington took the oath of President and there's a statue of him taking it. At one of the elevated stations there are steps that you only get on the steps, they will take you up to the top without your taking any more steps. We saw the animals in Central Park, and they have more cute monkeys! The Mall is as pretty as it can be. Yesterday I walked over to Fifth Avenue and went by Cornelius Vanderbilt's house; it faces Fifty-eighth Street, but the other side is pretty, too. We passed Huntington's house. After it was built he was afraid to live in it because somebody said he would die if he moved in. He did die, so he never moved in and his widow lives there now. Are you going to have Pete published in book form?" (Some day.) Wave Rodecker, Van Nuys, Ill.: "I like Lola Cox's plan, for the children to write short stories for our page; I don't know whether I can write any or not; I'll try." Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "I am sorry to say Philip will not end in his report because he doesn't wish to keep the rules any longer." (O Philip!) "This quarter I read Milton's Comus. Best wishes to all the members." Lucy Hitch, Palmyra, Mo.: "My mamma takes the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and I am always very anxious to read our page. I am a little girl, eight years old. I liked Red Box Clew very much." Nellie Dean Campbell, Hickman Mills, Mo.: "I would like to join the Av. S. as I think it a good thing for every one. I am 12 this month. My aunt, Anna Bryant (A. Campbell now), used to go to school with you at Independence, Mo." (Dear me! how long ago it seems!) "My favorite authors are Alcott, Sophia May, Wiggins, Abbot. For my pets I have little banties." (So have I.) "What are the rules of the Av. S?" (Tell you in a minute.) Bessie Knowles, Du Bois, Neb.: "I will join the Av. S. if you will tell me the rules." (It's a bargain. You make up your mind to do five things: read a verse of the Bible every day, learn a quotation each week, read 30 lines of poetry and 5 pp. of history each week, and keep a record of your work in a note book. If you keep all resolutions without missing a day for 12 weeks, you are placed on our honor list; but you must write to me, telling just how many pages and lines you have read, and from what books or authors.)

Agnes May, Campbell, Cal.: "I wish to become a member of the Av. S. Pete is fine. I have cut them out of the paper and put them in a book and I'm going to lend them to a little friend of mine to read. One paper never reached us—that of April 18th, so I never learned how they got out of the storm-cellar, or what aunt Dollie did when she found them out." (The paper you refer to was taken up with Av. S. Letters. It never did tell how they got out of the storm-cellar. In fact, they just walked out. Aunt Dollie didn't do anything—Edgar was too big to whip, and she didn't think it was Linda May's fault about the candy, and you know Madge and Pete were company, so she couldn't whip them. That's one good thing about being company anyhow!) "P. S.—I believe I would like to have you for my school-teacher, you are so funny." (Oh, but I'm not funny when I'm teaching; you just ought to see me a-looking through my spectacles!) Dottie Standish, Meeteetse, Wyo.: "We're having a new well drilled on our ranch. I have read Wide Wide World, Black Beauty, Uncle Tom's Cabin, Helen's Babies, etc. Reading and writing are my favorite pastimes. I am ten this month. I will send you my picture as soon as I can get one made; my mamma takes pictures." (Mrs. Standish, please make her one just as soon as you have time.) "I have one of Mr. Moody's Testaments that he marked in his preaching. I try to get some of the children to join our society. They smile and say, 'It must be nice.' But I can't get them to join. I will write again if this letter does not go in the waste-basket." (We have no waste-basket.) "I go a mile and a half to school. My sisters are Marie and Myrma. Marie is three years old and knows her letters by sight" (that is a good way to know them, too—I can tell 'em that way, myself,) "and she can count to ten. She wears overalls." (That must be delightful this warm weather, especially if you carry a very light supply of underalls.)

Ethel Mae Taylor, Harlan, Ia.: "I suppose you enjoyed your week with its boat rides, down on the farm." (Never had a better time; made an oven down at the spring and cooked fish myself; went swimming; rode the pony; made an island in the middle of the pond; dammed up the branch; had all the cream I wanted; blistered my arms, etc.; arose at five; played on the new piano; didn't break anything.) "Sorry I was not bright enough to guess who Nap was—will have to get Shem anyway." (Good story, too!) "Where can I get a copy of Red Box Clew?" (Hasn't come out, yet.) "I hope Pete will be printed. I like Lola Cox's plan very well, but believe I prefer continued stories, especially if they are as interesting as Pe—" (Modesty forbids my giving the rest of this sentence.) "I have read Kentucky Cardinal and Aftermath and liked both very much." Eugene Reynolds, Grenada, Miss.: "I begin to-day to keep the rules of the Av. S. My favorites, Pilgrim's Progress and Ten Thousand a Year. I wish you would have your picture put on the back of the EVANGELIST." (Why put me 'way over there, among all those college advertisements?) "You write like an old bachelor. Are you a married man?" (Oh, Eugene! What a question! Really! this is becoming quite embarrass-Bagley, Mabelvale, Ark.: "I think Lola Cox's plan will draw subscribers to the EVANGELIST, so they ought to give prizes for the best composition, story, poem, etc. What is Lola Cox's address?" (This is fame! Why, Cox, Mo., of course; do you think she would live any other place?) "Would she write to me?" (I cannot tell. She wrote to Gertrude Minnick, Davenport, Wash., a week or two ago. The Body of Christ.*

TEXT: For as we have many members in one body, and all the members have not the same office; so we, who are many, are one body in Christ, and severally members one of another.—Rom. 12:4, 5.

The church is honored by being represented as the body of Christ. It is not a mere group of individuals, more or less closely associated for religious purposes; it is a united, organized, articulated, living body. Let us remove anything and everything that mars this perfect soundness and symmetry in Christ.

Many, But One.

There are many nations, but one human race; many continents, but one sphere; many soldiers, but one army, and many members, but one church, one body. Hence there should be no discord in the church. There must be differences, for the members are unlike, but this very unlikeness should make more real and vital our union. Differences in ways of thinking, differences of temperament, and the like, are sometimes urged as reasons for a denominational, a divided, state of the church. It is quite as logical to argue for a division of the human body, because the members are all unlike, with vastly different functions. What similarity is there between the eye and the hand? Manifestly, according to this doctrine, they belong to different bodies. Put the two hands together, the two ears, the two eyes, the two feet, separate them into groups according to resemblances, and you have destroyed the body. The foot needs the eye; the tongue needs the ear. And so the ardent Methodist brother needs the intellectual Presbyterian, etc.

"A denomination," says Dr. Chas. H. Parkhurst, "is another name for some single strand of personal eccentricity, selected from each of a number of counterparts and tied up into one bundle." Looked at from this view point, as well as every other except that of the carnal heart, denominationalism stands condemned. The very argument by which it is frequently attempted to justify it condemns it. But in the same congregation, there are tendencies toward division. Diversities of gifts are evidence of the need of union. Disciples of Christ above all others, should bear living witness to the beauty and value of union.

The Indwelling Word.

"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God" (Col. 3:16). The body of Christ is to be animated and controlled by the spirit and word of Christ. In a representative church there are no words of wickedness and folly, of vanity and deceit, but words of truth and soberness. This word, by its very presence and power, communicates itself from one to another. It is heard in loving exhortations, in wise instruction and in ringing songs.

This is to be no meagre indwelling, but one which is rich and full. It is a fountain of wisdom, a source of refreshment and joy. God has no need of human wisdom—nor of human ignorance. Deeper and sweeter than the fabled fountains of pagan learning are the springing fountains of the divine word. In a heart obedient to this admonition, the peace of God is regnant; gratitude wells up in praise, and prayer rises like incense.

The Witnessing Life.

"And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him" (Col. 3:17). The first result of doing according to this precept will be to leave many things undone; for their nature is such that they cannot be done in his name. "Whatsoever" is all inclusive, but as if it were not enough Paul adds, "in word or in deed." The entire stream of activities is to bear witness to the indwelling life. And this is right, for we remember that there is a mighty deathlessness to human actions. They march on, through storm and sunshine, year after year, and even the death of the actor cannot stop their influence.

Can we conceive of the church as the body of Christ, bound together in perfect harmony and symmetry, erect, strong and beautiful? In it every member knows his place and performs his function. There are no drones. And just as, wherever Christ lived and wrought, the light spread, and tides of sorrow gave place to tides of joy, so in every community in which is a church of Christ, pure morals are inculcated, and works of faith and love abound.

Let each disciple ask himself, "Am I doing my part as a member of this mystical body?" And let every church propound the question, "Do we represent Christ to this community?" It is not by superior dogma, but by faultless life we are to win our peaceful victories.

Prayer.

Thy name, O God, is written afresh in every sunrise and in every sunset. The floating cloud tells of thy power, and the budding rose of Thy presence. But brighter than all else, Thy wisdom and loveliness in the Person of Jesus Christ our Lord. Thou hast created for him a body on earth. Glorify it, O God, by his abiding presence, so that from it may flow works of divine beneficence. Amen.

Every Lady Should Compete For This Prize.

The "HENDERSON ROUTE" is publishing a book of smart sayings of little children under the age of five years, and in order to get data for this publication they are offering two prizes. For the smartest saying a prize of ten dollars in gold will be given, and for the next smartest saying five dollars in gold.

In order to receive recognition all sayings forwarded must be accompanied with the full name, address, and age of the child.

A competent committee will have the contest in charge, and the winners will be promptly notified.

All sending in sayings will receive a copy of the book, without cost, when published, which will be handsomely bound and contain, in addition to the interesting sayings of the wee tots, a select number of fine half-tone pictures of children.

Address all letters to Mr. L. J. Irwin, General Passenger Agent, "Henderson Route," Louisville, Ky.

Quaint, Queer and Quirous Salt Lake City.

The late Col. John Cockerell in the Cosmopolitan said: "There are three unique cities in America, and one of these is SALT LAKE CITY." It is not only unique in its Temple, Tabernacle and Mormon Church institutions, but quaint in appearance, with its wide streets, immense blocks and martial rows of shade trees. It has, perhaps, more attractions to the square yard than any city in the country, and its climate, while temperate all the year round, is particularly delightful in summer. The Great Salt Lake, with its magnificent Saltair resort, where the water is "deader and denser" than that in the Dead Sea in Palestine, is an attraction in itself that people come miles to see. There are many cool mountain and lake resorts near by, also numerous very pretty canyon trips and parks, drives, Hot and Warm Sulphur Springs. Fishing and hunting in every direction. The trip from Denver to Salt Lake City and Ogden via the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY in connection with either the Colorado Midland or Denver & Rio Grande railroads is one of unsurpassed pleasure. Here nature is found in her sternest mood and the whole line is a succession of rugged canyon, waterfalls and picturesque valleys. No European trip can compare with it in grandeur of scenery. During the entire summer there will be low excursion rates to Salt Lake City and contiguous country. It is on the road to the Pacific Coast, if that be your destination. Send four cents postage to Geo. W. Heintz, General Passenger Agent, Rio Grande Western Railway, Salt Lake City, for literature, etc.

Abram and Lot.*

Soon after the entrance of Abram into Canaan, the country was afflicted by a famine, probably caused by a long season of drought, such as often visited the land. Abram took all his possessions, and, with his nephew Lot, went down into Egypt, where he abode until the return of a fruitful year to Canaan. While staying in Egypt there happened one of the two events that mar the character of this hero as a man of truth. Fearful that the beauty of his wife might cause her to be coveted by the Egyptians, and he be slain as a means to her possession, they agree to represent themselves as brother and sister. This was not woolly false, since they were half brother and sister, as we elsewhere learn. But, under the circumstances, and told as it was, this was a lie, and therefore unworthy of one who might claim the title "Friend of God." As they had feared, Pharaoh was attracted by the fair face of Sarai, and took her into his harem. But the Lord speedily, by means which are not told us, gave him to understand that she was the wife of Abram; and the heathen king administered to Abram a well-deserved rebuke for his duplicity, and sent her back to her rightful spouse. It must have been a sore lesson to Abram, yet he had enough of human nature in him to forget it, and to repeat the sin in after years, under similar circumstances.

The famine past, Abram, accompanied by his nephew Lot, returned to the land of Canaan and occupied the southern part of that country. His first stop was in the "South" country, or the Negeb, the plain lying to the south of Hebron, rich in grazing tracts. Thence he went northwards to Bethel, where he had before lived for a time and where stood the altar he had erected for the worship of God. Here he gave thanks to Jehovah for his preserving care, during the time of their sojourning in a strange land. Abram was now very rich in cattle, in silver and in gold, we are told. Lot, likewise, had been prospered, and was a man of extensive means. Their flocks and herds, covering the ground, soon began to exhaust the pastures, and the herdsmen quarreled over the possession of the choicest tracts. This became a grief to Abram, who was a man of peace, and affectionate in his nature. He felt, likewise, that he and Lot could not afford to dispute in the presence of the hostile peoples who were about them. "The Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land." It would put a stigma upon these worshipers of the true God to have the heathen around behold them at strife; and it would also invite the attacks of the native tribes, who must have watched with some jealousy the presence and prosperity of these strangers from the East. What a pity it is that some Christians to-day do not take a lesson from old Abram and study the things that make for peace, realizing of themselves, as Abram said of himself and Lot, "We be brethren." Let us be grateful that the spirit of Abram is more fully possessing the children of God to-day than ever before, perhaps; and that unseemly strife and selfish jealousy are less frequently exhibited by those who call themselves Christians.

So Abram gave the choice to Lot, that he might select that portion of the land which pleased him most. It would have shown a better spirit in the younger man had he deferred to his elder kinsman, who had been as a father to him, and under whose protection and guidance he had been so prosperous. But Lot was thinking of his own temporal interests rather than of the courtesies due to others. So he looked about from the hill on which they stood, and his eye was caught by the fair prospect to the eastward, where the valley of the Jordan widened out, and blossomed like a garden. It reminded him of the fertile fields that stretched out from the Nile, about the city of Zoan in Egypt, where their sojourn had perhaps impressed them with the contrast between that land of abundance and the scanty herbage of much of Palestine. Lot chose the plain, or valley of Jordan, and turned his face thither, feeling that he had made a very wise selection. What mattered it to him that the people of Sodom, near whose walls his flocks and herds were to graze, were sunk in vice, until all sense of shame was lost? He did not intend to have aught to do with them. He did not enter Sodom at once, but "pitched his tent toward Sodom." Yet a few years found him a dweller within the city, and so firmly fixed there that the angels of God could hardly get him out. Oh, how many parents, for financial advantages, have allowed their children to be surrounded by influences which could not do other than work ruin for their spiritual interests. Not all the riches of Sodom could atone for the moral degradation which its social life wrought for Lot and his family.

Abram saw his nephew depart for the fertile valley of the Jordan, and then turned himself about to the bleaker hills and vales of the highlands. Did he regret that he had given Lot the first choice? Did he envy his nephew the easier and more luxurious life which he should enjoy in the shelter of the narrow vale, shut in by the rugged bluffs on either hand? If so, there is no hint of it in the record. And it could have been but for a brief moment, if at all. For the Lord appeared to him once more, and cheered him by a splendid promise. "Lift up now thine eyes and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Ah, yes, Abram, thou hast so generously given, it shall now be given to thee. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth." "The liberal soul shall be made fat." Lot, who spoke for the best, shall seek a refuge amid the barren rocks of the salt plain. And Abram, who was content to take the worst in the interests of peace and for love of his fellow man, shall become the father of a mighty host, who shall crowd the promised land to the utmost and spread thence over the whole world, as a testimony for all time to the faith which a covenant-keeping God maintains with those who trust him. "As the dust of the earth," and "as the stars of heaven," are the terms which God employs to express the mighty multitude of Abram's children.

Abram returned to Hebron and again pitched his tent beneath the great oak of Mamre, and there built the Lord's altar. From that humble hill in southern Palestine there rose to heaven the purest incense of praise that had for ages ascended to God. The spiritual life of the race was perpetuated in the heart of that unselfish shepherd, and while the cities of the plain rejoiced in their increasing wealth, and revelled in their unhallowed pleasures, Abram communed with God on the heights and was satisfied.

The Normal Instructor, Part VII., is just from the press. It deals with the People of Bible Times under the General Heads of, I. The Chosen People; II. The Contiguous People. Under the first subdivision are considered, 1. The Patriarchs; 2. The Elect Family; 3. The Chosen Nation; 4. The Peculiar People. Under the second subdivision are described the nations who came in contact with Israel: 1. The Patriarchal Era; 2. The Davidic Era; 3. The Era of the Captivity; 4. The Intervening Era; 5. The Apostolic Era. There is added a Miscellaneous Section in which are considered, 1. Civil and Military Officers; 2. Sects, Parties, Classes and Councils; 3. The Christian Ministry. Normal classes and private students who have studied the six previous parts of the Series should now supply themselves with this work, and continue their studies. Price, 15 cents per copy; $1.50 per dozen. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful it Is in Preserving Health and Eating.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Christian Endeavor

Burris A. Jenkins

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 4.

Gaining by Losing.

(Mark 10:23-30.)

The other day a gentleman of my acquaintance gave a certain little boy a banana out of a bag and told him to carry it to his sister. The little fellow looked disappointed, but did as he was told. The sister took the fruit and laid it down while the little fellow stood waiting for her to divide it. Then the gentleman came up and gave another banana to the boy, whose face lit up with joy. The same man told me that another time he gave a lad several pieces of candy; then the man held out his hand and said: "Give me a piece, John." John did; but the gentleman still held out his hand. Another piece, and another came into his hand, until the boy had given up the last piece and stood ruefully gazing into the omnivorous paw. Then the gentleman rewarded the self-sacrifice.

And so this man seems to delight in teaching the lesson of gaining by giving. It is a great principle. It is the one that Jesus taught. It is everlasting. It is true among children and grown people. It may be hard at first to give up things. But in the end the joy comes not only in the reward but in the very act itself.

Persons gain healthy flesh by spending. They gain strength by giving strength. Men gain money by investing and spending money. We all gain spiritual depth by the giving of service. All our doings of good increase our capacity for good. It is by giving out, by losing, that we gain.

Peter, James and John and the rest gave up all for Christ. They gave up fishing, boats, nets, trade, homes, everything. And what did they gain? Immortal fame, to begin on a low plane. But also immortal life, power, leadership and a larger, newer life. What were their poor old battered boats, their rotting nets and their little trade in fish—what were all these in comparison with what they gained?

And so for each one of us that gives up home, business prospects, for the sake of the Lord and his work—for each one of us the exchange will be for our good. We may not see it at the time. We may see only the crosses and the thorns and feel the stripes, but in the end we shall see the real reward, houses and lands of the soul, mothers and brothers of the spirit, eternal and celestial possessions, the many mansions of a life that is hid with Christ in God.

Is there any cherished indulgence that you feel it hard to forego? Give it up, and right away, on the instant, you gain in light heartedness, in peace of mind, in elevation. It is like throwing sand bags from a balloon; you rise instantly.

Is there any sacrifice asked of you, any giving that you know you ought to do? Do it at once, and you immediately feel the exultation of the gaining. Swift as light is the answer to our giving. Electrical in instantaneousness is the reward for our self sacrifice. It may be as invisible as the galvanic current, but it is there.

It is ours to be like the earth, always giving and gaining, always bearing fruit and always enriching. It is ours to be like the trees and plants, always budding, leaving and flowering. It is ours to be like the great mother nature, always true to that eternal principle of giving to gain, of spending to increase, of scattering to gather.

Popular Hymns No. 2

THE ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. Popular Hymns No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will not find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in the style.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Like its predecessor,

CARMAN.

Louis N. Carman, of Unionport, O., departed this life May 2, 1901. He had been for many years a faithful member of the Christian church at Unionport, and will be much missed on account of his exemplary life and earnestness for the cause of the Master. Two sons and a widow mourn his loss and the whole community loses a highly respected citizen. Funeral services conducted by the writer at the church in Unionport.

C. E. SMITH.

CAMPBELL.

On June 20, John M. L. Campbell died at his home at Orchard Lake, Mich. Two days later we held a farewell service at his island home, then brought his body to the church where for several hours it was viewed by hundreds of his oldtime neighbors and friends. John Campbell was the oldest son of Colin and Caroline E. Campbell, both of sainted memory in the Detroit church. A few months after John's birth they came from Scotland to Detroit; so that practically his whole life of nearly sixty years was spent here. Just 46 years before to the day and almost to the hour, and within a few hundred yards of the same spot where he was laid away to his rest, he had been buried with his Master in baptism. He had served the Detroit church as its clerk for nearly thirty years. Markedly among his characteristics were his intense loyalty to his friends, his eager interest in the children and the young people, his tremendous earnestness in an undertaking, his loving championship of the cause of the weak and the oppressed, and his love for the church. The work by which he will be longest remembered was the illustrations of the Sunday-school lessons. For more than a quarter of a century there flowed from his fertile brain and facile fingers the finest series of crayon illustrations of the current Sunday-school lessons that I have ever known. Many years ago Bro. Campbell and Louise Loos, daughter of President Loos, of Kentucky University, were united in marriage. The union has been wonderfully congenial and happy. In addition to his wife, one brother, Forest, and two sisters, Mrs. John Henry and Miss Caroline Campbell, are left to mourn his loss and cherish his memory. Coupled with them are also a large circle of relatives and a much larger circle of church members, friends and acquaintances who are sorely bereaved. May the "Father of mercies and the God of all comfort" sustain the sorrowing and comfort the afflicted.

Died, on July 3, 1901, at "Fairview Farm," near Ashley, Mo., Robert Francis Lonsdale, aged 20 months and 15 days, only son of Frank L. and Mary Crow Lonsdale "And the little feet, in the golden street, shall never go astray."

WINTERS.

Clarence F. Winters, aged 19, the eldest son of John F. and Laura Winters, died of typhoid fever on June 23, 1901. He was a young man full of much promise. He had just graduated from the Lincoln High School. He was secretary of the Central Christian Bible-school to which John H. Bicknell, of Liverpool, is minister. The writer was called from Fairfield, Neb., to conduct the funeral service, being assisted by T. J. Thompson, of the First Church and Pres. W. P. Aylesworth, of Cotner University. The interment was made at Wyuka Cemetery, June 25, from the residence, 1408 E. St. L. A. A. HUSSONG.

THE CRISIS

By WINSTON CHURCHILL

This new work by the author of Richard Carvel and The Celebrity, is undoubtedly the novel of the year. Mr. Churchill's first book, Richard Carvel, has reached a circulation of 375,000 copies, and the new book, which every one is reading this summer, promises to exceed that wonderful figure.

THE CRISIS is a story of the days just prior to and during the war of 1861-1865. The scene is chiefly laid in St. Louis. Among the leading characters are Abraham Lincoln, U. S. Grant, W. T. Sherman, Fremont, Lyons, and other historic personages, who figured prominently in the great civil war.

THE CRISIS is a great novel. It pictures actual conditions in the Mississippi Valley at the outbreak and during the war more clearly than any work we have ever seen. A very sweet love story runs through it. All the characters are strongly drawn. The work is handsomely illustrated.

WHY?

Why do you, who live in the Mississippi Valley, send to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or even to Chicago for a desired volume, when you can secure it much more quickly and just as cheap in St. Louis? This is a question that is very difficult to answer. We can supply you with any book that you wish—any respectable book, that is; French novels and blood-and-thunder-seven-buckets-of-gore-to-the-chapter romances are barred—no matter where or by whom published. Our business is by no means confined to the books we ourselves publish. Our catalogue contains only our own publications, in the main, but we can sell you any book you wish to purchase.

A SUMMER RESOLUTION

I WISH to begin this summer well, to do something in it worthy of it and of me. to transcend my daily routine and that of my townsmen, to have my immortal life now in the quality of my daily life. I pray that the life of this summer may ever be fair in my memory. May I dare as I have never done. May I persevere as I have never done. May I purify myself anew as with fire and water, soul and body. May my melody not be wanting to the season. May I gird myself to be a hunter of the beautiful, that naught escape me. May I attain to a youth never attained. I am eager to report the glory of the universe. May I be worthy to do it; to have gotten through with regarding human values so as not to be distracted from regarding divine values. It is reasonable that a man should be something worthier at the end of the season than he was at the beginning.

WHAT WE STAND FOR

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

The Spiritual Side of Our Plea

— By A. B. JONES —

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

5 BOOKS for $1.00

The following works are paper-bound booklets. Each is a valuable treatise on the subject to which it is devoted—concise and dealing with the fundamental facts rather than microscopic detail. The price of each work singly is 25 cents. We will send the five books, postpaid, for One Dollar.

Christian Science Dissected.

By A. D. Sector. This work, issued last summer, has already had a very large sale. It is bright, breezy, clear and convincing—just the thing to put into the hands of one who is inclining toward "Christian Science."

Sabbath or Lord's Day.

By D. R. Dungan. Is it the First Day or the Seventh Day of the week that Christians should observe as a day of rest and worship? This book answers the question conclusively.

Facts About China.

By W. Remfry Hunt. The author has lived in Central China for many years. His book is full of facts about Chinese customs, language, government, religions, commerce, geography, etc.

The Liquor Traffic.

By S. W. Crutcher. Mr. Crutcher has spent years in fighting this traffic, and in this book tells of his experiences with manufacturers and dealers of whisky in the church and out.

The Lord's Supper.

By N. J. Aylsworth. This work is a defense of and custom of observing the Lord's Supper every Sunday. It is an able, convincing argument.

WARNING.—If you wait until you can go to the postoffice and buy a money order, you may never send for these books. Just send a one-dollar bill; it is safe, convenient, and saves you five cents.

Current Events.

The Schley Inquiry. It is to be regretted that human nature is so constituted that it often takes a bigger fight to determine who shall get the credit for a victory than it took to win the victory itself. Recent events have forced Admiral Schley to request an investigation into his conduct at the battle of Santiago. The third volume of MacLay's History of the United States Navy contains a severe arraignment of his course at that time. Though it has been shown that this volume is not used as a text-book at the naval academy, yet the whole affair has started the discussion afresh in the newspapers. A trial of the case was inevitable and Admiral Schley is justified in preferring a trial by a properly appointed court to trial by newspaper. A court consisting of Admiral Dewey and Rear-Admirals Ramsay and Benham, with Capt. Samuel C. Lemley as Judge Advocate General, has been appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to examine the whole question and especially ten points which are defined in the secretary's letter. The chief of these are the movements of Schley's squadron off Cienfuegos and from there to Santiago, his alleged disobedience to the order of May 25, the withdrawal from Santiago while the Spanish fleet was in the harbor, the failure to attack the Cristobal Colon in the mouth of the harbor when opportunity offered, and the movement of the "Brooklyn" at the beginning of the battle, which is said to have endangered the other ships. If the court decides that Admiral Schley was not guilty of cowardice, indiscretion and disobedience in these actions, he will probably undertake a civil suit for libel against the author of the history. The Secretary of the Navy has issued a general epistle to the naval officers suggesting that, during the progress of the trial, they refrain from public expressions of opinion. Almost every one is a zealous champion of one side or the other and it is a besetting sin of naval officers to talk too much for the press when they get a chance. Let us hope that the whole thing will be settled conclusively and that the Sampson-Schley feud may be forgotten so completely that the public can remember only the eminent services, and not the petty jealousies, of two brave men.

The Steel Strike. Satisfactory progress is being made toward the settlement of the steel workers' strike. Conferences have been held between Mr. Morgan and Mr. Shaffer, and a compromise will doubtless be patched up in a few days. It is believed that the Amalgamated Association will recede from its demand to be considered as the representative of the non-union workmen and to be allowed to sign the scale on their behalf, and that the steel companies will remove any obstacle which they have placed in the way of non-union men joining the union. The strike has aroused little interest in proportion to its magnitude, for it is difficult for the public to sympathize wholly with either side. The billion dollar trust certainly makes no very strong appeal for popular sympathy. The striking workmen, on the other hand, are not asking for higher wages, shorter hours or more sanitary conditions. Their union has agreed upon a certain scale with their employers and they profess entire satisfaction with the scale. The object of the strike is to compel the companies to extend the same scale to other mills and other workmen who are not in the union. In making such a demand as this, it seems to us that the Amalgamated Association is asking more than any union has a right to ask, and popular sympathy will not back it up in more than a half-hearted fashion. If, however, the strike shall induce the companies to nullify the clause in the individual contracts of the non-union men by which they have agreed not to join a union—though this was not the point primarily involved in the strike—it may promote the interests of the union and the workmen.

The Rush for Free Land. The registration of applicants for homesteads in the newly opened Indian lands closed Friday night, July 26. The total registration was about 170,000, far exceeding the expectation of both the officials and the prospective homesteaders. Since the number of claims to be assigned is only 12,500, this leaves to each registered applicant a little less than one chance in thirteen of securing a claim. If this had been known in advance it would doubtless have discouraged many. On Monday, July 29, the drawing of lots began which will decide who the lucky applicants are to be. Every precaution has been taken to prevent speculation and the transfer of any drawing will inevitably lead to its forfeiture. The method of registration and drawing by lot has met with some criticism, partly from those who characterize it as a lottery and partly from those who have more confidence in their ability to win a foot-race than in their luck at drawing numbers. The method cannot with any accuracy be called a lottery in the ordinary sense, for neither the winners nor the losers pay anything for the chance of drawing. When the government has a limited amount of land to distribute gratis, there is no reason why it should be made the prize for a go-as-you-please race ending in a rough-and-tumble fight. To auction it off, as has been suggested, would defeat the whole purpose by putting it in the hands of those who could pay most instead of those who need it most. The method of casting lots seems thoroughly practicable and justifiable.

Forehanded Politics. It is reported that, even before the drawing for homesteads in the new Indian lands had begun, and even before the registration of the applicants had closed, there was the beginning of political organizations looking to the government of the town of Lawton. Lawton is not yet a town at all except on paper, but within a few days it will suddenly acquire a population befitting a county seat and will find itself in the throes of its first political campaign before the grass has been worn from the trail down the middle of its main street. It is said that three tickets, Republican, Democratic and Citizens', are already in the field, though the political ambition of each nominee must be cooled somewhat by the reflection that it is thirteen to one that he will not draw either a homestead or a town lot in the new country. We do not know whether this report is true or not, but there is an element of truth as well as of picturesqueness in it, even if it is fiction. It is a vivid representation of the Anglo-Saxon passion for self-government. The habit of respecting authority—a habit which moves a man even to refrain from suicide when a policeman threatens to shoot him if he persists—is closely paralleled in our race by the instinct for politics. A city—even a paper city, with no more real existence than the shadowy land of Lyonesse, save in the expectation and desire of the homeseekers—cannot long exist without political parties, a ring or two and an assortment of bosses. These political "sooners" hastening to organize a government for a city of the future represent Anglo-Saxonism raised to the n-th power.

The End of McLaurin. By a vote of twenty-five to five, the Central Democratic Committee of South Carolina has excommunicated Senator McLaurin from the party. The action was, of course, instigated by Senator Tillman, and its immediate effect will doubtless be to put Mr. McLaurin out of the race for the long-term senatorship. There might have been enough Democrats of his way of thinking to give him a faint chance of success in an equal contest, but it is all over now that he is stamped with the disapproval of the Central Committee. The balance of power in any party is usually held by those who accept the dictates and definitions of their party leaders. Accepting the statement of the committee that Mr. McLaurin's political faith is not genuine Democracy, a majority of the party will reject it, not because they disbelieve it, but because they have been trained to reject everything that is not of, for and by the Democracy. We say it as no aspersion upon the party. In many states Republicans would do the same. But this is the reason why the South remains solid—because of the magic of the party name. So all that the committee needed to do, and all that it tried to do, was to say that McLaurin had no right to the name Democrat. No argument could be more effective. When the next political sun rises upon South Carolina it will be observed that the place of Mr. McLaurin is vacant. But this does not necessarily mean a permanent triumph for Mr. Tillman and the ideas which he represents.

A New Era for Porto Rico. With the issuing of the President's proclamation last Thursday establishing free trade with Porto Rico, that territory enters upon a new epoch. At the same time Gov. Allen, having carried the territory through the first period of its career, voluntarily resigned his office and Judge W. H. Hunt, secretary of the insular government, has been appointed governor. The condition of the island at the end of Gov. Allen's term is eminently satisfactory. The insular government is burdened by no debt and the taxation is less than in any other part of the United States. Money is in the treasury to meet all necessary governmental expenditures, with a surplus for emergencies. Since the Hollander law went into effect, ample revenue has been afforded by the excise tax on tobacco, a land tax of one-half of one per cent., and the import duty on goods from foreign countries. The largest items of expense in the government's budget are for schools and roads. The President's proclamation abolishing the tariff between Porto Rico and the United States will doubtless give an increased impetus to the sugar industry and to the exchange of duties with this country. Porto Rico is preparing to give to the West Indies an object lesson in the advantages of membership in the great American Union.

King Edward's Titles. It has been proposed in the House of Lords that King Edward be allowed the privilege of selecting a new title, or as many of them as he sees fit, to give proper expression to his dignity, majesty and sublime magnificence as potentate of England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Canada, Australia, India, South Africa, Gibraltar and St. Helena, with lively hopes in the Yang Tse Valley. Is it not enough to be known as "By the grace of God King of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and Emperor of India"? Of course if he really feels the need of a few more titles, he might add a dozen setting forth his relation to each separate colony in the empire, but there is no need to make a royal title look like the index to an atlas. If they have really decided that they want an empire—and it seems that they have—why not have one title to cover it all? Enlarge the meaning of the term Britain to cover all the British dependencies, and call the king "Emperor of Britain." That would be simple, comprehensive and dignified. At any rate he might do without the epithet "Defender of the Faith," a title conferred by the pope on Henry VIII in his youth for writing a book in defense of the Romish doctrines against Luther. It seems rather unfair to keep a title won in the defense of transubstantiation, while the oath of accession contains a vigorous denial of that same doctrine.

For the Honor of the Force. The trial of a criminal case has just been concluded in Pittsfield, Mass., which has occupied much space in the papers. Its sensational features need not be repeated here. A young man was arrested and tried for the murder of his sister. The testimony all pointed to the fact that she had been killed by burglars, but the police, being unable to locate the burglars, denied their existence and formulated a theory that there had been a family quarrel in which the girl was killed by her brother. There was no basis for this charge except the flimsiest circumstantial evidence, and no motive for it except the desire of the police force to shield itself from the odium of failing to catch the criminal. When the case came to trial the young man was speedily acquitted. So the police of Pittsfield must bear a double portion of odium. It is a poor business for the state to become a partner in so contemptible a trick as this, to attempt to convict an innocent man of murder in order to save the professional pride of a chief of police from the embarrassment of admitting that the burglar and real murderer had gotten away. This may not be technically a case of malicious prosecution, but it is just as bad.

The French Elections. It is in keeping with French ideas of the Lord's day that their elections are regularly held upon Sunday. As in England, so in France, even national elections are not held simultaneously in all parts of the country, but are scattered over two or three weeks. The recent elections for councillors-general in all the departments resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Republican party which is at present in power. The Nationalists, Royalists and all other branches of the opposition were completely buried by a vote of about four to one. This is particularly significant because the elections began on the day after the promulgation of the new law limiting the right of religious associations to hold property. This law, which was advocated by M. Waldeck-Rousseau and supported by the Republicans, is aimed against the Catholic orders, and much has been said about the unpopularity of the measure. It has been threatened by leaders in the Catholic Church that it would result in the overthrow of the ministry and the undoing of the party. The outcome of this election, held when the Religious Associations Law was uppermost in all minds, is a striking vindication of the party which has championed it and an indication of the comparative unimportance of clerical influence in French politics.

Peace or Intervention. From various sources come rumors that the chance of intervention in South Africa by the European Powers is again becoming a factor in the situation. A Conservative member of the House of Commons said a few days ago that the government was already facing the alternative, either to end the war at once or to submit to intervention in which the Kaiser would probably take the lead. How authentic this information is we cannot say, but it is significant that such a statement should be made at all in the House of Commons by a partisan of Chamberlain and Salisbury. The popularity of Mr. Asquith, the champion of Liberal Imperialism, is apparently on the increase, but this only shows how impotent the Liberal party is to suggest any positive policy of its own. Mr. Rosebery still maintains, as set forth in his letter to the Liberal Club of London, that there is no hope that the party can accomplish anything so long as it contains two irreconcilable elements, one of which is distinctly insular in its views, while the other reaches out toward empire.

International Trusts. The rumor of a combination about to be effected between the salt companies of the United States, Canada and Great Britain, sets one to thinking of the possibilities when the international trust is perfected. Even now, to be sure, the Standard Oil Company is practically world-wide in its operations and controls the oil markets of the world with little opposition. But in most lines the operation of tariffs makes it difficult for a trust to become truly international. Perhaps the transportation systems will come to it as soon as anything. The "community of interest" plan, which has made possible railroad operations of such vast magnitude as to startle even this unsusceptible age, will inevitably bring all, or nearly all, of the roads in the country under the control of one small group of men. Perhaps we are nearer to that consummation now than the general public suspects. At the same time the consolidation of railway and steamship lines is going on. The owners of a railroad with a seaport for a terminus, naturally dislike to hand freight and passengers over at that point to another company. Railway and steamships are feeders for each other, and when one man owns both, both feed him. So the Pennsylvania railroad has its freight steamers, and so Mr. Morgan, by the purchase of the Leyland line and a line from Portland to London via Hong Kong and Suez, has girdled the world with his own system. A general "community of interests" is apparently not far off. There is, moreover, a rumor that our steel trust is to be matched by a steel combine in Germany, with the Krupps at its head.

Brevities. The new battleship Maine was launched last Saturday at the ship-yard of the Cramps in Philadelphia. The construction of the vessel was authorized by act of Congress about a month after the destruction of the old Maine.

Dr. Emil G. Hirsch has resigned from the Illinois Board of Charities because the governor proposes to appoint a politician without special fitness as secretary of the board. The position requires technical knowledge. In reply to the criticisms in the letter of resignation, Gov. Yates says that so long as he is governor he intends to be governor—that is, to appoint whom he pleases where he pleases.

An effective temperance lesson is taught by the statistics of casualties during the present hot spell. The officers of the city hospital say that 95 per cent. of the heat prostrations in St. Louis have been persons addicted to the use of alcoholic beverages and in most cases the victims had been imbibing more or less freely immediately before the stroke. The glass that professes to cool in summer and warm in winter really does neither.

In Things Essential, Unity.

The daily papers have recently given us a report of what a young minister said in his farewell discourse to the church he had been preaching for, and probably his farewell discourse as a preacher among the Disciples of Christ. He is reported to have declared his inability to accept the view that the work of creation was completed in six literal days of twenty-four hours each or to believe in the historical accuracy, literally interpreted, of the incident of Jonah and the whale, of the sun's standing still, of the destruction of the children by bears for calling Elisha a "bald head," the giving up of women to the lust of brutal soldiers by command of the Lord, etc. We quote from memory. These things were displayed in large head-lines as reasons why this preacher could no longer remain in an orthodox pulpit!

We are quite safe in assuming, on general principles, that the report is a caricature of the sermon as a whole. But at any rate it is probable that the preacher did mention these things and perhaps others as illustrations of difficulties in the way of his remaining in the pulpit of the Christian Church. The newspapers accepted this view of the situation and spread broadcast the idea among the people that a minister holding such views is barred from the pulpit of one of the most liberal and liberty-loving of the religious bodies in Christendom, greatly to the discredit of the Bible and of Christianity. There is more harm done to the Christian religion by these newspaper reports than many of us imagine. There is a large number of people who get their impressions of Christianity and of the churches from the daily papers. Imagine what a text this incident, as reported in the papers, will afford for an infidel harangue to a crowd of non-church-goers in some down-town hall on Sunday afternoon!

One of the lessons we wish to draw from the incident is the un wisdom of any one, calling himself a preacher of Christ's gospel, going into his pulpit to tell the people what he doesn't believe, and what he has doubts about. The people have too many disbeliefs and doubts of their own. When they go to church they presumably go to have their faith strengthened by hearing a man who has positive beliefs concerning fundamental truths, and who will tell what he does believe and not what he doesn't believe. Imagine Paul, or any of the apostles, with a great, burning message about Christ in their hearts, rising before the people to air their doubts about the historicity of certain incidents in the Old Testament record! We beseech you, brethren, if you have any certain convictions concerning Christ and the great salvation, declare these to your waiting congregations, with all the soul within you, and leave your doubts in your studies until you either outgrow them or come to see that they have no relevancy to the great fundamentals of Christian faith.

This last remark leads us to say that any preacher who would array such things as we have mentioned as reasons why he cannot accept the Bible as a revelation of the grace and truth of God for man's salvation, or as reasons why he cannot occupy a pulpit among the Disciples of Christ, would betray a superficiality and immaturity of thought which would afford a much better ground for his retirement from the ministry than the difficulties mentioned. We protest against this misrepresentation of our common Christianity by this newspaper report, and especially do we repudiate this aspersion against a religious body which has always given emphasis to the motto: "In things non-essential, liberty; in things essential, unity; in all things, charity." No minister among us has ever been required to hold the opinions which this preacher is said to have rejected. They are matters about which ministers and others are permitted to hold their individual opinions. No wise preacher will take these opinions into his pulpit and preach them as a part of the gospel. If he should find that the faith of some of his congregation is disturbed by the impression that a certain view of these things was essential to Christian faith, he would be justified in pointing out to them that such is not the case. Indeed, it is wise, in these times, to teach the people clearly to discriminate between what is faith and what is opinion.

Incidentally we may remark, in concluding this article, that there is no reason why the people should be kept in ignorance of the progressive nature of revelation; that God has revealed himself to man and in man, as men have been able to receive it. This principle, so clearly taught in many passages, would relieve the minds of the people of many difficulties. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers, in the prophets, hath, in these last days, spoken to us in his Son," and the revelation in his Son is as far superior to that in the prophets as the Son is superior to the prophets in his knowledge of God and of the kingdom of the Spirit. But some of the annalists or historians of the Old Testament were not prophets, and did not have as high a conception of spiritual things as the prophets had. Why, then, should we think it strange to find psalms and historical records whose conceptions of God, and of man's relation to him, are far below the high ideals revealed to us in Jesus Christ? It is time the Christian world had come to a more clear and general understanding of these principles in order that the faith of the people be not disturbed by these imaginary difficulties.

The Joy of Jesus.

It is one of the seeming paradoxes in the life of Jesus that He was at once "a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," and yet was filled with a deep and abiding joy that manifested itself in some of the darker moments of His history. "These things have I spoken unto you," said Jesus to His disciples, "that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." This passage shows that beneath all the sorrow and grief which affected the life of Jesus, as they do all of us, only perhaps in a more intense form, there ran an undercurrent of peace and joy which gave to His life that serenity and strength which enabled Him to accomplish His life-work. It shows, too, that it is the desire of Jesus that His disciples should share in this joy which may co-exist with all the afflictions incident to this mortal life. This fact justifies a reverent inquiry into the sources of this joy.

It is not difficult to understand that there must have been a deep and constant joy in the mind of Jesus, coming from the elevated thoughts which One of His intellectual power must have had. Every man of genius or of extraordinary power of thought knows something of the joy that comes with the discovery or the realization of new truths or lofty ideas. But Jesus was something more than a rare genius. It is freely admitted on all hands that He possessed an insight into the nature of God and of the moral universe, of man and his destiny, unequaled by the great masters of thought in the world. He moved in a realm of thought and of feeling far above the plane on which ordinary mortals move. It is in the power of every disciple of Jesus to cultivate this source of joy and to accustom himself to think of those pure and lofty themes which bring joy to the mind and heart. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." This source of joy is under our control to a much larger degree than is usually supposed. Men may grovel in the dust, or on the wings of thought and imagination, quickened and strengthened by faith, soar into the loftier regions of ideas and ideals which bring real joy to the heart.

Jesus lived in conscious union with His Father. "The Father and I are one," was his constant iteration. No one else ever attained such sublime consciousness of the presence of God and of his perfect unity with Him. Who can estimate what a source of joy this must have been to Jesus in all the varied and tragic experiences which marked his life? Never for a moment did He lose sight of his Father's face except in the solitary instance when, upon the cross, he cried, out of a breaking heart: "My God, my God! Why hast Thou forsaken me!" And this cloud quickly passed, for in a little while he exclaimed: "Father, into Thy hands I commit my spirit!" We look upon prayer as a duty, but what joy it must have afforded to Jesus to get away from the multitudes that crowded about Him and in the solitudes of the mountains commune with his Father! It was while engaged in such communion on one of the mountain tops in Galilee that He was transfigured in the presence of His disciples. Is it not the privilege of every believer in Christ and in the God whom Christ revealed, to find in prayer and communion with the Father a source of perennial joy? Many have proved this to be true in their experience, and it is alike the privilege of all.

One other source of joy must be mentioned here. Christ lived and labored in the consciousness that He was serving humanity. He never had a thought, much less a purpose, of serving His own interests, of promoting His honor or seeking earthly position and fame. His joy consisted in binding up broken hearts, in bringing light to those who sat in darkness, and in setting the captive free. The secret of happiness, it has long since been learned, consists in living out of ourselves and for others. No one has ever done this to the extent that Jesus did. He came not to be ministered unto but to minister. His was the supreme joy of revealing the fatherhood of God to a sorrowing and grief-burdened world. He came to show us the Father. What joy it must have been to Him, as He saw with prophetic vision, new light and new hope and new love coming into the hearts of men! The author of the Hebrew letter tells us that He was able to endure the agony and shame of the cross because of "the joy that was set before Him"—the joy, no doubt, of seeing the great company of redeemed coming up through great tribulation, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood which He was shedding for the sins of the world. In a word, His was the joy of living for the good of others and of finding His happiness in the happiness of the race. Blessed is the man who finds his chief source of joy in serving unselfishly his fellow men!

Here, then, are some of the sources of the joy of Jesus, which he would have us share—the joy of pure and elevated thoughts, the joy of constant and unbroken communion with the Father, and the joy of unselfish service for the benefit of our fellow men. Whoso would share in the fulness of joy which marked the life of Jesus, must seek it in these sources, for elsewhere it cannot be found.

The Workingman and the Church.

The Outlook for July 27 contains an article under the above title which is worthy of a careful reading by all who are interested in the workingman and by all who are interested in the church. It is especially informing because it presents, in the form of a composite letter, the opinions of a great many labor leaders given in answer to four specific questions: First, what is the chief fault that workingmen find with the church? Second, what takes the place of the church in the life of the average workingman? Third, how do they regard Jesus Christ? Fourth, what, in your opinion, should engage the activities of the church?

The answers to the first question are by far the most important, for, in a considerable degree, they involve answers to the others. Briefly stated, the criticisms which the workingmen pass upon the church may be put as follows: The church does not teach the principles of Christ—the principles of love and brotherhood; the church is conducted in the interest of the capitalist and the poor man is not welcomed; there is too much pomp and ceremony; there is too much preaching of hell and eternal punishment; the churches do not permit freedom of thought; interdenominational disputes and differences in the interpretation of Scripture are not attractive to "men who see things as they are."

The first glance at these answers suggests that those who gave them really know very little about the church, and deliberate examination confirms this impression. To say that the churches do not teach Christ's principles of love and brotherhood, might have an element of truth in it; at least there are plenty of individual church members who do not embody these principles in their lives. But when this is followed by the statement that the church is conducted in the interest of the capitalist, it becomes evident that the critic is complaining because the church does not undertake the advocacy of some socialistic scheme which he has decided offhand is identical with the teaching of Jesus. Whatever may be the virtues of this program, the church cannot take upon itself the function of a society for the propagation of socialism. It is true that the church is conducted in the interest of the capitalist—but not as capitalist; and it is also conducted in the interest of the workingman—but not as workingman. There is no reason why either should be excluded from the means of grace. But the church is interested in them both as men, because they have immortal souls and are created in the image of God. It must declare to them the eternal principles of Christ's religion and leave each man to apply these in his own craft or calling.

The statement that there is too much pomp and ceremony in the services of the churches, might apply to some but certainly not to all. But taking it at its worst, it is no worse than the ritual which is observed in many of the lodges where these same men consider it beautiful and impressive. And what nonsense to say that the churches have too much preaching about hell. The suggestion will perhaps be welcomed by the Universalists, who cherish a similiar delusion that the orthodox delight to let their fancy dwell upon the burning lake, and that Jonathan Edwards' "Sinners in the hands of an angry God" is weekly rehearsed for the edification of all orthodox congregations. All others know that the preaching of hell, as an incentive to virtue, has fallen into a desuetude which may safely be called innocuous. That the churches do not permit freedom of thought is another error often found in connection with gross ignorance of the workings of churches, but negatived by the opposite complaint about too much difference of opinion even with a single denomination.

In all of these several ways the workingman is prone to misapprehend the church. Often his ideas of what the church should be and do are crude, though often again moral earnestness and a feeling after practical righteousness help him to a truer insight into the things essential. But, whatever the church ought to be, the workingman seldom knows what it actually is. Is it his fault? Perhaps, partly, at least. But no matter whose fault it is, the business of the church is to make itself known. In general, we believe that the church teaches Christ's principles of love and fraternity and honestly wishes to be of service to the world. But it is entangled with doctrinal difficulties. It is handicapped by the imperfection of individual members, and occasionally by the glaring unworthiness of some. Its leaders lack an adequate understanding of the social conditions in the midst of which they must work. The church misconceives the workingman as badly as the workingman misconceives the church. Not knowing his needs and his capabilities, the church's appeal, sincere though it may be, goes wide of its mark and is met with indifference or scorn.

The church has perhaps not much to learn, in the way of specific suggestions, from these letters from the labor leaders, but it will be a valuable lesson if it helps her to understand how little her real nature is known by those whom she seeks to help. The churches mean well, but they need to study the methods by which the principles that they teach can be set before the workingman in such a form that he can understand them and can see in the church something other than a rich man's club, or an organization for the oppression of labor.

Notes and Comments.

Every thoughtful reader of the New Testament has been struck with the presence therein of types of character which have persisted through the centuries until our own time. We need be at no loss to know how Jesus would deal with the men and women about us to-day if we understand how he dealt with those with whom he came in contact during his earthly ministry. In an editorial on "The Audacity of Jesus" in The Christian Century of July 18 is a paragraph which sums up in a striking way these characters:

The Jew, the Greek and the Roman are with us still in their modern representatives. The Jew of the first century is once more seen in the formalist, legalist and religionist of any creed or cult that rests in forms or symbols, orthodoxies and definitions, whether Buddhist, Mohammedan or Christian, so-called. From all these Jesus calls men to himself, and the vital power of his redemptive life. The Greek of to-day is the intellectualist, with his scheme of culture, his small philosophy, his dialects and criticisms. From these brilliant but arid levels Jesus calls men to himself, not to a new philosophy, but a new life. And to the present-day Roman, the man of affairs, the organizer of trade and promoter of vast industries, the artisan building his life into this majestic modern world, Jesus speaks in the same imperious tones. It is to these ruling spirits of the time, proud of their success yet at heart proud of their limitations and unsatisfied purposes, that he presents the sublime motive of a complete and rewarding service.

Rev. Dr. Dowling, of Los Angeles, one of the leading Episcopal ministers of the Pacific coast, recently created something of a sensation by preaching a sermon on the Romanizing tendencies in the Episcopal Church. The question at issue between high church and low church, he said, is not a mere matter of ecclesiastical millinery, any more than a war for political independence is a fight over a mere bit of bunting. The flag is more than a piece of bunting, and the high church ceremonies are not only forms but are symbols of an important idea—the idea of the elevation of the clergy as a distinct and superior class upon whom the laity are dependent for the means of salvation. It is this which gives significance to the otherwise profitless discussion about the practice of auricular confession, the use of incense and the doctrine of transubstantiation. These are all distinctly Catholic practices and beliefs, because they embody the idea of the priest as the mediator between God and man. The real question, as Dr. Dowling says, is whether the Episcopal Church will permit itself to be led back into bondage to a priesthood.

The Interior cites the episode of the natives of New Guinea who were terrified at seeing a sailor, the first white man they had ever seen, sit down and take off his shoes. They thought he was going to take himself to pieces. So there are some people, both in and out of the Presbyterian Church, who become alarmed when that body proposes to remove the pinching shoe of its Westminster theology. If they do remove it, it will be found that the denomination is not tearing itself to pieces and that it has found relief from a certain variety of very painful corns with which it has recently been afflicted.

Can it be that the Indian virtues of stolidity and cruelty are to be inculcated as the highest principles of American business? Mr. Lawson, the famous Boston stockbroker, gives this as one of his business maxims: "If your enemy strikes at you and hurts, don't let him see that he has hurt you. Ridicule him and strike back when your time comes." The great modern principle of competition does not appear lovely when set forth so baldly.

Editor's Easy Chair

Macatawa Musings.

It came last night—the long-expected, the beautiful rain. There had been premonitions of its coming for several evenings. The sun had enthroned himself in the west, before his going down, in a royal manner, and surrounded himself with a pavilion of clouds whose dark borders were fringed with gold, while beneath there seemed to be vast artificial basins full of water. This was a hopeful prophecy. There had been a cloud and a shower the night before. That was the beginning of the fulfilment of the prophecy. Last night came the fulfilment. A dark cloud rose over the lake before bedtime, and sent out its avant couriers as if to announce the good news to a waiting and anxious people of the coming of the long-expected rain. How beautiful is the black storm-cloud at such a time! Even the zig-zag lightning that flashes across its dark bosom possesses a fascination which we do not ordinarily associate with it. The deep, bellowing thunder that resounded over the lake was indeed like the voice of Jehovah saying to the people, "I have not forgotten mine ancient covenant that 'while the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest . . . shall not cease,' but the early and the latter rains shall fulfill their gracious mission." And soon the downpour came. Is there any sweeter music on earth, at such a time, than the patter of the rain on the roof, the splash of it against the window-panes and the dripping from the eaves and the trees? On through the night the darkness was cleft by the blinding flashes of lightning and the stillness was broken by the pealing thunder which followed in the lightning's wake, while the rain continued. The only limitation to our joy was the doubt as to whether the rain was general. We kept thinking of the thirsty corn-fields of Missouri, Illinois, Kansas and Iowa, and other states in the corn-belt, and wondering if they were being visited by the same refreshing rain. Let us hope, at least, that the long drought has been broken and that enough will be saved of the later growing crops to furnish bread for the hungry and to prevent any great want.

The daily papers reported that in Missouri, last Sunday, the churches where special prayers were offered for rain were crowded with people in spite of the intense heat. This would indicate that the faith of the people in a God who hears and answers prayer is more general than we might have supposed. Some of the preachers, we notice, were inclined to make light of appealing to the Almighty to modify the laws of His universe, but the plain, simple-minded people, who have learned to call God "Father," never stopped to philosophize about the matter nor doubted that He had power to give them, in his own time and way, what was best for them. And so they called upon His name. May this simple faith never depart from the hearts of the people! Has God no ears, that He cannot hear, nor heart, that He cannot feel, nor power, that He cannot bring to pass that which He desires to meet the wants of his children? A trusting, child-like faith is worth more here than all the world's wisdom and philosophy. If this season of drought has served to remind the people, too much inclined to forget God, of their dependence upon Him for their material as well as for their spiritual blessings, and that in Him we literally "live, move and have our being," if it has taught them the value of prayer, and shall further teach them the necessity of economy in the use of all His gifts, will not these things fully compensate for whatever losses or hardships may be involved in the shortage of crops? How slow we are to learn that there are some things worth more to the human soul, and far more essential to man's happiness, than silver and gold or abundant crops! It cannot be that in calling upon God for the needed rain the people have entirely forgotten their moral shortcomings and their neglect of God's laws, and have failed to repent as they have turned to Him for help in time of need. If not, then out of this repentance there will come an increase of spiritual blessing which will more than compensate for any material losses the country has sustained.

How fair Macatawa looks this morning after its face has been washed by the bountiful rain! Whatever man may do, nature never fails to respond to such beneficent gifts of heaven. This place has nearly received its full quota, but, like the omnibus, it always has room for one more. People are going as well as coming, and that gives a chance for the new arrivals to find accommodations. Our enjoyment of the comparative coolness of this place, through all the heated term, has had this one drawback—the thought of the thousands of people sweltering in the cities unable to escape the terrible heat because of poverty or the demands of their business. The suffering of the poor has especially appealed to us, and if our suffering with them would lighten their burden, or in any way ameliorate their condition, we would be glad to make the sacrifice for their sake and the Master's. It is only because we seem to be better able to perform the duties which Providence has laid upon us here than in the torrid city, that we are content to abide here during the summer season. Among the arrivals known to many of our readers, since our last report, have been T. P. Haley and wife, of Kansas City; R. M. Giddens, Paris, Tenn., and A. I. Myhr and wife, of Nashville, Tenn. The latter are taking their wedding tour, and have wisely visited the Park to enjoy its beauties and comforts for a few days. Bro. Myhr came to this country several years ago, a poor Norwegian boy, and by dint of industry and of high purpose he gained an education, graduating from Christian University. He entered the ministry and has won for himself high repute as an able preacher of the gospel. For many years he has been laboring as state evangelist of Tennessee, bringing the churches of that state into co-operation in missionary work. The result of his labors has been highly gratifying to the friends of mission work throughout the brotherhood. He is to be doubly congratulated on the success of his labors and on his having captured one of the fair daughters of Tennessee, a consecrated and educated Christian woman, who will no doubt add to the efficiency of his labors as well as the joy of his life. Mrs. Toof and daughter, of Quincy, Ill., W. R. Jinnett, of Atlanta, Ill., and Mrs. J. J. Haley, of Cynthiana, Ky., came over on the boat last night. J. H. Hardin, of Liberty, Mo., addressed a large audience at the Auditorium last Sunday afternoon, to the delight and profit of all, and Professor Graham Taylor addressed a still larger audience at the beach service in the evening in a most helpful and interesting manner. The Macatawa Assembly begins on Sunday, August 4, and lasts a week.

Questions and Answers

You truly say in the last CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that the supposed inaccuracies of the Bible do not amount to so much as the "spots on the sun." This being the case, might it not be well, so long as we enjoy the light and health-giving power of the great orb of day, to simply "keep cool" and not bother ourselves too much with the "spots"? J. M. Shepherd.

Topeka, Kan., July 22, 1901.

This was exactly the point of the editorial which our brother read, but seems not fully to have understood. There are some who refuse to enjoy the light of the sun, because it has spots on it. They say if it has the least spot, then it is no sun, and our solar system is in total darkness! In the article referred to, we were trying to point out the unwisdom of this course. We believe in enjoying the light of the sun and not bothering about its spots. But this does not mean the denial of the fact that the sun has spots. It would be awkward for us if, after we had been asserting that the sun has no light at all if it is not spotless, some one should prove that the spots really do exist. It would not do to turn it off by saying that he is attacking the sun while we are defending the sun. To make false claims is not to defend.

We were trying to show that the particular sun referred to—the Bible—whose spots troubled them, derived all its light from Christ, the true sun of righteousness, in whom is no spot or blemish, and that if there were small inaccuracies in the human element in the Bible, concerning details not relating to the question of salvation, this fact was no cause for discounting the pure light which shines from Him who is "the light of the world." We do not know why the spots are on the sun, but we feel sure it is a better sun, for our use, by having them. We are equally sure that the Bible is a far better book for our use, because of the human element there is in it, even though that involves small inaccuracies of chronological and historical detail, and moral conceptions less lofty than those of Christ, than it would have been if it had been handed down by angels, written, punctuated, printed and bound, without human agency and without the possibility of imperfection of any kind. To understand this fact is to be in a position not to fret or fume or worry about the spots on the sun.

The Dante Sex-Centenary and Other Italian Topics

By MADAME SOPHIA BOMPIANI

Italy glories in the great men who, in the past or the present, have made her illustrious. No other nation can boast of so many who have been supreme in their several lines. When the centenaries of their births or their deaths occur, some monument is raised to their memories; history is searched and eloquent tributes are paid to them. These monuments or mural tablets or statues indicate the changes in popular thought. They are no longer statues of the Popes, the Medici, or the Bourbons, but of the kings of Italy, of the once imprisoned patriots and of the victims of the Inquisition. The statue of Giordano Bruno stands now in Rome on the spot where he was burned, and an inscribed tablet marks the place where Savonarola suffered death in the Piazza della Signoria at Florence. But the greatest honors are accorded to the poets, the sculptors, the painters and discoverers. Dante, the "divine" poet; Leonardo, the painter, architect, sculptor and scientist; Michelangelo, the sculptor and painter; Raphael, the painter, are revered with little short of worship.

The Study of Dante.

Here in Rome, all through the winter, on Sunday afternoons, in the hall named after the poet, the first part of Dante's Divine Comedy has been studied by the most cultured people in the city. Titled ladies, professors, students of all kinds, bent over their copies of Dante as if they were Bibles, as one by one the Cantos were read and explained by a competent scholar. Two thousand youths met in their different school-houses one morning in April of the Anno Santo or "Holy Year" to hear lectures on different parts of Dante's "Vision," begun in Rome in April of the year 1300.

Six centuries ago Dante came to Rome as an ambassador from the city of Florence, asking the Pope, then Boniface VIII., to prevent the entrance of Charles of Valois into that city. Boniface gave him good words, but secretly favored Charles and the Guelphs. From the triumph of that faction and the intrigues of the Pope the exile and the misfortunes of Dante arose, and he dated his great poem—the monument of his glory—from the spring of that year. The Divine Comedy expresses the grief and disgust which Dante felt on discovering the contrast between his own high ideals of truth and justice and the evil and corruption he saw in Rome.

Dante and Modern Italy.

The political ideal of Dante, which is that of Italy, and that of the Roman Church are absolutely opposed. The one is greatness, the other decay. It was a wise thought of the Minister of Public Instruction Baccelli to educate these two thousand youths in the doctrines of separation of church and state, in the purity and nobility of life and government. This jubilee was a kind of antithesis to that held throughout the year in the Vatican. The enthusiastic admiration for Dante is an index of national health. The poet and reformer, afflicted and disgusted at the sight of the ambition and luxury which had taken the place of evangelical humility, cherished the idea of a vast moral and religious reform. Rome should be purified and ennobled—not the Rome where Cristo tuttodì si merca, but another filled with heroes, apostles and martyrs. This idea he expresses by placing virtuous Cato, although a pagan and a suicide, as guardian of purgatory, because, without religious light or ceremonies, he lived nobly and well according to the dictates of his conscience. For Boniface the Pope he prepared a place in hell—not for revenge, but on account of his evil deeds and wicked life.

Honor to the Exiled Poet.

Among other honors paid to Dante is the editing of a library of Dante literature which is intended to collect all that has ever been written about him. But, although there is so much of this, scholars confess that much more must be written before the art of the great poet can be understood and the secrets of his learning, his heart and his life fathomed.

Not only did they study and discuss what is in the works of Dante, but what is not there, and especially his complete silence regarding the Waldenses, the Albigenses, and other so-called heretics of his time who were persecuted. The Abbot Tosti, of Monte Cassino, dedicating his life of Boniface VIII. to Dante Alighieri, strove to remove the stain placed upon that Pontiff's life by the great poem, but the truth of history is too well known to be canceled by a few smooth words. Tosti himself was the victim of a Pope when he published some years ago his famous project for a reconciliation of Italy and the papacy, and was forced to retract what he had been beguiled to do.

The tall two-windowed house where Dante was born has become the property of the government. Florence, which exiled her greatest citizen, and threatened to burn him alive if he should return, would now, oh, so gladly, reclaim his bones from Ravenna. There was quite a newspaper discussion about a little parcel of his ashes that was gathered on a cloth thrown over the tomb at the time it was opened in 1866 to certify that the body was there. This precious dust is now in the National Library at Florence, and even of that Ravenna is almost jealous.

In the year 1899 the town of San Gemignano, near Siena, celebrated the sixth centenary of Dante's visit there as ambassador for a political question from Florence. The hall where he spoke is still there, and now bears his name. On this occasion a mural tablet was inaugurated in memory of the festival, one of the most romantic of this romantic Italy. The mediæval town of San Gemignano still preserves eleven of the seventy-two towers that adorned it in the twelfth century. Surrounded by walls with narrow streets and high, solemn palaces, its singularity attracts many travelers from foreign lands. It has been likened to Pompeii by some, but the poet Carducci says that if there is any resemblance, this is Pompeii not dead but alive. That day of the Dante festival it was gay with music and flowers and young life. Ten thousand visitors came there, and were received by fifty cavaliers dressed in the gay costumes of the Middle Ages, and one hundred young girls sang an anthem in honor of Dante.

The Virgil Monument at Mantua.

These monuments and festivals take us leaping back along the centuries, exalting and admiring one great man after another. Now it is the turn of the poet Virgil, whom Dante calls his "master," and from whose verses he professes to have learned his own "bello stile." Mantua, the birth-place of Virgil, now proposes to erect a statue in his honor, but it will be only one of a series of honors which from earliest times have been paid to the poet. It is a tradition that a statue of Virgil stood in the Roman period in a public square of Mantua, and that it was destroyed by Carlo Malatesta in the year 1397 because the people adored it with almost pagan rites. In 1257 the city abandoned the imperial system of coinage, and adopted the Venetian, substituting for the figure of Christ seated the figure of Virgil, also seated. At that time a sculpture in high relief, representing Virgil seated on a sort of throne under an arch supported by two columns, was placed on the front of the great palace, the pride of the city and one of the wonders of Italy. In 1499 Isabella d'Este, Marchesa Gonzaga, hearing of the destruction of the Roman statue by Malatesta a century before, proposed to erect a new monument on the same spot. But troublous times, lack of money, and the numerous expenses which Isabella's love of art gave her, prevented the execution of the project. Still, the design was made by Mantegna, and is now in the Museum of the Louvre at Paris.

Donatello.

The centre of the artistic life of Italy was always Florence, and there, more than four centuries after the death of the great sculptor of the Renaissance, Donatello, a monument was dedicated to his memory in the church of San Lorenzo. There he lies near some of his own exquisite productions, and in the ancient Bargello of Florence, the prison, once the scene of tragedies and death, now a national museum, there is a large hall filled with originals or copies of his works. When in youth, as yet poor and unknown, he went to Rome with Brunelleschi and sought among the buried urns and columns of antiquity for graceful designs, the populace called them seekers for treasure. Such in truth was Donatello, who revived the beauties of classic art, uniting them with the study of nature. Like some other great men, Donatello was careless of riches. "I have nothing," he said to a magistrate who invited him to give an account of his possessions, "and I have some debts that I do not know how to pay, and some credits that I doubt will ever be paid to me." His works are now, after four centuries, almost priceless.

The Cellini Festival.

The festivals in honor of another Florentine, the goldsmith and sculptor Benvenuto

Cellini, have just terminated. They consisted of ceremonies and speeches made by artists at his tomb in the Church of the Annunciation, and of a bust mounted on a beautiful pedestal that serves as a fountain. This is near the Ponte Vecchio, the centre for jewelers in his time. A more impressive ceremony was held in Rome, where so much of his life was spent, on the third of November, 1900, four centuries from the date of his birth. On the historic Campidoglio, in the hall painted all over with scenes in the battle of Crazii and Curazii, the flower of artistic Rome gathered to do him honor. The Persous, the chief ornament of the Piazza della Signoria in Florence, belongs there. But in Rome he made the exquisite cups and urns, the buckles and rings, the plates and jewels which rendered him famous. Many of these have been lost or melted for the gold, but he has left descriptions of them in the autobiography which he dictated. The events of his chequered and adventurous life are known through that work, which frankly displays all the defects of his character and the evils of his time, and yet may not have expressed the better qualities. It does injustice to one who felt the utmost admiration for the austere and elevated spirit of Michelangelo. In a sonnet addressed to him, Cellini says: "Give me but one leaf from thy crown, divine Michelangelo, and I shall ask for nothing more, for that is beautiful and good."

Paul's Portrait of a Preacher.

By F. D. Power.

II.

Look again at our portrait; its features indicate purpose, a mighty self-annihilating, overmastering purpose. If the lips move they say: "This one thing I do." "None of these things move me." "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life." "I give thee charge in the sight of God and before Christ Jesus that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of." "Hold fast the form of sound words."

Paul's uttermost soul and spirit are set upon his work. Never did office seeker long for office as did he to be made an organ of spiritual blessing to the church. A heart and a tongue he had to speak wherever there was an ear to hear. The very first day he came into Asia he commenced his work, "publicly and from house to house," "declaring the whole counsel of God," "keeping back nothing that was profitable," "warning every one night and day with tears," outwardly exposed to every temptation, inwardly "pressed in the spirit," determined at any cost to pursue his course with undaunted perseverance, declaring, "God is my witness whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his Son!"

"Give thyself wholly to these things," he commands Timothy. "Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received of the Lord that thou fulfil it," he says to Archippus. The preacher must be devoted to his calling. As Nehemiah, when men would divert him from his service, declares: "I am doing a great work, so that I can not come down," so to the suggestions of pride, indolence, ease, worldliness, unbelief, we should say: "I may not—I must not—I dare not—I can not—come down." Vacations, within reason, may sometimes be wise, but I tell you, no shepherd would abandon his sheep as our city churches are abandoned in the dog-days. In the sweetest story of all literature we read of "shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night." To abide by the flock, tarry among them; to be careful of them, vigilant over their interests, not to run hither and thither after their own pleasure and profit, but to live with the sheep, and feed the sheep, and shelter the sheep—this is the part of the shepherd. "Peter, lovest thou me?" "Yes, Lord." "Then feed my sheep." The divine shepherd when he putteth forth his sheep "goeth before them."

Yes, the preacher must be on fire with enthusiasm for his calling, firmness, boldness, energy, perseverance, unconquerable purpose. We see about the lips of this portrait of one who while "gentle among his people as a nursing mother cherisheth her children," who while imbued with the meekness and gentleness of Christ, yet spoke with authority, endured with fortitude, suffered death like his Master for the truth he bore to the world. "We, having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written: I believed and therefore have I spoken; we also believe and therefore speak." Before Felix, on trial for his life—no man standing by him—as the man of Nazareth before Pontius Pilate; before Festus and Agrippa; before the philosophers on Mars Hill; before the licentious Corinthians—everywhere this man proclaims his message. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ!" "I count all things but dross that I may win Christ and be found in Him."

How is it to-day? Words, words, words, in many a pulpit. There is noise enough. Of yellocution there is no lack. The great soprano was in the midst of her solo. The conductor of the orchestra was leading at his best. "Why does that man hit at the woman with a stick?" asks little Johnny. "He is not hitting at her," replied his mother, "hush!" "Well then, what is she hollering so for?" Of many a sermon the same question might be put. Then too often your preacher only preaches, as your soprano sings, when he is pushed to it, paid for it. "What is the meaning of the word excavate?" asks the teacher of the school. "To hollow out." "Give an example." "The small boy excavates when his father whacks him!" Then again, if the modern popular preacher has a message he is not infrequently unfaithful to it.

Lo, the smooth-faced priest, as he stands in the perch of his pulpit, Fraught with a message of wrath, surveying the great congregation.
Soon, as he looks, he beholds in the midst of the people expectant,
Squat like a venomous toad, alert like a hideous spider,
One of a fearful fame, who, armed with invincible millions,
Wrings from the hand of toil the fruit of its burdensome labor,
Coins from the blood of the poor the price of their bitter undoing,

Hears with a grin of content the mournful cry of the orphan,
While with a tainting touch he fouls the fountain of Justice,
Buying and selling and slaying the souls of men with his money.
Him beholding, the priest perceives the auriferous halo
Round that ophidian head and his voice momentarily falters.
Then his message of wrath he diverts to the sinners of Judah:
Boldly he bans old Balaam and tells the truth about Ahab,
Fearless of speech, he lashes the lust of adulterous David;
But of the sins of the reptile before him complacently basking
Never a word does he say; and his voice with its unctuous accents
Oozes with oil as he ends in a bland benedictory manner,
Querching the lightnings of God in a plitudinous puddle!

Paul shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God. Hear him: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received let him be accursed." "I charge thee therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word; be instant in season and out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine; watch thou in all things, do the work of an evangelist; make full proof of thy ministry."

