He blushed and bowed, and took his leave, but with a look which indicated more than his diffidence would permit him otherwise to express. He renewed his visit, very soon, however, and it was not long until the nuptials were celebrated.

Just what sort of an interview young Alden had with Standish after this, we do not know, but tradition says the captain never forgave him, and I should not wonder if tradition were right for once. The captain was not shrewd to send such a fine looking fellow as Alden to do his courting for him, and those pilgrim fathers and mothers were none too pious and none too sad, I venture, to have many a laugh at the captain's expense.

I fancy, too, that Standish often muttered to himself: "Fool that I was! Why didn't I have sense enough to go myself!" In less than thirty days after Alden asked for Priscilla for Standish, Priscilla's father died, and doubtless did not live to see his daughter married.

Another touching romance of the heart was that between William Bradford and Alice Carpenter, which began while as yet they were both in England. Bradford loved Alice passionately, and she loved him in return with equal ardor, only that she carried her coquetry too far. She took delight in holding him off, hoping, as I imagine, to see the man upon his knees, a pleading suppliant for her hand in marriage, as he believed he had her heart. The story is, that he claimed her too soon and put a kiss upon her lips which she resented with a slap in his face. Well, Alice held Bradford off one day too long, and to her grief and disappointment he did not come again. Alice was soon married to a Mr. Southworth, not so much because she loved him, as because she hated herself, and partly also to conceal her disappointment from her friends.

Bradford remained single until he heard of the marriage of Alice Carpenter to Mr. Southworth, then he married an estimable woman in Miss Dorothy May; not because he loved her, for he told her that he loved another, but because Dorothy persuaded him that she could love him with a devotion that would ultimately heal his wound.

Bradford and his wife came to America. Alice and her husband remained in England until Mr. Southworth died. When Bradford heard of the death of Alice's husband, the old passion was revived, if indeed it had ever been dead. Bradford was a devoted husband to Dorothy so far as conscientious attention to her every want could go. Do his best, however, he could not conceal from Dorothy the fact that he was only a conscientious husband. She craved the devotion that springs spontaneous from the heart, and she craved in vain.

One day after Bradford and his friends had returned to the Mayflower from a reconnoitering expedition, while the vessel was still in Cape Cod Harbor, he was told that Dorothy had fallen overboard. This was December 7, 1820. Alas! her drowning was not accidental, history fears. Bradford became governor after Carver's death.

In two years he renewed his suit for Alice. Her coquettish spirit still manifested itself, but was kept well within bounds. She came to America and they were married. They lived together thirty-five years, and children were born to them. Four daughters and four sons were also born to John Alden and Priscilla.

Mormonism? and for the sacred shrines of the Roman Catholic Church? They show cases of healing quite as pronounced as does Christian Science.

But Judge Clarkson thinks that a function of Christian Science is also "to prove once more the uselessness of all attempts to establish the church of Christ on earth through human leadership, organization and congregations swayed by creeds or tenets."

If there is a movement in existence swayed by human leadership it is Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy is its Alpha and Omega. It is true, also, that the rivals of Christian Science in the healing of the sick, namely, the Christian Catholic Church, Mormonism and the Roman Catholic Church, are remarkable specimens of compact organization. Nor is Christian Science itself lacking in effective organization with Mrs. Eddy as its recognized head. I do not think that Mrs. Eddy has shown the world how to establish the church of Christ on earth. The sweet-spirited author of "The A. B. C. of Scientific Christianity" thinks that this she has done—apparently. Jesus Christ said, "I will build my church," and this he has done. He established his church in Jerusalem centuries ago and the gates of hell have not prevailed against it, as he said they would not.

Judge Clarkson, in his book, indulges in the use of words in a way peculiar to Christian Science. Words are used, I am more and more coming to believe, by Christian Scientists with unusual and unwarranted significations. They do not use the English language, it is certain, as it is employed by the best speakers and writers.

This is clear: The judge believes that with a return to the faith of the Christ and the life that he enjoined, and in himself perfectly illustrated, there will come the power to heal the sick as the Master and his disciples healed. Is this the teaching of the Bible?

The miracles of the Bible are found in three groups. There are the wonders wrought by Moses; there are the miracles of Elijah and Elisha; and there are the supernatural works of Jesus and his apostles. Now the chief characteristics of these times are unbelief and a consequent disregard of God and his authority. From the facts recorded in the Bible I would say that if signs and wonders similar to those of Moses, Elijah, Elisha, Jesus and the Twelve, are ever again seen, it will be when there is a terrible spiritual deadness among men—not when there is an unusual abundance of spiritual life. Paul's exposition of spiritual gifts in the First Epistle to the Corinthians is in harmony with this view. It seems to me, therefore, that these good people exactly reverse the Bible teaching on the subject of miracles.

The suggestion made by Dr. W. T. Moore for a meeting of old preachers calls out favorable comments. N. A. Walker writes enthusiastically about it, suggesting that fifty years be the lower limit of age and that the meeting be held at Louisville, Ky. A special effort could be made to have as many as possible of the veterans who were present at the organization of the F. C. M. S. Bro. Moore and Bro. Walker were both on the committee which drew up the plans for that organization.

B. B. Tyler's Letter

Judge Clarkson, of Omaha, is the author of a small volume entitled, "The A. B. C. of Scientific Christianity." Mr. Joseph Russell Clarkson, commonly called Judge Clarkson, was a disciple of Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Patterson Eddy. He was a practitioner, teacher and lecturer in the Christian Science church for a year and a half preceding the first of January, 1901. He was active in all the branches of Christian Science work. His income was from five hundred to a thousand dollars a month. He went to Boston as one of Mrs. Eddy's counsels in the famous libel suit in which she was defendant. He knows the doctrine and practice of Christian Science as only a few know it. The time came when he became morally satisfied that the faces of the Christian Scientists were turned in the wrong direction. When he abandoned the movement he canceled twenty lucrative lecture engagements. In "The A. B. C. of Scientific Christianity," Judge Clarkson gives freely his opinion of Mrs. Eddy and Christian Science. There is no bitterness in his writing. There is a sweetness of spirit in all he says that is really charming. All agree, who are acquainted with him, that Judge Clarkson is a brilliant man. He is a good man, too. No unpleasant moral taint attaches to him. He has occupied an important judicial position. There are those who say he is erratic. The same was said of Paul of Tarsus and of Martin Luther. His abandonment of Christian Science, he says, was not the result of an impulse, but of long and careful consideration. So far is he from denouncing Christian Science in a wholesale way, he says he wishes the world at large to understand that as it is presented in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" it is the most wonderful exposition of truth that came during the nineteenth century. He believes that Mrs. Eddy, and those in her fellowship, have, to a large extent, abandoned in practice the doctrines contained in the text-books of the cult. He says that he would not have withdrawn had he not concluded that under existing conditions any radical reform could not be effected. The financial feature of Christian Science seems to have been the first thing that disturbed the conscience of Judge Clarkson. This is what he says:

"I have never been able to satisfy my best conscience that it was right to take a dollar or two in direct return for a prayer to God that he would heal the sick or sinner, and I have brought to bear upon that conscience all the specious arguments that I or others could frame to mold its instinctive sense of good into a different shape. It has steadily refused to acquiesce, and I am to-day thankful that its pleadings have at last been heeded, and the exchange of a dollar for a prayer, so far as I am concerned, stopped.

"If the action of Jesus in scourging the money changers out of the temple has any significance to the people of this generation, it applies with awful potent to the practice and methods of the Christian Scientists. I feel with reference to the lecturing much the same as with reference to the praying; the intimacy between money and the work is too close."

He says that it is in the teaching of Mrs. Eddy and her followers subsequent to the publication of "Science and Health" he sees a steady departure from the truth. This has come, he thinks, from an attempt to conjecture the causes for failures to heal. Here are some of the things that Judge Clarkson says about Mrs. Eddy and her following:

"They are a self-deceived, self-hypnotized, self-mesmerized people, and are to be pitied from one's heart."

"I call attention to the sixth chapter of Matthew and ask whether the Wednesday evening meeting, the testimonials in the Sentinel and Journal, the work of the publication committee and the general custom of trumpeting what one has done by way of demonstrating God's power and love, are not a departure from Jesus' cautions as to almsgiving and praying and are not decidedly pharisaical in their tendency?"

"The function of the Christian Science movement up to its present stage has been to call the world to justly estimate religious science; to show to a limited degree that Christian faith and character enable one, God working through him, to heal the sick."

May not the same be said for John Alexander Dowie and his Christian Catholic church? May not the same be said for The Individuality of Books.

By A. M. Growden.

Books may be individualized. The books which have survived because through them a golden purpose runs. In certain conditions men call for a particular book. The dying Scott called for the Bible. The soul of man craves congeniality in literature. In the most serious passes in life, books have been man's solace—even where the voice of friend could not penetrate.

There is a literature of instruction. In this class would be all the text books of the sciences, arts and philosophies. These are fundamental. The superstructure is built upon them.

Then there is the literature of rest. When summer days come, when weary brain demands change and rest, "light" (not frivolous) reading is in demand. We find the readers in sheltered nook, on sea beach sand, under cliffs where waves dash snowy spray, in rustic camp, in elegant yacht,—everywhere. Man at rest, and man traveling to find rest, but all providing for mentality's needs.

The literature of travel is a boon to the many who cannot flee, they are stay-at-homes. Here is a splendid field for mental growth. If the mercury stands at 100, a perusal of Arctic narratives will be refreshing. De Long, Greeley, Nansen and Peary will conduct us over fields of ice—and through icy mazes to warm retreats. Or, when winter winds blow, then balmy breezes may be wafted from Indian seas and Pacific isles. The one who abides at home may, by books of travel, visit the ends of the earth. This is the inexpensive way of doing it.

In the literature of power the real students will find delight in "Beacon Lights" and Plutarch's "Lives" and among "The Nations of the World" and with "Makers of History." Power, literary power, is to be cultivated only by method, studious, meditative and persistent. It is one thing to accumulate books—some buy them by weight and measurement—but quite another to have a library. The first requires money—the second, mental insight, literary discrimination. After all is said, it is not quantity read but quality assimilated that makes the mental man.

The literature of pathos is akin to the literature of power. "Oliver Twist" will always be read, for the same reason that men read the parable of the Prodigal Son. Both touch chords of sympathy—one touch of pathos makes the world kin. The avenue to many hearts is the way of tears. Tears are good if turned to practical ends—if hearts are touched only to relapse again, the last state is worse than the first.

There is the literature of devotion. Great men are oft "Alone with God." They spend many "Half-Hours at the Cross." Great characters are found near to the heart of Christ. John was not the equal of Paul mentally, but his closeness to the Redeemer made him "the beloved disciple." Lubbock in a list of one hundred books places the Bible first. In it all classes are met, all conditions seen, all true principles of life found, for he who is its central figure, its motive and its inspiration, declared, "I am the truth." The universe cannot dispense with the king of books, for we cannot have a mental and moral kingdom without the king.

The Observance of C. W. B. M. Day

✧ FIRST LORD'S DAY IN DECEMBER ✧

The great growth of the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the new fields it is entering this year and the need of larger equipment in fields already entered, makes the observance of C. W. B. M. day in all our churches very important.

The national convention has decided that the first Lord's day in December shall be set apart for learning of the work of this organization, securing recruits for its ranks and taking an offering for its treasury.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions works both in foreign and home fields. It gladly co-operates with the American Christian Missionary Society, the board of church extension and the various state organizations in missionary endeavor in the home land, while its relations with the Foreign Christian Missionary Society are cordial and pleasant.

Churches are sustained or Christian schools maintained in thirty states and territories in our country. Work is also conducted in Jamaica, India, Porto Rico and Mexico.

The forms of work are evangelistic, pastoral, educational, industrial, medical, orphanage, zenana, village, railway, colportage and leper.

There are one hundred and six missionaries in the United States, seventeen in Jamaica, thirty-five in India, seven in Mexico, and two in Porto Rico. The total number of missionaries and assistant missionaries is one hundred and sixty-seven—a gain of sixty-one over last year. Besides these workers, there are native evangelists, teachers and helpers.

The stations in Jamaica are Kingston, Torrington, Mt. Olivet, Bloxburgh, Mt. Zion, Bushy Park, King's Gate, New Bethel, Carmel, Providence, Chesterfield, Flint River, Mamby Vale, Oberlin, Manning's Hill, Lucky Hill, Bethel, Airy Mount, Fairy Hill, Berea, Branch, and Hazel Grove. The new missionary for Jamaica is Mrs. Neil MacLeod, formerly Miss Lois A. White, so well known to our sisterhood during her long term of service as corresponding secretary of our board.

The stations in India are Bilaspur, Deoghur, Bina, Mahoba, Calcutta, and Pendra Road. School work has this year been opened at Sakri, in connection with Bilaspur. The new missionaries in this field are Mr. and Mrs. Menzies. The new assistant missionaries are Miss Kate Brown, Miss Alice Gantzer, Miss May Gantzer, and Mr. and Mrs. DeMonte—in all, seven.

The station in Mexico is Monterey, with an out station at Topo Chico, which has been opened this year. Five of the missionaries at this station are new—Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Alderman, Miss Lucile Eubank, Mr. G. E. Hawes and Mr. A. Flores.

The station at Porto Rico is at Bayamon, where we conduct the first Protestant orphanage opened in the island. Miss Nora Collins has been added to the list of workers in this field.

The new enterprises for the year in the various fields are as follows:

In Jamaica, the building of the King's Gate Mission House and the Manning's Hill Chapel.

In India, the opening of the Sakri schools out from Bilaspur; the Mission Home and Chapel at Pendra Road; the Dispensary and Gospel Hall at Deoghur, and the enlargement of the orphanage at Mahoba.

In Mexico, the opening of the out station at Topo Chico, and the publication of the Gospel Call.

In Porto Rico, the thorough fitting of the orphanage building and grounds for their intended use, and the supplying of a teacher for the orphanage school.

The greatest enlargement of the year has been in the home land. Last October the work of the board of negro education and evangelization was placed in the charge of the board, and among the new enterprises are to be numbered the schools at Edwards, Miss., Louisville, Ky., Lum, Ala., and Martinsville, Va., also evangelistic work in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, Illinois, Kentucky and Florida.

Wallace C. Payne and wife have been located at Lawrence, Kan., and regular Bible work for the State University students undertaken. Palo Alto, Salinas and Hanford, in California north, and the state organization of California south, have been assisted. The Tidewater district, Va., and Parkersburg, W. Va., have also been given help. A new dormitory has been erected at Edwards, Miss., and a school building purchased at Louisville, Ky. The new workers for the year are Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lehman, Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Ross, Miss Jennie Brittain, Miss Effie Haines, Miss Carrie Taylor and Mr. J. O. Baker, Edwards, Miss.; Robert Brooks, Miss Maggie Brayboy, Miss Julia E. Williams and Miss Estelle Carson, Lum, Ala.; Mr. A. J. Thomson, O. Singleton, Louisville, Ky.; Mr. J. W. Thomas, Martinsville, Va.; James S. Hughes, Missouri; William Alphin, Kansas; H. Martin, Arkansas; A. Peddifold, Kentucky; J. H. Rogers, Florida; W. B. Taylor, Chicago, Ill. (for city missionary board); T. H. Lawson, Hanford, Cal.; D. A. Russell, Palo Alto, Cal.; O. G. White, Parkersburg, W. Va.; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Payne, Lawrence, Kan.; Liss Lizzie Beazley, Morehead, Ky., and Miss Mae Davenport, Hazel Green, Ky., besides others in states assisted through the missionary boards.

The enlargement of the forces, sixty-one missionaries being added during the year, and the plans for new work during the year make it very necessary that the C. W. B. M. day offerings shall be generous. We bespeak the cordial help of each pastor in the observance of this special day. The watchword for the year is "Information, Inspiration, Realization; 15,000 Subscribers for the Missionary Tidings, 50,000 women and $150,000." The realization of these aims will mean a deepening of the spiritual life of the church, an enlargement of the missionary spirit and more generosity toward all lines of Christian activity. We hope the day will be more generally observed than ever before.

The Channels of Life: Habit

By EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES

The streams of life, like the rivers of the earth, cut for themselves channels according to their volume and power. The currents of thought and feeling and of physical activity flow in certain definite courses within each individual. The figure of a stream with its bed and banks is suggestive of the emphasis which has been given recently to the relation between mind and body. Just as the gentle rivulets wear tracks in the soil and rocks, so the subtlest wishes, worries and intellectual achievements furrow the delicate substance of the brain and nervous system. In either case when the currents have made their grooves, they never flow quite so easily anywhere else. It is the property of many material things to preserve traces of impressions once received. The corner of a page turned down yields more readily in the same line afterward. Not only shoes, but all kinds of apparel have to be "broken in," and like well trained servants, retain their early lessons through life. Tools and instruments fit themselves to the hand and the hand responds to them, so that in pitching hay, writing letters, or playing croquet each one wants the fork or pen or mallet which has the familiar feeling. A new instrument is therefore apt to be disagreeable and disappointing. Now if these objects of wood and iron are molded to the tasks they are used in, it is not strange that brain cells and fibers should be fashioned by and in turn determine the mental life which is intimately, though mysteriously, related to them.

The Variety of Habits.

A rough classification of habits may be made into bodily and mental, but no act is exclusively the one or the other. Any action which is acquired is a habit, as standing, walking, writing, rowing, shooting, playing a musical instrument, or mastering the technique of any art or craft. The habit may of course be entirely unimportant, as the preliminary clearing of the throat before speaking, or the maneuvers of a baseball pitcher before each throw of the ball. The little tricks of gesture, posture and inflection often observed in public speakers, furnish ample illustrations. The daily rounds of the toilet, the routine of the kitchen, the shop, the office, are for the most part machine-like in their uniformity, and run themselves off with a rhythm and order which sometimes seem to leave little need for reflection and spontaneity. The mental life is likewise held within the banks of custom. A good illustration of mental habit is the very bad habit of punning. An individual may with little practice become addicted to puns so that even strangers like Mr. Boots, Foot, Shanks, Green, Black, or Newcomer are not exempt. All association of ideas is due to habit. One can experiment with himself as to these fixed tendencies of mind by noticing where his thoughts fly to at the mention of certain words or objects. Emotional moods also settle themselves upon some persons, so that they are constantly irritable or fearful or hopeful and confident. Some people never can hear a categorical statement without feeling impelled to dissent or at least to note exceptions. On the other hand, some people have grown to the function of praise and approval so that they cannot be critical in any case.

It is interesting to see how groups of people, religious denominations or political parties for example, move habitually within certain sets of ideas, expressed in characteristic phrases or catch words. Most of the readers of these lines expect to hear their minister talk of the Lord's day and not of the Sabbath; of our people, not our denomination; of our plea, not our creed. If their minister should some day appear in the pulpit gowned and surpliced, they would be outraged. But if another minister were to appear before his people without the gown and surplice there would be even more commotion. Both cases would illustrate the power of habit.

Forming Habits.

The first condition is the plasticity of the brain, and since this is greater in childhood and youth, these are the periods which give the bent and determine the whole course of the after life. Up to the age of fifteen or eighteen the predominantly physical habits are established. Then is fashioned one's gait, speech, penmanship, sports and technique. Musicians, sculptors, painters, wood-carvers, and all the rest must gain an early start in order to achieve notable results. The intellectual life, its scope, quality and direction is determined for the most part by the age of thirty. After that plans and hopes for new pursuits may be plentiful, but they seldom reach fulfillment. New languages, sciences, studies of all kinds may seem as possible as ever, but the fact that they are seldom won shows how far away they lie. It may be pathetic and discouraging, but it is true, and the best comfort will be found not in trying to disprove it, but in moving with full sails within the channels already made.

Among the means serviceable in forming habits, repetition is often emphasized on the ground that practice makes perfect. The old-time school teaching put great stress upon the "drill" for this reason. But mere repetition does not state the whole case, for there is nothing selective about it, and it fixes bad acts as well as the good. To set a copy before a child with the injunction to reproduce it so many times is senseless and fruitless; for the essential thing is to modify and correct each effort with a view to the ideal. Reflection upon the end sought is therefore a vital and indispensable element in forming right habits. The child should be taught to review carefully and intelligently the details of his work, and to compare it at every point with the pattern and the process of its production.

As another proof of the unwisdom of mere repetition may be cited the cases in which the proper adjustment is gained at a single stroke, by what has been called the "happy hit." In learning to whistle, or to whistle through the fingers or teeth, a boy tries to get an idea of the way it done, and then in the midst of variously different attempts suddenly finds the secret. The wave of satisfaction, the sense of discovery and achievement which runs through the experimenter fixes the operation in his mind and muscles so that it never escapes him so long as he lives. To get the "knack" or the "hang" of the thing, "catch on," are pat phrases of common speech for this experience.

There is one other curious feature in the formation of habits. The nervous system seems to build itself up in line with the desired activity. For example, in learning skate, one may quickly become fatigued and nervous after a few trials so that it is no use to try any longer at that time. But one may be surprised at the beginning the second lesson to find that he can do much better than at the end of the first. What has happened in the meantime? It seems plausible to say that during rest and recreation the physical centers involved have been reinforced and made more capable of the new task. In that way the encouraging view may be entertained that we learn to do things while we sleep or while we refresh ourselves by sports and pastimes, provided we properly set about doing them while work.

Value and Importance.

Habits bring economy, precision and consequent power to their possessor. They can be appreciated by contrast in the case of the baby whose movements represent abundant energy but small results. The profitless way in which an infant tries to bring its hand and mouth together ought to make grown-ups swell with pride being able to feed themselves. Habits once achieved work so freely and easily it is difficult to believe one did not always possess them. Many persons well remember their experience in learning to ride a bicycle. After the first attempts the whole body, every muscle and nerve ached from the effort. It was only by degrees that the muscles directly involved were separated from their task and hardened for the exertion so that they could endure a "century" ride. Transition from rigid strain to careless relaxation is another statement of the same achievement. When the art is mastered the power goes straight to its mark, giving grace and beauty with success. Awkwardness is nature's confession of uncoordinated effort.

Consciousness is constantly at work simplifying its tasks by turning them over to the control of habits where they need less direct attention. The accomplished pianist converses while he plays, as though the responsibility for the music were delegated to the fingers. The lady's knitting takes care of itself very

The People's Forum

The People's Forum seems to meet a long-felt want. Our invitation to readers to contribute to it has been promptly and heartily accepted. Even a casual glance through this column will convince anyone that it is possible to give forcible expression to some large and living ideas within the limit of two hundred words. Remember that all are invited to contribute on any subject of interest. We suggest for the benefit of several, that we must consider all pointed criticisms of our contemporaries as barred from our columns by the canons of journalistic courtesy. God's Way.

Our success as a religious movement in the days to come, as in the days past of our work, depends on our loyalty to the word of God. We want to know God's way in all the work we attempt to do for Christ and his church, and then to follow in this way in the spirit of the Master with all the zeal and earnestness we can summon. We have no right, neither has any church the right, to compromise God's way of saving sinners and strengthening saints. What God says that we must do. If God says that sinners must enter his church by believing on his Son, repenting of their sins and being baptized, we must not compromise one iota of this way. When we commence to compromise God's way, if we ever do, then our glory as a movement will begin to wane. If we remain true to the word of God and loyal to our Savior, our increase, in the coming days, will be by leaps and bounds such as the world has never hitherto known.

What Name?

By what name should we be called? That depends upon circumstances. It depends upon the standpoint from which we are viewed. If as followers of Christ, then are we Christians. If as learners of the doctrine of Christ, then are we disciples. If as to our relation to our heavenly Father, then are we children. If as to our relation with each other, then are we brethren. If in our relation to holiness, then are we saints. If we refer to the "body of Christ," the church as organized, then in God's word we read of "churches of Christ," "the church of God," "the church of the living God," "churches of God." Individual believers are called disciples of Christ, Christians, etc., in the living oracles; but we never read of a "disciple church," a "disciple preacher," nor yet of a "Christian church." These names are not employed by the inspired writers when referring to the body of Christ.

Hence, brethren, let us be admonished, that we may not be guilty of forgetting our own name given by our Lord. We are "disciples of Christ," "Christians," "brethren," etc., and are members of the "church of Christ," "church of God," "body of Christ," etc."

Belief and Baptism.

I wish to commend your answer to "A Friend," in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of November 7, on "Belief the only condition of church membership." Especially apposite and timely is this thought: "Faith, the desire to be a Christian, the purpose to turn away from evil, must have embodiment in some concrete act which means all that, and such is baptism." I hold it as certain that one cannot be fully, certainly and consciously committed until committed in action. The act of obedience is the complement of the mental state, intensifies it, shows it is controlling us. It is reasonable that it should refer the mind definitely to the authority of Christ, as a mere moral obligation between man and man cannot so evidently do; and that it should symbolically indicate the facts that underlie our faith—the death and resurrection of Christ—and at the same time express the ethical change taking place in our own minds, dying to sin and rising to a new life.

The effort to class baptism and the Lord's supper—symbolical and monumental institutions—with those temporary and changeable regulations that grew out of the customs of the country, and the incidents of Christian activity, such as washing feet, the holy kiss and methods of work, must have come from studying the Christian religion from some other source than the New Testament.

Greater Publicity.

Not prompted by a spirit of pride but for the purpose of allowing the world to know of our existence as a people, what we teach and what we accomplish, greater publicity should be given the proceedings of our conventions, state and national. The press is not at fault. The managers of a convention should select beforehand a competent brother, in touch with the press, and remunerate him for his time and labor in preparing each day a readable report of the session. Those compelled to stay at home from Minneapolis looked in vain in the dailies for a line concerning our great convention there. The only line that appeared was a three-line note saying that the foreign board attributed their small receipts to the work of Mark Twain.

Let the Cleveland committee for our congress in March and the Omaha committee for our next national convention bestir themselves, or in words of understanding, "get a move on themselves." It is not enough to enlist the local press. The Associated Press should be used.

The Preacher and the College.

One of the crying needs of to-day is a greater appreciation of the responsibility of the membership in general toward Christian education. The people have become so accustomed to the free school system or have so long witnessed the endowment of colleges by the very wealthy that they do not feel called upon to do anything themselves. The Christian Church can never have any well endowed schools until the masses of the membership learn to contribute. The remedy is the preacher. The gospel of systematic giving, including giving to Christian education, must be preached. The Iowa Christian convention this year recommended the giving of ten per cent. of all missionary offerings to Christian education—a step in the right direction, but the step must be lengthened. The small colleges are doing great good and must continue. But if the cause of Methodism, Baptistism, Congregationalism, etc., requires great universities with several million dollars' endowment, then surely the great and important work being done by the Christian Church needs such a force.

A Conspiracy to Promote.

Our supply of preachers is short. Never mind about the Year Book. When Bloomington, Winchester or Pittsburg finds the right man another church loses him. There are not enough rollers for all the hot mills. The Bible colleges can only grind out the grist that comes. Persuading young plumbers and harness-makers is a doubly doubtful expedient and insufficient, at any rate. Why not fall back on the Master's suggestion and organize a conspiracy of prayer? Let the committee on uniform midweek topics give us a service. Let every pulpit consecrate one Lord's day to the perpetuation of the gospel ministry, especially by striving to enlist all Christians in this prayer. Encourage their prayers to the fervency that will consent to the calling of their own children. Enlighten the best families to receive the evangelist as their most honored guest, instead of entertaining him grudgingly and of necessity. And thou, oh man of God, stir up the gift which is in thee. Glorify thy ministry. Let thy gentle greatness in God's might and grace convince the young that thine is a greater office than Morgan's, Schley's or Roosevelt's. The ministry will reproduce after its kind, if it be the right kind.

The Sunday-school and Christian Work.

Why cannot the time which in most Sunday-schools is wasted upon the general review of the lesson be used to interest the members in practical Christian work? Granting that there is scarcely enough time as it is to do much thorough studying of the scriptures, is it not true that far too little attention is given in our churches to present-day life with its needs and opportunities? No Sunday-school does its work well unless it dwells upon the application of Christian principles as well as their origin. This could easily be done by giving five or ten minutes of the school's time, now spent on aimless review or tedious "secretary's report," to the consideration of some benevolent work, either public or private. The local hospital, the care and reform of criminals, work for the unfortunate in county and state institutions, the visiting of the sick, the nearest rescue missions, the city charity organizations, the Red Cross Society, the Anti-saloon League and a dozen other topics could be taken up by an assigned speaker one Sunday after another. Information is easily accessible and interest is aroused at once. I look for a twofold result from such a movement, increased vigor and more representative attendance in the Sunday-school and a greater, broader Christian work in the community.

Our Budget.

—Be ye thankful.

—Be as thankful next week as you are this.

—A thanksgiving spirit that finds expression only one day out of three hundred and sixty-five is worth a little less than one-third of a cent on the dollar.

—The churches of Coffey county, Kan., held a convention at LeRoy, Nov. 13-14.

—R. H. Ingram, of Albia, Ia., has accepted a call to Creston, Ia., where he began work Nov. 24.

—H. E. Monser writes that he knows of places for two good preachers at $800 a year. He may be addressed at California, Mo.

—Bro. White, of California, preached at Cool Brook, Ill., Oct. 27 and at Cameron, Oct. 30, in the absence of the pastor, O. D. Maple.

—Homer T. Wilson has been called to the pastorate of the church at San Antonio, Tex. It is a strategic point of great importance.

—And a thanksgiving spirit which does not find an outlet in kindness toward man, as well as gratitude to God, is worth just a little bit less than that.

—W. E. M. Hackleman lost his house at Irvington, Ind., and all its contents by fire Nov. 20. The loss is estimated at about $3,000, with $2,300 insurance.

—The church at Berwick, Ill., has bought the M. E. church building at that place. This church was organized only a few months ago with forty-five members.

—P. B. Hall has resigned the pastorate at Harriman, Tenn. His work there is well spoken of and it is said that he was leading his people to a higher spiritual life.

—The new church at Buffalo, Kan., was dedicated Nov. 10 by Gilbert Park, assisted by E. D. Poston, of Pleasanton, who remained and assisted a few days in a meeting.

—J. A. Tabor, of Oklahoma City, wishes to correspond with a pastor, willing to work for about $600 a year in a growing railroad town of 1,000. Answer with references and state experience.

—The board of church extension has just mailed its 13th annual report containing 48 pages. The report has been mailed to all the preachers. If any one fails to get it, send a card to 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

—T. E. Cramblett will be formally inaugurated as president of Bethany College on December 10. A full and appropriate inaugural program is being prepared. All friends and alumni of old Bethany are cordially invited to be present.

—The annuity fund of the board of church extension continues to grow. Recently Jacob E. Miller, of Buchanan, Mich., sent $1,000 and Wm. H. Everman, of Burlington, Ind., $500. $100 was received last week from Mary Byram, of Pasadena, Cal.

—L. L. Carpenter dedicated the rebuilt and enlarged church at Metz, Ind., Nov. 17. Thirty-six years ago he dedicated the original structure. A small indebtedness of one thousand dollars was easily provided for with a surplus of $200. Brother Smith is pastor.

—The poem "Leah" was written by Eliza Poitevent Nicholson and appeared in the Cosmopolitan of September, 1894. The same author has a poem entitled "Hagar." This information is sent to us by Miner Lee Bates, of Warren, O., and Lillian M. S. Cahill, of Dayton, O.

—The annuity feature of the board of church extension continues to grow. In October the board received $1,000 from Jacob E. Miller, of Buchanan, Mich., and in November $500 from Wm. H. Everman, of Burlington, Ind., and $100 from Mary Byram, of Pasadena, Cal.

—The first annual meeting of the State Historical Society of Missouri will be held in Columbia, Mo., Dec. 5-6. The approaching celebration of the centennial of the Louisiana Purchase has evidently given new impetus to the study of the history of this state.

—C. W. Huffer had a stroke of paralysis on the first night of the meeting which he was beginning at the Central church, Toledo, O. He has regained the use of his left side somewhat, but is still in a critical condition, C. A. Freer informs us. The meeting was closed for the present.

—F. D. Power is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons at the Vermont Christian church, Washington, on female characters of the Old Testament. The list includes Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel, Miriam, Deborah, Ruth, Delilah, Hannah and others.

—The board of church extension is mailing its full annual report of 48 pages to all the preachers this week. This report should be carefully studied. If any one fails to receive it, send a card to 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, and it will be promptly mailed to you.

—F. O. Fannon writes that he is delighted with his new location at Sedalia, Mo., and finds the field a broad one. Thirty members have come into the church at the regular services and the audiences are large. At the Bible school rally the attendance by actual count was 1,086 and J. N. Dalby's primary class had about 150 present.

—W. H. Book writes that they are planning to have a union service once a month at the tabernacle in Martinsburg, W. Va. A men's union prayer-meeting has been organized and is proving a great blessing to the young men. The fruits of the recent tabernacle meeting are still being gathered in the shape of additions.

—The Church of Christ in Cairo, Ill., having completed the repairs on its building, will begin a series of evangelistic services Nov. 30, to continue until the middle of December. H. W. Ceiss, of Hamburg, Ia., will preach. The building will be dedicated Dec. 1, by a union service in which all the pastors in the city will participate.

—In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 14, in "Our Budget," we said the total amount of receipts last year for church extension was $465,846.21, and the gain in receipts was $48,734.38. The total new receipts were $65,846.21, and the gain was $8,734.38. We wish our error were the truth, however. We could then house about 1,000 congregations this year.

—R. H. McGinniss was ordained to the ministry Nov. 22, at Tama, Ia., where he has been pastor of the church for the last ten months. The service was in charge of W. H. Scott, of Marshalltown, vice president of the southeastern district, assisted by Rev. Mr. Hanna, of the M. E. Church and Rev. D. Mc-Masters, of the Baptist Church. Hon. C. H. Mills writes that the service was a beautiful and impressive one and speaks highly of Brother McGinniss as an able and growing young minister. He has been in this country only two years.

—At the North Carolina Christian convention recently held at Kingston, N. C., following an address on education by Dr. D. E. Motley, it was proposed by the representatives of Wilson College to donate $14,000 paid-up stock in the institution and turn the college over to the Disciples of Christ on condition that they raise at once $9,000. The proposition was accepted accordingly and most of the money was raised on the spot. We thus have the plant for a new college at the flourishing town of Wilson, N. C., under the direct control of the state missionary society. The brethren of North Carolina are to be congratulated.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—that acid condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

"It has been a long time since we have been without Hood's Sarsaparilla. My father thinks he could not do without it. He has been troubled with rheumatism since he was a boy, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine he can take that will enable him to take his place in the field." Miss ADA DOTY, Sidney, Iowa.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Remove the cause of rheumatism—no outward application can. Take them!

—H. T. Morrison, pastor at Manzanita, Col., would like to correspond with an experienced preacher who could assist him in a protracted meeting in a large tabernacle in Rocky Ford, Col., a town of about 3,000 inhabitants. There is a flourishing young church there which needs help. The meeting should commence about the middle of the winter.

—A. W. Allen, of Eagleville, Mo., writes expressing his friendship for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and says: "I have been a subscriber to the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST ever since it has been a paper. I am now past 80 years old. I helped to organize the first Christian church in Harrison county, and that was before it was a county, while it was territory, in 1841. I have lived to see thirty Christian churches in the county. I am as old as the state of Missouri. Was born Jan., 1821, have lived in Missouri sixty years, have seen an empire settled and am very active yet." That comes from reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

William Bowler, of Cleveland, died at his home early Friday morning, Nov. 22. He was widely known as a successful business man, a leader in all worthy enterprises and especially as a friend of Hiram College. He had been ill for more than two years, beginning with grippe and ending with pneumonia. He was chairman of the building committee of Hiram College and gave not only money but time and thought to its interests. Bowler Hall on the Hiram campus stands as a memorial to his generosity. The funeral services were conducted at the Euclid Avenue church, of which he was a member, by J. H. Goldner.

—Dr. W. A. Belding, of Troy, N. Y., died Nov. 19. There were few men among us whose service has been longer or more effective than his, who had a wider acquaintance with the Disciples of Christ both of this and preceding generations, or who continued his labors so actively to the end. Dr. Belding was in his eighty-sixth year at the time of his death. His last illness, pneumonia, lasted but a few days. Bro. G. B. Townsend informs us. Only a few weeks ago he preached several sermons at Worcester, Mass., and one Lord's day in Boston. Thousands of our readers, as they read with sorrow this notice of his death, will call to mind the picture of a tall, spare frame, straight as an Indian, bright eye, iron-grey hair and the elastic step of youth. He never grew old. In labors abundant, in the Lord's business ever diligently. His youth and vigor seemed marvelously preserved to enable him to do the work which he did so well. We hope to be able to give our readers later a fuller account of his career.

—We call our readers to witness that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST nowadays is comparatively clear of typographical errors. Still we are not above making mistakes. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, calls our attention to the fact that in his article in the issue of Nov. 14, "lose" appeared as "loose" and "virile city" was metamorphosed into "modest city."

—Former President Gilman, of Johns Hopkins, in a recent address deplored what he called "An era of Carnegie—too much reading," and said:

"Reading is a kind of craze that has got hold of the people. It is a dangerous habit, like a stimulant." His advice was:

"First—Don't read too much.

"Second—Study the art of thinking.

"Third—Use your hands and enlarge your vision by the use of the microscope."

This caution is needed by some, no doubt, but many do not read enough and few think enough.

—M. S. Johnson, of Carthage, Mo., writes: "Among those recently added to the church at Golden City, Mo., are Bro. J. Windbigler and wife, of the M. E. Church. Bro. Windbigler has filled important pulpits in this state viz.: Marcelline, Louisiana, Carterville and Monett. Has always had high standing in M. E. Church. He is a clean, conscientious, educated and gifted man of fine pulpit ability and an excellent singer. He will make a man of power among us. He did not come among us to get a job. He came from convictions of duty and without the promise or prospect of employment in the ministry. He is blessed with a good wife who is fitted in every way to aid him in his work and to make his ministry successful. He should find work among us at once."

—M. F. Harmon, of Terrell, Tex., writes thus in commenting on the promise in our prospectus for 1902 that the contents and style of the paper will be improved and the price reduced: "A better paper for less money! How can that be? It has been a puzzle to me for years (and I am a practical paper man) how you could give a paper half so large and good as the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST for even $1.50. Has paper gone down? Do you pay your printers? Where did you get your rabbit's foot?" Yes, we pay our printers a good deal more promptly—fortunately for them—than many of our subscribers pay us, but it is not the foot of a rabbit but the helping hands of the brethren that enable us to do what we do in the way of furnishing a good paper.

President Aylesworth at Drake.

The chapel hour Friday was an enjoyable season at Drake University. By arrangement of the Des Moines Lecture Course Committee, Pres. Barton W. Aylesworth, of the Agricultural College at Ft. Collins, Col., lectured at the Central Christian church, Thursday evening. Friday morning his heart led him toward the institution for which he gave eight years of his life. As he entered the chapel the students and faculty rose en masse to greet him. Everyone waited expectantly until Chancellor Craig introduced the old friend of the school to the new students. Pres. Aylesworth expressed his joy at being again in Drake's halls, and then in a very beautifully descriptive and humorous manner read to us some of the unwritten history of earlier days. In this informal talk the president betrayed to his audience the fact that with his splendid literary ability he has that richer treasure—a large and warmly sympathetic heart. The chapel session was prolonged for an hour and a half and the students pronounced it the most profitable hour of the year. After chapel a reception was given in the university library for the students to meet the president. From two to four o'clock in the afternoon he was at the home of Dean Shepperd, meeting friends of University Place.

Do You Get Up With a Lame Back?

Do You Have Rheumatism? Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

To Prove what Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney and Bladder Remedy, will do for YOU, all our Readers May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow; Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince anyone—and you may have a sample bottle for the asking.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night; smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh or sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with marked success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take, and if you are already convinced that this great remedy is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

Texas Letter.

During the seven months following March, 1900, ninety-three national banks were organized in Texas, with a capital of $3,362,000. We hardly think any other state can make so good a showing. And this is specially significant when it is remembered that Texas is overwhelmingly Democratic—her majority is "beastly"—and therefore naturally opposed to the national banking system.

The Baptist Ministers' Mutual Benefit Association of Texas has about 700 members. The association is eighteen months old and has had but four deaths. It gives to the families of deceased members $2,000. The assessment is $2.00 per member. A recent report of the treasurer showed all debts paid and a balance of $200. Is not this, wise and businesslike, and should we not imitate these people?

J. L. Haddock, a successful evangelist of Tennessee, has been employed by our state board.

Emanuel Dubbs, our efficient Pan-handle evangelist, on account of his wife's health, has resigned his work.

Our Baptist brethren have just closed their annual convention at Ft. Worth, and it was a great convention. As proof of its greatness, about five years ago it was learned that their educational institutions were in debt $200,000. The convention in San Antonio in 1896 determined to raise the money. B. H. Carroll, the most powerful and popular preacher in the state, resigned his pastorate at Waco and undertook the herculean task. Like the true general that he is, he organized his forces and began the fight, and from the first it has never been suffered to lag. At Ft. Worth he had it all but $25,000. The situation was stated and the appeal made, when more than enough was subscribed at once. Another evidence of greatness was in the fact that more than $50,000 was raised for state work. And still another evidence was in the presence at one of the sessions of 275 orphans from Buckner's Orphan Home near this city. This is a great church, with 200,000 members in Texas, wide-awake and aggressive.

E. W. Darst of Midland, late of Chicago, is in the field as an evangelist. Bro. Darst is one of the ripest and strongest and loveliest characters in our ranks, and we rejoice to see him in this wide and rich field. When such men give themselves to this work, many of the popular objections against "evangelism" will cease to be.

E. W. Brickert and wife are meeting with an enthusiastic success at Houston. The audiences are large and many additions. Sister Brickert is an accomplished singer and reader, and she is being so recognized in the city. Houston is destined to be a great city. In fact it is a great city now. Far enough from the gulf to be free from such overflows as that which destroyed Galveston, yet having water connection with the sea, it is absolutely necessary that she become a most important place. And a strong church here will be a power at a strategic point.

The twenty-eighth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is now in session in Ft. Worth. Every state and almost all the territories are represented, making it one of the most representative bodies of our land. Many women of national fame are present—women who are known, loved and feared for their valiant service in their holy crusade for "God, home and native land." The title of their organization leads many to think that it is entirely devoted to the fight against whisky. Such is not the case. There are forty-four distinct departments directed by experts in these several spheres. For example they war against tobacco and narcotics as well as rum.

"The Christian Lesson Commentary, 1902," is a charming book. This is W. W. Dowling's best, and it is the best of the seventeen books under this title. Any competent teacher with this volume at his elbow can do his work well, and no teacher should think of doing without it. It is from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis. Dallas, Texas. M. M. Davis.

The Investigation of Ministerial Character.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—In your editorial this week on "A Groundless Fear," you mention three ways of ascertaining the reliability of a minister: (1) by letters of introduction; (2) by editorial recommendation; (3) by state board investigation, and prefer the last mentioned.

The difficulties of state board control are:

(1) That their prime object is missions.
(2) That they are, or should be, already overburdened.

(3) That the ministerial question is one so peculiar and sensitive that in many localities the action of the state board in the matter would disgruntle the church whose brilliant preacher was disqualified and whose moral judgment impugned—thus greatly injuring all missionary work in that field.

(4) As you have mentioned, the churches generally will look upon state board control as the clamping on of ecclesiastical fetters.

Allow me to remind you of a fourth and better way, now in use, I believe, in California, Nebraska, Iowa and some other states. This is the establishment of a state ministerial association. It is not a church organization at all, but a purely professional one. Its powers are, of course, advisory only. Its executive committee investigates men, and publishes to the elders of all the state churches lists of eligible men, with the warning, "if you don't find a man's name on this list, inquire of the committee." This plan escapes all the disadvantages of the state board method, adds the personal and professional interest of the ministry in keeping its skirts clean, and possibly, gives more dignity and prestige to any pronouncement on a man's character as a minister.

[This fourth method appears to have good points. It is certainly free from the objections above mentioned. It might seem more appropriate, however, for the churches to co-oper-

AFTER MANY YEARS

Of suffering from kidney disease, Miss Minnie Ryan, of St. Louis, Mo., found a complete cure result from the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It is such cures as this which establish the soundness of Dr. Pierce's theory: "Diseases which originate in the stomach must be cured through the stomach." Every other organ depends on the stomach for its vitality and vigor. For by the stomach and its associated organs of digestion and nutrition the food which is eaten is converted into nutriment, which, in the form of blood, is the sustaining power of the body and each organ of it. When the stomach is diseased the food supply of the body is cut down, the organs are starved, and the weakness of starvation shows itself in lungs, heart, liver, kidneys or some other organ.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, and so cures disease of other organs which have originated through deficient nutrition or impure blood.

"I had been suffering with kidney trouble twenty years," writes Miss Minnie Ryan, of 1537 Louisiana Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., "and I had doctored with a number of the best physicians. Two years ago I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription' and took also several vials of Doctor Pierce's Pellets. I took eight bottles (four of each), and I feel now perfectly cured."

ate to determine the fitness of preachers than for the preachers to unite in recommending themselves. It is, however, strictly analogous to the practice of men in several callings and need not be a serious objection.—EDITOR.]

Twice Told Tales.

No Meat Extracted from them by Some who most Need the Facts.

We have more than twice told the reader of the fact that he or she may perhaps easily discover the cause of the daily ill feeling and the experiment is not difficult to make.

But there are readers who think truths are for some one else and not for themselves.

Some day the oft told fact will flash upon us as applicable when the knowledge comes home that day after day of inconvenience and perhaps of suffering has been endured, the cause not being recognized or believed, although we may have been told of the cause many times over, but never believed it applied to us.

It would startle a person to know how many people suffer because they drug themselves daily with coffee. We repeat it, it is a powerful drug, and so affects the delicate nervous system that disease may appear in any part of the body, all parts being dependent for health on a healthy nervous system. Relief from coffee for 30 days has cured thousands of people who never suspected the cause of their troubles.

The use of Postum Food Coffee is of great benefit to such, as it goes to work directly to rebuild the delicate cell structures from the elements nature selects for the work. Relief from a heavy drug and the taking of proper nourishment is the true and only permanent method.

Write and See.

Don't Let Prejudice Keep you from Getting Well.

No Money is Wanted.

Simply write a postal for the book you need. See what I have to say. You can't know too much about ways to get well.

My way is not less effective because I tell you about it. There are millions of cases which nothing else can cure. How can I reach them save by advertising?

I will send with the book also an order on your druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I will tell him to let you test it for a month at my risk. If you are satisfied, the cost will be $5.50. If it fails, I will pay him myself.

The book will tell you how my Restorative strengthens the inside nerves. It brings back the power that operates the vital organs. My book will prove that no other way can make those organs strong.

No matter what your doubts. Remember that my method is unknown to you, while I spent a lifetime on it. Remember that only the cured need pay. Won't you write a postal to learn what treatment makes such an offer possible?

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 582, Racine, Wis.

Book No. 1 on Dyspepsia,
Book No. 2 on the Heart,
Book No. 3 on the Kidneys,
Book No. 4 for Women,

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

New Jersey Letter.

If the future is as alluring and promising for the work of the Disciples of Christ in other localities as it is in New Jersey buoyant hope and thankful praise must be the general and characteristic tone. This virgin soil discloses something of the spirit which must have attended the proclamation in the days of the pioneers when our message was altogether new. The east was never so ripe for the preaching of New Testament Christianity as now.

This is not theorizing nor general statements of probable conditions. The career of our mission in East Orange is an unanswerable argument that our plea is needed and loses none of its power by lapse of time or change of circumstance. It is but six months since we secured our very modest chapel. A Bible school of one hundred, an active working force of thirty-five, and good audiences at all services speak loudly for the welcome awaiting such proclamation of the gospel as we make.

One resident recently said: "I find I have been a Disciple for many years without knowing it and not knowing how to voice my dissatisfaction with the church I had been working with." Another said with tearful joy: "Your chapel located here is surely God's answer to my prayers for light and guidance into undenominational Christian work." At our evening service on Nov. 17 five confessions and three immersions set the seal of God's approval by increase to our planting and watering of the word of truth. We are preparing for a meeting with W. J. Wright, to begin Dec. 8. If promises do not fail we shall have twelve or fifteen additions before the meeting gets a chance to begin. B. L. Smith came over from New York and preached for us at the evening service Nov. 10.

Will you heed a word of practical advice about the construction of baptisteries? Having performed many different functions connected with the care and construction of meetinghouses, the writer has seen baptisteries fearfully and wonderfully made. This mission chapel has the cheapest, most satisfactory and most easily constructed of any yet observed. A plain wooden box well supported on sides and bottom, providing a pool about 8x3ft. 6 in., is the first requisite. No particular care need be taken to make it water-tight. Line it with ordinary strong ducking, lapping the edges and laying them in white lead, tacked down with round-head tacks driven at close intervals. Lap the edges of the ducking over the top of the tank and tack down. Paint with at least two coats of white lead, allowing each coat to dry well. Finish with a coat of white enamel. If the water used is clear you have as beautiful a pool as can be conceived aside from running water in lake or stream. The baptistery is absolutely impervious, does not present a slippery surface to stand upon, and is as clean and wholesome as an enameled bathtub. We are greatly pleased with ours. You will be if you try it. Metal and cement linings are not to be compared with it, and an unlined pool is an abomination.

New Jersey is hopeful. We confidently believe that active evangelization and building up of the body of Christ will successfully meet or avert all possible crises, denominational or otherwise. The one crisis to be ever feared is a complacent self-satisfaction paralyzing head and heart and hand.

R. P. SHEPHERD.

East Orange, N. J.

From the New Country.

Immediately on closing my work with the church at Stroud, I came to Hobart, the county seat of Kiowa, and one of the new towns laid out by the government. The church extension board had sent sufficient money to our board to purchase lots in each one of the new county seats. Bro. Virtis Williams, corresponding secretary of the Oklahoma board, and Bro. E. M. Barney, of Webb City, Mo., bought the lots here. They were successful in securing a good location one block from the central part of town. Under the direction of Bro. Williams, the people here put up a board tabernacle to serve them through the winter. A church of 21 members was partially organized, but no one has been with them permanently as pastor. The Oklahoma board thought best that I should come on the ground and devote some of my time to the work until it was given permanency.

Perhaps a little of my experience here might be interesting to your readers. Everything is very new, and we have to rough it. When I came to town, the first night I slept in the office of a lumber and coal company where they were renting beds at 50 cents a night. A bed could not be gotten any cheaper anywhere, and as I could not afford $3.50 a week just for a bed, and as much more for board, I determined to curtail expenses. I secured a cot. The ladies supplied some bed clothes, and I made my bed in the little board tabernacle. It was warm, and I got along nicely, until one night a big rain storm came up, and I woke up to find the water pouring in on me, and had to pick up my bed and walk. A few nights after a "norther" struck us, and I came near freezing. These are just some of the experiences of frontier work.

I am glad in this report to say that our work is moving forward. We are working on our little building and will soon have the cold and rain shut out. We had eight persons to unite with us yesterday, increasing Bright's Disease and Diabetes Cured.

Harvard University Acting as Judges.

Irvine K. Mott, M. D., of Cincinnati, O., demonstrated before the editorial board of the Evening Post, one of the leading daily papers of Cincinnati, the power of his remedy to cure the worst forms of kidney diseases. Later a public test was instituted under the auspices of the Post, and five cases of Bright's Disease and Diabetes were selected by them and placed under DR. MOTT'S care. In three months' time all were pronounced cured. Harvard University having been chosen by the board to make examination of the cases before and after the treatment.

Any one desiring to read the details of this public test can obtain copies of the papers by writing to Dr. Mott for them.

This public demonstration gave Dr. Mott an international reputation that has brought him into correspondence with people all over the world and several noted Europeans are numbered among those who have taken his treatment and been cured.

The Doctor will correspond with those who are suffering with Bright's Disease, Diabetes or any kidney trouble, either in the first, intermediate or last stages, and will be pleased to give his expert opinion free to those who will send him a description of their symptoms. An essay which the doctor has prepared about kidney troubles and describing his new method of treatment will also be mailed by him. Correspondence for this purpose should be addressed to IRVINE K. MOTT, M. D., 75 Mitchell Building, Cincinnati, O.

our organization to 30. We have enough members in the community to have an organization of 40 or 50. Conditions are changing fast, and a man will soon be able to live as pleasantly here as anywhere. We hope to have a good building in the spring, and there is every prospect for a fine work in Hobart. We want to locate a man here and at Anadarko by the first of the year. Our work here is mission work, pure and simple, and we need the prayers and assistance of God's people in carrying on this frontier work.

An Old Church.

In 1877 H. F. Kett & Co., Cor. 5th Ave. and Washington street, Chicago, put out the "History of Warren County, Ill." And on p. 175, in giving a history of Cameron under the head of "The Christian Church" says:

"This is the oldest congregation of this denomination. It was organized in 1831. Their earliest meetings were held in private houses and in the school house. At this time they were at Coldbrook.

"Some of their elders were John G. Halley, Elijah Davidson and Wm. Whitman. Levi Hatchett, John E. Murphy and L. S. Wallace were some of the ministers. About 1851 or '52 elder R. R. Haley and deacon John E. Murphy, with some thirty members, went to Monmouth, Oregon, where they formed the nucleus of a large and flourishing congregation."

Inasmuch as I am pastor of this church I am very anxious to know if the above is true. If so it may be an item of history in "History of the Churches."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

RESTORES EYESIGHT

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which

Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether

Chronic or Acute, Without

Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision. J. N. Horne, Waycross, Ga., writes: "My eyes have been wonderfully benefited by Actina." W. R. Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina saved me from going blind." R. J. Reid, St. Augustine, Fla., writes: "Actina removed a cataract from my son's eye." Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I should have been blind had I not used Actina." A party of prominent citizens have organized in a company known as the New York & London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. They have bought all American and European rights for this wonderful invention. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York & London Electric Association, Dept 203, 929 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and its Disease in General, and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

The Sunday-school Lessons for 1902.

The Sunday-schools will devote attention during the first six months of the coming year to the Acts of Apostles. This course of lessons will be very profitable.

1. The law was given by Moses but the grace and the truth come by Jesus Christ. The grace of God that brings salvation to all men was first proclaimed on the first Pentecost after Christ's death and resurrection. The Acts of Apostles tells about this grace.

2. The Holy Spirit came to the apostles on the first Pentecost after Christ's crucifixion and commenced his work of convicting the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment. The Acts of Apostles tells what the Spirit through the apostles has said to the world.

3. Repentance and the remission of sins were preached in the name of Christ among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. Acts of Apostles describes this work.

4. The conditions in order to the remission of sins under the covenant of grace are stated in Acts of Apostles. If one wants to know what to do in order to be justified from all things from which he can not be justified by the law of Moses, he should study Acts of Apostles.

5. How the Lord added souls to the church is stated in Acts of Apostles.

Much more can be said to show the great value of the book known as Acts of Apostles. Those who enter the Sunday-school and seek the best of helps such as those can supply who have given years of study to the gospel and its proclamation by the apostles, should secure "The Lesson Commentary" for 1902, by W. W. Dowling. This book is not surpassed by any other Lesson Commentary. The lessons for the first six months of the coming year are of transcendent value. Get this Commentary so as to be prepared for a clear insight into these lessons. W. O. MOORE.

Write to Me.

I know that there are many young brethren who desire to preach the gospel, and to qualify themselves for the work by a course of study in the College of the Bible, but are short of means. I know this because I have received letters from many such, but I have not preserved their letters, and I have lost their names. I solicit further correspondence with all of these, and with all others having the same desire who may see this request or hear of it. Write me at once, stating your case fully, and see if I cannot in some way be of service to you.

A New Treatment for Deafness and Catarrh.

Bradford McGregor, of Cincinnati, O., a well-known demonstrator of applied sciences, asserts as a fact that catarrh and deafness can be cured, this assertion following his personal experience. Having suffered for years with catarrh, which resulted in very poor health and almost total deafness, his condition became such that specialists refused longer to treat him, saying his case was hopeless. Thus thrown upon his own resources, after using all known applications, he finally devised a new method of treatment based upon a principle entirely different from anything he had ever used or heard of, and cured himself with it. His hearing is perfect now, health good and no catarrh. The success of this remarkable treatment in the many tests made upon those similarly afflicted has been phenomenal, and to further extend its usefulness and to prove that it will cure, a free trial and full explanations will be sent by Mr. McGregor to any who suffer and will address him at 420 Lincoln Inn court, Cincinnati, O., and send twenty cents to pay for registering and mailing.

A Musical Preacher Speaks Favorably of The Praise Hymnal

"I have examined every piece of music in THE PRAISE HYMNAL and I regard it the best book for general use I have ever seen for the following reasons:

1. "For the regular worship it has everything desired.
2. "If you want revival songs you do not have to get another book.
3. "When prayer-meeting hour comes appropriate songs are abundant.
4. "If you have a national service, THE PRAISE HYMNAL contains what you want.
5. "If you desire a jubilee day, in this book are the songs.
6. "If a rally day, no other book is needed.
7. "Songs for Christian Endeavor are in good supply.
8. "If you have a funeral you do not have to search three or four books to get appropriate songs.

"Those who buy THE PRAISE HYMNAL, will not regret it.

Lynn, Ind.

J. M. LAND."

AS TO PRICES.—The contents of THE PRAISE HYMNAL are of a permanent quality. It is false economy to ask for cheap binding. We make a cloth bound book with leather back that will last ten years with any sort of care. The price is as low as can be made on its superior material and workmanship, $75.00 per 100 copies. Specimen copies sent on approval.

The Mayfield Sanitarium, located at 912 north Taylor Ave., St. Louis, has made a splendid record during the few years of its existence. It is under the patronage of the Baptist Church and is permeated by the best of religious influence. Religious services are held each Sunday afternoon in the chapel and as many as 25 conversions have occurred in these meetings within a year's time.

The best of accommodations are provided for all patients, in addition to the skillful treatment given by Dr. W. H. Mayfield, surgeon in chief, and those on the medical staff with him. Hundreds of the best people in the country are yearly finding this sanitarium a veritable boon for their many and varied ailments.

A feature which commends the institution to the public is that no charge is made for professional services to a minister of the gospel or members of his family. Indeed, beyond this, any church member unable to pay for professional service is given treatment in instances where board is paid by those interested.

Ladies With Superfluous Hair

On face, neck, arms, etc., will find it to their advantage to write for free booklet to the Dermatino Co., 1805 Market street, Room 65, St. Louis, Mo. That company makes the only remedy which permanently removes unsightly hair so that it will never grow again. The remedy is always effective and is absolutely harmless. Its action is marvelous and failure is impossible. It is unlike other preparations which give but temporary relief and do not kill the root of the hair. It will pay you to send for free booklet if afflicted with superfluous hair.

Alabama Convention.

We are now in convention at Greenville. This annual meeting is one of the best ever held—in attendance, spiritually, financially, etc. Co-operative work is spreading and the usual results are following. A. McLean has just delivered one of his clean cut, comprehensive addresses. His masterly array of facts and figures cannot fail to engender missionary enthusiasm and liberality. Visits of such souls as he in these parts are like the proverbial angel's visits and we appreciate them accordingly. Our state board has followed the plan of helping weak churches generally this year instead of aiding one or two to a big meeting and it has worked quite satisfactorily. CLARIS YEUELL.

The Channels of Life: Habit.

well unless a stitch is dropped or a turn is reached. The tendency is to reduce to order and system all the frequent and routine acts, and thus to leave the mind free for new and less familiar problems. How pitiable a sight it is to see an individual of mature years uncertain each morning what to do with the day and unable to determine at meals what to eat, or in company what to say, or in shopping what to buy. Fortunately most people are driven by necessity to some kind of system and organized living which relieves them of the worry and discontent which is apt to be the lot of those who can, if they wish, spend all of their time changing gowns or tying cravats.

How subject everyone is to his "second nature" may be realized by the attempt to break off a single habit, like smoking, chewing gum, using slang, wearing a certain kind of collar or hat. Professor James calls habit "the enormous fly-wheel of society." "It alone," he says, "is what keeps us all within the bounds of ordinance and saves the children of fortune from the envious uprisings of the poor. It keeps the fisherman and the deck-hand at sea through the winter; it holds the miner in his darkness, and nails the countryman to his log-cabin and his lonely farm through all the months of snow. It dooms us all to fight out the battle of life upon the lines of our nurture or our early choice, and to make the best of a pursuit that disagrees, because there is no other for which we are fitted, and it is too late to begin again."

This series of articles by Dr. Ames was begun in the issue of Oct. 31, and the articles will appear at intervals of two weeks. The titles are as follows:
The Fountains of Life: Instincts.
The Floodtide of Life: Adolescence.
The Channels of Life: Habit.
The Inner Light of Life: Imagination.
The Workman of Life: Will.
The Warmth of Life: Emotion.

An Abridged Bible.

By Hiram Van Kirk.

I have just received my American Revised Bible. I find the printing, references, maps, etc., almost all that can be desired. I would have had the translation a little more thoroughgoing. There is no reason for rendering the Hebrew proper name of God as Jehovah, when Yahveh or Yahweh is more like the original, and also stronger in many passages. It is only another continuance of the Jewish superstition of the sacred name. But as a whole the English of this work leaves no excuse for a further extension of the twentieth century Bible or any other of the so-called modern versions.
But why should some company not publish an abridgment, or, better yet, a series of abridgments, of the Bible? Is it not true that the average Sunday-school pupil is lost in the mass of material? In sitting down to read the Bible he soon strikes something which is not interesting, or which he cannot understand. The result is, he ceases for the time being. After a few attempts he gives up in despair.
It is my conviction that our English Bible is the greatest classic in our literature. What it needs for its dissemination is not comment, but editing. Who reads Shakespeare to-day in the massive Avon edition? Is it not the Hudson, the Rolfe, the Temple Shakespeare rather than that pervading our homes? Just so we should have an edition of the Bible for the pupils of the primary grade, of the grammar school, of the high school, of the college. Make a book of convenient size. Make the printing the best. Place as the core of it the stories of the Bible. Preserve the present system of references. Illustrate it with modern devices. The pupil can be made to love, to learn, to live by this Bible.

This is one of the next things to be done in Christian education. For this work the best intelligence of modern scholarship is required.

Greer, Nov. 18.—Closed at Moscow on Nov. 13, with 26 added, 11 baptisms. Bro. Wittkampfer, the faithful pastor, has done a splendid work there. Our next meeting will be Nez Perce, at which place we hope to establish a church before we close.—L. F. STEPHENS AND WIFE, evangelists.

ILLINOIS.

Augusta, Nov. 20.—Our meeting closed on Nov. 17 with five added by confession and 11 by letter and statement, 16 in all. Bro. White, of Galesburg, was with us nearly three weeks and did some excellent preaching. The church is much revived and all departments of work are prospering. We soon enter upon our fourth year.—A. L. FERGUSON.

Carlinsville.—The church here is in a meeting with W. H. Harding, district evangelist. The pastor, J. Seymour Smith, preached last Sunday at the West End church, St. Louis, where G. L. Snively is at present supplying.

Centralia.—The three weeks' meeting held by Bro. Stotler, the pastor, assisted by D. C. Brown, singer, closed Nov. 17 with 76 additions, 55 by primary obedience, 13 by letter and commendation, eight from the denominations. Only seven of the number came from the Sunday school. Monday evening after the reception was given to Bro. Stotler, at which time seven confessed Christ and 12 were baptized.—S. E. LOOMIS, clerk

Green Pond, Nov. 18.—Two baptisms last Lord's day.—W. H. KERN.

Macomb, Nov. 23.—Three added last Sunday night—one from Baptists and two by confession. Also two from the Baptists at prayer-meeting Wednesday night.—GEO. W. BUCKNER.

Shelbyville, Nov. 21.—Baptized three young ladies last Thursday evening at prayer-meeting; five since last report. Have organized a large midweek Bible class.—WM. DRUMMET.

INDIANA.

Bedford, Nov. 20.—I closed a two weeks' meeting at Orleans, a town 15 miles on the Monon railroad from Bedford, with 60 additions, mostly by baptism. There were two baptisms here last week.—JAMES SMALL.

Fort Wayne, Nov. 18.—Five more additions

CONSUMPTION

Right food—right medicine—right time—these three things are of the utmost importance to the consumptive. Right food and right medicine—these are contained in Scott's Emulsion of pure cod-liver oil. Right time is at first sign of disease. Right time is now.

Scott's Emulsion always helps, often cures. Ordinary food helps feed. Fresh air helps cure. Scott's Emulsion does both. Begin early.

We'll send you a little to try, if you like.

to the West Jefferson street church yesterday.—E. W. ALLEN.

Franklin, Nov. 9.—In a 11 days' meeting with the Freedom church 12 were added, 2 reclaimed, 2 from the Baptists, 2 by letter, 1 by commendation and 6 made the good confession; 1 added on a previous visit, 13 in all. O. E. Palmer, of Spencer, was with us three nights and gave us good help in song, prayer and preaching.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

Logansport, Nov. 20.—We are in the third week of our meeting, 24 added to date. 400 turned away last Sunday night for lack of room.—A. M. HOOTMAN.

IOWA.

Albia, Nov. 19.—One more confession Sunday night.—R. H. INGRAM.

Clarksville, Nov. 18.—Meeting one week old. 16 additions to date; more to follow.—A. R. ADAMS.

Corning, Nov. 20.—Our meeting of three weeks, two of which we were assisted by Prof. F. H. Sweetman and wife as singers, closed last night. We had 14 added by confession and baptism. We count it one of the best meetings we have held for a long time. Corning is doing good work for the Master.—I. H. FULLER.

Oskaloosa, Nov. 18.—Meeting still in progress with increasing interest and attendance. Over 40 added to date.—A. HULL.

Pleasantville, Nov. 20.—Have closed my work here and accepted the charge at Ames, Ia. Pleasantville is a good field and needs a good man immediately. Address A. J. Reins regarding the same. Three added to the church at Ames the last two Lord's days. We hope to do much good as pastor and people.—FORREST D. FERRALL.

Sewal.—Just closed a meeting of three weeks with five additions, four by confession and baptism, the first baptisms or additions they have had for three years. Will commence meeting at Highland church (Breckenridge, Mo., P. O.), Nov. 20.—O. L. SUMNER, pastor; FRANK A. WILKERSON, singer; GERTRUDE AMMONS, organist.

KANSAS.

Big Sandy.—We recently closed a meeting at Big Sandy, in Woodson county, Kan., with 27 additions; 21 of them were by confession.—GILBERT PARK.

Carneiro, Nov. 17.—State Evangelist Bro. G. C. Ardrey held a four weeks' meeting here, with unexpected success. We had 29 additions, nearly all of whom were good, honest, influential young men and women, 23 by baptism and six by statement; three from the Methodists and four from the Catholics. Bro. Ardrey leaves all in an excellent condition. He started the work of building a house 30x50 which will soon be a reality.—W. C. SHERIDAN.

Carneiro, Nov. 20.—I have just closed a five weeks' meeting, with 29 additions, 23 by confession and baptism and six by statement. Organized a C. E. society with 25 members. At the close of the meeting a building committee was chosen and $700 pledged and promised to build a house. The rest that will be needed will be raised at once and the work will be pushed to completion as fast as possible.—G. C. ARDREY.

Leavenworth, Nov. 19.—One addition for Nov. 10, and seven for Nov. 17.—S. W. NAY, pastor.

Leavenworth, Nov. 21.—One addition at prayer-meeting last evening.—S. W. NAY, pastor.

Morrowville, Nov. 21.—Was in a meeting here with 31 added when had to leave. After a week came back for series of lectures on the Bible and these developed into a second revival, making a total of 43 to date.—H. A. LEMON, Nebraska state evangelist.

Windom.—Meeting closed Nov. 20. Three and a half weeks, with 13 additions; six confessions, four by statement. Church greatly strengthened: C. J. Saunders, of McPherson, Hidden, Nov. 19.—I recently closed a meeting at Strasburg, Mo., resulting in 10 additions. I am now assisting Bro. Chas. West at a meeting at Coleman with one added to date. Bro. West recently held a meeting at Valley City, Mo., in which there were 45 additions.—J. W. BOULTON.

Pattonsburg, Nov. 19.—Closed a 13 days' meeting a few days ago at Sumner, Mo., which resulted in five additions. Organized Christian Endeavor Society of 16 members at Lord's day at Pleasant Grove, Caldwell county.—ROBERT ADAMS.

Princeton, Nov. 22.—We had six additions the last Sunday and two Monday at the later, also three additions Sunday before last, making 11 since last report. In our meeting in the country, a little over one week old, 17 additions. I go to Allerton, Ia., to begin a meeting Dec. 1st.—J. E. DAVIS.

Ridgeway, Nov. 18.—Just closed a meeting at Pattonsburg, Daviess Co., with 13 additions. We also repaired the church building by putting on a new roof, three coats of white paint, plastering the interior and putting on new paper; we also elected an entire board of officers. Pattonsburg church has taken on new life such as it has not possessed in years. Elder F. J. Stinson, of Bethany, Mo., with me the last few days and there were three more added while he was there. Bro. Stinson is one of our best preachers and true to the gospel of Christ.—ROLLA G. SEARS.

Shelbina, Nov. 22.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Lakmao Christian church with 11 additions, 8 baptisms; also a 15 nights' meeting at Fairview with 18 additions, 12 baptisms; 3 came from the Baptists and 3 from the Methodists, South. Most of these additions were heads of families. Two added at regular service at Shelbina. Begin at Shelbyville Monday night, Nov. 25.—J. H. WOOD. Springfield, Nov. 18.—Ten additions in the last month, 15 since last report. Some good meetings are being held in the Springfield district this fall. We will have a meeting after the holidays, the Lord willing.—D. W. MOORE. Springfield, Nov. 21.—W. E. Harlow, evangelist and Miss Murphy, singer, have been with us, First church, in a meeting for six weeks. 114 were added. 72 baptisms, 42 by statement. Of those added by statement 13 were from sectarian churches. This city was stirred as it has seldom been stirred.—E. V. BOWERS.

St. Louis.—Thirty-nine additions up to date at our meeting at the Fourth church.—E. T. McFARLANE.

OHIO.

Nelsonville, Nov. 18.—Our meeting with Bro. D. H. Patterson in Auburn, N. Y., began on Oct. 13 and closed on Nov. 7. The meeting was said to have been one of the best in the history of the church. In a letter from the pastor yesterday, he says: "I saw the Y. M. C. A. secretary to-day. He said, as far as I have heard the people were delighted with our brother's preaching. Well, I am not ashamed of the name." We are not related, only college acquaintances. Those who are acquainted with the conservatism of the east will not be surprised when I say that there were only 16 confessions. The meeting in the state prison was one of the greatest in its history. I learned to love the pastor and his people. We are having immense crowds and fine interest here; last night scores were turned away. We expect a great meeting.—H. C. PATTERSON.

NEBRASKA.

Fairfield, Nov. 18.—Bros. D. H. Bays and Frank McVey are now here leading us in a very happy meeting.—L. A. HUSSENG, minister.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Chandler, Nov. 18.—During the year ending Oct. 31, we had from all sources 81 additions in this field, over half of them by baptism; 25 of them were baptized in the Chandler church at one time without the aid of an evangelist. Have preached for our new church at Stroud two Sundays this month; three added. One confession at Valley View this month. Chandler now wants a pastor for whole time. This is a fine town, the place for some well equipped, self-sacrificing young man. Address W. B. Frank, chairman of board.—A. M. HARRAL.

Oklahoma City, Nov. 18.—I recently closed a meeting in the Baptist church at Kremlin, Okla., with 24 baptisms and a number from the M. E.'s. We organized with 50 members, purchased two desirable corner lots. Have stoned on the ground for the foundation and $400 raised for the building. A Young People's Society and a Ladies' Aid Society also organized and at work. Bro. J. H. Decker was secured to minister half time to them. He expects to again enter the general field. He preached three grand sermons during the meeting while I was called away. This congregation starts with a good future before them. I have preached the past week at a Presbyterian church five miles north of Harvale, O. T. One restored.—OTHA WILKISON. Oklahoma City, Nov. 18.—Our meeting at West Point was a success; 18 nights and 34 accessions as follows: 25 confessions, 2 from the Baptists and 7 by letter. I baptized one Catholic. I began a revival yesterday at Medford, O. T., with five accessions the first day. Our motto is: "Oklahoma for Christ."—J. A. TABOR, evangelist.

TEXAS.

Big Springs, Nov. 23.—Our meeting begins here Nov. 30. Bro. E. W. Darst, of Chicago, will do the preaching. Some preliminary work is being done by the writer.—JAS. S. HELM, singing evangelist.

VIRGINIA.

Fredericksburg, Nov. 23.—First nine or ten days of revival here puzzled us to know whether we could get a meeting here. Several attempts had been made but nothing came of them. The state board of Virginia had for several months been asking concerning this church, "To be, or not to be." But it is "To be." During last nine days, 31 have responded, all adults but three, and nearly all by baptism. We turn large numbers away every night now and hardly have standing room to preach. Chestnutt is the man for this charge.—HERBERT YEUELL, evangelist.

Martinsville.—Saturday night I closed a meeting of six nights at Mt. Olivet where C. E. Elmore conducted a meeting last year with great success, which resulted in the church doors being closed against us. There were 19 confessions and one added otherwise in this last meeting. Three of those who confessed were not baptized. They are getting ready to build a tabernacle at that point. At present we occupy a school house. C. E. Elmore preaches one-half time at Chat-ham, the other half he gives to evangelistic work and is having great success.—W. H. BOOK.

A Suggestion.

I cannot tell why there should come to me
A thought of some one miles and years away,

In swift insistence on the memory,
Unless there be a need that I should pray.

He goes his way, I miss; we seldom meet
To talk of plans or changes, day by day,
Of pain or pleasure, triumph or defeat,
Or special reasons why 'tis time to pray.

We are too busy even to spare thought
For days together of some friends away;
Perhaps God does it for us, and we ought
To read his signal as a call to pray.

Perhaps, just then, my friend has fiercer fight,
A more appalling weakness, a decay
Of courage, darkness, some lost sense of right—
And so, in case he needs my prayer, I pray.

Dear, do the same for me! If I intrude
Unasked upon you, on some crowded day,
Give me a moment's prayer, as interlude;
Be very sure I need it, therefore pray.

"Jerry's Thanksgiving."

By Hazel Lesueur-Pigg.

It was just one week before Thanksgiving. The odor of plum pudding, spice cake and mince pie came out in such appetizing puffs to twelve-year-old Jerry, that it caused him to cease sawing wood at frequent intervals and sniff the fragrant air.

"Geminny Christmas," he ejaculated, "I tell you aunt Phroso is fixing to have er feast f'r them church people. My, but I don't know how I'm going to sleep nights with all them goodies stored in th' hall closet an' it so near my room an' no lock either. Gee! but wouldn't a burgl'r have er snap? Aunt Phroso is jes' awful hard o' hear'n' an' uncle Rufus sleeps so soun' he couldn't hear th' battle o' Mer-nilla if 'twas right under his bed."

He laughed mischievously and the merry twinkle in his dark blue eyes betrayed some deeply hidden plot.

He jingled the pennies in his well worn trouser pocket and then proceeded to count them, "Five, ten, fifteen, twenty," he exclaimed proudly. "Yes, I have 'nough to take me to town f'r th' show day after Thanksgiv'n. Whew! I'll need someth'n' to cheer me up er bit after so much pray'n' and sing'n'."

"Jer-re-mi-ah, come here this instant!" aunt Phroso called loudly from the kitchen door. "Go down to the coop, quick! and give the gobbler and turkey hen an extra measure of corn. I'd rather go myself, but I can't leave the fruit cake. It's browning so nicely. Now run along. When you come back I'll let you eat the cream cake batter I had left, I just couldn't crowd it all in the pan."

Aunt Phroso returned for a peep in the oven. Her motherly face was flushed, partly from the heat of the big cook range and partly with excitement from the success of her work.

"I want those turkeys to be fat," she said firmly. "Phroso Patton is not the woman to invite the Rev. Cloon and his family of twelve without giving them the best in the market."

At last everything was ready for the eventful day. The turkeys were dressed eady for the oven on the morrow. The big table had been lengthened and set with a floral centerpiece of white and yellow cyrsanthemums. Aunt Phroso crept into bed tired but happy and fell asleep, little dreaming the coming day would bring forth startling revelations. The good woman arose early, even before St. Mark, the old Plymouth rock rooster, had any intention of crowing. A few minutes later there was a roaring fire in the range and the turkeys were put to roast with their plump sides covered with a savory dressing of sage and celery.

She went to the foot of the stairs and called Rufus to come and put fresh logs in the huge fireplace, when she was horrified by a small, ghostly figure at the top, uttering agonizing shrieks of pain. "Oh! I'm so sick. Oh dear! I must be poisoned. Oh! Oh!"

Aunt Phroso caught Jerry in her arms and hurried him back to bed, while she dispatched uncle Rufus to the kitchen for Jamaica ginger and the hired man post haste for Doctor Ware.

The good old doctor arrived with his usual genial smile and cheery voice. "Well, well, young man," said he, "I don't see why you couldn't have postponed this illness until a more appropriate time."

He was answered by a humble little voice tremulous with tears, "Oh, Doctor Ware, I don't know how to tell you but—I have been so wicked—so mean—a—a—glutt'n. Yes, that's the word. Do you know I—I—"

He was interrupted by aunt Phroso rushing into the room, her eyes glistening with unshed tears. "Oh, Jerry, I know it all now. I've just come from the store room closet. How could you do it?" A sight of Jerry's tear-stained face, emphasized by frequent spasms of pain, and Phroso's heart relented. She took him in her arms and their tears mingled freely. She was the first to speak. "Now don't cry any more, Jerry. I can slice the cake instead of leaving them whole and no one need know they have been sampled by greedy little boy. I can fix the pudding by putting in an extra handful of plums and garnishing with leaves. Your punishment comes in having to lie in bed for several days, at least. You will miss our lovely dinner and the magic lantern show, too."

Jerry began sobbing loudly: "Oh, you dear aunt Phroso, I'll never be so mean again. Everyth'n' looked so nice an' only meant to take er little, but the first bite was so good I took a wee bit more an'—"

"Yes, my child," interposed aunt Phroso, "you see the first wrong step leads to another and another, until one's pride is gone and even a great crime appears of no consequence. It is the little wrongs that cause the mischief, they multiply into mountains of sin before one realizes it. Now, let this be a lesson of profit, Jerry."

She kissed the penitent boy tenderly wrapped him snugly in a warm homespun blanket and descended to the kitchen.

"Rufus," said she, "kindness is the only way to rule Jeremiah. He is as meek as a lamb and feels his disgrace keenly.”

“You know best, Phroso,” he replied gruffly, “but I don’t believe I’ll ever get used to that boy’s pranks.”

Jerry was awakened from a comfortable doze by snatches of conversation and the clatter of dishes below stairs, which meant the feast had begun. He turned uneasily in his bed and sighed heavily: “I don’t feel like I ever want ’nother thing to eat, but it worries me er sight ’bout the preacher’s boys’ gett’n’ them big juicy drumsticks I’d counted on hav’n’ myself.”

Penny-in-slot Wisdom.

“A year or two ago,” runs a conversation reported in Tit Bits, “I spent a few weeks at some watering places. One day I saw a machine which bore the inscription, ‘Drop a penny in the slot, and learn how to make your trousers last.’

“As I didn’t have a great deal of money, I thought an investment of a penny, to show me how to save the purchase of a pair of trousers, would be small capital put to good use; so I dropped the required coin in, and a card appeared. What do you suppose it recommended as the way to make your trousers last?”

“Don’t wear ’em, I suppose.”

“No.”

“What did it say?”

“Make your coat and waistcoat first.”

Thanksgiving.

Men are prone to thank God for those prosperities of vine and meadow and shop and ship which make life easy and comfortable; but they are rarely grateful for those divine happenings which make life difficult and great.

Times and seasons for special thanksgiving are wise and necessary; for men need to be reminded of what they have received, and they need to have provision made for the special expression of their gratitude; but the grateful man does not depend on days and festivals for his thought of God’s goodness and care for him; these thoughts are always for him; and the song of thanksgiving is always in his heart.

Grace before meat is not an empty repetition of words; it is the phrase that forms on the lips out of the fullness of the heart. There are days so beautiful in their harmony of season, temperature, and light that when they dawn and we breathe the air of the radiant morning we say instinctively, “It is good to live.” To be a part of the moving order of the world in such a day seems to be a sufficient reason for existence; we do not care to go behind the fact of life. To one who sees the spiritual order of the world and recognizes the sublime chances of spiritual fortune which it offers, there is no need of special causes of gratitude; such a one thanks God daily that he lives. About him is the glory of the world which God’s stars light and God’s sun warms into fertility; around him are his brother men, needing his care, calling for his love, appealing for his service: let him stand where he will, there is a chance to be and to do, to live in the depths of the soul and to pour out the soul like a river for the refreshment of the world; around him also are ways without number of bearing the crosses of love and making its sacrifices; above him are the shining ones who, out of weakness such as his and in troubles and adversities like his own, have walked the way of life with steadfast fidelity and made that way luminous; before him, like a vast, half-seen avenue of some great city at night, stretches the path which glows more and more to the perfect day.

A man is specially and divinely fortunate, not when his conditions are easy, but when they evoke the very best that is in him; when they provoke him to nobleness and sting him into strength; when they clear his vision; kindle his enthusiasm, and inspire his will.

The best moments in a man’s life are often the hardest and the most perilous; but he thinks no more of personal discomfort and exposure than a thousand other brave men have thought of these things when the hour of destiny had struck. When the bugle rings across the field, the deadly line of fire that must be crossed is forgotten in the response to the duty which beckons from the heights above. Happy are they to whom life brings, not ease and physical comfort, but great chances of heroism, sacrifice and service! The great ages have never been comfortable ages; they have demanded too much and given too much. The comfortable ages are those which neither urge a man to leave his fireside nor offer him great rewards if he does so; the great ages are those which will not let a man rest for the multitude of choices of works and perils they offer him. In easy, comfortable, money-making times men grow callous to suffering, dull of insight, sluggish of soul; in stirring, growing, stimulating times they draw in great breaths of mountain air, they are afield with the sun, consumed with eagerness to lavish the gift of life in one great outpouring of energy. One who knows what to be grateful for would thank God for Drake’s chance to die, sword in hand, facing his foes half a world from home; for Sidney’s opportunity to pass on the cup of water to one whose thirst had less to assuage it; for Livingstone’s noble home-coming, borne in sorrow and silence out of the heart of the dark continent on the shoulders of men who could not measure his greatness, but who revered his spirit.

For all sweet and pleasant passages in the great story of life men may well thank God; for leisure and ease and health and friends may God make us truly and humbly grateful; but our chief song of thanksgiving must be always for our kinship with him, with all that such divinity of greatness brings of peril, hardship, toil and sacrifice.—Hamilton W. Mabie: “The Life of the Spirit.”

“You are an ungrateful child! If it hadn’t been for you I could have gone to the mothers’ congress.”

“If it hadn’t been for me you couldn’t have gone, because you wouldn’t have been a mother.”

The porter at an Arkansas railroad eating house began to ring a large gong when the train stopped. A gong is worse than a church bell to set a dog howling, and this gong was working with telling effect on a lean, lank hound standing on the platform. The porter stopped long enough to say, “What you howling for, dawg? You don’t have to eat here.”

They Had to Resign.

When Gen. O. O. Howard was in command of the army of the Tennessee, says Current Anecdotes, he got everybody converted by his preaching and influence. That is, all except the mule drivers. They hung out and he didn’t seem to be able to go deep enough for them. But one day a delegation of drivers came to his tent, and when the orderly admitted them the spokesman said: “Well, general, we have decided to make safe on this gospel offer you have been makin’. We want to be Christians; we don’t want to stand out against the whole army.” General Howard was delighted and gave them a few words of advice, and was ushering them out, when the spokesman suddenly remembered something. “I say, general, I most forgot; who you going to get to drive the mules?”

At the Table.

Don't bring worries to the table,
 Don't bring anger, hate or scowls;
 Banish everything unpleasant,
 Talk and eat with smiling jaws.
 It will aid your own digestion,
 If you wear a smiling face;
 It will jolly up the others,
 If you only set the pace.
 Knowing something funny, tell it;
 Something sad; forget to knell it;
 Something hateful, quick dispel it
 At the table.

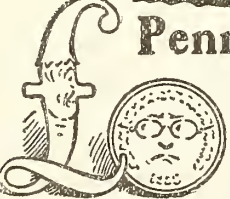

Cares domestic, business troubles,
 Ills of body, soul or brain,
 Unkind thoughts and nagging tempers,
 Speech that causes others pain,
 Public woes and grim disasters,
 Crimes and wrongs and right's defeat,
 Let them all go to the wind
 When you sit down to eat.
 Knowing something funny, tell it;
 Something sad, forget to knell it;
 Something hateful, quick dispel it
 At the table.

You may breathe a pious blessing
 Over viands rich and good;
 But a blessing with long faces
 Won't assimilate your food;
 While a meal of bread and herring,
 With a glass of water clear,
 Is a feast if it's accompanied
 With a blessing of good cheer.
 Knowing something funny, tell it;
 Something sad, forget to knell it;
 Something hateful, quick dispel it
 At the table.

—What To Eat

One day a minister's little son was playing with some boys who had a cart—and they wanted a dog to draw it. "Papa says we must pray for what we want," said the minister's son; so he knelt down and said, "O Lord, send us a dog to draw our cart." Very shortly after a big dog came that frightened them and they began to cry. A second time the boy knelt, but this time he prayed, "O Lord, we don't want a bull dog!"

Sir Thomas Lipton, who is even a better merchant than a yachtsman, gives this advice to young men: "Be punctual. Beware of corkscrews. Be civil. Treat rich and poor alike." He says that "corkscrews have sunk more people than cork jackets ever saved, and that a poor man's twenty shillings is as welcome as a rich man's pound. Be as respectful to a workman's wife with a market-basket on her arm as to the lady in her carriage."

A Pleasure Book.

A lovely old lady, whose serene countenance was unmarred by lines of care, was engaged in conversation with a woman given to fretfulness, says a writer in Forward. During the talk, the latter inquired the cause for her companion's peace of mind and the secret of her content.

"My dear," said the old woman, "I keep a pleasure book."

"What?"

"Yes, a pleasure book. Ever since I was a girl at school, I have kept a daily account of all the pleasant things that have happened to me. I have put down only the pleasant things; the disagreeable ones I have forgotten as soon as possible. In my whole experience I cannot recall a day so dark that it did not contain some little ray of happiness."

"The book is filled with little matters—a flower, a walk, a concert, a new gown, a new thought, a fine sentiment, a fresh sign of affection from my family—everything that gave me joy at the time. So, if ever I am inclined to be despondent, I sit down and read a few pages in my book, and find out how much I have to be grateful for."

"May I see the book?"

"Certainly."

Slowly the peevish friend turned the leaves. How insignificant the entries seemed! How much they meant! "Saw a beautiful lily in a window." "Talked to a bright, happy girl." "Received a kind letter from a dear friend." "Enjoyed a beautiful sunset." "Husband brought some roses home to me." "My boy out to day for the first time after the croup."

"Have you ever found a pleasure for every day?" inquired the fretful woman, wistfully.

"Yes, for every day, even the sad ones." The answer came in a low tone.

"I wish I were more like you," said the discontented woman, with a sigh. Then she looked at her aged friend, and a beautiful reverence grew in her face. "I don't think," she said, as her eyes filled, "that you need to write them down any more on paper. Your pleasure book is written in your face."

True Enough.

President John Henry Barrows, of Oberlin College, was making a speech recently where his allotted time was only twenty-minutes. As illustrating the point that a time which is short for one thing may be long for another, he told of a young man from the west who entered an electric car and sat down by a young woman who was gazing abstractedly out of the window. She had one hand in her muff. The young man was practical, and, seeing an opening, entered it; that is, he put his hand in at the other end of the muff.

After a while the young woman awoke to the situation, and turning her head she remarked, "I might scream. I might create a scene. But I come from Boston, and I am not easily excited. I give you just twenty minutes to remove your hand!"

Dr. Barrows had just twenty minutes for his speech.

The Runaways.—VIII.

"But I wish you wouldn't call me 'Miss Emily,'" said the little girl, "for it don't sound friendly. I mean if you wouldn't mind."

"Not at all, my dear." He chuckled. He had called her "Miss Emily" as a sort of joke.

"Haven't you got a dear little baby at your house?" inquired Emily.

Mr. Dayton shook his head. "No, my dear."

"But we saw a cradle and a little chair in the box-car."

"Yes," said the other. "But our child is a grown young man. He is off at college, now. He'll soon be smarter'n any of his kin!" The speaker chuckled again.

"But there was a cradle—we saw it," Emily persisted. "Don't it belong to you?"

At first Mr. Dayton said nothing; then he cleared his throat. "We had a little girl," he said slowly, "but she only lived to be five years old. She died last summer."

"It's awful sweet of you to keep her little cradle," said Emily. "I know she'd be glad for you to look at it, and think of her ever once in a while. I would."

Mr. Dayton coughed strangely.

"Now, Emily, you've made Mr. Dayton feel bad," said Zep, looking back reprovingly. "That's a pretty way to pay him back for giving you a ride!"

"I didn't go to," said Emily.

"How did she know?" demanded Harry. "Wasn't it natural for her to ask that question? I don't see that Em has done anything out of the way." Emily smiled, and leaning down, while with one arm she hung to the horseman, she patted Harry on top of his straw hat with her other hand.

"Now look at those two!" cried Zep in great good humor, and with the air of a proprietor. "They're always that way, Mr. Dayton, the awfulest chums you ever saw! If you say a word against Em, Harry ups and takes her part like anything!" Mr. Dayton looked over his shoulder and saw Emily patting Harry's hat. He smiled in the way some men smile, who are not ashamed to light up every corner of their hearts with gentle kindness.

"Say, my dear," he remarked, "I wish you would pat my old straw hat a little; it would make me feel good, I know it would!"

"Ain't this better?" asked Emily, suddenly deserting Harry, and giving Mr. Dayton a squeeze that made him feel like he had been diving a long time under the water. Perhaps you think this a sudden friendship. But if there is such a thing as love at first sight, why not friendship at first sight? And then, there are short cuts to friendship that a wise man will seek, instead of going the roundabout way of form and dignity and reserve.

The children found Mrs. Dayton just such a woman as you would wish such a man to have for a wife. She was fleshy enough to be good-humored from morning till night, and if she thought they were a good many people coming to dinner, she did not let them know it. As soon as she heard how they protected the box-car from the tramps, she felt the children had a claim to her gratitude. Had they not saved hundreds of dollars worth of property from Jake and Gregg? Mrs. Dayton began to pay them back that very day, with fried chicken and an apple-cobbler. When the dinner had been cleaned away—Emily washed the dishes while Harry dried them, or "wiped them" as we say in Missouri—all sat in the front yard, whence they looked out over a large part of the farm and enjoyed the breeze as it swayed the maple branches above their heads—and scared away the flies—and made unconscious sport for grass-chiggers.

The house was a long frame building, two stories in the front half where it put on its best appearance, with a porch before the front door, and another on the side, much longer and more homelike—as side-porches usually are. The yard was on the summit of a hill, with a stone wall around it, rising about two feet above the lawn, but standing really six or eight feet high, as you could see by looking over it at the pasture that rolled up to its foot. In the middle of the front pasture was a pond with a thorn tree growing on a point of land that ran out into the sparkling water; and beside the pond ran a branch, fringed with trees. Mr. Dayton had lived here from his first recollections—and before them, for he had been born on this farm. Here he had brought his wife, here their son had been reared—the one now off at college, who was seventeen years old. But last summer when little Ruth died, Mrs. Dayton felt she could not live longer in the old place—it seemed so lonesome and she was always listening for a little girl's questions and the sounds of a little girl's pattering feet. So they moved to town, five miles away, and Mr. Dayton rode over every morning to oversee the work—you may be sure he got "an early start" every morning, and why not, when he got up at half-past four? But at last Mrs. Dayton felt different, and her heart yearned for the dear farm where her little girl had been so happy and had given such happiness. They moved back the very week our little friends became runaways, so there you have the box-car explained.

Suddenly Mr. Dayton exclaimed, as they sat on some "comforts" under the trees, and imagined that was a protection against the grass-chiggers—"It can't be that your uncle Tom at Campton is Tom Burgess?"

"Why, yes, it is," said Zep, surprised.

"Is it possible?" cried the farmer. "Tom Burgess? I heard you say 'uncle Tom, uncle Tom,' and of a sudden I remembered my old friend, Tom Burgess. Why, I knew him when a boy!"

Emily looked at Mr. Dayton shyly. She drew a little away. She felt that anybody who was intimate with her uncle Tom was not just the man she had thought Mr. Dayton. He noticed her apprehension and laughed loudly. "I'll run up there and see him about you chaps to-morrow," he said.

"Come here, Ed," said Mrs. Dayton, beckoning. Her husband rose and followed her to the rock fence. They seated themselves upon it and began to talk in low voices. The runaways looked at each other doubtfully. They felt that their future hung upon those whispered words.

A New Departure.

A New, Effectual and Convenient Cure for Catarrh.

Of catarrh remedies there is no end, but of catarrh cures, there has always been a great scarcity. There are many remedies to relieve, but very few that really cure.

The old practice of snuffing salt water through the nose would often relieve and the washes, douches, powders and inhalers in common use are very little, if any, better than the old fashioned salt water douche.

The use of inhalers and the application of salves, washes and powders to the nose and throat to cure catarrh is no more reasonable than to rub the back to cure kidney disease. Catarrh is just as much a blood disease as kidney trouble or rheumatism and it cannot be cured by local treatment any more than they can be.

To cure catarrh, whether in the head, throat or stomach, an internal antiseptic treatment is necessary to drive the catarrhal poison out of the blood and system, and the new catarrh cure is designed on this plan and the remarkable success of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets is because being used internally, it drives out catarrhal infection through action upon stomach, liver and bowels.

Wm. Zimmerman, of St. Joseph, relates an experience with catarrh which is of value to millions of catarrh sufferers everywhere. He says: 'I neglected a slight nasal catarrh until it gradually extended to my throat and bronchial tubes and finally even my stomach and liver became affected, but as I was able to keep up and do a day's work I let it run along until my hearing began to fail me and then I realized that I must get rid of catarrh or lose my position, as I was clerk and my hearing was absolutely necessary.

"Some of my friends recommended an inhaler, another a catarrh salve, but they were no good in my case, nor was anything else until I heard of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and bought a package at my drug store. They benefited me from the start and in less than four months I was completely cured of catarrh although I had suffered nearly all my life from it.

They are pleasant to take and so much more convenient to use than other catarrh remedies that I feel I cannot say enough in favor of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets."

A little book on cause and cure of catarrh will be mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., and the tablets are sold by all druggists in the United States and Canada.

Longing for Home.*

TEXT: Forto meto live is Christ and to die is gain. But if to live in the flesh,—if this is the fruit of my work, then what shall I choose I wot not. But I am in a strait betwixt the two, having the desire to depart and he with Christ; for it is very far better.—Phil. 1:21-23.

Whatever may be said about Paul's theology, he had a Christology. What matter who preached Christ, or how? Even if some preached of envy and strife, hoping to annoy him, nevertheless he rejoiced. His daily prayer was that Christ might be magnified, whether by life or death. To such a disciple, to live is Christ, and to die is gain. This life of toil and hardship is glorious, because Christ is animating it, and His kingdom is being advanced by it; but the future life will bring him to an intimacy with Christ impossible here, and in contemplating that, like a tired school boy he longs for home.

Desiring to Depart.

Ordinarily men cling tenaciously to life. It is sweet to live. The air is balmy, the sky is bright, the sunshine is glorious, and perfect health gives an access of good cheer. To the normal person this is indeed the best possible of all worlds. And yet there comes the time when all this is changed. The love of life is still strong, but the desire for eternal life is stronger. As birds feel the migratory impulse and grow restless, and soon lift themselves on their wings and fly away in response to the sweet solicitations of sunnier climes, so the soul of the Christian feels the invitation of the heavenly land, and becoming dissatisfied here, soon wings its way to the 'land o' the leal.'

Many forces work upon the leaf clinging to the bough of the oak tree, to loosen it. And so there are many influences at work loosening our grip on this life, and making us ready and willing, yes, even anxious, to fly away and be at rest. In moments of deep spiritual insight, we catch celestial visions. Upon the mountain peak, in its transfiguring splendor, we hear heavenly voices, and see heavenly forms, and would abide with them. Such feelings are as natural as the love and enjoyment of life.

Clothed Upon.

"We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being hurdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but that we would be clothed upon, that what is mortal may be swallowed up of life" (2 Cor. 5:4). This is a fine statement of the case. When a man bends beneath the infirmities and decrepitudes of earthly fidelity, when the nerve throbs with torture and the heart aches, then it is he longs for the heavenly rest; then groans burst from pallid lips, and tears become his meat, day and night. Yet it is not that he desires death; not the unclothing, the putting off of mortality, but rather, the putting on of immortality. Thus it is the apostle carries our thought away from the tragedy of dissolution and fixes it upon the glories of the resurrection.

We are not Pauline in this particular, no, nor Christian, either. For when bereavement comes, we murmur and complain. We nurse our grief; we decorate the grave, and keep the old wound open; we fasten attention upon the unclothing, and make of death, which is but a point of transition, a perpetual sorrow. That is the meaning, generally, of the crepe society prescribes during the period of mourning. Let them whose friends and loved ones have gone beyond rather apparel themselves in white and adorn their brows with laurel. Let them celebrate the conquest of death, the victory over the grave! They are not unclothed, but clothed upon, and mortality is swallowed up of life!

The Crown of Righteousness.

This life has its rewards and punishments, though they are but meagre and imperfect. It requires the balance of eternity to correct the errors of time. And so we look longingly forward to the fulfillment of the precious promises of God's word. We do not, of course, adjourn all our happiness to the next world; far from it. The gospel is intended for the people now on earth, on this earth. But life is too short, human affairs are too variable, and social conditions are too unjust, to expect a full reward here for the righteous, or a full and condign punishment for the wicked.

Paul says we are to receive a "crown of righteousness." Perhaps something corresponding to a diadem may be worn by the saints in light; who knows? But ordinarily we think of this as symbolical of the glory that shall be revealed. Divine approval of itself is equal to a throne and a diadem, and the faithful will doubtless receive that. There may also be new enduements of wisdom and grace, a new gift of infinite love. More than conquerors, the victors shall be crowned.

Prayer.

O God, Father Almighty, we praise Thee for the promise and prospect of home and rest. If the toil here is long and bitter, grant unexampled fidelity, for we know the reward will be sweet. Give patience when the rough winds blow. Increase the measure of devotion. And as one by one our dear ones leave us, and the circle widens in heaven, strengthen in our hearts the longing for their companionship, and the vision beatific, in Jesus' name. Amen.

Moses and Pharaoh.*

How much time elapsed between the events of our last lesson and the present one, we do not know. It was probably a period of several months, if not a year or more. When Moses's hesitation to undertake the mission imposed upon him had passed, he bade farewell to Midian, and with his wife and children turned his face toward Egypt. His brother Aaron was instructed of God to meet him, which he did, and in the "Mount of God," where Jehovah had appeared to Moses, the brothers met and kissed each other. With what joy must they have talked over the declared purpose of God to deliver their people, and with what humble pride recognized the honor bestowed upon themselves in being chosen leaders in this high enterprise. Realizing the possibility of finding the Hebrews unprepared, from the effects of their long and bitter bondage, for the attempted deliverance, the two brothers on their arrival in Egypt call together the older men of their nation and reveal to them that the promised time of redemption has come. To strengthen their faith the miracles wrought to convince Moses were repeated, and all doubts were dispelled. God's people believed and bowed their heads and worshiped. The time of their deliverance was at hand and God had indeed not forgotten them.

This object accomplished, Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh and made known to him the command of Jehovah, that he should let Israel go three days' journey into the wilderness, that they might sacrifice unto God. The Pharaoh then on the throne was Menephthah, son of Rameses II. The character assigned to him in ancient history and on the monuments is in full accord with that suggested by the scripture narrative. He was a vain but weak prince, boastful and vacillating, cruel and violent, cowardly and superstitious. His generals had conquered the enemies round about, and he had taken to himself the glory which he had not earned. While his armies fought he lingered among the luxuries of his palace. Frightened by the slightest suggestion of supernatural power he immediately forgot his fears and assumed a stubborn spirit. It was natural that he should have refused the demand of Moses and Aaron. Well he knew that to let the subject nation go out into the wilderness would be but the first step to their flight into their own land. Besides, he did not choose to lose their labor for even so short a time. "Get you unto your burdens," was his short and stern reply. Angered by the demand, he made their task greater until the Hebrews cried out against Moses and Aaron for having made their slavery harder rather than easier. God reassures Moses and he and Aaron enter in earnest upon the work of delivering their people.

We cannot detail the story of the plagues inflicted upon Egypt and the slow and grudging yielding of Pharaoh unto the will of Jehovah. Ten awful visitations of divine wrath taught Pharaoh and his nation the power of Jehovah and the impotence of their own deities. The miracles wrought by Moses and Aaron were directed against the gods worshiped by the Egyptians. The Nile, revered as the source of their very life, became putrid with blood and swarmed with loathsome reptiles. The dust became vermin, rendering them unclean and unfit to enter the temples. Flies, or beetles, as some think, became a pest. Murrain and boils inflicted their awful pain upon man and beast. Hail devastated their fields and locusts destroyed what the hail had left. Three days of absolute darkness made its horror felt. Worst of all, the subject people, and attacked their op-these plagues passed by the habitations of oppressors alone. Several times it seemed that Pharaoh was about to yield in fact as he did in promise; but he "hardened his heart" so that the very signs which had softened Moses's heart and subdued him to God's will, made the disobedient king more stubborn. It is only thus that "God hardened Pharaoh's heart," and only thus does he harden the heart of any man. Truth disobeyed causes the soul to become unfeeling, as, obeyed, it makes the heart tender.

One more plague remains, and that, Jehovah says, will prove effective. The firstborn of all Egypt shall die, of man and beast, and that at one dread stroke, which shall come at midnight. Not one of the homes of the chosen people shall be visited by the angel of death, but the favor of Jehovah shall be so manifestly upon his people that the very officers of Pharaoh who have beaten and oppressed them shall bow down and pray them to depart. Nor shall they go out empty. For their long and unremunerated service they shall demand of their oppressors gold and silver in such quantity as will meet their needs in establishing their worship in the sanctuary, and be the basis for their wealth in the land to which their God purposes to lead them. The soul of Moses has been wrought up to the height of indignation, and the meek man, so long suffering and patient, "went out from Pharaoh in hot anger." We shall see, in future lessons, how amply all the promises of God were fulfilled in the bringing of his people out from under the yoke of bondage.

NOTE.—The statement made in the article on the lesson for Nov. 10, that the "shepherd kings" were ruling in Egypt at the time of Joseph, which would account for the favor with which the Hebrews were received, has been questioned by a brother, who cites the fact that Gen. 46:34 says that "every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians," as a contradiction of the above statement. It rather confirms it. The reigning Pharaoh was one of the "shepherd kings," who favored a pastoral people like the Hebrews. But the native Egyptians hated their kings, whom they looked upon as usurpers, and they were the more bitterly prejudiced against all pastoral peoples because their conquerors belonged to that class. When the native Egyptians again secured the kingdom and expelled the "shepherd kings," which was accomplished by Seti I., the very king who "knew not Joseph," and who began the oppression, they would of course vent the hate they could not before put into act, while the usurping dynasty was reigning. In answer to another query, I will say that the date of the exodus is somewhat uncertain, but it was probably not far from 1490 B. C. A brief but satisfactory statement of the reasons for this date is given by Canon Cook in his introduction to Exodus in the Speaker's Commentary. Exodus 12:40 gives the length of the sojourn in Egypt as 430 years. If this included the actual sojourn it would place the immigration into Egypt about 1920 B. C. If it includes the years of patriarchal life in Canaan, then the sojourn was about 200 years. Which interpretation is correct is uncertain, but probably the former.

The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful It Is In Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Book Notes.

N. B. The business of the Christian Publishing Company is by no means confined to the books which we ourselves publish, or to those listed in our catalogue, or to those which we advertise, from time to time, in our periodicals.

We do a general book business, and can supply. AT THE REGULAR RETAIL PRICE, almost any book in print, no matter where or by whom published. If you see anywhere a review or advertisement of any book and desire to purchase it, send us a money order or draft to cover the regular retail price, and we will forward the volume postpaid.

As all the available superlatives in the dictionary have been overworked in the advertising of very ordinary Bible offers, we propose, here and now, to announce very quietly what we believe is a fairly good thing in that line.

What do you think of a Bible bound in genuine Alsatian Levant, Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, Leather Lined (note that, please), Silk Sewed, Red under Gold Edges, clear, plain Minion Type, Concordance, Maps, other helps by the world's leading scholars, 1324 pages in all—in short, one of the finest Bibles, in all respects, ever issued—what do you think of such a Bible for $1.25 (One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents)?

Please remember that this is NOT one of those cheap, flimsy, paper-lined, imitation-leather-bound Bibles, made to sell for "$1.48" or "$1.98," or to be given with a year's subscription to the Weekly Toot. This Bible is listed at Five Dollars. We have never before offered it for less than $3.50. But now, to call attention to our Christmas bargains, and convince our readers that they can save money by sending to us for their Christmas gifts, we offer this Bible, without thumb index, for $1.25, or $1.50 with marginal thumb index. If the Bible is not just as represented we will return your money. Need we say more?

That our announcement of the new communion wine, at the reduced prices, has made a bit with the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, is evidenced by the demand for the small sample bottles, and the generous orders that follow the inspection of the samples. Nearly all the brands of so called "pure grape juice," sold at drug stores and groceries, have been so diluted and doctored that they are sickening to the taste. Our grape juice, on the contrary, is the "real thing." It is pure, it is delicious to the taste, it is unexcelled for use as Communion Wine or in the home. It affords a splendid nourishment and tonic for invalids, and is exceedingly grateful and refreshing to well persons. The prices:

	Single	Half-Dozen	Dozen
Quarts	$.65	$3.50	$6.00
Pints	.40	2.00	3.50
Half-Pints	.30	1.50	2.25

Small Sample Bottle—10 cents, prepaid.

Christian Science Dissected enjoys an undiminished popularity. It is really quite a big little book. It is small in size, but it is as successful in exposing the follies, fallacies and falsehoods of Christian Science as most larger books written for the same purpose. If you want to know what Mrs. Eddy teaches, or if you wish to save a friend who has been hypnotized by some propagandist of the Eddy cult, send for a copy of this work. It will accomplish the mission whereunto it is sent. The author of Christian Science Dissected—who is also the author of Troubles of the Beaverville Church—has a keen sense of humor. The many thousands who read and laughed over the Beaverville Letters will readily believe that there are a number of good "places to laugh" in Christian Science Dissected. The price of this work is only 25 cents. Special rates will be made for quantities. This little booklet should be scattered freely in every community where the followers of Mrs. Eddy have gained a foothold.

A great many people have had the good sense and judgment to purchase and read The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, and these are to be congratulated. But there are a great many more who ought to secure this book, who have not done so. During the past ten years we have published a great many valuable books, but none of them do we count more important to our cause than this history of the beginnings, progress and growth of our movement for the restoration of primitive Christianity. It should, by all means, be in every family among our people. The fathers and mothers in Israel who desire their sons and daughters to be zealous for the cause should put this book into the hands of the younger generation. No Disciple of Christ can read this history and not be made more zealous and active for the church. Many persons say: "I need not purchase this book for I read it as it appeared week by week, in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST." Pardon our contradiction, but really you did nothing of the kind. Not half the matter in this volume ever appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST or any other paper. And if it had, you should have the book to preserve for reference. It is the only authentic, complete history of our movement in existence. It is a fine volume of over 500 pages, written by J. H. Garrison, Chas. Louis Loos, W. T. Moore, B. B. Tyler, T. W. Gratton, B. L. Smith, A. McLean and Lois A. White. The price—which is low when the great value of the book is considered—is $2.

