

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

A. MCGARY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

VOL. 1.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, SEPTEMBER, 1884.

No. 1.

This pamphlet, THE FIRM FOUNDATION, in its contemplated monthly visitations, is respectfully, fraternally and affectionately dedicated to all of that class of brethren, who, believing that the New Testament Scriptures are from God, to man, through His Son Jesus the Christ, and who, regarding this book as an infallible guide through this wilderness of sin to the promised haven of safety beyond, are willing to turn their steps away from all human systems, plans and directions into this one mapped out by the Apostles of our Lord.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION will not attempt to "pipe" the popular airs of the day with pedantic or sophomoric swell, to get "dancers," but will endeavor to sing the "Song of Moses and the Lamb," by the notes of eighteen hundred years ago; notes that unlearned fishermen of Galilee, and one who would not "preach the gospel with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect," would recognize as the true ones.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION knows full well, that it could not pass through the crucible of fastidious literary criticism, unscathed. But avoiding the scales of the classico, it is willing to be weighed in its aims by that eye that "looketh not on the outward appearance, but on the heart." Without promising to confine itself to the nicely poised style of dictum that has been imposed on the age, by the artifice of the wicked Spirit of deception, until there is no safety in weighing words—it goes forth to battle for the truth, ignoring the conventionalists of so-called "polite society," preferring to call things by their right names as did He who "Spake as never man spake."

While THE FIRM FOUNDATION may often assume a stern air, it desires to be understood as "wrestling not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." And if it should sometimes single out individuals and deal with their teaching, it will proceed from a love which is greater for the cause of Christ than for the welfare of any man, and for which it has the example of the Saviour and those He sent to establish His cause. Looking to God for strength, with a determination to cheerfully accept whatever fate may be the end of this, THE FIRM FOUNDATION goes forth.

CAMPBELLISM—WHAT IS IT?

This appellation has been given to the people who have united their efforts, under scriptural designations, for the restoration of primitive Christianity. Doubtless in a very great majority of instances, the application of it to the brethren of Bro. Campbell has been done in a slanderous, reproachful spirit, rather than from a desire to give an appropriate name. Hence, many things taught by our Saviour and His Apostles are indiscriminately called Campbellism, by the sectarian world. But I desire to assure all whose eyes may fall upon this, that I use it with appropriateness, to designate that very large class of my brethren who are practicing, against the protest of their brethren in the minority, things instituted by Bro. Campbell, for which he, nor they, have ever shown a "thus saith the Lord."

In the outset, while I know Bro. Campbell's name needs no eulogy from me, I desire to be clearly understood upon that point. Suffice it to say, that in my opinion, if he has had any equals as an exponent of the doctrines of the New Testament Scriptures, he has had no superiors. But, while I entertain this high regard for Bro. C., my love for, and fealty to, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, leads me to protest against one thing that Bro. C. plead and practiced for which he could not find any authority in that, which he said "was a sufficient rule of faith and practice." I shall pursue the question—"what is Campbellism"—first by a negative style, by showing what is not Campbellism. As we are just going to press, I will be compelled to reduce this article to a much smaller compass than I had intended, or than it deserves; but may continue it at another time. Bro. Campbell taught that faith was the first step towards the Kingdom, or church; and that it "comes by hearing the word of God." It is not Campbellism to accept this teaching, because inspiration says—"without faith it is impossible to please God," and that "faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," that it is "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Bro. C. taught that repentance was the next condition in order, and that it is a sorrow for, and a turning away from sin. It is not Campbellism to accept this, because inspiration says—"except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish;" and as "it is impossible to please God without faith," it is, in the very nature of things, impossible to have repentance before faith! Bro. C. taught that confession "with the mouth" was the next condition to repentance. It is not Campbellism to accept this, because we see in the book of conversions, where it is required, and its order; and Paul said it was part of the "faith we preach" (see Rom. x, 8-9). Paul calls down curses upon man or angel that preaches any other gospel (see Gal. 1-8). Bro. C. taught that baptism "for the remission of sins," was the next condition. It is not Campbellism to accept this, for our Saviour said "except a man be born of water, and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom;" and Peter, a man with "binding authority," said "repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." We have briefly stated, in detail, what Bro. C. taught were the conditions, and their respective order, for entrance into the Church of God. With an open Bible in hand, we find that these premises of his are well taken; that they are as immutable as that "foundation of prophets and Apostles Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." But it is the practise of something taught by Bro. C., a conclusion of his, not fairly deducible from his premises by any parity of reasoning, that I denominate "Campbellism," and it is Campbellism. I refer to his plea—"our plea," for the union into "one body" of all who have been immersed, regardless of their failure to understand the design of baptism, or their having omitted making the good confession before compliance with that ordinance.