Lines of infinite patience, of untiring industry, mark the portrait, showing how deeply fixed and heroically followed is this purpose. Here is a man who loves men, bears with men, seeks men, honors all men. Here is a shepherd who takes heed "to all the flock," watches for souls, ceases not to warn every man day and night with tears, greets his people by name, has upon him the care of all the churches. Ah, who of us has ever fathomed the meaning of the Master when he says: "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men"? A member of my flock—a strictly veracious disciple of Isaac Walton—spent seventeen days at Harper's Ferry, gave eight hours a day, Sundays excepted, to fishing for bass, and caught three, three small bass, and was proud of the achievement! Shame on us, fishers of men, that we have less patient industry. "How long, sir, will it take me to play like you?" asked a youth of Giardini, the great violinist. "Twelve hours a day for twenty years," was the answer. "How are ministers who have not so full a meeting as yours to be patient?" one asked of Henry Ward Beecher at one of his Yale Lectures. "Just as I used to be patient when I had not so many folks in my meeting as I have now. I began my ministerial life at the bottom. At the first prayer-meeting that I held, the seats consisted of two slabs, with the flat side turned up, and with legs set into them. I had a chair, and I was the only person that had one. All the other folks who were present sat on these slabs. They held them all, and then there was room to spare. We had to go up two pairs of stairs. The room was lighted with tallow candles which we carried ourselves. The room was a world too big for the audience, and the furniture was rude, and the people were plain; and yet we had precious meetings there. But I recollect beginning my ministry with this feeling very strong in me: that it was a privilege to work on the lowest plane for Christ, and that, considering what I was, I had no reason to expect anything better. I made up my mind that I would work in the cabin, in the log-house, and in the woods, among the lowest people, if I might be permitted to work at all. And it was not my calling that took me away from that field. My heart goes out toward those Hoosier people yet; I love them; and if I were to be sent back among them, I should not be the one to cry. If you think that my work is on account of the crowd of people, you do not know me."

Paul's Portrait of a Preacher shows him to be a laboring man. "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." "Be not thou ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner, but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel." "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. If a man desire the office of a bishop what does he desire? a large income? a palace? to be called my Lord? No, he desires "a good work."

England Revisited

By W. T. MOORE.

The Outlook for Primitive Christianity.

In addition to a residence of 18 years in England, this is my fifth visit to the old country. I certainly have had exceptional opportunities to know something of the people and their institutions. I hope I have not been wholly indifferent in trying to reach an intelligent understanding of the outlook here, and I thought it might be both interesting and profitable to the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST if I should give my impressions of the present condition of the work in this country.

Upon the whole, the churches are doing quite as well as could be expected, all things considered. It is a fact that they have made some progress within the last few years, notwithstanding many of the conditions have been changed to their disadvantage. The Boer war has had a chilling effect upon religious life, and not the least disastrous result of this war is the practical division it has caused among Christians. The state of things here reminds me of the old days of our civil strife. Still, it must be said, to the credit of our own churches, that they have stood firmly together, and they are still heartily united. Nevertheless, the general effect of the war upon religious life is unquestionably bad.

The American brethren must come to understand the actual condition of things in this country. When they estimate the value of the movement here they must take into account the real facts of the case. Doubtless some grow tired of the slow pace at which the movement progresses, but this view of the matter is wholly unreasonable. Why does not Protestantism rapidly progress in Mexico, France, Austria and Italy? Why do not our missionaries make wholesale conversions in China, Japan and India? The answer is not far to seek. All these countries mentioned are already preoccupied with established religions. The same is true of England. Even the Non-conformist movements here inherit and practice many of the faults of the established church, and yet most of these are at a standstill, or else retrograding.

In view of these facts, can any one wonder that our movement has not gone forward by leaps and bounds? But this is not all. Our churches have been confronted with the practical failure of several other movements very closely similar to the one we are advocating. These movements have pleaded for Christian union and then practically illustrated division, or else degenerated into narrowness and exclusiveness, which made it impossible for them to succeed. Everywhere we go we are tantalized with references to these abortions and are plainly told that the people have had enough of union movements which end in establishing simply other sectarian churches.

A Brighter View of the Subject.

Notwithstanding the difficulties and drawbacks to which attention has been called, there are many reasons for encouragement in our religious outlook. First of all, we have an heroic band of workers here, who are standing faithfully to their guns and have evidently enlisted for the war. This fidelity to duty is really touching in some instances, and in all cases it is profoundly impressive. This must win in the end, if the forces are intelligently guided.

This brings me to a very vital matter. No great movement of any kind has ever been successfully inaugurated and carried forward to victory without intelligent, personal leadership. The Protestant reformation of the 16th century had Luther behind it; the Presbyterian movement had Calvin behind it, and as far as Scotland was concerned it had John Knox behind it; and the great Methodist movement had John Wesley behind it, while in America the Disciple movement had Alexander Campbell behind it. When once these movements became successful and fairly organized, then the one personal leader was not needed; but during the formative period a leader was absolutely necessary in order to anything like worthy success.

What our cause in this country needs, most of all, is some consecrated, distinguished man to lead the movement—a man who will give his life to the work, and who will come to this country (if he has to be imported) to remain here permanently as long as he lives; and it is practically useless to hope for any great triumphs here without such a man to lead the forces. Does any man suppose the Salvation Army would have amounted to much without General Booth? It may be the necessity for leadership does not present a desirable state of things. But that is not the question. The state of things existing is precisely the fact which calls for leadership. Doubtless if "the state of things" was different we might act differently. In this country the need I have indicated is especially paramount. Every party, every church, every movement, has its acknowledged leader and nothing succeeds that does not focus around some strong personality.

What Must be Done?

As there is no one at present in this country among our churches who seems to be specially fitted for this particular work, undoubtedly it is the duty of the American brethren to send such a man and provide for his support, at least for a time. But no one need think of coming who is not fully equipped for the important work which will be assigned to him. He must not be a man who is simply hunting a place, or is anxious for a picnic excursion to England. He must burn the bridges and make this a life work. He must identify himself with the people here by becoming one of them in every sense that that phrase implies. He must cease to be an American, and must, for all practical purposes, become an Englishman. He must thoroughly understand the plea which he comes to make, and must have a soul on fire with interest in it. He must have scholarship and eloquence. He must have both a ready tongue and pen, and above all he must have the spirit of truth as well as the truth itself.

It may be said that such a man is hard to find. Probably this is true, but better send no one at all than to send some one who does not meet reasonably these conditions. Anyway, I have stated the imperative need of the work in this country, and unless the need is supplied the work must go on at a limping, halting gait. Will the American brethren be equal to this great call upon their generosity? We shall see.

Life Seventy Centuries Ago.

I have just been looking through the Museum of Wonders which Prof. Flinders Petrie has opened to the public at the University College. It is the result of the last year's work with the spade at Abydos, Egypt. Nothing of so important a character has been exhibited since the Tell-el-Amarna revelation. It is estimated that these last excavations take us back to the first Egyptian dynasty, or about 4777 B. C., while the discoveries point clearly to at least four antecedent kings, Ka, Zeer, Narmer and Sma. Hence it will be seen that Archbishop Usher's chronology can no longer be defended.

I cannot go into details with respect to this most interesting collection of antiquities. However, it may be well to remark that several of the objects discovered are such as have not hitherto been known to exist at that remote period, as for example, models of groups of cattle and camels and the model of a house with the door at one end and windows at the other. There has been brought to light also the earliest known specimen of connected writing, while the gold bracelets of the queen of Zer-Ya (4700 B. C.) indicate a mastery in jeweler's work such as was not known to have been attained until 2,000 years afterwards. Some pieces of pottery show a foreign origin. They are clearly of Greek type, and indicate a civilization outside of Egypt, quite equal to that of the Egyptians.

The one fact which these antiquities clearly reveal is that our estimates of ancient civilization must be thoroughly revised. These old prehistoric tombs have little to say in support of the doctrine of evolution, as it is now popularly understood. Undoubtedly the excavations show that the people at that remote period were far from beings savages. Indeed, much of their work surpasses anything of the kind we find in subsequent periods.

The Weather in England.

While America has been sweltering in heat, the weather here has been delightfully pleasant. If I were not so busy with work I could heartily enjoy the many opportunities for recreation, but I must forego pleasure in order to perform my duty. I am already beginning to turn my face homeward, and hope to be able to reach there about the middle of August.

The BEAUTY of HOLINESS

By GEORGE H. COMBS

The world is full of lovers and the shrine at which they worship is the shrine of Beauty. All nature is in conspiracy to help on these lovers. The Greek fable tells of a goddess in whose every footprint sprang up flowers. This goddess is omnipresent and flowery footprints are everywhere. This world was not constructed along the lines of the utilitarian, was not built by contract, but is everywhere touched by artist love. God sent his beauty upon all things as a benediction. He could not make the desert altogether a desert but he must put green spots here and there as a kind of tender afterthought, and from Iceland's snowdrifts flower-eyes look out upon you, tender as the blue of heaven. Beauty builds her altars everywhere. Do you not see them? Then borrow eyes. Borrow Thoreau's eyes and look at the birds, Tabbock's eyes and look at the bees, Muller's eyes and look at the rocks, Herschel's eyes and look at the stars, Turner's eyes and look at the sunset, Claude's eyes and look at the light and shadow, Ruskin's eyes and look at the world.

Nature's beauty is perfect. No advance is possible. Our architecture is beautiful, Ruskin tells us, only as we copy nature. All forms and combinations of beauty nature with infinite prodigality has exhausted, and highest human invention is but skilled imitation.

Yes, we are lovers all of the beautiful. More, we cannot love anything else. You cannot love ugliness though you try never so hard. Put this to the test. God has so constituted you that you can't love anything but the beautiful. A weed, a lizard, a stain—you cannot love these things. A face comes to you. A dear, homely face—grandmother's face maybe; the features are irregular, there are wrinkles in the forehead, wrinkles in the cheek, the eyes are dim and the face is thin and worn. "I love that," you say, "and not for all the world would I change it. I love it and it is not beautiful." Yes, but it is beautiful, beautiful with the tenderness of seventy years, beautiful with watching and with loving, beautiful with the sacrifice it has known, beautiful with the light of trust upon it, beautiful with sweet expectancy, and the look that goes beyond the veil. If it were not so, you could not love it. We can love only the beautiful. This leads up to a great question: Is holiness beautiful?

Is goodness attractive? Is godliness fascinating? It must be said in candor that to the common thought it is not. Holiness and beauty seem almost antipodal. We say that men ought to live right, ought to be virtuous, ought to be godly, but we are not forward to affirm that such a life is beautiful. The truth is we think goodness is rather dull. Duty enthrones holiness, but drops no flowers on the altar. Holiness is a Puritan, very severe, very decorous, very correct, but unlovely; no color in its garments, no gladness in its steps, no trick of music in its speech. All in all the devil we find more interesting. This spirit crops out everywhere. Everything that pertains to religion is supposed to be dull.

You blame the newspapers for telling so much about crime. Save your censure, vice is supposed to be fascinating and the newspapers are simply caterers to our depravity. This prominence given to vice in our great dailies is but an index of how toothsome to the public vice is. Look again and see how the assumption that sin is the only thing in which men are interested strikes deep in present day literature.

Is not all this a miserable blunder? Sin there is, impurity there is, crime there is, but this is not all of life, nor that of chief concern. It may be well for us to go out into the alley at times and gaze upon some uprooted weed rotting in the rain, the dismal ash-heap and the stack of tin cans so sadly in need of carting, but the world is not all alley and I do not want to stay there always. Flowers are more interesting than weeds, happy children than forlorn ash-heaps, blue skies than pyramids of tin cans. No, this is a false view of life. Virtue is more attractive than vice, goodness then badness.

Beauty is aspiration. I take this text from Emerson. The Greek goddess rises from the foam of the sea. All beautiful things are aspiring things. Roots, ugly things, burrow in the earth; flowers, beautiful things, climb upward. Lizards creep, birds fly; beauty stands on tiptoe. Beauty is aspiring. But vice has no upward look. It has no wings. It does not rush toward the sun, but slinks into the dark. Vice is stagnant. The scum is on it. Its waters cannot mirror stars, can only shelter frogs. No bad man has to do with "stairs that slope through darkness up to God," but only with the foul and muddy pit from which he thinks not of extrication.

Beauty is life. All beautiful things are living things, even marble statues are said to breathe. Beauty knows naught of the dust, the grave, the worm, the foul decay, but takes hold on immortality. But vice is death, not only stagnation, not only paralysis, not only foul disease, but death. Sinning things are dying things. The wages of sin is death. Sin is death, and death is not beautiful.

Once more: Only that thing is beautiful which meets the end of its being. Do that for which you were created and that action is beautiful. Put a Greek temple at the terminus of a railway to serve as a car shop and it would not be beautiful. It does not meet the ends of its being. It was made to house gods, not to shelter cars. What is the purpose of man's creation? Can we believe that this purpose is met in a sinful life? Can we believe that the divine plan embraces sin as the end? Man was made for virtue. Man was not made for sin. In sinning he fails to fulfill his mission in the world and so failing is unlovely. If virtue be unlovely and vice only attractive, then the world's great artists have all been in error, for they have always painted vice as ugly, virtue as beautiful. No artist ever painted hell as beautiful, ever put a flower there or a child's face. The devil in art is always ugly and misshapen. And the artists are right. The devil is ugly and ugly are all his children. But the saints are always beautiful. There is never a saint but whose beauty is idealized, and between the faces of saints and angels there is no distance. Saints' faces are beautiful faces. Again the artists are right. Holiness is always beautiful. And when genius comes to paint the face of the Man of Galilee it grows despairing because upon that sweet, sad face, it cannot stamp a beauty enough divine. Right once more, beauty and holiness are one.

Think too that if holiness be not beautiful it is for us only an impossible dream, for we are so constituted that we can love only the beautiful. If holiness is not as fair to the soul's vision as the rose to the eye of sense, we are shut out forever from a Christian life. God has so made us then that music is discord, light darkness, life death. God commands us to be what we cannot be save through loving and we cannot love. By our very constitution we are doomed to sin and death. This cannot be. God is love, and love has made beautiful forever truth, righteousness, the life that is white.

The Army Now in the Field.

By W. J. Wright.

God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far flung battle-line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine,
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet.

The all but world-wide dispersion of the forces engaged in missionary work makes Kipling's lines appropriate. Excepting Thibet, there is scarce a country in the world in which the soldier of the cross is not freely and actively at work.

From Arctic to Antarctic, from Occident to Orient, stretches the thin, weak line of warriors in heaven's army on the mission fields. The facts given in this summary of forces are taken from the report of the Ecumenical Conference held in New York a year ago. The total income of the foreign societies was $17,161,092. This money was collected both at home and on the mission fields. The whole number of foreign missionaries was 13,607, "but what are these among so many!" The ordained missionaries numbered 4,953; the unordained male missionaries, exclusive of physicians, numbered 1,247, and the male physicians, 421. The married women numbered 3,450, the unmarried, 3,119, excluding in both cases the female physicians, who numbered 203. Heroic and holy beyond comparison with any other army is this Grand Army of Redemption "of whom the world is not worthy."

Taught and trained by these good soldiers of Jesus Christ, and co-operating with them in destroying the works of the devil, is an auxiliary army of native helpers who have turned from dumb idols to serve the living God. This division of the army numbers the ordained natives at 4,029; unordained native preachers, teachers, Bible women and other helpers at 69,300, making a total of 73,613 in the native army of the ransomed. Adding together the two divisions we have a grand total of 87,220, so that those who proclaim the word among the benighted are a great host; yet, so vast is the opposing heathen host as to give each Christian worker an average of about 10,000 souls for whom to care.

The conversions reported last year were 83,895, or more than twice as many as we Disciples reported in Christian America, and our growth has been so extraordinary as to make us conspicuous. The organized churches were 10,993 and had 1,289,298 communicants; the Sunday-schools numbered 14,940, with a membership of 764,684; the mission stations numbered 30,819, of which 5,223 are principal and 25,586 sub-stations. About these stations were gathered a total Christian community, including sympathizers, of 4,327,283, whose contributions for missions were $1,833,981.

Among the many forms of activity put forth by this army may be mentioned the following: 148 publishing-houses and printing presses, publishing 366 papers and magazines, which circulate 297,435 copies of their publications, with 364,904,399 pages of printed matter; the colleges and universities number 93, and the students 35,414; theological seminaries and training schools number 358; the pupils 11,905; besides these there are boarding and high schools, industrial, medical, nurses, kindergarten and day schools which bring the total of educational institutions conducted by missionaries up to 20,374, and the whole number of young persons under instruction to 1,046,309. This missionary army also carries on work in orphanages, foundling asylums, hospitals and special hospitals for lepers, besides schools for the blind and deaf. The Bible is translated and circulated in whole or in part in 421 languages and dialects; 67 steamers, belonging to the missionary organizations, are used to bear the workers and their belongings and appliances into contact with the darkness which they labor to dispel; and 54 organizations exist among the natives for diffusion of knowledge and reforms in social, political, moral and religious life.

Thus it is seen that while the army on the field is ridiculously inadequate to do the stupendous work before them, they, nevertheless, have boldly assaulted the strongholds of Satan, are winning converts daily, and by their schools and other activities are with absolute certainty undermining the whole structure of false religion, as well as all forms of life growing out of it. Principalities and powers are falling; world-rulers, whose reign is that of darkness, are trembling at the handwriting on the wall; evil spirit hosts, occupying high places, are being put to flight.

The powers of darkness yield,
For the cross is in the field,
And the light of life revealed.

This Grand Army of Evangelization has discovered that one can chase a thousand, and two put to flight ten thousand; yet it trusts not in might and not in numbers, but in the spirit of the Lord of hosts; and undaunted, undismayed by overwhelming numbers opposing them, they are a unit in declaring that the prospect of their ultimate success is "as bright as the promises of God."

New York Letter.

By S. T. Willis.

The New York Letter writer is enjoying the cool shade and refreshing breezes at the summer cottage at Osining Heights on the Hudson. It is a great relief to get out from the sweltering city each night to this delightfully cool place, where one can sleep well and be refreshed in the morning for the day's work. And besides, the delightful ride on the Central train down the beautiful historic Hudson is both restful and inspiring. Our summer cottage is no longer at Sing Sing though at former seasons the New York Letter was written from this place. The reason is the name has been changed. The citizens of this village, feeling the calumny and dishonor attached to the name Sing Sing, petitioned the legislature to change the name to Osining. They claim that the people, especially those engaged in manufacturing, were at a great disadvantage on account of the criminal associations of the name. It is difficult to make people realize that goods with the Sing Sing brand were not made in the great state prison here. So it is seen that even business keenly feels the smart of association with crime and shame. Surely a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches.

Osining is perched upon the hills of the eastern shore of the Hudson, thirty miles north of New York City, and is one of the most picturesque places on this world-famed river. It is by no means a sort of penal colony, as too many are apt to regard it, but it is a thrifty, well-to-do village of 10,000 good people, whose surroundings for health and beauty can scarcely be matched in the whole valley. The odd name of the place has been accounted for by various facetious expedients. Washington Irving says that it is a corruption of a Mohican place-word, O-sin-sing, referring to the rocky nature of the site, and adds with droll humor: "Some have rendered it, O-sin-song, or O-sing-song, in token of its being a great market town, where anything may be had for a mere song. The melodious alteration to Sing Sing is said to have been in compliment to a Yankee singing master, who taught the inhabitants the art of singing through their nose." Others say the name is a variation of that of a Chinese ruler, Tsing Sing, and was brought over by a Dutch sailor who had traded with the Celestial Empire. But the name comes from the red man's tongue and means a stony place, and well is the neighborhood named, for a more rugged spot of hill and ravine, a wilder upheaval of rock and boulder, one could hardly hope to find in any town.

The Summer School of Philanthropy, in session in New York, listened a few days ago to a most interesting lecture by Dr. Samuel M. Lindsay on "The Political Element in Public Institutions." He said, in many cases denominational charities are run by social cliques. Such restrictions hedge the board of managers that practical fitness is ignored, and some family or church relationship is made the basis for selection. Naturally, this frequently serves as a hinderance to advancement, and operates to prevent the adoption of newer and better methods of administration. He spoke strongly against the subsidizing of private charities, asserting that the establishment of state institutions, for which state officials would be responsible, is much better and wiser. When state aid is relied on by a private institution there is a strong temptation to shape the policy of that institution in accordance with the wishes of men who can influence the amount appropriated. He urged the necessity for the special training of workers for this field of service whether in the department of correction of crime, of the insane, the deaf, the dumb or the idiotic. But so often politics removes officers in state institutions at every change of administration, instead of every officer's holding his position as long as duty is faithfully performed.

A Margaret Fuller Ossoli memorial was unveiled and dedicated a few days ago at Point o' Woods, Fire Island, in the presence of a large number of people. It consists of a pavilion on the dunes opposite the scene of the wreck, containing a bronze tablet with the names of Margaret Fuller Ossoli, her husband, the Marquis Ossoli, and their child, Angelo, and the dates of their birth and death. Beneath this is the inscription, written by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe:

"Noble in thought and character, eloquent of tongue and pen, she was an inspiration to many of her own time, and her uplifting influence abides with us."

Although singularly free from superstitious fear, Mme. Ossoli felt strong premonitions of danger before starting on this voyage to New York from Leghorn, Italy. Just before sailing she wrote to a friend: "I am absurdly fearful about this voyage. Various little omens have combined to give me a dark feeling. . . . But I embark, praying indeed fervently that it may not be my lot to lose my babe at sea, either by unsolaced sickness or amid the howling waves. Or if it should, may it be brief anguish, and Ossoli, he and I go together."

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment has just approved the contracts between the New York Public Library and the city of New York, by which the city will come into possession of $5,200,000 offered by Mr. Carnegie for free circulating libraries. The city will proceed at once to acquire suitable sites for the buildings by process of condemnation. The city also agrees to equip and maintain the same. Forty-two of these buildings will be allotted to the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx. We confidently hope to secure one of these in the neighborhood of the 169th St. church. For several months we have been running one of the free circulating departments of the New York Public Library in the lecture room of our church, and it has accomplished much toward supplying the public with good books. It seems this is one thing that the church should assist in doing—supplying the community with helpful books. The Carnegie gift is one of the wisest and best offers made to our city in many years. The placing of good books in the hands of the young is the next best thing to the putting of the gospel of Christ into their hearts.

Dregs of The War

By BURRIS A. JENKINS.

I.

The old brick house covered all over with Virginia creeper, its white verandah and doric columns, its wide hall flanked on either side by high ceiled parlor and sitting-room, was one of the handsomest homes, in that early day, along the Missouri. An attempt had been made to burn it, during the war, and the walls had been so injured that they now had to be shored up with long timbers, like flying buttresses.

The large barn—at least three times as large as the house—was in strict accord with custom. Most noticeable was this custom of big barn building in the case of small log-built homes. It was a well-known rule of the western farmer to pay attention first to his barn and then to his house, just as it is of the city tradesman to look out first for his store and then for his residence. The farmers used to say "Build the barn, and the barn will build the house."

Cattle there were, too, scattered all about the lots, meadows, and wooded pasture-lands, evidence that the owner held to another adage of many a successful farmer, "Send nothing off the farm except upon four feet."

When the moon arose that night and the honeysuckle, hanging on the rusty wires of the side porch, was sending yet more lavishly its perfume out into the night, a crude song, accompanied by the rather skillful twanging of a guitar, came out from the depths of the porch behind the vines. It was one of those nasal voices, ripping its way through the night air with quavers and queer turns; and it was one of those falsely sentimental songs that celebrate the exploits of lawless men and hymn the death of criminals in strains fitted for martyrs of the faith. This particular song, with its story of murder, jury trial, and condemning court, described in poor, limping verse the scaffold and the wretch who stood upon it, the constant refrain reiterating:—

"Like an angel he did stand,
For he was a handsome man,
On his breast he wore a ribbin of blue."

Soon a party of young folk under the pine and locust trees, saying their good-nights by twos and fours, took leave of the young hostess, who walked with them to the stile and the horse-block.

One young man lingered and held his horse's rein.

"Give me your word, Scott," said the girl, but the young man only laughed in embarrassed fashion, jingling his horse's bit by flapping the rein.

"Don't you worry, Adelaide," he replied, at last.

"But there's cause for worry, Scott Cameron!" she replied, becoming more aroused. "Why does Jesse Young ride here to-night, and call you out for an hour's talk? And then Floyd Anderson—why does he come too, and Anson Cole, all in the same night hanging over our fence with you? I don't like the ways of these men, as you know, and I don't want you to run with them."

"There, there, Little People," he replied—he had long called her "Little People" as though her name were legion and she possessed him quite—"Don't fret about me —guess I'm nearly grown now and—"

"I tell you, Scott, I won't be put off lightly! I know what I'm talking about. Those men are dangerous—they're criminals—you hear that?—criminals! My father has helped protect them long enough. They're plotting something new and will lead you into it."

"Now, Adelaide after a man fights his way four years through the war, isn't he old enough to take care of himself?"

"You shall not evade me!" cried the girl. "Give me your promise before you leave me this night not to enter into any of the evil plots of that Jesse Young gang! Will you promise?"

"Now look here, child," said the tall young Confederate veteran, towering above the little woman, with his spare but firm form, and athletic shoulders, that were not too square, but sloped muscularly up to a well set neck, "see here, Adelaide, I'll be serious, too. What have I endured?"—

And he began pouring forth a stream of broken reference to wrongs that Adelaide Payne knew well. This young soldier, Winfield Scott Cameron, was an only son of a Christian minister of some wealth in negroes and in land. When the war came, young Cameron, with numerous relatives and friends, had joined the Confederate regiment of Colonel Jasper Redmond, raised in his neighborhood, and had fought through the entire war, save for six months when, wounded in the battle of Corinth, he had crawled back, as best he might, to his old home and haunts.

At his father's house he had found a condition of affairs all too common in that border state. The old home was deserted; weeds had overgrown the place, and were peeping through the bricks of the front walk; hollyhocks and sunflowers had grown rank in the corners of the yard fence; the neglected garden-patch had gone heedlessly to seed, tall onions and shriveled turnips growing old together. One corner of the house was charred and blackened by fire, and Scott knew that the hand of border war had been there.

Often and often in those fearful days had the bushwhackers of both sides destroyed the property and life of those who remained behind while the stalwarts had gone to war. But since the sympathies of this neighborhood were so largely southern, it was mostly by Federal troops, or, rather, by Federal irregulars and irresponsibles, that the dread work had been done.

Scott soon learned, from neighbors, of the family fate. One dark rainy night, a band of marauding Missourians, commanded by a Captain D——, of Columbia, had ridden to the house and asked for the Rev. Cameron.

"You cannot see him," was the sturdy reply of his good wife. "What do you want?"

"We want a—saddle," hesitated a voice in the dark.

"Very well, here it is," and the courageous woman placed her husband's saddle in the broad lamplight, just inside the door.

"Hand it out," said a voice.

"Come in and get it," returned the woman, all the while with difficulty keeping her husband in the background.

There was some muttered consultation among the men,—finally one with hat drawn down over his eyes, stepped into the light, and took the saddle.

Not yet, however, was there relief for the threatened house. More muttering outside, and soon a voice demanded that Rev. Cameron come forth and act as guide to Cottonwood Cross-roads, ten miles away.

"He shall not go," said the resolute wife.

"He must," replied the voice.

"You know the way perfectly well, Luke Lawson," said Mrs. Cameron, addressing the man who had stepped into the light.

Again there was whispering outside for a moment; then Mr. Cameron, unable longer to remain hiding behind his wife's coolness and courage, stepped forward into the light and laid his hand upon her shoulder.

"I'll go, good wife," he said, and would not be restrained. He knew he must go or see his house burned, probably worse. So he mounted his horse, bare-backed, and went with the men through the rain. They had ridden scarce a quarter of a mile when Captain D—— said,

"This will do. Now sir, how about this rebel preaching of yours?"

"I preach the gospel, sir, and try to console those whose hearts are broken by war. If that's rebellion, make the most of it."

"Where's your son?"

"In the Confederate army."

"It's a wonder you don't try to lie out of it. Get down and pray, if you want to. You haven't long to live, nor we to talk."

"I am ready to die."

"Shoot, then, men."

The wife, listening, heard the shots, and screamed; but there was none to hear her. Without a light, she hurried down the road, moaning and searching, until after long and fruitless effort she found her husband dead and cold. With difficulty she dragged the body home; then walked two miles to the county town for help.

The fatigue, the drenching rain, but most of all the grief at her husband's murder, ended, in a few days, her own life. Husband and wife were buried side by side in the yard of their home and the place was deserted.

At the time when their son—the wounded young soldier—learned those things, he was himself hard pressed by alert and active Federal scouts. Unable from weakness to elude pursuers, he was taken in hand by the father of Adelaide Payne, and secreted in the limestone caves of the cliffs overhanging the Missouri. Here he lay for many days, while the old man, every morning, with an axe over his shoulder and a tin pail filled with food, came through the woods to the hiding-place.

Here the young soldier pondered his wrongs, distorting, by a diseased and bereft and shaken mind, the causes and motives of the deed. It was impossible for him to exaggerate the horror of it, but it was possible to err in fixing the responsibility. Had he been entirely himself, had he been left less alone in his grief and suffering, he might have taken a clearer view of things. It is true, Adelaide came as often as was prudent and spent long hours with him; but so careful was the scrutiny of the scouts that she could rarely, with safety to himself, approach the bluffs.

In these infrequent visits she did much to preserve the balance of his mind, but the brooding of the solitary hours proved a tide stronger than she could stem.

Many a time, up and down, in the darkness of the night, he feebly tottered on the little ledge of rock before his cave's mouth, and shook his fists toward the north star. Many a time he tore, in the frenzy of his grief and rage, the thorn bushes from the cliff side, and cut his hands. Many a time the river answered dully when he hurled stone fragments in angry bursts into its bosom—answered with that rushing coldness with which an unsympathizing world goes by a sufferer. Is it wonderful that out of that solitude and sorrow he came forth illy poised for a lone man's life? Forty days in the wilderness and more; forty days tempted—tempted, too, with odds all against him. Sometimes he dimly felt that Satan was there, and then he sank upon his knees and wept and raised weak hands toward the sky. But for the most part he fought the matter out scarce conscious of himself, conscious only of his over-towering wrongs.

As he strengthened in his body, he hardened in his heart, and all that kept him from joining immediately one of the marauding bands of Confederate bushwhackers who slew and robbed throughout Missouri—joining them for purposes of revenge—was that his furlough expired when his wound should be healed, and he was compelled to rejoin his regiment at the South. So, it was in legitimate warfare that he fought through the remainder of the war—fought, however, as few men even in that courageous lost cause had fought—fought so that step by step, in place of brave men fallen, he was advanced to lieutenant, then captain, then major.

When the war was over, he came home, a sadder and a harder man. Home? No, but to a neighborhood that had once been home; to a farm desolate, and burdened with accumulated taxation that he could not pay, encumbered with a mortgage which might as well have been thrice as heavy, for all the power he had to lift; to a community sympathetic, to be sure, with his misery, but powerless to aid. How many there were in these border states, both of Federals and Confederates, who returned thus to ruined hopes and homes, with whom many sympathized, but whom none could help, who were compelled to tread the wine-press and drink the dregs of war!

In the discouragement and the heartburnings of those early days at home, it was only natural that others who had suffered should be his comrades. The gang headed by Jesse Young, all of whom had felt the hand of retaliation heavy on their homes, but most of whom had given ample provocation in their lawless maraudings during the war, drew him in and made him one of them. Adelaide had done all she could to give him a saner view. With such a determined mentor, who sat for him in the place of conscience, he could not but have misgivings; yet his eyes, blurred by stormy grief and desperation, magnifying into enemies all who were even remotely associated with the triumphant cause, looking towards the entire North as his rightful foes—the North which now possessed the wealth, the North which ran the railways, the North which traveled and prospered—his eyes, with their distorted vision, and with scales upon them, refused to see as Adelaide saw.

So, that night in the perfume of the honeysuckle, and under the locust trees, as mournful nightbirds in the distance and the sad singing of the pine trees in the yard mingled in their desolation with the sweet voice of the woman he loved and the low call of conscience to a life yet worth the saving, it was a doubtful issue between desperation and nobler determination. All this story of wrong which she knew so well, he recalled in angry fragments to her mind, while she listened, heart heavy with pity.

"But, dear," and she laid a small hand on his arm, "you cannot find the men who did the wrong. The only one whose name you know—Luke Lawson—was long ago shot—shot by his own company at the order of his colonel."

"Yes, but not for this murder," he said fiercely. "And there were others responsible—they were all responsible—the whole army—the whole North!"

"Captain D— is dead, too; and besides, Scott, our men burned and murdered likewise. Think of Centralia!"

"I know. I know. But none of our men killed women!"

"Nor did these men intentionally."

"I'm not so sure! Adelaide, be careful how you defend my mother's murderers—and to me!" She saw the danger of her ground and shifted it.

"But there's one woman left who loves you! Don't do anything that will kill her, too,—or, or—drive her from you. The war is over now. 'Thou shalt not kill' is again a law of our life—"

"Who thinks of killing?" he cried, and then added, "Unless I should find her murderers! And if you can be driven from me by anything in this world, it's better now than later."

She winced at the unkind speech; he himself felt his unkindness even more keenly than she, and repented on the instant. Then he said, "Besides, darling, I see no future! You never can be mine! I have no home to take you to, no farm from which to feed you—and our children—"

"Scott Cameron! You know I'm willing to go with you, farm or no farm, house or no house! Willing to work with you and for you!"

"God bless those little hands!" and he kissed them hotly. "They shall never work themselves callous for me and mine."

"But my father—"

"No! Your father shall not support me, either, nor pay my mortgage and taxes. We had negroes enough to pay those debts and more. The Federal government owes me their value, and by the Eternal, I'll have it!"

"O darling," she cried, and agony was in the voice, "do not commit crime! Those boys are not your kind. Do not go with them!"

"I'll do no injustice," he cried, and taking her half fiercely, half tenderly, in his arms, he kissed her forehead—did he feel unworthy to kiss her lips?—and leaping into the saddle, spurred away.

"God help him," the girl murmured. And kneeling beside the horse-block, in the long bluegrass heavy with its seed, she prayed as only women know how to pray.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

F. M. Rains and wife, on their way to Japan and China, spent Lord's day July 21, in Denver. Bro. Rains spoke in the morning in the Central Church, in the afternoon in the Highlands Church and in the evening in the Cathedral—commonly called the South Broadway Christian Church. The meetings were all well attended. The people were greatly interested in the addresses. No little good was done. The cause of missions was advanced. The evening meeting was a mass meeting of the Disciples in Denver. J. E. Pickett, of the Highlands Church, read the second Psalm; Mrs. F. D. Prettil, pastor of the Berkeley Christian Church, led the congregation in prayer; T. T. Thompson, of the East Side Church, after the address by F. M. Rains, baptized two believers. Bruce Brown, pastor of the Central Church, was in Illinois. Judge I. E. Barnum, Dr. L. S. Brown, S. D. Cook and other pillars of the grand old Central were present. Bro. Rains had a great audience and he made a great speech. At each of his meetings in Denver he spoke, of course, in the interest of world-wide evangelism. His last address was especially on the work of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. It was a capital survey of the work accomplished since the organization of the society in 1875. During this period missions have been planted in India, China, Japan, Turkey, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, England, Africa, Cuba and the Hawaiian Islands, and a man is now on his way to Manila. Up to the time of the Kansas City Convention last October the society had collected and disbursed $1,472,603. The society owns about $300,000 worth of property in the lands in which it is at work. More than 3,000 congregations of Disciples of Christ contributed to its treasury. More than 250 persons are in the employ of the society. Last year was the most successful in its history. More than $180,000 came into its treasury. The Disciples are moving in the right direction. They are rapidly becoming a great missionary people. They are coming to understand that the Church of Jesus Christ is the pillar and support of the truth. Their plea for unity is that the world may believe that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God. But the work of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society does not represent all that the Disciples are doing in the islands of the seas and in the lands beyond the oceans. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is at work in foreign lands. Counting the men and women in its employ, and reckoning that one-half of its receipts are spent in other lands than the United States, the Disciples have more than 300 foreign missionaries and are spending nearly $350,000 in evangelizing the nations.

Bro. Rains told us about the introduction of the gospel into Hawaii. The people of the islands were without civilization. They had no written language, and, of course, no literature. Clothing was not worn. The Hawaiians were naked savages. Homes they had not. Marriage was not. Of commerce they were ignorant. The gospel has wrought a change so wonderful as to be akin to the miraculous. The problem of Queen Lil vexed the soul of Grover Cleveland when he was President of the United States. She was a thorn in the side of Benjamin Harrison when he was the executive of the nation. There would have been no Hawaiian problem but for the missionaries. After they went to these islands of the Pacific the natives gave up cannibalism. Girls were no longer sold, bought, eaten. The language of the Hawaiians was reduced to writing. Homes were established. Men learned to love their wives and their children. Commerce began to be developed and civil government was established. Agricultural implements, machinery and raiment began to be in demand. The people of the United States have received many times over in the profit of trade the amount of money given to the missionaries. The heralds of the Christ made Hawaii financially valuable. These man-eating savages turned by the thousands from the worship of idols to the service of the living God. As many as 2,600 in one day swore allegiance to the Christ in baptism. The first house for Christian worship was a rude structure; but it had seats for 5,000 persons. The knight of the grip followed the missionary. He always does. Sometimes, too, he sneers at the work of the Christlike men and women who have brought about a condition of affairs which makes it possible for the commercial agent to make money. The almost invariable order is: First, the knight of the cross; second, the knight of the grip. I do not now think of an exception to this order. After the missionary enters a heathen land the trader enters. On the low plane of dollars, do foreign missions pay? A thousand times, yes! When the missionaries went to Hawaii in 1820 there was no commerce. This you know. In 1890, 70 years after these missionaries went to Hawaii—seven men and their wives—the sugar plantations were valued at $32,347,690. Do foreign missions pay in dollars? The exports of sugar in 1890 aggregated 292,083,580 pounds. In 1891 the foreign trade of Hawaii amounted to $17,698,270, of which the United States had $15,490,556. Do you think the people of the United States made a good investment when they sent missionaries to these islands? Have they got their money back? In 1897 the Hawaiians imported goods to the value of $8,871,071. When the missionaries landed the Hawaiians neither imported nor exported goods.

The Disciples are now at work in Hawaii. They are doing excellent work, too. To this fact the Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur, of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, testified after his visit to Honolulu a few years ago. He bore this testimony in print and orally. He advised the Baptist brethren to keep out of that field on the ground that the Disciples were doing so excellent a work. T. D. Garvin was then alone in Honolulu. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society now sustains workers in that field. There are many Chinese, Japanese and Portuguese on these beautiful islands. The aim is to lead them to believe in our Lord and send them back to the lands of their nativity as heralds of redeeming love.

The story of Japan is no less wonderful. Up to 1854 Japan had no commerce. In 1853 President Fillmore sent Commodore Matthew Calbraith Perry with a letter to the ruler of Japan. He entered the bay of Yeddo in the name of the United States and in the name of the Lord of hosts. He spread the American flag on the capstan, opened the Bible, and read and sang the 100th Psalm. He delivered the letter from the President of the United States to the Emperor of Japan. After doing this he steamed away. The next year he returned for an answer. This action led to the opening of Japan to commerce and to the gospel. There are now twenty-seven societies at work in Japan. The number of Protestant Christians is 40,000. The Greek Church claims about 25,000, and the Roman Catholic 50,000. Xavier entered Japan in 1549. The government became suspicious of the missionaries and drove them out. Multitudes were put to death. In a common grave they were buried, about 30,000, and over the place of burial this inscription: "While the sun warms the earth, let no Christian be so bold as to enter Japan."

"Verbeck of Japan" was born in Holland in 1830. In 1857 he went to Japan as a missionary of the Reformed Church of America. Four years later he began his educational work for the Japanese government. From 1869 to 1873 he was superintendent of teachers and instruction in the foreign department of the Imperial University at Tokio. He died in 1898. He was one of the organizers of the public common school system of Japan, this missionary was, in which more than 3,000,000 children are being educated. In 1877 Guido Tridolin Verbeck, D. D., received the third-class decoration of the Rising Sun. This is enough. Obtain a copy of the "Life of Verbeck in Japan" and read it. Have you read the "Life of Joseph Hardy Neesima"? He was born in Tokio, Japan, in 1843. He died in 1890. How he found his way to Boston, how he obtained an education, how he used his education, and the visible results of his consecrated life, are far more interesting than any book of fiction.

The largest and truest statesmanship is involved in our Lord's command to "make disciples of all the nations." Ponder this.
Denver, Col.

August Magazines.

Scribner's for the month is a special fiction number and exhibits a wide variety in subjects and styles. A Derelict, by Richard Harding Davis, is a rather conventional story of an erratic newspaper correspondent with much genius but little stability, who wrote a wonderful account of the battle of Santiago and sent it in under the name of the representative of the Consolidated Press, who happened to be drunk at the time, and thereby gained great fame for the latter. The character of Channing, the derelict, is well drawn but scarcely a new conception. Quiller-Couch has a legendary tale of Cornwall and Lyonesse in the days when the latter was suddenly submerged and the Scilly Islands were cut off from the main land. The colored illustrations of this are especially worthy of praise. Besides these there is a good Gloucester Sea story, nothing subtle but an old-fashioned well-told tale of a daring skipper and a rough sea; a Mississippi River steam-boat story; a woman's club story by Octave Thanet, illustrated by Christy; and a surprising article on Rural New York City.

The North American Review resists, with its accustomed strenuousness, the August tendency toward frivolity, and is as solid, authoritative and informing as in mid-winter. The article on The Simple Logic of Christian Science, by a member of the Christian Science Publication Committee, to be sure, gives a frothy tone to a few pages; but that is only carrying out the well-understood policy of the magazine to give both sides a hearing. Ex-Senator Edmunds writes on the Insular Cases, and Mr. Boutwell, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, on The Supreme Court and the Dependencies. The latter concludes, from an analysis of the opinions recently rendered, that in a trial of similar cases after the full organization of the territorial government in Porto Rico, the court would hold that the island is within the scope of the constitution. It is not customary to hear the late Prof. John Fiske criticised for inaccuracy or slipshod methods, but Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer makes such allegations against his history of early New York. Mr. Howell's monthly article is in praise of Booker T. Washington.

For journalistic enterprise the article by Aguinaldo in Everybody's Magazine describing his own capture, probably takes the prize for this month. It is a very simple narrative of the events and might have been written by any one reasonably well acquainted with the situation. We take the editor's word for it, however, that it is really by Aguinaldo. The story is told simply and without emotion and the only adjective applied to General Funston's exploit is "brilliant." The closing article, unsigned, on "Job Lots in Literature" is a bright piece of iconoclastic criticism.

The Atlantic Monthly devotes most of its space this month to fiction, including half a dozen short stories, the continuation of Miss Johnston's Audrey and the conclusion of Miss Jewett's Tory Lover. Besides these there is an article entitled Reciprocity or the Alternative, which means virtually reciprocity or war, and the beginning of Reminiscences of a Dramatic Critic, by Henry A. Clapp. William Watson's sonnet on Simon de Montfort is scarcely a success, but the always brilliant Contributors' Club is better than usual.

The current number of the World's Work is devoted to the Pan-American Exposition, and it may be doubted whether so complete and adequate an acquaintance with the Exposition can be obtained anywhere else short of a trip to Buffalo. An elaborate illustrated article on this subject fills the greater part of the magazine and the monthly March of Events is relegated to an inferior position. It may be added that for so new a magazine the World's Work is making an immense success as an advertising medium.

The Century is a special holiday number this month, but has no extra proportion of fiction. Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer writes on Midsummer in New York and Bishop Potter gives his impressions of India. The stories are mostly short and light. It will make good summer reading from cover to cover, being neither too frivolous nor too heavy. An engraving by Timothy Cole after Turner is notable.

Our Budget.

—Beatrice, Neb., is planning to erect a new building.

—The receipts of the Nebraska State Mission Board for the past eleven months amount to $2,168.56.

—O. A. Ishmael is to hold a meeting for the church at Creighton, commencing the fourth Sunday in August.

—W. W. Blalock closes his work at Lamar, Mo., August 25 and will be ready for engagements as pastor or evangelist after Sept. 1.

—L. J. Marshall has resigned at Palmyra, Mo., after a three years' pastorate and will begin work at Pueblo, Col., Sept. 1. During August he will enjoy a vacation at Boulder.

—Prof. A. A. Hibner, of Effingham, Ill., has received the degree of D. D. from the College of the Southwestern Illinois Association of the Methodist Protestant Church.

—E. C. Irvin has resigned at Williamsville, N. Y., to take effect Sept. 1, and the church desires to correspond with a good man for the place. Address Dr. W. H. H. Baker, Williamsville, N. Y.

—W. A. Fite, a recent graduate of Kentucky University, has received a call to a church in Prince Edward Island. He filled the pulpit at the Central church, Lexington, July 21, in the absence of I. J. Spencer.

—The church at Lushton, Neb., A. L. Ogden pastor, has been suffering for lack of a building but will attempt to build if the corn crop is not a total failure. The plans of the churches in many localities will be influenced by the fate of the corn crop.

—E. S. Muckley, of Bellefontaine, O., has accepted a call from the church in Honolulu, H. I., made vacant recently by the transfer of A. E. Corey to China. He will go to his new field in a few weeks. See his advertisement elsewhere of a small printing press which he wishes to sell before leaving.

—The annual offering for church extension will be made on the first Lord's day in September. A statement in regard to it is published elsewhere and should be read and heeded. Last year 1,300 churches sent offerings to the church extension fund. There should be more this year.

—The convention of the Tidewater District of Virginia will meet August 6-8, at Antioch Church, Caroline County, as previously announced. The program, which is at hand, bears the familiar names of L. A. Cutler, J. T. T. Hundley, P. A. Cave, Richard Bagby, O. B. Sears, A. Buxton, Peter Ainslee, B. A. Abbott and others.

—The local committee in charge of the preparations for the Minneapolis convention has issued a booklet giving information about the city and the preparations which they are making for a great gathering. If their zeal and enterprise is adequately rewarded our first twentieth century convention will be an overwhelming success.

—Foreign missionary receipts for the week ending July 25 show a loss of $2,754.39. This is partly accounted for by the fact that $1,700 was received for the special India famine relief fund during this period last year. The loss of $1,000 in the ordinary receipts, however, is distressing. It should be more than made up next year.

—We call attention to the first chapter of a new serial story by President B. A. Jenkins, which appears in this number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is a tale of the lawless days in the border states following the close of the civil war, and depicts vividly a period of American history which has not been much written about, but which offers a splendid field for historical romance. Our readers will find it interesting and profitable to read the four chapters of "The Dregs of the War."

—Bro. John Famulines, who has been attending school at Lexington, Ky., supplies for J. H. Jones during July, while the latter and his wife are visiting the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo.

—C. Manly Rice, of Wooster, O., has been obliged by ill health to give up regular pastoral work for a time and would be glad to do non-resident or supply preaching for churches within reach of that point.

—The church at Effingham, Ill., A. A. Hibner pastor, had a largely attended jubilee meeting July 21, which resulted in liquidating the long standing indebtedness of the church. A dedication service will be held the first Sunday in September.

—In view of the resignation of C. B. Newman at Detroit, who is to take up the work of the Bible College at Columbia, Mo., his congregation and official board in Detroit have passed resolutions of appreciation of his services and regret at his departure.

—The new house of worship at Alfordsville, Ind., was dedicated July 21 by L. L. Carpenter. This is the second church he has dedicated at this place, and the new one is said to be the best in town. Money was raised to pay all debts. The hot weather prevented a large attendance.

—The annual meeting of the Grand River (Mo.) District was held at Breckenridge, Mo., July 23, 24. This district includes Caldwell, Livingston, Daviess, Harrison, Grundy and Mercer counties. Secretaries Davis and Abbott were present and also most of the preachers and many of the laity of the district.

—G. L. Bush, of Taylor, Tex., will begin a meeting for the Garden City church Aug. 4. Bro. Bush is well known to the churches of southwest Missouri. Why cannot some of our Missouri churches capture him while he is here? I think his old time love for Missouri will again return if an opportunity is offered.

—The offering for home missions had made a gain of over $28,000 for the year so far. A gain of $9,000 before the close of the books Sept. 30 will give us the much desired $100,000. If all the churches that have not yet sent in their offering will do so immediately we will be able to reach the goal. Send all money to Benj. L. Smith, Cincinnati, Ohio, Y. M. C. A. Building.

Bro. F. M. Rains who, with his wife, is now journeying westward en route to China and Japan, has been steadily improving in health from the time he left Cincinnati. He delivered three addresses in Denver with apparent ease and they were received, so B. B. Tyler writes, with great enthusiasm. It is believed and sincerely hoped that the trip will substantially benefit his health. He left Denver for the convention at Santa Cruz, Cal.

—The Disciples' Divinity House of the University of Chicago has worked so satisfactorily that plans have been made to extend the method to other departments of the University. A system of halls or houses will be organized to provide homes and social life for students in the different grades. Arrangements have already been completed for a hall for young ladies in the preparatory school and the junior college, of which Miss Alice Lloyd, formerly principal of Madison Institute, will be head. Miss Lloyd has had long experience and ample success in dealing with college girls, and parents can feel safe in putting their daughters in her care. The total expense for residents of this hall, including room, board, laundry and tuition in the University, is estimated at $132 per quarter. The hall will open Oct. 1. The committee in charge of these plans is: E. S. Ames, Chairman, W. D. MacClintock, H. L. Willett, Errett Gates and Ella Adams Moore. It is expected that halls for boys and for college and graduate students will be established later.

—W. A. Baldwin, state secretary for Nebraska, requests the preachers in that state to begin on next Lord's day to announce the state convention from their pulpits and continue till the time arrives. August 19-24 is the time and Bethany camp grounds the place. A good program has been prepared in all departments. The usual one and one-third fare has been granted on all roads centering at Lincoln, and connections.

—Paul H. Castle has been called to the pastorate of the West End Christian Church, St. Louis, from which O. A. Bartholomew has recently resigned to become city evangelist. Mr. Castle has been pastor of the church in Vir den, Ill., and was for a short time a district evangelist in Illinois. He is a young man of vigorous and aggressive personality, a graduate of Eureka College, and has already made an excellent impression upon the congregation which has called him.

—J. H. MacNeill has resigned at Muncie, Ind., and will close his three years' pastorate there the last of September. After graduating from Kentucky University he spent two years in Louisville where the church was enlarged and a mission established, and eleven years with the church at Rushville, Ind., where a $30,000 church and a $4,000 parsonage were built, and 900 members added to the congregation. Since he has been at Muncie the debt has been reduced, missionary offerings quadrupled and 200 members added. Such a record as this leaves little room for comment and little need for further commendation. It speaks for itself and its witness is true.

—Walter Scott Priest, of Atchison, Kan., rounded out twenty one years of work in the ministry on July 21, and celebrated the occasion by a sermon on "The Christian Ministry." During this time he has preached 2,457 sermons, has received 1,200 persons into the church, married 234 couples and conducted 267 funerals. We are not surprised at the statement that he has never been without work a single day of all that time. Men of his sort never are. Having now attained his ministerial majority, he is ready for still more vigorous and effective work, and may his next twenty-one years be even more prosperous and useful than the last.

—We hope our readers will not forget the need of the Jacksonville church and will not forget to render substantial assistance. Their situation calls for something more than a spasmodic outburst of sympathy. Such a dire calamity is sure to arouse that in all minds, but there is no virtue in the thrill of sympathy unless you give some practical assistance. The executive committee of the Florida state board issues a general appeal in behalf of Jacksonville showing that, while the Catholics, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Lutherans have received help sufficient to enable them to rebuild, the Church of Christ has received almost nothing. Plans have been made for a church which will contain an auditorium seating 650, and a Bible-school room adjoining to seat 400, class rooms, parlors and two reading rooms to be kept open continually.

What are Humors?

They are vitiated or morbid fluids coursing the veins and affecting the tissues. They are commonly due to defective digestion but sometimes inherited.

How do they manifest themselves?

Garfield Park Assembly.

Beautiful for situation is Santa Cruz, Cal., the seat of Garfield Park, whither the tribes go up annually during the month of July. Although it is a week in advance of the regular convention, yet many feet have turned from various parts of northern and central California and now stand within the park. The quaint little cottages surrounding the park and the white tents pitched throughout the grove of eucalyptus, present a picturesque and attractive scene.

The cordial greetings of familiar friends and the kindly hospitality shown to the stranger within the gates, are the delightful social features.

Bro. R. N. Davis, the pastor of the Christian church here, is everywhere on the ground—a bureau of information, an accommodating servant of all. A large dining-hall and well kept restaurant furnish meals at reasonable rates for those who have not made other provisions. But as man does not live by bread alone, ample provision has been made for both head and heart in a systematic teaching and study of the Scriptures. Accordingly, Dean Van Kirk, of Berkeley Bible Seminary, an acknowledged master in Israel, has drawn to him a school of prophets, principally preachers, more than 50 in all, in the great tabernacle. This list constantly grows as time advances and attendance increases.

Two courses of lectures, "The Rise of the Prophets" and "The Teachings of Jesus," occupying an hour each, are delivered daily, except Sunday. Maps and blackboard outlines are skillfully brought into use in the course of these lectures, which greatly assist the learner in the apprehension of the lessons. Late standard authorities are consulted, but the Bible is made the final appeal in all religious questions. Hence his numerous Scripture references. It is gratifying to all to note Prof. Van Kirk's evident strict loyalty to the revealed word as he understands it. Appropriate questions by the class are always in order, and never fail to elicit an intelligent and respectful answer. But any attempt to introduce questions foreign to the subject in hand is promptly, yet courteously, dismissed. When one anticipates anything in the course, he is requested to "hold that point until it is reached further on." If a question is presented which neither the professor nor any human being has been able to answer, it is modestly referred to the querist for solution.

The limits of this brief correspondence will not admit an attempt to describe these courses of lectures. It will be sufficient to say they are both heartily approved and richly enjoyed by all who have followed them. Vigorous applause succeeded at the close of one of the lectures to-day. Things both new and old are being brought forth from the holy oracles, and our hearts are made to burn within us as we are led to behold the gradual, providential development or "Rise of the Prophets," or are conducted to a broader and deeper conception and appreciation of "The Teachings of Jesus."

The Disciples of this great empire state have ground to hope and take courage in the accession to their forces of Dean Van Kirk, the wise and enthusiastic head of our Bible Seminary at Berkeley, the seat of the great State University. Here let the Timothies in our churches be encouraged to go, that they may be trained to be able ministers of the word; and young preachers also, who have not enjoyed such advantages, let them seek greater proficiency, and so become more efficient laborers in the Master's service.

The Christian-Evangelist Fifty-two Years Ago.

Fifty-two years ago I was a compositor, working on the Evangelist here in the then little village of Mt. Pleasant, Ia., containing some three or four hundred people. At that time my father was the publisher of a small abolition free soil paper at this place the only anti-slavery advocate then published west of the Mississippi river. While engaged in this very laudable work, my father, the late Prof. Samuel L. Howe, founder of Howe's Academy of this city, also published the Evangelist, at that time a monthly magazine, issued in the interests of what was then known as the Church of Christ in Iowa. Whether the Evangelist originated here in Mt. Pleasant, or was brought here from some other point, I am at present unable to determine, but I do know that in 1849, fifty-two years ago, I helped to publish it in my father's printing office here, and I can truly say that we issued a very able and handsome magazine, and that it was a great help and blessing to the devoted and struggling little band of Christian workers of that faith in the state.

The editor of the magazine at that time was Elder Daniel Bates, a very faithful and consecrated man, both to his family and the church. While he was bravely shouldering the responsibility of publishing the magazine, he was, at the same time, educating his children in my father's academy here, and they were a very bright set of children indeed, and boys and girls of whom any father might justly feel proud. Bro Bates was quite deaf, and was compelled to use an ear trumpet, something unheard of before in this then western wild, and I well remember the wonder and astonishment, not unmixed with awe, which it produced in us boys of the composing room. Bro. Bates was a splendid specimen of the true Christian man. I presume he has long since been gathered to his fathers. Peace to his ashes, and a reverent tear to his memory.

These were the days of Chatterton, Arthur Miller, and a host of other pioneer heroes, through whose great sacrifices and beneficent labors the foundations of the present grand Christian Church were laid.

May the blessing of God ever rest upon the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and multiply its usefulness far and wide, and through its glorious agency may multitudes be brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

Mt. Pleasant, Ia.

[The Evangelist, edited by Daniel Bates at Iowa and afterward as a weekly paper by B. W. Johnson at Oskaloosa, was one of the two principal streams which united to form the present CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The other was the Gospel Echo, edited at Macomb, Ill., by J. C. Reynolds, who was joined in 1868 by J. H. Garrison. The latter brought the paper to Quincy, Ill., and thence to St. Louis, changing it from a monthly to a weekly and naming it The Christian. The union of The Christian and The Evangelist produced the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Hence the hyphen in the name.—EDITOR.]

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Publishers' Notes.

There is nothing in this world so worthless as poor music, and the country is flooded with books of religious music which are worse than worthless. Nothing is easier to do than to sit down and grind out a certain type of "gospel hymns." Any person with a fair knowledge of the rudiments of music can produce half a dozen or so of such tunes every day, and an accomplice with a talent for jingle and doggerel can supply the words to fit the tunes. Take fifty such pieces, add fifty old standard hymns that are in every book that ever was issued, and half a dozen really good pieces, mix the lot together, and you have the average book of sacred music, all ready to be exploited and advertised in the most extravagant style, and foisted on the public. A few well known men, who know absolutely nothing of music, but who are good-natured and willing to oblige the publisher of the book, write commendatory notices of it, and on the strength of these the book is bought by a number of churches, who only throw away their money. The Christian Publishing Company publishes several song books which do not belong to this class. The church that buys The Gospel Call, Silver and Gold or Tidings of Salvation, is running no risk. It is getting a book that has been tried and not found wanting by hundreds of our churches and Sunday-schools. The prices of these collections are very low. Sample pages and price-list will be sent on request.

No matter what it may be in the way of church supplies, send to us for it. Communion sets, communion wine, collection envelopes, baptismal pants, record books, treasurer's books, blank church letters—whatever it may be, we have the best at fairest prices. It seems hardly fitting that a congregation should permit the use of a bottle, a glass goblet and a china plate in the observance of the Lord's Supper if it is able to purchase a silver communion set, and yet this is what many of our small congregations do. We shall be glad to furnish prices on these sets, and on all kinds of supplies to those interested.

Correspondence.

What Shall We Pray For?

Not for rain. Why? Because God has not in these latter days promised rain in answer to prayer, and because in a long lifetime observance of the writer, such prayers have been a miserable failure. Call this dogmatic if you will, but it is better than the half-hearted mind of many good people on an important subject which should be definitely settled. Now for the proof.

The blindness, to say the least, of many ministers of the gospel is amazing. They seem to read the Bible with a veil over their faces. They fail to read it as they do any other book, but rather in the light of their prejudices, and mix up its teachings in the most astonishing manner. They fail to see that God dealt differently with mankind in the several ages of the world, and gave them laws and promises to suit their then condition. God is unchangeable, yesterday, today and forever the same, but he changes his times and his laws to suit his unchangeable purposes.

When God says through Noah, that "seed-time and harvest shall not cease," he proclaims a general law for all time, but when he says through Moses, "If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments, then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase," etc., and when because of disobedience he threatens them with desolations and calamities, he sets forth a special law applicable to Judea and Jews alone (Lev. 26th).

These blessings and curses are reiterated through the Jewish Scriptures, but there is no proof that they were carried over into the Christian age, for Jesus took them away, and if restored again, it must be shown in the teaching of the Holy Spirit, and I ask any one to point out a single clear text after the day of Pentecost and apostolic days, where God proposes to change times and laws, bring a scourge upon the earth because of sin, or remove it through the prayers of his people, or in any manner to interfere with the laws of nature for man's sake. It is fair presumption to say that, if God removes a scourge or calamity through prayer, he brought it on for some good purpose. It is a base charge against the loving Father to say that he brings a special scourge upon good and bad alike. I don't believe it.

It is true, nevertheless, that God has ordained terrible forces in his natural laws, as well as beneficent ones, which fall upon all men alike, when and where they may, not to chastize men for disobedience, but to test their loyalty, and when men receive them as such in humility and subjection, whether the greater calamities or sickness and death, then are they chastened as sons.

The Jews lived under a fleshly institution, an imperfect moral law, and natural law was constrained to meet the promises of God in their temporal condition; but in the Christian age, we live in a spiritual kingdom, under a perfect moral law, and physical manifestations are no longer needed to teach us how to walk by faith, and the general promise of "seed time and harvest" prevails over sinner and saint alike.

But some one will quote Jesus as saying, "And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive." "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything and shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven," and other texts of like character. But it should be seen that these texts as well as many others should not be quoted as intended for the Christian world of to-day, but as applying alone to the disciples and apostles as promises of help and guidance in the great work before them. Much more might be said in this part of the subject, but I choose to take up another line of proof—observation.

Now if, after four or six weeks of drought, an ordinary reaction of the elements of nature takes place, in accordance with all observation, whether prayed for or not, and the rain descends in showers in different parts of the state and country, the portions benefited will delude themselves into the belief that their prayers were answered, while the unfortunate places will have their faith greatly strained. Cannot good Christian people see that such a trial of their faith leads to unbelief, while the great world of sinners scoffs and jeers at a religion so opposed to their common sense?

But an incident of the past is spoken of to prove the efficacy of prayer. In the summer of 1875 Gov. Hardin, of Missouri, set apart June 3 as a day of fasting and prayer for the removal of the locust plague in the counties just south of Kansas City. I lived near Pleasant Hill, Cass Co., at the time and know whereof I affirm. My remembrance is that C. V. Riley, state entomologist, stated in one of the St. Louis papers of that date that the governor might set the day and the good people all over the state might pray, but that the locusts would not go until they got ready, which would be when their wings were fully grown, about June 20. Now, having more faith in Mr. Riley than in the prayers of the people, I waited until June 16 and planted my corn, so that it would come up just as the locusts would be leaving, so they could not eat it off, and about June 20, 17 days after prayer was made, they left a body and were seen no more. I mention this case so minutely not only to disprove belief in prayer for such purpose, but to correct a minister of one of our city churches who recently stated that the locusts left within two days after the day set for prayer, his wish to sustain his faith getting the better of the facts. It is somewhat astonishing how men will delude themselves into believing a thing because they want to believe it, whether it be in regard to special providence or some theological doctrine confusing the plainest Bible teaching.

The proclamation of Gov. Dockery and the prayers of the people will be a failure, are already a failure. After a week's time a few showers have fallen here and there, but no general downpour, such as is needed, nor is there likely to be at this time of year. Despite all this, the promise to Noah still holds good, and there will be plenty in the land, but this doubting, half-way faith will still obtain, and good men will try to believe that their prayers were answered because their own dooryard was sprinkled.

Our brethren have heretofore given forth no uncertain sound in matters of doctrine; let them now take this special providence question in hand and declare for Judaism or for the teaching of the Holy Spirit and common sense. During the civil war both sides prayed to God for victory, but the "most men and biggest guns" succeeded. In the South African war Pres. Kruger and his burghers put faithful trust in the God of the right, but the most men and guns again triumphed. Matters of right and wrong are settled hereafter. Since apostolic days no man has risen and no event has taken place that cannot be accounted for through natural law and without special divine direction; to maintain otherwise is to keep up doubt and confusion in the Christian world.

The little stone cut out from the mountain rolled on to its destiny by its own inherent gravitation. Dear brethren, the Holy Spirit has told us what to pray for, about which there can be no doubt; let us ask in intelligent faith that we may receive. If I seem over positive, dogmatic or in error, I ask the kind forbearance of my readers.

The disfiguration caused by skin disease, even more than the tormenting irritation which is so commonly associated with it. The use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery generally results in a complete cure of eczema, pimples, eruptions and other forms of disease which have their cause in an impure condition of the blood. "Golden Medical Discovery" absolutely purges the blood of humors and poisons, and so cures the cutaneous diseases which bad blood breeds and feeds.

There is no alcohol in the "Golden Medical Discovery" and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

"I was troubled with eczema from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet," writes Mrs. Ella Quick, of Cass City, Tuscola Co., Mich. "Could not walk at times, nor wear my shoes. Thought there was no help for me—at least the doctor said there was none. I went to see friends at Christmas time and there heard of the good that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery had done for them, and was advised to try it at once. For fear that I might neglect it, my friends sent to the village and got a bottle and made me promise that I would take it. I had been getting worse all the time. I took thirteen bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and ten vials of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and used the 'All Healing Salve,' which made a complete cure. It was slow, but sure. I was taking the medicine about eight months. 'I would say to all who read this: Try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery before wasting time and money.'

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets assist the action of the "Discovery."

Popular Hymns No. 2

THE ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. Popular Hymns No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the church.

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival. SINGING EVANGELISTS will be pleased with the analytical classification, enabling them without reference to indices to find a suitable song on a moment's warning.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations, etc., especially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Like its predecessors, Popular Hymns No. 2 is an

All Stepping Together.

Old captains who served in the northern and southern armies during our civil war have told me that when they approached a pontoon bridge during a march they always commanded the men to "break step," because if they all stepped together in crossing the bridge, the regular motion would start the bridge to swinging and throw it from its fastenings.

In this there is an illustration of what the Christian Church might do if we all moved as one man in a great purpose. If every church and individual would step together in all our efforts to evangelize the world we could shake the earth with our plea for Christian union and the redemption of the world. It is true that that church or individual will be happiest which falls into line with Christ and his church in all plans and efforts to save the world. The missionary secretaries will all testify that the happiest and most prosperous churches among us are those that co-operate in all our missionary work.

Missouri Mission Notes.

It is almost too hot and the secretary is almost too busy to write these notes, and were it not for one thing, I acknowledge it would not be done. This one thing is the awful need that has come. Up to the close of last month our receipts were $600 in excess of the same period last year. Steadily, month by month, they have been creeping up, and we had every reason to expect that this would continue, and our contracts and appropriations were made accordingly. Suddenly, however, this awful, unprecedented drought has fallen upon us and our receipts have fallen almost to nothing. Every day the situation grows worse. All of central and south Missouri is burned up; corn, oats, hay, all have failed, and it has become a question of living with a great many of our people down there. They have no reserve as in the more favored parts of the state.

Under such conditions it is useless for us to expect them to give for the support of the gospel. They do not have it to give. Our men are there and if we can support them they can preach the gospel to thousands of these people who otherwise would spiritually starve. To call them from their posts now would be a burning shame.

When drought-stricken India sent out her pathetic cry for bread, our people responded with large and quick generosity. What shall be their answer to the appeal that comes from our own brethren and in our own state? Surely, those who can respond to India's cry for bread will not fail to answer the cry that is nearer home. Let the answer come. The north part of the state has been richly blessed, the showers have come, crops are good. It is to this part of the state that we must principally look. But we appeal to every brother or sister, no matter where located, to send us their gifts, whether great or small, and help us in this work of God. No matter who the reader of this, if you can spare $1, $2, $3, $5, $10, $50 or $100, send it and we will use it as best we can.

We are trying to reach a half million for church extension by 1905, and a million by 1910. We can do it without a doubt, but we must step together to do it. More churches and more people must give. Last year the churches as churches gave only $10,337.47, or only about one-fifth of our new receipts last year came from the annual offerings—only 1,300 churches contributed. Surely we can do better. There is but one call in the entire year for the church extension fund, and we must emphasize this offering day or our advance along church extension lines will be slow, very slow. More than half the new churches organized must have help from our board in building. We organize 300 new ones each year. Let the pastors and churches fall into line for the September collection. The day is the first Sunday. Let the bugle call be sounded loud and every soldier of the Lord fall into line. Send postal card for literature and collection envelopes. They will be sent free. Address G. W. Muckley, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

I have many things to say concerning other matters, but I want this appeal to stand out with the greatest emphasis and the greatest prominence. Will not the preachers bring this matter before their churches? Show them the need. Surely no church, when the matter is presented as it ought to be, will hesitate. May the Lord incline the hearts of his people to be gracious to this appeal.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

For Well People.

An Easy Way to Keep Well.

It is easy to keep well if we would only observe each day a few simple rules of health.

The all important thing is to keep the stomach right and to do this it is not necessary to diet or to follow a set rule or bill of fare. Such pampering simply makes a capricious appetite and a feeling that certain favorite articles of food must be avoided.

Prof. Wiechold gives pretty good advice on this subject, he says: "I am 68 years old and have never had a serious illness, and at the same time my life has been largely an indoor one, but I early discovered that the way to keep healthy was to keep a healthy stomach, not by eating bran crackers or dieting of any sort; on the contrary I always eat what my appetite craves, but for the past eight years I have made it a daily practice to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal and I attribute my robust health for a man of my age to the regular daily use of Stuart's Tablets."

"My physician first advised me to use them because he said they were perfectly harmless and were not a secret patent medicine, but contained only the natural digestives, peptones and diastase, and after using them a few weeks I have never ceased to thank him for his advice."

"I honestly believe the habit of taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after meals is the real health habit, because their use brings health to the sick and ailing and preserves health to the well and strong."

Men and women past fifty years of age need a safe digestive after meals to insure a perfect digestion and to ward off disease, and the safest, best known and most widely used is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

They are found in every well regulated household from Maine to California and in Great Britain and Australia are rapidly pushing their way into popular favor.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, full sized packages at 50 cents and for a weak stomach a fifty cent package will often do fifty dollars worth of good.

Taking and Saving Life.

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of June 13, I saw this query, "How can I take the life of my fellow man in battle or anywhere else with a clear conscience?" I am glad that this query in one form or another is so frequently occurring. It shows the growth of real universal brotherhood and the breaking down of narrow patriotism, one of the greatest hindrances to a world-wide fraternity, which must be adhered to with great tenacity if we ever hope to save this world for Christ. So long as we keep pleading for the sacredness of our rights and privileges will the Christ-life be at a very low ebb. It is impossible to build up a Christ-like life and retaliate either nationally or privately for ours or any other's defense. These things show that we look only at the flesh and not at the great deep things of the spirit. The flesh must suffer that the spirit may conquer. This is a relic of catholicism from the time when Constantine gave protection to the church and joined the temporal to spiritual power.

If we are to conquer this world we must do it on the basis of self sacrifice as shown in Christ's death, the climax of his life, the principle that brought him forth from the grave unto life again. Christ said, "I came not to destroy, but to give life, not to take life, but to save it." We must face about on this life-taking business before we succeed in our life-saving.

Texas Letter.

Twenty-four cotton seed mills have been built, or are under construction in Texas, this year, increasing the number of such mills in this state and the territories to 184. No other cotton-growing section has any such record. It is hoped that a cotton oil exchange will be opened in this city in September, where quotations from all the great cotton markets of the world will be received direct by wire. These quotations will be forwarded immediately to all subscribers. The seed and its products are now much more valuable than the cotton used to be.

One of the best results of B. B. Sanders' recent meeting at Rockwall, was a determination on the part of the church to employ a preacher, and yet no amount of demonstration seems to convince many of this important fact.

Arthur Jones has resigned at Clarendon and is now at Austin. The church at Clarendon gave him a hearty call to remain.

Miss Lucile Eubank, daughter of one of our preachers, J. C. Eubank, of Denison, has offered her services as a missionary to Mexico. Many are going there that they may grow rich on her vast wealth, but this Christlike girl would go that she might enrich that priest-ridden people with the riches of free men in Christ Jesus the Lord.

D. A. Leak and Rev. T. Gallaher, of Rensselaer, Mo., have recently closed a debate at Milford. The usual questions were debated, and from all I can hear, our people have every reason to be satisfied with the result.