A modest appearing booklet that sells steadily is Sabbath or Lord's Day, by D. R. Dungan. In many sections of the country, Sabbatarians are carrying on aggressive missionary work, and in every such locality this booklet should be freely circulated. It is an unanswerable argument for the Lord's day—the first day of the week—as against the Sabbath, or seventh day, as the day for Christian rest and worship, and when any considerable number of copies get into a neighborhood, it speedily transpires that Sabbatarianism "folds its tents like the Arabs and silently steals away." Special prices will be quoted for lots of a dozen or more copies. Single copy, 25 cents.

We sell Baptismal Pants. Now that winter is at hand, every preacher who expects any "visible results" of his evangelistic preaching should be prepared with a pair. Our price is considerably lower than is asked by some other dealers in church supplies, and, if we are to believe the testimony of patrons who have used two kinds, the goods we handle are superior in quality to those for which a higher price is asked. At any rate, we have the best we know of, or have been able to find, and we have never had a complaint as to their quality. As a matter of course every congregation should provide this necessary article for its pastor. Prices quoted on application.

Hundreds and thousands of Sunday schools are getting ready for Christmas and the annual Christmas entertainment. For the past two weeks we have been very busy serving those seeking Christmas concert exercises and cantatas. In this line the popular favorites are:

1. Young Santa Claus. A cantata, and an unusually good one. The music is bright and catchy, and not too difficult to be easily handled. The rendition should cover from 75 to 90 minutes. Price, 25 cents per copy; $2.40 per dozen.

2. The Dear Christ Child. This is an entirely new concert exercise by H. P. Danks; 16 pages, nine songs, a number of recitations, readings, etc. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen.

3. The Unspeakable Gift. A Christmas concert exercise, including songs, recitations, responsive readings, etc., etc., by F. S. Shepard. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen.

4. The Wonderful Child, by W. W. Dowling. A Christmas service based on the prophetic declaration concerning the coming Messiah. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen.

NO FREE SAMPLES SENT. These exercises are too valuable and we are selling them on too small a margin of profit to permit us to distribute free samples, much as we should like to do so. Please do not write us saying, "Send samples of Christmas exercises." It is a small matter for an individual to send us five or ten or twenty-five cents in stamps for sample copies, but is a large matter for us to send free samples of these exercises to six or seven thousand schools. The postage, alone, would amount to $140.00. Please bear this in mind when writing for samples, and spare us the embarrassing necessity of asking you for a trifle of ten or fifteen cents.

Does your Sunday-school use reward cards, text cards, etc.? Do you get them from us? If not, send us 25 cents and get our fine "Sample Packet" of all manner of cards. This packet is worth much more than 25 cents, and we could not afford to send it at that price were we not confident that for every sample package thus sent out we secure a permanent customer.

ALSUP.

Mary Davisson Alsup, wife of our pastor, Rev. J. S. Alsup, was called home Oct. 25, 1901. We, the Pekin auxiliary of C. W. B. M., have lost a faithful member. The sympathies of all go out to the husband and four little children in their loss. Rev. Deshreeves, a life-long friend, conducted the funeral services. The remains were taken to Metropolis, Ill., for interment.

ANDREWS.

Died, Nov. 4, 1901, Charles Andrews, aged 86 years, 7 months and 4 days. For years he has been a patient sufferer from the infirmities of old age. Having lost his second wife by death, June 19, 1895, he has since made a home with his children, three of whom survive him, L. D. Andrews, Leavenworth, Kas., W. H. Andrews, Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Melissa Reed, Pomona, Kas. He fell asleep in the triumphs of a living faith and his casket marked "Father" has been placed 'neath the "clouds of the valley." L. D. ANDREWS.

BROWN.

Elizabeth Hutchinson Coursey was born at Bellbrook, O., May 9, 1825; was married to James Brown, June 16, 1842; died in St. Louis, Oct. 16, 1901. Five daughters were born to them, four of whom survive. There are also four grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Mrs. Brown's parents, Samuel L. and Jane Hutchinson Coursey, were Virginians, moving from Augusta county, Va., to Ohio, about 1835. From their Ohio home Mr. and Mrs. Brown moved to Keokuk, Ia., in 1857; to O'kalosa in 1861, and to St. Louis in 1883. Here Mr. Brown, although no longer a young man, built up a fine business, which has been conducted since his death by his daughters. Mrs. Brown was a woman of quiet unassuming character. Her religious faith was firm and unwavering. One could not be in her society for even a few moments without realizing her genuine earnestness, and seeing something of the beauty of Christ-likeness which characterized her.

COMBS.

Mary J. Agee was born in Todd county, Ky., June 18, 1820. She came with her parents to Pettis county, Mo., in 1835 where she was married to Wm. Bracht in 1839, who died in 1845. Of this union one child was born, Mary E., now the wife of Bro. P. Courtney, of Holden, Mo. She was again married in 1847 to J. H. Combs, who died in 1893. Sister Combs became a member of the Christian church at Georgetown, Pettis county, Mo., in 1843 and was a faithful Christian until her death, which occurred in Holden, Nov. 5, 1901. The funeral services were conducted by the writer from the home of her daughter, where her declining years were spent. She was a good woman and tenderly loved by all who knew her. J. W. BOULTON.

FOREMAN.

Amanda Foreman was born Sept. 12, 1862, united with the Church of Christ at Ingham, Ill., Sept. 27, 1873. Died Oct. 31, 1901. Was married to Hayden Foreman Nov. 8, 1885. She devoted her married life to building up a good, safe influence for her children to grow up in, but was called away while the eldest was but 10 years of age. She called her family about her, gave her husband, little son and daughter parting counsel and said,

"I would like to stay with you, but I must go. I am ready," and fell asleep.

GILLUM.

Died, at his home near Clarksville, Pike county, Mo., Nov. 2, 1901, Mr. J. C. Gillum, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. He was an industrious and upright man; an earnest Christian, filling faithfully the office of elder in the Christian church of which he was a consistent and worthy member. He was a kind father, devoted husband and a true friend. He leaves a devoted wife, four sons, (children by a former marriage), several grandchildren and an aged sister; also many bound to him by social and Christian ties. Being true to the Christ his reward is sure. He rests from his toils now. Though missed by the living he is blessed of God, whom in life he delighted to honor.

E. J. LAMPTON.

GROGGER.

At the family home, one and a half miles east of Leeds, in Jackson county, Mo., Mrs. Elvira, wife of Paul Grogger, passed away, on Wednesday, Oct. 30. Forest Hill cemetery, Kansas City, received the remains on Nov. 1. Besides the bereaved husband, four children and a large circle of friends mourn the departure of an exceptional woman. She was born near Somerset, Ky., March 27, 1842. In 1870, took up her residence in Kansas City, where her children were born and reared. Those qualities which marked her as a faithful and loving mother were always unconsciously exhibited in her home. Among the characteristics which distinguished her was that of benevolence. All the acquaintances of the family share with them this great sorrow.

HODGES.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hodges died at the Monod Hospital, this city, Saturday, Oct. 26. Sister Hodges was a member of the Christian church at whatcom, and resided at Fairhaven. Accompanied by her husband, she came here for surgical treatment. She had anticipated the result and had made every preparation. The most essential preparation was made by her faithful, consistent Christian life. The beautiful qualities of a noble Christian woman were hers in a very large measure. Her bereaved husband accompanied the remains back to the old family burying ground at Martinsville Ind.

HUNLEY.

Eldora Hunley was born Jan. 12, 1859. United with the Church of Christ at Ingham, Ill., Sept. 1875; was married to J. W. Hunley Jan. 8, 1882. She leaves her husband and eight children to mourn her loss; died Nov. 13, 1901. Her maiden name was Mitchell and her aged parents were present at the funeral, which was conducted by F. M. Lollar.

Ingham, Ill.

JOHNSON.

Mrs. Matilda J. Johnson, daughter of John B. and Jane M. Helm, was born in Kentucky and died at the home of her brother-in-law, Hon. J. F. Davidson, Hannibal, Mo., Nov. 11, 1901, aged 64 years. Early in life she became a member of the Methodist Church, and in 1863, when she married Joseph J. Johnson, she found her religious home with the Christian church in Hannibal. Her husband preceded her into rest 14 years ago. Since that time she has had a hospitable home with her sister, Mrs. Davidson. She was in her quiet way a preacher of righteousness in whatever circle she moved. Her sorrows brought her into a closer fellowship with God. Her kindness and good cheer were proverbial. She will be missed in the church, in the home and in many social circles.

ROCKWELL.

Sister Emeine Rockwell passed over to the better land Sunday, Nov. 3, 1901, aged 80 years, 7 months and 11 days. If ever death could be called beautiful it was so in her case. She had lived a long and useful life, had finished her work and was ready to depart. For many years she was a member of the Central Christian church in St. Louis, and became a charter member of the Lenox Avenue church in New York. She watched its growth with deep and prayerful interest, and as long as strength permitted she was always in her place in the Lord's house on the Lord's day. She was personally acquainted with many of our pioneer preachers, had entertained them in her home and knew well the struggles through which the church passed in its early days. Out of this there came a devotion to our plea which increased more and more with passing years. She filled a place all her own. So gently and so kindly she went in and out among us her presence was always a benediction. She leaves two sons in New York and a daughter in St. Louis. She was buried in Akron, O., beside her husband, who died in February, 1889.

WARDEN.

After a sickness of more than a year Bro. William Warden passed from earth to heaven Oct. 16, 1901. Bro. Warden was born in Missouri in the year 1822, died in Augusta, Mont., after a residence of 12 years. Bro. Warden became a Christian when quite a young man, was active in church work, acting as Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. He also served as elder in the church for many years. He was elected elder in the Augusta Christian church, which was organized last March. He was an earnest Christian man, loved God, Christ and the church; he was loved by all who knew him. He leaves a widow and two sons, together with a number of grandchildren to mourn his loss, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, H. L. Willis, who spoke from the words, "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his."

Dearest father, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply mourn,
But in heaven we hope to greet thee,
When life's journey here is o'er.

H. L. WILLIS.

WILCOX.

The death of Mrs. Julia Wilcox removes from the present life a remarkable woman. She was, as we are accustomed to say, self-made, but more correctly she was God-made. She was born in Terre Haute, Ind., Feb. 12, 1827. She was left an orphan at an early age, spending her early days in Louisville and St. Louis. Aug. 4, 1848, she was married to Seymour B. Wilcox, and the first year of her married life was spent in St. Louis, then a young, frontier city. The brick house where they began their housekeeping still stands, now in the heart of the city. Shortly after their marriage, they removed to Illinois, and finally settled at Virden, where she continued to reside until the death of Mr. Wilcox which took place in 1895. Mrs. Wilcox was the mother of nine children, five of whom now survive her. Among these is Mrs. Luella Wilcox St. Clair, co principal of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. During the past year Mrs. Wilcox remained most of her time at the college, and the writer had the very best opportunity to notice her remarkable character. During the last days of her earthly life, she suffered most intensely, but she did everything possible to keep others from being annoyed by it, or even from being conscious that she was suffering at all. She was one of the most unselfish women I ever knew. Her sphere of life was not specially prominent, but in quiet ways she gave unmistakable evidence of great strength of character. She was for many years a consistent member of the Christian Church. Her death was a benediction to all who witnessed it. It was simply the passing from the temporal to the eternal; and yet she seemed to meet the eternal before her spirit left the body. At the last her whole countenance lit up with almost angelic rapture, and while seeming to gaze into the future, she passed away to the spirit land.

WOODS.

Mrs. Cora Hall Woods, born Aug. 27, 1864, died Oct. 30, 1901, aged 37 years, 2 months and 3 days. Cora Hall was married to Mr. Chris. Snidow, Dec. 27, 1881. He was accidentally drowned many years ago. She was married to Bro. John H. Woods, Mar. 25, 1893. He, with three little children and her oldest daughter, survives her. She united with the Church of Christ, Sept. 15, 1894, and has been an active and devoted member ever since. She was a faithful wife, a devoted mother, a true friend and a generous neighbor. By the magic of her pure sweet life, she charmed into friendship every acquaintanceship. May God comfort her bereaved husband and protect and lead her motherless children.

A Course of Reading.

Carey E. Morgan, of Richmond, and Cephas Shelburne, of Roanoke, were appointed a committee on a course of reading for the Virginia ministerial association. The following books were selected by the committee and approved by the association at their state meeting in Richmond, and requested to be published in our papers. The object of the committee was to give a condensed, progressive course, beginning with the life of lives, while at the same time furnishing as much variety as possible with anything like system and giving one volume per month. The list contains thirteen books ranging in price from twenty cents to two dollars per volume. The entire set can be purchased with the usual discount for $12 to $15. Following is the list:

"Life and Times of Jesus," Siedel.

"The Beginnings of Christianity," Fisher.

"The Lives of the Fathers," Farrar.

A book on the Reformation (to be selected by reader).

"Alexander Campbell's Theology," W. E. Garrison.

"The Christian System," Campbell.

"The Gospel for an Age of Sin," Van Dyke.

"The Character of Jesus," Bushnell.

"The Evangelization of the World," Mott.

"Life Problems," G. Campbell Morgan.

"A Man's Value to Society," Hillis.

A Study of Brownie's "Saul."

"Making a Life," Cortland Myers.

Horse Bucked.

Rider Severely Hurt.

A Cincinnati man visiting in Texas, on a ranch, was thrown from a horse and so severely injured that his life was despaired of. He takes pride in telling how food saved his life. The heavy drugs given seriously injured his stomach and as he says: "It seemed I would soon have to starve in the midst of plenty. My stomach refused to digest food and I ran down from 165 to 133 pounds. When my appetite failed I was ready to give up, and it looked as though I would soon 'wink out.'"

"One morning the foreman's daughter brought in what she called a splendid food and it turned out to be Grape-Nuts. A little skeptical, I ate it and found it was good, and just the kind of food I could keep on my stomach which had been almost burned out by the vile drugs.

"I felt that I had obtained a new lease of life, for improvement set in at once. A week later I was weighed and had gained two pounds. My weight has since steadily increased by the constant use of Grape-Nuts, and I am now better than I have been in years, as my friends will all testify.

"In all kinds of athletic sports I notice I have a greater reserve force than formerly, for which I am indebted to Grape-Nuts. Taken in moderation it is the greatest food of its kind in the world, being equally well adapted to athletes and invalids." Paul Alwin Platz, 1906 Biglow Ave., Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, O.

Iowa Sunday-school Work.

At the recent state convention held at Cedar Rapids, the Iowa Christian Bible school Convention was organized. On the first of November the state superintendent and evangelist, J. H. Bryan, of Missouri, began his work at Iowa City, and since that has been at work in Cass county. Besides stimulating the Bible-school workers to greater energy and guiding them to better methods, his work has been helpful in other ways. At Iowa City the pastor, C. P. Leach, made the rally the basis of a forward movement in all lines of his church work, and at Atlantic the institute was the introduction to a successful meeting, there being five additions to the church at the last session of the institute. The evangelist has appointments at Lake City and Liscomb in December.

The plans of the executive committee for the state for the year ending at the state convention in September include the following items:

Twenty five per cent. increase in all established schools.

Two hundred home departments in the state.

One new school in each county in the state. District and county superintendents throughout the state.

State superintendent and evangelist in the field.

Normal Bible and training work.

An annual rally day in all schools fourth Lord's day in April.

A pledge for state Bible-school work from each school.

As the work is but recently organized it requires all the assistance its friends can give it. So besides the gifts from schools, life and annual memberships are offered; life membership being $5.00 a year for four years and the annual membership being $1.00 a year.

While Iowa schools are missionary, giving last year $3,565 for foreign missions, they have sadly neglected the Iowa field, giving only $154 for the salvation of Iowa. That the Iowa field is a needy field, is shown by the fact that we have neither church nor school in 14 counties, 34 county seats and 1,500 towns and villages, only one church in 11 counties and only two churches in 13 counties. That it is a productive field is shown by the splendid growth in the past. That a distinctive Sunday-school work can be maintained and that it pays to do so is shown by the record of Missouri, which has so wrought for 25 years with the most gratifying results, having kept five men in the field last year. Whether Iowa shall so do in the future will depend upon the support of the friends of the work. Pledges and cash may be sent to H. H. Slayton, treasurer, Des Moines.

WHAT a transformation man has wrought in matter! Nature says, here is a lump of mud; man answers, let it become a beautiful vase. Nature says, here is a sweet briar; man answers, let it become a rose double and of many hues. Nature says, here is a string and a block of wood; man answers, let them be a sweet-voiced harp. Nature says, here is a daisy; Burns answers, let it become a poem. Nature says, here is a piece of ochre and some iron rust; Millet answers, let the colors become an Angelus. Nature says, here is reason rude and untaught; man must answer, let the mind become as full of thoughts as the sky of stars and more radiant. Nature says, here is a rude affection; man must answer, let the heart become as full of love and sympathy as the summer is full of ripeness and beauty. Nature says, here is a conscience, train it; man should answer, let the conscience be as true to Christ and God as a needle to the pole.

LADIES' BIBLES.

We are at a disadvantage in dealing with our patrons. If these Bibles could be placed in a show-window and all the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST could be marched by we are confident few would pass without stopping, and our Bible sales would be increased twenty-fold.

Our "LADIES' BIBLE" is a novelty—something never before offered our readers. We never saw a more attractive edition of the Scriptures. If all who read these lines could see it, we would sell ten thousand copies during this month. Every man who loved his wife, every father who loved his daughter, every brother who loved his sister, every young man who loved—well, all these men would want to buy copies for those they loved. We offer two varieties of this Bible:

A19—Comparatively small, neat and compact, this Bible may properly be styled "dainty," and if the fair recipient be young and enthusiastic, she will very likely call it "cute." It is described as the "Minion 16mo, Oxford Reference Bible." It is printed on the famous "India Paper" (the finest book paper known, combining marvelous thinness and lightness with abundant opaqueness and strength). Size 6 1/2 x 4 3/4 inches, and less than 3/4 inch thick. The type is plain and easily read. It is about the size of that used in most newspapers. Besides the Old and New Testaments, this Bible contains a Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names, Harmony of the Gospels, Chronological Tables, Maps, etc. Bound in French Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Round Corners. Red under Gold Edges, etc. Price...$2.50

A29—This is very similar to the above, but is even newer than A19—one of the very newest ideas in Bibles, in fact. Its chief feature, in addition to those enumerated above, is its surprising lightness and thinness. By the omission of maps and extra matter the publishers have made a book that is almost as light as a feather. It is printed in same type as A19, upon the same famous "Oxford India Paper." It is magnificently bound in the genuine Persian Levant, and is Leather Lined to Edge, with Red under Gold Edges. This edition has not the extensive "helps" which we offer in other numbers; but for ordinary use, this is just the thing to give mother, wife, sister or sweetheart for a gift. Indeed, it is just the book for any one who desires a light, thin, compact Bible. Price.....$3.75

You have doubtless heard of this wonderful "India Paper," but you certainly never before saw an "India Paper" Bible offered so cheaply. You can make no more delightful and delighting Christmas gift to a lady relative or friend than one of these Bibles. Send in your order as early as possible, to avoid the holiday rush, and address it to the Current Events.

A Real Reform. No event of President Roosevelt's administration so far has been more significant than his removal of Gov. Jenkins, of Oklahoma, for using the power of his office to reward his political henchmen. It was like the President not only to take this action immediately upon ascertaining the facts, but to tell why in good plain English. The memorandum which he attached to his executive order is worthy of becoming a classic and it may yet prove to mark an era in the history of civil service reform. The following is the document in full:

"Governor Jenkins, of Oklahoma, is hereby removed because of his improper connection with a contract between the Territory and the Oklahoma Sanatorium Company. The decision is based purely upon his own written statements and his oral explanations of them at the final hearing.

"One of the duties of a territorial governor is to enter into a contract with some person or corporation for the keeping of the insane of the Territory. Governor Jenkins made such a contract with the Oklahoma Sanatorium Company, a corporation the promoters of which reserved $10,000 of its stock for the governor and subject to his orders.

"In the governor's explanation of the affair he says he told the promoters at the time they desired him to sanction the contract that 'it was an important contract' and that 'I have some friends whom I would like to have interested in the company to whom I owed some political obligations which I would not be able to pay by an appointment or anything of that kind.' The stock was delivered to a banker subject to the governor's order, and was turned over to those friends whose political services the governor thus sought to reward. The extent of the favor to the governor or his friends is suggested by the fact that the only known sale of the stock since the contract was given out was at double the price paid for it.

"As performance of the contract was to be the sole business of the corporation, it is obvious either that the Territory was obligated to pay far more than the service was worth, or that its helpless wards were to have the enormous profits contemplated taken out of their keep.

"The governor's confessed relations to the matter disclose such an entire lack of appreciation of the high judiciary nature of the duties of his office as to unfit him for their further discharge.

"A sound rule of public policy and morals forbids a public servant from seeking or accepting any personal benefit in a transaction wherein he has a public duty to perform. A chancellor would not for one moment retain a trustee who, in dealings for the trust, reserved an advantage to himself. The thought is not to be tolerated that the President can be less vigilant and exacting in the public interest.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

Is it Only a Beginning? Such events as this purification of Oklahoma politics confirm that feeling of exultation which was stirred in the hearts of all civil service reformers by the accession of Mr. Roosevelt to the presidency. There was nothing the matter with Gov. Jenkins's party record. His party loyalty and party orthodoxy were unquestioned. But he turned aside from the path of official duty to spend the tax-payers' money in paying his friends for their campaign service. The case seems particularly gross where it is a matter of distributing marketable property which has been received in return for an official contract. But it is in reality no worse than what is going on constantly in half the states of the Union. Whenever any office is filled without regard primarily to the efficiency with which the candidate will perform its duties and the honesty with which he will give the state full value for every dollar of salary which he receives, the case is virtually the same. There is no question but that President Roosevelt's example will exert a powerful influence in the establishment of a state of public opinion which will be far more critical toward these perversions of official power to party ends than it is at present. If any great party can become so imbued with this spirit that its party discipline will not break down under the application of the reform principle, that party has a glorious future before it. The refreshing thing about Mr. Roosevelt's course is that, unlike most of the presidents in their first terms, he apparently does not care whether party discipline breaks down or not. Of course he does care. He believes in the Republican party, thinks that it has a work to do, and hopes to hold its members in line to enable it to do that work. But holding people in line and propitiating the various elements of the party are a matter of such secondary importance that he can ignore it without a qualm when it interferes with honest and efficient government. We cannot but think that this is not only a notable beginning for Mr. Roosevelt—indeed it is scarcely a beginning for him, for he has already been at it a considerable time—but also the beginning of a more general application of the principles of civil service reform under the encouragement of his example.

The Fifty-seventh Congress. The first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress opened Monday, Dec 2. It is strongly Republican in both branches, that party having a majority of perhaps fifteen in the Senate and about forty in the House, on strictly party questions. The new congress is confronted by a budget of important business of sufficient magnitude to keep it busily occupied through its long session. The most interesting of all perhaps is the new Hay-Pauncefote treaty, superseding the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty and clearing the way for the construction of an American isthmian canal, which will come before the senate for confirmation. A bill for the construction of the canal will be introduced in the House early in the session and will be pushed hard for passage. The passage of a canal bill has so often appeared imminent, only to go by default in the closing days of the session, that we shall not predict its passage at the present session, but will only say that it has a better prospect than ever before. A ship-subsidy bill, differing probably in some points from that which failed to pass in the last congress, will be introduced. The President is known to favor the encouragement of American shipping, but he appreciates the perils of the subsidy principle, as most of the members of his party apparently do not, and he was no friend to the former bill. His declarations on this subject in his message are awaited with interest. Measures will probably be adopted for the establishment of civil government in the Philippines under congressional authority to supersede the executive authority exercised under the Spooner law. The trade relations with Cuba are an important topic for consideration. It is generally felt that it will be better to make such arrangements by treaty with Cuba after the establishment of her independent government following her presidential election next February. There is a growing improbability that radical tariff changes will be undertaken, but measures of reciprocity, which may be but little less important than the tariff revision, will be considered. It appears probable that congress will, without a great deal of debate, authorize the construction of a Pacific cable. Upon this point at least there ought to be practical unanimity.

Post Election Discord. Scarcely has the applause for the glorious defeat of Tammany died away before an apple of discord is rolled among the victors to threaten their harmony. It is the question of Sunday opening of the saloons. There is an influential element among the Fusionists which believes that Sunday closing is impractical and undesirable, and a movement will be made to enact more "liberal" legislation on that subject. It is not improbable that the attempt will be successful. Whether it is so or not, it is hard to see how the Fusionists can long hold together. A thoroughgoing reform is always more popular in prospect than in realization. Many, perhaps most, of those who fought Tammany in the recent campaign are in no sense temperance reformers. They are opposed to theft and blackmail, but they are committed to no principles which demand restrictive, anti-saloon legislation, moreover they have no intention of jeopardizing the popularity of their movement in the eyes of the not too enlightened populace as they fear they will do if they yield to the demands of the temperance "fanatics." They believe in honest politics and personal liberty. Whether this faction or the thoroughgoing temperance element gains the ascendancy in this administration, it is all too probable that the fusion of the reformers will break down before the next election. What then? Tammany once more? Perhaps. But at least New York will have two years of government which will be perfection as compared with what she has had. Carpe diem!

Chinese Exclusion. The present law which excludes the Chinese from entering the United States—except in those cases in which special arrangement is made with our state department, as for diplomats and distinguished travelers—will expire by limitation during the year 1902, unless it is re-enacted by congress at its coming session. The arguments in favor of exclusion are already familiar. They have not changed materially in the past twenty years. They fall naturally into two classes according as they are based on one of two considerations: First, the personal undesirability of the Chinese as a class of persons who claim the protection of our laws but do not possess even the promise and potency of the requisite qualifications for citizenship, are not assimilated by contact with our American institutions and introduce a discordant note of paganism into our Christian civilization; and second, the economic peril which comes from the competition of cheap Asiatic labor with American labor. The argument drawn from the first consideration would be stronger if it could include an assertion that these Chinese immigrants would, if admitted, constitute a real political peril. But this can scarcely be claimed unless it were proposed to extend to them the privilege of naturalization as well as that of residence. To most candid minds the Chinese who come to us appear as personally unpleasant but not politically dangerous. What if they do huddle together in Chinese quarters, forming virtually cities of their own? If we are capable of governing oriental cities beyond the Pacific we ought to be able to govern partly oriental cities on this side of it. Do we object to their admission on the ground that they are pagans? A Christian civilization which sends its emissaries into the darkest corners of the earth ought to welcome the opportunity to do missionary work upon the neediest of the heathen when they come to us. These are some of the replies that are offered to the argument from the personal objectionableness of the Chinese as residents and neighbors. Are they adequate? Certainly not, as thus briefly stated, and those who have seen most of the Chinese in this country are almost unanimous in saying that such answers never can be adequate.

The Argument From Competition. The most aggressive influence against the admission of the Chinese has been that of organized American labor, whose argument has been based upon the second of the considerations above mentioned, namely, the economic peril growing out of the competition of Asiatic labor with well-paid American labor. Whatever is permanently hostile to the interests of the laboring man is a menace to the country. Chinese labor in unlimited quantities would be dangerous to American labor because the Chinaman, with his Asiatic scale of life, can work for a wage which would mean sheer starvation for a white man. This argument appears very formidable and certainly anyone, in or out of Congress, who undertakes to combat it will have the labor unions about his ears in a moment. But after all, so far as the economic aspect of the question is concerned, is not competition by cheap Chinese labor the same as competition by machinery? The steam threshing-machine is a means by which three men do the work of thirty and send the twenty-seven looking for other jobs. The steam-driven spindle, so largely automatic that a skilled man can operate a large number of them, drives out of employment multitudes who had been managing spindles by hand. Even Chinese cheap labor cannot compete with it. The sewing-machine enables one operator to do what half a dozen had done with hand needles, and the other five must move on. Steam shovels and derricks reduce the number of men needed as section hands and diggers. And yet it is universally admitted that the introduction of labor-saving machinery does not, in the long run, work a hardship to laboring men, though it may force many laborers to acquire higher skill and find new employment. What difference does it make to a workman whether he is thrown out of his job by the competition of a steam shovel or by a gang of coolies? In either case he must look for another job. Since it has been decided that, in the case of the steam shovel and all the other substitutes of mechanical power for American muscle, the laborers as a class are not permanently injured, is it not possible that the advent of Chinese laborers would only have the effect of compelling unskilled labor to qualify itself as skilled labor, just as the introduction of machinery does? We are not conducting an argument on the case, but are merely stating, pro and con, some considerations which must be taken into account. In reality, probably the most potent factors in securing the continuation of Chinese exclusion will be the fact that they are personally obnoxious and that their admission would cause among workingmen an apprehension of evil which would go a long way toward bringing about its own fulfillment.

The Report of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Secretary Wilson's annual report includes a vast mass of interesting information and many statistics. The following are a few of the points touched upon: The service of the weather bureau has been extended to include reports from some of the British possessions, the Azores and Bermuda, and facilitate the anticipation of weather changes from those directions. The value of animals and animal products exported during the past year exceeds $250,000,000. The importance of government inspection to prevent the spread of contagious diseases is indicated by the fact that the inspectors condemn one-fourth of one per cent. of the cattle, one-tenth of one per cent. of the sheep, and one-third of one per cent. of the hogs. Statistics show that the losses from disease have been much reduced by inspection and disinfection. The introduction of foreign plants suited to our soil and climate is an important part of the department's work. The raising of rice in Texas and Louisiana and of macaroni wheat in the Dakotas, Kansas and Nebraska has been encouraged during the past two or three years, and already the consumption of those articles has been increased and the amount imported largely decreased. The Secretary urges congressional action in behalf of irrigation, and advocates public ownership of all irrigating plants on a large scale. The department will find an interesting new field in the Philippines, and a branch is to be established there. The Department of Agriculture cost the United States government $3,220,000 last year.

The War in Colombia. The threatened bombardment of Colon by the Colombian forces to dispossess the rebels who had captured the city was prevented by the protest of the American representatives. For several days a situation continued which presented some points of similarity to comic opera warfare. The Panama terminus of the trans-isthmian railway was in the hands of the government troops. The other terminus at Colon was in the hands of the insurgents. Fighting was in progress along the line but the trains were run regularly and firing was stopped as they went by for fear of American intervention. These interrupted battles gradually brought the government troops to Colon. Eventually the insurgents handed over the city to Capt. Perry of the U. S. ship "Iowa," who in turn transferred it to Gen. Alvan, Commander of the incoming Colombian forces. The marines from the Iowa have had the unique task of keeping the railroad trains moving through the mutually hostile lines. Colombia has recalled her minister from Caracas and has suspended diplomatic relations with Venezuela in view of the probability that that government is actively aiding the Colombia insurgents.

The President's Message. President Roosevelt's first message to Congress is received just before we go to press. It is a document of about 28,000 words, which make it, contrary to popular expectation, one of the longest messages ever sent by a president to Congress. It opens with a reference to the assassination of President McKinley and recommends that persons attempting the life of the president shall be amenable to the federal courts, that punishment for such attempts shall be proportioned to the enormity of the crime, and that the entrance of professed anarchists into this country shall be restricted by federal laws. In regard to trusts, he recommends enforced publicity and federal control of all interstate corporations. Tariff revision is discouraged and reciprocity recommended. A ship-subsidy is not recommended; a new cabinet officer, Secretary of Commerce and Industries, is suggested; a Pacific cable is favored; the isthmian canal project is encouraged; strengthening of the navy is advocated; and a reorganization of state militias after the model of the regular army is recommended. The army is large enough, but the creation of a general staff is recommended. The tribal rights of Indians should be taken away and they should be treated as individuals. The St. Louis World's Fair is commended. Irrigation of the arid lands should be carried out on a large scale with public ownership of the canals.

A Deeper and Wider Evangelism.

A few weeks ago, in commenting upon the evangelistic section of the Minneapolis convention, we remarked that we needed both a deeper and a wider evangelism. It is our purpose in this article to elaborate more fully what was meant by this phrase.

By a deeper evangelism we mean that the full content of the word evangelize, as it is used in the Acts of the Apostles, should be carried over into the present century. We have, indeed, the New Testament words and phrases associated with the process of turning men from the power of sin unto God; but there is constant danger lest we cheapen these words and phrases by using them in a superficial sense. Nothing is more common than this in the history of the church.

Let us take the word faith, for instance, which all agree is an essential condition of salvation. How easy it is to reduce it to a mere intellectual assent to certain propositional truths. And yet this is not faith in the New Testament sense. The faith that carries salvation with it is that which lays hold on the personal Christ and brings the soul into loving allegiance with Him. It is the power of spiritual vision that sees the invisible and makes that the controlling force in life. Then there is that great word repentance. How much there is in it. It is the turning of the whole internal man—his mind and his imperial will—away from sin to the service of God and righteousness. That is the kind of repentance over which there is joy in the presence of God. Theoretically every preacher among us holds this view of repentance, and yet is it not to be feared that persons are often brought into the church without a due sense of the awful nature of sin and the necessity of a thorough repentance?

As a Savior able to deliver one from the power of sin, Jesus Christ was highly exalted by the apostles and early preachers. He was able to save to the uttermost all who came to God through Him. Sinners fleeing from their sins turned to this great Savior with confidence in his power to deliver them from the guilt and bondage of sin. Let us beware that we do not lower by so much as a hair's breadth this divine Savior who died for our sins and who rose again for our justification. Not only is he able to save us from sin, but to give us life and that more abundantly.

Baptism may be preached very mechanically and superficially or it may be presented as the solemn act of the soul's dedication to God—an act which at once symbolizes the believer's death to sin and his resurrection to a new life of righteousness and his own Lord's burial and resurrection. Our plea is that we feel each of these New Testament words with their divine original content and rest satisfied with nothing less than this. This is what we mean by the deeper evangelism.

By the wider evangelism we mean an evangelism that does not depend upon specially trained and equipped ministers of the gospel, but that employs every redeemed soul in the church. It is only the deeper evangelism, however, that can lead to the wider evangelism. It is only as men are thoroughly converted themselves that they can become personal witnesses of the power of the gospel to redeem the life from the power of sin and evil habit. When men have once experienced this power in their own lives, it is an easy matter for them to bear testimony to their fellow men, with whom they come in daily contact, of the supreme excellence of the power of the cross. No man whose life has not felt the transforming power of the gospel can successfully recommend it to others. This is why the deeper must precede the wider evangelism.

You may put it down as a fact that this world is never to be converted until the whole body of the church can be enlisted in the work of evangelism. "Let him that heareth say come" is the divine ideal of New Testament evangelism. In proportion as we press on steadily in the direction of this deeper and wider evangelism shall we hold a leading place among the evangelistic forces working for the redemption of the world.

After Thanksgiving—What?

An anniversary, or a day of special celebration, religious, patriotic or otherwise, is a blessing, but one not unattended with dangers. It is always easier to be zealous in the observance of a day than to be constant in the remembrance of those sentiments and the practice of those virtues for which the day stands.

Who, for example, has not reflected upon the unfortunate tendency of many of our fellow-countrymen to make the vociferous and pyrotechnical enthusiasm of the Fourth of July a substitute for the quiet and enduring virtues of good citizenship? True patriotism there is—much of it, though never enough—but it must ever contend against the tendency to confuse those occasional demonstrations, which should be only the expression of patriotism, with those deep-laying sentiments and that enduring loyalty which is the essence of patriotism. It is grievous to note that an over-production of noise and glitter on the Glorious Fourth is not infrequently followed by an embarrassing shortage in the visible supply of patriotism when election day comes around and, still worse, when the season for paying taxes arrives.

And after Thanksgiving, what? To follow one day of gratitude with three hundred and sixty-four days of gross forgetfulness, of self-centered complacency, of base neglect of the duties of gratitude to God and helpfulness to men? Far be it from us. It is fitting and proper that on one special day set apart out of all the year—a day which seldom fails to find bountiful harvests gathered into full barns and the autumn plenty making glad the heart of man—we should cease from our labors and give expression to the gratitude that is in our hearts. But no man can be grateful enough in a day to cover the blessings of a year.

The secret of making the spirit of thanksgiving permanent is to make it practical. As President Roosevelt said in his proclamation, "true homage comes from the heart as well as from the lips, and shows itself in deeds." There is no other way of making permanent the thankful attitude of mind and heart than by embodying it in action. Gratitude to God finds its natural and necessary complement in sympathy and service toward men. It is not easy to keep oneself long upon the loftiest heights of spiritual exaltation. Perhaps it is not even desirable. Jesus was transfigured only once, and then he hastened down from the mountain when his disciples begged to stay. Yet who shall say that he was not as divine in service in the valley as he had been in radiance on the mountain top? The spiritual uplift of his glorious transfiguration lent richness and power to his service; and the lowly service gave depth and meaning to the manifestation of his glory.

It is a beautiful custom to make the Thanksgiving season a time for special remembrance of the needy and unfortunate. Nothing could be more appropriate. But even a concrete act of charity on one day in the year, if not followed up by such a series of acts as indicate that charity has become a habit, may indicate rather a spasm of contagious emotionalism than a settled purpose of helpfulness to men growing out of an habitual thankfulness to God. Let us not abate one particle in the zeal of our thanksgiving services upon the day appointed by proclamation. But let us rather keep the feast, remembering that the fountain of sincere praise can rise to the throne of God only when it has back of it an unfailing reservoir of thankfulness which no outpouring and no drought of affliction can exhaust.

Worse Than an Infidel.

"He that provideth not for his own household is worse than an infidel." Such language would have sounded almost shockingly severe had it come to us with less authority than that which is behind it. No decent man will allow his wife and his children or his parents to suffer for the necessities of life without putting forth his most strenuous efforts to provide for them. This is not only Christianity but common sense and common decency, and the world so recognizes it.

The world does not perhaps understand the full Christian significance that may be put into the term household, but those who know the mind of Christ know that it is his expressed will that his disciples should show their love for one another by providing for those that are of the same household of faith. In the family there is a head upon whom the other members are commonly dependent for their support. In the household of faith there are more supporters and fewer dependent, but there are always some of the latter. Especially is it always probable that some of those who have spent their lives in providing for the spiritual wants of the household will themselves be in need of temporal provision in old age. Shall we allow ourselves to be worse than infidels by neglecting such?

It is a pitiable spectacle to show to the world—the sight of hundreds of old preachers of stainless reputation and proved ability unable to support themselves longer by the arduous work of the ministry and treated like paupers by a generation which has exhausted the fruit of their toils. It is hard for the world to believe in the sincerity of a church in which such a condition can exist. Practical charity is at once the most scriptural and the most popular thing in the world. It is that which gives the lodges their place in the esteem of the public. The church forfeits its most effective apologetic when it fails to speak to the world in the language of deeds—a language which the world understands better than any other.

The day for the collection for Ministerial Relief is the third Lord's day in December. A statement of the condition and needs of that work is published elsewhere in this paper. Let us take heed in this matter that we be not worse than infidels.

The Quest of "Liberty."

Last week the announcement was made that the Non-Sectarian Church in St. Louis had affiliated itself with the Christian Assembly. The Non-Sectarian Church, it will be remembered, originated with the withdrawal of about one hundred members from the Central Christian Church of this city ten years ago, under the leadership of R. C. Cave. Since that time it has been unconnected with any religious body, but has found its most congenial fellowship with the Unitarians and the Ethical Culture Society. Feeling the need of a more definite co-operation with some recognized body of Christians, it has united with a congregation of the Christian Assembly, whose pastor, A. E. Nelson, will be the pastor of the combined churches. Dr. Cave retired from the pastorate of the Non-Sectarian Church about a year ago.

The Christian Assembly, otherwise known as the "Christian Connection" or "Old Christians," is the lineal ecclesiastical descendant of one branch of the movement started by Barton W. Stone. When Stone associated himself with Alexander Campbell and became an advocate of the restoration of primitive Christianity, according to our understanding of it, he carried with him a large number of his former followers, but not all. There are many who, rejecting with him all names but that of Christian and all creeds except the New Testament, maintained that the right of private interpretation forbade them to insist upon immersion as baptism. Their refusal to employ the creed-language of orthodox trinitarianism in defining the divinity of Christ has caused them to be charged with unitarianism—a charge which, though probably correct in specific instances, is on the whole unjust. The same charge was brought against Stone and has often been brought against the Disciples of Christ by those who are unable to conceive of orthodoxy on that point apart from the phraseology of the Nicene creed.

The disuse of the formulas by which the Ecumenical Councils of the fourth and fifth centuries hedged about the divinity of Christ always leaves room for some to let slip the doctrine itself. But Christian history shows that this danger is less to be feared than the peril of losing the living substance of the faith by over-punctilious attention to the creedal forms in which it may be conserved. On the whole, we maintain that the faith has not only not suffered, but has been enriched and has gained a truer emphasis, by being freed from the bondage of the creeds. But there are always those who reveling in their new-found freedom, explain away the words of Scripture and make shipwreck of the faith. So there have gone out from among us those who have found themselves out of sympathy with the warm evangelical faith of the Disciples of Christ; and some, misunderstanding the liberty of which we boast, have come to us only to be disappointed on finding that our liberty is not latitudinarianism.

It remains to be seen how the Christian Assembly and the Non-Sectarian Church will affiliate on better acquaintance with each other. At all events it will be interesting to those who study the history of the Disciples to note the relations between those who refused to come with us two-thirds of a century ago and those who have more recently gone out from us, both in the interests of what they considered liberty.

A Lesson from Russia.

At a Thanksgiving Day service last week the audience was called upon to sing our national anthem, "omitting the third stanza"—oh, that awful third stanza; why do all preachers shun a third stanza as if it were a plague?—and it was sung sitting. Three or four persons felt impelled to show respect to the song and the sentiment which it embodies by rising, but they found themselves in an absurd minority and sat down in confusion. The writer stood and remained standing through the three verses, and would gladly have stood through all four if the terrible third had been sung; not because his patriotism is of any better quality than that of those who sat nor because he wished to make a vain-glorious parade of it, but because he once had an impressive lesson on that point.

It was in Russia. Odessa had been gay with flags all day and was bright with colored lights at night in honor of the czarina's birthday, but the celebration centered chiefly about the beautiful boulevard which runs along the edge of the cliff and looks out over the Black Sea. Everyone was on the boulevard that night, promenading under the acacia trees; but the very focus of the life of the place was the big cafe where, Paris-like, hundreds of patrons sat at little tables in the open air, sipping mild beverages, watching the passing throng, and listening to the music of the excellent military band. Presently the band struck the first notes of the Russian national anthem—we know it as a hymn-tune, and one of the most majestic. Instantly the clatter of the cafe was hushed. Every seated person rose to his feet. Every hat was off. The rustle of the moving crowd died into silence, for the endless stream of promenaders halted. The waiter with your steaming glass of tea stopped on the point of setting it before you, as if turned to stone. The grand old hymn, which meant to those Russians love of country and respect for their empress, was played through to a silent, motionless assembly whose attitude was one of reverence.

No, it was not the tribute of fear, the enforced and superficial respect shown to a tyrant by his terrorized subjects. It was spontaneous and sincere. When the band had played the anthem through, the crowd by its demonstrations of enthusiasm demanded its repetition, and when that was done it had to be played yet again. They did not omit the third verse.

That was the lesson. If the citizens of a Russian town can show such respect for their wretched government, with its vicious principles and worse practice, how much more ought we to give outward tokens of respect for ours, the best on earth, and especially when we are assembled to recall our national blessings and give thanks for them. It was there on the boulevard of Odessa, standing with bared head out of respect to the patriotism of those about, that the writer vowed that henceforth, when the American national hymn is sung or played, he would stand and uncover whether anyone else stands or not.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A few weeks ago, while busily engaged in my duties, I had a call from an uncanny, dark-visaged visitor, who laid his hand on my shoulder familiarly and remarked I would be his prisoner for the next few weeks in his castle at Idlewild. In vain I protested that I was a very busy man, especially at this season of the year, with my head and hands full of plans for making the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one of the leading religious journals of the world for 1902. Smiling grimly, the dark-browed messenger observed that his mandate took no heed of such excuses; that men always talked so; but that the king whom he represented knew a few things about men which they did not know about themselves. There was something in his manner that convinced me that resistance or further argument would be useless, and that there was nothing for me to do but surrender myself to him. Wondering where his castle was located I followed him to the western part of the city, where he entered a familiar looking cottage at Rose Hill, which I saw was my own home. "This lady," he said, pointing to my wife, "will act as my warden and see that you do not escape this castle until you have served out your sentence." So saying, he lost something of his dark visage, and smiling rather benignantly, he bowed himself out and departed. I then knew him to be a messenger of Hygiene, sent forth to execute his law upon one who had in some way violated it, and with what resignation I could summons I bowed to the inevitable.

The sick chamber is not a bad school-room. Patience is a daily lesson. Why fret or murmur? One soon comes to see the uselessness and the sinfulness of it. How long the nights seem, when pain drives sleep from the eyes and slumber from the eyelids! How welcome the early streakings of the morning light! And when the sun comes above the horizon, sends his red beams through the window and begins to paint beautiful pictures on the walls of the sick chamber, it is more lovely than the Louvre! Blessed sun! There is healing in his beams. Life, joy and all the beauty of the morning await his coming. No wonder Christ is called the Sun of Righteousness. What joy and life and hope His coming has brought to this earth. The sick room teaches one not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think. He sees the great world moving on about the same as when he was an active worker, and even the enterprise with which he has been most closely identified goes forward without a perceptible wobble without his hand at the helm. This may be humbling, in a sense, but it is also very comforting. The problem of what is going to become of the cause when those who seem to be pillars shall be removed, is one that has never troubled me much. I have observed that God always has a reserve force of younger men and women coming on who fit into the place of pillars in the churches, as if they were made for the place, as indeed they were. One other lesson the sick room has taught me—a keener sympathy with the large class of shut-ins who are doomed to spend their lives indoors. Hereafter I shall try to hold these in more constant and loving remembrance.

There are some pleasures of the sick room that ought to be mentioned. Modern therapeutics is something very different from what the ancient article was. When I was a boy a fever patient was cupped and bled and physicked and suffered many things from physicians. He begged in vain for water to cool his parched tongue. The doctor sought to kill the disease, but generally killed the patient. Now the intelligent physician comes to assist nature in overcoming the disease. To this end he builds up the strength of the patient and makes him as comfortable as possible. Water? Ice? Yes, all you want. And sweet, juicy oranges to suck, to cool your fevered lips! And ice cream if you wish it! Why it is a positive luxury to be sick, now, as compared with what sickness was under the old regime. And then there is the æsthetic element of the modern sick room which must not be overlooked. Tall, fragrant "American Beauties," the dark-hued Meteor rose, the golden chrysanthemum, the modest violet, all these, representing the loving thought of friends who could be present in no other way, have contributed their share towards banishing the gloom of the sick room, beguiling one into forgetfulness of pain, and emphasizing the value and sacredness of life's friendships. And then letters have come breathing the spirit of Christian sympathy and brotherly love, which have made me feel a stronger desire to be more worthy of such tender solicitude and Christian esteem. "Blest be the tie that binds."

As yet I am only convalescent. To-day the warden of the castle permitted me to walk two blocks in the free air and sunshine. The three weeks' term expires to-morrow, and it is hoped that the sentence of confinement will not be extended much beyond that period. I have enjoyed my sickness as well as could have been expected, thanks to the good physician, to the tender care of warden and nurse, and to all the ministries of love above mentioned, which have made our prison castle more lovely than lordly mansion, or royal palace.

[We regret to state that the prisoner's term has been extended. A relapse and a return of the fever, higher than before, make it impossible to predict with accuracy when his new term will expire.]

We welcome to our family of readers this week several thousand persons who have been readers of the Central Christian Register. The publishers would have been glad to continue that paper if the brethren had desired it. The decision to merge the Register into the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST was not made by the publishers, but was made for the publishers by the constituents. We hope the readers of that paper will feel at home in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family and that our relations may be congenial and permanent. No interest will suffer from lack of representation by reason of this change. We invite all who have been in the habit of sending their church news to the Register to send it to the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST.

Gumption in Preaching

By STEPHEN J. COREY

The bored layman who exclaimed that the human race consisted of three classes: Male, female and ministeriale, was either prejudiced, ignorant, or driven to exaggeration by the tiresome and meaningless humdrum of a repetitious parson—probably the latter. The preachers of the gospel who lack practical wisdom and discretion are a minority, but we all need to take heed lest we fall. There is no other calling in which one is more unconsciously tempted to acquire oddities, eccentricities and strange idiosyncrasies of manner, thought and utterance. Brethren, while we are praying for grace, let us also pray for gumption. The preacher who cannot present the claims of Christ in an unaffected, straightforward, manly way, needs to consider carefully whether God has really called him into that life-work or not. The world has its scent trained for insincerity, and brands the gumptionless preacher with that trade-mark nine times out of ten.

The effect of such an one's preaching ranges all the way from helpless ennui to deep disgust. Many otherwise strong men in the ministry need to watch unto prayer, lest they be open to the accusation of lack of gumption. They may be learned and pious, and yet do all they can to alienate their audience through their manner, style, or lack of thought in little things. The preacher should neglect no legitimate means for seeing himself as others see him. He should never become careless as to what may seem only trifles in his message or pulpit manners. He may lose half his power over an audience by assuming a perfunctory and singsong tone of voice, some meaningless peculiarity of gesture, or a distasteful habit of delivery, all of which covers up his real personality and robs him of the evidences of freshness, earnestness, and originality. Such a man can make no logical complaint when passed by and left alone. Years ago the members of a congregation felt themselves obliged to sit quietly through a long sermon, no matter how much they were bored. It is different now. If they do not like the preaching they will stay at home and read the magazines. The preacher is not responsible for their tastes, neither should he pamper them, but the people can consistently demand practical, consecrated common sense from the ambassador of Christ.

The preacher must use gumption in getting and retaining the attention of his audience. Otherwise half of his congregation may run away from him and still sit complacently in their pews. He must keep the needs of his people in view constantly. He cannot dillydally with a text when they are starving for the bread of life. Too much exegesis may mean exit-Jesus. "Be not one of those learned philologists who chase a panting syllable through time and space." The people should be given what they need, not what the text logically develops. If a part of it is irrelevant, leave it out. There should be no homiletical law, either written or unwritten, which compels a man to take a text anyway. A preacher is not always to be blamed for parting with his text immediately on beginning to preach, but he is to be blamed for taking it at all, if it is a mere perfunctory spring-board from which to turn homiletical somersaults. The pulpit is hardly the place for such acrobatic performances.

Perspiration is not an infallible proof of inspiration, and often a preacher's words would have more lasting effect if spoken in conversational tones, than poured forth with a heat and volume forced and artificial. A fountain can rise no higher than its source. Unless there is fire in the heart to kindle the flame, better not use the bellows. Spurgeon was right when he said: "Come upon consciences with a crash and aim at breaking hard hearts by the power of the spirit, but these require spiritual power; physical energy is not the power of God unto salvation." If the preacher's theme is of vital interest and his preaching has gumption in it, seasoned with grace, the people will listen.

One must enter into the life and needs of the hearers. He who does not get some of his sermons from his people, will give few sermons to them. The man who discovers the ache in the hearts of his flock, and then goes about sensibly to meet it, will be apt to fulfill Lowell's homely eulogy:

"To him 'tis granted
Always to say the word that's wanted,
So that he seems but speaking clearer
The tip-top thought of every hearer."

To meet this hunger of the human heart should be the aim of every preacher. If he studies his text simply to find something to fill up the hour, he is false to his high calling, and some one may go away from his audience never to return—some one who came for bread and received a stone.

Not only should the minister of the gospel put gumption into his sermon and delivery, but also into other parts of the church service. The prayer in the pulpit should receive far more attention than it gets at the hands of some. It takes a good deal of earnestness to counteract the tiring effect of a slouchy petition. So sacred a thing as speaking to the all-wise Father should not be attended to in the shiftless manner which is so often evident. A mere acquaintance would scarcely tolerate in conversation the tiresome platitude and insipid repetition which our heavenly Father sometimes hears in public prayer. We rightly protest against set forms of prayer, but Dr. Edward Payson is to be sympathized with when he says: "Our devotional performances are often cold and spiritless; as the heart did not assist in composing, it disdains to aid in attuning them. They have almost as much of a form as if we made use of liturgy, while the peculiar excellencies of a liturgy are wanting." The prayer of the minister is the prayer of the people. "Let us pray," is his injunction, but his words are a contradiction, unless his prayer deals with the lives and needs of his people. He must be practical. A prayer without gumption is a prayer without unction.

And one word more. Is there anything in the New Testament which demands a monotonous sameness to any part of public worship? How many audiences have you

Office Plums and Political Pulls

By E. B. Bagby

Ex-Chaplain of the House of Representatives

Employment in the government service has many advantages. Not the least is the good fortune of a residence in Washington, the most beautiful of cities. Our streets and public grounds are shaded by 70,000 trees, including 800 varieties and species. There are here 331 large and small parks and reservations, which cover an aggregate of 900 acres. We have the best governed city in the country and Uncle Sam pays nearly one-half the taxes.

The 80,000 public servants who live under the shadow of the capitol dome manage to keep the wheels of the government moving leisurely during their six and a half or eight hours of labor, spend with alacrity their crisp, new bills received twice each month, are not harassed by fear of strikes and have thirty days' vacation to recuperate from physical exhaustion or departmental ennui. The enforcement of the civil service rules has relieved to a great extent the dread of the official ax and the tenure of office under the government is not now more precarious than that of private institutions.

In past years there were many who spoiled brilliant careers by becoming menials in the government service for the political favorites, but now promotions are based largely upon merit. There is a notable example in the case of Mr. Ailes, the assistant secretary of the treasury. He came to Washington a few years ago as a messenger, whose chief duties were to keep the grates replenished with coal in winter and the coolers with ice in summer. He took a course in law and mastered the details of the office and now receives a large salary and is the practical head of one of the most important of the departments.

Tom M., a member of the Ninth street church, graduated about ten years ago from the high school and as nothing better offered, accepted a position as conductor of a street car and took a scientific course at Columbian University. The chief of one of the divisions of the agriculture department called upon his professor and said, "I want a young man in my office and prefer one recommended by you rather than the dependent of some congressman." Our friend Tom was recommended and began work as a laborer on a small salary but was detailed to perform clerical duties. As the quota from the District of Columbia was full he was not eligible for appointment under the civil service. It is very easy though to give an examination so difficult and technical that no one can pass it but some one who had been trained in the department. When all other applicants have ailed then the Washington man is eligible.

This plan, which is often resorted to, was not followed in this case, as President Cleveland heard of the meritorious conduct of the young man, waived the civil service rules and made the appointment. Since this time Tom has received his Master of Science from Columbian University, traveled in every state of the union but five at government expense, become one of the foremost experts in soils in the country and will be earning before he is thirty a salary of $3,000 a year.

In spite of the prejudice against women employees in some of the departments the number of female workers is increasing yearly. The civil service commission had a requisition for an expert in one of the departments. The qualifications were a knowledge of four modern languages, index filing, etc., etc. A young lady who is a member of the Vermont avenue church was the only one who passed the examination and was far ahead of any other applicant. She did not receive the appointment. Upon inquiry from the commission the head of the department replied that the duties required the appointee to climb a ladder and a young woman was not eligible. By such subterfuges this department keeps the women out. But in others they get in, as there are now 8,000 in the government offices. Of these 903 draw salaries ranging from $1,000 to $1,800 a year. The remaining 7,000 draw from $600 to $900 per annum. The women in the departments, unlike the preachers, never reach the dead line. I do not know how the reporter found out, but the Evening Star states that 35 per cent. of the female employees are past middle life and 25 per cent. are over fifty years of age, and that there are hundreds who have passed their three score and ten.

While Uncle Sam is lenient with his servants there are some offenses, such as drunkenness, which are not tolerated. Last week a young man was proven guilty of a gross sin and though he went directly from the police court to the department his dismissal was awaiting him upon his arrival. A clerk who reported himself as sick when he was in fact participating in a tennis tournament was summarily dismissed. A young lady was repeatedly told to desist from talking during office hours. She continued her chattering and was discharged. Refusal to pay honest debts or to provide for the support of family will cause dismissal. It is understood that women who marry will not be kept upon the pay roll.

While the political pull has been on the wane since the introduction of civil service its power is by no means abolished.

Casey wanted a government position and though his "influence" was strong they were blocked by the fact that the position sought should be occupied by a lawyer and Casey was no lawyer. But one of his friends was the examiner. "Well, Casey, what do you know about law anyway?" "To tell the truth," replied the candidate, "I don't know a single thing."

The examiner thereupon made affidavit as follows, "I have examined Mr. Casey as to his knowledge of the law, and, to the best of my information and belief, he has answered the questions entirely correctly." Casey was appointed. We cannot vouch for the truth of this story, but we know that where there is a powerful congressional will a way is generally found. Influence, however, is not so potent in obtaining appointments as in securing promotions. Heads of departments deem it expedient to keep on good terms with the men on Capitol Hill who devise the laws that govern the department and who secure the necessary appropriations. So it sometimes happens that the work is done by faithful, efficient men who are outranked by the "shirkers, hall-runners, make-believe busy, superannuated and incompetent clerks" who have "a pull."

There are hundreds of young men who enter the government service in order that they may qualify themselves for professional work.

The short hours of labor afford them time to study and exceptional advantages are offered here in the professional schools. Students in law and diplomacy can attend the sessions of the district and supreme courts, have access to the supreme court and state libraries, can witness the practical workings of congress as the laws of the country are made and receive instruction from lecturers who occupy the highest official positions. Students of medicine and dentistry are afforded the privileges of the Army Medical Museum, whose collections of anatomical and pathological specimens are superior to those of any institution in this country or in Europe. At the patent office are models of all kinds of dental instruments. In the national museum the most complete collection of materia medica in the world is on exhibition.

The writer would be glad to tell every one of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST's readers how to get a political pull to secure one of these office plums. He cannot do this, but will be pleased, if you discover the way yourself and come to Washington, to direct you to the most delightful church home to be found anywhere.

CHINESE TOPICS

By WILLIAM REMFERY HUNT

Dusting the Capitol.

There is a great bustle in Peking just now, and all the rabble of the imperial palace are busy sweeping the pavilions of the dust and dirt of the sacrilegious invaders, who in the forms of the "eight foreign-deviled-bannered legions" did such devastation there last year when the court had gone on a vacation(?). Such is the gist of the imperial messages which come thick and fast by the official couriers, who are running like a set of wild cowboys over the country and scaring up the people to clear the roads, and to make way for the royal equipage as it passes—as a blind to the eyes of the people—back to Peking in the greatest state and pageantry that the mandarin can tax on the masses.

Educational Reform.

There is to be some reform despite the fact that these Augean stables should be flushed by having the hose turned on them by the Herculean power of an angry Kaiser with his confederates in the armies of Japan, Europe and America. We learn from the edicts that the curriculum for the future annual and triennial examinations is to be entirely changed. The eight sectioned effete essay competition is abolished. Discourses and theses in philosophy, law, international law, medicine, agriculture, literature and the practical sciences will be the order of the schools. Already the schools are being instituted and those that were brave enough to start early in the struggle for reform, and which were closed during the turmoils and travail of the past year, are to be re-equipped and endowed with the best that can be procured. Advance Sinim!

Missions Reinstated.

The terrible persecutions of the imperial Boxer campaign in the provinces of Shansi, Shensi, Chili and Shantung, resulting in the almost annihilation of the missions in that region, have been somewhat atoned for in the fact that the court has taken special pains to see that the missions in those regions have been assisted in gaining all the prestige they had (and more) before the massacres began. One missionary party was publicly received in Tai Yuen Fu, the scene of the beheading of fifty-five British and American missionaries in July, 1900. They were escorted officially to the scene of the executions and had the joy of meeting with a number of native Christians who had escaped death by hiding.

A Christian Burial Ground in Shansi.

They had the painful and pathetic experience of finding the bodies of at least more than fifty of their martyred comrades and in the presence of an immense concourse of heathen officials and the populace, had the sad privilege of committing to the dust the remains of these brave and holy ones "of whom the world was not worthy." The Peking court had ordered coffins to be made and sent to the place. They had also prepared the sites of the destroyed mission buildings to be the large cemetery to be used exclusively for the foreign missionaries who thus died and who may die in the future. It was a never to be forgotten day. All the missions in that region are invited back again, but it is even yet considered unwise for the wives and dear little children to return to those scenes. Humanity is very human and very naturally the sweetest and best of a Christian and cultivated motherhood shrinks from the thought of a repetition of those awful days and nights preceding the cruel and heartless martyrdoms of those dear ones and their own loved little ones a little more than a year ago.

Convention Notes.

The thirteenth annual convention of the workers of the F. C. M. S. met in Nanking Oct. 9-13. The welcome presence of our own missionary comrade, F. M. Rains, and his wife, was a feature of great and practical interest. In the presidential address W. Remfry Hunt gave him a right royal welcome from the workers. He attended all the sessions and by his intensely sympathetic and large and practical experience aided in so many vital points. The visit here will do him and the whole of the missions much good. He is one of God's noblemen, and the message of cheer and hope, and his words lit with the consuming fire of love and devotion to the world-wide missionary enterprise, will long live in our hearts and often cheer and inspire us, when he is back again opening with his prayerful and consecrated colleague, Archibald McLean, the letters that come from the Lord's people to the treasury at Box 884, Cincinnati. W. P. Bentley's paper was on a timely topic. He treated of "How can we best develop our educational work so as to make it more effective?" He pled for a larger equipment and showed in a masterly treatment of his theme, his own grasp, not of a mere idea, but of a fact and how to demonstrate it. The brotherhood will hear more of the educational call yet.

Dr. W. E. Macklin's address was characteristic. The Doctor spoke on "Fields and Forces" and gave a most eloquent appeal for the best and ablest men to go to the new and strategic points that are opening up all around us. He spoke of the call for literature, science, social reform, and the unique opportunity of entering the newly opened doors with the Christian light now, China is on the pivot of reform, we must give them Christian education or they will get the husk of civilization, as did Japan, and throw away the kernel in the delayed offer of Christianity. T. J. Arnold spoke on "The Farm Colony Idea" as an evangelizing agency and drew a picture of how to work it. There were other items all of which dealt with the science and art of running successful, self-reliant, strong, and self-supporting churches. F. E. Meigs and James Ware gave us fine "home trip" talks, Bro. Meigs taking us along with him to the Orient across Europe and on to America. He always gives us a treat in these home trip talks and although they are really prime we will not hurry them home for a good while yet—he and Mrs. Meigs and the children look well and are in harness and at work. James Ware was at his best and took us around the world by stages, he told us of the conditions among the churches at home, and of his helpful experiences among the brotherhood in America, speaking with evident emotion when he spoke so appreciatingly of the kindnesses showed him and his two daughters at Hiram, and of the fatherly help and attentions of our own veterans there in Mr. and Mrs. Hertzog.

New Missionaries.

Mrs. Ethel B. Garrett welcomed the new missionaries in the warmest and most enthusiastic terms. Miss Nellie Daugherty, of Eureka College, was with us and told us of the joy with which she was entering on her work. She said she felt at home among the missionaries already and looked forward with faith and hope to her future career. She is of the right sort. God be praised for the good judgment of the board in sending us the cream of the culture, grace and consecration of our educated youth. We are looking forward with much pleasure to greeting Bro. and Sister Cory from Honolulu and also Miss Edna Dale from Drake University. These new missionaries will be a real reinforcement, and they come to us in the joy and zeal of a devoted and spirited vigor. There will be some additions to the new fields, and other places occupied. Bro. and Sister Garrett will likely go to open up a new work, or rather to establish the work, at Tung Cheo between Nanking and Shanghai.

F. M. Rains Preaches to Chinese.

On Lord's day the services for the native church at the Central Christian church in Nanking were crowded. The communion service was led by W. R. Hunt, the Sunday-school superintended by the pastor, T. J. Arnold; the sermon to the Chinese was preached by F. M. Rains and interpreted by the pastor. Bro. Rains gave a strong, clear, and practical discourse from Acts 2:37-38, and dealt with the facts, commands and privileges of the gospel. It was listened to with rapt attention. His short, telling sentences were aptly and forcefully translated, and the lessons will be treasured up a long time.

After the convention Bro. and Sister Rains arranged to visit Chu Cheo. They had a brilliant reception. The native Christians met them outside the city with 10,000 firecrackers, and these kept up an incessant din all the way to the mission compound. This showed what "a hot reception" these glad believers gave them. They rode the journey of 45 miles in sedan chairs. The officials all turned out to greet them, having heard some enthusiastic reporter say that "a wonderful imperial commissioner from the highest empire" was coming to see the missions. We were cheered and helped in all our work, plans and homes by the spirit, love and brightness of our brother's visit to Chu Cheo.

Lhamon's Studies in Acts.

We are using this valuable book in Chinese, in fact, making an adapted translation of it. It is the best thing in its line that could be used in all our foreign fields. Its condensation, analysis and clearness makes it classic and invaluable. Some day we shall have a library of our own literature in this awakening mission field where the tare seeds of sectarianism are already showing vitality. Williams, Meigs, Macklin, Saw, Bentley, Arnold, Ware and the writer have already done something in this field of literature.

The Old Book In The New Crucible

By J. J. HALEY.

XI. Crucible of Archaeology.

The most effective argument now used against the literary criticism of the Old Testament is to point to the history of Homeric and other criticisms of ancient documents. It is effective because its force is easily felt and it is unanswerable. Dr. Peters, of New York, contributed a paper to a recent issue of the New World, summarized in the Expository Times, on "Archæology and the Higher Criticism," in which he pointed out that not only in the criticism of Homer, but also the Veda, of Buddhism, of the Avestan literature, and even of the New Testament, there had taken place "a most remarkable change of view with regard to the value of subjective or literary evidence alone." As the statement of Dr. Peters is the latest and most up-to-date scientific estimate of the facts relating to archæology and the Bible, I will further summarize it for the purposes of this serial.

A quarter of a century ago the Wolfian theory as to the origin of the Homeric poems was still extremely influential. The theory, which spoke of the Iliad as made up of a great number of smaller poems gathered into one at a later time, was supported by archæological evidence, or what was then taken for archæological evidence. It was claimed, for example, that if writing was not absolutely unknown it was not possible then to write poems of such length, and no man could have composed and carried them in his mind without writing them down. It was also held that the historic atmosphere of the poems was incorrect. The very existence of Troy was denied, and in some quarters there was an inclination to resolve the Homeric poems, as a whole, into Sun myths. Then Schliemann began to excavate. Beneath the mounds of Hissarlik old Troy was found. It had even been destroyed and afterwards rebuilt. Further discoveries at Hissarlik, Mycenæ and elsewhere showed that the descriptions of these cities in the Homeric poems were historically correct, and rested upon sound contemporaneous evidence or personal knowledge. It was also proved that writing was known and commonly practiced at a much earlier period than formerly was supposed. The difficulties in the way of the antiquity and integrity of the Homeric poems had been created by the critics themselves. They were once more accepted as the work of one man and the product of an early age.

Roman history has passed through a similar critical experience. At first the traditional history of Rome, with Romulus and Remus suckled by the wolf, was accepted literally. These stories were next explained from a rationalistic point of view, the wolf being a symbol of the fierce training of the lads, and such like. Then came the period of extreme skepticism. All of the early narratives were discarded. Roman history began at the close of the kingdom, or even a little later. Before that there was nothing historical or reliable. Then Lanciani began his excavations. Aided by his results Mommsen worked over the literary material anew. Roman history has been reconstructed and carried back almost to the days of Romulus and Remus.

The study of the Veda, of the Avestan literature, of Buddhism, has passed through a similar history. Once the tendency was to bring dates down to a late time, to deny reputed authorship, or everywhere to find composite authorship, and to reconstruct texts with minute subdivision. To-day the inclination among Indian and Persian scholars is to push back the dates of the sacred books, to accept the traditional views in a modified form, and to maintain unity of authorship. And over the New Testament we know how the pendulum swung forward once and how far it has swung back in our day. In Old Testament criticism our author thinks the tendency most decisively is in the other direction. There is no likelihood of the study of the Old Testament returning to the old paths. Back from the extreme subdivision of the Old Testament books and the very late dating of so much of its literature he believes we shall go. But we have not returned to the old paths in respect of any of the subjects mentioned, and he believes that least of all shall we do so in respect of the Old Testament.

The nearest to a complete return has been made in the case of Homer. But the Homeric poems are not the same as they were before the Wolfian hypothesis was sprung upon them. Schliemann claimed that he had proved Homer accurate to the minutest historical reference. Further research showed that it is only in respect of the general atmosphere of the poems that they can be described as historical; they are not, and probably were never meant to be, sober history throughout. Mommsen and Lanciani have not taught us to read Roman history as our fathers did. Rome has a far-back story, it is true, but Livy is not reliable in detail. In respect of the Avesta, men are holding their hand till the evidence is fuller. And even in the field of the New Testament it is not as many of us would like it. "There is an inclination," says Dr. Peters, "among extreme conservatives to be jubilant over Harnack's results, but in reality Harnack renders the old conservative view impossible, quite as much as the extreme radical position of Baur and the later critics who were more or less influenced by the Tubingen school of criticism."

There are two great reasons why the swing of the pendulum is likely to be least in the criticism of the Old Testament. One is that only extreme critics have carried that criticism too far. Strong men, in the fullness of knowledge and in the fearlessness of the truth, stand firm midway. Dillmann is named as a great scholar who finds in the microscopic analysis of extreme critics an "hypothesis of embarrassment," and Prof. Driver who, "speaking of the Yahwistic and Elohist narratives in the Pentateuch (J. and E.), holds that even in the matter of the lines of demarkation between these and the parts assigned to the redactor, we can seldom claim more than a relative improbability." Many able critics have protested against the minute subdividing of the text and the attempt to crowd the time of the Maccabees with the flower of Israel's literature. There is another reason, and a greater, why the Old Testament is likely in the main to stand. In other cases the return of the pendulum has been chiefly due to the findings of archæology. Here, says Dr. Peters, archæology has been most talked about; it has had but little influence.

He does not mean that biblical archæology has done nothing for us; he only means that it has done little to reverse the results of literary criticism. The actual gains of recent archæology are great and many. One of great significance is indicated. Greece, Asia Minor, Palestine, Egypt, Babylonia, have all contributed to it; it is the proof that in these lands there existed civilized nations—in some cases highly civilized nations—from at least 4,000 years before Christ. Great empires were established in those early times. And they did not stand apart; free communication was held between one empire and another. "The whole of Western Asia, with Egypt and the Islands of the Sea, was in the sphere of civilization long before the time of Abraham."

What have we obtained from these countries taken separately? Some customs alluded to in Genesis have been made clearer from comparison with Egyptian life. We have not yet found in Egypt a single Hebrew name, however, or had a single occurrence in the Bible incontestably established from this source of evidence. In one inscription the name of Israel has been found, but it has thrown our knowledge into confusion. For if Menephtah was the Pharaoh of the exodus, how is it that in the tablet discovered by Petrie he can speak of the people of Israel as "spoiled" in Palestine? Aside from the ambiguity and doubtful interpretation of this inscription there is no biblical fact as little in need of confirmation as the sojourn of Israel in Egypt.

Certainly the Tel el-Amarna tablets have furnished a great amount of extremely valuable knowledge regarding the condition and daily life of the nations that had to do with Egypt in the fourteenth century before Christ. They tell us that Jerusalem was already a center of worship and known by that name; that almost all the other prominent cities which are mentioned in the Bible were already in existence; that the people of Palestine spoke a language either identical with, or closely akin to, Hebrew; and that Babylonian was then the medium of official correspondence. But none of these things touch the higher criticism, nor do they overthrow the traditional belief regarding the composition of the Old Testament. It is also a fact that no reference has hitherto been found on any Egyptian monument to the events in the later history of Israel in which Egypt plays a part.

In Phœnician the most important discovery is perhaps the Marseilles sacrificial tablet. Other inscriptions have been found in various places. They show us the close relation between Hebrew and Phœnician, both in language and in script, and they illustrate some of the antiquities of the Bible, as the titles given to priests and judges, or the names belonging to the divinities. In Moab the great discovery is the Mesha stone, which gives us a new view of the relation between Moab and Israel about the time of Ahab, "confirming, and to some extent "correcting, the statements of the Bible"; and that is all. From northern Syria light has been thrown on the geography of David's conquests, and the narrative in the Bible confirmed. Some knowledge has also been gathered, as we have already seen in these papers, of that important people, the Hittites, and many of their inscriptions have been found, if only we could learn to read them. Discovery has revolutionized our views of the early history of Arabia, but done nothing for the Bible or against it.

It is from Assyria and Babylon that the great finds have come. "We have the Babylonian form of the flood story almost complete, which we are able to compare with the Hebrew version; we have the story of the creation, and perhaps that of Adam and Eve; we have the Tower of Babel, and much more than all that." These discoveries have placed much material in our hands for the comparative study of Semitic religion. They have established an intimate connection between Babylonia and Palestine from about 4000 B. C. to 1300 B. C. This connection then lost is again picked up in the time of Ahab, and it continues thereafter till Assyria and Babylonia were no more. Now these discoveries, says Dr. Peters, have not been without effect on the criticism of the Old Testament, but they face both ways, he tells us. Sometimes they support tradition, sometimes they flatly contradict it. They have established the substantial accuracy of the books of Samuel and of Kings; but they have shown both Daniel and Esther to be unhistorical. Of course, these heathen inscriptions do not utter the last word for either Daniel or Esther.

Last of all there is Palestine, the land of promise, it is the land of promise still. The fulfilment as yet has been meagre. "Beyond the Siloam inscription, the inscription from the temple barrier of the New Testament period, a fragment of an inscribed tablet from Lachish, and an insignificant seal or two, nothing has yet been found in Palestine." Is all this, then, an encouragement to the literary critics to neglect archæology? Far from it. The critics have themselves already recognized the necessity of knowing what archæology has done at every step. For although the findings of the spade have not seriously displaced the findings of the pen—at least of the responsible and moderate pen—yet there is no discovery that can be ignored; and sometimes the minute discoveries open the way to important and direct critical results. There can be no doubt, surveying the whole field of archæological discovery and investigation so far, that the substantial historical verity and accuracy of the old Book has been for the most part confirmed, and the cause of legitimate criticism has not been injured.

closed every day in the week, and every week in the year; but if we cannot have that, surely we should close them on Sunday.

Dr. David H. Greer, rector of St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal church, New York, was elected a few days ago to the bishopric of western Massachusetts but has declined the election on the ground that he owes a life duty to the church where he now preaches, and chief among his parishioners to the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, who together with his mother founded the large institutional establishment on Forty-second street, known as St. Bartholomew's Parish House. It cost $600,000, and together with other charities of the same church necessitates an annual outlay of $200,000. In these features it is said to be the largest church in the world. And Dr. Greer does not feel that he can leave the church and do justice to this great work.

In the same week the diocese of Long Island elected Dr. Frederick Burgess, rector of Grace church, Brooklyn, to succeed the late Bishop Littlejohn in that important bishopric. The contest in the election was long and bitter. Drs. S. D. McConnell, Henry C. Swentzell, R. F. Alsop and others were candidates before the convention. The voting began at 2 P. M. and continued until 12:45 A. M., when Dr. Burgess was elected. He will make his residence at Garden City and preside over the cathedral endowed by the late A. T. Stewart and from that seat of ecclesiastical power will administer the affairs of the Episcopal churches of Long Island.

New York Letter

By S. T. WILLIS

New York city and state is in the midst of a serious agitation over the question of the Sunday saloon. "The Raines Law Hotel" is one of the greatest curses ever fastened upon the decent law abiding citizens of any community. Under this law the saloons in New York city have been turned into "hotels" which are open to guests in transit (?) on Sunday, and they also foster and protect one of the worst social evils known to human society. They evade the law and run without molestation on Sunday. The politicians, the shyster lawyers, the foreigners who have no regard for our institutions, the saloon-keepers, the thieves and thugs, and the prostitutes, all join in a general clamor for a constitutional amendment for an open saloon on Sunday. The Christian people as a rule stand for no legal Sunday saloon. Some few preachers in the city have declared in favor of local option. But while this might work well in the smaller cities of the state it is very doubtful if either borough in New York city would vote in favor of no open Sunday saloon. The un-Christian and foreign elements in the metropolis are so large that it is exceedingly doubtful whether we could close the saloons under local option law. But the worst feature of all is the fact that Mr. Low, mayor-elect, and Mr. Jerome, district attorney-elect, are both agitating the question and favor "the opening of the saloon on Sunday after church hours"—that is, after 2 P. M. It is to be sincerely hoped that the Raines Law Hotel can be abolished and that we can close and keep closed all the saloons on the Lord's day. If this cannot be done we shall pay dearly for the poverty, drunk-ness, domestic sorrows, anarchy, irreligion and crime of every sort that will overtake us as a city and a state.

It has been said repeatedly by men of reputation in our city that we cannot close the saloons on Sunday. Some preachers have said this. Rainsford (Low's pastor), Parkhurst and a few others have made such statements. If these gentlemen are correct the city of New York should no longer boast of greatness and power but should confess with humiliation and shame her impotency and lack of self-governing power. When President Roosevelt was our police commissioner he demonstrated that the saloons could be closed on Sunday and that the law could be enforced. When some of the weak-kneed ones said, "Mr. Roosevelt, it is a bad law that calls for closed saloons on Sunday," he said, "It is not my business to sit in judgment on the law, but to execute it." If it is a bad law the best way to prove it so is to execute it and let its legitimate fruits condemn it. And if it is a good law it should be fearlessly executed for the good that will result from it. This certainly is right in principle and sound in philosophy. Mr. Jacob Riis, the famous author of "How the Other Half Lives," in an address at Carnegie Hall last Sunday afternoon, speaking on "Theodore Roosevelt as an Example of Citizenship," said Roosevelt was made great by an axiom, "It is better to be faithful than famous," and to this principle he adhered in all his duties. It was this idea of faithfulness that made Roosevelt fearless in the discharge of his task as police commissioner in New York. The saloons should be "Segregation" seemed to be the dominant note in the addresses and general discussions on almshouse administration at the recent sessions of the State Charities Conference in this city. It was shown that much has already been done in the way of separating the well from the diseased, the sane from the insane and the good from the criminal. But many improvements of this kind are still to be made. More and more this principle of separating the inmates of charitable and penal institutions into classes according to their conditions and needs is becoming recognized as vital to the good of the institutions, and also fundamental in the personal well-being of the individuals. Just at this point public charity has so often failed, because the almoners of such looked upon all applicants for aid as if they were alike. Individual cases demand individual attention, for people can no more be dealt with en masse successfully in matters of charity than in matters of education and religion. In order to make public beneficence accomplish the greatest good it must be administered individually and personally, and so both the giver and receiver is blessed.

Galileo's book proclaiming that the earth moves and Dante's treatise on monarchy have recently been removed from the Index Expurgatorius, the list of books which are prohibited by the Roman Catholic Church. So Dante has at last been forgiven for being against the pope in a question of mediæval politics, and it has been officially admitted that the doctrine that the earth moves around the sun is not "dangerous to faith." This proves Galileo's original contention—that the world does move.

[Fighting the Terror.

The Reverend Michael Baxter in England, and Lieutenant Totten in America, with many of their fledgeling disciples, are evermore assuring us, for our admonition, if not for our comfort, that the "everlasting smash" of this poor old Terra is but postponed a little while through some almanac anomaly. I love the study of prophecy, and especially enjoy the learned and reasonable writings of Elliott in his great "Horæ Apolopyticae"; of the "Parousia" of our Dr. Russell (not your Russell with his "Millennial Dawn"); of Grattan Guinness, in his beautiful book, the "Approaching End of the Age"; and of the erudite Prof. Birks in his delightful little volumes. It does seem to me that our younger ministers too lightly ignore this grand department of study, seeing that all the Bible seems to depend chiefly on the prophetic pivot. I am aware that the whole realm of eschatology is neglected partly because prophecy has been parodied by fanatical soothsaying. Most of my ministerial acquaintances seem to assume that the caricatures by the modern soothsayers of certain types render their own wilful ignorance laudable; and generally they boast aloud in their fraternal meetings that they have ceased to give attention to the colossal conundrum. With this theological contempt I have no sympathy. It is akin to the elimination of the two Christian ordinances by the Quakers on the pretext that these have done more harm than good because of their wholesale distortion. My purpose at the moment is to point out that the Baxterians and Tottenites have just now a splendid opportunity of adducing portents. Events have so very unkindly put to confusion these vaticinators (for everything that was to happen at certain clock-ticks and dial-shadows refused to come off) that they are famishing for some evidence that they are worthy of a hearing. Regrettable incidents are furnishing dark omens. The bubonic plague has set its black foot on our coasts. For weeks cases have been watched in Glasgow and in Liverpool, and now a suspected instance has occurred at Hammersmith in West London. All through this autumn we have been alarmed by the spread through great metropolitan districts of a severe double epidemic of smallpox and scarlet fever. Add to this trouble the symptoms of a decline in trade after long prosperity; the political confusion which is coming on Parliament and the government; and the unexpected failure of our generals in South Africa to bring the war to an end; and it will be seen that the winter is commencing with dark days. But there is one thing ever to be observed in the British people. They are more sensible, reasonable and patient in adversity than in prosperity. The latter experience, indeed, seems to corrupt all nations alike. If troubles are ahead, the discipline is sorely needed. Meantime, great efforts are being made to cope with the evils that plainly threaten the community. The great hospitals are being staffed with an increased number of officials. Money is being freely subscribed and the thousands of sufferers who cannot be well cared for at home are isolated.

Is This too Good to be True?

Though such a matter scarcely comes within the purview of my letter, I cannot refrain from referring to a rumor which is exciting new hopes in many a home. Lady Anne Masham has issued a pamphlet directing the attention of cancer specialists to the wonderful cure of her sister, Lady Margaret Masham, who was in a dying condition from cancer in the throat. On the advice of a friend compresses of violet leaves were applied. Within a week a marvelous cure was effected. That the disease was really cancer is vouched for by the head of the Pathological Society and now the physicians in the cancer hospital at Brompton are considering this new alleged remedy. So many assertions have from time to time been made that a cure for this appalling curse of the race has been discovered that few people will be quick to credit any fresh report. And yet, most of us think that somewhere on God's earth the Creator has provided an antidote for every ill.

A Christian Senior Wrangler.

The most coveted scientific prize in the world amongst young university students is the senior wranglership at Cambridge. The young graduate who in any year gains this academic honor is regarded as the premier student of the nation, and he is sure of a distinguished career if he chooses to continue his scientific application. By one of the most brilliant of senior wranglers a remarkable task has been accomplished. We might have expected this to be in the line of scientific research, especially mathematical; but this accomplished scholar, the Rev. T. G. Manley, has chosen to devote his life to Christian work in the foreign field as an agent in India of the Church Missionary Society. The society has just published a lecture given by him at Simla, in India, during the summer. His field is in the Northwest Provinces of India. I should therefore think that he is known to our own scientific brother in that region, Dr. Durand, of Mussoorie. They would be kindred spirits.

The Views of Modern Science.

It is gratifying enough to see how the gospel of Christ thus claims and receives the devoted allegiance of a foremost young scholar of one of our highest seats of learning; but something far beyond his personal adhesion is illustrated in this invaluable pamphlet. I wish that thousands of copies of it could go through America as well as England. It is entitled, "The View of Modern Science." Mr. Manley has been collecting from many of the most famous English scientists their own opinions about Christianity. The result is a collation of intellectual sentiment in favor of the religion of Jesus which is simply overwhelming. This pamphlet has made a sensation in the poor little infidel camp, which now is tenanted only by pygmies, as in the grim days of Hume, Bolingbroke, Voltaire and Paine all the skeptics were colossi. There were giants in those days. The grand intellects are now on the side of evangelicalism. So it seems to be triumphantly established by this extraordinary lecture-pamphlet, which is worth a whole library of books on evidences, because people in the mass cannot contend with a logical array of propositional argument, and also because an ounce of personal testimony from an esteemed source is worth a ton of abstract disquisition.

Is Science Now for Christ?

The most wonderful phenomenon of this age is the growth of science. That we all know; but we do not all clearly understand whether science is for or against faith. Many people, especially many bright and eager young students, imagine that science is favoring skepticism rather than belief in the divine revelation of spiritual truth. They are totally mistaken. Mr. Manley gives us the benefit of the direct communications to himself, in answer to his inquiries, of the most brilliant of our living philosophers. The chief scientific institution in the world is the Royal Society, to the fellowship of which only genuine experts are admitted. I have not in all my life's observation read any such accumulation of personal testimony. The recent president, Sir William Huggins, confesses himself what in fact we all know him to be, an earnest Christian character. Lord Kelvin, a former president, says, "I have many times in my published writings within the last fifty years, expressed myself decidedly on purely scientific grounds against materialistic and atheistic doctrines. I may add that I am a member of the Church of England and of the Episcopal Church of Scotland." Now, Lord Kelvin is reckoned the greatest scientist living in the world. But the foremost of British medical men, Lord Lister, also a former president of the Royal Society, comes forward in the same manner of affirmation, saying, "If you think that any advantage would arise from your saying that you know as a matter of fact that I am a believer in the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, there can be no objection to your doing so." To these three, the last who have been marked out for the greatest honor that can be bestowed in the scientific world, Mr. Manley adds the names of two others who have recently held the presidency of the Royal Society, Sir George Stokes and Professor Michael Foster.

The Triumph of the Spiritual.

"Here, then," says Mr. Manley, "we have five men (and I venture to say that no greater names can be mentioned of living men of science), all of them ready to stand up and confess Christ as their Lord and Savior before men, and I ask, where is the man of science who professes to be an agnostic or atheist whose name can be put above them?" There is much remaining that is equally remarkable, and I purpose to continue in my next letter the treatment of this tempting momentous topic.

WILLIAM DURBAN.

London, Nov. 17.

Superstition up to date comes to a climax in the new religion which Dr. Newbrough, of New York (strange it was not Boston), claims was revealed to him through a typewriter. Old-fashioned spiritualistic slate-writing is beaten to a standstill. But who ever thought Bangs's "Enchanted Typewriter" would turn up as the founder of a new cult.

Ministerial Relief.

The total contribution to our General Fund last year was $6,450.06. This is very complimentary to those making this contribution. With this sum we did much good, but it was far too small for the demands of this work, and only a pittance from so great a people. It would make an average of less than six cents each for the Disciples in Indiana alone; about the same average for those in Kentucky; only about five cents each for those in Illinois; and less than four cents for those in Missouri. Either one of these states is quite able to furnish the entire amount of assistance given to the fifty-six persons on our list last year.

When we remember that this very business of caring for the old preachers is one of the essential features of what we call "Our Plea," and when we stand face to face with the facts, first, that besides those to whom we gave only a meager assistance, there were sixteen others equally worthy who asked for help, to whom we held out only empty hands, and second, that we are a people nearly a million and a half strong, it seems to me that we might question our understanding of, or our loyalty to, that plea. An average of less than a half cent each for the care of the worn-out, helpless old preachers of the gospel is too insignificant for any purpose except to show our want of understanding or appreciation.

These things are not said in the spirit of criticism, but for the sake of emphasizing the sad fact that we are not doing our duty in this matter. Neither do I complain, for I have the utmost confidence in this most excellent brotherhood. My faith in the integrity of the Disciples of Christ is unbounded. I believe in them. An understanding of the principle, importance, and the needs of ministerial relief will insure the proper care of the old soldiers needing help. But, brethren of the ministry, YOU must take knowledge of these things, and YOU must lay them upon the hearts of your people. As is the ministry, so will the church be. Upon leadership depends the success of any cause, the victory in any battle.

Let every preacher in the brotherhood give the time of one well prepared sermon, properly announced, to this subject, let him from Acts 4, Rom. 15, and other scriptures, show the relation of this work to the plea of the disciples, and from the report which has been, or will be, sent him on application, show the importance and need thereof, ask his people to have fellowship in the most loving and tender ministry in the church of Christ, let this be done only once each year, and I promise here and now that not one of the old preachers or widows will ever again suffer want. What a joy this would bring to those who have done us such noble service. How much of the sunshine of love it would carry into their homes, and how greatly it would lighten the burden of their souls. And still again, how glad would be the hearts of those having part in this holy ministry.

Third Lord's day in December is the time. This day belongs to the "Old Guard," and every preacher in the brotherhood should be on guard to serve this interest. No preacher can afford to do himself or these needy saints the injustice of neglecting this day or some day set apart by him especially for this purpose. From our last annual report any one may prepare himself to present this work, and he that does it will get closer to the hearts of his people, and he will do them good.

(Do not think of this as a charity work. We are not asking for charity. Shame on the thought. These needy fathers and mothers are not charity patients.) Their relation to the "Plea" we make exalts them to the dignity of the martyr's place. They are the King's loyal and honored subjects; the heroes and heroines of the cross; living examples of a living sacrifice upon the altar of the nineteenth century movement for the restoration of the New Testament church. And in this ministry of love is to be found one of the best expressions of the spirit of the Master in the disciple. This is one of God's calls upon his people. Nearly twenty applications are now on file in this office awaiting your response to this appeal. May we not hear from you in the very near future? Be it understood, brethren, that ministerial relief has the right of way now, and should continue to have until you have made your contribution to its needs.

Oh Church of Christ, awake! This is your business, your duty, your privilege. The board of ministerial relief is your willing servant. With your contribution in the hand of this servant will you not reach out to these suffering saints? "Laborers together with God" in what, my brethren, in what? Caring for the wounded upon the field of battle and carrying the sunshine of a brother's love to a dying soldier of the cross are no less soldierly acts, and the duty of a "good soldier of Jesus Christ," than to stand in the forefront of the conflict. What the Father wills do with pleasure. "Thy servant heareth."

B. B. Tyler's Letter

Yes, I have read Prof. H. L. Willett's book, and will gladly tell you what I think of it.

The title of the book is "Our Plea for Union and the Present Crisis." It has 139 pages. It bears the imprint of the Christian Century Company, 358 Dearborn street, Chicago. I paid 75 cents for my copy. It is well worth the money. Would I advise you to buy the book? Indeed I would! It is a good book. It will pay you to read it.

The purpose of the writer is "to consider certain judgments which have apparently been formed in the minds of our religious neighbors regarding us." It is well to have the purpose of an author clearly before the mind when one reads a book. In this case, fortunately, the purpose is definitely stated. It is unfair to quote, as the convictions of the writer, "What our friends have to say." The table of contents, I believe, will whet your appetite. Here are the chapter headings: "Are the Disciples a Denomination?" "Have We the Sect Spirit?" "Do the Disciples Desire Christian Union?" "Do We Wish the Apostolic Christianity Restored?" "What Do We More Than Others?" "What Constitutes a Sectarian Attitude?" "A Historic Instance;" "The Two Paths;" "Denominational Sentiment;" "Apostolic Christianity—The Sources;" "Apostolic Christianity—The Doctrine;" "Apostolic Christianity—The Ordinances;" "Apostolic Christianity—The Spirit;" "The Form of Christian Union;" "Christianity—An Appeal."

These chapter headings are, to me, worth the price of the book. They suggest a series of sermons on what we call "first principles." It will not surprise me to hear that you are preaching on the topics above suggested. Such sermons are needed. I do not mean to intimate that you will say what Dr. Willett says. At some points you probably will not agree with his expressed convictions; but he has made, even in these chapter headings, helpful suggestions—much more has he done so in the chapters themselves. The time is now upon us when there ought to ring out from ten thousand pulpits a proclamation of the Christianity of the Christ—its teachings, its ordinances, its spirit. This the people need; for it they are ready. There is nothing so new, so refreshing, so stimulating.

Let us look at some of these chapter headings. "Are the Disciples a Denomination?" The answer to this question depends on what is meant by the word "denomination." Here is what Mr. Willett says: "A denomination, as the word has come to be used in the ecclesiastical vocabulary, is a group of people with a body of beliefs differentiating it more or less clearly from other religious bodies; with a name, or perhaps a variety of names, which either essentially or by usage, has a distinct content as applied to that body; with certain kinds of denominational machinery, such as colleges, journals, missionary and philanthropic societies or boards, answerable for their procedure to that special body and to it alone. Wherever these elements are found in combination it will be difficult to persuade the observer that it is anything but a denomination."

There is a difference, a marked difference, between denominationalism and sectarianism. To ask—"Are the Disciples of Christ a denomination?" is not the same as to inquire—"Are the Disciples a Sect?" Alexander Campbell spoke of the people with which his name is prominently connected as a denomination; he did not confess that they were a sect or that they were sectarian.

"Have We the Sect Spirit?" Some of "us" have and some of "us" have not. Some of the most bitter sectarians whom I have met wear the "disciple" label. On this point Prof. Willett says:

"We have seen men who called themselves disciples, whose only conception of loyalty to the gospel appeared to be a fervent desire to attack every form of Christian teaching that differed by a hair's breadth from that which they have been accustomed to believe; who could not understand how any man could be a follower of our Lord and hold views different in any degree from their own. To them all the churches, not of our 'faith and order,' were so many breeders of error in the community, and it was just as essential to save a man from the thralldom of Methodism or the darkness of Presbyterianism as from infidelity or Mohammedism. There have been men of this type in our ranks. Unfortunately their race is not yet extinct."

"Do the Disciples Desire Christian Union?" Some do and some do not. All desire "union." Who does not? But is the "union" desired Christian? This is the question. How does this inquiry appear to one who is not of us? Our author presents the matter in the following language:

"We, who proclaim our zeal for Christian unity, display in a majority of cases not only an indifference to its practical realization in the communities where we have representation, but are actually the most reluctant to engage in efforts of a unifying sort, such as union evangelistic services, efforts for civic righteousness which demand the earnest co-operation of all Christians, fraternity and comity in missionary labors, both in America and on foreign soil, and such other forms of united effort as the spirit of love and fellowship would suggest."

This is the judgment not of Dr. Willett, but of "our religious neighbors." By the way, the phraseology of this book shows the author to be a Disciple of Disciples. "Our religious neighbors" is a dead giveaway. That expression belongs to the Disciples. No others use it. And the book is full of such collocations of words as identifies the author as "one of us."

His reply to the inquiry—"Do the Disciples Desire Christian Union?" is capital. "Many of our leading preachers," he says, "are conspicuous for their painstaking endeavors to advance the harmony of the church by establishing fraternal relations with all who love our Lord and are seeking to promote righteousness." This statement is good; but it can be made stronger and still be within the limit of fact. Not simply "many of our leading preachers;" but an overwhelming majority of our preachers, prominent and obscure, great and small, "are conspicuous for their painstaking endeavors to advance the harmony of the church by establishing fraternal relations with all who love our Lord and are seeking to promote righteousness." The number of "Firm Foundation" folks and "Sand Creek" specimens among us, is exceedingly small. In this connection, Dr. Willett says that "loyalty to Christ and the teachings of the New Testament must be as strongly emphasized as ever." His suggestion as to how to promote unity among believers is worthy of a place in this notice.

"The methods by which this may be brought about," he says, "are, among others, these: Exchange of preachers in regular services; union evangelistic services, in which the whole gospel shall be proclaimed, but in a spirit of love which shall disarm all antagonism. Great interests obliterate small antipathies. A community aroused to a passion of earnestness over the salvation of men will not stop to debate subordinate questions, especially where holy scripture is plain. Then union teachers' meetings, lectureships or classes for Bible study and civic reforms of all kinds in which the church best shows her interest in the welfare of men. These are not mere ideals, but realities capable of actual accomplishment—indeed, going on under our own eyes. Some of our churches are promoting this very sort of Christian union to-day, with no loss of testimony as to the essentials of gospel obedience. Why should not all our people be leaders in this work?"

In his chapter on "The Form of Christian Union," our author says: "The pedobaptists must give up infant baptism of every form as unscriptural and devisive." He speaks of baptism and the Supper of the Lord as "essential ordinances of the church." The act of baptism is, in his thought, immersion, and he says that "other so-called forms of baptism were of course unknown among the apostles."

Many more things I would like to say in commendation of this sweet-spirited, thought-provoking little book, but my space is now full. Buy the book and read it.

The Uniform Prayer-meeting Topics.

The committee appointed at the Minneapolis convention has done its work, and the Topics for 1902 are out. All of the six members of the committee did earnest work in preparing them, and it is hoped the Topics may find general use among our churches. That they are the best possible Topics it were folly to claim, as the committee had but a single week in which to prepare them. But that they are worthy of the acceptance and use of all our prayer-meetings, and, rightly used, will make for their improvement, is sincerely hoped and believed. What is needed in order to the preparation of the best possible Topics is a committee appointed a year ahead, which can not only give its own best thought to the work, but call for counsel and suggestion from the whole brotherhood. Were the committee recently appointed to this task empowered to do so, it would now be asking our thoughtful men and women everywhere for their frankest criticism on the Topics for 1902, with any hints they can give which might improve them. In fact, without such authority, I here and now, as an individual Disciple of Christ, solicit private correspondence with any person who has a suggestion or a criticism on the subject, or if preferred, a brief public article in one of our papers, which would in a practical way promote the end in view. As an instance of the latter sort I call attention to Wm. R. Warren's "A Conspiracy to Promote," in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for Nov. 28.

The Topics for 1902 make several new departures, which it is thought will meet with favor. One is the introduction of serial topics which run through a whole month. There are four of these, placed at suitable intervals, and designed to create an increasing interest in the subject to which they pertain. Another feature is the opportunity for expository teaching provided in the very first month of the Topics by a set of subjects designed to compel a careful study of that rich portion of John's gospel included within chapters thirteen to seventeen. Still further, it will be seen that the scriptures selected to accompany each subject are chosen with special care, and are intended to exactly fit the case both in pertinency and length. Missionary days are suitably provided for in March, May, September and December, while the New Year, Independence day, Thanksgiving and Christmas are not forgotten, and all this without bracketing anything that would call attention to the fact. No subject is given to fill up with. Many that were suggested were rejected because they were not adapted to the aim and idea of the prayer-meeting. In a word, we sought to provide a set of Topics for 1902 that would lend themselves readily and easily to instruction, devotion, edification and practical living and doing in every prayer-meeting of our people throughout the land. It will take two more brief articles to say my full say.

Inauguration Day at Bethany.

The installation of Mr. Thomas Ellsworth Crambler as president of Bethany College promises to be the red letter day of the session. The inauguration of college presidents has come to be something of a fad, and Bethany has caught the contagious example. And why not? If a nation rejoices at the crowning of a new magistrate as the leader of its forces and the idol of its hopes, why should not a great brotherhood of saints rejoice to put the reins of the government of one of its honored and useful institutions into the hands of a wise and efficient leader?

An appropriate program has been arranged for the occasion. The governor of West Virginia, Hon. A. B. White, has consented to be present, and will have a place on the program. A number of college men, both from our own institutions and from others, will be present. Dr. W. O. Thompson, president of Ohio State University, is to deliver the principal address on the afternoon program. Prof. Waitman Barbe, of the University of West Virginia, is to deliver the address of the evening. Other speakers from the alumni, trustees and visiting friends will be heard on this occasion. Editors, ministers, college presidents and men of other callings are expected to be present.

The excellence and variety of the program have already exceeded the bounds of our original plans. All of the alumni and friends of the college are cordially invited to be present and will be cheerfully entertained. Please report to committee when you reach Bethany.

We are expecting that the installation of President Crambler, Dec. 10, will mark the beginning of a new epoch in the history of the college. Bethany faces the new century with twentieth century enthusiasm, with twentieth century plans, with twentieth century problems and with twentieth century hopes. A new century, an increasing endowment fund, new prospects and a new president should make old Bethany young again.

PHILIP JOHNSON.

An International Prophetic Conference will be held at the Clarendon Street Baptist church, Dec. 10-15. Many prominent speakers are on the program of the present conference. The subjects to be discussed are such as "The Conversion of the Jews," "Signs of the Nearness of Christ's Coming," "The Second Advent and the Future Life," etc. It is not a meeting of Adventists merely. The secretary is Rev. J. D. Herr, Box 5326, Boston.

The People's Forum

Preachers and State Boards.

The various state secretaries are expected to do two things especially: (1) Secure an all-round observance of November day for state missions, and (2) place the preachers and churches in correspondence so that both may be served. Question: If secretaries are to be depended upon so largely for this latter service, ought not every preacher and every church to be willing to help the secretary in securing a creditable offering for state work? We hear much about what the "state" ought to do in each one of the states. But what is the "state"? Simply the preachers and the churches of Christ within the given state; and the state board can and will always do just what the means placed in its hands will enable it to do. Let the good relations between the preachers and the state boards and their secretaries be mutual and reciprocal.

T. J. LEGG.

"Chapter and Verse."

Less often than formerly do we hear a challenge put in this form. Chapter-and-verse preachers do not necessarily know the Bible. The time has arrived when men are taking more comprehensive views of the book, and therefore proof texts, in the old sense, have lost most of their authority. The man to-day who tries to prove his theology by detached texts, however numerous they may be, cannot pass for a scholar, whatever his position in life. This age understands, as none other, that Christ is greater than the Bible; that his work is greater than any single statement of it; that the Bible is greater than any one of its books; that a book is greater than any one of its texts. The modern view seems to be, that the purpose of the Bible is to create a right impression in men, to "win them to a character like God's." "Rightly dividing the word," that is, progress in revelation, is now on firm footing. The number of scripture quotations is no longer the supreme test of soundness.

Letters of Recommendations.

"The People's Forum" is the very thing, and I make haste to take advantage of the invitation. I wish to "advocate a reform." We need a reformation along the line of recommendations. It is a matter for regret that recommendations are not worth their face value. A few years ago I mentioned the name of a lecturer to a successful business man and told him he was recommended by one of the most prominent men in educational and religious circles in America. When he saw the name attached to the recommendation, he remarked that it was worthless, as he would recommend anybody for anything, and consequently you could not depend on it. The business man is prominent in educational circles in one of our largest cities in this state. My own experience is that men altogether unworthy have been recommended to this state to some of our best churches. In one case, I know that the ones who recommended the man to me had every opportunity to know his character. This is a serious matter.

A recommendation should tell the truth. We should not recommend to another pulpit a man that we would not want in our own. Many a recommendation is written merely to get rid of some unworthy preacher.

The Opening Services.

A reform is greatly needed in nearly all our churches in the opening services. I have often been pained to see the pastor reading a lesson from God's word while the people were coming in, moving down the aisle, getting themselves seated, and those already in their pews watching every movement of the late-comers. Those of us who had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Spurgeon know that he would not permit such distraction, but the late-comers must occupy the rear seats, and all was as quiet as the grave while he slowly read and commented upon the scripture lesson. Inasmuch as the greatest spiritual blessings come to those who take some part in public worship I would suggest, by way of reform, that those who come too late for the opening be requested to occupy back seats, or stand until the reading is ended. Further, I would suggest that Bibles be placed in the seats and that the pastor request all to alternate with him in reading, and at the conclusion, with solemnly bowed heads, repeat, in concert, the "Lord's Prayer." Such concentration of minds on God's word and the Lord's Prayer will start all minds in unison along a highway that will lead their souls up into sweet communion with God.

The Dearth of Active Young Christian Men.

One cannot but be discouraged at the prospect for the church when one sees the small proportion of men, and especially young men, who attend church. The church needs men, and young men, that they may be trained up to take the place of the elder men in the course of time.

The American young man is an honest and fair person, as a rule. This very honesty and fairness make hypocritical Christians repulsive to him and keep him out of the church.

Something must be devised to counteract this influence. Christians must adhere closer together. Christians who have labor must employ only Christians; associate only with Christians. Make the young man feel all this with force.

Christian young women should exclude from their company all that are not Christians, not that those who are not Christians are base or knaves, but all means should be employed to bring the young men to Christ.

Of course, this would be somewhat difficult at first, but Christians must make a bold stand at all times and on all subjects, using art and cunning if necessary. If not, the day will come when we will see with regret the manhood of our land debased and in the power of Satan.

A Plan for Retired Ministers.

We mourn over the sad state of the ill, aged or unemployed minister of the gospel but do not employ our hands, heads and hearts in the matter of their employment and support. We want war more than wisdom, hence the young man everywhere. Let there be less mourning and more movement toward the solution of the acknowledged problem. The writer furnishes this outline for the reader's reflection: Let the ministers, in and out of pulpit, in each state or district act through approved brethren in buying a tract of land favorably located, and divide it up or hold in common. Those preaching to keep on, others to go and locate (if inclined and able) and thus begin the work of building and improvement. These pioneers to do missionary work, a part of the time, near by or farther off. A county in which we have no church is to be preferred.

Something of this kind is contemplated by several ministers of northern Ohio, who may lead off in the good cause of helping solve this problem.

Who will outline a better solution or offer suggestions? Do not think this will sectarianize us. Who are "we" to let our ministers suffer after serving us for greater things among God's people?

Preacher's Rates.

On page 1479 of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Nov. 21, under "Questions and Answers," there are a few statements in regard to the religious papers giving ministerial rates that I believe will set badly with some of the preachers. It is intimated that the "ministerial rate" means a "loss on every preacher's paper" and that because of the special rate the "entire burden" falls on the publishing company. You insinuate that it is "charitable" and a "form of benevolence" to do this for the preacher. There's another side to the question, it's this: I preach sermons on "Religious Journalism," and kindred subjects, in which I bring out the need of the religious paper. I work for the paper just the same as I work for missions, for I know that it will do the church good. I appoint one to act as agent, take the subscriptions, send them in, etc.

No doubt many papers are distributed through the influence of the preacher. He recognizes the kindness of the religious papers and therefore works for them. Now, because of this, is it a burden which rests entirely upon the publishers? It seems to me that what the publishers lose on the special rate to preachers, those very preachers cause them to gain on others whose subscriptions the preachers secure.

O. D. MAPLE.

[Bro. Maple's point is well taken. A preacher who does his whole duty by the religious papers deserves consideration from them. If all preachers were like Bro. Maple in this respect, the paragraph to which he takes exception would never have been written. But how about those who never speak a good word for any religious paper, or who mention it only to condemn and take it only because they can get it at reduced rates? There are such. The preacher who not only talks up good literature in general, but takes pains to assist in its circulation, deserves compensation and no publisher begrudges the reduced rate to such.—EDITOR.]

Our Budget.

—L. T. Faulders preached the union Thanksgiving sermon at Arcola, Ill.

—P. H. Welshimer, of Millersburg, O., has been called to the pastorate of the church at Canton, O.

—J. K. Shellenberger, of Madelia, Minn., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Albia, Ia.

—C. H. Trout, of Piqua, O., has accepted a call to become pastor of the First Christian Church, of Lafayette, Ind.

—E. M. Flynn has resigned his pastorate at Grant City, Mo. An able man will soon be wanted by that church.

—A. M. Harral, Chandler, Okla., wishes to correspond with a preacher who can begin work with three churches for whole time, Jan. 1; $50 a month.

—W. T. Hilton, of Omaha, is holding a series of evangelistic meetings at Fremont, Neb., beginning Nov. 24 and continuing indefinitely.

—E. B. Barnes will close a pastorate of five and one-half years at Normal, Ill., to accept a call to Noblesville, Ind., where he will begin work Jan. 1, 1902.

—C. E. Millard has given entertainments lately in Rock Island and Davenport and is now in a meeting at Moline, Ill. He will return home to Maysville, Mo., for the holidays.

—The little church at Rockville has just completed its new building at a cost of $1,400, $800 of which was paid by three persons. It is a small and weak congregation, but with its new building hopes for better times.

—M. B. Ingle, state evangelist of South Carolina, wishes to secure the addresses of all the Disciples of Christ in that state who live in places where there is no church. His address is Orangeburg, S. C.