In this plea, that good man transcended the authority that is "bound in heaven," and was inconsistent with himself. See what he said about understanding the design of baptism, before the act: "Knowing that the efficacy of this blood is to be communicated to our consciences in the way which God has pleased to appoint, we "stagger not at the promise of God," but flee to the sacred ordinance which brings the blood of Jesus in contact with our consciences. Without knowing and believing this, immersion is as empty as a blasted nut. "The shell is there but the kernel is wanting," Christian Baptist, page 521. This language needs no comment! What did Bro. C. teach was the way God had appointed, the sacred ordinance which brings the blood of Jesus in contact with our consciences? All know! Baptism! Then if he is correct in this teaching, no one who did not approach that "sacred ordinance knowing and believing, that the blood of Jesus was to be communicated to his conscience in the act of baptism," is a fit subject for admission into the one body. Their immersion according to Bro. C. was as empty as a blasted nut! The "kernel" was "wanting!" This is a clear case of suicide! But the old dry bones of this self slaughtered beast, "Our Plea," are hugged to the bosom of many with a fonder embrace than "the living way" of the one who died upon the cross for our sins! To accept Bro. C.'s promises is to accept "the truth that makes free." To accept Bro. C.'s conclusion in "our plea," is to reject that truth, and cling to man. This plea was Campbellism at its birth! It will be Campbellism to its death! We will now show that this plea was doubly killed by its author. In "Campbell on Baptism," pp. 18-19—Bro. C. gives the form of confession in these words: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," and then says: "This confession must be made by every applicant for Christian baptism in order to his being constitutionally builded upon the divine foundation; or, as we usually say, admitted into the Christian Kingdom or Church. No minister, or Church of Jesus Christ, has any divine right or authority to ask for more or accept of less than this, in order to Christian baptism." As before said, Bro. C. had abundant authority from the volume of inspiration, both by example and necessary implication—even outside of Paul's direct statement that he preached "confession with the mouth," for penning what we have just quoted from him. But his plea—"Our Plea," subverts it all! Does not that plea authorize the acceptance of those who have not been thus "constitutionally builded upon the divine foundation?" Further comment would be superfluous. My opinion of Bro. C. as a conscientious and a humble Christian forbids the idea with me, that he ever lived to see these glaring inconsistencies, that all who can afford to take a candid unbiased look, can now see! Brethren, it is exalting Bro. C.'s practices higher than he would have sanctioned and higher than any man's ought to be exalted, to continue this practice one moment longer! See the move in the direction of ecclesiasticism by those thirty-three preachers this spring! That is "Campbellism gone to seed." Bro. McPherson became ashamed of it, and like an honest man withdrew his name. Bro's Stapp and Bonham both told the writer that they would not do it again; but they ought to say so as publicly as the "special notice" was made. Doubtless, many who signed the "special notice" did so innocently and unsuspectingly. Bro. A. Clark wrote a very designing letter to the messenger, when he found that Bro. McP. had withdrawn his name. This letter was to encourage all who might be weakening on the "notice," to stand firm by their action. But such brethren as see their error, should not be gulled by Bro. C. He is tired of it and all that he lacks to make him acknowledge his error is real courage and Christian humility. Campbellism is not a "myth," but a sad reality. A. McG.

A CIRCUMVENTIVE PROCESS OF SALVATION BY FAITH ALONE!