Volney Johnson has done good work at Pilot Point. There were 23 additions and a movement inaugurated for the building of a new house. Ever since the split there some years ago, on account of the organ, etc., the work has been much hindered. Now the outlook is brighter, and Pastor Adcock is hopeful and happy.

T. E. Shirley, financial agent for Add-Ran University, gives to the friends of the school this cheering message: "Have passed the half-way station. Have secured in good pledges more than $10,000. Praise the Lord."

T. E. SHIRLEY."

Wilson and Huston have just closed a fine meeting at Lancaster, with 75 additions. Texas will long remember these faithful evangelists for their work at San Antonio, Waxahatchie and Lancaster.

The Central church organized another mission school in the city recently, which we hope will prove to be the beginning of a new church in an important district.

M. M. DAVIS.

Dallas, Texas.

To the Christian Churches of Missouri.

A crisis confronts the work of your state board of missions, and we beg you to give careful heed to the following statement. Up to the close of June, the receipts of our board had been six hundred dollars in excess of the same period last year; and there seemed every reason to anticipate the continuance of this favorable condition. Encouraged by this, your board made generous appropriations for the year, and opened new fields for the preaching of the gospel. Good men were called from other fields and put into our missions. Then came the fearful drought, entailing hardship upon all classes of our people, but especially those of the rural districts. Contributions have almost ceased to come in, and our treasury is empty. We cannot call from the field the good men who are doing so nobly, for we are under obligation to fulfill our contracts with them, and it would be a shame, anyway, for the work to be abandoned. It must not stop. We cannot afford to incur a heavy debt to transmit to the incoming board. Will you not come to our relief? The stronger churches of the state will surely send in the amounts of their apportionments at an early date. If they do so we will get through the year all right. If not, the cause of our Master will suffer a grievous embarrassment. We appeal to all the pastors and elders of our churches to act upon this appeal promptly. May God put it into your hearts to come up to the help of the Lord in this emergency.

W. F. RICHARDSON,
Chairman State Board.

Iowa Notes.

R. M. Estes has been employed by the churches at Nichols and Columbus City and will preach half time at each place.

J. Will Walters has a call to the church at Red Oak and we understand will accept.

Percy Leach is the new pastor at Iowa City and will begin work September 1.

Lee Ferguson has been called to the work at Bedford.

About one-third of the churches have returned the statistical cards and the reports are uniformly encouraging, but we hope to get them all in soon.

The time for our state convention is near at hand and we want to make it one of the best in our history. The Cedar Rapids brethren will spare no pains to make the delegates welcome and the board has prepared a good program. The delegates will be given lodging and breakfast free and dinner and supper will be furnished at the church at a small cost.

The ladies of the C. W. B. M. will begin their session Monday afternoon, September 9, and close 4 p. m. Tuesday. The I. C. C. session proper will begin Tuesday evening with an address by President I. N. McCash. Wednesday evening will be the Educational session and on Thursday evening we will have a grand jubilee conducted by the Endeavorers, closing the session with an address by J. P. McKnight, of Oskaloosa.

L. H. Stine, of Quincy, Ill., G. W. Muckley, of Kansas City, Mo., and other leading men of the brethren of the brotherhood will address the convention. The railroads have granted a one and one-third fare rate and we hope to have a large and enthusiastic meeting. Talk it, preach it, pray it, and come.

WHY?

Why do you, who live in the Mississippi Valley, send to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or even to Chicago for a desired volume, when you can secure it much more quickly and just as cheap in St. Louis? This is a question that is very difficult to answer. We can supply you with any book that you wish—any respectable book, that is; French novels and blood-and-thunder-seven-buckets-of-gore-to-the-chapter romances are barred—no matter where or by whom published. Our business is by no means confined to the books we ourselves publish. Our catalogue contains only our own publications, in the main, but we can sell you any book you wish to purchase.

Large Conventions and Large Missionary Offerings.

Both divine and human wisdom have ever cognized the value of large assemblies of the people gathered at one time and place for a definite purpose. The "Feast of the Passover" was not only a memorial institution to perpetuate a great event, but designed to help preserve a mighty nation, and as the providential means of the gathering of the multitudes at Pentecost, to hear the first proclamation of the gospel of repentance and remission of sins to all nations.

At that first "General Convention of the Christian Church" was organized the first Foreign Missionary Society, and there the dispersed disciples went everywhere preaching the word, first in Judea, then Samaria, and into the uttermost parts of the earth. In the light of the events that followed, the most striking critic against conventions as a waste of time and money could not consistently or conscientiously find fault. The plea of the so-called practical man that all the expenditures of the conventions for railroad fares, etc., is a waste of money, and might have been given to the poor, or given directly to our missionaries, finds no argument or comfort from this first General Convention at Jerusalem.

From the lesson of the broken alabaster jar, whose sweet perfume, though but a sentiment of a woman's love and heart, was no waste except to the selfish soul. For the Master declared it a good work, and a memorial to her. Even nature teaches us the value of the aesthetic and beautiful, as well as the material and practical. They who decry conventions because of the cash expended rather than the sentiment coined, would dethrone God because the flowers of beauty are not made into bread for the world's fragrance transformed into fruit, and the colors of nature to the cereals for the nurture of man. As the powder determines the speed of the bullet, the steam the stroke of the piston, so the enthusiasm engendered, the inspiration begotten by the great gatherings of God's people determine the measure of our missionary enterprises.

To this end, and in harmony with the laws of God, as expressed both in nature and revelation, let us work for large gatherings of the people at all of our conventions. We are taught by the Word that "One can chase a thousand, and two can put ten thousand to flight." Thus the doubling of numbers increases power by many fold. The focalizing of many rays of light upon a given point produces the burning glass. The contributing of streamlets from forest and field, mountain and meadow, give birth to the Mississippi; the broad bosom bears the commerce of a great country; and on whose banks stand not few mighty cities, not the least of which is Minneapolis, where the tribes shall gather and fall to pay tribute to the cause of God and enter the open door of the Twentieth Century with the greatest convention in our history. Here at the head of America's greatest river let us give a new impetus to the cause that pleads for the all-sufficiency of the alone-sufficiency of the Word of God and the union of all God's people, and the evangelization of the whole creation; believing with Duff, that "the church that ceases to be evangelistic will soon cease to be evangelical."

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Leading Paper for the Young People of the Christian Church.

W. W. DOWLING, EDITOR.

Our Young Folks is a Large Sixteen-Page Weekly Journal devoted to Bible Study, Christian Work and Home Culture, first-class in every particular, with a large and brilliant corps of special and general contributors.

WHAT IT CONTAINS.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS contains, among other valuable features, the following special departments:

I. The Picture Gallery: First-class pictures of prominent Ministers, Sunday-school Superintendents, Endeavorers and other Christian Workers, with biographical sketches.

II. The Church: Short, pointed articles on First Principles and Practical Duties; Talks on the mid-week Prayer-meeting Topics, and notes of Church Doings.

III. The Sunday-school: Full Expository, Illustrative and Practical Notes on the International Texts, that will afford teachers and older pupils all the aid needed in the study, teaching and application of the Sunday-school lesson.

IV. The Y. P. S. C. E.: Expository Notes on the Y. P. S. C. E. and Junior Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, with Illustrative and Practical Applications and Quotations, that will help young Endeavorers to take an active and intelligent part in the Service.

V. The Home Circle: Poetry, Stories, Illustrated sketches of travel, familiar chats about books, music, amusements and kindred topics.

WHAT IT WILL DO.

1. It will interest your big boys and girls, and help you to keep them in the Sunday-school.

2. It will instruct them in the Scriptures as understood and interpreted by the Disciples of Christ.

3. It will make your young disciples familiar with the work and principles of the religious body with which they are connected, and "root and ground" them in the faith.

WHAT IT WILL COST.

The Subscription Price is very low—so low that it comes within the reach of all. The following are

ARKANSAS.

Gravette, July 22.—Meeting two weeks old; 20 additions to date. Will continue another week.—A. J. BARNES, pastor; E. E. DAVIDSON, evangelist.

ILLINOIS.

Illioopolis, July 22.—There were three confessions and baptisms at Bethany, Ill., yesterday at my regular appointment; four others took membership by letter a few days ago. I can put some church desiring a good pastor, unmarried, and of excellent Christian character, in touch with the right man by writing me here.—H. B. EASTERLING.

INDIANA.

Decatur, July 29.—Three confessions at my appointment here yesterday.—AUSTIN HUNTER, Chicago University.

Monon, July 23.—During May and June I held a four weeks' meeting in Sigourney, Ia., that has never been reported. The baptistry had not been wet for three years previous to my going there. They want me to return and hold another meeting, as does Keota, 12 miles away. Just closed a grand meeting at Mt. Vernon, Mo. I am here in a tent meeting assisting the Baptist pastor. Tent is full and interest growing. I will be here one week—then to Arney, Ind. My time is all spoken for up to next March.—H. C. PATTERSON.

IOWA.

Albia.—One added by statement and three by letter.—R. H. INGRAM.

Council Bluffs, July 28.—Closed my first year with the church here yesterday and have received and accepted a call for another year. One confession yesterday. Have had about 100 added during the year and have paid off some old debts.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Des Moines, July 22.—Three accessions yesterday, making 298 in nine months.—E. W. BRICKERT, pastor East Side Church of Christ.

Kellogg, July 22.—One was received from the United Brethren by statement at our service yesterday, making three added recently not reported. I have resigned the work here, to take effect Sept. 1st, after which date I shall be ready for work elsewhere.—F. W. COLLINS.

Whitten, July 22.—Yesterday there were two additions at the morning service, one from M. E.'s and one by baptism. Also two by baptism four weeks ago.—EUGENE CURLESS.

KANSAS.

Ft. Scott, July 20.—I expect to start for Lexington, Ohio, Aug. 1, to assist M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in a tent meeting. O. L. Cook is the pastor. I have assisted both of these brethren before in a number of meetings.—V. E. RIDENOUR, singer.

Leavenworth, July 29.—Two additions here yesterday.—S. W. NAY, pastor.

Pleasanton, July 21.—I have been in my new field just one month. We have had three baptisms. There are 8 or 10 brethren that will take membership soon. The drought is not only killing all vegetable life but is very hard on spiritual life. However, we are faring better than the other churches in regard to audiences.—E. L. POSTON.

Sedgwick, July 26.—One confession and baptism here recently.—C. A. BURRIDGE, pastor.

Seneca, July 23.—One accession by letter from the Baptists at Oneida last Lord's day. A valuable addition as he is a man of good standing in community.—F. H. BENTLEY.

KENTUCKY.

Hinkleville, July 27.—Preached here a few days with seven additions. Am en route to Murray, Ky., to visit my mother. Will be in this state some weeks before returning to Texas.—J. W. HOLSAPPLE.

MISSOURI.

Canton, July 29.—I closed a meeting at Hager's Grove, Mo., July 24, with 9 additions; one by letter, one reclaimed and 7 by confession and baptism. Bro. E. H. Williamson assisted, leading song service. His work was very valuable.—C. A. HICKS.

Chillicothe, July 22.—Yesterday was observed here as a day of fasting and prayer. Four services with the thermometer at 114° in the shade came painfully near to being too much for me. At the morning service there were two confessions, making 22 additions, nearly all by baptism, since last report.—FRANK W. ALLEN.

Joplin, July 22.—While visiting my mother and sisters four miles south of Joplin, I preached one week to the miners and their families in a grove bordering a beautiful stream. The order and attention among these rough people was as good as I have ever seen in a city church. There were nine confessions.—SIMPSON ELY, Des Moines, Ia.

Kirkville, July 24.—Three additions at Darby Church last Lord's day.—J. L. HOLLOWELL.

Lebanon, July 15.—Our meeting at Campbell was perhaps not a great success, but we trust much good will result from it. The Bible-school was reorganized with 40 scholars, and they promised to meet every Lord's day to "break bread." There were four added at Lebanon the Sunday before I left for Campbell, one while I was away and one last Sunday, the first Sunday since my return. Praise God we are blessed to-day with a splendid rain. Some say, "God had nothing to do with it; it was the change of the moon." I suppose those Christians are thanking moon.—A. A. BEERY.

Mill Spring, July 24.—After graduating at the School of the Evangelists May 20, I came to southeast Missouri and am employed regularly at Greenville and Mill Spring. Each week I go to the needy fields where the cause is scarcely known. At present am in a meeting at Murl Spring; house overflowing. One made the good confession last night.—J. CLARK WILLIAMS.

St. Louis, July 22.—One added yesterday at Compton Heights.—J. N. CRUTCHER.

Springfield, July 21.—Five additions last week; four by letter and one by confession and baptism; 13 during the month of June; 18 in all since last report.—D. W. MOORE.

West Plains, July 25.—Two additions here at prayer-meeting last evening. Our audiences are remarkably large at the services on each Lord's day. My year's work closes here Sept. 1.—E. W. SEWALL.

NEBRASKA.

Bethany.—Baptized three at Filley and one recently at Lanham.—H. A. LEMON.

Deweese, July 22.—Two confessions at Deweese the 14th; two confessions and one from the U. B.'s at Ox Bow yesterday; good audience and deep interest notwithstanding the warm weather. I expect to close my work at Deweese Oct. 1, that will close my two years. I will be open for engagement as pastor or to hold some meetings; if I locate must have good school privileges.—E. W. YOCUM.

Harvard.—Two additions at our morning service July 14. The builders are at work on our new church edifice. When completed it will be the finest church home in the county.—SAMUEL GREGG, pastor.

North Platte.—Atwood and wife are hard at work in the tent at North Platte. One confession and one by statement. This meeting is preliminary. A building should be put up and the work made permanent.—W. A. BALDWIN.

OHIO.

Lordstown, July 25.—A large audience greeted me on my return from the east. I preached two Sundays at this place in July and there were two added by baptism. I now go west where I expect to locate.—D. WAGNER.

Niles, July 26.—At the usual mid-week service held at the Christian church in this place Mr. Joseph McCormick, who has been preaching for the Primitive Methodists here, came forward when the invitation was given and made the confession and was immersed. He is held in high esteem by his congregation. By birth he is an Englishman. He served a missionary to South Africa for five years and also preached in Scotland for two years. He has been in the United States for nearly two years. Bro. McCormick will continue to preach as soon as he can find a congregation with which to labor. He is a single man about 37 years old, and is particularly adapted to missionary work, the work which he did in South Africa giving him the experience so much needed in this line of work. He is not afraid of work. Any one needing services of such a man will do well to address him in care of the writer, 33 N. Mechanic St. Niles, O. Will state secretaries kindly take notice.—D. R. MOSS.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Hennessey, July 20.—Evangelist Clara Hazelrigg, of Topeka, Kan., just closed a very successful four weeks' meeting. Fifty were added to the church. She is a highly educated lady and proclaims the gospel in simplicity, yet with a forcible language that none can fail to comprehend. Our new pastor, Bro. D. D. Gillispie, will preach his first sermon next Lord's day.—G. E. GILMORE.

TEXAS.

Claude, July 22.—The big annual camp meeting of the Panhandle is almost ended. Bro. J. H. O. Smith is preaching powerful sermons. Singing led by the writer. A fine interest prevails. Four confessions last night. Pastors and churches wishing my services after Aug. 9, address me at Sioux City, Ia.—JAS. HELM, singing evangelist.

Cleveland, July 22.—Bro. Andrews, of Mineral Wells, commenced a meeting here on July 7. We had open-air meetings until our church was ready to use. This is the first church in town and was filled every night. Eight were added to the church, five by baptism, three by letter. Bro. Andrews won the esteem of all whom he met. We expect to dedicate our new church in Aug.—Mrs. FRAZER.

WASHINGTON.

Garfield.—Two additions recently, one confession and baptism and one from the Episcopals.—R. M. MESSICK.

Among Our Advertisers.

Barclay Meador, Advertising Manager.
The new advertisements of schools to be ad in our columns this week are those of rd Seminary, a school for girls at Nash-e, Tenn., Eureka College at Eureka, Ill., Cotner University of Bethany Heights, coln, Neb. The two last named are representative schools of our church and are both sexes.

As was stated in this column in the early summer, the necessity for setting forth the merits of the schools and colleges of our land through a well written advertisement in a journal of character and circulation, is being recognized by the officers of schools quite generally. Our columns have this year been devoted to this end as never before. They have maintained the advertisements of the schools under the control of our own church with scarcely an exception, and those of many others patronized to a greater or less extent by our readers.

Enough information is contained in these advertisements for parents to determine in a general way which school is best adapted to the needs of son or daughter, as the case may be. Particular information may be obtained in regard to any given school by writing to the school direct or to us. The information is at hand when the important question of which school son or daughter should go is to be settled. Our readers will serve the interests of their children well if they make use of the directory of schools we publish from week to week this season.

Elsewhere in this issue appears a full page advertisement of the San Jacinto Oil Company, of which Dr. J. B. Cranfill, editor of the Baptist Standard, Dallas, Tex., is president. The directors of this company are among the most prominent and reliable business men of Texas, and the company they represent is a perfectly legitimate enterprise. It is believed that those of our readers who desire to invest in oil stock could buy better or more reliable oil stock than the stock of the San Jacinto Company. Our recommendation of this company is based on the high standing of the men who compose its board of officers. We hope that every one of our readers will go carefully over the advertisement.

The Normal Instructor, Part VII., is just from the press. It deals with the People of Bible Times under the General Heads of, 1. The Chosen People;
The Contiguous People. Under the first subdivision are considered, 1. The Patriarchs; 2. The Chosen Family; 3. The Chosen Nation; 4. The Peculiar People. Under the second subdivision are described the nations who came in contact with Israel:
The Patriarchal Era; 2. The Davidic Era; 3.
The Era of the Captivity; 4. The Intervening Era;
The Apostolic Era. There is added a Miscellaneous Section in which are considered, 1. Civil and Military Officers; 2. Sects, Parties, Classes and Movements; 3. The Christian Ministry. Normal and private students who have studied the previous parts of the Series should now supply themselves with this work, and continue their studies. Price, 15 cents per copy; $1.50 per dozen.

Wouldn't It Chill You?

(A seasonable bit of poesy.)

Oh, the snow!
The beautiful snow!
It shivers and shakes as the blizzards blow;
It zips in your eyes and it flirts with your ears,
And pelt's on your nose till it fetches the tears;
And isn't it grand when a quart or a peck
Of the beautiful snow takes a scoot down your neck?
Oh, the snow!
The beautiful snow!
Isn't it nice on your fingers, though?
Isn't it fine as the jolliest news
When it drifts all around and gets into your shoes?
And isn't it brazen, and isn't it bold?
And isn't it frigid?
Say,
Isn't it cold?

Oh, the ice!
Magnificent ice!
It stretches its arms o'er the lake in a trice;
It's clear as a jewel and solid as gold—
And isn't it lovely? And isn't it cold?
It clogs up the hath pipes as cool as you please,
And wonderful icicles come with the freeze.
Oh, the ice!
Magnificent ice!
That time you fell down on it—wasn't that nice?
And isn't it great when it forms on the street,
And makes you cut capers to keep on your feet?
And isn't it jolly to have and to hold?
And wouldn't it freeze you?
Say,
Isn't it cold?

The Experiences of a Balloonist.

How a man came to be by profession an aeronaut and what sort of experiences he encountered in the pursuit of that perilous career, a writer tells in a recent number of Ainslee's. After getting into the business as a boy by serving as a balloonist's assistant on one occasion and being accidentally jerked up a few hundred feet into the sky, he started out in earnest:

"I didn't come back home for ten years. I had learned in the meantime to do high-wire walking, and on this return home I was engaged to walk a wire one hundred and fifty feet from the ground at the ends. It was nine hundred feet long, and where it sagged down it was about seventy-two feet from the ground. I had six hundred feet of my own cable and the other three hundred feet were spliced on. For a boy twenty-one years old I was doing pretty well. I had a manager all to myself, six thousand dollars saved up, good clothes, a diamond stud, and a pair of diamond cuff-buttons. I went out on the wire, walked from end to end, did fancy steps, turned somersets, made believe I was falling, and was just about to do another trick when—I waked up in Huron Street hospital, nineteen days later, with both arms broken, my wrist as you see it now, all bulged out as big as a goose-egg, both legs broken—one of them in two places, and notices of my death of two different dates. The splice had parted.

"They say that when you fall from a height you think of everything you have ever done in all your life—that it all comes up before you. It may be so, but in my case I don't remember even falling. I was on the wire one instant, and the next instant, so far as I knew, I was in bed at the hospital, asking what the matter was. And that wasn't the worst of it. When I got out, I found that my manager and my money and my diamonds were all gone. I didn't even have a pair of trousers. Well, I try to learn something every day, and what I learned then was that I could look after my money without a manager. I got an engagement walking the wire as soon as I was able to get out—to tell the truth, a little before I ought to have come out—but my nerve wasn't what it had been, and I've kind of got out of that lately."

National Perils and Hopes.

In an address delivered last week at Monona, Ind., Wilbur F. Crafts, of the Reform Bureau, spoke in part, as follows:

Since the civil war, thirteen dark clouds, some of them cyclonic, have been gathering in our national sky.

The consumption of liquors in this period, measured by gallons, has increased more than twice as fast as the population, and partly as a consequence divorces and murders have increased in like proportion. Three other clouds hang together, peculiar to our own national sky and to this part of our history; namely, the increase of lynchings, labor riots and municipal corruption, all of which are larger evils in our country than in any other. Three other clouds are no less threatening; namely, the increase of Sabbath breaking, apparent to all; of impurity, declared by a recent conference of physicians; and of corrupt and mendacious journalism. Three more of these clouds are: the increased interest in brutal sports, the deepening darkness of the negro problem, and the spread of gambling, especially slot machine gambling for children and epidemic stock gambling for grown ups. The thirteenth cloud, larger than all, and partly inclusive of all, is our national habit of law-breaking.

I am a Christian optimist. Not a lazy optimist; not a wilful optimist, who finds hope by turning his back on the clouds; not a professional optimist, who acts as if retained to defend the present against all comers by explaining away facts; but a Christian optimist, who expects right to win—first, because God reigns; second because the young people of the church are beginning to recognize social ethics as a part of Christian duty and of church work by their citizenship committees; third, because Americans have a way of waking up when evils grow intolerable, and they are very nearly that just now; and fourth, because in the one-third of a century which my memory covers I have seen eight clouds as dark as the thirteen now in the sky scattered by the winds of God and the work of his people.

In my boyhood there were five evils that timid Christians said had "come to stay" namely, dueling, slavery, polygamy, the lottery and the spoils system. They had behind them the same vast power of politics, money and social custom as the clouds we so much dread to-day. But they are all gone or going because God had "come to stay," and a few of his people had staying qualities. Three other reforms are nearly complete that we may count them done; namely, the secret ballot, scientific temperance education, and international peace, which the people have demanded by united voice of churches, colleges, boards of trade and labor unions, and which the Hague official peace congress of nations has embodied in an international supreme court that will have its day when the present unpopular wars are over.

The practical question, for the sake of which all the foregoing has been said, is: How were these eight clouds dispelled? By the same methods we may hope to scatter those that remain. They were dispelled not by individual action; not by separate churches, acting denominationally; but by Christian union.

Little Red Men

An Indian baby's first year is spent strapped up in a tight little cradle, such as you have seen in pictures. When the little feet get out of the cradle they will soon learn to run about. Then the little red man will mount on a cornstalk and take such a ride as you take on a cane or a broom. He would say that his horse is much better because it makes such a dust.

As soon as the little red woman is out of her cradle she begins to carry a doll or a puppy on her back, just as her mamm used to carry her. She makes cunning little wigwams too, and plays "keep house," while her little brother plays at hunting and fishing.

But the little red boys and girls do not play all the time. They learn to help their mothers, and a good Indian mother takes great pains to teach her children to be polite. She teaches them that they must never ask a person his name; they must never pass between an older person and the fire; and they must never, never speak to older people while they are talking.

When a little red man forgets these very good rules, and is rude, what do you suppose his mother says to him? I am sure you can never guess. She says: "Why, you act like a little white child!" Can it be that these little red men can teach us lessons in politeness?

The Survival of Dramas.

The deeper reasons of the law of the survival of dramas may not be laid down here and now, says Henry Austin Clapp of the Atlantic. But a good negative working-day rule of prediction can be furnished. It is simple enough: The play which never passes into literature, the play which, in "the cold permanency of print," cannot endure reading and rereading, has the sure seed of death within it. Out of a hundred contemporary dramas, ninety are lost and unprofitable on a first perusal, and ninety-and-nine are warranted to cause mental nausea at a second. Take Robertin's School, for instance, which was performed to delighted hundreds of thousands in England and America in the early seventies. Reading it deliberately to-day is like absorbing a gallon of weak, warmish du sucre, flavored with the juice of half a lemon and a small pinch of ginger. Contrast with that work, and with works of its quality, the half a hundred tragedies and comedies which remain to us from the creeds of the fifth and fourth centuries before Christ. The newest of these plays are two thousand two hundred years old; they are written in a dead language; they give the atmosphere of a remote land and an alien age and civilization; yet they still receive the quick sympathy and command the reverent admiration of the world.

The Last Adventure of the Sky Pilot.

Ralph Connor has never told anything better than the last adventure of the Sky Pilot which appears in Leslie's Monthly for August. The faithful Bill is hunting for the Pilot in a blinding blizzard, into which the Pilot has ventured on an errand of mercy, only to be utterly lost in the storm. "Listen!" Bill said, holding up his hand, and we stood listening for our lives. But only the hissing boom of the blizzard beat upon our ears. "I swear I heard something just as I—there—" He put up his hand again, and through the storm came the sound of a winging:—"God in the midst of her doth dwell, Nothing shall her remove." Bill dropped on his knees, and taking off his cap he sobbed out: "Thank the good God! That's him. It's the Pilot." Then he sprang to his feet and yelled:—"Hello! You dod-gasted fool-hunter, where in thunder an' lightnin' air you, any-way?" "Hello, Bill! Here you are, old boy." In the bluff we found them; the Pilot, dead with cold and near the last stage of exhaustion, holding up a stranger as they slumped wearily the path they had beaten around the horses to keep themselves from freezing to death. "Oh, Bill," cried the Pilot, making a brave attempt at a smile, "you're a great man." Bill held him at arm's length a moment, and then said solemnly:—"Wall! I've come into contact with some fools, idjits, blanked idjits"—Bill had lost his grip of himself for a moment—"in my life, but such a blanked, conglomerated lot, it hasn't been my pleasure to mix them up to this point in my career." The Pilot by this time was in fits of hysterical laughter.

Mr. Sousa as a Non-Conductor.

Mr. Sousa, the March King, wears his uniform at all times and seasons, says the Saturday Evening Post. He compels his men to do likewise. The fact that he does so leads to experiences that are laughable to him. Mr. Sousa was standing in a large building in Philadelphia waiting for the elevator. A man came up to him rapidly and said: "What is the number of Mr. Blank's office?" "I don't know," said the short man in the blue uniform. "Well, isn't he in this building?" asked the man. "I don't know," answered Mr. Sousa. "Well, don't you know anything?" said the man. "If I knew anyone here I would report you." At which Mr. Sousa shouted with laughter, and the man, catching sight of the genuine elevator boy, saw he had somehow made a mistake. Again, Mr. Sousa was standing in a railway station, on the platform, waiting for a train. A belated traveler ran up to him and shouted: "Has the 9:30 train pulled out?" "I really don't know," answered the man with the blue uniform. "Well, why don't you know?" shouted the irate traveler. "What are you standing here for like a log of wood? Aren't you a conductor?" "Yes," said Mr. Sousa, "I am a conductor." "A nice sort of conductor you are!" exclaimed the traveler. "Well, you see," said Mr. Sousa, "I am not the conductor of a train: I am the conductor of a brass band."

A Golden Rule Horse Advertisement.

The following announcement of a horse for sale is said by the Chicago Record to have appeared in a Minnesota paper. It will probably be admitted that, if the golden rule will work in a horse trade, it can be applied in any branch of business: "We have a good family driving horse for sale, providing you carry insurance. "He is not over particular as to feed. In fact, he prefers our neighbors' haystacks and cornerbirs to our own. "We feed him whenever we can catch him, which is seldom. "He is partly gentle. The other parts are not, and you must govern yourself accordingly. "We will throw in the derrick and telegraph pole combination which we use to hitch him up with. "If you are fond of driving we would advise you to engage a cowboy that owns a fast horse to do your driving and be sure and get on top of the barn before he begins to drive the horse. "For price and coroner's address apply to the owner."

Jones: Does that young man next door to you play the piano by ear or by note?
Smith: By brute force.

Minister: So you saw some boys fishing on Sunday. Did you do anything to discourage them?
Small Boy: Yes, sir, I stole their bait.

to produce a better remedy for Chills and Fever, Ague and all Malarial diseases than Yucatan Chill Tonic (Improved). For the past 15 years many sweet and so-called tasteless Chill Tonics have been forced on the public. The theory of this sort of medication is wrong. The stomach of a sick person rejects anything sweet and when the stomach rebels it is time to change your medicine—any honest doctor will tell you so.

A Chill Tonic made right is what the people want, and the American Pharmacal Co. Faith and Works.

A theological discussion, which issued in a practical illustration of the same, is described in the New York Observer:

Two colored brethren were walking along the road discussing faith and works. Mr. Johnsing was strong on faith and Mr. Thomson pinned his faith to works.

"I jes believe," says Johnsing, "on lying down on the promises and jes trusting in de Lord, until he done brung it to pass."

"I believe in de promises, just same as you do, but laws, I additionally b'lieve dat a man should jes do all he can ter bring dem promises around himself. Suppose my boy Jim says, 'I want a drink.' I say, 'What for you botherin' me about it? Go to de spring and get'—Say, what's dat dust in the road? Dat am Mistah Carter's bull!"

Mr. Johnsing went over one fence and Mr. Thomson over the other fence, leaving the animal a clear road. After walking some distance in the fields they came together, and Mr. Thomson cried out in derision:

"Eh, oh my! Did I see Brother Johnsing lying down on dem promises?—a restin' on dem promises, when de bull came down de road? Eh, eh, oh no!"

"Hol' on dar, hol' on dar, doan you go circumventin' me and a-jeerin' me. I jes want to tell you mighty plain dat when de Lord made dem promises, dar warn't no sich animals aroun'. No, sah! Dat animal was a contingency, sah."

The Pangs of Mathematics.

The Ledger-Monthly tells the story of a big boy in a country school who was clever enough in some studies, but hopelessly deficient in mathematics. The teacher, a man who had little mercy for a stupid pupil, one day lost patience with him entirely. The boy had failed to do a simple sum in subtraction, and the teacher rubbed out the figures on his slate, put down ciphers and six more under. He drew a line, handed the slate back to the dullard, and said, gravely: "There, see if you can subtract that!" The poor boy gazed stolidly at the new sum. It looked queer and hard. He tackled it aloud, making hideous grimaces as he progressed. "Nawthin from nawthin leaves—nawthin Nawthin from nawthin leaves nawthin Nawthin from—nawthin—leaves nawthin Nawthin from nawthin leaves nawthin Nawthin from nawthin leaves—nawthin There he paused, confused, but, rallying all his brain power, he exclaimed: "If I ever goin' to carry, I've got to carry no Nawthin—from—nawthin—leaves one!"

PETE.

XXI.—Germs.

Edgar did not answer the rough words of the camper. Even yet he could hear the offbeats of his runaway horse. He fancied the horse dashing into town with the harness; and the consternation of Dr. Wells when the morning came without the anti-toxine. He could see the agonized faces of Mrs. Morris and Jennie and Madge, the hours rushed by without his return. What would they think? The runaway horse would tell the story. Edgar made a terrible effort, and rising, started down the road. He went several yards before a wail burst from his lips and he fell once more in the midst of the road. At each step he felt as it were a keen knife thrust through his ankle.

"See here, pardner," said Nap, climbing the rail fence and coming to his side, "you don't want to do that again. What are you coming from? Ain't afeerd of me, air you? I ain't no Philistine a-passin' along the other side, I'm a Samaritan, I am, and all my family was. I ain't goin' to hurt you if you did try to run me out of the country. Here! I can pack you, I expect. Let me git ahold of you, and I'll juggle you up to my campfire and make you comf't'ble."

"Leave me alone!" said Edgar savagely. "Don't touch me. I've got to get to town." "Not you," said Nap. "You stays right here with Mr. Nap. You ain't fit to travel, and I belong to the Society of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. I'd soon think of a chicken with his head wrung off, promising to make a tower to Niagara." Nap sat down beside Edgar and lit his pipe. Then he said, "Lemme see this here foot of yours. I'd better git the shoe off afore your ankle is so bulged and enflated that it won't come without cuttin'. That's right, — all; it'll do you good. And it certain does no harm."

"Nap," groaned Edgar, "if you feel a spark of kindly feeling for me, after what has passed, I implore you to leave me and hurry to town, and go to Mrs. Morris' house and tell Dr. Wells that if he comes here at once, it may not be too late." "You wants me to go to town for you?" said Nap. "Yes, yes, instantly!" "And to Mrs. Morris' house?" "Yes, where you'll find Dr. Wells." "And tell him to come here in an instant?" "Yes,—and I'll pay you handsomely for it, Nap."

"Tell him," said Nap, "that it may not be too late?" "Yes, yes. But hurry." "You want me to do all this for you, Mr. Brown?" "If you will, Nap." "But I can't," said Nap. "Oh, no, by no means. What! Me go to Mrs. Morris' after being drove from there like a herd of steers? And my dignity a-goin' to that house from whose very barn I was carried away in a contemptible spring-wagon? No; not Nap. Not him!" Edgar groaned. "Nap, there is anything that could induce you to have pity on me and go, name it! It's a matter of life and death." Nap smoked his pipe thoughtfully, while he eyed the prostrate young man. At last he said, "Well, if you'll agree to bolster up my dignity at this end, I'll let it shift for itself at the other end of the road. You say to me:

'My Lord Duke,' you say, 'Your Grace Sir Nap,' you say, 'I humbly petitions your lordship for to take pity upon a miserable worm at your august and noble feet,' you say,—Will you say that, Mr. Brown?" "Anything, Nap, if you'll go without delay." "Well, I agrees to go. Now you say them words afore you forgits 'em, an me too." So Edgar said, "My Lord Duke, Your Grace Sir Nap, I humbly petitions your lordship for to take pity upon a miserable worm at your august and noble feet!"

"'Whose shoestrings,'" continued Nap, "'air too good for me to touch; I petitions you, Sir Nap, my noble lord, for to do as I begs?'" Edgar repeated these words, "Sir Nap," continued the tramp, "'Sir Nap,' you say, 'I ain't got no organ nor member that is worthy of being sat beside your little toe, Sir Nap, in the point of honor and worthiness,' you say." Edgar repeated abjectly: "Sir Nap, I have no organ—" "No, no," interrupted the tramp. "You say, 'I ain't got no organ'; don't you meddle with the precious words as falls from my lips!"

"Oh, Nap!" groaned Edgar, "while you are playing with me, little Pete is dying!" "Well, what's little Pete to me?" said his lordship. "Who is little Pete, anyhow?" "She is the youngest child of Mrs. Morris. Her real name is Prudence. Nap, you have seen her. If your heart is not made of—"

"What's this here talk?" interrupted Nap, dropping his pipe. "Is it Miss Prudence that's about to die?" "Oh, yes! And I have the medicine here that will save her life,—the only thing that will. But if she doesn't get it very soon it will be too late." "Give it to me!" cried Nap. Edgar hesitated. Nap swore, so we are obliged to skip his first remark. Then he said, "Don't you know I'd do anything and risk anything for that little angel? Gimme that medicine. I swear I'll git it to her safe and on the run. And if you don't fork it over, I'll take it away from you!" Edgar handed him the anti-toxine with trembling words, but Nap cried: "You don't have to preach to me! Miss Prudence is my friend, and I'll save her if these legs can do it. Good-by; you can smoke my pipe while I'm gone." And Nap started toward town at a great rate. Now another person telling this story might have described how Dr. Wells and the Morris family sat through that terrible night, waiting for each hour to strike, and wondering, at last, why Edgar did not return. Another writer might have described their anxiety, their alarm, and at last their despair. But since Nap reached the house in time for the medicine to be used, what would I gain by keeping you waiting, telling what everybody must know? You may be thankful that that other writer did not get hold of this story! I should like to go right ahead and tell you if the medicine made Pete well. But one can't know that yet; we must wait several days and see how she gets along. Nap was met at the door by the doctor, who, of course, did not know he was a tramp. Nap started to tell him about Edgar and his sprained ankle, but Dr. Wells left him standing at the door. There was no time then for sprained ankles! I will tell you about anti-toxine, so you will know just what it is. You take a horse and put him in a pasture all by himself. Then you get some Germs of the diphtheria disease, and you catch this horse and make a little hole in his side, and put those Germs into the sore. Then after awhile that horse gets sick. While he is at his sickest, you get his blood in something, and let it set awhile and then skim off the top, which is the serum, and you put that in a glass tube and melt the end of the tube so it'll come together and not let in any air. There you have your anti-toxine. When Dr. Wells gave Pete the anti-toxine, he broke the tube (you see there isn't any cork), and after making a little hole in Pete's arm, he forced the medicine into her body, where it mingled with her blood. That was better than drinking it, anyway. And then the germs of that unfortunate horse and Pete's germs got to fighting. How it will result, only time can tell.

Looking Christward.*

Text: Looking unto Jesus, the author and perfecter of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God.—Heb. 12:2.

It is well to guard one's own heart, to search it in the light of God's word, all its hidden cavities and slimy recesses, to submit self to the closest scrutiny, and challenge motive and service; but beware how you allow yourself to become altogether introspective. Look aloft! without! above! Look to Christ! The sea captain does not find any stars shining in the hold of his ship.

Faith's Author.

Christ it is who has begun a good work in us. Let us praise him for his wonderful grace. And as the Author of our faith, he is able to increase faith, and he alone is its proper object. The soul's first vision of the Crucified inspired faith: faith in his divinity; faith in his love; faith in his power; faith in his word. And with every subsequent glance Christward that faith has been strengthened and enlarged. Thoughtful men are saying that the only gospel for these times is the gospel of a Person. Speculations, creeds, traditions, theologies, are all powerless to inspire faith in the future; but present Jesus Christ in all the plenitude of his power, and infidelity becomes dumb.

Everywhere men and women are giving their lives for the triumphs of the faith. Churches are multiplying devices. There seems to be no end to organizations, religious and semi-religious. But above all agents and instruments, the great power to propagate the faith is found in him who alone is its Author and Finisher. For the struggling, despairing soul, there is hope in a Christward look; for discouraged toilers there is renewed strength. As flowers turn sunward, lifting their bright faces into the light, so must human hearts turn Christward.

A Saving Look.

"Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God, and there is none else" (Isa. 45:22). It cannot be an idle, indifferent, merely curious look. It must be eager, expectant, devout. For it is a look which brings salvation. Spurgeon tells us that he went into a church feeling guilty before God, "afraid to look upward, lest I should be utterly cut off, and lest his fierce wrath should consume me. The minister rose in his pulpit and read this text. I looked that moment; the grace of faith was vouchsafed to me in the selfsame instant; and now I think I can say with truth:

"E'er since by faith I saw the stream
His flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die."

There is something wondrously simple in this gospel; it is redemption for a look. Some are fond of intricate worship, an esoteric gospel; but there is nothing dark or mysterious about the Bible. Can it be that because of its very simplicity learned and cultivated people do not accept it? Naaman wanted some thaumaturgic display; he was angry when bidden to bathe in the muddy Jordan. But because the simple-minded, the unlettered, and the uncultivated are vastly in the majority it is fortunate indeed that salvation through Christ is to be accomplished so easily.

When to Look.

Look Christward when you are tired of looking to yourself. It does not take long to weary of one's self. Watch your own moods, seek your own gratification, be jealous of your rights, and you will die of ennui. Look Christward when tired of looking manward. God has sent and is still sending great men into the world, through whom he is working wonders; and we look eagerly to them as if the servant were greater than his Lord. Men disappoint us; they fail us just in the moment of crisis and opportunity; but the Master never fails us. Away, then, from self and fellow men and human institutions: look to Christ.

If ever a man becomes satisfied with his own attainments the Christward glance will arouse him and create a desire for growth in grace. If the sinner is unconscious of his sins let him look Christward, and sin becomes black and horrid and damning. If faint-hearted and weary the baffled soldier looks to his Captain, then his arm is nerved and his face illumined with the certain hope of victory. Kirk White's poem on the "Star of Bethlehem" voices the feelings of myriad souls:

"When marshaled on the nightly plain,
The glittering host bestud the sky,
One star alone of all the train,
Can fix the sinner's wandering eye,
Hark, hark! to God the chorus breaks,
From every host, from every gem;
But one alone the Savior speaks:
It is the Star of Bethlehem.

"Once on the raging seas I rode;
The storm was loud, the night was dark;
The ocean yawned, and rudely blowed
The wind that tossed my found'ring bark:
Death-struck, I ceased the tide to stem;
When suddenly a star arose,—
It was the Star of Bethlehem!

"It was my guide, my light, my all;
It bade my dark foreboding cease;
And through the storm and danger's thrall,
It led me to the port of peace.
Now safely moored, my perils o'er,
I'll sing, first in night's diadem,
Forever and forevermore,
The Star—the Star of Bethlehem!"

Are most easily reached via the Pere Marquette Railroad. Through car service from St. Louis and way points via Chicago to Bay View, Petoskey, Charlevoix, Traverse City and Harbor Springs. All of the popular Summer Resorts of Western Michigan are reached by the Pere Marquette. For handsome booklet describing the resorts, write H. F. Moeller, G. P. A., Detroit, Mich.

Quaint, Queer and Quirious
Salt Lake City.

The late Col. John Cockerell in the Cosmopolitan said: "There are three unique cities in America, and one of these is SALT LAKE CITY." It is not only unique in its Temple, Tabernacle and Mormon Church institutions, but quaint in appearance, with its wide streets, immense blocks and martial rows of shade trees. It has, perhaps, more attractions to the square yard than any city in the country, and its climate, while temperate all the year round, is particularly delightful in summer. The Great Salt Lake, with its magnificent saltair resort, where the water is "deader and denser" than that in the Dead Sea in Palestine, is an attraction in itself that people come miles to see. There are many cool mountain and lake resorts near by, also numerous very pretty canyon trips and parks, drives, Hot and Warm Sulphur Springs. Fishing and hunting in every direction. The trip from Denver to Salt Lake City and Ogden via the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY in connection with either the Colorado Midland or Denver & Rio Grande railroads is one of unsurpassed pleasure. Here nature is found in her sternest mood and the whole line is a succession of rugged canyon, waterfalls and picturesque valleys. No European trip can compare with it in grandeur of scenery. During the entire summer there will be low excursion rates to Salt Lake City and contiguous country. It is on the road to the Pacific Coast, if that be your destination. Send four cents postage to Geo. W. Heintz, General Passenger Agent, Rio Grande Western Railway, Salt Lake City, for literature, etc.

God's Promise to Abraham.*

How long after the separation of Abram and Lot occurred the battle of the kings, in which Lot and his family were taken captives, we have no means of determining. It was probably but a short time, at the most a few years. The wealth and power of Abram are shown by his ability to lead a band of armed and trained fighting men, from among his own servants, numbering three hundred and eighteen, to the rescue of the captives of Sodom and the surrounding country. He overtook the kings of the East not far from Damascus. They were probably careless by this time, having met with unbroken success in their raids, and it was easy to surprise them, and create a panic which sent their army fleeing in terror from the foe whom they magnified into a great host. Lot and all his household and possessions were recovered, as well as those of the king of Sodom. But Abram refused to accept a share of the goods offered to him by the king, because he was unwilling to have it said that he was indebted to Sodom for any of his wealth. On his way back he was met by Melchizedek, the "King of Righteousness" and "King of Peace," or of Salem, who was a priest of the Most High God, and to whom Abram paid a tenth of all that he had gotten, as a thank-offering to Jehovah. This strange figure, whose family is not named, and whose birth and death are not recorded, is taken by the Psalmist in the 110th Psalm, and by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, as a type of Christ, whose priesthood is not fleshly, but spiritual, and based not upon his descent from Aaron, but his character and eternal intercession for his people.

The years were passing, and still Abram and Sarai were childless. The promise of God, that they should bring forth a multitude of descendants, and that these should possess the land of Canaan and become a blessing to all the families of the earth, seemed no nearer its fulfillment. Doubtless many questionings arose in their hearts, whether God had indeed meant to literally bestow these gifts upon them. So God granted to Abram a vision in which he said to him, "Fear not, Abram; I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward." This emboldened his aged servant to ask him, "O Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and he that shall be possessor of my house is Eliezer of Damascus?" Shall I leave my possessions to my servant, and is the promise to be fulfilled through him? God assures him that not a servant, but a son, one born out of his loins, shall be his heir. Leading him out under the clear sky of Hebron, God bids him count the stars, if he can, declaring that so numerous shall be his seed. Abram believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness. Such faith is worthy of being thus reckoned. It is only possible to him who has learned to trust supremely in God, and commit his way unto him. Happy the Christian who can share in this faith of Abram, even under the brighter skies of Christian promise. To trust God in the face of delay and disappointment, to believe that all his promises will be fulfilled, and to go forward without halting, when we cannot see the path, this is faith indeed, and will bring its sure reward.

The promise of the land of Canaan as an inheritance is repeated. Abram asks some sign which shall confirm the promise, and God graciously executes a covenant, after the fashion of the times, the memory of which shall in after years prevent all doubts from entering the heart of his aged servant. Abram is directed to prepare a sacrifice, of a

Sunday-School Periodicals

The Sunday-School Publications issued by the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY of St. Louis, are in use in a little over Two Thirds of the Sunday-schools connected with the Christian Church in America, as shown by the statistics in the last Annual Year Book, among which are most of the prosperous and progressive ones. There is no good reason why a large proportion of the other fractional One Third should not also be thus furnished, as we have abundant facilities for supplying all. The list of Publications is complete in every particular, and supply every want. It consists, in part, of the following:

Four Lesson Annuals.

1. The Lesson Commentary for Teachers and Advanced Classes: $1.00 per copy, post-paid; $9.00 per doz. not post-paid.
2. The Lesson Helper for the Senior Classes and Teachers: 35 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $3.60 per doz., not prepaid.
3. The Lesson Mentor for Junior Classes: 25 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.40 per dozen, not prepaid.
4. The Lesson Primer for the Primary Classes: 20 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

Four Lesson Quarterlies.

1. The Bible Student for Teachers and Advanced Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 70 cts.; 25, $1.60; 50, $3.20; 100, $6.00.
2. The Scholar's Quarterly for the Senior Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 40 cents; 25, 90 cents; 50, $1.60; 100, $3.00.
3. The Youth's Quarterly for Junior Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 21-2 cents per copy, per quarter.
4. The Primary Quarterly for Primary Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; five copies or more to one address, 2 cents per copy per quarter.

Three Weeklies.

1. Our Young Folks, a large 16-page Illustrated Weekly, nearly four times as large as the ordinary Sunday-school paper, for Sunday-school Teachers, Advanced Pupils, Christian Endeavorers, and in fact for all Working Members of the Christian Church, with a well-sustained department also for the Home Circle, adapted to the wants of the whole family. Single copy, 75 cents per year; in clubs of 20 or more, 50 cents—12 1-2 cents per quarter.
2. The Sunday-School Evangelist for the Boys and Girls of the Intermediate Department, with bright Pictures, Lessons and Entertaining Stories. In clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 32 cents per year—8 cents per quarter.
3. The Little Ones, for the Little Folks, with Beautiful Colored Pictures in every number. In clubs of not less than 5 copies, 25 cents a copy per year—6 1-4 cents per quarter.

Concerning Samples.

If your school has not been using these publications, samples of all, except the Lesson Annuals, may be had Free for the asking. Your School deserves the Best Supplies Published, especially when they are to be had at the Lowest Rates.

heifer, a she goat, a ram, a turtle-dove and a young pigeon. The animals were divided in twain, and the halves laid on opposite sides of the altar. The birds were not divided, but laid on either side with the divided animals. It was customary for parties entering into a covenant to thus separate the parts of the sacrifice, and then walk between the pieces, as if to call down on themselves the fate of the victims, if the covenant should be violated. Having followed the directions of the Lord, Abram sat down and waited to see what God might have to say further. The birds of prey came, attracted by the smell of the flesh, but Abram kept them from the sacrifice. At sunset Abram fell into a deep sleep, and heard the voice of God, speaking to him out of a dense darkness which seemed to overwhelm his soul. The coming captivity of Israel in Egypt, lasting four hundred years, was foretold and their deep afflictions under that terrible yoke. But their final deliverance in the fourth generation after their entrance, and their final and glorious possession of the land of promise, mitigated the severity of the prophecy of their bondage. This four hundred years may date from the time of this prophecy, rather than from the actual beginning of the sojourn. For the time is elsewhere given as four hundred and thirty years, and yet there were just four generations between the descent into Egypt and the return. Caleb was the fourth from Judah, and Moses the fourth from Levi. Paul says in his letter to the Galatians that the giving of the law was four hundred and thirty years after the time of the covenant with Abram, so that this period doubtless covered the whole time of the sojourning of Abram and his descendants in Canaan and Egypt. The actual time spent in Egypt was, perhaps, something over two hundred years.

The reason for this delay in giving Canaan to the children of Abram is stated: "The iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." That nation was rapidly descending the scale of moral degradation, but while there was hope of their reformation mercy would wait upon them. When the time for hope was past, they should be destroyed. God's mercy ever postpones to the utmost possible the day of his wrath. As for Abram himself, he is promised that he shall live to a good old age, and then be laid away in peace, to sleep with his fathers, a term which certainly implies that the dead are not perished, but are at rest. Thus are there certain foregleams of immortality in the Old Testament, which must have afforded unspeakable comfort to the righteous amid the trials of life.

While these words still echoed in the heart of Abram, in his vision, behold, there passed between the pieces of the sacrifice a smoking furnace, or oven, and a burning torch, and again the voice of God repeated the promise of the land of Canaan as a possession to the seed of Abram, expanding the promise to include all the country from the Euphrates to the river of Egypt, the Wady-el-Arish, a stream which flows between the borders of Philistia and Egypt. This promise was fulfilled in the time of David and Solomon, whose territories reached these limits.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 11.

Enemies and Arms.

Eph. 6:10-18.

Let the peace societies talk as they may against the use of military terms, we shall have need of them. Paul used them and so must we. Although it is not needful to over-multiply them, although it is quite possible to teach our children too many of them, although it is better to supplant "Fee-fo fi-fum, I smell the blood of an Englishman. . . . I must have some," etc., with some sweeter and more beautiful rhyme, although all this is so, nevertheless there is a use for military language, else Paul and other inspired writers would not have employed it.

This world is a fight. There's no disguising the fact that we are in a struggle, a big, hard struggle. We are not to win every fight either. We are to suffer defeat, we are to find the enemy Sin victorious now and again with humiliating heel upon our necks; but we must up and at him again. And the sound of the military terms stirs us to conflict. Let's have armors, swords and military bands, then, to clash in our ears.

If the strenuous life is needed anywhere, to-day, it is needed in religion. We are too lackadaisical, are we not? We take it all so easily. We are in earnest, yes, but not dead earnest, fighting earnest. Up and at him with all his hosts and principalities and powers; "Up, ye sluggards and break the devil's head." Carlyle's language of fighting is not as beautiful and dignified as Paul's, but it's good for us just the same, as harts-horn is sometimes good for us. There are times when we need to be roused to strenuosity.

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus, Ye soldiers of the cross!"

"Onward, Christian soldiers, Marching as to war."

"Fling out the banner,
Let it float seaward and skyward, wide and high."

"Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the lamb?"

These and numerous other stirring songs have shown us the spirit of the "church military" and have added to the vigor of our religious mood time and again. Let them still be sung. It is all the spirit of Paul. He lived in camps, among soldiers, chained to one a good part of his time, possibly, while he was writing this book. He heard the shields clashing and the trumpets braying along the great Roman highways, through most of his life. It was natural he should use these military sounds to illustrate his teaching. We, too, are still surrounded with stirring scenes. Let us use everything for the glory of God.

And now, whom are we to fight? Who is your enemy? Who is mine? Maybe you don't care to tell; but you know very well who he is. He may be your long tongue, your fierce temper, your ungovernable passion of one or another sort, your avarice, your ambition for self. You know who he is very well. Fight him to a standstill. Fight him dead!

And what's the armor against him? You know, perhaps, better than anybody else, what strengthens you most. You are, therefore, foolhardy if you neglect it. Is it prayer? Is it the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God? Is it your faith in the right ordering of all things? Is it your sense of moral righteousness? Whatever strengthens you most it is yours to foster. You know whether your enemy fights with spear-thrust, or winged arrow flight, or shot and shell. Fight him with the proper armor.

Facts About the Great Beaumont Oil Fields

The San Jacinto Oil Company was organized at Beaumont, Texas, on San Jacinto day, 1901. To Texans the words San Jacinto mean victory. The first San Jacinto day was April 21, 1836. On this memorable day Sam Houston and his immortal Texas band defeated Santa Anna and his Mexican myrmidons and thus set the noble Texans free. Since that day the name San Jacinto has been a synonym for honor, chivalry and progress in the annals of the Lone Star State. No Texan can lightly use that glorious name. The incorporators of the San Jacinto Oil Company entered into an agreement with each other and their prospective stockholders to organize and maintain an oil company with the purpose of honestly and speedily developing a great property, and they thus chose the name for their Company that on April 21st, 1836, was made immortal.

THE PURPOSE OF ORGANIZATION.

The purpose of the organization of the San Jacinto Oil Company was to acquire lands, drill oil wells, and thus develop a great and large dividend-paying property. The selling of the stock of the Company was never an end in itself, but simply a means to an end. Stock has been sold only for the purpose of development, and not at all for profit or speculation. The men who incorporated the Company had the laudable desire to better their financial condition, and at the same time to earn large and increasing dividends for their stockholders. They believed, and yet believe, that it is as legitimate to plant a drill in the ground and drill for oil, as to plant a grain of corn in the ground and expect an ear of corn. Both investments are legitimate, and one is as legitimate as the other.

THE OIL FIELD.

The Beaumont oil field was discovered January 22, 1901. The first well that was struck is known as the "Lucas Geyser." When the vein of oil was struck in that well, at a depth of 1,000 feet, the oil gushed out at the rate of 70,000 barrels a day, and was thrown 160 feet high by the immense force that brought the oil to the surface. This geyser gushed at the rate of 70,000 barrels a day for ten days, and formed a lake of oil near there that contained 700,000 barrels of oil.

Barrels, mind you—not gallons!

The lake of oil has been burned up, which seems a great pity; but it was in the way of other improvements and had to succumb to the interests of advancing oilization. Up to the present writing, fifteen additional gushers have been sunk, and are all of about equal producing value to the "Lucas geyser."

You want to know how big the oil field is? We don't know. Nobody knows. It probably extends through a rather large area there. It is said by old citizens, that there is an oil lake in the Gulf of Mexico on the coast about thirty miles southeast of Beaumont. In times of storm, mariners make for the oil lake, and when they reach it, they find an eternal calm, and are safe. Old citizens of Beaumont say that the oil lake has been in existence ever since they knew the country, and it is supposed that the oil lake is from the same source that furnishes the oil for the Beaumont gushers. Then, up some twenty-one miles northwest, is the Sour Lake oil field. It is reported that the oil lake has been tapped there, and it is believed that there is a lake of oil extending from Sour Lake to the Gulf of Mexico, and that the Beaumont oil fields are right in the track of this immense body of oil.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Our Board of Directors are as follows: J. B. Cranfill, editor of The Baptist Standard, is President; R. C. Buckner, of Dallas, founder and manager of the great Buckner Orphans' Home, is the First Vice-President; Hon. R. P. Connor, County Judge of Brown County; Lee Watson, a prominent business man of Brownwood, is Second Vice-President; T. C. Yantis, the cashier of the Brownwood National Bank, and one of the wealthiest and staunchest business men in the west, is Treasurer; while I. J. Rice, a prominent attorney of Beaumont, is Secretary and Attorney for the Company. All of these are Directors, and other Directors are as follows: John C. Bernay, capitalist, Brownwood, Texas; Dr. J. T. Harrington, city physician, Waco; Dr. T. E. Cranfill, manager for Texas of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association; P. B. Jones, President of the Southwestern Co., Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. T. L. Westerfield, dentist, Dallas; J. C. Rodgers, a prominent business man of Brownwood, and Dr. R. L. Spann, physician and surgeon, of Dallas. No company has yet been organized with a stronger Board of Directors, composed of more representative men.

OUR PROPERTY.

The San Jacinto Oil Company owns the following property: A lot 40x118½ feet within about 450 feet of the Star and Crescent 70,000 barrel Gusher on the northwest and about the same distance from one of the 50,000 barrel Guffy Gushers. It is large enough upon which to drill three wells. This we regard as our dead-sure oil proposition. Then we own one acre in the Bullock league, 3,300 yards northwest of the gushers; two acres in the C. Williams league, a little farther in the same direction; ten acres near Sour Lake where they once had an oil refinery, using the product of shallow wells, and where a new oil vein has just been struck; ten acres near Saratoga in Hardin County, which is a short distance north of Sour Lake and where they have oil of the finest quality in a number of shallow wells; ten acres in the northwest portion of the H. Williams survey where Sanger is putting down a well, with good prospects for oil. We own the lease on five acres 2½ miles south of the gushers, and two acres southeast of the said wells. We own ten acres three miles west of Sabine Pass opposite the oil pool in the gulf. There is a flowing artesian well containing a little oil and strong flow of natural gas within half a mile of this tract. It is now being developed. Our company also owns seventy-five acres just south of and adjacent to the known oil fields of Corsicana, and a lease on forty acres in Sabine County upon which there are four natural gas wells.

These properties are of inestimable value. This tract in Gladys City of 40x118½ feet could not be bought for $50,000. This tract is within about 300 feet of the Columbia gusher, 450 feet of the New Orleans Crescent gusher, 600 feet of Guffy No. 2 and about 700 feet of the original Lucas well. This is oil land beyond the shadow of a doubt. No well has yet been sunk on the oil cap without obtaining a limitless supply of oil.

DEVELOPMENT.

The Houston Drilling Company has the contract for sinking our first well, and work is now actively in progress on this well. We hope to finish it by August 20. Oil has now been found on every side of our tract, and it is only a question of a few weeks when we will bring in a gusher. One of the best wells in the field has just been finished within 300 feet of our derrick at a depth of 790 feet. Our plan is to develop our entire property as rapidly as possible and to sink wells wherever we see a favorable prospect of securing oil. As soon as our first well is brought in we will begin the construction of tanks and a pipe line so as to actively engage in marketing our oil.

CAPITAL STOCK.

The capital stock of our Company is $250,000. Consisting of 2,500,000 shares of stock at par value of 10 cents each. We are offering a small amount of this stock at par. The shares are 10 cents each, and no one will be allowed to purchase less than 100 shares. We shall sell only a limited quantity of this stock at any price, as we believe that within 30 days it will be worth at least five times its par value. When the limited amount set aside for sale has been sold, no other stock will be offered at par. It is the candid judgment of the directors of the San Jacinto Oil Company that there can be no investment in oil stock that will be so safe, or that will bring such splendid returns as the purchase of stock of our Company.

DIVIDENDS.

Our Company cannot state definitely when we will begin to pay dividends. If our first oil well is what we hope and believe it will be, it will produce 50,000 barrels of oil a day, or 18 250,000 a year. If we can sell this oil at 50 cents a barrel, which is a very low price, this one well alone will earn in net profits for our stockholders over $9,000,000 a year. Such an outlook dazes the human mind, but this picture of our prospects is not overdrawn.

WHAT WILL WE DO WITH IT?

That is a question that is on all lips, but it is not difficult to answer. The Beaumont oil is the greatest fuel oil that has ever been discovered. It is fifty per cent. illuminating oil, and when refined has no superior on earth as a lubricating oil. We live in a big world, and there is no doubt that the factories, railway companies, steamships, and all other enterprises will soon be using this oil for fuel.

The vast fortune accumulated by Jno. D. Rockefeller answers the question as to the profits in oil as an illuminant. We are not solicitous about the market. This is a question that will speedily take care of itself.

LIABILITY.

Under our Texas law no stockholder in a corporation is liable beyond the face value of his stock. No other liability than this can be incurred by owning stock in a Texas corporation.

NON-ASSESSABLE.

Our stock is full paid and non-assessable. No assessment can be levied against any of our stockholders for any purpose.

OFFICERS.

Our financial officers are bonded and our business is transacted in a business-like way.

INVESTMENT

We urge no one to take our stock. We have given the facts concerning our Company in this prospectus, and in this way an opportunity for an investment is placed before you. All the money sent to this Company for stock will be honestly administered in the interest of the stockholders. Every stockholder owns share and share alike in all the lands and properties of the Company. If we strike an oil well he will own an interest in that according to the value of his stock, and in the same way he will own an interest in each well that is drilled. There will never be an attempt to freeze out the small stockholder, but their every interest will be as sacredly protected as will the interests of the incorporators of the Company.

ORDERS FOR STOCK.

In ordering stock all that is necessary is to remit by bank draft, registered letter or postoffice money order the amount you desire to invest. Certificate of stock, bearing our corporate seal, will reach you by return mail. Send all orders for stock to

OF UNITY IN RELIGION.

MEN ought to take heed of rending God's church by two kinds of controversies: the one is, when the matter of the point controverted is too small and light, not worth the heat and strife about it, kindled only by contradiction, for they be two things, unity and uniformity; the other is, when the matter of the point controverted is great, but it is driven to an over-great subtilty and obscurity, so that it becometh a thing rather ingenious than substantial. A man that is of judgment and understanding shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing; and shall we not think that God above, that knows the heart, doth not discern that frail men, in some of their contradictions, intend the same thing; and accepteth of both? There be also two false peaces, or unities; the one, when the peace is grounded but upon an implicit ignorance, for all colors will agree in the dark: the other, when it is pieced up upon a direct admission of contraries in fundamental points: for truth and falsehood, in such things, are like the iron and clay in the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image; they may cleave, but they will not incorporate.

Current Events.

Missouri's Birthday.

On Saturday of this week, August 10, the state of Missouri will celebrate the eightieth anniversary of its admission to the Union. Though the mention of the Missouri Compromise at once recalls the date 1820, it was not until the following year that the state was formally admitted. The constitution prepared by the territory in preparation for its admission prohibited free negroes from either living in the state or passing through it. When Congress passed the act authorizing the admission of Missouri, it was conditioned upon the repeal of this clause, and President Monroe was authorized to admit the territory to statehood by proclamation as soon as this condition had been complied with. The mails were slow in those days and the people of Missouri for many months supposed that they were enjoying the full privileges of statehood and proceeded to organize their state government accordingly, the first general assembly meeting in St. Louis September 19, 1820. The governor, Alexander McNair, and other state officers, had been elected at the same time with the members of the General Assembly. The total vote for all candidates for governor was considerably less than 10,000, and St. Louis was a thriving town of not quite 5,500 population. It was not until nearly a year after the organization of this first state government that, the constitution having been amended as required, President Monroe issued his proclamation admitting Missouri to the Union on August 10, 1821. The statistics of that time, both of population and of taxable wealth, look like the day of small things, but there were gigantic problems to be dealt with and great men to deal with them. The troubles which were inevitable for a border state at the time when slavery was the burning question, assumed an especially difficult phase in Missouri by reason of the terms of the Compromise under which it was admitted. But the problem was solved here as elsewhere in a manner which eliminated all compromise and left the commonwealth free to take up the burdens and duties of the new era. Missouri is an octogenarian now, but still young and full of vigor, and even her own inhabitants have, as yet, scarcely begun to estimate aright the richness of her resources.

A Magic City.

More wonderful than all the exposition cities, with their imitations of fairyland in stucco and electric lights, is the magic city of Lawton. An exposition city is built in a year or two at an immense outlay of money, to be the toy of the nation for a season. There is in it such magic for us grown-ups as the Noah's ark and Jack-in-the-box contain for the four-year-old, a succession of dazzling effects which leave the onlooker bewildered and puzzled. But it is after all an artificial affair. For a practical, substantial and permanent piece of magic, the birth of the city of Lawton, the metropolis of the newly opened Indian lands, is as wonderful as anything that has ever been witnessed. The drawing for homestead claims was completed on Thursday of last week, but there still remain to those who had been unlucky in the drawing the chance of securing town lots at the auction which begins Tuesday, Aug. 6. Instantly there sprang into being a city of 10,000 souls, lacking, it is true, all the external semblance of a city in buildings and streets, but possessing the more essential characteristics of permanence, reality and serious, practical intent, which the most wonderful of exposition cities must always lack. Probably never before has a city of such size come into being so suddenly, and it will not be a week before it is equipped with banks, stores, a newspaper, a city government and a civic consciousness which commonly takes the form known as local pride. It is a great country that can make a city out of the raw materials over night, and we are more than ever inclined to believe that Oklahoma and Indian Territory together have a strong claim for statehood.

A Prize for Roberts.

Earl Roberts is the only winner of all who have been connected with the British campaign in South Africa. He went out when affairs were at their worst and came back at the happy moment when they were at their best. His already great popularity was much increased by the work which he did there, and the peerage, which he received from Queen Victoria only a few weeks before her death, was generally approved as a well-earned reward. In addition to this, the House of Commons last week voted him a subsidy of £100,000 as an additional remuneration for having whipped the Boers—though it is still costing $1,000,000 a day to keep them whipped. The vote was by no means unanimous, though it was concurred in by the Liberal leader. The Irish members made it a field day for the exploitation of their antipathy toward the leaders of the war and their disapproval of the British imperial idea generally. Mr. Chamberlain has officially announced that the efforts to make terms of peace have ceased, and that stern measures will now be pursued to put down the rebellion. The policy of burning farms has been abandoned, he says, and the method of concentrating the population in camps is being pursued. He maintains that this is a perfectly humane process, as here carried out, and that many of the Boers come into the camps of their own accord. Very likely they do—considering the alternative. The policy, however, has an evil odor among those who remember the horrors of the Spanish reconcentrado methods in Cuba.

The Strike Grows Serious.

The hopes which were entertained last week that a speedy settlement would be obtained between the Amalgamated Association and the Steel Trust have not been realized. On the contrary, the former overtures have been canceled and concessions withdrawn, and it is apparently a matter of only a few days until a general strike order will be issued by the president of the Amalgamated Association. President Shaffer has been authorized to call out all the men in the Amalgamated Association when he deems best, and he stated three or four days ago that he would do it within a week. When the battle comes it will be a finish fight between the Amalgamated Association and the Steel Trust. The latter will no longer be satisfied with anything short of the complete downfall of the organization which has attempted to regulate the dealings of the employers, not only with the members of the union, but with other workmen who are not in the union. As we have said before, this strike seems to us wholly without justification. There may be times when a strike is advantageous to the striker, and beyond question many just demands have been backed up by strikes. But this one seems wholly superfluous. The union has made demands which, in our judgment, the operators were justified in refusing to comply with. On the other hand, the Steel Corporation, in maintaining its right to prevent the organization of the workers at the non-union mills, is making an unjustifiable encroachment upon one of the natural rights of labor. One is naturally inclined to give his sympathy to the weaker party in a case where both are apparently to blame, but it can only be a half-hearted sympathy. The strikers have our heartiest good will, but not our approval.

A Practical Victory.

The whole story of the recent nominating convention in Ohio has not been told when one has recounted the discomfiture of the Bryanites and the repudiation of free silver. Another factor operated in the convention, quietly but effectively. The Antisaloon League in Ohio is an organization which deals in practical politics. At the last session of the Ohio legislature it advocated a local option measure called the Clark bill which was violently opposed by Lieut. Gov. Caldwell. Mr. Caldwell is the accredited representative of the liquor interests in Ohio, and it was not a matter of chance that he failed of renomination at the recent convention. He wanted the nomination, and his friends wanted it for him, but the representatives of the Antisaloon League made it clear that the renomination of the man who had lobbied against their bill would be considered a direct affront by the temperance people of the state, and that they would act accordingly. The party leaders were not willing to take the responsibility of arraying the temperance people against their ticket, so they conceded the point and Caldwell was dropped. So was Senator Seiber, who was another particularly zealous friend of the liquor interests, and in his place was nominated ex-Representative Harris, the author of a local option bill, bearing his name, five years ago. These results are distinctly encouraging. They show what the sentiments and votes of temperance people can do when they realize that they hold the balance of power, even in a state where one party is particularly strong, as in Ohio.

Important to Farmers. The extraordinary period of heat and drought through which the country has passed is apparently at an end for the present. Whether or not those conditions will be renewed during the latter part of the summer, it is, of course, impossible to say, but it is the part of prudence for every farmer whose crops have suffered from the drought to assume that the remainder of the summer will be at least as good as the average and to take steps immediately to make good, as far as possible, what has been lost through the drying up of his corn. Full reports will very likely indicate that the average percentage of loss is not so great as has been supposed. The Secretary of Agriculture is now making a tour of inspection through the corn belt and his assistants are trying to make an accurate estimate of the actual amount of damage. A bulletin has just been issued by Dr. H. J. Waters, Dean of the Missouri Agricultural College, of the State University, giving advice in regard to possible crops which can be successfully raised between now and frost. His advice is to retain high-class stock and sow one or more of the following forage crops: "The cow pea if sown at once on well-prepared land, wheat or oat stubble that is broken, ought to make one or two tons of hay that excels clover in feeding value. This hay can be gotten off the ground in time to sow the land in wheat without another breaking, the surface being disked just ahead of the drill. Cow peas improve the land, just as clover does, and make a splendid preparation for wheat. Sorghum is another drought- and heat-resisting crop, very productive, and will mature before the frost, if sown now on well-prepared land at the rate of about a bushel of seed per acre. Kaffir corn is closely related to sorghum, and may be grown and handled in essentially the same way, with almost as satisfactory results. Millet may be used quite successfully, and will stand considerable drought and much heat. Brown dourba, a plant closely related to sorghum and Kaffir corn, somewhat extensively used in the dry portions of Kansas, may be used if the seed of the others mentioned can not be gotten. It is not considered to be quite so productive and satisfactory, however. On land especially suited to this purpose turnips would be worth sowing for the farmer who expects to winter any considerable number of sheep. Rape has been grown successfully for fall pasture in this state, but the experience with this plant for fall use is somewhat limited, and it is not considered so sure a crop as the hay crops just named. Rape may be sown in the corn where the stand is not good, or where the growth has been seriously retarded by the drought. If sufficient rain comes to start it well, it will make a large amount of excellent pasture for sheep, hogs and cattle, and will continue green until the ground freezes. Rape will do better, however, if sown alone."

Improvement Association. The National League of Improvement Associations is doing some good work in creating public sentiment in favor of the beautifying of cities, towns and homes, and in bringing that sentiment to concrete expression in many cases by actual improvements. It is the purpose of the League to encourage the formation of a local improvement association in every city, town and village and to assist these local associations by establishing an organization among them and promoting interchange of ideas. The value of such work can scarcely be overestimated. In the nature of the case it must be slow if it is to be sound, for the development of public sentiment and the cultivation of a taste for the beautiful must keep pace with the improvements that are made. It is no more possible to put on civic beauty from the outside and without the underlying love of the beautiful in the popular mind, than it is to brighten a cheek with the glow of health by applying pigments to the outside without the bounding red blood within. The League is to be congratulated both upon its tangible results and upon its work as an educator of public opinion, and it deserves support. An annual convention of workers for civic improvement is to be held at Buffalo, Aug. 12-15, under the auspices of the League.