—The University of Texas has among its students this year exactly one hundred members of the Christian Church. J. W. Lowber is delivering a series of chapel addresses on "The Seven Days of Genesis."

—Lawrence Wright is in a meeting at Ulysses, Neb., with W. A. Baldwin, secretary for that state. The meeting promises well. C. C. Atwood and H. H. Harmon have dropped in to note its progress and to speak a good word.

—The church at Ashley, Ind., dedicated its new house on Nov. 24. L. L. Carpenter preached the dedicatory sermon and raised the amount, $1,100, necessary to provide for all indebtedness. The attendance was good in spite of inclement weather.

—We regret to announce the death of Bro. C. J. Kimball, whose obituary appears in another column. He was for some years proof reader on the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and was widely known among the Disciples of Christ. His faithfulness and Christian character won the respect of all who knew him.

—Eleanor Thompson, of Jacksonville, Ill., writes as follows: "The author of the poem 'Leah,' published in your last issue, is Eliza P. Nicholson (Pearl Rivers, pseudonym) a young New England poetess. The poem was first published in the Cosmopolitan for September, 1894. In the same magazine for November, 1893, appeared her 'Hagar,' which in its dramatic intensity is still finer. Both, however, deserve wider recognition than they have yet received."

—A further item of information about the author of the poem "Leah" is furnished by Kate W. Partee, of Little Rock, Ark. Eliza Poitevent Nicholson succeeded her husband as editor of the New Orleans Picayune and was the first woman editor of a large daily in the south.

—The Second Christian church, St. Louis, will have a jubilee meeting Tuesday evening, December 3, to celebrate the payment of its debt. The church has been heavily burdened for many years and its release is chiefly due to the efforts of W. Daviess Pittman, a St. Louis business man who has been acting as pastor without compensation for two years or more; preaches regularly twice every Sunday, holds his own protracted meetings with large results (45 additions in the one just closed) and has raised a large part of the money to pay the debt from business friends unconnected with any church.

—J. W. Travis, pastor of our church at Margate, England, writes that he is kept busy answering the question: "Who are you?" Those who have lived in the eastern part of our own country are not altogether unfamiliar with that query as to who the Disciples of Christ are and it always furnishes a good point of departure for expounding the principles of New Testament Christianity as we understand them. Brother Travis has grasped the opportunity by giving a series of addresses on "Our Plea as Disciples of Christ," one of which, printed in the Thanet Times, is reprinted on a slip in convenient form for distribution.

—All ministers will be interested in the following announcement in regard to the regulations of the Central Passenger Association regarding the issuing of half-fare permits:

Commencing Jan. 1, 1902, the territorial limitations heretofore restricting issuance of Joint Annual Clergy Certificates by the lines of the Clergy Bureau of the Central Passenger Association to beneficiaries residing in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Western New York, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and certain points in the province of Ontario, will be removed and annual certificates to those applying and qualifying under the rules will be granted generally, except to clergymen residing in the state of New York, east of Niagara Falls, Tonawanda, Buffalo, and Salamanca; the states of New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland; the state of Pennsylvania, east of Warren, Oil City, Franklin, Allegheny and Pittsburgh; the state of West Virginia east of Wheeling, Bellaire, Parkersburg and Charleston; and the state of Virginia north of Charlottesville, Gordonsville and Alexandria; including the District of Columbia. Effective with the inception of the new year, issuance of trip clerical permits by the lines comprising the Clergy Bureau of the Central Passenger Association will be discontinued and only the joint annual certificates will be available to those entitled to this privilege.

The regulations governing the issuance of permits will be found in detail on the application blanks which may be obtained from ticket agents of all roads belonging to the Association, or from the office of the commissioner, F. C. Donald, Monadnock Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Itching Skin

Distress by day and night—

That's the complaint of those who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with Eczema or Salt Rheum—and outward applications do not cure. They can't.

The source of the trouble is in the blood—make that pure and this scaling, burning, itching skin disease will disappear.

"I was taken with an itching on my arms which proved very disagreeable. I concluded it was salt rheum and bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. In two days after I began taking it I felt better and it was not long before I was cured. Have never had any skin disease since." MRS. IDA E. WARD, Cove Point, Md.

rid the blood of all impurities and cure all eruptions.

—Samuel B. Ross, of Martelle, Ia., writes: "I desire to thank you for calling attention to our need of a proper history of the Restoration in the several states, especially for Iowa, and that Allen Hickey is the man to do the work. I have during the past two weeks written to several of our prominent men in Iowa about this very matter urging them to do something. We cannot hope, in the very nature of things, to hold Bro. Hickey with us many years and his removal would sever the last link in Iowa's past."

Piney Woods.

Healthful but Not Always Curative.

To go to the piney woods is a help, but if one carries along the bad habits of food and drink that have caused sickness, the piney woods will not produce a recovery.

Coffee drinking caused blindness in a Virginia gentleman, and his remarkable experience is worth reading. "I have been a coffee drinker since my earliest remembrance. If I missed coffee at a meal it brought on headache. This should have shown me that I was a victim to a drug habit. Finally, wakeful, restless nights came on. After dinner I was always drowsy and after sleeping would waken stupid and morbid, and felt as though I had been drugged, and when this feeling wore off nervousness and restlessness would set in until I drugged myself with coffee again.

"At last my eyesight began to fail. Some of the best optical specialists agreed that I had an affliction of the optic nerve, and after two or three years' treatment my eyes slowly lost their power and I became almost sightless.

"I was advised to go to a pine woods near the sea in a most isolated place. This I did and lived there for two years without any visible benefit. I gave up all hope of recovery until last spring a friend expressed the belief that the coffee I drank was the cause of all of my trouble. He had been a slave to it and had been unable to find relief until he quit and took up Postum Food Coffee.

"His experience startled me and I decided to try the change although I had but little faith in its merits. My first cup of Postum proved delicious and was a great surprise. It was evidently well made. I had not the slightest trouble in leaving off coffee, for the Postum filled its place perfectly.

"During the past six months I have gained in flesh, my sallow complexion has become clear, and my eyesight gradually improved until now I am able to read and write. My mind is once more clear and active, and I no longer suffer from sleepless, nervous spells. You can imagine I feel grateful for my restoration." W. Harold Fenton, Brighton, Va.

seen drop from interested attention to listless indifference, when the "invitation" was given at the close of the sermon? And why? Because morning after morning and evening after evening it has been given in practically the same words and manner. Thus that which might have been powerful if carefully used, or under great spiritual enthusiasm, becomes tame and wearisome under ordinary conditions. If discretion is not used, it becomes meaningless and lifeless to two-thirds of the congregation. Peter and Paul were men of resources. Their doctrine was not bound up in means so much as in the purpose and end. Do you suppose they would object, if here now, to the silent raising of the hand by the seeking sinner—while the heads of the people are bowed in prayer—if it was followed by an open confession? Or is it possible they would brand a man as a heretic if he used an "inquiry room," or occasionally dismissed the audience after the sermon, and sent the people home on their own responsibility?

Marvelous Growth Of Hair.

A Famous Doctor-Chemist Has Discovered a Compound That Grows Hair on a Bald Head in a Single Night.

Startling Announcement Causes Doctors to Marvel and Stand Dumfounded at the Wonderful Cures.

The Discoverer Sends Free Trial Packages to All Who Write.

After half a century spent in the laboratory, crowned with high honors for his many world-famous discoveries the celebrated physician-chemist ist at the head of the great Altenheim Medical Dispensary, 4833 Butterfield Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, has just made the startling announcement that he has produced a compound that grows hair on any bald head. The doctor makes the claim that after experiments, taking years to complete, he has at last reached the goal of his ambition. To the doctor all heads are alike. There are none which cannot be cured by this remarkable remedy. The record of cures already made is truly marvelous and were it not for the high standing of the great physician and the convincing testimony of thousands of citizens all over the country it would seem too miraculous to be true.

There can be no doubt of the doctor's earnestness in making his claims nor can his cures be disputed. He does not ask any man, woman or child to take his or anyone else's word for it, but he stands ready and willing to send free trial packages of this great hair restorative to anyone who writes to him for it, enclosing a 2-cent stamp to prepay postage. In a single night it has started hair to growing on heads bald for years. It has stopped falling hair in one hour. It never fails no matter what the condition, age or sex. Old men and young men, women and children all have profited by the free use of this great new discovery. Write to-day if you are bald, if your hair is falling out or if your hair, eyebrows, or eyelashes are thin or short and in a short time you will be entirely restored.

In Memory of Marion Ingels.

Into the "more stately mansions" our brother and friend passed during the dawning of Nov. 9, 1901. Into that glorious land where "it is daylight everywhere" his spirit entered. The work and worth of Bro. Ingels are well known to the brotherhood; this is especially true of our churches in Kansas, where he labored for almost twenty years.

He was Sunday-school evangelist of the state for six years. He served as pastor for many of our churches, and during the last three years he served our state board as state evangelist. No words can adequately measure the Christian character and personal worth of Bro. Ingels.

Like his Master "he went about doing good." Strong in faith, upright in life, spotless in character, he was a tower of strength, a beacon light, as he moved among the church. Everybody could trust him and everybody loved him. He was so sweet and even-tempered. He did not become "sour" like a few of our preachers do when they begin to grow old. In this respect Bro. Ingels did not grow old. He kept up with the times in study and spirit. He was the young preacher's friend and the old preacher's example.

No one was more deeply interested in Kansas missions and no one toiled more earnestly and self-sacrificingly for its growth than he. He willingly labored in the out-of-the-way and the unpromising fields, "tho' barren the field might be."

Moreover, he was a constant supporter of the C. W. B. M. His wife, Mrs. Libbie F. Ingels, has served as state president of this organization for several years and is still holding this position. Our prayers are for her and her boys. May the Father bless and comfort them as he has already done in giving them such a husband and father. They, as well as we, "have a goodly heritage" in the life of Bro. Ingels.

W. S. LOWE.

Wisconsin Budget.

There seems to be a general awakening over the state; not an excitement but increasing activity.

Since the general convention I have visited Viroqua, Pleasant Ridge, Bloom City, Lynxville, Chippewa Falls, Sugar Grove, Sabin and held a ten days' meeting at Readstown, a new point where we hope to organize ere long. Bro. Barstow will probably visit that section soon and preach for them awhile.

Bro. Owers has lately taken up the work at Richland Centre.

If any church would like a successful evangelist for his carfare and entertainment and give him freewill offerings, write me and I will give you his name.

If any of our churches anywhere contemplate buying a bell soon I think I can direct him to one who can give them inside prices. This isn't a cent to me one way or the other, but I believe churches will be benefited by addressing me with stamp to learn of proper party through whom to buy and why.

The hall in Ladysmith, Wis., where our church meets was burned a few nights ago. We have not heard what they will do for a building in which to meet till they build in the spring.

Sugar Grove has begun to get out stones for foundation for new church. They need it badly. They are able to build a good house.

Bro. Morgan is holding forth at Sextonville. We are temporarily located here to try to get a building and preacher for this little band we organized three months ago. Although the Bible-school is less than three months of age there were 50 in attendance last Lord's day. The school is held in a private house which is getting too small. Have we not some brother in Illinois, Ohio or Iowa who would like to do some practical work and build a little chapel for us here? We

Life Saved by Swamp-Root.

The Wonderful New Discovery in Medical Science.

Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Swamp-Root, discovered by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, is wonderfully successful in promptly curing kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Some of the early symptoms of weak kidneys are pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatism, dizziness, headache, nervousness, catarrh of the bladder, gravel or calculi, bloating, sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, suppression of urine, or compelled to pass water often day and night.

The mild and extraordinary effect of the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best.

Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and a pamphlet that tells all about it, including many of the thousands of letters received from sufferers cured, both sent free by mail. Write Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and please mention that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST.

could build a neat little house for $300. It would be a good investment.

Brethren, write your epitaphs in church buildings while you are alive. The little band here needs help so much just now. Three hundred dollars now would be worth more than $1,000 five years hence.

My permanent address is Milwaukee, though I expect to be here for some time. Letters sent to either place will reach me.

Please remit December dues on state work. Send to me.

A Christian Union Symbol.

This symbol, suggested by J. M. Rudy, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., is designed to be worn by all who believe in and are praying for the union of God's people. The whole is the letter "C" for Christ. The letters "C. U." stand for Christian Union. The line connecting these letters is intended to indicate that Christian Union will come in Christ, not passing beyond or ignoring the scope of his authority—"Hear ye Him." The light is the sun. Christ as the Son of God bears the same relation to the spiritual world that the sun bears to the material world. What the sun is to the solar system, Christ is to the moral system. Christian Union must come under and in the light of Christ.

Those to whom the idea has been mentioned unanimously approve of it. It has been wisely suggested that the design ought not to be cheapened into a ten-cent button, which would rather tend to make it a laughing-stock than to win serious consideration for what it represents. If used at all, it should be in the form of a substantial pin.

C. H. White has been called to remain at Galesburg for a fourth year. His third year does not expire until April, but the congregation was evidently anxious to forestall any plan that he might have for going elsewhere. Two hundred and twenty-five members have been added to the church during his pastorate and an indebtedness of $4,000 has been paid. Brother White preached the union Thanksgiving sermon at the Universalist church in Galesburg.

In Nankin, China.

When we came near Shanghai, China, W. P. Bentley, our missionary in this city, came out in a steam launch to meet our ship. It is needless to say we were pleased to see him. When we reached Shanghai we were met by Sister Bentley and James Ware and wife and all the children in the mission. Besides, there were a number of native brethren to greet us. It was a delightful meeting. The cordial reception will long be remembered. Miss Daugherty, of Vermont, Ill., who has been assigned to Nankin, China, was on the ship, and we had the pleasure of her company from Kobe, Japan. We were soon quartered in the hospitable home of Bro. Bentley for a few hours. He had already secured our tickets on a fine steamer to Nankin, and we started that night, to be at the conference, October 9-13.

What a mighty river the Yangtse is! One hundred and fifty miles from its mouth it is 15 miles wide. It is 200 miles from Shanghai to Nankin and the average width of the river between these cities is three miles. This great river is over 3,000 miles long and is navigable over 1,600 miles.

When we reached Nankin we were soon in the midst of the conference. It was a great pleasure to meet the missionaries. I had never before seen T. J. Arnold and C. E. Molland. Old friendships were renewed and new ones formed. The China missionaries are a splendid body of Christian workers. They now number 28. There are also 31 children in the China mission. They are not to be overlooked as a missionary force. During my travels in the east I have not seen a stronger body of missionaries. I have seen the buildings and studied somewhat carefully the plans and policies of the mission and am convinced that every dollar of money has been economically and wisely expended.

The discussions in the conference developed three pressing needs in our work in China:

1. A hospital at Lu Cheo Fu. This will require about $4,000. Dr. Butchart has charge of the medical work in that important but long neglected city; medical work is a power in China.

2. Nankin Christian College needs to be better equipped. We now have suitable grounds and one school building and a dormitory. The school cannot accommodate more than 50 boys and young men. A larger work should be undertaken. This is the earnest desire of F. E. Meigs, who has this work in hand. He needs, and requests, a well equipped man to assist in Bible work especially. A very strong man is needed, one who is consecrated, studious, and as wise as Solomon, if possible. He ought to be the equal at least, of any man we have in any of our colleges in America. China is now in the early dawn of a great educational system, and now is the time to place the mightiest men in this empire that can be found. The school has already done a great work, but it has suffered for want of proper equipment. At least $5,000 is now needed for the enlargement of Nankin Christian College. I wish you could see the bright young men in this institution. They pay their own tuition and board. More than half of them are Christians and all attend chapel exercises and receive Christian instruction. Considering the amount expended, I know of no school in America doing more good for the word than this.

3. A lot for a church in Shanghai. This has been needed for some time. Shanghai is the eye of the whole empire. It is the New York of this whole land of 400,000,000 souls. Its growth is rapid, and its importance is constantly increasing.

The whole number of missionaries in Nankin is about 40. A delightful reception was tendered us at the home of T. J. Arnold, where we had the pleasure of meeting, not only all of our own missionaries, but also those of other boards. Sunday morning I spoke to a large congregation of Chinese in our Christian church. The church in Nankin now numbers over 200, and there is a constant growth. All of our missionaries were present. It was an inspiring service. The oldest daughter of C. E. Molland made the good confession, and as requested, I had the pleasure of baptizing her. I also baptized three Chinese women who made the confession of their faith at this service. I took the confession of Muriel Molland in English and T. J. Arnold took the confession of the Chinese women in Chinese. He is now the pastor of this growing church. Sunday afternoon I spoke again at the union missionary meeting which was held in our church. Following the address we enjoyed a union communion service. Altogether it was a day long to be remembered.

Let me tell you about our work in Nankin. We have four comfortable missionary homes. Dr. W. E. Macklin and family occupy one, F. E. Meigs and family another, T. J. Arnold and family another, and Miss Emma Lyon and Miss Mary Kelly the fourth. The next building is the large hospital conducted by Dr. Macklin. The people come to him by the thousands to be healed of all manner of diseases. He preaches the gospel while he heals the bodies. His fame is known far and wide. Dr. Macklin is one of the best known men in China. He is a hard student and an indefatigable worker. He does much very valuable literary work. Two buildings are used in the work of Nankin Christian College—one building for study and recitation and another for a dormitory. The girls' school enjoys a large, commodious building, and is conducted by Miss Emma Lyon. In one room of this building hangs a large picture of one who gave her life for China, and below the

Calisthenics

Are a benefit to healthy women. But to women who are suffering from diseases peculiar to their sex they are an injury. When there is weak back or bearing-down pains, sideache or other indications of womanly weakness, exercise can only aggravate the condition. The womanly health must be first restored before strength can be developed by exercise.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well. It does this by healing the womanly diseases which undermine the general health. It stops the drains that weaken women, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"When I first commenced using Doctor Pierce's medicines," writes Mrs. George A. Strong, of Gausevoort, Saratoga Co., N. Y., "I was suffering from female weakness, a disagreeable drain, bearing-down pains, weak and tired feeling all the time. I dragged around in that way for two years, and I began taking your medicine. After taking first bottle I began to feel better. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, two of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' one vial of 'Pleasant Pellets,' also used one bottle of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Now I feel like a new person. I can't thank you enough for your kind advice and the good your medicine has done me."

IN MEMORY OF

CARRIE LOOS WILLIAMS,

Some time a missionary in Nankin.

Entered into rest, Feb. 12, 1892.

Aged 36 years.

This school established by her friends in loving remembrance of her devotion to Christ is an answer to her earnest pleadings in behalf of the girls of China.

It will be remembered that Carrie Loos Williams was the wife of E. T. Williams and the daughter of Prof. C. L. Loos, of Lexington, Ky. The work of this consecrated woman is still a mighty power in the China mission.

In the same compound is a small chapel for work among the women and a day-school for the children of the neighborhood.

Another important building in Nankin is the church building. It is well equipped with baptistery and dressing rooms. Here large crowds gather to hear the preaching of the gospel. Altogether we have nine buildings in Nankin.

A. E. Corey and wife have just arrived from Honolulu, H. I., to take up work at Lu Cheo Fu. He has received a hearty welcome from the missionaries and will prove a valuable addition to the China mission.

The name of A. F. H. Saw is familiar to those acquainted with our work in China. He was called to his reward on high, May 17, 1898. In company with a number of missionaries we visited his grave in the foreign cem-

SERIOUS HEART DISEASE IS CURABLE.

The Eminent Specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, Succeeds After 5 to 30 Physicians Fail.

$2.50 WORTH OF TREATMENT FREE.

Heart diseases which a few years ago were incurable now readily yield to treatment. Short breath, pain in the side, oppression in the chest, palpitation, smothering spells, puffing of the ankles or dropsy, whether complicated with stomach, liver and nervous troubles or not, can be speedily relieved and soon cured. Dr. Miles will give a $2.50 course of treatment free, to prove the truth of his statement. His treatments have the great advantage of being specially prepared to suit the peculiarities of each patient.

These treatments are the result of 25 years of close study, careful research and extraordinary success. They are far in advance of the medicines used by the ordinary doctor and few show such faith in their remedies. Every sufferer should take advantage of this opportunity before it is too late.

Hon. John Gates, Ex-Representative of Iowa, after 10 years of suffering from heart, stomach, and bladder troubles, says, "I lose no opportunity to advocate Dr. Miles' Special Treatment. I am better now than for ten years, which I attribute solely to his skillful treatment."

Mrs. Mary A. Bradeen, of Rapids, Me., writes: "I consider your heart treatment worth its weight in gold to me. You have saved my life after others failed."

Philip Metz, of Montra, O., reports: "I had heart trouble for 15 years and was very near death's door when I commenced your Special Treatment. I now feel well and work every day."

Mrs. August Kronck, of Huntington, Ind., cured after 30 physicians failed; Mrs. Flora Graetor, of Bristolville, O., after 22; Mrs. R. Parker, of Mishawaka, Ind., after 16; Mrs. H. E. Cole, Pittsburgh, Pa., after 6; and Mrs. E. Norris, of Windsor, O., after five gave her up.

A thousand references to, and testimonials from Bishops, Clergymen, Bankers, Farmers, and their wives will be sent free on request.

Nankin, Oct. 20.

Ohio Letter.

Ohio disciples are praying for the speedy recovery of C. W. Huffer. He was stricken with paralysis Monday night, Nov. 18. At this time he is gaining and the doctor gives him much encouragement. Robert Moffett filled the pulpit of the Toledo church, Nov. 24.

Bro. Vorhees, who recently came among the disciples from the Congregationalists at Chillicothe, has taken the church at Rutland, Meigs county. Secretary Bartlett is doing two men's work these days, writing receipts for offerings for Ohio missions, dedicating churches, visiting missions, raising church debts, etc. He was at Madisonville Nov. 24, to help pull the church out of a debt. By the way, if he has not sent you the receipt for your Ohio offering, it may be because you have not sent it in. Do not delay.

The edifice at Washington C. H. has undergone quite extensive repairs and additional capacity put on. The reopening will take place December 8. S. H. Bartlett will preach and solicit the needed wherewithal.

Frank Simpson has offered his resignation to the church at Massillon. He has served them for several years quite faithfully. Where he will go is not known at this writing.

C. A. Hill has left Canton and P. H. Welsheimer, of Millersburg, has had a call from the church. His acceptance is not yet announced.

Philip Y. Pendleton will assume charge of the Walnut Hill church in Cincinnati January 1. The only church without a pastor in Cincinnati now is Norwood.

The Franklin Avenue church in Columbus will be four years old next April and on Jan. 1 will become self-sustaining. From a few scattered disciples in this end of the city this work has grown in that time to be a church of 155 members with a neat home valued at $4,000. They have extended a unanimous call to the present incumbent to remain as pastor. The people are in perfect harmony and have a mind to work.

Columbus, O.

Preachers, Lawyers and Doctors.

In "Questions and Answers" in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 21 it appears that Enquirer, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and Lyman Abbott are troubled about an over-supply of preachers, and the fact that preachers are not so well paid as doctors and lawyers. Now, these things do not trouble the writer a great deal, because:

First, the surplus of preachers after all does not seem to be so great. There are quite a number of churches in this part of the state at present not supplied with preachers, and there are very few preachers who desire to give their time fully and faithfully to the ministry who remain unemployed. I know of none. If there are such it is quite likely that they could soon find employment in other parts of the country. Then, too, there are always new fields to be developed.

Second, I have no desire to exchange my income for that received by doctors and lawyers of like age, experience and ability. I am quite sure that a careful comparison will convince almost anyone that preachers have not so much of which to complain in the matter of salary. There were certainly many lawyers who would have gladly exchanged incomes with Dr. Abbott while he was preaching for Plymouth church.

Something over a year ago the Chicago Tribune gathered statistics concerning the professions in that great city. These statistics made the salaries of the preachers appear in a very favorable light, and surely no one will say that Chicago has too many preachers. Preachers do not often accumulate wealth as men in business and other professions do, but it is not the fault of their salaries. It is because their time and energies are directed along other lines, just as they should be.

The Outlook does not make special rates to preachers, and why should it? It does not ask preachers to serve it more than other people. Some of our church papers have made special rates to preachers, but it is hard to see this as a "form of benevolence," the "whole burden" of which "ought not to fall on the publishers." The preachers are, or at least they ought to be, our papers' best friends. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is offered for 1902 at the exceedingly low price of $1. I am sure that I would be glad to place the paper in ten or more homes, and would feel well paid without receiving any premium from the publishers. Thus surely all of our preachers

If You Are Sick LET ME KNOW IT.

I wish simply your name and address—no money. Say which book you want.

I will send it with an order on your druggist to let you have 6 bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. He will let you take it for a month; and if it succeeds, he will charge you $5.50 for it. If it fails, he will send the bill to me. He will trust to your honesty, leaving the decision to you.

Such an offer as this could not be made on any other remedy. It would bankrupt the physician who tried it. But in five years I have supplied my Restorative on these terms to 550,000 people. My records show that 39 out of each 40 paid for it, because they were cured.

This remedy alone strengthens those inside nerves that operate all vital organs. It brings back the only power that can make each organ do its duty. No matter how difficult the case, it will permanently cure, unless some organic trouble like cancer makes a cure impossible.

I have spent my lifetime in preparing this remedy. I offer now to pay for all you take if it fails. I cannot better show my faith in it. Won't you merely write a postal to learn if I can help you?

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 582, Racine, Wis.

Book No. 1 on Dyspepsia,
Book No. 2 on the Heart,
Book No. 3 on the Kidneys,
Book No. 4 for Women,

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

are glad to do their best for our very worthy papers, and working together the outlook is not so blue for preachers or publishers, and still our best wishes may be with doctors and lawyers.

WALTER KLINE.

Robinson, Ill., Nov. 27, 1901.

[1. In the passage cited in our "Questions and Answers" for Nov. 21 we quoted the Outlook's opinion that there are too many preachers and said: "We think that opinion is a very erroneous one." It would not appear from this that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is "troubled about an over-supply of preachers," as our correspondent seems to infer. We say again, as we said before, there are too few.

2. As to the adequacy of preachers' salaries, it would not be claimed by anyone that the best-paid preacher is worse off than the worst-paid lawyer. Dr. Abbott's presumably ample salary would figure slightly in a general average. As an illustration it counts no more than the case of the poorest country preacher.

3. Perhaps it is true that the pay of the young preacher is satisfactory as compared with that of the young lawyer. But compare the middle-aged preacher with the middle-aged lawyer and the old preacher with the old lawyer. If you select your preachers and select your lawyers, you can prove anything.

4. As we have elsewhere stated, the preacher who does his whole duty by the religious paper merits consideration and gets it. But how about the preacher who is the only subscriber in his town, or in his congregation? It is hard for the publisher to see how his valuable influence merits a reduction in price. —EDITOR]

RESTORES EYESIGHT

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which

Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether

Chronic or Acute, Without

Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision. J. N. Horne, Waycross, Ga., writes: "My eyes have been wonderfully benefited by Actina." W. R. Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina saved me from going blind." R. J. Reid, St. Augustine, Fla., writes: "Actina removed a cataract from my son's eye." Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I should have been blind had I not used Actina." A party of prominent citizens have organized in a company known as the New York & London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. They have bought all American and European rights for this wonderful invention. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 203, 929 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and its Disease in General, and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

Evangelistic.

ARKANSAS.

Fayetteville, Nov. 25.—Tuesday we closed a most delightful series of revival meetings. Bro. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, did the preaching. His sermons were plain, practical and most inspiring. There were 15 additions. —N. M. RAGLAND..

Hot Springs, Nov. 23.—Our meeting here closed on Nov. 20, with 10 additions to the church, eight baptisms and two reclaimed. Bro. Frank Thompson, of Pine Bluff, assisted me, and the church was much revived and great good done, which this report cannot show. Our present membership is now 108. —T. NELSON KINCAID.

ILLINOIS.

Arcola, Nov. 25.—I closed a very interesting and successful three weeks' meeting here last night with home forces. There were 18 additions; 12 by confession, 1 by letter, 2 by statement and 3 reclaimed; 1 previously from the U B's not reported. This makes 76 added to this congregation during the last 11 months. —L. T. FAULDERS.

Gibson City, Nov. 27.—We have just closed a meeting of five weeks with 30 added. Bro. E. A. Gilliland, of Clinton, did the preaching, and Miss Besse Rhode, of Pine Village, Ind., led the singing. —STEPHEN E. FISHER, pastor.

London Mills, Nov. 29.—Four confessions Sunday morning and two from Baptists at night. I preach at this point half time, visiting it from Macomb —MARY PICKENS-BUCKNER.

Macomb, Nov. 29.—Four confessions last Sunday morning, two at evening service. Baptized after prayer-meeting Wednesday night. —GEO. W. BUCKNER.

Niantic, Nov. 25.—Closed two weeks' meeting last night. Four added; two from the M. E's, 1 from the Baptists and 1 by statement. Church yesterday voted that I should continue here for the third year, beginning March 15 next. —J. R. PARKER.

A Model Church Hymnal,

So says Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, of

The Praise Hymnal

"THE PRAISE HYMNAL is in use in both the Franklin Circle and Aetna Street Churches of this city, and each week brings to me a new appreciation of the work. The dignity and variety of the contents, and the rare taste displayed in the arrangement and typography combine to make it a model church hymnal. So far as I have seen, the Responsive Readings are unequaled, and are a most attractive feature of the book.

JESSIE BROWN POUNDS."

Cleveland, O.

AS TO PRICES.—The contents of THE PRAISE HYMNAL are of a permanent quality. It is false economy to ask for cheap binding. We make a cloth bound book with leather back that will last ten years with any sort of care. The price is as low as can be made on its superior material and workmanship, $75.00 per 100 copies. Specimen copies sent on approval.

Normal, Nov. 11.—Five additions since last report. Our missionary collections this year have been the best in our history. —E. B. BARNES.

Pittsfield, Dec. 2.—Have now been with this church six weeks—an active and loyal people. Increased interest and attendance in all services; 510 in Sunday-school yesterday. Class offering $23.68. —F. M. ROGERS.

Summum, Nov. 26.—The first week of my meeting with Kerton Valley church resulted in 24 additions, all except 1 by primary obedience; also 2 made the good confession at our regular services here Sunday morning. —CHESTER A. BAIRD.

Watseka, Nov. 23.—Another added to the church since last report—a father over three-score and ten years of age. There seems to be a special interest just now among the older people of my Sunday congregations. —BENJ. S. FERRALL.

Watseka, Nov. 30.—Three have been added to the church here within the last week, two lifelong Lutherans and a French Catholic. These closing weeks of my five years' work here are proving to be among the most pleasant yet experienced. —B. S. FERRALL.

Waggoner, Nov. 29.—Bro. Lewis P. Koff, of Erie, Ill., has just finished a two weeks' revival at this place and a successful one. He has had 15 additions and great interest was manifested during the meeting. Bro. Koff being an earnest worker and a splendid speaker he has greatly uplifted and helped the cause in our town and community. —HARRY CAMPBELL.

Waukegan, Nov. 29.—Omer and Sprague have just closed a four weeks' meeting in this difficult place for Christian work, with 33 additions; all things revived, fine feeling, money in the treasury. It was the best meeting held in this city for many a day. Omer and Sprague are strong workers and preach and sing the gospel with power and love. Our work here moves on grandly. —W. O. THOMAS, pastor.

INDIANA.

Arcadia.—On Nov. 24 I closed a two weeks' meeting with the Arcadia congregation, with which I am located. As a result of this meeting 6 were added to our membership; 2 by letter, 1 by statement, and 3 by primary obedience. We feel that good seed has been cast which will result in future harvests. —W. H. NEWLIN, minister.

Connersville, Nov. 29.—We have just closed a meeting with 57 added and $3,000 raised, which completes payment on our new $5,000 church lot. This insures the beginning of our building next year. M. W. Harkins, of Anderson, Ind., did the preaching and T. R.

Humphrey, of Vevay, Ind., led the singing. Bro. Harkins gave great help to money raising, in addition to his effective work as a preacher —GEORGE DARSIE, JR.

Delphi, Nov. 25.—One addition yesterday at morning service and 1 recently not reported. I recently aided G. H. Clarke in a short meeting at Williamsport. I will close my three years' work here Jan. 1, and will then be ready for work elsewhere. —WM. GRANT SMITH

Madison, Nov. 25.—Bro. Geo. H. Farley, of Pleasureville, Ky., has just closed a very helpful meeting here resulting in 10 accessions as follows: 5 confessions, 2 from Baptists, 2 by statement and 1 by letter. Bro. Farley is a good preacher and will do good work wherever he goes. Our church is stronger in every way since the meeting. Observed "boys and girls' rally day" last evening. Large audience; reached apportionment. —J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

Orleans, Nov. 25.—Elder James Small, of Bedford, Ind., closed a meeting at Orleans last Monday evening which had continued two weeks, with 60 additions, 42 by confession, most of whom were young persons, but a number were adults and heads of families. The meeting was largely attended by members of the other churches and a feeling of good fellowship prevailed throughout. On the last night of the meeting there were a number of additions. We regard Elder James Small, of Bedford, as one of the strongest evangelists in the field.—E. D. LAUGHLIN.

Vincennes, Nov. 25.—Last night we closed our meeting here in which the pastor did the preaching and C. E. Millard conducted the music service. The meeting ran through 20 nights. Crowded houses greeted us throughout the whole meeting. The meeting resulted in 94 additions.—WM. OESCHGER, pastor.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Prior Creek, Nov. 23.—We began a meeting here Oct. 13 and will close now in a few days. We have rested one week while here. Up to date there have been 157 additions. 37 since last report. 125 by baptism, the rest from the sects. We think this is the greatest meeting ever held in the territory by our people. Our people will now begin to build and will be the strongest body of people at this place. During the last few days Bro. Roberts, of Vinita, and Bro. Thompson, of Adair, have been with us and we appreciated their presence. I go from here to Chelsea, I. T.—MORTON H. WOOD.

IOWA.

Albia, Nov. 28.—Two young men made the good confession Sunday night. The pulpit was filled by Bro. Shellenberger, of Mankato, Minn., who has accepted a call to this church and will begin work about Jan. 1.—R. H. INGRAM.

Bloomfield, Dec. 2.—The writer seems very much at home in an Iowa field once more. We spent two very pleasant years in Beatrice. One of their needs is a new church building which I trust they will be able to build when Bro. Price, who has been called to the work, becomes well initiated in the work. We left the church with all debts paid, and just closing a sale which will give them in cash $1,700. We can see no reason for their not enlarging their work. During our last four weeks at Beatrice there were 10 additions to the congregation. The first Sunday in November we began our work here having nine additions the first three Sundays when we decided to continue and hold a series of meetings. We just closed the second week last evening during which time we have had 42 additions, nearly all by confession and baptism. Miss Lucile Park, of Des Moines, is conducting the singing. Since our coming the brethren have placed two new furnaces in the building. Our chief difficulty now is the want of room.—D. A. WICKIZER.

Council Bluffs, Nov. 25.—Our work moves steadily forward; 1 addition yesterday.—W. B. CREWSON.

Delta.—The congregation here has just closed a very successful meeting conducted by home forces. The immediate results are, 24 accessions and all departments of the church strengthened. Our Bible-school will send a box of 30 dressed chickens to the Orphans' Home, St. Louis, for Thanksgiving.—L. H. HUMPHREYS, pastor.

Robertson, Nov. 23.—Kindly report our meeting 6 days old and 11 additions. J. E. Dinger, of Dows, is doing the preaching.—F. D. FILLMORE, pastor.

South English, Nov. 25.—We have just closed a 4 weeks' meeting held by Bro. W. J. Hastie, of Altoona, with 24 additions, 16 baptisms, 2 by statement and 2 by letter. We desire a minister to locate with us for half time; good salary to right man. Anyone desiring a location please write to S. M. Miller, South English, Ia.

KANSAS.

Caney, Nov. 29.—One added at Elk City and 1 at Tyro since my last report. Bro. Omer, of Camp Point, Ill., will begin a meeting here next Sunday.—J. R. CHARLTON.

Horton, Nov. 23.—One confession last Lord's day at regular service.—L. H. BARNUM.

LaCrosse, Nov. 25.—Our meeting her is ten days old and the interest is good. Twelve have been added; three by statement and nine confessions, five of them young men from the high school. We need a good pastor here.—J. L. THOMPSON.

Lawrence, Nov. 25.—We have just closed a three weeks' meeting in the Christian church of North Lawrence. Baxter Waters, pastor of the First Christian church, in pursuance of the plan adopted at the Minneapolis convention, came over and did the preaching for us. There were 18 additions; the church is in a flourishing shape, and everyone is hopeful and enthusiastic. In the middle of our revival Messrs. Bell Bros., the enterprising music dealers of this city, made us a present of a very handsome chapel organ.—F. M. McHALE.

Leavenworth, Dec. 2.—Three additions here yesterday.—S. W. NAY.

Lyndon, Nov. 25.—We had eight additions yesterday; one from the Baptists, one by letter, one by statement, and five by confession.—FRANK JALAGEAS.

Lyndon, Dec. 2.—We had four additions yesterday, one from the Baptists and three by confession. We are enjoying a general revival.—FRANK JALAGEAS.

Oneida, Nov. 25.—We are in the third week of a meeting here. C. C. Bentley, the brother of the pastor, is doing the preaching. Good interest and four confessions to date. More to follow, we believe.—F. H. BENTLEY.

Pardee, Nov. 25.—Five baptized and one from the U. B. church at this place.—H. E. BALLOU.

Pardee, Nov. 29.—Our meeting began the evening of Nov. 11 and continued 14 days; 5 obeyed the gospel; 2 by statement, 1 from the U. B. church. Bro. H. E. Ballou did the preaching and did it well.—J. A. MILLER.

Soldier, Nov. 24.—Bro. R. L. McHatton is in a fine meeting here. Thirteen accessions to date; 11 confessions, one reclaimed and one from the Baptists. Bro. McHatton is an excellent worker.—CHAS. A. POLSON.

Topeka, Nov. 26.—I spent twenty days with the Harmony church, Dickinson county, and the pastor, B. L. Matchett, closing on the 24th. There were 22 additions.—W. S. LOWE.

Wichita, Nov. 25.—Yesterday was a record breaker for evangelists. The greatest number ever added by one of our evangelists in one day was 63. Yesterday under the preaching of Evangelist J. V. Coombs there were 67 accessions, 35 at morning service, 32 in the evening. A. E. Dubber is pastor of the church.—A. R. DAVIS, singer.

KENTUCKY.

Carlisle, Nov. 27.—We closed a meeting of two weeks at this place, with 74 additions. I was assisted by Bro. R. H. Crossfield and Miss Perrin. The Lord richly blessed us. I have accepted a call to this church for the fifth year.—F. M. TINDER.

Covington, Nov. 26.—Our meeting at the First church conducted by home forces closed Sunday night; 63 additions, 48 confessions.—GEORGE A. MILLER.

Cynthiana.—I closed my meeting last Sunday with 35 additions. I close my seventh year with the church here with everything in a prosperous and hopeful condition. Every "feller" does not "fizzle out" and have to leave because he builds a new church.—J. J. HALEY.

Lexington.—The meeting at the Central church closed Nov. 17 with 90 additions. The pastor, I. J. Spencer, preached every night except Saturdays for four weeks. A thanks-Springfield, Nov. 23.—The Church of Christ of this city, where G. A. Reinl is pastor, has this month had five added to the church; three by baptism and two by letter.—S. M. HUNT.

MINNESOTA.

Duluth, Nov. 23.—Last Wednesday evening we closed one of the most successful meetings held in the history of the church. The meetings continued four weeks resulting in 12 additions. J. K. Shellenberger, our state evangelist, did the preaching and soon won the hearts of the people by his earnest appeal for a primitive gospel. The future of the church is exceedingly bright. An earnest zeal is manifested in all departments of church work.—C. R. SINE ☞ Mankato.—The meeting which has been in progress four weeks, held by Simpson Ely, closed with 35 additions and a deep impression made on the community.

MISSOURI.

Breckenridge, Nov. 25.—Our meeting is just one week old, with 21 added; 16 by confession. There is a splendid interest. There were 4 last night, will continue over next Lord's day and hope for more; will report at close.—W. E. BATES.

Breckenridge, Dec. 2.—Our meeting continued just two weeks. Closed last night with 30 additions, 23 by confession and baptism. About twice as many men as women were baptized.—W. E. BATES.

Buffalo, Nov. 25.—Closed a two weeks' meeting last night at Prairie Grove church, with 15 added to the church, 9 by confession, 2 by letter, 3 by statement, 1 from the Baptists. Bro. R. C. Harrell is the pastor and has done a good work for them for 4 years. I begin to-night at Half Way, Mo.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

Centralia, Nov. 25.—During October Bro. A. N. Lindsay assisted me in Centralia. It was a great meeting with 67 additions and the church at high-tide in every way. One letter and one confession last night.—E. M. SMITH.

Grand Pass, Nov. 28.—We have just returned from a series of meetings held at Bethlehem, Blue Lick and Christian Union, Saline county, Mo., and Waverly, Lafayette county, Mo., resulting in 126 additions; 26 from the Methodists, eight Baptists, one Presbyterian and one Catholic. One Baptist preacher (Fillmore Pryor).—J. I. ORRISON.

Harris, Nov. 27.—The Harris meeting of 2 weeks and 3 days' duration closed last Lord's day night with 8 additions, 4 by baptism. J. R. Blunt gave us splendid sermons. He is helping in a short meeting at Duffield school-house, a few miles south of Humphreys. One confession last night.—R. W. BLUNT.

Higdon, Nov. 30.—Three additions at Silver Point, two by baptism and one by letter.—J. B. DODSON.

Huntsville, Nov. 25.—We had 8 additions recently in my meeting at Wellsville, where I preach one-half time. Am now in an interesting meeting at Salisbury, where I preach one-half time. Five accessions to date.—W. D. McCULLEY.

Joplin, Nov. 25.—We received 6 additions here yesterday; 4 by confession, making 12 for November and 26 for past quarter. We expect to occupy our new building about December 23. Correspondents writing me for favors should enclose postage if they expect an answer.—W. F. TURNER.

Knobnoster, Nov. 29.—At Passaic on Nov. 26 I closed a very interesting meeting of 10 days' duration with 5 additions to the congregation; 4 baptisms and 1 by statement.—S. F. WALTON.

LaBelle, Nov. 29.—C. S. Brooks, of New London, Mo., closed a very successful meeting with the church here which resulted in 17 additions; 14 by confession on and 3 by letter. Bro. Brooks is an able speaker and a good evangelist.—J. H. COIL.

Leonard, Nov. 25.—Meeting here is 10 days old. J. S. Clements, of Canton, Mo., is doing the preaching; 25 additions up to date, with bright prospects for the future.—ALLEN HITCH, pastor.

Lexington, Nov. 25.—Yesterday, Nov. 24, closed my third year's labor here. Remain for another year beginning Dec. 1, 1901. Six additions at last service, two by letter, one reclaimed, 3 by confession; 6 previously by letter, making 12 additions to the congregation for November, 1901.—E. J. FENSTER-MACHER.

Liberty.—The pastor, J. H. Hardin, with H. A. Northcutt as chief speaker, has just closed a meeting of four and a half weeks with 67 additions, 41 by confession. The church is now fully emerged from the partial eclipse into which it entered when F. O. Fannon left it about ten years ago. J. M. Vawter and J. H. Hardin have both done much to lift it up, and it is now upon the heights.

Mexico, Dec. 1.—Meeting one week old with 7 additions; 4 by confession. J. Will Landrum is delighting all as song leader and soloist. Large congregations.—A. W. KOKEN-DOFFER.

New Hampton, Nov. 29.—I am assisting Bro. Myrick in a meeting here. The interest is fine; 11 additions so far and the prospect for many more is very good. A large part of the audience stand in the aisles and on the outside of the house. Mrs. Scott, my daughter, has charge of the music. This is my seventh meeting in this county.—MORGAN MORGANS.

Pape, Nov. 25.—Our meeting here is eight days old with 12 additions; 5 confessions, 4 baptized, one to be baptized and 6 by statement, 1 reclaimed. I never had better attention and interest. I go from here to Corinth, Kan.—W. N. PORTER.

Plattsburg, Nov. 27.—I have just closed a meeting of 3 weeks at Agency, Mo., with 24 additions; 12 confessions and baptisms, 5 by letter, 4 by restoration and 3 from the denominations. In the early part of the meeting H. F. Davis held a successful Bible-school institute of 5 days. This is my sixth annual meeting for this church, which has called me the eighth year for one-fourth time, without a dissenting vote or voice.—JAMES C. CREEL.

St. Louis, Dec. 2.—First church, six confessions. Second, meeting closed Sunday night with 45 additions, making 94 for the year thus far. Central, three confessions. Fourth, meeting continues with 42 so far; $500 received by bequest from Miss S. C. Lane. Fifth, two by letter. Ellendale, one confession. A. B. Moore has just closed a union meeting held in Hope Congregational church. East St. Louis, three additions, one by confession.

NEBRASKA

Omaha.—The annual meeting of the North Side Christian Church, Omaha, has just been held. The reports of the various departments show encouraging progress. There have been 85 additions to the church during the year. The present membership is 300. We have a wide awake Bible-school. Our superintendent, Bro. C. A. Mangum, is a wide-awake young man. With a host of young people to push the work the outlook for the future is very promising. Come to Omaha next October. We are preparing for the greatest convention ever held by the Disciples. Twenty-seven committees are at work. We meet twice a month from now until the convention. Come!—W. T. HILTON, pastor.

Omaha, Nov. 27.—We had a good day last Sunday; one confession and one received into fellowship, previously baptized, in the morning service, and 2 confessions and 2 others baptized in evening. I preach the sermon in the union Thanksgiving service of the down-town churches at the County Memorial Lutheran church to-morrow at 10:30. My theme will be "The hand of God in American history."—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

York, Nov. 28.—I began a revival last Lord's day morning. There were six added at the morning service and one at the evening service, all heads of families. The people here have built a $5,000 church this year and provided for all indebtedness. Fifty have been added to the membership so far this year. Bro. A. C. Corbin, of Beaver City, Neb., will assist in the meeting now begun.—G. JAMES CHAPMAN, pastor.

OHIO.

Akron, Nov. 25.—Our meeting here closed last night with 32 additions. Nearly all were by baptism. Bro. Geo. F. Hall, of Chicago, did the preaching. Miss Lillian Pearl Perrin, of Indiana, was present the first two weeks of the meetings. She was obliged to withdraw from the work in order to meet her engagement at Carlisle, Ky. At the close of the services last night, Bro. Hall made an appeal to the large audience present for enough pledges, payable in four months, with which to liquidate the present indebtedness of the church. The result was a great victory, nearly $900 being raised.—LUTHER MOORE, pastor.

Weston, Nov. 25.—J. R. Ewers conducted a series of meetings for us in October, which resulted in 15 by baptism and two by commendation. The meeting did great good along all lines.—S. W. COOK.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Blackwell, Nov. 30.—We began a meeting at this place last Sunday. Have had packed house at every service and three added. We go to opera house Sunday night. The church has no pastor. This is a fine young town of 3,500 population and in a fine country.—W. E. HARLOW.

Shawnee, Nov. 25.—Our Chetopa meeting of 18 days closed Nov. 21 with 45 additions, 38 baptisms, the church set in order and a pastor sighted—a good man and will be called. I am now in Shawnee, O. T. Our meeting starts off with a packed house and 2 additions the first day.—D. D. BOYLE.

OREGON.

Albany, Nov. 25.—Mrs. Clara H. Hazelrigg closed a 19 days' meeting with us last night, having greatly helped the church in raising nearly $500 for current expenses and arousing the church to a more consecrated service. The immediate results were 17 by statement and letter and 10 by confession, 5 being from the denominations.—J. B. HOLMES.

Eugene.—The First Christian church here recently closed a 23 days' meeting with 31 additions. B. B. Burton did the preaching and Dudley Eshelman, of Tacoma, Wash., led the singing. At the close of the meeting Bro. Burton gave his great lecture, "In the Corridors of Antiquity." This is one of the best lectures ever given in Eugene. We have had two additions since the meeting closed. This church met its apportionment for state work in the November offering.—MORTON L. ROSE, pastor.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Charleroi, Nov. 29.—We are in a good meeting here with 28 additions to date—18 by confession and baptism. Will continue another week, and then return home for a rest. Churches desiring my help in meetings

Christmas Cards.

The great majority of the readers of this paper, who can afford to present their friends with diamond rings and automobiles at Christmas time, have no interest in this announcement. It is for the benefit of the few who are unable to scatter such costly gifts, but who wish to send some Christmas remembrance to their friends. For all such, the CHRISTMAS CARD is just the thing. The friend who is worth having will appreciate such a kindly evidence of good will and remembrance as much as he would a gold watch. The complete list of our Christmas Cards is given in our Christmas Catalogue, yours for the asking, but we give below the following:

No. 70.—Twelve designs for the purchaser of a dozen cards gets 12 different cards. Size (closed), 4x2½ inches. Varied designs—flowers, landscapes, etc., etc. Christmas Greetings. Space for name of giver. Single copy, 5 cents; per dozen 35 cents.

No. 81.—Flowers, cut to shape; a most tasteful design. Closed, 5x3 inches. Verses and Holiday greetings, with name of sender. Two designs. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 40 cents.

No. 62.—Size 6x4½ (open). Christmas verses and greetings. Child figures, embossed; flower stamped designs. Two varieties. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 40 cents.

No. 45.—An exquisitely chaste design; Rural Scenes in Photographic Colors. Shakespearean Quotations; Christmas Greetings. Four designs. Single card, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 14.—One of our prettiest and choicest cards. Embossed designs with filigreed borders. Two varieties. Inside, Christmas verses and greeting. Single copy, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 54.—This is getting into the higher grade of goods. Bowls of Roses in four designs. Escalloped Edges, Classical Quotations, printed in Gold. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 43.—This "card" is really a little booklet, with choicest floral designs on cover; holiday greetings and verses, and with blanks for names of giver and recipient, inside. Single copy, 8 cents; per dozen, 60 cents.

No. 99.—"Just too sweet for anything," is what she will say when she gets this beautiful Christmas remembrance. Size (open), 11x5½ inches. A triumph of delicate color-work. Single copy, 10 cents; per dozen, 80 cents.

No. 98.—A delicate bit of coloring in flower-designs. Holiday Greetings in Embossed Lettering. This is another booklet. Inside are Christmas verses and register for two names. Single copy, 10 cents; per dozen, 90 cents.

No. 100.—This is a novelty—a new idea in Christmas greetings. It is impossible to give, in a few words, any adequate or intelligible description of this beautiful novelty—this ingenious arrangement of color reflection to produce day and night effects on the same card. No. 100 is truly a gem. We have put it at a low price in order to introduce it among our patrons, 10 different designs. Single, 25 cents; per dozen, in assorted designs, $2 25.

Our five cent cards are such as the city stores, even, sell for ten to twenty cents. Our prices are very low. The practice of giving Cards at Christmas and Easter is rapidly growing—as it should—as it is a beautiful custom.

You doubtless have a score of friends whom you wish to "remember" at Christmas, yet you stagger at the expense and labor of purchasing expensive presents for them. Why not secure a dozen or two of our cards, and thus satisfy the generous impulse of your heart, without embarrassing yourself financially? Verbum sap.

Homestead.—A three weeks' meeting closed with 9 additions, 7 by baptism. The pastor, E. A. Bosworth, was assisted by E. P. Wise, of Somerset, Pa.

Newcastle, Nov. 25.—The Updike and Webb meeting continues with 48 added the first two weeks.—GEO. A. WEBB, singer.

Washington, Nov. 25.—There have been six additions by letter and three by baptism during the month of November. Have opened a mission Bible-school in Tylerdale addition with 150 enrolled. Have purchased lot and will build soon as possible.—E. A. COLE, pastor.

TENNESSEE.

Johnson City.—R. Lin Cave, of Independence, Mo., recently closed at this place a two weeks' meeting which resulted in 34 additions to the church, 20 by confession and baptism. Bro. Cave's sermons were of the highest order and proclaimed him at once a great preacher. A. A. Ferguson, our pastor, begins a meeting at Rockwood, Tenn., Dec. 1.—A. B. CROUCH.

VIRGINIA.

Martinsville, Nov. 25.—Preached at Mt. Olivet yesterday afternoon. Two confessions.—W. H. BOOK.

Fredericksburg.—Meeting three weeks old. 38 to date. Great crowds. People studying, debating and quarreling over "our plea" until this old conservative aristocratic town is getting alarmed lest a "Campbellite" church should creep in. But it is in and established now. All our "prospects" are guarded to church, and converts made to feel social and home pressure. We thank God and take courage for his power thus far.—HERBERT YEUELL.

WISCONSIN.

Richland Center, Nov. 24.—Friday evening a roll call of the church was held, invitations were sent to all members resident and non-resident, a large number responded, a very happy and profitable evening was spent. Two members have been added by letter, and one dismissed, during the month.—EDWARD OWERS, pastor.

Family Circle

They are Thinking of You.

By F. Tate Kincaid.

Did you ever sit down in a room all alone,
Far away from the friends you love best,
And feel as if something were hovering round
Like a soul from the land of the blest?

Did you ever commune with something unseen,
A presence you could not explain,
And then feel it vanish and leave you alone—
To plead for its presence in vain?

O friend, if you haven't, just give me your hand
And go where you never have gone,
Where no kindred spirit, no one that you love
Can greet you, and you are alone;

Alone amid thousands who flit to and fro
With laughter and mirth in the halls,
And out in the corridors, out in the streets
The sound of their merriment falls.

Go yearn as I've yearned for the touch of a hand
In friendship unselfish and true,
The glance of an eye that can speak to the soul
And say, "I'm contented with you."

And then you will learn a sweet lesson of life,
That those who are constant and true
Will come in the spirit when you are alone,
Because they are thinking of you.

Things to See in December.

The gift of sight is universal, but the power of seeing things is not so common. Most of us need a guide to point out the unobtrusive beauties which would otherwise escape our eyes. A writer in Country Life in America—a splendid new magazine for all interested in the great world of out-of-doors, and unexcelled in mechanical perfection by any current periodical—pleads for a fuller appreciation of the beauties of winter.

Are you one of those that cower at home, he says, sighing over faded woodlands and meadows brown and sere? There's something for you in your neighbor's wood lot, and faith, you need it!

Never mind where the paths are. Make one of your own. Shuffle your way through the drifts of leaves, all crisp and dry and brown. What a din they make!

The bluejay scolds you roundly for coming, but at heart he respects you. Not many have the hardihood to dare the silence and the cold.

What a sting there is in the gusty atmosphere! But there is a tingle in your blood by this time that answers the challenge. You catch your foot in a matted tangle of trailing yew. In falling you uncover a pocket of chestnuts hidden by some thrifty squirrel. What an exceptional flavor! And this little plant with the mottled leaf must be wintergreen! How the years fade out that separate you from the days of your youth as you nibble that leaf!

But listen! Is it a voice far off, or only the echo of a summer voice still wandering in the woods? It comes again!—the faintest little broken chirrup, and now you are sure. Off comes a strip of loose bark from the stump beside you, and there is your musician—a tiny, brown cricket. Under your gaze, he moves uneasily, and tries to slip away into a crevice. It may be terror that he feels—probably it is bashfulness.

What a winter resort you have discovered! Some borer has grooved the wood into an intricate pattern, leaving a trail of sawdust behind. In this soft bed lodges many a creature, waiting for the warmth of spring. Here is the chrysalis of a butterfly, lashed to its support with ropes of its own making. Hung all about are silken bags filled with the eggs of spiders. A yellow woolly caterpillar has spun a scanty cocoon and lies within it—a shiny, cartridge-shaped pupa. He wags his tail sleepily as you poke at him. Alongside is a relative of his, brown and black, who has gone to sleep with his clothes on! It is reverence that you feel as you fit that bark carefully into its place and bank it up with leaves. Truly our winter means not death, but only sleep!

But it's cold on the ground. You pocket a handful of chestnuts and munch them as you forge ahead. Instead of the vivid colors seen in October, there are browns and dull purples and pale yellows. They do not startle and waylay, but they do not weary you. There is a quiet restfulness in the picture—and it satisfies.

It is a joy to see the evergreens. Their time has come at last, and against a russet background they stand proudly up to be counted. You had forgotten how soft are the plumes of the white pine, and how beautifully fleecy the dark green sprays of the hemlock. Can anything be more heartening to a man than the smell of their bruised twigs?

One last, best sight as you leave the woods is a fine beech tree in full leaf, with the setting sun upon it. A touch has turned its dross to gold. It is a sight that makes the tears start!

Your neighbor has land and you have none. But he has never found anything but fuel in his wood lot. As you sit warming your hands at the fire, and picking off the burs you brought home, you incline to feel compassionate toward him. In spite of his riches, he is poor, indeed. And you are thankful for that best gift—the power to see and to feel.

Write Right.

"Scatter decent, helpful things."

Good, philosophical Ras Wilson once said to a new reporter, "Young man, write as you feel, but try to feel right. Be good humored toward everyone and everything. Believe that other folks are just as good as you are, for they are. Give 'em your best and bear in mind that God has sent them, in his wisdom, all the trouble they need, and it is for you to scatter gladness and decent, helpful things as you go. Don't be particular about how the stuff will look in print but let 'er go. Some one will understand. That is better than to write so dosh bing high, or so tarnashun deep, deep that no one understands. Let 'er go."

"So on the above plan," says M. W. Porter, of Topeka, Kan., "I will write what I know of Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food from personal experience. After a long period of indigestion and other disorders, with some misgivings I took up the use of Grape-Nuts. Despite the hot weather I kept gaining in strength and mentally, a thing I had never done at that season of the year.

"I found the food an excellent stimulant for the brain, and I could do more and better work than I had ever done. It was a revelation to discover how closely the brain and digestive organs were in sympathy with each other. Whatever retarded the work of one had a corresponding effect on the other, and the food that tended to put one in proper shape acted accordingly on the other. I know that my great improvement mentally and physically came from dispensing with unwholesome food and using Grape-Nuts liberally."

The Reason.

I've often sat here and wondered Whatever the reason could be,
 That no matter how naughty I've been to her,
 Mamma's always so good to me.

To-day when my very best doll tore her frock
 I punished that child most severely,
 And locked her up in a cold, dark room,
 'Til she should repent sincerely.

But after I'd turned the key in the lock
 I felt so unhappy, and sorry, and sad,
 That I just had to bring her right out again,
 For I loved her although she was bad.

Then it came to me all in a minute,
 As I rocked with my doll on my knee,
 That mamma is only a great big girl,
 And her very best dolly is me.

How to Keep a Position.

Mr. James J. Hill, President of the Northern Pacific railway and head of the corporation recently formed to effect the combination of the great northern trans-continental roads, writes in Success on How to Get and Keep a Position. As an employer on a large scale, Mr. Hill ought to know as well as any one what qualities in an employe win the approbation of his boss. He says in part:

Having secured your position, how shall you keep it? First, and always, by being absolutely and strictly honest, for honor and character are man's greatest promoters. They stimulate energy and promote confidence. Who can deny the great power of energy and confidence? After an employer finds out he has an energetic clerk, in whom he can place absolute confidence, that clerk's future is a very promising one.

Go to work with slow, steady, determined effort. Don't grab your pen or shovel as if you knew just what you are expected to do without explanation. Don't give your employer the impression that he has secured a man who is using his brains simply to figure out how far his weekly wage will go—if it will pay only the rent and buy the food, or if it will go so far as to permit of two theater tickets and a new collar for the dog. Perhaps you think your employer cannot detect such thoughts. He is, perhaps, a keen man, has probably employed scores before you, and has had much practice in reading the expressions of men.

When luncheon or closing time is approaching, don't begin to prepare for leaving twenty minutes beforehand. I know a young man who stopped work regularly at 11:40 A. M., and at 5:10 P. M., in order to have plenty of time to "wash up," arrange his cuffs and tie, and brush his hair, so that he could leave promptly at 12 o'clock for luncheon, and at 5:30 P. M., when the store closed. It was some years ago. That man is still looking for a "good job." He has had more than a dozen. He knew how to get them, but he never acquired the art of keeping them. Don't be afraid of trying to do more than is expected of you. This has been the cause of many a man's failure. The bookkeeper who gives up a theater party or an evening social, in order to try and complete a balance sheet, does not escape his employer's notice. He has shown willingness and has given the "boss" good evidence that he regards his interest before his own pleasure. You may make mistakes; but, if you do, say so, and make your amends by trying to correct them. Never lie about a mistake, for such a course adds cowardice to an already unpleasant condition.

Why is a Monkey a Monkey?

Did you ever stop to think where some of the animals got their names—their English names we mean, for of course, Adam didn't name them in English when they filed past him in the garden? A writer in Cassell's Little Folks explaining the origin of some of these names says:

"One of the funniest little animals is the monkey, and whenever you look into its little wrinkled face, remember how its name arose. Monkey is due to the English way of pronouncing the old German word Moneke, which was the name of the ape's son in a famous old tale. This Moneke is a diminutive form of the Italian monna, meaning 'an ape,' and also used as a nickname for an old woman; while monna itself is short for madonna, that is, 'my lady.' Orang-outang is a Malay expression, meaning, in plain English, 'the wild man of the woods.' Lemur is the Latin word for 'ghost,' and was given to the little animal so called on account of its nocturnal habits. The squirrel carries its name-history about with it in the shape of its bushy tail, which serves to a great extent as a covering when it sits down. Squirrel is composed of two Greek words, meaning 'shadow' and 'tail.' Mouse, which goes far back to the old Persian and Sanskrit languages, means the 'stealing' animal, just as wolf in its original form meant the 'tearer,' and hare meant 'jumper.' The lynx was so called because of its keen, bright eyes, its Latin name being allied to the Greek word for a lamp."

Success Out of Failure.

It is a fact, proven by many examples, that some boys who cannot be started on the road to success start themselves very effectively when thrown on their own resources. General Lew Wallace, according to his own words, was a poor student in his young manhood, says Success.

He grew tired of his college course after six weeks and returned home. But his failure at college furnished the turning-point in his career. He says:

"I shall never forget what my father did when I returned home. He called me into his office, and took from a pigeonhole in his desk a package of papers neatly folded and tied with red tape. He was a very systematic man, because, perhaps, of his West Point training. The papers proved to be the receipts for my tuition, which he had carefully preserved. He called off the items and asked me to add them. The total, I confess, staggered me.

"That sum, my son," he said, with a tone of regret in his voice, 'represents what I have expended to provide you with a good education. How successful I have been you know better than anyone else.

"After mature reflection, I have come to the conclusion that I have done for you, in that direction, all that can reasonably be expected of any parent; and I have, therefore, called you in to tell you that you have now reached an age when you must take up the lines yourself. If you have failed to profit by the advantages with which I have tried so hard to surround you, the responsibility must be yours. I shall not upbraid you for your neglect, but rather pity you for the indifference which you have shown to the golden opportunities you have been enabled to enjoy through my indulgence."

"What effect did his admonition have on you? Did it awaken or arouse you?" General Wallace was asked.

"It aroused me, most assuredly. It set me to thinking. The next day, I set out with a determination to accomplish something for myself. My father's injunction rang in my ears. New responsibilities rested on my shoulders, as I was, for the first time in my life, my own master. I felt that I must get work on my own account.

"After much effort, I finally obtained employment from the man with whom I had passed many afternoons strolling up and down the little streams in the neighborhood, trying to fish. He was the county clerk, and he hired me to copy what was known as the complete record of one of the courts. I worked for months in a dingy, half-lighted room, receiving for my pay something like ten cents a hundred words. The tediousness and the regularity of the work made a splendid drill for me, and taught me the virtue of persistence as one of the avenues of success. It was at this time I began to realize the deficiency in my education, especially as I had an ambition to become a lawyer. Being deficient in both mathematics and grammar, I was forced to study evenings. Of course, that was very exacting, after a full day's hard work; but I was made to realize that the time I had spent with such lavish prodigality could not be recovered, and that I must extract every possible good out of the golden moments then flying by all too fast."

Nature Literature.

The growth of literature pertaining to plants and animals and the out-of-doors, says a writer in Country Life in America, is one of the most emphatic and significant movements of the time. As an indication of the interest on the part of the public in reading matter appertaining to country life, it may be recorded that there were published within fifteen months one hundred and forty-two books devoted to out-door topics. Not one of these books has been what the publishers call a failure; a number have sold 20,000 copies; some 40,000; others 50,000; and at least one 90,000 copies. Publishing houses are preparing special catalogues of outdoor literature. Added to all this is the rapidly growing literature of agriculture and its allied arts. The old days of distrust of "book-farming" have come to an end. Farm literature of the present day is vital, resourceful, scientific, entertaining. The demand for it is increasing. Much of it will outlive its generation.

The Book.

The following collection of the opinions of great men about the Bible was printed upon a card and hung upon the door-knobs in Lexington, Ky., during the recent series of meetings in that city:

Andrew Jackson—The Bible, sir, is the rock on which our republic rests.

Thomas Jefferson—I have always said and always will say that the studious perusal of the sacred volume will make better citizens, better fathers and better husbands.

Daniel Webster—I have read the Bible through many times; I now make a practice of going through it once a year. It is the book of all books.

Patrick Henry—There is a Book worth all other books which were ever printed.

Henry Clay—I have always had and always shall have a profound regard for Christianity, the religion of my fathers, and for its rites, its usages and observances.

Carlyle—A noble book! All men's book!

Walter Scott—There is but one book for the dying man—the Bible.

Milton—There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion; no orations equal to those of the prophets, and no politics like those which the scriptures teach.

John Locke—It has God for its author, salvation for its end, and truth without any error for its matter.

Isaac Newton—I account the scriptures of God to be the most sublime philosophy.

Benjamin Franklin—Cultivate an acquaintance with, and a firm belief in, the Holy Scriptures. This is your certain interest.

Gladstone—Constantly I study the word. The Holy Scripture is an impregnable rock. The acceptance of Jesus will solve all the great problems of the day.

Napoleon—The soul can never go astray with this book for a guide.

George Washington—It is impossible to govern the world without God. . . . He must be worse than an infidel who lacks faith, and more than wicked that has not gratitude enough to acknowledge his obligations. Thy word is a lamp to our feet, by it we must be judged.

The young mother thinks, when she has completed the baby garments that are to clothe the little form. But she is not all ready for baby's coming, unless she has done something more for the baby than merely to prepare his clothes. Many a young mother who goes through hours of pain and suffering wonders why it was not possible to prepare in some way for the baby's advent, and to avoid the agony that seemed almost unendurable. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the one medicine for women which prepares them perfectly, both for the burdens and pleasures of maternity. It prevents the morning sickness from which so many women suffer. It strengthens the whole body, so that there is no nervousness nor anxiety. It promotes a healthy appetite and causes refreshing sleep. It gives the mother strength for her trial and makes the baby's advent practically painless. Healthy mothers have healthy children, and it is the general testimony of those who have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a preparative for motherhood, that the children were healthier and happier than those born after months of mental misery and physical anguish on the part of the prospective mother.

Sick and ailing women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter absolutely without fee or charge. As chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., Dr. R. V. Pierce, assisted by his staff of nearly a score of physicians, has in the past thirty years and over treated and cured more than half a million sick and suffering women. The testimonials of these cured women are on record. A large number of them were cured when doctors had pronounced a cure impossible and after enduring years of useless suffering.

Let no sick women hesitate to take advantage of Dr. Pierce's offer, but write at once and so secure the professional counsel of a specialist in the diseases of women, entirely free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Hoped for Death.

"For the sake of poor suffering women, I feel it my duty to inform you of the great benefit your medicine has given me," writes Mrs. Callie Bowles, of Watts, Iredell Co., N. C. "I was in a most miserable condition when I wrote to you. I had uterine disease so bad I could scarcely walk and suffered such dreadful misery I hoped to be relieved by death. You wrote to me to take your 'Favorite Prescription' and I have taken eleven bottles of it, and two of your 'Pleasant Pellets.' I am entirely well and feel like a new woman. I feel thankful to God and to Dr. Pierce for the blessings I now enjoy. I have a fine big boy, two months old and never got along as well in my life. I can't praise your medicines enough."

Very Thankful.

"I will be very glad to say a few words for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription," writes Mrs. P. S. Douglas, of Mansonville, Brome Co., Quebec. "During the first four months when I looked forward to becoming a mother I suffered very much from nausea and vomiting and I felt so terrible sick I could scarcely eat or drink anything. I hated all kinds of food. At this time I wrote to Dr. Pierce and he told me to get his 'Favorite Prescription' and a bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I got a bottle of each and when I had taken them a few days, I felt much better, and when I had taken hardly three parts of each bottle I felt well and could eat as well as any one, and could do my work without any trouble (I could not do anything before). I feel very thankful to Dr. Pierce for his medicine and I tell all who tell me they are sick to get these medicines or write to Dr. Pierce."

With the Children.

J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Advance Society Letters.

Jas. F. Stewart, Santa Paula, Cal.: "Some three years ago two children, Grace and Ulie Stewart, of Santa Paula, became members of the Av. S. Perhaps the children would like to know where they are now. The older sister they spoke of, is married, the mother of two sweet little girls. Ulie is at Kimberlin Heights in the School of Evangelists, preparing for his life work. He has been there over a year, and, although not sixteen, has preached his first sermon, which is said to have been a splendid effort. Grace is with Princes C. Long, the singing evangelist, preparing herself to sing the gospel. They expect when they graduate, to go together to preach and sing Christ into the lives of men. And I, the father and preacher they spoke of, am all alone except for the faithful dog Nero, who is as wise as ever; he mourned the children's absence many weeks, but has become reconciled." (I was so pleased when I read this letter, it was just as if somebody had given me a beautiful present.) Burleigh Cash, Pennville, Ind.: "I think the new story is fine." (Good for you!) "I broke my collar bone about five weeks ago, but it is getting well." (I hope your side beat; I suppose it was football?) Helen Unsell, Frankford, Mo.: "I am just eight; I have never gone to school because we live so far, but mamma teaches me. I enjoy the stories every one, but I think the last is always the best. We are twelve miles from the Mississippi river, and have to cross it when I go to my grandma's." (What fun!) "We have free mail now and get our papers every day, which gives us much pleasure. I hope I will get some new books on Christmas." (Where's Santa Claus? I hope he's around listening, somewhere.)

Madge Masters, Ozark, Ark.: "I will tell about a Hallowe'en party I went to on Oct. 31. The 'Criterion Club' gave a faggot party; each member was to invite two friends. This was the invitation:

'To-morrow night is Hallowe'en,
Ten little sticks you're asked to bring;

And while they burn a story relate,
And don't forget to bring a plate.
Meet us on the college ground,
Where nuts and candy will be found.'

We wrote on butcher's paper and tied little sticks to it. About fifty came and we had such a nice time—I wish you could have been there. We had it on the campus and made the candy in kettles we could set right down in the coals. I helped make some of the candy and you know it was good." (I know it was good if any of the kindness of those little hands could rub off on the candy; I think it must have been the sweetest candy that was ever kettled in Arkansaw.) "I liked Pete better than any of the stories, for the girls reminded me of a crowd I go with. Margaret Sturges, of Chillicothe, writes me such nice letters; I do wish we lived close so we could go and see each other." (ME, too!) Ethel Wheat, Aurora, Mo.: "Sorry I have not kept the rules, but begin again, as do also Flora and Alma Berry; I send a new name, Sadie Shrum, 13. What colors are our badges?" (Red, and any other one color you may prefer; a good combination is red and blue with "Av. S." worked on the upper ribbon in white silk.) Willie Bell, Lees Summit, Mo.: "I have found the Av. S. work a benefit since I left college two years ago. I find that the regularity of the reading, as well as the information gained, is beneficial."

Orrell Fidler, Terre Haute, Ind.: "How fast time flies!" (Yes, doesn't it!) "So Orrell sent a full report of his work, did he? That is what you said last time. The very idea! I'll forgive you this time, if you never do it again. It's not the first time I've been taken for a boy, but I am a girl. And always will be, because I'm not going to get old like some try to make you out to be. I don't think you're an old bachelor, because then you would not care for us as you do. Anyway, you are not old enough to be a regular bachelor. I speak as if I know, don't I? Well, I do; I have a brother about your age and he is a boy yet. A quotation:

'A little bit of powder,
A little dash of paint,
Make a woman's freckles
Look as if they ain't.'

The author is unknown and I think it is a shame, for no doubt this was an old writer's masterpiece. Lately I have read Janice Meredith, Alice of Old Vincennes—I liked that very much, it was so near home. And Tommy and Grizel, but I did not like the way Tommy acted, at all. I correspond with Ethel Taylor, got acquainted with her through our society, like her very much. I am a girl." Agnes May, Campbell, Cal.: "Is Pete to be published in book form? I think lots of people would like to read it." Mattye Upton, Houstonia, Mo.: "My cousin Anna Black and her cousin Beatrice Hatten, of Sedalia, send their names. I have read Up the Ladder and The Gypsy's Prophecy. I would like to live where Madge Masters does. I think it would be great fun to help cultivate sweet potatoes. My Sunday-school class is the banner class; one boy gave a dollar."

Lema Davis, Hume, Ill.: "I am very sorry, but don't believe I can stay with the Av. S., for school has begun. I cannot remember the rules at all." (I hope to print a letter from Lema before long, saying she has decided to stay with us. If she had an alarm-clock she could set it, and whenever

That is the result of a course of treatment with Scott's Emulsion. We have special reference to persons with weak lungs and sensitive throats.

Scott's Emulsion does some things better than others. This is one of them. It has a peculiar action on the throat and lungs which gives them strength and makes them tough.

That's how Scott's Emulsion drives out coughs, colds and bronchitis. It keeps them out, too.

Constance Blessing Smith, Fayette, Mo.: "Will you let another little girl join your happy circle? We live on a lovely farm, our yard is sixteen acres and full of trees. I am twelve. I have six fox terriers, three of them little puppies, and a great dane named Dewey. I belong to the Sunshine Band of Mercy in K. C., and I try to be kind to all dumb animals." (So do I try, and I think it a great work; but I find flies and spiders very trying; it will not do to indulge them too much; one must be firm.) "The story I sent, 'Mrs. Sea's Reception,' I wrote when I was ten. It was raining one evening and I was looking out the door when my little story came into my mind, and I went upstairs and wrote it. I am sure I can keep the Av. S. resolutions, for I have gone three years without touching a drop of coffee and two without eating pickles." (Can more be said?) "Please write more on Pete. Please do have it in book form, I like it so much better than the Red Box Clew. I think you must be Edgar. Good-bye until I see you again in the next paper."

Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "I hope The Runaways will be as good as Pete. Jean is going to read Pete to her pupils. Tell the members of the Av. S. that I know all about the author of it; I have seen him and I know whether he is an old bachelor or not. I will not tell them that, but I will say his pictures in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are not half as good looking as he is." (No, they're not; not quarter. Nannie D. knows what she is talking about—I visited her one summer.)

NEW HONOR LIST, and a fine one: Nannie D. Chambers (11th quarter); Madge Masters (12th); Orrell Fidler (2nd) (I am a fiddler myself, so how could I know she was a girl?); Burleigh Cash (13th); Harry Cash (13th); Mrs. F. A. The Saints' Coronation.*

TEXT:—And when the Chief Shepherd shall be manifested, ye shall receive the crown of glory that fadeth not away.—1 Peter 5:4.

Again we have a glimpse of coming glory. Last week we studied the map of the heavenly country, and felt stirring within our hearts a longing for home. Now we are to think of the crowns which reward the home-coming hosts. Such themes are most appropriate at the close of the year. The harvests have crowned the year with gold; and in this we see a parable, for life has its harvest and its golden crown.

Veiled Glories.

The children and saints of God are in disguise here. They struggle for the mastery over appetites and passions, and contend with vicious propensities, and are in outward appearance much like their unregenerate fellowmen. But all the while, there is developing within the glory that is to be revealed hereafter. It is veiled now; it is unperceived and in the majority of cases even unsuspected. Yet it is none the less real, and its final manifestation is one of the sweet certainties of Christian life.

Was it not in the same way that the Master lived? To be sure, His character was spotless from the first; there was no transgression, there was no penitence and amendment in His career, but the glory which He had since the world began was veiled by the flesh. It flashed forth occasionally, in miracles of mercy, in celestial speech that distilled from His lips as fragrant as the airs of heaven, but in the main it was hidden. He was unrecognized, misunderstood, rejected. But through those days of obscurity, he endured the cross, despising the shame, for He had respect unto the recompense of reward. His disciples need not be fretful or impatient; they can afford to wait the time of revealing and carry the hidden glories of character to the day of coronation.

The Courage of the Future.

If we believe the word of God, then no matter what our burdens and trials, there is coming a time of triumph. This is the refrain of some of our sweetest songs: "What must it be to be there?" "Not half has ever been told," etc. Imagination wearies itself in trying to picture the joys of heaven and the splendors of coronation. They cannot be imaged to our earthly minds. But now if all this untold glory awaits us, then what strength the anticipation should impart for present toils. It should give us strength to endure reproaches and humiliations. God's people are often reviled; His most faithful servants are caricatured and traduced. Can they say exultantly "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely?"

Strength for the present duty, for the burden of sorrow, for the unknown future, is ours, if we rightly anticipate the moment of thrones and crowns and sceptres. Crosses fill the vision and try the heart now; judgment halls frown and persecutions threaten and the grave yawns; but looking forward, we see the final victory, the hour of spiritual supremacy and everlasting reward, and we take courage. Nothing can harm us; no enemy can overthrow us; no peril can engulf us; we shall come off more than conquerors. Days of depression and discouragement should be brightened with thoughts like these.

"For Me."

There is no egotism in this expression of the apostle; when he declares, "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness," he is but claiming his own. Christianity does not demand self-effacement, self-obliteration, but self-sacrifice, sanctification. Therefore we are at liberty to think of the throne room and the crown jewels. And this phrase suggests the great fact of adaptation. There are to be rewards bestowed fitted to individual needs, and rounding out different characters. Identity, personality, individuality, will be respected in heaven. There will be no dull and monotonous uniformity.

There are in every heart unspoken desires, unuttered yearnings for moral greatness and spiritual excellency that shall there and then have their fulfillment. If we are obedient, if we take God into our lives and let Him fashion them, we need not fear. He will lead us to the fountain for which we thirst. He has trained us in the way each should go, not in the way some other child should go, and there will be this same respect for personality shown in the final award. And yet our joy will not be selfish and separate. When we glance about us, our hearts will bound with gladness to see that not for us only, but for all them that love His appearing, there are crown and thrones and dominions. What throngs will assemble! What songs will arise! What hallelujahs will ring!

Prayer.

Up out of darkness and worldliness, from flesh and folly, from sin and sorrow, O God, lift us. Cheer the disconsolate and the defeated with visions of coming glory and victory. Lead us into blessed fellowship, into tender sympathy. Forbid that any should fall out of the ranks, but measure to each struggling soul patience and strength, and bring every tired pilgrim home at last, robed and crowned, through Jesus Christ, our Lord Amen.

The Passover.*

The final appeal had been made to Pharaoh, in behalf of the people of God, and by him haughtily refused. All the wonders wrought by the two servants of Jehovah had but served to harden his heart while his base and cowardly refusal to keep his several promises to release Israel, promises made under the awful influence of dire afflictions which beset his own nation, proved conclusively that naught except the most fearful calamity, one which should strike directly at his own household and throne, could bring him to submission. After the ninth plague had passed, Pharaoh angrily forbade Moses and Aaron to enter his presence again, under penalty of death. They answer him with the courage born of confidence in God, telling him that when they next meet, he will be the suppliant, and his appeal the very one which they have been making before him. The final visitation of Jehovah shall bring death to every household in Egypt, while the entire Jewish nation shall escape.

How much time elapsed between the departure of Moses and Aaron from Pharaoh's presence and the final catastrophe resulting in Israel's deliverance, we do not know. It was probably not more than a few weeks at the most. The Hebrews must be prepared for their journey to Canaan, and be instructed where to gather in bands to march for the common rendezvous at Succoth. But this need require but little time. Israel had long perceived that the contest between Jehovah and Pharaoh could have but one ending, and all the plans for their march might have been talked over with the elders of the people during the months that had passed, and the details arranged. They waited for the awful midnight when the power of Pharaoh should be broken, and they and their little ones go forth a free people.

Before effecting their final deliverance, Jehovah provides for such a memorial of his providential love as will keep alive in their hearts, and the hearts of their children, the memory of what he had done for them. The human heart is forgetful of favors, and needs constant reminders of grace bestowed to preserve gratitude toward the giver. The very generation that Jehovah delivered from Egyptian bondage proved false to him, and it could not be expected that future generations would cling to him without some provision for teaching them their infinite obligation. The Passover became to Israel an object lesson, speaking in more impressive tones than any mere words of the birth of the nation from the womb of her cruel mother, Egypt, and of the providence of Jehovah that followed them through all the varied experiences of their pilgrimage. To the Christian the story of the Passover is of surpassing interest, since it brings to him the sweeter story of his Passover, the true Lamb of God, through the shedding of whose blood has come to him deliverance from the awful bondage of sin and birth into the spiritual family of God.

The Passover should signify a new beginning for the year to Israel. Nisan should henceforth be the first of months. They should count time from the date of their deliverance. Does not the child of God through Christ count his new life from the time when he is born into the kingdom of heaven? "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things have passed away, behold, all things have become new." The register of ancient Israel was in "the book of generations of the children of Israel." The register of God's spiritual Israel is in "the book of the regenerations of the children of God." Our names are written in "the Lamb's Book of Life."

The innocent lamb is chosen as the sacrifice whose blood shall cover their heads from the stroke of death. It shall be "without blemish," the choicest of the flock. Selected on the tenth day of Nisan, it is to be kept until the fourteenth, and then slain in the evening and its blood sprinkled on the posts and lintel of their doors. The flesh shall then be roasted, care being taken not to break any of the bones, and eaten with unleavened bread and bitter herbs. Any family too few in number to consume a lamb shall join a neighbor family, that all the lamb may be consumed. Any fragments that remain, with the bones, shall be burned. Can we not see here a beautiful symbolism of the Lamb of God, whose sinless life was freely yielded up for our redemption, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God? He was the "chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely." He was "the Lamb of God without spot and blameless." His blood is called by the writer to the Hebrews "the blood of sprinkling," and is said to be applied to our hearts by faith. In the Lord's supper we preserve the memory of his great redemption, and the bread and wine tell us anew of his undeserved mercy. We do not eat of it with bitter herbs, because the sweetness of our deliverance makes us forget even the bitter bondage of sin from which he has saved us. We do not eat of it standing, staff in hand, with the haste of those who are yet to make their hasty flight for liberty, but in the quiet of the divine communion afforded to us who "sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

Again the fearful visit of the angel of death is foretold, and the promise given that he shall pass over every house where the blood has been used as commanded. The firstborn of man and beast shall die in all Egypt, but life shall reign among the chosen people. The sparing of their firstborn in this time of dread visitation doubtless led to the statute enacted in the Mosaic law, dedicating to God the firstborn of man and beast, and requiring the redemption of the firstborn child by the payment of a certain sum into the Lord's treasury. This provision would forever keep in their memory the separation made between Egypt and Israel by the mighty hand of God.

We leave the chosen people here for another week. They have set apart the choicest lambs from their flocks, and at the appointed time have slain them, and sprinkled the blood upon the posts and lintels of their habitations. The flesh has been prepared, and with unleavened bread and bitter herbs is spread upon their tables. They gather their families about the board, and wait the signal to begin the feast. Their garments are girded about their waists and the sandals on their feet. A staff in every hand suggests the long journey before them. They await the coming of God's angel with awe, but without fear. "God is their refuge and strength," and their hearts are overflowing with hope and joy.

*Lesson for December 15. Exodus 12:1-14.

Book Notes.

N. B. The business of the Christian Publishing Company is by no means confined to the books which we ourselves publish, or to those listed in our catalogue, or to those which we advertise, from time to time, in our periodicals.

We do a general book business, and can supply, AT THE REGULAR RETAIL PRICE, almost any book in print, no matter where or by whom published. If you see anywhere a review or advertisement of any book and desire to purchase it, send us a money order or draft to cover the regular retail price, and we will forward the volume postpaid.

Our Special Catalogue No. 39, for Christmas, 1901, is a good thing. It will probably be out and ready for delivery by the time this issue of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST reaches its readers. We already have some thousands of envelopes addressed to send copies to as many of our patrons. If you do not receive a copy by Saturday, December 7, you would better drop us a postal card and ask for one. You can't afford to miss it. Our Christmas catalogue of 1900 was a veritable blessing to thousands; but this year we have surpassed all former efforts. It is not only a Christmas catalogue, but is also pre-eminently a Bargain List. There are some offers in it that you will have to read through two or three times before you can really believe you have read aright, and even then you will fear there is some mistake—some typographical error in the prices. This is particularly true of some of our offers of high-grade Teachers' Bibles, which are offered at prices lower than those commonly asked for the cheaper grades—those bound in imitation leather and lined with black paper! Do not neglect to send for a copy of this catalogue, if you fail to receive one by the date mentioned. It may save you several dollars in the purchase of Christmas Bibles.

Our unprecedented offer of a Five Dollar Bible for One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents, (just one fourth price) which was made in last week's issue of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST, evidently caught the public eye. Answers began to come in on Friday (the first copies of the paper were mailed on Wednesday night) and they came fast. Our supply of this Bible, at this price, is limited, and we greatly fear that many persons are going to be disappointed. It is a case of "first come first served." We will send them out as long as they last, and then (sad thought!) we will have to begin returning the money of procrastinating would-be purchasers.

"This is my busy day" is the standing notice which every employe of the Christian Publishing Company keeps hanging over his desk, case, press, table or bench these days. Never in the history of this house, extending over more than a quarter of a century, have we been so busy. In some departments, extra night work is now the rule, and the lunch hour is shortened to a few minutes. The moral of this, to our patrons, and especially to those who intend to purchase books and supplies, is that all orders should be sent in as early as practicable, to avoid possible disappointments. It is our rule to fill all orders the day they are received, and rarely do we fail to keep to the rule. Often are we blamed for the delay of the post office or of express companies. We will do our utmost to serve you—we will work until midnight, if necessary, to keep up with orders, but we urgently request our friends to send in their Christmas orders as soon as possible, and not wait until the great rush that comes in the last two weeks of the year.

We very much regret the fact that we have been obliged to disappoint some scores of our patrons who have ordered The Witness of Jesus during the past week or ten days. The rapid sale of this book was a surprise, even to us, and before we could anticipate it, the first edition was exhausted. But before this paragraph is read, the new edition will be ready, and we will be prepared to fill all orders as soon as received. The Witness of Jesus is truly a notable book—a book that well merits the welcome it has received from the thousands of admirers of the late Alex. Procter and his genius. No preacher, no intelligent, growing Disciple can afford to miss the mental stimulus he will receive from the reading of the volume. Mechanically, the book is one of our best. Cloth, 404 pages. Price, $1.25.

Does your congregation use in its Communion Service a wine concocted in the back room of some drug store and composed of wood alcohol, rain-water and tincture of capsicum? We hope not, but if it uses such a mixture, or anything similar, it ought to repent and reform. Send us ten cents in stamps and we will send you, by mail, a sample bottle of our pure, unfermented Communion Wine. We have secured the best, pure grape juice to be had, and are selling it at greatly reduced prices. For $2.25 we can send you enough to last the average congregation three months—one dozen half-pint bottles; or if you think that is not a sufficient quantity, send $3.50 for one dozen pint bottles, securely packed in a wooden box. This Communion Wine bears our own label. It is strictly pure, palatable and wholesome. If you use it once you will never go back to the old, fiery, dangerous stuff that was formerly so generally used.

This is about our last opportunity to call your attention to Christmas exercises and cantatas. We have been sending these out by the thousand for a month past. If you have so far neglected this matter and do not attend to it at once, it will be too late. Fortunately, our concert exercises are simple and easily learned. We repeat the list previously given:

The Dear Christ Child. An entirely new concert service by H. P. Danks. Sixteen pages, nine songs, four scripture and responsive readings, recitations, etc. Nineteen numbers in all. Price, 5 cents per copy, 50 cents per dozen.

The Wonderful Child. A popular favorite by W. W. Dowling. Eight songs, fifteen recitations, responsive readings, etc. Price, 5 cents per copy, 50 cents per dozen.

The Unspeakable Gift. By F. S. Shepard. Eight songs, six recitations, responsive readings, etc. Price, 5 cents per copy, 50 cents per dozen.

The Old, Old Story. Nine songs, with readings, recitations, Bible studies, etc., etc. A delightful Christmas program. Price, 5 cents per copy, 50 cents per dozen.

No FREE SAMPLES. We regret that we cannot give free samples of these exercises. It is a small matter for each person desiring samples to send us five, ten or fifteen cents, but it is rather a large thing for us to send free copies to thousands of persons. When ordering samples, send the single copy price of as many programs as you care to examine.

There is an increasing interest in the new American Revised Bible. We will send a circular, giving prices, sample of type, etc., to all who ask it. We have just received a stock of these Bibles from the publishers, and are ready to fill all orders.

We have recently given orders, also, for new supplies of the leading styles of Oxford and Bagster Bibles, thus supplementing our already very large stock. We also have the various editions of Nelson, Holman, Eyre and Spotiswoode, etc., editions.

A Bible novelty and something never before offered our readers, is what we style the "Ladies' Bible," otherwise called the "Oxford Minion 16mo Reference Bible." It is such a dainty, compact, light, convenient edition of the scriptures that it seems to us peculiarly adapted for woman's use. Some of the "Teachers'" or "Reference" Bibles sold are so bulky and heavy that they are really burdensome to carry. Not so this edition. Printed on the famous "India paper" and discarding a part of the rarely used and superabundant "helps," while retaining those most needed, it is as "light as a feather." Size $6\frac{3}{8} \times 4\frac{5}{8}$ inches, and less than $\frac{3}{4}$ inch thick. We have two styles, as follows:

A19—French morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, self-pronouncing dictionary of proper names, harmony of the gospels, chronological tables, maps, etc. Price, $2.50.

A29—Finer binding, Persian levant, leather lined to edge, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, India paper. Maps and extras omitted, making book especially thin and light. A jewel among Bibles. Price, $3.75.

Either of these Bibles is pre-eminently suitable for a Christmas gift to any lady. We anticipate that this will become one of our most popular Bibles.

BELDING.

The following facts in regard to the late W. A. Belding, of Troy, N. Y., whose death has already been noted in our columns, are taken from the funeral address delivered by G. B. Townsend:

"Warren Asa Belding was born in Randolph, Ohio, September 5, 1816. His early years were spent in what was then a new country. At the age of 16 he became a Christian. He had a strong desire to enter the ministry at once, but was dissuaded from doing so, especially while so young. He turned his attention to the study of medicine, and in 1839 began the practice of medicine at Aurora, O., with Dr. Fowler, but soon removed to Stark county. On September 29, 1837, he was married to Miss Myra E. Ward. Not long after he began the practice of medicine he began to preach as opportunity was offered. From 1840 he preached quite regularly on Lord's day, and frequently held evangelistic meetings with great success. He gave more and more of his time to preaching and less to the practice of medicine, until in 1849 he abandoned his medical practice and gave himself wholly to the work of the ministry. In 1860, while living in Mentor, O., he was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife. In January, 1863, Dr. Belding began work in the city of Syracuse, N. Y., and since that time his work has been largely in New York and the east. On January 8, 1862, he was married to Miss Emily Sherman, of Pittstown, who for nearly forty years has been the sharer of his joys and sorrows. She was permitted in the providence of God to minister to his wants and soothe him in his last illness until the cables were loosed and the proud ship sailed out.

CRAMER.

A terrible tragedy occurred in the home of S. C. Cramer at Central City, five miles west of Joplin, on the night of Nov. 14. A burglar entered the home at 2:00 A. M. and waked Mrs. Cramer. She recognized the voice of the burglar as a neighbor and called him by name. He then fired a bullet through her head, killing her instantly. Mr. Cramer waking, fired at the burglar, killing him. Mr. and Mrs. Cramer both stood high in the community and had befriended her slayer. Mrs. Cramer was a member of the Central Christian church at Sherman, Tex., where her father and mother, Bro. and Sister Bonar, are prominent workers in the church. Deceased was organist there for five years. This is terrible, but God can be sufficient. May he bless and heal.

FROST.

Malinda Redmon was born in Edgar county, Ill., Jan. 25, 1827 died in Humbolt, Ill., Nov. 20, 1901, in her 75th year. She was married to Archibald Frost in 1849. He died 28 years ago. Her latter years were spent in much affliction of the body, but she died in the faith of Christ. She leaves three sons and one daughter to mourn their loss. Funeral at Humbolt conducted by the writer.

INGELS.

The angel in the heart of Bro. M. Ingels has unfolded his wings and soared away to God. His was a noble life, a strong character and the coming of his soul into the presence of its maker must have been glorious. Personally, I feel a great loss in his departure. Those who knew him best loved him most. He was a hero. We young men need just such counselors as our lamented Bro. Ingels. To me it seems as though the orbit of heaven has been expanded and one of her greatest planets has touched the earth and in its travel continued to burst forth into a lustrous grandeur of white rays, with purifying light penetrating even the darkest recesses of humanity. By continual shining this planet has grown so radiant and with its luminous forces has passed beyond the natural sight of the unaided eye of man, into a perpetual life of glory. The pastor and wife of the Salida church mourn a deep loss.

KIMBALL.

Charles J. Kimball died at Mound City, Ill., Nov. 16. He was born at Blairsville, Ind., July 16, 1838, and removed with his parents to Golconda, Ill., in 1850. He united with the Christian Church in boyhood. After finishing his course at the public schools he studied at Eureka College. During the war he served in Company F, 29th Illinois Infantry. In the service he contracted ailments from which he never recovered. After the war he engaged in the milling business until 1877, when he moved to Mayfield, Ky., and became one of the editors of the Apostolic Church. He was an occasional preacher all his life but never occupied a pastorate. During recent years he served in various capacities, chiefly as proof reader on several papers, including the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. His service for this paper ended in October, 1900. In 1871 he was married to Miss Mattie Smith, of Cincinnati, who died in 1898. He was a man of sterling Christian character, firm convictions and unswerving loyalty.

LOWE.

Sister Ephrasia Kline Lowe, wife of our Bro. Lowe, superintendent of Kansas missions, died at her home in Topeka, Kansas, Aug. 20, 1901. She was born at Camp Point, Ill., Jan. 31, 1858. She was married to Bro. W. S. Lowe March 8, 1882. Five children were born to them; one died at the age of 13 months. Sister Lowe united with the Christian church in the summer of 1882 and continued a steadfast Christian until her death.

MCCALEB.

Herbert Giles McCaleb was born in New castle, Ind., Sept. 27, 1831, and entered into life eternal Oct. 25, 1901. In 1855 he was married to Margery Hoover who, with 8 children, survives him. For a quarter of a century he was an earnest, active member of the Church of Christ at Marion, Minn., and was an elder there for twenty years. His wife and children were all members of the church. He was a man of more than ordinary intellectual ability and of large, generous heart and always took an active interest in public affairs. He was a kind husband and loving father. The funeral services were held at Marion and conducted by Elder Van Dolah and Devine of Rochester. An immense audience of relatives and friends was present. The interment was at Marion.

MENABB.

Died, at her home in Delta, Nov. 8, 1901, Mrs. America McNabb. Her maiden name was Hicklin. She was born in Bath county, Ky., Oct. 14, 1814. United with the Church of Christ at Friendship, Ind., March 5, 1832. Married to A. J. McNabb, Sept. 17, 1835. Sister McNabb was one of the pioneers of Keokuk county, Iowa and a charter member of the Delta church. For over 70 years she walked in the fear of the Lord, died in the triumphs of a living faith and now rests from her labors and her works do follow her.

L. H. HUMPHREYS, pastor.

SCOTT.

T. W. Scott died at his home in Chagrin Falls, O., Tuesday, Oct. 29. Mr. Scott was born in Chester, Geauga county, O., Aug. 8, 1831. For the past 28 years he has lived in Chagrin Falls. He was, up to the time of his death, and for many years previous, an elder in the Christian Church. He was a man of wide intelligence, sound judgment, breadth of mind and heart, depth and tenderness of feeling. A widow, Mrs. Martha Scott, and two daughters, Dr. Loo E. Scott, of Chagrin Falls, and Mrs. Dr. Wakefield, of Minerva, O., survive him. The funeral occurred Oct. 31, conducted by Pres. Zollars, Prof. Wakefield and the writer.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washer Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men.

Enthusiastic Converts

There are Thousands of Them Who Believe as This Woman Does.

Mrs. Ira Knowlton, of Butte, Montana, is a most enthusiastic convert to the virtues of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets as a cure for obstinate stomach trouble. She says: "I had poor digestion nearly all my life. It now seems to me that for years I never knew what it was to be hungry, to have a good natural appetite.

"I was troubled with gas in stomach causing pressure on the heart with palpitation and short breath. Nearly everything I ate soured on my stomach, sometimes I had cramps in the stomach which almost resembled spasms.

"Doctors told me I had catarrh of the stomach, but their medicines would not reach it and I would still be a sufferer had I not, in sheer desperation, decided to try Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

"I knew they were an advertised remedy and I didn't believe anything I read about them, as I had no confidence in advertised remedies, but my sister living in Pittsburg wrote me last spring telling me how Stuart's Tablets had cured her little daughters of indigestion and loss of flesh and appetite and I hesitated no longer.

"I bought a fifty cent box at my drug store and took two of the large tablets after each meal and found them delightful to take, being as pleasant to the taste as caramel candy. Whenever during the day or night I felt any pain or uneasiness in the stomach or about the heart I took one of the small tablets and in three weeks it seemed to me as if I had never known what stomach trouble was.

"I keep Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in the house and every member of our family uses them occasionally after a hearty meal or when any of us have a pain or ache in the digestive organs."

Mr. E. H. Davis, of Hampton, Va., says: "I doctored five years for dyspepsia, but in two months I got more benefit from Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets than in five years of the doctor's treatment."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, bloating after meals, sympathetic heart trouble.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is not a cheap cathartic but an active digestive remedy containing the pepsin and diastase which every weak stomach lacks, and they cure stomach troubles because they digest the food eaten and give the weak, abused, overworked stomach a chance to rest and recuperate.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold in every drug store in the United States, Canada and Great Britain.

The Disciples' Union of Greater New York.

The November meeting of the Disciples' Union was addressed by Bro. B. L. Smith, secretary of the home board. The feature of Bro. Smith's visit was the dinner given by Bro. and Sister Harlan, of Sterling Place church, and Bro. and Sister Denham, of 6th Street church, at the residence of Bro. Harlan in Brooklyn.

The long well-filled table in the spacious dining room reminded one of western hospitality.

There were present 25 ministers or representatives of churches of Greater New York. The fellowship was very delightful. There was a feast of reason and flow of soul.

From the home of Bro. Harlan, all went to the church. Bro. Smith's address was a fine presentation of the necessity of pushing our work in the great cities of the Atlantic Board.

This is something we have waited a long time for in the east. We are glad the Disciples are now waking up to the fact that the east is one of the most promising fields in the whole country.

This Union has for its purpose the planting of new churches in Greater New York and already some 50 members have pledged themselves to give $5.00 each when the ground is broken for a new church and $5.00 when the building is completed. There is room in this great city for twenty churches of our faith. Bro. Denham's call for pledges after Bro. Smith's address met with a hearty response.

Bro. Philpott's earnest appeal for new members resulted in 12 being added to the Union. The meeting was largely attended and an enthusiastic one. The outlook for the Union is most promising.

The next meeting, Dec. 10, will be held in the Lenox Avenue and 119th Street church of which Bro. Jas. M. Philpott is pastor. Mrs. Margaret Bottome, President of the King's Daughters, will address the meeting.

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

First church of Sedalia had 1,087 present third Sunday in November and is to be the largest school in the state by the June convention. F. O. Fannon is meeting with the heartiest co-operation on the part of all the school workers.

Boys and girls' rally day for America has not passed except in the schools keeping the day. All others should do something immediately if not sooner.

East Broadway, Sedalia, reports 333 present in November and three confessions one Sunday, and three sessions of the workers every Sunday. F. L. Cook is more in favor with the church to-day than he was four years ago, his first visit.

John Giddens is putting the work in good shape at Balm, where the meeting resulted in 48 additions to the church, many of them from the school.

At Agency W. B. Smith has superintended the union school for fifteen years without a break, but faithful as he is he will be found in the Christian school after Jan. 1.

R. B. Havener is helping Belleflower where C. C. Hill did such good and acceptable work, and where we hope soon to have one of our strongest congregations.

In the last five years we have helped in building new houses at Stanton, St. James, Newberg, Dixon, Crocker, Stoutland, all in south central Missouri and on the Frisco, besides six others in the interior, and yet some say the cause is getting so low down that it

Is the Most Economical

Greater in leavening strength, a spoonful raises more dough, or goes further.

Working uniformly and perfectly, it makes the bread and cake always light and beautiful, and there is never a waste of good flour, sugar, butter and eggs.

While it actually costs less to make a batch of biscuit with the Price Baking Powder than with the so-called cheap powders, there is the additional advantage of better and more healthful food.

ought to be turned over to some other people. Our evangelists have located eleven ministers in that region.

Aurora rally was what it was because the people had a mind to work, and a crowded house was so taken with the exercises that the offering to our work was four times that of last year. Aurora will keep that silk banner for another year or know the reason why.

South street, Springfield, combined boys and girls' rally day and Missouri rally day, raising $35 for one and $50 for the other. What do you think of that? On church mission day they gave $500 to all missions. How is that?

Agency and J. C. Creel ought to be proud of their new house, costing $3,000 and one of the most modern houses in Buchanan county, every dollar paid on dedication, and $89 to spare, and Bro. Creel called for his eighth year without one dissenting voice. My pleasure was to help them organize the Bible-school while Bro. Creel followed in a meeting with 20 additions. The brethren were most generous to your servant, while J. C. is one of the true yoke fellows in all my work for Christ. The school had 84 at last report.

Keep your eye on Cameron, for now comes word that they have a Home Department of an even hundred, making it the largest in Missouri.

Rally returns were sent us from Clarence, Auriel Maud, New Galilee and Ocean Wave, the last increasing its offering threefold. What do you think of that?

Fred Mounts and Ash Grove, under the excellent leader, J. R. Roberts, have reason to be proud of their work and are happy in the results, while the young people are going to show us what can be done for our work.

A NARCHY is no more an expression of social discontent than picking pockets or wife-beating. The anarchist is in no sense a product of social conditions, save as a highwayman is produced by the fact that an unarmed man happens to have a purse.

To strike with ignorant violence at the interests of one set of men almost inevitably endangers the interest of all. The fundamental rule in our national life is that, on the whole and in the long run, we shall go up or down together.

It should be as much the aim of those who seek for social betterment to rid the business world of crimes of cunning as to rid the entire body politic of crimes of violence.

The rule of brotherhood remains as the indispensable prerequisite to success in the kind of national life for which we strive. Each man must work for himself, and unless he so works no outside help can avail him; but each man must remember also, that he is indeed his brother's keeper.

—From President Roosevelt's Message.

Christmas Cards.

The great majority of the readers of this paper, who can afford to present their friends with diamond rings and automobiles at Christmas time, have no interest in this announcement. It is for the benefit of the few who are unable to scatter such costly gifts, but who wish to send some Christmas remembrance to their friends. For all such, the CHRISTMAS CARD is just the thing. The friend who is worth having will appreciate such a kindly evidence of good will and remembrance as much as he would a gold watch. The complete list of our Christmas Cards is given in our Christmas Catalogue, yours for the asking, but we give below the following:

No. 70.—Twelve designs—i. e. purchaser of a dozen cards gets 12 different cards. Size (closed), 4x2½ inches. Varied designs—flowers, landscapes, etc., etc. Christmas Greetings. Space for name of giver. Single copy, 5 cents; per dozen, 35 cents.

No. 81.—Flowers, cut to shape; a most tasteful design. Closed, 5x3 inches. Verses and Holiday greetings, with name of sender. Two designs. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 40 cents.

No. 62.—Size 6x4½ (open). Christmas verses and greetings. Child figures, embossed; flower stamped designs. Two varieties. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 40 cents.

No. 45.—An exquisitely chaste design; Rural Scenes in Photographic Colors. Shakespearian Quotations; Christmas Greetings. Four designs. Single card, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 14.—One of our prettiest and choicest cards. Embossed designs with filigreed borders. Two varieties. Inside, Christmas verses and greeting. Single copy, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 54.—This is getting into the higher grade of goods. Bowls of Roses in four designs. Escalloped Edges, Classical Quotations, printed in Gold. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 43.—This "card" is really a little booklet, with choicest floral designs on cover; holiday greetings and verses, and with blanks for names of giver and recipient, inside. Single copy, 8 cents; per dozen, 60 cents.

No. 99.—"Just too sweet for anything," is what she will say when she gets this beautiful Christmas remembrance. Size (open), 11x5½ inches. A triumph of delicate color-work. Single copy, 10 cents; per dozen, 80 cents.

No. 98.—A delicate bit of coloring in flower-designs. Holiday Greetings in Embossed Lettering. This is another booklet. Inside are Christmas verses and register for two names. Single copy, 10 cents; per dozen, 90 cents.

No. 100.—This is a novelty—a new idea in Christmas greetings. It is impossible to give, in a few words, any adequate or intelligible description of this beautiful novelty—this ingenious arrangement of color reflection to produce day and night effects on the same card. No. 100 is truly a gem. We have put it at a low price in order to introduce it among our patrons, 10 different designs. Single, 25 cents; per dozen, in assorted designs, $2.25.

Our five cent cards are such as the city stores, even, sell for ten to twenty cents. Our prices are very low. The practice of giving Cards at Christmas and Easter is rapidly growing—as it should—as it is a beautiful custom.

You doubtless have a score of friends whom you wish to "remember" at Christmas, yet you stagger at the expense and labor of purchasing expensive presents for them. Why not secure a dozen or two of our cards, and thus satisfy the generous impulse of your heart, without embarrassing yourself financially? Verbum sap.

Send in your orders as early as possible, to avoid the rush, and accompany them by cash. Address,

Current Events.

The Effect of the President's Message.

President Roosevelt's message to Congress has been received with a unanimity of approval which is uncommon for such a document. It contained no great surprises, but gave forceful expression to his ideas of government in relation to the problems now uppermost. The reception of the message has been, on the whole, quite as cordial abroad as at home. The general satisfaction is broken only by a note of apprehension from Germany, where the suggestion that "reciprocity should be the handmaid of protection" does not meet with approval. The American protective tariff has long been the bugbear of German manufacturers and they had hoped that the policy of reciprocity might modify the rigors of the tariff. The President's statement that protection is still to be the first consideration, is naturally disappointing to them. His call for legislation for the encouragement of our merchant marine also meets with no enthusiasm in Germany. The whole tone of the message is strongly approved in England and especially its words against anarchy. The declaration in favor of immediate independence for Cuba disarms the criticism of the Latin-American states. On the whole, the message has made a most satisfactory impression and marks the auspicious opening of a new phase of President Roosevelt's career. He has shown how he can deal with men individually; it now remains to be seen what is his capacity for dealing with the legislative department of the government.

The President's Message: Anarchism.