That the advocates of Bro. Campbell's plea—"Our Plea"—have waged a most furious and relentless war against the doctrine by faith alone, is well known by all who have any acquaintance with the history of Bro. Campbell's efforts and those of his brethren from the inception of "Our Plea" to the present time. Yes, this doctrine which has "comforted" so many and lulled them to sleep in a state of fancied security outside of the "one body," has always been met with scoffs and sneers from "Our Plea." Whenever and wherever this doctrine has dared to risk itself to the fortunes of open conflict, there have always been Davids from the ranks of "Our Plea" to sling its life out. The advocates of said plea never saw the day that they would not have spurned the idea of openly ingrafting this doctrine into the plea, and yet, with all of their contemptuous sneers at this doctrine, it is clandestinely wrapped up in its deceptive folds. "Our Plea" offers salvation to certain classes on faith alone! Now for the proof. I grant that this proof must be sought through circuitous routes: but the proposition is susceptible of a most satisfactory elucidation to all who will pursue the inquiry with unbiased minds and open eyes. It is charged against the sectarian world by "Our Plea" that they do not preach the word of God: and I think the charge well grounded. "Faith comes by hearing the word of God." "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Well, I will meet Campbellites upon their own grounds, fight them with their own weapons, and force them into a position that they have refused and fought with a most vigorous opposition! 1st. If sectarians—Methodists, Baptists, or Campbellites, etc.—do not preach the word of God, then their converts cannot have that faith that comes by "hearing the word of God." 2d. If they do not have that faith that comes by hearing the word of God, then all of their subsequent acts are displeasing to God. So, then, their repentance, their confession, and their baptism—even by immersion—are displeasing to God! It is all bogus! This being true—and if it is not, Campbellites are as much responsible for it as anybody else—these sectarian converts are outside of the "Church," the "one body," unless they have entered it without faith! Now, then, this is precisely the attitude that the Campbellites place these people in: and I believe the Bible does too. These pages are open for any man—Methodist, Baptist, or Campbellite—to show that I have misrepresented the teachings of Campbellites or the Bible on this point, if I have done so. Now we will take "Our Plea" and look at that side of it that is presented to these "sectarians" by its advocates when they go out proselyting: They preach either the word of God or Campbellism. These sectarians believe what they preach, have faith by hearing what they preach, and are taken in through the trap-door on faith alone! i. e., that class that are taken in without baptism. Brethren, if this is not a fair statement of the case I would be glad to be corrected. Candid minds will see it, I think. It is the most inconsistent practice under the sun! Brethren, it is outright bribery—a guileful system of conquest for members! It is a palpable rejection of that way that is "bound on earth and in heaven," which says, "preach the Gospel" and baptize those that believe what you preach; which says, "Go teach all nations, baptising them." To teach any part of the nations without following up that teaching with baptism is to substitute the wisdom of this world for the wisdom of God; is to wholly disregard God's conditions and His order of those conditions. It is a most flagrant system of depreciating and dishonoring God! It is Campbellite salvation by faith alone! It is a circumlocutive route to swindle man-made systems out of their numbers to swell the ranks of the most dangerous counterfeit that now threatens the stability and perpetuity of the true Church of God by confusing the most honest class of inquirers that are seeking God, and losing them in the labyrinths of the wisest worldly system!

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

J. W. JACKSON.

While it is generally taught and believed by professed Christians that there is salvation in no other name given under heaven than that of Jesus, it is not so generally understood nor believed that Jesus in His official capacity is the Foundation upon which His Church is built. All of the promises of God are in CHRIST; not in Jesus, but in Him as the Christ, the son of God. The blessings and privileges thus designed for man are bestowed through him officially. These official relations are expressed in this proposition: "Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ the son of the living God." This is the foundation truth or creed of the Church. No body of people can be built together either religiously or politically without a creed or foundation truth. This truth apprehended by faith gives spirit and vitality to each member, and the members thus animated by this vitalizing and unifying principle are built together into one body upon the one foundation. It is important, then, that we understand the full import of this fundamental proposition.