Negro Disfranchisement. It is encouraging to note the unwillingness of the Alabama Constitutional Convention to enact the "grandfather clause" as a means of eliminating the negro vote. It indicates at least a glimpse of the truth that such a measure simply places a premium upon illiteracy among the whites and puts the dominant race at a distinct disadvantage by depriving it of a motive for education which will be more than ever potent among the negroes. If a negro cannot vote unless he can read, there is an extra inducement for learning to read. If a white man can vote whether he can read or not, there is one less inducement. Far-sighted statesmanship ought to see that this places the white race under a handicap which it can ill afford. The Democratic State Convention of Maryland, which is now in session, has given rather clear evidence of its intention to make its new constitutional amendment disfranchise the negroes as completely as possible. The party platform declares that "Peace, good order, personal safety and proper development of our material interests depend upon the control of the commonwealth by its intelligent white residents. We therefore without hesitation proclaim that the success of the Democratic party will mean that, while we shall deal with perfect fairness in securing all benefits of good government and full and free opportunities for education to all classes, such action must be taken as to prevent the control of the state government from passing into the hands of those who have neither the ability nor the interest to manage public affairs wisely and well." The second part of this utterance which makes no reference to race distinction is more in keeping with the Maryland constitution than the first part, which declares specifically for control by the whites. We sympathize thoroughly with those who are anxious that the control of their states should not pass into the hands of ignorant persons, whether black or white. But the introduction of the race distinction into a party platform is at best unnecessary and at worst invidious.

Brevities.

Vice-President Roosevelt has achieved a distinction seldom attained by an occupant of that office. He has been caricatured in the papers of the other party within six months after retiring to the active duties of the vice-presidency. He has recently admitted that he will accept the presidential nomination in 1904 if he has a chance.

The "Progressive Democratic Party," consisting of the Bryan followers who seceded from the recent Ohio Democratic Convention, held a convention of their own in Columbus, O., last week. It was not large enough to justify hiring a hall and met comfortably in the hotel room of one of the delegates. The experts do not consider it an overwhelming factor in the political situation in Ohio.

Senator Chandler has complained that Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans makes uncomplimentary mention of him in his recently published book, "A Sailor's Log." "Fighting Bob" believes what he said and will probably stick to it, and the result may be another naval inquiry. To avoid trouble, why not have a navy composed entirely of deaf mutes, and put every officer under bond not to write for publication?

Kansas is indignant because Secretary Wilson has defined the corn belt as including only Iowa, Illinois and Missouri, thereby shutting out Kansas and Nebraska. In the latter states, he says, "conditions cannot be counted on. The crops in those states are too uncertain." The Kansas corn and wheat crops for the past ten years show up remarkably well for a state classed as "semi-arid and unreliable."

Mr. Kipling's latest poem, "The Lesson," is a sorrow to his friends and must be a source of savage glee to his enemies and rivals. Its sentiment is all right, but its poetical quality is about on the level where Prof. Triggs would place Watts' hymns. He must be trying to qualify to succeed Alfred Austin as poet-laureate. Remembering, however, the unfortunate precipitousness of Mark Twain in his recent anti-missionary outbreak, let us withhold judgment and hope that Mr. Kipling, like Mr. Ament, is being wronged by an error in transmission.

The quarter centennial of Colorado's admission to the Union was celebrated last week by exercises including the unveiling at Colorado Springs of a statue of Zebulun Montgomery Pike, who discovered Pike's Peak. Mr. Pike is entitled to great credit for having found the peak and it is high time for his memory to be suitably rewarded. A less careful man might have lived in the community for years without noticing a little thing like a 15,000-foot mountain. It is well to encourage such keen-eyed scientific observation as evidently characterized the late Mr. Pike, even if it takes a monument to do it.

The Object of Bible Study.

There was probably never so much Bible study in the history of the world as there is to-day. Chief among the factors which have brought about this increased interest in Bible study is that freshly-awakened spirit of inquiry which has invaded every realm of human knowledge. The latter half of the last century has been marked by a supreme desire to know the facts relating to every department of knowledge. This spirit of inquiry, naturally enough and properly enough, invaded the realm of religion and sought to know the real facts about its sacred literatures. This literary and historical investigation of the Bible, which has come to be known as higher criticism, has awakened a deep and wide-spread interest, not so much in the critical problems which the scholars are engaged in solving as in the contents of the Book itself. Beginning with the Bible scholars, the spirit of investigation has worked its way down among the common people until Bible study classes and clubs and institutes are now being conducted in almost every church and community. All this is well, and argues good for the future of the church, which has hitherto kept itself in too great ignorance of the Book it has championed.

It has occurred to us, however, as worth while to inquire what is the supreme purpose in Bible study, and to point out some other motives not so worthy, which may lie behind some of this activity in Bible study. It is possible for persons to be zealous in the study of the Bible and yet miss the very purpose for which the Scriptures were written. The Jews of Christ's day are a good example of that fact. They were exceedingly zealous for their Scriptures, guarded them with even superstitious care, and perused them with great diligence; and yet, as Jesus plainly told them, they missed the very purpose which the Scriptures aimed to accomplish. He said to them: "And ye have not the word abiding in you: for whom He hath sent, Him ye believe not. Ye search the Scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life" (John 5: 38-40).

It is clear from these words of Jesus that the real purpose of the Scriptures—at least their highest purpose—is to testify of the Christ. They are not an end in themselves, as the Jews seemed to believe, but are means to an end, the belief of the soul in Christ. It is not in the power of the Bible or of any other book to give eternal life to any soul. It is the glory of the Scriptures that they lead the soul who rightly reads them to Jesus Christ, in whom alone is life eternal.

It is plain, too, from what Jesus said to the Jews, that people may be exceedingly zealous for the Bible and hold very extreme and rigid views about its inspiration and sacredness, and yet be void of the spirit of Him concerning whom they testify, without which all Scripture knowledge and all dogmas are vain. The true meaning of the passage above quoted is, as given, "You search the Scriptures" instead of "Search the Scriptures," as in the Common Version. It is the statement of a fact, and not the giving of a command. They searched the Scriptures, but not with the right motive. The passage may be rightly used to encourage study of the Scriptures, not because it is a command, but because of the fact stated, that these Scriptures testify of Christ. That makes them worthy of study and indicates, as well, the purpose of studying them.

There is a critical study of the sacred writings that has for its object the solution of certain literary and historical problems relating to authorship, date, or whether of single or composite structure. This is not to be condemned, but it is not the highest object of Bible study. It has its sole justification in the fact that it enables us better to understand the meaning and spirit of these Scriptures. To the extent that it contributes to this end it is profitable. It is not an end in itself. So far as the motive behind this critical investigation may be hostility to the sacred writings, or the desire to overthrow confidence in them, or to sustain some favorite critical theory through pride of opinion, it is of course wholly wrong and to be condemned. No doubt some biblical criticism has this unworthy motive. It would be gross injustice, however, to include in this class all the scholarly researches of eminent Bible scholars, men of faith, whose sole aim has been to ascertain all the truth accessible concerning these sacred books. Only a limited number are capable of conducting investigations likely to solve these recondite problems, some of which may never be solved. They have a certain value, but they are by no means vital to faith or to an intelligent understanding of the Scriptures. All of us may study the Bible for the higher purpose.

Scarcely less to be condemned is the habit, altogether too prevalent in the past and by no means extinct yet, of searching the Scriptures in order to find proof of doctrines and theories which we have inherited or agreed to accept as true. It is this that, in the past, has built up our denominational walls. What religious body can plead "not guilty" to the charge of having given special search for, and special emphasis upon, such texts as seem to harmonize with its pet doctrines, while it has neglected no less important passages which could not be used so effectively in its denominational propaganda? How familiar certain sects are with a certain line of passages which they quote glibly, while they are perfectly oblivious of other passages, standing just beside their favorite texts, which do not lend themselves to their peculiar views! Sometimes a single passage is divided up into several parts by as many religious parties. A good illustration is Acts 2:38, 39: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." One class of religious people use this passage largely for the phrase, for the remission of sins, in connection with the commands which go before. Another class lays the emphasis on the promise, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Another still cites it for the words, "for the promise is unto you and your children"; and finally, a fourth class passes rapidly and lightly over all the rest to bear down heavily on the words, "as many as the Lord our God shall call." How few, alas, are ready to take the whole passage, in its obvious meaning—baptism, for the remission of sins, gift of the Holy Spirit, universality of the promise, conditioned by the divine call!

Are we not authorized from these reflections in concluding that the highest purpose of studying the Scriptures is to learn more of Christ, that we may become partakers of His life through faith, and enter into His service more effectively in helping to save the world? It is well to keep this purpose in mind in all our Bible classes and institute work, lest the people be side-tracked by minor and purely subsidiary issues. The Holy Scriptures are able to make us "wise unto salvation" only "through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Let it never be forgotten that no Bible study ends in salvation which does not lead to faith in Jesus Christ. He is the sum and substance of the Scriptures. They show us Christ, and Christ shows us the Father. They testify of Christ, but Christ alone can give us eternal life. He, not they, is the object of our faith. They are the means; He is the end.

Civic Beauty.

It is pleasing to note that there is a well defined movement in many parts of this country toward the development of higher ideals of civic beauty. The ultimate aim of the Improvement Associations—which have been busy in many cities and towns replacing weeds with flowers and making their respective localities fit dwelling places for beauty-loving men—must always be to develop popular ideals in such a way that civic beauty will be the natural result. The common ideals of a community will inevitably find embodiment in its external appearance. Just as the enforcement of law depends upon the support of a public sentiment for law and order, so the making of a beautiful city must depend upon a general sense of beauty as well developed as the Anglo-Saxon respect for law. Without this, a city may be beautified by the addition of ornaments covering up its essential ugliness, but it can never be really beautiful.

The pursuit of the beautiful, like the pursuit of learning, has always been handicapped by one of two errors, and sometimes by both. Seekers after learning have always been tempted into one of two byways, leading off from the true highway of education toward false and fatuous ideals—one toward the monkish view which shuts up learning in the cloister, the other toward commercialism which makes of education a mere means of money-getting. The monkish view, cherishing learning for its own sake and guarding it from the eyes of the common people as if there were profanation in their touch, was the peculiar error of the middle ages. There are remnants of it yet, which we sometimes mis-name "the scientific spirit" and consider ultra-modern—though the true scientific spirit is something far different from this. On the other hand, the commercial attitude toward education, which asks only whether a liberal education will "pay," whether the college man has a larger chance of earning a handsome salary than a non-college man, is pre-eminently the danger of our own day. But no education can be truly "liberal" which is conducted with no other object in view than immediate returns in the pay envelope or the bank account. One of the gravest educational problems of our time is so to state the motive of education, and so to construct the curriculum, as to avoid these opposite extremes of sordid commercialism and monkish withdrawal from the practical affairs of life.

The two dangers which are present wherever the beautiful is cultivated are analogous to these perversions of education. The most obvious is the withdrawal of beauty from the haunts of men into a cloistered seclusion, where it is worshiped by a select clique under the motto, "Art for art's sake," while the rest of the world, sitting in outer darkness unilluminated by the radiance of this æsthetic cult, is looked down upon as barbarian or Philistine. On the other hand, just as learning, when brought from the cloister, may be degraded into the slave of an avaricious master seeking only for gain, so beauty may be not only brought forth into the market-place—so far so good—but there debased by a bondage to purely commercial motives and ideals. Over against the idle vaporings about art for art's sake and the moral irresponsibility of art, set the factory-made product which has no motive for its maker but the dollar which it brings, and no value to its purchaser save its representation of a certain conventional type of respectability—and the disgust of any sane lover of the beautiful in art is complete. There is no art that is of value for its own sake except the art of living, to which all other arts are tributary. To separate art from life leaves life devoid of beauty and art bereft of vitality.

There is an immense amount of money spent in this country annually upon works of art, and this fact is cited in disproof of the charge that we are a nation altogether given over to commercialism. Yet is it not strange that one should make this very defense in terms of the money which our art costs? Nevertheless, it is true that our sense of beauty is not wholly commercialized. Our criticism is that, when it escapes this fate, it does so for the most part only by shutting itself up in museums. We live in the midst of well-paying but hideous bill-boards, profitable but preposterous sky-scrapers and in an atmosphere murky with the smoke of factories which earn excellent dividends. And they point us to eight million dollars worth of treasures in the Metropolitan Art Gallery as proof that we are lovers of beauty! It is as if one should point to a score of church steeples under which respectable congregations gather weekly, as proof of the moral tone of a city, though the streets and the police courts might show a veritable Sodom.

One of the prime needs of American life, we believe, is for the development of a sense of the beautiful which will pervade all our activities and enterprises and will not be content to dwell in the midst of ugliness, broken only by an occasional trip to a museum. The æsthetic side of man's nature, like the religious, was not meant to be exercised one hour a week and to be ignored at other times. Both represent elements which must enter into all life. A more wholesome emphasis upon the beautiful in our civic arrangements and in the environments of village and country life, would be an incentive to righteousness and an aid to genuine civilization. We need to develop a Christianized form of the old Greek ideal of life—the Beautiful and Good.

Notes and Comments.

The Liquor Dealer has this plaintive note of injured innocence: "All of the trades and professions combined have not one half the opposition nor are they half as much persecuted as the liquor trade. Why is this the case? Simply because those engaged in the business do not stand up for their rights." We have observed, that what it stands up for is usually very far from its rights. It is generally trying to stand us up to get our rights—away from us. But we are glad that it notices the opposition. Perhaps some day it will learn why.

It is said that, when the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was first introduced into Havana, the fashionable set took to it eagerly as a new and delightful fad, and got up a bull fight to raise money for the work. The application of this story will be sufficiently obvious to any one who has thought upon the absurdity of employing catch-penny schemes of doubtful character to raise money for the church. There may be a distinction between social follies and mortal sins, but even the former are impotent allies for advancing the Kingdom of God, and the church weakens its force by using them.

A Hardshell Baptist, whom a Missionary Baptist was trying to convert from the error of his anti-missionary ways, asked how many Missionary Baptists there were in the south. The answer was, "1,500,000." "And how much do they give to missions in a year?" "$150,000." "Well," said the Hardshell Baptist, "a little matter of ten cents a head seems scarcely worth disputing about." Even if we reach the $200,000 mark for foreign missions this year, it will be considerably less than twenty cents a head, which paltry sum is all that separates us from those violently anti-missionary churches which we criticize so freely.

Prof. Petrie, who has been exhibiting some newly-discovered relics which show the status of Egyptian civilization about 6000 years B. C., finds himself confronted by a formidable critic in the person of one Dimpleby, who feels that the situation calls upon him to "defend the Bible." The Bible says that "before Adam there was not a man to till the ground," and since, by hypothesis, Adam was created "close on 4000 years B. C.," it must follow, says Dimpleby, that any assertion that there was civilization in Egypt or elsewhere prior to that date must be anti-biblical. Since the Bible has been surviving such defenses of its friends for many generations, there is no doubt but that it can endure the much less dangerous attacks of its enemies.

Rev. J. Cumming Smith, of Indianapolis, recently said in a sermon that the Universalist denomination no longer has a right to a separate existence, because it is a protest against an idea of God which is no longer an item of evangelical belief. Rev. Marion Crosley, of the same city, answered Dr. Smith's argument by reverting to the "glorious history and marvelous achievements" of the denomination and decrying the suggestion that, when the victory has been won, it should go over to the enemy's camp. How many more denominations are there, we wonder, which continue to exist simply because of pride in their past achievements and because they have gotten into the habit of considering the rest of the Christian world as "the enemy's camp." Universalism may speak for itself, but as for us we have a grimmer enemy to contend with than even moribund Calvinism.

A contemporary, in protesting against the tyranny of the organist and the helplessness of most preachers to manage the music in their own churches, says: "The preacher is usually the best judge of the music, for he has made it a study." Would that he were the best judge, and that he had made it a study! Since music is recognized as a part of our public worship, why should we not expect of the preachers a reasonable degree of proficiency in this subject? It would save us from very much bad music and perhaps from some of the friction which sometimes occurs in cases where the preacher knows so little about music that he is forced to give the sole direction of it to some one else. The preacher need not be a professional musician or an adept in the making of music, but he ought to be a competent judge of musical effects.

It has been generally remarked that among the characteristics of the late Prof. John Fiske the most notable was his gift of lucidity. So clearly could he state a proposition, whether in history or in philosophy, that the wayfaring man, though a fool, could understand it at the first reading. This very virtue has been criticised as a vice by those who consider that to popularize truth is to degrade it. But this view is taken only by those who would make of every department of human knowledge a mere technique and would lock it with monkish zeal away from all who are not initiated into the technicalities of the science. Prof. Fiske was one of those who hold that if truth is sacred it cannot be made profane by being widely known. He was a true representative of democracy in learning.

Prof. Triggs, of the University of Chicago, has recently been the object of much criticism because he stated to one of his classes in English literature that it is scarcely possible for good poetry to be religious, and that the hymns of the church are for the most part doggerel on a lower literary level than the dime novel. We have been in the habit of considering Milton's Paradise Lost fairly good poetry and it is certainly religious, but perhaps Prof. Triggs thinks differently. Tennyson's In Memoriam would be considered a religious poem by most readers, and it would be hard to deny that Browning's Saul comes in the same class. And yet, though the utterance about religious poetry seems clearly as untrue as it is sensational, we are not inclined to stone Prof. Triggs for his remark about the hymns. If he had said that some hymns or many hymns, instead of most hymns, are without value as literature, he would not have been far wrong. Perhaps it would not be a bad idea to expect our preachers to know something of poetry as well as something of music, if we are going to continue to use religious poetry in our public worship.

But the man who indiscriminately denounces all hymns as doggerel, either does not know the hymns of the church (which is probable), or has no sane view of what constitutes poetry, or is so dogmatically anti-orthodox that his judgment about any matter touching religion is violently warped. As a matter of fact, Prof. Triggs never has been a person to take too seriously. He likes to say bright things, and truth is always a minor consideration to one whose master-passion is the desire to scintillate. With this morbid craving after the sensational, it is little wonder that he gives his preference to the blood-and-thunder novelette rather than the hymns of Watts and Wesley. But is this a fact about the hymns, or a fact about Prof. Triggs?

A contemporary is trying to lure us into a discussion of evolution, saying that since we have espoused the doctrine we must defend it. We give notice here that we are not to be lured. We have not espoused the doctrine of evolution, as all of our intelligent readers ought to know perfectly well. It is a scientific question, and the evidence is not all in yet. We do not profess to know a vast amount about science—being in that respect about on a par with our dogmatically anti-evolutionary contemporary—and we shall wait until the scientists have rendered a somewhat more unanimous verdict either for or against. If it were a religious question we would not care a straw about the verdict of the scientists, but since it is a scientific question, we will have modesty enough to defer to those who know more than we do. As to the relation of the first chapter of Genesis to the matter, we agree with Paul that "every Scripture inspired of God is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely to all good works." Paul seems to have forgotten to say anything about its being profitable for cosmogony, geology or anthropology.

Editor's Easy Chair

Macatawa Musings.

The old lake is vociferous in its praise this morning, as if it were celebrating some notable victory. Is it the recent rain over the corn belt that calls forth this loud hosanna? The white-crested waves that chase each other shoreward clap their hands on the resounding beach and lift their voices in a pæon of praise to the great Creator. In this respect the earth is unlike the heavens which declare the glory of God, of which it is said, "There is no speech nor language; their voice cannot be heard." In solemn stillness the stars move on in their appointed orbits,

"Forever singing as they shine,
The Hand that made us is divine."

But theirs is a song of silence, the seen but unheard harmony of shining worlds, the music of the spheres. But comes this not of our imperfect sense of hearing? If our ears were keen enough we might hear the melody of revolving spheres, and listen, enraptured, to the chorus of the morning stars. And if our eyes were only strong enough what revelations of beauty and of glory would burst upon our vision as we turned them upward to search the mysteries of the stellar universe! But "we walk by faith, not by sight."

What a night last night was! The full moon rode in unclouded splendor through the heavens. The great lake which all day had presented a scene of turbulence under stress of a stiff breeze, quieted as evening came on, and under the caresses of the moon became as gentle and as sentimental as a lover basking in the smiles of his adored. If you have never seen Lake Michigan under the spell of a full moon, nor gazed upon the silvery sheen of light which transfigures it into a fairy sea, as we looked upon it last night from the lofty perch of Edgewood-on-the-lake, it would be impossible for us to convey to you any adequate idea of the beauty of the scene. O lake, thou that roarest all day under the masculine power of the sun, and at night dost sing a soft, sentimental ditty under the milder radiance of her queenship, the moon, how much human nature thou seemest to have after all! And so, to him who will heed the lesson, "day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." Of all the new books we have read during the summer we have found none so interesting as the two old volumes—Nature and the Bible.

The religious services at the Park this year are fully up to the standard of previous years in character, and are, perhaps, more largely attended than ever. Prof. Bergen, of Hope College, Holland, preached at the auditorium in the afternoon, the writer filling his pulpit at Hope church, Holland, in the evening. At the beach service Rev. Mr. McNutt, a Presbyterian minister who has been for two years serving as a laboring man in the ranks of lowliest toilers, in order to understand their condition and needs, gave some of his experiences not only as a day laborer, but as a tramp out of money and hunting for a job. The cold, merciless treatment he received at the hands of professed Christians was such as to impress on his mind one of the reasons why there exists a gulf between the church and many laboring men. We are sure there is great improvement in this regard, and that the church, composed largely of the world's toilers, feels a closer bond of sympathy with that class of workers than it formerly did. We have no doubt, however, there is much room for growth yet before the church occupies the same point of view that Jesus did toward the poor but honest toilers in every department of the world's work.

Among the arrivals at the Park since our last are J. J. Haley and wife, of Kentucky; George T. Murphy, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, St. Louis; W. R. Jinnett, of Illinois, who was here a few days and departed; George Bellamy and wife, of the Social Settlement, Cleveland, and Claude E. Hill, of Missouri, who is taking the summer course at the University of Chicago, and whose family will remain here, he spending Saturday and Sunday with them each week. W. D. Cree, secretary Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis, was a transient guest at Edgewood-on-the-lake, and entered heartily for a day into the enjoyment of life at Macatawa Park. Bro. Hill has recently been to Minneapolis and came away enthusiastic for the national convention in October. He is going to try to work up a large delegation from western Missouri. He says he never before saw such enterprise and activity displayed by any local committee as the committee at Minneapolis is manifesting. This calls for a corresponding activity on the part of our preachers and other church officials in planning for a general representation. We earnestly urge, for the sake of our cause in the great northwest, that no pains be spared to make it a thoroughly representative convention. It is not too early to plan for it now. Let us make it a shining light whose rays will penetrate remote regions and give the weary workers new hope and inspiration.

In a walk the other day through the wild, rugged and uninhabited part of these grounds, in company with a friend, we came across an artist in one of the beautiful wooded glens who, with his brush, had just transferred to canvas a quiet scene of rural beauty which will delight the eye of many a lover of the beautiful who will never see the original. We had the pleasure of comparing the picture with the real thing and finding it wonderfully true to nature. We remember once while tramping through Wales running across the artists here and there who were copying some of its charming scenery. But Wales has no more beautiful landscapes than we have in our own country. What a wonderful art it is to transfer a bit of lovely landscape to canvas and hang it up in one's room or in an art gallery to educate the eye, to delight the soul, and to bring one into communion with nature again, when it is not possible to go forth into its scenes and hold fellowship with its visible forms! Only a few, however, can do that, but all lovers of nature may so photograph its scenes on their minds, whether first hand or through great works of art, as to beautify their own souls. Such is the ministry of nature and of art which, in its highest form, is a reproduction of nature.

A lawyer, writing us a few days ago about this place, said his wife had been reading the "Macatawa Musings" in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "written doubtless by some one full of fancy," and had contracted a desire to visit the place! Thus our matter-of-fact, unvarnished statements, falling so far below the reality, are attributed by this limb of the law to an unbridled fancy! We have never made a serious effort to describe this place in full, and have never written a line in these Musings with a view of inducing anybody to come here. This department of the paper has reflected more or less faithfully the subjective feelings aroused by our local environment, and in that way we must plead guilty of having brought a good many people to Macatawa Park. If any one of these has ever been disappointed with the natural charms of the place when he has arrived on the scene, he has carefully dissimulated his real feeling. We have no doubt but that when our lawyer friend reaches here and takes in the situation he will forget his legal lore, for the time being, and reproach the writer of "Macatawa Musings" for not conveying a more faithful picture of the scene of beauty which so bewilders him.

Dregs of The War

By BURRIS A. JENKINS.

II.

In the next week the grove of oaks and black walnuts a mile from Nelson Payne's home was full of people. Hundreds were moving about, taking their bounteous luncheons from huge baskets, strolling and eating, between the morning and the afternoon preaching, that third day of the meeting. Booths supplied food and country delicacies to those who had come unprovided. But few indeed were those compelled to buy, for hospitality was one of the traits brought from Kentucky by most of these Missourians; many, however, were those who did buy for the pleasure of the spending. A year had now flown since the war, and money began to appear again.

It was a long-heralded occasion. Twelve leading preachers of the Christian Church were present, and it was felt that such a group of giants could assault well-nigh any Gibraltar of "skepticism or sectarianism." Already forty had made confession of their faith, and it was confidently expected that by the end of the meeting, when the baptizing in the Missouri should take place, the number would mount to hundreds. There was a tense interest—not an effervescent enthusiasm, but a deep, quiet, inquiring seriousness. Little groups could be seen here and there among the trees, thumbing small Testaments and arguing solemnly; an occasional solitary figure moved among the paw-paws or the willows meditating who knows what of the issues of life now or life to come; pairs of young folks on whose horizon some new hope was dawning strayed alone; while in the great "arbor" or tabernacle, built of boughs thickly enough thatched to fend off heavy rains and large enough to shelter hundreds and even thousands, big families sat about their open baskets and spoke the praises of the "great guns" they had lately heard.

Who would have thought that this happy, prosperous people was still bleeding with the wounds of war? Wonderful must have been their recuperative power to turn thus to the affairs of church within a year after civil strife! Perhaps this very religious intensity was a direct result of the fiery furnace. Bitter had been the trial of fire; something salutary, let us hope, there may have been in it.

As, upon that happy occasion, the battery of preachers stood about the platform, the sheriff of the county approached and said, "You must come with me, sir," at the same time laying hand upon the shoulder of "Raccoon" John Smith, of Kentucky, the biggest gun of them all.

"Why?" asked the old minister, his hands shaking with the palsy he had known for years, but the same old merry twinkle in his eye.

"For preaching the gospel without taking the oath of allegiance," said the sheriff, tugging in fierce fashion at his long, stringy, straw-colored, sunburned moustache. "Better take the oath without any fuss; you'll have to, anyhow!"

"You can collar a coon, brother; but you can't turn him into a parrot! I will not take it," said the old man mildly, and smiled.

"Come on to jail, then! I'm a busy man these days. No time to waste!"

"Shame, Lafe Hanson," cried a chorus of neighbors.

"John Smith not a good citizen!"

"He needs no oath to make him an American!"

"Shame, shame!"

The sheriff grew all the fiercer.

"Hold your tongues!" he roared, and brandished a revolver in either hand. "You know who I am? I'm Cap'n Lafe Hanson—cap'n, if you please—cap'n in the—th Missouri regulars, and I can handle a whole regiment sech as you!"

The crowd thickened round the pulpit, an angry flush burned on certain swarthy cheeks, rash young men slipped furtive hands into their pockets and pressed into the inner circle round the officer. He backed up against a great walnut that supported the roof of boughs at the corner of the speakers' stand, and turned his revolvers on the crowd. There were explosions in the air. A single flash of a foolish word might have set them off.

Raccoon John Smith, of Kentucky, was just the man for such an emergency. He feebly climbed upon a bench and holding out his shaking hands quieted the gathering storm, then smiled and said, "Brethren, don't be disturbed. I will go with this lawfully-constituted officer. He speaks authoritatively and I respect his words in proportion to their weight. But I shall return soon. A higher Authority will protect me. Though this honorable officer wields that same powerful weapon with which Samson slew a thousand Philistines, I shall—" a roar of laughter from the crowd greeted this jest, then new but now time-honored, and dissolved all danger of bloodshed, while the sheriff, deaf to the allusion, looked down at his new Colt's revolvers and smiled at the old man's ignorance of modern gunnery.

The officer was making his way through the lines of spectators, triumphantly leading his prisoner, when a portly man, with a voice of thunder, ascended the platform and rapped the surging, laughing crowd into silence. Then he said:

"Sheriff Hanson, bring the prisoner here."

"Who is that?" asked one.

"Why he's Judge Stone, don't you know him?" said another.

"To be sure," said a third. "Circuit judge. Member of the Methodist Church, but a fine man for all that. He'll be governor yet, I bet."

"This case comes in my jurisdiction, sheriff," said the judge, a sly smile playing over his spacious countenance, which he concealed by mopping his high bald forehead; "and as the prosecuting attorney is here we'll just try it at once. Will some gentleman volunteer to defend the prisoner?"

Counsel was instantly secured. Then, when the statute had been quoted that every man who, in Missouri, preached the gospel, must take the oath of allegiance to the Federal government, and the prosecutor had arisen to state the case, the judge interrupted:

"If you please, Mr. Prosecutor, allow me to ask the prisoner a question or two."

"Certainly, your honor."

"Your name, sir, is—"

"John Smith."

"Ah! No other name?"

"Raccoon."

"Ah! Your home?"

Before the prisoner could answer, some enthusiastic Smithian shouted:

"His home is everywhere!"

Instantly the cry was taken up by hundreds of throats, "Everywhere! Everywhere!" and laughter rose in waves, while tears of love for the old pioneer started to the eyes of many.

The prisoner rose and bowed his thanks, then answered, "Kentucky, your honor."

"Are you a member of the Methodist Church?"

"No, your honor."

"The Baptist Church?"

"No, your honor."

"The Presbyterian Church?"

"No, your honor."

The crowd was breathless with interest—the judge's face assumed a pseudo-stormy aspect.

"Well, in the name of religion, what church do you belong to?"

"The Christian Church, your honor."

"Mr. Prosecutor, the prisoner is accused of preaching the gospel without taking the oath of allegiance, I believe?"

"Yes, your honor."

"Well, I dismiss the case; for all Missouri will agree that no Campbellite ever preaches the gospel."

The crowd was in great good humor with the judge, whether the sheriff was or not, and in great good humor with Raccoon John Smith. The sheriff stormed out of the grove and rode toward the county seat, shaking his fist at the crowd and saying:

"I've no time for you Campbellites. There's work for me to do."

"Yes," muttered a tall young farmer, with deep chest and sloping shoulders, "there'll be work for you to do to-night." And leaping into the saddle Scott thrust his feet through the wide wood stirrups until the high boot-heels supported his weight, and dashed away on the opposite road with jingling spurs and bit.

John Smith preached like a Nestor that night, for though his hands were palsied, and though he took a negro servant in all his travels to feed him at the table, his tongue and his mind were still perfectly his own and his speech dripped the honey it was noted for. Sparkling humor was his, moving pathos, faultless language, for, pioneer though he was, his tools had been ground. At the close of his sermon, while his audience were weeping, and he, though deeply moved, stood clear-eyed and controlled, looking into their faces, he offered an invitation to any to come forward during the singing of a hymn and make open confession of their faith in Christ.

Down the narrow aisles they moved, over the backless benches of pine they stepped—the penitents. Some were melted to tears, some were with difficulty repressing emotion, some were calm and self-contained. But the remarkable thing was that in this multitude where galvanism was glancing from nerve to nerve, and the tension must have been great, there was no ecstasy of emotion, no falling to the ground, no frothing at the mouth that had characterized so many such revivals in the past. Perhaps it was the sort of message that was preached—calm, argumentative, appealing to the reason, though not untouched with moderate emotion.

During the singing of the hymn of invitation, while a full score came forward to declare their faith, and while the whole audience felt the spell, the young ex-Confederate who had blocked out work for the sheriff once more galloped up to the grove—this time a trifle pale, covered with dust—and, throwing himself from his horse, scarcely observed, mingled with the youth in the rear seats.

Soon another horseman, then another and another, all white with dust and sweaty, dropped bridle rein over the long hitching-rack and lost themselves in the throng. A number of the farmers in the audience noted these accessions, and moving out to the edges of the arbor, gathered in knots about the grove.

The preacher observed this break in the ranks with some astonishment and, having welcomed the score of penitents, having made a second exhortation, and given out a second invitation hymn, he saw that the spell was broken and that no more now would come.

He, therefore, asked the single question of one after another of the twenty or more:

"Do you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God?"

He received the unfaltering answer:

"I do."

Then he addressed a few words of congratulation and fatherly counsel to each.

At this juncture the rush and clatter of horses' gallop broke once more on the ears of the still congregation. They saw the sheriff, with half a dozen deputies, swing out of a cloud of dust and ride up upon the turf.

The benediction was immediately pronounced and the crowd became chaos. The sheriff moved about with his fierce look and peered into stolid or hostile faces. Low murmurs among the farmers, whispered consultations, broken sentences, were heard by the keen ears of the old preacher:

"The Mail and Express—"

"Blue Glen Cut."

"A rich haul!"

"Central Pacific road?"

"Anybody hurt?"

"No, it wasn't the engineer."

The esoteric circle of the ex-Confederate farmers knew that the sheriff understood full well who the train robbers were. But they knew also that his presence was largely in the nature of a "bluff," that he did not dare approach a man of the real gang and that scores of six shooters slumbered ready to protect, and scores of barns and homes stood ready to receive, the outlaws.

Certain it was that the religious interest broke and fell from that night on until after two more days of fruitless struggle the meeting closed. Nothing was talked of among the farmers but the Blue Glen robbery. Nothing was felt but the hatreds and sympathies of the last half-dozen years revived in all their keenness, and plots for protection and counter plots for capture were discussed at every fireside and in every field.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Revenge is of death and deadly. Forgiveness is the giving, and so the receiving, of life.

English Topics.

Dr. W. T. Moore in England.

There are some few men who are incarnations of the "Anglo-American Alliance." Of course, that same alliance is only supposed to be a sentimental myth. There is no such alliance in practical politics, and for many reasons that is all the better, for the grandest of all confederations is that "Union of Hearts" which our glorious Gladstone used to aim at creating. Multitudes of Britishers and multitudes of Americans are already cementing the international sympathy between the two countries. I am always puzzled to realize whether W. T. Moore is an Englishman or an American. He is actually both. I never met any American who seems to love England so much or to understand this nation so thoroughly, without seeming to be any less an American all the time. But yes! I remember my delight when in America year before last, at discovering how passionately such genuine Americans as J. M. Van Horn, J. J. Haley and H. S. Earl and one or two others cherished their attachment to England. Somehow they and their families had not lost a particle of their enthusiastic interest in the welfare of the "Mother of Empires," although they all seemed glad to be living again in their native land under the "Stars and Stripes." Our old leader, W. T. Moore, makes no secret anywhere of his conviction that if you want real freedom of the best kind you must come to enjoy it in this tight little island. Therein I do not myself altogether agree with him, for I feel, as a progressive liberal, that we are sadly wanting in many of our dealings with the heritage of our forefathers, and we are fearfully enslaved, not by our laws, but by our antiquated feudal traditions. This, however, is not my topic at the moment. Dr. Moore is singularly young for a septuagenarian. Even in aspect he is no older than when I first came to know him about 25 years ago. There seems to be no reason why he should not go on for another quarter of a century exemplifying the truth of Cicero's delightful classic, "De Senectute," for he appears to be reveling in the pleasures of old age. In the case of such a man, enjoying a recrudescence of juvenility, each month in the year is May. He preaches, orates, converses, walks for miles about London, and indulges in stentorian, protracted and intermittent laughter after a manner defiant of all the usual tendencies of senility.

A Hollow Theological Void.

There are some pretentious systems of religion which send forth resounding echoes by virtue of their blatant effrontery, but which never can accomplish anything but destructionism. The professors of these systems possess no constructive genius. One of these is the much-vaunted Theism of to-day. I believe that many Americans are acquainted with the name of the Rev. Charles Voysey, the founder of the London Theistic Church. This able man was a Church of England vicar of a Yorkshire parish. He seceded from the Anglican communion, from orthodoxy, from evangelicalism, from common sense, from sweet reasonableness, and from everything except the establishment of his own personal importance. Such individuals are generally Ishmaelitish negationists. They deny everything which ordinary people believe, they vote for turning down everything that is up, they lift their hands against every man, they take that cruel delight in knocking away the crutches from the grasp of the crippled and the helpless which Beecher so sternly rebuked in Ingersoll, and they reduce all the prospect to a hollow void and blank desolation. The Theistic Church is situated in the west end of London, and so is in the midst of a fashionable and cultured community. And numbers of clever folks, as well as of people who are not clever but desire to be thought so, resort to listen to Voyseyism, which is a mongrel cross between Unitarianism and skepticism. At last Mr. Voysey has come out into the open. His theology no longer smacks of the Judas kiss. He is now deliberately endeavoring to "undermine and overthrow the authority of Jesus Christ." He acquits our Lord of having been an impostor; Jesus was "only mistaken or demented." According to his interpretation of the Gospels, "Jesus expresses a diabolical intention to bring the sword of strife and division into our very homes. Jesus makes himself out to be insincere as well as foolish. His purpose is fiendish; too bad to be believable of anybody." This is a fragment of a sermon just preached. But even with this outrageous utterance Mr. Voysey is not content. He is not merely railing against orthodoxy. The most brilliant representatives of unorthodoxy, such as Dr. Stopford Brooke, are lashed because they believe at least something. Is it not true that unbelief is incapable of any halt? Is not skepticism necessarily implied in a course of downgrade intellectualism? The Broad Church in each denominational wing must always produce a crop of infidels. Each of these carries a hollow shell of religious opinion, unless he chooses to pose as an absolute atheist. But rationalists who do this are increasingly rare. Infidels now prefer to don the garb of the Theist. The great God they nominally acknowledge, but in truth they only adore a very little dumpty deity. The god of their veneration is self, and as each one is his very own little god, there can be no unity in this precious pantheon. A new Valhalla is being constructed. The old infidels used to admit the figure of Jesus beside the busts of Paine and Voltaire and Bolingbroke, but they have no room for Him now amongst the great humanitarians, because he is to be regarded as a spiritual swindler. Truly, if Christianity is on the decline, as pessimists want to convince us, its opponents are not compensating the poor old earth for the loss of faith, for they are reducing their own ethical systems to farcical chaos. I think that we had better not trouble much about the unbelievers of the present day. They are about the poorest lot that the devil ever passed in review, or ever counted up for the list of his book of numbers. Christianity holds the field in mightier force than it ever did since the apostolic time.

British Imperialism and Popery.

One of the most singular and unexpected tendencies of recent events is the very injurious effect on Roman Catholicism of the Imperialist wave. That wave has in some directions done harm. In others it has brought some good results. There is no possibility of denying either the dark or the bright side of modern Imperialism. I believe that you also, my American friends, acknowledge that your mighty republic has been caught in the overpowering Imperialist current—whether for good or evil only time will prove. I am inclined to the opinion that the results will be mixed. It is so in all human developments. The force of patriotism intensifies in these days. But Toryism takes unfair advantage of the condition. The Democracy is playing too docilely into the conservative hands. The upper classes are ruling this nation, and they are grossly beguiling the people. Church and state are corrupting each other and are conspiring to curtail popular freedom, while the masses are asleep. But, on the other hand, the more artful Imperialists, whose motives are selfish and impure, are in danger of over-reaching themselves. Many, of course, of the high churchmen and the Catholics are always eager to snatch the leadership in any movement which is against the interests of the common people. Well, the English Catholics are beginning a new wail. They are always whining and crying in this country. English Catholicism has been wiping its weeping eyes over the dreadful results of the Protestant Reformation ever since I can remember. But it can never wipe all tears away. Just at this moment the Catholic party is sobbing in agony, because the very Imperialism which it was the first to promote and encourage has turned out to be most hurtful to its interests. It has been discovered, to the profound dismay of the Ultramontanes, Jesuits, Ritualists and all other nice cliques of ecclesiastical conspirators, that the growth of British Imperialism has been anti-Catholic in its main tendency. The Catholic Weekly Register has been trying to explain this. But this sapient organ looks at other countries besides England, and it hysterically admits that Italy is "united in spite of the church," that in France "the party hot against the present Republican regime is identified with Catholicism," that "Spain has been drubbed by America, the Protestant mistress of the new world," and that even Austria, ever till recently the Pope's best friend, "has found out that the clerical party is not her best hope of cohesion." But it is argued, for the partial comfort of bigoted Romanists, that "these are mere temporary and superficial contradictions of the true and normal harmony between the church and the nation's highest life, a union which in the past was fruitful in the great conceptions of corporate life." The anti-clerical cyclone continues to rage in France, where the Senate has concurred in its vote with the lower chamber in passing the bill for the repression of the massive modern French monastic bodies, called associations, and the hurricane of popular fury continues to blow against clericals in Spain, Portugal and Italy. Slowly but surely Popery in Europe is dying. The curse of heaven has long been on it, and now the maledictions of the nations are being added to the celestial anathema.

WILLIAM DURBAN.

London, England.

need the companionship of new children," she said, "and to meet with children not of the family. Nothing broadens one so much as to mingle with others."

Mrs. Mains rather objected to another party, Frankie having just had one on his fifth birthday, but her sister promised to assume the whole care of the occasion, which she did. The little social passed off very satisfactorily to its director. She had invented many new pastimes for the boys and girls, all of them being of such a nature as to impart some knowledge.

"Well, Aunt Ines, what you going to do to 'xperiment with now?" asked Ina the next day after the party. "I'm ten years old and I think you might let me know, even if you don't the others. You see Gladys is only seven years old—only seven." The elder sister sighed as if the entire responsibility of the family rested upon her.

That sigh gave Aunt Ines a hint. "Why not give the children the responsibility of conducting a household?" she thought as she gazed out of the window at the crowds that were passing up and down the busy street. "I shall talk with sister about it and see what she says."

"The whole household is in your hands, Ines, while you are here," was Mrs. Mains' response to her sister's request, "but I don't know how I shall get on with the children after you are gone. They will expect as much attention from me as they have been receiving from you."

"I trust that you will find them at least a little more advanced," laughed Miss Stacy. Then she proceeded at once to put her plans into effect.

She let Ina call herself the mother. Frankie was a make-believe father, while Gladys was their child. During the entire day each was to fill as far as possible the duties of those they represented. Frankie sat in his father's place at the table and carved the meat, while Ina in her mother's place poured the tea, the big folks who were present passing themselves off as company. In many another way the children received valuable lessons of what it meant to stand at the head of a house.

But I have not time to speak of all of Aunt Ines' plans, each of which was carefully studied out and intended to convey to the children some useful information or discipline.

She would at times allow them no toys for a whole day, saying children know how to amuse themselves better than we do and they should not be wholly dependent upon their toys. Again, she would give them their playthings in parts, that they might, by putting them together, learn to invent. She also insisted that every little quarrel should be settled, not by the wronged child giving in to his opponent, but by a just settlement in which every phase of the question was considered. Most of her arrangements were pleasing to the young Mains: yet none, when found the opposite, would she relinquish and they loved her none the less for her firmness, and when her month's visit was up they felt very sorry to have her leave them. Mrs. Mains, found that as she had prophesied, the children would now need more of her attention than ever and Aunt Ines was probably likewise correct, for the lives of the children had been greatly broadened because of her interest in them.

The Child-Study Aunt

By ALICE MAY DOUGLAS

She was a teacher in a western school and had come east to pass her vacation with her sister. She had just caught the child-study craze and having no children of her own upon which to experiment, she borrowed those of her sister.

"So you have come to inspect my children, have you?" laughed the gay young mother on the evening of Miss Stacy's arrival.

"Just to help them develop the best that is in them," answered the aunt, "and where are the darlings?"

"Fast asleep, I trust. You see I know one thing, at least, along the line of bringing up children. I put them to bed early."

"And I must go and take a peep at the chickens. No, no, don't shake your head. I wouldn't awaken one of them for anything. I can be as quiet as a mother. Who loves children more than I?"

"After you have had some of your own you will know," laughed Mrs. Mains, as she carried Aunt Ines' wraps into the hall and saw her stealing upstairs towards the nursery door. She did not see the sweet look on the aunt's face, however, as this noble woman gazed into the faces of little Gladys and Ina, as they lay side by side, and as she offered a prayer for Frankie who was sleeping so soundly in the small room directly off of the nursery.

"See my bank," cried little Ina, Miss Stacy's namesake, the first morning after her arrival. "I have forty and eleven cents in it."

"And what will you do with your pennies after your bank is full?" asked the aunt.

"Put them in the great big bank down the street."

"What good will it do you there?"

"O I shall know I have it."

"But won't it do you more good if you keep part of your money and spend it for what you need?"

"I don't have to, for papa and mamma buy all that I need."

Ina now ran into the nursery with her bank, and the aunt exclaimed to the mother, "A bank is really a half educator, my dear Sarah. If children are taught merely to hoard up money and never to spend a cent, they will become miserly. I shall buy Ina a spending bank in which to keep a part of her savings and with this she must buy a part of her wardrobe. She will take better care of her clothes, if she has to buy them herself."

"Just as you say," laughed Mrs. Mains. "You are running the children this season, but I hope you won't run them off the track."

So Aunt Ines took the three little ones down street and gave them a lesson in shopping. It much amused the other customers and the clerks but it proved a useful occupation—a delightful one too, for the sisters and brother seemed to enjoy their trip immensely.

Aunt Ines' next move was to invite a number of children to pass the afternoon with her nephew and nieces. "Children

Paul's Portrait of a Preacher

By F. D. POWER

III.

Last and first the portrait shows the preacher. He may not be an orator, a spell-binder, he must be a preacher. Paul's victories over many audiences, over a band of philosophic skeptics on Mar's Hill, over a monarch in the law courts, over a mob on the stairs in Jerusalem, Paul's treatment by the heathen at Lystra who would offer sacrifice to him as Mercury, the God of eloquence, Paul's matchless writings, as the requiem in the 15th of first Corinthians, the rapture in the 8th of Romans, the grand contemplative vision in Ephesians, the happy and subtle lightning like strokes in Colossians, the accumulating multitude of images that rush together in fiery pomp and illumination in 11th and 12th of Hebrews—all show that Paul was an orator, a splendid master of expression in speech. Every man may not be thus gifted, but you must preach.

With all my heart I would be a preacher. I have no ambition for the priesthood. A priest in the popular sense is a creature unknown to the dispensation of Christ. I have no desire to be a clergyman. Your uniformed, titled and professional ecclesiastic is not a New Testament character. My aspirations are not met in the better terms "minister," "teacher." Jesus preached; the apostles were preachers; the royal word "preacher" fills the measure.

Studying our portrait we see it is a preacher's face. You can always tell them. There is a clerical cut about the chin and a ministerial mold about the brow that you can not mistake. Garfield told me he could tell what denomination a man belonged to by the color of his eyes. A preacher does not need to wear a coat buttoned to the throat, a white tie, or a collar hind part before, to distinguish him. The preacher face is as characteristic as the bicycle face or the automobile face. On one occasion, sitting in the waiting room of a railroad station, I observed a good Irish woman eyeing me reverently. Presently she approached and said with great respect: "Beyn't you Father Eugene?" "No, madam." She looked sorely disappointed, paused a moment and then asked again: "Beyn't you one of the fathers?" Again I had to disappoint her. "No, madam, but I am a minister of the gospel. What can I do for you?" Another time a gentleman approached me on a railroad train and asked: "Is this Cardinal Gibbons?" I was leaner then than now. "No, sir." He didn't believe me. "Are you not Cardinal Gibbons?" he inquired a second time. "No sir, I have not that honor." He apologized and soon found the gentleman he was seeking.

Our portrait shows the preacher. God honors preaching. By the living voice of the living man the gospel is to be proclaimed. Words are things, living things, quick and powerful and sharper than a two-edged sword, "as goads and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies. "Go ye into all the world and preach." What constitutes true preaching can best be determined by a New Testament study of the Greek words used to describe it. There are a dozen of these words, each expressing a distinct feature of this work, and all together setting forth its true nature and purpose.

First is λαλέω, to talk, to speak. It simply points to the breaking of silence, the voicing of the message, the fact of utterance, as: "We can not but speak the things which we have seen and heard." They could not keep silent, they must voice God's messages to men. Another word is εὐαγγελίζω, to bring or proclaim glad tidings. Five times it is used in the eighth of Acts to describe Philip's preaching. It was joy-giving, it was good news. This word expresses the authority of the messenger as well as the character of the message. The evangelist is literally "a messenger with a glad message." Paul speaks of himself as such a messenger sent by God. Every preacher should be such a bearer of good tidings, taking the Word of God and declaring it to men. Κηρύσσω is another term, to make proclamation as a herald. John the Baptist is a κήρυξ, a herald of the Coming One. The herald calls the attention of men, makes known some message of the King, announces the truth he is commissioned to proclaim. There is the term ἀπαγγέλλω, literally to announce, from showing the source of the message as "that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." There is the word καταγγέλλω, pointing to the object of the message, bringing down the message to the people, bringing the gospel home to hearers as "through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins," brought down or announced down to you in your need. Too much preaching is uppish, it soars above people's heads, it does not get right down where men are. Ἀναγγέλλω another word signifies to announce thoroughly, from top to bottom, as when Paul says, "I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God." It implies also repetition. We are to tell the story again and again. Another term is διαγγέλλω which means to preach through and through, to publish abroad, proclaim everywhere the whole message to the whole world. Διαμαρτύρομαι is to give full, clear testimony. Paul, pressed in the Spirit, testified—earnestly, fully testified—that Jesus was the Christ. Messengers we are, heralds we are, but most of all must we be witnesses, testifying the gospel of the grace of God. Παρήγγιζομαι is a word signifying to speak with freedom, used of Paul's preaching in Jerusalem: "He spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus," that is fearlessly and freely without reserve, without holding back any part of the truth. Another word to express apostolic preaching is δαλέγω, literally to speak to and from, to converse with, usually rendered "reasoned" or "disputed." Paul reasoned in the synagogues, held conferences, heard and answered questions as our missionaries do, a sort of preaching that needs to be revived.

Finally, we have διδάσκω, to teach, to instruct: "Go ye, therefore, and disciple all nations, teaching them." "Paul and Barnabas continued in Antioch teaching and preaching the Word of the Lord." The people need teaching, the people are glad to be taught, the preacher is a teacher of divine things. The great need of our day is apostolic teaching and apostolic preaching. From these must flow apostolic results.

God help us to fill out in our ministry the outlines in Paul's portrait of a preacher. More and more beautiful it becomes as we study it. The light that never was on land or sea beams from it. It is the reflected radiance of the Master's face, the likeness of our adorable Lord. How shall we ever attain it? In three things the secret lies—Christ, immortal souls, self-surrender. "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust!"

(THE END.)

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

The following came to me a few days ago. I am sure you will be interested in the loving missive, so I pass it on to you:

"How is it that in your CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST letter you slash Mormonism, Spiritualism, Christian Science and other evils, yet totally fail to say one word against the most infamous, deadly, and by far the most satanic of all the evils that curse our country, a worse curse than all the others combined, and that is Romanism, the implacable enemy of Christ, of his kingdom and of the human race, and that is now making such daring aggressions along all lines? How can you fail to flash your Damascus blade into this stronghold of satan, and this chief bulwark of the liquor traffic? Let us hear from you on Rome! You make a monstrous mistake in reference to Dr. Cullis. I am well acquainted with Dr. Cullis. No truer or more godly man ever lived in Boston than he. He was a man who had the fullest confidence and love of all who knew him. His memory is honored by all the best people in all the churches. I am amazed at your ignorance of Dr. Cullis."

Such a message is positively refreshing. I have not enjoyed anything in many a day as I have enjoyed this. The man who wrote it is my friend.

It is evident that the writer of the foregoing is not personally acquainted with me. If he were, he would not say, "I am amazed at your ignorance!" My ignorance would not surprise him if he knew me. No person who is acquainted with me is surprised at that. I sometimes think of writing a book, the title of which will be, "Things That I Do Not Understand." It will be a big book, if I am spared to complete it. The work will be sold only by subscription. It will consist of at least one hundred volumes of certainly one thousand pages each. The price will not be less than a hundred dollars a volume. The volume will be sold singly to those who prefer to secure the work in this way. It is simply certain that after securing one volume those who appreciate a good thing and who are financially able to do so will gladly procure the complete work. My unknown friend is hereby appointed general agent for the United States and her colonies for my great book to be entitled "Things That I Do Not Understand."

It is barely possible that I misrepresented Dr. Charles Cullis. In what I said concerning him I relied upon my memory. There is a "Home for Consumptives" in Boston, founded by him, I believe, in 1870. The latest information that I had concerning this home was that the people had given to it $300,000, and that 1,800 or 2,000 persons had been cared for. This "Home for Consumptives," is for those who are supposed to be incurable. This is a good work. I did not say that Dr. Cullis was totally depraved. That he did good while he lived, and that his memory is now precious, I have no doubt. This is sufficient for the present. In a few weeks I will tell you all about Dr. Cullis and it will be a pleasure to me to make a favorable report on his life and work.

My friend is in error as to Romanism in the United States. Romanism is not "making daring aggressions" along all lines. Romanism is steadily losing ground in this country. The losses of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States are enormous. Their best informed writers tell us that if they had held their own, i. e., Romanists who emigrated to the United States and their children, there would now be a Roman Catholic population of 35,000,000 instead of from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000. The lamentations of Romanists over their losses in our country are pathetic. Romanism does not keep pace with our increase of population. Protestantism steadily gains. The names of towns, cities and counties in all this western country tell that a few years ago the Roman Catholic Church controlled everything in this part of the world. It certainly does not do so now.

If Romanism has lost numerically here to such an extent as to cause sore lamentations, its change of character has been no less marked. Compare Romanism in the United States with Romanism in South and Central America, in Spain, in Italy, in any Roman Catholic country on earth. Do you see no difference? A free press, free schools, a free ballot, free thought, free speech, a free church, an open Bible—these are deadly foes of the Roman Catholic Church. Where these are Romanism cannot prosper.

A certain class of men and of publications seems to find pleasure in representing Romanism as laying hands on everything in sight. I have no doubt that "the church" would do this if it were possible—but it is not possible. "The Roman Catholic priests who are now serving as chaplains in the United States army and navy will number two to every one of any other denomination," is a sample statement from this quarter. How much truth is there in it? E. B. Bagby, who lives in Washington, D. C., looked into the matter and reported in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 18, that "of thirty-three chaplains in the army there are eleven Methodists, seven Episcopalians, six Presbyterians, four Roman Catholics, two Baptists, one Lutheran, one Congregationalist, and one who is recorded simply as a Christian. In the navy there are nine Methodists, five Episcopalians, three Catholics, two Baptists, two Presbyterians, one Disciple of Christ, one Unitarian and one Universalist."

It is a fact that by far the greater number of saloon-keepers in the United States are Roman Catholics. It is also a fact that probably the greatest single evil in the United States is the liquor saloon. But the saloon has not the endorsement of the church. The Pope is on record in favor of total abstinence. Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, says that "Bishop Ireland has delivered many of the most powerful speeches for the cause of temperance ever spoken by man." The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America was organized in 1872. Leo XIII. has given it his benediction. The Catholic World, some years ago, said that "forty working people are supposed to support a saloon," and Mr. Powderly said in a meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union that he would prefer a following of 100,000 total abstainers to 12,000,000 patrons of the liquor saloon. The latest statistics that I have put the number of men in the Roman Catholic Church who have taken the total abstinence pledge at 100,000.

The history of the Roman Catholic Church is bad. Its cruelties have been revolting in the extreme. The fundamental principles of the church are unbiblical and un-American. The Catholic Church is an out-of-date institution. But it is losing its grip. In this country it is not to be feared.

It is not a serious menace to any good thing in this land. There is an element in this church which ought to be encouraged, and I will encourage it whenever and wherever I have an opportunity. It is not "the most satanic" influence in the land. Of all "the evils that curse" our country it is not "the greatest." It is not "a greater curse than all other evils combined." The average Romanist is not an "implacable enemy of the Christ." The Catholic Church is not "making daring aggressions all along the line." I can use my "Damascus blade" in a better way than in the manner suggested by my unknown, well-meaning, but mistaken correspondent. Rome is dying, slowly but surely dying, in the United States. Let her die in peace. Statistics show that in this country she is fatally ill. The anti-Roman Catholic orator unwittingly aids the cause that he would destroy. Turn on the light. The light and Romanism cannot co-exist.

Missionary Achievements of the XIXth Century By A. W. TAYLOR.

A record of the past century's missionary achievements would be encyclopedic. Any treatment of them in a short space must be fragmentary. This "New Crusade" surpasses all others since the apostolic days in magnitude. Some statistics are here given. They may seem like dry bones. Touch them with a believing imagination until they become living beings and behold what wonders have been wrought.

A century ago there were a few heroic souls who had left footpaths to the altars of self-sacrifice among the heathen peoples. The Moravians led. Such names as those of Zinzendorf, the Moravian apostle, Schwartz, who founded the first native church in India, Egede, who sowed the seed in arid Greenland, Ziegenbalg, who was in India a hundred years before Carey and Duff, translating the Bible into Tamil and preparing the way, Elliot and Brainard among the American Indians before even India was thought of, are stars now shining with lustrous glow out of the deep darkness of that past. To-day whole constellations are reflecting the light of the Sun of Righteousness.

One hundred years ago the missionary enterprise was characterized even by the church as an insane project. The latest statistics show an annual expenditure of more than $17,000,000 for the gospel in foreign lands, nearly 14,000 missionaries and 74,000 helpers, with a native church of 4,500,000. There are 11,000 organized churches and 31,000 stations, 15,000 Sunday-schools with 765,000 pupils and the conversions number 84,000 annually. There are also 20,000 day schools, from kindergarten to university, educating more than 1,000,000 scholars.

The Bible has been translated into 421 tongues, more than 100 of which had not so much as an alphabet, and 2,000,000 copies of the Scriptures are circulated each year. Besides this 13,000,000 volumes and tracts are distributed annually. Millions are treated in the hospitals and every form of benevolent and rescue work is carried on. To have organized so mighty an army and to be effecting so brilliant a conquest in the cause of the King of Peace is the greatest achievement of the church in the past century.

But what shall be said of the effect of this lengthening of cord and strengthening of stakes upon the church at home? It is difficult to estimate the power of scientific skepticism as directed against theology during the past hundred years. The century dawned with doubt broad upon the horizon, and we cannot deny that doubt had as good a reason to exist as did most of the theology and ecclesiasticism of that time. Missions have been one of the mightiest of agencies to awaken a lethargic church to show its faith by its works. The logic of doubt falls prone and palsied before the spectacle of self-sacrifice for another's good. To do deeds of love in His name unto the millions beyond is to throw a burst of warm sunshine into a vale beclouded with chilling mists. Not only have missions saved the church from doubt but they have been during the last three decades one of the most potent factors in healing internal schisms. In reckoning upon the factors that will produce Christian union, let us not forget that the word from the front is "get together." So another of the conspicuous missionary achievements has been the strengthening and uniting of the church.

Would that space allowed the recounting of some of the achievements of missions in the transforming of peoples from savagery to civilization. The stories of the Pitcairn Islands, Sierra Leone, Hawaii and the South Sea groups are among the marvels of history. Himself brought out of cannibalism, the veteran Hawaiian missionary, Kanwealoha, said: "Not with powder and ball, sword and cannon, but with the living word of God and His Spirit, we go forth to conquer." Lastly one of the great achievements of every age is the men it produces. To the names of Carey, Judson, Mackay, Livingstone, Williams, Marsden, Duff, Verbeck, Morrison, Paton, Mrs. Judson and Fidelity Fisk, may be added a host of both living and dead whose biographies are worthy a place in every library and whose names should be familiar to every pulpit.

Stone on the Divinity of Christ.

By W. J. Burner.

B. W. Stone was charged with denying the divinity of Christ, and when his movement was united with that of the Campbells, the Disciples were brought under suspicion of unsoundness on this point, which suspicion found utterance in many books and periodicals. It is, perhaps, impossible to ascertain what influence Stone exerted upon the thought of the Disciples, but it is not a difficult matter to discover his own views on the subject.

Stone himself did not think he denied the divinity of Christ. It has always been the custom in the Christian Church to take a man's statement of his own belief at par. Stone says, "We have also been charged with denying the Son of God; or, in other words, his divinity; than which, I think, there can be no charge more unjust." His confession of faith is "the son of God did not begin to exist 1,820 years ago; nor was he eternally begotten; he was the first begotten of the Father, the first born of every creature; brought forth before all worlds; in the fulness of time was united with a body prepared for him; and in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Works, by Mathis, p. 59).

Stone opposed a biblical doctrine of the person of Christ to the "orthodox" statement. He was fully conscious of the difference and made no attempt to reconcile them. His seeking for a biblical doctrine was in harmony with a principle which he announced in 1804, in an address which accompanied the Last Will and Testament of the Springfield Presbytery. The people should take the Bible as the only sure guide to heaven, to the exclusion of creeds. Of course, the "doctrine of the Trinity" is not in the Bible, and Stone did not find it there. It is in the creeds, and, therefore, should be excluded. It is much to Stone's credit that he was so thoroughly emancipated from orthodox theology that he made no attempt to read it into the New Testament, and that he did not lack the courage of his convictions. He says, "That the Son of God was very and eternal God, and yet eternally begotten, is a doctrine to which I cannot subscribe; because the terms eternal Son, eternally begotten, are not found in the Bible. As they are human inventions, by human reason they may be tried. According to the above cited articles (from the Westminster Confession and the Methodist Discipline) the Father and the Son are one eternal substance. The voice of reason is that the same eternal substance cannot beget itself, nor be begotten by itself. Therefore, the substance of the Son was neither begotten nor born. If it be granted that the substance of the Son was eternal, and, therefore, never begotten, then it must follow that what was eternally begotten had no substance, and was, therefore, not a real thing. This is virtually to deny the Son." Again, "If language conveys ideas, it is plain that the act of begetting implies a previous agent; and that the agent and the act must precede the thing begotten; therefore, the Son could not be eternally begotten" (Works, p. 61). He further argues that it is impossible that the very and eternal God was born of Mary; that if the two natures, Godhead and manhood, were inseparably united, it was God who suffered on the cross; that, as all acknowledge, the one only living and true God is without passion, therefore, he that suffered such exquisite passion on the cross was not the only living and true God (Works, pp. 62, 63). He states his own position in these terms: "My own views of the Son of God are that he did not exist from eternity, but was the first begotten of the Father before time and creation began" (Works, p. 66).

With these statements compare the doctrine of Arius.

1. God is one in nature and person; everything else is created out of nothing; the divine essence cannot be communicated.

2. The Son was created first; he was created out of nothing, and created to be the means of creating the universe.

3. There was a time when the Logos was not; he stands between God and man, a third order of being; he became incarnate in the historic Christ.

A comparison makes it evident that Stone was a fairly consistent Arian. It is also evident that Stone did not believe Christ to be, in any real sense, God. Of this he is fully conscious. He says, "Our brethren think they sufficiently confute us when they prove the divinity of the Son by divine names, titles, attributes and worship ascribed to him. They ascribe these attributes and names to the Son, as in him from all eternity. But we ascribe them to him because the Father dwells in him" (Works, p. 81). How divine "attributes" could be ascribed to a being who was not in the truest sense God he does not explain. They might be ascribed to the Father who dwells in Christ, but the fact that the Father dwells in Christ is not a sufficient ground for ascribing them to Christ. Stone would have gotten out of the difficulty better by denying that divine attributes are ascribed to Christ by the New Testament writers.

Stone's strength lay in the fact that the New Testament doctrine of the person of Christ did not go beyond his own, and, therefore, his opponents could not point out any contradiction between them. By no possible ingenuity can Nicene Christology be deduced from the New Testament. With the insane exegesis with which the orthodox tried to bridge the centuries between John and Athanasius, Stone had a happy time. If his own exegesis limps a little at times, it is no more than one would expect. The first worker in a new field is liable to error. One is surprised that his mistakes are so few. His attempts to apply "human reason" to the orthodox doctrine are less fortunate. Origen's doctrine of the "eternal generation" of the Son will not be destroyed by pointing out a contradiction between the dictionary meanings of the terms employed to describe it. The mind of Origen was strong enough to grasp a simple thing like that! With the philosophical content of the terms Stone does not seem to have had any acquaintance.

Stone's interest in the doctrine of the Trinity was practical, not speculative. His problem was fellowship of all Christians in evangelism, and Trinitarian speculations stood in the way of such fellowship. He solved the problem. Trinitarians and non-Trinitarians lay down together. The Christian Church has an abundant faith in Christ, but has no doctrine of his person.

To this extent, at least, we have certainly restored "primitive Christianity."

The Golden Text of the Bible.

By Louis S. Cupp.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." This has been called the golden text of the Bible. Around this central truth the entire Bible history revolves. It sets forth the whole scheme of redemption in a sentence—God's love, sacrifice, salvation.

The text explains what God is by telling what he does: "God loved." Therefore, God is love. Go to the mother who weeps over her dead child and whisper softly in her ear that God is love. Go to the reeling drunkard, debauched and disgraced, and tell him tenderly that God is love. Go to the home of poverty where wretchedness reigns and light up those hollow eyes and pallid faces with the cheering message that God is love. When a torch is borne into a dark cavern the eternal shades are banished, and every crystal in the walls blazes with light. So this message is a torch that will banish the gloom of misery and poverty from the world and light up the true diamonds in every human soul.

God's love is universal: "God so loved the world." Did he not love sinners none of us could hope to be loved. He can no more help loving than the sun can help shining. It is his nature; and, like the glorious sunlight, his love shines over all. Beecher, the eloquent, once beautifully said: "The sun does not shine for a few trees and flowers, but for the wide world's joy. The lonely pine on the mountain-top waves its sombre boughs and cries, 'Thou art my sun!' And the little meadow violet lifts its cup of blue and whispers with its perfumed breath, 'Thou art my sun!' And the grain in a thousand fields rustles in the wind and makes answer, 'Thou art my sun!' So God sits, effulgent, in heaven, not for a favored few, but for the universe of life; and there is no creature so poor or so low that he may not look up with childlike confidence and say, 'My Father, thou art mine!'" How much did God love the world? He so loved it that "he gave."

Love is a giver. Love is not self-centered. Love gives. Love is not a cistern, hoarding everything that enters until it is pumped out, but love is a spring clear as crystal, leaping up with life, bubbling over with blessings, and constantly giving forth its purest and best. "Everything that God is or has he gives." Love is not a pond, stagnant and still, but a broad river that flows gladly, exultantly on, feeding all the needy by the way, turning all the wheels in its progress, and at last giving all its abundance to the sea. The more it receives the more it gives. Men are not always so. Often those who receive most give least in proportion to their income.

Love gives everything. It can keep nothing back that is good. God gave his only Son. From the beginning God had given many precious gifts to man. He had given him this earth, as fair as was ever flung from the fingers of Omnipotence. In its bosom he had buried treasures of silver, jewels and gold, and the indispensable iron and coal. He had given him air and water and plenteous harvests, without which he could not live. He had painted the earth with beauty and flooded the sky with glory. He had studded the dome of heaven with stars and planets, and had wedded the earth and sky with the beauteous rainbow. He had given men cities and wealth and homes—and still he gave his Son. He emptied heaven of its most precious gem to make us rich and good. God considers nothing too precious to give his children. He never tires of giving. Though he has given so much already he is only waiting for us to open our hearts to give us infinitely more, here and now.

Notice love's supreme ambition. It is to save the world. "That whosoever believeth should not perish, but have eternal life." God can take no pleasure in death. His supreme delight is life. Those who refuse his Son have debarred themselves from life and written their eternal doom with their own heart's blood. God yearns to save the world. "God did not send his Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world might be saved through him."

This is the way God loves and gives and seeks to save. "Be ye therefore imitators of God, as beloved children."

The Inspiration of a Large Convention.

By John L. Brandt.

This is an age of great conventions—political, sociological, educational and religious. Never before in the history of the world was there such a desire on the part of men to come together in great conventions to consider questions of vital interest to mankind. Everything contributes to the success of such gatherings. The railroads offer superior facilities at reduced rates; cities construct large auditoriums for the accommodation of the delegates who come; hotels furnish entertainment at prices within reach of all; the program committees provide special talent so that all may go with reasonable assurance that it will be good to be there. Organization and preparation are so complete that he who has never been present at one of these national gatherings has missed one of the greatest inspirations of his life. I write particularly on behalf of our national conventions. To see the great men in convention who have toiled for the restoration of primitive Christianity and for the supremacy of Christ; to see and hear and shake hands with the pioneer workers, the founders of our institutions of learning, the editors of our religious papers, the authors of our books, the officers of our missionary societies, and the missionaries fresh from the field, the soul-winning evangelists, the faithful pastors of the churches, and the liberal supporters of the cause, is an inspiration to better life and an incentive to greater activity.

At no place can you come in touch with so many mighty men of the brotherhood as at the national convention—men who have thought for Christ, men whose whole hearts have loved Christ, men whose energies and possessions have been given to extend the cause of Christ. To see the faces of these men is next to seeing the faces of angels. Have you not read and thought of them and then yearned to see their faces? Those who have been present and seen the countenances so expressive of benevolence, wisdom and love, can testify that they had a miniature vision of the face of Jesus. To shake their hands is to receive an electric spark to the soul that will impart energy for years to come. To hear their words is to hear words of wisdom from richly endowed intellects that have been sanctified by truth. To hear them in public discourse is to think with them, feel with them, rejoice with them and exalt Christ with them. If you will attend the National Convention at Minneapolis and give your time and heart to it, you will return with new ideas for your field of labor, with new enthusiasm for your routine duty, with new inspiration to live a purer life and with new resolve to serve Christ with all your heart.

The Essential Power.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

One chief reason why many pastors do not see visible results of a gracious kind following their services is because they are trying to get along without the express power of the Holy Spirit. It may be that they preach a pure gospel, but to preach even the pure gospel without the power of the Holy Spirit in the preacher is to fall short of the necessary condition of the most successful preaching. Rev. Dr. C. B. McAfee, in referring to Pentecost day and the Holy Spirit's power, says: "We want power to make the gospel clear to other men. We may spend all our time in discussing what sort of a miracle this speaking with tongues was, but it is clear that it resulted in some people's understanding the gospel who would not otherwise have understood it. There are churches which incline to pray for such a gift for their pastors. They would not have them preach in Greek or Latin or Hottentot. But they would like them to preach in such English as will make the gospel plain and understandable. Some men seem unable to do that very simple thing. A man once told me that he supposed he was too deep a thinker for most people to whom he preached. I said nothing, but I thought—not deeply; it was not necessary. The coming of the Spirit upon some of us who teach classes and preach to audiences would simplify and clarify and make attractive our messages."

I care not how thoroughly one may be educated, nor how learned he may be in the languages in which the Bible was originally written,—the truth is, if he have not within himself the illuminating power of the Holy Spirit he cannot have truly correct views of the inner meaning of much of the gospel, and of course, he cannot present to others the deep and most vital truths of the Bible. It is the preacher having a good literary education, having his mind well trained, and who is a close Bible student, who also is empowered by the Spirit, that makes his hearers see the truth in a new and true light, and holds them constantly charmed by the living and saving message. We have no reason to think that the Holy Spirit can use his power as effectually through a stupid, unlearned preacher as he can through one who is wakeful and rightly trained in divine knowledge. The preacher must study the Bible most eagerly, invoking the Spirit's aid, both in the study and in the preaching.

The Spiritual Uplift of Large Conventions.

By A. B. Jones.

The very magnitude of a thing creates interest and commands respect. We cannot look upon a vast plain or sea or mountain without an uplift of feeling. A large body of living beings is still more inspiring. A large swarm of bees or flock of birds or herd of cattle attracts attention and excites interest by its very multitude. Much more does a mighty army of men moving with a purpose create within us a feeling of enthusiasm. But the most inspiring form of emotional life which we experience in this world is when we view a mighty host of men and women gathered together with a high purpose to glorify God and redeem humanity. The songs of praise, as the voice of many waters; the rising tide of devotion in prayer ascending as a mighty cloud of incense from consecrated hearts; the fervid eloquence from lips and tongues aglow from the altar fires of redeemed souls—all conspire to awaken the noblest thoughts, to inspire the highest emotions, and to give the mightiest uplift of enthusiastic life of which we can conceive.