The great importance of the President's message to congress justifies devoting considerable space to it, since it defines in sufficient detail and with unquestionable clearness, the course which will be followed in an administration that promises to be more than ordinarily interesting to every student of national affairs. It was fitting that the message should open with an appropriate reference to the death of President McKinley, and it was characteristic of Mr. Roosevelt that he should find in that sad event not only an occasion for mourning but a stimulus to action. Congress is urged to enact effective legislation to prevent known anarchists from coming to this country, to deport those who do come and to punish those who stay. Any persons guilty of attempting the life of a president, or of one in the legal line of succession to the presidency, should be amenable to the federal courts, and an unsuccessful attempt should receive a punishment proportionate to the enormity of the offence. This is sound doctrine. The suggestion has already been taken up by congress. Senator Vest has introduced a resolution calling upon the senate judiciary committee to inquire whether congress has the power to legislate for the exclusion and deportation of anarchists, and, in case this is found to be unconstitutional, to consider the advisability of a constitutional amendment conferring upon congress that power. The McComas resolution assumes that congress has the power and proposes to make assault upon a president with intent to kill punishable with death, such cases to be tried in federal courts. The Burrows bill provides for the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists. Senator Hoar has introduced a bill making it a capital crime to assault with intent to kill a president or any foreign ruler or chief magistrate who may be in the United States, and making it punishable with imprisonment not exceeding twenty years to counsel or advise such a crime. In spite of the difficulties involved in formulating a legal definition of an anarchist, there is no doubt but that congress will do its best to follow the recommendation of the President and fulfill the desire of the whole country for anti-anarchist legislation.

The President on Trusts.

The President's words in regard to trusts are perhaps as satisfactory as any part of his message. The only criticism likely to be passed upon them is that they do not go far enough; in reply to which it may be said that he undertakes only to point out the first step toward counteracting their dangerous tendencies. There are three strong points in his attitude toward the trusts: First, he recognizes the value of combinations as the heavy machinery of the commercial and industrial world, and the far-reaching misfortunes which would follow a ruthless and indiscriminate attack upon them. Second, the recognition of their value does not blind him to their dangerous tendencies, which do not indeed necessitate the prohibition of combinations, but which can be obviated only by the most careful governmental control. Third, he boldly enunciates the Christian principle of brotherhood as fundamental to every consideration of the relations between capital and labor. Rich and poor are members of one body, and if any member suffers the whole body suffers. The substitution of this view for the idea that a state of war normally exists between labor and capital, must precede any adequate handling of the problems involved. As the first step toward curbing the dangerous tendencies of trusts; the President recommends enforced publicity. A corporation owes its existence to the permission granted by the government, i. e., by the public, it is therefore no limitation of personal liberty to compel it to make known to the public the exact condition of its affairs. Publicity may not be, in the end, an adequate cure, but it is the first step, and if severer remedies are needed this will disclose that fact. Interstate commerce should be subject to federal control; and if this requires a constitutional amendment, then such an amendment should be adopted.

Immigration and Commerce

The strong words of the message in favor of protection will probably check the supposed drift of opinion toward tariff reform. The President believes in protecting American labor both by a tariff and by more rigid immigration laws. Not only is the re-enactment of the Chinese exclusion law recommended, but a threefold test is suggested to be applied to all immigrants; all known anarchists should be excluded; a careful educational test should be enforced; and none should be admitted who are "below a certain standard of economic fitness to enter our industrial field as competitors with American labor." This would stop the influx of cheap labor and would permit the entrance of those who can earn "an American living" and can surround themselves with the conditions of life necessary for developing American citizenship. The maintenance of the present tariff law is recommended, with only such modifications in accordance with the principle of reciprocity as shall not interfere with the effectiveness of the law as a protective measure. A subsidy to our merchant marine is not explicitly advocated—indeed, Mr. Roosevelt was no special friend to that measure at the last session of Congress—but Congress is urged to do something to stimulate the development of our shipping interests, which suffer in competition with foreigners both because of the subsidies paid by other governments and because of the lower wages paid abroad to the builders and the crews of merchant vessels. In treating of forestry and irrigation, the President has a congenial subject and one with which he is thoroughly familiar. He says: "The forest and water problems are perhaps the most vital internal questions in the United States." His earnest advocacy of vigorous dealing with the irrigation question, including public ownership of water rights and reservoirs, will encourage the people of the west to believe that their turn has come.

Our New Possessions.

Cuba is now about to pass from under our immediate guardianship and to assume among the nations of earth such a separate and equal station as she may be able to occupy. It is recommended that, to encourage her industries, a special reduction be made in the tariff on articles imported into the United States from Cuba. While we are under no obligation to do this, still it may be considered as necessary to the full discharge of our duty toward our ward, since such concessions are a virtually necessity to secure the economic prosperity of the new republic. In Hawaii there is a tendency to the aggregation of large estates worked by cheap labor for the profit of the few. This is un-American and must be counteracted by a land policy similar to our homestead system. Conditions in the Philippines are pictured conservatively but encouragingly. If any mistake has been made it has been in applying the principle of local self-government too rapidly. Certainly it has been done rapidly enough to disarm the fears of all reasonable natives. The most urgent need in the Philippines now is for legislation which will permit the granting of franchises, for a limited term of years, and will encourage the investment of capital. What the islands need is business. The laying of a Pacific cable and the construction of an isthmian canal are approved as feasible undertakings and pressing necessities.

The Army and Navy, etc. In treating of the military, naval and civil service, it was characteristic of the President that he should lay stress upon the qualifications of the men rather than upon an increase of material equipment. The army is large enough, but its officers should be sifted and tested more rigidly. More important than the construction of new ships for the navy is the constant drilling of the crews in every duty which they would have to perform in case of war. If we are to keep up a navy at all, it should be kept constantly at the highest point of effectiveness and ready for instant service. The President's sentiments in regard to the merit system as applied to the civil service are too well known to require mention. He recommends the extension of it to new classes of positions, especially to offices in our new possessions and to the consular service. It is recommended that the policy of gradually dividing the Indian tribal lands into individual holdings be now carried to completion. It is time to stop dealing with tribes and begin dealing with the Indians as individuals. The message closes with a reference to the deaths of Queen Victoria, the Dowager Empress Frederick of Germany and President McKinley, and a recognition of the peaceful and cordial relations which we now sustain toward all other nations. Nearly everybody in this country had already learned that President Roosevelt is not a mere boisterous rough-rider and lion-shooter, elevated by chance to the presidency, but very likely that impression lingered in many European minds. This first message to Congress, a thoroughly statesmanlike and scholarly document, should effectually dispel the last remnants of such a notion.

Report of the Secretary of War. Secretary Root's annual report was in two parts, the first dealing with the general condition of the Department and the second with affairs in the Philippines. In the latter part he stated that satisfactory progress was being made in reducing the archipelago to a state of peace and that the natives are being surprised by the prompt fulfillment of the promises which the government has made to them—a new experience for them. He recommends the purchase of the property held by the religious orders and that funds for this purpose be secured by a loan, which can gradually be repaid by the proceeds of the sale or lease of the land to the natives in small holdings. The three principal religious orders held 403,000 acres of cultivable land at the time of the American occupation. Under the changed conditions it would be useless for them to keep this property. Business in the Philippines is suffering from the inability of the Commission, under the Spooner law, to grant franchises for more than one year. During the year ending Nov. 30, 1901, the total force of the United States army has been reduced from 103,150 to 84,513, of whom 43,239 are in the Philippines, 33,874 in the United States, 4,914 in Cuba, 1,541 in Porto Rico, 256 in Hawaii, 162 in China and 527 in Alaska. The death rate per thousand during the year has been, in the United States, 10.14; in Cuba, 9.72; in Porto Rico, 7.90; in the Philippines, 16.76. The greatest of these ratios it will be noticed is less than the average mortality in many American cities. It is estimated that 58 per cent. of the territory and 70 per cent. of the population in the Philippines are now under civil administration. The enlistment for insular constabulary and local police among the natives proceeds satisfactorily.

In Favor of the Nicaragua Canal. The isthmian canal commission presented its report to Congress promptly at the beginning of the session. It presents the arguments for each of the two suggested routes and recommends the Nicaragua route as the most feasible. The estimated cost of constructing the canal by the Nicaragua route is $189,864,062. The estimated cost by the Panama route is only $144,233,358, but it would cost $109,141,000 in addition to acquiring the Panama concession though the work already done there is valued at not more than $40,000,000. If it could be obtained for its actual value the total cost by the two routes would not differ widely. The Panama route presents the following advantages: a canal at sea-level throughout and consequently without locks; natural harbors at both ends; a length of only forty-nine miles as against one hundred and eighty-three miles by the Nicaragua route; estimate time for the passage of a steamship twelve hours as against thirty-three hours. The advantages of the Nicaragua route are: a more advantageous location for commerce because it is nearer to the principal ports on both sides and will make the voyage one or two days shorter after allowing for the time needed in passing the canal; more hygienic conditions; more favorable prevailing winds for sail vessels; can be completed in eight years, including two years for preparatory work, as against ten years for the Panama route. Two bills have already been introduced in the Senate, one authorizing the acquisition of a strip of land for the canal and the other appropriating $120,000,000 to build it, $10,000,000 to be available annually.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Secretary Gage's annual report, which was presented to Congress during the first days of the session, discusses at length the problems of banking and currency and states the present condition of the national treasury. For the fiscal year, 1901, the government's receipts have been $699,316,530.92 and the expenditures have been $62,598,546.54, leaving a surplus of $77,717,984.38. This surplus in spite of the reduction of the war tax at the last session of Congress is a few odd million larger than last year's surplus. Nearly half of the government's income is from internal revenue and the other principal sources are customs, postal service and profits on coinage. The principal items on the list of expenditures are in round numbers as follows: civil establishment $117,000,000, military establishment $144,000,000, naval establishment $60,000,000, pensions $139,000,000, interest on public debt $32,000,000, Indian service $11,000,000, postal service $116,000,000, including a deficiency of nearly $5,000,000. The estimate surplus for the fiscal year of 1902, unless some further reduction of receipts is provided for, is $100,000,000.

Proposed Temperance Legislation. The Anti-saloon League sends a copy of the following bill entitled "An Act Prohibiting the Use of Intoxicating Liquors and Opium in the Military Service, and Providing Libraries, Reading Rooms and Schools for the Military and Naval Forces of the United States."

1. No person who is addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors or opium shall be enlisted into the military service of the United States.
2. No person during the term of his enlistment in the military service of the United States shall use intoxicating liquors or opium except upon the prescription of a physician or surgeon.
3. Libraries, reading rooms and schools for enlisted men, with compulsory attendance thereto, shall be established throughout the army and navy of the United States.
4. The Secretaries of War and Navy are hereby directed to carry the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

To many these will appear to be impractical blue laws, but so far as the first two are concerned they are only the same sort of common sense provisions to secure effective service that have been adopted by many large employers. Even if it were true that a general prohibitory law would be overstepping the bounds of legitimate legislation—we do not think it would, but if—these provisions against the use of intoxicants and opium by soldiers would not be open to the same objection. Soldiers are employes. Their employer has a right to impose upon them such conditions as it deems essential to efficiency. It does so without hesitation in the various departments of the civil service. Why not in the military service? The army is composed for the most part of very young men whose habits are not definitely formed when they enter the service. Such a prohibitory provision is necessary not only in the interest of the effective performance of their duties, but to prevent the army from becoming a school of vice. It is a disgrace to have to say of any service that those who enter it pure are almost certain to leave it impure.

The Charleston (S. C.) Exposition was opened with religious services, Sunday, Dec. 1, and was formally opened the following day. President Roosevelt at Washington pressed the button to start the machinery and Chauncey Depew made the principal address.

Personal.

The many inquiries in regard to the health of J. H. Garrison, the editor of this paper, render it fitting and necessary to make a public statement. For more than a month he has been confined to his bed with a severe and persistent attack of fever accompanied by acute neuralgia. A few days of apparent convalescence, during which the "Easy Chair" published Dec. 5 was written, were followed on Dec. 1 by a relapse, since which time his condition has been more serious than before. It cannot yet be said that he is improving. Of necessity, several weeks must elapse before he will be sufficiently restored to discharge his regular duties or any considerable part of them.

We desire to thank the many friends whose ministrations of kind words, of prayers, of flowers and of Christian sympathy have been most gratefully received.

Was the Change Necessary?

A few days ago we received a letter from a brother who has preached for several of our churches in Texas and Missouri, stating that he had united with the Universalist Church, and stating his reasons for making the change. We quote in full his five points of Universalism:

1. I do not believe in the Trinity.
2. Believing that man is the product of evolution, I cannot accept the orthodox idea of the Fall.
3. While believing that the Bible contains a revelation of the character of God, I doubt its verbal inspiration.
4. While believing with all my heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of God, I do not believe that he bears our punishment for us, but that he saves us by leading us into a life like his own.
5. I believe that all sin will be punished here or hereafter, but think that punishment is remedial in its nature (Heb. 12:9, 10) and hence will cease when it has accomplished its object.

We have no intention of taking up these points one by one to discuss the correctness of the positions stated. We wish merely to raise this question: Does the acceptance of these positions render it incumbent upon an honest man to sever his relation with the Disciples of Christ and join the Universalists? We would be glad to have from many brethren answers to this question with brief statement of the reasons for the decision.

The first thing that strikes one on perusing the five points is that, on their negative side, they deny theological doctrines which no one is ever asked to affirm on joining one of our churches, and that they affirm doctrines which no convert is asked to deny. If the belief of these five points is enough to take one out of the fellowship of the Disciples of Christ, even though he can affirm belief in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Savior of men, then it ought to be enough to keep one out in the first place. But if that is true, are we not running great risks in requiring only a simple affirmation of faith in Christ? How do we know that the converts who make this declaration understand and accept the doctrine of the Trinity, verbal inspiration and the rest? If those are essential, we cannot find out too soon whether the applicant has them or not. Better shut the gate before he comes in than compel him to jump the fence afterward.

But we are not inclined to admit that it is time to erect this little five-pointed creed into a test of fellowship. It is noticeable at a second glance that these points are all theories—and we have always considered it our strong point that we do not insist upon theories. There is a theory of the constitution of the Godhead, a theory of the origin of evil, a theory of the method of inspiration, a theory of the method of the atonement, and a theory of the operations and extent of post-mortem punishment. Giving them their technical names, we find that our brother's troubles come respectively under the heads of theology (in the narrower sense), anthropology, theory of inspiration, soteriology and eschatology—truly a formidable list. And yet, though many of the sayings of Jesus bear upon these topics and furnish material for the scholars to work on in constructing their theories, we do not recollect that he or his apostles ever required of men a complete and correct understanding of these things as a condition of membership in the body of Christ.

A person who leaves the Disciples of Christ because he disbelieves certain things, presumably had fellowship with them until his departure because he did believe these same things. This opens another phase of the question. If one may have an inadequate reason for going, may not another have the corresponding and equally inadequate reason for staying? It is at this point that extremes meet. For there is the closest kinship between the man who stays in a church because he believes in the Nicene doctrine of the Trinity, verbal inspiration and so on, and the man who leaves it because he does not believe those doctrines. The two are essentially alike in exalting these speculative, inferential and subsidiary points of doctrine above simple faith in Christ and obedience to him. That they take opposite views of the particular doctrines, is a mere detail. The fundamental fact is that they make the doctrines their criterion, and this fact puts them in the same class.

The corner stone of our movement is the transfer of emphasis from these points of creedal definition to active and obedient faith in Christ as the one essential thing. In the light of that principle, is it necessary for a man to leave the Disciples of Christ when he finds that his views of theology, anthropology, inspiration and so on, are not those held by most of his brethren?

What Is News?

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST wishes to publish all the legitimate news of our churches. But what is legitimate news? News has to do with events and achievements. It is always concrete and specific. A statement that the cause in a particular town is prospering "all along the line," or that "all the departments of work are moving forward" is not news. Those things can be said of every church that is alive, and it ought not to be necessary for our churches to arise and proclaim to the brotherhood that they are not dead. We can assume that. Besides, in all such generalities the personal equation is so great that the statements are meaningless unless one knows the temperament of the writer.

News is definite. It deals, as we have said, with events and conditions. If a church has accessions to its membership, that is a matter of news. If it builds a new house, or enlarges an old one, or pays a long-standing debt, or engages in any special missionary, evangelistic, benevolent or educational work, those are matters of news. If it changes its pastor, that is news.

But is it legitimate news when a preacher writes that he has been called at an increased salary to two different congregations (naming them perhaps), but has declined? Or when one writes that he has just closed the most glorious meeting ever held in Smittown, and has received nine other applications for meetings which he does not intend to hold? Such information might be interesting and legitimate if it came from some disinterested source, but it is certainly lacking in all delicacy and taste when the person most concerned hastens to get it into print as an advertisement of the fact that he is in great demand. An engagement to marry is always an interesting announcement. Even the report of a rejected proposal is interesting gossip. But if the much-sought lady should periodically furnish to the press lists of her rejected suitors, a wearied public would turn away with anything but admiration.

There is clearly a need for some discrimination in regard to what should be published in a religious paper. The editor of a widely circulated journal was recently asked if he did not find it an arduous task to edit his paper. "Edit!" he said. "I don't edit the paper. The subscribers edit it." If he had meant by this to say that he acts only as the agent of his subscribers in giving them what the majority wants, he would have been expressing a principle which must always have a wide and legitimate application in journalism. For a newspaper is, after all, a democracy, governed by the will of the majority. Its citizens can secede when they please—and they often do, leaving their taxes unpaid.

But a democracy is governed by the votes of all; it is not pulled hither and thither at the caprice of each. The eminent editor referred to was not the head of a journalistic democracy, but was presiding over a state of anarchy, for he meant to say that he simply printed what his subscribers sent in without regard to the value or general interest of their contributions. Each contributor is interested in his own production and gladly pays his subscription as the price of seeing his name in print. No, it is not a religious paper, but a professional journal, and it has found this policy financially successful. But it is not journalism.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST finds it necessary, in the interest of the great mass of its readers, to do considerable editing. Evangelistic reports, than which nothing is more welcome, are often too long for publication in full. Last week we published four pages of them and their average length was about six lines. Necessarily the brethren who, with the best of intentions, had taken pains to expatiate upon the virtues of their co-laborers, found these compliments for the most part cut out. It was done not because we doubted the deserts of those commended, but because of the physical necessity for condensation, and because such commendations are usually unnecessary.

When it has been stated, for instance, that an evangelist has brought fifty converts into the church, organized an Endeavor Society, given new life to the prayer-meetings, and raised money for the salary of a settled pastor in place of the former occasional preaching, it is superfluous to add that he "is indeed a workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," that he is a "true yoke-fellow in the Lord," and all the other time-honored phrases which either restate what the results prove, or else institute odious comparisons with former pastors and evangelists who have labored at the same place.

New men, of course, need introduction, and there are special cases which demand that an exception be made to the rules. We must use our best judgment in making these exceptions, even though that may not agree with the judgment of some whose reports are condensed. Of this our readers may rest assured: we are determined to make the best paper that we can. On this point our interests and those of our subscribers are one. Extended reports will be published only when justified by the general interest of our readers. But in general the most eloquent statement of news is that which is most concise, most definite and most modest. Let the work tell.

The Veterans.

The United States government spends hundreds of millions of dollars in pensions. These pensioners served their country faithfully as soldiers for a few months or a few years—few of them more than four years—were disabled, and a grateful country grants them a stipend for life. What shall we do for those who are disabled after a long lifetime of service in the Master's cause, whose remaining years are few, whose worthiness is unquestioned and whose necessities are great?

A regiment marching out with full ranks and unsoiled banners, eager to dare the fortunes of war, is an inspiring sight. It speaks of hope, of aspiration, of all the latent heroism that lies in the heart of man awaiting the appointed hour of its manifestation. But when the regiment comes back—ah, then it is a sight for memories and tears. The banners are tattered, but every shot that has torn their folds has borne its witness to their spotless honor, and the bursting shells that have crisped and seared the colors in their blackening smoke have made them tenfold more the brilliant oriflammes of courage and of victory. The ranks are broken, but the heads are high. The men are veterans now. It matters not whether their service has been long or short. They have fought their fight. They have done all there was to do. They are veterans. And the beholder who cheered and went his way and forgot, when the recruits marched out, stands now with bared head and tries to cheer, but chokes, when the veterans come back.

On an April day in 1898, the First Illinois Volunteers left Chicago. They were the city's pride, for they were a regiment of the sons and brothers of Chicago's best. Tears were shed that day, but there was pride and glad expectancy, and over all was the thrill of the joy of girded men.

On a September day they came back. The streets were crowded before; they were packed now. An hour before the column was due, it was impossible to move along the line of march. At last they came—first the convalescent in carriages, then the sick and wounded in ambulances, then in open ranks the remnant of the regiment. Before that broken line there swept a wave of—what was it? It was not a cheer, for it was subdued and reverent. It was not a sob or a moan, for joy and victory were at its heart. It was the homage that men pay to those who have suffered and achieved. They were veterans, "our veterans" to that throng, and the city took the First back to its heart with tenderness and pride.

We have other veterans, who are "our veterans" to all of us—the veterans of that Grand Army whose host no man can number. They do not file past us in columns which the eye may see, and yet we see them with the mind's eye. They were on the firing line half a century ago. They knew the labors of pioneer work. It was their lot to bear the odium of a misunderstood and maligned "sect," to smart under the social ostracism of days when to be a "Campbellite," and, above all, a "Campbellite preacher," was to forfeit all the common rights of hospitality and humanity. And it was their achievement to win standing-ground in the religious world for themselves, their brethren and their successors. Most of them have already joined the company of the saints invisible, but some are yet with us, and some of these have need that we should transform our pride in their achievements into provision for their necessities.

The third Lord's day in this month, Dec. 15, is the special day for the offering for ministerial relief. Let us honor our veterans. And let us remember the words of our Lord, how he said "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

A Co-operation of Churches.

A correspondent in the People's Forum reiterates the fear which we recently characterized as "groundless" in regard to the examination of ministerial records by the state mission boards. As we understand our correspondent, he believes that it would be dangerous to commit to the mission boards or to a committee of a ministerial association the function of collecting information in regard to the character and ability of preachers and distributing it to churches on request. He would prefer to have that duty committed to "a co-operation of churches."

Certainly the principle which he advocates is the correct one. The employment of worthy preachers is a matter which concerns the common interests of the churches. No church liveth unto itself and none dieth unto itself; and the church which dies as the result of the work of a ministerial impostor, leaves to its sister churches a heritage of evil odor which they cannot escape. By all means let us have a co-operation of the churches in the interest of a pure ministry.

The only reason for suggesting that the various state mission boards act as bureaus of information for their respective states is that these boards are co-operations of the churches. To add to their present functions that of maintaining a bureau of information in regard to preachers, is certainly not a question of usurpation or unscripturalness, but merely one of utility. If the boards are so busy that they cannot undertake this work, even with additional clerical assistance, it would, of course, be necessary to have some other representative of the churches to do it. But in any case we fail to discern any ground for apprehension. What is suggested is not a board of control, but a bureau of information. If the state mission board in any state is composed of individuals who could not conduct such a bureau without attempting to lord it over God's heritage, then they are not fit persons to constitute a mission board. We do not know of such a case.

Our correspondent's objection to the proposed plan on the ground that mere advice is ineffective, since "bad men always reject good advice," is not a serious obstacle. The plan is not to advise the preacher who is found upon inquiry to be untrustworthy, but to advise the churches, which are presumably composed of good men who would welcome good advice.

The point in which we are chiefly interested is not to get this duty committed to the hands of any special set of men, whether state board or ministerial committee, but to get it committed to some hands which will perform it. It would be unfortunate to precipitate a controversy over the method and so block the whole process. The substance of the matter is that the churches ought in some way to co-operate for mutual help in securing worthy preachers and for mutual protection against the unworthy.

Notes and Comments.

Two facts are notable in the reports of the work done by Christian Endeavorers on and about Thanksgiving. The first is that it was practical work embodying a Christlike spirit of love to men. The second is that it was largely union work. It is a fair illustration of the truth that the church will find its lost unity when it learns to place upon practical helpfulness the same emphasis which Christ placed upon it.

We call attention to the fact that contributions intended for the People's Forum must not exceed 200 words in length. We are daily in receipt of articles varying in length from 300 to 800 words and marked "For the People's Forum." We are glad to have them and will use as many of them as possible, but they cannot go in that department. If you have a suggestion to offer through the People's Forum, estimate the number of words after you have written it—count the lines and the number of words in an average line and multiply.

The pastor of an Ohio church of over a thousand members writes that he wants the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST sent to a party who is on his "list of hopefuls." He thinks that is one of the best ways of making him familiar with our teachings and attracting him to our position. We appreciate this; and, what is more, we believe it is a wise plan. Preachers seeking a potent ally to help them bring their "hopefuls" to the decision point, will find it in any good religious paper which presents the principles of New Testament Christianity and does not squabble with its neighbors.

Here is another kind word which deserves to be quoted. A brother in Colorado writes: "I have just had occasion to test the merit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. There was a Bible conference held here this week in which the moral issues of the present were up for discussion. Hardly a question was raised on which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST had not given very full and instructive information during the last few months." The moral of this little tale is too obvious to require statement. We mention the matter now because the time for renewing subscriptions is approaching and, to be perfectly frank, we are anxious to have you attend to the matter. It will be to your interest to do so, and also to ours.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for next year will be sent to all who pay for it in advance. It will also be sent to all who will order it and state definitely at what time in the future they will pay. It will not be sent to those who do not definitely order it. If your paper stops when your time is up—after you have failed to respond to several requests to renew—do not blame us and say that we are not willing to trust you. We will gladly give you credit if you will ask for it. So do not fail to respond to the notice when you receive one.

Play and the Kingdom

By FREDERICK D. POWER

The element of play is much needed in our serious, busy life. Hard living, carking care, grinding toil, unlimbered minds and hearts from day to day mark this materialistic age. Take your principal street on any afternoon and study the faces. How few look as if any joy had come down and was singing in their souls! How the money lines and policy lines and lines of care and greed and vice, and lines that tell of worry and weariness stand out! How rare the light of cheerfulness and contentment and peace and good will!

Men and women do not relax as they should. Five minutes the whole nation pauses while the martyred President's body is laid in the tomb—five minutes in a century—and it is thought a marvelous thing. Every day demands some rest, some period of recreation, some letting down of mind and body, some little of the element of play.

That is a sweet old prophecy of Zechariah when, speaking of the enlargement of God's people, the happy times of the kingdom restored and the coming in of the Gentiles, he says: "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." Boys and girls—God made both, made them for this world and made them for heaven. It would be a poor world and a poor heaven where there were all boys or all girls, and worse where there were neither boys nor girls. And these children of the kingdom are natural children. They are not forced like hot-house plants and fruits. The prophet sees boys and girls playing in the streets of the city. They are still children—happy, sporting, frolicking, spirited, with the joyousness and laughter and simplicity and naturalness of childhood. A sad child, a child that is not playful, is an anomaly. There is a beautiful little poem of Archbishop Trench, where a father is represented as walking through a graveyard with his little son and he checks the child's gambols. The little one for a minute or two takes off his hat and walks demurely by his father's side, then presently throws up his cap and chases a butterfly. The father acknowledges the boy is right, for the sun is shining overhead and the birds are singing merrily. Even in the cemetery all nature is glad and why should not the boy be natural and laugh as well?

This element is needed in the church. If in the heavenly city, the new Jerusalem, there will be found boys and girls playing in the streets, here and now they may have a part in the kingdom. We want more of cheerfulness in Christian service for old as well as young. It makes the man who has it happy and renders him acceptable to society, and pays in both temporal and spiritual benefit. We want bright weather in the heart as well as overhead. We want flowers blooming in the gardens of the spirit as well as in the gardens about our homes. This honors religion and proves that we have a good Master. Joy is a friend of grace and puts the heart in tune to praise God. Joy is visible fulfillment of the promise of garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness, the oil of joy for mourning.

Joy is a Christian duty. "Rejoice in the Lord always" is as much a command as "Pray without ceasing." To see harps always hanging on the willows repels people from the Lord's service. Christians have no right to walk dumpishly in the way of God, for they are King's sons, children of the bride-chamber, heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Thousands need the experience of the child who, when eating its dinner, and the golden rays of the sun fell upon the spoon, put the spoon in her mouth, exclaiming: "O, mamma, I have swallowed a whole spoonful of sunshine!" Thousands need to follow the example of that deep-lunged, red-blooded preacher, Sidney Smith, as he used to throw open the shutters to the morning sun, saying, "Let us glorify the room!" A philosophy of religion which has no room for the joy and pleasure of man is as little conversant with the wants of man as with the will of God.

Then this element of gladness is a much needed one in our civilization. We are too crowded with serious and anxious work to think of free, joyous, careless exertion to amuse ourselves. Yet it would seem well at times to say, "Let us play!" rather than "Let us pray!" The children, for example, are found playing in the streets of the city of God, but there is no place for the boys and girls thus to amuse themselves in our great teeming human centers of population. The small boy in all large cities is always the subject of much complaint and frequently falls into the hands of the police. Privileges that he once enjoyed before the town took on its metropolitan manners have been encroached upon more and more. Driven from place to place, stopped in his attempts to play ball on vacant lots or in the streets, or to make a disturbance commonly called "noise," he is forced to hunt for seclusion often and finds dangerous sports to while away his leisure time. He gets into the clutches of the law and is thrust into a cell and receives impressions that lead eventually to a downward career. One of these little fellows I talked with in the city jail and when I asked: "How old are you?" he replied, "Eight, going on nine." Think of it—a babe in a prison cell!

Playgrounds are a necessity of civilization. Fresh air agencies contribute to health and manhood. Pool-rooms, cards and the saloon get boys whom the playground would keep out of temptation. Some of our cities are wise a little bit in this matter, but only a little bit. In New York forty-two school playgrounds are opened during the summer, twenty-eight having library attachments. Besides these, there are roof-gardens, outdoor gymnasiums and public baths. In Brooklyn five playgrounds are maintained on vacant lots, where swings, sand courts, see-saws and kindred sources of amusement are offered. In Chicago free public bathing beaches are conducted. Baltimore allows the use of eight playgrounds of the public schools and four in the public parks. Boston has numerous playgrounds and public baths. Cincinnati has three public playgrounds with pavilions to protect those frequenting them from heat and rain, and they are equipped with swings, merry-go-rounds and other forms of amusement. Washington has ample parks and beautiful lawns, but nothing for the boys and girls. Once a year, at Easter, if they will be good, Uncle Sam opens the back yard of his White House and says, "Come and play." Go to, Mr. Carnegie, and quit building libraries and open spacious grounds instead; and say to the children in slums and tenements, the worn and tired children, the peaked and pining children, the unnatural, unchild-like children: "Here you may romp and yell to your heart's content and none shall molest or make you afraid."

Our bodies are precious as well as our souls. Paul never wrote: "Who shall change our vile body?" It is "this body of our humiliation," nothing that God ever made being "vile." By far the most exquisite and wonderful organization that has come to us from the divine hand is the human body. It is more than a shell, more than a garment, more than a house. As the soul is fitted to be the habitation of God, so is the body fitted to be the habitation of the soul. If the soul rejoices, the body rejoices; if the soul be in distress, the body is in distress also. If you sin, the curse fulfills itself in both soul and body. The blood and brains of a meek, humble, charitable, heavenly-minded man carry qualities in them which the blood and brains of a worldly-minded man do not. The body needs our thought, and pure recreation and exercise and wise care of the body have their influence upon the soul. Let us play.

THE INNER LIGHT OF LIFE: IMAGINATION

By EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES

"See the monkeys on the wall, father! There they go up over the door and across the ceiling and out at the window. Aren't they ugly monkeys, father?"

"Father" laughs in a skeptical way, but the monkeys keep on romping and running in the fancy of the child. One visit to the zoological garden was sufficient to furnish endless entertainment to this boy for a whole year. He caught the band of monkeys at first sight and held them securely, subject to his will. Their presence to his thought depended on no external object or condition, and they were not held to the circumstances of their first appearance. They could be seen where nothing like them was and they were free from their cage to roam through the house and street and up the trees, even where real monkeys could not go. It is sometimes supposed that imagination is limited to childhood, and that it must be outgrown in maturity, but on the contrary any success in the most serious and matter-of-fact pursuits is reached under the illuminating rays of this inner light.

Various Kinds of Imagery.

Twenty years ago, Mr. F. Galton, an English psychologist, made an epoch in his science by the discovery of the great variation in the mental images of different people. In ordinary society individuals have great power of visualizing, seeing in the mind the things talked of. For example, the scenes of one's childhood come back in memory with natural color, vividness and distinctness of detail, so that one seems to see again

"The old oaken bucket, the moss covered bucket
That hung in the well."

Among scientists, however, it was found that very often they had no such mental pictures at all. They were accustomed to think in abstract terms for which the bare words were adequate symbols. Between these two extremes lies a great variety of forms. There are as many kinds of imagery as there are kinds of sensations. Not only can the "old oaken bucket" be seen with one's eyes shut, but one can hear the creaking of the rope and pulley and the splash of the water, or feel the delicious coolness of the refreshing draught, or smell the odor, or touch again in memory the wet, slippery bucket, or renew the strain of the arms and back, which was so keen for the thirsty lad, tired and perspiring from his play. A simple test to determine a person's mental images is to write out the colors, sounds, touch impressions, odors, tastes, muscular tensions or movements which can be recalled with lifelikeness while he is only thinking about them in quiet reminiscence. Are your dreams filled with all kinds of sensations? When you remember a verse of poetry, do you seem to read it from the original page, or does the sound of it ring in your ears?

It is interesting to follow a poet like Shakespeare or Milton and note the richness and precision of the imagery. Some striking cases are recorded, as for instance that of Professor Striker, of Vienna, who thinks in terms of movement or muscular activity. In order to think of a soldier marching, he must himself have the sympathetic feelings of movement in his own legs. Otherwise the soldier seems to be paralyzed. In another case, a merchant who was exclusively a visualizer, lost his mental images through injury to the brain, so that his home and city seemed strange and as though seen for the first time. He could not recall the faces of his wife and children. He deliberately set to work to learn things over again by their sounds.

The Movement of Images.

If one sits restfully in a comfortable arm chair by the open fire and lets go of his mind, it will entertain him with an astonishing panorama. It is as though a screen were before his eyes on which dissolving views hurriedly or leisurely follow one another in endless number and variety. This is reverie. The attention is passive. It is a waking dream, in which the apparent lawlessness and mixture of elements is mysterious, fascinating and every way kaleidoscopic.

Usually, however, the images cluster about some center or topic and are welcomed or rejected as they further or retard progress toward a definite end. When one plans a pleasure trip, the idea of health and recreation becomes the magnet which draws up images of trains and boats, of wardrobe, companions, cash accounts, the business affairs to be arranged. At another time a change of occupation is in mind. Various possible pursuits appear to thought. They are run over in terms of income, associates, agreeableness of the tasks involved. As far as possible one sees himself in the surroundings, activities and possible successes or failures incident to each field of work. Whatever interests us determines what images arise and the direction and freedom of their movement. Every well-ordered mind works under the control of a few great organizing principles, in the service of which the stream of images grows and enriches itself through years of reflection and experience. To summon the appropriate elements out of the past and fashion them to the present need, or to project a plan of what the future is to be and see how it can be met, these are primal functions of imagination in all departments of life.

In Practical Affairs.

It is often suggested that business is too matter-of-fact to need the aid of imagination, and yet the merchant must envisage in advance the demand and supply of his wares, he must anticipate competitors, develop novel advertisements and carry in his mind's eye a comprehensive view of his enterprise in its details and relations. The projection of a transcontinental railway, the organization of an army and its effective control, the invention of a printing-press or any other machine, calls for imagination of the most vivid and sustained sort. How often it has happened in this country that some far-sighted man has bought land for a song of another man who had no visions, no dreams for its future. After a time, the fancied railroad of the former became a reality. The farm was made into a town site and the man with the imagination became rich. The history of America's great industrial and material development is to be credited not only to energy and pluck, but also to the foresight and prophecy which belong to genius. The quality of initiative which has made Americans famous the world over in commerce, war and statecraft, is little else than clear prevision of events supported by boundless courage and timely action.

"See the monkeys on the wall, father! Aren't they ugly monkeys?"

In Science.

Still more striking is the function of this power of the mind in the realm of science, where law and logic reign. The chemist elaborates the world out of atoms, which no one ever saw, which have no extent or magnitude, but which after all obey definite laws in their combinations and transmutations through infinite time and space. Two of these imaged atoms called by the name hydrogen, and one called oxygen, enter an imagined alliance and produce an invisible molecule of water. Thus all the rocks and trees and oceans, and our flesh and bone are for the chemist aggregates of millions of intangible and unextended units. To say this is not to say that chemistry is an illusion, but only to affirm that its fundamental realities in all their vast domains exist for thought and not for the senses.

Every department of science makes a similar demand upon the imagination. Astronomy pictures gaseous vapors thrown off into space millenniums ago which have cooled into our solar system. Through geologic ages of shifting seas and continents, of ice fields in our temperate zone and tropical summer in the now frozen north, the crust of the earth slowly came to its present form. Give him the fossil remains from a few regions of the world and the paleontologist recovers the marvelous beasts, fishes, birds and plants which flourished millions of years in the past and whose dynasties rose and fell with as sure a rhythm as those of human history. Into this strange world the ancestors of man came and through eons of time gradually gained speech and customs, instruments and dwellings, until at last in a comparatively modern day history and civilization had their feeble beginnings. Such is the vision which sober science constructs by minute observations and generalizations.

In Humanities.

It is, however, in the realms of art, ethics and religion that the inner light shines with greatest brilliancy. The artist, as Schopenhauer said, divines the hidden meaning of things, understands the half-uttered speech of nature and articulates what she only stammered forth. He expresses in the hard marble that beauty of form which in a thousand attempts she failed to produce. He presents it to nature, saying, as it were, to her, "That is what you wanted to say." And whoever is able to judge replies, "Yes, that is it." The genius in literature, music, or painting is in the same way an interpreter of the world. He penetrates to the heart of nature and history by the sight of the mind rather than of the eye. His achievements are won less by what he gathers from without than by what he nourishes within.

The inwardness of truth and beauty is better realized in the realm of conduct, where the guiding stars of heroes and saints are often utterly invisible to their neighbors and companions. How powerful that light was to Bunyan in the Bedford jail! How it sustained the missionary priests to the American Indians! How it burns yet in the souls of reformers and patriots who toil on in the night of disappointment and defeat, cheered by the vision of a far-off glorious day in whose light and joy they already live! Plato in the Republic, Jesus in the kingdom of God, More in Utopia, Bacon in the New Atlantis, have made immortal their ideals of human conduct and society and have kindled in many minds aspiration for their realization.

Men of all conditions cheer themselves by thought of something better yet to be. They are dwelling by thought in houses now unbuilt, they see their children already in places of honor and usefulness, they forget the heat and toil of the present in the dream of what these are to bring. The religious man may hearten himself by greater flights of fancy. While his body walks the earth, his spirit revels in the companionships and delights of heaven. He holds the present to be insignificant compared to that which shall be. How often has "the world" failed to appreciate its saints because it could not understand their loyalty to the visions of the soul.

B. B. Tyler's Letter

I believe in the license system; I believe in high license; I believe in local option; I believe in the South Carolina dispensary system; I believe in the Anti-Saloon League; I believe in the Prohibition party; I believe in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; I believe in the legal prohibition of the liquor traffic; I believe in constitutional prohibition; I believe in total abstinence pledges and societies; I believe in the abolition of the canteen in the army; I believe in the final destruction of the liquor traffic.

This is my temperance creed. I will proceed to explain and comment.

1. I believe in the license system because the principle of prohibition is in it. This system says to ninety-nine men out of a hundred, or to one hundred and ninety-nine men out of two hundred, you shall not engage in the vending of alcoholic liquors as beverages. When the license system was adopted any man, every man, all men, might engage in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It was quite a step forward to prohibit so large a number of men engaging in the business. The one man who was permitted to continue when this plan was adopted ought also to have been compelled to abandon the sale, as beverages, of liquors that intoxicate. I object to the license system because it creates a monopoly. I believe in it because it contains the principle of prohibition.

2. I believe in high license—after a community has decided to license the business. I would, if possible, put the license fee so high that no man would be able to engage in the business. Towns have kept traveling shows from exhibiting within their limits in this way, why not prevent the saloon man engaging in his business in the same manner? If the question on election day were: Shall the saloon receive a license? I would vote no, but if the majority should say yes, then I would insist on the highest possible license fee.

3. I believe in local option because every community, it seems to me, ought to be permitted to regulate its own affairs in its own way. Many small communities would put an end to the liquor saloon if an expression of desire were permitted at the polls. As evidence of the truth of this statement see what is done where there are local option laws.

4. I believe in the South Carolina dispensary system. The state under this system takes the entire business in its own hands. As a rule there is only one place in a county where intoxicating liquors can be purchased. The liquors are sold in sealed packages. They cannot be used on the premises. The man who dispenses the liquors has no interest in the promotion of the business. The places where the liquors are sold are made as unattractive as possible. There are no seats. There is no music, there are no games, there are no pictures. Contrast this with the brilliantly lighted saloon, with games, with music, with pictures. If any profit results from the sales it belongs to the state—not to an individual, nor to a company.

5. I believe in the Anti-Saloon League. The special business of the league is the enforcement of law in regard to the liquor business. Its motto is: The saloon must go. Its first task is to secure the enforcement of laws now on the statute books, its second task is to secure more stringent legislation. I believe in the Anti-Saloon League, partly, because the saloon men fear and hate it. As a rule you will not go far astray if you are in favor of what they oppose.

6. I believe in the Prohibition party because it is a party of agitation. It can do more foolish things in a given time than any other party that ever had an existence. About as often it aids the whiskey men as the forces of temperance, but the Prohibition party keeps things stirred up. It is always and everywhere opposed to stagnation. This is a great thing—especially on this problem. Wherefore, I believe in the Prohibition party.

7. I believe in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Its educational work is invaluable. This organization looks after the heart as well as the intellect. I like its quiet, intelligent, aggressive, persistent, determined opposition to the liquor business. There are 300,000 of these women in the United States. This is a force to be reckoned with. They have secured legislation in almost all the states by which temperance instruction must be given in the public schools. The ultimate value of this no one can compute.

8. I believe in the legal prohibition of the liquor business. The license system prohibits ninety-nine men out of a hundred, or one hundred and ninety-nine men out of two hundred from keeping liquor saloons. Here is the principle of prohibition. Let this principle be applied impartially.

9. I believe in constitutional prohibition. I would fix the status of the saloon once for all. I would not have the people vote "wet" or "dry" at every election, as in Massachusetts. The permanent legal status of the liquor saloon ought to be that of a corpse. This can be done by prohibiting the liquor traffic in our state constitutions. It is difficult to change a constitution; it is easy to change a statute law.

10. I believe in total abstinence pledges and in total abstinence societies, because they do a great amount of good. They have saved many men; they now save many. Moral suasion for the drunkard, legal suasion for the drunkard-maker. Many a man can be made sober by signing a total abstinence pledge and becoming a member of a total abstinence society who, without such help, would live and finally die a drunkard.

11. I believe in the abolition of the canteen in the army. Business men and corporations are more and more requiring men in their employ to totally abstain from the use of intoxicants as beverages. Is it possible that business men and corporations can do what the United States government is unable to do? The time was when men engaged in business thought that they must furnish grog to those in their employ. They know better now. Some men still think that the United States must do this same thing for some men in its employ!

12. I believe in the final destruction of the liquor traffic. The movement is now in this direction. The intelligence of the people is coming to this point. The people are sovereign. When they say, The saloon must go, the saloon will go. The liquor business does not pay—except the saloon-keepers, brewers and distillers. When the people see, as they will, that the business does not pay them, that it adds to their burdens, that it increases the amount of their taxes, that they are in fact paying taxes to keep up this business, they will suppress it. When the people once see that it does not pay them they will stop it. There are other reasons for believing in the final destruction of the whiskey business; but this is sufficient for the present.

Jesus's Teaching Concerning Himself

By J. M. LOWE

There are two ways in which Jesus taught concerning himself—by words and deeds. The present treatment is to be limited to Jesus's sayings concerning himself. There is here enough to confound any skeptic in Christendom. It is not the intention of this paper, however, to presume anything unusual of Jesus of Nazareth, but to walk with him through the gospels, watch his works, and listen to his words. The inductive method, which is truly scientific, shall be used. By this method did the deeds and words of Jesus impress his followers until this impression issued in Peter's confession, "Thou art the Christ."

The sonship of Jesus, therefore, is a declaration of faith. It cannot be otherwise, for much as some may wish to have seen Jesus and to have heard his words, they would not thereby escape the necessity of faith. The acceptance of Jesus as the Christ would still be a matter of faith, though eye to eye and face to face with the Lord. Faith is that power of the soul by which we see the invisible, know the unknowable, and attempt the impossible. Such a view of faith redeems that magical word from its narrow association as a term for churches and theologians and assigns it a place in all progress, as the power which bridges the chasm between the actual and the possible, the unseen foundation of tomorrow's trials and triumphs.

The source of Jesus's teaching concerning himself is twofold—direct and indirect. First. For example, he said, "I and my father are one"—a direct statement in which he affirms his divinity. Second. "Come unto me all ye that are weary and that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," which teaches his divinity indirectly; such a promise being the prerogative of divinity. In this paper the last shall be first and the first shall be last. The indirect statements are richly suggestive as to Jesus's estimate concerning himself. In a careful canvass of these sayings I received at least four distinct impressions of this man Jesus.

1. His consciousness of God. His first recorded words constitute a vivid commentary upon this thought, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" His whole life glows with the splendor of the presence of God; so much so as to justify a description of his career as being "the human life of God." He had a deep sense of dependence upon God. He said to the tempter, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." In many passages this thought floats upon the surface—"I and my Father are one." "My Father is greater than I." "The spirit of the Lord is upon me." "He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor." "The very works that I do bear witness of me that the Father hath sent me." "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me." "Thinkest thou not that I cannot beseech my Father and he shall even now send me more than twelve legions of angels?" "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will but thine be done."

Whatever may be true or false concerning the genuineness of this language it is certain that, judged by any standard, it breathes a spirit of confidence in God that cannot be reconciled with falsehood.

2. Originality. More than any other teacher, ancient or modern, does Jesus ignore customs, authorities and traditions. When everything is granted touching his instruction in childhood, his careful study of the scriptures and general culture, it seems that the completest acquaintance with these things fails to explain his readiness and boldness of speech. Certainly he would not learn from Moses how to supersede Moses and obtain the courage to do so. How refreshing and invigorating are many of his sayings, beginning with "I say unto you." Whether the coming of Jesus was evolutionary or revolutionary, this fact of his unprecedented originality is to be explained. If Jesus repeated the sayings of other teachers, by repeating those sayings he raised them from the dead, and this is no less wonderful.

3. Authority. This is the direct result of his originality. No king is so commanding; no teacher so dogmatic; no reformer so fearless. It seems to me that some of his commandments must have shaken the very foundations of the earth. Truly, from the trembling gates of death the bars have fallen away and the bands of many have been loosed. Even yet, the centuries are ringing with those triumphant words—"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Here is a king without a throne, a captain without a command, yet the ages tremble 'neath the tread of his army of soldier subjects.

From a human standpoint, this authority rises to audacity and the boldest egotism. He says that he is greater than Jonah and Solomon. He declares that his words will outlive heaven and earth, and that he is going to establish a kingdom which will never be destroyed. He gives forth the startling statement that he will draw all men unto him, and presumes to invite the weary ones of earth to come to him and rest. He proclaims himself a sower of good seed whose harvest is the end of the world and whose reapers are the angels. He pronounces a woe upon the cities that reject his teachings. He considers it necessary to explain that his Father is greater than he. In various other passages does this strange teacher commend himself and recite his victories. He proclaims himself more worthy of love than father, wife or mother, encourages his followers by saying that he has overcome the world, and before he dies builds a monument to his own memory, saying, "Do this in memory of me."

With all these extravagant words of what, humanly speaking, might be called self-praise, no one has seriously charged him with boastfulness or egotism. This failing is noted and despised in other men, but not in Jesus. The reason is that Jesus spoke the sober truth and the world has received it as such without so much as dreaming of any inconsistency. He spoke not to reflect credit upon himself or his family, but upon man, for he was the Son of man, and upon God, for he was the Son of God.

To me it is more than wonderful the deference that kings and peasants, statesmen, poets, philosophers, teachers, theologians and men and women everywhere pay to Jesus, that obscure Teacher who died upon a cross outside the city of the great king. When he speaks the world is silent. Even the task of much criticism is not to destroy the words of Jesus, but to discover surely which words are his and which are not. Few, indeed, would presume to remove from the language of the world one syllable which is believed to have escaped his lips. Such a compliment is wonderful in our eyes and well may His question be repeated, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

4. Sincerity. This is a large determining factor in the extent to which a teacher's message is received. Because of Byron's insincerity his otherwise popular works go at a discount. Insincere men are like counterfeit coin, they have not the right ring. Sincerity bears witness to the gold of manhood. In Jesus sincerity is the perfect union of act and word. His eye is single. He lived but one life. His words but rendered his deeds audible. Deed kept pace with creed. His highest joy was in relieving sorrow, and his truest freedom was in service. He commanded men to love their enemies and pray for those who spitefully used them. He obeyed his own commandment, loving his enemies in life and praying for them in death.

In His saddest hours and in the times of deepest sympathy his sincerity is most apparent. "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto her, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Admit into this passage the slightest tinge of insincerity, and it falls from the highest heights of the sublime to the lowest depths of the ridiculous. Also that marvelous chapter, the fourteenth of John, "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself." These words breathe the tenderest and truest sympathy. The nature and theme forbid insincerity. There remains the saying uttered in Gethsemane, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will but thine be done." If the one who spoke these were sane, he was also sincere, for insincerity would have surrendered before this. To convince a reasonable man that the one who uttered these words was self-deceived would require more skill in dialectic than the solar system has yet produced. To declare him insane is to put a premium upon madness. And to ascribe these words to the tongue or pen of another is to give falsehood or pretense credit for the highest and truest declaration of human duty that has been proclaimed by human tongue or traced by human pen.

The Preacher an Example

By H. C. PATTERSON

Our Possibilities in Europe.

By Charles Forster.

Paul in one of his letters to Timothy exhorted him to be "an example to the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." It is unquestionably true that the most powerful sermons are those read in the lives of truly godly men and women. It is also true that many an eloquently spoken sermon has been shorn of its power for good through the inconsistent life of the one who preached it. There is little of good that can come from the preaching of those who say "don't do as we do, but as we tell you." On the other hand the influence of the life of that man who says in the language of Paul, "follow me as I follow Christ," is far-reaching in its good results. It was not so much what Jesus said as what he did that has made the world better, and the preacher's influence in the world for good must, after all, depend more upon his personal life and example than upon his eloquence in the pulpit. Paul, recognizing this fact, said to the Romans, "Thou therefore who teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou who preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? Thou who sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? Thou who abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you." And these questions, propounded by Paul, are quite pertinent and recall the couplet we learned while a boy in the district school viz.:

"A man of words and not of deeds
Is like a garden full of weeds."

While it is true that the preachers, as a class, are exemplary in their lives, and their conduct is in perfect accord with their preaching, it is also sorrowfully true that some are not as considerate of their example as they should be. Paul said, let "no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way. It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

There is one practice to which some preachers are given that I will mention, viz., the use of tobacco. We have reached a period of intellectual and scientific development when it is no longer a debatable question as to the injuriousness of the use of tobacco. That is almost universally admitted by the scientists. Its use injures the mind to such an extent that those students who use it are incapable of doing as satisfactory work as those do who use it not. Last April Mrs. Minnie Waldron, a member of the educational society, after gathering statistics concerning the Bloomington, Ind., schools, made report that out of 215 boys in five grades, 68 had smoked cigarettes from one to three years and a few for six years. This was 31 per cent. of the whole number of boys, not one of whom had made an excellent record. Forty-six per cent. of them had failed of promotion and only 17 had reached a grade of 75 per cent. She found that 14 cigarette-smoking boys had spent two years and more in their present grades, and that six per cent. of those failing of promotion had already been two years in their present grades.

Out of 70 young men examined by a prominent physician in Peru, Ind., for certificates for membership in a fraternal society, 37 of them failed to pass because of bad heart action brought on by the use of tobacco. Since it is a fact that smoking or chewing is destructive to nerve force, it must also be true that it is destructive to moral and spiritual force, hence it is a sinful practice. Besides it is admitted by all to be a filthy habit. If it is injurious to the body and a filthy habit, it certainly defiles the body which the Apostle Paul declares to be the temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and if any man defile this temple him will God destroy.

Seeing that all this is true, and also that $600,000,000 are annually wasted in this filthy practice, it is certainly the duty of the preacher, in "showing himself an example in purity," to quit it at once and begin using his influence upon his elders and deacons to induce them also to set better examples before the young boys and men.

In Auburn, New York, we are told, the young have very little regard for the preacher who uses tobacco. A few weeks ago some children in Illinois were speaking of the superintendent of the Sunday-school, when one said: "Mr. B. is such a nice man, it is a pity that he smokes," and so said they all. How can we preachers ask, and reasonably expect, people to break away from evil practices when we will not do it ourselves? I hope soon to see the dawn of that day when not one preacher will use tobacco.

It has not been long since I was assisting a pastor who smoked as many as ten cigars a day. It was the talk of the town and a stumbling-block to the young. I preached on "Temperance or Self-control," during which his evil example was held up before him. He was a true, good man and, seeing his wrong, said to me; "I will never use tobacco again," and so said some of his leading members. I once used it, but applying the rule, "What would Jesus do?" decided that he would never be seen going down the street with a cigar or pipe in his mouth—nor would he have us do so; hence I quit. Do you indulge? If so, won't you quit and use your influence to get others to do the same? We pray for a speedy coming of the day when our preachers and church officers will not have the smell of the filthy weed upon their garments.

The Culture of the Many.

The greatness of a people consists not in the unusual attainments of the few, but in the culture of the many. It takes great statesmen, great lawyers, great soldiers, great doctors, great merchants, great farmers, great clerks, great bootcarriers, great newsboys, and great bootblacks to make a great people. All life must be exalted. Nothing is unworthy save that which is worthless. The man who digs a good ditch with a glad heart is more kingly than he who sits around with soft hands waiting to foreclose unjust mortgages on widow's houses. Let the glory from above fall upon every worthy work and it becomes a part of the King's business.

J. M. LOWE.

Over seventy years have passed since this present reformation began. The extent of its influence in this land causes us to rejoice, but when we turn our eyes toward Europe our joy is checked, for in the whole of that continent there are only 3,500 Disciples of Christ. Scotland, Ireland, France, Spain, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Austria, Russia and Greece, with a total population of 265,000,000, know comparatively nothing of the reformation that we love so much. The more are we surprised at this, when we consider that the Seventh Day Adventists—who arose in this country as late as 1845, and whose teachings are radically opposed to the intellectual spirit of the age—have churches scattered over many of these countries, and have publishing houses in London, Hamburg, Christiana, Basle and other European cities. We are led to inquire as to the possibilities of our plea over there, and as to the cause of the present state of things.

If wisely proclaimed, the possibilities of our plea in Europe are great, for what the people of to-day desire is a gospel that is factual and reasonable, and ours is such. The thoughtful and analytical mind of Europe is fast losing interest in the existing religious systems, and though open skepticism does not prevail, yet the coldness and indifference of the largest class tell of an inward, unconscious skepticism. They have become weary of the abstruse theology of the churches, just as a child becomes weary, when efforts are made to teach him simple truths through the means of tedious formulæ. Had a child been under such methods of teaching for years, the vivacity of his intellectual life would almost be gone. A live spark of truth, simply presented, would arouse him to life by the very virtue of its contrast with the dullness of the past. So it is with Europe. Simple gospel truths have been hidden in abstruse formulas, and as a result the gospel life has lost its vivacity. The proclamation of the gospel in an earnest, simple and precise manner will, by the very virtue of its contrast with these formulas, revivify the ebbing religious life.

The reason for the present state of things is very apparent. It cannot be accounted for by any defect in the plea, for that is exactly what Europe needs; nor can it be on the part of God, for his power to promulgate his truth is limitless. Hence, it must be on our part as agents through whom God gives his truth to the world. Christ commanded us to go into all the world, and, at the same time, told us that the source of our power was his own limitless power. Between this command and promise there is a relation: To the extent that we go, just to that extent do we draw from our source of power, and just to the extent that we do not go, just to that extent do we limit the working of the power of God in us and through us. The power of God is limitless. The old gospel is just what Europe needs; hence, the only reason for the present state of things over there is that we have held back, and limited the Holy One of Israel.

Handling the Word Scientifically.

By O. D. Maple.

"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth." This is the revised version of 2 Tim. 2:15 and may comprehend more than the phrase "rightly dividing the word of truth."

Shakespeare in "The Merchant of Venice" puts into the mouth of Antonio these words, "The devil can cite scripture for his purpose," which some pretended polemics quote when they run up against a false teacher who has read the Bible and used the scriptures copiously and adroitly. They say that any one who is apt in his use of the scriptures can support his doctrine thereby.

Is this true? Have we a Bible of such make-up that it proves any and all doctrines? Is the Bible a conglomeration by which you can prove this, that and the other? Is the holy book void of system?

I am sure that while the Bible is systematic some people are not in handling the same. They prove their doctrines, many times, by the jumping-here-and-there system, by taking from, adding to, or changing just a little.

I am reminded of the preacher who went to a place where one of our evangelists was holding a meeting and began a rival meeting. As the evangelist had preached that "baptism was for the remission of sins," the rival preacher announced that on a certain night he would show that baptism was not for the remission of sins. The Christian evangelist dismissed on that night and took his congregation and went over to hear the sermon. With the greatest of care he laid his premises and with vigor he impressed them on the minds of the people. Finally he came to the scripture and quoted passage after passage, many of which had about as much to do with the design of baptism as "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

After meandering for some time he came to Acts 2:38. He said that the preachers who believed in baptism for the remission of sins delighted in quoting Acts 2:38 and that many who disbelieved in this "baptismal regeneration" theory were afraid to tackle such scripture as Acts 2:38. But, he continued, I'll show you what Acts 2:38 means. Let us read it: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ" (he paused and looked around in the room and then at the window and said, Brethren, it's a little close in here, would you please let down the windows and give us fresh air?)—"and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." He got over baptism for the remission of sins by leaving out the phrase "remission of sins." I suppose that in time he learned to handle the scriptures so scientifically that baptism had nothing to do with "the gift of the Holy Ghost" by simply leaving that phrase out of the reading.

The above I know to be true, for I can find twenty-five persons who will testify to its truthfulness. Moreover, the preacher who performed this wonderful feat in handling the scriptures scientifically is now preaching here and giving us scientific lessons in the use of the Bible.

Illustrations can be cited showing that the same practice is followed in the scientific handling of the scriptures to the glory of Christian Science. An advocate of that particular folly recently wrote as follows in defense of his system:

Scientific Christianity is based upon no other than the foundation which Jesus Christ laid—"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel, heal the sick." This is the rock which the builders rejected.

It would be interesting to know just where this quotation is found. The words given within quotation marks, as the foundation which Jesus Christ laid, are not to be found, so connected, among the recorded sayings of Jesus. What becomes of the system which is confessedly built upon a foundation that turns out to be a garbled misquotation?

Advantages of the Uniform Topics.

By George Darsie.

The theme is large and my space is small and so more is meant than meets the eye. Do your own expanding.

1. They provide the prayer-meeting with a definite Topic for each week of the year. The meeting thereby becomes a concentration and not a scatteration. Unity characterizes the readings, prayers, songs and talks. The meeting which "covers all creation," has gone out, and the meeting which focuses to a single point has come in. That seems to me the first condition of a successful prayer-meeting.

2. They provide also a profitable Topic. There will be no wrangling over untaught questions, no fierce disputes about the mere letter of religion, no airing of personal grievances or ill-natured indulgence of the fault-finding spirit, for the Topics allow for nothing of the kind. They are uncompromisingly committed to what encourages, edifies and profits.

3. They further provide a seasonable Topic. Nothing is more appropriate than to pray for the various benevolent enterprises of our brotherhood in our church prayer-meetings, and especially so at times when offerings for them are due. How a church can expect to make a generous offering for the foreign work, the home work, for church extension, for ministerial relief and so on, that does not press these things in the prayer-meeting, I cannot see. Then, too, about April first, at the close of the evangelistic season, how suitable that the prayer-meeting should have a Topic suited to the needs of young Disciples. These instances and many others illustrate what I mean.

4. They provide a good range of Topics. The obligations of a Christian are many-sided. The duties of a Christian life run in many directions, and hence Topics suited to a prayer-meeting should cover as far as may be the whole circle of Christian duty. They should have range and variety in order to meet the needs of the case. And our committee had this in mind in preparing the 1902 Topics.

5. Many Christians travel, and they like to visit the midweek prayer-meeting when away from home, and the more so when they know what the topic will be, and have studied up on it. Many an edifying talk from a new voice will be heard as the result of the adoption of the Uniform Topics.

6. And what fine helps our weekly papers furnish for the study of the topics. No one, however immature in knowledge, can read one their articles and not be ready to add his word of interest to the meeting. And not seldom can selections from these articles be cut out and carried to the meeting and read with profit. But this word of caution is needed: Study the topic for yourself, and say your own word on it, rather than some one else's. Too many read clippings quench spontaneity.

7. It is truly an inspiring thought that others are thinking and praying about the same subject with ourselves, and that our whole brotherhood, east and west and north and south, is attuned to the same keynote of praise and worship. The topics thus become a new bond of union among us.

8. The last advantage is that all our publishing houses will furnish these topics for 1902, printed in good style, to all who send for them, at the reasonable rate of twenty-five cents a hundred.

The Individual Communion Service.

By Carlos C. Rowilson.

I wonder that every church does not adopt the individual communion service. Apart from its unquestioned sanitary importance, the service can be made so much more helpful than the usual form of its observance that it is well worth its cost. Thinking that readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who do not have this form of service would be interested to know about it, I will briefly describe our service. The elders are seated one at each side of the table, with the deacons seated in the front pew. An appropriate song is sung. Then from the pulpit the minister reads, "And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the apostles with him. And he took bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it to them." At this point the elder to the right gives thanks, and then distribution is made to the congregation, each retaining the bread until all are served. When the deacons are returned to the front, the minister reads, "This is my body which is broken for you. This do in remembrance of me. Eat ye all of it." And all eat together. The minister then reads, "In like manner he took the cup, after supper, and gave thanks for it." The elder to the left expresses thanks, and the congregation is served with the wine, retaining the goblets until all are served. Then the minister reads, "And when he had given thanks, he gave to them; and they all drank of it." So likewise let us do. And all drink. The service is closed with another quotation or two, and a song.

This is a very simple service. The young are given suitable instruction as to its meaning in the few quotations, and the words are so familiar as in no way to detract from the meditations. An old disciple was in our congregation not long ago and afterward remarked that ours was the most impressive communion service in which he had ever participated. We have used it two years, and are abundantly satisfied. Much care should be taken in selecting a service that can be easily handled.

English Topics

By WILLIAM DURBAN

The Phenomenal Boys.

With very mingled sentiments I refer to Jack Cooke, the youth of 16 years of age who is just now the pulpit wonder of London. Londoners by myriads are exactly like New Yorkers, or like the old Athenians, always ready for any new sensation. Nothing pleases the novelty hunters excepting for the passing hour. They are full of delighted interest in any new novel by Corelli or Caine, any fresh play brought out by Irving or Terry, any pantomime introduced at the Hippodrome, any revival campaign on original lines. But nothing in any of these directions has power to draw after a time. Barnum is forgotten, so are Gladstone and Spurgeon, and all popular idols are soon bundled into the museums of yesterday's rubbish. Well, the charm of the moment is the lad who is nightly preaching at Bloomsbury Baptist Chapel. Jack Cooke is as remarkable a sample of precocity as any young piano or violin prodigy like Hoffman or Kubelik when they first appeared. There is also in the west of England a little Welsh boy, only 12 years of age, who is astonishing the people, but whose parents are wisely about to relegate him to the obscurity of school. Jack Cooke seems to have finished his education. I do not know what to think about him, and I discover that everybody else is equally puzzled. This youth can give forth a gushing stream of talk, too rapid for the reporters, and could evidently continue orating from morning to night. Therefore he is marvelously gifted with oratorical power, for he speaks effectively, in a beautiful voice and with really choice diction uniformly at his command. But all is provokingly superficial. For instance, a few nights ago he told the people that he had been "having a word of prayer," and so had forgotten the text he had chosen! Therefore he asked the audience to supply him one on the spot. They at once did so and he adopted it without hesitation, but he preached from it a sermon which would have been equally suitable for any one of a thousand different texts.

Is this the Age of Intellect?

Canon Barnett once said, "The great need of to-day is that men should think, think—and again think! Action will follow. But thinking is our first duty as Christians." But is this really so? It would not seem so to anybody listening to the lad Jack Cooke. "Your young men shall see visions." And you get the impression that this boy has seen a vision. But what sort of a vision? Simply that of an irresistibly good bargain to be immediately grasped here over the counter, "you, my friend, receiving, the Almighty making the offer." To Jack Cooke this view of conversion leaves the sinner no choice. It would be insanity to hesitate. "Stand up and accept! My good sirs, you are not going to miss this for lack of a little courage!" One imagines while listening that all the purity of a St. Thomas a Kempis, the charity of a St. Francis, the fire of a John Wesley, the dreams of a John Bunyan, the magnetism of a Moody, the force of a Gladstone—all lie there in that boy's hand, for anyone who will dart into the vestry behind the pulpit. Everything that is divine in character and conduct may be actually bespoken by holding up one's hand. The lad flips his fingers to lift the people from their pews, and one realizes nothing incongruous in the action. The whole weary wilderness of religious failure and speculation is traversed in a moment, so that you wonderingly rub your eyes to find yourself at the haven where you would be.

England in a Trance.

Surely this nation is in one of those moods which inevitably come occasionally on every people. We seem to be politically, religiously and socially in a comatose condition. Nothing is stirring the national soul. Of course, there will one day, and the day is near at hand, be a tremendous awakening. The influence of Lord Salisbury has induced a political hypnosis, which is felt more or less by all classes. We are not, according to the rule of heavenly wisdom, to put our trust in princes, nor in any child of man. But this nation years ago gave to Lord Salisbury a blank cheque, leaving the whole authority of the empire under his autocratic jurisdiction. He absolutely despises the masses, and has recklessly displayed his lordly contempt. In return, they absolutely idolize him. This uncrowned king of England is as supreme as Bismarck was in Germany, though he has but little of that despotic bureaucrat's genius. Indeed, the favorite character with the English of this generation is a commonplace but arrogant aristocrat. Here is our danger. Soporific Toryism is narcotizing the popular sensorium and John Bull, with overweening confidence in his supercilious master, slumbers profoundly while the rest of the world sneers, objurgates and marvels at the British attitude. The Boer war should have been finished long since, but for the initial blunder of the government in assuming that the warfare was to be triumphantly accomplished by an ordinary force, chiefly of unmounted men, notwithstanding the earnest advice of experts. Ever since Gladstone committed political suicide by pandering to Irish home rulers, especially to the immoral Parnell, the great and grand Liberal party has been disintegrated. We are given over for the time being to a blind and besotted stagnating conservatism. Our young men for the most part think that Toryism is a splendid regime, and it is this attitude of the new generation which is the most ominous factor in the situation. I do not think that the return to reason will be spontaneous. Nothing will bring the nation to its proper senses but a time of tribulation—and that is what is approaching. Germany is the stormy petrel. She is raging against Chamberlain, and is snatching at first one stick and then another in order to beat Britain. But the Germans are suddenly finding something different to think about. Starvation, the ugliest of spectres, has appeared in the Fatherland. The boasted boom is over. This is bad for all Europe, for a prosperous Germany is the European center of gravity.

Chamberlain's Blunder.

Joseph Chamberlain is incorrigible. I do not belong to his party and therefore I will try to be fair to him. I am a Radical and have never voted Tory in all my life. If I were Tory I should not like Mr. Chamberlain, though he is now the most potent Tory leader. He is England's most dangerous enemy. For when he does the right thing he seems fated to do it in the wrong way. He has lectured nearly all great nations in the most exasperating manner. This dictator not long since told the irascible French people that they must mend their ways. Just before that he had the audacity to remind the Tsar that those who supped with the devil must use a long spoon. Now he has been raising a Teutonic tornado, and this time he is right enough, while the Germans are wrong enough. By a persistent affectation, born only of malignity, certain editors of the reptile continental press, always ready to revile England and America alike, from motives of jealousy, have daily reiterated lies about the conduct of the British soldiers in South Africa. It is constantly repeated in French, German, Belgian and Swiss papers, that our men are in the habit of putting Boer women and children in the front of the firing line. Whether the war is right or wrong as a political measure, this scandalous libel on brave men who have simply done their duty, and have by thousands gone to death, is unworthy of a great people like the Germans. But there has been little response on the part of the British press. It has been noticed that the shameful lying was confined to the gutter journalism of the Continent. Nevertheless, it might have been expected that English feeling would be aroused to indignation. Strange to say when Mr. Chamberlain observed in a speech, and a very quiet and sober one for him, that the measures taken in South Africa were not so severe as many that had been adopted by Russia, France and Germany, he lit a spark which has been fanned into a terrific conflagration. It does not seem to occur to the Teutonic soul that Britain has been egregiously insulted and has quietly refrained from retaliation. What is to be regretted when nations vilify other great peoples, is this, that when storm and stress arise, then the traducers may experience the lack of that sympathy which sometimes means salvation.

In Some of Our Churches.

Brearley at Fulham, Rapkin at Birkenhead, Spring at Gloucester, and Morgan at Southampton are reporting good work going on in their respective churches of Christ. I note that the recent report of the American F. C. M. S. puts its account of the English work very tersely and very accurately. More has been done in raising money for the debts, etc., than in raising the membership to higher numbers. This must be so in some years. Our principles do not meet with widespread approval in Britain. They have only been tried in England, the most conservative portion of the United Kingdom. Why the grand American brotherhood, which I consider capable of conquering the earth in time, if it will go on and on, has let alone Ireland, Wales and Scotland, the Radical sections of the kingdom, I cannot understand. I and

Bro. Spring, when we were at the jubilee convention, got the great assembly to carry a resolution requesting the F. C. M. S. to send three evangelists, one to Scotland, one to Wales and one to Ireland. Ireland, the land which gave birth to Alexander Campbell, has had no attention. I am aware that our two voices were but articulations in the wilderness. In the three grand populations I have named movements would be set going by able evangelists which would react powerfully on England. It is not to the discredit of England that she is conservative. She cannot be expected to tear up the roots of many institutions which have been embedded in the soil for a thousand years. I say frankly that I am amazed that few Americans, however keen, seem to see this. We are expected to accomplish a rapid revolution here. It is not a land of quick changes, neither is the older part of your own country, my dear American brothers and sisters. But I am given to understand that some of the American leaders are half ashamed of us because of our very slow progress. Well, come over and try, any of you who think that very gradual success is due to the management of the work! Some of you have tried. You did your best nobly. We were grateful and admiring, but we did not behold any working of supernatural or even astonishing results. We want some more of you. We understand our country. When once it is captured it will stick forever to the truth, but old England is not to be stormed by impatience.

Silas Marner: A Study in Human Nature

By A. M. GROWDEN

Silas Marner presents a fine picture of human nature.

Silas—The Misunderstood.

Among the superstitious an eccentricity is proof enough of a league with the evil one. Silas lived in an antique place not so remote as mentally inaccessible. The greatest mountains are those reared by ignorance—the widest chasms are those stretched by mental barrenness. It was an English Sleepy Hollow where people were childish, not childlike. It is not surprising therefore that the Young Man with pale face and brown eyes and reticent manner should excite suspicion. Once allow a man to do as others do not, and at once there are whispers in the air, and voices everywhere, and fingers point what tongues are afraid to say.

Again, Silas Marner kept money. He had money and that was sufficient to give rise to distrust because others had less. The church in Lantern Yari was ruled by wonderful worthies, among whom was William Dane. He ruled by personality—the personality of bigoted assurance. At the death of the old deacon, a turning point in the life of Silas was reached. The evidence of the pocket-knife, circumstantial, but so clear to those obtuse ecclesiastics, was against him—the pocket-knife and the money, the latter gone but the knife a witness though tongueless. Of course the hand that removed the money was the hand which held and owned the knife. Many a man has been hung on just such evidence.

"God will clear me," said Silas.

"The evidence is heavy against you, Bro. Marner," said the minister.

"I must have slept." For Silas, like the disciples, was afflicted in the eyes, not the heart, but it made no difference. There are some who do not know the difference, and they are said to be the chief rulers in the synagogue.

The Casting of Lots.

Silas Marner was guilty—the lots said so. That was conclusive. But what a magnificent retort from the accused to Dane:

"You stole the money, and you have woven a plot to lay the sin at my door.

But you may prosper for all that." Then in the heat of feeling he adds a blasphemy which was on a par with the iniquity of those long headed Pharisees.

Marner goes out into a cold world. Even Sarah has turned against him, and unbelief like an evil bird, takes him under his dark wings. How easy to lose hold of the invisible—the church, as it appears, has made thousands of infidels.

The Heart That Lacks God Must Have An Idol.

Marner's idol was of gold. Now he works harder. Five guineas at one time in his hand—he would keep them. He freezes out charity, when "he loved no man that he should offer him a share." The periods of his life were marked by money. His work was only for money. His wants were simplified, his gains increased in proportion—money had become his idol. And so he worked, toiled, and slaved; for every man who has an idol is a slave. The chain that binds may be golden, but it holds a slave.

The iron pot and the hole in the floor became the sanctuary of what was once a soul. His horizon was bounded on one side by a loom, which he worked ceaselessly, and on the other by an iron pot carefully covered with bricks and sand. He looked down, not up, for the earth was his home. Aspirations had fled.

Dunstan Cass in the rain had paid a visit to the weaver. He would warm at his fire and perhaps frighten him by a visit. But Dunstan needed money. His brother's horse had been killed, and he was responsible. But the loose bricks attracted his attention. He searched and found the treasure—then out into the darkness again, a robber, but rich.

Silas Is Penniless.

He is well-nigh demented. He works mechanically, thinking only of his lost gold, and longs for some one to bring it back. He is more lonely than ever, for his golden idol is gone. He toils on, sadder than ever. But his happiest day dawned when a little girl, seeking a friendly hand, reached his house so mysteriously and with her soft fingers touched the old withered man into new life.

What a picture! The old man holding the little one close to his heart and refusing to give it up. It was his. It had touched his cold heart. It had given him a new impulse. "The mother's dead, and I reckon it's got no father. It's a lone thing and I'm a lone thing. My money's gone, I know not where, and this is come from, I don't know where. I know nothing—I'm partly dazed." Somehow he thought that the gold had turned into the little child. He was confused.

Silas, like an old tree receiving new life, leaves and fruit, is now seen at his best. The closing picture is one of the sweetest in literature.

Eppie (short for Hephzibah) became the power in the old man's life, thought and action. She led him back to the Maker whom he had blotted out, back to the church as it appeared, back to humanity and back to himself. She brought back sunshine, and the songs of birds, and the heart of laughter.

Eppie was better than gold. A clinging soft hand, a pure heart, a face full of sunbeams, are more potent factors than the gold which perishes. Riches and influence came and would take his treasure, but Eppie said no, for she was now a girl and could think.

"I don't want to be a lady. I couldn't give up the folks I've been used to." And Eppie held her "father" by the neck, and Silas sobbed and held her hand. Riches and influence went, leaving the old man and his treasure to simplicity and ease of heart.

And now but one thing remains. Nature makes a revelation. The old stone pit is drained, and lo! the body of Dunstan Cass, and with it the pot of gold which he had stolen. Sin reveals itself. Happy old Silas, it was well worth, even though he did misunderstand God, like Job of old. "So the Lord blessed the latter end more than the beginning."

Literary Notes.

A charming Christmas publication is Heart Treasures, a story of motherhood, by Corey Shannon Meriwether. It is a prose poem, beautiful both in conception and in expression. The mechanical work is admirably done in decorative style. (Williams and Wilkins Co., Baltimore. $1.)

N. D. Hillis's "Right Living as a Fine Art," published in tasty form suitable for a gift, contains an exposition of Channing's famous "Symphony" as an outline of the ideal life and character. In literary style and the Emersonian meatiness, it is what we have come to expect from Dr. Hillis. For a sample, see the extract on the cover of last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. (Revell. $.50.)

A series of juveniles well worthy of attention, especially at this season, is published by Altamus, of Philadelphia. The series includes the following: "Galopoff, the Talking Pony," by Tudor Jenks; "Caps and Capers, a Story of Boarding School Life," by Gabrielle E. Jackson; "The Little Lady—Her Book," by Albert Bigelow Paine; "Folly in Fairyland," by Carolyn Wells; and "Tommy Foster's Adventures," by Fred A. Ober. Tudor Jenks has a great reputation to sustain as a writer of children's stories, and he does it. Carolyn Wells has an inexhaustible mine of the juvenile gold of sheer nonsense of the "Alice in Wonderland" type. (Ornamental cloth. $1 each.)

Hand-Clapping or Amen?

It seems hardly fair to ask the brethren to be at the expense of traveling such long distances to attend the conventions, and then have about one-third of the time of each session taken up by two or three thousand people clapping their hands. A traveling man who happened to be in Minneapolis during our late convention told me he attended one session and that it reminded him of a great national political convention, that it was very hard for him to believe that it was a religious convention. He said that when the convention was located at Omaha for next year the storm of hand-clapping and even whistling was terrific. May it not be that we have overdone the applause business just a little and that it would be better occasionally to say "Amen," and thus seem more religious? L. L. CARPENTER.

The Grace of Liberality.

The grace of liberality is the soul of all grace. Charity of spirit is the source of all liberality. In our efforts to be loyal to truth we may do great violence to its spirit. The mind of the Master was the mind of kindness and gentleness. He hated sin but he loved the sinner. Except with the Pharisees, whose hypocrisy had become exasperating, he dealt most gently and kindly with those who were in error. He first drew men to himself and then led them into right ways of thinking and acting. Nothing matters so much as the personal attitude we adopt toward people. The principle that underlay the Inquisition was not wholly wrong but was wholly mistaken, namely that all who differed had to be brought into line for the welfare of the race, and that to hate the individual meant to be loyal to principle. The same spirit sometimes governs us and we too feel that when we differ we may almost claim the spirit of avenging angels. We should grant men freedom of thought and expression in practice as well as in theory. It is too late to have heresy trials of any sort. If men are in error the spirit of kindness will win them to better thinking while vindictive argumentativeness will drive them into worse error. E. P. WISE.

An Improved Church Letter.

Whoever shall devise a remedy for the abuse of church letters will doubtless save many a soul from death, and will certainly destroy the source of a multitude of sins. Letters are carried for years, and a great variety of excuses offered for refusing to deposit them. This is a weakness to the church and a danger to the individual. I suggest that publishers of church letters insert a clause specifying a time limit of validity. Six months is ample for all but the most extraordinary cases. Persons of unstable character are the greatest sinners in this respect, and why should the church be asked to vouch for their worthiness for an indefinite period? The laxity tolerated in dealing with church letters would prevent this provision from acting as a complete remedy, but doubtless in very many instances it would serve as a caution against neglect. This suggestion made to one publishing firm was received with approval. A sufficient demand for such a form of letter would bring it. This is to start the demand. If there is a firm publishing such a letter I will use it and recommend it to others. F. W. COLLINS.

Prescott, Ia.

[It would not be difficult to insert such a time limit, even if it is not embodied in the printed form.]

A Preacher's Library.

We are blessed or afflicted with many preachers who have had no college training and young men are continually entering our ministry who do not go to college. Many of these men do not know enough about books to buy those that will be most helpful, and the lists of "four hundred books that a preacher should have" do not give them what they need. If our wise men would prepare a list of about twenty-five and arrange for their supply on "the installment plan" by some publishing company, they would earn the grateful thanks of many a poor and struggling preacher. And if ordination could be postponed until after the completion of such a course of reading, it would mean much more than it does at present. W. J. BURNER.

The Test of Ministerial Fitness.

Allow me to express my cordial agreement with your New York correspondent that the principle involved in the resolutions adopted by a recent state or national convention "is certainly wrong." The editorial, "A Groundless Fear" does not touch the real ground of the fear.

The better way, suggested by an Iowa correspondent, is open to the same objection and is confessedly useless, since the powers of any committee of a ministerial association are "advisory only" and bad men always reject good advice. The suggestion of the editor that "it might be more appropriate for the churches to co-operate to determine the fitness of preachers," points to the true remedy. We have proclaimed far and wide and long that the New Testament is an all-sufficient rule of discipline. Why not apply this rule in the recognition of our ministry?

This rule leaves it for the churches themselves to call, prove and approve, and on occasion to disapprove and depose, ministers. Departure from this fundamental principle is dangerous, either by one church assuming to do what belongs to a co-operation of churches, or by a "state board" or committee of a ministerial association usurping the rights of churches acting by their representatives chosen for this purpose. W. L. HAYDEN.

[See editorial note.]

The Sunday Newspaper.

A leading daily of this city, in an editorial regarding the tendency of some preachers to discuss in their pulpits, subjects of a manifestly secular, even sensational, character, often times betraying ignorance, withal, of what they discourse on, says: "Aside from the question of authority, men are sated with such stuff anyway during the week, and if they go to church Sunday it is to be recalled to the spiritual side of life, which is too much neglected." In this sentence, this editor unwittingly pens what a close reader can hardly refrain from applying to his own Sunday blanket-sheet edition, and the "stuff" therein served up for those who "go to church." What should be the Christian's (the preacher's, say,) attitude with reference to the Sunday paper, anyway? One of our own Chicago preachers—of more than average spiritual-mindedness, too—alluded the other Sunday to an item which he was particular to explain he "took from his paper of that morning." Another pastor, one of our own also, referring from his pulpit to a matter of uncommon public moment, remarked: "Interested as I might be in learning the latest on the subject, I would not invest in a Sunday paper to post myself, for I will have nothing to do with them." Hundreds heard these two utterances. One must tend to confirm the Sunday paper patron in his course; the other to influence against taking or reading it. Preachers, on which side is your example? W. P. KEELER.

High Altitudes.

Food Cannot be Boiled as Quickly as in Low.

The curious experiences people have with coffee drinking are worth pondering over if any one is ailing and does not know the exact reason thereof.

Coffee is a secretive worker, and through the nervous system affects different parts of the body in different people.

A young married woman, Mrs. T. L. Blackmon, Oswego, Montana, had a conclusive experience in the effects of coffee on her eyes. She says, "I have used coffee since a child, but a short time ago my eyes began to grow weak, and the least exertion such as reading or sewing would cause shooting pains and wavy lines of light so that I could see but little else for minutes at a time.

"This alarmed me and I earnestly sought the cause of the trouble. Some one told me that coffee sometimes affected the eyes. I at once decided to quit it and see if I would be benefited, but I must have something to take the place of coffee, for I wanted to modify, as much as possible, the sacrifice of giving it up. "So I decided to try Postum for myself. When it came I made it strictly according to directions and was wonderfully surprised and pleased with it. Husband says that my Postum is very different, indeed, from that he once drank at a friend's table.

"I frankly own that I like Postum better than I ever liked coffee. It has a rich body to it that coffee lacks. I boil it longer than twenty minutes and it improves it. Perhaps it requires longer boiling in the high altitudes. I think it does.

"For three months now I have been using Postum and have been wonderfully benefited. My eyes no longer pain me, and are strong as they ever were. My complexion, instead of being sallow as formerly, is clear and rosy. I know to a certainty that my improvement has been caused by leaving off coffee and using Postum, for that is absolutely the only change I have made, and I have taken no medicine.

"A Mr. Randall, a friend of ours, has obtained relief from his stomach trouble and headaches by leaving off coffee and taking Postum. We think we know something of the facts about coffee and about Postum."

Our Budget.

—Ministerial Relief next Sunday.

—"Contributing to the necessities of the Saints," is the apostolic statement of an apostolic virtue.

—John P. Glvens, of Virginia, has passed his final examination for B. D. degree at the University of Chicago.

—Clyde Sharp closed his work at Barnard, Mo., Dec. 1, and the church is in correspondence with a man to succeed him.

—A contribution of $4 to the Tyler Relief Fund has been received from G. W. Coffmann, of Harda, C. P. India.

—H. M. Brooks, of Paris, Ill., writes that he knows of a young preacher of ability who can be secured to preach for $600 a year.

—J. T. Bridwell, of McArthur, O., is arranging a debate with a representative of the Mormons, to take place in January.

—N. Rollo Davis will close ten months' work with the King City (Mo.) church Dec. 15. Over 30 added in that time. A successor is wanted.

—N. R. Davis has recently closed a ten days' meeting at Bethany, Mo. He will preach during the coming year for Bethany, Dawson and Long Branch.

—The minutes of the Minneapolis convention are ready for circulation and anyone wishing a copy may secure it by addressing B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati.

—J. M. Philputt, of the Lenox Ave. church, New York city, has accepted a call to the Richmond Ave. Church of Christ, Buffalo, N. Y., from which Pres. B. A. Jenkins, now of Kentucky University, lately resigned.

—Flournoy Payne has been called to remain the third year at Colorado City, Col. The membership has been increased fifty per cent., nearly all debt removed and the church property improved within the last two years.

—Prof. Shailer Matthews, of University of Chicago, will take a party of students to Palestine for three months' work, for which credit will be given in the Divinity School. A. W. Place, a graduate of Bethany, will be a member of the party.

—The Sixth Christian church, Indianapolis, Ind., is to be remodeled and enlarged at a cost of $2,800. The adjoining lot was recently bought and the enlarged building will be thoroughly modern and adequate. O. W. McGaughey is pastor.

—The Cairo, Ill., church dedicated its enlarged and repaired building on Dec. 1, in a union service arranged by the pastor, Clark Braden. H. W. Cies, of Hamburg, Ia., was present at the dedication and is assisting in a protracted meeting.

—We are requested to announce the publication of a story entitled "Bruce Norman" by John T. Brown. It is the story of a young man who worked his way from obscurity to eminence and gives an account of his college life, his work as a preacher and the schools of reform which he instituted. (John T. Brown, Louisville, Ky., $1.)

—We do not want to stop the paper of anybody who really wants it. But we have no way of knowing who really wants it except by the renewals that are sent in. It will cost you only one dollar. If you haven't the dollar by you, just say when you will pay it. Your promise is as good as your cash—but we want one or the other.

—Thanksgiving day at the University of Chicago was celebrated by the laying of the corner stone for the new Bartlett gymnasium. Corner stone layings are common occasions there at present. Seven new buildings are now in process of erection. The Disciples' Divinity House may catch the contagion at any time.

—Special subscription price for 1902, one dollar.

—Help us boom the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at our special price of one dollar a year.

—If your subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST expires Jan. 1902, renew at once. Otherwise it will be stopped.

—Do not fail to renew your subscription before your time expires. Watch the label. You may miss some copies of the paper by neglecting this.

—Send in your subscriptions promptly. You will not want to miss a single copy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for 1902. Back numbers will be hard to furnish.

—W. F. Turner writes: "We expect to occupy and dedicate our new church building here Dec. 29. L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will conduct the services."

—Fifty-two issues of the illustrated CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at one dollar makes a handsome though inexpensive Christmas gift. It will not be continued beyond the time paid for unless renewed.

—Good literature is an absolute need in every family. We ask your active co-operation in furnishing it. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from the time subscription is received until January 1, 1903, for only one dollar. This to new subscribers.

—Any preacher unmarried who desires to take a course in Johns Hopkins University can find employment in a prosperous mission in Baltimore that will more than pay his expenses. Address Peter Ainslie, 721 Carey street, Baltimore.

—The new church at Grand Rapids, Mich., was dedicated Dec. 8, the principal address being by C. B. Newnan, of Detroit. An evangelistic meeting will follow, conducted by F. P. Arthur, assisted by Mr. Willis, of Ann Arbor, as singer.

—The church at Tina, Mo., wishes a preacher for half time at about $300. R. H. Love writes that it is a difficult field and that the church is weak, but that it pays every dollar that it agrees to pay and has possibilities. George W. Collier is clerk.

—At South Bend, Ind., the First Christian Church Sunday-school had a rally day, Nov. 24, with 387 present. A chapel is being erected in the southern part of the city and it is the hope of the pastor, P. J. Rice, that a church will soon be organized there.

—R. A. Torrey, superintendent of the Moody Institute, Chicago, and Mrs. Torrey will sail from San Francisco Dec. 28, on a missionary journey around the world, returning about Jan. 1, 1903. He will hold Bible institutes at many points, especially in Australia and New Zealand.

—M. L. Pontius, pastor of the Christian church at Streator, Ill., requests all persons who know of members of the church who have moved to that city and have not identified themselves with the church there to send the name and address to Myron L. Pontius, Streator, Ill.

—At the request of a correspondent we recently asked for Ingersoll's eulogy on whiskey and the reply, which was published in this paper some time ago. I. J. Cahill, of Dayton, O., furnishes us the desired clipping, which is reprinted in the Family Circle this week. It is good. Read it.

—We beg the indulgence of our readers if their paper should reach them a day or so later than usual. Our growing list is taxing our mechanical department to its utmost. We expect to have another new press in position in a few weeks and will then be able to supply the demand more promptly. We don't care if our friends compel us to buy even another press. Send on your subscriptions. We will take care of them.

Pains in the Back

Are symptoms of a weak, torpid or stagnant condition of the kidneys or liver, and are a warning it is extremely hazardous to neglect, so important is a healthy action of these organs.

They are commonly attended by loss of energy, lack of courage, and sometimes by gloomy foreboding and despondency.

"I had pains in my back, could not sleep and when I got up in the morning felt worse than the night before. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and now I can sleep and get up feeling rested and able to do my work. I attribute my cure entirely to Hood's Sarsaparilla." Mrs. J. N. PERRY, care H. S. Copeland, Pike Road, Ala.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Cure kidney and liver troubles, relieve the back, and build up the whole system.

—Members of the Pine Creek (Ill.) church recently presented their pastor a fur lined overcoat. Evidently it is not a cold church.

—Mrs. Frederick F. Wyatt writes that there have been twenty-nine additions at San Angelo, Tex., and $83 raised for missions since they went there last February. Brother Wyatt has accepted a call to continue indefinitely and the church has encouraged pastoral calling by giving him a new buggy.

—A note from F. M. Rains, written Dec. 2 on the steamship Nippon Maru on the Pacific ocean, says that they expect to land the next morning, Dec. 3, and will reach Cincinnati about Dec. 15. He reports a delightful and profitable trip, his only cause for regret being the news that the churches took a backward step in their gifts for foreign missions.

—A. L. Chapman, formerly missionary under the Foreign Christian Missionary Society at Constantinople, has accepted a call to the work in Butte, Mont. He began there Dec. 1, and reports that his new field is a booming city of 75,000. It is a violent transition from sleepy Constantinople at the gate of the Orient to the greatest mining camp of the world.

—Clifford S. Weaver writes from Osaka, Japan, that he has recently made a missionary tour to Kyoto, the former capital of the empire, accompanied by R. L. Pruett and Hirai San. As a result five young men from the higher normal school were baptized. There are now seven Christians in that school of 600 students. The Japanese pastor will hold a meeting each week in the vicinity.

—The financial report of the Minneapolis committee shows what it costs to entertain a convention. The total expense incurred by the committee was $1,172.16. In addition to this amount about $1,200 was expended by the Commercial Club and upwards of $500 by individual members of the committee and others who did not ask to be reimbursed. The services of the committee were, of course, rendered gratis.

—The church in Kalamazoo, Mich., dedicated its building Nov. 27. The lot is well located on a corner in the heart of the city and the chapel is designed to be only the lecture room of a larger building to be erected later. The present membership is about 150. The organization is ten years old. The erection of this building was made possible by a loan from the church extension society. On dedication day the church not only raised the thousand dollars which was necessary to secure the loan, but also enough more to pay it back. The state secretary, D. Munro, helped in the financial work of the day and F. P. Arthur, C. S. Medbury and J. W. Taylor assisted in the dedication. H. H. Halby is pastor.

—Joseph Utterback writes that a congregation called Mt. Zion has been organized on the summit of the Ozarks in Texas county, Mo., with thirteen members. A Bible-school is being held through the winter, which is unusual there. The house is a log building 20x24, but has been recently commodiously furnished. A Thanksgiving service was held with an oration in the morning and songs, recitations and speeches in the afternoon.

—The Church of Christ at Ft. Madison, Ia., after meeting for ten years in the court house, built a plain, substantial tabernacle in a good location and has been having many additions during special meetings held by the pastor, E. E. Lowe. The tabernacle idea is a good one. It would help many a church to escape the dilemma between a long period of houselessness and an equally long period of struggle under the burden of a debt.

—W. J. Russell, of Rushville, Ind., has accepted a call to the East End Christian church, Pittsburg, Pa., the pastorate of which was recently vacated by the resignation of T. E. Cramblet to become president of Bethany College. Both the Rushville and the Pittsburg East End churches are among the largest in the brotherhood. The former has a membership of 1,200, having gained 400 during the past three years, and an indebtedness of $11,000 has been half paid and the rest provided for during that time.

—The Batavia, Ill., Christian church held its annual meeting Dec. 5, at which time the reports of the various departments were presented. There have been twenty-two additions, nineteen by baptism; Sunday-school increased by sixty; $40.62 raised for missions; Ladies' Aid society of sixteen members and C. W. B. M. auxiliary of eighteen organized. The pastor, G. A. Ragan, has been doing graduate work in the University of Chicago. He will conduct evangelistic services in Springfield, O., in January.

—The American Institute of Sacred Literature offers a series of courses beginning Jan. 1, which run parallel with the international Sunday-school lessons in the book of Acts. The courses are graded and range from the simplest outline courses to technical work in the Greek text. These courses are under the direction of the council of seventy, the president of which is John Henry Barrows, of Oberlin, whose recent article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on "Why Young Men and Women Should go to College," has attracted a wide reading. These courses supplementary to the international lessons will be found useful both for those who cannot go to college and for those who have been. For particulars address the American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago.

—The following is an extract from the resolutions of respect passed by the church at Worcester, Mass., referring to the recent death of Dr. W. A. Belding:

It is almost with reverence that we think of him in his association with the churches throughout the country for more than sixty years. The universal spirit of sadness which pervades so large a portion of the brotherhood throughout the land, and especially in the Worcester church, bears testimony to the tender relationship of spiritual father which he bore to so many of us, for he had the privilege of baptizing with his own hands nearly 12,000 persons during his long and eventful ministry. He was one of the very few remaining ministers who were contemporary with the pioneers and founders of the great movement of the 19th century for the restoration of Primitive Christianity. His evangelistic labors form a very large, important and interesting portion of the history of this church, especially in its early days; and his faithful services when the church was weak and his untiring solicitude for the welfare of the Worcester church were born more of love than duty, and we that knew this old hero best knew that the Worcester church was the love of his strong manhood days, and we therefore hold his memory with the greatest love and esteem and we class him as one of the pioneers and pillars of this church.

Do You Get Up With a Lame Back?

Have You Rheumatism? Do You Have Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow; Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney and bladder remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince any one—and you may have a sample bottle free, by mail.

Backache and Urinary Trouble.

Among the many famous investigated cures of Swamp-Root the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers, speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy.

DR. KILMER & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:—When I wrote you last March for a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, my wife was a great sufferer from backache, rheumatism and urinary trouble. After trying the sample bottle, she bought a large bottle here at the drug store. That did her so much good she bought more. The effect of Swamp-Root was wonderful and almost immediate. She has felt no return of the old trouble since.

Oct., 1901.

F. THOMAS,
427 Best St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night, inability to hold your urine, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, uric acid, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart-beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, wornout feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with wonderful success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

To Prove What SWAMP-ROOT, the Great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy, Will do for YOU, Every Reader of the "Christian-Evangelist" May Have a Sample Bottle Absolutely Free by Mail.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

—A new church building will be dedicated at Waynesburg, Pa., Dec. 15, with the assistance of Z. T. Sweeney. It will be the finest church edifice in the town.

—The church at Buffalo, Kan., dedicated its new building, Nov. 10, in the presence of a large audience. The pastor, Bro. Park, was assisted by E. L. Poston. Enough money was raised to cover all indebtedness. Bro. Poston continued a few days in evangelistic services with two additions.

—L. W. Spayd, of Shreve, O., writes that John Encell, of Marion, Ia., assisted him in a meeting three weeks in November with thirteen additions, eleven by baptism. On five evenings Brother Encell read the chapters of a story which he had written and Brother Spayd thinks that if the story were published in book form it would be the best converting book ever issued by us

If You Lack Energy

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It vitalizes the nerves, helps digestion, and refreshes and invigorates the entire system.

Alexander Ellett.

The following is a synopsis of a memorial discourse at Chillicothe, Mo., by Frank W. Allen. Bro. Ellett's prominence in this state, his wide circle of interested friends, his long and useful life and the excellence of the sermon are sufficient excuse for departing from our usual rule and printing the funeral address:

Text.—Phil 20:21. "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death. For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

Once more the shadow of death has fallen upon us; once more the fountains of grief have broken up in our hearts, for the gates of the silent land have noiselessly swung wide and closed again upon one of our number—"a Prince in Israel," whom we loved and honored.

Bro. Ellett was born in Hanover county, Va., Sept. 16, 1831, and departed this life Sunday night, Oct. 27, 1901, at midnight. He moved to Mississippi with his parents when five years old and was bereft of a father at nine.

At 12 years of age he united with the Baptist Church, but on his return to Virginia at 13 years of age, he and his mother came into the Christian Church under the preaching of A. Campbell.

He graduated from Bethany College in 1854 and at once accepted a position in a female school at Little Rock, Ark., tendered him by Prof. J. D. Pickett. Several years later he became associated with Wm. and Kirk Baxter, in Newton College, Miss., where he remained until the institution was broken up by the war. In 1856 he was married to Miss Mary Howell, of W. Feliciana Parish, La.

To this union five children were born: Prof. R. H. Ellett, of Kentucky University; W. H. Ellett, of this city; J. G. Ellett, of Colorado; A. J. Ellett, of Sullivan county, Mo., and Miss Coral Ellett, of Mississippi. His next field of labor was Chaneyville, La., succeeding Bro. Robt. Graham as pastor of the church.

This congregation was scattered by the war, and he removed to Palestine, Texas. In 1866 he returned to Starkville, Miss., and resumed teaching and preaching as occasion offered. Here in May, 1867, his well-beloved wife died. He bought a small farm of virgin forest in that county and built himself a little log cabin. Here he toiled and studied and preached for seven years.

In the fall of 1868 he married Miss Caroline Haworth, of Artesia, Miss., whom you so well know and so well love. He could not have asked the love of a truer heart and the service of a nobler life than she gave him. She not only cheerfully bore her own burdens but lent him strength to bear his. For 33 years her love doubled his joys and fully halved his sorrows.

To him she was as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land; a shelter in the time of storm.

To this union also five children were born: J. A., of Omaha; Lula, Virginia, Waller and Love, of this city.

In all ten children; worthy citizens of our own and of other commonwealths—worthy sons and daughters of their worthy sire—richly meriting our love and that wealth of soul he generously bestowed to his closing hour.

In 1874 Bro. Ellett removed to Harvey county, Kan., and opened up another farm. Here for nine years he toiled and taught and preached, doing much to organize new churches and to systematize and vitalize the work of state missions. In the winter of 1883 he removed to Bethany, Mo., where he preached until July, 1885, when he bought his home here. He was the pastor of this congregation for about six years. For 16 years he has gone in and out among you magnifying that Christ whom he preached and whom he loved to serve. He could truthfully say: "Christ shall be magnified in my body whether it be by life or by death; for to me to live is Christ and to die is gain."

His life was a remarkably unselfish one. He had too much of the mind of Christ to be otherwise. He greatly magnified Christ in this respect.

He was modest but morally brave. He never thought more highly of himself than he ought to have thought. But when a great principle was involved, or a great truth was in jeopardy, he was as brave and as uncompromising as Paul.

He was great minded. He thought great thoughts. He was by nature a student. Books were his delight. He usually had with him here in the house of God his Greek Testament. Only a short time ago he purchased a new Greek book which he studied with all the ardor of a college student. He would have made a great professor in some university.

He was a great preacher. Not to those with itching ears; not to those who loved cutely turned sermonettes; not to those who came to be entertained rather than to be instructed, but to those who wished a larger survey of and a richer insight into truth, he was great. It is ever to be regretted that his innate modesty and his aversion to writing kept him out of our public prints. It is an irreparable loss that he did not leave us a book of sermons.

He was great-hearted. This logically follows. He came near loving his neighbor as he loved himself. His love of wife and children was deep and rich and tender and strong and his love of his brethren was scarcely less so. His love for the welfare of this congregation caused him to overtax his powers in one of the greatest talks ever made to a Chillicothe audience, and doubtless hastened, if it did not cause, his death. Surely you can never forget how on the night of "Forefathers' day" he magnified Christ, as with thrilling power he unfolded the beginning and purpose of "our movement" and pled with you to be true to that purpose, true to the pioneers who wrought so nobly, true to the prayer of the blessed Son of God for the union of his people. The man of many great speeches never made a better one than was this his last. May it be that being dead he yet speaketh? In his sickness, with a beautiful patience and spirit he again magnified the Master, and we who Horse Sense.

"Any fool can take a horse to water, but it takes a wise man to make him drink," says the proverb. The horse eats when hungry and drinks when thirsty. A man eats and drinks by the clock, without regard to the needs of nature. Because of careless eating and drinking "stomach trouble" is one of commonest of diseases. Sour and bitter risings, belchings, unnatural fullness after eating, dizziness, headache, and many other symptoms mark the beginning and progress of disease of the stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures through the stomach diseases of other organs which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach, and allied organs of digestion and nutrition. It strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, cures obstinate cough and heals weak lungs.

"I was taken with Grippe, which resulted in heart and stomach trouble," writes Mr. T. R. Caudill, Montlaud, Alleghany Co., N. C. "I was unable to do anything a good part of the time. I wrote to Dr. Pierce about my condition, having full confidence in his medicine. He advised me to take his 'Golden Medical Discovery,' which I did. Before I had finished the second bottle I began to feel better. I have used nearly six bottles. I feel thankful to God for the benefit I have received from Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I can highly recommend it to all persons as a good and safe medicine."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets keep the bowels healthy.

stood about him felt that he might truly say: "Christ shall be magnified in my body whether it be by life or by death; for to me to live is Christ and to die is gain."

Of all the sweet, deep passages in God's word, none more fitly reveals the character and purpose of Bro. Ellett—the friend of God, the friend of man. So when the end came the beauty of the Lord was upon him and the work of his hands was established.

When his spirit winged its flight back to God who gave it, we wept with each other and for each other, but none wept for him who in dying had laid hold on eternal life.

Don't Let Prejudice Keep you from Getting Well.

No Money is Wanted.

Simply write a postal for the book you need. See what I have to say. You can't know too much about ways to get well.

My way is not less effective because I tell you about it. There are millions of cases which nothing else can cure. How can I reach them save by advertising?

I will send with the book also an order on your druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I will tell him to let you test it for a month at my risk. If you are satisfied, the cost will be $5.50. If it fails, I will pay him myself.

The book will tell you how my Restorative strengthens the inside nerves. It brings back the power that operates the vital organs. My book will prove that no other way can make those organs strong.

No matter what your doubts. Remember that my method is unknown to you, while I spent a lifetime on it. Remember that only the cured need pay. Won't you write a postal to learn what treatment makes such an offer possible?

Texas Christian Lectureship.

Our lectureship for this year is now a thing of the past, and like most of its predecessors, was a pronounced success. The attendance was about one hundred, mostly preachers. It was held in Waco with the University Church of Add-Ran University. Unfortunately I was called home for a funeral and heard only a part of the program. A. E. Ewell was the first to speak. "Some Problems Peculiar to Young Preachers," was his theme, and his paper was good, a fit foretaste of the feast that followed. Mrs. Ida V. Jarvis was the next, and her theme was "Feeding the Flock of God." It was tender, scriptural and practical, and will bear fruit. Chalmers McPherson was the third speaker, and his was a great speech. McPherson never makes a bad speech, but perhaps he never made one quite so good before. He presented us "The Man in the Pulpit," and we will never forget him. Arthur W. Jones came next on the subject, "The Church and the Liquor Traffic." His words burned like fire, and the audience was thrilled to the core. No other address was superior to this in its stirring power. "The Attitude of Unbelief," was shown by S. K. Hallam, and the speaker was at his best, and hence the paper was fine. J. B. Haston came from the sick room, but none would have suspected it when listening to his elegant paper on "The Trend of the Pulpit." J. C. Mason, always practical and helpful, was eagerly heard on "The Organization and Work of the Sunday-school." M. O. Ewing, a young man who has been with us only a short time, won a high place as a preacher with his paper, "The Spirit of Missions." Mrs. Josephine McKinsey on "The Christian a Nonconformist," was strong, gentle and Christlike. There were other

RESTORES EYESIGHT

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision. J. N. Horne, Waycross, Ga., writes: "My eyes have been wonderfully benefited by Actina." W. R. Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina saved me from going blind." R. J. Reid, St. Augustine, Fla., writes: "Actina removed a cataract from my son's eye." Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I should have been blind had I not used Actina." A party of prominent citizens have organized in a company known as the New York & London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. They have bought all American and European rights for this wonderful invention. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 203, 929 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and its Disease in General, and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

papers from the home talent, but I did not hear them.

H. L. Willett was our "Chief Lecturer," and he gave six lectures, only three of which I heard. His first was "Old Testament Criticism," and it was not very satisfactory. A number of us thought it lacked definiteness. What I mean will be clear when I tell you that one of the brightest men of the convention required two queries, or rather the same query twice, before he could understand his position on the inspiration of the Ten Commandments. But his position as finally defined was acceptable. His other lectures, "New Testament Criticism" and "New Testament Quotations from the Old Testament," were splendid. After his first lecture he discarded in the main his manuscript, and spoke with ease and fluency. Bro. Willett, in addition to much learning, has a charming personality, and he easily wins his way to the hearts of men.

The last day was the great day of the lectureship. It was Emancipation Day. Add-Ran University for years has been in debt, and many of her friends at times thought we would lose the school. But such is not the case any longer. There is not a dollar of debt to-day. About three months ago that man of God, T. E. Shirley, took the field as financial agent, determined that the debt should be paid, and thanks be to God, it has been paid. And to-day we have one of the best plants for a great school to be found in the whole land. Our property, worth $150,000, is first class in every particular, and almost every room is occupied by a body of as fine students as you ever met. This day's work marks an epoch in our history in Texas, and we will move forward henceforth as never before.

We meet next year at Weatherford, and the time is changed to Monday-Thursday after the second Sunday of December. The new officers are A. Clark, president; J. C. Mason, vice-president; M. O. Ewing, secretary. The executive committee is C. McPherson, J. T. McKissick, J. B. Haston.

A committee was appointed to look into the matter of an encampment for the lectureship and state convention, and to report at the Dallas convention in June. The committee consists of M. M. Davis, B. B. Sanders, J. C. Mason, C. McPherson, T. E. Shirley.

My Wife's Plan for Preacherless Churches.

I use the above title because preacher's wives usually do their work behind the scenes, and are entitled to far more recognition than they receive.

Many preachers are like one of Kipling's characters, who used capital I's so often in conversation that they appeared as telegraph poles fitting by as you ride on a fast train. In fact many of us are only telegraph poles bearing up the current of thought evolved or inspired by the wife.

I write this without her consent or knowledge, and when she sees it, I may conclude it is wise to go out—saw wood and say nothing for a while.

After reading last week's editorial on "Preacherless Churches," she said, "I believe there is a practical way of meeting this question." The big I gave a nod and grunt, to signify that he would condescend to listen to her plan. The plan follows:

Let the country churches group themselves, as suggested by the editor, two or more, as their strength demands. Then purchase from 5 to 40 acres of land, build a parsonage, put out fruit and improve it for poultry, fruit or farming. Give this, rent free, to the preacher. If better suited for farming, let the brethren, at set times, meet, plow, plant or reap, to give the preacher a lift. Many a city preacher, hard pressed to exist on his salary, would be delighted to preach for these churches. He would soon know his people, be identified with them and learn to love them. This would, in most cases, insure long pastorates, as many obvious advantages would obtain.