Jesus is the son of God. He was "God manifest in the flesh"; acknowledged by the Father and proven to be the Son of God by His resurrection from the dead. Ro. i, 4. He is also the Christ of prophecy. The words Messiah, Christ and Anointed are respectively Hebrew, Greek, and English, equivalents expressive of official station or dignity. In ancient times prophets, priests and kings were anointed with oil when about to enter upon the functions of their respective offices. Jesus as the Anointed of God unites in Himself personally and officially all three offices. He is Prophet, Priest and King.

God had spoken in ancient times to men by prophets; now He speaks to us by the Prophet. The former were human, and spoke only as moved by the Holy Spirit; Jesus is Divine — "in Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." He is infallible, and from His teachings there is no appeal. He knew the human heart, hence could adapt His teachings to the humblest capacity. He entered the tomb, dwelt in its darkness, and coming back therefrom has taught us lessons full of hope of "the sweet beyond." Priests had been appointed to minister in holy things; but they were fallible, and had to offer for themselves as well as for their fellow-man, and they could not continue in office by reason of death. Jesus, our High Priest, is without sin, and hath an unchangeable priesthood. Full of compassionate tenderness for poor sinful man, having been tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin, He ever liveth to make intercession for us. Jesus, our King, will enact just such laws as are necessary to the well-being of man. He will protect and defend His people, punish His enemies, and finally reward all the faithful. All this is included in the foundation truth of our religion, and more than this. This is the central truth which gives value to every other truth taught in the system.

Having discovered the import of the proposition, we proceed to the teachings of the Scriptures in order to ascertain where, when and how this foundation was first laid.

Some proof, however, is demanded as to the proposition being the foundation. Paul, I Cor. 3, 11, says: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus the Christ." To "lay a foundation," in Paul's language, is to preach Jesus the Christ. He says that he "strived to preach the Gospel not where Christ was named lest I should build upon another man's foundation"; (Ro. 15, 20) and as "a wise master-builder I have laid the foundation and another buildeth thereon." I Cor. 3, 10. This he did when he went to Corinth and reasoned in the Synagogue every Sabbath and "testified to the Jews that Jesus is Christ." Acts 18, 1-5. This was the burden of Apostolic preaching and writing, viz: that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God, and that as such He is the Foundation of His Church. To this agrees the prophecy: "Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone—a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not be confounded." Isa. 28, 16. Peter, addressing Christians, quotes this prophecy and applies it to Jesus. I Pet. 2, 6-7. Also in his address before the Sanhedrim (Acts 4, 11) he declares concerning Jesus of Nazareth, "this is the Stone which you builders rejected which is become the head of the corner." If further confirmation of this point is necessary we turn to Mat. 16, 14-20. Jesus asks: "Who do men say that I the son of man am?" * * * * "But Simon Peter answered and said: Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him: Blessed art thou, Simon, son of Jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father, which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." The foundation, then, is Jesus, the Christ, the Son of God; and it was to be a sure foundation—one that could not be moved or conquered by the powers of the under world. Why men should here say that the gates of Hades should not prevail against the Church I cannot conceive, unless it be to prove a succession of Churches from Apostolic days to the present. Every item of faith and hope for an eternal life is centered in the Christ, hence to be a sure foundation He must be tried, and must prevail over the gates of Hades. This He did, and now is glorified in heaven.