The first twentieth century missionary convention of the Christian Church at Minneapolis, October 10-17, 1901, we are all expecting to be an immense thing, and a pronounced success from every point of view. In the throng of consecrated men and women, in the high tide of liberal giving reported for the year past, in the wise planning for the year to come, in the sacred and inspiring song service, in the depths of earnest prayer to Almighty God, and in the fervid eloquence of the addresses—all, all will doubtless mark an event in our history, and make a keynote for the new century. If these ends are all to be attained and these factors are all to be made potent in the solution of the problems of the twentieth century, let every brother and sister who can, resolve now to attend the coming convention at Minneapolis and make the occasion one long to be remembered.

The good people of Minneapolis are expecting great things, and preparing for them; let us not disappoint them.

Mid-August.

August, Sweetheart of the Sun,
Summer work is nearly done.
While the idle days are going
List thy ardent lover's wooing.

Now the year is in its prime Take thy brief vacation time.
Stubble fields are brown and yellow,
Pippins ripe are growing mellow.

Ranks on ranks of shining corn,
Jeweled by the dew of morn,
Whisper in the evening airs
Like a legion saying prayers.

Farmer-boys on loaded wains;
Harvest moons on gathered grains;
Tender hearts a bit forlorn,
Summer's turned another corner!

—E. C. Tompkins in Frank Leslie's.

Current Literature.

The recent death of Sir Walter Besant has brought to an abrupt and premature end a work which many would gladly have seen carried much farther. Sir Walter wrote novels, and good ones too, but the novel was scarcely an end in itself with him. Out of his first great literary success, All Sorts and Conditions of Men, grew a movement for the social betterment of the working classes in London which he engineered so effectively and successfully that his services were recognized and rewarded by knighthood. His last work, East London, published shortly before his death shows the insight and sympathy of the true social reformer happily blended with the graceful diction and artistic sense of the true man of letters. This is the fourth book which Sir Walter has written about his beloved London, each one describing a district of the city or a phase of its life. East London is the city of the workers—a city of nearly two million people without a hotel, without a bookstore, without a newspaper. But, though lacking these appurtenances of civilization, it is not a city of slums, and its various social ranks are as clearly marked as those of the aristocratic West End. The author knows them all and writes of them with an insight born of affection. It is a pleasure to read and commend a book which can be at once so interesting and so informing. Unlike the wielders of feeble pens, the author of East London can be grave without dullness, explicit without tediousness and, upon occasion, gay without frivolity. (The Century Company. $3.50.)

The first of a series of volumes describing the conditions of common life among our European neighbors, is German Life in Town and Country by William H. Dawson, who is also the editor of the series. The plan of the series is commendable, and if all the volumes are as well done as this one they will be well worth while. The author's view of the German governmental system, in so far as it directly affects the people, is on the whole decidedly commendatory. He believes that the compulsory military service is an advantage to the people individually, and that it is generally popular. It is impossible to deny that for thousands of immature boys from whom the ordinary restraints are suddenly removed, the tendency of army life is demoralizing, for strictness of discipline in an army does not necessarily preclude laxity of morals. It is obviously true that "single men in barracks don't grow into plaster saints"—and sometimes they grow very much the other way. Yet one may admit that a regime which teaches the duty of order and obedience may not be without its value, especially from the standpoint of the upper classes, who consider that the peasant's chief function in life is to submit. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

Mr. Howells' latest book, A Pair of Patient Lovers, is a group of five stories each a little too long for a short story and a little too short to stand alone. The first gives its title to the volume. The five are quite typical of Howells, and there is little need to give more definite characterization than that. One does not go to Mr. Howells for thrills, but for a graceful and genial narrative of things which are interesting chiefly because they are well told—things which seem natural and plausible just as they stand but which might all have happened differently without in the least marring the story. There are situations of moderate, though never extreme, ingenuity and dialogue of mild piquancy which never approaches the danger line that separates it from brilliant conversation. But an amiable observer of the affairs of men—and Mr. Howells is nothing if not amiable—is always a pleasant companion, even if he prefers to let his observation linger on the common lights and shadows of every-day experience rather than to turn it toward the glittering peaks of adventure and romance. The reading of one of Mr. Howells' books is like a railroad journey with a pleasant companion across Illinois or Indiana. You don't care much for the scenery and indeed have only half an eye for it, but you enjoy the genial companionship of your friend and his interest in everything he sees and you come to your journey's end in very good humor with the world. (Harpers.)

The increased interest in Bible study is manifesting itself, among other ways, by calling forth a number of Bible helps in the form of outlines for Bible study. One of the latest of these, entitled Bible Facts for Busy People, by Mrs. Calla Scott Willard, of Bethany, Neb., presents twenty-three Bible lessons, together with plans for organizing a normal Bible-class and for an introductory meeting. The little pamphlet of 100 pages embraces a great many matters of information in relation to the Bible and its various books, and indicates a great deal of care in its preparation. Some of the information, we should say, needs modernizing; but these slips, as a rule, relate to minor matters, and do not seriously affect the value of the lessons. The plan of these Bible lessons seems to be designed to convey a comprehensive view of the Bible and of its contents and to put persons in the way of an intelligent study of the same. (Revell $25.)

More August Magazines.

The Ladies' Home Journal has a long-standing habit, contracted early in its successful career, of exploiting the personalities of men and women who have done things in the world. Such personal articles dealing with the fads, fancies and manner of life of living celebrities usually deserve to be classed in Du Maurier's famous list of "things one would rather have left unsaid." But if they are to be done at all they should be well done and so they are in Mr. Bok's magazine. C. D. Gibson and Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson are the victims this month. The thirty other contributors to the present number write on about as many different topics, including Italian girls, the training of canaries, and the running of a boarding school.

Frank Leslie's, like the others, has a mid-summer fiction number, and it is something of a distinction to be able to show stories by Ralph Connor, E. W. Hornung and Flora Annie Steel in a single number. There are other well known names besides and some not so well known. Among the "Marginalia" there is a bold attempt to tell some new Lincoln anecdotes. They may be true. Some of them are certainly good. But the public has grown so skeptical about Lincoln stories that one only jeopardizes his reputation for veracity by telling new ones. For literary purposes, better a plausible fiction than an improbable truth.

The Missionary Review of the World has for its leading article a broad and general consideration of the problems of missions by Dr. Pierson. There are also articles on Romanism and Protestantism in France, the Doukhobors (Russian non-conformists) in Canada.

The light of genius shines in the story of The Little God and Dickey in McClure's. We quote a section of it elsewhere. It is not epic genius but the genius of humor and of happy insight into child-nature. There is also a story of the Canadian woods by Henry Van Dyke.

The Cosmopolitan for the month presents a distinguished list of contributors including Quiller-Couch with a tale of a French exile, Irving Bacheller who has a Canadian story, and Richard Le Gallienne. An essay on The Ideal Husband is a sequel to The Ideal Wife published some months ago.

The Ledger Monthly is made up chiefly of short stories and the various household departments which give a multitude of hints in regard to the doing of things which have to be done in every family and are usually done wrong. The growth of such departments in a number of the important magazines is a feature of their recent development and probably one reason for their popularity. The Ledger has an article on the Hiawatha play as given by the Ojibway Indians and one on the Roof-dwellers in New York.

The Kind of Coffee When Postum is Well-Made.

"Three great coffee drinkers were my old school friend and her two daughters

They were always complaining and taking medicine. I determined to give them Postum Food Coffee instead of coffee when they visited me, so without saying anything to them about it, I made a big pot of Postum the first morning, using four heaping teaspoons to the pint of water and let it boil twenty minutes, stirring down occasionally.

Before the meal was half over, each one passed up the cup to be refilled, remarking how fine the coffee was. The mother asked for a third cup and inquired as to the brand of coffee I used. I didn't answer her question just then, for I had heard her say a while before that she didn't like Postum Food Coffee unless it was more than half old fashioned coffee.

After breakfast I told her that the coffee she liked so well at breakfast was pure Postum Food Coffee, and the reason she liked it was because it was properly made, that is, it was boiled long enough to bring out the flavor. I have been brought up from a nervous, wretched invalid to a fine condition of physical health by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

I am doing all I can to help the world out of coffee slavery to Postum freedom, and have earned the gratitude of many, many friends." Myra J. Tuller, 1023 Troost Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Our Budget.

—Church Extension Sunday, Sept. 1.

—Let us make the offering simultaneously everywhere. Take it on the appointed day.

—Remember that money given for Church Extension is an endowment. It goes out, does its work, comes back, goes out again, and will keep on going long after you have gone.

—J. L. Parsons, of Indianapolis, lectured at the Lakeside, O., Chautauqua Aug. 1 on "The New Thought." His lecture was received with great enthusiasm.

—C. M. Hughes, singing evangelist, has been out of active service for some time, owing to sickness in his family. His child is now improving, as his friends will be glad to hear, and he is ready to make engagements anywhere at once. Address, Lexington, Ky.

—C. P. Smith, of Richmond, Mo., preached a memorial sermon for the Knights of Pythias recently on "From Death Unto Life," which was published in full in the papers. He has been offered a month's vacation by his church, but does not expect to take it.

—The convention of the churches of Christ of the Nodaway Valley district will be held at Tarkio, Mo., Aug. 27-29. For the convenience of the entertainment committee let all those who expect to attend send their names in advance to F. B. Elmore, Tarkio, Mo.

—We have received Vol. 1, No. 1, of The Christian Iconoclast, an eight-page paper, published monthly by H. F. Henrichs at Bunker Hill, Ill. This first number makes a good appearance and we hope that it will successfully fill a long felt want, as its publisher anticipates. The subscription price is fifty cents.

—Robert L. McHatton has recovered from his attack of typhoid fever and is now filling the pulpit of the Sixth and Prospect church at Kansas City, Mo., while the pastor, George H. Combs, is spending his vacation at Macatawa Park. Bro. McHatton will be in the evangelistic field in September, beginning at Augusta, Kan. He has not yet entirely recovered his strength, but has reason to hope that he will be himself by September.

—Mr. Paul Moore, who has been managing editor of the Christian Commonwealth, London, England, since his father, Dr. W. T. Moore, returned to this country, is about to leave England and come back to America. Ill health is the reason of the change. Mr. Moore has exhibited a high order of editorial ability in his management of the Christian Commonwealth and has kept it, where his father placed it, in the front rank of English religious papers. His ability ought to be utilized in this country.

—The books of the foreign society close Sept. 30. Money received before this date will be credited on the receipts of this fiscal year and will go toward the desired $200,000. If not received until after this date, it will have to be credited on next year's receipts. Churches which wish their offerings to be counted in the report which will be given at the Minneapolis convention, must have them in on or before Sept. 30. Many churches have not yet sent in their offering, and all such should make haste to do so.

—The History of Hiram College and Western Reserve Eclectic Institute, by F. M. Green, with an introduction by Prof. E. B. Wakefield, is now ready for delivery. It is a volume of about 500 pages and covers the half century of history from 1850 to 1900. Not only the alumni and friends of Hiram but all who are interested in the progress of our educational work will welcome this opportunity of securing a well written and authoritative record of the development of one of our greatest schools. All orders should be addressed to F. M. Green, Box 1146, Kent, O., accompanied by $1.65.

—Vernon J. Rose will re-enter the evangelistic field, Sept. 1. Churches desiring his services can address him at Newton, Kan.

—Russell F. Thrapp has resigned his pastorate at Pittsfield, Ill., to take the church at Jacksonville, Ill., where he will begin about Sept. 1, as successor to Bro. Snively.

—The church at Virden, Ill., is making some improvements and enlargements in its building, including reseating and redecorating, which will give it a seating capacity of 300, and will make it one of the handsomest buildings in the place.

—I. H. Fuller announces that the program for the by-county convention which is to be held at Corning, Ia., is now in the printer's hands and will soon be ready for delivery. Those who expect to attend are requested to send their names to Mrs. N. N. Whitlock.

—The Pontiac (Ill.) Chautauqua Assembly, which was in session July 25 to August 7, had a program containing the names of many of the best known lecturers in the country, from Gen. John B. Gordon to Sam Jones. Of our own men on the program we note the names of S. S. Lappin, Herr Cohen, Z. T. Sweeney and A. P. Cobb.

—At Ladoga, Ind., during a recent union meeting, the stores, which are usually open in the evening, were closed during the hours of service. This is an indication that the revival affected the whole town, as a revival should. Wilson and Huston will hold a meeting there soon and we should be glad to see the same consideration shown.

—The thirteenth annual convention of the churches of Christ in southern California and Arizona will be held at Long Beach, Cal., Aug. 8 to 18. It will include the sessions of the Ministerial Association, the Sunday-school convention, the missionary convention, the state C. W. B. M., and the Endeavor Society. F. D. Power, of Washington, is the chief attraction from outside of the state.

—J. W. Kellar, pastor of the Baptist Church at Monon, Ind., writes as follows of the work of H. C. Patterson, who recently held a tent meeting at that place: "Our people were perfectly delighted with him and were only sorry that he could not remain a few weeks longer. He thoroughly understands the Scriptures and knows how to make others understand them. The Christian Church has just cause to be proud of him."

—The fourth district of the Christian Endeavor Union of Michigan held their convention last week in Macatawa Park, Mich. The attendance was very large. The day was fine. Addresses were delivered by the president of the district and secretary of the state union, also by F. P. Arthur, of Grand Rapids, state president, Prof. Bergen, of Hope College, and Evangelist Smith, of the Moody Institute. There was an excursion in the afternoon on Lake Michigan, and another session at night. Bros. Griffith, of Ionia, Nickolson, of Ballard, Tremaine and Arthur, of Grand Rapids, were among our ministers present. The occasion was a very delightful one.

—The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has secured a new superintendent for the men's department. Mr. James H. Todd, who comes to this position from New Zealand, will relieve Mr. Torrey of much of the work of this department. The summer session of the Institute through August and September is in charge of Dr. James M. Gray who is adhering to Mr. Moody's original plan to meet the needs of both ministers and laymen who wish to spend the time in Bible study. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will be in Chicago from Nov. 5 to Nov. 23 and will deliver fifteen lectures at the Moody Institute under the general title "The Crises of the Christ," including the Need, the Birth, the Baptism, the Temptation.

Eczema

How it reddens the skin, itches, oozes, dries and scales!

Some people call it tetter, milk crust or salt rheum.

The suffering from it is sometimes intense; local applications are resorted to—they mitigate, but cannot cure.

It proceeds from humors inherited or acquired and persists until these have been removed.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

positively removes them, has radically and permanently cured the worst cases, and is without an equal for all cutaneous eruptions.

Hood's PILLS are the best cathartic. Price 25 cents

—E. L. Coons, pastor of the Christian church at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, was in St. Louis last week and favored the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with a call. Bro. Coons is a business man as well as a preacher, being city salesman for a wholesale grocer in Burlington, Ia., as well as pastor of the church at Mt. Pleasant.

—Dr. G. A. Hulett, of Springfield, Ill., chairman of the assignment committee for the Illinois missionary convention, requests all who wish entertainment at that convention to send their names to him as early as possible, stating on what day they will arrive. The program of the convention appears in another column.

—A new edition has recently been issued of H. Exley's tract entitled "The Witness of the Spirit: What is It?" by the Christian Publishing Company. This tract was first published several years ago and met with a warm reception. Owing to the many requests which have been received for its republication and the renewed interest in many quarters in the subject of the Holy Spirit's work, we have issued this new edition. It is a handsome booklet of thirty pages and will be sent postpaid for ten cents.

—The receipts for foreign missions for July have evidently been affected unfavorably by the drought. The report for July, as compared with that for the same month last year, shows a falling off in the number of contributing churches and in the number of individual offerings, while there is a slight gain both in the number of contributing Sunday-schools and Endeavor societies and in the amounts contributed by them. The loss in regular receipts for the month is $2,351.26, which is only slightly offset by a gain of $294 in bequests. Total net loss, $2,057.26.

—The Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ in Eastern Ohio will hold its thirty-eighth annual meeting at Medina, O., Sept. 2-5. Among the addresses on the program are the following: The Church of the Twentieth Century, by W. R. Lloyd; The Preacher and his Gray Hairs, by B. S. Dean; Recent Archeology and the Bible, by Levi Marshall; How to Push and how not to Push our Plea for Christian Union, by W. W. Sniff; Does the Accepted View of Evolution Contradict the Bible? by George Fowler; To what Extent Should the Topics of the Day be Discussed in the Pulpit? by J. J. Slayer; Alexander Campbell, by B. L. Smith. There will also be addresses by A. Baker, J. A. Lord, Robert Moffett, and others.

We call attention to the notice elsewhere of "The New Century Knights," an organization for boys, which is being established and furthered by Dr. W. B. Palmore, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. The purpose of the organization is shown in the pledge which all members are required to take: "It is my purpose to be something and to do something for the betterment of the world, and my determination never to use profanity, alcohol or tobacco in any form." Dr. Palmore has done much practical reform work and we are glad to call attention to this effort to supplement the work of reform by an effort toward the prevention of vice. For further information about the new organization address Dr. W. B. Palmore, 1414 Locust St., St. Louis.

The September Offering.

In 1823 there gathered in a saloon tent in St. Louis, a company of gamblers, their breath fetid with the fumes of liquor. In the midst of their drunken glee one of the men sprang to his feet, and throwing his revolver with a crash upon the gambling table, shouted out, "Boys, we'll see that Jesus Christ never comes west of the Mississippi won't we?" And they all shouted, "We will." But Christ has come west of the Mississippi and with him the churches which have given moral backbone and fiber to this great western country, without which all material prosperity would be vanity.

No small part of the making of church work permanent has been the effort of the various Church Extension Boards of the Protestant Churches. West of the "Father of Waters" 90 per cent. of all the church buildings have been aided in their erection by church extension funds, more than 30,000 having been helped in this way.

The Board of Church Extension of the Christian Church was organized in October 1888, because of a cry that came up from the growing west, saying, "You have sent out your evangelists, preached the gospel and organized us into congregations, but there has been no provision made for helping us to get the necessary buildings, without which the religious organization leads a hazardous life."

The Christian Church, at its national convention at Springfield, Ill., heeded the cry, and in 1888 the work was incorporated and a special fund of $10,662 was turned over to the new board, to which the brethren have added during the last thirteen years $283,000. So that we had on August 1st, 1901, nearly $300,000 in the church extension fund.

We would remind you that this is a permanent fund. The money is loaned to the churches, not given. It is loaned to pay the last debt on the property after the church building is completed, and only after all debts are paid in cash except what the sum from the extension fund will pay. Thus, when the loan is closed, the church is out of debt in the town where it is located, and is simply in debt to its own brethren.

The loan is to be returned to the board in five equal annual installments, with only 4 per cent. interest. The interest charge being made to pay the current expenses of handling the fund and procuring new money with which to build it up.

Several splendid features characterize a plan like this church extension plan. It is a permanent fund. The money builds one church, comes back in five years and builds another, and goes on building church homes after the donors have gone from earth. Time and vandal hands may destroy monuments in the cemetery, but not so when you put money into this fund to build monuments to God.

The struggling missions aided by this fund raise $3 for every dollar loaned by the board. The missions first help themselves, then call upon the board to help them. They are indeed worthy. They are made self-reliant by paying back the loan.

By means of this fund's encouragement the church is early started in a new community, thus going into a town in its inception, getting property when cheap and shaping the religious thought of the new community.

The board has assisted in building churches all over the land. More than 550 churches have been built in forty states and territories and the Dominion of Canada. More than 200 churches have paid back all they have borrowed.

The board is seeking to lift the extension fund to a half million by 1905. The Kansas City Convention recommended this.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST urges all preachers, elders and churches to join in so worthy an effort in the September offering for church extension.

Minnesota Letter.

Readers of the Minnesota letter will remember that a few weeks ago Rev. Wm. Baier, then pastor of the Free Will Baptist Church of Winona, came to our people at Rochester, Minn.

Bro. Baier spent last Lord's day with the Mankato church, preaching for us in the morning, and I wish to write some interesting things about him. He is a German. His father, Rev. C. H. Baier, is a missionary, sent by the regular Baptists of Germany among the Germans of Russia. He has been engaged in that work over 30 years. He does not dare to work among the real Russians; his work is solely among the Germans who have emigrated to Russia under a special arrangement with the government. The son, Wm. Baier, was born in Russia in 1870 and lived there with his father till he was 18 years old. When his time came to enter the regular army of Russia at the age of 18, he escaped the authorities and fled to this country. In 1888 he landed in New York with $4.00 in his pocket and not a word of English in his head. He began life in the new world as a day laborer in a garden; was soon converted to Christ; worked his way through the German departments of Rochester University and Theological Seminary; filled the chair of Greek in Parker College at Winnebago City, Minn.; was pastor of the Free Will Baptist churches at Blue Earth City and Winona; came to us in June, 1901.

His sermon Lord's day morning was a clear and forceful setting forth of the new birth. He speaks excellent English, his slight brogue in no way detracting from the pleasure of the hearer.

J. K. Shellenberger, the manager of our missionary forces, is endeavoring to plant a church in Winona and to put Bro. Baier in charge. It is the opportunity of the year in Minnesota. Winona is a beautiful and wealthy city of 20,000 people. Some of our people live there and a number of Free Will Baptists are ready to come with us. Bro. Baier is acquainted with the field, stands well in the city and is anxious to undertake the work.

If the Winona work cannot be opened up at present it seems to me that Bro. Baier ought to be used in some mission among the Germans. He has a thorough German education and is able to work among the most intelligent of his people.

The Minnesota State Convention will assemble at Austin, August 26. The Ministerial Association will occupy the first evening and the following half day with the following program: Monday evening, address by T. J. Dow. Tuesday morning, address by E. A. Orr; address by J. M. Elam.

At 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon the missionary society will begin its program, a brief abstract of which here follows: Reports from officers. Address by H. D. Williams, "The Sunday school as a Factor in Evangelization." Evening, address by A. D. Harmon. Wednesday morning, C. W. B. M. session. Wednesday afternoon, M. C. M. S. Symposium on "Open Doors in Minnesota," led by W. W. Divine. George T. Halbert on the National Convention. "What Can Scattered Disciples Do?" Sarah Ankeney. "The Plea of the Disciples," by C. J. Tanner.

The convention will be short but good. Everybody in our Minnesota churches expects to attend the Minneapolis Convention and hence the Austin Convention is liable to be slighted—a thing which should not occur.

Need of Large Funds for Entering Cities.

Men and money for the cities! This is a cry that our people well may raise as a slogan for the next decades. A few George Muckleys for our city pulpits, and a few such thousands as he is able to gather for city buildings, would send us miles ahead in our siege of the metropolitan Gibaltars. Perhaps it would be better to say tens of thousands, for it is large sums that we must learn to expend before we can adequately enter the cities.

Our people have been used to rural giving. We have never yet learned the large size of things that city life shows us in these opening years of the twentieth century. But we shall learn it. Our colleges must teach it. They must make men who are equipped for city work, and who can impress on their congregations that large things can be and must be done by our people in the great centres of population.

America is a big place. It thinks big things, does big things, and has a big future. We must wake up to the bigness of the age and demonstrate—what is actually the fact—that we are a big people with a big plea. There is no doubt at all of the size and importance of our movement. It has worked hard, but not long, for recognition, and has gained it. The multitudes of America have seen us advancing and have saluted us at last, and kindly. The people of the great towns are waiting to welcome us—yes, and to join us.

But there is no move that goes these days without money and lots of money. Give the Church Extension Board money, then, plenty of money. Do not tie their hands and let them stand fingers in mouths, at the city-gates, unable to enter. Let the Disciples of Christ arouse to the size of the age and do large things for our people and our plea!

Ohio Letter.

A. Skidmore will hold a meeting for the historic Dutch Fork Church in West Virginia early in September. He preached at this church when a student at Bethany twenty-four years ago.

W. R. Walker, who has been for three years with the Martinsburg, Bladensburg and Eden churches in Knox county, has been called to the pastorate of the North Baltimore Church. He will be a good man for the church. District No. 1 of which he has been the efficient secretary is loath to give him up.

S. J. White, of Missouri, has been visiting in Ohio. The churches at Ashland and Millersburg for which he formerly ministered have been delighted to hear him again. Why doesn't some Ohio church that wants a good pastor lasso Bro. White and keep him here?

Samuel H. Forrer, of Barnesville, will take the Fostoria mission. This is a difficult field, but the state board feels that they have the right man.

The brethren at Millersburg, under the leadership of P. H. Welsheimer, are starting a building enterprise. They will build a front on the present structure which, when completed, will make an excellent house.

The Christian people of Ohio are greatly stirred up over the action of the state board of agriculture in deciding to keep open fair on Sunday, Sept. 1. This is the first year the fair has ever been held two weeks and hence the Sunday opening is a new question. But the public conscience is being greatly agitated and therefore educated and the board, like the World's Fair and Pan-American managements, will find they have reckoned without their hosts. The Disciples of Christ ought above all people to keep sacred the first day of the week. The best rebuke to our public servants is to stay away from our fair altogether.

Loyalty to Our Church Schools.

The paramount issue among the Virginia Disciples is the establishment of one or more church schools in the state and greater loyalty in their support than has heretofore existed in the maintenance of those already established elsewhere. A few of our people send their boys and girls to our church schools beyond the limits of this state, but at least 95 per cent. of the children of the Disciples of Virginia are educated in the state schools and institutions of learning owned and controlled by other churches. If we are to meet the demands of the twentieth century upon us in the Old Dominion, we must educate. There is but one chartered institution in the state which is owned and controlled by Disciples. That institution is Tazewell College. This school has been in operation for nine years. Last year it enrolled 188 pupils. The Christian Church at Tazewell has appointed a committee, of which Philip Johnson, pastor, is chairman; Geo. W. Gillespie, president of Bank of Clinch Valley, is treasurer, and J. N. Harman, secretary. This committee is authorized to raise money to purchase this property, further enlarge its grounds and improve its buildings, and take control of same as a church school.

The work heretofore done by this institution will commend it to the brotherhood as worthy to receive into its halls their boys and girls to be trained for the great duties of life. This college is located in the bluegrass section of southwest Virginia, in one of the most healthful sections in the state. It is 2,500 feet above sea level. During the nine years it has been in operation there has not been a death or a case of serious sickness among the students of the boarding department. The tenth session opens September 3, 1901, with fine prospects for a successful year.

To me the most humiliating statement that can be truthfully made concerning the Virginia Disciples is that up to this time they have not had a single school which they could call their own. I believe that our people in Virginia, if they were inspired with proper loyalty to our educational interests, could build and successfully maintain at least three, if not four, good preparatory schools in the state, and these could be placed on a paying basis within the next twelve months. To this end will our brethren of the ministry make at least one speech or preach one sermon to their respective congregations within the next few weeks, in which they will emphasize this great need, and encourage their people to go forward in this work?

I am thoroughly conversant with the educational conditions prevalent among our people in seven of the eleven districts of Virginia, and I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment there is hardly a church in all these seven districts from whose membership from one to five students could not be turned into our own schools, if the preachers of these churches would enthusiastically throw their influence in that direction. We have churches in these districts that are dying for the lack of qualified ministers to fill their pulpits, therefore, I beseech you, brethren, by the needs of our people, by the simplicity and power of our plea and by our loyalty to the cause of primitive Christianity, that you arouse yourselves to the appreciation of your duty and opportunity in this respect.

Missouri Mission Notes.

This is the hardest convention season for Missouri in the last decade. It has been so very hot and dry that nearly every convention had to be shortened up on account of the weather. Even in the northwest, where we usually have such great conventions, it has been hard to get the people out. But there has not been a single intimation on the part of any one that we ought to draw back. Retreat is not in the thought of the people.

Receipts have been cut to almost nothing. A large number of the churches put off their state collection till the very last, and many others let it slip clear over into next year. We urge upon all such to read again the article of the president of the state board, W. F. Richardsou, on the straits in which we are placed and, remembering that we are in the last month, proceed at once to make the promise good. We have depended on these promises.

The state convention is nearly here—Sept. 16-19, Mexico, Mo. I am crowding the railroads as hard as I dare to secure the half-rate and I think I will succeed. Lodging and breakfast will be free; dinner and supper will be served at 25 cents each. The old Central Hotel opposite the Ringo House has been secured and meals will be served there and the hotel rooms will make ideal committee rooms. Everything is being done that can be to make your stay at Mexico a comfortable and happy one. The program will be found in this issue and the committee having the matter in charge believe that it is one of the best ever presented to a Missouri convention. The C. W. B. M. part is not quite ready, but will be very soon. We believe that the report will show a great year's work.

What remains to make this one of the best conventions we have ever had in Missouri? 1. You must come. It depends largely upon you. 2. The preachers especially should set it down that "I am going." What better thing can a church do than send its preacher? Many of them never have a vacation, but do enjoy these state gatherings. Make his heart glad by raising the needful funds and sending him. 3. Every church which has not as yet sent a contribution to our treasury should do so at once. This will enable us to meet our obligations and to make such a report that the convention shall be one great song of thanksgiving. Let us hear from you.

"Played Out"

Is one of the curious expressions used for worked out. Many a woman drops into a chair, in utter weariness "all played out," and wonders why she feels so weak. She has not yet realized that the general health is so intimately related to the local health of the womanly organism, that weakness must follow womanly diseases.

Restoration of the general health invariably follows the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the periods, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces refreshing sleep.

There is no substitute for "Favorite Prescription," for there is nothing "just as good" for womanly ills.

"I wish to advise the suffering women of this great land, of the good I have received from Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" writes Mrs. Mary Shappell, of Columbus Grove, Putnam Co., Ohio. "For four years I had been a sufferer from female troubles, and at times was unable to do even the housework for three in the family. I had such pains that I suffered almost death dozens of times, but after taking five bottles of your medicines I can truthfully say that my health was greatly improved. I have a good appetite and am gaining in flesh right along. This spring is the first time in five years that I have done my house cleaning all by myself and without the least fatigue whatever. I hope all suffering women may find relief as I have done."

"My gain in weight has been just ten pounds, and I am still gaining."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1008 large pages, paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of mailing only, or for cloth-bound book, send 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Bro. Harris has resigned at Grant City and is now located at Stanberry. The church at Grant City gave him up reluctantly. The pulpit is now vacant and is worthy of some good man.

The church at Pattonsburg is without a preacher and also the one at Jamison. Bro. Adams lives at Pattonsburg and preaches to surrounding churches. He has a son that ought to be in the ministry.

Bro. J. B. Mayfield is doing a fine work in his new field at Gallatin. With a new preacher and an elegant new building, Gallatin ought to do great things. Bro. Mayfield has not yet been able to move his family because he could not get a residence. The time is coming when the churches will have to build parsonages.

Recently I had the pleasure of preaching at Cameron. Bro. White was taking his vacation. After a service of six years he is stronger with his people than ever before.

The Mormons have nearly taken Stewardsville. What stewards these people are! Who would like to stand in their shoes in the day of judgment? Where are Bro. McClure and Bro. Braden? 'Tis awful to think what fools we mortals are.

Bro. R. C. Watson, of St. Joseph, grows old beautifully. He is doing a fine work in his mission field—additions nearly every Lord's day.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

While the district meeting attendance at Pleasant Hill was light, owing to the one prevailing condition, the entertainment of the delegates was not neglected, for T. M. Gregg and his pleasant family are not built that way, neither is their interest in Bible-school work shortened by minor matters. I doubt if there is another church or school in the state that has felt the impulse of any one person as has Pleasant Hill the touch of her pastor, C. E.

That was a worthy and righteous thing that the Plattsburg district decided to do for Mitchell Park, St. Joseph, namely, help them build a good house of worship. This little band has gone right along since the "Webster Bros." first began their mission school in the hall. When J. A. McKenzie located with them, their growth was rapid, and these good, sacrificing saints have given nearly all their earnings to the work of God. They deserve the help of their brethren. Their school is growing all the time and there are additions at nearly every service.

The First Church school under J. M. Irvine is moving forward, reporting two hundred and eight at the lowest record this season. While C. M. Chilton is said to have a full house every Sunday morning and has announced to carry on the war all summer. Their Endeavorers gave a moonlight excursion on the river and the boat was crowded with people. The North Side Mission, under Will E. Woodson, is taking active steps toward permanent work in that territory, so that all the work in the city is upward and onward.

Maryville will spend about $5,000 on their house before the next Bible-school convention meets with them and we are even now appointing county Bible school superintendents that will make it in their way to work up big delegations from each of the schools in their respective counties. So that one year in advance we are planning for a great convention in the garden spot of the earth.

Remember, one and all, that Sunday, Oct. 7th, is Missouri Bible school Rally Day, and that we will send you sample invitations, programs, recitations and all else needed to make the day a great day in your records.

First quarterly payment is due and should be sent in immediately, for we are to turn over the new leaf this year. You said so, did you not?

The Spiritual Side of Our Plea

By A. B. JONES

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

Sunday-School Periodicals

The Sunday-School Publications issued by the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY of St. Louis, are in use in a little over Two Thirds of the Sunday-schools connected with the Christian Church in America, as shown by the statistics in the last Annual Year Book, among which are most of the prosperous and progressive ones. There is no good reason why a large proportion of the other fractional One Third should not also be thus furnished, as we have abundant facilities for supplying all. The list of Publications is complete in every particular, and supply every want. It consists, in part, of the following:

Four Lesson Annuals.

1. The Lesson Commentary for Teachers and Advanced Classes: $1.00 per copy, post-paid; $9.00 per doz. not post-paid.
2. The Lesson Helper for the Senior Classes and Teachers: 35 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $3.60 per doz., not prepaid.
3. The Lesson Mentor for Junior Classes: 25 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.40 per dozen, not prepaid.
4. The Lesson Primer for the Primary Classes: 20 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

Four Lesson Quarterlies.

1. The Bible Student for Teachers and Advanced Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 70 cts.; 25, $1.60; 50, $3.20; 100, $6.00.
2. The Scholar's Quarterly for the Senior Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 40 cents; 25, 90 cents; 50, $1.60; 100, $3.00.
3. The Youth's Quarterly for Junior Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; ten copies or more to one address, 21-2 cents per copy, per quarter.
4. The Primary Quarterly for Primary Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; five copies or more to one address, 2 cents per copy per quarter.

Three Weeklies.

1. Our Young Folks, a large 16-page Illustrated Weekly, nearly four times as large as the ordinary Sunday-school paper, for Sunday-school Teachers, Advanced Pupils, Christian Endeavorers, and in fact for all Working Members of the Christian Church, with a well-sustained department also for the Home Circle, adapted to the wants of the whole family. Single copy, 75 cents per year; in clubs of 20 or more, 50 cents—12 1-2 cents per quarter.
2. The Sunday-School Evangelist for the Boys and Girls of the Intermediate Department, with bright Pictures, Lessons and Entertaining Stories. In clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 32 cents per year—8 cents per quarter.
3. The Little Ones, for the Little Folks, with Beautiful Colored Pictures in every number. In clubs of not less than 5 copies, 25 cents a copy per year—6 1-4 cents per quarter.

Concerning Samples.

If your school has not been using these publications, samples of all, except the Lesson Annuals, may be had Free for the asking. Your School deserves the Best Supplies Published, especially when they are to be had at the Lowest Rates.

Iowa.

Will our brotherhood of the state of Iowa give heed to a single request: You know already that the greatest convention that we have ever held in the state will meet in Cedar Rapids, Sept. 9-13. We have been praying and planning to make this convention one of great power and enthusiasm. Our people throughout the state need the sympathy, help and inspiration of your presence. But do you want entertainment? We are preparing an entertainment directory. It will be printed and issued in book form on Sept. 8. It will contain all the names and addresses of people in our city who take delegates. It will also contain the names of the delegates whom they are to entertain. This means that you must drop us a card at once, informing us of the numbers giving their names coming from your church. You will get lodging and breakfast free. Dinners and suppers will be served at the church. When you get off the train you will be handed our directory. In it you will find your names together with names and city addresses of the persons with whom you stop. This will help you and will be a very great help to us. But we must have your names just as soon as we can get them in order to complete this directory. Make up your delegation at once and send in the name of every member of that delegation. Send all names to

Iowa Notes.

The church at Cedar Rapids extends a hearty invitation to all Iowa to attend the state convention there Sept. 9-13. In order to accommodate the large attendance that is expected, one of the largest auditoriums in the city has been engaged for the evening sessions. The railroads have granted a one and one-third rate for the round trip on the certificate plan. This convention will mean much to our work in northern Iowa and we should go there 1,000 strong.

Lawrence Wright is in a good meeting at Dumont. The excessive heat has made a large attendance out of the question. He has a good tabernacle, preaches good sermons and is having a good hearing. There was one baptism last Sunday. He is an architect as well as a preacher. He has the best tabernacle plans that I know of. Not a board is cut and the plan is so simple that any one can erect the building, and it is cheaper and better than a tent. Send $1 to him at Jefferson and he will send plans and specifications for different sizes:

J. P. Martindale closed a six weeks' meeting at Goldfield, July 28. There were two baptisms. The brethren speak very highly of his work. They have $1,100 subscribed for a church building and will organize with about 25 or 30 members.

Geo. C. Ritchie, who is now in an excellent meeting at Wellman, will soon close his work at Kirta to accept the pastorate of the First Christian Church, Salem, Ore. We are sorry to lose him. Don't fail to send in your statistical card and pay your apportionment for Iowa missions. B. S. DENNY, Cor. Sec.

Southern Illinois Ministerial Association.

The annual convention of the S. I. M. A. for 1901 was held at Cairo, July 22 to 25. The program had been carefully prepared by Clark Braden, pastor of the Cairo church. It was the purpose to lead the convention into a thorough study of the restoration movement and the proper attitude of the churches of Christ to other religious bodies.

No effort was spared in advertising the convention and it was well attended. The program called for lectures by President Rossborough, Clark Braden, C. C. Redgrave, W. L. Crim, C. W. Tate, W. A. Meloan, C. S. Towne. All of these were present and responded with able and helpful addresses except W. A. Meloan.

At the Wednesday evening session the convention, with great enthusiasm, adopted a resolution endorsing C. C. Redgrave's illustrated lecture, "In the Footsteps of the Pioneers."

One pleasing feature of the convention was the large number of the older preachers in attendance.

On account of the unpleasant weather the convention adjourned at the close of the third day instead of occupying four days.

The following officers were elected: President, G. W. Tate, West Salem; vice-president, R. H. Robertson, DuQuoin; secretary, Walter Kline, Robinson; treasurer, H. Y. Kellar, Effingham.

WALTER KLINE, secretary.

Cheap Excursions to Utah.

While there are tourist rates to Salt Lake City and Ogden and return in effect every day, a special opportunity is afforded to visit the World's greatest sanitarium and health and pleasure resort through a series of cheap excursions to leave Chicago, St. Louis and Missouri river points July 1st to 9th inclusively, and September 1st to 10th inclusive, at rate of $40.00 from Chicago, $36.00 from St. Louis and $30.00 from Omaha, Kansas City, St. Joseph, etc., etc. On July 10th to August 31st inclusive, round trip rate to St. Lake and Ogden will be $44.50 from Chicago, $39.50 from St. Louis and $32.00 from Missouri river stations; proportionate rates from intermediate points. These dates and rates are subject to change.

No place in the universe presents such a complement of attractions as Salt Lake City. It is the place of the great Mormon Temple and Tabernacle, the seat of ecclesiastical authority of the Saints and the home of their prophet. It is quaint and curious and picturesque in environment. The summer climate is incomparable. There are cool mountain and lake resorts near by, the greatest of which is Saltair Beach on Great Salt Lake. Here you can float upon the surface of the water almost a mile above sea-level. Within the limits of the city are Warm Sulphur and Hot Springs, parks, drives and beautiful canyons. Furthermore, the trip to Utah by way of Denver and Colorado Springs over the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY in connection with either the Denver & Rio Grande or Colorado Midland railroads is one of unequalled splendor. The scenery is the most magnificent in America. Send two cents postage for copy "Salt Lake City—the City of the Saints," to Geo. W. Heintz, General Passenger Agent Rio Grande Western Railway, Salt Lake City.

LIFE OF GEN. W. T. SHERMAN.

It may be difficult to believe, but it is nevertheless a fact, that we are offering the Memoirs of Gen. W. T. Sherman, written by himself—a magnificent volume of 954 pages, printed in large type on the best book paper and bound in finest cloth binding, for Seventy-five Cents, prepaid. This is the standard life of Sherman, published by the Chas. L. Webster Co. We have come into possession of a number of copies, which we offer thus cheaply. The regular price is Two Dollars. Our special price is

Book Notes.

It is not out of place, we believe, for us to occasionally remind our patrons of what the Christian Publishing Company has done and is doing in both bettering and cheapening the literature of the Disciples of Christ. Some time ago we definitely announced that it would be our constant aim to make it as easy as possible for our people to secure good books, and this policy we have steadfastly adhered to. A new catalogue was issued, in which prices were very generally reduced. In many instances the price of books was reduced one-half, and in some instances even more. We grouped together certain sets or combinations of volumes, styled "libraries," and offered these at exceedingly low prices. We introduced the installment, or time payment plan, whereby responsible persons could replenish their libraries on very easy monthly payments. New books were issued at lower prices than formerly prevailed. In short, we have done everything in our power to induce the members of our churches to supply themselves and their families with good books. In doing this, we believe we have merited the gratitude and thanks and the practical support of all those who appreciate the value of good literature. It is with much gratification that we have read the hundreds of appreciative letters that we have received, and have seen the growth of our book business until it is now almost double what it was two years ago.

But we are by no means content with what we have accomplished, and the results. We make a conservative estimate when we say that out of the 1,200,000 members of our churches in the United States, not one person in two hundred ever buys a book of a religious character, or any volume of the distinctive literature of the Disciples of Christ! To the thoughtful person, this must be a startling statement. Books are published which, according to their merit and worth, should have a circulation of at least one hundred thousand among our own people, but the fact is that when any one of our books—and by "our books" we mean those volumes which are designed for our own brotherhood—reaches a circulation of two thousand copies it is regarded as a big success. Our people are not a book reading people. By their refusal or neglect to read religious literature they remain, in a great measure, ignorant of the great cause to which they are nominally devoted. Lack of knowledge must inevitably cause a lack of zeal and religious activity, and hence the cause suffers. The wise pastor, who desires an intelligent, zealous, cultured congregation, will not neglect to continually urge upon his people, in public and private, the necessity of securing and reading the best books of our own literature.

Continuing what we have been saying in the preceding paragraphs, we may mention one book—The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century—recently issued by the Christian Publishing Company. It is a volume of peculiar and especial interest and value to the Disciples of Christ, being the first and only complete and authentic account of the beginnings, the progress and the growth of our religious movement. It is the work of a number of the ablest men in our ranks, and is edited by the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, J. H. Garrison. The sentiment of those who have read this work is that it is the most important addition to our literature in ten years. It might naturally be supposed that such a work as this would be immediately desired by every Disciple of Christ who knew of its publication, and that we would have difficulty in printing and binding new editions rapidly enough to supply the demand for it. This is what ought to be, but it isn't. The book is selling well, compared with other books having to do with religious matters, but, to be frank, we have not nearly sold the 50,000 copies that we should have sold since the work was issued. It is altogether probable that most of those who read these lines will some day read The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, and when they do, they will reproach themselves for not having done so sooner. It is a most helpful, instructive and interesting volume. It is printed on first-class paper and bound substantially, as is fitting for a volume that is to be often handled. Price, postpaid, $2.00.

During the summers of 1898 and 1899 the author toured on a bicycle through England, Scotland, Wales, France, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Italy. Traveling on a wheel, he was able to see Europe as it cannot be seen by the tourist who is whirled over the Continent by train. He has written most delightfully and entertainingly of his travels, of his experiences with odourate officials and unsophisticated peasants, of his struggles with the several European languages, of the customs of the common people, of Alpine scenery, Swiss lakes, etc.

During the past year we have sold more copies of the several books written by Alexander Campbell than in many years previous. This is partly due to the great reduction in price of these works, especially when sold together as one set, and partly because of the general revival of interest in Mr. Campbell and his writings. Mr. Campbell is not our prophet and lawgiver, and we are in no sense bound to endorse, believe or practice what he wrote and taught, but, nevertheless, we owe a great deal to him as a great thinker, and the one who led tens of thousands out of the wilderness into the highways of truth. Every preacher among us, at least, should have Campbell's works among his books, and should thoroughly understand his doctrines. We are still offering Campbell's complete works, comprising eight substantial volumes and three pamphlets, together with Grafton's Life of Campbell and Garrison's Alexander Campbell's Theology, these forming our Campbell

Library, for only $10. Any single volume of Campbell's may now be purchased for one-third less than the old price.

Hundreds of thousands of people are reading The Crisis this summer, taking a keen delight in following the fortunes of Stephen Brice, Virginia Carvel and the other characters in Mr. Churchill's charming novel. The book is worthy to be read by anyone, and well deserves the tremendous sale it is having. Whether viewed simply as a story, or as a history of the people, the customs and the politics of the Mississippi Valley during the period from 1855 to 1865, it is an admirable piece of literary work. The book may be secured from the Christian Publishing Co. Price, $1.50.

ARKANSAS.

Gravette, Aug. 1.—Our meeting closed here last night with 41 additions: 28 baptisms, 9 from the Baptists, the others from M. E. and Presbyterians.—A. J. BARNES, pastor, E. E. DAVIDSON, evangelist.

Little Rock.—The following items show the work of Arkansas state missions for the month. Brother Kincaid makes a good report for June: Sermons, 8; visits, 90; additions, 3; money raised, for all purposes, $115. Brother Monroe, at Mena, in June reports sermons, 15; additions, 4; baptisms, 3; pledges to state missions, $20; collected for state missions, $2.50. They have put in a baptistery costing $20. Brother Thompson has had to go home to recuperate after a severe attack of typhoid fever, leaving the pulpit at Pine Bluff vacant until he returns. Brother Walker, Arkadelphia, has had smallpox and been quarantined in his home. This, of course, has interfered with his work. Brother Ratliffe, Southwest District, reports 6 added at Wilton, and 4 at Cook Spring. When writing was in a meeting at Falcon. Joe Jones, Caddo Gap District, reports a meeting at Bethsaida in which there were 25 additions, 24 baptisms; and the same day he closed at Bethsaida he commenced a meeting at Amity, his home; one confession up to writing. Brother Jones has only had one night's rest in three weeks. As far as heard from this gives baptisms, 28; total additions, 30.—E. C. BROWNING.

ILLINOIS

Bunker Hill, Aug. 2.—We are just beginning a tent meeting here where there is no Church of Christ and but few members. It is pioneer ground.—E. O. SHARPE, MR. AND MRS. G. B. WILLIAMSON Saunemin.—Four confessions recently.—J. C. LAPPIN.

Windsor, July 29.—Had two additions at Humboldt yesterday, man and wife. He was a Baptist preacher and a good worker.—A. H. HARRELL.

INDIANA.

Danville, Aug. 1.—Four added here last Sunday. One by letter and three confessions, two of whom were teachers in city schools. I go to Monroe County for meetings during my vacation.—EUGENE T. MARTIN.

Jeffersonville, July 30.—On last Lord's day there were five additions to the church at Bethel in this county. Four were confessions. Next month we intend to continue the meeting. The Sunday school under the leadership of A. B. Hutsell is doing well.—F. E. ANDREWS.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Grove, Aug. 1.—We commenced our meeting at Gravette, Ark., July 21 with 41 additions. Nine of these came from the Baptists, several from the Methodists and C. P's., one reclaimed and 25 by baptism. On July 30 I baptized 10 persons, four of whom were old, the youngest being 61 and the oldest 76. One of the remarkable features of this meeting was the large per cent. of persons above 40 who were baptized. I am now at Grove, I. T., for 10 days to see if I can collect the few scattered brethren here and set them to work. I go from here to Hartville, Mo.—E. E. DAVIDSON.

IOWA.

Council Bluffs.—One confession and baptism at our Wednesday evening prayer-meeting this week.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Riverton, July 30.—I began a promising meeting here last night. Six were added to the Hamburg congregation in a schoolhouse meeting recently held. Audiences at Hamburg are smaller than ever before on account of the hot weather.—H. W. CIES, pastor of the church at Hamburg.

KANSAS.

Chanute, Aug. 2.—I have been located with Chanute Church two years last Sunday. Half time at Yates Center until Jan. 1. During the two years there have been 190 additions to the churches, 110 by confession. Preached 367 sermons. During the past year I held three meetings besides my regular pastoral work. I have decided to close my work here about Sept. 1, when I will be ready to locate elsewhere.—W. T. ADAMS.

MISSOURI.

Elmo, Aug. 3.—I closed a 11 days' meeting at Elmo, Friday night, Aug. 2, with five additions, as follows: Two confessions, two from the M. E. South and one from the M. E.—CHAS. L. BEAL, Central Christian College, Albany.

Huntsville, Aug. 5.—One added by letter yesterday morning. H. A. Northcutt will begin a meeting here Aug. 12. He held us a great meeting several years ago.—LOUIS S. CUPP.

Kirkville, July 30.—Have just closed two years' pastorate for the church in Kirkville, during which time there have been received into this church 296 members, 96 of these by statement, 70 by letter, 125 by confession and baptism. Have preached 156 sermons, officiated at 42 funerals, made 32 speeches, officiated at 32 weddings and made an average of 20 calls per day. We have enlarged our church at a cost of $3,500, all paid but about $500. We have not given as much for missions this year because of this work. I have also held seven protracted meetings during this time.—H. A. NORTH CUTT.

Princeton, July 29.—We have had six added since coming here—two by baptism, one by statement, one from the Latter Day Saints, one, an elder in the church from which he came, from the Christian Mission, and one last night from the Baptists. I find many marks of good work from my predecessor, H. S. Gilliam, who is now at Maysville. We raised for foreign work about $20, for state work about $17, for Orphans' Home, pledges and all, $130, for district work we pledged $15.—J. E. DAVIS.

Triplett, Aug. 3.—Twelve additions to the present; have to close Sunday night. Begin a meeting at Junction City, Ky., next week. Bro. Kerr, from Gallatin, is leading the music in our meeting here. He is a fine singer.—W. G. SURBER.

Windsor, July 30.—I have just closed a two weeks' meeting here with nine additions; Bible-school organized and money raised for a preacher. We want to locate some good preacher in Morgan county to work the different points.—R. B. HAVENER.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Chandler, July 29.—Three additions at Luther yesterday, and two at Valley View Annex the Sunday before. Our Christian Endeavorers in the church here are proving themselves pastoral helpers. They held one of the best services of the year last evening. I contemplate devoting a week or so in August to an Oklahoma tour.—A. M. HARRAL.

Norman, July 28.—I preached for the church at Norman this morning and evening. One confession.—J. G. CREASON.

TEXAS.

Denton, July 29.—Preached yesterday at Denton, where Bro. Hallam ministers. One confession and one addition by statement.—JOE S. RILEY.

San Angelo, July 29.—The church here is advancing, and it is said that a deeper interest is being shown by all than has been manifested in San Angelo for years. Improvements have been made upon the church edifice and parsonage. A Senior Endeavor Society has been organized with 28 members and increased to 32; 17 have been added to the church. B. B. THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. The Episcopal Convention at San Francisco.

The meeting of this convention at San Francisco will afford an opportunity for many to travel over the Northern Pacific-Shasta Route. The Northwestern scenery of the United States, it is admitted, is of the grandest in the country and the fact that the Yellowstone Park lies in this section is proof of this. No one should miss the opportunity to travel over this route. Cheap rates will apply in one direction via direct routes and in the opposite direction via Portland and the Northern Pacific. For any further information and particulars and copy of Wonderland, 1901, send six cents in stamps to Chas. S. Fee, G. P. & F. A., St. Paul, Minn.

A Larger Blessing.

BY AARON PRINCE ATEN.

To every life there cometh both
Unrest and restful joy;
In every soul some blessing is
Though mixed with base alloy;
Amid the roses beautiful
With perfume pure and sweet,
The hidden thorns with pointings sharp
Our eager graspings meet.

Content dwells not within the heart
That strives for better things,
And reaches on with eager grasp
And flies on tireless wings
To reach the bounds where blessing comes
In fullness to the soul,
And each in radiant rapture drinks
The joys that o'er him roll.

Why not have larger blessing here:
Amid the arid sands,
Though burning heat be ours to bear
And few the helping hands?
To all our spirits fullness comes,
If opened wide, our hearts
Responsive are to heavenly love
That fills and ne'er departs.

The Bogy Man.

Perhaps most parents have learned, in this enlightened age, that a child cannot be frightened or bullied into any sort of goodness that is worth having. How many children, says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion, have been terrified by stories of the "Bogy Man," of "the wolf that will come and eat them," of "the policeman who will put them in the lock-up," till their fear of the dark amounts to positive agony. Bedtime should be an hour inseparably associated with the prayer at the mother's knee, followed by a quiet talk, after which the little one settles down to a restful sleep. But instead how often does it happen that the child is tucked in bed with the admonition, "Now go right to sleep, like a good boy, for if you don't there's a big dog over there in the corner that'll come and bite you!" Go to sleep! Sheer nervous terror keeps the child awake. How can he be expected to grow up anything but timid?

Another writer in the same magazine suggests a cure for naughtiness, which, if effective, ought to fill a long-felt want. Conscientious parents realize it is necessary to encourage good impulses, and also to train the child's moral nature through the education of his faculties; but it is hard to convince them that in respect of those venial faults most children exhibit quite early neglect is better policy than discipline.

Many times a child who accidentally finds naughtiness an interesting experiment would quickly weary of it if it were not for the commotion it makes in the family. To become an offender is to become important, and nothing is more agreeable to young or old than that. One is liable in times of tedium to attract attention in some way, even if it involves making one's self odious. The desire for notoriety is, in its incipient form, simply a determination to become the center of something, and children show it as often as and even more frankly than their elders.

Is it not then desirable to make a child's small attempts at intractability dull affairs to him, so that he shall forget them? Every act that we remember well we incline to do again, and the best thing that can happen to children is to have all their good acts marked by red letters, while their minor offenses are dropped into the gulf of forgetfulness.

How They Dine in Japan.

I think probably the most entertaining experience we had in Tokio, said Miss Lillian Griffin in the Baltimore Sun, was a Japanese dinner.

We had been invited to dine at the Maple Club, and at the entrance a bevy of small servants went down on all fours in salutation, removed our shoes and escorted us to the dining-room, a small apartment minus chairs, table, everything. We were expected to sit in native fashion, on our heels on the floor, which was covered with faultlessly white mats. Our places were marked by a circle of small, flat blue cushions. Sitting upon one's heels is a difficult position for foreigners to assume, and almost impossible to maintain. With inward misgivings, but with a show of great ease, I subsided upon my cushion and for fully five minutes my troubles seemed over. Alas! soon numbness attacked my astonished members, then paralysis; finally movement or inaction became alike torture. "How long can I stand it?" I thought, uneasily, as I looked toward my friend, and in her eyes caught an answering signal of distress.

At that moment a troupe of little serving-girls—musumes—entered with the dinner. First we were served with tiny handleless cups of tea and most beautiful confectionary, shaped into pink and green maple leaves and delicate rose-tinted waxen mysteries. They were works of art, but I quailed before them, and for me that course was purely ornamental. Before each of us was then placed a lacquered table about a foot high, holding several dishes. I have never been considered tall, but I felt awkwardly so for those surroundings, especially that doll's table and those toy dishes.

At first glance I did not recognize a single acquaintance among the delicacies; so I began to take an inventory of them. On a piece of glass were carefully arranged thin slices of raw fish and a small bowl of dark sauce. A plate was divided in halves by a slice of white and yellow cake made of sweet and Irish potatoes. On one side of this barrier was a small piece of boiled lobster, half a microscopic bird, preserved cherries and chestnuts; on the other, two sugar-coated Irish potatoes, one white, the other red. I next uncovered a lacquered bowl. It was filled with a brown soup, in which floated pieces of fish. My neighbors were eating this with chop-sticks. Tremblingly I took up the bits of wood and tried to do likewise. With every movement those detestable chop-sticks slipped in my fingers. I worked with desperate energy, but gradually the few solid portions of my soup crumbled to nothing. For fresh material I had to turn to a gelatinous substance called soy, on which rested a piece of broiled eel.

Two little girls served sake, the rice wine of Japan, from slender, long-necked vases. Here was a fresh trial. The sake, which tasted much like diluted sherry, was served hot. I felt proud of my fortitude when I had swallowed some with an unmoved countenance. There are some very elaborate ceremonial rules for drinking this wine, which, it is needless to say, we did not observe.

One after another new and curious delicacies were placed before me, until a signal was given and the musumes rose and retired to the end of the apartment. One side of the wall slid back and revealed a picturesque group of exquisitely dressed girls. They were the maikos, or dancing girls, and their accompanists, the geishas. At first the sight of painted, powdered, marvelously costumed dancers, trailing beautiful robes, and waving tinted fans, was charming; then the monotony of it impressed me. It was not really dancing, but posing, and such neat, exact posing that I felt as though looking upon some mechanical toy, and expected every moment it would run down. All the while the wailing voices of the geishas rose higher and higher, while with an ivory striker their delicate hands sounded the strings of the samisens, a most discordant instrument. As the last plaintive note ceases the screens were drawn, and we resumed our dinner. Other dances followed at intervals until rice was brought us as a last course, and the Japanese feast was over.

A Precaution.

There was a canny Scotch farmer, who, according to the Youth's Companion, had been suffering from the aching of a troublesome tooth, and went into Glasgow for treatment. The dentist, having examined the tooth, said kindly:

"It's a very bad tooth, and I should advise you to save yourself pain and take gas, which is only a shilling more."

He showed the machine to the old man and explained its workings; how he would fall asleep for a minute or two, and awake with the tooth and pain gone. The farmer at last consented, and took out his purse.

"Never mind paying now," said the dentist, loftily.

"Hoots!" replied the Scot. "A was na thinkin' o' that; but if A'm ga'en ta sleep A thoct A wad like ta count ma siller fust."

Grape-Nuts and Cream.

An Ideal Hot Weather Breakfast.

The selection of food for hot weather is an important question. We should avoid an excess of fats, cut down the butter ration and indulge more freely in fruits and foods easy of digestion. One meat meal per day is sufficient during hot weather.

An ideal breakfast is Grape-Nuts, treated with a little cream (which, by the way, supplies the necessary fat in a very digestible form), a cup of Postum Cereal Food Coffee, hot, or if cold, it should have a little lemon juice squeezed in; then some fruit, either cooked or raw; also perhaps two slices of entire wheat bread with a very thin spread of butter. A breakfast of this sort is so perfectly adapted to the wants of the system that one goes through the heat of the day in comfort as compared with the sweaty, disagreeable condition of one improperly fed. Once put in practice, the plan will never be abandoned during the hot days, for the difference in one's personal comfort is too great to be easily forgotten.

The Irish Language.

One hears so much of the Irish brogue that one may easily forget—or never know—that there is a real Irish language which is still spoken in some parts of Ireland. It is only very distantly related to English, and is a Celtic language akin to Welsh, the Gaelic of the Scotch Highlanders, and the now extinct language of Cornwall. At the present time there is a Gaelic literary revival in Ireland and many books are being published in that language. Thomas O'Donnell, an Irish member of Parliament, writes as follows in the Review of Reviews about the Irish language and its relation to the history of the island:

"Our language is the only thing that remains to us after the struggles of centuries. Our liberty and our own land have been taken from us. While that language remains it will ever act as a Masonic bond to link a people whom misgovernment has exiled all over the globe, and who would otherwise be lost in the multitude and lost to their country. Our national poet has said: 'The language of a nation's youth is the only easy and full speech for its manhood, and for its age, and when the language of its cradle goes, itself craves a tomb.' And again: 'A nation should guard its language more than its territories—'tis a surer barrier and a stronger frontier than fortress or a river.'

"The language and the mind of Ireland mutually reacted upon each other. While the language was in the first instance the product, the growth, of the Irish mind, leaving in its idioms and forms of expression distinct characteristics of the minds which evolved it, the minds of future generations of Irishmen were shaped and developed by the language, by its expressive beauty, its prayerful and religious tendencies, its mystic charms; they grew in the natural order, forming, each one, a link in the chain of national development, each the inheritor of the wisdom, the culture, and refinement of those preceding, each drawing from the store-house of the past; and thus has been developed, not in one generation, not by forced instruction, but by slow degrees, through nearly twenty centuries, the Irish mind and the Irish language. The Irish mind was, even in pagan times, essentially religious, chaste, and idealistic, docile, dutiful to parents, passionately loyal whether to earthly chief or heavenly King, self-sacrificing and unselfish—a fitting soil on which to sow the seeds of Christianity, a soil which has brought real enduring fruit, not its semblance, or the blossom, to decay on the appearance of the storm of self-interest or self-indulgence. That mind, with its simplicity, its sincerity, and its devotion to the cause of religion, has come down to us unstained, in a language which to-day, in the wilderness of irreligion, moral depravity, selfishness, and mammon-worship, speaks only of the beauty of a simple life, relating tale after tale to exemplify the worth of self-sacrifice, of chastity and purity. Our language breathes of the time when men and nations were younger, more beautiful, and less materialized than they are to-day."

For Dyspepsia.

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. T. H. ANDREWS, late of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., says: "A wonderful remedy which gave me most gratifying results in the worst forms of dyspepsia."

The Bishop's Joke.

Bishop Watterson, of Nebraska, was once mistaken for a traveling salesman by one who met him in a railway train.
"Do you represent a big house?" asked the traveler of the bishop.
"Biggest on earth," replied the bishop.
"What's the name of the firm?"
"Lord and Church."
"Hum! Lord and Church! Never heard of it. Got branch houses anywhere?"
"Branch houses all over the world."
"That's queer. Never heard of them. Is it boots and shoes?"
"No."
"Oh, dry goods, I suppose?"
"Yes, they call my sermons that sometimes."

Getting Ready to Enjoy.

She was a little old woman, says The Northwestern Christian Advocate, who came on at a country station for her first journey by railroad. The other passengers smiled as they watched while she settled herself and her belongings as if she expected to travel around the world.
A young relative who was with her called her attention to a beautiful view of the lake, but she was so busy with tucking a veil over her bonnet that she gave it scant notice.

"Pretty soon, John. As soon as I get everything fixed all right, I'm goin' to sit back and enjoy myself," she said. "I always have been lottin' on a ride in the cars."

But her satchel, basket and box were not easily arranged to her liking and the forty-mile ride was brief.

"Already?" she exclaimed, as the name of her destination was called. "Why, I've hardly had a mite of pleasure from the journey yet! If I'd thought we were goin' to stop so soon, I wouldn't have wasted all my time fussin'."

The passengers smiled again, yet doubtless some of them were taking their life journey in much the same fashion.

A Musician's Diplomacy.

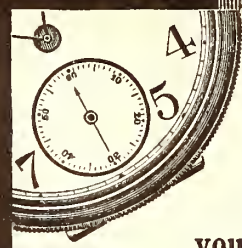

Artists and musicians who are solicited to give their services free for charity can not be blamed for feeling that those who make such requests ought to be prepared to meet them half-way.

Madame Eames, recently in London, put the matter in a new light to those who invited her to appear gratuitously for charity, says the Saturday Evening Post.

She was one afternoon at Lord Charles Beresford's, and the next day received a letter from Lady Beresford saying that two ladies present had wanted to ask a favor, but in her presence had lost courage.

"But I am not afraid of you," wrote Lady Beresford, and proceeded to say that the ladies in question, who happened to be extremely wealthy, wished her to sing for nothing for a certain charity.

Madam Eames immediately sat down and wrote a reply. It was her duty, she said, to save herself as much as possible for her operatic performances at Covent Garden, which were stipulated by contract to be two days apart, so that she might give her freshest and best to the public. She felt, however, greatly attracted toward the charity named, and would make only one condition regarding the donating of her services. She had received 300 guineas (about $1,500) for singing at Mr. W. W. Astor's and about the same amount at other private concerts. She would gladly sing for nothing at the charity concert if each one of the ladies interested, who had so kindly asked her, would donate 300 guineas to the object for which the concert was to be given.

As yet no replies from "the ladies interested" have been received. But Lady Beresford, not being one of the "interested ladies," appreciated more fully the humor of the situation.

An Iron Will with Limitations.

Two men were arguing in their club. One, a fellow of ineffable conceit, was boring everybody with boasting of the power of his will, maintaining, with much violence, that his will was stronger than that of anybody's present. An English paper records the conversation. "You are wrong there," said one of the gentlemen, "and I will prove it. Go and stand in that corner, and I will have you out of it before I have commanded you the second time."

The smart one stood in the corner, and the quiet one said:

"Come out of that corner."

The other grinned and shook his head. The quiet man sat down and looked at him steadily. Five minutes passed, and then the smart man said with a sneer:

"Don't you think you'd better give it up? I don't feel any influence at all, and I can't stand here all the evening."

"Oh, as to that," replied the quiet man, there's no hurry. I am perfectly comfortable. You recollect that there's no time limit; you are simply to come out before I ask you twice. And as I don't intend to ask you again until a week from to-day, in order to give your strong will a fair and vigorous trial, we might as well take it easily."

The man with the iron resolution sneaked out of the corner, and the experiment was declared off.—Youth's Companion.

"Marian, you have a hole as big as a quarter in the heel of your stocking," said a mother to her little daughter.

"Mamma, you exaggerate so," replied the little one. "That hole isn't bigger than fifteen cents."

He Left.

A skeptical young man confronted an old Quaker with the statment that he did not believe in the Bible. The Quaker said:

"Dost thou believe in France?"

"Yes; though I have not seen it, I have seen others who have; besides, there is plenty of corroborative proof that such a country does exist."

"Then thee will not believe anything thee or others have not seen?"

"No, to be sure I won't."

"Did thee ever see thine own brains?"

"No."

"Ever see anybody else that did?"

"No."

"Does thee believe thee has any?"

The Young man left.

The Little God and Dicky.

Mr. Richard Carr Pendleton, aged seven or thereabouts, is the hero of Miss Daskam's latest story in McClure's Magazine. He has reached that stage of his education where his fond mother thinks it best for him to go to dancing-school—which same is his particular pet aversion. Much against his will he is being groomed for that function by his patient mamma. As the process proceeds, this monologue, representing her half of the conversation, filters through the crack in the door.

"Your necktie is on the bed. No, I don't know where the blue one is—it doesn't matter; that is just as good. Yes, it is. No, you can not. You will have to wear one. Because no one ever goes without. I don't know why.

"Many a boy would be thankful and glad to have silk stockings. Nonsense—your legs are warm enough. I don't believe you. Now, Richard, how perfectly ridiculous! There is no left or right to stockings. You have no time to change. Shoes are a different thing. Well, hurry up, then. Because they are made so, I suppose. I don't know why.

"Brush it more on that side—no, you can't go to the barber's. You went last week. It looks perfectly well. I cut it? Why, I don't know how to trim hair. Anyway, there isn't time now. It will have to do. Stop your scowling, for goodness' sake, Dick. Have you a handkerchief? It makes no difference, you must carry one. You ought to want to use it. Well, you should. Yes, they always do, whether they have colds or not. I don't know why.

"Your Golden Text! The idea! No you can not. You can learn that Sunday before church. This is not the time to learn Golden Texts. I never saw such a child. Now take your pumps and find the plush bag. Why not? Put them right with Ruth's. That's what the bag was made for. Well, how do you want to carry them? Why, I never heard of anything so silly! You will knot the strings. I don't care if they do carry skates that way—skates are not slippers. You'd lose them. Very well, then, only hurry up. I should think you'd be ashamed to have them dangling around your neck that way. Because people never do carry them so. I don't know why.

"Now, here's your coat. Well, I can't help it, you have no time to hunt for them. Put your hands in your pockets—it's not far. And mind you don't run for Ruth every time. You don't take any pains with her, and you hustle her about, Miss Dorothy says. Take another little girl. Yes, you must. I shall speak to your father if you answer me in that way, Richard. Men don't dance with their sisters. Because they don't. I don't know why."

The Biograph in Education.

The biograph, or moving-picture machine, has acquired wonderful popularity during the four years since its invention, but so far it has been used chiefly as a means of amusement—a grown folks' toy. A writer in Everybody's Magazine, who gives much information about the workings of the biograph, thinks there is a great future for moving pictures in the school-room. To the insular child what more impressive method of information as to what a warship is like in all its majesty, than to show him one in motion-photography. The children of the Central States will be shown waves dashing high upon the strand, or rolling in gentle billows on the bathing beach where children are at play. There are city children, too, who can be shown harvesting and haying scenes in the great West; cows, horses and all animals, wild and tame. And for both rural and urban youngsters the mutoscope will display the Indian, the Chinaman, the Zulu—all races of men and their manners and their customs. To the geography class the mutoscope will display the capes, rivers, cities, bays, towns and historic buildings that heretofore have been but names to the book-dazed scholar. He will be shown the Muir Glacier in its mighty disintegration, Vesuvius in eruption, and Niagara's resistless flood. It will take the scholar up the Danube or down the Mississippi, or show him the wondrous panoramas of London, New York, Paris, Bombay and Canton life. To the history class the mutoscope will show the great personages of to-day, as they live and move and have their being. What more vital suggestion of the war with Spain than the two views of the Spanish warship Viscaya, one showing her at anchor in New York harbor, her captain, in bitter jest, training his cannon on the city, the other a battered wreck upon the beach of Santiago a few weeks later?

The worthy Sunday-school superintendent was illustrating the text, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Superintendent: "If I want to raise a crop of turnips, what sort of seed must I sow?" Children: "Turnip seed." Superintendent: "If I want to raise a crop of tomatoes, what kind of seed must I sow?" Children: "Tomato seed." Superintendent: "Very good. Now, if you want to raise a crop of good manhood, what kind of seed must you sow?" And an observer who kept tally reported that the school on test vote was a tie between turnip seed and tomato seed.

the annual publication of the Northern Pacific Railway will be found a distinct advance, in some respects, upon even its immediate predecessor Wonderland 1900.

Its cover designs and eight chapter headings are by Alfred Lenz, of New York, from plastique models and are splendid examples of art.

There is within the covers of the book much historical matter, some of it new, as well as purely descriptive narrative.

The three principal chapters relate to the history of the unique Northern Pacific Trademark, the Custer Battlefield in Montana, and Yellowstone Park. Each is profusely illustrated, the Trademark chapter in colors. This trademark is of Chinese origin and is 5,000 years old. Its story is a strange one.

It is safe to say that Wonderland 1901 will be in greater demand than any preceding volume of the Wonderland family, and, as heretofore it will be sent by Chas. S. Fee, St. Paul, Minn., to any address upon receipt of the postage, six cents.

Wash delicate things — handkerchiefs, laces, doilies etc. (things which one cannot send to the ordinary wash.) in Pearlina's way, viz. Soak, rinse, squeeze — directions on each packet. Spread smoothly while wet, on a mirror or window pane.

When dry they require no ironing. Grand advice for bachelors, maidens, boarders and hotel guests, and for fabrics too delicate and valuable to risk to others' hands.

Pearline is trust-worthy for washing and cleaning where ever water can be used.

MARION HARLAND

in her book "First Aid to the Young Housekeeper," says there can be little doubt of the saving in effort by use of most washing - powders and, if a trustworthy powder be used, of the saving to the fabric, over the old soap - rubbing way of washing. Users and imitators, both, have proved Pearline trust-worthy.

XXII.—That Dog Collar.