But can the churches be induced to act? Is this plan only a suggestion which will fall into "innocuous desuetude"? Yes, unless organized and pushed. Let our state board employ an organizer, a man with grace, grit, and gumption. Send him among the churches to do this work—not simply to suggest it to the churches, but to set in order the things that are wanting.

For the real, permanent good of our churches in Missouri, this would be worth fourfold the work of an evangelist at this time. We have had, and seized, our time to evangelize; now is our time to organize, or we will lose a large part of the work that has been done. The right man in the field for this work now would give a permanent feature to our work that is greatly needed, and produce marvelous results in the future.

Memory Food.

A Case where Memory was Strengthened by Grape-Nuts.

Food that will actually help the memory as well as agree perfectly with a delicate stomach is worth knowing of.

A good wife out in Alta, Ia., who did not know which way to turn to get food that would agree with her husband, who was left in a weakened condition after a serious illness and could scarcely retain any food in his stomach, was one day induced to try him on Grape-Nuts, the famous ready-cooked breakfast food, and from the first he began to improve rapidly. In three months he had gained 30 pounds.

She says that his stomach has recovered so completely that he can now eat any kind of food.

She mentions the boy of an intimate acquaintance, who was so delicate and thin that his appearance was pitiable and he had no appetite for any ordinary food. He was put on Grape-Nuts and liked the crispness and sweetish taste of the new food and took to it. His improvement began at once and he is now a healthy, plump boy.

"I know that Grape-Nuts will do more for weak stomachs than any medicine. The claim that it will build up and strengthen the brain has been proven to my certain knowledge. Sister, who writes for the press, and is compelled to memorize a great deal, has been using Grape-Nuts and says she is surprised at the result. There is a marked improvement in her memory and the brain works more perfectly and with better results.

How to Hold a Rally.

I have received a number of requests for details of plans used in preparing for our Sunday-school rally and will answer once for all.

First, we announced to the school that we would rally for the Sunday-school Dec. 1. The purpose of the rally was stated and the superintendent appointed four committees: advertising, program, canvassing and finance. We began work two weeks in advance of the day. The advertising committee prepared all the printed matter. A sufficient number of large posters to fill the town were prepared as follows:

RALLY.

The Pittsfield Christian Church will rally for the Sunday-school, Sunday, Dec. 1, 1901.
Rally Cry: "Five hundred scholars in Sunday-school, Sunday, Dec. 1, 1901."

Object: Enlargement of the school. Enrollment for Christ. Evangelization of America.

How Accomplished? By coming, confessing, contributing.

In canvassing for new scholars the committee used this form of pledge:

S. S. RALLY, PITTSFIELD CHRISTIAN CHURCH.
Sunday, Dec. 1, 1901. 9:30 A. M.

If not sick or unavoidably hindered, I promise to attend this rally, Name.....

Solicitor.....

The town was divided into four districts and assigned to members of the committee, who in turn assigned them to the 22 classes. In this way the canvass was thorough and was completed in a short time. The committee reported on the following Sunday 517 pledged to attend the rally. This we announced through the local press.

On Wednesday evening preceding our rally, we took for our prayer-meeting topic, "Our Sunday-school." The superintendent spoke on the subject, "What our Sunday-school is and what we want it to be." Other topics were, "Fathers and Mothers in the Sunday-school," and "The Value of Decision Day." The Sunday-school prayer-meeting is an important feature of the rally.

On Sunday morning we lacked but seven of having as many present as the number pledged and the class offering amounted to $23.68. As a souvenir and as a plan for ascertaining the number of "stickers," we prepared the following device, printed on cardboard, with a colored card attached:

1, attended the rally of the Pittsfield Christian Sunday-school, Sunday, Dec. 1, 1901.

Following the Sunday-school service, an address was delivered by the pastor on "The Sunday-school for the Times."

In the evening a program was rendered by the children. The total attendance at these services was about 1,500, and this in a town of 2,500 with 10 churches. Much of the success of our enterprise is due to our efficient superintendent, R. T. Hicks, and his loyal co-workers.

Try a rally. You are sure to succeed.

IT GROWS UPON THEM.

The Praise Hymnal

IT settles the music question satisfactorily as far as the book question is concerned. It is the most economical investment as to music books, for it settles that question for a long term of years, and you have, during the time, the best that is to be had.

DEAR BROTHER FILLMORE:—THE PRAISE HYMNAL is the best church music book I have ever seen. We have been using it at Richmond Street, Cincinnati, ever since it came out. Its strength and excellency have grown upon us from the first. To-day we appreciate it more than ever. We have tested, I presume, one-half of its contents, and I believe the other half must be just as good.

Our church is capable of testing the book pretty thoroughly. We have always had a singing church, and at one time had for two years a highly cultured choir-master with a volunteer choir of some thirty voices. This chorister had served many different churches and had used as many different hymnals. He frequently remarked that THE PRAISE HYMNAL was by far the best he had ever seen. He was enthusiastic over it, and took great delight in teaching our choir and congregation its beautiful songs.

The book has been a great blessing to our church. Our Lord's Day services have been dignified by its grand hymns, while our prayer meetings and evangelistic services have been stirred deeply by its effective gospel songs. Its combination of the older classic hymns and modern gospel songs makes it a great book. With us it is the ideal church music book.

I wish also to make especial mention of the Responsive Scripture Readings. We have used these constantly in our Lord's Day services, and frequently at other services. Not only are they a source of instruction, but a great help to devotion. At times our services have been very impressive when the whole congregation have read together as one voice the sublime utterances of Holy Scripture as found in these selections.

If by anything I could say I could induce our churches generally to get THE PRAISE HYMNAL, and use it as it is capable of being used, I would gladly say it. With THE PRAISE HYMNAL on the market there is certainly no excuse for churches being without first-class music.

An Incident.

The unexpected news of the death of my old Bethany College mate, Alexander Ellett, has filled my heart with sadness. It was my good fortune to dine with him and his excellent family only a short time ago before I left Missouri for my home in Salem, Oregon. He was then 67 and I 63, but he was in splendid health and bade fair to fill out on earth four-score years. We first met in the halls of Bethany College in February, 1854. On the fourth of July in that year he graduated in the same class with Jno. T. Dye, of Indianapolis, O. A. Burgess, John Shackelford and Jas. S. Lamar. One had to know Bro. Ellett, you might say intimately, to appreciate his full and real worth. Never very demonstrative in his approaches to his fellow students nor was he so in his after life, but a more genuine spirit, a more honorable man, I never met. For him all of his friends and brethren had the highest respect because of his ability as a preacher of the gospel and his incorruptible integrity. Judging from his conversation and the whole tenor of his daily life he was as pure a man as it was ever my lot to meet. I think I knew him well and the longer I knew him the more I loved him.

One little incident in his life and my own I want to put on record. When pastor of the large congregation at Chillicothe, Mo.,—and he preached for that church longer than any minister it ever had—I was preaching at Breckinridge and Pattonburg, and one day on my way to the latter place, I heard in Chillicothe that Eva, the little daughter of my dear friend, Calvin McInturff, then and now an honored elder of the church, was sick and nigh unto death. I met Bro. Ellett on the public square and we went up to the house where the sick child was. Three or four skillful physicians were present. She had diphtheria or membranous croup.

These doctors were holding a consultation in regard to performing the operation known as tracheotomy. Late in the afternoon they left, undetermined as to what course should be pursued. Bro. Ellett and I determined to remain there all night and to sit up with the child. At midnight her father came to me and said, "Bro. Messick, I want you to pray for the recovery of my child." Only four of us in the room—the father and mother, and the two preachers. We all immediately knelt before God; Bro. Ellett sent up to heaven a fervent prayer for the child and I prayed as well as I could. The child was breathing with great difficulty; you could hear her all over the house. It was a struggle for life, but in a very few moments after praying, she began to breathe with all ease and from that moment we had no doubt as to her recovery. The physicians came early the next morning and all said, "She will recover."

Alexander Ellett was a grand man in every sense. He has left a rich legacy to his children in a life thoroughly consecrated to the service of his God through a living and growing faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Missouri State Mission Notes.

So many, having heard of the serious illness of my mother, have been kind enough to write and inquire as to her condition, that I take this method of answering. First of all, thanking each and every one for the kindly interest and their tenderly expressed sympathy, she is a little better at present writing, but the physicians give us no hope of recovery. Our comfort is that she has lived so near to the great Father that she can lovingly trust him now, believing that he doeth all things well.

We have had some happy answers to our call for volunteers for our One Dollar League. We have had one contribution each from Kansas, Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana. The last is from a preacher in his 83rd year, whose lower limbs have been paralyzed from his youth. Yet his interest even in Missouri missions leads him to make his gift. May God bless him. The brother from Ohio asks if Ohio money is not as good as Kansas. Yes indeed, and thank you. The one thing that puzzles me is that these brethren from other states manifest so much more interest than many in our own state. But they are still coming in and we hope to have a long list for the next issue of the Message. Maybe this interest from other states will stir up the spirit of emulation in our own.

Who is there among us that will take hold of a college enterprise in southeast Missouri? There is a good, new building, cost $6,000, well located, that can be obtained, and I believe that the school will pay from the start. It will take some one with determination, consecration and what in western parlance is called "hustle," and some money to make it go. The man also, must have a good, strong body—a practical man. No sentimental dreamer can succeed at all.

We are just sending out the notices of the apportionment of the churches. It is practically the same as last year. That of some few churches has been raised, but we believe that it is only where it can be easily done. The state convention voted unanimously to instruct the state board to ask for $10,000 and we are trying to raise it.

Many of the churches can just as well send in their apportionment at once as not. If such is the case we entreat you to do so. The last board meeting found us without the means to pay our field men. They must be paid or their families will suffer. Will you not help us, and do so now?

At any rate we hope to find every preacher and church in line for state mission day, January 12, 1902. This ought to be a great day through the state. We have asked our county secretaries to take up the matter with the churches. Now won't the preachers take up the matter also? The whole year's work depends on this offering. Make it large and success is ours, but a failure will cripple us very much indeed.

The Christian Worker, by J. H. Foy, has long been generally regarded as the best ministers' manual published. It is a book that every preacher needs, for it will give him assistance and help in every part of his duty as a minister of the Gospel. It is full of hints and suggestions concerning weddings, funerals, baptisms, dedications, and all manner of special occasions. Besides, there are instructions on church discipline, organization, etc., etc. The book is eminently practical, and is exceedingly cheap at its low price—seventy-five cents. QUEEN ESTHER

By M. M. DAVIS. A charming little volume by one of the most popular preachers and pastors in our brotherhood. Taking the story of Esther as given in the Scriptures, he skillfully enlarges, supplying detail and incident, until he makes a romance of absorbing interest. The book is beautifully printed and bound, is illustrated and contains 132 pages. The price is 75 cents.

Evangelistic.

ARKANSAS.

Fayetteville, Dec. 6.—We are still reaping the fruits of Bro. T. P. Haley's good preaching. Since the close of his meeting there have been 4 more conversions.—N. M. RAGLAND.

Newport, Dec. 2.—Held a two weeks' meeting at Paris, Ark; 6 confessions. Bro. Shifley recently baptized 5 others at that place which have not been reported.—JAMES H. BROOKS.

COLORADO.

Longmont, Dec. 7.—H. A. Davis, state evangelist for Colorado, held a three weeks' meeting at Berthoud, closing Dec. 1. Results, 3 added; 2 by letter, 1 from the M. E.'s. Money to pay off the indebtedness was raised and the mortgage burned. The church is now entirely free from debt.—E. F. HARRIS.

ILLINOIS.

Blue Mount, Nov. 25.—Meeting closed here last night with 15 added. H. M. Barnett, of Rantoul, did the preaching in a splendid manner.—J. R. CRANK, pastor.

Dixon.—The Mt. Morris church enjoyed a short but very fruitful meeting last week with 13 accessions. Finis Idleran, pastor of the Dixon church, assisted the writer. His work at Dixon is very promising.—D. F. SEYSTER.

Longview, Dec. 7.—I held a short meeting at Camargo, Ill., in September; 5 additions. I also held a short meeting at Center Point, Ill., 5 additions and 1 later. I have given half time to this church this year. In all I have preached for these brethren eight years. We have built and dedicated a beautiful chapel here at Longview. I intend to hold a few meetings in Kentucky next year.—B. N. ANDERSON.

Paris.—I brought 12 young women and 2 young men from the Little Grove church to Paris lately for baptism. Am now in a meeting at Kansas, Ill.—H. M. BROOKS.

Rantoul, Dec. 2.—One confession at our regular service here yesterday.—H. M. BARNETT.

Sidell, Dec. 6.—J. C. Coggins, pastor Tabernacle church, Decatur, Ill., is holding a meeting here. Nine have been added up to date, four last night.—ADAM K. ADCOCK, minister.

Summum, Dec. 4.—Closed 13 days' meeting with Kerton Valley church with 34 additions, 27 confessions, 7 reclaimed.—CHESTER A. BAIRD, pastor.

Wayre City, Dec. 3.—Closed meeting here last night with 13 additions, 9 confessions, and church in good working order. I begin at Browns, Edwards county, to-morrow night. Churches desiring meetings or regular work can write me at Browns.—J. A. LITTLE, Rochester, Ind.

INDIANA.

Marion, Dec. 6.—The second month of the present pastoral year closed last Sunday with 7 additions, 2 by letter and 5 by baptism.—M. F. RICKOFF.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Durant, Dec. 2.—Two additions to the Fifth Avenue Christian church yesterday morning.—JOE S. RILEY, pastor.

IOWA.

Clarksville, Dec. 3.—Our meeting here with home forces closed with 27 additions, 2 from the Lutherans, 2 restored, 3 by letter, 11 by confession, 4 from the Baptists, 3 from the

M. E.'s and 2 from the United Brethren.—A. R. ADAMS.

Henderson, Dec. 2.—Lately closed a meeting at Corning, Ia., with the pastor, Bro. Fuller. I am now in a meeting with Bro. McCrea, pastor here.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN, singing evangelist.

Manning, Dec. 4.—Am in a meeting 10 miles south of here in the county; six added in the first eight day.—F. A. SHEETZ.

North English, Nov. 29.—The church house here has been repaired and remodelled and was reopened Sunday by pastor S. P. Telford and B. S. Denny. The writer began Monday night. The meeting is four days old and already they are not able to seat the audience. Bro. Telford had things ready for the meeting.—BEN. F. HILL.

Sac City.—Our four weeks' meeting, planned for October, but delayed by an epidemic of scarlet fever, has just closed. Home forces were aided by A. R. Davis, of Diamond, O., as our singing evangelist. While there were only 8 or 10 additions, the meeting was fruitful of great good in other ways. I can heartily recommend Bro. Davis.—D. F. SNIDER, pastor.

KANSAS.

Among the Kansas preachers who delivered addresses at union Thanksgiving services were C. Henderson at Belleville, W. A. McCausland at Howard, and R. E. Rosenstein at Manhattan.

Atchison, Dec. 5.—Two confessions last Sunday evening and one by letter. Audiences very large. Will burn mortgage on church Sunday evening, Dec. 22. All departments in fine shape. I have conducted 46 funeral services since Jan. 1. So many old people are going away.—WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

Benton.—Twenty-three baptized since last report.—J. L. McCUNE.

Highland.—J. R. Bell, of Norton, has closed a meeting with 14 accessions, 11 baptisms. He expects Mrs. Clara H. Hazelrigg to assist him in a meeting at Norton soon.

Horton.—L. H. Barnum recently closed a meeting with 30 added.

Rexford, Dec. 5.—Meeting 3 weeks old; organized with A. Lowry elder, using M. E. church. Will continue indefinitely. Bro. L. is a young preacher and section foreman.—W. R. BURBRIDGE.

Scott, Dec. 3.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here Nov. 30, with 24 accessions, 18 by confession and six by letter and statement. Bro. J. N. McConnell, of Lyons, did the preaching. This is a place of about 200 inhabitants. Four by letter and two baptisms here not previously reported.—A. NEESE, minister.

Sharon, Dec. 2.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at his place with 15 additions, 13 by baptism, one from the Mennonites and one by statement.—J. J. McLAIN.

Seneca, Dec. 2.—Just closed a meeting of three weeks last night at Oneida. C. C. Bentley, the pastor's brother, did the preaching. Results, 10 accessions to the congregation. Seven by primary obedience. Two by letter first day of meeting. One from the United Brethren.—F. H. BENTLEY.

Soldier, Dec. 3.—We have just closed a splendid meeting of three weeks here, Bro. R. L. McHatton preaching. 40 additions, 32 by baptism, two from the Methodists, two from the Baptists, one from the United Brethren, one by letter and two reclaimed. The church is much strengthened.—CHAS. A. POLSON.

Vining.—Our meeting continued almost four weeks with but 3 accessions, 2 baptisms. Still we believe that the congregation is in much better spiritual condition than before. W. I. Thomas, the pastor, received a donation party the night before Thanksgiving.—R. E. ROSENSTEIN.

Wichita, Dec. 2.—Twenty-four accessions last night.—J. V. COOMBS.

The Right Thing.

A New Catarrh Cure which is Rapidly Coming to the Front.

For several years Eucalyptol Guaiacol and Hydrastin have been recognized as standard remedies for catarrhal troubles, but they have always been given separately, and only very recently an ingenious chemist succeeded in combining them, together with other antiseptics, into a pleasant, effective tablet.

Druggists sell the remedy under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and it has met with remarkable success in the cure of nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat catarrh, and in catarrh of the stomach.

Mr. F. N. Benton, whose address is care of Clark House, Troy, N. Y., says: "When I run up against anything that is good I like to tell people of it. I have been troubled with catarrh more or less for some time. Last winter more than ever. Tried several so-called cures, but did not get any benefit from them. About six weeks ago I bought a 50 cent box of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and am glad to say that they have done wonders for me, and I do not hesitate to let all my friends know that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the right thing."

Mr. Geo. J. Casanova, of Hotel Griffon, West 9th Street, New York City, writes: "I have commenced using Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and already they have given me better results than any catarrh cure I have ever tried."

A leading physician of Pittsburg advises the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in preference to any other treatment for catarrh of the head, throat or stomach.

He claims they are far superior to inhalers, salves, lotions or powder, and are much more convenient and pleasant to take, and are so harmless that little children take them with benefit, as they contain no opiate, cocaine or any poisonous drugs.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cents for full size package, and they are probably the safest and most reliable cure for any form of catarrh.

KENTUCKY.

Erlanger, Dec. 2.—Two weeks' meeting held in the town hall at this place closed last night with 40 accessions.—EDGAR D. JONES.

MISSOURI.

Altamont, Dec. 4.—I have just closed a meeting at Altamont, with seven added by baptism. Bro. Anthony, our district evangelist, led the song service and conducted the devotional service several evenings. I also held a meeting a short time before at Madison Square, a country church six miles from here; 12 additions by baptism, and the church greatly enlivened.—G. W. LEONARD.

Belton.—I closed my work here last Sunday with large audiences and deep interest. One confession at the morning and one at the evening service; also one reclaimed (from Dunkards) one week ago.—B. E. DAWSON, M. D.

Bethany.—N. R. Davis has recently closed a ten days' meeting here. He will preach next year for Bethany, Dawson and Long Branch.

California, Dec. 4.—My brother, C. C. Hill, who is pastor of the church here, assisted us in our meeting at Pleasant Hill, Mo., preaching each night for two and one half weeks. There were 31 accessions. The church was made stronger in every way and never was in better condition. I am in our third year of ministry and well pleased with the progress we are making. I am, in return, helping my brother here.—CLAUDE E. HILL.

Carthage, Dec. 5.—Fourteen new members added recently; was assisted one week by Jasper Winbigler, during which nine were added. Bro. W. was formerly pastor of the M. E. church at Jasper. He should be called to one of our best pulpits.—M. S. JOHNSON.

Chillicothe, Dec. 4.—Baptized a man who in a few weeks will be 87 years old.—FRANK W. ALLEN.

Forest Green, Dec. 1.—Twelve additions so far in the meeting which commenced Nov. 23, conducted by A. C. Yocum, of Salisbury, Mo., assisted by Miss Gussie Ward, of Fayette, Mo., as singer. Seven by confession and baptism, four by statement, and one from the Methodists. The meeting will continue through the coming week. There will be an effort made to erect a union church here as a result of the meeting.—G. W. LAWGORN.

Kansas City, Nov. 29.—Closed meeting at Linden, Mo., with five confessions and money subscribed for pastor, half-time.—T. W. COTTINGHAM.

Kirkville, Dec. 6.—There were five additions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Leonard, Dec. 3.—The meeting closed here to-night with 72 additions. Bro. J. S. Clements is an able man.—ALLEN HILCH, pastor.

Lexington, Dec. 2.—At yesterday's morning service 12 were received, six by letter, two restored, four baptized.—E. J. FENSTERMACHER.

Liberty, Dec. 2.—I recently held a twelve days' meeting at Mt. Gilead, Clay county, with 16 additions. Prof. J. W. Cox, of Warrensburg, ably assisted me as a singer. This makes 84 additions to my three home churches this fall.—FRED V. LOOS.

Louisiana, Dec. 7.—I closed my labors at Queen City, Mo., Dec. 5; 27 added, 2 from the Baptists, 1 M. E., and 24 by confession and baptism. We were helped by the presence, part of the time, of Bro. R. A. Martin who preaches for them one Lord's day in each month; also by the presence, several evenings, of Bro. P. D. Holloway, and Bro. Hollowell one evening. The church met the cost of the meeting, thus relieving the state board.—E. J. LAMPTON.

Memphis, Dec. 4.—We are in a meeting with home forces; 11 added thus far; will close in a few days. Will in a few days begin our fourth year with this church. Bro. Munyon, who has recently moved to Memphis, has taken charge of our county work here.—GRANVILLE SNELL.

Mexico, Dec. 8.—Eighteen additions at close of second week of our meeting, 11 by confession. Shall continue a few days longer. J. Will Landrum, song leader.—A. W. KENDOFFER, pastor.

New Haven, Dec. 2.—The church at New Haven has recently closed a two weeks' meeting; 15 additions, 14 by baptism and one reclaimed. Bro. R. B. Havener did the preaching.—J. A. A.

Odessa, Dec. 3.—Nov. 28, I closed a three weeks' meeting with the church at Cedar Grove, a country church 15 miles southeast of here. Bro. Ollie Davis, a young man in his first year's ministry, has preached here one Sunday in each month, and has made possible this meeting with the 91 additions. The church has wisely called Bro. Davis for full time. I have spent six weeks from my home congregation recently and in the two meetings have had 118 additions. My congregation here has unanimously called me for the third year and I must stay at home for a while.—J. W. COGGINS.

Princeton, Dec. 3.—Since the meeting at Princeton many more have taken Christ; two since last report. We have outgrown our house and are going to build. We sent our district pledge of $15 a day or so ago. The meeting promised by Princeton was held in the district; hardly two weeks; 25 added; 23 confessions, two reclaimed.

Salem church, Nodaway county.—I have been in a meeting here two weeks; 5 confessions, 1 from U. P. church and 2 restored. In the Pickering meeting there were 37 baptisms instead of 27 as reported; 52 in all. Bro. Butler was a great help. I will devote my whole time to the Pickering church next year.—F. E. BLANCHARD.

Spickards.—Closed a three weeks' meeting at Mercer, Mo., Dec. 1 with 37 accessions. Our house was too small for the audience.—J. P. SCHOOLER.

Springfield, Dec. 1.—I am entering on my fourth year's work for our state mission board. Since Dec. 1, 1900, 160 have come into the church under my preaching; five new churches and five Bible-schools have been organized; and four new church buildings are under way, which will cost when completed, $3,600. Besides raising several hundred dollars for repairs and to complete houses, I have organized five union temperance societies which have been successful in closing out permanently ten whisky joints and three saloons. Our greatest need in southwest Missouri at present is some more earnest preachers, who would not be afraid to start in on $10 or $12 a week. I know of several counties in this district in which we haven't a preacher, and one county in particular in which we have 12 churches and 12 good houses in which no preacher resides. Will not some good, earnest young man come into this field and settle down? I will be glad to correspond with such an one and help him to find work. Our cause is improving some all over southwest Missouri. Almost every part of the field is ready to respond to the plea of the Disciples of Christ.—JOSEPH GAYLOR.

St. Louis, Dec. 9.—Additions at the St. Louis churches yesterday were as follows: First, 1 confession; West End, 1 confession; Beulah, 1 by letter.

Warrensburg, Dec. 8.—I closed a two weeks' meeting last night at Lee's Summit, Mo., with 24 additions, 20 of them by confession. Prof. John F. Cox, of Warrensburg, had charge of the music.—KING STARK.

NEBRASKA.

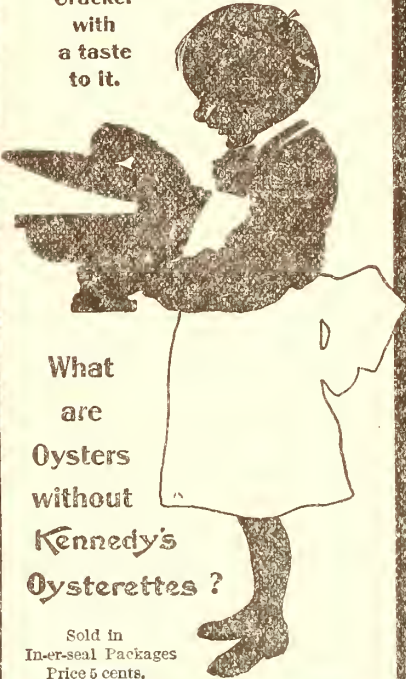

Cortland, Nov. 27.—We have just started a meeting at Highland Center with large audiences. Prof. Clarence Turner is doing the singing.—EDWARD CLUTLER, evangelist.

Omaha, Dec. 7.—Last Monday and Tuesday I spent at Waterloo, Neb. I baptized three women who had confessed Christ in a meeting just held by Bro. and Sister Harrington, of Iowa. Two others made confession and were baptized. Over $400 was pledged for support of a minister. A new minister will be called soon; 4 additions last Sunday in the First church, Omaha, and 1 by letter. We have had about 50 added since Sept. 1.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

OHIO.

Shreve.—Held a three and a half weeks' meeting at Glenmont, Ohio, in October with 12 additions; 11 by baptism. Elder John Encell, of Marion, Iowa, helped me most of the time in our nearly four weeks' meeting in Shreve, with 13 additions, 11 by baptism. I am now in a meeting for December with Geo. H. Carl for the church in Milton Center, O.—L. W. SPAYD.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Norman, Dec. 2.—Our meeting at Norman is two weeks old with 19 additions, 11 by confession; 5 confessions last night.—J. G. CREASON.

Medford, Dec. 4.—Bro. J. A. Tabor closed a meeting here last Sunday evening; 20 were added to the church, 8 by confession. We have good reason to feel encouraged.—JESSE J. SUMMERS.

Ponca City, Dec. 3.—This is our second meeting with T. H. Popplewell, who is now pastor here. He has done a great work for the congregation here and has made splendid preparation for the meeting just commencing.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, song evangelist.

TEXAS.

Houston.—We have been here but two and a half months and we have paid about $1,000 on old debts, kept up our current expenses and contributed to the missions; and the Lord has added 54 to the church. Five accessions yesterday and one at prayer-meeting last week.—E. W. BRICKERT, pastor Central church.

NURSING MOTHERS

A mother's poor health is bad enough for the mother but worse still for the nursing baby.

Mothers find Scott's Emulsion a nourishing and strengthening food. If the breast milk is scanty or thin Scott's Emulsion will make it rich and more abundant.

When mothers take Scott's Emulsion the babies share in the benefits. Thin babies grow fat. Weak babies get strong.

We'll send you a little to try, if you like.

Family Circle

Two Reasons.

"Papa growls like a bear to-day,
'Cause the wind is east, I know;
And Fred is mad as a hornet, 'cause
His grades at school were low;
And sister Marjory mourns like a dove,
'Cause Johnnie's gone off to the war;
And baby snarls like a poodle dog,
Nobody knows what for;
And my dearest dolly has lost an eye—
Her sawdust is running out too—
But I must be merry as merry can be,"
Said dear little Mollie Loo,
"For we couldn't stand another cross beast
In this criss-cross-grammum zoo."

"Papa is gay as a lark to-day,
For the air is clear and cool;
And Fred is blithe as a cricket, 'cause
He had the best grades in school;
And Marjory sings like a nightingale,
'Cause Johnnie is ordered home;
And baby is meek as a kitten, 'cause
A cunnin' new tooth has come.
But I'm in compound fractions now,
And they're snarly as snarly can be,"
Says dear little, brave little Mollie Loo,
"Yet I must be cheerful, you see,
For we must not have a single cross beast
In this happy menagerie."

Two Eulogies on Whiskey.

Judge Joel W. Tyler, of Cleveland, Ohio, was a prominent citizen of northern Ohio and an able man. In his boyhood he was a schoolmate of Robert G. Ingersoll, the notorious nineteenth century agnostic. Several years ago Col. Ingersoll sent Judge Tyler a bottle of fine old whiskey, and with the gift a letter. Judge Tyler, not to be outdone, sent Col. Ingersoll a bottle of whiskey accompanied also by a letter. The two letters might be said to represent the Ideal and the Real. The following is Col. Ingersoll's letter, which represents the "Ideal":

"MY DEAR FRIEND:—I send you some of the most wonderful whiskey that ever drove the skeleton from a feast or painted landscapes in the brain of man. It is the mingled souls of wheat and corn. In it you will find the sunshine and shadow that chased each other over the billowy fields, the breath of June, the carol of the lark, the dews of night, the wealth of summer and autumn's rich content, all golden with imprisoned light. Drink it and you will hear the voices of men and maidens singing the 'Harvest Home,' mingled with the laughter of children. Drink it and you will feel within your blood the starlit dawns, the dreamy, tawny dusks of many perfect days. For forty years this liquid joy has been within the happy staves of oak, longing to touch the lips of men."

"R. G. INGERSOLL."

Judge Tyler's reply is as follows, and represents the "Real":

"MY DEAR OLD PAL:—I send you some of the most wonderful whiskey that ever drove harmony from a feast, or painted shades of rats and reptiles in the brain of man. It is the latent demon let loose from wheat and corn. In it you will find the moonshine and shadow in which you staggered home over the billowy road. The breath of the basilisk, the croaking of the raven, the duce of night, the rags of paupers and home's rich content, all withered and destroyed. Drink it and you will hear the wailing of wives and children mingled with the moaning of fathers and mothers, lamenting the doom of drunkards. Drink it and you will feel within your soul the dreamy, tawny dusks of many a wretched spree. Drink it and you will feel within your blood the seething venom of an incarnate fiend. For forty days and nights this liquid woe has been within the staves of oak, longing to scorch the lips and craze the brain of man."

Holiday Gifts Made at Home.

For those who wish to make inexpensive Christmas gifts and gladden the hearts of those they love, perhaps a few suggestions I can give will be found available, and they can be made with loving, nimble fingers and I'm sure they will be appreciated.

A pretty, well-made needle-book is always appreciated and an acceptable gift, and can be made of odds and ends after you are through making the larger gifts. This one is made of silver-gray satin, lined with pale blue silk. Procure two pieces of cardboard 3x4 1/2 inches and cover with the satin. The satin should all be left in one piece like a book cover. Cut the lining long enough to form a pocket an inch and a half deep in each side. Cut four pieces of white flannel to fit the cardboard sides, buttonhole-stitch them around the edges with light blue floss and tack them neatly to the inside of the case. Embroider or paint a spray of for-get-me-nots on the satin before making it up. This makes a dainty little needle-book and it is not hard to make.

The postal card case makes a neat and a pretty addition to the furnishing of a desk. Make it of blue linen or buff linen—a pretty shade. A piece of cardboard 5 3/4 inches square will do. Make the front piece a pocket just the same width and about 3 1/2 inches deep; cut the cardboard even and cover it neatly. Decorate it with some pretty embroidered or handpainted flowers. This is very unique and can be done quickly.

There is nothing more exquisite to make than cambric handkerchiefs. Get sheer linen lawn or linen cambric and hemstitch above an inch hem and put lace on the edge. Or another dainty way is to put a lace insertion and edge around it. A few rows of hemstitching above the hem is very pretty.

I never appreciated a gift more in my life than a half dozen sheer linen cambric handkerchiefs with an inch hem and hemstitched, with a valenciennes lace edge. They were so daintily made; and to make them look new as long as you have them, always launder them yourself. I wash mine out in a warm suds of rain water and Pearline and rinse in warm water, and while damp, iron with a hot iron, being very careful to do the work smoothly and evenly. In fact one such handkerchief is a nice present to give. An old lady seventy years old hemstitched me one last Christmas, and I value it so highly I keep it laid away in a perfumed muchoir case most of the time.

Such little gifts made at home are prized twice as much as bought ones by appreciative people.

The Wedding Ring.

Just why the wedding ring is always worn on the third finger is a mystery to most women, one of whom writes asking for an explanation. In the days of long ago the wedding ring was worn on the forefinger and was thickly studded with precious stones. People who have seen the old pictures of the Madonna in Rome will remember that in one or two of them there is a glistening ring on the forefinger of her right hand, but with Christianity came the wearing of the wedding ring on the third finger rather than the first. The old story of there being a vein that runs from that finger to the heart is all nonsense. All veins run to the heart. The use of the third finger for the wedding ring originated in this way: The priest first put it on the thumb saying: "In the name of the Father," on the forefinger, adding: "In the name of the Son;" on the second finger, repeating: "In the name of the Holy Ghost," and on the third finger, ending with "Amen," and there it stayed.

Friendship.

A Fable for Cynics.

One day a green snake was gliding through and over the tall grass, with its eyes ever watchful for friend or foe. (Its friends were those insects that it could devour for its food, and its enemies were those who could devour it.) So it was very watchful as it scudded itself in those graceful undulatory movements through the grass.

Presently it came to a big pile of brick-bats. This pile of bats was so red and so big that the green snake eyed it suspiciously, but, as it did not move, he started again cautiously forward and at its foot viewed his surroundings.

"My!" he seemed to say, "such a nice place for bugs; so many cracks and crannies. I'll certainly have a feast here."

So the snake began pushing his head first into one opening and then into another, and one could imagine that he could hear the crushing of little bones, as the snake passed to and fro, in and out of the cracks between the bats. This snake really looked lovely as he slid over the red bats. The contrast was so marked—a long, green ribbon, rather more like a long blade of grass which had grown upward in the shade, protected from the winds and sun, air and insects, a perfect blade of grass, which is so seldom seen.

"My!" the little green snake thought, "this is perfectly delightful. I am getting a nice mess. If I could only find a crack which goes deep into the pile where I could hide myself away into sleep and rest after my hearty dinner, I would be perfectly satisfied."

It really seemed as if things were shaping themselves nicely for this weary green snake's comfort, for presently he disappeared into one of the crevices, tail and all, and remained there.

Coming across the road, hot and tired and dusty, hungry too, I have no doubt, came a viper, sluggishly moving along, caring for naught except to fill his bread-basket once every day or two. He was like the outcast. He was against everything and everything was against him. If anything disturbed him he coiled, and flattened out his head, and said, "Take care! Leave me alone, for my weapon kills." He was always ready to fight, even to the death. He reached the red pile of bats and began to search the cracks and cran-nies. He was fond of bugs, but he loved frogs more.

"My eyes! but that looks like a green frog. I'm going for it."

Into a crack he rushed and seized the green snake by the head; he began to swallow it. The green snake wriggled and twisted, but it was no use. The viper kept on swallowing, until at last only the trembling tip of the tail vibrated slowly to and fro outside the viper's mouth, and then the viper glided into the crack from which he had dislodged his friend and the two dwelt together in perfect amity and happiness. Both the weary snakes slept. Now which snake was the happier?

First Aid in Case of Poisoning.

By S. Henton.

I have had two requests from young mothers who have had frights from giving the wrong medicines, and they wish to know something to use in case of accidental poisoning and of the best methods of treatment. Until one has had such a scare I don't believe they can conceive of the fright, etc.

The following simple table of antidotes will be found useful: For external poison, such as poison ivy, gimpson weed and all plant poisons, bathe the affected parts in a solution of warm borax water, have it strong and apply with a poultice of tansy leaves, moistened with sweet cream and keep the system cool.

Mustard and salt water with a little powdered borax added is excellent.

An active emetic may be given in cases of emergency so as to produce vomiting and to eject the poison from the stomach.

For poisons from alkalies, lead or mushroom, use vinegar and oil freely.

The first thing to do is to produce vomiting, and prompt action in such cases often saves life, hence, every housewife and mother should know what remedies to use.

For corrosive sublimate, copper and creosote poisons, administer the white of an egg and sweet milk. It produces vomiting quite readily.

Flies.

This pestiferous insect called the house fly (musca domestica) has a way of treating a fellow which heretofore I did not understand. I know all about it now and if I were in his place I would do exactly the same or go one better. This little insect has a way, if our heads are bald, of prancing over the smooth scalp, then flying off and coming back often—a sort of "out and come again." It is fond of tickling us on our nostrils, and when we drive it off it won't stay driven off, but it comes back so frequently that we become, if we are in church, ashamed, or in other places we get mad and we are apt if we are of a forgetful temperament to cuss it.

There is a reason for the quick and frequent movements of this insect. It will alight on one's forehead and for no cause assigned it will fly off and away, and a moment afterwards it will return to the same place as if it had forgotten something. Now, the reason for the frequent movements is this: instinct teaches it of hidden foes, that it must not remain long in any one place, for if it does something will happen to it.

There is a spider here, in fact throughout the whole of the United States, a jumping spider, of which there are several species, and they are liars-in-wait for Miss Fly. Miss Fly's instinct teaches her that these quick and frequent changes of her base of operations are the way for her to avoid one of her greatest foes.

Yesterday I saw how Miss Fly met her fate at the hands, or rather the mouth, of one very small, dusty spider. She was moving through the grass, first on one blade then on another, until she alighted on a blade of grass whereon sat or stood a little brown spider which looked like a small lump of dried mud. Miss Fly must have thought it was mud. But this lump of mud sprang upon her back so suddenly and fixed his claws into her abdomen so quickly that all Miss Fly could do was to roll around fluttering on the ground with the spider fastened tightly to her body. In a few seconds she was dead and the spider had a feast.

Woman.

Max O'Rell, the famous Frenchman with the name which is half German and half Irish, has written a book about women. Most women say that the book gives the strongest possible evidence that he knows nothing about his subject. But whether right or wrong, here are some of his opinions on the question of perfect beauty in women:

I prefer the pretty woman to the beautiful woman, and I like the charming woman best of all.

The pretty woman remains pretty longer than the beautiful woman remains beautiful, and the charming woman lasts forever.

The beautiful woman is often selfish and conceited, the pretty woman seldom and the charming woman never.

The absolutely beautiful woman is a statue, and very often a few little defects give her life. The beautiful woman may appeal to our artistic sense, but seldom to any other sense. In her presence we feel benumbed, and as we get quite close to her, we often have a sensation akin to that of a man with no clothes on leaning against the North Pole. She is haughty and seldom cheerful. She has no sense of humor. She ever stands sentry at the door of her majesty, and as she walks, stands and sits, she never loses sight of her outlines. If she were your wife, you feel you would have to spend your life in constant deadly fear lest you should crumple something and break the symmetry of the whole ensemble. The sensation would be very much like the one you have in some of those old-fashioned puritanical houses where you find all the chairs placed in a row against the wall at perfectly equal distances. You dare not sit down for fear of causing immediate disorder and confusion. If you are pressed, and you do sit down, you want to apologize, for, somehow, it doesn't seem fair on the furniture.

The beautiful woman is to be admired at a respectful distance, like the Venus of Milo in the Louvre, who is seen at her best from the beginning of the suite of rooms at the end of which she stands in all her unapproachable, majestic beauty.

Beautiful and pretty women are never jealous of female geniuses, for beautiful women are the masterpieces of creation, and female geniuses are its freaks. On the other hand, the most famous female genius might resent being told that she was not beautiful.

Talleyrand was one day sitting at table between the brilliant but homely Madame de Stael and the exquisitely beautiful Madame Recamier.

"Here I am," he remarked, "sitting between Genius and Beauty."

"Without possessing either," retorted Madame de Stael, piqued at the remark of the wily statesman, who was a very ugly man.

When I Was a Boy.

Up in the attic where I slept
When I was a boy—a little boy—
In through the lattice the moonlight crept, Bringing a tide of dream that swept
Over the low red trundle-bed,
Bathing the tangled curly head,
While moonbeams played at hide and seek
With the dimples on each sun-browned cheek—

When I was a boy—a little boy!

And oh, the dreams, the dreams I dreamed
When I was a boy—a little boy—
For the grace that through the lattice streamed

Over my folded eyelids seemed
To have the gift of prophecy,
And to bring me glimpses of times to be Where manhood's clarion seemed all to me—
When I was a boy—a little boy!

I'd like to sleep where I used to sleep
When I was a boy—a little boy—
For in at the lattice the moon would peep,
Bringing her tide of dreams to sweep
The crosses and grief of the years away
From the heart that is weary and faint today,

And those dreams should give me back again

The peace I have never known since then—
When I was a boy—a little boy!

Right Side Out.

Jack was cross; nothing pleased him. His mother gave him the choicest morsels for his breakfast, and the nicest toys; but he did nothing but fret and complain. At last his mother said:

"Jack, I want you to go right up to your room and put on all your clothes wrong side out."

Jack stared. He thought that his mother must be out of her wits.

"I mean it, Jack," she repeated.

Jack had to obey; he had to turn his stockings wrong side out, and put on his coat and trousers and his collar wrong side out.

When his mother came up to him, there he stood—a forlorn, funny-looking boy, all linings and seams and ravelings—before the glass, wondering what his mother meant; but he was not quite clear in his conscience.

Then his mother, turning him around, said:

"This is what you have been doing all day, making the worst of everything. You have been turning everything wrong side out. Do you really like your things this way so much, Jack?"

"No, mamma," answered Jack, shamefacedly. "Can't I turn them right?"

"Yes, you may, if you will try to speak what is pleasant and do what is pleasant. You must do with your temper and manners as you prefer to do with your clothes—wear them right side out. Do not be so foolish any more, little man, as to persist in turning things wrong side out."

Sir Thomas Lipton's Ambition.

About forty years ago a ragged little boy named "Tommy" used to sit on the piers at Glasgow and watch the boats skimming over the waters. He was neglecting the messenger service, for which he was paid sixty cents a week, but he could not help that, for the yachts fascinated him.

One day he said: "When I grow up to be a rich man I'll have a yacht of my own, the finest and fastest that was ever built." Suddenly "Tommy" disappeared, and a letter, postmarked New York, told the old folks how he had run away to America to make his fortune. Prosperity proved somewhat coy, but the young emigrant managed to save enough to pay his way home to Glasgow. That boy declares today that his first trip here made him, for it taught him "Yankee shrewdness and enterprise."

His father had managed to amass a fortune of $400, and this whole amount was advanced to start the young man in business in a little provision shop. This was the humble beginning of Sir Thomas Lipton's 450 stores in all parts of the world. He is the largest individual land owner in Ceylon, where he cultivates tea, coffee and cocoa; in Dublin he makes ginger ale; in London, among a hundred other lines, he is contractor for the British army and navy; he has warehouses in Colombo and Calcutta; in Chicago his packing house kills 3,000 hogs a day; he sells tea in New York, makes candy in London, and runs a restaurant that cost half a million dollars, where twelve thousand people are fed daily at a half-penny a head. Despite his $50,000,000 he manages to be busy and happy; but one of the happiest days of his life was during the Queen's Jubilee, when 360,000 of the poor of London sat down to dinner as his guests.—Ledger Monthly.

"Always," said the astute city editor to the new reporter, "always be on the lookout for any little touch of humor that may brighten up our columns." That evening the new reporter turned in a story about a burglary in a butcher's shop, which commenced: "Mr. Hiram Cleaver, the well-known butcher, is losing flesh rapidly these days."

"Can you tell me what sort of weather we may expect next month?" wrote a subscriber to the editor of a paper, and the editor replied as follows: "It is my belief that the weather will be very much like your subscription." The inquirer wondered for an hour what the editor was driving at, when he happened to think of the word unsettled. He sent in the required amount next day.

A New Treatment for Deafness and Catarrh.

Bradford McGregor, of Cincinnati, O., a well-known demonstrator of applied sciences, asserts as a fact that catarrh and deafness can be cured, this assertion following his personal experience. Having suffered for years with catarrh, which resulted in very poor health and almost total deafness, his condition became such that specialists refused longer to treat him, saying his case was hopeless. Thus thrown upon his own resources, after using all known applications, he finally devised a new method of treatment based upon a principle entirely different from anything he had ever used or heard of, and cured himself with it. His hearing is perfect now, health good and no catarrh. The success of this remarkable treatment in the many tests made upon those similarly afflicted has been phenomenal, and to further extend its usefulness and to prove that it will cure, a free trial and full explanations will be sent by Mr. McGregor to any who suffer and will address him at 420 Lincoln Inn court, Cincinnati, O., and send twenty cents to pay for registering and mailing.

The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful it Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

With the Children.

J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Runaways.—IX.

Monday morning Mr. Dayton, with the assistance of Mr. Fronk,—Mr. Fronk was the "hand,"—finished unloading the box-car. He took the noon train for Campton, to return late at night. During his absence Mrs. Dayton told the children to go as they pleased about the farm, but they did not want to feel like company. So Emily and Harry cleaned the dishes, and Zep swept the side-porch and fed the chickens, and all three fed the pigs, to whom you call and call about sundown, saying, "Who-ee! Who-ee!"—and who, in consequence, come running to the pen in the back-lot. They watched Mr. Fronk milk the cows; they fed the two cats and the dog; they opened the shutters at night to cool the bedrooms. In the cool of the evening they gathered all the tomatoes that had ripened that day, and they hunted for ripe grapes, and mellow apples. When it was nearly train-time, Zep caught up the horse and rode to the switch, intending to ride back behind Mr. Dayton. The train would come before eight, and after that,—let it get dark! wouldn't Mr. Dayton be sitting in front, big and strong? Mrs. Dayton sat on the side porch in her rocking-chair, waiting for her husband's return. Harry and Emily sat on the edge of the porch, counting the stars. Everything was so peaceful! You could hardly see the leaves move. The dog lay asleep at Harry's feet, proud to trust himself to his new friend. Swallows circled in the darkening sky. The pond looked deep and solemn in the mist that was rolling down the hillside into the pasture-bottom.

"I would like to live here always," said Emily. "Wouldn't you, Harry?"

"Oh!" said Harry.

At last the dog lifted his nose and held it at the angle of inquiry. Yes, they were coming back. All went to the stone wall and watched the horse with its double burden trot across the pasture. It crossed the branch, circled around the front pond, climbed the hill toward the yard. Harry had the gate open for them, and Mrs. Dayton had a kiss for her husband.

"How have they been?" asked Mr. Dayton as he led the horse toward the back gate, with the barn for its ultimate destination. His wife answered decidedly, "Perfect treasures!" It was the first time she had expressed an opinion. Emily blushed quite red with delight and caught Harry's hand, and began to swing it back and forth. "Catch my other hand!" cried Emily to Zep, "and let's circle around our queen, like we used to do to aunt Mary." She and Harry went up to Mrs. Dayton and tried to make a circle about her, but she was so large! Mrs. Dayton laughed. "Bless the children!" she said, quite overcome by these honors.

"Oh, come on, Zep," cried Harry, "we can't circle about her without you. Don't you know aunt Mary was the same way?"

"Oh, no," said Zep, who felt that he was growing too old for such sports. "Don't bother Mrs. Dayton."

"Zep's too old," said Mr. Dayton. "Here, Zep, hold the mare and I'll join the circle." Then to Emily's and Harry's delight, Mr. Dayton took a hand of each, and all three began to caper about the lady, singing, "Circle around our queen! Circle around our queen!" Mr. Dayton capered higher and sang louder than anybody, and pretty soon the children got to laughing so hard they had to stop. Mrs. Dayton, who had been blushing at these attentions, put an end to the game by rushing upon Mr. Dayton and giving him a hug. When the horse had been "put up" it was very late indeed, quite nine o'clock. But this was an extra occasion, and they sat on the porch while Mr. Dayton told the news. He had seen his old friend, Tom Burgiss, who had consented for the children to stay as long as Mr. Dayton wanted them. And as soon as he grew tired of his guests, they must be bound out. "Do you think you will get tired of us soon?" asked Emily timidly.

"Well," said Mr. Dayton, "I owe you about $500 on that box-car property, and I think I'll let you board it out! At three dollars a week, apiece, it will keep you here longer than a year. But to speak very plainly, your staying here depends upon yourselves. I shall feel at perfect liberty to send you to your uncle Tom any day that you prove yourselves undesirable acquaintances."

"I know one thing," said Emily, "you'll find Harry always ready to do more than you ask. That's what aunt Mary always said."

"I know another thing," observed Harry, "that Em looks little, but she can do a heap!"

"Now listen at 'em," said Zep, with a grin. "Don't they go on, Mr. Dayton!"

"Your uncle Tom had a letter from your aunt Sarelda," continued Mr. Dayton seriously, "and I am very sorry for what was in it. You know that gold ring Emily dropped, and the gold watch Zep left on the bench? Well, they were returned the next morning! Some one rang the bell and your aunt Sarelda went to the door just in time to see a little boy dart around the corner of the street. And there on the doorstep was a bundle, containing the watch and ring! And your aunt Sarelda says the boy was you, Harry! And she thinks you three stole that ring and watch and then your conscience hurt, and you took them back. As soon as she could, she telegraphed to Tom Burgiss to know if you had come on the train, as she sent you. The answer came back, 'No.' And she thinks you are hiding in St. Louis right now! But Tom promised to telegraph her that you are here."

"Oh, Mr. Dayton!" cried Zep, flushing, "how could she think we stole anything? But you can tell her how we were here when she thought she saw Harry scoot 'roun' the corner."

"No," said Mr. Dayton, "I could tell her I think so, but she would have her own opinion. You see you could have got off the train in East St. Louis, and taken back the watch this morning, then got on a freight and ridden to the switch about an hour before I found you."

"But we stayed last night in the box-car," cried Harry and Emily together.

Not Mrs. Nation, But—

"I am not Mrs. Nation; I have no hatchet; I am not crazy." These words came from the lips of a Lewes woman, as she met her husband face to face in a hotel barroom, the other evening, says the Lewes Pilot.

They were directed to the bartender and the loungers, as the former handed the woman's husband a glass of whiskey. She continued, "That man has not done a day's work this winter, and I am worn out trying to support him and the rest of the family. I want to know if something cannot be done to keep him from destroying his own life and starving his family."

The woman was thin and pale. Her lips quivered as she spoke. Her frail body could hardly stand the strain of the unfamiliar environment. As she finished, the little girl by her side burst into tears. The bartender took back the whiskey. The abashed husband stood with bowed head. One by one the loungers left the room. Presently the bartender, gazing at the poor woman, solemnly vowed that the man should not drink at his bar again.

It was a pathetic scene; it was the last resort of a desperate woman; as she left the hotel with her husband and the little girl there was a lesson too painful for any pen to picture.

Hour of Prayer.

Frank G. Tyrrell.

The Heavenly Banquet.*

TEXT: And he said unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are bidden to the marriage supper of the Lamb.—Rev. 19:9.

Not always are there to be stripes and imprisonments, sorrows and losses, Gethsemanes and Golgothas, for the children of God. The Christian life is tense, vital, toilsome. It is like that of the Olympian racer who by severe training and rigorous abstinence is fitted for the contest, and by this very rigor and hardness enabled to carry off the prize. Now we hail the storm and the strife, severe and stern, but in a little while, we shall welcome the peace of the everlasting haven, which even now beckons us on.

The Invitation.

The blessedness is indescribable, but it is only for those who are bidden! And who are they? Men are accustomed to issuing invitations when they have a feast; but in every community the invitations exclude more than they include. Now, God has invited his children home, and we can but wonder upon what basis the invitation comes. Are any excluded? Theologians have pored over this question, and they have in hide-bound creeds divided God's family into the "elect" and the "non-elect," and they talk to us in unpronounceable words and mysterious terms about "predestination," and "fore-ordination." And so many a poor soul has lived in fear and terror lest he should be of the non-elect, fore-doomed to eternal torment! And all this speech without wisdom has been inflicted upon the world, when God's word plainly declares, "Whosoever will, let him come!" Ah, "the elect are the 'whosoever will' and the non-elect are the 'whosoever won't!'" Christ said to those who rejected the invitation when he bore it, with pierced hands and bleeding feet, "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." All are invited, the maid in the kitchen and the lady in the drawing room; the president in the executive mansion, and the pioneer in his sod hut.

The Company.

Who will sit down at that feast? "Many shall come from the east and the west, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob." They are to be not a select and haughty few, but many, a great multitude. And not only so, but among them shall be the glorified saints of all ages. Orators, statesmen, poets, philosophers, explorers, men who have immortalized their names, are sometimes seen at earthly banquets, but they are few; in the heavenly, only the immortals will be admitted—all will be immortal. What would you think, if you had enjoyed the privilege of sitting at the feet of Moses, the great law-giver, to receive from his mighty brain the statutes of Jehovah? Or to have been with Joshua, as he struck valiant blows for the conquest of Caanan? Or to have sat in the court of the Hebrews, when it was resplendent with Davidic glories? Or if you could have been with the martyrs, when they died, and heard their triumphant shout, as their freed spirits went to God? That would have been glorious, and yet it can never be. You cannot turn back the swift chariot of the fleeing years. But you can do better than that; you can sit down to a heavenly banquet, an honored guest with all these notables, and many more. What a splendid company! Will you not win it?

The Selection.

We look forward to a time, far off, we imagine, when the good and the bad shall be separated—the sheep parted from the goats. But that time will mark only the discovery of a difference of character which is even now being made. Here in the midst of temptation and toil we are ourselves determining our destiny. It is a selection by no means arbitrary. The mere rites and ceremonies of religion do not possess any magical efficacy to fit us for the company of the blest.

There must be "the answer of a good conscience toward God." Salvation is not the fruit of some priestly hocus-pocus; souls are not juggled into paradise; salvation is a matter of character.

The three Hebrews who were flung into the fiery furnace went in unflinchingly, trusting in God, and came out unscathed. Where did they get the decision, the boldness, the confidence, the loyalty, which enabled them so to do and dare? It was not miraculously bestowed; it was the result of a long course of training, a long succession of choices.
They were among the chosen of God, but unidentified, before the trial. Let us strive to keep within listening distance of this great invitation, and seek to gain a place in this glorious company, a seat at the heavenly banquet, for again and again we are assured that such are "blessed," and that is a

Prayer.

O God, save men from darkness and death.
Hold before them the terrors of the law, the fate of impenitent and disobedient children, and woo them also with the sweet solicitations of love. Help us to warn and to win; until great companies shall turn to Zion, and come up with songs and rejoicing, and find a welcome at the marriage supper of the Lamb, for His name's sake. Amen.

W. F. Richardson

The Passage of the Red Sea.*

The dreadful stroke had fallen upon Pharaoh and his people. In every Egyptian household there lay a corpse, and that the firstborn. "From the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on his throne unto the firstborn of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the firstborn of cattle." The monuments tell us that Menephtah, the Pharaoh then reigning, lost his eldest son, heir to his throne, thus confirming the scriptures. The effect was such as might have been anticipated. "There was a great cry in Egypt; for there was not a house where there was not one dead." It was useless for the king longer to presume to resist Jehovah, who had thus at a single blow plunged the entire land into mourning. Calling for Moses and Aaron, he bids them leave the land at once, with all their people, and taking with them their flocks and herds. And not only so, but his spirit is crushed, and he seems to realize for the first time the enormity of his sin in resisting the servants of the Most High God. It is almost pathetic to hear this proud ruler, his head bowed in the very dust, pleading with his former slaves, "Bless me also!" Everywhere the Egyptians urged the Hebrews to be gone, and readily gave them anything they asked, that they might see them depart.

It was in the night of the 15th of Nisan, after hastily eating the Passover, as they had been instructed, that the children of Israel took their departure from the land of bondage. They did not forget, in their joy and haste, the request made so many generations before by the pious Joseph; and his body, which had been embalmed and placed in some receptacle, was brought forth and carried in the midst of the host, through all their future wanderings, until it was finally laid to rest in the sacred soil of Shechem.

The direct route from Egypt to Canaan lay along the border of the Mediterranean sea, and through the southern border of Philistia. The Hebrews seem to have started in this direction, going northeast from Succoth, where they had selected their place of assembling, to Etham, one of the fortified posts on the great wall that shut in the northeastern border of Egypt. Before them moved a stately pillar of cloud, which by night assumed the brightness of fire, and which Moses assured them was the visible sign of the presence of God's angel, sent to direct their way through the wilderness. At Etham the vast column was turned back toward the south, and marched along the western side of the Bitter Lakes, until they reached a point below the head of the western arm of the Red Sea, very near where the city of Suez now stands. The sea and the range of mountains known as Jebel Ataka shut them in on three sides, and the path they had followed from the north alone presented an exit. They had to all appearances placed themselves in a "pocket," out of which only a prompt retreat could extricate them. And this was soon rendered impossible; for the enemy appeared in vast array upon the crest of the low hills that rose between the seashore and the level country through which they had just marched.

When Pharaoh and his people realized that the Hebrews had actually gone from their land, and bethought themselves of the immense loss they would thereby suffer, they determined to follow them, and bring them back. The tidings that their former slaves were lost in the wilderness along the seashore filled them with joy, and they started on the campaign with eagerness, saying to one another, "I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them." All the hate that had been gathering in their hearts should now be gratified with an awful slaughter. Israel realized their peril, and for a moment their hearts failed them, and they reproached their leader for bringing them into the wilderness only to become victims to the anger of the Egyptians. Moses's faith faltered not for an instant. "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will work for you to-day: for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more forever. The Lord shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace." How Jehovah proposed to deliver his people, Moses probably did not know. But he could not doubt the divine purpose, and his words gave new courage to the troubled multitude.

The way of safety lay through the sea. The host is commanded to go forward, and their advance ranks are soon standing on the brink of the seashore. Moses stretched over the waters the rod of God, and a strong wind from the east, or probably northeast, drove the waters back into the deep bay to the south, leaving the bed of the sea uncovered for a space ample enough to allow the mighty multitude to pass across the neck of the sea, which here was less than a mile in width. The cloud that had been in front of them moved to their rear, and spread out until it hid them from the sight of the Egyptians, who waited through the night, confidently expecting, when morning came, to fall upon their victims with a great slaughter. During the latter part of the night, however, the Egyptians became aware of what was happening, and instantly gave pursuit, following the Hebrews into the bed of the sea. But they soon found their chariots sinking in the sands, or the wheels breaking as they clashed against one another, while the horsemen became confused, and many of them terrified with a consternation which suddenly seized them, as if some unseen power was fighting against them. They declared that Jehovah was opposing them, and sought to retreat. It was too late. Moses was told to again stretch out his rod over the sea, Israel being at last all on the further shore. It was done, and the hosts of Egypt perished in the waters. The dead bodies of men and beasts drifted to the shores, while Israel abandoned themselves to holy rejoicing over the destruction of the cruel nation at whose hands they had suffered for ages past; and fervent praises of the Lord who had wrought such signal deliverance. The song of Moses and Miriam, as given in Exodus, 15th chapter, is a classic of sacred poetry, and has voiced for countless thousands the joy of such divine victory as God has often vouchsafed his people. Israel is at last free, and now goes forth to the high destiny for which God has spared them through all the weary years of their pilgrimage. Baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, they henceforth march under his leadership, and are protected by his mighty influence with their God.

Publishers' Items.

Our advertisement of a Five Dollar Teacher's Bible for One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents has made things very lively in the Bible section of our Book Department. Responses have been fairly pouring in, and purchasers are delighted with their bargains. Here is a specimen letter just received:

Browning, Ill., Dec. 6, 1901.

Gentlemen:--I have received the Bible advertised by you at one-fourth regular price. Enclosed find $2.50 for TWO MORE copies of the same Bible.

JENNIE RENO.

This speaks for itself. These prices ($1.25, or $1.50 with thumb index) will prevail only while present stock lasts, and it is not a large stock. What you do should be done quickly.

If your friend is a Christian Endeavorer, we suggest that your Christmas remembrance may very appropriately take the form of a C. E. pin or badge of gold or silver. We have a number of styles. Prices are as follows:

Solid gold catch pin, size 1.....	$1.00
" " " " " 2.....	80
" " scarf pin, size 3.....	60
Solid silver catch pin, size 1.....	25
" " " " " 2.....	22
" " scarf " " 3.....	25

Size one is approximately the size of a ten-cent piece; size 2 is the size of a gold dollar; size 3 is a trifle smaller than size 2. These badges serve to make known to each other fellow Endeavorers who may chance to meet, and are also very neat and handsome pieces of jewelry.

A new edition of Alexander Campbell's Christian System has recently been issued. Mechanically, it is a great improvement over the old edition. Finer paper, wider margins, more modern and more substantial binding, make it a volume that we are proud to issue. It will be remembered that about a year ago we reduced the price of this work to One Dollar. This reduced price has been made permanent. All of Mr. Campbell's works may now be purchased much more cheaply than formerly. Campbell's complete works, comprising eight large volumes and three pamphlets, are now sold, as a set, for Eight Dollars, and The Campbell Library, consisting of the eleven works mentioned and, in addition, Garrison's Alexander Campbell's Theology and Grafton's Life of Campbell, is sold for only Ten Dollars. This set should go into thousands of homes and be read by tens of thousands of persons whose religious lives are brighter and truer because of Campbell's life and work, yet who know but little at first hand of his life and teaching.

The twentieth century will undoubtedly be known in history as the century of missions and world-wide evangelization. The church has never been wide-awake on this subject, but the awakening is surely coming. Christian people are becoming more and more interested in missions. One indication of this is the increasing demand for missionary books. We give here a list of some of our own books on this subject.

Leaves from Mission Fields (Ragland) ..	$1.00
Missionary Addresses (McLean)	60
Facts About China (Hunt)	25
Christian Missions (Green)	60
Circuit of the Globe (McLean)	2.00
Union and Victory (Garrison)	05

These are a few volumes that should be in every Christian home, and in every Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor library. Zeal comes with knowledge. No man is earnest and enthusiastic in a cause of which he knows little or nothing. Missionary expansion must be preceded by education, and the education must be had chiefly from the reading of missionary literature.

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY

DEVOTED ESPECIALLY TO

The Work and Welfare of the YOUNG PEOPLE of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH

AND GENERALLY TO THE INTEREST OF

All People of All Ages Engaged in Bible Study and Church Work.

WILLIAM WORTH DOWLING, Editor,

Assisted by an Able Corps of Special and General Contributors.

The Minister finds OUR YOUNG FOLKS almost indispensable for many reasons, particularly on account of the Notes on the Uniform Mid-week Prayer-Meeting Topics, which are fuller and more complete than are given by any other publication. One of the leading Homiletic Monthlies reprints in nearly every issue one or more of these articles as "Sermonic Outlines" for the use of its host of ministerial readers.

The Sunday School Workers, including the Superintendent, Teachers and Bible Students, find in the two or more pages devoted to the International Bible Lesson in each issue the very best helps available. The Notes for Primary Teachers, by Mrs. Mary W. Grant, are especially valuable.

The Christian Endeavor, by a study of its columns, is thoroughly furnished. The exposition of the Senior Topics, by Frank G. Tyrrell, and of the Junior, by Mr. and Mrs. J. C. B. Stivers, are the fullest and most helpful that go into print, while the practical articles on methods of work and kindred subjects make OUR YOUNG FOLKS the foremost journal of its class.

The Picture Gallery is adorned from week to week with half-tone engravings of the best class of leading Ministers, Superintendents, Teachers, Endeavorers, and other Christian Workers, as well as by pictures of charming bits of Natural Scenery in all parts of the country.

The Story Department is a charming feature of OUR YOUNG FOLKS. In the past several serials have run through its columns which were so popular that they were afterwards published in book form. Shorter stories appear in every issue that are always pure and wholesome and uplifting.

The Subscription Price of OUR YOUNG FOLKS is One Copy One Year, 75 cents, and in clubs of ten and upwards only 50 cents each, although it is a large Sixteen-Page Weekly. Subscriptions are invariably discontinued at the expiration of the time for which an order was distinctly given.

A SERMON OUTLINE

THEME

OUR SPECIAL RATE OF ONE DOLLAR.

WE WILL TREAT THE SUBJECT UNDER THREE HEADS AS FOLLOWS:

FIRST—New Subscribers may secure THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for one year by re-mitting ONLY ONE DOLLAR.

SECOND—Old Subscribers with subscription PAID TO JAN. 1, 1902, OR BEYOND may have subscription extended one year by paying ONLY ONE DOLLAR.

THIRD—Those in Arrears may pay to Jan. 1, 1902, at regular rates and send ONLY ONE DOLLAR for the year 1902.

(A) The first division of our subject may be explained and emphasized by means of sample copies, exhibits of what THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for 1902 is to be (we will furnish printed folders on application), and by impressing upon the prospective subscribers the necessity of a Christian paper in the home. It should be further urged that the paper be the very best obtainable, which is another way of indicating THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

(B) Such homely admonitions as "A word to the wise is sufficient," "Make hay while the sun shines," "Now is the accepted time," "Opportunity has a forelock but no back hair," etc., may be used to illustrate and fix the importance of the second division.

(C) The third division naturally suggests a reference to the Twentieth Century and the awfulness of lingering in a century from whence one's friends and associates have departed. The Scripture admonition to "owe no man anything" may be used effectively.

CONCLUSION—Sin not away the day of grace. Accept the present opportunity. Now is THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.

LADIES' BIBLES.

We are at a disadvantage in dealing with our patrons If these Bibles could be placed in a show-window and all the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST could be marched by we are confident few would pass without stopping, and our Bible sales would be increased twenty-fold.

Our "LADIES' BIBLE" is a novelty—something never before offered our readers. We never saw a more attractive edition of the Scriptures. If all who read these lines could see it, we would sell ten thousand copies during this month. Every man who loved his wife, every father who loved his daughter, every brother who loved his sister, every young man who loved—well, all these men would want to buy copies for those they loved. We offer two varieties of this Bible:

A19—Comparatively small, neat and compact, this Bible may properly be styled "dainty," and if the fair recipient be young and enthusiastic, she will very likely call it "cute." It is described as the "Minion 16mo, Oxford Reference Bible." It is printed on the famous "India Paper" (the finest book paper known, combining marvelous thinness and lightness with abundant opaqueness and strength). Size 6 1/2 x 4 1/2 inches, and less than 3/4 inch thick. The type is plain and easily read. It is about the size of that used in most newspapers. Besides the Old and New Testaments, this Bible contains a Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names, Harmony of the Gospels, Chronological Tables, Maps, etc. Bound in French Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Round Corners. Red under Gold Edges, etc. Price....$2.50

A29—This is very similar to the above, but is even newer than A19—one of the very newest ideas in Bibles, in fact. Its chief feature, in addition to those enumerated above, is its surprising lightness and thinness. By the omission of maps and extra matter the publishers have made a book that is almost as 'light as a feather.' It is printed in same type as A19, upon the same famous "Oxford India Paper." It is magnificently bound in the genuine Persian Levant, and is Leather Lined to Edge, with Red under Gold Edges. This edition has not the extensive "helps" which we offer in other numbers; but for ordinary use, this is just the thing to give mother, wife, sister or sweetheart for a gift. Indeed, it is just the book for any one who desires a light, thin, compact Bible. Price.....$3.75

You have doubtless heard of this wonderful "India Paper," but you certainly never before saw an "India Paper" Bible offered so cheaply. You can make no more delightful and delighting Christmas gift to a lady relative or friend than one of these Bibles. Send in your order as early as possible, to avoid the holiday rush, and address it to the Book Notes.

N. B. The business of the Christian Publishing Company is by no means confined to the books which we ourselves publish, or to those listed in our catalogue, or to those which we advertise, from time to time, in our periodicals.

We do a general book business, and can supply, AT THE REGULAR RETAIL PRICE, almost any book in print, no matter where or by whom published. If you see anywhere a review or advertisement of any book and desire to purchase it, send us a money order or draft to cover the regular retail price, and we will forward the volume postpaid.

What a dainty, beautiful thing it is!—our "Ladies' Bible." Every time we look at it we are more certain that it is just what many hundreds of our patrons have been looking for. Imagine a book containing the entire Bible, with complete references, measuring 7x4¼ inches, only ⅝ inch thick, and weighing but 11 ounces, bound in Persian Levant, leather lined, silk sewn, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, printed on the famous India paper. This is our "Ladies' Bible," otherwise known as the "Oxford Minion 16mo Reference Bible," and as our "No. A29." Price, $3.75.

Practically the same Bible, but a little less finely bound and somewhat cheaper in price, is our No. A19—another "Ladies' Bible." It is printed on the same India paper, is bound in French morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, silk sewn, red under gold edges, and contains, besides the text and references, a self-pronouncing dictionary of proper names, harmony of the gospels, chronological tables, maps, minion type, etc. This is the cheapest "India paper" Bible known. Price, only $2.50.

Speaking of Bibles: We have just received what must be regarded as the ne plus ultra of Bible manufacture. It is the largest type reference Bible in the smallest compass published. Size, 7¼x5¼ inches, and only ⅝ inch in thickness. Printed on the "Oxford India paper." Long primer type, bound in seal-skin, divinity circuit, rolled calf lined to edges, silk sewn, round corners, red under gold solid edges. Besides the text and references, there is a self-pronouncing dictionary, harmony of the gospels, chronological tables and maps. Any one purchasing this Bible has the satisfaction of knowing that he has the finest book that can be produced. Price, $14.50.

Christmas is coming, and is almost here. It is high time you made preparations for the day. These preparations may be divided into several classes. For example, every dutiful and loving husband should practice daily, before a mirror, the expression of mingled surprise and delight which he expects to assume when his wife presents him with the dressing-gown he knows she has been working on for ten weeks. But the chief preparation must be in the matter of providing gifts for those dear to us, and this is right where we come in. We are anxious to help you solve the perplexing problem of what to give your friends at Christmas. We have books of all kinds, suitable for all ages and all tastes. We can supply volumes grave and gay, literature heavy or light. We can send you the édition de luxe that the sighing swain sends his love, or the cheap booklet that the married man gives to his mother-in-law. We have a beautiful stock of Christmas Cards, ranging in price from 5 cents each, or 35 cents per dozen, to 25 cents each, or $2.25 per dozen. These cards are listed at about one-half ordinary prices. We have Bibles and Testaments of all kinds and prices, from 7 cents to $14.50 per copy. All these good things are listed in our Special Catalogue No. 39, which is our Christmas catalogue. We have been unavoidably delayed in getting out this list. Christmas is now at hand, and if you are to profit by the bargains offered in our catalogue, you must make haste. Drop us a postal card and we will send you this catalogue.

Our Christmas Catalogue is particularly rich in gifts appropriate for children and young people. Parents and teachers who are seeking gifts for their children or pupils will save both time and money by making their selections from our list. For example, we offer about fifteen charming children's books for 35 cents each. There are a number of others at 40 cents and 50 cents each. Many of these, moreover, are such volumes as you will be asked twice as much for at the book stores. We have books for the very little tots, for the knickerbockers and short skirts, for the sweet sixteen and for the college graduate. We are prepared to suit all, regardless of age, sex or desire.

A short time ago there stood in one corner of our shipping room a pile of books six feet square and as high as a man's head. This pile was composed of The Christian Sunday-School Lesson Commentary. It was only a part of the edition, placed where it would be convenient for the filling of orders for single copies. Now the pile is less than two feet high. The books that recently towered high are now scattered over the world. Several hundred are on shipboard, bound for Australia, New Zealand, Hawaii, England, China, India, Japan, etc., etc. And besides those gone from this pile we have sold thousands in large orders, ranging from one order for twenty-one hundred (2,100) copies down to those for one or two dozen. These facts demonstrate the unrivaled popularity of our Lesson Commentary. Have you ordered your copy for 1902? If not, send us one dollar without further delay and we will promptly mail you a copy. If you are a teacher, officer or Bible-class pupil in the Sunday-school you really cannot well afford not to secure this great help.

The Christian S. S. Lesson Commentary is so excellent a commentary on the portions of scripture used in the lessons that a great many people are securing the editions for former years to add to their libraries. We have the annual volumes for the years 1886 to 1901 inclusive. Each volume is a large cloth-bound book of from 350 to 400 pages. The first ten volumes are by B. W. Johnson. Beginning with 1896 W. W. Dowling is the author. The price of any volume from 1886 to 1900 (inclusive) is 35 cents. The price of the edition for 1901 is now 50 cents. The complete set of sixteen volumes forms a valuable commentary on the Bible, illustrated with thousands of pictures, diagrams, etc. Note our special offer. We will send the complete set of sixteen volumes by express, not prepaid, for only four dollars! This is at the rate of 25 cents per copy—considerably less than the actual cost of manufacture.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

"What means this glory round our feet,"
The magi mused, "more bright than morn?"
And voices chanted clear and sweet,
"To-day the Prince of Peace is born!"

"What means that star," the shepherds said,
"That brightens thro' the rocky glen?"
And angels, answering overhead,
Sang "Peace on earth, good-will to men!"

All round about our feet shall shine
A Light like that the wise men saw,
If we our loving wills incline
To that Sweet Life which is the Law.

So shall we learn to understand
The simple faith of shepherds then,
And, clasping kindly hand in hand,
Sing, "Peace on earth, good-will to men!"

And they who do their souls no wrong,
But keep at eve the faith of morn,
Shall daily hear the angel-song,
"To-day the Prince of Peace is born!"

Christmas Cards.

The great majority of the readers of this paper, who can afford to present their friends with diamond rings and automobiles at Christmas time, have no interest in this announcement. It is for the benefit of the few who are unable to scatter such costly gifts, but who wish to send some Christmas remembrance to their friends. For all such; the CHRISTMAS CARD is just the thing. The friend who is worth having will appreciate such a kindly evidence of good will and remembrance as much as he would a gold watch. The complete list of our Christmas Cards is given in our Christmas Catalogue, yours for the asking, but we give below the following:

No. 70.—Twelve designs—i. e. purchaser of a dozen cards gets 12 different cards. Size (closed), 4x2½ inches. Varied designs—flowers, landscapes, etc., etc. Christmas Greetings. Space for name of giver. Single copy, 5 cents; per dozen, 35 cents.

No. 81.—Flowers, cut to shape; a most tasteful design. Closed, 5x3 inches. Verses and Holiday greetings, with name of sender. Two designs. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 40 cents.

No. 62.—Size 6x4½ (open). Christmas verses and greetings. Child figures, embossed; flower stamped designs. Two varieties. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 40 cents.

No. 45.—An exquisitely chaste design; Rural Scenes in Photographic Colors. Shakespearean Quotations; Christmas Greetings. Four designs. Single card, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 14.—One of our prettiest and choicest cards. Embossed designs with flagedreed borders. Two varieties. Inside, Christmas verses and greeting. Single copy, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 54.—This is getting into the higher grade of goods. Bowls of Roses in four designs. Escalloped Edges, Classical Quotations, printed in Gold. Single, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

No. 43.—This "card" is really a little booklet, with choicest floral designs on cover; holiday greetings and verses, and with blanks for names of giver and recipient, inside. Single copy, 8 cents; per dozen, 60 cents.

No. 99.—"Just too sweet for anything," is what she will say when she gets this beautiful Christmas remembrance. Size (open), 11x5½ inches. A triumph of delicate color-work. Single copy, 10 cents; per dozen, 80 cents.

No. 98.—A delicate bit of coloring in flower designs. Holiday Greetings in Embossed Lettering. This is another booklet. Inside are Christmas verses and register for two names. Single copy, 10 cents; per dozen, 90 cents.

No. 100.—This is a novelty—a new idea in Christmas greetings. It is impossible to give, in a few words, any adequate or intelligible description of this beautiful novelty—this ingenious arrangement of color reflection to produce day and night effects on the same card. No. 100 is truly a gem. We have put it at a low price in order to introduce it among our patrons, 10 different designs. Single, 25 cents; per dozen, in assorted designs, $2.25.

Our five cent cards are such as the city stores, even, sell for ten to twenty cents. Our prices are very low. The practice of giving Cards at Christmas and Easter is rapidly growing—as it should—as it is a beautiful custom.

You doubtless have a score of friends whom you wish to "remember" at Christmas, yet you stagger at the expense and labor of purchasing expensive presents for them. Why not secure a dozen or two of our cards, and thus satisfy the generous impulse of your heart, without embarrassing yourself financially? Verbum sap.

Send in your orders as early as possible, to avoid the rush, and accompany them by cash. Address,

The Schley Verdict. The verdict of the naval court of inquiry in the case of Admiral Schley is a verdict which will please no one. The court was divided. Admirals Ramsay and Benham found Schley deserving of censure on all of the eleven points to which the Secretary of the Navy directed the attention of the court. Admiral Dewey, president of the court of inquiry, presented a minority report in which he held that Schley proceeded with due dispatch to Cienfuegos, that his blockade of that port was effective, that the passage to Santiago was made as expeditiously as possible, that the blockade of Santiago was effective, and that, since he was in absolute command of the squadron at the time of the battle, he is entitled to the credit of the victory. Admiral Dewey makes no explicit reference to Admiral Schley's alleged disobedience to orders, the retrograde movement, or the famous loop, but contents himself with stating in a general way that he did the best he could under the circumstances and deserves the credit of destroying the Spanish fleet. Schley's friends are jubilant over the vindication of their hero in Admiral Dewey's report, but find it hard to swallow the censure of the majority of the court, and there are threats of all sorts of appeals and continuations of the investigation. Admiral Schley has stated that he will follow the advice of his attorney, Mr. Rayner, in pursuing the inquiry further. It is reported that Mr. Rayner will not favor a congressional inquiry, but will try to find some other court of appeal. To bring the matter before Congress would inevitably entangle it with political questions, with results even more demoralizing than those of the inquiry which has just closed.

"Kill the Umpire!"

Those who occasionally see the great American game of baseball, know the sound of a cry for vengeance upon the umpire. An umpire seems to be considered by most men as an instrument for getting their own opinions endorsed, and they cannot be satisfied with any judgment which goes against them. The naval court of inquiry, consisting of Admirals Dewey, Benham and Ramsay, is as high a court as can be instituted by the department. No court, of course, can satisfy all the people who consider courts merely as instruments for confirming their opinions. There have been a great many absurd utterances through the press and otherwise since the verdict was announced. Persons who had all respect for the court before have suddenly discovered that it is the mere tool of the "naval clique." It is unquestionably regrettable that so old and valuable an officer as Admiral Schley should end his active career with such a verdict as this, but the inquiry was of his own seeking and the court was of the sort which he himself chose. He was satisfied with the umpires before they had rendered their decision, and he will doubly endear himself to the public if, whatever may be his sense of injury, he will allow the matter to drop at once. He has already won the admiration of all discerning persons by refusing an offer to go on the lecture platform at the rate of $20,000 for forty nights.

The Philippine Tariff Decision. The United States Supreme Court, in deciding the Fourteen Diamond Rings case, has declared that the Dingley tariff law does not legitimately apply to goods imported from the Philippine Islands since they were acquired by the United States, and that all duties paid under protest on such goods must be refunded. This decision is consistent with the decision made several months ago regarding the Porto Rican tariff. In the case of Porto Rico, a special tariff bill was passed by Congress several months after the annexation of the island, and the suits involved two points: First, was the Dingley schedule legally applicable to Porto Rican goods imported in the interval between annexation and the enactment of the special tariff law? Second, was the special Porto Rican tariff law constitutional? To the first of these questions the Supreme Court answered, "No"; to the second, "Yes." The Dingley law specifies the duties which are to be collected on goods imported from "foreign countries." In holding that the Dingley law was not applicable to Porto Rican goods, the court therefore held that Porto Rico was not a foreign country within the meaning of the law. The Constitution provides that duty shall not be levied on goods transported from one point to another within the United States. In affirming the constitutionality of the Porto Rican tariff, therefore, the court held that Porto Rico was not a part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution. The case in the Philippines is similar to that in Porto Rico during the interval between annexation and the enactment of the special tariff. The Philippines have by annexation ceased to be foreign territory and hence, says the court, have ceased to come within the provisions of the Dingley law. Since no other tariff law has been enacted for them, it is inevitable that a condition of free trade should exist. And this is what the Supreme Court has recently affirmed in deciding the Fourteen Diamond Rings case. The rings in question were brought from the Philippines and passed the customs examiners at San Francisco without duty being levied on them. Subsequently they were seized in Chicago by agents of the Treasury department and the payment of duty at the Dingley rates was demanded. The owner refused on the ground that the law imposed a tariff only on goods coming from foreign countries and that the Philippines were not foreign. The Supreme Court upholds the owner of the rings in this contention.

The New Philippine Tariff.

The decision of the Fourteen Diamond Rings case leaves a double reason for prompt action by Congress in enacting a special tariff law. In the first place Philippine free trade leaves open an avenue by which foreign goods can be brought into the United States without the payment of duty, the increased cost of transportation via the Philippines being much less on most articles than the duty according to the Dingley schedule. In the second place, it is desirable to provide a source of revenue for the Philippines. The bill which has been introduced in the House of Representatives and which will be voted upon Wednesday afternoon of this week meets both of these requirements. It makes the full Dingley schedule effective on goods imported into the United States from the Philippines; it confirms the schedule which was arranged by the Commission last September and is now in force on goods imported into the Philippines; it remits the internal revenue tax upon all taxable articles manufactured in the United States and exported to the Philippines; and it provides that all duties collected on imports to the islands or on imports to this country from the islands, shall constitute a fund to be used in defraying the expenses of government in the Philippines. The order under which the bill is being considered in the House does not admit of amendment and its passage is considered certain. It will have the right of way in the Senate and will probably be put through before the Christmas recess.

Clara Barton Re-elected. Miss Clara Barton has been re-elected as president of the Red Cross Society. In May, 1900, after many delays, the society was incorporated by act of Congress. It had already for many years been recognized by international treaties which promised immunity from attack to those who wore its emblem on the battlefield. During the past year a surreptitious movement has been on foot, urged on by some ambitious persons, to remove Miss Barton from her position as president of the society. She is now in the neighborhood of eighty years old but still vigorous, so her friends say, and capable of an immense amount of work. But it would seem that those who are ambitious to reap the honors which she has sown for the Red Cross Society might refrain from any attempt to supplant her while she lives. For the present, at least, the attempt has been frustrated.

Wireless Telegraphy. It was a startling announcement that was made last Sunday that Marconi, the young Italian electrician, had succeeded in sending wireless signals across the Atlantic Ocean. Several months ago he established a station on the cliffs of Cornwall near the most westerly point in England. With a powerful transmitting apparatus at that point a signal has been sent to a corresponding station on the coast of Newfoundland. It was not a complete message, but merely the three dots which stand for the letter "s". The signal was caught by a receiver raised on a kite. Some doubts have been expressed as to the correctness of this report, but there is no doubt that Signor Marconi believes that the signal has been reported, for he has caused official announcement to be made to the British, Italian and Russian governments. In any case there are, of course, many more steps to be taken before wireless telegraphy for practical purposes will be an accomplished fact. But the transmission of a single letter proves that the thing is possible. And why should it not be possible? Light and sound are vibrations and they are transmitted through the air and the hypothetical ether. Electricity, so far as we know anything about it, seems to be a mode of vibration and more than likely we shall find that nature has provided an all-pervading medium for its transmission when we only learn how to make use of it. If electric lights had come before sunlight we would be wondering how it could be possible for light to be transmitted without wires. The problem of wireless telegraphy for long distances is far from completely solved, though messages are now sent a hundred miles or so with comparative ease. But from all appearances the young Italian is on the highroad to immortal fame as one of the world's greatest inventors. With Marconi at the age of twenty-six doing impossible things in wireless telegraphy and Santos-Dumont, who is even younger, astonishing the world with the performances of his airship, it is evident that in the realm of invention the young men are getting their full share of the honors.

An Incitement to Crime. It is reported that "Brigadier General Bell has issued an order to the soldiers under his command in northern Luzon, forbidding them, under pain of severe punishment by court-martial, to drink the native 'vino' spirits, which has been found to produce insanity and incite to crime." Is there anything extraordinary in this characterization of "vino" to distinguish it from the very best brand of Kentucky whiskey and several other varieties of beverages of greater or less potency? The symptoms are certainly familiar. Judging by the frequency with which the terms "drunk" and "disorderly" appear in conjunction in the annals of the police courts, one might think that the prohibition might be extended with equal reason to the native vino produced and consumed in this country.

Single or Separate Statehood. The convention held a month ago at Muskogee, I. T., advocating the admission of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory to the Union as a single state, had general but not universal support among the people of those territories. Last week another convention was held at the same place by those who favor independent statehood for Indian Territory, and resolutions were adopted demanding the right of self-government "without the interference of persons inhabiting any other state or territory." If the two territories are united into a single state the inhabitants of what is now Indian Territory will of course have self-government without any interference by "persons inhabiting any other state or territory." This fervid invocation of liberty seems based on the assumption that the maintenance of a territory's identity and separateness is one of the natural rights of man. The convention in advocating separate statehood for Indian Territory urged the speedy completion of the Indian citizenship rolls, the allotment of the remaining tribal lands, and the elevation of the Indians to the status of citizens. A population of half a million is claimed but probably a hundred thousand less would be a high enough estimate at present. The statehood movement is liable to delay from the conflict of plans. Senator Fairbanks has introduced a bill to admit Oklahoma as a state, its capital to be a town named McKinley. The proposition favored by Delegate Flynn, of Oklahoma, is to admit Oklahoma at once and add to it from time to time the counties of Indian Territory as they become ready for it. This plan agrees both with the general sentiment that something ought to be done at once, and with the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior that it will be some time before the Indian tribal government can be entirely abolished and the territory as a whole made ready for statehood.

A Notable Capture. Of all the despicable gambling schemes, none is more atrocious than that of the "policy" shops which gather in the hard-earned pennies of the poor. The New York police, acting under the recent law which makes it criminal to be found in possession of "policy" sheets or paraphernalia, have raided an establishment which appears to be the central office for the whole system in that city, and Al Adams, "the Policy King," is looking very hard into the face of long delayed justice. The books which were captured show receipts averaging not far from $10,000 a day coming through 82 shops in various parts of the city. These receipts were practically clear gain aside from the cost of rent and police protection—for the police captain of the district has been suspended pending investigation. As for payments to those who draw the lucky numbers—there were none. As ordinarily conducted playing "policy" is not a game of chance, it is a sure thing—for the shop. Before the winning numbers are chosen it is known just how the bets have been placed and the choice of numbers is made accordingly. Of all blind, foolish schemes for winning money, this is one of the worst, and the evil is far more widespread than many imagine. The worst of it is that it is a folly which especially affects the imaginations of the poor, thousands of whom are squeezing out dimes and quarters from their meager wages every week to play "policy" in the hope of some day making a lucky stroke. It is the poor man's savings bank, but with this objectionable characteristic, that the savings are always kept by the bank. It is estimated by Capt. Goddard of the New York police force, who headed the raid, that the police shops of New York city took in $60,000 a day before the recent campaign against them was begun. There have been one hundred and five arrests and forty-five convictions for "policy" playing since the new law went into effect.

The Senate on Monday ratified the new Hay-Pauncefote treaty with only five dissenting votes. The representative men of both parties agreed that the terms of this treaty amply safeguard American rights. By explicitly abrogating the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of fifty years ago, it saves us both from the inconvenience of being bound indefinitely by an antiquated convention and from the temptation to commit a diplomatic faux pas by ignoring it. The new treaty, although assuring the neutrality of the canal, will permit it to be a thoroughly American enterprise in every respect which is of any consequence. It is an appropriate time to make another entry in the long and growing list of triumphs of American diplomacy.

We are glad to be able to announce that the editor's condition has improved somewhat since last week's bulletin. There has been a slight lowering of the temperature of the fever and a corresponding improvement otherwise. The change is only slight, but it is enough to justify the hope that within a few days he may enter upon the period of convalescence. The complete recovery of his strength must of necessity be a slow and tedious process, but there is reason to believe that it will begin within a few days. As soon as he is able to be moved he will be taken south.

A Christmas Sermon.

Is it true, as men tell us, that the gladness of life has really vanished from our aging earth and that, between the greedy quest of gold and the feverish pursuit of pleasure, men rush through life with neither the inclination nor the capacity for such innocent and wholesome joys as thrill the heart of childhood? Has the blood of the race grown so cold, its imagination so blind, its faith so weak, that we have become a people without visions, without unselfish enthusiasms—with only a keen eye for business? Certainly there are many who hold this opinion, and by so thinking confess that for themselves the accusation is true. But one may at least admit, without laying himself open to the charge, that there is in our modern life, and especially in city life perhaps, too little of this spontaneity and exuberance, and that we need to cherish every influence which makes for its encouragement.

It is the great value of the Christmas season that it brings back the joys of childhood to those who have failed to find consolation in worldly wisdom; that it restores the vanished rainbow tints to a world which our dull eyes at other times perhaps see as a somber gray; that it gives us back our faith in men, quickens our old enthusiasms, revives our visions, and fills our hearts with a spirit of unselfishness which echoes back the angels' song, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

To be sure, the merchant takes shrewd account of the "Christmas trade"; so much so that the superficial and cynical observer might even assert that the whole tradition of Christmas is maintained as a piece of consummate commercialism, and that the makers and sellers of wares are united in a conspiracy to stimulate gift-giving and coin it into dollars for their own profit. But such an explanation of the phenomena of Christmas would take account of only its most superficial aspects. Christmas is not characterized most adequately as the time for giving presents to one's friends, but as the season when the spirit of brotherhood and of simple childlike joy prevails. Gift-giving is not the main thing. It is merely an inevitable expression of the real Christmas spirit, which is something that no mercantile shrewdness could possibly create for its own selfish ends. No, Christmas is not a creation of the business world. It is the bursting forth of the springs of the human heart—springs which at other times we suffer to become clogged with the cares of our daily toil and polluted with the short-sighted penny-wisdom which we call worldly prudence.

Perhaps there will come a time when mankind will no longer need these special seasons of refreshing, because men will have learned to keep alive throughout the year that spirit which now needs an annual revival. Perhaps—but such a consummation is too far distant to make its anticipation worth while. For us and for our time, and until men have learned the secret of being at once earnest and light-hearted and of applying the principles of brotherly love to all the practical affairs of life fifty-two weeks in the year, the Christmas season will continue to be a period of needed recuperation for the better nature of every man. It is something to be unselfish one day or one week in the year. It is not enough, but it is something.

Christmas is, by common consent, the children's festival. Why? Most obviously, because it is the birthday of the Christ-child. When Divinity clothed Himself in our mortal nature, he sanctified first Womanhood, then Childhood, then Manhood. Not only did Jesus set a little child in the midst of his disciples as a pattern for them, but before that he set himself as a little child in the midst of the family, in the midst of the natural environment of childhood, and made the brightness and the purity of childhood henceforth tenfold more pure and bright. Why should not the Christ-child's day be held forever sacred to the children?

Jesus said, "Except ye repent and become as little children, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." Yea, and except ye repent and become as little children, ye cannot enter into the kingdoms of this earth. Repent of the sin that defiles the heart; repent of the selfishness that narrows the soul; repent of the anxious care that denies God's providence; repent of the needless gloom which masquerades as religion, while it insults the very sunshine of God; repent of the cynicism which belittles faith in man; repent of the sordid blindness which sees no good but gold, stigmatizes brotherly love as impractical, and can catch no hopeful vision of better things ahead. Unless ye repent of these things and become as little children in purity and unselfishness, in placid faith and eager joy, in hope, in trust, in glad enthusiasm, ye cannot enter into the kingdoms either of earthly happiness or of heavenly felicity. Whoever holds the title deeds and mortgages, the earth and its fulness are possessed by those whose hearts are large enough to contain large generous thoughts of God and man and the world.

This is the Christmas spirit—the spirit of childlike joy in all good things, of faith without fear, of love without limit, and of the perfect peace that comes from these. Let us keep the feast in gladness of heart and in grateful remembrance of Him who has brought us joy and has left us peace.

Mr. Seymour Bell recently said that America needs more English tea and Scotch whiskey, and England needs more American labor-saving machinery and the skill to use it. British competition would be favored by the adoption of both recommendations. The copious use of Scotch whiskey is a great help—to one's rivals.

Home—A Christmas Meditation.

As a bird that wandereth from her nest so is a man that wandereth from his place. Do good and dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed. The fire burns brightest on one's own hearth. A tree often transplanted neither grows nor thrives. He who is far from home is near to harm. He who is everywhere is nowhere. East and west at home the best. God, the fountain of life, has a home, and somewhere in space there is a place which we call heaven. A curse upon all those fantastic methods of living, dreamed of by socialism and communism, which would sacrifice home to the meagre economies of great establishments where humanity is fed in stalls like cattle.

Such are some of the utterances of the world's prophets on the need of the home. Center of all sunshine and joy, of all festivity and good cheer, should be this sacred shelter. What happiness in father's or mother's care, in the tender ministry of husband or wife, in the confidence and trust of brothers and sisters! What blessed associations cluster about the very word "home," compared with which dwelling, mansion, palace are but cold terms! What memories quickening the pulse, warming the heart, stirring the soul to its depths, making age young again, sustaining the sailor in the midnight watch, inspiring the soldier on the field of conflict, imparting endurance to the worn-down sons of toil!

Going home means going into an atmosphere of gladness, a place of joy. Of the primitive Christians we read: "And they, continuing with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread at home, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart." These ancient Christians were not hermits, they enjoyed their food. A convivial meeting some think a contrivance of the devil, but a convivium is only an eating together. Two laborers eating their lunch of bread and cheese on the sidewalk are having a convivial time. It is reason enough for eating with gladness that we have something to eat, and reason enough for eating with thanksgiving that we are counted to be sharers in the bounty of the Giver of all good. What pleasure to see a man enjoy a square meal. It is worth the cost of paying the bill. A long-faced, dumpish, ungrateful feeder should have no turkey or plum pudding at Christmas, but only bread and water enough to keep his dyspeptic body and his lean, narrow soul from disconnecting. "What were the three great feasts of the Jews?" asked the Sunday-school teacher of her class. Tommy's hand went up. "What were they, Tommy?" "Breakfast, dinner and supper!" exclaimed Tommy. Jews and Gentiles alike observe these feasts and they should be observed religiously, gratefully, joyfully. Selfishness and discontent kill joy. The ungrateful man is never happy.

Home above all should be the abode of peace. One traveling in Germany came to a tavern and stopped for dinner. After the meal the landlord put on the floor a great dish of soup and gave a whistle. In came a big dog, a large cat, an old raven and a big rat with a bell on its neck. All four went to the dish and without disturbed together. After dining the dog, the cat and the rat lay before the fire, and the raven hopped about the room. The landlord had taught them to live in peace. He said the rat was most useful, for the noise it made by the tinkling of the bell drove all the other rats and mice away.

Now, if a dog, a cat, a raven and a rat can live together happily, cannot father and mother and brothers and sisters do the same? Shall people, rational men and women, be guilty of grumbling and fault-finding, snarling and squabbling all the time, making their homes wretched, and driving boys and girls out into the cold world and into the pathways of sin? Ought not every man's house to be a very hill-top of cheerfulness and serenity, a mountain height of inspiration and confidence and joy, far removed from all mist and cloud?

What a treasure is a happy home! A merchant failed in business and went home in great agitation. "What is the matter?" asked his wife. "I am ruined, beggared; I have lost my all!" exclaimed the man, pressing his hand to his head. "All!" said his wife. "No; I am left." "All, papa!" said his oldest son. "I am here." "And I, too," said his little girl, running up and putting her arms about his neck. "And I'm not lost, papa," said his little boy. "And you have your health left," said his wife. "And your hands to work with," said his oldest. "And God's promises," said grandmother. "And your feet to carry you about," said his youngest boy. "And a good God," said his wife. "And heaven to go to," said the little girl. "God forgive me!" exclaimed the man. "I have not lost my all. What have I lost to what I have left!"

Peace is here if anywhere on earth. The peace and good will the Babe of Bethlehem came to bring most of all is in the home. With the Christmas season let the home be the center of joy and festivity.

"I knew by the smoke that so gracefully curled Above the green elms that a cottage was near;
And I said, if there's peace to be found in the world
A heart that was humble might hope for it here."

Home should be a foretaste of heaven. Our highest idea of heaven is that it is home, our Father's house, the place where the children gather. "I long to see home!" sighs the sailor, when his ship rocks to and fro in the storm. "I am going home," thinks the merchant as he closes the doors and bars the windows of the shop, tired of the labors of the day. "I shall go home now," says the plowman at the end of the furrow, as he unhitches the team and turns their heads toward the farm-house. "I must hurry home," said the mother, when her heart is with the little one. "How I long to get home," says the schoolboy, disconsolate over his task. "Don't stop me; I must run home," says the bright-eyed little girl, as she skips along the pathway. "Almost home!" exclaims the dying Christian, with enraptured vision. "Home at last!" shouts the pilgrim, as he steps on the golden shore to wander no more forever.

"I dreamin of de light,
In the shadders of de night, De mawnin's over yander 'en its comin' to my sight."

En I heah de sweet bells ringin,
Singin, singin, ever singin,
Of de light, of de mawnin light.
I dreamin of de light,
En de hills is gittin bright.
Ez ef angels breshed em ez dey passed wid wings of white;
En I singin right along,
En my soul is in my song,
Of de light, of de mawnin light.
Shine out, O blessed light!
Make de worl' and heaven bright,
Though dey ain't no dark kin ever hide dat heaven from my sight,
Shine out, en let me he
Whar yo' beams kin fall on me
In de light, in de mawnin light."

The Slaughter of the Lambs.

To be greedy without being gullible is a height of sordid prudence which few attain. Therefore it is not only more wholesome and more Christian to avoid greediness, but it is also eminently safer. Let a man once conceive an ardent desire to double his money in ninety days—not merely to wish vaguely that he could, but to make that desire a guiding principle of action—and he is ripe for any folly.

Only a few days ago the police uncovered the operations of one of the five-hundred-and-twenty-per-cent. stock-market swindlers. It was the same old hoax. Advertisements in country papers were followed up by circulars announcing that the company was in a position, owing to its inside information about the stock market, to guarantee a weekly dividend of ten per cent. on all money placed in its hands. An investment of one hundred dollars would bring a weekly return of ten dollars. Whoever would lay down a thousand dollars would thenceforth enjoy perpetual affluence with an income of one hundred dollars a week. These figures were mentioned merely as a minimum. The company had good reason to believe that much larger returns would be secured, but it proposed to deal in all frankness with its patrons and it did not just at present feel justified in absolutely guaranteeing more than five hundred and twenty per cent per annum. And people whose sanity had never been held in suspicion, who had been shrewd enough and diligent enough to save up various sums of money, trooped after the whistle of these pied pipers. They planted their savings in the hope of a glorious harvest; but they found that they had only put their money in a hole—and the other fellow had the hole. The police and the postal authorities intervened, but the culprits had fled, leaving only some documents which revealed the completely fraudulent character of their operations and the foolish greed of their dupes.

The education of no American boy ought to be considered complete until he has taken a thorough course of study in the science of How Not To Get Rich. It is useless to try to teach the art of getting rich. All the people who know how are so busy doing it that they have no time to give lessons. But it would be worth while, at almost any cost, to point out to the rising generation some of the ways in which wealth is not to be acquired. This course of study would include a classification and analysis of the various get-rich-quick schemes, and would show that the only person who ever acquires wealth by these methods is the swindler who plays upon the greedy eagerness of some more credulous wealth-seeker. The course would issue in the proof of the proposition that, barring gifts and unexpected discoveries, quick riches mean dishonest riches.

And yet it is hard to make this teaching carry with it the weight which it should, when gentlemen of eminent respectability are manipulating corners in copper and clearing a few millions over night, or are gathering in some hundreds of thousands of dollars in margins by selling certain train-loads of wheat which they never possessed and subsequently buying from some one who is not expected to deliver it. By some sleight of hand, the trick is turned by those who know the game. The police do not interfere, immaculate respectability is preserved, and the onlooker goes away with the impression that 520 per cent of profit is not at all incompatible with strictly legitimate dealing.

The respectable stock gamblers are primarily responsible for the success of despicable swindlers of the 520 per cent type in leading the lambs to the slaughter. Their example, constantly held up before the public eye as an honorable success, fosters the false idea that money can be honestly acquired without honestly working for it, excites greed for unearned gains, and prepares the grist for the swindler's mill. When the social and moral judgment of the stock gambler is readjusted to fit his deserts, the confidence man will lose his most valued ally, for the strongest point in his appeal to the credulity and greed of his intended victims is the unfailing reference to recent conspicuous winners in the stock market.

All men who have possessions may be divided into two classes: makers and takers. Similarly, the means of acquiring wealth may be broadly classed under two heads: industry and robbery. Industry makes; robbery takes. He who becomes wealthy but has created no wealth of any kind, must have what belonged to some one else and for which no equivalent was rendered. He is a taker, not a maker. Gifts and inheritances aside, this is equivalent to saying that he is a robber. The man, therefore, who wins in a stock speculation is a candidate for the same honor which one may bestow upon a skilled and successful safe-blower, and the man who loses is entitled to such pity as is given to the would-be burglar who misses his booty and loses his tools in the attempt.

Most of the victims of the ten-per-cent-a-week scheme and of the similar transparent frauds, mean to be honest. They covet wealth, but the thought of acquiring it by shop-lifting, pocket-picking or house-breaking would not tempt them. They must have a means which the public conscience approves. They find it in stock speculation through the agency of the company which furnishes the tips and "guarantees" the result. Whose fault is it then that thousands of these credulous lambs are annually led to financial slaughter? It is their own fault for their folly and greed. It is the fault of the big speculators for furnishing an inspiration to covetousness. Most of all, it is the fault of the public for viewing the great robbers with approbation and for failing to record in its judgments upon them the principle that honest money comes only with honest work.

Notes and Comments.

A brother in a distant state writes that his church is in need of a carpet, a silver communion set and some pulpit chairs, for which worthy object he solicits a contribution, adding: "Do not neglect this Macedonian cry." Carpets and silver communion sets are doubtless desirable accessories for a church, but an appeal for them is not a Macedonian cry. When the man from Macedonia appeared to Paul he did not plead for carpets and silverware, but for someone to come and preach the gospel.

President Harper, of the University of Chicago, is to have charge of the entire series of educational congresses at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1903, including the conferences and assemblies of jurists, scientists, teachers, literary men, theologians and financiers. Dr. Harper is most of these himself—especially the last. Now perhaps Chicago will believe that we are too magnanimous to harbor a grudge because she has outstripped us in numbers and area. We freely forgive her.

It is reported that Battle Abbey, located at the very spot where William the Conqueror won the battle of Hastings and determined the future course of English history, has been sold to William Waldorf Astor for a million dollars. The report may be erroneous, so far as concerns the identity of the purchaser; we hope so. It is not pleasant to contemplate the eviction of the shade of the mighty Norman by an ambitious plutocrat who has for several years been trying to break into the ranks of the British aristocracy. The earlier William knew how to break into the very best English society. He did it with an ax.

The brigands who have captured Miss Stone are almost certainly zealous religionists. Oriental brigands usually are. If they are Bulgarians, as is probable, they are members of the Orthodox Greek Church; if Turks, they are Mohammedans. In either case their view of religion is much the same—that it is a talisman which will give them luck in any enterprise, however villainous, if they are only faithful in performing its rites and generous to its altars. Such a conception of religion is in itself an answer to the criticism which some have passed upon Miss Stone for going among such people. Their need of a missionary's services is evidently great.

Our Cincinnati contemporary, the Christian Standard, makes a good suggestion in saying that our papers ought to co-operate in the movement to put a paper in every home in the church. Co-operation is always better than competition of the cut-throat and cut-price sort. Some of our friends have thought perhaps the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST did not favor the idea of putting "a Christian paper in every Christian home," because we have not said much about it in just those words. But we do. We believe, however, that it is better policy to allow the individual members to designate the paper, each for himself, than to vote in by wholesale a paper which some prefer and others do not. To get a good paper into every home is only half of the campaign. The other half is to get it read. This is naturally easier when each person chooses for himself.

Two or three generations ago the introduction of beer into this country as a common beverage was hailed with satisfaction by the temperance workers, on the theory that, by furnishing a little alcohol, it would prevent people from seeking stronger drinks. But it did not work that way; alcohol never does. Every one who is capable of learning anything has by this time discovered that the consumption of malt and of spirituous beverages does not vary inversely. Recent statistics show that beer-drinking Germany consumes a constantly increasing quantity of spirits per capita. That beautiful theory that men can be kept from whisky by giving them beer, whether in the canteen or anywhere else, has never yet been known to work.

The Missouri Bible College in connection with the State University at Columbia has recently occupied a building which stands on the lot that was purchased for the Bible College some time ago. The building was originally a residence but has been remodeled and will be found sufficiently capacious for the present needs of the college. W. J. Lhamon, of Allegheny, Pa., will begin his work at the Bible College January 1, and will have charge of the classes in New Testament, while Dr. W. T. Moore will teach the Old Testament. The friends of this enterprise will be glad to note these signs of increased activity. The Bible College now has an endowment of $50,000, a lot which could not be better located, a building adequate for all immediate needs, and a faculty of unquestioned ability though not yet of sufficient numbers.

Why is it that the term "backbone" as a quality in character is generally used in the sense of stubbornness, cantankerousness and harshness? A backbone differs from a ramrod in two important particulars: It has marrow in it, which gives it life, and it has joints, which give it flexibility. The man whose opinion on all propositions is an unvarying negative, or the man whose opinion cannot be changed when new facts are brought to his attention, is not a man with a backbone, but a man with a ramrod down his intellectual and moral spine. So as to systems of religious thought. "Calvinism," say some of the anti-revisionists, "has backbone," which gives it a great advantage over all systems of a less dogmatic character. But is not the backbone of such a system rather of the ramrod variety? If men must systematize their thoughts about God—and perhaps they must—it is essential that the backbone of their systems shall contain a few yielding vertebræ, with cartilaginous links of a not too rigid sort, in recognition of the limits of human knowledge and of the fact that it has not pleased God to reveal all his mysteries to men. The impact of a large, swift-moving idea upon a rigid system with a ramrod for a spinal column, is disastrous. It puts an embarrassing curve in the ramrod, and a crooked ramrod is the most useless of all useless things. A system with a real backbone receives the shock, bends beneath the blow and then springs straight again. And when the first surprise is over it is found that the new idea, if it is a true one, has itself become a strengthening vertebra in the backbone.

CHRISTMAS GREETING

By I. J. SPENCER

No holiday is so universally and enthusiastically celebrated as the twenty-fifth day of December. Its annual recurrence produces a high tide in business and in social life. By the unselfish and charitable it is observed charitably; by the selfish it is used selfishly; by the noble it is utilized nobly; by the coarse and vulgar its coming is made the occasion of coarse indulgences and vulgar gratifications.

The elevating, joy-giving and redemptive event it commemorates, opens upward the hearts of the good, the wise, the grateful, and the loving; and brings down tender good will and showers of blessings upon those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death. To the Christian it comes as an opportunity to give food to the hungry and good cheer to the sorrowing and the suffering. It declares again and again that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Whatsoever is done in the name—by the prompting or according to the will—of Him whose advent it recalls is beautiful and beneficent. Christmas implies glory to God in the highest and goodwill toward men.