Edgar lay a long time in the country road with his sprained ankle, and at last here came Nap; and it was beginning to be morning. "I taken the medicine all right," said the tramp picking up his pipe (which Edgar had not used in his absence), "and the doc said it 'twarn't too late. I tried to tell him about you a-laying out here under the heavens, but he brashed me away same's I was a fly. And I didn't see none of the women folks. Went to liv'ry stable, and telled of you being here, and there was your horse with the broken harness and a big hallyballoo over him, and they're coming after you; but they's so slow, I knowed I could beat um afoot, which I have did." Not long after the young man was taken to his hotel, where Dr. Larry ministered to his injury. As the day wore on, Pete did not improve, but Dr. Wells said it was a good sign that she grew no worse. Mrs. Morris would have gone in person to thank the young man for his night's ride, but she could not leave her daughter a moment. So she sent a grateful message by Arthur Pendleton. As it was now known that Pete had diphtheria, her sisters and intimate associates were all forbidden to come to school, that is, Madge and Jennie, Letitia and Arthur Pendleton, and Linda May Dudley. As it would be very important for Mrs. Morris to sit up that night, she went to bed after dinner to rest up for the watch, and Miss Dollie came to occupy her place. Madge had been sent to stay at Miss Dollie's till Pete should recover, lest she take the dreadful disease, herself. Letitia could not visit anybody but Linda May, because the other girls had not been exposed to the contagion. So when Miss Dollie left home to go and take care of Pete, Linda May and Madge were left alone in the house. Pretty soon Letitia came to spend the afternoon with them. It was a beautiful afternoon, and it was all the more fun because they knew school was going on, and they didn't have to be shut up in the schoolhouse. So of course they looked upon the day as that much time gained over and above Saturday and Sunday.

"Poor Pete!" said Letitia, as they sat on the edge of Miss Dollie's front porch, "wouldn't we have fun if she was here!" "No," said Linda May, "because if she was well enough to be here, we all would have to be going to school. I'm sorry she's sick as she is, but I'm glad what she's got has scared our teachers." "I wonder," said Madge, "how long there's danger of taking diphtheria? Wouldn't it be fun if Pete got well but they was still a risk of us taking it, and we could be holding that over the heads of everybody till next spring!" "I believe I am taking it," said Linda May. "There is the funniest place just under my knee—you ought to see it!" "Well let's see it," said Madge with interest. "You come on in the hall, then." They went and examined the place. "I know what that is," said Madge, "that's a chigger-bite." "It couldn't be a chigger-bite," Linda May reasoned, "'cause I never play on the grass. I don't care, anyway, I have a funny feeling sometimes. 'Cause Pete took it in her throat's no sign I ain't taking it in my leg." "I am very sorry," said Letitia, "that this sickness is infectious. I don't think it's fun to miss school, then have to catch up. We could be improving our morals, now, if Pete hadn't had it." "Aw, Tishy, Tishy!" mocked Madge. Letitia burst into tears. "Now, Miss Letitia Pendleton!" remonstrated Linda May. "Come on, let's play and have fun. And Madge, you quit calling her that." "She's madden I'm glad," chanted Madge, "but I know what would please; bottle of—" "No fun sittin' here," said Linda May. "Well," said Madge, "what let's do?" "Somethin' bad," said Linda May. "I don't know what makes me feel bad but I do. Don't you?" "Shaw!" spoke up Letitia, forgetting that she was crying. "It takes Pete to be bad. You all don't know how." "I do," retorted Madge indignantly. "I can be just as bad as anybody." "I always feel like being wild when Aunt Dollie goes away from home," said Linda May, "I wonder why?"

"It's no fun," said Madge, "just sittin' here, saying how bad we are. We might as well be playing school. Oh, there comes Arthur, and he's got Lucifer!" At that moment Letitia's brother came up, leading the dog. "Say, Artie," called Linda May, "oh, let us have that dog to play with!" "I don't care," said Arthur, "where's Miss Dollie?" "Gone." "How gone is she?"

"She's just coming back in time to get supper." "Hurrah for her!" cried Arthur leading the dog up to the porch, "I've been to see Mr. Brown; he's laid up with his ankle; he asked me if I'd exercise this dog. Say! I want to go swimmin'. Would you kids keep this dog till I come back?" "When you comin'?" demanded Linda May apprehensively. "Oh, I'll be here in time. I won't be gone long." "Why don't you stay and visit us?" asked Madge. "Aw, I don't want to be sitting around talking to girls," said Arthur in deep disgust. "I want to swim. I ain't got no doll to nurse." "We're not nursing dolls," retorted Madge, "you stay an' we'll play Dare-base." "I don't want to play dare-base." "Well, we'll play ball, in the lot, and you can be first batter." "I don't like to play ball with girls," said Arthur frankly. "Let him go," said Letitia cuttingly; "he never had any maccommodation." "Yes, we don't want him to stay," said Linda May. "I don't see," observed Madge, "what he's hanging about now for." Even this was no use. Arthur hastened toward the mill-pond. The girls played "jacks" with a little rubber ball; then hopscotch; and "catch," with a larger ball; and "High Spy"; and By-down. And they had ever so much fun with Lucifer who, though a great coward, was of a kind disposition. They took off his collar to air his neck, and tried to teach him to "shake hands." But when you held your hand toward him he wanted to lick it, which was not pleasant. And it grew later and later, and Arthur did not come to take the dog away. But somebody came: Miss Dollie; and it was about an hour before they were looking for her. They were all in the sitting-room when they heard her voice; "Here I am, children; it's clouding up so, I was afraid to stay longer." The instant Lucifer heard her voice he jumped as if stung by a bee, stuck his tail with great force between his legs, and fled upstairs. Nor did he stop till he was under Linda May's bed, where he squeezed up against the corner of the room. But Miss Dollie did not hear his flight, and of course did not suspect his existence in her house. There was the collar and rope on the floor. Linda May grabbed it up frantically, put it on a chair and sat on it. In came Miss Dollie. "Here you all sit," she said cheerfully, "what good little girls! Letitia, your mother said you could stay and eat supper with us. We'd better have supper before this storm comes, for you know I always run to my cellar at the first big cloud. Linda May, run and shut up the little chickens." Linda May sat tight on her chair with the dog collar feeling pretty hard and sharp under her.

The Wise Decision.*

TEXT: Thus saith the Lord of hosts: In those days it shall come to pass that ten men shall take hold, out of all the languages of the nations, shall even take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you. Zech. 8:23.

The despised race becomes triumphant. There are periods in Hebrew history when this prophecy seems to have had at least a partial fulfillment; when other nations stood in awe of them, and even sought alliance with them. There was wisdom in such an act. And there is wisdom to-day in seeking alliance with those people and those nations whose God is the Lord.

The Favored Race.

God did not leave himself without a witness in the world of nations; but in working out His beneficent plan for the race, He chose a man, a family, a nation, to whom He gave a revelation. In the third chapter of Romans, Paul asks, "What advantage then hath the Jew?" and answers his own question. "Much every way: first of all, that they were entrusted with the oracles of God" (Rom. 3:1,2). Among them God raised up prophets, lawgivers, judges, seers. Through them He wrought upon the surrounding nations and the entire world. The history of the Jews is one of the most unanswerable arguments for the truth of Christianity.

In the midst of their wickedness and wanderings, in their exiles and captivities, God was with these people, and it was this great fact that made them the "observed of all observers." If they were steadfast and obedient God rewarded them; when they transgressed His law, He punished them, seeking thus their recovery. Now we are to look, not to Israel after the flesh, but to spiritual Israel. All who receive the living oracles with the obedience of faith, are His people, and them He favors with the blessing of His Spirit.

All Races.

Men of every tribe and tongue are coming into the kingdom of God. The lessons of history are not lost; the teachings of God's word are prevailing. National antipathies and jealousies are giving way before the gospel of redeeming love. Still the Jew is persecuted; but the fires of persecution begin to smolder, and burn low, wherever the knowledge of Israel's God prevails, wherever the living oracles are received, and interpreted in life.

The Jews themselves have rejected Messiah, and repudiated the gospels. But are they sinners above many among the Gentiles? For still the sad word goes forth, "Who hath believed our report; and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" The children of pious parents wander away from their early teaching, and forsake the God of their youth. But again and again the universality of redemption is declared. "All nations, many peoples, all languages," it is prophesied, will return to God their Father, and rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. When we despise the Jew, when we echo the traditional prejudice, do we forget that "God hath made of one blood all the races of men"? The favor shown to the Jews is a favor to the world. "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

In His Paths.

"He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths" (Isa. 2:3). Isaiah beholds a glorious vision of the peace and happiness that will bless this wounded earth when God reigns. "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks." The centuries roll by, and apparently this prophecy is forgotten; certainly it is unfulfilled. Yet as the centuries pass the dark shadows lighten. A peace congress becomes a possibility, even while war rages. An international court of arbitration is being formed; and men are seeing as never before the horrid brutality and devilishness of war.

No man, no nation, can honor God with the lips, while the heart is far from Him. A perpetual condition to the favor of God is obedience to His commandments. The Christians whom you know are growing into the image of Christ day by day, are docile, humble, studious. They are always ready to learn. They treasure the experiences that bring them nearer to God—life's crosses, and burdens, and griefs, as well as its sunny triumphs. If we have made this wise decision, let us be faithful. And then let us so preach, and teach, and live, that many others may believe. The gods of this world have blinded many eyes, and sorely afflicted many souls. Only the gospel can give deliverance.

Prayer.

We thank Thee, O God, that we have been led to decide our soul's destiny, by following Thee, and striving to walk in the way of Thy commandments. To this decision keep us faithful and steadfast, with victorious hope. Keep our hearts in perfect peace; enable us to quench the fiery darts of the adversary; and bless abundantly our efforts to bring others to this same blessed decision, through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

Every Lady Should Compete For This Prize.

The "HENDERSON ROUTE" is publishing a book of smart sayings of little children under the age of five years, and in order to get data for this publication they are offering two prizes. For the smartest saying a prize of ten dollars in gold will be given, and for the next smartest saying five dollars in gold.

In order to receive recognition all sayings forwarded must be accompanied with the full name, address, and age of the child.

A competent committee will have the contest in charge, and the winners will be promptly notified.

All sending in sayings will receive a copy of the book, without cost, when published, which will be handsomely bound and contain, in addition to the interesting sayings of the wee tots, a select number of fine half-tone pictures of children.

Address all letters to Mr. L. J. Irwin, General Passenger Agent, "Henderson Route," Louisville, Ky.

Quaint, Queer and Quirious
Salt Lake City.

The late Col. John Cockerell in the Cosmopolitan said: "There are three unique cities in America, and one of these is SALT LAKE CITY." It is not only unique in its Temple, Tabernacle and Mormon Church institutions, but quaint in appearance, with its wide streets, immense blocks and martial rows of shade trees. It has, perhaps, more attractions to the square yard than any city in the country, and its climate, while temperate all the year round, is particularly delightful in summer. The Great Salt Lake, with its magnificent Saltair resort, where the water is "deader and denser" than that in the Dead Sea in Palestine, is an attraction in itself that people come miles to see. There are many cool mountain and lake resorts near by, also numerous very pretty canyon trips and parks, drives, Hot and Warm Sulphur Springs. Fishing and hunting in every direction. The trip from Denver to Salt Lake City and Ogden via the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY in connection with either the Colorado Midland or Denver & Rio Grande railroads is one of unsurpassed pleasure. Here nature is found in her sternest mood and the whole line is a succession of rugged canyon, waterfalls and picturesque valleys. No European trip can compare with it in grandeur of scenery. During the entire summer there will be low excursion rates to Salt Lake City and contiguous country. It is on the road to the Pacific Coast, if that be your destination. Send four cents postage to Geo. W. Heintz, General Passenger Agent, Rio Grande Western Railway, Salt Lake City, for literature, etc.

Abraham's Intercession.*

One peculiar distinction of the Old Testament history, as contrasted with others of like early date, is that it makes its chief hero, and the founder of the Hebrew nation, Abraham, simply a man, and a very imperfect one at that. Other nations claim a god as their progenitor, and pagan myths are legion in their number, and marvelous in their stories of the power of achievement of their heroes. Abraham is a man among men, and the narrative of his faults and follies is told with absolutely no attempt at concealment or mitigation. We therefore read of the weakness of the faith of Sarah, who despairs of the fulfillment of God's promise through her, and gives to Abram her slave maid, Hagar, an Egyptian, as a second wife, that she may adopt as her own any children that may result from such union, and thus God's promise be fulfilled. Before Ishmael was born, however, her jealousy sprang up against Hagar, and she drove her from the home of Abram through continued hard treatment. God sent Hagar back, with an exhortation to patience under her hard lot, with the gracious promise, precious to the heart of any oriental woman, that her son should become a mighty leader of men and the father of a great nation.

Thirteen more years pass, after the birth of Ishmael, and Sarah is yet childless. Abram is ninety-nine years of age and his wife ninety. The Lord appears again to him, and repeats his promise, at the same time changing the names of Abram and Sarai to Abraham and Sarah. Thus the "princely" woman becomes more specifically a "princess," and the "exalted father" becomes the "father of a multitude." The rite of circumcision is given as the badge of Abraham's descendants and the sign of his covenant with Jehovah. Circumcision had been practiced among the Egyptians from ancient times, but was unknown among the Chaldeans and the peoples of Palestine, with the possible exception of the Phoenicians. But, as the rainbow already spanning the sky assumed a new meaning when made the sign of God's covenant with Noah, so circumcision became to Israel a sign of the covenant of grace which God had made with Abraham.

As Abraham sat one day beneath the oaks of Mamre, three strangers approached his tent. After the fashion of the country, they were offered the hospitality of his household, and he and Sarah ministered with their own hands to their wants. While they ate, one of them, who seems to have been highest among the chosen messengers, and to be called "the Lord," declared that the time was now at hand for the fulfillment of God's promise, and that before the year ended Sarah should bear a son. Sarah overheard this promise, and laughed to herself incredulously, but the angel rebuked her, saying, "Is anything too hard for the Lord?"

Rising from their meal, the divine messengers turned their faces toward Sodom, and Abraham went with them, to start them on their way, and, perhaps, that he might enjoy a comradeship which he felt was more than mortal. Pleased with his faith, and gratified that he still sought their company, the angels determined to reveal to him the purpose for which they visited the land. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant." Abraham was to be the father of the chosen people, and it was fitting that God should take him into his intimate counsel, for the instruction of generations to come. Besides, Abraham was already a faithful father in his own household, teaching them the way of the Lord, and leading them in the path of the upright. God would honor such parentage, in a time when the

A Series of Historical Sketches, dealing with the Rise and Progress of the Religious Movement inaugurated by Thomas and Alexander Campbell, from its Origin to the close of the Nineteenth Century.

Edited by J. H. Garrison

This great work, which has been eagerly awaited for some time, is now ready for delivery. It is truly a notable work—a splendid addition to the literature of the Disciples of Christ. It is the only complete and modern history of the current reformation, and therefore should at once find a place in the home of every earnest and zealous Disciple.

This history is divided into eight periods, as follows:

Introductory Period	- - - - -	Chas. Louis Loos.
Period of Organization	- - - - -	B. B. Tyler.
The Turbulent Period	- - - - -	W. T. Moore.
The Transition Period	- - - - -	T. W. Grafton.
Period of Revival of Home Missions	- - - - -	Benj. L. Smith.
Period of Foreign Missions	- - - - -	A. McLean.
Period of Woman's Work	- - - - -	Lois A. White.
Lessons from Our Past	- - - - -	J. H. Garrison.

Chas. Louis Loos was personally and intimately acquainted with the fathers of the reformation, and associated with them in their work. His statement of the origin of our movement, and of its early connection with the Baptists, is the most satisfactory which has yet been made. B. B. Tyler has for many years been an untiring student of the history of our movement. W. T. Moore was an active and prominent participant in the events of the period beginning with 1861. His sketch of Alexander Campbell is a masterpiece, and is alone worth the price of the book. T. W. Grafton, in his "Life of Alexander Campbell," and "Men of Yesterday" has shown his ability as an able historian. Benj. L. Smith, A. McLean and Miss White have been most conspicuously identified with the enterprises of which they write. The closing section, by J. H. Garrison, is the address delivered by him at the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, October, 1899.

"The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century" is a handsome volume of 514 pages, bound in cloth. It is an addition to that list of books which, whatever other books he may have, every earnest Disciple of Christ should possess. This history is not only a volume full of facts and information, but a story of absorbing interest.

family life was suffering unspeakable degradation throughout all that part of the earth. So the angels told Abraham that they were going down to Sodom, to see if the reports of its corruption were true, with the implication that, if they found them so, they would execute the judgment of God upon its inhabitants. The two angels who accompanied him who is called "the Lord" then went on their way to Sodom, but "the Lord" waited to hear what Abraham might say. It is needless to speculate as to who this being called "the Lord" was. Some have believed him to be one of the chief angels, like Gabriel or Michael; while others have believed him to be the "angel of the Lord's presence," mentioned in Old Testament history, and probably him who afterwards became Jesus of Nazareth. He was manifestly one who represented Jehovah himself and stood pre-eminent among the angelic servants of God, if nothing more.

The appeal of Abraham is exceedingly earnest and touching. He was thinking of his nephew, Lot, who, though dwelling in Sodom, had refused to participate in the wickedness of its people, and deserved by contrast the name of a righteous man. He is pleading for him and his family, as well as the other righteous whom he believed to have a home in that center of vice. Not only so, but he is pleading for the wicked also, and asking that they be spared with the righteous. His prayer is very bold. "Be it far from thee to slay the righteous with the wicked. Shall not the Lord of all the earth do right?" Let Abraham's faith give us the answer to a thousand questions, when perplexed with doubts of God's kindly providence for man. The Judge of all the earth will do right. We may be blinded, so as to fail to see what is right, but he who can see the end from the beginning will make no mistakes, and from his judgments there will be no appeal, for they will approve themselves to every soul.

How persistent is Abraham in his prayer. If fifty righteous are found; wilt thou spare the city? If it lack five of the fifty? If there be forty? thirty? twenty? ten? And God never ceased granting his prayer till he ceased asking. Did he think that it was impossible there should not be ten good men in Sodom, that he stayed his petition when it reached that number? Or did he doubt the willingness of God to go further with his gracious response? We do not know; but we cannot help wishing that he had kept on asking, and it might be that the city would have been granted a further lease of life. Yet its exceeding corruption could not long have continued, when Lot alone represented the element of purity and reverence within its walls. Abraham went back to his tent at Mamre, but when, the following day, he looked toward the cities of the plain, he saw the smoke of their desolation rising toward the sky, and he knew that the ten righteous were not found.

God's Requirements.

Deut. 10:12-14.

1. The fear of the Lord was one of the first requirements imposed upon Israel. Nor was this fear of the Lord merely the sort of fear that this word conveys to our minds to-day. It was fear which was filled with reverence, awe, and even love. The same fear of the Lord is required of us still. It is a wholesome, a reverent, a godly fear.

And there is danger in the modern idea of God's great kindness and gentleness that we shall forget the need for a very real fear of Him. God is after all an avenging fire; God punishes sin; God never allows the wrongdoer to escape retribution; the way of the transgressor is hard; fear of the arrows of the Almighty is a needful, a wholesome feeling. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

2. That we shall walk in his ways is another of God's requirements. No emotion, no sentiment, will take the place of doing, of living, of ethical life. Down deep at the basis of all true religion is the bedrock of morality. Do right is one of the very first requirements of God.

It too often happens that we try to make up, by a flood of tears and emotion, for a course of wrongdoing. It too often occurs that the Sunday is our time of tearful rebound from a course of conduct during the week which we cannot justify.

3. That we love God is another requirement which has always been laid upon his people. To love God is to love:

(1) Truth. God is absolute and unvarying truth. In Him there is no varying nor shadow of change from the standard of perfect truth. This means more, too, than mere truthfulness. It means faithfulness to Himself. To be true to oneself, to be friends with oneself, never to vary from what one believes worthy of oneself, this is truth. To love God is also to love:

(2) Beauty. God is the embodiment of the beautiful. "Whatsoever things are lovely" are found in Him. If we love Him we shall rejoice in what is high, noble, beautiful. The passion for a beautiful life is the highest aspiration possible to us. Never to mar, for a single moment, the symmetry of our lives; never to make a false stroke with the chisel in carving out the angel in the marble; this is to be the truest artist. There is no work of art like human life. To love God is to love:

(3) Goodness. God is good. Nor is this trait a negative, feeble, empty one. It is a strong, virile quality. Goodness is the physician whose sleep is on a knife edge, and who is ready any moment to go at the call of suffering. Goodness is the mother who suffers willingly, gladly, in behalf of her loved one. Goodness is the ever-living, ever-loving, ever-wakeful Father of us all.

Whoever fulfills the requirements of this text will be a child of God.

Alexander Campbell's Theology

By W. E. GARRISON. This book is a scientific statement according to the historical method of the religious and philosophical influences which molded the theological teaching of Mr. Campbell. Here are some extracts from reviews:

J. J. HALEY: "This book marks the beginning of a new epoch in our literature. . . . I heartily commend it to the perusal of thoughtful men and women."

F. D. POWER: "A distinct and noteworthy contribution to our literature. It is a clear and comprehensive statement of a very important theme."

ERI B. HULBERT: "Readers whose desire it is to understand the theology which Mr. Campbell elaborated will find in this treatise exactly the information they are seeking."

A handsome volume of 302 pages, bound in cloth. Sent postpaid on receipt of price, $1.00.

CLARDY.

Tuesday morning at five o'clock Zeno B. Clardy, one of our most highly respected citizens and lawyers, suddenly and peacefully breathed his last at his residence on Mesa Avenue. In the death of Zeno B. Clardy, El Paso, Texas, has lost one of its most valued and progressive citizens, and his taking away in the prime of life is a severe blow not only to his wife and daughter, but also to the entire community. He was a model husband and a fond, loving and indulgent father. No one knew him but to appreciate and honor him more. He was an ideal citizen, possessing the highest characteristics of a moral community. For the last seventeen years he has resided in El Paso, and during all that time he has carried a mien of the strictest rectitude. He was a devout and consistent member of the Christian Church. In 1884 he came here from Farmington, Mo., and a short time after his arrival formed a partnership with Judge Allan Blacker in the practice of law. Mr. Clardy was a Missourian, having been born at Libertyville of that state, where he spent his boyhood days, and was about 47 years of age. John E. Clardy, his father, was present at the funeral. Thursday morning at 9 o'clock the funeral services took place at the family residence and were largely attended by those who had come to pay their last respects. The services at the house were conducted by the Rev. J. M. Campbell, pastor of the church of which the deceased was a member, assisted by Rev. Henry W. Moore, rector of the Myrtle Avenue Presbyterian Church. The ceremonies at the grave were conducted by the Woodmen of the World, deceased being a member of that order.

GORE.

Dr. Abner E. Gore was born in Bullitt county, Ky., Oct. 12, 1823. With his father he moved to Missouri when but ten years of age. He was graduated in 1848 from the Louisville Medical College and practiced in Paris, Mo., until the time of his death, March 28, 1901. He was married March 28, 1850, to Miss Margaret Clark, who several years ago crossed over to the other side. Eight children were born to them, of whom but three survive. In early young manhood Dr. Gore became a Christian. The Christlike characteristics that thus early adorned his life qualified him for the eldership and for nearly fifty years he served faithfully in this capacity in the Paris congregation. Twice for a period of years he was chosen to be chairman of the official board and was serving as such at the time of his death. W. N. BRINEY. Paris, Mo.

KENNEDY.

Mrs. Vida Eluora Kennedy was born in Marshall county, Ill., Dec. 27, 1876. She united with the Christian Church in Toluca, Ill., in the fall of 1893, and always took a deep interest in church work. She suddenly departed this life July 18, 1901, and leaves to mourn her loss a loving husband, an infant son, father, mother, three brothers, four sisters and many loving relatives and friends. Funeral services by the writer.

A. R. ADAMS.

ROBERTS.

Bro. B. F. Roberts died in Kirksville, Mo., July 18, 1901. He was born in Andraun county, Mo., March 14, 1874. He was a graduate of the American School of Osteopathy of Kirksville, Mo. A little more than a year ago he went to Lincoln, Ill., and began the practice of Osteopathy. He was very successful until his health failed. He was converted and united with the Christian Church at the age of 14, and was a faithful member all his life. The first money he made in his practice he divided with the Lord. He made some investments which promise to be successful, and which he also divides with the Master. Shortly before his death he made his will, bequeathing one half he had to his widowed mother and the other half to the various missionary societies of the church. Fifty or seventy five thousand dollars is a low estimate of what he leaves to his mother and the church. He appointed his brother Isom, who is pastor of our church in Marceline, Mo., as executor of his will. His funeral sermon was preached by the writer.

H. A. NORTHCUTT.

WOODROWE.

Mrs. Almira Woodrowe, who died at her home in Ottawa, Kan., Saturday, June 29, was born in Sangamon county, Ill., Jan. 17, 1830. June 28, 1851, she was married to Samuel Woodrowe. To them were born four children, two dying in infancy, Rhoda, who died in 1890, and Amanda who survives her. Mr. Woodrowe died while in the Civil War. Mrs. Woodrowe came to Ottawa, Kan., in 1880. For forty years she had been a consistent member of the Christian Church. Funeral services were held Monday morning, July 1, at 9 o'clock, by Rev. O. B. Cook. The interment was at Princeton.

The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Caut.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Topical Outlines of the Midweek Prayer-meeting Themes for 1901 is a neat booklet of thirty pages, similar in style to the booklet issued last year, of which many thousand were used. Price, 25 cents per dozen Christian Publishing Co.

BIBLE CLASSES,

C. E. SOCIETIES,

BETHANY CIRCLES

We desire to call the attention of all such associations as those named above to a new book, recently published by us, which should be read and studied by all the young people among the Disciples of Christ. This book is

The Reformation of the XIXth Century.

It is a history of the Disciples of Christ—the first and only complete, authentic, adequate history ever issued. It is the joint production of some of the ablest writers in our great brotherhood—Chas. Louis Loos, B. B. Tyler, W. T. Moore, T. W. Grafton, Benj. L. Smith, A. McLean, Lois A. White and J. H. Garrison. Never before has such a clear and correct account of the origin and early days of our reformation been offered to the public. Never before has there been written such a fair and dispassionate history of the "turbulent period" of the life of this great reformatory movement. Never before has the present generation had so excellent an opportunity to learn the facts connected with the organization and development of our several missionary societies. In short, this is a history that must stand as the standard work on the subject for many years to come.

Bible Classes, Christian Endeavor Societies and Bethany C. E. Reading Circles will find this a delightful volume for study. It is by no means a dry and didactic compilation of facts and statistics, but is a narrative of absorbing interest, which, when once begun, will assuredly be completed. We know of no work, after the Bible, that our young people can study with more profit. A better knowledge of the history of our great plea will give them a greater love and zeal for it.

The price of this work, single copy, is $2.00, postpaid, but we will be glad to quote, on application, special prices when several copies are ordered at one time.

NOTES.

The total enrollment, all departments, last year, 1,764, not counting the Summer Schools, 1,140. Notable material improvements of the past summer: Completion of Auditorium; new portico and other improvements to Main Building; new Pharmaceutical Laboratory; new rooms for Business Department, new desks, etc.; new Bacteriological Laboratory; 3,500 square feet of cement walks; renovation of Gymnasium. In faculty equipment the most notable thing has been: 1. Complete reorganization of the Department of Music, under the leadership of Mr. Frederio Howard, of New York; 2. The Bible College has been completely merged into the organic life of the University. The first and second years are now taught in the Science Hall on the Campus; 4. The Des Moines College of Dental Surgery has become an affiliated department. It will add eighty students to the College rolls. 5. The addition of many new teachers to the faculty of the University.

The University has made a steady and rapid growth in the twenty years of its history. It is expected the enrollment will reach 1,900 the coming year. The location in Des Moines, with its state and city libraries, its courts, hospitals, churches, societies, etc., is excellent in every respect. Send for general catalog, 200 pages, free.

THE UNKNOWN COURSE.

Where lies the land to which the ship would go?
Far, far ahead, is all her seamen know;
And where the land she travels from? Away,
Far, far behind, is all that they can say.

On sunny noons upon the deck's smooth face,
Linked arm in arm, how pleasant here to pace!
Or, o'er the stern reclining, watch below
The foaming wake far widening as we go.

On stormy nights when wild Northwesterners rave,
How proud a thing to fight with wind and wave!
The dripping sailor on the reeling mast
Exults to bear, and scorns to wish it past.

Where lies the land to which the ship would go?
Far, far ahead, is all her seamen know;
And where the land she travels from? Away,
Far, far behind, is all that they can say.

HIRAM COLLEGE

A School for Both Sexes, Located at Hiram,
Portage County, Ohio, Thirty-Five
Miles Southeast of Cleveland.

A SPLENDID LOCATION.

Beautiful Scenery, Pure Air, Excellent Water: An ideal college town, modern, up-to-date, lighted by electricity and having a fine system of water-works.

GOOD BUILDINGS.

The buildings are comparatively new:
(1) Main building commodious and convenient in all its appointments
(2) A large and beautiful Christian Association building, erected five years ago at a cost of $30,000.
(3) Two excellent ladies' halls well furnished and supplied with modern conveniences.
(4) Music building for the accommodation of our large and growing music department.
(5) A library and conservatory building just completed, the gift of Abram Teachout, and a Warener & Swazey's nine-inch telescope, costing approximately $5,000, the gift of Lathrop Cooley.

LIBRARIES AND APPARATUS.

(1) A large and well equipped chemical laboratory.
(2) Two other laboratories, Physical and Physiological.
(3) A well selected library. Large addition to this library will soon be made.
(4) A good museum.
(5) A large and well furnished gymnasium.

COURSES OF STUDY.

(1) Four Classical Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical.
(2) Four Scientific Courses—Regular, Philosophical, Legal and Medical.
(3) Four Literary Courses—Regular, Ministerial, Legal and Medical.
(4) Five Special Courses—Music, Oratorical, Business, Art, Teachers'.
(5) Special elective course in any variety.

CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS.

We have a strong body of Professors and Instructors, twenty-four in number. They are, for the most part, specialists of large attainments, and are thoroughly abreast of the times.

LITERARY SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS.

Hiram has:
(1) Five literary societies of unusual strength and vigor.
(2) Two Christian Associations that contribute much to the religious life of the school.
(3) Several departmental and social organizations of special interest and value.

EXPENSES.

Expenses are very moderate. Good table board can be had for $2.00 per week; club board for $1.25 to $1.75. Room rent for fifty cents to one dollar. Tuition for four to five dollars per term for each student.
The three leading items of board, tuition and room rent may be reduced to about $125.00 for the college year of 38 weeks.

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

Under the auspices of the T. W. Phillips' Loan Fund an industrial department is being established that will assist about fifty young people. It is believed that students admitted to this department may reduce the entire expense of the year, including tuition, to about $90.00, and those who do considerable work may reduce expenses to sixty or seventy dollars. Other expenses low or moderate. Reciprocal privileges. Next session of those colleges begins in Lexington on Monday, September 9, 1901. Next session of Medical Department begins in Louisville January 1, 1902. The Commercial College (in Lexington) may be entered at any time of the calendar year. The courses of study lead to the degrees of A. B., A. M., B. Lit., M. Lit., B. S., M. S., B. Ped., M. Ped., and M. D., and, in the College of the Bible and the Commercial College, to graduation without degrees.

Current Events.

The Cuban Presidency. It looks as if it may be a case of the office seeking the man in Cuba. There is a presidential office awaiting occupancy, but the natural candidates seem reluctant to accept it. Gen. Gomez has positively declined in a tone which sounds as if he means it, and has recommended Senor Palma for the presidency and Senor Maso for the vice-presidency. The latter would be glad to have first place on the ticket but is not anxious for the second, and Palma gives no encouragement to the consideration of his name. In a letter recently published, he apparently refuses to allow himself to be considered a candidate—though not definitely refusing the candidacy, to be sure,—and points out the great difficulties which the first administration will have to meet. The greatest of all is the probability that the President will not have a majority of the legislative assembly with him. There is a multiplicity of small parties, no one of which is likely to command a majority. Whatever policy the president might desire to carry out, he would most likely be blocked by an opposition which would be divided on any positive measure of their own but firmly united in opposing his. It is almost certain that there will be wide differences of opinion about making a treaty with the United States, about the arrangement of reciprocity treaties and about the payment of the army. Recognizing so clearly the difficulties and dangers which confront the first administration, it is not surprising if Senor Palma prefers to rest with his present honors without risking failure in so difficult an enterprise. It will be difficult, however, to find one whose ability and integrity more perfectly fit him for the overcoming, as well as the anticipation, of the difficulties which will confront the first president of Cuba.

A General Strike Declared. As was expected, President Shaffer of the Amalgamated Association of steel, iron and tin workers issued a general strike order on Tuesday of last week to take effect Saturday night. So far the compliance with this order has not been sufficiently general to afford much gratification or encouragement to the leaders of the strike. About 16,000 men have gone out in addition to those who had already quit, but the refusal of the men in Chicago and vicinity to strike has been a disappointment to the leaders. The Carnegie Company's works, although employing no Amalgamated Association men, have been a storm center, for it was hoped that the union men there would make a sympathetic strike. This has not been done with any unanimity, though two or three hundred union men have made considerable trouble. President Shaffer wishes to make this the biggest strike in history to establish forever the supremacy of unionism. The building trades, the united mine workers and the Federation of Labor approve of the plan and have promised moral and financial support but have not responded favorably to overtures looking to a general sympathetic strike. During the past week the Steel Corporation has gotten control of the Shelby Steel Tube Works, capitalized at $13,000,000 and operating fifteen non-union mills. This is both a sign of strength and a means of filling the orders which are already on hand. The price of tin plate has gone up rapidly since the general strike order was issued by the Amalgamated Association. Europe doubtless looks on with pleasure and counts upon regaining through this disturbance some of her lost steel trade. The numerous steel strikes in England in recent years and the perversion of unionism which has given rise to them are assigned as one cause for England's loss of supremacy in the steel industry. Meanwhile the general public looks upon the strike with divided sympathy and scant interest, owing to the lack of a specific and substantial grievance on the part of the strikers. When capital combines, it endeavors to conceal the fact and the less recognition the combination gets the better it is pleased, so long as its definite purpose is accomplished. The labor combination, on the other hand, has gotten all it asks for in the way of wages, hours and conditions, and now goes on a strike to get recognition. It seems rather a childish procedure.

Homesteads and Speculation.

With the allotment of claims and the sale of town lots at auction in the newly opened Indian lands, the troubles and complications incident to the opening are not all over. The man who drew the first number in the Lawton district and therefore had first choice of all the homestead claims chose a strip adjoining the whole south side of the town of Lawton. The land office may have been in error in allowing him to choose a tract a mile long and a quarter of a mile wide, instead of compelling him to take his one hundred and sixty acres in a square half a mile on each side. At any rate, it allowed it, and one could scarcely expect the lucky Mr. Woods to know more about the land laws than the land office itself knew, or to be more strict in their application. It is true, too, that it was not particularly gallant for him to cut out the young lady who drew second choice from access to the town, compelling her to take the claim behind his. But in a country where so few men in the cities give their seats to ladies in the street car, it can scarcely be legally demanded that one shall give up his farm to a lady on the frontier, or even choose a worse instead of a better tract of land to accommodate her. An attempt is being made to invalidate Mr. Woods' claim by proving that he is a speculator on the ground that he took the most valuable piece of land that he could find. The squatters who have overflowed from the town of Lawton on to his land are naturally anxious to have him evicted so that they may divide his land into town lots and keep it. But their claim bespeaks a love of neither justice nor courtesy, but plain avarice. We would be glad to see Mr. Woods forced to change the shape of his claim so as to give the lady a chance, if that is the law, but the attempt to prove that he is a speculator because, having drawn first choice, he took the best he could get, savors strongly of the ridiculous. On the whole, the effort of the authorities to prevent speculation appears to have been remarkably successful. The sale of town lots in Lawton has been the feature of the week. Business lots 25 by 150 feet have sold at from $250 to more than three times that figure. Most of the business that is done in the new towns is, of course, done in tents, but the erection of wooden buildings began almost simultaneously with the opening. Saloons, which were excluded during the first days, are now permitted and sixty of them have been opened in Lawton. It is gratifying to note that the churches have not been slow in securing lots and beginning work in the various new towns.

The Trouble in Colombia. The revolutionary disturbances of Colombia have developed into quite respectable magnitude, the most significant indications of which are that the United States has dispatched a war vessel to the Atlantic side of the Isthmus and has another in readiness to go to the Pacific side, and that diplomatic relations between Colombia and Venezuela have been broken off. The Colombian revolutionists are representatives of a radical party which wishes to overthrow the present conservative government and effect the reunion of Colombia, Venezuela and Ecuador into a "Great Colombia" federation such as existed prior to 1830. President Castro, of Venezuela, and President Alfaro, of Ecuador, are co-operating with General Uribe-Uribe, leader of the Colombian insurrectionists. The political uncertainty which is normal to the Latin-American states is an incentive to the presidents of Venezuela and Ecuador to participate in the movement. Recognizing this co-operation with the rebels, the troops of the Colombian government have unsuccessfully attempted an invasion of Venezuela, and the hostile interchanges between the two have led to the recall of the Colombian representative from Venezuela, the management of Colombian interests there being left in the hands of the American charge d'affaires. It is reported, however, with less evidence of truth, that the alleged invasion from Colombia is in reality a domestic uprising in Venezuela against the arbitrary methods of Pres. Castro. The United States gunboat Machias is now at Hampton Roads fitting to proceed to Colon to protect American interests. The president of the Panama Railway Company has requested the government to send a warship also to the Pacific side of the isthmus. The battleship Iowa has been ordered from Puget Sound to San Francisco and will there be held in readiness to go to Panama if needed. The United States is bound by treaty to see that the way across the isthmus from Colon to Panama is kept clear if Colombia cannot do it, but there is no probability that interference will be necessary, and it will not be attempted until the local government has conspicuously failed to protect this trade route. We are not ready to take sides in the dispute between the Colombian government and the allied revolutionists, but it occurs to us that a Great Colombia with a broader base than any of the present republics might be less easy to tip over—and that would be an advantage.

Chinese Affairs.

Li Hung Chang has been supplanted as viceroy to Chi Li province, so it is reported, by Yuan Shih Kai, formerly of Shan Tung province. Li is too feeble to administer the government in his province as actively as the turbulent times demand, and it is important that some one be put in command who can see that peace is preserved. The Chinese court is not altogether pleased with the arrangements that have been made for the evacuation of Peking and complains that too many foreign troops are remaining under the guise of legation guards. The court wishes also to arrive at some definite understanding with Russia about the control of Manchuria before returning to Peking, and it is not improbable that on one or both of these grounds the return will be delayed until at least January.

The Return of Count von Waldersee. Count von Waldersee, late commander-in-chief of the allied forces in China, reached Germany last week on his return from the East. Whatever general enthusiasm might have been aroused by his advent was overshadowed by the mourning for the death of the Dowager Empress. It is doubtful, however, whether the enthusiasm would have been very hearty in any case. The value of his services is generally recognized, but among the intelligent classes there is also an appreciation of the fact that he did not do what he was sent out to do. He did as much of it, doubtless, as any one could have done, but the mistake was in supposing that he would have a united international force at his command and a definite enemy against which to wield it. Arriving in China he found that there was no war and no enemy and that the relation between the forces of the various powers and their German commander-in-chief was not exactly what he had expected it to be. A field-marshal on the ground was plainly a supernumerary. Under the circumstances it is not surprising that, in his frantic efforts to do something worthy of his rank, he made a good deal of unnecessary war upon unarmed villagers who had no thought of constituting a hostile force until he compelled them to assume that attitude. It was really a very trying situation and Count von Waldersee behaved indifferently well under the circumstances. He probably earned his salary, but any special rewards which he may receive will be wholly gratuitous.

The Empress Frederick.

The death of the Dowager Empress Frederick of Germany has been followed by a period of mourning in England as well as in Germany. She was the eldest daughter of Queen Victoria and, as the Princess Victoria, wore her mother's name. The funeral services, although simple and unpretentious, in accordance with her expressed wish, occupied several days from first to last and were of an impressive character. After the services at Kronberg, where the Empress died, the body was brought to Potsdam near Berlin where King Edward, accompanied by Queen Alexandra, came to attend his sister's funeral. Like her husband, she was a pronounced liberal in matters of government. At the time when she came to Germany as wife of the crown Prince Frederick William, Bismarck was at the height of his power. Being rigidly opposed to constitutional government, he saw danger in the liberal tendencies of the heir apparent and his English wife and by his interference with her affairs caused her no end of annoyance. Upon his representations to the old Emperor, even the education of her children was taken out of her hands and they were placed under tutors who would instill into them a belief in their divine right to arbitrary sovereignty. Her eldest son, the present Emperor William, learned the lesson all too well. Shortly after his accession to the throne, the Iron Chancellor—whose belief in the divine right of kings was equivalent to a belief in his own divine right to rule the king and the country through the king—was forced to step down. It was a tribute to the force of character of the Empress Frederick that she could arouse such opposition from the Chancellor. He was forced to deal with her as with an opposing statesman. Yet her many virtues won her a place in the hearts of both the German and the English.

A New Edict in South Africa.

Mr. Chamberlain's statement of a week or two ago, that the time for leniency had passed and that a more rigorous policy would henceforth be pursued against the Boers, received its explanation, in part at least, in the proclamation issued August 7 by Lord Kitchener under instructions from the colonial secretary. According to this proclamation, all leaders of the Boers who are in arms resisting His Majesty's forces and all members of the late governments of the Transvaal and Orange Free State are to be permanently banished from South Africa unless they surrender on or before Sept. 15. Meanwhile the cost of maintaining in the concentration camps the families of burghers who are still in the field shall be held against the burghers as a charge upon their property. It is not precisely apparent what the British government expects to gain by this edict. It is by no means likely that its terms can be conveyed to all the scattered commandoes of Boers in the field before the date fixed; and if it could be, it is still less probable that any considerable number of them, having endured the hardships which they have endured, would consider a threat of banishment a sufficient incentive to surrender. As for holding the cost of maintaining their families as a charge against their property, the suggestion conveys a grim humor when one remembers that the remaining property of most of these same burghers consists of a rifle and a blanket. With the former they will doubtless be glad to repay any debts as opportunity offers. As a business proposition, the British concentration camps are a series of credit boarding-houses with very poor prospects of pay. Lord Milner left England for South Africa on Saturday of last week, accompanied by Gen. Lyttleton. The presence of Gen. Lyttleton in the expedition has naturally started the rumor that he is to succeed Gen. Kitchener in command. Lord Milner is personally so unpopular and so little trusted by the Boers that his presence even in Capetown will be a hindrance to any possible future peace negotiations.

Brevities.

Preparations are being made on a large scale for the Schley inquiry. At his request, officers are being summoned from Guam and China to give testimony.

M. Santos-Dumont, after a fall with his balloon near the Eiffel Tower, was seized by Parisian women, overjoyed at his escape, and violently Hobsonized. Is not the Deutsch prize of $20,000 a sufficient incentive to aeronautics without the addition of an osculatory booby prize in case of failure?

At the recent convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society at Hartford, Conn., Archbishop Ireland said that it is no longer true that there are more drinkers among Catholics than in other religious bodies, though he admitted that it was formerly true. The society has over 85,000 members.

Secretary Wilson having returned from his tour of inspection through the corn belt reports the conditions more serious than the department had before been inclined to admit. The loss will be most severe in Nebraska, Kansas and southern Iowa. The total corn crop is now estimated at 1,100,000,000 bushels, not much more than half of the estimate six weeks ago.

By a bold and successful robbery, the Selby Smelting Works, forty miles north of San Francisco, were relieved of gold bullion to the value of $283,000. Within a week the culprit confessed under promise that he would not be prosecuted and pointed out where he had hidden the booty. He now claims the $25,000 reward that was offered for finding himself.

Gen. MacArthur's report for the Philippines for the year ending July 4, when he was succeeded by Gen. Chaffee, contains much discussion of general commercial and industrial topics. The report of casualties from May 5, 1900, to June 30, 1901, is as follows: Americans: 245 killed, 490 wounded, 118 captured, 20 missing; Filipinos: 3,854 killed, 1,153 wounded, 6,572 captured, 23,095 surrendered. The capture of Aguinaldo is characterized as "the most momentous single event of the year," a military transaction "unique, isolated and complete in itself."

Democracy and the Moral Judgment.

Ruskin has somewhere in his "Modern Painters" a remark to this effect: that the opinion of a majority is trustworthy only in those cases where the opinion of each individual is more likely to be right than to be wrong; but that in cases where it is more probable that any single individual will be wrong than that he will be right, it is safer to follow the minority. The theory of probabilities, which is a mathematical law as certain in its action as the law of gravitation, justifies this saying. If there is even a slight probability in the case of each separate individual that he will be right, then there is a practical certainty that the majority will be right if the number of votes is large enough. And vice versa.

This principle is laid down by Ruskin as preliminary to the proposition that public opinion is not a trustworthy guide in judgments of artistic excellence, since every untrained individual is more likely to admire that which has no real artistic merit than that which is meritorious. Carlyle virtually places political questions in the same class in which Ruskin places questions of art—that is, among things of which the public is more apt to judge wrongly than rightly. His famous dictum, that the combined opinion of thirty million fools is not likely to produce wisdom, is true enough as an abstract proposition, but its application rests on the assumption that the thirty million people are fools. To say that the common man is a fool in matters of politics—that is, that he is more likely to judge wrongly than rightly—is an assumption which would destroy the basis of democratic government.

There are, to be sure, governmental questions which are essentially technical and upon which the judgment of untrained minds, in whatever numbers, is absolutely valueless. Such matters as the tariff, the principles of national finance, currency and banking, contain so large an element of pure technicality that the offhand opinion of any number of men without a corresponding technical training is about as valuable as their advice would be in arranging the specifications for building a battleship. These are questions of statesmanship and should never have been allowed to get into politics.

But the foundations of democracy are not destroyed when one has admitted the worthlessness of a popular vote to settle the details of naval construction or tariff schedules. Democracy rests upon a broader and firmer basis than this. It is founded upon this principle: that there is in government an element, and the most important element of all, which is not technical or professional and in which the common man's opinion is more apt to be right than to be wrong. This is the element of morality, which is paramount in civil government as in individual conduct; and the appeal to the moral judgment of men can always be made safely when it is unfused with other issues. It is not morally safe to do as the majority does, but it is usually safe to act according to those principles of morality which the majority of civilized men accept. Moral questions—the recognition of the rights of man and his civil duties—are the foundation of all large politics. Other matters, such as private interest, the eloquence of a demagogue, or deception by false leaders, may turn the scale, but the consensus of the moral judgment is generally right. A corruptionist, even a known corruptionist, may be elected to office, but only by stealing the livery of virtue. There is scarcely a community in the United States where a corruptionist could be elected with the right of bribery as an issue.

When the people are deceived and the majority goes wrong, there is in a democracy always the right of appeal to a higher court—from the people ill-informed, with minds inflamed by party zeal and distracted from the real moral issue, to the same people better informed and more calmly intelligent. Every reform has this task before it, to separate itself from the partisan controversies which by habit arouse the passions and prejudices of men, and to present itself as a purely moral proposition. So can it secure the most general acceptance among a people who, however prone they may be to err in judgments of art and public finance, can usually be counted upon to choose the right side of a purely ethical alternative. Upon this principle democracy can find a firm foundation.

Faith and Experience.

The article elsewhere, entitled "Faith vs. Experience," affords an interesting study. A thoughtful man, such as the author of the article, does not write statements without seeing, in his own mind, reasons for them. What, then, is his conception of salvation, which enables him to write certain sentences in this and in his former article, to which our editorial note, which he quotes, was appended? He had stated, in his former article, that "the divine presence and help" of the Holy Spirit is "a matter of faith and not a matter of personal experience." Our objection to this reasoning was that it put faith and experience in a false relation to each other, making them mutually exclusive terms, a position which he reaffirms in this article. In saying that "the whole of our religious life comes through faith," we meant, of course, that it has its source, its legitimate cause, in faith. We cited the scriptural passages—"we walk by faith, not by sight," we are "saved by faith,"—and then raised the question whether we do not have a "personal experience of salvation." Our brother thinks not. It is obvious, then, that he is not thinking and writing of a salvation that means a new feeling toward God, a new feeling toward sin, a new sense of reconciliation with God, and of joy in the Holy Spirit, a new power to resist temptation and to depart from iniquity, new aspirations, new hopes and a new outlook on life, but of something that takes place in the mind of God, of which man is wholly unconscious until it is communicated to him by some statement which he accepts by faith. In other words, he seems to have in mind as his full conception of salvation the abstract idea of the remission of sins as an act of God.

He says: "The love of God, the gift of His son, the death of Jesus for our sins, His resurrection and ascension, are facts of which we have no knowledge except as we believe that they are facts." These facts are, of course, matters of revelation, but having been accepted by faith and acted upon, the soul, thus believing and acting, acquires an experience, through faith, which corroborates and confirms the evidence upon which he believed, and gives him additional certitude.

He also says: "Repentance, confession of faith, baptism, prayer, etc., are commands of which we have no knowledge except as we believe that the Lord has commanded us to do them." Not stopping now to point out the fact that the commands referred to meet the profoundest religious needs of the soul, which existed as facts of human nature long before the commands were given, is it not self-evident that when repentance and faith, prayer, etc., occur, the soul is profoundly conscious of these experiences and of their adaptation to meet its needs? In other words, are these psychical changes less matters of personal experience because they were originally matters of revelation of God's will, received through faith?

Again, our brother says: "We have no knowledge of the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the dead and eternal life, except as we believe God's promises." The forgiveness of sins, regarded as an act of God, is of course a matter of revelation, to be conveyed to the mind of man in the way God may choose, but it is associated with such psychical conditions as faith, repentance, the obedient spirit, of which we can have personal knowledge. So also our Christian life, and that of the church universal, furnishes an additional proof of the resurrection of Christ, and hence of our resurrection; and eternal life has its beginning here in the soul of the believer, who by the presence of this life within him gains complete assurance of his future life.

With a conception of salvation that does not seem to enter the realm of consciousness, it is not strange that our brother should regard the phrase, "a personal experience of salvation," as "very questionable." In proof of this he says: "If it means that we know, by personal sensations, that we are saved, it is erroneous, for then it substitutes experience for faith." Why does our brother use so vague a term as "sensations"? Certainly repentance and faith do profoundly affect the mind and heart and will, and, when accompanied by obedience, they result in a sense of peace and joy of which the soul is as conscious as it is of any other experience. Why should this evidence of personal consciousness be placed in opposition to faith, instead of being regarded as a confirmation of faith, of faith brought to the highest degree of certitude? Was it not this experience that enabled Paul to say, "I know whom I have believed"? Is this not what the same apostle means, also, when he says that "the Spirit Himself bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God"? And is this not what John means when he speaks of "the witness within you"? Neither of these inspired writers had any thought of substituting this internal experience for faith, nor have we any such thought. We never reach a point here, in our Christian experience, when we cease to "walk by faith," but religion would become a barren fact if it brought no personal experiences of peace and of joy and of victory over sin, confirmatory of faith, and making faith a living and present reality in our lives.

Who Deserved the Censure?

While the Sampson-Schley controversy is being launched upon its career as a full-grown official investigation by a naval court, another disturbance in the navy has come up and has apparently been settled. As reported in an earlier issue, Senator Chandler, who was Secretary of the Navy under President Arthur, has complained of the uncomplimentary reference to himself by Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans in his book, "A Sailor's Log." Another official inquiry was threatened, but Mr. Hackett, acting Secretary of the Navy, in the absence of Mr. Long, has cut the Gordian knot by reprimanding Admiral Evans and sending a copy of the reprimand to Senator Chandler as the pound of flesh which was due to him. If it would help to salve his wounded honor, the ex-Secretary might have this reprimand of his enemy framed and hang it over the head of his bed where its benediction could be upon him night and morning.

But what was it all about? In 1884, when Mr. Chandler was Secretary of the Navy, Admiral Evans was assigned to duty as inspector for the Fifth Lighthouse District, which extends along the Atlantic coast from Havre de Grace, Md., to Beaufort, N. C. The lighthouse service had fallen into bad condition through the appointment of keepers as reward for political services. It was the duty of the inspector to examine the appointees, but pressure was brought to bear to get the favorites through the examination whether competent or not. In one case where an appointee was found upon examination to be hopelessly unfit, the inspector refused to pass him. It was reported to the Secretary of the Navy that he was "interfering with political conditions in the Fifth District." Without inquiry or opportunity for explanation, he was relieved of his position and placed on reduced pay. Admiral Evans's comment which has aroused the ire of the ex-Secretary is as follows: "It was, of course, a gross injustice and caused no end of comment in the newspapers; but I took it as quietly as possible and have always felt contented that I was not personally known to the man who could so far degrade the high office he held. The navy had in some ways degenerated into a job lot, at least in the eyes of those who used it for their own purposes, and was sometimes let to a very low bidder. . . . However, I had felt the sting of insects before in my life and did not consider them of much importance."

This, it must be admitted, is not the language of profound reverence for one's superior officer, and it may be open to criticism under the canons of naval etiquette; though it seems to us that there is a vast difference between criticising a former secretary who has now no connection with the department, and criticising one who is in office at the time of the criticism. It is not denied that Admiral Evans bore himself with all due meekness toward Mr. Chandler so long as the latter was secretary.

But the principal question which Admiral Evans's words raise in the plain man's mind is not, Are they polite? but, Are they true? Is it a fact that positions in any department of the navy were given as a reward for political services when Mr. Chandler was secretary? that a lighthouse inspector was punished by the Secretary for trying to keep up the efficiency of his district by preventing the appointment of incompetent favorites? We do not know whether this is true or not farther than what Admiral Evans says about it in his book. But it is strangely ominous that there was no investigation to determine whether the charge is true, and that even in the censure, which Mr. Chandler now wears as a trophy at his belt, there is no question of the truth of the statements. If not true, the charges are well worth denying. On the surface of the case it appears that Mr. Chandler as Secretary was guilty of degrading his office for the accommodation of political spoilsmen, whom he encouraged at the expense of one important department of the service; while Admiral Evans is guilty of indiscretion in mentioning matters about which it would have been more discreet and courteous to keep quiet. Perhaps that censure got into the wrong envelope.

Notes and Comments.

"Ignorance is the only devil," said a preacher recently who was very desirous of being epigrammatic. If his remark be true, it must be admitted that he preached like one possessed. But the statements about both theology and demonology uttered by one so thoroughly possessed by his own demon of ignorance are perhaps not wholly trustworthy.

A writer in the Sunday-School Times objects to the use of the so-called "sanitary" communion outfits with individual cups and suggests that, if the situation has become so desperate as to call for this remedy, it is time to cleanse the church roll and to weed out the unsanitary members. It might be hard to satisfy a bacteriologist with this procedure, for he would find germs in the cleanliest saint, but there is a sense in which an occasional weeding out of unsanitary members would be a benefit to almost any church.

A sober-minded contemporary quotes a slang-laden description of a ball game which was printed in the Yale Record and inquires apprehensively, "What is to become of our language when such language is sent out from one of our oldest and largest universities?" There is no need for alarm. The Yale Record is a comic paper. So long as our oldest and largest universities send out slang for the sake of its humorous absurdity, the language is safe. The danger will come when, at universities and elsewhere, slang is used as ordinary language without recognition of its absurdity.

"The most common of those feelings which present obstacles to the pursuit or propagation of truth," says Bishop Whately, "are aversion to doubt; desire of a supposed safe medium; the love of system; the dread of the character of inconsistency; the dread of innovation; undue deference to human authority; the fear of criticism; regard to seeming consistency." It cannot be denied that these are formidable barriers both in the pursuit and propagation of truth. Some of these qualities of mind, however, kept within proper limits, may also prevent the acceptance of certain things presented as truth, which are not truth, but only plausible errors. It is easy, however, for conservatism to degenerate into opposition to what is new, and the defense of what is old. In such case it ceases to be conservatism and becomes the powerful though unconscious ally of radicalism.

A good work in behalf of the destitute orphan children in Cuba is being done by Mr. Elmer E. Hubbard, formerly a missionary to Japan, who is now operating a series of industrial homes in Matanzas, Cuba. Poverty always follows in the wake of war, and the homeless and helpless must be provided for. The Hubbard Homes are under the auspices of the undenominational Cuban Orphan Aid Society, and the trustworthiness of the management is vouched for by Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson of the King's Daughters, President Angell of the University of Michigan, the editors of the Outlook, and many other well known persons. $2.50 a month sent to Miss Grace Williams, secretary, 610 Woodland Street, Nashville, Tenn., will feed, clothe and educate one child. The cause is a thoroughly worthy one.

Prof. Triggs has added Longfellow and Oliver Wendell Holmes to his list of doggerel poets. Every time he utters one of these critical estimates, he gives the public some new information about himself. But the public now knows all it cares to know about Prof. Triggs. The methods of Brann's Iconoclast applied to literature reach the point of stupidity very quickly. The public is prepared to hear with indifference the further utterances of Prof. Triggs, even if, in a wild attempt to make himself interesting, he discounts Homer because he was accounted orthodox in his day, puts Virgil's Eclogues in the same despised category with Watts's hymns, degrades Dante into a mere vender of moralities, and rules Milton out of court entirely. Let us be thankful that Shakespeare at least is safe, for Prof. Triggs has already classed him with John D. Rockefeller—and what greater honor could Shakespeare ask? Prof. Triggs is the sort of person who may be expected at any moment to join in the apotheosis of Elbert Hubbard.

Some statistics showing the growth of the Presbyterian Church (North) in this country during the past thirty-one years were published last week by the Herald and Presbyter. We note that throughout the entire period there has been a healthy parity between the number of ministers and the number of churches. In 1870 there were 4,238 ministers and 4,526 churches. At the present time there are 7,532 ministers and 7,779 churches. In each case only a few extra churches, indicating that the noxious practice of half-time, quarter-time and no-time preaching does not prevail. The membership has a little more than doubled within the period covered by the statistics and is now 1,025,388. The annual net increase for the past four or five years has been about two per cent., which is somewhat less than the average for the entire period. It is interesting to note that the statistics show almost as many adult baptisms as infant baptisms. The record of contributions shows that, unlike the Disciples of Christ, the Presbyterians give more to Home than to Foreign Missions, and the amounts for both are surprising compared with our meager totals: for the present year $1,252,159 for Home Missions and nearly a million for Foreign Missions. In addition to these there is a contribution to the work of education which averages annually well into the hundred thousands. The total amount of money raised for the present year is over sixteen million dollars, 25 per cent. of which is for missions and benevolences, and 75 per cent. for the maintenance of the local congregations.

Editor's Easy Chair

Macatawa Musings.

Macatawa Park has been a sort of theological center during the past week. Each forenoon, from ten o'clock to twelve, has been devoted to the study of Christ's teaching as given in the synoptic gospels. Prof. Lloyd, of the Pacific Congregational Theological Seminary at Oakland, California, has been the lecturer. His themes have been, "Jesus' teaching about God;" "Jesus' teaching about himself;" "Jesus' teaching about the spirits (Holy Spirit, angels, demons, devils);" "Jesus' teaching about the kingdom of God;" "Jesus' teaching about man;" and "Jesus' teaching about the gospel and the Old Testament." Each lecture is followed by what the doctors would call a "quiz." The attendance has not been very large, for the discussion has been on a plane rather above the range of thought of the ordinary church member who has no special interest in Bible study. Those attending, however, have felt themselves fully repaid by the painstaking, conscientious and fearless studies of Prof. Lloyd. His omission of the fourth gospel from his studies, in this course, is not because he discredits it as a work of John, but because it is constructed on so different a plan as to make it difficult to study it in connection with the synoptics. And yet we are convinced that outside the class room, at least, it is better to present the teaching of Jesus as a whole, making the synoptics the basis of the study and supplementing it with John's teaching.

Prof. Lloyd is a reverent but independent student of the Bible, and his New Testament studies are entirely based on the original Greek, with which he is very familiar. He has little patience with the outcry against those who are conducting the most rigorous investigation to ascertain all about the facts of the Bible and let the whole truth be known. At the close of an able lecture last evening on "Martin Luther," after describing in glowing terms his courage and heroism in standing for the truth against the Pope, the emperor, cardinals and princes, he said it was but mockery, however, for men to sound the praises of Luther for his devotion to the truth, while smirching the reputation of Bible scholars to-day who are devoting themselves with singleness of heart to biblical researches. It is much easier, however, for us to admire heroic and independent thinking in the abstract, or in persons far removed from us in time and place, than in the concrete men and women with whom we come into familiar contact. Our Savior said something about men building the tombs of the prophets whom their fathers had stoned. Human nature is not very different now from what it was then, and the probability is that God's prophets will continue to be stoned, in one way or another, while the world stands, or at least until the millennium dawns.

On Wednesday evening of this week we had a lecture by our own talented George H. Combs, of Kansas City. His theme was "Christ in Modern Literature," and it was one of the most brilliant lectures ever delivered on the Macatawa platform. Bro. Combs has a wide acquaintance with modern literature, has a keen insight into its spirit and tendency and very unusual ability in interpreting and characterizing authors and their works. Bro. Combs would undoubtedly succeed admirably in the lecture field, but it would probably be at the expense of his record as one of our most successful pastors. This lecture of his on "Christ in Modern Literature" has been expanded into a small volume, the MS. of which is in the hands of the publisher, awaiting its fate. It is a timely topic, and if the lecture is a fair sample of the style and judicious treatment of the whole book, we hope it may soon see the light. Nothing is clearer to the reader of modern literature than the fact that Christ is pushing his way to the front in literature, as He has in art, and that He is continually taking larger possession of the entire life of mankind. The most popular works of fiction within the last quarter of a century have dealt largely with the Man of Nazareth, and his spirit has invaded much of modern fiction where his name is not mentioned. This is only one of the many indications that He is rising to his rightful sovereignty over the world. The eighteenth century story writers saw fit to ignore the great Galilean Prophet, but nineteenth century authors have found Him not only the noblest but the most popular theme. No doubt this is partly due to the fact that the Christ of mediæval theology is giving place to the Christ of the New Testament, and as this later Christ, who was the original Jesus of Nazareth, is being lifted up, He is drawing all men unto Himself.

During the past week we have had a succession of glorious days terminating in magnificent sunsets. The weather has been all that could be desired, and Macatawa Park never looked lovelier to our eyes than at present. The colony of Disciples who make this their summer home continues to grow. Cincinnati has made the latest contribution in the persons of the two Misses Wilson, who, after visiting several places in the lake district, have settled down here for a few days of quiet rest before they return to their profession of teaching. In spite of the forenoon assembly sessions, even the preachers find a little time for fishing. The most exciting incident in this line, during the past week, was the capture of a muskallonge by Dr. J. H. Hardin and wife. They were not hunting for a muskallonge, but it came along and had no better sense than to take Bro. Hardin's hook, and suffered the natural consequence of so rash an act. When it came to the surface, having no landing net—and an ordinary landing net would have been useless—the bold fisherman thrust his hand into the mouth of the great fish and landed it in his boat, receiving some lacerations of the skin, which he presents as evidence of the truthfulness of the story. But he took other precautions to guard his veracity. In the presence of witnesses the great fish measured 38 inches and weighed 11 1-4 pounds. Of course this leaves the Liberty pastor the hero of the rod and line—for the time being. We are thinking of taking a day off and seeing what can be done to preserve our prestige as an expert angler.

Questions and Answers.

What is it to "hunger and thirst after righteousness"? Beta.

It is to have an intense desire to be righteous and to enjoy communion with God. It implies a recognition of one's own demerit, dissatisfaction with present attainments, and a deep purpose to press on to better things. Jesus has promised that those who thus hunger "shall be filled."

Is Paul speaking of the sins of the unregenerate or of church members at Rome in Romans 3? N. Montgomery.

In the chapter referred to, the apostle is showing that both Jews and Gentiles are under condemnation, and the quotation made from the Old Testament is a description of unregenerate people. It is a dark picture of human life, unrelieved by the regenerating power of the gospel.

What is the best remedy for religious indifference? I seem to have lost my first love, and would gladly regain it. X.

Repent, and do thy first works. Forget your own feelings and go to helping somebody else to be happier. Indolence is the bane of Christian life. Do something each day that is distinctly unselfish, and do nothing that you know Christ would not approve. So shall you soon experience a return of your "first love."

In recent numbers of your paper, and also in your S. S. literature, I notice that you point out Friday as the day of Christ's crucifixion. Is such a position in accord with the Master's words (Matt. 12, 40), or is it merely our foolish clinging to the fables of the Roman Church? Chester A. Baird.

This is the view of the best biblical scholarship of the ages, and is not in conflict with the words of Jesus in the passage cited when they are understood in harmony with the Jewish custom of counting time.

When speaking of the church, is it right for a Christian to use the words "your church," "my church," "the church of my choice," etc.? N. H. Kent.

According to New Testament usage, the word church has two meanings: the whole body of believers and the local congregation. Since denominations are unknown to the New Testament writers, there can, of course, be no scriptural warrant for calling a denomination a church. The use of the terms in question is legitimate enough if the reference is to local congregations, but not otherwise. A denomination may be "mine" or "yours," but the whole church universal would better be left in the possession of its founder and called the Church of Christ.

✧ Choosing A Calling ✧

By CLINTON LOCKHART

Professor of Biblical Literature in Drake University.

That moment is a great crisis with a young man when he is selecting an occupation for life. It is often unfortunate that he must decide without knowing what he is most fitted to do, or even what he will be expected to do in any given calling. To persons in such a dilemma kindly suggestions are usually welcome.

It is a fact, as sad as it is frequent, that a young man will sometimes make such a choice through a mere whim in disregard of the highest considerations. Here, if anywhere in life, we should expect the most exalted principles to guide and the noblest possible ends to be sought. It is too important a field for the sway of wild fancy.

On the other hand, those who advise young men in this matter ought to be considerate of their peculiar yearnings and talents, so as not to push a man into a calling for which he is wholly unfit. Neither should we imagine that all men ought to enter any one occupation; for there can be too many in any business. However, there is not much danger that strictly humanitarian occupations will be crowded.

There is no doubt that many young men quickly dismiss all thought of such an occupation as the ministry on grounds which really are favorable to its adoption. One objects because the ministry requires a high standard of character and devotion to God. But is not that the very reason for becoming a minister? Is it better to choose an occupation which allows loose morals and wayward life, or one which demands our noblest manhood? Ought not our calling be just as great a stimulus to worthy character as possible, that it may stay us from the current that bears too strongly at the best toward evil? It is a great mistake to select a work for life that tends to bad habits, when there are many callings which ennoble the character and sweeten life. The ministry requires just what every good man should want, just what he should require of himself; and the wise man will put himself in position to develop the best that is in him.

Another objects to the ministry because it demands too much scholarship. This necessitates much work and expense, besides some years of time to prepare. Very true; but the education is worth far more than the work, expense and time devoted to some pursuit that makes only a financial return and leaves the laborer as ignorant as before. Some young men avoid an occupation that requires learning because study is irksome to them, or, plainly, they are too lazy. Well, the ministry does not need that kind. Men who are industrious, who appreciate an education, and are willing to do the work necessary to get it, can get it, and will be able to use it to their own honor. Wisdom suggests the choice of a calling that will train the mind and make of the man the most that he can become. Poverty need not be an obstacle; for most of the best-instructed ministers educated themselves by their own efforts. Some of the best students in all our colleges are those who make their own expenses as they go. Thus they wring fortune out of poverty, and find the richest wealth in the very dust of discouragement. The best occupation for a brave man to choose is the one that will compel the best preparation.

Others object to the ministry because of its publicity and exposure to criticism. Certainly the public man is likely to hear some things said of him that will not delight his soul; but on the other hand, the good man will hear far more that will make him happy, so that the objection is fully offset. But adverse criticisms are a blessing to wise men. They know that such expressions by the people usually have some foundation, and that it is a privilege to search out one's errors and correct them. The truly great man wishes as many criticisms as possible that he may improve by them and attain to the greatest excellence. Mark it: excellence is always worth all that it costs. But publicity has other advantages. It furnishes the best incentives to worthy effort that one can have, and so it develops the best thought and the most praiseworthy conduct. Especially the publicity of a minister is also a valuable safeguard to his character, a perpetual restraint upon his irregularities. This is a priceless boon to him who is wise enough to profit by it.

Aside from these considerations, the ministry has strong attractions for men of the highest aims:

1. Humanity is suffering everywhere for the want of the Gospel message, and the number of men is insufficient to supply this growing demand. The cry of humanity is always the call of God.

2. Probably in no other occupation can a work so great and far-reaching be accomplished. The character and happiness of the individual, the civilization of the race and the salvation of souls are the fruitage of faithful ministration.

3. There can be no better field for the exercise of the noblest manhood and the most exalted talents. No man has abilities too versatile or too precious for a work so varied in its possibilities and so lofty in its character.

4. A ministerial education is less technical and more general, less professional and more popular, less exclusive and more widely valuable, than almost any other. It is the kind that blesses a man whether in one occupation or another, the kind that all men need, and it is worth its cost even if the calling were not followed.

5. Facilities for education for the ministry are encouraging; instruction abreast of the times, tuition free, living available by work while in college. Likewise the study necessary to the prosecution of a minister's work with success is pleasant to secure and creditable to possess.

6. In the work itself the companionships are the best, the fellowships the sweetest, the purposes the highest, and the results the most comforting.

7. While no earnest minister need fear a want of financial support, which with the man of high instincts is always a minor consideration, the peace that follows the rescue of one soul from the ways and woes of a sinful life and death is worth more than the wages of the most successful secular profession.

The old advice, "Do not enter the ministry if you can help it," while it duly recognizes the need of sincerity and conscience, is insufficient to reach the youth that really desires to know what reasons exist for his choosing such a work. It is evident that many worthy young men would undertake this divine duty if they but knew the value and the need of their labors. Nevertheless, the world does not need indifferent, unworthy or incompetent ministers, and the church does not want them. Yet the call is not for men of rare talents only. Men of moderate powers can be useful. Not orators, not enthusiasts, not prodigies are needed, but faithful men, willing to prepare for the work and to do it, trusting to God and eternity for the full and final reward. The ministry speaks for the best that is in a man, challenges his best abilities; but it asks only for the best in common men of faith and love. The position is a place of responsibility and honor in the army that battles for the cause of man and God, that seeks to serve and preserve the interests of the whole race. The work appeals to the patriot, to the philanthropist, to the humanitarian.

Des Moines, Ia.

✧ Apostolic and Modern Missions.

By N. M. Ragland.

1. Evolution is the greatest of terms in science. It is the method, not the cause, of creation. The greatest word in the history of Christianity is missions. It is the method by which the church has carried out our Lord's last commission. The pattern for missions is found in the life of Jesus and in the example of his holy apostles, who were guided by the Master's oral teachings and the inferences of the Divine Spirit. Apostolic missions was the most original, far-reaching and benevolent enterprise that ever engaged the attention of thoughtful men. The messengers of the cross were possessed of an absorbing desire to make known the glad tidings. To this gracious message they gave an host of tongues. They threw themselves into the conflict with Judaism and paganism with consuming zeal and tireless energy. Their conduct is suggestive of a remark of the late Prof. John Stuart Blackie: "Christianity is a charge of cavalry, dashing onwards like a storm, to break the solid squares of an opposing infantry bristling with many spears." The conflict and the conquest begun in Jerusalem was carried into every part of the vast empire. The conditions were favorable for such an enterprise. Gibbon says: "The people considered all religions equally true; the philosophers considered them equally false, and the magistrates considered them equally useful." This secured for Christianity protection and respectful consideration. In the latter part of the first century, however, this policy was changed and the Christians became objects of frequent and frightful persecutions.