It is a time when the kingdom of heaven descends very near to the hearts of men, women and children. It is a time not for saying to the naked and hungry "be fed"; but for bestowing the needed boon. It is a season for emphasis upon the practical and tangible in the Christian religion.

One of the most valuable experiences to any man is not to desire to receive; not to fret or be gloomy if ignored or forgotten in the distribution of others' gifts; but to put himself in partnership with God as a dispenser and giver, bestowing upon others for their good, wisely chosen gifts, asking nothing in return.

While seeking to add to the sum of human happiness and to reflect the glory of Him who was born in Bethlehem, we must seek as well, by our influence to prevent the outbreking of base passions—avarice, fleshly pleasures, selfishness, envy, hatred, injustice, and cruelty—that flow in hideous contrast beside the beautiful stream of good will among men. Not material gifts only, but words and deeds of sympathy, cheer, faith, and love, may be used to bless and brighten many a heart and home at this glad Christmas-tide. To every reader of these lines the writer extends the hand of good will; the heartiest Christmas greetings and the sincerest God speed to every thought and step and deed for the uplifting of our fellow men.

It is important to know that the sublimest, best gift possible is not gold, or any external treasure. It is the consecration of one's self, as Christ gave himself to men, to cleanse, illuminate, cheer, love, succor and inspire them to holy living, following in his footsteps and upheld by his spirit.

The New Happiness

By N. AYLSWORTH

Man has ever been wont to regard himself as essentially a selfish being, whose only way to happiness was through self-seeking. To receive much and be ministered to by others was to be happy; to receive little and serve others was to be unhappy.

This view of happiness has ever tended to make man a robber, and for untold ages war was the profession of mankind. But war served this ideal of happiness very imperfectly, for it was always highly destructive, tending to put out of existence the very things contended for. Hence, efforts were early made to limit this tendency to indiscriminate robbery, and governments were formed. But these had to recognize selfishness as the prime law of life, and offset the gains of wrong-doing by penalties which appealed directly to this principle.

In the highest type of religion known to the ancient world this was also true. Threatened calamities for disobedience and promised reward of prosperity for well-doing were the grand motives for the Jewish righteousness. Christianity set aloft another principle, but it had to take the world as it was, and appeal also to the law of selfishness—with this significant difference, however, that its rewards and punishments were in a future state. This was worth much, very much, for it placed life on a basis of faith; yet it was in so far a transferred selfishness. Its power to stimulate the conscience and quicken the nobler impulses was immeasurably greater than any unideal application of the principle, but a righteousness founded on such an appeal was in danger of falling to the level of a mere prudence, albeit of the higher sort.

Co-operating with these external influences, there has always been an inner sense and prompting to righteousness in what we call conscience; but it is to be noted that the action of this faculty has usually been felt to be stern rather than joyous. It holds the lash of compunction and executes righteousness with severity. It is a law, not a gladness. Its demand is self-denial, and it has no means to make this joyous.

During the Christian ages the law of selfishness, in one form or other, has, for the most part, held sway; and love has been regarded, and is even now regarded, by a large part of the church, as impracticable. The Christian life is viewed as a life of self-denial in view of a future reward—that is, largely as an other-worldly prudence.

A remarkable fact during all this reign of selfishness has been that the attainment of happiness according to the principle of self-seeking has been disappointing. The means of happiness when once obtained have failed to fulfill expectation. The recognition of this fact is as old as human history, and it means that the selfish principle, while to an extent applicable, does not satisfy the demand of the human heart. This is because we are human, not simply animal, and the thirst of spiritual discontent is ever making our cup insipid. The animal sated is satisfied; man sated is still hungry.

It has long been preached that religion satisfies this hunger; but if it be but a transferred selfishness, as is largely true with many, it certainly does not. The hope of heaven may be very comforting in trial, but it alone is not sufficient to make us happy. The church—with numerous individual exceptions—has been but slow in finding out Christ's better way, and the secular world has always disbelieved in the law of love.

In all this, a change has been taking place in the last century which is both more startling and fuller of promise than all else that has come to pass in that wonderful period. That change has been the incoming, on a large scale, of what may be termed a new happiness.

Carlyle in his "Sartor Resartus" gives the inner history of a supposed philosopher who had begun life with the usual hopes and purposes of men but had met with such serious disappointments that he had lost faith and become pessimistic. After repining for a long time, he becomes defiant; and then, when his indignation had burned itself out, indifferent. In this state he asks himself why he should demand to be happy, when he had not even the right to be a few years before.

Through such reflections he reaches other views of life, and at last makes a complete surrender of self. Thereupon he passes into a mental state of restfulness, in which his faith comes back, and all things grow to look more kindly about him, and he exclaims: "O nature—or what is nature? Ha! Why do I not name thee, God? Art not thou the living garment of God? O heavens, is it in very deed He, then, that ever speaks through thee; that lives and loves in thee, that lives and loves in me?" "With other eyes, too, could I now look upon my fellow man: with an infinite love, and infinite pity—poor, wandering, wayward man! Art thou not tired, and beaten with stripes, even as I am? Ever, whether thou bearest the royal mantle or the beggar's gabardine, art thou not so weary, so heavy laden; and thy bed of rest is but a grave. O my brother, my brother, why can I not shelter thee in my bosom, and wipe away all tears from thine eyes!" And here he finds that he can do without happiness, for he has found blessedness.

The remarkable thing about this discovery is that in the new-found happiness there is no sop thrown to selfishness. Re-The new happiness is the joy of doing good, the gladness of making others glad. This is not only duty, then, and happiness. Carlyle was a giant with a tongue of fire; and for fifty years he stormed through the century, dealing mighty blows against materialism, selfishness, and hypocrisy. He was the Elijah of the nineteenth century. He was not a church man, but he snatched fire from the Christian altar and filled the heavens with its glow. As no other man, he impressed the century, and stood forth in the broad world as the apostle of the new happiness.

Probably the greatest poem of the century was Faust, Goethe's masterpiece; and this addresses itself to the same subject. Faust, a learned man, is visited by Mephistopheles, a wonder-working spirit, who proposes to conduct him to perfect happiness. Faust bargains that when he shall say to the moment, "Stay, thou art so fair," he shall yield up his life, and Mephistopheles shall have his soul. Mephistopheles, through the exercise of magical powers, conducts him through many experiences in quest of happiness. At length the path lies through wrong doing, and with much reluctance Faust yields to the temptation to stain innocence, and is led both to crime and the ruin of a pure life. Not happiness, but anguish and wild woe succeed to this gratification of passion, and the curtain falls on a blackness of darkness as of hell.

In the second part, Faust is conducted through a long pilgrimage, whose object he does not comprehend, the direct quest of happiness being lost sight of, until he at length finds himself impelled to engage in a great work of philanthropy. He gives all his thought and energy to an enterprise that is destined to issue in the well-being of his fellow men on a large scale. When his work is done, and he contemplates the great good that will result, he exultingly cries to the moment, "Stay, thou art so fair," and immediately sinks down and dies. Mephistopheles seeks to gain possession of his soul, but angels bear it to God.

The great lesson of this masterpiece of the century is that of the new happiness—the joy of beneficence. We miss in Goethe the deep moral tone of Carlyle, and this appears in the method of coming to the discovery of the new happiness, but the lesson is the same—that unselfish service is happiness. In this, as in Carlyle, the idea of a future happiness is out of view. Faust is seeking present happiness, and he finds it at last, after all else has failed, in making others happy.

Goethe's poem has been regarded as a mirror of the century. Mephistopheles, cold, heartless, knowing, and magical in wonder-working, is a striking impersonation of the human intellect; cold, heartless, skeptical, far-seeing, and almost magical in its wonder-working, it has led us a far chase for happiness during the century. But we are coming to see that not in the splendor of achievements nor in multiplicity of possessions is happiness to be found, but in the joy of doing good.

The greatest discovery of the nineteenth century was not physical, but spiritual—a discovery in the nature of the human heart—I should say re-discovery, for Christ proclaimed it long ago in his law of love. Unselfish service is heaven. God has made us so. This is the mighty voice of the century. And not in vain was it that Goethe sang and Carlyle thundered and a thousand other voices added their acclaim, for the world is already beginning to resound with the new gladness of doing good. Of this I shall speak in another article.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

A Glimpse of Shanghai By F. M. RAINS

Shanghai was my last place to visit in China. It is a great and growing city of some five hundred thousand souls. The foreign population, that is, American, English, French, etc., is about 9,000. There are three foreign concessions, English, American and French. Shanghai is the eye of the whole empire. It is the New York of the east. The manufacturing interest is very great. The banking business is large. C. S. Addis, Esq., manager of the Hong Kong and Shanghai bank, told me that about $2,000,000 annually passed through that bank for missions. No doubt this bank handles more missionary money than any other one bank in the world. The bank is well managed. One of its officers made a great pile of money for the bank by speculating in silver. He was promptly discharged on the ground that he had disobeyed orders in not doing only a strictly banking business.

Shanghai is famous in China for its great schools. St. John's College is an Episcopalian mission school. It commands a far-reaching influence in the whole only empire. It is a school for young men and its capacity is 300. When a young man enters the school, he must pay his board and tuition three years in advance. Not long since there was room for thirty new students. Promptly eighty-five presented themselves for examination, ready to pay the expenses three years in advance. Only thirty were accepted and fifty five had to go elsewhere. I mention this fact to show how China is being aroused on the educational question. Fifteen years ago the Chinese of either sex would not attend schools if board and tuition were given free; now all the schools are crowded and they pay both board and tuition. I visited also the Nanyang College in Shanghai. It would do your eyes good to see this magnificent plant of new, modern buildings with every appointment and convenience. The Chinese government put this up at a cost of about $200,000. The building has just been completed. The Ching Chong school for Ningpo boys I also visited. This school has $500,000 at its command. A poor Ningpo boy grew to be a very wealthy man, and when he died he left $500,000 for this great school. Do you think a Chinaman is worth saving? Some wealthy Chinamen have just made a tender of $500,000 to start another great school in this city. China has no public school system. This will not be true many years longer. Government schools will be started at no very distant day. But what will they be? How can it be done? China does not have at present properly educated men to launch a system of public schools. Count Ito, of Japan, says his country can furnish the teachers. That would be fatal. This public school interest will fall into the hands of the missionaries, if they are ready for such an undertaking. Timothy Richards, who has been in China for about forty years, says that if China had 1,000 well educated, consecrated young Chinamen government schools could be started in the right way. A common school system for a country numbering 400,000,000 souls is one of the greatest and most far-reaching enterprises the world has ever seen. The missionary interest must be ready to give direction and character to the movement when it comes.

I had the pleasure of seeing Consul General Goodnow. He gave me a full account of his relations with Li Hung Chang during the recent riots. In common with everybody in China, native and foreign, he does not think the so-called "great Chinese statesman" was immaculate. General Goodnow is kind to the missionaries. They all look to him as a personal friend. One of the last things President McKinley said to him before leaving Washington was, "Be good to the missionaries." President McKinley also said to him and to other consuls that he thought the representatives of a Christian nation like the United States ought to attend church at least once every Sunday. General Goodnow is not a member of any church. His wife, however, is a member of the Christian Church. She was raised in Indiana. He is a warm, personal friend of our missionary, W. P. Bentley.

Our missionary force in Shanghai is W. P. Bentley and wife, James Ware and wife and Miss Tonkin. The churches in Australia have just sent Miss Tonkin to be associated with the Wares in their work. The foreign society is much pleased to have the co-operation of the brethren in Australia. Mr. Bentley is doing a fine work in different ways. He preaches in the Christian Institute and teaches. He is called upon to serve on different boards and committees of an interdenominational character. His work is outgrowing his present quarters and he is calling loudly for more room and larger buildings. He is in pressing need of at least $6,000. Will not some one send us a check for that amount for this special need? We ought to rejoice that the work is so prosperous. Land is advancing in price all the time in Shanghai. We ought to have bought plenty of ground ten years ago. It was cheap then, but we were not able. Other mission boards are doing and planning for great things in this, the most important city in the east. James Ware is happy. He has all he wants. He has a good chapel and his new home is almost completed. I went with him to one of his outstations on the island of 'Tsunghing. This island is forty miles long and twelve miles wide and has a population of 800,000. Mr. Ware baptized thirteen, most of them bright young men. One man walked all night that he might be there to be baptized. Scores of people are asking the way of the Lord. Some walk six and eight miles every Sunday to hear the gospel. The work in China in some respects reminds one of the pioneer days in Kentucky and Missouri. A Buddhist priest was at the baptism. These chaps amount to but little. They are ignorant fellows. A majority of them cannot read. They try to look holy and wise, but they make a spectacle of themselves. By the way, the island of 'Tsunghing is the home of sorghum we have in America. It was taken to America from this island. When I was a boy I had to work at the sorghum business day and night. The business was never a success—in my hands. We have two churches in Shanghai. They unite once a month in a union communion service. The regular meeting was held while I was there. It was a delightful service. Following the service, Mr. Bentley baptized three upon a confession of their faith. Christian work is being conducted in thirty places in the city by all the missionary agencies. This city would soon be won for our Lord were it not for the immoral lives of foreigners.

A mighty change has come over China since the Boxer riots. Mission work was never before so prosperous. Mission schools are crowded. Large numbers are being gathered into the churches. The officials are kind and courteous. The missionaries are hopeful. China is a world power; as goes China, so goes the world. The people are now seeking western learning. Give this nation the gospel and the problem of the evangelization of the world will be solved.

On this trip to the east I have seen many new and strange things. I have seen mighty mountains and volcanoes and rivers. I have seen great cities, ancient temples, great statesmen and scholars, but nothing I have seen has impressed me so much as the marvelous success of the gospel in these lands. I went out believing and hopeful and I return knowing and enthusiastic. The man who questions the success of the work in Japan and China doubts the testimony of thousands of as intelligent and consecrated men and women as the world has ever seen.

The Three Kings of Cologne.

From out Cologne there came three kings
To worship Jesus Christ, their King.
To him they sought fine herbs they brought
And many a beauteous golden thing;
They brought their gifts to Bethlehem town,
And in that manger set them down.

Then spake the first king, and he said:
"O Child, most heavenly, bright and fair!
I bring this crown to Bethlehem town
For thee, and only thee, to wear;
So give a heavenly crown to me
When I shall come at last to thee!"

The second, then, "I bring thee here
This royal robe, O Child," he cried;
"Of silk 'tis spun, and such an one
There is not in the world beside;
So in the day of doom requite
Me with a heavenly robe of white!"

The third king gave his gift, and quoth;
"Spikenard and myrrh to thee I bring,
And with these twain would I most fain
Anoint the body of my King;
So may their incense sometime rise
To plead for me in yonder skies!"

Thus spake the three kings of Cologne,
That gave their gifts, and went their way;
And now kneel I in prayer hard by
The cradle of the Child to-day;
Nor crown, nor robe, nor spice I bring
As offering unto Christ, my King.

Yet have I brought a gift the Child
May not despise, however small;
For here I lay my heart to-day,
And it is full of love to all.
Take thou the poor but loyal thing,
My only tribute, Christ, my King!

Jesus's Teaching Concerning Himself

By J. M. LOWE

(CONCLUDED.)

By way of introduction to part second, it may be said that the Christ of the gospels bears little resemblance to the Christ of theology. Speculation has lifted the man Jesus so high into the realm of metaphysics that he is well-nigh an abstraction. The chief misfortune in this process has been the loss of his humanity to a degree out of all proportion with the self-asserted character of the Man of Galilee. He usually refers to himself as the "Son of Man"—thus implying a thorough humanity; not indeed, imperfect, weak and halting, but glorious humanity. Incidentally he speaks of his own limitations. He said, "No man knoweth the hour, not even the Son, but the Father;" and "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." He asserts that at his request his Father will send him more than twelve legions of angels. These limitations, however, imply his completeness in God, and are by no means to be set down as defects. Well said one of the greatest preachers among us, "Jesus was a perfect man, but a perfect man is more than man. I want to say that when you have a perfect man, you have a perfect human and a perfect divine creation." Let us rejoice that Jesus was clothed with our humanity, and be inspired thereby to a deeper and truer discipleship.

It is a matter of joyful congratulation that all the cardinal doctrines of the Christian religion are taught in the direct sayings of Jesus concerning himself.

1. The incarnation. This doctrine is abundantly taught in the epistles, but these find their greatest strength in being confirmatory of the plain statements of Jesus. Listen to this statement: "I came out from the Father and am come into the world; again I leave the world and go unto the Father" (John 16:28). It is true that all men, indeed all things material and immaterial, come from the Father. But Jesus in this statement evidently does not refer to this. If so, his remark in his own behalf is pointless. Miraculous conception or natural conception, this statement affirms a relationship to God and procession from God that other men cannot claim for themselves. "I and the Father are one"—a personal, vital, intelligent union with God. "Give me the glory which I had with thee before the world was;" "before Abraham was, I am"—direct statements of pre-existence. "Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in me?" "The words that I say unto you, I speak not for myself, but the Father abiding in me doeth his works." Here is the express statement that the Father abides in him, the essence of the incarnation.

2. Redemption. The word redemption means to release for a ransom. Jesus uses this particular word when he says the "Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many. Back of all the theories of redemption is the fact of redemption. The abolition of a theory does not destroy the fact any more than a change in astronomy would dash the stars out of the sky and lead the worlds astray. Theories may come and theories may go, but redemption of mankind will go on forever. J. M. Campbell says: "The question to whom was the ransom paid is an idle one. To the devil, is the answer which some theologians have ventured to give. To God, say others. Locke felt moved to ask, 'Would it not be incongruous to pay the ransom to the party who receives the parties redeemed?' These difficulties arise from taking the word literally. The figure contained in a word must not be over-stretched. All human analogies give at best a faint suggestion of divine realities. The truth at the heart of this word is, that the soul of man is loosed or released from sin by means of the sacrifice of Christ."

3. Reconciliation. This truth is held in solution in many scriptures. "Whoso confesseth me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven." "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." "I am the door, by me if any man enter, he shall be saved and shall go in and out and find pasture." "I came that they may have life and may have it abundantly." "For the Son of Man has come to seek and to save that which was lost." "And for their sakes I sanctify myself that they themselves, also, may be sanctified in truth." "Neither for these only do I pray but for them also that believe on me through their word, that they may all be one, even as thou Father art in me and I in thee that they also may be one in us."

4. Remission. Reconciliation is the result of redemption, and remission is the process of reconciliation. The great classic on remission is found in Matthew 6:28: "This is my blood of the covenant which is shed for many unto the remission of sins." The relationship between the blood of Jesus and the remission of sins is a problem of philosophy. Beyond question they are joined in this statement. Many would have us believe that there is a mystic merit in the blood of Christ, per se. How his blood taken alone can procure salvation would be reduced to a rational proposition with great difficulty.

I am reminded in this connection of a remark made by a Lutheran minister concerning the bread and wine. "We take the words literally," said he, "this is my blood and this is my body. Of course we must quit thinking." The kind of faith needed here is the faith defined by the boy when he said, "Faith is believing something when you know it ain't so." Happily, Jesus himself solves the problem for us. It is not his blood that is for remission, but the shedding of it. Likewise in other places, the scriptures say without the shedding of blood, there is no remission. It denotes the fullest measure of devotion. The death of Jesus completed a continuous sacrifice. He gave his life long before he shed his blood. It was such a death after such a life. And the shedding of his blood betokens the deepest and farthest expression of a deathless passion for a lost world. We say our country was saved by the blood of patriots. What do we mean?

The country would have been saved if not a soldier had died. But battle means possible death. So in the task of winning a wicked world, Jesus "resisted unto blood striving against sin." There are those, doubtless, who see in the red blood of Jesus the price of our salvation. Such are, indeed, hopelessly orthodox.

5. Resurrection. What a theme! It is resplendent with all the glories that gleam from the starry crown of the Son of Man. The very language we use to describe it is roseate with the brightness of its glory. Night brightens into day, sorrow smiles through her tears. Doubt and despair depart forever, and dead hopes rise up and walk. Illumined by this theme, we forget the shadows of Gethsemane, and the tragedy of Calvary sinks in a sea of light. This glowing truth—a sinless resurrection—is the beautiful blossom from centuries of sowing and centuries of growing. It is a fitting climax to such a series of struggles.

"Through death comes life,
Through loss comes gain,
The smile for the tear
And the joy for the pain."

Jesus many times asserts his own resurrection. I affirm that such a statement from the lips of a sane man proclaims his divinity. Why should any man dream of such an impossible thing? Such a declaration of resurrection is no less wonderful than the resurrection itself. I turn from the well-trodden path of proof of this fact and content myself with a single reflection. The best evidence of a risen Christ is a rising race. The best evidence of a transfigured Christ is a transfigured manhood. If the wonderful, powerful, beautiful sinless life of Jesus had culminated in anything but a glorious resurrection, the world would not have survived the disappointment.

6. Retribution. He walks into the darkness who turns away from the splendor of the resurrection. The pain and agony of him who rejects Christ is a scientific certainty. Millions of miles of space are illuminated by the light of the sun. But there are caves and caverns where his rays never enter. Jesus is the light of the world but into the sealed heart of sinful selfishness his rays cannot enter. Where light is denied darkness reigns. "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." There is in the whole Bible no clearer, sharper delineation of the future of the sinner than comes from the lips of Jesus himself. I refer to the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew beginning with the thirty-first verse—when the Son of Man shall come in his glory, from his eternal throne purchased by suffering and founded upon righteousness, those who reject him shall be turned away into an unhappy and awful condition whose duration is defined by the same word that defines the duration of the joy of the righteous. These are not the words of a proud prince who has won the day and is disposing of his victims. It is the language of destiny. Life in every world has its conditions and limitations. The words of Jesus are the foundation rocks of all society, human and divine.

Thus are six great doctrines—Incarnation, Redemption, Reconciliation, Remission, Resurrection, Retribution—easily deduced from, rather they are declared by, the direct statements of Jesus concerning himself. Nor is this all. He declares himself to be Judge, Savior, Mediator, Lord, King, the light of the world, the door of the sheep, the resurrection and the life, emancipator, the bread of life, the living bread, the true vine, builder of the church, witness to the truth, Messiah, Son of Man, Son of God. Some one has said it would take a Christ to make the claims that Christ made. Never did man claim so much for himself. Never were the claims of man more nearly undisputed. Still he stands, the most luminous figure of history. His very death redeemed the cross from its criminal associations and made it the ensign of simple faith and holy love. Out from what the world would call the wreck of all his ambitions he emerges with the never dying wreath of victory upon his brow. His bitterest defeat was his brightest victory. His death was the entrance upon a life which was a life indeed. From the despised victim of Jewish hatred he rises to the very throne of God. Millions of the world's highest and best pour out their prayers and beseech the Creator of the universe in his name. And from his throne on high he is the recognized Leader of all leaders, Teacher of all teachers, King of all kings.

The Floating Population

By GEORGE H. COMBS

"There are three thousand Disciples in Kansas City unidentified with any of our local churches" is the statement of one of the most conservative and best informed ministers in this city. The word was startling. If the facts sustain it, as no doubt they do, a condition confronts us almost appalling. For this is no local but universal sin and hurt. The reasons cannot be sought in any purely local features. Our churches here are aggressive and united and know not even in faintest traditions the curse of faction. What is true here must be true in all our cities. No doubt a full knowledge would disclose an even larger number of the church-homeless in our greater cities. What can be done to remove this shame? Of all the problems connected with city evangelization none is more perplexing and more important than this. It is not how to enlarge our numbers, but how to hold our own. Every year there pours into our towns a flood of Disciples speedily to be lost in the quicksands of city life. How shall these newcomers be reached and held?

We are confronted at the very outset by a seeming utter consciencelessness as to the obligations of church membership, obligations which in the thought of the great majority are shaken off by removal from their home churches. Hence in nearly every instance these new additions to our neighborhood must be looked up and urged with never lessening insistence to cast their lots with our local churches, and how often with what ineffectualness all city preachers know. It is safe to say that the average preacher in our western towns spends at least one half his time running down these erstwhile and elsewhere Christians and finds his pastoral work a burden too heavy to be borne. The time that should be left free for evangelizing among the unchurched is torn to tatters by this enforced missionary work among those who without urging should be quick to identify themselves with the churches. Yet without such visitation and systematic culture these would be lost to the cause. What to do?

Is not the fault primarily with our system of issuing church letters? Is not the unwise rule of issuing stereotyped rather than individualistic church letters, letters given to the individuals—to be worn out or yellowed in trunk pilgrimages, as so often happens—rather than to the churches into which these would go, responsible for this mischief? A St. Louis Disciple, say, wishes to remove to Kansas City, calls for his church letter, which is granted, recommending him to the Disciples of the wide, wide world instead of to one of our local churches here, and then given to him, rather than sent to the church into whose neighborhood this Disciple moves. This is our prevalent system and how faulty!

Now this brother comes with his letter. It is general and he looks nowhere in particular for the church which is to receive it. Besides, he has the letter and it is quite convenient always to hasten slowly in such matters; he will wait. This waiting time frequently extends to his death and a yellow church letter must serve as foundation for funeral sermon. If he would promptly make known his church identity upon coming into his new home the harm would not be so great, but no, even this must not be rashly disclosed, and unknown to Christian workers, he goes on his way alone. Sometimes on a revival wave he is caught up and brought into the church, but not always, not often.

Now cannot this be changed? Let us stop issuing these omibus letters. Let the brother from the Broadway church, Lexington, Ky., upon his request for a church letter be informed that the letter will be granted and sent to the minister of the Dayton, O., church into whose neighborhood he will move. Would not this simplify matters? With this plan he would never be without a church home. By his very removal to Dayton he becomes a member of a Christian church in that city. It is not optional with him as to whether or no he will identify himself with one of the churches in the Ohio city. There is no break in his church relationships, his removal is simply a change of church home. This relieves the ministers of the city from the arduous task of locating and re-converting him, best of all it will almost surely save him from that fatal unconcern which is ever akin to death.

How to Use the ni rm Topics.

There is complaint that m d week prayer-meeting is often unprofitable, and the complaint is alas! but too well grounded. What then? Shall it be abolished? A few so advocate, but unwisely so, as it seems to me. The trouble is not in the prayer-meeting itself, but in the way we run it. We lay the blame on it, when we should lay it on ourselves. Stupidity and conventionality, the chief faults of the average prayer meeting, disappear when we infuse a little freshness and variety. We too often condemn a prayer meeting because it won't run itself. We expect it to be an automaton! But we must learn that it takes effort—hard, constant, earnest effort to make it succeed. I regard it as axiomatic that the prayer meeting out of which much comes must be the prayer-meeting into which much is put. And I feel morally certain that those who favor its abolishment are for the most part people who expect to reap where they have not sown. While variety spices the meeting it may easily become its bane. The true idea is, variety within certain limits, or hedged by a certain measure of uniformity. Reading, prayer, songs, remarks are and must be prayer-meeting staples. But these can and should be varied almost without end.

1. Take the readings for instance. There are two scripture selections generally with each topic. They may both be read by the leader, or by the leader and the meeting responsively, or by all in concert, or one responsively and the other in concert, or by two young men or two young women chosen for the purpose, or one by an individual and the other by the meeting, responsively, or in concert. Here are seven or eight variations, and others could easily be added.

2. Take the prayers also. A prayer-meeting, not to be a misnomer, should have many prayers. To have them they must be short and to the point. Shut out the old fashioned long-winded and circumlocutory prayer.

Ask for three or four prayers, one right after the other, naming beforehand the persons to offer them. Call for sentence prayers that any who will may participate. These for variety. The single prayer is, of course, the stand-by.

3. Take the songs. Make them fit the topic. Let them be full of spirit and life. Emphasize the musical feature. Make it attractive. Call for voluntary songs. Make the entire service a song-service now and then, varied only by a scripture reading and an opening and closing prayer.

4. And finally, the remarks. It is a mistake to call them the chief thing. The worship in song and prayer is the chief thing. Sad will be the day for us when we come to think it is a vain thing to worship God. But well-timed remarks add no little to the interest, when they are well-timed and quit when they are done! And why should the men do all the talking? Let the women have their liberty.

Encourage the writing and reading of brief papers on special phases of the topic by thoughtful persons. Notify them the previous week. And every now and then close all books and have a "memory meeting"—getting songs, scriptures and everything else from the unaided memory.

These are merely suggestions, of course, but the burden of them is that if you want a good and profitable prayer-meeting you must thoughtfully plan and diligently work for it.

President Cramblett's Inauguration at Bethany College

By G. W. MUCKLEY

Bethany College deserves a larger circle on the map of the United States. It augurs well for the future of Bethany College that the installation exercises were so well attended by notable men. When one thinks of her distinguished graduates who to-day are scattered all over our country, not only in the institutions and work of our church, but in those of the country as well, one is reminded of the words of the Sage of Concord, "All foregone days of virtue work their health into this day."

In 1841, when Bethany College threw open her doors for educational work, there were only 40,000 people in the land who were known as simply Christians. Since that time we have grown to a million and a quarter members, with educational work going on directly or indirectly under the auspices of our people in seventeen different states. In nearly all of these institutions, and in all of the missionary organizations, some of Bethany's men are doing the work of the church. So when we think of this great visible host to-day, we must not forget the impulse that was given to our movement for Christian unity by the princely men who have done the work of presidents and professors in this famous institution of learning.

"On the Banks of the Old Buffalo" was sung on the morning of Dec. 10 with unusual good cheer, as distinguished visitors, students and alumni moved about the college campus, or walked along the corridor, so familiar to the old boys, waiting for the arrival of the distinguished guests who were to participate in the installation of the new president of Bethany College, T. E. Cramblett. The forenoon exercises were to begin at 10:30, with an address by Judge John A. Campbell, of New Cumberland, W. Va., one of the faithful trustees of the college. The special conveyances which brought the principal speakers from Wellsburg, were late in arriving, and though the day was cold and rainy, and dark clouds were lowering, the spirits of the students and alumni could not be made gloomy, for the time was well taken up with cheerful songs that every Bethany man knows, while crowds were waiting in chapel hall, or marching along the corridor.

The college colors, green and white, were profusely distributed about the hall, a large streamer, three feet wide, being stretched entirely around the four walls. The ushers were decorated each in a yard of green and white ribbon, flowing from buttonholes or lapels of coats. As the new president was waiting in the president's room, one could see upon his genial face that he was entering upon his new task full of hope; assured, however, that no man must speak confidently when he puts his armor on, reserving that for the day when the victory is won.

Bro. Cramblett is young, but not inexperienced, and with many excellent qualities, he is equipped for his position, and is confidently assured of the fullest cooperation of the trustees, the faculty and the alumni, and the students as well. All the friends of the dear old college felt that this was to be a great day. It is a notable fact that at Bethany College, no such preparations were ever made and successfully carried out as were those attending the inauguration of President Cramblett on Dec. 10. Such distinguished men as Gov. White, of West Virginia; William O. Thompson, president of the Ohio State University; Dr. A. E. Turner, president of Waynesburg College, and Prof. Waitman Barbe, of the University of West Virginia, were present, delivering as stirring and practical addresses as it was ever the pleasure of the writer to hear.

The arrival of these distinguished guests in chapel hall, headed by President Cramblett, was the occasion of a tremendous ovation. The entire audience arose, and amidst waving handkerchiefs, the college yell and clapping of hands the speakers took the platform. Then the audience arose and sang "All Hail the Power of Jesus's Name." Everybody sang, sang hopefully, and so one lived over again the experiences of the days when, with his comrades in college work, he used to enjoy the religious worship at each chapel exercise. Following this song were the usual devotional exercises, followed by a solo by the widow of the late President Wollery. Her soul was expressed in her song and in her face, which seemed to glow in memory and love of him who had given such notable service to Bethany College.

Chairman J. C. Keith spoke very appropriately of the founding of the institution by Alex. Campbell, and its splendid career and notable men down to the present time, showing that the influence of Bethany College was now felt to the uttermost parts of the earth. Then came the address of Judge John A. Campbell, of New Cumberland, W. Va. He reminded us of President Eliott's famous description of what Harvard College cost. Mr. Eliott said, "You can estimate the earnings of a steel corporation, but the jingle of dollars does not measure the assets of a college." The assets of a college are not stone, brick, mortar and fittings, but the characters of the young men and women, which the institution is capable of turning out mentally and spiritually. Mr. Campbell dwelt emphatically on the object for which Bethany College was founded—that it was for more than study for school, it was preparation for the study of life. He reverted to the founder of the college, as a man whose broad Americanism was due to his inclination for the cultivation of the higher instincts of mankind.

Carrie B. Mathews, a former student of the college, sang a soprano solo, after which Dr. A. E. Turner, president of Waynesburg College, presented to the audience an address of a serious and humorous nature on "Education that Educates." He stated that Waynesburg College was founded just 10 years later than its sister, Bethany College. He spoke of the purposeful life. The man who seeks a little thing gets it. The man who seeks the higher thing achieves it. He dwelt much on the strenuous life, illustrated in a character sketch of President Roosevelt. A man must not offer as an excuse that he has not the talents of his neighbor, but must make himself believe that he has a talent and the world will admire him and help him to his accomplishment.

There were three interesting features of the afternoon program. The address of President Thompson, of the Ohio State University; that of Gov. A. B. White, of West Virginia, and the inaugural of President Cramblett. Dr. Thompson spoke on the subject, "Small Colleges." He showed that the growth of large colleges had been within the last 30 years. It looks to some of us in viewing colleges that bigness is a virtue and littleness is a vice. Some folks think boys should be educated in crowds. This has created a sentiment in favor of large colleges, and people, like sheep, follow the crowd. He argued in favor of the small college, because the student comes in close contact with his professors. Let a young man get the inspiration of a noble soul, and he will use it as an exemplar through his life. He spoke of the large and small colleges in the Union, and said the ones of lesser prominence were quite as good as if not better than the large ones, stating that one had but to read the alumni rolls of small colleges to prove that more brainy men of the country were graduates of small colleges. He said that it was not the number of students in the institution that made the best school, but the quality of the professors and students together. He closed by saying, "We can give up everything else rather than the small college. No small colleges of which I have known have been anything but the centers of the noblest sentiment and the noblest ideas."

When Gov. White was introduced, he was given the Chautauqua salute, the entire audience standing. When quiet was restored, he pulled out the manuscript of his address, and, waving it before the audience said there were two things that greatly discomfited him. First, his speech was on the subject, "The Uses of Small Colleges," and second, he was sandwiched in between two college presidents, a thing he was not used to. He was used to being sandwiched between two politicians. Gov. White was equal to the occasion, and pulling some notes from another pocket, he spoke very briefly and interestingly on the material development of West Virginia in the past five years, giving facts which should fill every West Virginian with pride and satisfaction. He showed that while faith in West Virginia's development was founded on the lavish abundance of God's providence in the formation and creation of the state's natural wealth, yet it would not be apropos to the occasion to exploit these matters, except to show that they must be used to develop the educational and Christian institutions of the state, that the commonwealth's perpetuity might be assured. He was happy all the way through his speech, showing in a particularly exhaustive manner the value that small Christian colleges were to any state, in its proper development.

It was a matter of gratification and pride to everyone that Pres. Cramblett measured up so well in the delivery and matter of his inaugural address. This was the comment on all hands. He thanked the students and visitors present for the kindly way in which they had ushered him into the highest office in connection with the college. Bethany was dear to him, and he would endeavor to hold up the traditions and character of the institution, according to the example of his illustrious predecessors. He emphasized the fact that in doing this, he needed the assistance of the students, the faculty and the alumni. He felt that he need hardly ask for this, as all the alma mater of Bethany would work as one man to build up the institution. On concluding the president received a great ovation, being the target for a continuous shower of congratulations.

The evening was given over to a reception to Pres. Cramblett and his wife, at which the writer presided. Short addresses were given here by Prof. Barbe, of the University of West Virginia, and the friends and alumni. It was conceded that the reception with the short speeches and banquet was perhaps the most inspiring of the day's sessions, a fitting climax of the day.

It was a red letter day for Bethany college, and the outlook is indeed bright. Eighty-five thousand dollars has already been secured on the endowment, and there is every prospect that the first $100,000 will be completed before the winter is over. Through a gift of George Oliver, of Pittsburgh, the building is to be greatly improved and modernized, and an electric light plant installed. The faculty is harmonious and capable, and Pres. Cramblett has already secured many new students and is increasing the endowment. The clouds are lifting, Bethany's debts are being paid. Let the great brotherhood of the Disciples, by greatly increasing her endowment, pay in part the debt it owes to an institution which is the mother of all our colleges, and which has sent out so many good and useful men, "jewels all, which, upon the forefinger of all time shall sparkle forever," in their work for the Master.

apparent discouragement. Men were conspicuous by their absence, though it was a national conference. The convention itself summarizes its opinion of the Episcopal Church, on missions, as follows: First, that the Church has a pre-eminent call to mission work in Latin-American lands. Second, it sadly needs young men for its mission work both at home and abroad. Third, its present supply of mission funds is utterly inadequate. Fourth, the laity and some of the bishops and clergy are responsible for the apathy prevailing throughout the church toward missions. Fifth, the church at large needs a revival, and systematic instruction to arouse and stimulate zeal for Christian missions. Sixth, the men of the church should be systematically organized to aid the cause of missions, now being carried on largely by the women and children. The convention was of the opinion that the work of the missionary heroes is all out of proportion to the methods, the sympathy, and the interests of their people at home.

NEW YORK LETTER

By S. T. WILLIS

The cause of the Disciples of Christ in the Metropolitan district moves on with success and interest. W. J. Wright, general evangelist of the Atlantic states, is in the midst of a series of services with the church at East Orange, N. J., R. P. Shepherd, pastor. The outlook of the new church at that place is full of promise, several persons of late have become obedient to the faith and united with the church there. It is fitting that the new evangelist should begin his labors at this new point. It is rumored that J. M. Philpott will leave the church on 119th street to become pastor at Richmond Ave., Buffalo, N. Y. It will be quite difficult to think of him apart from New York, as he has been in this city about sixteen years, either as pastor in the church on 169th street or the one he serves at present on 119th street. At this time it is not quite certain whether he will go to Buffalo or not, but the rumor is well founded. The last quarterly meeting of the New York District of the C. W. B. M. was held at the Second Church, Brooklyn (Greenpoint), on December the third, and owing to the extreme inclemency of the weather, was not as largely attended as usual, though it was an interesting meeting and some of the discussions were full of life and snap, especially so regarding the question of a change of the district meetings from quarterly to semi-annual gatherings. The change was not effected. The Disciples of the country and especially of the east, have sustained a severe loss in the death of Dr. W. A. Belding, one of the fathers in our spiritual Israel. The Doctor did a great service for the Master and has gone to his reward in the heavenly world. The Disciples' Union of New York is making commendable progress in preparing practically for the extension of our forces in this city—the city building league looks toward helping to secure lots and erect buildings for future congregations.

in speaking of modern evangelism, or the proper substitutes for the old fashioned revival, took the ground that a higher grade of evangelists is very much needed. He said, "Evangelism"—meaning thereby the special calling of the evangelist, or the itinerant preacher—"is the scrap pile of the ministry, the intelligence office of a saint out of a job. We want no more freak evangelists, no more sensational, half-educated enthusiasts." It is probably true that evangelists of the past have done a great deal either to build up the churches of God or to discredit both the church and the ministry in the eyes of men. It all depends on the qualities of the evangelists, and the nature of the truths preached. For instance: A few men styling themselves, "The Holy Ghost and Us" order, have been preaching some queer things in Brooklyn, claiming that their leader is another Elijah, that his claims to divinity have been thoroughly tested, and that God has given him power to call spirits back to their bodies after leaving them. He says he is simply notifying men of their last chance to be saved, and apparently he does not care whether they do so or not. Such preaching tends only to bring some of the holiest and most beautiful teachings of the Gospel into contempt, because of a sad misrepresentation and misapplication of them. From such evangelization the church may well pray to be delivered, for the simplicity of Christ, the pure truth as it is in Jesus, is the only truth that will save the world. If evangelists will only proclaim Christ crucified with plain severity and whole souled enthusiasm, well and good; the more of it the better. But cyclonic, insanely egotistic, clap-trap sensationalism, labeled "preaching the gospel" tends only to injure the cause of Christ.

The Protestant Episcopal Missionary Convention just held at Rochester, New York, faced "The Problems and Opportunities" before that denomination, with

A new scheme for the raising of money among Sunday-schools of the Methodist Church has been devised by issuing a set of stamps of five denominations: 1 cent, 2 cent, 5 cent, 10 cent, and 25 cent. The plan is to sell them to the children as they collect money for the fund of the Twentieth Century Thank Offering Commission. Small albums are provided by the commission in which the stamps can be pasted, showing the amount raised by each child. At first the intention was to issue stamps in color and size similar to those issued in honor of the Chicago and Pan-American Expositions, but the government could not allow that, but did permit them to be issued in several shades of bronze not used by the United States Government. The designs are not unlike ordinary postage and revenue stamps, but vignettes of well known Methodists are printed in their centers, and the value of the stamp is shown in large letters at the top. They expect to raise $1,000,000, through the Methodist Sunday-schools in this way.

"As Becometh the Gospel."

By T. H. BLENUS.

James has said, "If any man among you seem to be religious and bridled not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." The true spirit and genius of the gospel of Jesus Christ presents four characteristics: it is a system of knowledge, a system of joy, a system of holiness, and a system of mercy and benevolence. What we do and what we say therefore must be distinguished by these attributes, that is, we must be wise, cheerful, holy and benevolent. It is almost impossible to look out upon the world around us, its teeming population, its prospects, its rapid increase, its discordant elements, its political excitements, and its religious pretensions, without the thought that we are approaching a crisis for which nothing can prepare us but a God-given gospel held in a pure conscience, and manifested in a life of love and Christian sympathy and benevolence. As it was the spirit of love that prompted the Almighty to provide a salvation from sin, so the language of love must be the vehicle of our communication with our fellow men. The voice that attunes itself to the tender soothing whispers of a loving affection not only characterizes the great principle of the plan of redemption, but contributes more to the salvation of the lost, and the harmony of the church, the correction of evils and the brightening of graces, than all the frettings and denunciations combined. We want to cultivate the gentleness of a John and the broad magnanimity of a Paul, the one "whose lips dropped as a honeycomb," and the other who counted not his life dear unto him, so that he might finish his course with joy. "Now, I beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ." Let the facts be told, let the doctrine be preached, let the precepts be urged, without fear and without favor, but, "in much patience considering him who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself."

Christianity is founded upon the most astonishing instance of generosity and love that ever was exhibited to the world. And its spirit imparts to every believer that generosity of sentiment which expands the soul; that charming sensibility of heart which makes us glow for the good, and weep for the woes, of others, that Christian love which comprehends in its wide circle all our brethren of mankind, that diffusive benevolence reduced to a principle of action, which makes the human nature approach to the divine.

B. B. Tyler's Letter

"The church has put me in charge of a young people's Sunday-school class. I am desirous of studying the Bible with them in some more comprehensive way than by the fragmentary lessons we have. Can you suggest some method of study that would interest the class in the Bible and at the same time increase their knowledge of the Bible? I have thought that perhaps a detailed study of the life of Christ and a study of the epistles as a whole might be valuable. Perhaps you can suggest some available literature on the subject or some method of study. I shall be greatly obliged and I am sure that you can do us much good by helping us."

The matters mentioned in this quotation doubtless will interest others than the writer and for this reason will be treated in this place.

It is interesting to know that the church has placed this young man as a teacher in the Sunday-school. The church ought to take an active interest in the work of the Bible-school. It ought, at least, to know who are the teachers and what is taught. There is no more important part of church work than that of giving instruction in the principles and practice of the Christian religion. In the Apostolic Age there were persons in the church called "teachers." There ought to be such in the church today.

You are to be commended for your desire to study the Bible and teach it in a "comprehensive way." This is the right way to study the Bible, but unless yours is a most remarkable class of young people they can appreciate, and be benefited by, only the rudiments of Bible study.

I am in some doubt as to what you refer to when you speak of fragmentary lessons in the Sunday-school. The only fragmentary system with which I am acquainted poses as scientific and calls itself "The Inductive Method"; but I am almost certain you have not heard of it. The International Sunday-school Lessons are certainly not fragmentary. At present we are engaged in a study of the history contained in the books of Genesis and Exodus. Six months will carry us from creation to the giving of the law. Every paragraph in the books named must be studied. It is safe to affirm that no teacher has sounded the depths of this series of lessons, or surveyed its area. Here is something at once profound and comprehensive. If your desire is for a study that is systematic, scientific, inductive, synthetic, broad, here is your opportunity. The life and literature of the Hebrew people from the morning of creation to the encampment of the chosen people at the foot of Mount Sinai furnishes an opportunity for investigation that ought to satisfy the most ambitious. There is nothing fragmentary in these lessons if they are used as the committee intended them to be used.

I note what you say about a detailed study of the life of Christ. A study of the life of our Lord, in detail, was completed less than six months ago in the Sunday-schools of Christendom. Beginning with 1900 the Bible-schools of the world spent a year and a half in a study of the life of Jesus. The recorded facts in his career among men, as a man, were placed in chronological order. Not a single event was omitted. All that is recorded of the life of the Son of God in the New Testament was examined by those who followed the course prepared by the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee. Such a comprehensive and systematic study of the life of Christ was never before attempted. There was nothing fragmentary in this scheme. All available literature bearing on the subject was needed in order to its mastery. If you are in search of something comprehensive here it is. If you are looking for something systematic in the way of Bible study it is before you in the studies of the life of Jesus of which I now speak.

Beginning with 1902 the Sunday-schools using the International system will begin a study of the Church of Christ as it is described in the New Testament. These studies will bring us, in six months, to the introduction of Christianity into Europe. In a comprehensive study of the church in the first century the epistles must be studied. They are a part of the history. Does this impress you as fragmentary? You request me to suggest literature. This I will do.

If you determine to study the life of Christ I suggest that you secure Peloubet's Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons for 1900 and 1901. They can now be obtained at the cost of second-hand books. These volumes will refer you to almost everything in print on the life of Christ. It is to be regretted that you did not keep step with the Sunday-schools of the world in their study of the life and work of Jesus recently completed.

If you determine to join in a comprehensive study of the church of the first century I commend to you first of all the book of Acts and the Epistles of the New Testament. Study these more than books about them. "The Records and Letters of the Apostolic Age," by Ernest De Witt Burton (Scribner's, New York,) is a helpful book in this connection. The aim of the author is to promote the historical study of the Apostolic Age. I commend this book as a most important aid if you mean to really study the lessons of the International Committee during the first six months of 1902. You can also use with profit the Commentary on the Sunday-school lessons issued by the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis. "Select Notes on the International Sunday-school Lessons" by the Rev. F. N. Peloubet is fine. The suggested literature in this book is alone worth more than the price of the volume. McGarvey's Commentary on the Acts is a good book for this period. There are three great books on the Apostolic Age that must be named in this connection. They are: "A History of Christianity in the Apostolic Age," by A. C. McGiffert; "The Apostolic Age," by James Vernon Bartlett; and "Christianity in the Apostolic Age," by Geo. T. Purves (Scribner's). "A History of New Testament Times in Palestine," by Shailer Matthews (Macmillan, New York,) ought also to be in your collection.

The present International Sunday-school Lesson Committee was elected by the International Sunday-school Convention in Boston, June, 1896. It was chosen to serve for six years. The first meeting was held in Washington in November, 1897. It was decided to spend two and a half years in a study of the Old Testament and three and a half in a study of the New Testament. It was decided to begin this series of lessons with such a study of The Life of Jesus as had never before been attempted. A year and six months, as I have said, was spent in this study. During the remainder of the course the studies will be alternately in the Old Testament and in the New—six months at a time in each. The purpose of the committee is to furnish such an outline as will enable the pupils to obtain a comprehensive view of the Bible, or of the life and literature of the ancient Hebrews.

At the meeting of the committee in New York last April, a sub-committee was appointed to prepare an outline for an advanced course of study. What shall be the character of this course? Shall it be a study of the Bible by books? Shall it be a doctrinal course? Shall it be a study of the biographies of its great men? Shall it be a study of the history of Israel or of its literature? Shall it be a study of the life of our Lord, or of the beginning of his church? Shall the course be for two years? If so, what ought to be the study for the first year and what for the second? Ought the committee to select portions of Scripture to be studied or simply suggest topics? Ought the committee to prepare a general outline for each lesson? These are some of the questions with which the sub-committee is now wrestling. Have you suggestions to make? Let me have them.

The People's Forum

Words From a Farmer.

Thereport of the foreign Christian missionary society as contained in the Christian Intelligencer of November, 1901, is comforting. The missionaries seem so earnest, hopeful, contented with their lot and wages, their only grievance that they cannot do more and that others are not sent to help them do greater works. Also to read how earnestly the board solicits money for these far off workers, themselves patterns of faithful liberality in this work. I wish we could all sympathize and help in their effort to better the condition of the human race. How I wish I had done more in my past life but I was largely ignorant of the earnest desire of many of the brethren who know more of the situation. That I may not appear inconsistent permit me to say that in the last two years I have given more to the various calls of the church than my income. I write this hoping to stir the hearts of some to more earnest giving to the best of all causes—the church. I am a farmer 61 years old.

"They All Eat Oats."

Did you read the article, "The Pulpit of a Century Ago and To-day," in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 21? It was from the pen of S. C. Humphrey. It was a good article, as most all are that appear in the above named paper.

The contrast therein drawn is, to my mind, somewhat overdrawn. Human nature and the gospel of Christ never change. That people are not attracted by a great deal of "stuff" that goes by the name of preaching in these last days, is beyond any doubt true. But is it not a fact that the average man is just as eager to hear the careful, intelligent, faithful preaching of the word of God to-day as he ever was? No kind of preaching will as deeply move a community to-day as doctrinal preaching. A certain preacher was once called to a large, wealthy city congregation. A friend said, "Are you not afraid to try to preach to that congregation?" "No," said the preacher. "There are different kinds of horses. Some are trotters, some draft, and some all purposes, but they all eat oats." Horses always have done so, they always will. Do you see the point? Preach the WORD. The word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword.

The True Christian Cohesion.

Success demands practical co-operation. This also the Christian heart craves. In the incidentals of Christian work, the New Testament recognizes expediency, and hence admits of change. The simplest effective plan is the best. This will receive the concurrence of disciples generally if there is no fear of an assumption of authority. If authority is claimed for it, it loses its influence and expansiveness, crystallizes into an ecclesiastical head and furnishes the shibboleth of a narrow party. The history of religious movements abundantly demonstrates the futility of a central authority or ecclesiastical head, to draw and hold Christian people together. It may closely combine a few, but it will repel the many. This is the principal cause of a divided Christendom. Fidelity to a common Lord and a common book, with the drawing power of common love and common work, furnishes the adhesive and cohesive principle in Christian co-operation. The phenomenal success of the Disciples of Christ has come from the emphasis placed on faith and obedience, untrammelled by party dictum. Our isolation and weakness arise not from want of a central authority, but from an assumed law of negations, precluding voluntary association for the Lord's work.

E. C. BROWNING.

What is Wrong With the Christian-Evangelist?

I confess that for several years there has been lurking in my mind a vague, indefinite idea that there was something unsound in the teaching of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have read its editorials carefully, thinking all the while that sooner or later I would be able to put my finger on an editorial and exclaim "Eureka! I have found it!"

But I have despaired of ever finding anything that I can formulate into a complaint or magnify into a heresy. I have been benefited and spiritually uplifted by its editorials. It has been of more value to me in my ministerial study than have all other papers. I place it week after week on the table in our free reading room here, and feel that I am giving the people our very best paper. However, my old suspicion has such a hold on me that I suppose that I will continue hunting for heresy and finding the truth in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as long as I live.

[A convincing proof that one can not always find what he is looking for, unless he looks in the right place for it. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is decidedly the wrong place when one is looking for heresy.]

"Habit."

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Nov. 28 Bro. Ames under the above caption presents some very interesting matters. Among other things he introduces two illustrations of the power of religious habit. (1) "Most of the readers of these lines expect to hear their minister talk of the Lord's day and not of the Sabbath; of our people, not our denomination; of our plea, not our creed." (2) "If their minister should appear in the pulpit gowned and surpliced they would be outraged. But if another minister were to appear before his people without the gown and surplice there would be even more commotion." I have heard these illustrations before. Their use then was to show that these things were simply, solely matters of habit—distinctions without a difference, altogether unimportant. I will allow that illustration No. 2 is, possibly, simply and solely a matter of habit (no pun intended). Of course people very frequently abandon bad habits for good habits, and of course of this Bro. Ames would heartily approve. I have noticed, also, some have fallen into the habit, be it good or bad, of seeing no difference between Lord's day and Sabbath, our people and our denomination, our plea and our creed. There was once, presumably, to them a difference.

Church Letters.

The question of church letters is coming more and more to be a very perplexing problem. Recently I heard a minister in one of our large churches in the city say that if all those who had either come to the city without their letters or were at present retaining them locked up in an old trunk or between the lids of a dust covered Bible, could be gathered together they would double the membership of that church. And this state of affairs is very largely true of other cities to some degree in smaller places. So much so that the present letter system is very perplexing, not to say aggravating. Inasmuch as there is not a "thus saith the Lord" for the manner in which the letter shall be granted, I would suggest that the letter be sent by the church to the clerk or elder of the nearest church in the city where the member is to reside. This would keep the letter from the trunk or dusty Book and place it at once in the hands of the proper parties. This direct method would place the moving member at once under the care of the church where he is to reside. A resolution at our district, state and national conventions favoring such a plan would speedily bring about the desired change and do much for the Master's cause.

Mischief Maker.

A Surprise in Brooklyn.

An adult's food that can save a baby proves itself to be nourishing and easily digested and good for big and little folks. A Brooklyn man says: "When baby was about eleven months old he began to grow thin and pale. This was, at first, attributed to the heat and the fact that his teeth were coming, but in reality, the poor little thing was starving, his mother's milk not being sufficient nourishment.

"One day, after he had cried bitterly for an hour, I suggested that my wife try him on Grape-Nuts. She soaked two teaspoonfuls in a saucer with a little sugar and warm milk. This baby ate so ravenously that she fixed a second which he likewise finished. It was not many days before he forgot all about being nursed, and has since lived almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. To-day the boy is strong and robust, and as cute a mischief-maker as a thirteen months old baby is expected to be.

"We have put before him other foods, but he will have none of them, evidently preferring to stick to that which did him so much good in his time of need—his old friend Grape-Nuts.

"Use this letter any way you wish, for my wife and I can never praise Grape-Nuts enough after the brightness it has brought to our household. These statements can be verified by anyone who wishes to make a visit to our home." F. F. McElroy, 256 S. 3rd St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Grape Nuts is not made for a baby food, but experience with thousands of babies shows it to be among the best, if not entirely the best in use. Being a scientific preparation of Nature's grains, it is equally effective as a body and brain builder for grown-ups.

Our Budget.

—W. B. Crewdson preached the Thanksgiving sermon at the Baptist church in Council Bluffs.

—Mr. and Mrs. Bagby, of Salt Lake City, were given a reception by the C. W. B. M. Thursday evening, Dec. 12.

—Ben F. Hill, who is at present in a meeting at North English, Ia., will become pastor at Plattsburg, Mo., Jan. 1.

—The Dayton, O., church has leased a room for a mission on the west side and will begin that work with the new year.

—T. M. Johnson, of Clinton, Ill., wishes to correspond with churches desiring the services of a pastor or evangelist.

—Baxter Waters closes his work at Lawrence, Kan., Jan. 1, after which he will be open for an engagement elsewhere as pastor.

—H. J. Hostetler, of St. Joseph, Ill., has been called for a third year by the church at that place. He preached the union Thanksgiving sermon.

—W. B. Morris, pastor First Christian church, Enid, Okla., preached the union Thanksgiving sermon in the Presbyterian church at Enid, Okla.

—R. H. Ingram has closed his work at Albia, Ia., and opened at Creston, Ia. The Albia church expressed its appreciation before he left by a handsome presentation.

—W. H. Waggoner lectured thirty-four weeks this year with his missionary institutes in Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Minnesota. The institutes are a success and are constantly winning better support.

—J. K. Shellenberger, whose acceptance of a call to the church at Albia, Ia., was announced last week, has been obliged to withdraw his acceptance, since the Minnesota state board decline to release him as corresponding secretary.

—The Christian Index of Des Moines has been sold by G. L. Brokaw. It will hereafter be edited by J. M. Rudy, and its business manager will be A. J. Marshall. Bro. Rudy has resigned as pastor of the First Christian church at Cedar Rapids.

—Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., has just recovered from an attack of grippe. His illness and the work of repairing the building of the Bible College prevented the opening of the classes until recently. The classes are now under way with favorable prospects.

—E. B. Redd has moved from Platte City to Jefferson City, Mo., and has entered upon his work at the latter place. He expresses hearty appreciation of the hospitable reception which he and his family have received from the brethren at the state capital.

—T. W. Cottingham, now in his sixth year as Nodaway district evangelist, wishes to get four monthly appointments for preaching near Kansas City. He wishes to be more at home than he can be at present. His mothers, one 80 and the other 85 years of age, are with him.

—M. J. Ferguson, of California, who has been spending about six months in Kentucky and Ohio in evangelistic and other work, was in St. Louis over Sunday and called at this office. He is westward bound, but will stop on his way to hold a few meetings as occasion may offer.

—The new Fifth Avenue church of Christ, Grand Rapids, Mich., was dedicated Dec. 8. C. B. Newnan, of Detroit, delivered two addresses and Miss Lura V. Thompson, state organizer for the C. W. B. M., was present and organized an auxiliary. With the assistance of D. Munro, state secretary, $5,000 was pledged; a very liberal offering for this church.

—The Tokyo Christian, edited by W. D. Cunningham and published monthly at Tokyo, Japan, is devoted to the progress of missionary work in that land. It is a bright and inspiring little sheet which would interest any one who is capable of being interested in missions.

—W. H. Waggoner, of Eureka, Ill., has just closed a missionary institute at Quincy, Ill. W. W. Burks, pastor, speaks of his work in terms of the highest appreciation. Bro. Waggoner's plan is original and unique and his use of missionary maps, charts and pictures is effective.

—T. H. Blenus reports that the Church St. Christian church, Jacksonville, Fla., has about held its own during the past year, notwithstanding the losses incident to the great fire of May 3. The amount raised by the congregation for all purposes averages $41 per capita for the entire membership.

—The Central Christian church, Indianapolis, Ind., has the largest Protestant Sunday-school in the city with an average attendance of about 335. At the rally day for home missions there were 425 present and the offering was $81.86. This is a school with a woman superintendent, Mrs. A. J. Clark.

—John Williams, pastor at Whiting, Ia., preached at the North Side Christian church, Chicago, the last two Sundays. He writes that the new church building at Whiting, Ia., is nearing completion, will be dedicated about the middle of January and will be one of the finest houses of worship in that part of the state.

—W. M. Taylor is producing results at San Juan, Porto Rico. He writes from that point: "Last Thursday I preached the union Thanksgiving sermon to a good house. On Dec. 1 I married a couple of natives and baptized ten bright Porto Ricans. We had one other confession at the night service."

—B. B. Tyler, who has made a conspicuous success of the Wednesday evening meetings at his church in Denver by turning them into Bible studies, is beginning a course of reading and study of the book of Acts. The book will be taken up one chapter each Wednesday evening. The suggestion is worthy of imitation.

—W. O. Stephens, pastor of the church at Crowley, La., writes that although the congregation is only about eight weeks old, the contract has been let for a beautiful little church building which will cost $4,000. We have but very few congregations in Louisiana, but if they were all as lively as this infant, we would soon have more.

—The Bethany C. E. Reading Circle will devote the next three months to Bible study. The course is planned to give a general view of the entire Bible together with a more detailed study of some of the most important parts of the Old and New Testament. For full particulars address J. Z. Tyler, 798 Republic street, Cleveland.

—E. Richard Edwards, pastor of the Church of Christ at Syracuse, N. Y., is preaching a series of Sunday morning sermons on "The Position and Influence of the Church in Modern Society." He intends in the series to give an investigation of the alleged fact that the church is losing its influence together with the reasons for this decadence, if it is a fact, and the means of counteracting the tendency.

—The church at Shoal, Ind., has organized a C. W. B. M. auxiliary with thirteen members. The prospects are said to be bright in spite of the unlucky number. Dec. 1 was observed as rally day by the Sunday-school and church. The church is interested in locating a Christian man at that point in the furniture business, and a lady as milliner. They are said to be good openings. For information address Box 133, Shoals, Ind.

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial.

It causes bunches in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"A bunch appeared on the left side of my neck. It caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. I went into a general decline. I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken six bottles my neck was healed, and I have never had any trouble of the kind since."

Mrs. K. T. SNYDER, Troy, Ohio.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills will rid you of it, radically and permanently, as they have rid thousands.

—Louisiana state mission day is Dec. 22, as set apart by the last state convention. Every church and individual disciple in the state is asked for an offering on that day. The state board is anxious to send a strong evangelist to Baton Rouge and Monroe to establish churches, but cannot do so unless funds are provided. Send all offerings to F. W. Palis, Box 188, Shreveport, La. Claude L. Jones is corresponding secretary for the state.

—B. L. Allen, pastor of the Morris street Christian church, Indianapolis, writes that a house to house canvass of the community in which the church is located reveals the fact that there are many who have been members elsewhere, but do not now have membership in any congregation, and also that many who have never been members of any church express a preference for the Christian church. There have been 117 additions to this congregation since Jan. 1.

—R. D. Patterson, one of the most prominent citizens of St. Louis and one of the oldest members of the Christian Church in this city, died of pneumonia, Dec. 15, at the age of 70. He had been a resident of St. Louis for fifty-seven years, during which time he was successful in business and prominent in all good works. It is said that the First Christian church in this city was organized in the house of his father, Dr. Joseph Patterson. A fuller obituary will appear later.

—J. F. Callahan writes from Cleveland, O.: "I am helping in the Woolsey street Sunday-school and renewing acquaintance among the Cleveland ministry and that of the neighboring churches. Bro. H. R. Cooley's name is much in the daily papers and on the tongue. He is director of charities in Mayor Johnson's cabinet and sets many prisoners free from the workhouse, with good advice no doubt. A visit to Hiram House was enjoyed last week. There is room for more such."

—Angus McKinnon, who has been business manager and office editor of the Christian Century, severed his connection with that paper on Nov. 30. The ill health of his wife and child compelled him to leave Chicago, and he is now with his family at Asheville, N. C. He is willing to accept a pastorate in a suitable locality in the south. He is a graduate of Drake in both A. B. and B. D. courses, and was for six years principal of the commercial department of Drake University.

D. N. Wetzel is holding a good meeting at Footville. Three confessions at last report.

I am in receipt of a letter from J. H. Berkey giving the pleasing information that I. N. Bussing, a United Brethren preacher of ability, has identified himself with the Church of Christ at Monroe. The Monroe church is doing well and has extended a call to Bro. Bussing to remain the fourth year at increased salary.

The work here at Rib Lake while difficult, owing to lack of a public room in which to hold our services, is nevertheless encouraging. While the brethren are mostly poor, yet they seem determined to win and think they'll build in the spring. We are going to build an outdoor baptistry this week.

I visited Ashland, a beautiful little city of 15,000 inhabitants, one of the most northernly points in the state situated on Chequamegon bay, a point of Lake Superior. We have no church there, but a few brethren. Bro. Cobb promises to defray all local expenses of meeting. Hope to try there some time in the not far distant future.

We ought to have a church at Racine. If any of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST know of any members in Racine, please notify Rupert A. Nourse, 1425 Park Ave., that city.

"The Dearth of Young Men."

In your issue of December 5 you have a piece written by B. C. Biggerstaff under the following caption, "The Dearth of Active Young Christian Men." I want to take issue with my brother and say his piece may apply to Lathrop, Mo., but it does not apply to Richmond, Va. The young men are our bone and sinew and are always ready and willing to respond to their fullest extent to every call made on them for time or money. Our churches have a large turnout of the young on all our Lord's day services, so much so that it has been commented on by visiting preachers time and again. One great cause for young men not coming to the front more generally is found in the fact that the preachers do not exert themselves enough, and the officers too often forget the old saying, "young men for war and old men for counsel." The church should always be on the warpath for souls and advancement, and it cannot follow too closely the ways of our grandfathers, for times are changing day by day. The young man is the only one to keep abreast of the tide. Encourage the young men to join in the active, forward work and they will gladly do it, but expect them to follow old time ideas and wait orders, and they will drift off every time. Richmond is proud to be able say that her pulpits are filled by such men as Carey E. Morgan, F. W. Troy, Preston A. Cave, Henry Pearce Atkins and H. H. Moore, all of them young and full of energy, fond of young men and always planning for forward movements with the young men as advisers and helps. Try this plan, my brother, and you will find the same state of affairs as exists with us.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washer Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men.

JOHN F. M.

A College at Washington City.

The Disciples are to establish a college at Washington, D. C. The project has been under consideration two or three years. Recently it was definitely decided to begin the work next year. F. D. Power and E. B. Bagby, Washington; B. A. Abbott and Peter Ainslie, Baltimore; Francis M. Applegate, New York, and Daniel E. Motley, ex officio, are the trustees. Three more trustees are to be chosen from other places.

The institution expects to do the highest order of college work from the beginning. "It is the intention of the institution to do the best grade of college work, employing men of thorough scholarship and Christian life-power." The institution will certainly have many advantages in being at Washington, the seat of the government, and where there are large libraries.

Daniel E. Motley is to be president of the college. He is surely capable of filling the place. He has done acceptable work as organizer and state evangelist in North Carolina. The Watch Tower says he is "brave, an untiring worker and, above all, a profound scholar. He is the embodiment of all that is requisite in an organizer and instructor."

Mr. Motley took the degrees of B. S. and A. B. at Milligan College in 1894. He has since taken A. M. from the same institution. He attended Johns Hopkins University three years, where he won a scholarship each year and took Ph.D. degree in 1899. Mr. Motley was one of the ablest students of the university. A Baltimore paper stated that his chief professor said, "Dr. Motley made the best examination in history in the history of the department." X. X.

Minnesota Letter.

The great Minneapolis convention had a very perceptible effect on our churches in this state. It aroused hope, imparted energy and set in motion such an evangelistic campaign as the state never before knew. J. K. Shellenberger held a meeting in Duluth resulting in 13 additions. A. D. Harmon held a meeting in his own church in St. Paul resulting in 23 additions. Simpson Ely held a meeting at Mankato resulting in 35 additions. J. O. Walton and wife held a meeting at Truman and organized a new church with 33 members. M. B. Ainsworth, of Watertown, S. D., held a meeting for his uncle, R. M. Ainsworth, at Cleveland, this state, and added 18 to the fold. J. G. M. Luttenberger was at Litchfield two weeks and added 13 to the church. J. K. Hester preached a few days at Olivia and increased the church by 10. These additions I know of, and perhaps there were others.

Simpson Ely is now in an interesting meeting with John Treloar at Austin, Minn. At last accounts there had been seven additions.

From Austin Bro. Ely will go to Rochester and join hands with the indefatigable W. W. Devine in a four weeks' siege. Dec. 29 J. K. Shellenberger will begin a series of meetings with the new church at Winona and the pastor, Wm. Baier. Bro. Shellenberger is now preaching for the church at Duluth during the absence of the pastor, C. R. Sine, visiting friends in the east. W. W. Devine, of Rochester, is in a meeting at Marion.

E. R. Russell, of Wessington, S. D., is preaching during this month for the church at Garden City, this state, and the probability is that he will become the settled pastor. The announcement made in the EVANGELIST recently that J. K. Shellenberger would become the pastor of the church at Albia, Ia., was a little previous. Our missionary board could not let him go and he is to remain as our corresponding secretary. This means much for the cause in this state; we have no other man who understands the needs of Minnesota so well.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Last Lord's day Bro. E. A. Orr and the writer exchanged pulpits. The following day Bro. Orr read a paper entitled "The Preacher the Advance Agent of the Kingdom of God," before the ministerial association of this city. The paper elicited very high praise and at the same time provoked a very warm discussion. Bro. Orr is a man of fine scholarship and broad and liberal culture.

Mankato, Minn., Dec. 12, 1901.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

We are glad to report 106 days of field work done during October and November, resulting in 11 new auxiliaries, aggregating 184 members.

Mrs. Ella B. Hall, of Springfield, succeeds Mrs. Anna Hooten as manager of Springfield district.

Every C. W. B. M. woman should know of the special work for Missouri this year, to send Miss Mattie Burgess to India and to support her for a year. This will need at least $1,000, which must be in special gifts over and above the regular monthly offerings. Gifts of any amount, including life memberships of $25 payable in two years and annual memberships, may be directed toward this fund.

In order to have a definite sum toward which auxiliaries may work, the following plan is suggested: That each auxiliary shall use its most earnest endeavors to send a sum for this purpose that shall equal $1.00 for each member, to be paid before Sept. 1, 1902, preferably in quarterly installments. Endeavorers, churches and individuals are earnestly invited to have fellowship with C. W. B. M. sisters, as they thus become a living link, by contributing for this purpose through the auxiliary. As the blessed Christmas season approaches let us remember the Christless ones, to whom Miss Burgess shall minister for us, and make, in his name, an offering of love.

All money intended for this purpose should be sent to Mrs. Helen E. Moses, plainly designated "the Mattie Burgess fund," and reported to secretary in like terms.

Eastern News Notes.

"The saloon must go!" This was the rallying cry of some one hundred delegates representing every section of our country who gathered Dec. 3, in this city to attend the sixth annual convention of the American Anti-Saloon League. As Hiram Price, president of the league, had died during the year, the first vice-president, Dr L. B. Wilson, presided and was elected president for the ensuing year.

Howard W. Russell, general superintendent, in his annual report said: "The fact that the anarchists of Chicago hatched their conspiracy of Chicago of 1886 in the north side saloons, has been forgotten. But when the nation understands that President McKinley's assassin was the son of a former saloon-keeper, that in the back room of his father's saloon in Cleveland he learned his first lesson in anarchy, that he boarded in a saloon in Buffalo and went therefrom to fire the fatal shot, and that the murderer was toasted and praised by the anarchists of Paterson and Newark in the saloons of these cities, the patriotic indignation of the people will have been aroused to such a degree against the saloon as a meeting place and personification of anarchy as will hasten the fulfillment of the prediction that within ten years the paramount question in America will be the abolishment of the saloon. In eight years a promising league has been formed out of the branches in thirty-six of the states and territories of the union."

J. L. Erwin was loudly applauded when he stated that when the Anti-Saloon League began its work in this city there were 1,100 saloons, one for every 218 persons, now there are 640 saloons or one for every 443 persons. Then one arrest for drunkenness and disorderly conduct for every 47 persons, now one for 70 persons.

In a strong address, Dr. D. J. Burrell, of New York, admonished that the canteen was scotched and not dead. The anti-saloon forces must make further demands: that a total abstinence clause be inserted in enlistment papers, that the canteen be converted into a club of healthful atmosphere, that it be supervised by officers adequately instructed in the management of a club devoted to the betterment of the men and not out of sympathy with the spirit of such an organization. Much of the credit for the success of the work during the past year is due to E. J. Dinwiddie, the legislative superintendent. At the closing session $5,000 was raised to pay off a deficiency of $7,000 which had accumulated in the last two years. The convention adjourned Dec. 5, to meet again next year in Washington.

Finley B. Sapp has accepted the unanimous call from the H Street church of this city and has begun work. Bro Sapp is a graduate of Bethany College, preached for several years in the state of Washington, has done good service as an evangelist and doubtless will build successfully upon the foundation so well laid by W. J. Wright. Bro. Wright's first duties as general eastern evangelist called him to Baltimore, setting in order the affairs of the Huntington Ave. church. J. H. Troy, the former pastor, has started an independent work. J. O. Shelburne is serving at Huntington Ave. temporarily. W. J. Wright is now in a meeting with the mission church at East Orange, N. J.

J. W. Kimmel has recently closed a short meeting with his church, Whitney Ave., with about a dozen confessions. The local union of our C. E. societies is arranging to buy a lot and build a chapel in the southeastern section of Washington. The Ninth Street church is busily preparing for the coming of Wilson and Huston Jan. 5. We have now an average attendance of nearly four hundred at Sunday-school, holding sixth place among the Protestant schools in the District of Columbia. Our church debt has been reduced by $8,500 in three and a half years. There have been seventeen additions, twelve by baptism since Oct. 1. We anticipate a successful meeting. Vermont Ave. continues her slow and steady gait and rejoices in the friskiness of her children.

The inauguration of a school or higher institution of learning has been contemplated for some time by the Disciples east of the Alleghenies. Word comes from Daniel E. Motley, of Asheville, N. C., that he proposes to start such an enterprise in this city next fall and will begin to canvass in its interests Jan. 1. Bro. Motley received his degree from Johns Hopkins University and is well qualified for the task he has undertaken.

An Unworthy Preacher.

It is a sad duty that devolves upon us, but one that we feel cannot innocently be thrown off, as it affects the well being of the cause we love, to state that Joseph S. Kelley is unworthy the confidence of the Christian brotherhood. He has preached in Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and when last heard from was in Arkansas. He is said sometimes to assume the name of "Bowlin." He is a man about 35, weighs about 150 pounds, medium height, with black hair, black moustache and dark eyes. If particulars are desired write to one of the undersigned.

THE POISE

Of a woman in perfect health attracts the eye at once. Such a woman is all too rarely seen. The most of women bear scars of suffering on their faces which no smiles can hide, and often in their very carriage betray the womanly weakness which oppresses them.

There can be no perfect health for the woman who suffers from disease of the delicate womanly organism. Her general health is so intimately related to the local health of the womanly organs that these must be cured before the general health can be established.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

makes weak women strong and sick women well. It cures womanly disorders and diseases; brightens the dull eye, rounds out the hollow cheek and gives strength for wifely duties and maternal cares.

"My health is the best now that it has been for four years," writes Mrs. Phebe Morris, of Ira, Cayuga Co., N. Y., Box 52. "I have taken but two bottles of your medicine, 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' These medicines have done me more good than all that I have ever taken before. I couldn't do my work only about half the time, and now I can work all the time for a family of four. Before I took your medicines I was sick in bed nearly half the time. My advice to all who are troubled with female weakness is to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery'—the most wonderful medicines in the world."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Preachers' Meeting at Moberly, Missouri.

According to a previously arranged plan a number of preachers met in the study of the Central Christian church of Moberly at 2 P. M. Dec. 9, to hold the first of the monthly preachers' meetings of north central Missouri.

A permanent organization was formed, of which S. B. Moore, of Moberly, was made president and W. D. McCulley, of Huntsville, secretary. The president and secretary were constituted a program committee to arrange for the next meeting which will be Jan. 21, 1902.

After the business matters were disposed of a splendid paper was read by E. M. Richmond, of Fayette, on "Where Was Christ, and What Was He Doing, Between His Death and His Resurrection?" After a number of friendly and interesting criticisms, another good paper was presented by E. M. Smith, of Centralia, on "The Preacher Before the People."

There are in Moberly, and within a radius of fifty miles, sixty-five preachers who could attend these meetings greatly to their benefit. It is the purpose to make them monthly and permanent. There will be papers and addresses on all questions of benefit to the preachers.

SERIOUS HEART DISEASE IS CURABLE.

The Eminent Specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, Succeeds After 5 to 30 Physicians Fail.

$2.50 WORTH OF TREATMENT FREE.

Heart diseases which a few years ago were incurable now readily yield to treatment. Short breath, pain in the side, oppression in the chest, palpitation, smothering spells, puffing of the ankles or dropsy, whether complicated with stomach, liver and nervous troubles or not, can be speedily relieved and soon cured. Dr. Miles will give a $2.50 course of treatment free, to prove the truth of his statement. His treatments have the great advantage of being specially prepared to suit the peculiarities of each patient.

These treatments are the result of 25 years of close study, careful research and extraordinary success. They are far in advance of the medicines used by the ordinary doctor and few show such faith in their remedies. Every sufferer should take advantage of this opportunity before it is too late.

Hon. John Gates, Ex-Representative of Iowa, after 10 years of suffering from heart, stomach, and bladder troubles, says, "I lose no opportunity to advocate Dr. Miles' Special Treatment. I am better now than for ten years, which I attribute solely to his skillful treatment."

Mrs. Mary A. Bradeen, of Rapids, Me., writes: "I consider your heart treatment worth its weight in gold to me. You have saved my life after others failed."

Philip Metz, of Montra, O., reports: "I had heart trouble for 15 years and was very near death's door when I commenced your Special Treatment. I now feel well and work every day."

Mrs. August Kronck, of Huntington, Ind., cured after 30 physicians failed; Mrs. Flora Graetor, of Bristolville, O., after 22; Mrs. R. Parker, of Mishawaka, Ind., after 16; Mrs. H. E. Cole, Pittsburgh, Pa., after 6; and Mrs. E. Norris, of Windsor, O., after five gave her up.

A thousand references to, and testimonials from Bishops, Clergymen, Bankers, Farmers, and their wives will be sent free on request.

Send at once to Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., 201 to 209 State St., Chicago, Ill., for copyrighted examination chart and pamphlet. Mention this paper.

One Reason Why I Am a Prohibitionist.

I am and have been for a number of years a third party Prohibitionist. Of course I am thoroughly convinced that I am here doing more good in the political world than in any other way; also that I am closer to the heart and doctrine of Christ than is possible for me anywhere else. The more I know of the world and the more I know of the questions involved the better I am satisfied to be counted among the Iowa Prohibition cranks. I would rather stand well one hundred years from now than to be politically popular in Iowa to day.

I am a Prohibitionist because this is at present the only way to keep the political friends of the saloon at the study of the great question of the saloon and unrighteousness.

Before the campaign just closed in Iowa the political bosses called their wise men together very much as did Herod in the study of the birthplace of the child Jesus. They propounded these questions: If we nominate our man and run him for governor, how many will vote the Prohibition ticket? What will it cost us? Can we not call in our political opponents and roll up such a majority that no one will suspect us of ever giving a thought to the Prohibitionists? Can we safely run the father of the mulct law without stirring up the churches and bringing ourselves into such a hornets' nest as we were in in the seventies and early eighties?

They decided they were safe, and they were. The churches have not yet waked up to the fact that they are moved at the will of the saloon on the political chessboard. They made a careful estimate of the Prohibition vote. They put it very, very large, as they thought. But, thanks be to God, they did not get it half high enough. Enough of us voted that ticket to keep up their study and make it more imperative than ever. We do not have to remind them that soon an election will be close. They know it and already are putting on their thinking caps to solve the problem how they may yoke the saloon man and the preacher to the political cart and get out of the mud. They will soon come to the Methodist Church for another Shaw or to the Disciples for another Drake. They have always succeeded in this game of chess and hope to always succeed in the future. But God is on the side of righteousness and is raising up a generation with eyes to see through the game, and the day of reckoning is not far off. For one, I propose to keep this Herod and his wise men at the study of this problem until they see that God is playing on the other side.

A. M. HAGGARD.

England Revisited.

On July 17 I sailed from Boston on the steamship "New England" and landed at Liverpool on the 25th. Our voyage was pleasant and prosperous, and more like a river trip than an ocean voyage—no gales, nor storms, nor thrilling scenes. Some amusing incidents, however, occurred. We had on board about forty Mormon missionaries bound for England and the Continent. Some of these were exceedingly zealous in propagating their crude and foolish doctrines. The most active were a woman about 45 and a man about 75 years of age. Both were very verbose and dogmatic, and gave evidence that they had learned their lessons well at Salt Lake City. The old man boasted that he had conducted four missions in England and had eight wives. He had with him one of them about 60 years old.

On the second day out they commenced their work in earnest. With their Bibles in hand (well interlarded with notes) they moved among the passengers on deck and read the commission, Mark 16:15,16, and the two following verses, and put special emphasis on "These signs shall follow," etc., contending that if the commission was faithfully carried out, the same results would follow, as in the days of the apostles; and that this was not a mere assertion, for the demonstration had been given and was now actually given at the present day. The woman affirmed that two years ago she had been healed of a painful disease by "the laying on of hands" of a person who was now on board the "New England," and that she had not suffered any pain since. The old man declared it was true and that he had healed hundreds of people and also conferred upon many the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of his hands. I challenged the statements of both, and also showed that they had misapplied some passages and misquoted others, and therefore I could not accept their testimony without clear and substantial proof.

Two days passed and I learned that the wife of the old man was very sick. As soon as the Mormon woman came on deck, and in the presence of a number of passengers with whom she had frequently talked, I asked her: "How is Mrs. H. this morning?" She answered: "She has had a bad night, but is improving." I replied, "Why did you not get the person who healed you to relieve her of her sickness?" Confused and discomfited she left without any reply. Soon after the old Mormon appeared on deck and I asked him: "How is your wife this morning?" He replied: "I think she is better, and I hope she will be able to come on deck to-morrow." I then asked him, "Why did you allow her to suffer when you can heal the sick by the laying on of your hands?" He made no reply but walked away. This incident put a stop to their activity in proselyting and their

May I Send You A Book?

I will mail you any book from the list below if you send me your address. With it I will send an order on your nearest druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. If you think that you need it after reading this book, you are welcome to take it a month at my risk. If it cures, pay your druggist $5.50. If it fails I will pay him myself.

This remarkable offer is made after a lifetime's experience. I have learned how to strengthen the inside nerves—those nerves that alone operate every vital organ. I make each organ do its duty by brining back its nerve power. No case is too difficult. I take the risk in all.

In five years 550,000 people have accepted this offer, and 39 in each 40 paid. They paid because they were cured, for no druggist accepts a penny otherwise. The decision is left with you.

Note that if my Restorative cures, the cost is a trifle. If it fails, it is free. Can you neglect such an offer when 39 out of 40 who write me are cured?

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 582, Racine, Wis.

bold assertions and showed up the sham and hollowness of their pretensions.

On my arrival at my son's I found several kind letters of welcome and invitation awaiting me. I commenced my labors at Chester. Here I received a most cordial welcome and preached to large and attentive audiences. The labors of Bros. M. D. Todd, J. M. Van Horn and Earl M. Todd, are held in loving remembrance and are still producing good fruits. Bro. Mark Collins had closed his ministry there a few weeks before I arrived and had returned to the United States, to the regret of not a few. The church is now in need of a good, devoted, earnest and sound gospel preacher. I hope this want will soon be supplied. Chester is a very fruitful field for the faithful preacher. The situation and the climate are delightful, the church is earnest, devoted and active, and the people are ready to hear the word and obey.

Thence I went to Birkenhead. This is the field where Bro. J. M. Van Horn achieved so many victories for Christ. He was succeeded by Bro. J. J. Halcy, and the large audiences that J. M. Van Horn gathered in the Music Hall were sustained, but since Bro. Halcy's return to the United States the hall has been given up and the church meets in a building erected on its own lot. Bro. G. Rapkin is the present preacher. He is a man of great zeal and unflagging activity. He is rising daily in the esteem of the church and people, and his audiences are increasing in size and interest. Nearly every week some are added to the church; and in the near future he hopes that the church will occupy a building on the front part of the lot that will seat from 600 to 800 people.

RESTORES EYESIGHT

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which

Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether

Chronic or Acute, Without

Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely ly a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision. J. N. Horne, Waycross, Ga., writes: "My eyes have been wonderfully benefited by Actina." W. R. Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina saved me from going blind." R. J. Reid, St. Augustine, Fla., writes: "Actina removed a cataract from my son's eye." Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I should have been blind had I not used Actina." A party of prominent citizens have organized in a company known as the New York & London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. They have bought all American and European rights for this wonderful invention. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 203, 929 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and its Disease in General, and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

Book Notes.

Make way for Santa Claus! The genial old gentleman, by the way, has the headquarters of the book department of his business with us. If you intend to include any books among your Christmas gifts—and of course you do if your friends are not wholly illiterate—you will save money by securing them of us. Note our advertisements in this issue, and if you live within 500 miles of St. Louis send for our Christmas catalogue. There is yet time for you to profit by the wonderful offers contained therein.

"'Tis true, 'tis pity; and pity 'tis, 'tis true." You put off ordering one of our $1.25 Bibles (regular $5.00 value) until now they are all gone, and it is everlastingly too late. Perhaps you thought we were only "bluffing" when we announced that we had only a few hundred, and that they would not last long. We never "bluff." We believe it is good business policy to be frank and honest in our announcements. Our supply of this "Five Dollar Bible at one-fourth price," is completely exhausted. We are sorry so many of our friends had to be disappointed. We wish we had had enough to go around, or that we could get more to sell at the same price.

But our "Five Dollar Bible at one-fourth price" was not the only good thing we offer. We have a Bagster Teacher's Bible listed at $5.00, which we offer for $2.00, and it is a better Bible in many respects than the one offered for $1.25. The binding is of finer leather, the paper is better, and it is an A1 book. The price we ask is less than the wholesale cost. We haven't so very many of these, either, and we give the same warning as we did before. If you want a copy of this Bible send immediately. You will be pleasantly surprised when you see what a beauty it is.

In our Christmas Catalogue we have given a list of suitable presents for the pastor. We wish to add to this list an édition de luxe of the Greek New Testament. It is a little book (pocket size) printed on India paper and bound in finest cloth. It is from the Oxford University press and you are aware that this means perfection in type, paper, binding, etc. Price $2.50.

A new New Testament is our No. B 1353—Testament and Psalms combined. This edition is in very large type (pica) and is just the thing for those whose eyes are not so good as they used to be. It is the clearest, plainest print imaginable. The binding, too, is beautiful—a soft morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, etc. This book comes packed in a neat box. The price is very low for such a book. Only $1.50.

If you wish the finest—the very finest Bible that can be made, send to us for the magnificent $14.50 Oxford recently described in these columns. Oxford editions have always been famous for their beauty of type and excellency of binding, and in this particular edition it would seem that perfection has been reached. This Bible is bound in sealskin—the finest, softest and most durable leather known. It is double lined with calf. It is printed on the celebrated "Oxford India Paper," which is thin as tissue, but surprisingly opaque, and very tough and strong. The book is silk sewn. The edges are what is styled "solid gold." Of course, $14.50 is not a small price to pay for a Bible but, considering its value, this Bible is cheap at $14.50. The type is large (long primer) and wonderfully clear and plain. If you purchase this Bible you have the satisfaction of knowing that you have as fine an edition of the scriptures as can be produced. Sent prepaid by registered mail, on receipt of price, $14.50.

The Praise Hymnal

"Last October the church in this city purchased 150 copies of the PRAISE HYMNAL, and everybody is delighted with them. Since we have had them we have introduced the responsive reading of the Scriptures, very admirable selections from the Psalms and portions of the New Testament, comprising the first 64 pages of the book, and the morning worship of our church has been greatly improved. The selection of hymns, both old and new, can hardly be improved. The general make-up of the book is the best. We cordially recommend the PRAISE HYMNAL to all churches contemplating the purchase of new hymn books." — WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

Alexander Campbell's works are enjoying a steadily increasing sale. Our people are coming to have a new and larger conception of Mr. Campbell's genius and of our obligation to him. We believe that our wholesale reduction in the price of Campbell's works, about a year ago, was the most notable event in the literary history of our cause. Former prices were 50 per cent. higher than those now asked. Here is the list:

Practical Christian Union.

The time has certainly come in our history as a people who have stood for the union of Christians upon "the Bible and the Bible alone" as a practical basis for such union, to undertake some more practical line of bringing about a united church. Christian union means, when reduced to its last analysis, church union, as it will be impossible to have the Christians united and the church yet divided. I will suggest a few things that will be helpful:

1. To encourage the idea of holding union meetings with the denomination that is nearest to us in faith and practice in a given community, with a Christian evangelist to do the preaching. This would show to the world that we were really in favor of union; would acquaint us with our religious neighbors in rescuing the perishing and preaching the apostolic gospel in apostolic fashion; would lead them into more correct views of the truth; and would result in the salvation of many precious souls.

I would not be particularly in favor of a "union meeting" of all the evangelical denominations and the Church of Christ, with a denomination evangelist to do the preaching. It may accomplish some good, but the converts are apt to be about "half baked" or incorrectly taught in the word of the Lord, as there are too many of these evangelists who quote Mark 16:6 in this manner, "He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

2. To send special invitations to all so-called Christian bodies to attend our revival efforts and to give such help as they feel disposed to offer, knowing that there are always great things to be had just for the asking. Jesus says, "Ask and ye shall receive." This is a rule that will generally hold good.

3. Now, since there was a standing committee of five brethren appointed at Minneapolis to represent the convention upon the subject of Christian union for the year to come, suppose said committee should devise ways to have the national convention represented at the various gatherings of the denominations by a representative man to take such course and action before the assembly as the time and place would seem to demand, using discretion and prudence in order to further the cause of Christian union, and report results at our next national convention.

This would open up the question in a manner that would go toward convincing the Christian world at large of our sincerity and that we really did want this union that we have clamored for so long by word of mouth.

Now, let us advocate it in a manner that will speak louder, as "actions always speak louder than words." If the denominations will not come to us, let us go to them. Not to join in with them in their erroneous views, but to offer them something that we have that they need, and need as much as we do, thereby making overtures looking forward to the "glad day when all Christians are one."

CALIFORNIA.

Vallejo, Dec. 1.—First three months' work in this town, location of Mare Island Navy yard, closed yesterday with 2 baptisms and 4 by letter for the period. We met in a hall, but hope soon to secure a lot. On Dec. 13 I go to Redlands, at which place I was pastor for the two years closing in August last. The return, though for a short time, will still be a joyful one, the occasion being the dedication of our beautiful house of worship which was just being completed when I left this summer to come to Berkeley Bible Seminary. The dedication has been delayed until the new pastor should come, Bro. Conley, of Lexington, Ky.—PAUL McREYNOLDS.

ENGLAND.

Southampton, Dec. 3.—Two recently added by baptism and 1 by letter. Though resulting in but 1 confession, Bro. Earl's recent ten days' meeting did much in interesting former friends. My second anniversary as pastor was celebrated Nov. 17. There were 15 baptisms during the year and 6 added by letter, making a total of 48 for the two years. We have paid $1,500 off our indebtedness and are $125 per annum nearer self-support than we were two years ago. The annual report of our English work just issued shows that we raised more money than any other one of our English churches the past year, both for home work and for missions; offerings for the latter aggregating over $400. Bro. F. Cook, of Southport, gave us a donation during the year of $300 on our debt fund.—LESLIE W. MORGAN.

ILLINOIS

Bellmont, Dec. 9.—Our series of meetings which began Nov. 14, 1901, conducted by Evangelist Z. A. Harris, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., closed Sunday evening, Dec. 8. There were 17 accessions; 10 baptisms, 3 by statement and 4 reclaimed.—B. FRENCH, JR.

Bloomington, Dec. 11.—The Uplike revival in New Castle, Pa., closed the night of Dec. 9, with 145 additions; 25 the last night.—GEO. A. WEBB, singer.

Camp Point, Dec. 13.—By reason of disappointment from smallpox, my singer, Bro. L. D. Sprague, will be open for engagement for January. He is one of the best in the brotherhood.—R. G. OMER Dorchester, Dec. 11.—I have just closed a meeting at Therburnville. One man made confession. Two took fellowship. The church was reorganized with 35 members. We have excellent brethren there. The Bible-school and all the church departments are in good working order. This meeting was conducted by the writer under the auspices of the fourth district. The church is a missionary church. The boys and girls' rally day, which was observed at the Gillespie church, was a great success.—JOHN G. M. LUTTENBERGER.

Le Roy, Dec. 10.—Our meeting of 4 weeks closed last Lord's day with 11 accessions; 8 baptisms, 2 by statement and 1 from U. B.'s, who had been baptized. Mrs. Nona McCormick, of Jamestown, Ind., led the singing to satisfaction of all. The preaching was done by the pastor. This was the third meeting I have held here in the two years' pastorate; total number of accessions 87. In a short meeting at Holder, Ill., there were 3 baptisms not reported.—F. A. SWORD, pastor.

Omega.—One Thanksgiving day a 20 days' meeting closed at Mt. Moriah, 6 miles south of Salem, Ill.; 140 added, 31 by baptism. Charley Wood, of Wayne county, conducted the meeting.—W. J. SIMER.

Sterling, Dec. 9.—We have closed a short meeting with 17 added; 1 reclaimed, three letters and the others conversions. Brother Thad. S. Tinsley did the preaching.—W. E. SPICER, pastor.

Summum, Dec. 9.—Two confessions at regular services here yesterday. Reorganized the Kerton Valley church Saturday, with about 40 members present. The total number will be about 60. Will organize C. E. society there this week. The outlook for them is indeed promising.—CHESTER A. BAIRD.

Watseka, Dec. 7.—A husband and wife were added here by letter last Sunday, making 14 in a little over 4 weeks. This congregation has granted me the privilege of holding a meeting at Laporte, Tex., this winter.—B. S. FERRALL.

Windsor, Dec. 8.—I closed the year's work at Ash Grove, Dec. 1; 14 additions and church greatly strengthened. There were 33 additions for the year, preaching one-fourth time. I have accepted a call from Mulberry Grove one-fourth time the coming year.—A. H. HARRILL.

INDIANA.

Logansport, Dec. 11.—Our 5 weeks' meeting closed last Sunday night with 44 added; 31 were by confession, 6 by letter, 3 from the M. E.'s, 2 from the New Lights, 1 from the Evangelicals, 1 from Dunkards. Mrs. J. E. Powell, our soloist, deserves great credit. Much judicious advertising was done by the committee. No clap-trap methods were resorted to. Finance committee came out with money in the treasury after paying all expenses.—A. M. HOOTMAN.

Muncie, Dec. 9.—Our meeting at Charleroi, Pa., closed with 33 additions; 23 by confession and baptism. That makes 62 additions in our 8 weeks' work in Pennsylvania, which is encouraging for this conservative country. We will now rest till after the holidays.—A. MARTIN.

Terre Haute, Dec. 9.—Yesterday we had 3 additions to the church at Georgetown, Ill., and 1 the Sunday before at Indianola, Ill.—LEONARD V. BARBERE.

IOWA.

Clarksville, Dec. 12.—One more addition since our last report; 30 since I took the work here in October. I will hold a meeting at Greene, Ia., after the holidays.—A. R. ADAMS.

De Soto, Dec. 11.—We have just closed a good meeting here held by home forces, except that Bro. Garmony, a fine chorus leader from Des Moines, was with us over a week. There were 16 additions, 11 by baptism, 2 from Baptists, 1 reclaimed, 1 by letter, 1 from U. B. church.—J. E. DENTON.

Manning, Dec. 9.—Two more added in my meeting at Fiscus. A total of eight in two weeks.—F. A. SHEETZ.

Martelle, Dec. 9.—Two were added to our number by statement at our evening service yesterday who had never been identified with any church.—SAM B. ROSS.

Murray, Dec. 6.—Fifteen additions to date in our meeting here. Good interest and packed houses. F. G. Tyrrell gives No. 3 on our lecture course here next Wednesday in his lecture on "Sleepy Heads."—W. W. WHARTON.

Oskaloosa, Dec. 9.—Our revival meeting lasted 4 weeks and closed only because we had previous agreed with the other churches to join in a union meeting led by Dr. Gordon, Cleveland, O.; 68 accessions to the church: 36 the visible results, 40 confessions, 10 by statement, 9 by letter and 9 from other churches. The pastor, J. P. McKnight, did the preaching and has made active preparations for taking care of the new converts.—A. HULL.

KANSAS.

Belleville, Dec. 10.—Bro. W. H. Scribner, of Girard, Kan., assisted me in a short meeting which closed last Thursday evening with 9 additions; 5 by baptism and 4 by statement, and much good seed sown for future gathering.—C. HENDERSON.

Council Bluffs, Dec. 9.—Two additions here yesterday, one confession, one by statement.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Glasco, Dec. 6.—We begin a meeting on Lord's day, Dec. 8, with J. W. Gaines, of Perkins, Okla., as evangelist. One confession at our last regular service.—C. E. F. SMITH.

Harper, Dec. 5.—I have moved here from Claflin, Kan., and give half time to this church and half to Bluff City. Have been in a meeting at Harper two weeks with 1 confession and 4 by letter and statement. I preached the Thanksgiving sermon in the Presbyterian church.—B. F. STATLINGER.

Horton, Dec. 10.—One confession last Sunday evening. One by letter not reported. I also preached the union Thanksgiving sermon in the Free-will Baptist church.—L. H. BARNUM.

Leavenworth, Dec. 10.—Please report one more addition for Dec. 8.—S. W. NAY.

Soldier, Dec. 11.—One addition from the Baptists at our services last Lord's day evening.—CHAS. A. POLSON.

Soldier.—Our meeting closed here Monday, Dec. 2. It continued three weeks and besides the general uplift to the church and community, there were 40 accessions. C. A. Polson, the pastor, is highly respected and will make his mark among us.—R. L. McHATTON, 1911 Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

Thayer, Dec. 9.—T. A. West, of Wellington, Kan., has just closed a meeting for us, which was one of the best meetings we have ever had; 21 were added to the church, 13 by conversion, 2 from the Methodists, 1 from the Presbyterians, 1 from the Congregationalists and 4 by commendation.—PASTOR.

Wichita, Dec. 12.—One hundred and thirty accessions here; 67 one day, 24 another day. New house will be built.—J. V. COOMBS, A. E. DUBBER, pastor.

MINNESOTA.

Modelia, Dec. 3.—We held a short meeting for this church with the hope of reviving the cause here, and succeeded in encouraging them to try to engage a pastor with Truman and Horicon. Two baptisms.—J. ORVILLE WALTON & BELLE FORD WALTON, evangelists.

MISSOURI.

Appleton City, Dec. 8.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Center schoolhouse, St. Clair county, last night with eight additions; seven by confession and baptism and one by relation. Our meetings were well attended, usually overflowing, good order and an unusual interest awakened. The strength of the church is in its young people.—J. N. MURPHY.

Ashland Church, Howard Co., Mo.—Our pastor, A. N. Lindsay, has closed a meeting here with 28 accessions to the church, including men who have resisted for years and had stood out like landmarks in the community.

Bellflower, Dec. 9.—R. B. Havener, of Windsor, Mo., has just closed a two weeks' meeting here; six additions and the church wonderfully revived. Bro. Havener is one of the strong men in the state.—H. C. HUPP.

Brumley, Nov. 29.—Our last meeting at Freedom, Camden county, was continued 7 days. Five added by baptism and two by relation. Elder J. C. Thompson, who is doing good work at Bramley, preached one excellent sermon during the meeting; Elder Jos. Foster led the singing.—S. O. BURK.

Buffalo, Dec. 9.—Just closed a meeting at Half Way, Mo., with 8 added to the church; 5 by confession, one by letter, two by statement. Bro. R. C. Harrell is the pastor and helped me in the meeting. He began on his second year's work there the first of December. My next meeting will be at Elkland, Mo.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

Carthage, Dec. 12.—Four more added at Jasper at last appointment, three by confession and baptism. The Christian church is now unquestionably at the head of the profession in that town and her responsibility is correspondingly increased.—M. S. JOHNSON.

Chillicothe, Dec. 9.—One confession last night.—FRANK W. ALLEN

Clinton, Dec. 8.—Received seven to-day at regular services. Two were confessions, three by statement, one from the Baptists and one from the Methodists. One by confession during the week, one reclaimed. Our Junior C. E. has about 50 members. First Sunday in January is our Sunday-school rally day.—E. H. WILLIAMSON.

Clinton.—I have held the following meetings recently: at Union, Mo., in August, 29 additions; Holliday, Mo., in September, 12 additions; Middletown, Mo., one week in September, 12 additions; Richards, Mo., latter part of September, 35 additions; New Harmony, Mo., in November, 46 additions.—J. J. LOCKHART.

ast week. Nine services and nine accessions.—J. WINBIGLER.

Harris, Dec. 9.—At a recent meeting held by J. R. Blunt at Duffield schoolhouse, Sullivan county, 16 were added; eight by baptism and the rest by relation. The meeting was short, but was a grand success. J. R. Blunt has now returned to his work in south Missouri.—R. V. BLUNT.

Huntsville, Dec. 10.—Closed a three weeks' meeting recently at Salisbury with 13 accessions. Much interest and immense audiences, many were turned away unable to get in the house. Outlook hopeful.—W. D. MCULLEY.

Huntsville, Dec. 10.—Spent a part of last Sunday with C. M. Chilton of the First church in St. Joseph. Few men are working harder or with more success. He had just closed a meeting at Trenton with 108 additions. Had nine additions at this home church Sunday. Has had 450 additions this year and has missed but two Sundays from his own pulpit. The auditorium of the First church has been greatly beautified recently and is now one of the handsomest in the state. Bro. Chilton is greatly loved by his congregation.—LOUIS S. UPP.

Kirkville, Dec. 12.—There were 4 additions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHOTT.

Mound City, Dec. 12.—Our meeting with home forces began Oct. 20, and closed Dec. 2, resulting in 46 additions to the church, 36 by baptism, 3 by letter and 7 by statement; 11 by baptism, 4 by letter and 2 by statement not previously reported make a total of 63 since last report. The church has extended me a call to continue indefinitely. Last Monday night a large number of members visited the parsonage and left substantial evidences of their good will.—GEO. L. PETERS.

New London, Dec. 10.—Our meeting is one week old and there have been 31 additions. My brother in the flesh, Wm. T. Brooks, of Ladoga, Ind., is an evangelist of power, and Bro. Lapp of his congregation is a fine leader of song.—CRAYTON S. BROOKS.

Pope, Dec. 8.—Dec. 2, W. N. Porter closed a two weeks' meeting here with 25 additions, 11 baptisms, 13 by statement, one reclaimed. Bro. Porter has been employed for one-fourth time.—M. E. VOGLE.

Salisbury, Dec. 10.—I closed a two weeks' meeting at Forest Green, Mo., on Dec. 8, with 25 additions, ten of whom were baptized, four from the Baptists, two from the Methodists, eight by statement and one reclaimed. A church was set in order with a full complement of officers; I will minister to their spiritual needs for the coming year at one-fourth time. The church starts out with great zeal and fair prospects. Miss Gussie Ward, of Fayette, Mo., led the singing with good results. Steps are being taken to build a church in the village with good prospects of success. I start Friday for Mountain Grove, Mo., to engage in three meetings in order. Pray for our success.—A. C. YOCUM.

St. Joseph, Dec. 13.—Wyatt Park Christian Church, five baptisms last Sunday at regular service.—M. M. GOODE.

Trenton, Dec. 9.—Our meeting of five weeks closed last night with 117 additions. Bro. Chilton, of St. Joseph, was with us all the time except Sundays.—C. F. STEVENS.

Windsor.—In a meeting here with home forces we had 49 additions, 42 baptisms in 18 days.—W. F. HAMANN.

Windsor, Dec. 9.—Just closed a short meeting at Bellflower with 8 additions, and 15 in my last meeting at New Haven, Mo.—R. B. HAVENER.

NEBRASKA.

Deweese, Dec. 10.—Just returned home from a good meeting near Mt. Grove, Mo.; 25 sermons, 42 additions; 21 by confession and baptism, 4 from the Baptists, one from Mormons. The brethren had thought of disbanding but now their number has been doubled and they will go on.—E. W. YOCUM.

Trumbull, Dec. 9.—Closed a 4 weeks' meeting here last evening with home forces. Fifteen additions; 4 by statement as former members, 1 reclaimed, 3 by confession and 7 from the sects. Best meeting held here in 8 years, as the additions were all adults and 9 of them heads of families.—O. L. ADAMS.

OHIO.

Dayton, Dec. 13.—Closed a splendid meeting at Nelsonville, O., last Sunday night, with 40 added; 17 the last night. Am holding a short meeting for the Baptists here. Don't any one get scared, I've done it before. Go home next week after an absence of 10 weeks, and to Somerset, south Kentucky, for January. This has been a good year for me.—H. C. PATTERSON.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Enid, Dec. 7.—Our revival meeting is in progress with John H. Swift, Bellflower, Ill., doing the preaching. Thirty additions to date.—W. B. MORRIS, pastor.

Norman, Dec. 9.—We closed our meeting last night here at Norman with 21 added. We had 13 confessions and 8 or herwise. Several others will unite soon. Have had 30 added since I came on Oct. 13, 1901. We have a good, live Y. P. S. C. E. Our Junior Endeavor is prospering under Mrs. Creason's management. There are 32 on the roll. Our Bible-school is prospering.—J. G. CREASON.

Ponca City, Dec. 12.—Meeting here 12 days old with 25 accessions. T. H. Popplewell is the much loved pastor and is doing the preaching.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE.

OREGON.

Monmouth, Dec. 3.—Results of our recent meeting are, 8 baptisms, 1 from "Church of God" and 2 by letter.—E. C. WIGMORE.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Newcastle, Dec. 2.—Our meeting continues with interest; 22 confessions and 1 by statement last night, making 92 in three weeks.—UPDIKE & WEBB.

TEXAS.

Clifton, Dec. 5.—Had one meeting of 21 additions, another of 5 at Valley Mills, 12 miles from here. This place is largely a Norwegian town. I have a broad field here.—THOS. G. NANCE.

Gainesville, Dec. 10.—We have had excellent results since I have been here. Crowded house continually. Will go to opera house Sunday night to preach on "Our Position." Eight added at regular services. Had rally and nearly doubled Sunday-school. Offering that day was $34.60. Gave my lecture on Palestine to a $170 house. Lectured to a $110 house on Mohammed sm. Will put one of our church papers in every home in the church this next week.—C. R. SCOVILLE.

Marfa, Dec. 10.—The Marfa church has recently paid off the entire indebtedness on our house, making the final payment of $408. We had 4 additions to the church at Alpine last Sunday, 2 by baptism.—T. D. SECREST.

VIRGINIA.

Oranda, Dec. 3.—I have just closed a meeting with the church here resulting in 12 confessions. D. S. Henkel, of Basic City, assisted and did most of the preaching.—W. L. DUDLEY.

Fredericksburg—Herbert Yeuell conducted a meeting at Fredericksburg lasting 26 days, resulting in 60 added, 55 of whom are adults. He is now in his second meeting with the Lynchburg, Va., church where his meeting lasting 18 days resulted in 66 added. A fine meeting has opened, 17 added first 8 days. He goes next to Rowan Avenue, Pittsburg, for a meeting.

WASHINGTON.

Elma, Dec. 10.—One conversion Sunday, Dec. 8. Work moving along splendidly. We are proud of our prayer-meeting. It is quite a success.—DANIEL FRUNDLE.

Family Circle

A Christmas Carol.

By J. M. Lowe.

I can hear the joy bells ringing
In the coming Christmas time,
I can hear the children singing
To their glad and merry chime.

From childland come the voices
Ringing sweet and clear,
And every heart rejoices
For Christmas soon is here.

A million swell the chorus
In echoes loud and long,
The centuries before us
Have joined the happy song.

From lands beyond the distant seas
Flows back the sweet refrain,
And ages old in mysteries
Breathe out the holy strain.

There falls a glory from above
Of soft and radiant light
As shepherds saw the star above
Dear Bethlehem that night.

The soul has burst its fetters,
The doom of sinful thrall
Is writ in golden letters
On every prison wall.

Then set the joy bells ringing,
For Christmas time has come;
The children all are singing,
There's gladness in the home.

Do not forget the sad ones
Who need a gift of love;
Do not forget the bad ones
Estranged from God above.

Then give a gift to others
Of blessed gospel light,
That they may help their brothers
Who stumble in the night.

Give thanks to God that Jesus's birth
Has conquered sin and wrong,
And driven darkness from the earth
And filled the world with song.

Using Pictures in the Sunday-school.

A large carbon photograph of the "Sistine Madonna" hung above the teacher's desk in a primary schoolroom in one of our cities. It came as a surprise to the children. They were all delighted. When they passed out for recess that morning, one little girl remained in her seat, with her head bowed upon her arms on the desk. The teacher went to her kindly, and asked:

"What is it, Mary?"

"Oh, that picture!" replied Mary. "It is so beautiful!"

"Yes, it is lovely. But you are crying, Mary. What is the matter?"

"When I look at that picture, I feel as if I never wanted to do a naughty thing again."

Miss Lovell taught an ungraded school amid the Massachusetts hills. One boy bothered her perpetually. He seemed to be, not vicious, but just careless and uneasy, interested in everything but his lessons. She had moved him from seat to seat, until at last he sat directly in front of the teacher's desk—within reach. One morning this boy John found the "Madonna of the Chair" peeping at him from a little easel on Miss Lovell's desk. Every time he looked up, the sweet lady caught his eye. By noon John was less restless. That afternoon he was almost a good boy. His teacher wondered, never suspecting the cause. When she came into the school yard next morning, behold! there sat John on the steps. What could have happened? As she approached, he came to meet her.

"Miss Lovell, do you suppose the pretty lady and the babies will be there this morning?"

"John, my dear, there shall always be a pretty picture there for you, if you say so."

Children are touched by beauty. Boys do not act in a parlor as they do in a barn. Girls love pretty things. The public school teachers have a suspicion that Emerson was not talking nonsense when he said, in his "Ode to Beauty":

"All that's good and great with thee Works in close conspiracy."

Hence our public-school rooms are becoming beautiful. Beautiful school furniture has eradicated vandalism; beautiful school walls and beautiful school work will eradicate don't-care-ism.

Since the day when Charles Dudley Warner wrote of the Gothic revival in his "Backlog Studies" Sunday-school rooms have improved in some respects, and yet his words, if quoted, might not be too wide the mark even now. What attraction can a stuffy, dimly lighted, bare-walled room, with ugly, uncomfortable furniture, offer to children who attend school five days a week in a cheerful, beautiful, modern schoolroom, with flowers blooming in the windows? It is high time for the churches to give to their children "beauty for ashes, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," to "beautify the place of his sanctuary and make the place of his feet glorious." Among the things upon which the children of the kingdom, young or old, are to think continually, are included "whatsoever things are lovely."

Christmas is a good time to begin. Make the primary department a present of "The Divine Shepherd," by Murillo,—not a cheap, poor print, but a fine carbon photograph a yard across. For the intermediate department, purchase Hofmann's "Christ in the Temple," and for adults his "Christ and the Rich Young Man."

Who is to do all this? You, my friend, reading this—you may have that honor. Start a subscription paper at once. People will give more for beauty than they will for repairs. And, when the beautiful things are in place, and your eye feasts upon them week after week, and their message goes to your heart, you will feel well repaid. But not for that reason would I urge you to act. Do it for the sake of the children. Pictures do not talk, yet "there is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world," and children love pictures.

That is why pictures should be used in teaching. Christmas is a good time to begin that too. Here is a series of pictures (each may be had for one cent) that will tell the sweet story of old more graphically, more interestingly, than it can be told in words by any teacher living—unless he be a genius at storytelling: "The Annunciation," Guido Reni; "Arrival at Bethlehem," Merson; "The Angel and the Shepherds," Ploekhorst; "The Holy Night," Correggio; "The Arrival of Shepherds," Lerolle; "Worship of the Magi," Hofmann; "Madonna and Child," Murillo; "Joseph's Dream," Crespi; "Flight into Egypt," Hofmann; "Repose in Egypt," Merson; "Holy Family," Murillo.

With little children, the pictures immediately generate questions: "What is this?" "What is that for?" "Why is it so?" The wise primary teacher is content to answer questions. When the pupil questions, and the teacher answers, more is being learned usually, both by teacher and pupil, than when the teacher questions and the boy answers—or tries to answer.

With an intermediate grade, a copy of Guido's "Annunciation," for example, in the hand of each pupil, a teacher might proceed to question somewhat as follows: "What has the artist represented? Let us read the account in Luke 1:26-30, 35. Which phrase suggests the instant which the artist has selected in his picture? Why is Mary represented as kneeling, and with her hands crossed? Why are her eyes cast down? Why are the books introduced? Why is the angel represented as pointing to heaven? Why are clouds beneath him? Why does he hold a stalk of lilies? Why are the cherubs introduced? Why that brightness above the clouds, and the beam of light falling towards Mary? Why is Mary's head crowned with a halo of light?" Almost every one of these questions may be answered by quoting a verse of scripture, or, rather, almost all answers, if correct, may be backed by a verse of scripture, and with older pupils the scriptural references should be found and compared (for example, Luke 1:26-38; 1 Sam. 1:9-18; Luke 1:8-13; 3:22; Hos. 6:5; Ps. 104:3; Exod. 4:1-5; Esther 4:11; Song, 2:2; Num. 17:8; Matt. 18:10; 2 Sam. 22:10-12).

Such teaching is not soon forgotten. The appeal is through two senses instead of one—through eye-gate and ear-gate; and the impression made, I sometimes think, is as the square of the number of senses through which we appeal. Fourth of July simply possesses a boy. Why? Because he hears it, and sees it, and feels it. Fourth of July takes the boy as the children of Israel took Jericho,—upon all four sides at once. If we could always do it that way, no boy would remember!

Pictures used in teaching lead children to remember, not only the story, but the picture itself; therefore let us use only the best pictures available. Reproductions from masterpieces by some one of the photographic processes are best. Avoid, above all else, cheap, amateurish representations of the face of Christ. Let the pupils see often such representations of that face as Lionardo's in the Brera Gallery and in his "Last Supper"; Raphael's, in "The Transfiguration"; Carl Bloch's, in "Christ the Consoler"; Hofmann's, in "Christ and the Rich Young Man"; and that wondrous face by Cornicelius, in "Jesus Tempted of Satan." Let us give the children the best. We say, "in one ear and out the other." True, but we never say, "in one eye and out the other."—Henry Turner Bailey, state supervisor of drawing in Massachusetts, in the Sunday-school Times.

The Secret of Success.

This world is old but still it whirrs us on Through days and nights. The years are fitting past
Like summer clouds, some dark with moaning storms
While others soft and cooling shadows cast.
Two lives we live—the life of Man and Soul—
One known by man and lived upon the earth,
One known to none, none save the Mighty
One
Who guides the Whole and gave to Soul its birth.
'Tis strange that man so oft is decked in snares
And chatters idle nothings, while the Soul
Lies far away, in weariness and pain, While lightnings flash and heavy thunders roll.
Again, the soul beholds a dream of joy,
And journeys through a land of sweetest blooms.
While man still dwells on earth and fights his way
Among the beasts that feast amid the tombs.
If we would win, the Soul must dwell with man;
Then beasts will fear and fearing harm us not,
And men will follow as we point the way,
And seek to find the sword with which we fought.

The Whirligigs Who Lived in the Pond.

The Water Boatman (who was an insect and not a man) floated on his back on the placid water, enjoying the warm beams of the sun.

Close by a party of Whirligig Beetles were dancing merrily round and round.

A cloud of smaller insects blew along with a soft puff of air. The Whirligigs stopped frolicking, caught as many as they could, and feasted upon them, then settled to their merry round again.

The Boatman dipped his hind legs, which he used as oars, in the water, feathered them, and paddled himself nearer, to watch these crazy bugs better, when behold! they suddenly took wing and flew away. What was the matter?

Ah! a hungry fish had fancied he saw in them an excellent meal. They saw the hungry gleam, and had flown away. Well, well!

Then he caught sight, out of the corner of his eye, of his favorite insect, and hastily sculled himself onward in pursuit.

There was a sort of a flash and a soft hum. A large and brilliant Dragon Fly flitted by, poised over this same very delicious insect, snatched it in his jaws, and ate it greedily.

As the Dragon Fly flitted on the Boatman rowed himself after it as fast as possible, hoping, perhaps, to get another dinner from it or to pay the Dragon Fly back.

A few Skippers, skimming aimlessly over the surface of the water, determined to see what he was after.

He passed behind a large stone. On the other side he saw the Whirligigs, still at the old gay round. Even as he spied them, while he was yet under the shelter of the stone, a small bird swooped down from a tree hard by, hoping to seize a Whirligig or two for her dinner. Immediately the Whirligigs dived into the clear water.

"Hold on! hold on!" cried the Boatman, warily watching the bird. "Don't you know there are fish down there? Do you want to get eaten?"

The Skippers had scurried away. A tiny Whirligig arose beside him. "If the bird is closer than the fish," he asked, "don't you think it would be the most likely to eat me up?"

"Certainly, certainly. Do you mean to say that they both take pleasure in eating you? Why, that isn't fair—not any more fair than that the Dragon Fly should steal my dinner!"

"By the way, he's gone now. Let's go ask somebody why things are not fair. Whom shall we ask? Do you know anybody especially wise?"

"I only know how to watch for my enemies and dinner," returned the Whirligig.

"There is a wise Crawfish," timidly called a Water Skipper from the distance. "She lives in the crevice under the big stone at the head of the brook."

The Water Boatman rowed on, feathering his legs, the Whirligig danced beside him, and the Skippers trailed behind. When they came to the big stone they called in a timid bug call: "O, Miss Crawfish!"

She thrust out her horns and one great claw, then the other, and peered between them.

"Well," she snapped when she had examined them, "I hope you don't want me to teach buglets too!"

"No, no," they cried. "We only came to ask you why things should be so unfair."

"Unfair? What do you mean? I'm sure you all look plump and luscious enough. You've had plenty to eat."

"No," squeaked the Boatman. "It isn't that. Why should that Dragon Fly be so beautiful, and yet come and steal my dinner?"

"Do you suppose the Dragon Fly lives without eating? Do you think that because he is pretty he should live on air? H'm! Beauty don't make anything. It's the bug that hustles who gets all the goodies."

"Of course," murmured the Boatman, slowly edging away—those great claws did look so dangerous. "But why should the Whirligigs dance so merrily when the hungry fish are hunting them in the water and the hungry birds on top of it?"

It had never occurred to the Beetles before that they had such a hard time; but since they had been pitied, they felt much aggrieved, and listened eagerly.

"H'm!" said the Crawfish, "Watch them the next time they dance, and see how hard it is to tell one from t'other. The birds, looking down, and the fish, looking up, get them so mixed up they have to stop for a minute, to make sure of the plumpest, and that gives the Beetles a chance to get away. Good dodge that!" Turning to the Whirligigs, she continued; "You dive when it's birds and fly when it's fish, don't you?"

"Yes, yes! And it's quite exciting."

"And you have four eyes: one pair to look up, to watch for birds and dinner, and the other pair to look down, to watch for fish and dinner. Isn't that so?"

"O, yes. We have great sport, though it is dangerous."

"You see," said the Crawfish, "those are only the Whirligigs' troubles, and they are provided to meet them. We all have troubles, you and I and everything, and we are provided to meet them in some way. Don't you think that if the Whirlies made a fuss and moaned about it they couldn't be so gay, nor dance around, and so would be easily caught?"

"Yes, indeed."

"Now they make pleasure out of it, and are always ready for their enemies."

"Your troubles are?"

"Mercy!" Chuck! Splash!

A small boy passing had thrown a stone into the pool. The bugs all hurried away, and the Crawfish drew back into her hole. As they went it seemed as though a voice came through the water, calling: "More troubles."—Abbie Sharpe in the Children's Visitor.

The Cowboy's Indian Barometer.

While several officials were exchanging stories a few nights ago in Washington, Mr. Milton E. Ailes, assistant secretary of the treasury, turned the topic to "highway robbery" by relating an anecdote he had heard during a recent outing, says the Saturday Evening Post.

"It was told by our stage driver in Yellowstone Park," said Mr. Ailes, "and was intended to throw light on the reputed chivalry of western highwaymen. A stage was held up in the Black Hills. Among the passengers was a school teacher who by dint of painful frugality had saved up enough to invest in a ticket to her home in Vermont and return, with six dollars left over for expenses en route.

"Oh, Mr. Highwayman," she implored, "do not take my money! It is all I have, and without it I shall not be able to continue my journey to my widowed mother in distant Montpelier."

"The bandit opened her purse and surveyed the six silver dollars. Tears started in his eyes, and he said chokingly: 'No, marm, I'll not rob you entire; I'll split the difference; here's three dollars back, and God bless ye!'"

"That reminds me of an incident in my own career," observed Secretary Gage. "You wouldn't take me for an Indian fighter, perhaps, and that's where your judgment would be most sound. It happened years ago before the Union Pacific was completed to Denver. Julesburg was the end of the line. I met on the west-bound train eleven acquaintances from Chicago. My destination was the terminus of the road, but they were going on by stage one hundred and sixty miles farther to Denver.

"Several stages had been attacked recently by roving Indian bands, and the excitement and dangers of the approaching trip of my friends were uppermost in our minds. Although I had no actual business in Denver I began to long to share the peril of the journey. Under orders of General Sherman, then commanding the Department of the Missouri, all passengers traveling through that country were armed, and with our repeating rifles we felt unusually brave. As our train pulled into Julesburg a stage arrived from the Colorado metropolis, and among its passengers was a typical frontiersman. His hair was picturesquely long. His buffalo-skin coat came to his heels, and when it flapped back it disclosed at his belt a brace of brave-looking weapons. He looked out amusedly from under his slouch hat at our tenderfoot company.

"I accosted him and found he had come all the way from Denver.

"Tell me," said I, "if you had no business in Denver and some of your friends were going there, would you accompany them just for the pleasure of the trip?"

"Stranger, if I had no business in Denver I'd go in the other direction," he replied, sweeping his arm toward the Mississippi river.

"There is real danger, then, from the Indians between here and Denver?"

"Exactly," he replied; "the scalping business is the chief industry of the Colorado plains just at present."

"But you got through all right," I persisted.

"Yes, but I know their ways; know how to watch 'em and scare 'em off."

"That was the knowledge I sought, and I asked him to explain, which he did in detail.

"Some of your party," he went on, "wants to sit on the seat with the driver. These drivers bear watching, for sometimes they'll get down, cut the traces, and streak out astride a mule, leaving the passengers to face the Indians.

"The thing to do is to watch both driver and mules. The mule is the barometer of the prairie. He knows when a storm is coming, and he can sniff an Indian farther than a man can see him. You mustn't think of sleeping on them hundred and sixty miles. Just sit with your rifle between your knees and hold it tight. As soon as the mules snort warning of the Indians the driver should pull the team around short. All the party should then get out and make ready to fire. You'll see the Indians coming nearer and nearer. Suddenly they'll rush toward you, shooting as they advance, and shrieking their battle-cry. That's the time for you to display nerve. Pick them off one by one with your rifles, at the same time giving prolonged imitation of their war-whoop—thus:—" and he emitted a series of alarming savage yells.

"Keep up a steady fire now, and, above all, don't let up a moment on the war-whoop. The Indians are brave in their challenge, but they don't relish the answering defy."

"I wasn't certain," continued Secretary Gage, "that I could remember all this, so I asked him to repeat the program.

"When he got to the war-whoop part of the performance, and attempted to drill me in making the sounds, I suddenly got an inspiration. 'I've decided not to go!' I exclaimed.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"I shouldn't have any breath left to make that war-whoop," I replied."

"When you have leisure," said a caller to the city editor, "I would like to speak to you." "All right; come after I'm dead."

With the Children.

J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Runaways.—X.

In the privacy of their room Mr. and Mrs. Dayton discussed the orphans. "We must remember," said the farmer, "that we have only known them two days; pretty short acquaintance, isn't it? Their own uncle and aunt think they stole the ring and watch."

"But we don't!" said his wife. "Who could think so and look into their faces and hear them talk?"

"But we must be on our guard," cautioned her husband. "Remember, their uncle and aunt have heard them talk, too. It seems impossible that they can be thieves and hypocrites; but you know some children make their best impression at first, and after that something's always cropping out. Now, what we want to do is to keep an eye open for the cropping. But if they prove themselves, I don't see why they shouldn't live here, do you? Our boy will be away at college every year, now, and that little Emily—she'll keep your mind off of—she'll keep things from being lonesome. And there's good plowing in Zep for next spring, and Harry, too."

"And they are so much help about the house—if they hold out," assented Mrs. Dayton. "Of course it's a good deal more expense, but if they hold out they'll pay us back, and then—we don't have to count our biscuits, anyway."

The children were awakened at half-past four the next morning, and they felt as if they didn't know themselves, but had been roused to find themselves entire strangers. They dressed, half asleep, and sat around the breakfast table blinking at the lamp and wondering how Mr. Dayton could eat bacon in the night time. "We ain't hungry," Harry apologized when Emily had shaken her head at the bacon.

"Oh, come on and eat," said Zep. "This is part of the job, ain't it, Mr. Dayton?"

The farmer laughed. "You'll get used to this after a while," he said cheerfully.

"You reckon so?" inquired Emily doubtfully, as she clapped her hand over her mouth to keep in a yawn.

"Children," said Mrs. Dayton with a sigh, "do you know trouble is always sure to come after a while?" She wore a little smile, and spoke in a grown-up way which indicated that her words were addressed rather to her husband. However, Emily answered promptly:

"Yessum, we've always noticed that. Soon's I get a new shoestring, most ever' morning when I tie up my shoe I think to myself, 'Now this pretty black shoestring,—I know just how it will look after a while, all broken and worn in the middle and tied in knots!' It don't matter how new it is, you know just how ugly and discouragin' it's goin' to get."

Mr. Dayton looked over at his wife and winked. "But what is your trouble, my dear?" he asked her.

"Gray hairs," she answered. "I looked in the glass this morning and was fairly frightened at myself. I am getting to be an old woman!"

"I do hope you will be gray," said Emily earnestly. "Aunt Mary's head is almost white, and it makes her just beautiful."

"Oh, yes!" said Harry, sticking his fork into his bacon and then changing his mind. "Ever since we had to leave her—she's so poor!—we've wanted to get to know a white-haired lady, they look so sweet, we think. But they'n't any gray hairs around, where we come from. The ladies all use some kind of hair dye like aunt Sarelda, and I expect some day they won't be any grayheaded ladies any more at all, except aunt Mary."

"Well, if I live," said Mrs. Dayton, smiling, "I promise you to be a gray-haired lady. But, children, Mr. Dayton and I have decided about you; you are to live with us as long as you prove yourselves what we think you are; and you are to start to school this morning. Our district school opens to-day, so you are just in time."

"Ain't there some work you would rather have me do?" inquired Zep.

"What would you rather do than go to school?" inquired the farmer.

"Anything," said Zep.

"You see," said Emily, "we don't care for schools. Aunt Sarelda wouldn't let us go to one 'cause she wanted to teach us thorough, all by herself. But the thorougher she taught the worse we liked it."

"But would you be willing to grow up and live in ignorance of what makes true men and women?" asked Mrs. Dayton, a good deal disappointed.

"The fact is," said Harry confidentially, "we don't care anything about books. We don't think it makes any difference whether we know things or not. Aunt Sarelda is educated and aunt Mary ain't, and uncle Ralph in New York, he never went to college, and he's the richest man you ever saw."

"But if you want us to go to school," said Zep, "we haven't a word to say. It will be just like getting up at four in the morning."

"Yes," said Harry, "we'll just think of it as part of the job."

"Well, you can think of it then," said Mr. Dayton, "for about eight o'clock we are going."

The country schoolhouse stood about a mile from the Dayton farm. The yard was surrounded on three sides by a great cornfield, while in front ran the broad country road. The children felt very strange as they came in sight of the long frame building which looked so large to them. In the yard were about thirty boys and girls from seven to seventeen, while in the doorway stood a young lady with light, fluffy hair, blue eyes, and very small hands. Some of the children were larger than she, and apparently older; and yet she was the teacher! Mr. Dayton rode up to the stile-block with Emily behind him, while the boys followed afoot, carrying their lunch-basket. Some of the children in the yard came to the fence and stared at the orphans, just as you see horses trot up to the pasture fence to gaze at a strange team. The Lamonts felt lonesome and unhappy as they entered the yard.

"Howd'y, Miss Fanny!" cried Mr. Dayton in a hearty voice, addressing the young teacher. "Now see what I have brought you. This is the kind of crop we raise on our farm." Sinking his voice he added, "Orphans; living with me on probation; rich uncle with a bankrupt heart."

Miss Fanny kissed Emily and led her into the schoolhouse which consisted of only one room. "We are to be good friends," said the young teacher, "and you are always to feel at home with me, Emily, for I, too, am an orphan."

"That makes us kin, don't it?" exclaimed Emily, putting her arm about the pretty lady whom she already began to love, "'cause we both know just how it feels."

Harry and Zep wandered aimlessly in the yard, trying to look as if they felt at home. A group had gathered in a distant corner of the yard. "I tell you," one of the boys was saying, "I just come from Compton where their uncle Tom Burgiss lives. Me'n Mr. Dayton come on same train. Lucy, she was there'n heard Mr. Burgiss readin' the letter. And I tell you they're runaways, an' stole a watch an' gold ring in St. Louis."

"They don't look like that kind," said a tall girl in a short dress, "and I don't believe that sweet-faced little girl ever did anything very wicked."

"Well, their aunt believes it," said the boy, "and so does their uncle. And so do I. And I don't want to go to school with thieves. All I've got to say—they'd better keep away from ME!"

Shoots Again

Although Coffee Took His Eyesight For Awhile.

A Colorado camp cook had to quit his job because he could not make coffee without drinking it himself and it was killing him. He says he used to take a cup of coffee before he got his breakfast for the men, for he felt the need of keeping up his strength and his stomach troubled him so much.

"Finally," he says, "I got so bad I was taken to the hospital. The doctor told me it was a clear case of coffee poison and if I did not quit I would never get well. I had to quit in the hospital and gradually got a little better, then I took to drinking Postum Food Coffee and took it out with me to a job in the woods.

"I have been using Postum steadily for about eighteen months and have entirely recovered from dyspepsia, and all my old aches and ails. My eyes are so well now that I can see the gun sights as good as anybody, but two years ago I never could hunt because of my eyes. I know it is the quitting of coffee and using Postum that has benefited me. Nobody could have dyspepsia any worse than I had. All my neighbors thought I was going to die, but I am all right now. I have to send thirty-five miles to the city of Trinidad for my Postum, but it is worth while." Wm. Green, Burwing, Colorado.

The Unspeakable Gift.*

TEXT: Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift.—2 Cor. 9:15.

While the air vibrates with the ringing of Christmas bells and the music of Christmas carols, it is exceedingly appropriate to pause and reflect upon the simple event, so significant, which is the inspiration of it all. Again we see the moving caravans, the crowded inn, the huddled groups seeking rest in the stable, and over all the vivid shining of the stars in the Syrian sky. And once more the open heavens are before us, the frightened shepherds, the chorusing angels, and the adoring sages, while the babe and the Virgin Mother form the center of the brilliant, sacred scene.

To Whom?

The beneficiaries of a gift are first and foremost, those who receive it with grateful acknowledgment. In thousands of sermons and services the great gift will be described, and there will be prayers of adoration and thanksgiving from those to whom it has come in its fullness and glory; but what of the millions for whom it is just as much intended, who have not yet heard of it? who do not so much as know whether there be any gospel? If it is right and proper and altogether admirable for the fortunate to remember the unfortunate, the rich to remember the poor, and at Christmas, for those who receive gifts to remember those who may not, unless specially sought out, is it not equally admirable for Christians to remember the pagans? The rich and manifold life of the nation has sprung into being because of God's unspeakable gift. The Christ child lives and breathes in national righteousness and peace, and even commercial prosperity is but his smile, and happy homes are his benediction.

The fitness of such thoughts as these is all the more apparent when we remember that he who has matriculated in the school of Christ is required by the Master himself at once to engage in making recruits, in disciplining others. Can there be any "anti-missionary" individual at this season of the year? He who can say gratefully, "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift," must not dare selfishly to appropriate that gift. The gospel of redeeming love cannot be bottled up. It cannot be embalmed and entombed like a mummy, nor hermetically sealed in creeds and theologies like canned fruit or preserves. It must diffuse itself, and its diffusion will only intensify it. The best way to be everlastingly possessed of God's gift is to bestow it upon others—the spiritually destitute around you and far away from you, for God loves the world, and all the world should be blessed by his bounty.

Abundant Life.

Christ declares that he came to give life, and life more abundant. This is a statement of the divine purpose in bestowing him, in the fullness of his power and beauty, upon the world. To receive the gift is to receive Christ, and to receive Christ is to receive, not something formal and eschatological merely, but something vital. Have we not now an opportunity to learn this anew? A noted preacher says: "Do I not see men who think they follow Christ, but who manifest none of the spirit of Christ? What is the nature of that religion which satisfies itself with empty compliances of the sanctuary? Do I not see men who honor the Sabbath, but care nothing for those people for whom the Sabbath was made? Many men honor the sanctuary, they really love prayer, they really glow under the hymn, they delight in taking official part in the services and duties of religion; nevertheless, so soon as they have performed

The Christian Lesson Commentary

== FOR 1902 ==

ON THE INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDIES.

By W. W. DOWLING,

AUTHOR OF

The Bible Hand-Book, The Normal Instructor, The Guide Book, The Helping Hand, Editor of Our Young Folks, Etc.

THE CHRISTIAN LESSON COMMENTARY has for many years been the favorite help of the great majority of the leading Bible teachers and students among the Disciples of Christ, and is used more or less by the foremost instructors of all denominations. The Leading Publishing House of another well-known and influential Religious Body for the year 1901 used over 2,000 copies of the work, and they have already contracted for a still larger number for the year 1902.

THE VOLUME FOR 1902 has preserved all the distinctive features that made former issues so helpful and popular, and has added others equally valuable. There is a new classification of the material that will make the helps and suggestions more easily available.

1. The Exegetical Notes, which have always been a principal feature, are thorough and concise, and deal with the difficult points in the Scripture Text in a plain and practical way.

2. The Illustrative Notes are fuller than will be found in any other lesson help, and serve as side-lights to illuminate and reveal the inner meaning.

3. The Applicatory Notes are really Sermonic Outlines, and many ministers find them invaluable in the preparation of their discourses when they desire to preach on themes along the line of the International Bible Studies.

4. The Practical Notes, appended to each subdivision of every lesson, are a summing up of the teaching and a practical application, all ready for the use of both teacher and student.

5. The Suggestive Notes for teachers on each lesson are more complete than those found in any other Lesson Annual extant.

6. The Other Points of Excellence are Lesson Outlines, Chronological Tables, Maps, Diagrams, Blackboard Designs, Orders of Service. Engravings and Vocabularies.

THE STYLE AND PRICE are the same as heretofore. The volume is larger and fuller than any of its contemporaries, and, when size and quality are considered, much cheaper. It is printed on fine paper and substantially bound in cloth and sold at $1.00 per copy, prepaid. Per dozen, not prepaid, $9.00.

Orders for THE CHRISTIAN LESSON COMMENTARY should be sent as soon as possible, that teachers and students may have the book in time to prepare for the first Sunday of the New Year.

their own duty to God, what becomes of their life?"

If, then, the life of God throbs in your veins, if it vibrates in your voice, and is wrought out into the very warp and woof of your daily toil, if the precepts of God govern your intercourse with fellow men, and the spirit of God dwells in your renovated heart then you may join with a mighty host in rendering a tribute of thanks to Him from whom such a gift has been received. But on the other hand, if you lack these things, seek them

Self-Giving.

Christ gave himself for our redemption, and thereby became our great exemplar. No theory of substitution will satisfy the Bible teaching of atonement. We must suffer if we would reign with him. He bore the cross, so must we; he gave his life, so must we. The whole aim and purpose of the gift is to save us from selfishness in any form, which is death, and fill us with the Christ spirit. If we grasp this thought in its fullness and richness, the whole year will be transformed, and the earth will be Eden-clad again.

"Have you found the heavenly light?"

Pass it on!

Souls are groping in the night,

Daylight gone.

Hold the lighted lamp on high!

Be a star in some one's sky!

He may live who else would die.

Pass it on!"

Prayer.

Purge out the dross from our hearts, O God, yea, even if it takes the fiery flame, and show us the plenitude of thy mercy, the richness of thine unspeakable gift. May he who is the gift take complete possession of us, of his church, of the world, and make it one of the courts of the eternal, a suburb to the city of our God. Amen.

WHY?

Why do you, who live in the Mississippi Valley, send to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or even to Chicago for a desired volume, when you can secure it much more quickly and just as cheap in St. Louis? This is a question that is very difficult to answer. We can supply you with any book that you wish—any respectable book, that is; French novels and blood-and-thunder-seven-buckets-of-gore-to-the-chapter romances are barred—no matter where or by whom published. Our business is by no means confined to the books we ourselves publish. Our catalogue contains only our own publications, in the main, but we can sell you any book you wish to purchase.

Fourth Quarterly Review.*

The lessons of the past quarter gather about two of the most noble and instructive characters the world has ever seen, and such as can be paralleled only among those who have been taught in the school of the Great Teacher himself. Indeed, among his followers they have perhaps few equals in many of the elements of spiritual greatness. Among the Old Testament heroes they stand unique. Noah, Abraham and David were men of sturdy faith, but the first yielded to appetite, the second to falsehood and the third to lust. Joseph and Moses were models of chasteness and sobriety, of truthfulness and integrity. Surrounded by sordidness, they cared naught for earthly riches. Breathing the atmosphere of the filthy Egyptian court, they maintained their purity unsullied. Meeting with treachery and cunning from every quarter, they were open as the day. If during the three months of Bible study, we have gotten into our minds a true understanding of their godly characters, and into our hearts the same sublime ambition for holiness, we have been infinitely repaid. Let us glance briefly at these two men of God.

Joseph stands at the threshold of the period of Israel's bondage, as Moses at its exit. The lad of seventeen, who was too artless to protect himself against the jealousy of his brothers, was too steadfast in his purity to succumb to the wiles of the temptress. Refusing to make an excuse of circumstances, he held himself rigidly to the highest ideals of fidelity to man and loyalty to God. Most men are embittered by unjust accusation and punishment. Joseph could suffer in prison for a crime which he had scorned to commit, and bear himself so manfully and with such sweetness of spirit as to win the love of both his jailer and his fellow-prisoners. Few can endure with equal magnanimity both adversity and prosperity. The head tends to become dizzy that is hastily exalted. Joseph passed in an hour from the prison to the throne, yet was in no degree changed by the marvelous transition. He is the same true and gentle man when he rules in Pharaoh's stead as when he comforted his companions in the dungeon. His heart, which could find room for sympathy with every sufferer around him, was shut against all feeling of revenge, and when his brothers stand before him asking for bread, there is no taunt for their misery, no reproach for their great sin against him. After testing their feelings toward his aged father, and his younger brother Benjamin, and that without delaying to minister freely to their necessities, he makes himself known to them, and rains his tears upon their faces. He tries to make them feel, as he does, that God had brought it all about for good, both to them and to him, and would banish from their hearts and consciences all self-reproach. He had learned to forgive and forget, and his magnanimity is well-nigh Christlike. It was his joy, for all the years that followed the migration of his father's family into Egypt, to care for them with the tenderness of a parent, and his grief over his father's death was far exceeded by that which he felt when he found that his brothers yet doubted his full forgiveness. What a wonderful and beautiful life was his, and how natural that it should be a favorite with the children, whose quick and spontaneous sympathies find in his strange story that which appeals to their instinctive faith in God and sincerity toward men.

Moses, the leader and lawgiver of Israel, is nearly as free from fault as was Joseph. What there is that might be criticised grew out of the force of circumstances, rather than any inherent weakness or vice within himself.

*Lesson for December 29.

His killing of the Egyptian was due to his vigorous defense of one of the oppressed of his own people, and not to a desire to murder. When God was angered with him, at the time of his calling, in the mount of God, it was because of his excessive timidity which made him doubt his ability to do what God required at his hand. It betrayed a lack of faith in God, but that lack arose out of his low estimate of himself, not a base view of Jehovah. And the act which led to God's refusing him an entrance into Canaan with the people he had led through the wilderness was provoked by the stubbornness and unbelief of the nation, with whom he had borne for more than a generation. How many of us would have had any patience left after such a test?

Who that has studied the life of this man of God can question the fact of divine providence? In his rescue from death as a babe, his life amid the luxuries and pomp of Pharaoh's palace, the forty years of quiet and even monotonous shepherd life, the rapid and tragic scenes of the weeks that brought deliverance from bondage for his people, and the two score years of the wilderness wanderings, we see the hand of God forever manifest in power. Yet, for the most part, natural events and forces are used to work the great design of Jehovah, and miracle appears where the event can only thus be brought about. Meekness and strength were strangely mingled in his character. Rather, perhaps, his strength was in his meekness,—in that utter forgetfulness of self that made it possible for him to ever remember God and be enforced by his eternal might.

The death of these two heroes was worthy of the life they lived. Joseph assured his brethren of the coming return to Canaan, and directed his bones to be buried in its sacred soil, when that time should come. He fell asleep with this cheering prophecy upon his lips. Moses climbed the heights of Nebo and looked over into the land for which he had longed, and his disappointment in not being permitted to enter was soothed by the loving companionship of God himself, whose hand buried the body of his aged and faithful servant in that lonely grave, around which the angels might evermore keep vigil, but on whose sod no mortal should ever drop a tear. That such a life and such a death as those of these two men of God may be the portion of us all, is our most fervent prayer.

NOTE.—With this article my task of preparing the Sunday-school lessons for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ends. For two years it has been my pleasure to talk with the readers of that paper every week, and it is with some what of regret that I bid them farewell. Owing to the change of plan, by which this column will be omitted from the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, my weekly message ceases. For the words of kindly appreciation from those who have been helped, I am sincerely grateful. Good bye.

Ladies With Superfluous Hair

On face, neck, arms, etc., will find it to their advantage to write for free booklet to the Dermatino Co., 1805 Market street, Room 65, St. Louis, Mo. That company makes the only remedy which permanently removes unsightly hair so that it will never grow again. The remedy is always effective and is absolutely harmless. Its action is marvelous and failure is impossible. It is unlike other preparations which give but temporary relief and do not kill the root of the hair. It will pay you to send for free booklet if afflicted with superfluous hair.

Enthusiastic Converts

There are Thousands of Them Who Believe as This Woman Does.

Mrs. Ira Knowlton, of Butte, Montana, is a most enthusiastic convert to the virtues of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets as a cure for obstinate stomach trouble. She says: "I had poor digestion nearly all my life. It now seems to me that for years I never knew what it was to be hungry, to have a good natural appetite.

"I was troubled with gas in stomach causing pressure on the heart with palpitation and short breath. Nearly everything I ate soured on my stomach, sometimes I had cramps in the stomach which almost resembled spasms.

"Doctors told me I had catarrh of the stomach, but their medicines would not reach it and I would still be a sufferer had I not, in sheer desperation, decided to try Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

"I knew they were an advertised remedy and I didn't believe anything I read about them, as I had no confidence in advertised remedies, but my sister living in Pittsburg wrote me last spring telling me how Stuart's Tablets had cured her little daughters of indigestion and loss of flesh and appetite and I hesitated no longer.

"I bought a fifty cent box at my drug store and took two of the large tablets after each meal and found them delightful to take, being as pleasant to the taste as caramel candy. Whenever during the day or night I felt any pain or uneasiness in the stomach or about the heart I took one of the small tablets and in three weeks it seemed to me as if I had never known what stomach trouble was.

"I keep Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in the house and every member of our family uses them occasionally after a hearty meal or when any of us have a pain or ache in the digestive organs."

Mr. E. H. Davis, of Hampton, Va., says: "I doctored five years for dyspepsia, but in two months I got more benefit from Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets than in five years of the doctor's treatment."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, bloating after meals, sympathetic heart trouble.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is not a cheap cathartic but an active digestive remedy containing the pepsin and diastase which every weak stomach lacks, and they cure stomach troubles because they digest the food eaten and give the weak, abused, overworked stomach a chance to rest and recuperate.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold in every drug store in the United States, Canada and Great Britain.

NOBLITT.

Mrs. Effie M. Noblitt, wife of Bro. T. L. Noblitt, pastor of the Christian church of Armourdale, Kan., died on the morning of Nov. 21, 1901, at the age of 29. Sister Noblitt was born in Kansas, Oct. 5, 1872. Her family moved to Texas, where they lived till she was about 17, when they came to Missouri, settling at Kirksville. Here she and Bro. Noblitt became acquainted and were married March 12, 1892. The following year Sister N. obeyed the gospel and was baptized by her husband. She lived a devoted Christian till the end of her earthly life. Being long ambitious to fit herself for the practice of medicine, she had taken a course in the Eclectic Medical College of this city, from which she would soon have honorably graduated. Despite the demands upon her time and strength of her medical studies, she was a faithful and loving mother to her four little children, and her home life was ever a happy one. Her broken hearted husband took her body to the old home in Kirksville for burial. May the everlasting arms be about him and his motherless children, to comfort and sustain, in this hour of their great bereavement

LADIES' BIBLES.

We are at a disadvantage in dealing with our patrons. If these Bibles could be placed in a show-window and all the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST could be marched by we are confident few would pass without stopping, and our Bible sales would be increased twenty-fold.

Our "LADIES' BIBLE" is a novelty—something never before offered our readers. We never saw a more attractive edition of the Scriptures. If all who read these lines could see it, we would sell ten thousand copies during this month. Every man who loved his wife, every father who loved his daughter, every brother who loved his sister, every young man who loved—well, all these men would want to buy copies for those they loved. We offer two varieties of this Bible:

A19—Comparatively small, neat and compact, this Bible may properly be styled "dainty," and if the fair recipient be young and enthusiastic, she will very likely call it "cute." It is described as the "Minion 16mo, Oxford Reference Bible." It is printed on the famous "India Paper" (the finest book paper known, combining marvelous thinness and lightness with abundant opaqueness and strength). Size 6 7/8 x 4 1/2 inches, and less than 3/4 inch thick. The type is plain and easily read. It is about the size of that used in most newspapers. Besides the Old and New Testaments, this Bible contains a Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names, Harmony of the Gospels, Chronological Tables, Maps, etc. Bound in French Morocco, Divinity Circuit, Round Corners. Red under Gold Edges, etc. Price....$2.50

You have doubtless heard of this wonderful "India Paper," but you certainly never before saw an "India Paper" Bible offered so cheaply. You can make no more delightful and delighting Christmas gift to a lady relative or friend than one of these Bibles. Send in your order as early as possible, to avoid the holiday rush, and address it to the A29—This is very similar to the above, but is even newer than A19—one of the very newest ideas in Bibles, in fact. Its chief feature, in addition to those enumerated above, is its surprising lightness and thinness. By the omission of maps and extra matter the publishers have made a book that is almost as "light as a feather." It is printed in same type as A19, upon the same famous "Oxford India Paper." It is magnificently bound in the genuine Persian Levant, and is Leather Lined to Edge, with Red under Gold Edges. This edition has not the extensive "helps" which we offer in other numbers; but for ordinary use, this is just the thing to give mother, wife, sister or sweetheart for a gift. Indeed, it is just the book for any one who desires a light, thin, compact Bible. Price.....$3.75

R. W. ORVIS.

STEVENSON.

Martha Johnson, wife of Andrew Stevenson died at their home near Cuba, Ill., Dec. 5, aged 63. Funeral services were conducted at Lewistown, Ill., in the church of which she and her husband were charter members, in which her five boys (all living) were baptized, and in which her oldest son, Marion, now minister of Irving Park church, Chicago, preached his first sermon. She became a Christian at the age of 14 and though for many years an invalid she brought up her boys in the faith and made a home for them while she lived. She was "faithful unto death."

How to Order Books.

During the holiday season almost everybody is sending away to some publisher for one or more books. We offer the following suggestions for the mutual benefit of buyer and seller:

1. Don't forget to sign your name. We are almost daily in receipt of book orders, enclosing money, to which there is no signature. In such cases the publisher simply has to wait until his patron sends in a 'kick' because his books have not arrived.

2. Write your address, and write it plainly. It often happens that a person will send a remittance of several dollars, and neglect to state where he lives. Sometimes the postmark on the envelope will supply this information, but often the postmark is illegible. Give your state as well as your town. "John Jones, Springfield," for example, is a trifle indefinite, as it may mean Springfield, Ark., Col., Ga., Ill., Ind., Kan., Ky., La., Me., Md., Mass., Minn., Mo., Neb., N. H., N. J., N. Y., N. C., O., Ore., Pa. (there are three in that favored state), S. C., S. D., Tenn., Va., Vt., Wash., W. Va., or Wis. The publisher has just one chance in thirty-four if he tries to guess at it!

3. Always state exactly what you want. Please don't write: "Send me two song books." The Christian Pub. Co. handles a dozen or so different song books. And don't say: "Send one dozen copies Gospel Call." That may mean any one of six distinct things. Do not write and ask the price of a book, and on receiving a reply wait a few weeks and then write a card, simply saying: "You may send me that book." How can the publisher know what book you mean when he has dealt with several thousand persons and read and written thousands of letters since you first wrote?

4. Please do not write and say: "Send me 10 C. E. topic cards (price ten cents) and I will remit on receipt of cards." The publisher is sure you will remit all right, but think what is involved. The Christian Endeavor supply clerk gets your letter, writes a label for the package, sends you a bill for the cards, makes a memorandum of the charge and gives it to the bookkeeper. The bookkeeper opens up a ledger account with you, puts down your name and address, the date, what you bought and the amount, and then puts your name in the index. A few days later you send in five 2-cent stamps to pay your bill. The bookkeeper takes your letter, searches among tens of thousands of names in his index until he finds yours, turns to your page, credits you with 10 cents, balances the account and sends you a receipt. All this for ten cents! But suppose you had sent the ten cents with your order? Your letter would have been opened, your name and the amount entered, your name and address written on a label for the package and its stub and the cards sent. That's all. Please think of all this the next time you send us a small order.

5. Don't get mad at the publisher until you know he is guilty. Recently a man wrote us to the extent of several pages and with much freedom. He frankly stated his opinion—which was far from complimentary—of any business house that habitually held his orders several days before filling them. An investigation showed that every order this man had ever sent had been filled and forwarded the day of receipt. There was a lax postal service in his neighborhood, but he had not considered such a possibility.

6. Please, please, PLEASE don't say: "Send this by return mail." In the first place, there has been no such thing as a "return mail" for fifty years, and in the second place, every business house endeavors to attend to every order at the earliest possible moment, even if the patron says there is no hurry. The aim is to get each day's business attended to and make room for to-morrow's business. No frantic pleadings about "return mail," "rush this order," "send at once," etc., etc., will expedite matters one moment.

7. When you have our catalogue before you and see in it, Christian System, price $1.00, do not write and ask "What is your lowest price on the Christian System?" The lowest price is one dollar—and it is a very low price, too.

8. In remitting any amount less than one dollar, we are willing for you to send postage stamps. This saves you cost of a Money Order. Do not send your personal cheque, whether the amount is large or small. We have to pay 15 cents collection on all such.

9. When you have written your order, do not seal the letter until you have carefully read it over, and are sure it is all right.

By following these instructions, you will certainly (barring accidents and errors in the mail and express service) receive what you order in the shortest time possible, and with the minimum amount of trouble for yourself and for—

BLESSED is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness. . . . Labor is Life: From the inmost heart of the worker rises his God-given Force, the sacred celestial Life-essence breathed into him by Almighty God; from his inmost heart awakes him to all nobleness,—to all knowledge, “self-knowledge” and much else, as soon as work fitly begins. Knowledge? The knowledge that will hold good in working, cleave thou to that; for Nature herself accredits that, says yea to that. Properly thou hast no other knowledge than what thou hast got by working: . . . the rest is yet all a hypothesis of knowledge, a thing to be argued of in schools, a thing floating in the clouds, in endless logic-vortices, till we try it and fix it. “Doubt, of whatever kind, can be ended by action alone.” Work is of a religious nature; work is of a brave nature, which it is the aim of all religion to be. All work of man is as a swimmer's: a waste ocean threatens to devour him; if he front it not bravely, it will keep its word. By incessant wise defiance of it, lusty rebuke and buffet of it, behold how loyally it supports him, bears him as its conqueror along.

The Schley Case.

Secretary Long promised to withhold his approval of the finding of the naval court of inquiry until Admiral Schley's protest was filed by his attorney, Mr. Rayner. The protest turned out to be a sweeping accusation that the majority of the court in finding Admiral Schley's conduct censurable had ignored the evidence, and it was asked that the majority report be disapproved and the evidence reconsidered. Admiral Sampson, through his attorney, filed a protest against Admiral Dewey's minority report, which stated that Schley was in command at the time of the naval battle of Santiago, and therefore deserved the credit for the victory. After considering the two reports and the two protests, the Secretary of the Navy approved the report of the majority which admitted Schley's personal bravery but found him worthy of blame on the eleven specified points; Admiral Dewey's dissenting opinion is disapproved; and in particular the recommendation of the court that the whole matter be now dropped, is approved. The reasons for the last recommendation, at least, are apparent to all. If the court of inquiry, constituted as it was, could not reach a unanimous verdict, and if the majority report could not command general approval—as it obviously does not—it is useless to hope for an agreement by any other method. There is no doubt but that popular sympathy is on the side of Schley—a fact, however, of not the slightest significance in a judicial determination of the merits of the case. A congressional inquiry, being conducted by men who have constituents to please, would have no chance of being as free from bias as the investigation which has just closed. Probably this is a case where the doctors will disagree until the end of time, and future generations will inherit another insoluble riddle of history to be placed beside Who was the Man in the Iron Mask? and Who wrote the Junius Letters? It will be Who won the battle of Santiago?

Dewey's Opinion and the Protest.

But however much room there may be for difference of opinion regarding the matters of historical fact, there can be little difference of opinion as to the irrelevance of Admiral Dewey's minority opinion that Schley was in command during the battle and therefore deserves the credit of the victory. It was distinctly stated in the order which convened the court that this question was not within its scope. The court itself repeatedly ruled out testimony bearing upon the question of the command during the battle. It declined to allow Admiral Sampson to be represented by counsel, on the ground that he was not an interested party to the inquiry, since it did not touch the question of the command or the credit for the victory. The fact was repeatedly emphasized that the business of the court was merely to determine whether Schley did his duty; not to decide whether he deserved more or less credit than Sampson. The court was therefore right in refusing to allow Sampson to be represented by an attorney as an interested party in the case. But now comes the minority report of Admiral Dewey offering an opinion upon the very point upon which the court had refused to hear evidence. We are not saying that Admiral Dewey's opinion may not, conceivably, be correct, but only that it is irrelevant to the inquiry to which the court was confined, and that it does grave injustice to Sampson by assuming to give a judicial decision of a question in which he is an interested party without allowing him to present testimony. Probably Admiral Dewey, like the majority of the American people, feels a keen sympathy for Admiral Schley. But his manner of expressing it was unfortunate.

Congress and the Schley Case.

With more zeal than discretion, Admiral Schley's congressional friends have rushed to his defense against the majority decision of the court, and a dozen or more resolutions in his behalf were introduced in a single day—resolved that the committee on naval affairs be authorized to hold an investigation; resolved that Admiral Schley, although now retired, shall receive full pay as though on the active list, in recognition of his eminent services; resolved that the division of the prize-money from the ships captured at Santiago be investigated, with a view to getting a larger share for Admiral Schley than was allotted to him by the department; resolved that Admiral Dewey's opinion be approved without further investigation; resolved that the thanks of Congress be extended to Admiral Schley; resolved that a sword of honor be presented to Admiral Schley; resolved that a medal be struck commemorating the victory at Santiago under Admiral Schley's command. It need scarcely be stated that it would be a wholly gratuitous insult to the navy department for Congress, without investigation, to vote down the report of the court of inquiry after it has received the approval of the Secretary of the Navy. One item which all will note with pleasure is that Mr. Maclay, the author of the naval history which precipitated the trouble, has been removed from his position in the navy yard. No scrap of evidence has ever been adduced in support of his accusations against Admiral Schley's personal courage and patriotism.

A Lesson in Silence.

General Miles has received a harsh lesson in the noble art of silence—a branch of military and naval tactics which, judging from recent incidents, ought to occupy a larger place than it does in the curricula of West Point and Annapolis. The ranking officer of the United States Army has been censured in terms which suggest the scolding of a school boy. In a recent interview for publication, Gen. Miles said he approved Admiral Dewey's opinion in the Schley case and had "no sympathy with the efforts which have been made to destroy the honor of an officer under such circumstances." The clear assumption was that the latter statement was meant to characterize the action of the majority of the court. When called upon by the Secretary of War for an explanation, he explained that he had reference to those who had applied such epithets as "coward" to Schley. The explanation was not satisfactory either to the President or to the War Department, and Secretary Root accordingly reprimanded Gen. Miles in terms more stern than are often used on such occasions. The following is the army regulation which Gen. Miles directly contravened in giving an interview on the subject: "Deliberations or discussions among military men conveying praise or censure or any mark of approbation toward others in military service, are prohibited." Secretary Root cites this regulation, refers to the controversy which has existed in the Navy for some time, and concludes: "It is of no consequence on whose side your opinion was, or what it was. You had no business in the controversy and no right, holding the office which you did, to express any opinion. Your conduct was in violation of the regulation above cited and the rules of official propriety, and you are justly liable to censure, which I now express."

The Incident at Chartres.

One might have supposed that our American criminal courts had gone as far as it was possible to go in bringing in gawsome exhibits to support circumstantial evidence in murder trials. Indeed, they have in some cases gone much farther than common decency can approve and farther than the pursuit of justice requires. It seems to have become a recognized legal procedure in some courts to horrify the accused by a sudden presentation of the hideous accessories of crime under the pretense that it is necessary for the jury to see them, and then to treat the prisoner's actions in the presence of the gawsome sight as a further proof of his guilt. No matter how he acts, it is easy to persuade an impressionable jury that he betrays the consciousness of guilt. But it has been reserved for a French court to give the most atrocious exhibition of this judicial malpractice. A case now pending at Chartres, two hours' ride from Paris, has aroused the French people as no trial since that of Dreyfus has done. It is a murder case, the details of which are too shocking to repeat.

Circumstantial evidence fastens the crime upon a peasant of the neighborhood. The extraordinary feature of the case is that not only are the most hideous exhibits brought into court and used in such a way as to associate them with the accused in the minds of the jurors, but the judge does not even maintain a pretense of impartiality, constantly refers to the prisoner as "the murderer," and is as eager as a prosecuting attorney to seize upon every scrap of incriminating evidence. Many prominent Parisians are beginning to take an interest in the case, and it is realized that it is really the French judicial system that is on trial, rather than a peasant of Chartres. The court room in which the trial is taking place is almost under the shadow of the great Cathedral of Chartres. But it remains to be seen whether there is any overshadowing spirit of justice which will secure for an accused man a judicially impartial trial in France.

A New Postmaster General.

Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith has resigned his post in the cabinet and the President has appointed in his place Mr. Henry C. Payne, of Wisconsin, who was for ten years postmaster at Milwaukee. The resignation of Mr. Smith has been under consideration for several months. Early in the year he felt that his business interests in Philadelphia required closer personal attention than he could give them while officially employed in Washington, but it was President McKinley's wish that he should remain until the order limiting more strictly the granting of second-class privileges had been issued and enforced. This reason, and an unwillingness to make a break in the cabinet immediately after President McKinley's death, have moved him to delay his resignation until the present time. The order was issued Dec. 1, and promises to prove more effective than any previous expedient for remedying the abuses in connection with second-class mail. Some of the local church papers have suffered by losing the privilege of mailing at the rate of one cent a pound, but on the whole the order will probably have a good effect on the business of the postal department. The retiring Postmaster General deserves credit for this achievement. The announcement of Mr. Smith's resignation has started rumors of other cabinet changes. It is said that Secretary Gage will retire within two months. Secretary Hay has denied the report that he will resign.

A Conference Between Labor and Capital.

The conference which was held in New York between eminent leaders of organized labor and representatives of consolidated capital, closed on Tuesday. It was a thoroughly representative body, and its deliberations, although marked by an unusual degree of harmony, lacked the vagueness and generality which too often characterize the attempts to reconcile the interests of capital and labor. On the last day of the conference an executive committee of thirty-six was chosen, composed of an equal number of representatives from each of three groups. Senator Hanna is chairman of the section representing capital; Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is chairman of the section representing organized labor; and Ex-President Cleveland is chairman of the section representing the general public. This executive committee has organized with Senator Hanna as general chairman and will constitute the industrial department of the National Civic Federation. The purposes of the association are to encourage right relations between capital and labor, so as to prevent disputes from arising, and to arbitrate such differences as may arise, if both parties request arbitration. It will not attempt to enforce compulsory arbitration and it will not discuss abstract problems and principles, but will deal with concrete situations. Over 2,000,000 organized workmen are represented by the official heads of their unions on this executive committee, and the amount of capital represented is beyond calculation. This is the most promising effort that has been made in recent years to secure an understanding between capital and labor. It promises results for two reasons: First, because of the eminence and representative character of the men who are participating in it; and second, because it is undertaken at a time when men's passions are not inflamed by prejudice on either side. Nowhere is the superiority of prevention over cure more obvious than here, and the executive committee has shown wisdom in beginning its work when the situation is peaceful, and stating its purpose to forestall troublesome difficulties, rather than waiting for troubles to arise and then trying to settle them. Senator Hanna, in particular, has taken an interest in the negotiations which will go far toward sweeping away the odium which attaches to his name in the minds of many as a grasping monopolist.

Unification of Banks Proposed.

Secretary Gage, at a meeting of the New York Bankers' Association, advocated a combination of banking interests to form a great American institution. The weakness of our banking system, with the consequent liability to panics, is due, he said, to the isolation of the various local banks. A bank is a medium for exchanging credit. The primary requisite for an effective bank is that its credit shall be good. The broader the base of an institution the more secure it will be from overthrow by distrust arising out of local conditions. Therefore, he advocates the centralization of banking interests in an institution which would be national in its scope, like the Bank of England, but would have only the same connection with the government that our banks have at present through government supervision.

Breaking Ground for the World's Fair.

On Dec. 20, in spite of zero temperature, the actual work of construction was begun on the Louisiana Purchase Exposition to be held in St. Louis in 1903. Elaborate exercises had been planned, including a grand parade with Gen. Bates as marshal, but it was found necessary on account of the weather to abandon this feature. In all other respects, however, the exercises of the day were carried out according to the program. The president and directors of the Exposition Company and the representatives of the various states took turns in lifting a shovelful of earth with a silver-plated ebony-handled shovel, and the work of construction was declared to have been begun. But fifteen months now remain before the date fixed by Congress for the opening of the Exposition, and to finish the work within that time will require a degree of rushing which has never yet been applied to the building of an exposition. It will require even harder work, perhaps, to get the foreign governments to prepare and install their exhibits within the specified time. But at present the sentiment seems to be strongly opposed to any postponement of the Exposition.

Gifts for Education.

John D. Rockefeller has given to the University of Chicago a Christmas present of $1,250,000. This is not, as was at first reported, for the establishment of a law school, but is for the general expenses of the University. This makes just $10,000,000 that Mr. Rockefeller has given to the University of Chicago. Mr. Carnegie's recent gift of $10,000,000 for the establishment and endowment of a university at Washington was a surprise to the general public. The institution is not to be the much talked of National University, but something similar to the Smithsonian Institute. The government will be trustee of the funds, but further than this it will not be a government institution. The fact that the gift was in bonds of the Steel Corporation has occasioned some embarrassment, since it was felt that the government ought not to have even the appearance of being a partner in the steel trust. But Mr. Carnegie has given assurance that he will arrange this so that the gift can be accepted. Both of these benefactions, however, are by far exceeded by Mrs. Stanford's gift of $30,000,000 to Leland Stanford University two weeks ago, $18,000,000 of which is in gilt-edged stocks and bonds and the remainder in real estate.

The Hepburn bill for the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal has been favorably reported in the House. It will be called up Jan. 7 and will have the right of way until disposed of. Mr. Richardson, Democratic leader in the House, says there will be no opposition from the minority. The bill carries an appropriation of $10,000,000 and limits the total cost of the canal to $180,000,000.

Germany is pressing Venezuela hard for the payment of an over-due debt and has threatened to seize a port if the money is not forthcoming at once. She has paused, however, long enough to explain in an aside to the United States, that this threatened action will be subject to the conditions imposed by the Monroe doctrine.

The rector of the University of Berlin is quoted as warning America against the tendency to too much higher education, on the ground that it is a wasted investment. It does not pay. And this from Germany, the land where the academic spirit is strongest, where learning for learning's sake is more highly prized than anywhere else, to America, the land which is most in danger from the doctrine of learning for money's sake!

We are again able to report a slight improvement in the editor's condition, but only very slight. On Monday of this week his temperature, for the first time in three weeks, dropped to normal for a few hours. It had been hoped that by Christmas he would be in a condition which would make it possible to take him away from the city, but a further delay of a few days will be necessary. A change of air is considered essential to starting him upon the road to recovery. We take this occasion to express thanks to the many friends who have, by letter or otherwise, given assurance of their sympathy and prayers.

The Home and Its Perils.

Nearly all the dangers that threaten our civilization may be traced to the family. The root of the commonwealth is in the homes of the people. The social and civil life springs from the domestic life of mankind. The official life of a nation is ordinarily the reflex of the moral sense of the people. The morality of public administration is to be gauged by the moral standard of the family. The home is a city of refuge, a strong tower into which we may run and be safe, a sure haven, and because the home is a center of safety, a stronghold of purity, a mountain-top of moral culture and life, the greatest attacks of the arch-enemy upon human society are aimed at the home. The perils of our civilization, the perils of the republic, are the perils of the home.

False education is one. We have no confidence in the nation to train the child. All the great, the permanently great, things achieved in the world have been the work of individuals working from the instinct of genius or of goodness. What has been the rage? Why, for organization, classification, machinery. The individual has been thought capable of nothing; the committee, the community, the machine, must do the work. All this strikes at the home. Home education, cottage training, family culture, is neglected. Religion must have a place in the training of the young. "To educate in the arts," said Webster, "is important, in religion is indispensable." There is a heart to be formed to virtue as well as a head to be enlightened. Citizens of the kingdom of heaven our children must be as well as citizens of the state.

Mormonism and divorce are enemies to the home. One is simultaneous, the other successive, polygamy. One hitches his wives as he hitches his horses, two or more abreast, the other hitches them tandem. Statistics show the ratio of divorces to marriages to be alarmingly on the increase in this country, and most trivial reasons are given for the disruption of the home. Marriage is ordained of God, instituted in paradise, the first blessing of the Lord. Marriage is a school for the exercise of virtue, where love is united and made firm as a center. Kindness is shed abroad, and men and women trained in the holiest and most fundamental duties of life. Marriage is the nursery of society, the mother of the world, which fills cities, churches, kingdoms, heaven itself. Marriage builds its houses and gathers sweetness from every flower, labors, unites into societies and republics, sends out colonies, builds up the world, obeys laws, preserves order, promotes the interests of mankind. Marriage is the voluntary union of one man with one woman, to be entered into not by coercion, not for convenience, not for worldly gain, but freely, cordially, advisedly, and in the fear of God; and for so high and holy a purpose that it represents the spiritual union of Christ and his church. The greatest social crime next to murder is to seduce the affections of wife from husband or husband from wife, and the greatest evil the state can inflict on society is the dissolution of the marriage contract on other than scriptural grounds.

Sunday desecration is another enemy of the republic which strikes at the home. The Lord's day is consecrated to worship and rest. Public worship has been practiced from the beginnings of the race. Even the light of nature led men thus to assemble. Then God gave his law. Christ on earth went up to the great feasts and attended constantly the services in the synagogue. The glory of God was to be sought in the gates of Zion. The honor of God's name was to be published in the family. Man's spiritual benefit was to be promoted. Ordinances of divine worship were means of grace. Communion, fellowship, prayer, praise, preaching, the Lord's Supper, were of the highest moment to society. Abandonment of divine worship, violation of the sanctity of the Lord's day, is not only ruinous to the state; it is a blow at the home. Neglect of the Lord's house, indulgence in the Sunday newspaper, Sunday excursions, Sunday golf, the Sunday bicycle; children and youth everywhere but in the family pew in the house of prayer—means not only the demoralization of society; it is the laying waste of the home. When the French Revolutionists would abolish the Lord's day they were ready to enthrone a lewd woman as the goddess of reason.

The saloon above all things is the enemy of the home. Hundreds of families are broken up in this Christian land yearly by the demon rum. Wives and mothers suffer, little children cry for bread, noble men are transformed into brutes, and poverty and shame, lust and murder, disease and death, misery and woe, hell itself comes in where all sweetness and light and virtue and peace and happiness and purity should abide.

Home is the stronghold of safety and so the devil seeks the destruction of the home first and chiefly. Guard then your homes. Stand for them against these foes. Cherish them, keep them holy, keep within their sacred shelter. East and west home is best. As paradise was home to Adam, to you let home be paradise. Safeguarding the home we shall keep the nation.

At Northampton, England, a strike has been brought on by the introduction of labor-saving machinery for making shoes. And this is the twentieth century! It is hard for labor to learn that it has in the long run nothing to gain by trying to block the wheels of progress. A finger thrust between the cogs may stop the wheels for a moment—or may not. But in any case the finger gets the worst of it. Yet cog-wheels are a useful contrivance. No strike can abolish the shoe factory and bring back the cobbler's bench.

The Coming One.

The Tetragrammaton of the Old Testament is probably the CHRIST of the New Testament. This incommunicable name, which is generally rendered Lord in the old version and Jehovah in the new, probably means the Coming One. It is well known that scholars differ as regards even the spelling of the word. However, the four letters Y H W H stand for Yahweh, or as some spell it, Yahvah, which means "He who becometh" or "the Becoming One," or more probably, simply the "Coming One." If this view of the matter be correct it clears up a great difficulty, and at once disposes of the controversy between the Eloists and Jehovahists. Undoubtedly the Christ of the New Testament is frequently referred to in the Old Testament, and there is certainly no good reason why there may not be a divine significance in the name Yahvah which will account for its use as soon as human history begins. Elohim seems a suitable name for the God of creation, while Yahweh exactly fits the idea of the God of redemption. This latter clearly indicates futurity, though it does not in the least suggest the idea that pre-existence is wanting. In the prophecy of Isaiah, Yahvah is called "the everlasting father." But this phrase can be better rendered from the original by "Father of Futurity." The new version, in the margin, translates the phrase—"father of eternity"; but in our judgment this does not express the idea of the Hebrew as well as the phrase we have given. Perhaps the old way of rendering the phrase accounts for the origin of some of the language of Ashdod which has become popular in theology. Of course, strictly speaking, according to the laws of philology, there can be no eternal Son of God, as an "eternal Son" is unthinkable, to say nothing about the absurdity of the use which has been made of the phrase. But let no one suppose that we, for a moment, doubt the eternity of Yahvah. For the reason that the term means He who will be, it does not follow that it has no retrospective signification. He always was as well as always will be, but in different dispensations he is revealed to us under different representations. It is true, however, that under all dispensations he retains the distinctive idea of the Coming One. The Jews looked for him because their prophets had foretold his appearing. After their return from their captivity in Babylon the idea of a deliverer began to grow more and more as a national sentiment; and finally, when the nation became enslaved by the Roman dominion, this looking for the coming one became a national characteristic; for their only hope of freedom was in the promised Messiah.

Nevertheless, he was both despised and rejected, when he did come. His birth was against him. Had he been born in a palace and of royal parentage, doubtless the people would have welcomed his coming and followed him as their promised deliverer. But the manger was not the point from which the Jews expected their King would rise, and when he afterwards became "the Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief" they saw nothing comely in him; and yet the very lowliness of our Lord's birth was the keynote of his wonderful mission. He came to break down at least three ruling distinctions, viz., social distinctions; racial distinctions, and governmental distinctions. He met the first of these in his birth, the second in his death and the third in his coronation. By the humbleness of his birth he broke down the distinction between the rich and the poor; by his death he destroyed the distinction between races, nailing the difference between Jew and Greek to the cross; by his coronation he was proclaimed the rightful ruler over the world, and it only remains now for all the "kingdoms of the world to become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ."

There is still to be a second coming. We may not have a very clear conception of what this coming is, or when it is to take place. It is well known that some of the ablest exegetes differ widely among themselves as to questions involved in the second coming of Christ. Still, there can be no doubt about the fact of the second coming, and this is the main point we desire to emphasize at present. When this issue reaches our readers they will be doubtless celebrating the first coming of Christ, but there will be many who will be looking with longing eyes for his appearance "a second time without a sin offering unto salvation." This second coming is practically the hope of the church. In the New Testament it is so regarded. In the experience of faithful Christians it stands as a beacon light in this world of darkness. We have already seen that Yahvah is the father of futurity, and hence our divine Lord belongs to the future of his saints. His days will never end, the time of his coming may not be known. It may be before the close of this year. It may not be for thousands of years to come. It may be in the evening; it may be at midnight; it may be at dawn. But whether to-day or to-morrow, or at the end of a million of years, the fact of his coming is not changed, and this is the important matter for his people to understand. In any case we should be ready, and the way to be ready is to have our lamps trimmed and full of oil. Of one thing at least we may be assured, we have a work to do whether he comes speedily or not; and as we are about to enter upon the Christmas season let us make that season an inspiration to help us for the coming conflicts with all the powers that oppose the reign of the Prince of Peace. This will make our Christmas a practical factor in our Christian life, and will help us to appreciate more and more the Yahvah of the Old Testament which has become the Christ of the New.

Notes and Comments.

A Colorado woman has discovered that she owns the whole state of Illinois and has filed a claim in due form for $2,000,000,000 together with four other minor claims for various trifles amounting to $500,000,000. This makes the conventional fifty-million-dollar-estate-in-Holland vagary look like a small game, unimportant if true. It is easy to class this as a form of insanity. But why should not the same classification hold for the man who now and then discovers that his ancestors owned the entire site of Philadelphia or Manhattan Island or Pittsburgh and that the whole thing is rightfully his?

It is probable that at the St. Louis World's Fair, 1903, a separate building will be erected for religious exhibits. At no previous exposition has this been done, but an interdenominational committee has been advocating such action and the directors are favorably considering the matter. The religious progress made in the Louisiana Purchase during the past century and the part which religion has played in the development of civilization within that period, certainly deserve definite recognition. Application has been made for a building not less than 380 by 460 feet, to cost about $400,000.

District Attorney Philbin, of New York City, who is in favor of strict regulation for the saloon, thinks, nevertheless, that this particular devil is not so black as he is sometimes painted. "I do not know of any line of business," he says, "in which so much good can be accomplished as in the liquor business. A saloon-keeper, who has a proper conception of his duty to those persons patronizing his place, may be able to save men from becoming victims to the evil of intemperance, and by a high and proper appreciation of that duty prevent his place from being a great source of unhappiness and misery to the families of the men who are in the habit of frequenting it; and there are liquor dealers who are mindful of such obligations." The statement that some liquor dealers are worse than others is not open to criticism, but the fact that some prevent their saloons from becoming as great sources of misery as others scarcely entitles the calling to be placed at the head of the beneficent professions. The best way for a man in the liquor business to do good is to shut up shop and get to work earning an honest living.

About Feb. 1 some one will write us a letter substantially as follows: "Dear Sirs: Why have you stopped my paper? I have been taking the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for twenty years and I don't see why you have suddenly gotten afraid to trust me a few months for my year's subscription." The next day after writing this the brother will be reading over again the last copy of the paper that came before they stopped. His eye will rest on the statement that we will cheerfully give credit to anyone who will order the paper and state at what date (within a year) he will pay for it, but that in the absence of an order accompanied by either cash or promise to pay, we will consider that the paper is not wanted and will stop it. When he sees this it will occur to him that, having advertised that we will discontinue papers unless ordered continued, we must do so or forfeit all claim for payment. He will understand then that we did not distrust him in the slightest, but were simply enforcing a plain business policy which is sensible when applied to groceries and dry goods, and equally so when applied to religious papers. Then he will send his dollar and renew. Send yours now.

The McKinley National Memorial Association has completed its organization and is now beginning its active work. Its purpose is to erect above the grave at Canton, O., a memorial to our late president which will not only represent his place in American history but will be a monument to his place in the hearts of the American people.

To this end the memorial will be erected entirely by popular subscription. By a resolution of the American Bankers' Association, all banks will serve as depositories for subscriptions. All postmasters are authorized to receive and forward money for this object, and the express companies will issue money orders for this purpose free of charge. The representatives of the United States and foreign countries will receive and forward subscriptions. Every subscriber whose name and address is forwarded to the treasurer, Myron T. Herrick, Cleveland, O., will receive a souvenir certificate. To prevent any conflict in this worthy work, the McKinley Memorial Arch Association has determined not to solicit popular subscriptions for the erection of a monument in Washington, but will appeal to Congress for an appropriation for that purpose.

A correspondent in the People's Forum adverts to Dr. Ames's statement, in his article on "Habits," that saying "our plea" instead of "our creed" is a matter of habit and that it is a matter of habit that we approve of the ministerial frock coat and white tie and disapprove of the surplice. To say that a thing is a habit is not to say that there is no rational ground for it. Habit is in the realm of mind what momentum is in the realm of matter—the force which keeps things going. The experiences of any half hour of busy life would present most embarrassing obstructions if we had to think out every problem and bear in mind the reasons for every act. There are hundreds of acts, both mental and physical, which we do without thinking why. We knew the reason once and thought of it every time we did the act, but now the act takes care of itself. Habit is like a well-trained subordinate, or a whole corps of them. It can not do a new thing, but it can repeat indefinitely anything which, in the exercise of your reason, you have done. It is a matter of habit that we walk on our feet and not on our hands, but that is not saying that there are not excellent reasons for the former method. Only we go on with our walking and never stop to think of the reasons. If we did, we would never get anywhere. So with the phrase, "our plea," and the ministerial garb. They are habits, so firmly fixed that we do not often need to think of the reasons. The habit keeps us straight on these matters and leaves us free to think upon weightier concerns.

A correspondent criticizes our recent statement that "we do not think the Scriptures give us any law or rule as to the kind of bread to be used in the Lord's Supper." He reminds us that unleavened bread was always used at the Passover, that Jesus certainly used this sort in instituting the Lord's Supper, and that the absence of leaven was significant of the purity and compactness of the body of Christ. These comments are by no means unfamiliar. One who seeks a symbolic meaning for every detail of an ordinance can usually find it. And such interpretations may be useful, if not emphasized in undue proportion to weightier matters. The fact that Jesus in instituting the Lord's Supper made no reference to the quality of the bread as unleavened, is strong evidence that, however essential that quality may have been to a Jewish Passover, he did not consider it essential to the observance of his Supper. Although the term "wine" is not used in the account of the institution of the Lord's Supper, it is just as certain that the fruit of the vine there referred to was fermented as that the bread used was unfermented or unleavened. If one will say that the expression "fruit of the vine" gives liberty to use any sort of fruit of the vine, fermented or unfermented, then one must also say that the word "bread" gives liberty to use either leavened or unleavened. If one cites the historical fact that the bread actually used was unleavened, as proven by Jewish usage, one must also bring in the historical fact that the fruit of the vine actually used was fermented, as proven by the fact that the Jews at that time knew no other sort, and by the further fact that among the Gentile converts a few years later drunkenness and disorder sometimes prevailed at the communion service, as shown by Paul's rebuke of the Corinthians. Nevertheless we prefer the unfermented grape, juice for the reason stated before, and can see no reason why the use of any particular kind of bread can invalidate the service if it is taken in loving memory of our Lord.

Ministerial Fitness.

The editorial note in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Dec. 12, inst., suggests a few questions pertaining to the proper test of ministerial fitness.

1. Is it true that "these boards are a co-operation of churches" as such, for the purpose of testing the fitness of preachers?

2. If not, is it not a usurpation for the state boards to constitute themselves a bureau of information as to the record and standing of ministers?

3. What guarantee can there be that said bureau will obtain information from reliable sources and they will not become peddlers of local gossip or the slanders of envious preachers, jealous elders or ungodly members?

4. How can they impart their information to inquiring churches without suspicion of being tale-bearers, judging men without hearing them and knowing what they do?

5. Are there not unworthy churches, as well as unworthy preachers, who reject good advice and seek to ruin good and faithful men who rebuke their sins?

6. Why, not apply the New Testament teaching in the recognition of worthy preachers "in the interest of a pure ministry?"

7. Is it not time to call a halt on this invasion of the rights of churches by colleges, editors or boards or committees of any sort, in the regulation of the ministry in ways unknown to the New Testament and contrary to sound doctrine?

Surely, this important duty should be "committed to hands that will perform it," without suspicion or prejudice, and whose right to do so is unquestionable, as it will be when it rests on specific congregational action in a co-operation of churches.

W. L. HAYDEN.

Edinbury, Pa.

These questions are not so hard to answer as they may at first glance appear. We submit the following suggestions, numbered to correspond to the numbers of the questions:

1. It is true that the state boards are co-operations of the churches "as such" to do whatever needs to be done by co-operative effort. At present our co-operative work is practically limited to missions. But it seems to us that it requires a very narrow definition of the scope of missions to exclude the work of protecting struggling churches against scalawag preachers.

2. Answered above. It is not "usurpation" for a state board to tell anything it knows to anybody who asks. It would be usurpation for a board to order a church to employ this man or dismiss that man. But to give information to a church which asks for it is certainly not usurpation.

3. Neither a state board nor any other "co-operation of the churches" can be guaranteed perfect, but probably the members of the board would be as free from prejudice and malice as any other persons who could be secured to represent the churches in this matter. If not, they have no business to be on the board. A man who is a faithful and efficient servant of the churches in directing state mission work, will not be a peddler of gossip and a purveyor of slander when it comes to questions of ministerial character.

4. The suspicion of tale-bearing can seldom be separated from the telling of an unpleasant truth. This is unfortunate but inevitable. For this reason, this work of collecting information about ministerial fitness must always have an unpleasant side. It is not a privilege to be usurped, but a painful duty which must be imposed upon some one.

5. Yes, there are unworthy and foolish congregations which do the wrong thing even when they are well informed. It would take the authority of a bishop or a presbytery to control these, and either of those devices would introduce more ills than it would remedy. But that is no reason why the church which wants to do right should not be given a fair opportunity by furnishing the advice which it needs.

6. That is just what we advocate.

7. If anyone—whether college, editor, board or committee—is invading the rights of churches, it is certainly time to call a halt. But let us not call a halt on the wrong thing. Let us not call a halt on a movement which promises to secure a purer ministry without in the least encroaching upon the independence of the local congregation.

The Giving Time and the Gift-Spirit.

By BAXTER WATERS.

Now comes the season of merry-making—joyous, festive days and nights of glad hearth-stones and good cheer; a time for exchange of greetings, well wishes "and good gifts to all"; and all this because of One who gives, "who gave." These are intimations at least of him whose chiefest joy and prevailing temper was to give; and whose precious words, saved to us in holy writ, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," have transformed many a human life.

The Christmas time would have us consider others; their needs, desires and quests of happiness. It teaches us to say not, "what shall I receive or how be served?" but, "what shall I give and how serve as 'He who came to minister'?" Let us then with Browning

"Rejoice that we are allied
To that which doth provide
And not par ake, and effect and not receive."

This gift-spirit "holds more of God who gives than of his tribes that take." Every life should be serviceable, positive, outgoing, full of sweet charity, and the Christmas season brings these things home to our hearts; it creates that "empyrean air" and cherishes that fine sentiment and holds up that vision splendid under the inspiration of which we enter into a fuller consciousness of sonship and into deeper experience of the incarnation which passes over every man coming into the world.

But this giving-time must over-run all time; it must reach out like a widening river till it enriches all our days and every season is one of joy and every day one of helpfulness. And this gift-spirit should permeate the whole life and saturate every deed and grace. It should be there to urge, to guide and to purify like holy fire. Every day should be lived in the light of the incaruate Son and every duty performed in the warmth of his holy love.

But it is not merely to giving among our kith and kin that "the spirit driveth" us; "do not even the publicans the same?" But our grace, like the Father's, follows the sun which shines on the good and on the evil, on the fair lands and on those who sit in darkness and have perchance no word in their language for LOVE, or no room in their hearts for Christ. The story of the season is one of charity; good will to all—unbounded good will which merges into the grace of God, the God who gives and gives to all.

Is it not strange how few people who profess discipleship have any conception of the duty and the blessedness of giving—giving of their means for the advancement of the heavenly kingdom, for the upbuilding of their own church, for the relief of the poor! Why is it that a religion the very essence of which is service, generosity, philanthropy and love produces so many dwarfed, selfish, mammonish lives, narrow in creed, mean and scanty in faith, bigoted in spirit, miserly and unsympathetic in manner and habit of life. Perhaps they have not been taught; have not heard the angel's song of glad tidings and responded thereto. Perhaps they have refused to follow the star in its bidding to lay down their rich gifts at the Child-King's feet—not daring to give! O God, create in us willing spirits. And as the message of Christmas time dies away on that holy morn, and the chimes of the glad New Year begin their music, let our hearts respond to the poet's great sentiment:

"Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kiedler hand,
Ring out the darkness of the land
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

THE PREACHER'S HANDICAP

By J. H. WRIGHT

Literally, a handicap is an imposed burden which hinders the speed of a runner. Figuratively, it refers to that which retards the progress of any individual or cause. I wish to present some of the things which handicap the preacher of the gospel. I do not refer to those inherent in the man, of which every minister knows there are many, but to the hindrances from without. These confront him daily and he must successfully meet them if the church fulfills its mission.

Paul recognizes this handicap to the individual Christian and urges him to "lay aside every weight" if he would win the race. Writing to the Colossians, he describes these weights as "anger, wrath, malice, railing, shameful speaking and lying." Who could hope to reach heaven handicapped by such sins?

The preacher is also handicapped. This was true even of the Great Teacher. Trying to implant spiritual truths and lead men to some apprehension of his coming kingdom, we are told that, "He spake the word unto them, as they were able to hear it." And even after long and intimate association with his apostles, he was compelled, in his last discourse, to say: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but you can not bear them now." The best that even he seemed able to do was to promise that the Spirit would lead them into fuller knowledge. What the world lost by the inability of his hearers to grasp the still higher truths he may have had in mind, we can never know.

Paul struggled under the same great difficulty at Corinth. "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, as unto babes in Christ. Ye were not able to bear strong food; nay, not even now are ye able." Was it not a misfortune that Paul was so handicapped in the message he would have given to them and through them to the world? The writer of the letter to the Hebrews keenly felt the same embarrassment: "We have many things to say, and hard of interpretation, seeing that you are become dull of hearing."

Is it strange, then, that the uninspired preacher of to-day may find himself handicapped? Human nature does not change very radically. It is true that Christianity has to such a degree modified the trend of thought and opened eyes to the perception of spiritual truth, that some of its lessons are more easily apprehended. And yet, because these conceptions must be made anew by every soul for itself, the preacher has ever before him a mighty task. It has "pleased God to save men by the foolishness of the thing preached," that is, the gospel. What hinders its reception?

It may seem to smack of egotism to say that the preacher is handicapped by the mental status of many he would benefit; but it is true. His mission is dual; the enlistment of men in Christian service and training them spiritually. The mental attitude of the hearer may be receptive, antagonistic, indifferent.

Mental Unpreparedness.

The lack of mental preparation is a constant hindrance. This does not imply that the mind is obtuse, defective or wholly undeveloped. "It is impossible," says a writer on "Psychology of Thought Communication," "to make a mind think a thought it is not prepared for. If children are forced along in their studies too rapidly they soon find themselves unable to think the thoughts required in their lessons. Teacher and pupil must go back to the point where the lessons became unthinkable to the child. Preparatory lessons must be restudied; and sometimes the pupil must lay the subject by and await a larger experience." The same principle is true with reference to those of maturer years. I recall its application to myself in my early college days. There was a study I was anxious to take up, for certain reasons, and was chagrined when the president kindly assured me that it would not be wise to do so, advising that I take it later. The implied lack of development was humiliating. But it was true.

And so it is in the inculcation of religious truth by the preacher. He finds his hearers often unprepared. A good brother once said to me, "If I knew more about the Bible or if you knew more about Short Horns, we could get along better." It was said jocularly, in the early stage of our acquaintance, but there was truth in it. It was Isaiah's lament, "My people doth not consider." Men alert in business, quick in grasping the details of their favorite occupations, grow drowsy under the preaching of the gospel. It is not always because the preacher is prosy. They do not think enough about religious truth.

Mental Indifference is another handicap. Men become so absorbed in business or pleasure, so continually crowd God out of their thoughts, that they grow absolutely indifferent as to what may be true or false in religious thought. "Gallio cared for none of these things," when Jew and Christian discuss God's plan of salvation. So is it with many men to-day. They are absolutely indifferent concerning the claims of God, the mission of the church or the purpose of this journal. Many who have once "tasted the good word of God," manifest the same spirit. They enter a new community but go not near the church. If the pastor learns of their former relation and urges, for their souls' safety, that they resume their place in the church, his words fall upon dull ears. Not that there is moral obliquity, but simple indifference. Other things fill their minds. "With me, the lodge stands first," said one when thus appealed to. "It gave me my home when the church would not." It was not the lodge that gave the home. It was the insurance and this might have been had entirely independent of any lodge. How would this sound? "The New York Life stands first with me; it gave me a home when the church would not." Who would not be shocked at such a comparison? When will we remember that the church and the lodge are not in the same class at all? It is woe unutterable to the true pastor when, from such misconceptions, he sees souls drifting away toward threatened destruction.

Mental Antagonism is another hindrance. I can understand some of its force when I listen to the advocacy of a cause repugnant to my convictions. I read with horror the teachings of some anarchist who would subvert all law. Do I realize that to him the sacred truths I advocate are equally unpalatable? What wonder that it is hard to reach him! And the bias in the minds of the working men of the cities, fostered skillfully by our antagonists, leading them to feel that the church is the advocate of the wealthy as opposed to the poor, makes our work more difficult. We may truly say, "These conceptions are all wrong and do us injustice;" but how can we make them see that they are in error?

Carnality.

to use a Bible term, is a mighty handicap. It is the reverse of spirituality. Its prevalence handicapped Paul. The missionary feels its force. Heathen tongues are largely lacking in words to convey spiritual ideas. New words must be coined or new thoughts must be injected into old words. Christianity found a word used by the Greeks. To them it signified little save manly courage in war. A spiritual thought was injected into it and it came to mean virtue, a broader, sweeter word by far. Piety meant to them reverence for their gods or for parents. Christianity has set it aglow with godly sentiments. How hard it is to reach the man whose life is on the lower plain of carnality, whose mental images are only those of the flesh! How can one plead the dignity of chastity with him whose delight is in licentious thoughts?

In the Corinthian church Paul was confronted with carnality. "For whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal?" was his inquiry of them.

Dissensions Among Christians.

then, is not a new thing under the sun. Happy is the preacher who is not thus handicapped. How bitter they become and how persistent, is well known. And how trivial the cause, occasionally! A church thus divided appealed to one in high standing to adjust their differences. One faction wanted the house painted white, the other yellow. Each side stated its case with force and asked favorable consideration of its position. This was the decision: "I advise that the house be painted black. It is a good color, will wear well and eminently appropriate for a body that ought to go into mourning over such a foolish quarrel among its members." Melancthon, to emphasize the need of harmony among Protestants, told a story of a mighty conflict between the dogs and the wolves. As the armies approached the wolves sent out a spy. He came back with words of encouragement. True, the dog army outnumbered theirs, but he had noticed that they were undrilled, suspicious of one another, snapping and snarling at those on either side. The mastiffs might fight, but the cowardly curs, good only to bark, would run, and victory would be with the wolves. I asked an old soldier what kind of an army would conquer. He said: "The army that is most in earnest, has perfect confidence in its leaders, has no petty jealousies and will obey orders to the letter and to death." Such a church would be victorious, too.

Lack of Stability.

It is discouraging when work accomplished begins to crumble. Build a dam, and have the first freshet sweep it away; gather a harvest, and see fire destroy it in an hour; win souls to Christ, only to see them "tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness"; preach the word, and then marvel that they "are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel!"

Such are some of the things which handicap the minister. Do you wonder at seeming failures, at partial success? What is your attitude toward him, dear reader? Are you antagonistic or sympathetic? Do you indulge in the spur of criticism or, because you know his tribulations, do you inspire him to nobler deeds by words of cheer?

Strong men of God will feel that my picture is feebly drawn. The work of the ministry calls for brave men; men who can stand alone at times if need be; men who can endure criticism with no worry about "vindication"; men of heroic faith; men who walk with God. "God give us men." Such men.

Augmenting the Creed

By L. H. STINE

Not long ago, the writer sat in a temple of light listening to a forceful sermon by a prominent and capable preacher.

In a head that crowned a powerful physical structure the speaker carried a big brain in which reason and imagination balanced each other, performing their functions well.

The speaker had also a voice of great compass, under perfect control, which bore words to the audience that enforced attention. They were words of instruction, then of sentiment and feeling, then of argument followed by a dip into philosophy, then of imagination and before long they were like a razor to a wounded heart when, filled with fury, he inveighed against the action or the character of the hypocrite, or when he denounced an act of civic unrighteousness.

In his sermon the preacher was indoctrinating his congregation into the incomprehensible mysteries of the Christian creed. Doctrinally speaking, the sermon was a superior one. Judging from the speed and momentum he put into it, the speaker was familiar with his theme. The sermon abounded in sweeping assertions and universal propositions that held the attention of the people. The sermon had breadth and depth, and also length to maintain delightful proportion and to produce the desired effect on even some uneducated minds in his audience. With eloquent peroration the impassioned speaker recapitulated the principal points of his argument, and made full confession of his faith. What did he believe?

"I believe in God, in the living God, in the living God; in Christ the prophet, the priest and the king; in the doctrine of the atonement, of inspiration and of immaculate conception."

When the speaker came to the dogma of the immaculate conception the writer became puzzled to determine his whereabouts. No altar was in sight, nor was there a candle burning. No cross with the crucified figure of Christ upon it before which reverent souls bent the knee. No odor of incense served to mark the place as one where the devout Catholic worshiped and adored. Nevertheless, if only the dogma of papal infallibility had been confessed, the people in the church would have heard the two characteristic features of modern Roman Catholicism acknowledged in a Protestant pulpit.

The people did not flinch when they heard the doctrine of the immaculate conception confessed by their popular preacher. They received the doctrinal innovation with a grace that is always becoming in the faithful. On the front pew sat one of the old stalwarts. For forty years he had been contending earnestly for the ancient faith on the corners of the streets in summer, and by the roaring stove in the village store in the winter. When the preacher hurled his fist upon the Bible, that lay on the sacred desk, to illustrate how strong his faith was in the doctrine of the immaculate conception, the old disputer came near dislocating the joints of his neck so emphatically did he nod assent. A superior smile obscured the wrinkles that grew in rows on the face of the president of the Ladies' Aid. The entertaining way her brilliant preacher flogged the folks on the next block tickled her hysterical fancy; and the way he made plain the creed she had so long believed produced such a thrilling sensation in her inward parts as resulted in a slight spasmodic laughter. She came near having a convulsion in church. The writer called to mind Thomas Babington Macaulay's description of the frantic scene in court when Edmund Burke made his famous speech during the impeachment trial of Warren Hastings. Indeed all the people were moved to feelings of high emotion. The wife of one of the deacons said on leaving the church she could have remained all night, the meeting was so good and the preaching was so fine.

Recently an article appeared in one of our leading papers, from one of our most popular and widely known evangelists, in which he took a certain class of his brethren severely to task for dealing mildly with prospective heretics. He criticised these brethren roundly and soundly. Naming a number of fully grown heretics, the evangelist declared that, while these growing heretics were occupying prominent pulpits and places among the Disciples, they were busy denying the doctrine of inspiration, the doctrine of the atonement and also the doctrine of the immaculate conception. This evangelist regarded such a denial as a great sin—a sin against the scriptures and a sin against the church.

No doubt this evangelist had been in the habit of proclaiming this trinity of doctrine as he journeyed from place to place preaching the gospel. High-sounding words in a sermon, these words of immaculate conception, and fine-looking ones in cold black and white. Woe be to the heretic who would deny the dogma of the immaculate conception, when by chance he fell under the scourge of this self-constituted defender of the faith.

What is this doctrine of the immaculate conception that is on the lips of pastor and evangelist, and that is given a place in one of our weekly journals?

The immaculate conception is a modern dogma of the Catholic Church which exempts the Virgin Mary from all personal contact with sin. It was proclaimed by Pius IX. December 8, 1854, in the church of St. Peter in the presence of more than two hundred cardinals, bishops and other dignitaries in these words: "That the most blessed Virgin Mary, in the first moment of her conception, by a special grace and privilege of Almighty God, in virtue of the merits of Christ, was preserved immaculate from all stain of original sin."

Such is the doctrine on which the gifted pastor laid mighty emphasis; which was so dear to the heart of the fighting evangelist and that bore an unfamiliar look in the columns of the Protestant weekly.

The Staple Theme.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

It does seem to me that those pastors who announce that they will preach upon certain themes, such as they take pains to render strikingly novel and which have no vital relation to gospel truth, do not have any real heart in the work of Christ. It looks as though their great regard were to get together a larger congregation than they usually have had, or to keep pace with some other pastor in the place, whose congregation is larger than their own. At any rate, there is an evident lack of downright devotion to the gospel of Christ and the true welfare of men's souls. The staple theme which Christ wants his ministers to continually stick to is his own cross, with all of its relations and significations. This is not the narrow theme which many people imagine that it is. It is the broadest, deepest and most reaching theme in all of God's universe. It affects the whole of man's history. It has to do with everything in the world. The editor of the Australian Christian World, having in mind the statement that a minister had recently used as his theme this novel one, "Lovers and Flirts," thus delivers himself: "Can we imagine John Wesley preaching to 'Lovers and Flirts'?" The very mention of such a theme in connection with his name is sufficient to suggest the answer. But, it will be said, the times are changing; tens of thousands of the people are outside all churches and seem determined to keep outside all churches. Is it not well to attract them, even by guile, to draw them to the house of God? But are they drawn to the kingdom of God by such methods? Are many not disgusted and driven away by our sensational titles and advertisements?

Life From Death

By CLERIN ZUMWALT

I had a dream, a strange and mystic dream.
The day was bleak, the winds of Autumn howled
And overhead a heavy mass of clouds Portending wintry storms hung thick and grey.
The aging year mourned for his youth.
The wind swept o'er the spot where flow'rs had bloomed
In summer days, and tossed upon the air
The moldered leaves all colorless and dead.
The trees were bare, the grasses dead and grey
And by my side an ancient garden wall
Was crumbling 'neath the tread of marching years,
Its top o'erstrewn with dry and faded leaves.
I bowed my head upon the moldering wall;
The wind sang through the trees in mournful tones
That seemed to say, "Such is the life of man;

Those leaves are fallen down to endless death,
Their mold'ring forms but crumble into dust,
Their life is gone forever more while suns
Roll on and nations rise and fall,
And perish, even as the grass of earth."
I trembled at the dream and tried to wake,
When o'er the scene a strange white mist swept down
And, ere it rose, I heard the songs of birds
And on the air the scent of spring was borne
A beauteous scene was spread before my gaze,
A scene profuse with bright and fragrant blooms.
The trees I once thought dead were draped in green,
Were awakened to a new and greater life.
* * * * *
The dream is past but still the truth remains
That Death is but the father of young Life,
And ere we wed the maid we love so well
We must the father meet and clasp his hand.

happiness as now. Never before has duty been with so many delight. The old pain is becoming the new pleasure.

The old happiness has ever tended to be fleeting, eluding the hand or turning to ashes in the grasp. This has been its world-long history. Not so the new happiness; it is tangible, enduring. It is not a vanishing quantity, but treasure at compound interest. A noble deed done is a perennial fountain of satisfaction, nor shall you hear the last of it on others' lips. Nor does it, like pleasure, leave the heart hungry; it is a satisfaction. He who builds his life at the pleasure level has missed the law of his being. As well feed your hunger with hay at the stall of the ox as seek to satisfy the heart with animal happiness.

The means of the new happiness are unlimited. The old wealth is difficult to obtain; the new wealth is ours for the taking.
Everywhere, every hour, we may do good and drink its satisfaction. Here is a universal wealth like sunshine.

The ability for the new happiness is allied to genius. It is genius—highest human faculty—in the realm of the heart.
Genius finds its reward in the joy of doing,
not in some low gain that its work buys.
Genius, like love, is unselfish. Hack work in literature or in anything else hampers genius. The rapture of doing is its high reward. The lady cultivates her garden that she may see the flowers bloom, not that she may be paid for it. What garden like God's great garden of hearts! What blossoms like happy faces! What fragrance like gratitude and good will! Is there no joy in such floriculture? They of the better taste delight to cultivate the most beautiful thing—human happiness.
The day is coming when the vandalism (selfishness) which treads down God's most beautiful things will be called barbarous.
It is a veritable coarseness—but all little hearts are coarse and neighbor to the animal.

The new happiness has its reverberation.
The generous act not only goes out a happiness but comes back to us multiplied and baptized in the good will of another.
Do a kindness even to a savage and he will never forget it, and will long to repay it, not in measure but a hundredfold. "Every spirit begets its own likeness" is a master law of the human heart. It is a magician's wand by which we may make men not only good and glad, but our lovers. No imagination can conceive what the world would be under the application of this law.
Place a lamp between two mirrors and in each will be seen an infinite line of lamps like the first. It is the physical law of reflection. The spiritual is like it. Throw a joy into another heart and it is reflected back and forth forever between you. When men cease to be little the millennium will be here and the world will be resplendent with its million lamps of joy.

The time never will come when the human soul can spare its hope of a future life and when the loss of it would fail to darken, belittle and ultimately brutalize the present; but we stand near to a time when heaven shall be less a hope than the prolongation of a present blessedness, when righteousness shall cease to be half a prudence, and when duty and delight shall be one.

The New Happiness

By N. J. AYLSWORTH

(CONCLUDED.)

George Eliot gave voice to the aspiration of her life in these words. She longed to be

"Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence; live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
For miserable aims that end in self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge man's search
To vaster issues."

... be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony;
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love;
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty—
Be the sweet presence of a good diffused,
And in diffusion even more intense,
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world."

Mrs. Cross was not a believer in the Christian's heaven, and it was in the presence of the great darkness that she wrote these words. If the hope of immortality were blotted from the human heart it would be an unspeakable calamity, and every noble impulse would feel the shock; but there are many, very many, who would not, therefore, say, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," but would rather be moved to a great pity for the meagreness of human life, and would seek to make its little hour as glad as possible for their fellows. To them life would be sweeter so.

The older preaching dwelt much on rewards and punishments, and painted in lurid colors the agonies of the damned.
To-day, with multitudes, the most winsome plea is that which appeals to a sense of duty and calls to sacrifice. Men are hungry to do good. Mr. Sheldon set the world on fire with a simple story of self-denying service for others. "In His Steps" has no other charm than that of unselfish service; but the church was as tinder to his words. The world is hungry for the new happiness. It would taste the blessedness of toil, and even of pain, for others. Multitudes are finding the heart's high pastime in the philanthropies. Life would be empty for them if it held but business and the selfish pleasures.

The study of sociology, which has come to the front in the last few years, has for its object the betterment of the many, and the keen interest which is taken in it is but a form of philanthropy. The absorbing question of the age is how to do good.

The last stronghold to yield to the new manhood is, by its very nature, the business world. A high pressure of selfishness was once almost necessary to a successful business career, but a new conception is beginning to dawn on the business world.
Within the last few years quite a number of capitalists have sought to carry the spirit of brotherhood into their business relations with employees, and the result has been so satisfying that the principle is steadily gaining ground. It is found not only to be financially practicable but to yield a fund of satisfaction and good feeling, as well as public approbation, that is very gratifying.
In a word, the old duty is being rediscov-ered as the new happiness.

This remarkable change in the capacity for happiness, which is one of the most striking features of our age, is due to a growth of the human heart. Dryden, himself a large type of man, said:

"The secret pleasure of the generous act
Is the great mind's great bribe"

But it is not so with small minds, and the new happiness has been long in coming because the heart of man was little.
To those who live at the animal level it is not "more blessed to give than to receive," but is really painful; and the larger part of mankind has yet to learn that the sinking of self in doing good, apart from any ulterior gain, is itself a high form of happiness; that God has so made the human heart that cross-bearing is crown-wearing on its upper side. This truth mined from the human heart is worth more than all the other discoveries of our wonderful age. It infolds the millennium. Many individuals during all the Christian ages have found out the secret, but never before has the world at large stood so near to the new

Why I Love the Prayer-Meeting.

By Clayton Keith.

I love the prayer-meeting because:

1. After the cares and labors and perplexities of the day my mind and soul find sweet relief in communing with God. "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord."

2. It brings me close to God. It is here that he has promised to meet his children. "Where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them." Many of my brethren and sisters may be absent, but God is always there. He never stays away. We cannot see him, but we all feel his presence.

3. It brings me near heaven. When we have met around the mercy-seat and poured out our souls in prayer to God, we can say, like Jacob of old, "Surely this is the gate of heaven." We think of the joys and the glories of the redeemed. By faith we contemplate the beauties and the enjoyments of the Christian home.

4. It is here that I gain new views of truth. An old truth is seen from another view point, and new light is shed. The spark struck out kindles a flame in my heart.

5. It is a relief to my conscience. By attending the prayer-meeting, I am able in part to redeem the solemn pledge that I made before angels and men when I gave myself to Christ and to his church. I then made and yet have a peaceful conscience—void of offence toward God.

6. It does my soul good. I am thereby refreshed in spirit and renewed in thought. I am stimulated to greater activity in the service of God. My faith and hope and love are all increased, and I feel stronger in my claim of being a child of God.

7. It encourages my brethren and sisters. The sweet fellowship of kindred spirits strengthens, animates and encourages all who gather together during "the sweet hour of prayer." The privilege of praying with and for others relieves my own heart. Go out and comfort some sad heart and come back strengthened. Pray for others if you would be strong in the day of trial. The few who are regular attendants at these meetings, who have borne the heat and burden of the day, sometimes feel sad because so few "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." I love to go and sit with them and share their burdens and labors, that I may in the great day of God have the privilege of sharing their abundant reward.

8. I know from brief experience that, if I am prompt and regular in my attendance at the prayer-meeting, it will greatly encourage our minister in the work that lies before him. His labors are arduous, his discouragements are many, his watchings and longings for souls are constant. I will not cause him to think that I have forsaken the place of prayer, lest his heart sink and he become discouraged. I will go and encourage him by my presence, by my prayers and by words of encouragement.

9. Perhaps my attendance may have an influence upon the unconverted—some friend out of Christ. He gets his idea of Christianity largely, if not entirely, from the lives of Christians, as it is reflected from you and from me. When he sees how earnest and persevering we are in Christian duty, and that our lives are consistent, he may "take knowledge that we have been with Jesus."

He may be induced to go himself to a place that is so constantly attractive to me and to my brethren and by this means he may be brought to Christ.

"Under whose preaching were you converted?" asked one of our aged ministers of a young lady convert. "Under aunt Mary's living," was the prompt reply.

10. I am sure that my attendance will glorify God. To glorify God is the great object for which Christians should live. "Whether you eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." In the spiritual prayer-meeting, God is honored by the growth of Christians in grace and in knowledge. Then I will go and meet the Savior and be richly blessed.

B. B. Tyler's Letter

The Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has just closed a mission of ten days' duration in Denver. He spoke twice a day—in the afternoon on Prayer, and in the evening on The Christian Life. I could not hear him in the evening. I heard four of his addresses on Prayer. The last two days of his mission he spoke three times each day—in the morning to ministers alone, in the afternoon and evening to whoever would come. The purpose of the meeting was the deepening of the spiritual life. His sojourn in Denver, I believe, has been a blessing. The Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is about the sanest itinerant preacher of gospel truth I have ever heard. He is so altogether different, in appearance, in thought, and in manner from Mr. Moody that I do not see how it was possible for the two men to work in harmony, as I am assured they did. Again and again Mr. Morgan said things that were diametrically opposed to the teaching of Mr. Moody. He does not lack much of being a great man. He is didactic in his style. He is an unusually thoughtful man. For an Englishman he speaks remarkably good American English! The spirit of the man is exceedingly kind. He does not awaken antagonism on the part of his hearers even when he says things the correctness of which they doubt. He believes that the other man has rights as well as himself, and these rights he respects.

Mr. Morgan was born in England about thirty-eight years ago. His ancestors, for generations, were Congregationalists. His mother belongs to a Baptist family. His father was a Baptist minister, but his leanings toward Plymouth Brethrenism caused him to surrender his church and salary. Both parents now live with Mr. Morgan. I infer from a remark made the other day in a public address that their home is now in Baltimore. He represents the Northfield (Mass.) Extension work inaugurated by Mr. D. L. Moody.

Mr. Morgan is unable to point to a time and place and say: "Then and there I was converted." From childhood he has loved the Lord and has endeavored to do his will. His first public address was given when he was only thirteen years old. His subject was "The Common Salvation." He was at the time in association with the Wesleyans. He determined to enter the ministry and in 1888 offered himself to the Wesleyans, but was refused. Mr. Morgan was asked if he would enter the theological college, and when he explained that, owing to family responsibilities, this would not be possible, he was informed that there was no place for him in Methodism. In his addresses the influence of Plymouth Brethrenism on his mind can be seen. If he wears a denominational label now it is that of Congregationalism. Any one, or all, of his addresses in Denver might have been given with entire acceptance in any congregation of Disciples of Christ. A few things he said that would bring into use interrogation points; but the same remark may be made with equal truth concerning any man in the ministry of the Christian Church.

Mr. Morgan crossed the Atlantic the first time in 1896. Rev. Albert Swift, whom he came to visit, wrote to Mr. Moody, who at once invited Mr. Morgan to give a series of Bible readings to his students in Chicago. He was so well pleased that he invited him to return to America in '97. Until Mr. Moody's death, Mr. Morgan visited America every summer, giving one or more addresses daily for three weeks. In 1899 he made a tour of 10,000 miles and held conventions in some of the largest cities. It is reported, on what seems to be good authority, that Mr. Moody said in the summer of '98: "Mr. Morgan is altogether the most remarkable man I have ever had at Northfield."

For four years he was pastor of New Court church, London. He is said to have been remarkably successful in the pastorate. The New Court chapel is in one of the most populous north London districts. He said one day during his mission in Denver, that he had not seen a prayer-meeting in the United States. He then explained that a prayer-meeting is a meeting for prayer, and said that in our so-called prayer-meetings we do many other things than pray. There is quite as much talking and singing as praying. Nor is America worse off than England in regard to prayer-meetings. But can there be a meeting in which those who are present will do nothing but pray? Mr. Morgan says that such a meeting is possible. He had two such meetings each week in his church in London. At first the attendance was small, but both attendance and interest steadily increased until from a hundred to a hundred and fifty persons were present in each meeting. His Wednesday evening meeting he did not call a prayer-meeting. It was a meeting for a systematic study of the Bible.

Reference is made above to the Northfield Extension work. The object of what is called the Northfield Extension work is to hold conventions of a few days' duration for Christian people in the large centers of our land. It was undertaken in response to many urgent requests for speakers to visit churches and repeat their Northfield addresses after the close of the summer meetings, and thus extend to those who were unable to attend Northfield the privilege of hearing some of the speakers. It is in this character of work that Mr. Morgan is engaged. His time is taken every day until the first of October, 1903.

Reuben in Rome

By MORTON H. PEMBERTON

The people in Italy, like society in other European countries, are divided into classes, the aristocracy, the middle classes, and the lower classes, on down to nobody. Now, in America we have just the two classes, the common people and the politicians.

The Italians are a poor people. The aristocracy is broke and the common people are "busted." The people give all of their money to the priests and then beg for a living.

My most distinct recollection of Italian character is the fact that they will fleece a foreigner. They justify this on the ground that they need the money. One day in the streets of Rome a jewelry peddler haunted us with his trinket-box, trying to sell us some jewelry. He held up a shining spoon and said, "Gold spoon, two dollar and a half." I thought this would make a good spoon for my wife's souvenir collection and said, "I'll give you twenty cents." I got the spoon. That's a sample of Italian character—and it's also a sample of a sucker.

I maintain that if you give a man Jewish origin, Italian training, English cheek and American opportunity, he will be making loans to the government in less than ten years.

But all Italians are not dagos. They have their gentlemen and their rascals just like other countries, if not in the same proportion. Nor are all anarchists Italians. Conditions which produce anarchy merely reached Italy first, and they have suffered its poisonous sting as well as we. When we make life as hot for anarchists as the Italian government has, they will get out of this country just as they have had to get out of Italy.

The history of Rome, according to the books, begins in obscurity, or soon after. The most trustworthy historians say that Rome was founded about 750 B. C., by Romulus and Remus, two little boys who were nursed and raised by a she wolf. This may be true, for all over Italy there are statues of this wolf with Romulus and Remus taking their morning's milk.

The Romans ran a republic until about forty years before Christ, when Julius Cæsar set up an empire, and got murdered for his trouble. Then followed Cæsar Augustus who was on the throne when Christ was born. Then came Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius and Signor Nero, the violinist, and a host of other Emperors, some good and some bad, on down to 476 A. D., when Rome fell and was picked up by the Popes and carried down to the eighth century and turned over to Charlemagne, after which the German Emperors and the Popes ran it in partnership and sometimes in conflict. The Pope always considered himself the senior partner.

Our visit to St. Peter's was not so much to see the services as to see the art and architecture of the greatest temple that was ever raised to religion. Not being an artist I cannot describe St. Peter's from an artistic standpoint, but merely from an American point of view, and say that it cost $50,000,000 to build it, and that it costs $40,000 per year to run it—and then they hardly pay the priests enough to keep up their families.

Nearly everything in St. Peter's is marble and gold and precious stones, excepting the pipe organs and parts of them are ivory. The guide took us down to see the golden casket which they claim contains the remains of the Apostle Peter. Not being a scholar, I don't know whether they were the real remains of Peter or not, but I am inclined to give truth the benefit of the doubt. Scholars seem to be divided in opinion as to whether Peter was ever in Rome when alive, much less dead. However, I am not a fellow who would take Santa Claus away from the children unless I had some better things to give them than they were getting from Santa. Therefore, all who want to can believe that St. Peter was in Rome and is now actually buried in St. Peter's cathedral.

As I beheld this most beautiful and most wonderful church in the world, I said, did love of God or pride of man build it? And I wondered if Jesus Christ were on earth again would he not say to those who claim to represent him, "Sell these precious stones, and see to the beggars that throng the streets of Rome," and announce again that the hearts of men are the temples in which God dwells.

The Vatican is where they keep the Pope and the best art works. It covers thirteen and one-half acres and has more than one thousand rooms in it. This is entirely too much room—more than any family could hope to fill—besides, the Pope is a single man.

In the Vatican is the famous Sistine Chapel in which are those wonderful ceiling paintings by Michelangelo. People stand for hours with mirrors in their hands, looking at these frescoes. It is too hard on the neck to gaze up at them very long. There is also in the Sistine Chapel Michelangelo's celebrated "Last Judgment" which covers one whole end of the chapel. It represents innumerable sheep going into heaven and the goats going somewhere else. It looked to me like Dante's Hell. I am sure the conception was not obtained from the Bible.

The star picture of the Vatican art gallery is Raphael's "Transfiguration." Christ is hovering between Moses and Elias; Peter, James and John are prostrate upon the ground, dazzled by the light of the ascending Christ. To the left are the figures of St. Lawrence and St. Stephen, and in the lower part of the picture are several disciples being requested to heal an afflicted boy. How fitting was it that Raphael was working on this very picture, when, in 1520, the light of his young life went out. Barely was the matchless figure of Christ finished when Raphael dropped his brush to ascend with his Master into a heaven of immortality and eternal love.

It takes twenty-five big rooms and one large hall to hold the Vatican library. This makes a nice working library for the Pope.

However, it is used principally for exhibition purposes. The wisdom of the country being in the hands of the priests, the people do not have much use for books.