2. Modern missions began around the close of the eighteenth century. The men who inaugurated this enterprise for the evangelization of the world were moved by the same spirit that guided the apostles. William Carey said: "We must take every opportunity of doing the heathen good. Laboring night and day, we must instruct, exhort, and rebuke with all long-suffering and anxious desire for them, and above all, must be instant in prayer for the effusion of the Holy Spirit upon the people of our charge." Beginning at Serampore, Carey and his associates planted churches in various parts of India. They established schools of various grades and founded a Christian college. They translated and published the Holy Scriptures in thirty-six languages and dialects. Adoniram Judson translated the entire Bible into the Burmese tongue, and planted churches in Rangorn, Ava, Mandenain and other centers, from which the light of the gospel radiated into the regions around. The example of these first modern missionaries has been followed by all the boards that have sent missionaries to the foreign field. The American Board says: "The purpose of missions is the conversion of lost men; organizing them into churches; giving these churches a competent native ministry, and conducting them to the stage of independence and self-propagation." This purpose is identical with that of the apostles.

3. Comparison of apostolic missions and modern missions reveals the pleasing fact that they are essentially the same in all important particulars. The only differences are in changed conditions and circumstances. The good seed of the kingdom and the soil of the heart remain the same from generation to generation. Men are still restless and reaching out after God. The gospel continues to be the best hope of the world. The inspired word, the Divine Spirit and God's providential care are with the missionaries in every part of the world as they were with the apostles in the midst of the Roman empire. The faith, the zeal, and the fidelity of those who are enlisted in preaching the gospel in all lands, are as great as that of those who carried the gospel from Jerusalem to Rome. The motives of the modern missionary are as high and as holy as those of the great apostle who counted not his life dear to himself, so that he might finish his course with joy, and the ministry, which he had received from the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. Under all the circumstances the results of modern missions have been as great and as satisfactory as those of the apostles in the first century. In the hearts of the men and the women on the foreign field is written: "God is our Father, and the Father of all men. All men are brothers." To this religion of humanity they have dedicated their lives, which they are ready to offer up, if this religion may be the religion of all men.

The Memorial Supper

BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES

The purpose of the supper is best expressed in the words of Jesus: "This do in remembrance of me." He was not afraid of being forgotten, but he wanted to be remembered for a particular work. The world remembers too many, and less worthy ones, to forget him. He was confident of the spread of his kingdom and of the endurance of his message, but the supper reveals how careful he was to magnify the essential feature, the central principle of his mission. The same anxiety to be rightly understood moved him once to ask the disciples, "Whom do men say that I am?" While others said John the Baptist, or Elias, or one of the prophets, Jesus was quick to approve Peter's reply, "Thou art the Christ." It was his lowly service of love, shown forth most fully by his broken body and shed blood, which he sought to impress by the symbolism of the bread and wine.

The first thing which strikes one in this memorial is its utter simplicity. The church has since tried to magnify the religion of Christ by elaborate ritual, and relics, and material monuments, but these are impotent beside the tokens which were consecrated by our Lord himself. After all, the simple, commonplace things are often the most significant. A tiny insect, brushed aside in disgust or trampled under foot, may reveal to the scientist, through its delicate organism and wonderful adaptation, a vision of infinite wisdom and care. The flowers, the grass, the birds, the common things of life, were ever expressive to Jesus of the divine presence and providence. Natural things are closest to the God of nature, and, therefore, they most easily become symbols of his life and truth. The bread and wine easily became suggestive of the Man who satisfies the deepest hunger and thirst of human souls. The communion service has become to the whole of Christendom a dramatic epitome of the entire Gospel. It carries the imagination quickly to the heart and to the farthest reaches of Christian truth and service. It reveals the divine love and courage and trust of Jesus. It uncovers the depths to which sin could degrade men, blinding their eyes to the beauty and righteousness of the true Messiah.

The memorial supper illustrates the power of truth to transform apparent defeat into glorious victory. Jesus is remembered for his death. Most men are remembered, if at all, for some event of their life. How easy it would be to select for perpetuation an attractive moment in the life of Christ. The Transfiguration, or the Triumphal Entry, would seem easier to preserve than the ignominious death. But the success with which Christianity has made the cross its emblem is the evidence of the power of love to exalt anything through which it serves the world. It is the illustration, too, of the fact that all the progress of the race toward justice and knowledge and peace has come by way of the cross. The cross of Jesus is the divinely perfect example of what occurs in all nature and in every individual where there is growth. That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. The crushed rose and the sorrow chastened life yield true fragrance. Pioneers sow their bodies on battlefields and a nation springs from the soil. Reformers die, and freedom is ever born anew for the enslaved in body and in mind. Christ, in his death upon the cross, revealed the way, the way in which love and power ascend to the throne everywhere in life. The death of Jesus is the consistent culmination of his life in such a world. It is his life, so different from all others, that makes his death unique. The cross is the luminous point at which all the virtues of his character become visible in their perfection. He is the Savior to every man who makes that vision his own ideal and guide.

It is for this reason that the communion service is more than an indulgence in sentiment or formal ceremonial. It aids the imagination to hold vividly the essential principles of the Christian religion, and therefore keeps many a man and woman to a purer and more purposeful daily life. It is this practical and spiritual value which has perpetuated the Supper through all the Christian centuries. It lives in the church not because its observance was commanded, but because it really ministers to holy living. The tendency which to-day is discarding the sacramental elements of religion can only touch the accessories of the observance of the Lord's Supper, for the institution itself is not a sacrament. It is the normal and natural means by which the church renews love and faith in her Lord and Master, and thereby increases her likeness unto him.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

To a student of American Christianity the history of the Disciples of Christ—their origin, aim, program, progress, and present position, numerically, doctrinally, financially, socially and educationally, is a story of surpassing interest. I know of nothing equal to it in the entire history of the church. They are, without doubt, a unique people. What has been accomplished by them along a number of lines is simply wonderful. What of their future? Will their progress in days to come equal their growth in the days that are gone? This question no man can answer. Doubtless there are persons who believe the future has for the Disciples of Christ victories greater than any that have been gained in the past. If this optimistic view shall be realized I will certainly rejoice.

Every great movement in religion as in every other department of life must crystallize about a leader or leaders. This is inevitable. The Disciples were blessed, wonderfully blessed, in their leaders in the early period of their history. Great men for their times and in their places were the Campbells, Stone and Scott. They were born to lead. Isaac Errett, in his day and for his peculiar work, was the peer of any member of the historic quartet here named. The characters of these men made them leaders and commanders of the people. Commanding characters will always be needed. Such men will always have influence.

The men with whom this nineteenth century movement for the reunion of the divided church, by a return in faith and in life to the Christianity of the New Testament originated, were educated gentlemen. They were worthy to be called scholars. As scholarship is to-day, they are hardly to be accounted such; but in their day and in the United States, and in the part of the country in which they wrought, they were certainly worthy of this name. They read, they thought, they had convictions, they were men of positive speech, and they were as courageous as martyrs. Great men were our fathers! Men of their character are as much needed now as at any previous period in the history of our race. The future of the Disciples of Christ depends on the presence among them of men whose characters are Christian and whose attainments give them standing among men of culture. The questions pressing for solution now are quite as difficult as, if not more perplexing than, were the questions in the early part of the last century. If great and good men were needed to solve the questions of that period, men equally large, intellectually and morally, are needed to successfully grapple the problems before us at the beginning of this twentieth century of the Christian era.

The average preacher among the Disciples to-day is superior to the average man in the ministry forty years ago. This period is mentioned because it is covered by the memory of the writer. The young preacher in 1901 is, in his equipment for work, superior to the young preacher in 1861. We are on a much higher level now in this respect than we were then; and to me this is a reason for gratitude and hope. But if our young men are better fitted for their work than were the men of forty years ago they ought to preach the gospel more effectively than did the men of the former period. But do they? I do not know. Sometimes I fear they do not. More, I fear, is made of their doubts in their public discourses and less of their deep convictions.

The men with whom this movement began not only believed in learning, in education, in scholarship, they were themselves educators. Their belief was manifest in their works. Thomas Campbell was a teacher, Alexander Campbell was a teacher, Barton Stone was a teacher, Walter Scott was a teacher. Not long had they been at work in the field of religious reform when institutions of learning of college grade were founded. They saw that an educated ministry was an essential. But for Bethany College their work would have been a failure. The debt of the Disciples of Christ to their schools is enormous. I wonder if they appreciate the magnitude of the debt. We speak eloquently and with emotion of the heroes of the mission field. I would not detract one iota from the popular estimate of their heroism; but I desire to mention in close connection with them the men and women who have given their lives to the cause of education. They too are heroes.

F. M. Green, in his "History of Hiram College," just from the press, has done his part to show the importance of the work of his alma mater, and so to show the debt of the brotherhood of Disciples of Christ to this school founded less than ten years after the beginning of Bethany College. As the Buffalo Seminary preceded Bethany College, so the Western Reserve Eclectic Institute prepared the way for Hiram College. The work on Hiram Hill has been dignified and thorough above the average. It has sent out since its humble beginning, fifty years ago, an army of teachers and preachers—preparing one man to be the executive of the nation. Hiram graduates have a right to be proud of the achievements of their alma mater. Men and women have been trained in this institution to fill worthily every responsible station in life—not simply those of teacher, preacher, congressmen, president. Hiram graduates are found in every useful vocation and position. Their names and character of service are given in an appendix to this book. It ought to be borne in mind that what Hiram and all the colleges of the Disciples have accomplished has been with an exceedingly imperfect equipment. Their schools have been deficient in the teaching force, in apparatus, in endowment. Their hands have been tied all these years. If so much has been done without endowment, with insufficient apparatus, and a small teaching force, what may we not expect when these deficiencies shall have been remedied? Hiram is in better condition than at any previous period in her history. The endowment now is in the neighborhood of $300,000. Within a few years past new buildings have been erected. Improved apparatus has been secured. Hiram College is in better condition to do good work than ever before.

F. M. Green's book ought to be extensively read. The story is well written. The author is in sympathy with his theme to the point of enthusiasm. The facts recorded on the pages of this volume are tremendously important to the Disciples. Every reader will receive an inspiration that will cause him henceforth to live on a higher plane. The work of college education in general will be aided by the circulation of this book. Our educational work is one. The success of one institution is a help to all.

THEOLOGY IN PREACHING

By STEVE J. COREY

Henry Ward Beecher once said that his least concern lay in having a theology, but that he was anxious to have religion. The religious teaching of the great preacher would have been much stronger and more lasting had he cared less for divorcing theology from religion, a thing which really cannot be done. The man who preaches without a real basis of theology, sails a ship without a rudder. We have been prejudiced against systematic arrangement of Christian doctrine by the cold, intellectual, and dogmatic theology of the past, but escape from a system of doctrinal belief we cannot, nor dare we. Doctrinal speculation is lifeless, but the decrying of true theological thinking is coming to be a vice of this age. We ought to thank God that we can in a measure systematize his truth. Theology is but the theory of religion, and any one who puts two facts concerning God and his redemption together, has the beginnings of the theology. And who does not do it? Consciously or unconsciously we philosophize as naturally as we repeat prose. Revelation does not present to us a system of belief, but it is there, and we must arrange it. God has given us a dissected map—we have the pieces and the key, and it is for us to complete the map.

Does not one of the weak points of present day preaching lie in the absence of real doctrinal teaching? Is there not a great need for the statement over and over again of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith? Christianity is an ethical system, but ethical teaching is not the beginning nor the whole of it. The staple of preaching is doctrine. The uppermost thought in every preacher's mind should be, that man is lost and that Christ saves. These great truths his people need first, last and always. He must teach Christian ethics—he cannot forget daily duties, but these things are secondary. They are the outcome of his theology not the basis of it. How many preachers feel that all of their earnestness in condemning evil habits and encouraging virtue has no more weight than a feather. What is the trouble? The heart of the matter has not been reached. The scriptural way of dealing with sin has been forgotten. The great eternal fact of alienation from God, and redemption through Christ, must come first. To preach Christ is the best way to preach morality. The great doctrinal verities are the arrows for the sinful heart.

To preach in this way a man must have a theology. He must have a system of belief. No forensic oratory, no interesting illustration, no impassioned appeal, will take its place. The people must be taught, and the staple of that teaching must be doctrine. The fact that we as Disciples of Christ have no creed but the New Testament does not exonerate us from having a theology, a system of doctrine; it makes it all the more necessary. We have no general binding statement of doctrine, but from this very fact each man must have his own. Why should we forever tremble at the thought of "a theology"? Is it because we fear the repetition of the sad tragedy of the final and binding dogma of the church in past centuries? It is about the last thing we need fear in this age. Rather let us fear the tragedy of a flabby and toothless religion, which accepts everything in general and nothing in particular—a religion without a definite system of belief, without a theology. "Doctrine without duty is a tree without fruits, but duty without doctrine is a tree without roots."

Must it be forever thought that every man who thinks along theological lines is dry? That doctrinal preaching is fossilizing? There never was a greater delusion. To be sure, doctrine as a mere dogma is always dry. But doctrine shot through by experience, fused by personal conviction, is living and powerful. The hearts of the people are hungry for it. The world is dying for it. Without it preaching is a farce, and the evangel a travesty. The preacher may not call it a "system of theology," but if he has no definite ideas of Christian doctrine, his teaching (if indeed it can be called such) will have no more permanency than a bridge constructed by a man who knows nothing of mathematics. A man without a basis of doctrinal belief may inspire for a time, but, if he is to reach, teach and mold people in a way that will last, he must believe something and know what it is. And will theological preaching reach the ordinary people? Will it not be too dry and unsightly, and will they understand it? That depends. A skeleton is unsightly, but covered with the form of an Apollo Belvidere one is startled into admiration. And is the skeleton any the less needful because of the beauty of the form? Did Paul hesitate to send doctrinal teaching to the Romans or Ephesians?

And would not our congregations compare favorably with the conglomeration of slaves, ignorant soldiers and newly converted and illiterate idolaters to whom these doctrinal discussions were addressed? Is not the modern cry for "simplicity" three-fourths intellectual laziness? There is no greater mistake than to suppose the common man will be driven away from church by strong doctrinal preaching. It is what he needs; it is what his heart craves. Let the minister of the gospel neglect it at his own peril.

Prayer for Rain.

By Mrs. Blanche H. Brown.

[The following article is selected from among several which have been called out by the article entitled "What Shall we Pray For?" by H. H. Todd in our issue of August 1. An editorial statement of a position opposed to Mr. Todd's has already been made.—EDITOR.]

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of August 1st, Bro. H. H. Todd asks the question, "What Shall we Pray For?" and answers by saying, "Not for rain."

Can God send rain in answer to prayer? If he did in the days of Moses, why not now? Has he changed the laws of the universe since Christ came? Jesus said to the sea, "Peace, be still!" Has God less power over the elements than he had two thousand years ago? Our brother will not maintain that God has less power than he had in the Judean age, or that it is less possible for him to send a direct and immediate answer to prayer.

But will he? Our brother answers "No." Why? "Because we live in a spiritual kingdom, under a perfect moral law, and physical manifestations are no longer needed to teach us how to walk by faith." True. And every Christian will agree that spiritual welfare is vastly more important than temporal welfare. Our brother says that the promises of temporal blessings which were given during the Judean age, "Jesus took away, and if restored again it must be shown in the teachings of the Holy Spirit!" and he asks for "a single clear text after the day of Pentecost and apostolic days, where God proposes in any manner to interfere with the laws of nature for man's sake." Will he give us "a single clear text after the day of Pentecost," or before it, which will prove conclusively that Jesus took away these promises?

We have the record that God did answer the prayers of his children in those former days. But we do not know that he "interfered with the laws of nature" in so doing. Even then the rain fell "upon the just and upon the unjust," as it does to-day. If God interfered with nature's laws in those days, what proof have we that he will do so no longer? If on the other hand, in those days he operated through natural laws in bringing about the fulfillment of his promises, why should we suppose that these laws, though unknown to the scientific world, are not still in existence, to be used as God sees fit in dealing with his children?

In Matt. 6:7, 8, Jesus cautions his disciples against vain repetitions, "For your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him." He does not say "Therefore do not ask." But he says, "After this manner pray ye," and gives to them that grand, sweet petition to "our Father." And in that prayer he says, "Give us this day our daily bread." Did he mean this instruction for those only who sat under the sound of his voice? Is that prayer not available to the disciple of the twentieth century? Like Paul, "We know not what we should pray for as we ought."

The letter of James was written after the day of Pentecost. Let us hear him: "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." James did not say, "Send for one of the twelve," nor did he say "The effectual fervent prayer of an apostle availeth much." Bro. T. would have said, "Send for a skillful doctor." Perfectly right and proper. God has never at any time promised to "interfere" in behalf of his children, if they are too lazy or too stingy to avail themselves of the material aids which he has placed within their reach. "This ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone."

James goes on, "Elias was a man, subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again and the heaven gave rain and the earth brought forth her fruit." If these words bear no profit to those who live under the new dispensation, why did James, inspired by the Holy Spirit, write them so many years after the day of Pentecost? If they are applicable only to those who lived at that time, then where is the verse of Scripture applicable to the disciple of to-day, and how shall we discern between them?

Our brother says that in his observation "such prayers have been a miserable failure." I very much like that paragraph in his article in which he says, speaking of disasters, "and when men receive them in humility and subjection, then are they chastened as sons." Jesus came to earth to teach the love and fatherhood of God, and throughout his mission here he was ever mindful of the sufferings of those around him. Was he more compassionate than the Father who sent him?

I am reminded of a little home scene. My little four-year-old daughter comes to my side, leans her curly head against my arm and looks eagerly, pleadingly, into my face, as she holds before me an apple: "The wind was blowing and it fell on the grass and it looks like it is good, may I eat it?"

"No," I answer, "it is not ripe."

The blue eyes fill with tears, the baby lips quiver and the sweet voice falters, as she pleads, "It looks like it is ripe. I know it wouldn't make me sick. I would like to eat it."

I love my little daughter. I am touched with pity for her disappointment, but can I grant her request? From very love I must refuse, though I can not explain to her nor can she comprehend the reason why. Her prayer has been a "miserable failure." What must she learn from this? Not to ask for things that are hurtful to her? Perhaps. But how is she to discern what is hurtful? She must go on asking for what she wants subject to such knowledge as she possesses, and must leave the granting or refusing to the judgment of her parent.

The wisest human being on earth is an infant before the wisdom of God. And even as the little child before its earthly parent, so, it seems to me, ought we before our heavenly Father to make our requests, asking for just what it seems to us it is right we should have. And we should ask in faith believing. Believing what? That within two or even six days our prayer will be answered in exactly the way and manner we expect or request it? No. We must leave the answer to his infinite judgment. We must ask in faith, believing that our request will be granted if it is right and best that it should be so.

Are the proclamation of Gov. Dockery and the prayers of the people a failure? No. The showers that have fallen may not fulfill the letter of the request, but if the people receive them with thankful hearts, remembering that God's wisdom is above our wisdom, "in a spirit of humility and subjection, then are they chastened as sons."

In the garden of Gethsemane, Jesus cried, in agony, "O, my father! Let this cup pass from me!" adding in sweet humility, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Who would dare to say this prayer was a miserable failure? Yet, the cup did not pass. He drank it to the dregs, and in that dark hour was made perfect through suffering.

As to the prayers to God in time of war, no prayer should ever be offered except in humility and subjection, remembering that while both sides believe themselves right, one must be wrong, and frequently both are wrong. We must not forget that the children of Israel were not always successful, but were punished for national sins and even carried into captivity. I believe the God of right still directs the destiny of nations.

New York Letter.

By S. T. Willis.

It is difficult to take the eyes off the grandeur of the ceaseless surging of the sea long enough to write the New York Letter. We are enjoying the delightful breezes and the fine surf at Bethany Beach, the new resort of the Disciples of the East. It has been my privilege to see most of the popular sea-side resorts of the north Atlantic Coast, many of them of world-wide fame, and I am free to say I have never seen a finer natural beach anywhere than this. If properly managed this resort can be made into an ideal resting place for the Disciples of Christ. It has several miles of beautiful sandy beach, without a rock or any other obstruction. The bottom slopes gradually out to sea a distance of several hundred yards, and the surf is absolutely clean; the foam and sand are a lovely white. Fifteen acres in the midst of this tract of land has been deeded to the Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia Missionary Society, to be used by the Disciples of Christ for the purpose of a summer religious assembly. A large number of Disciples have purchased lots, and some have built. Others intend doing so before the next season.

The large octagonal auditorium, with a seating capacity of several hundred, was dedicated on July 12, when a large and enthusiastic congregation was present.

The deed to the assembly grounds was placed in the hands of the officials of the Missionary Society. A number of services have been held, and several persons have become obedient to the faith. Among those who have visited the beach this season are F. D. Power, E. B. Bagby, Dr. H. Penrod, Mrs. Lattimore, Mrs. J. M. Pickens, E. H. Bondurant, J. Scott, I. Kitchen, J. H. Tibbetts, Miss S. Sweeny and J. G. Thompson, of Washington City; from Philadelphia, G. P. Rutledge, D. C. France and family, and I. Scithens; C. L. Thurgood and wife, and W. S. Kidd and family from Pittsburg; Earl Wilfley from New Castle; Mr. Folsome and family from Youngstown, Ohio; J. A. Hopkins, Rockville, Md.; Mrs. Laura Wheeler of Baltimore; G. Dudley of Lemoine, Pa.; S. Evangs of Millville, Del.; S. T. Willis and family from New York, and others. D. C. France, a Disciple of Philadelphia, was made mayor of the town of Bethany Beach and a number of persons were elected commissioners by the lot holders under the laws of Delaware. It is the desire of the management to add Chautauqua features to the program in the coming seasons.

More and more public institutions are encroaching upon the sanctity of the Lord's day and stated divine services in the Lord's house. The question of opening the public libraries of New York is being discussed in literary circles of the metropolis. Dr. Billings, head librarian, who is on intimate business terms with Andrew Carnegie, is quoted as favoring the opening of the branch libraries at certain hours on the Lord's day. This opinion is shared by others, and is strengthened to some extent by the success of the experiment of opening the Metropolitan Museum of Art on Sunday afternoons. But, while both the public library and the art museum are educational institutions, the case relating to them is by no means parallel. In order for one to get the benefit of the great art exhibit one must visit the museum and study its varied riches within the building that houses its treasures. None of the exhibits can be taken out and studied. It is not so with the library. The circulating and traveling departments, which will be numerous, furnish reading matter of every class to be taken to the homes of those who wish it, and the books may be secured at any time and kept two weeks. But if the keeping of the libraries open on the Lord's day either directly or indirectly makes for the moral and religious advancement of the people, as well as for their intellectual enlargement, the best element of New York will approve of it.

The holding of religious services recently at "Haymarket" dance hall in the tenderloin district of New York was one of the significant advance movements of the army of the Lord against the very ramparts of Satan. There is, perhaps, a no more deadly pitfall for the feet of virtue in Gotham. The Haymarket is a notorious, disreputable place. Many are the victims who have lost their virtue in this infamous place. It was frequented by the lewd among the moneyed class, and, therefore, has always been strongly guarded by the influence of the conscienceless rich. But it has been the custom not to open the place until about 10 P. M., and then remain open all night. But the proprietor, willing to increase the revenue, has turned the place over to the Rev. Joseph Jones of the Jerry McAuley Cremorne Mission. Mr. Jones, with a band of loyal helpers from the Y. M. C. A. and some of the great missions, began holding services there on July 28 with apparent good results. It is something like the reformatory work which has been done in past years in other parts of the city, such as Water Street, the Five Points and the Bowery Mission district. Moral and Christian heroism is always at a premium under such conditions. It is encouraging to know, for instance, that brave young men of the Brooklyn Christian Endeavor Union have banded themselves together to send a delegation of good men on each of the trolley cars making evening trips to Coney Island to sing hymns on the cars in order to counteract the influence of the vile songs being carped by evil minded young men who travel the line, making night hideous with their vile effusions. The Christian courage of these young men certainly is commendable.

The Passing of Symbolism

By HUGH McLELLAN

The modern spirit is a scientific spirit. The scientific spirit calls for the facts. The days of old were the days of symbolism; ours is the day of realism. There was a day when the rich folk of the earth showed their wealth by symbols. They lived in palaces and castles, not so convenient and comfortable, possibly, as a modern dwelling, but complete in symbols of wealth and luxury. Each battlemented tower, each escutcheon was a symbol of wealth. My lord had diamonds set in his snuff box, not that it made the snuff any better, but it stood for grandeur. He had diamonds in the lid of his watch. There were gold buckles on his shoes, and so on. My lady! why, "she had rings on her fingers and bells on her toes." The household servants were all liveried and every appointment was in keeping. These were the symbols of wealth and station. It sometimes happened that a man retained the symbols longer than he retained the means, and then he seemed richer than he was. To-day the symbol has almost disappeared. Messrs. Carnegie, Sage, Morgan and Rockefeller are all plain men. They are remarkably simple and unostentatious in their style. They wear no jewels and dress with almost severe plainness. One would not think by merely seeing Mr. Carnegie on the street that he was able to give away ten million dollars in one gift. He is satisfied in the fact of his ability and needs no show. This is the modern spirit—reality, sincerity, facts. Not look rich, but be rich. Not display your money, but give your money. Not symbolize your wealth in dead ornament, but energize your wealth in living institutions.

There was a day when the old merchantman of the sea, the sailing ship, carried on her prow an elaborate figure-head. Neptune, Triton, and all the sea-nymphs in gilded glory took their station under the jib. These carved representations of the sea powers bobbed up and down to the laborious wallowings of many a leaky tub. These symbols of rule over the mighty deep, with their cheap gilt, were but tragic irony to the sailor who felt that there was but a leaky plank between him and death. The figure-head is gone. To-day the ocean liner has simple, unadorned lines. They do not need symbols of power; they have power. Triton is not under the jib; he is in the boiler. Not what is on her, but what is in her makes her go. The modern motto is not symbols of speed, but speed.

The decay of symbolism is seen also in the decay of oratory. Not that the art of public speaking is declining. On the contrary, it is gaining power. One of its forms only is dead. The oration lies under a splendid pall of words. Words thick as autumnal leaves cover its meagre form, and all the flowers of rhetoric are piled upon its breast. The oration died because it could not tell the facts. It sought symbolism and neglected realism. It emphasized beauty at the expense of truth. It apostrophized, it symbolized, it typified, it lied, it died. The modern address or speech is a power because it is sincere; and because, discarding useless and ambiguous symbolism, it tells the facts.

When we turn from these small instances to larger principles, we see that the whole process of divine revelation has been a development from the symbol to the reality. The beginnings of religion, with its tabernacle and altar and smoke and hyssop and priests, was a period of symbolism. The New Dispensation is the day of fact. The incense is gone, but prayer remains. The priest is gone, but the soul, leaving its dark sins, still draws near to God. The lamb without spot is not upon the altar, but Christ, the Lamb of God, is in us the Hope of Glory. God in olden days looked out upon the world, his face hidden in the symbolic veil; now the veil is lifted and the world gazes transfixed upon the face of Jesus. Immanuel! A sinner is not drawn by an abstraction. The prodigal world will never return to kiss a figure of speech. The world is hungry for facts. God is the great Fact. The world will come back to him.

Is not this principle a prophecy of the passing of all symbols, and the certainty of eternal life? Matter is symbolism. The world of matter is but the beauteous symbol of the spiritual energy which created it.

"The spacious Firmament on high With all the blue ethereal sky" is but the symbol of the divine life and wisdom. Are not the houses and factories, the bridges and ships, the material symbols of the life and energy of man? His very body is but the pantomimic sheet on which Life throws its shadow. Surely, in the process of the suns these symbols will pass and the eternal facts appear. Not evidences of God, but God. Not symbols of love, but love. Not manifestations of life, but life. Not darkly through a glass, but face to face.

Missouri as a Mission Field.

By Elmer T. Davis.

Of our 1,675 churches in Missouri nearly 1,000 have no regular preaching, not even once a month. What will be the lives of thousands of our children who are raised under the influence of these churches? They are being taught by example that if they have been baptized into Christ and do nothing particularly bad they do not have to support or attend the preaching of the gospel to be a Christian; that it is not a duty but simply a choice; and the preaching of the gospel to them dwindles to a mere matter of entertainment. They attend any church they desire or stay at home or wherever they can enjoy themselves the best. A few years ago a religious canvass of this city revealed the fact that over 1000 people who were members of the Christian Church were not in fellowship with any church in the city and of course did not support them with any regularity in attendance or financial help, and many more think if they attend the morning service that entirely relieves them from church work the rest of the day. If this indifference is not caused by the way they were raised, what is the cause of it?

We are compelled to acknowledge that the attendance of our city churches is not nearly what it ought to be. Thousands of people who have belonged to the Christian Church are in the theaters instead of the church on Lord's day evening. One reason given for this condition is that our young people in the small towns go away to school and when they come home they don't want to listen to a man preach unless he is educated. But that excuse certainly could not keep them away from our city churches. The trouble is they don't even have an uneducated man to preach to them, not even one Lord's day in the month, for their parents and friends don't hire a man to do it, which to them is the best proof under heaven that it is not a necessary part of the Christian life. When they come to the city they bring the same standard of a Christian life with them, and church-going is only one class of entertainment. If they desire to attend, they do; if not, they look for some other entertainment, and the theater as an entertainer is so far ahead of the church that the hundreds of empty pews and the crowded theaters tell the result when Sunday night comes.

Is it the goal of our ambition to build church-houses and allow them to rot down in idleness? Is this the fruit of "our plea"? Is this the result of preaching the "old Jerusalem gospel"? No wonder three-fourths of our churches give nothing for missions! How can a church that has not enough interest in the gospel to preach it to its own children be expected to send it to Africa or China? If it is important to build up a church extension fund to build new church houses, if it is important to send our home evangelists into new fields where we have no house, no organization and no influence, how important it is for us to enter these fields where we have a good house, some faithful members and some influence, to revive the work and have the gospel regularly preached.

This field is a large one in nearly every state and a great part of this work must be done by our pastors. A two weeks' meeting will in many places start these churches into regular work, and thousands of our young people may be trained to grow up in knowledge and favor of our Lord and to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ and to glorify our Father by bearing much fruit.

Dregs of The War By BURRIS A. JENKINS

III.

Late the next night, when the services were over, the locust trees in Nelson Payne's great bluegrass yard were waving over groups of guests, loath to retire into a crowded house. Sixty in all were sleeping, those nights, in this one house and barn. The fresh straw of the recent threshing enclosed in brand-new sheeting served for beds, and these literally covered the floors of every room, men occupying all the rooms on the east side of the wide hall and the hall itself, women all on the west side.

To be near their horses most of those dusty riders of the previous night's exploit were sheltered in the barn, taking turns at keeping guard. Nelson Payne was a fiercer partisan than his daughter Adelaide, and counted it well-nigh a virtue for the southern born to retaliate for injuries, fancied or real. He could see none of the border depredations save those committed by northern bushwhackers, and those he magnified tenfold. His home, then, had always been a house of refuge to the hunted gang.

An outsider, however, would never have known that aught save the most peaceful concerns were in the minds of that gathered company. The croquet balls were clicking in the moonlight, small bits of white cloth being tied upon the arches to locate them in the uncertain light, and shouts of laughter broke from those at play; couples here and there strolled in secluded corners; groups were gathered in chairs or on the grass "swapping yarns"; children shouted at "Puss in the corner," "Drop the handkerchief," "King William," "Hide and seek," and other ingenious games; and even the elder folk sometimes sold dignity for a taste of childhood and joined in the rout. Baskets of fruit added to the pleasures of the night; and great, sweet-hearted, luscious watermelons—melons such as none but black Missouri soil can grow—burst open with delights.

Had one peered into the rail-fence corners in the great barn lot, or even farther down the road toward the woods pasture, he might have noted one or two solitary figures keeping watch upon the approaches. This and an occasional whispered consultation among certain of the farmers were the only tokens of a disturbed state of mind.

It had been rumored during the day that a Chicago detective agency had sent a posse of men into the county, and it was expected that at any time they might appear upon the scene. Little share in the night's entertainment were they likely to receive!

On the steps of the porch and on the grass all around was gathered the largest group, in the center of which in a great old "split-bottom" arm-chair—he had refused the black mohair best parlor rocker—sat the aged preacher, Raccoon John Smith, of Kentucky. Marvelous tales of personal experience in pioneer preaching, saddle-bag stories, moving incidents of persecution, ostracism and denominational jealousies, but most of all a flowing humor that made the stout farmers almost laugh their leathern lungs out, held his little audience as his preaching had held the large one.

Frequently the old man turned his eyes toward the rear rank of his listeners where sat the unmoved and serious young Confederate major. The adroit old preacher was all the while talking at this immobile face, just as in his preaching it was his custom to aim his message at one man. He was, one might say, playing for his opening. Gradually he led the conversation around—he was always master of its trend—to the point he desired.

The war was not a difficult theme to reach in any company of the day, but his must be a master hand who could harp upon its strings with harmony. The aged warrior of the faith touched lightly upon the causes of the conflict; expressed no opinion about slavery, but gently declared his mind that money and not blood should have purchased the liberty of the blacks; doubted whether even then war could have been avoided; and was glad that when all was done the Union was not dissolved. He spoke tenderly of the number of his sons in the faith, most of whom had been clad in gray, who were sleeping on the battlefields, and of the broken-hearted homes, both north and south, where Rachels would hear no comfort. On the border warfare and the outrages committed by both sides he touched tactfully,—felt that much bitterness might be avoided, much more peace of mind be found, if all could discern in these acts their true irresponsible complexion. War was an unsettling horror. Justice, difficult enough to deal out at the best, could not in such times be faithfully administered.

Gentle and tender, so consummately kind, were the tones of the patriarch's voice! It was not so much what he said—the same things had been uttered before in every man's ears who was present—but it was the manner of his saying, so thrilled with the sympathy of nearly three score years and ten, so appreciative of the wounds he was touching, so mindful of the memories he stirred. Toward the last of his words he looked full into the face of Scott Cameron and saw the tears spring and flow. The old man was surprised to find so ready a conquest, and the fierceness so soon giving place to weeping. Something must have prepared the way, he thought. But when he saw the heart had been touched he reached out for the will.

"So, brethren," he continued, "there is but one thing for us, young and old, to do. The lost cause so dear to the hearts of most of us here is forever lost. Let us bury it with the dead; and as David did who mourned in sackcloth while his son lay dying, but arose and anointed his face when his son had died, anointed his face and turned to the duties he owed his people, so should we do. Back to our farms and our homes, desolate though they may be, back to slenderer resources, to a strenuous poverty, to blackened and shattered hearths, it is ours to go. Our hearts will ache a thousand times for good old days, but God is over all. He gave and he took away—are we men enough to say, 'Blessed be his name'? If so, we'll be still better men for saying it. Will you do it?"

The old man was now leaning far forward and resting his shaking hands upon the arms of his chair as he looked intently into the white faces that were turned to his in the moonlight, especially into the face of Scott Cameron. There was, for a moment in that little circle, a silence so deep it could be felt; then some one broke it with a choking gasp, another with a sob. Then a deep voice answered,

"I will."

Then another and another and another. The Elder watched Scott Cameron, saw his lips move, but was not certain whether he spoke the pledge. One who sat beside the young man, however, heard his scarce audible words,

"By heaven, I will."

"Thank God," murmured Adelaide, and put her hand in his.

They two soon walked away from the group about the porch. Although this was their first meeting since that at the stile a week before, for a long time no word passed. Not a word of upbraiding could she speak, not even an inquiry. She left it to him to say what he would. At last when they were far past the group at the well and had come where the huge chopping-block lay beside the woodpile under the elm, he sank to his knees and, with his arms about her waist, his face buried in his sleeve, wept like a little child. The sobs of the strong man shook her as the storm shakes a willow; she smoothed his hair, kissed his head, murmuring all the time she knew not what, and waited for the tempest to subside.

At last he spoke:

"I am ashamed, Adelaide—you'll—I'm weak!"

"No. You are strong."

"You told me not to go! I wish to God I had not gone!"

She waited for further word.

"His blood is on my hands!"

She shuddered but asked after a pause:

"Whose blood, Scott, dear?"

"Allen Thompson's, who was murdered at Blue Glen. He was a captain in a Tennessee regiment, who fought at Corinth where I was wounded. He took me off the field to the rear and was kind to me—and now—his blood is on my hands!"

Adelaide could not repress a second shiver, but she begged him to go on, hoping for some better turn to the affair.

"He was on the train last night. We stopped it and passed readily through the forward cars and smoker, holding up all the passengers. Jesse Young and I were doing this work, while others stood guard outside. There was no resistance till we came to the platform of the first coach back of the smoking car. There a man stepped out to meet us, armed with the emergency axe from the coach. I recognized him instantly, but before I could cry aloud Jesse fired and the man fell. I would go no further, but worked all in vain with the dying man. Thank God he did not know me! Will he ever know me—ever see me? I can never face him! His blood is on my hands!"

And he sobbed again.

"Not so bad as that, Scott, not so bad," murmured the girl, though she knew that before the law he was accessory. She did all in her power to soothe him; they talked long and earnestly; and when they separated he took, perhaps, less morbid views of the affair.

As he stepped into the barn he found his comrades lying about upon the hay in the dim light of lanterns or playing poker on a wagon seat.

"Been getting religion, Scott?" said one, and the game ceased as all turned sneering or frowning faces toward him and laughed or growled. Evidently he did not stand well with the gang. He made no reply, but stood looking about him until his eyes rested on the leader's face.

"Jesse, I'm going to quit the gang."

"Um-m-m, state's evidence?"

"No. But I'm done."

"Looked as if you were done last night, when you took to slobberin' over that dead fool!"

"But, Jesse, he was a Confederate!"

"What do I care if he was a tin angel? In another minute he'd a had me—and you—you struck up my right hand. I had to shoot with my left. Lucky for you I didn't shoot you! If I'd thought a minute I would!"

Scott did not condescend an explanation of his relations with the murdered man. He simply said:

"I thought I was working against Federals only, and to avenge southern blood. That's the way you've always put it to me. But when it comes to murdering Confederate soldiers you can count me out."

The young veteran knew, and Adelaide had warned him, that he took his life in his hands when he crossed the threshold of that barn, and he had laid his weapons on a grain bin in token that he felt his helplessness. He knew that his record would belie the charge of cowardice in thus throwing himself on their mercy, and he did not care to have more blood upon his hands.

"Well, go, then," said the leader. "Get religion, turn state's evidence, what you will, but—have you told anything already?"

Scott blushed and stammered, then straightened himself and replied:

"Yes! I told the whole thing to one person."

There was a hissing of anger from all the gang, and weapons leaped from their holsters.

"Who in — was it?" growled Jesse, through clenched teeth.

Cameron hesitated, then replied, "I will not tell you."

"You won't!"

Scott saw the silver flash of Jesse's pistol as he raised it to the level, and heard the click of the cocking; then there was a swift rustling, rushing sound in his ears, and something came between him and the threatener.

"I'll tell you, Jesse, whom he told. It was I!" cried Adelaide, and the weapon slowly dropped, while a hush fell on all the gang.

"And I'll tell you more—more that you men ought to have sense enough to know—that Scott Cameron is not the man to turn state's evidence. Never in this wicked world! He's a braver man than any of you cowards here, else he would never have stepped into this barn to-night. He's brave enough to live an honest life besides. But that's no matter—

"Whose barn are you in? Who has helped you out of more than one scrape before? If you respect my father—"

A low whistle from the lot outside brought every man to his feet.

The sentry hurried in, breathless, and reported the posse a few hundred yards down the road. It was too late to fly, even had that been the plan; so weapons were quickly hidden, though handily near, cards concealed, lanterns extinguished, sleep feigned, and all things given a peaceful appearance.

One lantern only was left burning, and that by Adelaide's direction. She held it, and with it the couple stepped out to meet the newcomers. Scott had never been engaged in any previous escapades, and so was not known as an outlaw.

"Who's in this barn?" asked the leader of the Chicago men; but before he got an answer he added, "Hold that lantern a bit higher, madam. By heaven, that face is worth all our night's riding to see—with apologies to your husband there. But who's in the barn?"

"Guests, sir," replied Adelaide.

"Guests, eh? Same story. Hanson, I swear the whole state of Missouri must be sleeping in this county to-night. Sixty in one place, fifty in another, twenty in a dozen others. How many in your place, madam?"

"Sixty, sir."

"There you are again. I'm not going to poke around any more haymows and kick out sleepy grangers. I'm tired of this thing. Let's go on to the town and come back in the morning. I'd be glad to see the madam's face by daylight—and we can check off her sixty guests then, eh, ma'am?"

"You will be welcome, sir."

Lafe Hanson, the sheriff, began to protest. Adelaide and Scott heard him growling in undertones into the leader's ears. Then the latter burst out impatiently,

"That's what you're always saying—'Worst old rebel in the lot. Sure to find him here!' I'm tired of it, and going to town to bed! Jesse Young, in my opinion, is not sleeping in any crowded barn to-night."

"O, Jesse Young," volunteered Scott, "if it's he you're looking for, I saw him and two of his friends riding down the gulch road about sundown to-day, toward the river at the ferry." And he spoke the truth.

"There," said the leader. "There's the first real clue we've had to-day. You deserve to possess such a wife! Toward the ferry, eh?"

"Yes, the Gulch ferry."

"Did he say he was going to cross?"

"Said he was thinking of reaching Lone Elm to-night."

"That settles it. No sleep to-night, after all. Lone Elm is—how far is it?" asked the Chicago man.

"About ten miles, I should say."

"And he crossed at the ferry in that direction?"

"I didn't say he crossed. He was riding toward the ferry and said he had a mind to cross."

"Well, I'll bet he did. I would, if I were he. Thank you for your information. This is the kindest reception we have had to-night. Good-bye. Try and see you again."

Lafe Hanson growled immoderately as they rode towards the big gate. But those who stood in the lot heard the leader say,

"I don't have a high regard for your detective qualities, Lafe. I tell you you must throw in a word of flattery now and then. All people like it—though, by thunder, I meant every word I said about that young woman! That's what loosened them up. And theirs is the likeliest tale we've heard to-night. I'm bound for Lone Elm or bust, and you can go where you please."

"Well, have your own way," said Lafe. "You'll at least know this country better when you're through!"

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

A New Century of Missions.

By A. M. Chamberlain.

The nineteenth century has been called "The Century of Missions." In view of the long obscured record of that first century in which the apostles of our Lord did herculean deeds of evangelism, the name is perhaps not a misnomer; but, if the church is to be true to her charge, the close of the era now opening will have seen the title transferred to a new claimant. The nineteenth century has, it is true, rediscovered the real function of the church as an organization: has shown that she has real life only as she seeks something besides her own welfare and perpetuity, but many things have combined to prevent the church of the nineteenth century from fully or even largely living up to the ideal of church activity. Time need not be spent in bewailing the paralysis of effort growing out of a "divided Christendom," for, apart from that, it is to be doubted if in any section of the church universal there is a real wealth of that spirit which should permeate all church life. Individuals live with their own entrance into "heaven" as the main objective: congregations strive for the enlargement of their numbers; missionary activity is a side issue to be urged upon the attention of the church, to be supported with a meagre offering extorted as a sort of "holy blackmail" by the courageous and long-suffering pastor.

With the opening of a "New Century" there is room and there is hope for better things. There is no people so well placed as we for a return to the primitive missionary motive. We have neither creed discussion nor general church politics to divert attention from the one vital purpose. Our only great gathering is one whose sole object is the advancement of missionary activity and interest. It remains but to secure at this gathering as a matter of established custom the presence of at least one representative from every missionary congregation, and we shall be on the borderland, at least, of proper emphasis upon the question of missions. With the opening of the twentieth century, and with our first Twentieth Century Missionary Convention, a long stride in that direction should be taken. It has been our habit in the past to gather a few hundreds of the more active workers each year in what we have called a National Convention. The time is opportune for a great change. The recent occurrence of our Jubilee Convention has emphasized the possibility of great gatherings that shall stir the church from center to circumference with a new access of missionary zeal. I do not hesitate to say that every congregation should look upon it as a duty to have at least one representative at Minneapolis.

The time should soon come when this personal relationship to our national conventions will be the general rule of congregational life. When all is left to the individual initiative, many are debarred from attending by the question of personal expense. With the establishment of the idea of congregational representation this need be a barrier to none. No one can doubt the great gain to the spiritual life of all the churches if they were adequately represented each year at such an assembly. Every church should look upon it as a duty to send their pastor to the national missionary gathering. It is not as a favor to him alone, but as germane to their own growth. What such a step will mean for the growth of the church is simply incalculable and in these early days of the new century it must be brought about. Let every reader and every church do their part so that this first missionary convention of the twentieth century shall be in spirit and method as well as in name an epoch-marking gathering.

Why Our Conventions Should Go Beyond the Central Territory.

By J. T. Ogle.

There was a great stir in Thessalonica when the skeptical Jews said, "These that have turned the world upside down, are come hither also." That was a glorious advertisement for the gospel as preached by Paul and his companions. But his personal presence in the city was absolutely necessary in order to impress the people with his message.

As a people, we have literally "turned the world upside down" in all the central part of our country. But little more than a vague "rumor" of us has reached the far east and the north of this goodly land. Here we are all but unknown. Our great conventions have usually been held in sections of the country where we are strong, and are recognized as a factor in the religious work of the age.

Many of our preachers have but little conception of the burden of the work that rests upon our ministers who are laboring just beyond the strongholds of our people. They stand practically alone, endeavoring to impress an unknown message of an unknown people upon the community, and that in the presence of religious bodies well known and centuries old.

In my judgment it is but the part of wisdom that our great conventions should go from the center to the very outskirts of our brotherhood, that our power and influence may be felt in these communities for good. It is home missionary work on a grand scale, and a work that will tell for good through the coming years.

If it was thought a wise thing to do, and money and time well spent in sending the leaders of our foreign work to visit the mission stations in the heathen world, what can we say of taking our conventions beyond the central territory and into the very heart of as grand and noble a people as live on the globe? Its influence will "tell for ages, tell for God" and good.

For this reason vast numbers of our people should attend the convention at Minneapolis, October next. Where, heretofore, but meager newspaper reports of us have gone, let thousands of consecrated men and women, whose lives are on fire with the plea that we love, go. Let us go by states and territories in such numbers that we will impress all the Northwest with our greatness, and make the future efforts of our people easier in all that region. This can be done by a large attendance. May there be such a gathering in Minneapolis that the skeptics, if indeed they be found there, may say, as of old, "These that have turned the world upside down, are come here also!"

America is the ripest mission field on the globe to-day. The salvation and hope of the world depends largely upon the evangelization of America. Our life as a people should beat in strong pulsations against every part of this country where we are practically unknown. Our coming convention, as one great heart-throb, should send new life pulsating through the religious veins of all the northwest of our country.

May we not disappoint the brethren of Minneapolis who are so exceedingly anxious to extend to us such generous entertainment.

Guthrie, Okla.

A Duty of Preachers.

By Sumner T. Martin.

One of the first duties every preacher or elder owes to the church is to see that it is put into line with all of our general missionary enterprises. Church extension will appeal to him very strongly. The wisdom of the plan that sends out a loan to help build a church, and when it comes back with its accrued interest sending it out again to do the same, and so on forever, must make every man with means feel like investing in such an enterprise, and so building himself a monument in the redeemed lives of men and women whom his money have won to Christ. The 2,700 homeless churches call to all of us with comfortable church houses to render prompt and generous aid. For it is a well-known fact that the homeless church is looked upon as a transient church. The house lends it permanency in the estimation of the community and so brings to it strength which it would otherwise miss. I earnestly hope that each church will be ambitious to reach its apportionment, and so help reach the half million by 1905.

A Change Breakfast.

Getting Ready for Warm Weather.

As the warm days approach, it is well to give some thought to an easy way to prepare breakfast. A food that is already cooked and simply needs to be treated with a little cold milk or cold cream, is ideal on that point, and such a food can be found in Grape-Nuts, at 15 cents per package.

It is sold by all grocers, and is so highly concentrated that not more than three or four teaspoonfuls are required for the cereal part of the meal. This makes the food very economical and does not overtax the stomach with a great volume.

Our Budget.

—Church Extension Day, Sept. 1.

—Take the collection on the appointed day.

—As a plain business proposition for business men, nothing is more convincing than the church extension plan. It is a dividend-paying investment.

—The opening of the new Indian lands and the locating of a dozen new towns furnished an opportunity for Christian expansion. The church extension board seized the opportunity and secured lots in all the important new towns. Churches will be planted which will grow up with the country and which will help the country to grow up right.

—Brother G. E. Ireland, late of Wabash, Ind., who was recently called to the pastorate of the Carondelet Church, St. Louis, began his work at the latter place last Sunday. The congregation is small and weak, but it has possibilities, and Brother Ireland is the man to develop them. We need a strong church in the southern part of the city. Brother Ireland will be a valuable accession to our force of ministers in St. Louis.

—T. J. Shuey, of Valparaiso, Ind., has been called to the church at Rock Island, Ill. Since the resignation of T. W. Grafton a year ago the church has had no continuous pastor and is in need of a strong man to lead it. Rock Island has 19,000 inhabitants and ninety saloons, and is a field which calls for the most aggressive sort of church work. Brother Shuey will not be able to be with the church steadily for about three months.

—Dr. W. T. Moore sailed from England on "The Oceanic" of the White Star Line, on the 7th inst., accompanied by his son Paul and Miss Ellen Coop, daughter of Frank Coop, of Southport, England. "The Oceanic" is due at New York Aug. 13th. Bro. Moore has arranged to have the Commonwealth carried on without the direct assistance of himself or his son. William Durban, our English correspondent, will continue to write for it.

—The Kansas State Missionary Convention will be held at Hutchinson, Sept. 9-13. A rate of one and one-third fare on the certificate plan has been secured from all points in Kansas and from Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free. Those who expect to attend should send their names to D. Y. Donaldson, pastor of the Christian Church, Hutchinson, Kan. A. McLean, John E. Pounds and G. W. Muckley will be among the speakers.

—Bro. Daniel Trundle, of Elma, Wash., had a serious accident recently while returning from Ray's Mill, where he had gone to preach. He was thrown from his bicycle, breaking his collar bone and receiving other injuries. In this condition he remounted his wheel and rode on home five miles. It is profitable for the public to note occasionally that a preacher may possess what the worldly-minded call "rand." The church at Elma, after many struggles, much of the time without a pastor, has begun to thrive under Bro. Trundle's administration.

—We have received a pamphlet entitled "Economic Redemption or Hard Times; The Cause and Cure," by Henry F. Lutz, pastor of the Christian Church at Canton, O. It is probably not new, since the introduction is dated 1897, and the reference to "the present hard times" is scarcely applicable to the condition of the country just now. The argument is that hard times are not caused by under-protection, but by wasteful use brought about by moral depravity which finds its most vigorous expression in the liquor traffic. To abolish this would be the most effective cure for hard times. A sermon by Mr. Lutz on "Recent Gigantic Combines and the Lessons they teach," appears in the Pittsburg Press of July 8.

—D. D. Boyle, now of Kingman, Kansas, has been called to become state evangelist for Texas.

—Frederick F. Wyatt is open to engagements for one or two revival meetings in the near future.

—J. A. Lytle, of Rochester, Ind., will be at liberty after September 1 to correspond with churches needing pastoral or evangelistic work.

—The twenty-first annual meeting of the Audrain county (Mo.) Christian Missionary Co-operation will be held at Mexico, Mo., Aug. 19-21.

—The annual convention of the fourth district of Nebraska will be held at Wakefield, Neb., Sept. 27-29. W. L. Ireland is corresponding secretary for the district.

—C. G. McNeill can put any church needing a pastor in communication with three good, experienced men. He may be addressed at 535 Garrard Street, Covington, Ky.

—F. J. Stinson, who has been retained as pastor of the church at Bethany, Mo., is appreciated by his fellow-townsmen, as is evidenced by notices in the local papers.

—W. A. Fite, formerly of Windsor, Mo., and a recent graduate of Kentucky University, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Palmyra, Mo., where he will begin Sept. 1.

—The fourth annual meeting of the churches of Christ in Knox county, Ind., will be held at Maria church, Sept. 1. John L. Brandt, of Valparaiso, will be the principal preacher, and a basket dinner will be served.

—Robert E. Swartz, who has been living at Iowa City, Ia., to educate his children, wishes to take up ministerial work again and can be addressed at that place by churches wishing to correspond with him.

—Disciples of Christ visiting the Pan-American Exposition can secure entertainment in Christian homes by addressing J. P. Lichtenberger, pastor Jefferson Street Church of Christ, 175 Laurel Street.

—Mrs. Sarah L. Bostwick, of Argenta, Ark., National President of the C. W. B. M., colored, calls upon all the colored auxiliaries to report to her at once their work during the past year and to send as many delegates as possible to the Minneapolis convention.

—We are informed by L. S. Cupp that the wife of Bro. W. D. McCulley, pastor of the Christian Church at Wellsville, Mo., died last week of heart failure, leaving two little girls, aged four and two. Bro. McCulley has the sympathy of his brethren.

—Bro. and Sister Wiseman have resigned the pastorate at Miller. Both are preachers and can be secured for pastoral work. The church at Miller wishes to secure a young or middle-aged married man as pastor; $600 and parsonage. Address R. W. Barnes, clerk.

—Receipts for foreign missions still show a loss. During the week ending Aug. 8 the receipts were less than for the corresponding week last year by $347.33. The drought must surely be the cause of this decrease. The end of the year is rapidly approaching and churches should make haste to make good this deficiency.

—W. H. Waggoner has spent twenty-one weeks this year lecturing on missions in Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska. He is now taking a two weeks' vacation at the Old Salem (Illinois) Assembly, and will go from there to a missionary institute at Virginia, Ill. His missionary maps and lectures are unique.

—The congregation at Asherville, Kan., a little band of about fifteen, is rejoicing in the possession of a new building which was dedicated out of debt July 28. Mrs. Clara Hazelrigg had charge of the dedicatory services, assisted by Bro. Smith, of Glasco, and J. N. Beaver, of Osborne, Kan. The amount raised to pay off all obligations was $468.

Rheumatism

What is the use of telling the rheumatic that he feels as if his joints were being dislocated?

He knows that his sufferings are very much like the tortures of the rack.

What he wants to know is what will permanently cure his disease.

That, according to thousands of grateful testimonials, is

Hood's Sarsaparilla

It corrects the acidity of the blood on which the disease depends, strengthens the stomach, liver and kidneys, and builds up the whole system. Try Hood's.

—The sixth of the anti-Mormon tracts by R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky., is entitled "Smithianity or Mormonism Refuted by Mormons." It consists of a reprint of the letters written in 1831 by Ezra Booth, a Methodist circuit rider who was an early convert to Mormonism, and who after seeing its workings was converted back again. 63 pages. 15 cents.

—Cecil J. Armstrong has resigned the pastorate of the South Side Christian Church, Lexington, Ky. The resignation was accepted under protest, to take effect Jan. 1, when he finishes his work for the M. A. degree in Kentucky University. During his two years' pastorate the membership was almost doubled and the church has averaged about $2 per member for missions. His future work is not yet determined.

—J. P. Holmes, of Paris, Tenn., has been called to the pastorate of the Highland Park Christian Church at Chattanooga, from which W. M. Taylor recently resigned after a seven-year pastorate to go to Porto Rico. Bro. Holmes was at Knoxville, Tenn., for three years, and during the past year has been doing field work among the churches of central Tennessee with great success. He is a vigorous and aggressive young man, a Lexington graduate, and has already made an excellent impression.

—The board of church extension has sent Dick T. Morgan, an experienced lawyer and business man of Perry, Okla., as its agent to secure lots in all the important town sites in the newly opened Kiowa, Comanche and Apache territory. Boggess' ride at the opening of "the strip" was brilliant and effective, but since the government has changed its method of distributing free land the church extension board must change its method accordingly. Mr. Morgan is a man who can be trusted to get anything that is gettable for the Church Extension board.

—On Aug. 4 the Central Christian Church and the First Christian Church of Lincoln, Neb., were united into one congregation. The work has for some years been in a divided state, which has been a serious hindrance, and the reunion is believed by all who are on the ground to be an important advance step. There is no change in the organization or officers of the First Church and its present pastor, T. J. Thompson, will remain indefinitely. The membership of the First Church was 367; that of the united congregation is about 440.

Correspondence.

The Opening of the Indian Lands.

Oklahoma has been in the eyes of the entire country since the President's proclamation opening the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache and Caddo reservations for settlement. The rush into the territory far surpassed anything that we were anticipating. Fifty thousand was the estimate in the beginning, but the registration showed 167,000 people anxious for claims. El Reno was the principal place for registering. That little town seemed very metropolitan for awhile. It was a sight worth seeing. The writer went there on Friday of the second week to get his name in the box. The prairie schooner was coming from every direction. Trains were unloading people by the thousands. Tents were pitched on every vacant spot. The fakir was in his glory, and easily fooled many of the home-seekers. The notary coined money, because every one who registered had to go before a notary and have papers made out. The writer went to a booth away from the main part of town, and fell in line as No. 400. It took about fifteen minutes in line before my number was reached. It took just a minute or two to register. After coming from the booth some little time was spent seeing the sights. Everything that human ingenuity could devise to get a man's money was in El Reno. Every man, woman and child who resided there had some scheme to get a little of the "root of all evil," even to the preachers. It was a rare opportunity, and one that would not return again.

Probably your readers will be more interested in knowing of our plans for church work in the new country. This has been a subject of long consideration before the Oklahoma board. After a great deal of deliberation, it was decided to secure some of our most active pastors in the territory for the three county seat town sites set aside by the government. These men work the new fields, and the churches for which they preach keep up their salaries. Bro. J. M. Monroe, of El Reno, was chosen for Anadarko; Bro. A. B. Carpenter, of Norman, for Lawton, and Bro. V. Williams, the field superintendent, goes to Hobart for a short time. These are all men of fine ability and great judgment. The plan is for these men to have each a tent, gather the people together, and begin at once to hold services. When town lots are sold, they are to buy the very best. The church extension board is behind us with the necessary money. By this means we will be among the first to plant the cause of Christ.

In addition to these three county seat towns, there will be other places springing up that will need looking after. These will be taken by us in much the same way. There is to be a new town called Sickles on the Rock Island railway. This town is already sanctioned by the government. The promoters of the place reside at Geary, where I was working. As soon as the government passed favorably on the town, I went to the manager to get church lots. He assured me of two, with deed to same free of cost. I took the precaution to arrange this matter so that the lots are a certainty.

During the excitement of registering and drawing the writer was at Geary, on the border of the new country, trying to give permanency to that new work. Under the intense excitement it was difficult, but the work is a success. Money was raised for a minister, and Bro. Renfro, of Weatherford, was chosen, and will work the two points. A Sunday-school and C. E. were organized, and prospects are bright.

The writer was not one of the lucky men in drawing. But some of our preachers secured claims. Bro. W. M. Hollett, pastor at Perry, was successful, as was also J. A. Tabor, evangelist of central district, Indian Territory, and also O. P. Cook, pastor at Ottawa, Kan.

There may be some others. The drawing was fair, and those who drew nothing must make the best of it. Many persons registered who had no rights. The man who drew number one in the El Reno district had 4,000 acres of land. Uncle Sam laid violent hands on him. One man registered seven times under seven different names, and drew three numbers. He also went behind the bars. The last report is that more than 300 have been arrested for various things of this kind. This will leave many claims vacant at the end of 60 days. Such claims become subject to homestead laws, but there are hundreds of people waiting to settle on them.

Our work is most prosperous. There are many preachers wanting to come this way, some of them of national reputation. Bro. Dameron has about thirty letters in answer to an advertisement. Bro. Williams and I have a long list of names. We cannot locate all of them, but we hope to bring some of them to Oklahoma. Keep your eyes on us and expect good reports.

"Faith" vs. "Experience."

The inference of Bro. Franklin is that since the "divine presence and help" of the Holy Spirit is "a matter of faith," it is therefore "not a personal experience," raises the question whether a Christian can have any personal experience of a religious character, since the whole of our religious life comes through faith. "We walk by faith, not by sight." We are "saved by faith." Have we no "personal experience" of salvation?—Christian-Evangelist, June 27, p. 814.

"We live by faith," but we have, nevertheless, the experience of living. The whole of our religious life does not come through faith. The love of God, the gift of his Son, the death of Jesus for our sins, his resurrection and ascension, are facts of which we have no knowledge except as we believe that they are facts.

Repentance, confession of faith, baptism, prayer, etc., are commands, of which we have no knowledge except as we believe that the Lord has commanded us to do them. We have no knowledge of the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal life, except as we believe God's promises.

"Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the proving of things not seen." Faith and experience are "mutually exclusive"; even though it be granted that they "are related as cause and effect."

But experience begins in faith. There is the experience of believing, the experience of hope, and the experience of obedience. Indeed, the entire Christian life is an experience. But, "personal experience of salvation," is a very questionable phrase. If it means that we know by personal sensations that we are saved, it is erroneous; for then it substitutes experience for faith. The "things not seen," and "the things hoped for," are made real to us by faith. There is no other way by which the soul may lay hold on them. When God was "minded to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel," he did not give them "a personal experience" in confirmation of his word, but "interposed with an oath," and swore by himself. These are the "two immutable things" which anchor the soul to things not seen (Heb. 6:17, 18). God did not give Abraham a "personal experience" that he would have a son the next year, but told him so, and "Abraham believed in the Lord, and his faith was counted to him for righteousness."

We may experience joy and peace in believing. We may have, and ought to have, a large experience in obedience. But when we would reach out after "unseen things" we must have faith. "Whom, not having seen, ye love; on whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice greatly" (1 Peter 1:8.)

We may have very much "personal experience of a religious character," for "the whole of our religious life," does not "come to us through faith." "The life I now live," and which "I live in faith," is, in every activity of it, a "personal experience." This personal experience may be "related to faith as effect to cause"; but the effect can never in any sense take the place of the cause.

"This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

From the Rockies.

Since coming to our new field I have been asked by several of our old friends in the east to report our work in Salida. After pleasant years spent in Iowa I find myself in a beautiful little city of four thousand very energetic people, some mining, but our people are mostly railroaders. We have D. & R. G. shops with a monthly pay roll of over $90,000, this much money from one source alone turned loose in the midst of eighteen saloons, four large gambling houses and their attending evils makes a lively town and a difficult field for church work to prosper in. But the inspiration of the many majestic hills and the snow-capped mountains looking down upon us gives strength. It seems as though our Lord is "apart" in a mountain to pray while we are left in the valley to watch, and so we bend to our labors.

□ In May, I was introduced, with Mrs. Walters, to this work. I am not disappointed with what I find. This is a church like many another one that has come to the front through many trials. Although without a pastor for over seven months previous to my coming, the work still grew in strength if not in numbers. In our brotherhood we have but thirty-seven churches in Colorado and only fourteen of them are self-supporting, of which the Salida church is one. Something over one hundred resident members are to be found. All audiences are very small in this country, I am told. I am quite sure our own are not large, but can notice a gradual increase during the last few weeks. Not by leaps and bounds, but gradually we are growing, both spiritually and numerically. Two additions recently.

Our midweek prayer-meetings are very inspiring, a large attendance every week, seldom less than forty. The Christian Endeavor gives one Sunday afternoon in each month to the inmates of the poor house, four miles from town, when by a carry-all, supplied by the missionary committee, twenty young people go and conduct a prayer-meeting which is longingly looked forward to by the old people. Through the missionary committee, the society has made arrangements to place a Bible in each room of our largest hotel, also in the D. & R. G. hospital and poor house. At our public drinking fountain we are to place two cups with our society emblem engraven thereon. From the Endeavor Society comes $35 a month to support our home church work. Our C. W. B. M. supports one teacher in the foreign land and is having good meetings at home.

Bro. Leonard G. Thompson was with us in July and presented the needs of our state work and received an offering of $20. We surely know Colorado is a great mission field, sixty miles is our nearest neighboring church in the faith. We need more consecrated young men who will take up the ministry among us. We have no flattering report from the Salida church, but we are being felt in this community.

F. F. WALTERS, pastor.

Jacksonville Is Rebuilding.

When the great fire of May 3 laid waste the city everybody asked, "Will it be rebuilt?" The answer was always "yes," but sometimes with a rising inflection, followed by a sigh and "but it will take a long time." The debris had to be cleared away, plans made and insurance collected. It all took time. The papers kept saying what would be. Some of the most chicken-hearted and tender-fingered wearied at waiting or saw no soft place to take hold and left the city. But it has come—the rush of building—saws, hammers, trowels, pile drivers, steamhoisters, make music day and night. "Acres of ashes" is a thing of the past. New Jacksonville, greater Jacksonville, is at hand.

Workmen are here from all over the country. There are frequent delays for material. The railroads never did such a business. The Clyde Steamship Company has put on two new and very large boats, the Apache and Arapahoe, between Jacksonville and New York, and has enlarged two others. Church work is below par. Our only chance for a central place to meet is in the M. E. temporary building 4 P. M. Sunday. This is near where our new building is being erected.

The first sleepers for the main floor of the church were put up to-day. The basement is seven to nine feet in the clear. We are grateful for the help that has come to us from our sister congregations and trust many others will do likewise. It is good to be a part of the body of Christ in times of affliction.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The school at Sturgeon will hold its rally Oct. 7. Of course all up to date schools will, and we will furnish the programs. What number will your school need?

The minutes have gone to all superintendents and ministers and will go to any others writing for same. Examine carefully, write us freely.

Hannibal is another of the Missouri schools that will observe Rally Day the first Sunday in October and will use the regular program. Levi Marshall and J. W. Mounce will lead and it is to tell on all the winter's work.

At the Atchison county meeting, held at Rockport, the schools made a much better showing than at the meeting one year ago, and Jesse Gresham is now the county superintendent.

At the Holt county meeting, T. B. Dry, who has just located with Maitland, was made county superintendent, and now if the school superintendents will co-operate with him we will again have Holt in the front rank, as was the case years ago.

One of the good features of the Breckenridge district meeting was the presence and active participation of men like Judge J. W. Alexander and F. J. Britton, for with all his work in that judicial circuit, Judge Alexander has never neglected his church work, and is now an elder and the Bible-school superintendent at Gallatin and the president of the district co-operation.

It is asked, "Is the purpose of the rally, Oct. 7, to raise money for state Bible-school work?" Not at all, but to revive all the departments of the school at the close of the hot summer and to enlist all for the winter campaign, for many schools that meet their apportionments promptly will keep the day, as for instance Breckenridge. Their school pledge is paid in full, but the rally will be held and if an offering is taken likely it will go to general home missions. B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O., will cheerfully furnish all schools full programs that wish to observe the day instead of the fourth Sunday in November. Emphasize, agitate Oct. 7.

Salem, Nodaway, has a good home department with thirty members, eight of whom have joined the main school and fourteen of whom have never missed a lesson nor failed in making an offering to the school. In eight months the department more than paid its way, putting money into the treasury of the school.

Order your Rally Day programs early; will furnish them free. They will be first-class.

Starks' Headache Powders

ABSOLUTELY HARMLESS.

Dr. J. F. Kincheloe, Conway, Ark., says: I have used STARKS' HEADACHE POWDERS in my practice and my family, and have taken them myself. I find them not only good, but very good, and ease pain effectually.

Irvin S. Tinker, Plainville, Conn., says: Enclosed find stamps for more of STARKS' HEADACHE POWDERS. I like them very much. 10-cent package at all druggists. Sent by mail, postpaid.

How Strong Are You?

The dial of the punching machine won't answer that question. Strength depends on nutrition. When the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition are diseased, the body fails to receive its full supply of nourishment and hence grows weak. That is why no man is stronger than his stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and the allied organs of digestion and nutrition. The food eaten is then perfectly digested and assimilated and the body is made strong in the only possible way—by nutrition.

"I was troubled with indigestion for about two years," writes Wm. Bowker, Esq., of Juliaetta, Latah Co., Idaho. "I tried different doctors and remedies but to no avail, until I wrote to you and you told me what to do. I suffered with a pain in my stomach and left side and thought that it would kill me. Now I am glad to write this and let you know that I am all right. I can do my work now without pain and I don't have that tired feeling that I used to have. Five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and two vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets' cured me."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets stimulate the liver.

Church Extension September first.
State convention September 9-12.
Reduced rates on all railroads. Ask agent for certificate and return at one-third fare.
Select your delegates early and send their names to J. M. Rudy, Cedar Rapids.

The Cedar Rapids people are prepared to entertain 1,000 delegates and will be disappointed if they do not come. A souvenir program directory will be printed and a copy given to each delegate. Get up a crowd and go.

C. F. Sanderson, of Chariton, will succeed Robert Smith at Lenox.

Lee Furgeson, of Hopkins, Mo., has been called by the Bedford church.

H. H. Rama has moved to Holly Springs and I suppose has taken the pastorate of the church.

F. L. Davis will attend Drake and preach for the church at Lacona full time next year. This is a good choice for both pastor and people.

Evangelist J. S. Beem and R. A. Givens will hold a meeting at Eagle Grove. Bro. Beem starts to-day to begin the work.

The Marion Co. Board has selected Lawrence Wright to hold the meeting at Bussie. He will begin as soon as the Dumont meeting closes.

B. F. Hill, one of the best pastors and evangelists in Missouri, can be secured for work in Iowa. His address is California, Mo.

Geo. Munroe, of Des Moines, a scholar and preacher of experience, can be secured for an Iowa pulpit.

W. B. Golden, a Newlight preacher who recently came to us, is ready for work. He is a good pastor and is said to be especially strong as an evangelist.

A good dentist who is a member of the Christian Church can be put in correspondence with a good location by dropping me a card.

There are scores of places in Iowa where there are a few disciples cut off from church privileges, some of whom are very much interested in the conquest of Iowa. In Carroll there are a few whose faith and works deserve special mention. A few months ago there were a half dozen or more disciples in Carroll who were determined to let their lights shine, they accordingly began meeting for prayers. Later the ladies began meeting for work and prayer, hoping to get enough money together to start a church. They were pleased with the results, but as some of the leading workers have moved away, leaving them with little hope for an organization in the near future, they have turned their earnings over to the I. C. C. that they may be used in the Lord's work. The sum amounted to $24.60, enough to hold a meeting in some needy field. We trust that other isolated disciples will follow the worthy example set by the Carroll brethren.

There has been quite a little said of late about the number of pastorless churches in northwest Iowa. The conditions in that part of the state are peculiar. There are a large number of weak congregations in the district that could barely give a man support for one-fourth, or at the most, one-half of the time and in many cases they are too much isolated to co-operate with other congregations, and, as a result, a preacher or a church must starve or live on half rations. In spite of this fact, 55 churches have regular preaching, 15 have none, three uncertain and four cannot be called churches. This is bad enough, but not as bad as has been stated. These results are gathered from the reports that are daily coming in. These conditions should challenge our most heroic efforts for Iowa missions.

Scott County (Ark).

Scott county is crossed east and west by three good valleys, cut off from the north by the Ozarks and the Arkansas river. We once had seven congregations, but war and other influences have left us in a weak condition. We now have about 500 brethren scattered over the county, too weak in any one locality to accomplish much. We have a good church property at Waldron, the county seat; congregation weakened by deaths and removals. The incoming railroad will open up the country. Already men and capital have begun to locate. We want to move to the front with the church work. We are, during the summer, holding grove meetings every fourth Sunday six mile east of Waldron. The grove is virtually the Colony church at present. The pulpit at Waldron is occupied every first Sunday by W. H. Winters, and every third by J. W. Bratcher. G. P. Young, W. H. Bryan and Thos. Self have so far been the principal speakers at the grove meeting.

So far a large per cent. of our Colony men have been preachers. I attribute it both to their need of homes and to their good judgment in locating in a place where homes are cheap and prospects favorable for large developments in the near future. Bro. Bryan is now moving his family from Nevada, Mo. We want brethren who will work the farm and help to build up the church to come and occupy the land while it can be secured for less than the price of two years' rent in the north.