I had studied Latin in college for five or six years and had gotten the idea that the Roman Forum was a kind of platform that the old Romans built for Cicero to speak on. When Rome fell it was a great shock to the Forum. The temples and government buildings crumbled, the monuments fell and the middle ages covered them up with about forty feet of dirt and rubbish. By the fifteenth century blacksmith shops were built on it; teamsters used it as a hitching-ground and tied their horses to the marble columns which stuck up through the dirt; the oxen of the peasantry were allowed to graze upon it while their owners tried to skin each other in trade; and the very name of Forum was forgotten. At the beginning of last century the scientific spirit took up the matter and began to resurrect the bones of early Rome.

Here it was that Marc Anthony delivered his celebrated funeral oration when the anarchists stabbed Cæsar. Pictures are carved on the inside of the arch of Titus representing the Emperor in a four-horse car, driven by Roma, the triumphal procession with the captive Jews, and Titus is being carried away to heaven by an eagle. As a rule a Roman Emperor didn't go to heaven, but Titus was a good Emperor when compared with the others, though if he had lived in our day he would have been turned out of the church.

The colosseum looks like a large hog-head with four tiers of seats and an arena imagined in it. Charles Dickens says that a man ought to visit the colosseum by moonlight. I happened to be in Rome at the same time the moon was there. Evening was just beginning, and as I approached the massive walls of the great amphitheatre, I almost wished that I was soon to be on the inside to see an ancient bullfight, or to see the gladiators fight, or to see the lions and tigers claw each other, or to see a game of football. As there was nobody to kill I walked around, thinking and thinking, until I found myself making a speech to the night air.

I thought of the thousands of slaves and workmen who had died of heat and exhaustion while fitting in the stones of these old crumbling walls. I thought of the thousands of captives and innocent prisoners whose blood was spilled to amuse a bloodthirsty people, and I thought I could hear voices crying out from the walls of this wicked old colosseum, "To the lions with the Christians!" Here it was that Christian martyrs poured out their blood and gave their bodies to be burned or torn to pieces by the beasts, rather than deny that Jesus Christ was their Savior and friend. And I said, God be thanked that what remains of this old colosseum is now a ruin and that its most precious stones are in the buildings and altars of Christian churches, bearing witness to the triumph and victory of Christianity.

Life's Current

By MINNIE E. HADLEY

Oh, what is life, and what can mean
This ceaseless toil for worldly gains,
This bitter strife, this anguish keen,
Of sickened hearts and wearied brains?

I see the strong oppress the weak,
As in the days when might was right,
And selfish men their own ends seek,
'From early morn to hush of night.

"And is this life?" I ask again,
Is this the end that God designed?
A triumph o'er our fellow men,
A well-filled purse, a cultured mind?

It must be so; else why this strife,
Or why this thirst for worldly fame?
And why will man lay down his life,
To gain for self a lasting name?

But, lo! there comes the voice of One Who humbly walked by Galilee,
"As ye to the least of these have done, Ye've also done it unto me."

In this I read the purpose true,
The end and aim of life's great plan.
We live for the good that we can do Unto our suffering brother man.

Fellowship

By FRED DYSART

It has long been a source of regret to me that our brotherhood is considered a denomination by other Christian people, and that we are not more successful in presenting the truth we have to sectarian Christians. Are we doing all we can for Christian union?

In the first Corinthian letter Paul gives instruction to a divided church. "Now this I say that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ." It seems that those who said, "I am of Christ," were considered by Paul as one of the sects. His instruction to them was not that all the other sects join those who said, "I am of Christ." His reproof falls alike upon all. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." And Paul addresses this letter "unto the Church of God, which is at Corinth; to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord." He does not withdraw his love or fellowship in any degree from the brethren who call themselves after Apollos or Cephas. Nor does he send any special words of encouragement or approval to those who say they are of Christ. Were they not all to blame? If so, what was the fault of those who said, "I am of Christ"? It seems they did not have the same sorrow over the divided state which Paul had and would have them feel. They had at least permitted the others to withdraw from them. Instead of using all their efforts to keep the church together, they had ceased to plead with those in error and had commenced to talk of their own perfection—"We are of Christ."

Paul would have them do as he did—refuse to recognize their different names and continue to speak of their erring brethren as one with them in Christ. Though they might seek to withdraw from Paul he would not be divided from them, but would still hold in full love and fellowship all who "call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord." This is holding the truth in love.

I think of the men who in the past ten years have worked most effectually among the churches and have done the most in bringing about co-operation of the denominations. They have not been of our brotherhood. Some have gained so large a hearing from all Christian people that, although they themselves were sectarian in name, that fact has been forgotten. They are known by their fruits. Their work was better than the creed to which they had subscribed. Wherever they labored harmony and love increased and practical Christian union was promoted.

Do we not believe that many of the members of sectarian churches are followers of Christ? Christ prayed that his followers might be one. Ought we not to be one with all of Christ's followers as nearly as possible? The work of bringing about Christian union must be done by those who desire the fulfillment of this prayer. If we fail in this mission in any measure it will not be through the fault of others. The work Christ has for us to do he will give us the ability to perform when and how he wills. Our usefulness depends entirely upon the attitude of our own hearts—our willingness to be co-laborers with him. If we will recognize and act upon the truth that we should not be divided from other Christians, our part of the union will be effected. If we still hold to them and refuse to give them up there can be only a partial division between us. This is not impractical. When a wayward boy goes far away from his sorrowing mother we do not say there is a division. No matter how many miles between them that mother still holds her boy in her heart. What church of live Christians could have kept Mr. Moody from its fellowship and from entering fully into its work?

Paul sought to correct error wherever he found it, but did not permit errors in judgment or understanding of the gospel to alienate him from any who called upon the name of our Lord. For those who were in error Paul held the hope expressed to the Philippians, "If in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you."

Should we not have the same standard for Christian fellowship which Paul had, and admit to full fellowship with us "all who call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord"?

We know there are those who love and worship our Lord and are doing work for him who do not have perfect knowledge of the ordinances of his church. Should we not receive such into the closest fellowship and endeavor to "show them the way of the Lord more perfectly"? The more like brethren we can be to them the more their hearts will be opened to our message of truth. Charity is greater than knowledge. It prepares the way for knowledge.

Holding the truth we have in love, preaching and teaching it as we have opportunity, can we not trust God to reveal "even this unto them"?

[The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, as its readers well know, does not believe that our plea for union would be strengthened or our position rendered either more scriptural or more acceptable to the religious world by a departure from our present teaching and practice with regard to the relation of baptism to church membership. We publish the foregoing article because of its excellent spirit and genuine spirituality and because it states admirably the view of those who do advocate a change. For a statement of the other view see the editorials entitled "A Problem of Consistency" in our issues of Sept. 19 and Oct. 3.—EDITOR.]

The Cleveland Congress and Church Benevolence.

Through the courtesy of B. L. Smith, secretary of Home Missions, organized Christian Philanthropy was allowed one hour for the presentation of its claims to the brotherhood at the Minneapolis convention. This brevity is due to the close affinity of Christian benevolence to every feature of church activity.

It is not distinctively Foreign Missions, for it cares for the old soldier fallen on the home field, and recruits, through our orphanages, our home churches as well. Its purpose is not identical with that of Home Missions, for it administers the grace of churches already established. It helps our Church Extension fund, for men perceive the value of churches who see them caring for world-forsaken aged and educating orphans; yet it draws its resources principally from around the altar of the church. It supplements Ministerial Relief, but is larger than that, for the needy minister constitutes only one segment in the greater circle of Christian Philanthropy.

All these interests are friendly to the National Benevolent Association because it is worthy and because it helps them all; and yet, which is willing to yield any part of its time on the program to this ministry, which exactly coincides in scope and method with none. Yet all recognize it would be a reproach to any people and excite wide-spread indignation if it were ignored by our national conventions.

The proclamation of the truth is one pan and practical helpfulness is the other pan of the gospel scale. In one of these are our various missionary societies and special funds and in the other is our Benevolent Association. How will necessary equilibrium be maintained.

I propose that the questions of: The place of benevolence in our national conventions, the attitude of our churches thereto, and the advisability of consolidating all of our philanthropies into one such union as characterizes the home, foreign, C. W. B. M., and church extension societies be referred for solution to the Cleveland Congress that meets next March.

The Boy Preacher

By BERNARD GREENSTEIN

Our age is remarkable for its numerous juvenile prodigies. Boy orators and girl pianists are not so very uncommon, and children can be found who are exhibiting professionally their precocious intellects for money and the notoriety which a daily newspaper only too cheerfully donates. But the height of juvenile monstrosity is fairly attained by that religious curiosity known as boy preachers. These freaks are rapidly developing into an evangelistic profession. They are fast becoming a staple article in the church market. The boy preacher is a convenience on the theory that a revival is a religious attraction, something out of the ordinary to awaken church members and induce non-church members to become church members. Churches and theaters both engage attractions. The church's entertainment is usually considered more serious and less sensational—but not so when it is a boy preacher.

What is more absurd than the frantic efforts of a boy revivalist whose only consecration is his nerve, and whose only intellect is his prodigious memory? One can scarcely conceive of anything more farcical, unless it be the reception that a usual church audience accords the youthful minister. The boy is to them an inspired darling, a heavenly fondling, and a little dear whose very person is almost sacred. Many endearing epithets are indiscriminately fired at him, and the boy, of course, receives them with great dignity. The congregation hears the juvenile wonder quote a dozen Scriptures, and goes into a few ecstasies over the remarkable feat of remembering a number of familiar passages. When the boy gives the familiar explanations, the congregation goes into more ecstasies, and immediately proclaims him to be a profound student of theology. His memory is mistaken for intellect. His superficial jumbling of words and passages is called profound analysis.

The writer was a boy preacher for three years, and he speaks from experience. He made many blunders in his untutored ministry, yet his admiring friends rarely corrected them for him, but instead of the corrections which he certainly needed, he received the thoughtless compliments which could be given only by an over appreciative audience. The writer will never forget the friendly minister who showed him the tremendous error of being a boy preacher at all, and his only regret is that his course was not sooner interrupted. Conceit had to be irreparably punctured before his friend's counsels could take effect.

I appeal most sincerely to the Christian public and church officials to ignore boy preachers, basing my appeal not only on three years' experience and subsequent observation, but on the three following reasons:

First. A boy preacher is a disarrangement in the economy of the church. The inaugurators of the primitive church never thought of boy preachers, much less of providing a place for them in the machinery of the church. The Jewish custom of delegating powers to adults prevailed exclusively in the constitution of the early church, and it shows admirable sense. The theory of the custom was simply that adults have the responsibility which maturity only can give. The application of this Jewish theory by the early apostles and disciples is, that since the Gospel is a grave matter, therefore it ought to be disseminated by persons of recognized gravity, dignity and responsibility. Christ never preached when he was a boy, despite the modern notion that he did. He asked and answered questions.

Many quote Matt. 21: 16, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise," in defense of the modern boy preacher, but there are several flaws about this defense. The thing commended in children in this passage is praising, not preaching. Furthermore, it does not fit the boy preacher because he does not consider himself a babe and a suckling. He considers himself a boy, and, at the same time, the possessor of adult intellectual insight and adult delivery. No boy has scriptural authority to preach, and he most certainly has no Bible precedent to follow.

Second. Juvenile preaching is injurious, both negatively and positively. Juvenile ministry occasions much notoriety, and this notoriety naturally stimulates his vanity. Children are more affected by certain forms of notoriety than adults, e. g., newspaper notices and pictures. This is natural, but the systematic appearance of a boy preacher's name in connection with the remarkable effects he has had on a capricious church, destroys the naturalness of the elation and develops in the boy a morbid passion for more notoriety. This is the positive injury; it makes him unnaturally vain.

Again, the boy preacher is injured negatively by losing his opportunity for mental and intellectual improvement. All boy preachers are saturated with the idea that they are divinely commissioned to save the world, and all their little energies are put forth in this direction. He will not allow studies to intrude on his time in preaching. The professional boy preacher is too busy to study, so when he attains his manhood, he finds himself inadequate to its requirements because of his want of education. The boy preacher does not think of his inevitable manhood and its wonderful possibilities, but he thinks of a lost world and what he might do in his youth. But the world remains unmoved.

Third. Better prepared and more consecrated adult evangelists are always obtainable. To this reason, one may reply, "These are not attractions." If this is a valid objection, it would be better to dismantle the church or close its doors. Shame on that church which needs attractions to secure an attendance; which refuses to recognize the attractive power of a dynamic gospel; which declines to see the unique alluring power of an immaculate Jesus, and which resorts to the worldly methods of sensationalism in order to fill its miserable edifice! Christianity needs no monstrosity to aid it.

For these reasons, I object to boy preachers, and these reasons are the basis of my appeal to all Christians to ignore entirely the modern boy preacher.

The Young Minister in the Large Church.

By F. N. Calvin.

The question of retirement of the man with the gray hairs, and the more serious question of church mismanagement are more closely related than many at first suppose. With a certain class there is always a demand for the young minister. Unfortunately there are many among us who accede to this demand without giving it the serious thought that it sometimes requires. The result is that often a young man who has just been graduated from college, with little or no experience in practical church management, but who can make a brilliant talk, is recommended by his teachers and admirers, and is called to the work. Soon the novelty of the new relation wears off, and he comes face to face with practical problems that demand large experience and wisdom. He is unable for the task that confronts him, and is forced to do one of two things: resign, or put on a bold face and blunder into the undertaking without sufficient preparation. In either case he has been injured, and the church has been weakened. The men who are best prepared to fill the places of responsibility in the secular world are men who have worked their way up from the bottom, and who understand all about the management from the smallest institution to the greatest. The men who are best prepared to occupy the pulpits of the large churches are, as a rule, the men who have begun at the bottom in the country church or small town, and have worked their way up through a great variety of experiences until they know almost every variety of human nature and practical problem that they will meet in the large city church.

Are not our colleges somewhat to be blamed for this condition of affairs? Their representatives are anxious to get their students into places of honor and influence, where perhaps they may in turn do some special work for their alma mater and, when it is known that some large city church, or some church of influence is without a pastor, one of their last year's graduates is recommended. Through the pressure of the college influence, and from the demand of a certain class who want the young man, and because of a few brilliant speeches which the young minister can make, a man is called to a work for which he is practically unprepared, and some man who is thoroughly competent, but who is guilty of growing a few gray hairs, is pushed off into a field that does not demand one-half of his real ability.

Colorado Springs, Col.

One day at a time, is the divine order of living. God never encourages the habit of long payments. The Bible teaches that we cannot lay up any storehouse of blessings in this life. We may lay up treasures in heaven, but our supply here is from day to day. We must pray "give us day by day our daily bread." Strength and blessing come as we need them, and not to be stored away where they may rust.

The People's Forum

"Experience."

There has been much loose declaiming against experience, due perhaps, to the abuse of it as evidence of regeneration. But it has a most important place in religion. "A real theology, that rings true and is to carry any conviction, must be a personal confession of faith" (H. C. King). We get at the truth by each one's honestly declaring "his best." Has not one who has struggled with doubt and been victorious—for example, Prof. Romanes—an experience worth recording? Who can estimate the worth of a man's message, who has lost children, seen his home broken up because of sickness and death, whose friends then forsook him, and yet feels his faith in Christ and man deepen? I would give more for the honest and thoughtful, telling of his feelings and convictions and how he won his victory, than for a barrel of sermons on what is commonly called "first principles."

"A Good Mixer."

In one of our religious papers I read recently a notice to the effect that Bro. Blank, having just brought his labors at a particular point to a most glorious consummation, was open for engagement. He placed special stress on the fact that he was a "good mixer." I had hoped that we had seen about the worst of this nefarious business of playing the clown in the social life of our churches. If it were simply a matter of words the fact remains that the term in question is vulgar. Its chief use is to be found around the prize ring. It would also be a fitting name for some master of the punch bowl. But it is not a matter of words alone. This incident tells the awful truth that men who have assumed the holy office of ministers of Christ have utterly abandoned the preaching and teaching of the truth and spend their small store of energy in throwing a sop to the worldly side of the churches. It is passing strange how so many preachers can spend all their effort in trying to scintillate before the people and to gush from their pulpits, while the groans of dying churches are to be heard on every hand.

The Preacher and the Workingman.

Brethren, go into the shops more. Speak to the workmen more naturally. Come into living fellowship with them. Talk with them in groups. Let them talk freely among themselves in your presence, you being one with them.

You can say anything to them as counsel if your own life and manners confirm the advice. Be honest, plain and sensible with them. They are men, brothers, and have keen insight, and despise sham and cant. All the stronger ones disdain any show of superiority. Many preachers without realizing it show such self-esteem and formal expression that the plain workman of the world cannot be reached by them.

In the degree that preachers are in dead earnest and love men they can reach the working people. Zeal may be to reach success, but the true spirit is a zeal to win souls, save people from sin and see them united to Christ.

Training for Bishops.

I suggest the establishment of a correspondence course of instruction for church bishops to study at home, and answer stated questions by mail, as may be outlined. Ministers are supposed to prepare themselves for their special work. The bishop should likewise prepare himself for the special work the Holy Spirit has appointed for him to do.

Such a course would better fit them for their sacred calling, wonderfully assist the minister, unify the whole church, always keep the pulpit supplied, and thus "feed my lambs" who would otherwise go hungry. Whenever a minister ceases to study his work his usefulness is soon over, and the same is true of the bishop or any one else. Standing as the bishop does between the minister and the congregation in so many respects, a responsibility devolves upon him that neither he nor the church can afford to permit him to assume unless scripturally educated. No minister can know too much about his work. The same is true of the bishop. The method of bringing this before the bishops can be considered later if this idea is approved.

The Value of Religion.

It is an undoubted fact that the Christian religion is the strongest principle of virtue with all men, and with nine-tenths of mankind is directly or indirectly the only principle of virtue. Any attempt, therefore, to ignore it or to destroy it must be considered as an attempt against the well-being and happiness of the human race. If the heathen philosophers did not attempt to subvert the false religions of their country but, on the contrary, gave them the sanction of their example because, bad as these systems were, they had a considerable influence on the manners of the people, and were better than no religions at all, what shame, what contempt, what infamy, ought they to bear and incur on themselves who endeavor to overthrow a faith which contains the very noblest ideas of deity and the purest system of morals that were ever taught on earth. He is a traitor to his country, a traitor to the entire human race and a traitor to heaven who abuses the talents that God has given him in vain and wicked attempts to wage war against heaven and to disparage that system of faith which of all things is the best adapted to promote the happiness and the perfection of the great family of humanity. It requires a large portion of the evil spirit and a long experience in the mystery of iniquity to become callous to every sense of religion; to throw off the authority of God and of conscience and to overleap the bounds of laws divine and human.

A Quiet Sunday.

In making its appropriation for the St. Louis World's Fair of 1903, Congress anticipated the wishes of those who believe in a quiet Sunday. The bill contains the following clause:

"That, as a condition precedent to the payment of this appropriation, the directors shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sunday during the whole duration of the fair."

The fact that this section was a part of the law had escaped the notice of those in favor of keeping the gates open on Sunday, and its publication at this time has caused consternation. One of the officers of the Fair when asked if it was the intention to keep the gates closed on Sunday, replied:

"Yes such action is not optional on the part of the officials of the Fair. It is made imperative by section 25 of the law enacted by Congress." This decision, if abided by, will go a long way towards relieving the consciences of a host of people all over the world, as to the expediency of Christians patronizing even on a week day an exhibition that shows on the Lord's day. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and every religious journal cannot too strongly advocate a closed Sunday for the coming World's Fair.

Gas and Trouble.

Comes From White Bread.

While it is true that we build up the body from food, it is also true that different kinds of food have different effects on the body and produce different results.

For instance, it is absolutely impossible to live on white bread alone, for it contains almost nothing but starch, and an excess of white bread produces gas and trouble in the intestines, while, at the same time, the other elements required by the body for building up brain and nerve centers, as well as muscular tissue have been left out of the white bread, and we see from experience the one trying to live on white bread alone gradually fails in mental and nervous power as well as loss in muscle.

Such a diet could not be kept up long without fatal results. A lady in Jacksonville, Fla., was crippled by an accident two years ago. Being without the power of exercise, an old stomach trouble that was hers for years became worse, and it was a serious question regarding food that she could digest.

A physician put her on Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food with some remarkable results. She says now that, not only is she able to do a big day's work, because of the strength of her brain and nerves, but that she has finally thrown away her crutches because the muscles of her limbs have gradually grown stronger since she began the use of Grape-Nuts, and now she is practically well and can go about without trouble, notwithstanding the fact that it was said she would never be able to walk again. So much for eating the right kind of food instead of remaining an invalid and a cripple because of the lack of knowledge of the kind of food to use to bring one back to health. Our Budget.

—Last issue for 1901.
—Watch for the New CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—Our special price for 1902 is ONE DOLLAR. Send it now.

—Paper will be discontinued when your time is up, unless you order it continued.

—We do not care to send the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to any one who is too indifferent about it to say whether he wants it. We dare to adopt the policy because we believe that few of our subscribers will be indifferent.

—You don't expect your grocer to send you things you haven't ordered, no matter how long you have been trading with him. So with a religious paper. If you want it, say so. If you want it, we want you to have it. You can get it fifty-two times in the year for one dollar.

—Grant E. Pike has begun work with the church at Colorado City, Tex.

—James Morris, of Galena, Kan., has begun his work as pastor at Oswego, Kan.

—During the past week the Foreign Society received a direct gift of $800 from a generous friend.

—C. C. Carpenter, of Thomson, Ill., has been called to continue with the church there for another year.

—W. J. Lockhart, of Fort Collins, Col., was recently presented with a gold watch by his congregation.

—Melvin L. Peden, of Gibsonburg, O., had a surprise party recently. The visible results were large quantities of groceries.

—On the departure of F. D. Ferrall from Pleasantville, Ia., to take up the work at Ames, Ia., the former congregation presented a gold watch to him.

—A preacher, if the right man, can find employment at a reasonable salary in a town having college advantages, by addressing Harry Bower, Albion, Ill.

—A public debate will be held at Wayne City, Ill., beginning January 7 and continuing four days, between Clark Braden and D. B. Turney, of the Methodist Protestant Church.

—J. G. M. Luttenberger's booklet entitled "A Christian or a Church Member—Which?" has proven so popular that the first edition is almost exhausted and a second edition is in preparation.

—The church at Lodi, Cal., where John Young ministers, celebrated the payment of its debt on Dec. 15 with an all-day meeting and a formal burning of the note. State Evangelist Henry Shadle was present.

—W. W. Blalock closed two years and a half pastoral work at Lamar, Mo., Dec. 22. The church will want a pastor. Applicants may address A. E. Shelton. Bro. Blalock wishes to engage with churches in reach of Lamar.

—Beginning with the next issue of this paper the reports of marriages and obituaries will be done away with as a distinct department. Items of this sort, when sent to us as news, will receive the same treatment as other news items.

—The South Carolina state mission board has decided to put the work at Columbia, the state capital, on a permanent basis, and to that end will locate M. B. Ingle at that point. Steps are being taken to secure a lot and erect a temporary building.

—The Chicago Christian Ministers' Association at a recent session adopted resolutions of respect in view of the recent death of Dr. W. A. Belding, of Troy, N. Y. He was a pioneer in establishing the work in Chicago, and the brethren in that city feel particularly indebted to him.

—A new paper, the Christian Union, will be issued from Des Moines, Ia., beginning Jan. 1, 1902, edited by J. M. Rudy. Its field will be Iowa and the northwest. It will occupy the place now filled by the Index, which was recently sold by G. L. Brokaw. Best wishes to the new paper.

—The following correction should have been made in the list of trustees of the new college which is to be established at Washington city. The name of F. M. Applegate should be omitted and the names of Andrew Wilson, of Washington, and O. A. Hawkins, of Richmond, inserted.

—The church at Pine Village, Ind., was dedicated by L. L. Carpenter, Dec. 15, with the temperature at 15 below zero. The house was only half filled, and it did not seem an auspicious occasion to raise the needed $3,000 to pay all indebtedness, but the amount was raised and $700 more. J. A. Hall is pastor.

—F. M. Rains has returned home from his trip to China and Japan. His visit did the churches great good. It is the wish of the missionaries that some member of the committee be sent out each year. They have especially requested that the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and his wife go out next year.

—The Foreign Society needs a skilled mechanic to go to Africa to help in the mission on the Congo. He should be a single man, young and strong, a carpenter and blacksmith in one, and an earnest Christian without. Anyone qualified for this position may correspond with A. McLean, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—At Cameron, Mo., the men of the church will keep open house at the church all day New Year's day, with exercises morning, afternoon and evening. It is intended to make this an annual rally day for the congregation. The Sunday-school at this place now has a Home Department with one hundred and three members.

—We will be glad if any one can inform us of the whereabouts of one L. S. Archer, who is presumably acting as an agent for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We are unable to get in communication, with him and hereby announce that his credentials as an agent for this paper are cancelled. Any persons paying money to him for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will do so at their own risk.

—The Omaha papers are beginning to devote a considerable amount of space to the preparations for the convention of October, 1902. The various committees have been appointed—twenty-seven of them—and from this time on Omaha will probably not be allowed to forget the great convention with which her new auditorium is to be inaugurated.

—D. W. Besaw, of Cleveland, has become state representative of the National Benevolent Association for Ohio. He has been state evangelist for several years. J. W. Strawn has been appointed state representative for Kansas. The churches are requested to cooperate with these and the other representatives of the National Association in this good work.

—The Week of Prayer, observed annually during the first week of each year at the suggestion of the Evangelical Alliances of the world, will be held Jan. 5 to Jan. 12, 1902. There is an increasing unanimity in the observance of this week, and consequently an increase of beneficial results coming from it. It is suggested that the services and sermon of the two Sundays, Jan. 5 and Jan. 12, be appropriate, and that the following topics be borne in mind in the services for the week: Monday, The Vision of God in Christ; Tuesday, Our Nation; Wednesday, Our Churches; Thursday, Christian Missions; Friday, The Family and the School; Saturday, The Coming of the Kingdom.

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it. It gets tired easily, and what it fails to digest is wasted.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at different times for stomach troubles, and a run down condition of the system, and have been greatly benefited by its use. I would not be without it in my family. I am troubled especially in summer with weak stomach and nausea and find Hood's Sarsaparilla invaluable." E. B. HICKMAN, W. Chester, Pa.

—At the annual meeting of First Church, Omaha, of which Sumner T. Martin is pastor, the reports show a working church making solid progress. The membership of 477 has had a net gain of 65 during the year. The Endeavor Society is almost as large as the Sunday-school, and the C. W. B. M. is unusually large. The amount raised during the year was $2,750, besides $768 to apply on the debt and over $500 for missions. This places the First Church of Omaha first among the Nebraska churches in the matter of missionary contributions.

—F. W. Emerson, of Topeka, Kan., endeavored to resign his pastorate to go into temperance work, but his congregation has persuaded him to take a leave of absence for one year instead. He will become state lecturer for the Kansas State Temperance Union and will do gospel temperance work on the evangelistic plan, spending a week in each town visited. Taking total abstinence pledges will be a leading feature of all meetings. Persons in Kansas desiring his services in their community may address Rev. J. E. Everitt, 701 Jackson St., Topeka, Kan.

—In order that the friends at home may pray definitely for the work and workers on the foreign field, a Missionary Prayer Cycle has been issued by the foreign society. The various mission stations have been arranged in topics for especial prayer, the names of the missionaries, some message from their work and the especial needs of the various fields of labor are so arranged that very definite petitions can be offered in their behalf. By carefully following the cycle one will have a larger vision of the world and its needs. Constant prayer for the missionaries will strengthen them for a conflict that sometimes seems very discouraging. The cycle will be sent to any address for three cents. One dozen copies for thirty cents. Address A. McLean, Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—Mrs. Helen E. Moses, corresponding secretary of the C. W. B. M., has issued the following statement in regard to the health of Mrs. O. A. Burgess:

For several weeks our honored and beloved president, Mrs. O. A. Burgess, has been very sick. Her illness is a consequence of repeated attacks of the grip, which have resulted in serious heart trouble and general exhaustion. At this writing, Dec. 20, her symptoms are more hopeful. Even should these favorable conditions continue, it must be some time ere she can be out again. Those whose letters to Mrs. Burgess have remained unanswered will understand the reason, nor is she yet able to receive letters or messages. We know the united prayers of the members of our organization will ascend for her. Her sister, Miss Legerwood, and the members of the executive committee of the board sincerely thank the many friends for their great kindness during her sickness.

—The American Bible Society does a vast amount of work among the peoples along the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, circulating immense numbers of Bibles in Arminian, Greek and Arabic. During the past year the Arabic issues alone were over 40,000. The oldest agency of the Society, established at Constantinople over sixty years ago, has sent out 2,000,000 copies of the Bible or parts of it.

—The American Committee of the Young Women's Christian Associations will hold four conferences for young women during the summer of 1902 at the following places: Capitola, Cal., May 16-26; Ashville, N. C., June 13-23; Lake Geneva, Wis., Aug. 22-Sept. 2; Silver Bay, Lake George, June 27-July 7. These annual gatherings have been held for several years with increasing interest. For full particulars address the American Committee of Y. W. C. A., 1312 Champlain Building, Chicago.

—The new church at Waynesburg, Pa., was dedicated Dec. 15, with all debts provided for. Z. T. Sweeney was expected to preach the dedicatory sermon, but illness prevented him from being present. T. E. Cramblett, president of Bethany College, was secured as a substitute, and met the requirements to the satisfaction of all. The church and parsonage cost about $18,000, about half of which had already been subscribed. The remainder was provided for by subscriptions aggregating $9,400 on dedication day. A. A. Doak is pastor of the church.

—S. W. Crutcher, of Harrisonville, Mo., writes that that town with about 2,000 inhabitants maintains an interdenominational provident association which renders assistance to the needy during the winter months—a practical refutation of the oft-repeated charge that the church cares nothing for the poor. In regard to missionary contributions, Bro. Crutcher writes: "I expect to encourage all of our missions, but I am tired of stilted apportionments. I think we will all sooner or later adopt the omnibus plan of raising money for missions. Then we shall have to teach the children that the main point in Children's Day is to give in the right spirit and have less of exercises, for the first of June is too near the closing of the public schools to catch and hold the children for preparation for Children's Day.

—J. M. Philputt, who has just accepted a call to the Richmond Avenue church, Buffalo, has been a pastor in New York city for more than sixteen years. Twelve years ago he organized the Lenox Avenue church, of which he has been pastor ever since. They began meeting in a hall, but have now an attractive house of worship on 119th street near Lenox Avenue, with a membership of over 300, and nearly as many in the Sunday-school. One who is in close touch with that work and thoroughly competent to testify about it writes: "The Lenox Avenue church is a model of zeal and activity in all kinds of Christian work and is a recognized factor in the religious life of that part of the city." Bro. Philputt has labored and sacrificed beyond measure in this work, having received into the church during his pastorate more than 500 people. The members were unanimous in their desire to have him remain indefinitely.

Not Recommended for Everything But if You Have Kidney, Liver or Bladder Trouble, You Will Find Swamp-Root Just the Remedy You Need.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the great kidney remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince any one.

Doctors Prescribe Swamp-Root.

"I have prescribed that wonderful remedy for kidney and bladder complaints, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, with most beneficial effect and know of many cures by its use. These patients had kidney trouble, as diagnosed by other physicians, and treated without benefit. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root effected a cure. I am a liberal man and accept a specific wherever I find it, in an accepted school or out of it. For desperate cases of kidney or bladder complaint under treatment with unsatisfactory results I turn to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root with most flattering results. I shall continue to prescribe it and from personal observation state that Swamp-Root has great curative properties."

L. BARSTOW IRISH, M. D.,
Sept. 24, 1901. 276 9th St., Borough of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for many kinds of diseases, and if permitted to continue much suffering with fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Makes you pass water often during the day and obliges you to get up many times during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; makes your head ache and back ache, causes indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, makes you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in SPECIAL NOTICE.—If you have the slightest symptoms of kidney or bladder troubles, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Bro. Nicholson and the brethren at Platt have their new house nearly done.

Wessington is again without a preacher. E. R. Russell was called to this church in June with fine prospects, but was a sad misfit, and now the people are lamenting the mistake. Here is a splendid church, a splendid people; can pay from four to five hundred dollars. It is a small town in which one can live very cheaply. Let some one look after this place. A worthy man can find a good field here.

Chalmers McPherson, of the First church, Ft. Worth, is giving his people some old-time preaching, as the following announced subjects show: "The Work of the Holy Spirit in Conversion," "How to Read the Bible," "A Bible Example of Conversion," "Monumental Institutions," "Union of God's People." J. S. Myers, of the Third Church, is in a meeting, aided by Bro. Cook, of Sedalia, Mo., so the "Fort" just now is being shaken up after the right fashion.

Addison Clark has resigned the pastorate of the Central church at Waco to take charge of the work at Amarillo.

San Antonio has called to her pastorate the gifted Homer T. Wilson, and all rejoice that he has accepted the invitation. This means a strong church in a most important city. We understand that an elegant new house is one of the certainties of the near future.

Misses Olivia Baldwin and Bertha Mason, both from the foreign field, were with us at the Waco lectureship.

J. B. Boen is assisting Jno. L. Andrews in a great meeting at Mineral Wells, with 100 additions. This is the most popular watering place in the state, and thousands of visitors from many places visit it. This makes it a most important point, and hence the meeting is of unusual importance. A splendid new house is nearing completion, and everything looks well for the cause at that place.

J. W. Holsapple offered his resignation as pastor of the Central church of Sherman, but the church declined to accept it, and he will remain another year.

The Christian Courier, our state paper, celebrates the fourteenth birthday with the last issue. Difficulties and dangers from the first have been in the way of the Courier. And several times it seemed that death was unavoidable. But the outlook is bright, and G. A. Faris, the editor, is hopeful of a splendid future.

D. L. Hardison, one of our best men, has been placed in the Gulf district by our state board, and thus the work grows. The church of the state is becoming aroused on the question of missions, and if the pastors will lead as they can and should the convention next year will show the best work in our history.

Don't Let Prejudice Keep you from Getting Well.

No Money is Wanted.

Simply write a postal for the book you need. See what I have to say. You can't now too much about ways to get well.

My way is not less effective because I tell you about it. There are millions of cases which nothing else can cure. How can I reach them save by advertising?

I will send with the book also an order on your druggist for six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I will tell him to let you test it for a month at my risk. If you are satisfied, the cost will be $5.50. If it fails, I will pay him myself.

The book will tell you how my Restorative strengthens the inside nerves. It brings back the power that operates the vital organs. My book will prove that no other way can make those organs strong.

No matter what your doubts. Remember that my method is unknown to you, while I spent a lifetime on it. Remember that only the cured need pay. Won't you write a postal to learn what treatment makes such an offer possible?

Simply state which book you want, and address Dr. Shoop, Box 582, Racine, Wis.

Marfa is no longer in debt. How it thrills my heart with joy to write such a sentence. Debt so often means danger and death that I have come to dread it as I do few other things in church work. While debts are sometimes advisable, as a rule they should be shunned as we shun sin. T. D. Secrest is the happy pastor at Marfa, and he will now move his forces forward as never before.

Bishop Isaac W. Joyce, of Minneapolis, in a recent address before a Methodist conference at Denison, said that "the times are propitious for a dropping of denominational creeds and the unification of the Christian Church." And this sentiment seems to be in the air everywhere. Let us thank the Lord that the leaven of union, so faithfully injected by Campbell and his co-laborers, and so clearly taught by Christ and the apostles, is seen now in the whole lump, and let us stand firm in the plea we make.

With a desire simply that the reader may know the facts in the case, and with no spirit of boasting, I wish to say that the post office receipts of Dallas for the year ending Nov. 30 were $229,101.04, a gain over the preceding year of $35,446.26. As compared with Nashville, Tenn., with a population of 80,800, and St. Joseph, Mo., with a population of 103,000, Dallas is in the lead.

Hawkeye Items.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST could be filled weekly with matters of interest in Des Moines alone with its ten churches and missions, 5,000 members, 13 Sunday schools, and a few more contemplated, with 700 students at Drake, a Sunday-school rally day attendance of 1,297 at the university school, and 887 at the Central, with no students to draw from, several good meetings already on, an $8 100 mortgage lately burned, and others getting very warm, etc.

But Iowa has spokes as well as a "hub." About 50 preachers go out regularly from Des Moines, many of them to two or more places.

Our strongest outside church is at Mason City, with 1,100 members, a house of worship which leaves no suggestion of anything to be desired, a pastor and Sunday-school superintendent to correspond, and a home department covering the entire city, and is reaching out into the surrounding country. These are rapidly taking Mason City.

Hampton will doubtless be swept clean, as it has a "new broom," in the person of Howard Cramblett, recently of South Omaha. The spirit of new life is so strong that they have a new baby in the parsonage.

Webster City has set the novel example of calling an elderly preacher, and seems to think J. A. Seaton is the man.

The new church at Eagle Grove is very enthusiastic and is searching for a building site. The "Clarion voice" of J. W. Babcock is heard in the church at that place. May his record of bringing many to Christ be repeated at Clarion.

F. D. Ferrall, under whose ministry a fine church has been built and paid for at Pleasantville, has taken the pastorate at Ames, the seat of the State Agricultural College, and will doubtless push forward the good work of his predecessor, J. R. McIntire, who has gone to Ft. Dodge. Perhaps the most heroic enterprise in Iowa just now is that of J. M. Hoffmann at Boone, where we have a weak congregation in a very important town of 12,000 people. The best corner in town was secured and we now have an elegant building 61x81 feet, which is to seat 1,000 people, basement of rock faced vitrified brick, and superstructure of Omaha hydraulic pressed brick, under roof, basement in use and mostly paid for. Sister H., besides her full share in this and the state C. W. B. M. work, preaches for the church at Colo, where she spoke at the union Thanksgiving

ATTENTION

To physical warnings will often prevent a serious illness. When there are oppressive fullness after eating, bitter risings, belching, headache, dizziness, nervousness, with physical and mental sluggishness, prompt attention should be given to the condition of the digestive and nutritive systems. Not all these symptoms will occur at once or in any single case, but any one of them indicates a disordered condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition.

A prompt cure of these conditions will be effected by the timely use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It heals diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, perfectly and permanently. Many diseases, seemingly remote from the stomach, have their origin in a diseased condition of the organs of digestion and nutrition. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures through the stomach diseases which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach, and hence diseases of liver, lungs, heart and other organs are cured by use of the "Discovery." It contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, or other narcotic. It is a true temperance medicine.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing else "just as good."

"I was a total wreck—could not sleep or eat," writes Mr. J. O. Beers, of Berryman, Crawford Co., Mo. "For two years I tried medicine from doctors but received very little benefit. I lost flesh and strength, was not able to do a good day's work. I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and when I had taken one bottle I could sleep, and my appetite was wonderfully improved. I have taken five bottles and am still improving."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation by curing the cause. They do not beget the pill habit.

service, while Bro. Hoffmann did the same at Boone. Bro. H. says this house is to be dedicated, free of debt, in time for the next Iowa state convention.

At Marshalltown, Bro. Scott seems quite serene about the progress of his work.

Cedar Rapids followed the example of Des Moines—"swarmed." The new Second church on the west side, with the hearty sympathy and substantial aid of the First church, is thriving. This is the only way to reach the people in large places.

J. M. Rudy at once "enthuses" you with his new C. U. button which he hopes to make so significant and attractive that it will be generally worn and greatly emphasize our distinctive plea.

A threatening waste-basket forbids mention of the good work of the veteran S. B. Ross at Martelle; of our younger Bro. McGinnes at Tama, and of former Drake students, S. J. Carter at Olin; N. G. Ohio Letter.

Another new church organization has been launched in Buckeyedom. This time it is the "Ohio Federation of Churches and Christian Workers." The object of the movement is "to promote effective co-operation among the churches and Christian workers of the state of Ohio, in order that their essential unity may be manifest; that a means may be found of expressing the united Christian sentiment of the state in regard to moral issues," etc. Each denomination is entitled to one representative on the state council with an additional member for each 5,000 members or major fraction thereof. According to this reckoning, the Disciples will have 16 members in the council. Considerable stir has been brought about from the fact that the word "Evangelical" was put in the name. The Universalists are crying, "narrow," "conservative," etc. Local federations will be formed. Such has already been done in Toledo and Columbus. A national council will be organized in Washington early in February. The Ohio Federation of Churches is a move in the right direction. It stops too soon. But let the Lord be praised for any and all signs of the coming of that unity for which our Savior prayed. It is a good thing, pointing in the right direction, push it along.

Evangelist Martin is now at Portsmouth with Geo. P. Taubman in a meeting. They began last Saturday night. The prospects are good for a great meeting.

Richard W. Abberley, of Columbus, will help Walter Mansell at Salem in January in an evangelistic effort. Bro. Abberley will suffer an increase of $300 on his salary, beginning Jan. 1. A convenient affliction.

C. C. Redgrave has been giving his illustrated lecture, "In the Footsteps of the Pioneers," in Ohio. He was at Columbus in two churches. Hiram, Youngstown and some nearby places. This lecture is worthy of a wide hearing. It is a novel way of presenting the things for which the pioneers pled. The young people of our churches ought by all means to hear and see this lecture. It is also valuable in a missionary way. It will do your religious neighbor much good. It will show him things he had not thought of before. Send for Bro. Redgrave and have this lecture.

A new mission has been launched in Dayton. It is located in the west end of the city. It is quite promising and will be a full-fledged church within a short time.

W. R. Moffett, of Bellecentre, has been assisting L. G. Walker in a meeting at Centerburg.

Charles Darsie, of Covington, Ky., has accepted a call from the church at Paulding, O. He comes back to Ohio and is welcomed.

Vernon Stauffer has so far recovered from his long siege of sickness as to be able to go to his old home in northern Ohio. He hopes to be able to take up his work at Richmond St., Cincinnati, about the first of the year.

W. W. Sniff has offered his resignation at Franklin Circle church, Cleveland. What his plans for the future are, we do not know.

It might be well to remind the readers of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST at this time of the coming "Congress of the Disciples" in the metropolis of Ohio, Cleveland. Every Buckeye preacher will want to attend. He can afford it too, since it is so close. The fact is he can't afford to stay at home. If the exact date has not been announced let it be done at once, that preachers may plan for it.

C. W. Huffer has so far recovered as to be able to talk a little while at the morning service last Sunday.

Several local church papers in Ohio have been denied a second class place in Uncle Sam's mail bag. It is a sore disappointment to the churches. C. A. FREER.

Union on the Bible.

Some writers on Christian union appear to me to advocate a union of all of the so-called Christian bodies into one regardless of their different ideas of the Christian religion. I cannot understand the plea in that light. I have been an advocate of Christian union for thirty years, but I have always understood it to be on the Bible and the Bible alone, as the only rule of faith and practice. A Christian union other than that will not hold, because oil and water will not mix, and Christ and Belial cannot associate. Christ is too high above Belial, he cannot come down to him. Belial is too far below Christ, he cannot get up to him. So is the doctrine of Christian union on the Bible alone too far above the common theology of the day, it cannot come down to it without making a complete surrender, and neither can the churches of to-day come to the idea of the Bible and the Bible alone without making a complete surrender. The idea of Christian union should be pressed with all vigor, but keep this idea always before the mind, that everything contrary to the teaching of the Bible must be surrendered before there can be any union. Then let us be careful to have everything as near that rule as possible, otherwise we would become another miserable sect. As to Bro. Rudy's button he proposes, it is all right, provided it is understood to represent the idea of a union on the Bible alone. HENRY PITTMAN.

Convention City Notes.

The Rambler couldn't wait till 1902 to go to Omaha, but is more than ever anxious to be one of the 1902 crowd. The Martin-Hilton-Crawdson triumvirate and their many hustling coadjutors are planning for a mammoth historic convention.

Our people are talking it at every corner. The auditorium managers, the newspaper folks and the heavy business men of the city and state are almost ready to take it out of the hands of our church people, and arrangements are already assuming a breadth of scope and minuteness of detail never before thought of.

Twenty-eight committees are vying with each other in activity. A convention paper is soon to be started.

A union prayer-meeting of the four churches in Omaha, South Omaha and Council Bluffs is held, in connection with a meeting of the committees, the first Wednesday evening in each month and will continue till the convention. One of the privileges of the writer to attend. The usual occupation of the city pulpits by our strongest men is expected to include the Wednesday evening before, as well as convention Sunday. Also Sunday-school and C. E. workers are to be passed around, also evangelistic meetings on the streets, in shops, packing houses, etc., during convention, to be followed by a special effort in each of our churches in the city and state. A band is to meet delegations, state songs are to be arranged for, Mrs. Princess Long will be secured, if possible, and everything on a like scale.

The excavation is completed for the auditorium, which is to be 132x364 feet, an entire half square on Howell street, extending from 13th to 14th, in the heart of the city, on the principal street car lines, and convenient to the hotels, etc.

Our churches are already feeling the impetus of the undertaking. The First Church is contemplating a new building and has had over 50 additions since Sept. 1. B. B. Tyler recently spent two weeks at the North Side Church, and, of course, got the whole brotherhood in the city in good humor and in good repute with their neighbors.

Bro. Crawdson is quite well pleased with the progress at Council Bluffs. The convention horizon extends across the river and Iowa will claim a share of the hurden and the glory.

South Omaha has been without a pastor for a short time, but does not expect to permit that condition long, and is also preparing to build. RAMBLER.

RESTORES EYESIGHT

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which

Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether

Chronic or Acute, Without

Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision. J. N. Horne, Waycross, Ga., writes: "My eyes have been wonderfully benefited by Actina." W. R. Owens, Adrian, Mo., writes: "Actina saved me from going blind." R. J. Reid, St. Augustine, Fla., writes: "Actina removed a cataract from my son's eye." Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I should have been blind had I not used Actina." A party of prominent citizens have organized in a company known as the New York & London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. They have sought all American and European rights for this wonderful invention. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 203, 929 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and its Disease in General, and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

Upper Ohio Valley Notes.

Prof. Philip Johnson, of Bethany College, preached at Wheeling, Sunday, Dec. 8. On Monday before the Northern Ohio Valley Ministerial Association he read an excellent paper on "Our Colleges."

After being for three months without a pastor, the Martin's Ferry Christian church has procured the services of Geo. E. Dew, of Wauseon.

Bro. Kersey, acting pastor for the church at Wellsburg, has a class of 130 men and women which meets on Sunday afternoons. The class has in it representatives of all the churches in town.

An electric plant donated Bethany College by J. W. Knight of Bowling Green, O., will soon be put in active use in lighting the college and hall.

Rev. John Balcom Shaw, of New York, recently addressed a presbytery meeting in Bellaire in behalf of contemplated evangelistic work among the Presbyterians all over the country. Indeed this meeting, with sessions lasting a day and a half, seems to have been planned with the idea of revival in mind. He announced himself as a member of the evangelistic committee appointed by the General Assembly, said that the committee had $25,000 in its hands to do its work, and proceeded to outline plans for the ministers. He claimed that the great need of the church is the enrichment of the inner life. He pleaded with the preachers that they would devote at least one sermon each Lord's day to bringing souls into the church; not necessarily smart sermons, but simple sermons, sermons that come as much from the heart as from the head, were needed. Particular emphasis was laid upon cottage prayer-meetings among the members and decision days in the Sunday-school.

The exercises in connection with the inauguration of Thos. Ellsworth Cramblett as president of Bethany reminded one of commencement time at the old college. The chapel, which during the day was well filled, had been repapered and very prettily decorated with green and white bunting—whithal presenting a gala day appearance. True, the old stoves with their long distended arms shriveled with age were there, but then they added to the value of the scene, for, like Yale's old fence, they carry with them an inspiration from the past. Judge John A. Campbell, of New Cumberland, W. Va., and President A. E. Turner, of Waynesburg College, Pa., spoke in the morning. In the afternoon Pres. W. O. Thompson, of Ohio State University, and Gov. A. B. White, of West Virginia, gave excellent addresses. After these came Pres. Cramblett, whose inaugural address only increased the confidence that has gone abroad in the college and among the alumni and friends of the institution since he began his work, Sept. 1.

EDW. B. BAGBY recommends the Scripture Readings of

The Praise Hymnal

"With the opening of our new house of worship we introduced a new hymn book. Our music committee selected THE PRAISE HYMNAL, and we have never regretted their choice. We found beautiful and appropriate hymns for our dedicatory service. For the varying seasons that have followed, and for all the regular and special services held, we have found this selection adequate to all needs.

"I wish to commend especially the collection of Psalms and Topical Selections from the Revised Version of the Scriptures. The use of these Responsive Readings has greatly enriched the worship of our Lord's Day meetings.

pleasantly spent. The principal speaker for the evening was Prof. Waitman Barbe, of West Virginia University. His address was clever and finished. It was entitled "Things not in the Catalogue," and struck a keynote of what is true in any college, but especially at Bethany, in laying particular stress upon the spirit of the institution as the peculiar mark of power.

Our estimable church extension secretary, G. W. Muckley, acted as toast-master for the evening. He addressed the student body Tuesday morning. I forget the exact words in which he stated his subject, but I remember he had a map.

Dr. Uhrich, of Wheeling, W. Va., W. R. Errett, of Pittsburg, A. L. White, of Wheeling, Earl Wilfley, of New Castle, Pa., and the writer responded briefly to toasts which were given after refreshments had been served by the ladies of the hall.

The music as rendered by Mrs. L. K. Woolery, Miss Carrie Mathews, Richard Kersey and Prof. Moos added much to this festal day.

The tenth of December marks the formal beginning of a new era with Bethany.

Around the Bay.

"Greater San Francisco" will soon have a half million souls and is the coming New York of the Pacific coast. The Christian Church has only five congregations; two in San Francisco, one in Oakland, one in Berkeley, and one in Alameda. They are awakened to the importance of the situation as a strategic point, however, and are planning great things for the future. The commercial activities of these cities on the San Francisco bay and their relatedness to the trade of the Orient are to open the gates of these old lands to the spread of the gospel among millions of people who are now living in superstition, fear and spiritual death. We are counting much on the help and cheer of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the coming years for the spread of the gospel west of the Rocky mountains and the far extension of the kingdom of God in oriental countries and idolatrous lands. We already have a strong force of able preachers on the coast and are planning for more through the work of our Berkeley Seminary at Berkeley, the seat of our state University. Dean Van Kirk is full of hope for the future of the seminary.

Oakland is the home of Dr. George W. Sweeney, a member of the well known Sweeney family of preachers. He was pastor of the First Christian church here for many years. But owing to the protracted illness of Mrs. Sweeney he resigned his pastorate, since which time he has been prosecuting a calling which he terms the "Bohemian or High Scout profession." He marries "couples," preaches funerals, and preaches the gospel frequently as occasion offers. He lectures also, on sociology, scientific questions, religious problems, as well as on his travels in foreign lands, which have been quite extensive, "A Tour of the Russian Empire," being one of his lectures.

The Oakland Christian church has had quite a number of well known preachers for pastors. D. Pat Henderson, B. H. Smith, Alexander Johnston, Dr. W. A. Porter, Prof. J. C. Keith, W. A. Nelson, James Small, T. D. Butler, David Wetzell, Glen McWilliams and others have served the church acceptably. The present pastor, Frank A. Powell, has been here a little more than a year and has made a great many friends.

Dr. H. L. Willett preached the fall quarter convocation sermon Dec. 15, in Kent theater. It was generally conceded that it was one of the ablest convocation sermons delivered here for a long time.

C. L. Waite, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., passed his final examination for the B. D. degree, Dec. 10.

Austin Hunter is spending his holiday season assisting L. R. Hotaling in a meeting at Michiganton, Ind.

The annual banquet of the Disciples' Club was held the evening of Dec. 16, and proved a most delightful occasion. The attendance was much larger than at any of our former banquets.

During the last few sessions of the weekly assembly of the Disciples, the time has been devoted to a discussion of first principles, what they really are and the urgent need of more vigorous preaching of the same. The men were asked to present ten appropriate subjects for first principle sermons. The general trend of the discussion may be inferred from the following list of subjects submitted by one of the men: 1. "Jesus as the Most Conspicuous Fact." 2. "God." 3. "Holy Scriptures—Whatever Jesus Guarantees has a Revelation Value." 4. "The Teaching of Jesus Concerning Man." 5. "The Human Life of Christ." 6. "The Atonement." 7. "The Doctrine of the Cross." 8. "Resurrection Miracle—Its Implication." 9. "Regeneration." 10. "The Program of Christ."

Are We Infidels?

In my boyhood days the pioneers of the Reformation were doing vigorous work in western Missouri. They met with strong opposition from our religious neighbors. I heard such remarks as, "Campbellism is baptized infidelity," "He is a baptized infidel," "Your so-called Christian Church is simply a lot of baptized infidels," "You people baptize infidels," etc.

We had some grand, good preachers there in those days. There were giants in the earth in those days and how well they did their work is eloquently told by our large membership in that state to-day.

These preachers showed by their labors, their lives and their sacrifices that they were the Lord's heroes. They received no salaries, their honest, industrious hands ministered to their necessities. Even Paul at Corinth probably worked no harder nor preached more earnestly.

In days since then I have often wondered how those preachers succeeded in making a living while devoting so much time to freely preaching the gospel. They were indeed poor in this world's goods; proverbially so, but they were rich in the faith, and in a knowledge of the Bible. Texas has had the same kind of heroes. I feel sure that every reader of this is glad to be able to say that he is a member of the same household of faith with these pioneers.

Now, listen, Paul says, "As we have opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Thank God we have the opportunity yet!

Some of these grand men who wore themselves out in the Lord's work are yet lingering with us. We have not only the opportunity, but we have an urgent appeal to do good to them.

The board of ministerial relief is calling earnestly for help for these men. Let us heed the words of Paul ere the opportunity is gone.

But do you ask, "What has this to do with the question at the head of this article?"

I will tell you; hear Paul again, "If any provide not for his own and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Brethren, are not these old pioneers of our own household? Are we providing for them?

The spirit of Bro. Atkinson, whose heart we broke by our neglect of this subject, took its flight as he said, "Brethren, be warned, quit you like men."

Preachers and Printer's Ink.

Ministers of the gospel get many favors in the way of free advertising. The use and abuse of their privileges in this regard is both interesting and amusing. In the "Personal Mention" columns and "Reports from the Field," we sometimes see evidences of that something that is "half scandal." On my desk is an interesting lot of "ads" from lecture bureaus and clippings from some religious papers. One of the first is a folder setting forth the charms of a "Prince among lecturers." On the front page is the picture of "the doctor," surrounded by the familiar faces of some "sure thing" American orators. For ego, I take off my hat to this advertisement. I find on examination that "the doctor" is "preacher," "author," "lecturer," "traveler," "a second Wendling," and any one of half a dozen other nice things. "Held us spell-bound," "simply stupendous," etc., etc., are some things the hearers are supposed to say about this man. Evidently the world languished, its ears aching for Demosthenian eloquence until this luminary appeared above the horizon.

Then, I have in mind the preacher who has just "taken charge of the First church at Beanville." (The only one there). Some nice young woman immediately writes of the big audiences and "large interest in all departments since Brother Stireme came." "Already the town is upside down," "Think we will have to enlarge the church," "A marvelously enthusiastic worker," etc., etc., are some of the phrases that greet the tired eyes of Bro. Jones who has just gone from Beanville.

I offer gratis a scheme for all such remarkable men to advertise themselves without becoming a burden to the papers and incidentally saving from "that tired feeling" us who labor, perhaps in struggling churches, trying to give Jesus the pre-eminence.

The idea is this: Get the photograph of the preacher, large size, usual smile, etc., place it on placards, street car size, and print the following lines beside "the doctor's" smiling phiz:

This is the preacher of (insert name) town, His fame is known for miles around; Prince, author, lecturer, too, is he—O wonderful versatility! So hear him now, or miss a treat, In powerful preaching, he can't be beat.

The Value of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful It is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poisons of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probable the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

COLORADO.

Fort Collins, Dec. 14.—Eleven added to the church here since last report.—WM. J. LOCK HART.

CUBA.

Havana, Dec. 16.—We heard last evening the first confession of the Christ in Spanish in our Cuban mission. Manuel Quijono, a young man of 26, well educated, came forward and publicly confessed that "Jesus es el Cristo el hijo de Dios." He will be buried with his Lord in baptism next Lord's day, where I have already baptized 26 in the Gulf. We believe Mr. Quijono will be a valuable help to us. He has been a regular visitor in my home for months on Sundays, when we have talked and read of his Christian duty. We expect the Havana work to prosper, but more so with your prayers and those of our brethren in our beloved land. May you all pray for Cuba in these trying, unsettled times in her business and civil affairs.—LOWELL C. McPHERSON.

ILLINOIS.

Arcola, Dec. 16.—One added to the church here yesterday.—L. F. FAULDERS.

Benton, Dec. 20.—I recently held a two weeks' meeting at Christopher, with 14 baptisms, two reclaimed. Provision made for organizing a C. E. society.—W. J. BURNER.

Chapin, Dec. 18.—The church at Literberry, Ill., closed a successful protracted effort on Lord's day, Dec. 15, 1901. There were 12 most excellent additions to the church, 10 by confession and baptism and 2 from the Baptists. Bro. E. O. Sharpe, of Girard, Ill., did the preaching. He is clear, forceful, able and scholarly. I filled Bro. Sharpe's pulpit during this meeting and 2 were added there by statement. The church at Literberry has extended a call to me to continue with them another year, beginning Jan. 1, 1902. This will be my seventh year as pastor of this congregation.—IVAN W. AGEE.

Moline, Dec. 12.—Last Lord's day we closed a great union meeting. A feature of the meeting was C. E. Millard's illustrated songs.—S. D. POOLE.

Rantoul, Dec. 16.—One confession here yesterday at our regular service. One added by letter a week ago. A. R. Spicer, of Danville, Ill., has been called to succeed me here.—H. M. BARNETT.

Saybrook.—One addition from the Baptists and one confession. Members of the church gave the preacher a surprise party on Dec. 4, and left the larder well filled with the necessities of life.—T. A. LINDENMEYER.

Sidell, Dec. 16.—Three additions yesterday at regular services, two by statement and one by confession. Two by letter at previous regular services.—C. F. GAUMER, pastor.

Sidell, Dec. 16.—Our meeting closed last Friday night with 17 added to the church; 7 baptisms, 5 from the Methodists and others by letter or statement. This is admittedly a difficult field, but we have done our best. Bro. Coggins, pastor Tabernacle Christian Church, Decatur, Ill., did the preaching and did it well.—ADAM K. ADCOCK

INDIANA.

Cicero.—I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Cicero, Ind., resulting in 34 accessions to the church and a general awakening of the community; 55 have been added during the year. I will preach for them one-half the time next year.—T. H. KUHN.

Elwood, Dec. 18.—Meeting at Cisne three weeks and two days old with 30 additions, 22 by obedience. K. A. Williams is doing a grand work in that community.—L. C. WILSON.

I have just closed a ten days' meeting for my brother, J. J. Taylor, in the Christian Church at North Vernon, Ind. There were 14 additions to the church; 12 confessions, one reclaimed from the Baptists and one immersed Presbyterian. T. R. Humphrey, of Vevay, Ind., led the song service. My brother was called for all instead of half time.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

IOWA.

Bloomfield, Dec. 16.—Our meeting continues, with 61 additions to date.—D. A. WICKIZER.

Corning, Dec. 16.—Four more received into the fellowship yesterday; three by letter and one by obedience. The good work goes on and the church is prosperous. W. B. Crewdson, former pastor, gave us a fine lecture Dec. 10. Theme, "The Place and Power of the C. E. Society." It will do any church good to hear it.—I. H. FULLER.

Drakeville, Dec. 18.—Our meeting here closed last night with 38 additions; 32 by baptism, 2 reclaimed and 4 by statement. Seven of those baptized were from Methodist families and two from Baptist families. This is the eighth protracted meeting I have held at Drakeville, assisted by home forces. My work at this place will close next Sunday, having preached for them half-time ten years, during which there were 245 additions to the church. Bro. J. H. Painter will probably be my successor.—D. W. HASTINGS.

Jefferson, Dec. 21.—We have just closed a pleasant and profitable meeting with the church at Ulysses, Neb., where Bro. Baldwin, the state secretary, is pastor. We begin at Estherville, Ia., on the 29th.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT.

North English, Dec. 16.—The meeting continues all this week, God willing, closing the 22nd inst., 30 accessions to date. Bro. Telford is the pastor.—BEN F. HILL.

Villisca, Dec. 20.—Myself and Ward E. Shafer, leader of music, begin a meeting at Newton, Ia., Jan. 6. E. F. Leake, of Newton, assisted by Mr. Shafer, will hold a meeting here in February.—S. M. PERKINS.

KANSAS.

Courtland, Dec. 16.—I baptized two men here yesterday, making nine since my last report.—J. L. THOMPSON.

New Albany, Dec. 15.—Our meeting at Silver Creek closed Dec. 9 on account of bad weather. The preaching was well done by Bro. G. Park, of Buffalo. Three from the Baptists. Will begin our meeting at New Albany soon.—G. F. BRADFORD, pastor.

Parsons, Dec. 20.—We closed our meeting at Blackwell, Okla., with 58 additions, 24 by baptism. Begin at Marshalltown, Ia., Jan. 1.—W. E. HARLOW.

Winfield.—Fifty-six added here recently, thirty of these by confession.—GEO. T. SMITH.

MISSOURI.

California, Dec. 16.—Our meeting at this place closed last night. There were 7 additions, 6 by baptism and 1 from the Baptists.

The Right Thing.

A New Catarrh Cure which is Rapidly Coming to the Front.

For several years Eucalyptol Guaiacol and Hydrastin have been recognized as standard remedies for catarrhal troubles, but they have always been given separately, and only very recently an ingenious chemist succeeded in combining them, together with other antiseptics, into a pleasant, effective tablet.

Druggists sell the remedy under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and it has met with remarkable success in the cure of nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat catarrh, and in catarrh of the stomach.

Mr. F. N. Benton, whose address is care of Clark House, Troy, N. Y., says: "When I run up against anything that is good I like to tell people of it. I have been troubled with catarrh more or less for some time. Last winter more than ever. Tried several so-called cures, but did not get any benefit from them. About six weeks ago I bought a 50 cent box of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and am glad to say that they have done wonders for me, and I do not hesitate to let all my friends know that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the right thing."

Mr. Geo. J. Casanova, of Hotel Griffon, West 9th Street, New York City, writes: "I have commenced using Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and already they have given me better results than any catarrh cure I have ever tried."

A leading physician of Pittsburg advises the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in preference to any other treatment for catarrh of the head, throat or stomach.

He claims they are far superior to inhalers, salves, lotions or powder, and are much more convenient and pleasant to take, and are so harmless that little children take them with benefit, as they contain no opiate, cocaine or any poisonous drugs.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cents for full size package, and they are probably the safest and most reliable cure for any form of catarrh.

My brother in the flesh, Claude E. Hill, of Pleasant Hill, did the preaching, and it was second to none I have ever heard in a series of meetings. The church was delighted and is left in fine working condition. We are expecting further results to follow this excellent work.—C. C. HILL.

Cameron.—Four additions to the church Sunday, making 12 since the special revival service closed, or 48 since Oct. 1.—WILL H. BROWN.

Chillicothe, Dec. 17.—Just closed a meeting at Highlands, Mo. (Breckenridge P. O.), last Sunday night, with 13 confessions, 1 restored. Bro. Pardoner preached 3 sermons for me while I was away, with 3 additions. Bro. Bates preached for me one night; was stormed out, and closed on account of cold. Sister Gertrude Ammons, of Seymour, Ia., had charge of the music. This was my third annual meeting with the above church since I commenced laboring with them.—O. L. SUMNER.

Palmyra, Dec. 22.—Two accessions here today.—W. A. FITE.

Marionville, Dec. 16.—Our meeting with Bro. Myrick, at New Hampton, closed with 19 additions. It was an enjoyable meeting. I preached for Bro. W. F. Turner on Sunday night, the 8th. There were 4 additions. Bro. Turner is doing a great work in this important field. On the 29th they will go into their new house—one of the best, if not the best in the state. I lectured on Monday night. Today I start for my home in the sunny south.—MORGAN MORGANS.

Moberly, Dec. 17.—Our meeting of three weeks closed at Missouri City on the 1st inst., with 24 additions. Bro. H. S. Saxby assisted in the meeting. During our two years' service at Missouri City 47 were added to the church there.—J. P. FURNISH.

Mexico, Dec. 16.—Our three weeks' meeting closed yesterday with 29 additions from all sources; 16 baptisms, 2 restored; one prominent man from M. E. Church; others by letter. J. Will Landrum greatly pleased us as a song leader. I can highly recommend him anywhere. But for severe weather our additions could have been doubled.—A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

OHIO.

Columbus, Dec. 15.—Two added by confession and one by statement this evening. One added by baptism Dec. 1. Two-thirds of the amount needed to build our new auditorium has already been subscribed, and we hope to dedicate next November.—M. E. CHATRY, pastor.

Gibsonburg, Dec. 20.—Our meeting closed here Friday night, Dec. 13, with 14 additions, 12 by baptism. Elder Mullen, of Bays, O., assisted me. We are greatly encouraged.—MELVIN L. PEDEN, pastor.

Greenwich, Dec. 16.—We closed a five weeks' meeting here last night. I baptized 20 and fellowshipped one from the Methodists and one from the Church of God, 23 in all. One was the daughter of a Congregational minister, another a member of that church, and two others of those I baptized were Methodists, but are all now simply Christians. This is my first meeting as pastor. It was conducted entirely by our home forces. I go to Ft. Wayne, Ind., in January to assist Bro. Harris at Creighton Avenue.—JAMES E. HAWES, pastor.

Nelsonville, Dec. 16.—There have been five additions here since our meeting closed.—C. M. KEENE.

Newark, Dec. 16.—Three additions yesterday. This makes 26 since beginning here the last of September.—H. NEWTON MILLER.

Perry, Dec. 20.—Just closed a four weeks' successful meeting. Bro. Percy H. Wilson, of Austintown, O., was our evangelist. His work was earnest, thorough, scriptural. Visible results, 15 added and the church greatly strengthened and encouraged.—O. A. RICHARDS.

The Spiritual Side of Our Plea

—By A. B. JONES—

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

One in a Hundred.

The first year of the new century is gone; there are ninety-nine years left for improvement. Messrs. N. W. Ayer & Son, the Philadelphia promoters of advertising, have begun early in their efforts to make the second year better than the first. Their Twentieth Century Calendar, issued about this time last year, it was thought, approached near the limits of the art preservative and the demands of utility—but the 1902 calendar is better. As usual, the background and main sheet of this calendar is an art work, enhanced in beauty by the tasteful colors of the printer. The twelve sheets containing the dates of the months have a restful dark green background, the large figures in white catching the eye at a great distance. In each sheet are epigrammatic sentences bearing on the possibilities of business during the year. Though this calendar marks the passing of one year in a hundred, it is in itself one calendar in a thousand for artistic beauty and real usefulness. The demand is always great, and whoever would have a copy should send 25c before the edition runs low. This is a merely nominal price to cover the cost of printing, handling and postage. Address N. W. Ayer & Son, Chestnut and Eighth streets, Philadelphia.

Catarrh and Consumption

I have spent nearly 50 years in the treatment of the above named troubles and believe I have effected more permanent cures than any specialist in the history of medicine. As I must soon retire from active life, I will, from this time on, send the means of treatment and cure as used in my practice, free and post-paid to every reader of this paper who suffers from these loathsome, dangerous and disgusting diseases. My treatment will positively give prompt relief and cure in the worst cases. This is a sincere offer which anyone is free to accept. Address, PROFESSOR J. A. LAWRENCE, 114 West 32d St., New York.

The Sleepy Man.

Nurse says the sleepy man
Is coming—let us run,
And watch him through the keyhole;
'Twill be such glorious fun.

I wonder what he looks like,
For nurse has often told
That he's great-grandpa to Santa Claus,
Then he must be very old.

So they softly crept to the playroom—
Little Ted and blue-eyed Nan—
And waited long and patiently
To see the sleepy man.

At last came their bedtime,
And nurse looked all around
For Baby Nan and Little Ted,
But neither could be found.

So then she sought the playroom,
And lo, behind the door
The sleepy man had caught them both
And laid them on the floor.

Loyal to the Climate.

Residents of St. Paul are said to be fond of dwelling upon the "peculiar dryness" in their climate which makes the cold less unbearable. A writer in the Chicago Tribune, who also has a "peculiar dryness" in his method of telling the story, makes it evident that the cold is not depressing to cheerful people who have large wardrobes.

"Yes," remarked the St. Paul man to his friend from Chicago, as he stood arrayed in his blanket suit and adjusted a couple of buckskin chest protectors, "yes, there is something about the air in this northwestern climate which causes a person not to notice the cold.

"Its extreme dryness," he continued, as he drew on an extra pair of woolen socks, a pair of Scandinavian sheepskin boots and some Alaska overshoes, "its extreme dryness makes a degree of cold reckoned by the mercury, which is unbearable in other latitudes, simply exhilarating here.

ered more with the cold in Michigan, for instance," he added, as he drew on a pair of goatskin leggings, adjusted a double fur cap and tied on some Eskimo ear-muffs, "in Michigan or Illinois, we will say, with the thermometer at zero or above than I have here with it at forty-five to fifty degrees below.

"The dryness of our winter air is certainly remarkable," he went on, as he wound a couple of rods of red woolen scarf about his neck, wrapped a dozen newspapers about his body, drew on a fall cloth overcoat, a winter cloth overcoat, a light buffalo-skin overcoat and bearskin overcoat.

"No, if you have never enjoyed our glorious Minnesota winter climate with its dry atmosphere, its bright sunshine and invigorating ozone, you would scarcely believe some things I could tell you about it. The air is so dry," he continued, as he adjusted his nose protector, drew on his reindeer-skin mittens, and carefully closed one eyehole in the sealskin mask which he drew down from his cap, "it's so dry that actually it seems next to impossible to feel the cold at all.

"We can scarcely realize in the spring that we have had winter, owing to the extreme dryness of the atmosphere.

"By the way," he went on, turning to his wife, "just bring me a couple of blankets and those bedquilts and throw over my shoulders, and hand me that muff with the hot soapstone in it, and then if you'll have the girl bring me my show-shoes and ice-berg scaling stick, I'll step over and see them pry the workmen off the top of the ice palace who were frozen on yesterday. I tell you, we shouldn't be going out this way five hundred miles farther south, where the air is damp and chilly. Nothing but our dry air makes it possible."

A Convincing Argument.

His name was John Methuen, and his life was a long series of disappointments and baffled hopes. He was a mere lad when his father died, and John as the eldest child and only son, assumed the burden of supporting the family. A thoughtful, studious boy, with a love of books, he was obliged to sacrifice all his hopes for an education.

It was a hard battle. The mother aged visibly, the sisters were delicate and unaccustomed to the work which their circumstances put upon them, and John himself was never strong. But he was ever faithful to his responsibilities.

In time he married, and into his home came his mother and one sister. It was a blessed burden, but still a burden, and the years were many during which he carried it.

The outward features of his life were commonplace enough. His taste for books and his leaning toward the intellectual interests of life would naturally have led him into some pursuit where the taste could be gratified; but circumstances deprived him of the choice. His father had owned a small farm, and there the boy's duty lay. He was a small farmer, and not a particularly successful one. Not only did he never attain a position of ease, he never even reached the point where the necessity of meeting his expenses and paying his just debts was not a problem and a cause for worry. He died when he had hardly passed middle age, worn out by the burden he had carried so uncomplainingly from boyhood.

But that is not the whole story. He had improved his mind in odd moments, had read widely and thought well. He had held a modest but increasingly influential position in the church, and for years had taught in the Sunday-school. Men recognized the strength and fineness of his mind, and were accustomed to say of him, "What a pity that he had not a college education!"

Remarks like these, echoing the "might have been" of his disappointed past, sometimes came to his ears, but they seemed never to disturb him or to ruffle the habitual serenity of his manner. In all those years he was ever calm, ever courteous, ever helpful. No man could recall an instance when he had complained or had reminded others that he had made any sacrifice for them.

After he was dead a brilliant young man in the village, who had been known as a skeptic, became a decided Christian. It was a surprise to his friends, and one of them asked him what argument had changed his views.

"The life of John Methuen," was his answer.

Then the thought came to others of the friends of the dead man that if all the service he had performed could be measured, and the number known of those he had touched for good, the life of John Methuen would be seen to have been as useful as if he had occupied a chair in the faculty of some college, or filled a pulpit, or been a leader in great industrial enterprises.

There are many John Methuens. Their humble lives often seem like failures, but be sure that not one of them is in vain, and that to Him who knows the human heart they are not failures, but the noblest of successes.—Youth's Companion.

Playing Doctor.

An attorney has two bright children. A few days ago their mamma found they were playing "doctor." The younger child was the patient, with head wrapped in a towel, and the older, the physician, with a silk hat and a cane. The mother, unseen by the little ones, listened at the doorway.

"I feel awful bad," said the patient.

"We'll fix all that," said the doctor, briskly. "Lemme see your tongue."

Out came the tiny red indicator.

"Hum-hum! coated," said the doctor, looking very grave indeed.

Then, without a word of warning, the skilled physician hauled off and gave the patient a smart slap in the region of the ribs.

"Ouch!" cried the sufferer.

"Feel any pain there?" inquired the doctor.

"Yes," said the patient.

"I thought so," said the healer. "How's the other side?"

"It's all right," said the patient, edging away.

Thereupon the doctor produced a small bottle, with what looked like either bread or mud in it, and placed it on the table.

"Take one of these pellets," the physician said, "dissolved in water, every seventeen minutes—al-ter-mit-ly."

"How long mus' I take 'em?" groaned the patient.

"Till you die," said the doctor. "Good-by."—Selected.

Eggs in Winter.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Two years ago in a lecture before the chemistry class at the medical university where I was a student, the professor, while analyzing an egg, stated that the reason hens did not lay as many eggs in winter as in summer was that in winter they could not get the necessary food to produce the yolk of eggs, and if farmers would feed their fowls powdered red albumen in winter they could have as many eggs as in summer. I was interested in the subject, as my father and brothers are farmers, so after the lecture I asked the professor in what quantities and how the albumen should be fed. He said to take a pound of powdered red albumen and mix it with a pound of black or red pepper ground fine. Then every morning mix some ground feed, half wheat bran and half corn meal, and to each quart of this feed add two teaspoons full of the mixed pepper and albumen, then add enough hot water to dampen the feed not to make it sticky. Give a quart of this mixed hot feed to each 12 hens every morning, and a quart of whole grain, wheat or corn, or both mixed for each 12 fowls every evening, and in two weeks your hens will begin to lay and will lay all winter if you feed them this feed. The professor said he had kept a pen of game fowls for 15 years, he always fed them this feed and always had an abundance of eggs.

I wrote to my father and brothers, giving them this recipe, and they and several neighbors tried it with complete success last winter, the coldest weather did not stop their hens laying. My father keeps about 100 light brahmas, winter before last they did not lay at all, but on this feed last winter they averaged about seven dozen eggs a day all winter. One thing the brahmas used to do to a finish—that was set, but last winter father could not get a hen to set until he quit feeding this feed.

My brother bought 250 young hens last September, and I got a letter from him today saying that he began feeding this feed two weeks ago and is now getting over 200 eggs a day. I have a great many friends back home that read your paper and thought I would print this recipe, so that they and all your readers that keep poultry could be benefited by its use, for hens may as well be laying all winter as to be idle, but a hen is simply a machine, and if you do not supply the material, the hens cannot lay the eggs. You can get a pound of pepper at any grocery for about 30 cents and a pound of albumen at any drug store for 60 cents. A pound of each will feed 50 hens over a month. You will get 100 dozen eggs that you would not get without it, and 100 dozen eggs in winter are worth at least $20, and $20 for 90 cents worth of feed is surely a big profit.

The only funny thing I have seen in a London newspaper in five months here (intentionally funny, I mean,) was a picture in one of the pink afternoon papers. An old lady was standing on the edge of the roadway talking to a constable, with her back turned toward the 'bus that was tearing down the street. "Wheer do I get the Hampstead 'bus, constable?" she asked. "You'll get it in the back, mum," said he, "if you stand there about half a minute longer."

A Pair of Them.

Those who have first gazed in dismay and then laughed at their own distorted reflection in a concave or convex mirror will appreciate an amusing occurrence lately witnessed at a menagerie.

Here and there between the cages were placed trick mirrors which reflected a distorted image. An Irishman, after a critical survey of the monkeys, had wandered away from his better-half and suddenly found himself in front of one of these mirrors. After a glance at his distorted reflection he rushed back to his wife, who was still watching the antics of the monkeys.

"Come away wid ye, Bridget!" he exclaimed. "Oi've found a bigger trate than that—the ugliest baste in the show! He's in a little cage in the corner."

Bridget followed her husband's lead, and he dragged her in front of the "little cage." To his astonishment there was more in the "cage" than he expected.

"Begorra, Bridget," he exclaimed, "there's a pair av 'em!"

As Good as Golf.

He was an old farmer, on a visit to the city, and he saw two young fellows playing chess. The game was long, and he ventured to interrupt it at length.

"Excuse me," he said, "but the object of both of you is to git them wooden objects from where they are over to where they ain't?"

"That partly expresses it," replied one of the players.

"And you have to be continually on the lookout for surprises and difficulties?"

"Constantly."

"And if you ain't mighty keeful, you're going to lose some on 'em?"

"Yes."

"An' then there's that other game that you dress up odd fur, and play with long sticks an' a little ball."

"You mean golf."

"I think prob'ly that's what I mean. Is that game amusin'?"

"It is quite interesting, and the exercise is very beneficial."

"Well, I reckon it's a mighty good joke."

"To what do you refer?"

"The way I've been havin' fun without knowin' anything about it. If you gentlemen want to really enjoy yourselves, you come over an' git me to let you drive pigs."

You'll git all the walkin' you want, an' the way you have to watch fur surprises, an' figger so's not to lose 'em, would tickle you most to death."

An Enthusiastic Reader.

Happy would be the modern novelist who should awaken one tithe of the interest excited by Richardson's novels in Lady Bradshaigh, one of the author's friends, says the Youth's Companion. This lady entered so deeply into the story of "Clarissa Harlowe" that she regarded the actors in it as real persons. "Would you have me weep incessantly?" she asked, on receiving volume five.

Again, after she had learned what the catastrophe was to be, she wrote:

"If it be possible, recall the dreadful sentence. My hand trembles, for I can scarcely hold my pen. I cannot help hating you if you alter not your scheme."

All her persuasions were in vain; but having suffered so much on Clarissa's account, it was certainly a little hard that, in his third novel, he must threaten her with the death of his heroine. Then criticism was changed to entreaty. "I was forced to lie down," she says, "and was relieved for a moment by a flood of tears. I was not without some hope of relief from your letter, but alas! I am more confirmed by it in what I dreaded."

She adds in a postscript, "This letter will weigh heavy with my tears. It has been thoroughly soaked; and I have but one poor consolation left, that if you kill me, it is the way you use all your heroines."

Richardson's reply was to send her the seventh volume, where the heroine was blessed with good fortune; and Lady Bradshaigh's relief found an expression equally exaggerated.

"God Almighty bless you, my dear sir," she writes, "for setting my bursting heart at ease. I wish you had seen me open your letter, trembling, laying it down, taking it up again, unresolved whether to look at the beginning or the conclusion. At last I ventured to unfold it partly, and with a side glance read a few words which instantly produced the happiest tears I ever shed. Oh, sir, you would rejoice in the pain you occasioned me, could you but know how I feel. Forgive you? From my heart and soul I thank you."

Young Blood.

The fact that a young man of twenty-six has just succeeded apparently in sending a signal across the Atlantic Ocean without wires and that another young man of twenty-five has within the past few months accomplished hitherto impossible things in aerial navigation, together with the fact that President Roosevelt at forty-three is by far the youngest man who ever occupied that high office, calls attention to the pre-eminent part that young men are playing in the world's affairs. Young as he is, however, Mr. Roosevelt, says Success, is the oldest of at least nineteen of the prominent rulers of the earth. He is just three months older than Emperor William of Germany, and Czar Nicholas of Russia is only thirty-three years of age. The emperor of China is twenty-nine. Victor Emanuel III., of Italy, is one year younger. Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, is twenty-one. Though not yet actually ruling, Alphonso XIII., of Spain, is but fifteen. His royal neighbor, Charles I., of Portugal, is a year under forty. Abbas II., Hilma, khedive of Egypt, is but twenty-seven. Alexander of Servia is twenty-five. Ferdinand I., of Bulgaria, will be forty-one next February. Thanh Tai, king of Siam, is twenty-two. Of the rulers of the small German states, Ernest Louis, grand duke of Hesse, is thirty-three; Charles Edward, duke of Saxe-Coburg, is seventeen, and Frederic, prince of Waldeck, is thirty-six.

R. Iglesias, president of Costa Rica, is forty. The sultan of Morocco, Abdul Azziz, is twenty-three; and the maharajah of Nepal is twenty-seven. Prince George, of Greece, governor of Crete, is thirty two. In our own country, Governor J. C. W. Beckham, of Kentucky, is thirty-two.

It will be seen that a great part of the earth is ruled by young men, and no one will deny that government is not wiser, more enlightened, and more restricted to the necessary exercise of power than ever before.

"Wish I was twins," said Willie. "Why?" "I'd send the other half of me to school, and this half would go fishing."

"Are you working—have you any engagement now?" asked the elastic skin man of the living skeleton. "No," replied the other freak, "I am what is known as 'an idle curiosity.'"

"If I stand on my head, the blood all rushes to my head, doesn't?" No one ventured to contradict him. "Now," he continued triumphantly, "when I stand on my feet, why doesn't the blood all rush into my feet?" "Because," remarked Hostetter McGinnis, "Your feet are not empty."

The steamer rolled and pitched in the waves. "Deah boy," groaned Cholly, at the end of his first hour on shipboard, "promise me you will send my remains home to my people." A second hour passed. "Deah boy," feebly moaned Cholly, "you needn't send my remains home. There won't be any."

With the Children.

J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Runaways.—XI.

Harry and Zep had not wandered long about the schoolyard before the teacher came to the door and rang a bell. It looked like she was calling them in to a late breakfast, but in reality she was inviting them to a feast of nouns, capital cities and figures. The children poured into the house in no particular order, because it was "first day," and they hoped to do pretty much as they pleased. It was delightful weather and it seemed such a pity to leave the sunshine and soft breezes, to smell the hard, slick benches, the chalk dust, and the cold barrel-stove! The very books seemed to give out an odor like unpleasant weeds. The children felt instinctively that God made the country, but man made the schoolhouse. Every child examined Miss Fanny Mace with a critical eye. She was a new teacher, so slight of form, so pretty and youthful, with such a pleasant smile, they wondered if she could "keep order." Some began experimenting at once. The large boy who had accused the Lamonts of being thieves, drew a pin stealthily from the bottom edge of his vest, and leaning cautiously over his bench, brought the point into contact with a little boy who was not thinking of pins. The little boy started wildly, and cried "O, mamma!" The children laughed aloud. Miss Fanny tried to look stern. "What is it?" she demanded.

"Somebody sticked me," complained the sufferer. The children laughed again. The little boy, who had great serious eyes and a mouth naturally puckered, as if the thread had been drawn too tight, added wistfully, "I don't want 'em to do it to me. I don't like to be pointed with a pin."

"James Rooney," said Miss Fanny to the large boy, "did you stick poor little Benny with a pin?"

"Yessum," says James Rooney. He was so used to being called "Jim" that when he was addressed as "James" he felt a little uncomfortable, as if he had on his Sunday clothes. The children laughed again. Benny turned his solemn eyes upon the boy behind him and looked indignant wonder.

"Children," said Miss Fanny, flushing, "there is nothing to laugh about. It is not fun to stick a dear little boy with a pin; it is very wrong and you ought not to laugh at James and encourage him. It is not funny and it is not original. It is an old, old trick, not worthy a little gentleman."

The children did not regard the episode from the same point of view. They did not care how old the trick was, or if it was original. The sight of Benny's reproachful eyes and solemn, puckered mouth was good to them. Miss Fanny continued, "I am going to ask every boy and girl in this school to help me preserve order. I will trust you to do what is right, and so we will all be a happy, industrious band, learning much, and feeling happy every day. Now I will write on the board the classes in the order I hope to have them, and we will organize as speedily as possible." She turned her back upon the room and began to write in beautiful letters. How pretty she looked as the September sun shone upon her brown hair! Emily Lamont gazed at her in shy affection.

James Rooney felt himself a hero, and in order not to lose his prestige, he hastened to secure his advantage. He spread a sheet of letter paper upon his tousled hair. Miss Fanny did not look around. He balanced his pen upon the paper, while the children watched him in breathless suspense, their mouths parted. Still Miss Fanny wrote. With a cautious hand James placed his bottle of ink beside the pen. The top of his head was now a writing desk. James sat enjoying his glory, afraid to move lest the desk upset, holding both hands up ready to grasp his property the instant the teacher should look around.

Glory usually comes to man bit by bit, a little one day, a little more the next year. It was so with James Rooney. As a hero of the pin he had won renown; that was enough for him that day. As he sat balancing the paper, pen and ink upon his erect head, another ambitious youth slipped behind him, and dropped a cold button down the rigid neck. James started violently and the ink, upsetting, divided into two black streams, one following the button, the other crossing his forehead, burrowing down his cheek and making a little cascade off his chin. The bottle fell in the aisle with a crash while the pen stuck into the floor as if it were an arrow just discharged. Miss Fanny looked around and cried out at the ghastly sight. It was such a serious matter that the pupils did not know whether to laugh or not. Little Benny fixed his great eyes upon the teacher and said with the decision of a judge, "It's what he got, Miss Fanny, it's what he got!"

James Rooney was sent to the spring to clean himself, while Tom Smith, the lad of the button, was sentenced to be "kept in all day." The school wore on toward noon with no interruptions save incessant whisperings, throwing of wads, and sniggerings when one would catch sight of Benny's solemn countenance. At last school "let out for noon." Emily, Harry and Zep took their lunch basket to the sidewalk which ran from the door to the well. The well had gone dry, so when you got thirsty you had to go to the spring, which was far across the road. Two old apple trees threw their shade upon the sidewalk, and the pupils always sat along the edge in fair weather to eat their dinner. No one came near the Lamonts, but they did not feel very lonesome, they had each other, and since they were orphans they had never been bothered with much kindness. Perhaps Miss Fanny would have eaten beside them had she not been obliged to stay in the house in order to keep in Tom Smith. "Keeping in" works both ways. After a while Zep went to the spring after a drink and Emily entered the schoolhouse to share Miss Fanny's captivity.

As soon as James Rooney saw Harry sitting alone beside his empty basket, the hero of the pin came up, still showing ink stains on the backs of his hands and along one corner of his mouth. "I know all about you!" said James. "You're the boy that stole his aunt's ring and watch and then took 'em back the next morning!"

"I didn't do any such a thing," said Harry, starting up with a very red face as four or five boys gathered about. "You did," returned James, "for I heard your uncle, Tom Burgiss, tell Mr. Dayton so. I say you did, I say you did, I say you did!"

"You say it again," cried Harry desperately, "and I'll fight you."

"It!" cried James, "it, it, it!"

"Aw, Jim," said a boy, "leave the fellow alone; he's heap little-er'n you are."

"Don't care f'I am," cried Harry. "Anybody calls me a thief's got to pay for it!"

"Come on, pay for it, then," said James, "we can fight out in the cornfield and Miss Fanny won't know nothin' about it, an' couldn't help herself if she did!"

"Come on, come on!" cried several others in rapture. "We'll have a good, honest fight, and start in the school year right!"

The boys hurried from the yard into the cornfield, Harry eager to maintain the honor of his family by means of his two little fists.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Eli Perkins asked Mr. Evarts how a man ought to lie on a Wagner car to sleep well. "Don't come to a lawyer with such a question as that," he said. "Go to some railroad man. Go to Depew." "But Depew is a lawyer," I said. "Well, y-e-s, Depew is a lawyer; but all the law Depew knows wouldn't bias him in answering." "But which side should a man lie on—right or left?" I asked. "Oh," said Evarts, smiling, "a lawyer can answer that. If you are on the right side you won't need to lie at all." But Depew says that Evarts really said, "In your case, Eli, it wouldn't make a bit of difference which side you're on; you'll lie, anyway!"

Quaint Philosophy In An Advertisement.

When a man acts as he believes the Infinite within him would have him act, he draws power to himself from unseen sources; that power may be shown in many ways.

Things work smoother, plans carry out, people begin to say, "lucky;" "he's a winner;" "everything he touches succeeds," etc., etc.

Ever try it? If you ever do, you will agree that it is the greatest proposition on earth.

There is a marvelous potency behind the man who acts in a simple, straightforward way, as near as he knows, in accordance with the promptings of that invisible Deity within.

This should teach him that great and honorable work is ahead; man at once the tool and a part of the master workman.

The tool must not be dulled and ruined by bad food, tobacco, whiskey, coffee, etc. You question including coffee among "bad habits." None of these habits are bad habits unless they weaken or lessen the clean-cut power of the individual. If they do, quit them. If food and drink are not well selected, change. Put your machine in clean, first-class shape. It is the purpose of this article to suggest a way to keep the body well so it can carry out the behest of the mind.

A sure and safe start in the right direction is to adopt Grape-Nuts Food for every morning's breakfast. It is delicious, pre-digested, highly nourishing and will put one far along toward doing his best in life's work.

Follow this with abandonment of coffee, if it does not agree with you, and take in place of it, Postum Cereal Food Coffee, for its regenerating and vitalizing nourishment.

With a wise selection of food and drink, man can quickly place himself in shape where the marvelous Directing Power will use him for some good and worthy purpose.

Sense, just plain, common sense.

SABBATH OR LORD'S DAY

By D. R. DUNGAN, author of "On the Rock," "Moses, the Man of God," etc. It is a powerful argument against Adventism, and the observance of the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week, as the day of rest and worship. Dr. Dungan is a man well versed in the Scriptures, and gifted with sound sense and good judgment. He is a strong and convincing writer. This work should be placed in the hands of those who have been disturbed by the teachings of Adventists.

ALEXANDER PROCTER'S SERMONS

"The Witness of Jesus" is the title of a new volume, just issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, containing nineteen sermons of the late Alexander Procter. These sermons were stenographically reported, and afterward carefully edited and revised. The several sermons are as follows:

The Witness of Jesus.
Creation—Old and New.

The Coming One.

Transfiguration of Man.

Foreknowledge and Predestination.

Salvation and Retribution.

Three Worlds of Revelation.

Laws of Retribution.

Following Jesus.

Faith in a Future Life.

Knowledge of God.

The New Birth.

Authority in Religion.

Coming of the Perfect.

Unseen Things.

Law of Glorification.

Creed of the Church.

The Baptismal Formula.

Christian Baptism.

In addition there is the Memorial address delivered by T. P. Haley at the Missouri Christian Convention, 1900, and a preface by the editor of the volume, J. H. Garrison. This is a beautiful volume of 404 pages, handsomely bound. The full-page portrait of Mr. Procter is an excellent likeness of the great preacher.

Echoes from Northwest Ohio.

And first, we regret to learn of the illness of Bro. J. H. Garrison, chief editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He enjoys the sympathy of the brotherhood, as well as their prayers for his speedy recovery.

Since the Minneapolis convention there have been nearly one dozen additions to the Church of Christ in Findlay—mostly received by letter and statement, a few baptisms. A. M. Growden, pastor.

At Leipsic, O., Bro. J. W. Underwood had five additions recently.

At McGuffey, O., Bro. J. T. H. Stewart had six additions in a late meeting.

At Weston, O., Bro. S. M. Cook, (Bro. J. R. Ewers aiding) enjoyed a revival in which 17 were added to the church.

Bro. J. Mullen aided Bro. W. L. Peden at Gibsonburg, O. At last report received nine were added.

Bro. W. R. Walker enjoys a good opening at North Baltimore, O. At last reports six had been added.

Bro. Z. E. Bates enjoys good success at Rudolph. Six additions of late.

Bro. J. W. Underwood enjoyed a blessed meeting at Uniopolis, O. At last report 43 were fellowshiped.

Bro. H. H. Moninger is doing successful work at Tiffin. Fifteen had been added when last heard from.

Bro. P. J. Kempher had three additions at Bethel, O.

Bro. C. E. Hoskins helped Bro. S. H. Farrer at Fostoria, O. One addition.

Bro. J. T. Stewart, of our city, went to Plevna, Mo., to hold a special meeting. At last report 19 accession were had.

Bro. P. J. Kempher is now in a meeting at Dunkirk. Souls are turning to the Lord.

Bro. L. E. Hoskins is protracting a meeting at McComb, O. We expect good reports from the same.

In a few days Pastor A. M. Growden, of Findlay, O., leaves enroute Dunedin, New Zealand, to visit his mother and relatives. He will be gone until spring.

On Dec. 20 Bro. Z. T. Sweeney delivered a strong and eloquent lecture in our city on "The Golden Age." R. H. BOLTON.

Findlay, O., Dec. 21, 1901.

Bible Teaching.

By far the most instructive Bible teaching ever done in this city has been done during the past week in the Christian Church by Knox P. Taylor, of Illinois. He has equipments unexcelled for this kind of work and a head and heart full of knowledge of the book of books, which he is dispensing to good audiences. One can ill afford to miss a single lesson, yet any one can enjoy even one, since the short reviews give the connecting link between the lessons. These lessons should be taken advantage of by both saint and sinner, and aside from their religious features they are sources of the most complete teaching of history. "The earnest minister of the church, Eld. F. A. M., is endeavoring to bring about a new dispensation in Bible study and his efforts, so commendable, ought to receive the consideration and help from all Christian people and from the entire citizenship of this town. You will be welcome."

The above item appeared in one of our city papers last week while Bro. Taylor was holding our Bible Institute and was written by a staunch member of the Presbyterian Church in this city, who, by the way, attended every session of the institute.

That the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may have some idea of what was taught and so highly commended by this Presbyterian writer, I will transcribe a few points on the subject for Sunday morning.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

1. Grown people as well as children learn more readily when the picture is presented to the eye than when the sound only enters the ear. From the beginning God has taught man by signs and symbols. He directed Moses to conduct a system of symbol-worship. Paul says that this was a shadow of the real worship, and that the shadow should disappear as soon as the true light appeared. Moses made the tabernacle and all its furniture, the table of shew-bread, the candlestick, the altar of incense, the ark of the covenant, the cherubim of glory for the purpose of instructing the Israelites, and through them, the whole world in the sublime mysteries of the redemption. No wonder the tabernacle and temple were objects of so much interest to the Israelites. There was the place where God had recorded his name, there were the symbols of his presence, of his power and of his glory, and there he had promised to meet with them.

WHY WE SHOULD STUDY THESE TYPES.

1. A record of these symbols was made for our instruction and our comfort. Rom. 15:4.

2. In them we have a beautiful pictorial outline of the Christian system. To-day we study the table of shew-bread. Called shew-bread because it stood before the face of Jehovah. On it were placed every Sabbath by the high priest twelve cakes of fine flour, to be eaten by the priests. Lev. 24:5-9.

POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

Table of shew-bread, Lev. 24:5-9.

1. It was instituted by God's command. Lev. 24:5.

2. It was a memorial of the old covenant. Ver. 6.

3. The table was in the holy place. Ver. 6.

4. Twelve loaves were on the table. Ver. 5.

5. The table was used each Sabbath day. Ver. 8.

6. Only the priests could eat of the bread. Ver. 9.

7. It was eaten by the light of the lamp. Ver. 6.

8. It was eaten by priests with clean hands and robes. Ex. 30:19,20.

9. God commanded that this shew bread should be eaten by the Jews until Jesus came. Rom. 10:4.

We have looked at the shadow (the points were written out fully on a blackboard and a large painting representing the table of shew bread was suspended before the large audience). Now we look at the substance, the thing represented by the shew bread, viz.:

THE LORD'S TABLE.

See 1 Cor. 11:23-26.

1. It was instituted by Christ's command. Ver. 23.

2. It was to be and is a memorial of the new covenant. Ver. 25.

3. The table is in the true holy place, the church. Ver. 22.

4. One loaf, one bread, one body, one church. 1 Cor. 10:17.

5. This table is to be used each Lord's day. Acts 20:7.

6. Only priests should eat of it. 1 Cor. 10:15-17. "Ye are a royal priesthood." 1 Pet. 2:5,9.

7. It is eaten by the light of the Bible. Psalm 119:105.

8. It is eaten by Christians with clean hearts and robes. 1 Cor. 11:28.

9. Christ commanded that this shall be until he comes again. Ver. 26.

CONCLUSION.

To the humble, faithful disciple who has properly examined himself and who through the emblematic bread and wine really discerns the Lord's body and blood, how rich and suggestive and sanctifying is this heavenly ordinance! It is then that the divine majesty, meekness, loveliness and benevolence of our Redeemer furnish food for our hungry souls. It serves also to sanctify and purify our hearts. How can any disciple of the loving Christ absent himself willingly from the house of the Lord on the Lord's day? In what estimation does the unbeliever or infidel hold his Christian neighbor who from any excuse permits himself to be detained from participating in the Lord's Supper. His estimate is low, very low indeed, as I can testify from personal observation.

Missouri Mission Notes.

Your secretary has been out into the south-east part of the state for the last two weeks, and has been so busy seeing things that he has had no time to tell even that which he has seen.

The cause that we love in that part of the state is in the most hopeful condition that it has been for some time. Not that the condition is better as far as members and wealth are concerned, possibly, but because it is more open to the influences which we can exert. The spirit of opposition which is sometimes called "anti" is failing. Three or four years ago this element had a sufficiency of power to cause us an infinite deal of trouble in that section of the state. It is not all gone by any means yet. That "peculiar" people is still there, and as peculiar as ever. One of the members of one of these churches, so called, had the temerity to marry a woman belonging to the General Baptists, and for the sin of not marrying "in the Lord" he was excluded from the church, and this was not by any means the only instance of the kind. Such a people can only bring a cause into contempt, and but few people have the power of discrimination to distinguish between our people and these people of such peculiar ways.

The only way we can ever overcome this pernicious influence and make it stand out that they are not of us is to put men in that territory who are exceptional in the strength of their character and their ability to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. Such men we have in J. C. Craig, of Poplar Bluff; Horace Siberell, of Cape Girardeau; Geo. McGee, of Fredericktown; R. M. Talbert, of Farmington; and J. H. Tiller, of Bloomfield. Such men as these are an honor to our cause. They are representative men, but what are they among so many. We ought to have twice that number of this kind of men in that section of the state.

We had our Southeast District Convention at Dexter, and the blizzard and the date of our convention seemed to have agreed to meet there at the same time. At any rate it was the worst storm that has been in that part of the state for years, and made it utterly impossible for us to get a representative convention that was large in number; but while few, those that were there came for business purposes, and were determined that as much good as possible should be accomplished by their gathering together. It was determined to hold another convention, beginning Monday night after the first Lord's day in April, 1902, at Farmington, and every preacher there pledged himself that he would not only persuade all his people to come that he could possibly influence in that direction, but that he would persuade them to come with pledges and money for the employment of a district evangelist. We have opportunity now to employ one of the best men for that part of the state. It can be done for $25 per month. The salvation of our cause in that part of the state imperatively demands that this man should be employed. Failure to do this means a loss to our cause in that part of the state. Town after town, good ones, permanent ones, growing ones, are open to us to enter. The hand of God seems to be pointing urgently in that direction, and we must not fail to put the man in that place.

The only reason for a failure of this kind will be a scarcity of money. The treasury is a great deal worse than empty now. It must be replenished in order to meet present obligations, and in addition these new appeals come to us with such potency that it is heart-breaking to think of any failure to meet them. As I have said, it will take $25 per month to get this man into that field. As most of you know, I have nothing except a bill of expense that comes to me each month against my salary, but I am so impressed with the necessity of that field that I will be one of twelve men to give that $300, $25 each. I challenge the liberality of my brethren throughout the state. Surely eleven other men can be found out of 170,000 who can give this much for such a work in such a place. Who will be the first to respond to this word which I send out today?

We are exceedingly anxious for the coming of the twelfth day of January. That is the great day for Missouri state missions. On that day throughout all the state we hope to induce our brethren to express their sentiments in regard to state mission work. Brother preacher, will you not present it to your congregation? Brother elder, will you not see that your people know of this great work and have opportunity to contribute to it? "The harvest truly is plenteous and the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he send more laborers into his vineyard." But do not forget while praying for the laborers to be sent, that in order that your prayers may be answered you must pay as well as pray.

Have you joined the One Dollar League? If not, will you not do so now? The books are still open, the list is growing. Just received to day $1 from the oldest preacher in the state, O. P. Davis, of Prairie Home. God bless him and may his example be a strong incentive unto his brethren throughout the state.

Yours in His name.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY

DEVOTED ESPECIALLY TO

The Work and Welfare of the YOUNG PEOPLE of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH

AND GENERALLY TO THE INTEREST OF

All People of All Ages Engaged in Bible Study and Church Work.

WILLIAM WORTH DOWLING, Editor.

Assisted by an Able Corps of Special and General Contributors.

The Minister finds OUR YOUNG FOLKS almost indispensable for many reasons, particularly on account of the Notes on the Uniform Mid-week Prayer-Meeting Topics, which are fuller and more complete than are given by any other publication. One of the leading Homiletic Monthlies reprints in nearly every issue one or more of these articles as "Sermonic Outlines" for the use of its host of ministerial readers.

The Sunday Workers, including the Superintendent, Teachers and Bible Students, find in the two or more pages devoted to the International Bible Lesson in each issue the very best helps available. The Notes for Primary Teachers, by Mrs. Mary W. Grant, are especially valuable.

The Christian Endeavor, by a study of its columns, is thoroughly furnished. The exposition of the Senior Topics, by Frank G. Tyrrell, and of the Junior, by Mr. and Mrs. J. C. B. Stivers, are the fullest and most helpful that go into print, while the practical articles on methods of work and kindred subjects make OUR YOUNG FOLKS the foremost journal of its class.

The Picture Gallery is adorned from week to week with half-tone engravings of the best class of leading Ministers, Superintendents, Teachers, Endeavorers, and other Christian Workers, as well as by pictures of charming bits of Natural Scenery in all parts of the country.

The Story Department is a charming feature of OUR YOUNG FOLKS. In the past several serials have run through its columns which were so popular that they were afterwards published in book form. Shorter stories appear in every issue that are always pure and wholesome and uplifting.

The Subscription Price of OUR YOUNG FOLKS is One Copy One Year, 75 cents each, and in clubs of ten and upwards only 50 cents each, although it is a large Sixteen-Page Weekly. Subscriptions are invariably discontinued at the expiration of the time for which an order was distinctly given.

Lessons in Soul Winning

BY E. H. KELLAR.

Dr. Warren Randolph, Secretary International Lesson Committee, says:

"Seldom have I seen so much which ought to be thought about and studied packed into a book of this size. If in all our Sunday-schools the prayerful study of these pages could be added to the study of the regular Scripture lesson (and nothing should interfere with that) it could scarcely fail of producing that kind of 'evolution' devoutly to be hoped for—the evolution of Christian workers out of Christian disciples."

Other opinions from prominent Pastors, Editors, Evangelists, Sunday-school Leaders, Endeavorers, etc., go to show that this book is one of the most valuable contributions to the religious literature of our day and is destined to do much to revolutionize church methods. In some instances the Endeavor Society is making the suggested activities of this book its special line of work.

CHRISTIAN.

William Christian died at the Baptist Sanitarium, St. Louis, Sep. 3, 1901. Born in Pike county, Missouri, Jan. 29, 1832. Married to Ruth A. Brown, of New London, Mo., Oct. 27, 1867. Graduated with the honors of his class at Watson Seminary, Ashley, Mo., in 1865. Taught for several years in New London, subsequently elected president of Troy Christian Institute and in 1872 was admitted to the New London bar. Served two terms as prosecuting attorney of Ralls county and one term as public administrator. Was for several years cashier of Ralls county bank. Resided two years in Nevada, Mo., during which time he became, what a most thorough investigation developed, the innocent victim of a business trouble that wrecked his fortune. For years he was an honored elder of the New London church, serving efficiently and acceptably as public teacher in the absence of the regular minister. Just, generous, consistent, he won the confidence of all. Though very reticent in disposition and unobtrusive in manner, he was the chosen leader in all public and private enterprises. For months before his death he suffered constantly and uncomplainingly. His death was universally regretted.

CHURCHILL.

John W. Churchill was born in Hardin county, Ky., July 2, 1826, and died Nov. 5, 1901, at Macomb, Ill., where he had resided since 1864. Our churchhouse and many of our homes bear witness of his skill and honesty as a "contractor and builder." But on Wednesday, Oct. 30, he laid down his tools and went home feeling a little unwell. His seat at the prayer-meeting was vacant that evening and ere we met again he had entered the "house not made with hands." The funeral was conducted by Pastor Geo. W. Buckner and Elder J. S. Gash, and besides the grief-stricken family and relatives, almost every seat in the church was filled with mourners for this worthy citizen, this beloved elder, who taught rather by his meek and quiet spirit, his constant devotion and loyalty, and his wise private counsels, than by much speaking in public. In early life he contracted with his God to build a character fit for heaven. Day by day he waited on the Lord and renewed his strength. Year by year he added the Christian graces until he reached a ripe old age, and then with no wasting disease to rob him of physical or mental vigor, he passed from life to life, with scarcely a taste of death. "Too honest to grow rich" here, he laid up his treasures above, and in the "Father's house of many mansions" he awaits the family reunion.

The Reformation

of the XIXth Century

Being the first complete, authentic, adequate history of the beginnings, development and progress of the Disciples of Christ that has ever been published. It stands without a rival, in a class by itself. This work, which has been long expected, has just been issued, and has been hailed with delight by all those who have an intelligent, active interest in our great cause. The chapters devoted to the beginnings and early history of the movement are especially valuable, being written by men who were intimately associated with Campbell and the "fathers," and who were, themselves, actors in those early events and scenes. This history was published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during 1899, but has since been entirely revised, re-written and amplified.

CONTENTS.

Introductory Period.	Chas. Louis Loos.
Period of Organization.	B. B. Tyler.
Turbulent Period.	W. T. Moore.
Transition Period.	G. W. Grafton.
Period of Revival of Home Missions.	Benj. L. Smith.
Period of Foreign Missions.	A. McLean.
Period of Woman's Work.	Lois A. White.
Lessons from Our Past.	J. H. Garrison.

These two great books, the one dealing with our principles and the other with our history, are properly companion books, and should stand side by-side in the library of every one who cares to comprehend "our plea." They should be placed in every home among the Disciples of Christ. There can be no question but that these are the most important volumes in all our distinctive literature, and we believe we are justified in feeling proud that we are the publishers of two such splendid works. Both works were planned and edited by J. H. GARRISON, editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We especially urge every preacher, who has not already done so, to speedily obtain both of these volumes. Again and again have we heard preachers say of The Old Faith Restated, "it has helped me more than any other ten books I possess." The second and later work is equally valuable. Both are large, handsome volumes, of 456 and 514 pages, respectively.

THE GOSPEL CALL.

This book is undoubtedly the most popular song-book in use among our churches at the present time. Its popularity is based on genuine worth. It contains over 400 standard chorals and "popular hymns," and is thus a first-class, "all-around" book, which can be used in the Church, Sunday-school, C. E. Society, Missionary and Revival Meetings, etc. It consists of two parts, which are published separately and combined.

SILVER AND GOLD.

The latest book by Hackleman and Coombs, the authors of the Gospel Call. This book was first issued about two years ago, and has already reached the enormous sale of nearly 200,000 copies! It is a book containing 174 songs—every one "singable." No pieces were put in just to fill up, but thousands of dollars were spent by the publishers in securing the very best songs to be had. Just the book for Revival Meetings, Sunday-schools, etc.