Those who have purchased and read The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century are most enthusiastic in their praise of the book. It should be borne in mind that this book is not merely a reprint of the articles that ran through the Christian-Evangelist during 1899. The several authors have completely revised, rewritten and amplified their contributions, adding a great deal of entirely new matter. We urge all our readers to send at once for this volume. It will give them a clearer and better understanding of the origin, growth and triumph of our cause than they can otherwise gain. Price, postpaid, $2.00. Christian Publishing Co

A New Music Book

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

SINGING EVANGELISTS will be pleased with the analytical classification, enabling them without reference to indices to find a suitable song on a moment's warning. The rich variety and power of the solo and special song department, selected specially for his use in revivals, will be joyfully received.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos, with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will not find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed, unless it be to keep in the style.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Popular Hymns No. 2 contains 256 songs.

Texas Letter.

S. D. Dutcher, late of Mexico, Mo., is doing a fine work at Oklahoma City, O. T. Their beautiful house is too small and they are beginning to plan for a new and larger one.

C. McPherson, of Ft. Worth, thinks the Texas brethren should have one great annual rally upon some such plan as the "Bethany encampment" of Indiana. There are others who believe this a wise move, and it is probable that the matter will receive proper attention at our lectureship in December.

J. W. Marshall and Theodore E. Fittz have just closed a great meeting at Troy. There were 82 additions, 63 of whom were baptized.

Cleveland will dedicate a new house in August. Jno. L. Andrews has recently held there a very helpful meeting.

R. D. Shultz, the popular pastor at Galveston, has called to his assistance a "pastoral helper." He did not send to Harvut at Cincinnati for her, as many are doing, but selected Miss Lillian Bush, of Allen. They were married July 16; and our readers wish them great joy and usefulness.

Some things are enough to chill the ardor of our soldier boys. Two of these are to be seen in Texas. Albert Sydney Johnston, one of the brightest and bravest soldiers of any age or army, was killed at Shiloh. His body was brought to Austin and buried, but the grave is unmarked until this day. The battle of San Jacinto was the birthday of Texas' independence. Seven hundred volunteers met fifteen hundred Mexican regulars and slew and captured them all, including Santa Ana, the dictator of Mexico. A treaty followed which acknowledged the independence of the new republic. A stone shaft erected in 1881 is the only mark to be seen. The graves are unkept. The wooden rails that once fenced them off are rotten and fallen. The rank growth of the river bottom is undisturbed, and the cattle roam in freedom over this famous field and tread upon the graves of these noble heroes. Surely this is the basest ingratitude, and every lover of true patriotism hangs his head in shame at the sad sight.

Nathaniel G. Jacks has resigned his work as state evangelist of Mississippi and will make a tour of the west. He will spend September and October in Texas, and will be glad to visit many of our churches. Address him at Jackson, Miss.

Alvin, one of the unfortunate churches in the Galveston flood, has so far recovered as to rebuild, and now has a delightful house in which to worship.

S. K. Hallam, late of Roswell, New Mexico, locates at Denton. A good field, a good church and a good preacher ought to guarantee a good work.

W. S. Knox died in Waco, July 28. He was a young man of 27 years. His life was clean and his brain strong and he gave promise of great usefulness as a preacher. He leaves a wife and two children, who have the sympathy of all in their deep sorrow. His death was caused by typhoid fever.

Our colored brethren of Waco have laid the corner stone of a $2,500 house. This is good for our "brothers in black," and they deserve encouragement at the hands of all.

G. D. Smith and Graham McMurray are in a good meeting at the Ross Avenue Church in this city. Both of these brethren are tent-makers. One is an undertaker and the other a printer, and it is the judgment of many that they should give themselves wholly to the ministry of the word. If they could give themselves thus to the work much good would result, for both are men of power.

Wisconsin Notes.

We effected an organization of 24 members at Ladysmith last night. We look for others. The outlook is good. This is a new town in the northwestern part of the state and a new county seat of a new county (Gates) and having splendid water power, the Flambeau River, the prospects are good for this being quite a city in the not very distant future. A good, strong church here means a great deal. One man has agreed to give $400 toward a church building. Bro. W. O. King is the "bishop" here.

Our new work at Manitowoc is in a prosperous condition. Recently organized a Bible-school there with nearly 40 scholars.

The trustees of the Retreat Church house have turned the building over to the state. Your evangelist went down there a few days ago to look after it, and if possible make some disposition of it.

Bro. Kreidler, of Milwaukee, reports the work in flourishing condition.

We are sorry Bro. Wetzel is talking of giving up work at Richland Centre. He has done a good work there and ought to be retained. Remember state meeting, Sept. 19-22.

J. H. STARK, State Evangelist.

Ladysmith, Wis., Aug. 5.

[The brethren in Wisconsin may well mourn the departure of Bro. D. N. Wetzel from Richland Centre. But he is leaving one good work for another equally good. He is to become an accredited representative of the Christian Publishing Company, in which capacity we hope the brethren will receive him cordially, both for our sakes and out of respect for his own sterling worth.—EDITOR]

Church Extension Day, Sunday, September 1

Save and Succor.

It is a noble thing to rescue a man from drowning. It is enough to stir the hearts of men and angels to see some brave fellow, with his life in his hand, rush into a mad stream and snatch a doomed man from the waves. But if he were to leave him on the bank with no provision for his complete restoration, but only changed just a little the time and place of his death, none would shout his praises as a rescuer.

Our brave evangelists are rescuing the lost by the hundreds and the thousands from the black streams of sin, and church extension is the beautiful and busy handmaiden, standing on the banks of the stream nursing them into vigor and strength. Will you not give her a substantial word of cheer on church extension day?

M. M. DAVIS.

Dallas, Texas.

The Marked Dollar.

The corresponding secretary of the board of church extension is making his second general tour of California and the Pacific coast this summer. When he came into our state eight or nine years ago the churches knew comparatively nothing about church extension. Many congregations did not know that our brotherhood had a loan fund by which churches could be erected on the easiest terms. His was necessarily a flying trip, but it was a campaign of state-wide education.

Everywhere in hamlet or city where Bro. Muckley had gone I heard but one word: "Church extension is the business proposition of the brotherhood." In the few years since Bro. Muckley's first visit thousands of dollars have come to California churches in loans from the extension board. Not one dollar of these loans has been lost. The inspiration to the church comes from the fact that the money is in our own hands, and every dollar returned starts out immediately to house some neighbor. Every dollar is a "marked" coin—it bears on its face the marks of our Lord Jesus—it goes about everywhere doing good.

HENRY SHADLE,

Cor. Sec. State Board N. California.

Houseless Churches.

Church extension has become a wonderful factor in our progress to-day. Without its help our work would be greatly retarded, especially in Oklahoma, where it seems the Disciples have almost taken possession of the land. Most of the churches erected in the territory have been aided by this fund, and because of this timely assistance we are getting a solid footing.

It is said that the Congregationalists mourn because they have three hundred un-housed churches in the United States. But just think of it, we have twenty-seven hundred churches without houses! We are organizing new congregations at the rate of more than three hundred a year. Many of these will appeal to our board of church extension for assistance in building houses of worship, but these appeals will be in vain unless we greatly increase our offerings to this fund. We must do this. Let the preachers and elders take the matter in hand and see that every church of the brotherhood reaches its apportionment.

"A half million for church extension by 1905," is the new watchword. We can reach the half million mark if we try. The amount in the fund is now nearly $300,000. Ever keep in mind the fact that since the beginning of the work of our church extension more than a dozen years ago, not a single loan has been lost, but the ministry of this fund has proved a blessing to our great brotherhood.

Help this fund to continue its mission of usefulness in the Church of Christ by making liberal offerings. CHARLES HAZELRIGG.

Mulhall, O. T.

A Typical Instance.

The geographical position of Redlands, Cal., is unique and strikingly beautiful, the easternmost town of the great San Bernardino Valley and the first stop of importance as you enter southern California from the east and therefore fittingly chosen as the place to extend a formal welcome to our nation's chief magistrate on his recent visit to our state, beautiful for situation nestling among her orange groves on the range of hills forming the southern boundary of the valley, the great San Bernardino range opposite, towering, snow-capped, running westward to the sea.

Redlands is the last link in a great chain of orange growing towns, running 70 miles eastward from Los Angeles. Twelve years ago Redlands was a raw village with a half dozen newly set out orange groves. To-day she is a city of 6,000 with fifty square miles of productive orange and lemon groves immediately tributary and is still growing and developing at an astonishing rate. It is one of the "show towns" of the state, its glorious situation and climate, beautiful homes and churches, famous oiled drives, dustless yet dry, culminating in matchless Smiley Heights, bring the tourists by thousands to return later as residents. Notwithstanding its importance, Redlands is the only town of any size in southern California where the Disciples have no place of their own where they can meet together to break bread and to welcome the brethren and strangers within her gates. For four years we have met in halls, part of the time with and part without a preacher.

Four years ago the brethren bought a splendid corner lot which they have held on to with desperation until now, when by the generous and well timed aid of the extension board, their eyes are gladdened by the rising walls of a beautiful little church. The importance of this field in the estimation of the brethren of the state is shown by the fact that the churches of southern California responded to its appeal for aid in building by the gift of over $500. The church has nearly doubled in membership the past year and with the help of those who will move in during the next year or two, ought to make short work of the extension loan. The board of church extension never made a better investment than in Redlands.

PAUL McREYNOLDS, pastor.

Redlands, Cal.

A Homeless Child.

Whose heart has not been saddened at the sight of a homeless child, and at the blighting experiences in the life of such a child? Yet, how similar are the experiences of our 2,700 homeless churches, and we are adding to these one new organization almost every day. The problem before us to be solved is, shall we leave these churches to die by the wayside or make our extension board able to "go out in the highways and hedges and gather them in," and by a little timely aid enable them to overcome the obstacles and build a house and thus make permanent the work. I have helped to build nine churches in the last few years, and five of these were made possible by a timely loan by the extension fund. I will build three this fall in Oklahoma and most likely two of them will have to be helped by the board.

The fact that we have 127 national, state and district boards, who must look to our church extension for the necessary help to make permanent the many new or weak churches which they are establishing or assisting, makes it imperative that we should supply well the needs of the board from whose hands these blessings fall.

The fact that no loans have been lost and that the four per cent. charged covers all expenses, shows the wisest administration by the management and should call forth the heartiest response on the part of the brotherhood.

Our new watchword, "A half million for church extension by 1905," is neither beyond our means to give or the needs of the work, and we believe that no church will discredit itself by failing to raise its apportionment, if the preacher and elders will lay the matter properly before the church.

NEW TESTAMENT COMMENTARIES

During the past two years there has developed among the Christian people of America a great revival of interest in the study of the Bible. Never before in the history of Christianity were so many people zealously and earnestly studying the Bible, endeavoring to know more of its contents and its meaning. Everywhere there are being organized classes and clubs for Bible study. In consequence of this movement there is a brisk demand for Bible helps—books that have hitherto been sold chiefly to preachers. The people are inquiring for the best commentaries and exegetical works to aid them in their study of the Bible. We are glad to be able to announce that we are fully prepared to supply Bible students with the best books to meet their requirements. A few of these we list here:

COMMENTARY ON MATTHEW AND MARK. By J. W. McGARVEY. A volume of 392 pages, cloth-bound. The former price ($2.00) has been reduced to $1.50.

COMMENTARY ON LUKE. By J. S. LAMAR. A splendid book by a grand man. Cloth, 333 pages. Reduced from $2.00 to $1.50.

COMMENTARY ON JOHN. By B. W. JOHNSON, the well-known commentator. This is a cloth-bound volume of 328 pages. Price reduced to $1.50.

STUDIES IN ACTS. By W. J. LHAMON. One of the finest works of recent years. Bound in cloth; 420 pages; price, $1.25.

COMMENTARY ON ROMANS. By MOSES E. LARD. A book of 485 pages, bound in cloth. Price, recently reduced, is now $2.00.

COMMENTARY ON HEBREWS. The author, R. MILLIGAN, was one of our most gifted men. Cloth, 395 pages. The reduced price is now $1.50.

PEOPLE'S NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES. By B. W. JOHNSON. Two volumes. Vol. I. contains the Four Gospels and Acts; Vol. II. covers the Epistles and Revelation. A concise, but complete work, of as much practical value to the average man as a commentary in 15 volumes costing $30.00. Bound in cloth. Price, per volume, $2.00; per set, $4.00.

Please note that former prices of these works have been reduced 25 per cent. Many thousand copies were sold at the original prices, but we desire that many more thousands shall have the help and benefit of the thought and genius of these eminent Bible scholars. In the case of a class, club or association organized for Bible study, we suggest that a fund be raised to purchase this list of books, and other works, for the joint use of the members. A full description of the volumes in the above list will be found in our 100-page General Catalogue, mailed free on receipt of request. Address, Gravette, Aug. 7.—Our meeting closed here last week, resulting in 41 accessions to the church. The church was strengthened and built up and much good done otherwise. Bro. Davidson is a good evangelist.—A. J. BARNES, pastor; E. E. DAVIDSON, evangelist.

Hebron, Aug. 5.—I closed a meeting with the church here last night. The meeting continued nine days, and nine were added to the church, seven by confession and baptism. It was one of the best meetings of the little congregation's history.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

ILLINOIS.

Boonington, Aug. 7.—One reclaimed and one confession at Armington recently.—W. D. DEWESEE.

Jacksonville, Aug. 5.—There were two large audiences yesterday and four additions, our pastor, Geo. L. Snively, preaching. There have been 391 additions to the church during Bro. Snively's ministry here—an average of more than two each Lord's day.—J. WALLACE BROCKMAN.

Williamsville, Aug. 5.—There were three additions at our morning service yesterday.—W. W. WEEDON.

INDIANA.

Anderson.—The work at the East Lynn church, Anderson, Ind., is holding up through the weather very encouragingly. We are having our house painted and papered and set in good shape. We also hope to have a new organ put in soon after its completion. I begin a meeting at Bethany church, five miles from Anderson, where I preach once per month, on Aug. 18.—R. B. GIVENS.

IOWA.

Council Bluffs, Aug. 5.—Our second year starts out well, fine audiences and 15 additions at our 11 A. M. service yesterday. Bro. J. F. Adair, of Missouri Valley, was with us and preached a good discourse in the evening. We also had one confession and baptism at our Wednesday evening prayer meeting last week.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Chillicothe, Aug. 10.—Two more baptisms last Lord's day and one by commendation.—FRANK W. ALLEN.

Farmington, Aug. 12.—We had three additions the first Lord's day in August and four yesterday.—R. M. TALBERT.

Fulton, Aug. 12.—Had five additions at Richland church the second Lord's day, three by confession and two by statement. A. W. Kokendoffer will hold us a meeting this month.—FRANK J. NICHOLS.

Joplin, Aug. 5.—During July we received 3 additions here—all by confession. On July 14 Bro. Simpson Ely preached us a fine sermon. The week following he visited his mother and other relatives four miles south of here and preached of evenings in a grove on the banks of Shoal Creek, resulting in nine confessions. We have opened a mission Bible school at 21st and Byers Avenue, that gives great promise.—W. F. TURNER.

Kirkville, Aug. 6.—There were three confessions here last Sunday and one to unite by letter.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Ravenwood, Aug. 12.—Just closed a three weeks' meeting at this place, held by home forces, which resulted in 21 added to us; 10 confessions, six reclaimed, four by statement and letter. It is the largest meeting in the history of the congregation. A new period now dawns upon our history. It has been a struggle; it will now be an opportunity.—ELLIS B. HARRIS.

Troy, Aug. 10.—On Sunday last in the presence of a large assemblage I baptized Rev. O. J. Gary in the Cuivre River at Moscow Mills. Bro. Gary, who with his wife united on that day with the Christian Church, was an M. E. minister of twenty years' standing, of good repute and honest report, and being a man of wealth was not under temptation to change his views for lucre.—G. J. ASSITER.

Versailles, Aug. 12.—My last meeting was at Gravois Mills and not at Windsor, as stated in your last issue of CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and Register.—R. B. HAVENER.

Victor, Aug. 5.—I began a meeting here yesterday with two confessions in the morning and four last night. Outlook is good and the brethren are all hopeful for a great revival in the work.—D. B. McCANON.

Victor, Aug. 12.—Our meeting now eight days old and 15 added to-day, all by confession and baptism, two of these were from the Presbyterians and one from the Methodists. Interest is unabated and we continue.—D. B. McCANON, pastor and evangelist.

NEBRASKA.

Deweese, Aug. 5.—Three additions at Ox Bow yesterday, one by confession, two from the Evangelical church, with more to follow. Good audience and deep interest.—E. W. YOCUM.

TEXAS.

Amarillo, Aug. 1.—I have just returned from an eleven days' meeting at Quanah; 26 additions, 12 by baptism, three from Baptists, balance by statement. They will at once employ a preacher for all his time. One addition here yesterday. This church calls me for another year.—VOLNEY JOHNSON.

NEBRASKA.

Ulysses.—Reports from the Plainview congregation, where Thos. Maxwell ministers, show three confessions in June and ten in July. This is a model country church. The meeting at Lushton closed with one added. Subscription is to be pushed for a house, which is much needed. J. E. Wilson closed his work at Chadron, Aug. 5.—W. A. BALDWIN, Cor. Sec'y.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Orangeburg, Aug. 5.—Two confessions at Evergreen church since last report; one confession and one from the Baptists at Erwin-ton.—M. B. INGLE.

SABBATH OR LORD'S DAY

By D. R. DUNGAN, author of "On the Rock," "Moses, the Man of God," etc. It is a powerful argument against Adventism, and the observance of the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week, as the day of rest and worship. Dr. Dungan is a man well versed in the Scriptures, and gifted with sound sense and good judgment. He is a strong and convincing writer. This work should be placed in the hands of those who have been disturbed by the teachings of Adventists.

My Dreamery.

By W. S. Whitacre.

My home is in a busy world
Whose restless throng is round me whirled,
Intently striving for some goal—
For some wealth, a precious soul,
A fleeting pleasure, or a name
Upon the dazzling scroll of fame,
The winning of a higher place,
The running of a fleeter race,
The gaining of a selfish end,
The helping of a needy friend—
But when I'm lonely, so to speak,
I leave this busy throng and seek
My Dreamery.

The duties of the passing day
Will often lure my thoughts away,
The competition and the strife
That enters into every life
To kindle vain ambition's fire,
Will often fill me with desire
My lagging efforts to renew,
And greater things to dare and do.
When I would strive to emulate
I often find the stress too great
And realize that I am weak—
'Tis then I turn aside and seek
My Dreamery.

Above the turmoil of the street,
Beyond the sounds of noisy feet,
Away from sights and sounds that mar
My peace and quiet, and afar
From dust and din of worldly strife
That blights so many hopes in life,
An unpretentious castle stands
That was not reared by human hands,
Wherein I find a safe retreat,
Where all my facts and fancies meet.
The name this little castle bears is Mind;
And there within its walls I find
My Dreamery.

My Dreamery is filled with scores
Of things I love—its very floors
Are laid with thoughts that never die,
Its pictured-covered walls are high,
Its dome extends beyond the blue,
And piercing many a planet through,
It reaches heaven's gates ajar
And enters where the angels are.
There is no tongue or pen can tell
Of my companions—they that dwell
Within the castle walls with me,
My thoughts, and they alone can see
My Dreamery.

Mt. Vernon, Ill.

A Railway Incident.

"Three things declare a man," said the old Jewish rabbi—"his voice, his purse, and his anger." Had he lived in these days he would surely have added a fourth—his "railroad manners." The following good story from the "Boston Record" will illustrate:

A gentleman prominent in legal circles in Boston was recently riding in a train, and in the seat before him was a young and gaily-dressed damsel. The car was pretty full, and presently an elderly woman entered, and finding no seat vacant but the one beside the young woman mentioned, sat down beside her.

She was a decently-dressed woman, but apparently of humble station, and she carried several clumsy bundles, which were evidently a serious annoyance to her seat-mate. The young woman made no effort to conceal her vexation, but in the most conspicuous manner showed the passengers around that she considered it an impertinent intrusion for the new-comer to presume to sit down beside her.

In a few moments the old woman, depositing her packages upon the seat, went across the car to speak to an acquaintance, whom she discovered on the opposite side of the aisle. The lawyer leaned forward to the offended young lady and courteously asked if she would change seats with him.

A smile of gratified vanity showed how pleased she was to have attracted the notice of so distinguished-looking a gentleman. "Oh, thank you ever so much," she said, effusively. "I should like to, but it would be as bad for you as for me to sit beside such an old woman."

"I beg your pardon," he responded, with undiminished deference of manner, "it was not your comfort I was thinking of, but the old lady's."—The Pacific.

Mixing Their Metaphors.

Few things are more joyous to an audience than the mixed metaphors of an orator. The Irish race is famous for its contributions to merriment in this particular. The Academy gives three illustrations.

"You are," said a late Lord Mayor of Dublin, "standing on the edge of a precipice that will be a weight on your necks all the rest of your days."

"The young men of England," remarked an English clergyman, "are the backbone of the British Empire. What we must do is to train that backbone and bring it to the front."

And this is from a member of Parliament: "Even if you carried these peddling little reforms, it would be only like a flea-bite in the ocean."

How Much They Pay.

When I was rector of a church in Baltimore (says an Episcopalian bishop) I used to see a dear old lady in the garb of a Quaker very often in the congregation of the church. One of the wardens said to me:

"Mrs. Blank is a great friend of yours."

"I am glad to hear it," I replied.

"Yes," said the warden, "she said to me, 'I love to hear your pastor preach, but I should love him so much better if he did not receive money for it.'"

"But," said the warden, "he pays $20,000 a year for the privilege of preaching to us."

"Does he, indeed? And how so?" asked the old lady.

"Well, we both were educated at the same time, we are about of an age, and I earn $23,000 a year at my profession, while he receives only $3,000."

"I tell thee," said the dear old Quaker, "I shall always hear him hereafter with a great deal more pleasure."

"Hard-hearted."

Ex-President Harrison, a man who was unjustly accused of being a cold and unemotional man, told this story about Senator Edmunds who bore a similar reputation with equally little justification:

"There was an important bill to be considered in the senate, in which I had an especial interest. I said to him: 'Senator Edmunds, I want you to be sure to be present this afternoon to help me with my measure.' He replied: 'I shall not be there.' 'You must,' I said, 'I cannot,' he determinedly continued; 'I have an invalid daughter, you know, who is the idol of my heart. I am trying to make life just as happy for her as possible. I promised to read to her this afternoon, and I intend to do so, if the wheels of the government stand still.' The senator's eyes were full of tears as he talked, and I said to myself that, while people think Edmunds as cold as an iceberg, they did not know him."

The Woman Who Wrote.

A woman there was, and she wrote for the press—

As you or I might do;
She told how to cut and fit a dress,
And how to stew many a savory mess,
But she never had done it herself, I guess—
Which none of her readers knew.

O the hour we spent, and the flour we spent,
And the sugar we wasted like sand,
At the best of a woman who never had cooked—
And now we know that she never could cook—
And did not understand.

A woman there was, and she wrote right fair—

As you or I might do;
How out of a barrel to make a chair,
To be covered with chintz and stuffed with hair,
'Twould adorn any parlor, and give it an air!—
And we thought the tale was true.

O the days we worked, and the ways we worked,

To hammer and saw and hack,
In making a chair in which no one would sit,
A chair in which no one could possibly sit
Without a crick in his back.

A woman there was, and she had her fun—
Better than you or I;
She wrote out receipts and never tried one,
She wrote about children—of course she had none—
She told us to do what she never had done—
And never intended to try.

And it isn't to toil, and it isn't to spoil,
That brims the cup of disgrace—
It's to follow a woman who don't know beans—

A woman who never had cooked any beans—
But wrote, and was paid to fill space.

Breakfast on Drink.

Coffee Makes Many Dyspeptics.

"Coffee and I had quite a tussle. Two years ago I was advised by the doctor to quit the use of coffee, for I had a chronic case of dyspepsia and serious nervous troubles, which did not yield to treatment. I was so addicted to coffee that it seemed an impossibility to quit, but when I was put on Postum Cereal Food Coffee, there was no trouble in making the change, and to-day I am a well woman."

"One of the lady teachers in our public schools was sick and nervous. Frequently the only thing she took for breakfast was a cup of coffee; I urged her to try leaving off the coffee and use Postum instead. Went so far as to send her a sample from my box and give her directions. She now uses nothing but Postum Food Coffee and told me a short time ago that she was perfectly well."

"It is easy to make good Postum, once a person becomes accustomed to it. Put four heaping teaspoons to the pint of water and after it comes up to a boil, see that from that time on it boils fifteen or twenty minutes, then use good cream and you have a drink that would be relished by the queen. Be sure and put a piece of butter size of a pea in the pot to prevent boiling over." Mrs. Lizzie Whittaker, Kidder, Mo. Postum is sold by all first-class grocers at 15 and 25 cents per package.

Tom's Mistake.

On the station platform two men stood waiting for their train. Another man, with a pick and shovel on his shoulder, was passing on his way to work. He was not more than fifty or fifty-five years old, but his gait was stiff and labored, and there was a pronounced stoop in the figure. His overalls, once brown, were lime-bleached and faded to a soft "old rose," and bagged dejectedly at the knees. The face under the weather-beaten cap was stolid and listless. As he slumped along in his heavy cowhide boots, he apparently embodied that most persistent and most pathetic figure which mediæval Europe called the "serf," and more modern Europe calls the "peasant," and the census enumerator of America of to-day sets down as "unskilled labor." As he crossed the track the elder of the two men on the platform pointed him out to his companion.

"That man and I were schoolmates. He was not dull at his books, and ought to have made a better condition for himself in life."

"What's the matter with him? Does he drink?" asked the younger man.

"No; nothing of that kind has hindered him. When he was about fifteen years old he was offered a dollar a day to dig a cellar. This seemed large wages to him, and he left school and took the job. He was proud of his size and strength, and this offer made him feel so independent that he rather looked down on the rest of us boys. He never went back to school. He found work to do which required no technical skill, only muscle used under an overseer's direction, and he kept at it. I remember Judge Haines, one of the school committee, met Tom—his name is Tom Mahan—and said to him: 'My boy, you are making a mistake and doing a foolish thing. If you must work, why don't you learn a trade?' 'I'd have to give my time three or four years for nothing. What would be the use of that? I'm as strong as a man, and I'm getting a man's wages now,' said Tom. 'Strong?' said the Judge. 'Are you as strong as one of my horses? They work for their keep, but I have to pay the man which drives them thirty dollars a month besides his keep; and the man who shoes them gets three dollars a day. If strength counts for so much, I wonder the horses don't strike and look for a job laying brick or carpentering.' But Tom thought the Judge was only joking with him. He couldn't see why he should give his time to learn a trade or some profitable business, and work for nothing, as he said, when he could work for wages, and so he went his own way."

"There are thousands like him," said the other man. "They never learn to do any special kind of business, and never seem to realize that the reason the trained blacksmith, or the skilled carpenter, or the salesman gets higher wages than they do is because he has given time to learning to use his head as well as his feet and hands. If boys would only keep the important fact in mind that muscle—mere physical strength—is always one of the cheapest things in the labor market, and that so far as price is concerned it matters little whether a man furnishes it, or a horse, there would be fewer men to be classed as 'unskilled labor.'"—Youth's Companion.

Maxims of Business.

In Gordon Graham's Letters from a Self-Made Merchant to his Son, now appearing in the Saturday Evening Post, occur the following bits of business philosophy:

Baron Munchausen was the first traveling man, and my drummers' expense accounts still show his influence.

Adem invented all the different ways in which a young man can make a fool of himself, and the college yell at the end of them is just a frill that doesn't change essentials.

It's the fellow who thinks and acts for himself, and sells short when prices hit the high C and the house is standing on its hind legs yelling for more, that sits in the directors' meetings when he gets on toward forty.

Pay day is always a month off for the spendthrift, and he is never able to realize more than sixty cents on any dollar that comes to him. But a dollar is worth one hundred and six cents to a good business man, and he never spends the dollar.

If you gave some fellows a talent wrapped in a napkin to start with in business, they would swap the talent for a gold brick and lose the napkin; and there are others that you could start out with just a napkin who would set up with it in the dry-goods business in a small way and then coax the other fellow's talent into it.

I always lay it down as a safe proposition that the fellow who has to break open the baby's bank for car-fare toward the last of the week isn't going to be any Russell Sage when it comes to trading with the old man's money.

Queer Inventions.

Inventiveness is not usually regarded as a feminine characteristic, even by those who know that almost any woman will use a hairpin to cut the leaves of a magazine, button her gloves, fasten flowers to her belt, or pick a lock.

The records of the Patent Office, however, contain a long list of women inventors, says a writer in the Youth's Companion, who has been delving in those most interesting archives. Women have received patents for a car-coupler, a valuable improvement in the printing-press, a trousers-stretcher, a mustache-guard, a shirt-front protector and other things which fill the world with sunshine; but all these devices must hide their diminished heads before the combined traveling-bag and bath-tub.

When folded, this commonplace-looking object is an ordinary traveling-bag of generous size, and may be used as such, but a little pressure on a button or two reveals its true character. Four concealed legs shoot out, the frame opens until it forms a level and continuous rim, what appeared to be leather is seen to be colored india-rubber, and behold a tight and commodious bath-tub!

For the traveler who possesses one of these devices the dustiest journey has no terrors; the greedy landlord is powerless. When the train stops at the wayside watering-tank, he has only to seize his hand-bag and slip out into the sage-bush. He returns refreshed and clean, the envy of his less fortunate fellow travelers.

Another woman has established her hold on posterity by the invention of the combined washing-machine and seesaw. This is a pleasing device for turning work into play, and letting some one else do it.

It consists of a frame which supports a plank seesaw and a revolving drum containing the soiled clothes. The seesaw is connected with the drum by two walking-beams. When the children begin to "teeter," the drum revolves. Meantime the "lady of the house" sits back in the shade on the veranda, and prepares her paper for the next meeting of the club. The clothes will be rubbed white long before the children are tired, and by prohibiting the use of the seesaw except on Mondays, wash-day becomes a joy to the whole household.

What is the steam-engine or the cotton-gin beside such boons as these!

One day a beggar man asked a passer-by for a quarter, with which to buy food for his starving family. The passer-by threw him a coin, and was hastening upon his way, when he heard a voice calling him to pause. It was the beggar man. "Sir," cried he, "the coin you gave me was not a quarter. It was a five-dollar gold piece. Here is four dollars and seventy-five cents in change." Was he not an honest beggar man?

"It is remarkable," said the political aspirant to his confidential friend at the club, "how differently people are affected by the same thing."

"How do you mean?" inquired his friend. "Well, I was thinking of my speech. It kept me awake four nights, and put everybody who heard it to sleep in half an hour."

"One of my ancestors," said the haughty Miss May Flowerstock, "was driven out of England for religious reasons."

"Huh!" retorted the unassuming Miss Jones, "two of mine were driven out of the Garden of Eden for the same reason."

"I wouldn't cry like that, my little man," said the benevolent old gentleman in a soothing tone. "Well, you can cry any way you want to; this is my way," replied the small boy uncomforted.

"Settling With 'Yours Truly.'"

It seems that a crowd of little fellows were overpowered by that barbarian instinct which sooner or later masters all genuine men—to "take to the woods." I suppose it is the solitude, the shadow, the aspiration kindled in the mind by following the great trunks upward with the eye, that exert upon them such an irresistible charm. Well, they "took to the woods" every Saturday afternoon, and just inside of the vast shade they built a little cabin, over the door of which they nailed a board, containing these words:

"Any feller that defayces a tree or kills a byrd in these here woods will have to settle with— Yours truly,

Jim Brown, Tom Duncan,
John Smith, Dan Johnson."

Now, where in the world those boys acquired the principles embodied in that brief "Declaration," I am sure I do not know; but if I were going to try to find a youngster to learn my trade or run my errands, I should be pretty likely to try to get hold of one of the members of that quartet; for a boy that loves trees and birds, and is willing to make the "feller" that defaces or kills them "settle," has the sort of stuff in him that I am looking for.

I suppose I might be a little bit liberal about the trees, much as I love them. For, if some young chap who was "dead in love" should be overcome by his feelings and carve on the smooth bark of an old beech his own initials and those of his best girl, and then cut out a big heart with an arrow stuck through the center, my sympathy would make me wink charitably at his sacrilege. I may have done it myself!

But, when it came to birds, I would draw the line as sharp as the boys did. I should like to see those four youngsters form a hollow square and meet some foeman worthy of their steel! If they did not put up a good fight, I should lose my guess. "Settling with yours truly" would not be a "picnic" if I know anything about the kind of material such lads are made of!

We need more of them grown to manhood—men that will make wrong-doers "settle with yours truly," men who have masterful affections and convictions, men who love something or other enough to make them willing to die for its protection, if need be.

That was the kind of stuff they made old John Brown of Ossawatimie out of! He felt toward a black man just as those boys felt toward trees and birds. He put up his sign away out in Kansas, and any one could read it if he could read at all. "Whoever mars the image of God almighty in one of these black men will have to settle with— Yours truly,

John Brown."

One of the great troubles of the age in which we live is that we have not the moral force to make men "settle." The very best people in the community permit all sorts of vandalism to be perpetrated with nothing more than a feeble little whisper of remonstrance. Scoundrels start saloons right before their front doors; barbers and confectioners put in "slot machines" within a hundred feet of our schoolhouses where their children are; lynchings are perpetrated in their streets; rascally combinations are made between business men to rob them; justice is perverted in their courts; and all they do is to lift a little feeble and ineffectual "protest."

That was not the way our forefathers treated the British! They made them "settle with yours truly"!

The longer I live, the more clearly I see that the way to treat all wrongdoers is to make them "settle," and we never ought to forget that "nothing is ever settled until it is settled right"!

There is hardly a city in the world so big that four solid, determined men with the spirit of those little fellows in their bosoms could not bring to the bar of justice the worst criminals and crush out the most strongly entrenched crimes.

For one, I shall not soon forget that lesson, and I am hunting for those boys so as to propose myself as a candidate for the "Society of Settlers."—Charles Frederic Goss, in Christian Endeavor World.

"United States" is Singular.

We commented recently upon the frequent ungrammatical use of the term "United States" with a plural verb when the nation, as a nation, is referred to, and we said at that time that the question had been settled by history, culminating in the civil war, which proved that this nation is one and inseparable. It is, therefore, grammatically singular, and it is actually one. The Chicago Record-Herald has taken the matter up and quotes the defense which Hon. John W. Foster makes for using the singular form in his recent book, "A Century of American Diplomacy." After considerable research he has shown that the use of "United States" as a singular noun has developed with the idea of federal unity, and that both have been unquestioned since 1860.

"I have found," said Mr. Foster, recently, "that in the early days of the republic the prevailing practice was the use of the plural, but even then many public men employed the singular, and of late years the latter has become the rule. Among statesmen who have habitually used the singular verb are: Hamilton, Jefferson, Seward, Blaine, Edmunds, E. J. Phelps, Webster, Benton, Fish, Frelinghuysen, Motley, Reid, Gresham, Silas Wright, Marcy, Everts, Bayard, Charles Francis Adams, Depew, Olney."

"Of living professors of international law Woolsey, of Yale; Moore, of Columbia; Huffcut, of Cornell, and James C. Carter, of New York, use the singular. Andrew Jackson was the first president to adopt the singular verb in official papers. In the earlier messages of presidents the plural form is usually found, but since Lincoln all of them, including Grant, Cleveland, Harrison and McKinley, have invariably used the singular. In the divisions of the Supreme Court during the first half-century the plural form is generally used, but the singular appears occasionally. In later years the court has used the singular. The same remark applies to treaties with foreign nations."

the annual publication of the Northern Pacific Railway will be found a distinct advance, in some respects, upon even its immediate predecessor Wonderland 1900.

Its cover designs and eight chapter headings are by Alfred Lenz, of New York, from plastique models and are splendid examples of art.

There is within the covers of the book much historical matter, some of it new, as well as purely descriptive narrative.

The three principal chapters relate to the history of the unique Northern Pacific Trademark, the Custer Battlefield in Montana, and Yellowstone Park. Each is profusely illustrated, the Trademark chapter in colors. This trademark is of Chinese origin and is 5,000 years old. Its story is a strange one.

It is safe to say that Wonderland 1901 will be in greater demand than any preceding volume of the Wonderland family, and, as heretofore it will be sent by Chas. S. Fee, St. Paul, Minn., to any address upon receipt of the postage, six cents.

PETE.

"Linda May!" remonstrated her Aunt Dollie, "did you hear me tell you to go and shut up the chickens before this storm?" Her little niece did not budge. How could she? Would she get up and let Miss Dollie see that there was a dog collar and rope under her? Linda May tried to gain time. "But oh, Aunt Dollie, how did you leave Pete?" "She is very sick," was the reply, "poor little darling, she just lies there starving for a drink of water, but afraid to drink, it hurts her so. But run along, child, I hear it thundering." "Oh, no, Aunt Dollie, that's just a wagon going over a bridge." "Well, wagon or thunder, you'd better go this instant to those little chickens," said the old lady sharply. "Go on, Linda May," said Madge, "I want to sit in your chair." So Linda May got up very cautiously and Madge squeezed behind her, and sat on the collar and doubled-up rope before Miss Dollie could see them. You would have thought they were sitting hens, afraid their eggs might get cold. Linda May went to see about the chickens. They were hatched the first day of October, and Miss Dollie "lowed to have them for Christmas." Miss Dollie got her steak out of the refrigerator, and spread it on the kitchen table and began to beat it. She stood right where she could see Madge, and she talked to her between the blows of her hammer, so Madge had no chance to slide the dog collar away. It was of iron, and Madge felt it making a round ring on her, it was so sharp. Suddenly Miss Dollie said, "Madge, run and look at the sky."

"Oh, Miss Dollie," said Madge, squeezing to the chair, "I can't tell a thing about clouds." "Well, you can look in the west and see if it looks dark over there." "Yes, go on, Madge," said Letitia, "I want to sit in that chair." "That must be a wonderful chair," said Miss Dollie, "I believe I'll come and sit in it myself." Madge gasped. But Miss Dollie couldn't come on account of the steak. I think she was joking, anyway. Little did she dream of the wicked plot of those girls! So Letitia perched upon the dog collar, and Madge went to look at the sky. And now if Miss Dollie sends Letitia on an errand, I don't know what we will do. Oh, yes, here comes back Linda May. "Letitia," she said in a low voice, "do you want me to sit on it awhile?" "No, go on away." "Oh, let me, it's fun." "I won't," said Letitia. "Linda May," called her aunt, "you go and get down the glass jar with the maple syrup from the top of the cupboard. There are two jars there, side by side, and one's empty. Do you think you can do that, Linda May?" "Yes, ma'am. I'll lift and see which is the heavy one, and then get it down." "Very well, but be careful, Linda May. And take that chair Letitia is sitting on, and get up on it so you can reach the jar." "There's a closer chair to the press," said Linda May. Just then Madge came in saying, "Miss Dollie, which way is west?" "Bless the children!" cried Miss Dollie, giving the steak a whack that almost made it cry out, "I'd rather do it all by myself."

Linda May dragged another chair to the cupboard and climbing up, tested the weight of one of the jars. It was so light that she knew it was the empty one. So she exerted her strength on the second, to lift it down. Now there wasn't much maple syrup left in that jar, but she pulled on it as hard as if it had been brimming full. In consequence, it tipped almost over, and as the syrup had been frugally watered by the grocery-man before he sold it, it was very thin. Accordingly it began to pour down upon Linda May's head, although the top of the jar was still on.

Linda May was so astonished and frightened at what her aunt would say (and what is more to the point, what she would do,) that she just held the jar tipped over in her rigid hands, and the little stream of maple syrup continued to trickle out upon her hair. Madge and Letitia saw her, and their mouths flew open, but they were too excited to utter a sound. "Linda May," called Miss Dollie, "have you found the maple syrup?" "Yes, ma'am," answered Linda May faintly. At that Madge began to laugh and couldn't stop. That made Letitia laugh till the tears came to her eyes, and Linda May, as if quite desperate and entirely deprived of her senses, turned the jar upside down and got its contents down her neck. She felt sticky. Miss Dollie at the sound of the laughter laid down her hammer. But just then a terrific crash of thunder shook the house. "The cellar! The cellar!" screamed Miss Dollie, and she fled. They came after her, Madge and Letitia convulsed with laughter and Linda May scared and miserable. When they got in the cellar, a few drops fell slowly and painfully as if wrung out of a half-dry cloud. Then the sun came out. The tornado was over. They went back to the house, and Linda May was set to washing her hair. All Miss Dollie said was that she ought to have got the syrup herself. But she said it in such a way that Linda May didn't know what might happen later. Then they found that the steak was gone; not a bone of it was to be seen. Miss Dollie accused Mrs. Mitchell's cat, and was loudly indignant. She said all her troubles came on her at once. But the girls looked at each other. Their eyes said, "Lucifer!" Oh, why hadn't Arthur come after that dog in time? Where was Lucifer now? What was he doing? Doubtless eating that steak! When Letitia ran to the cellar, she had looked wildly about for a place to hide the dog collar and rope. In her haste she had put it under a white garment that lay in a little chair in a corner of the room. This little garment was Linda May's night-gown which Miss Dollie had been mending that afternoon. When the meatless supper was over, Miss Dollie announced that Letitia had permission to stay all night. Letitia said, "It will give me much pleasure, Miss Dollie." She was always just that polite to grown people. Madge would have clapped her hands; Pete would have capered; Linda May would have said, "I'm glad," in similar circumstances. Miss Dollie improved them that evening, she read aloud to them from "Talks about Geography for Children." Suddenly it occurred to Letitia that it wasn't so much fun "staying all night." Then they grew sleepy. Madge and Letitia were to sleep together. That paired Linda May off with her aunt. "Get your gown," said Miss Dollie, bringing the lamp. Linda May was about to pick it up, when she felt the dog collar and rope under it. There stood Miss Dollie with the lamp! So Linda May grabbed up the collar and rope inside her gown and carried them to the bedroom. When Miss Dollie was putting the lamp on the bureau, Linda May slipped the collar and rope in her own side of the bed. They undressed and pretty soon were asleep. Linda May kept the collar and rope tight in her arms as long as she was awake. But as soon as she fell asleep, she began to dash out her arms and legs as if she were swimming, according to her custom. At last the rope worked down and looped about Miss Dollie's ankle. Miss Dollie suddenly gave an agonized scream. "A snake in the bed!" she cried, she made a wild plunge and the cold iron collar slid down between her knees. Miss Dollie gave another blood-curdling scream and rolled out upon the floor. Lucifer, who had been sound asleep under Madge and Letitia's bed, heard the voice he feared, and began to howl in an ecstasy of terror. Madge and Letitia, hearing the dog under the bed, woke up. "Robbers!" cried Madge. "Robbers!" cried Letitia. "A sna-a-ake!" cried Miss Dollie, standing in the dark on a chair, with her gown gathered about her. Linda May began to cry.

The Heavenly Mansions.*

TEXT:—In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you.—John 14:2.

There are times, no matter how deeply interested they may be in their work, when tired toilers long for rest. They have borne the "burden and heat of the day," and welcome the cool shadows of evening. Rest and reward are sweet to them. Is it not perfectly natural that the servants of God should experience like emotions?

Our Father's House.

We are always children. Gray hairs and wrinkles may come, father and mother may join the silent majority, we may be engrossed in the affairs of life, yet through all these changes, we cherish the tenderest recollections of the childhood home. Now, God is our Father. And there can never be a grander conception of heaven than God's dwelling-place. One is not more at home in his own house than in his father's. And then, in our Father's house, there are added comforts and pleasures. We are free from responsibility. We have the joy of the Father's presence.

In this house—and it must be altogether splendid—Jesus says there are many mansions, literally, "abiding-places." These are fitted to our necessities. We shall want nothing in these mansions. And there is solid comfort in the reflection that in them we are to abide. This life is full of change. It seems impossible to root one's self in a community. We are always going from place to place, and at every move we must needs break tender ties. But there we shall "go no more out forever."

A Place for You.

As plain as language can make it, Jesus says, "I go to prepare a place for you" (John 14:2). Is there any room for the discussion of the question, whether heaven be a place or not? Different it will be, no doubt, from any place we have ever seen, however glorious; but that it is a place, with metes and bounds, exits and entrances, the Bible clearly teaches. The language the sacred writers use to describe this "place" is no doubt figurative. We shall not expect to see a city with real gold on the streets, and twelve gates, each gate a solid pearl. But there is no doubt that the reality, when we do see it, will far surpass this brilliant picture of it.

Is this place—an abiding place, a place of rest—is it "for you"? These words are addressed to the disciples, and to them as the representatives of all disciples. Are you, then, a disciple of Christ? And are you pressing on from one degree of knowledge to another? If you have obeyed the gospel, if your life is "hid with Christ in God," then the heavenly mansions are for you. The Master prepares for the servant. We cannot doubt that the preparation will be splendid. He prepares our summers and our winters, our harvests, our days, and our nights. He prepares our eternal homes.

Not Troubled.

Jesus was going away, and at this thought the disciples were saddened. In this language of interceding, protesting love, He comforts them. Would that these words might be chanted in the ear of every sorrowing, weeping soul the wide world over. "Let not your heart be troubled." Do not submit to it. Trouble is something you can prevent; you can forbid it access to your hearts and homes. Do not be troubled, cast down, discouraged, when your work seems fruitless; toil on, and leave the harvest with Him. Nor yet when sickness prostrates you; for the Great Physician is by your side. Say with the psalmist, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." Bereavement and heartache are unavoidable; but the faithful disciple has a faithful Lord, and he will not fear.

Small cares, petty annoyances, trifling vexations, can all be put aside if we trust Him. "Ye believe in God!" that is enough. Faith is the victory! How can we be troubled, abashed, fear-smitten, if we remember that in spite of unworthiness, we are the objects of Christ's tender care? He who prepares a place for us, and bids us be untroubled, will receive us unto Himself. That means the joy of everlasting abode with Him. So let us look at the present through the future, not vice versa. For that future will glorify this meagre, trying present.

Are you going to disappoint the blessed Master? After His anguish and sorrow, after the pain He suffered, after the preparation He has made, will you not enter in? And if you will not, what then? There is another place, prepared not for you, but for the devil and his angels. Into that pit go the impenitent and the faithless. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Prayer.

Almighty God, we have tasted the joys of forgiving love. We know that this life is full and rich because of the advent of Christ. We have walked through shadowed valleys, yet not alone. Sorrows and tempests have but driven us nearer to Thee. As friends slip away from us, and our bodies wax weaker and weaker with age, we long for our house of many mansions. May the joy of anticipation strengthen us for the remaining days of our pilgrimage, and through Christ Jesus may we at last have an abundant entrance. Amen.

The Episcopal Convention at San Francisco.

The meeting of this convention at San Francisco will afford an opportunity for many to travel over the Northern Pacific-Shasta Route. The Northwestern scenery of the United States, it is admitted, is of the grandest in the country and the fact that the Yellowstone Park lies in this section is proof of this. No one should miss the opportunity to travel over this route. Cheap rates will apply in one direction via direct routes and in the opposite direction via Portland and the Northern Pacific. Quaint, Queer and Quirious Salt Lake City.

The late Col. John Cockerell in the Cosmopolitan said: "There are three unique cities in America, and one of these is SALT LAKE CITY." It is not only unique in its Temple, Tabernacle and Mormon Church institutions, but quaint in appearance, with its wide streets, immense blocks and martial rows of shade trees. It has, perhaps, more attractions to the square yard than any city in the country, and its climate, while temperate all the year round, is particularly delightful in summer. The Great Salt Lake, with its magnificent Saltair resort, where the water is "deader and denser" than that in the Dead Sea in Palestine, is an attraction in itself that people come miles to see. There are many cool mountain and lake resorts near by, also numerous very pretty canyon trips and parks, drives, Hot and Warm Sulphur Springs. Fishing and hunting in every direction. The trip from Denver to Salt Lake City and Ogden via the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY in connection with either the Colorado Midland or Denver & Rio Grande railroads is one of unsurpassed pleasure. Here nature is found in her sternest mood and the whole line is a succession of rugged canyon, waterfalls and picturesque valleys. No European trip can compare with it in grandeur of scenery. During the entire summer there will be low excursion rates to Salt Lake City and contiguous country. It is on the road to the Pacific Coast, if that be your destination. Send four cents postage to Geo. W. Heintz, General Passenger Agent, Rio Grande Western Railway, Salt Lake City, for literature, etc.

For Well People.

An Easy Way to Keep Well.

It is easy to keep well if we would only observe each day a few simple rules of health.

The all important thing is to keep the stomach right and to do this it is not necessary to diet or to follow a set rule or bill of fare. Such pampering simply makes a capricious appetite and a feeling that certain favorite articles of food must be avoided.

Prof. Wiechold gives pretty good advice on this subject, he says: "I am 68 years old and have never had a serious illness, and at the same time my life has been largely an indoor one, but I early discovered that the way to keep healthy was to keep a healthy stomach, not by eating bran crackers or dieting of any sort; on the contrary I always eat what my appetite craves, but for the past eight years I have made it a daily practice to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal and I attribute my robust health for a man of my age to the regular daily use of Stuart's Tablets."

"My physician first advised me to use them because he said they were perfectly harmless and were not a secret patent medicine, but contained only the natural digestives, peptones and diastase, and after using them a few weeks I have never ceased to thank him for his advice."

"I honestly believe the habit of taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after meals is the real health habit, because their use brings health to the sick and ailing and preserves health to the well and strong."

Men and women past fifty years of age need a safe digestive after meals to insure a perfect digestion and to ward off disease, and the safest, best known and most widely used is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

They are found in every well regulated household from Maine to California and in Great Britain and Australia are rapidly pushing their way into popular favor.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, full sized packages at 50 cents and for a weak stomach a fifty cent package will often do fifty dollars worth of good.

Abraham and Isaac.*

Filled with horror and fear by the awful destruction which had visited the cities of the plain of the Jordan, Abraham moved his camp further to the south, within the territories of Abimelech, the king of Gerar. Here for the second time he was led by fear for his life to pass off Sarah as his sister, in which deception she concurred. But the Lord in some way revealed to Abimelech the true relation that existed between them, and the action of that rude chieftain of a desert tribe is in marked contrast with theirs. They must have felt keenly the rebuke which he administered, and it probably corrected their seeming propensity to sacrifice truth for safety and caused them henceforth to trust God more implicitly.

At the appointed time, as foretold by the angel, Sarah gave birth to Isaac, the child of promise, and he was circumcised on the eighth day. At the feast which celebrated his weaning, Hagar, the mother of Ishmael, was seen by Sarah to mock, or deride the young child, and she perhaps concluded that some plot would be contrived by Hagar to make way with Isaac, and thus secure the honor of the inheritance for her own son. The sight aroused all the jealous nature of a wife and mother, and Sarah at once demanded that Hagar and her child be sent away and not allowed to share with Isaac the property and promises that belonged by right to him. Abraham's affectionate nature rebelled against such a seeming wrong, but God told him to do as Sarah demanded, and that he would care for the banished child and make of him a great nation. The descendants of Ishmael became the hardy people whose home was amid the rocky fastnesses of the land known afterwards as Edom, south of the Dead Sea.

The favor of God was so manifestly with Abraham as to attract the attention of Abimelech, who proposed a covenant of fidelity between them and their children. This covenant was ratified at the well of Beersheba, one fed by a living spring, which yet furnishes abundant water for the grazing flocks of the shepherd and for the thirsty traveler. And Abraham sojourned many days in the land of the Philistines.

It might be supposed that Abraham had been sufficiently tried when we remember all the difficulties through which he had passed in response to the expressed will of Jehovah. But the supreme test was yet to be applied. The law of sacrifice had early suggested to men the principle that the more precious the object offered the more acceptable the gift. Hence, human sacrifices had early found a place in the religion of many nations. Abraham had seen such offerings in his native Chaldaea. Egypt was familiar with the practice. The Canaanites "made their children to pass through the fire unto Molech." Later in the history of the chosen people we find the king of Moab offering his eldest son upon the walls of his capital, while the Gibeonites demand the sacrifice of seven sons of Saul as an atonement for his violence toward them. The Valley of Hinnom attains to a base notoriety for its human sacrifices during the reigns of the evil kings Ahaz and Manasseh. When we remember these facts, and that the life of a son was believed to be absolutely in the hands of the father, we will see that God's command to Abraham to offer up Isaac could not bear the aspect of horror with which we would view it to-day, or even Israel would look upon it at a later date. Yet the fact that God did not allow Abraham to consummate the offering showed that it was not the will of God that man should

We desire to call the attention of all such associations as those named above to a new book, recently published by us, which should be read and studied by all the young people among the Disciples of Christ. This book is

The Reformation of the XIXth Century.

It is a history of the Disciples of Christ—the first and only complete, authentic, adequate history ever issued. It is the joint production of some of the ablest writers in our great brotherhood—Chas. Louis Loos, B. B. Tyler, W. T. Moore, T. W. Grafton, Benj. L. Smith, A. McLean, Lois A. White and J. H. Garrison. Never before has such a clear and correct account of the origin and early days of our reformation been offered to the public. Never before has there been written such a fair and dispassionate history of the "turbulent period" of the life of this great reformatory movement. Never before has the present generation had so excellent an opportunity to learn the facts connected with the organization and development of our several missionary societies. In short, this is a history that must stand as the standard work on the subject for many years to come.

Bible Classes, Christian Endeavor Societies and Bethany C. E. Reading Circles will find this a delightful volume for study. It is by no means a dry and didactic compilation of facts and statistics, but is a narrative of absorbing interest, which, when once begun, will assuredly be completed. We know of no work, after the Bible, that our young people can study with more profit. A better knowledge of the history of our great plea will give them a greater love and zeal for it.

The price of this work, single copy, is $2.00, postpaid, but we will be glad to quote, on application, special prices when several copies are ordered at one time.

offer "the fruit of his body for the sin of his soul."

The command is put into words which must have pierced the very heart of the patriarch. "Take now thy son, thine only son, whom thou lovest, even Isaac, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of." Had such a command come to Abraham at the beginning of his life of faith, he could hardly have obeyed. But God will not try us beyond our strength, and only after the habit of obedience had become a "second nature" to Abraham does he subject him to this supreme test. And what a test it was! His tender love for the child of his old age, his only son; the promise of God that through Isaac his seed should be called, a promise that, to all human wisdom, seemed impossible if Isaac died in his early youth; these motives plead with mighty power against the command of Jehovah. Abraham's faith triumphed. The writer to the Hebrews tells us that Abraham believed that God would raise up Isaac from the dead and thus fulfill his promise. Thus does a true faith lay hold upon the invisible and anticipate that which man hath never seen.

Abraham's obedience was very prompt. He arose early in the morning and made his way to Moriah, probably the mountain known by that name upon which the temple was afterwards built. The fifty miles of journey was passed in three days. Leaving the servants at the base of the mount, Abraham and Isaac ascend its sides, the lad bearing upon his shoulders the wood on which he is to be burned, as his great prototype, the Son of God, bore his cross up the side of Calvary. To Isaac's pathetic inquiry, "Father, where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" Abraham, with breaking heart, replies, "My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering." Did he somehow feel that God would spare him the final trial of actually slaying his son, or did he only mean that God's will must be done at any cost, even if the lamb be the darling of his heart and home?

The sacrifice was complete. Abraham had already suffered the awful pangs of death in the binding of his dear boy and the lifting of the knife to slay him. No keener would have been his anguish had it descended into Isaac's tender flesh. And Isaac himself had concurred in the sacrifice, for we can only believe that he at last yielded himself to be bound and laid upon the altar. "Abraham, Abraham!" the voice of God called out. And the glad assurance is given him that he need not carry out his purpose, but that Jehovah will accept the ram caught in a nearby thicket instead of Isaac. God swears by his own infinite self that the promise made before to Abraham shall be fulfilled. And Abraham with gratitude calls the place Jehovah-jireh, "God will provide." It was the supreme moment in Abraham's life when he stood beside the smoking sacrifice that had become Isaac's substitute, and looked forward to the Lamb of God that should take away the sin of the world. Thus did Abraham rejoice to see the day of the Christ, and he saw it and was glad.

TOPIC FOR AUG. 25.

Daily Prayer.

(Ps. 34:1 22.)

"I will make it the rule of my life to pray every day."

The need for daily talk with God is as evident for a Christian as the need for daily sustenance is for a human body. No physique can be sound that is not constantly renewed by food and sleep. So, no soul can be kept sound that is not fed of God and does not repose upon God.

Different bodies need different sorts of sustenance. Some need food of one kind, some of another. The food that one would thrive on might be unwholesome for another, and vice versa. So, I take it, this matter of prayer—a grave problem for some people—must be solved in one way for one, and in a different way for another. What feeds your soul? There is the true test question. Which sort of prayer most satisfies your cravings?

Is it prayer at night or morning by your bedside, in your room? Is it the bright, fresh thanksgiving and praise of morning, when the heart leaps up to meet the sun? Is it the prayer for the day's guidance? Or is it the night's petition that most satisfies you—the yearning for forgiveness, the desire for truer, better living, the craving for the rest and comfort of the weary and heavy laden? If it is these that fortify and encourage one for the strife of life, then it is these the Endeavorer should have.

But there are those who do not find in these stated times their highest and most needed sustenance, but find it rather in moments of meditation, snatched at times from the business of life, moments on the porch or on the grass in summer, moments before the fire in winter, moments in the quietude of the church building before service (would that more people would come early for this very purpose!), moments on the after-dinner couch or on the public highway between strenuous endeavors. For those who have found these odd times sustaining, such moments should be assiduously cultivated.

Still others find their best communion with God in the very thick of life. For them the turmoil and the strifespeak of God; for them the clash of the reaper, the rattle of utensils, or the roar of industry and trade are broken by the still small voice that can be heard only in the inner chambers of the soul. For them every moment is lived as in the sight of God, and is conscious of His presence. This, after all, is the highest attainment of the philosophy of that great father of modern thought, Kant. He declares that all life should be lived in the sense that God is here. And is this not the spirit of the Psalm that heads our lesson? For those, then, to whom business is a constant prayer, this God-consciousness is the best of all spiritual sustenance.

And so for each of us there is the proper spiritual food. Never need the righteous beg bread. It is always to be found. If a child ask bread, will Our Father give him a stone? One of us can eat strong meat, another herbs, another milk, "sincere" milk.

All this is not to say that all these means of spiritual strengthening may not be utilized by us all. Let each one use any one or all of these. The stated times of prayer will refresh in us the constant assurance of God's presence and will enable us to find, all the more frequently, moments of meditation. And meditation, in its turn, will compel us to frequent kneeling in the sight of God; while the constant living and working as unto Him will create in us the desire for all kinds of prayer.

ALDERMAN.

A. D. Alderman, died at his home in this city, after a brief illness, July 27, 1901. He was born in Ohio in 1846, but moved here soon after his marriage, about 25 years ago. He had been a member of the Christian Church for more than 30 years, much of the time an officer. He was at the time of his death a deacon in this congregation. He was a Christian in a very large sense. To him Christianity was something practical and real. His life's record, with its eternal influence for good, was written indelibly on the hearts of his family and many friends. His service in the church and his life as a Christian citizen are an everlasting monument to his memory.

DUNN

Phoebe C. Dunn died at her home in Marion, Ia., July 24, 1901. She was born in Morgan county, Ohio, March 15, 1832. She was married to Wm. Dunn in 1848. In 1855 they came to Marion, Iowa, where they lived together until he was called to the better world April 28, 1898. Since his death she has spent her summers in Marion and her winters in San Diego, Cal., and other southern resorts. She has been a faithful member of the Christian Church since her girlhood. Her devotion to the cause of Christ and humanity is emphatically told by the several liberal bequests named in her last will and testament as follows: Drake University, Des Moines, $1,000; Church Extension of Christian Church, $1,000; Home for Friendless, Cedar Rapids, $500; Christian Church, Hammond, La., $200; Home for Aged Women, Cedar Rapids, $500; Home Missionary Society, Christian Church, $1,000. Mrs. Dunn devoted to the Christian Church in Marion her homestead of two lots, with fine brick residence. She had previously donated to the church $1,000 as a subscription to the fund for a new house of worship which was built a few years ago. Sister Dunn, as well as her husband, had a wide circle of friends and were noted for their generous hospitality. Her funeral service were conducted at the home by J. A. Seaton, ex-pastor, and J. G. Excell, present pastor of the Christian Church in Marion, on Friday, July 26, at 6:30.

J. G. EXCELL.

HARTSOCK.

Mrs. A. A. Hartsock, of Tama, Ill., died suddenly while visiting her sister, Mrs. M. E. Pickett, at Ft. Dodge, Ia. She was born in Franklin county, Ohio, May 22, 1834, and when five years of age removed with her parents to Warren county, Ind. In 1853 she was united in marriage with Hezekiah Briggs, and in 1857 they came to Tama county, Ia. Her husband gave his life for his country, being killed at the battle of Champion Hill, 1863. In 1869 she was married to Hon. William Hartsock, who died at Tacamah, Wash., Feb. 4, 1892. She leaves five children, one brother and two sisters. At the age of 14 she united with the church, and she never severed from her faith or failed to live a true Christian life. She was one of the charter members of the W. C. T. U. of Tama county, and her voice was ever heard in the temperance cause. The funeral services were conducted at the Christian Church by R. H. McGinness, pastor, and D. McMasters, of the Baptist Church.

SHOOKMAN.

Nicholas Shookman, a deacon in the New Haven (Mo.) Church, died July 29, 1901, of consumption, aged 66 years, 8 months and 9 days. He was born Nov. 21, 1834, and lived all his life in Franklin county. Bro. Shookman obeyed Christ in 1885, and was a most faithful follower, dying with his face toward the Sun of Righteousness. He was an honest, honorable, manly man, and a loyal soldier of Christ. The church and community have sustained a great loss. He leaves a widow and five children.

G. E. JONES.

WALLING.

Helen May Walling, daughter of Geo. R. and Nellie May Walling and granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hopkins, was born Aug. 1st, 1899, and departed this life July 28th, 1901. Helen was an exceptionally bright child and her departure leaves a vacant place in the household in which she lived that is sorely felt. Her life was short but it was full of sunshine and has left impressions that time will not efface. Her intelligence was far in advance of her age. The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Quisenbury, pastor Fifth Christian Church, this city.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

Book Notes.

We urge our friends and patrons to remember that the business of the Christian Publishing Company is by no means confined to the books which we ourselves publish, or to the works listed in our catalogues, or to those which we advertise, from time to time, in these columns. We do a general book business, and can supply, at the regular price, any book in print, no matter where or by whom published. We solicit correspondence regarding any desired volume. If you see, anywhere, an advertisement, review or notice of any book, and decide to purchase it, send your order to The Christian Publishing Company.

Sunday-school teachers who follow the quite general custom of giving reward cards to the members of their classes, should not fail to carefully read and examine page 72 of our General Catalogue, where will be found a descriptive price list of a great many varieties of handsome cards, ranging in price from 20 cents per 100 to 3 cents each. We handle, also, fine cards designed as special gifts or rewards, at higher prices. Our cheaper cards are supplied in a wide variety of styles, with or without Scripture texts. On account of the cost, and the very small margin of profit at which cards are sold, we cannot send free samples of cards. We have prepared, however, a special package of sample cards, which give the teacher an idea of the beauty and excellence of the several grades we supply, and this package we will send to any address for 25 cents. The cards in this special package are worth far more than 25 cents. They are put up as samples only, and only one package can be sent to one person. We will gladly send, free of charge, a copy of our catalogue.

The writer of these paragraphs has made many very pleasant traveling acquaintances through the wearing of a Christian Endeavor pin or badge on the lapel of his coat. Often, when on a tedious and lonesome journey, he has been greeted, in a railway coach or on the deck of a steamer, by an outstretched hand and a cheerful—"My name is Smith, from Chicago. I see by your badge that we belong to the same organization, and I'm glad to meet you," and the remainder of that trip has been pleasant and the end of it came all too quickly. Every active Christian Endeavorer should wear the emblem of the society. These emblems, or badges, are made in several styles and sizes, and are sold at prices ranging from 15 cents to $1.50. On page 83 of our General Catalogue the several styles and sizes are illustrated, and prices are quoted. This catalogue will be sent free on application. It contains, also, complete price list of all manner of supplies for Christian Endeavor societies.

Very soon, now, the "revival season" will be at hand. The first-class, active, wide-awake church is always and at all seasons engaged in evangelistic work, as a matter of course, but it is during the autumn and winter that the greater number of "protracted meetings" are held, and it is then that our congregations arrange for special evangelistic efforts. Every congregation that is planning for such a protracted effort during the coming season should now be getting ready for it and preparing the way for the evangelist who is to come later. Next to the prayerful consecration of the church members and the practical demonstration, in their lives and conduct, of the transforming power of the gospel, the best thing to do to make ready for a "great ingathering" is to make a general but judicious, distribution of tracts. By means of these may be sown the seed which will bring forth a rich harvest later on. Our churches have never realized the value of this method of spreading the truth and reaching the hearts of the unregenerated. When valuable tracts and pamphlets are so cheap, there is no reason why any consecrated, active Christian should not, on his own account, make a careful and systematic distribution of this form of literature among those of his friends and acquaintances whom he desires to see converted and brought into the church. As a matter of course, care and discretion should be used in the distribution. If there lives next-door to you, for example, a devout and pious old lady, who belongs to some pedobaptist body and whom you desire to teach "the way of the Lord more perfectly," it is scarcely judicious to hand her C. P. Evans' excellent tract, The Evils of Intemperance, or Ely's pamphlet, Tobacco. These will do very well for the young man in the next block who is busily engaged in promoting that branch of agriculture known as "sowing wild oats," and to whom it will hardly be worth while, in his present moral and spiritual condition, to give a treatise on the form of baptism. On pages 60, 61 and 62 of our General Catalogue will be found the price list of a very large number of tracts and pamphlets, published by us, on a wide range of subjects. Prices run from 1 cent to 25 cents for single tracts, but large discounts are made when any considerable number are ordered. Some tracts may be had as cheaply as 25 cents per hundred.

There is now scarcely a community in the United States which has not a teacher, propagandist and practitioner of "Christian Science," or else has not had visits from some peripatetic disciple of "Mother" Eddy. There can hardly be a doubt that "Christian Science" is now at the height of its glory. Mrs. Eddy, the "author and finisher" of the new faith, is a very old and feeble woman, and we may expect to hear of her death any day—unless, indeed, the fact of her death be concealed, that the faith of those who believe her immortal may not be shaken and their contributions cease—and when it becomes known that she is dead, the disintegration will begin. It is likely that several ambitious disciples of the cult will claim the succession to the leadership, and the result will be division, secession, and presently annihilation and innocuous desuetude. So mote it be! Meanwhile, intelligent Christian people should thoroughly prepare themselves, that they may be ready, at any time, to point out each inconsistency non sequitur, fallacy, misstatement, etc., in the tortuous arguments and explanations of the proclaimers of this new gospel, and to defend Christianity against the assaults of "Mother" Eddy and her followers. If you wish to know just what "Christian Science" is and what it teaches, and want to learn this without laboriously going through a volume of several hundred pages, procure a copy of Christian Science Dissected—a pamphlet of 64 pages which the average person can read carefully in a couple of hours, and which has been pronounced by many the fairest and most effective attack on Eddyism that has yet been published. This pamphlet was published a year ago, and has had a very large sale. It will be mailed to any address for 25 cents.

Do you know about how many stars are visible to the naked eye on a clear night? Can you tell the distance from the sun to Jupiter? What is the circumference of the moon? How many satellites has Saturn? Perhaps you can answer these questions, but you might be asked hundreds of other questions concerning the universe in which we live and the geography of space (if we may be permitted that term) and make but a poor showing. The average man or woman, otherwise intelligent and well-informed, knows precious little about the solar system, outside the little planet on which we live. This is rank provincialism. If you have not read it, send 50 cents for a copy of Wonders of the Sky, by W. J. Russell, and learn something of what is going on all about. This volume is an elementary book on astronomy, not written as a text-book, but as a pleasing and delightful narrative, a description of the "Wonder of the Sky." It is a book that the young folks will delight to read. It is most beautifully bound in cloth, stamped in silver and gold with appropriate design. Price, post-paid, 50 cents.

Lessons in Soul-Winning, by E. H. Kellar, is a book that should be carefully studied by every Christian who is striving to do his part in the salvation and regeneration of his fellow men. In a paragraph above we have spoken of the use of tracts in preparing for a series of evangelistic services. The object of these tracts is chiefly, of course, to prepare the minds and hearts of the unsaved to receive the message which the evangelist will deliver. Lessons in Soul-Winning is designed to assist the Christian worker in his efforts to supplement the teaching of the tracts and the message of the preacher by personal appeals to those who are almost persuaded—"not far from the kingdom." This work has received the strongest endorsement from many prominent Christian workers, both in our own brotherhood and in other religious bodies. Its suggestions are eminently practical, and the book is characterized by its good, common-sense, straightforward style and tone. It contains 184 pages, and is issued in two bindings—cloth, red edges, price 75 cents; in paper covers, price 25 cents.

It is an unfortunate thing that so many books written for young people, and more especially books designed to warn young men and women of the peril and danger of many popular amusements, and to point out to them safe and righteous paths, have been written by men who apparently forgot, while writing, that they were ever young themselves, and who, moreover, give unmistakable evidence that they are wholly ignorant of many of the things which they unsparingly condemn. The young man or young woman who begins to read such a book does not go far into it until he or she discovers that the author is making statements of alleged facts which the reader knows are not facts, and the book is speedily thrown aside in disgust, though the reader may have been one who was in grave need of advice and admonition concerning questionable amusements. Happily, however, all books of advice for the young are not thus defective. Pre-eminent among the volumes of this nature which are characterized by good sense, by fair and temperate statements and by accurate and honest judgment is the late work by W. J. Russell—What is Your Life? This book is pure gold, and, as we have more than once declared, it is easily worth $10,000 to any young person who will read it, and faithfully follow its precepts. It is unlike the majority of books of good advice to the young, moreover, in that it is actually a work that young people enjoy reading. The author has made frequent use of anecdote, incident, illustration and quotation, and has produced a work of lively interest, which is certain to be read, to the last sentence, by every one who begins it. Every parent should put this book into the hands of his children, and induce them to begin it; it will not be necessary to urge them to finish it. It is a beautifully printed and bound volume, and the price is only $1.00.

Where did yesterday's sunset go,
When it faded down the hills so slow,
And the gold grew dim, and the purple light
Like an army with banners passed from sight?
Will its flush go into the golden-rod,
Its thrill to the purple aster's nod,
Its crimson fleck to the maple-bough,
And the autumn glory begin from now?
Deeper than flower-fields sank the glow
Of the silent pageant passing slow.

It flushed all night in many a dream,
It thrilled in the folding hush of prayer,
It glided into a poet's song,
It is setting still in a picture rare;
It changed by a miracle none can see
To the shifting lights of a symphony;
And in resurrections of faith and hope
The glory died on the shining slope.
For it left its light on the hills and seas
That rim a thousand memories.

offers exceptionally fine opportunities for doing a high grade of work in the following DEPARTMENTS: Preparatory, Teachers', Scientific, Classic, Engineering, Oratory, Pharmacy, Musical, Fine Art, Law, Commercial, Phonography and Typewriting, Review.

The institution is well equipped with buildings, apparatus, library, etc. (The new Science Hall recently completed, has laboratory facilities sufficient for accommodating 400 students working at one time.) Each department of the school is supplied with everything necessary for its special work. For example,

The Pedagogical Department is not only supplied with a full reference library, consisting of all the latest and most approved books treating on professional work, but it has also excellent apparatus for experimental purposes.

The Commercial Department is provided with a more extensive line of offices than has ever been attempted by any other school.

The Pharmacy Department is one of the few in the United States that has laboratory facilities for doing all the work. What is true of the equipments of these departments is true of the other departments. Attention is called to this to show that while the Expenses here are about one-third as great as at other high grade schools, yet the advantages are the best. Tuition, $10 per term. Board and furnished room, $1.50 to $1.90 per week. Fall term will open September 3, 1901.