Where was this foundation first laid? In Zion, the city of Jerusalem. Isa. 28, 16; Mat. 5, 35; Ps. 48, 2. Jerusalem was to be the place from whence the Word of the Lord should proceed. Isa. 2, 3. Repentance and remission of sins was to be preached among all nations in the name of Christ, beginning at Jerusalem. Lu. 24, 47. This is sufficient as to the place of beginning. It excludes all those preachers who go back to Ur of the Chaldees or to Canaan and preach the covenant of circumcision as the foundation of the Church. Nor can our Baptist friends find any consolation in these Scriptures; for there is no proof that John the Baptist ever was in Jerusalem; and if he was, he could not have preached that of which he was ignorant—the Gospel of Christ. Christ in his lifetime was in Jerusalem, but instead of proclaiming His Messiahship "He charged His disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ." Mat. 16, 20. This brings us to the question, When was this foundation laid in Jerusalem? It could not have been during His earthly mission, for during this period He was officially inferior and subject to the Father. "Though He were a son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered, and being made PERFECT, He became the Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey Him." Heb. 5, 8, 9. Again Jesus says: "I can of mine own self do nothing"; "for I came down from heaven not to do my own will, but the will of Him that sent me"; "I am come in my Father's name"; "the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works I do bear witness of me that the Father hath sent me." A great many other Scriptures can be cited to show that Jesus in taking upon Himself the form of man became a subject of the government under which He was born; that He lived and died in obedience to the will of God. Paul teaches us that He "made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. 2, 7-11. Why was He exalted? Because of the life of humiliation and the works He had finished. When was authority given to Him? Not until His exaltation to the right hand of God. Again, it was necessary for Him to be made like unto His brethren that He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. Heb. 2, 17. Hence He "was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin, and can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way. Jesus being the High Priest of our confession, was MADE High Priest by the oath of God. Heb. 7, 21. Being Priest, it was necessary that He have something to offer. Heb. 8, 3. On earth He could not be a priest (Heb. 8, 4) because the law under which He lived, and to which He was obedient, had a divinely appointed priesthood. But God having abolished that law in the death of Christ, changed the order of priesthood from the human to the divine — from the transient to the unchanging. Jesus as "the lamb of God" suffered without the camp (Heb. 13, 12); that is, on this earth. As High Priest he entered into the true holy place, heaven itself, by His own blood, and offered Himself without spot to God. AFTER He had made the offering "He sat down at the right hand of God." Heb. 10, 12. He was not made the Christ until after His resurrection and ascension. So Peter also declares in his sermon recorded. Acts, 2d chap. In preaching to the multitude who had assembled on account of the wonderful occurrences of that day, he first explains that which they saw and heard as the fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel; hence what he spoke was "by the Holy Spirit." He then presents Jesus, His death and resurrection, attested by the prophecy of David and the testimony of the Apostles, and therefore says he, "let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ." Acts 2, 36. This is the first announcement of this fact to the world. His Messiahship is for the benefit of man; hence as "Lord of all" He sends the "promise of the Father," the Holy Spirit, to announce on earth His glorification in heaven. This He does through the Apostles, and here begins on earth the administration of the Kingdom of Heaven, of which Jesus is the King.

We have already seen that "to lay a foundation" is to preach Jesus the Christ. Hence, in Jerusalem, on the Pentecost after the death of Jesus, in the year 33 A. D., God by the Holy Spirit first preached this fact, and thus laid a firm foundation upon which to build the Church of Christ. Another idea, however, is connected with this preaching. The developments of the purpose of God were gradual and progressive, and I may say, also, that the things done and suffered on earth by Jesus were preparatory and necessary to His perfection officially. In nature and character He was already perfect. Thus it was with the Apostles. Jesus had chosen them to be with him, and through three and a half years He taught and prepared them for the great work to be entrusted to them; so that when assembled together in Jerusalem, in obedience to His command, they were spiritually right—their sins forgiven; but officially imperfect. True, Jesus had commanded them to preach the Gospel to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, but He told them to tarry in the city till endued with power from on high. Lu. 24, 49. When they received this power it fully qualified them or fitted them to be foundation stones in the Temple of God. They as ambassadors for Christ proclaim His sovereignty and make known His laws.

To return, however, to Peter's announcement that "God had made Jesus both Lord and Christ." When the multitude heard this they cried out: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter's reply to this question should be seriously considered: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Jesus had been proclaimed "both Lord and Christ," and upon the testimony produced men believed it; hence the question and answer. Two things are commanded; the reason for doing them is found in the two promises immediately connected with them, and the source of both commands and promises, is the authority of Jesus Christ. This answer is doubly authoritative: It is given by Peter, who was specially selected to open the administration of Christ's government on earth to both Jews and Gentiles. Mat. 16, 19; Acts 15, 7. It is the first command ever given on earth by the authority of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. This cannot be denied by anyone familiar with the New Testament, and this one fact alone should forever settle the questions of the time and place of the beginning of the Church of Christ.

The force of the command, however, is destroyed by the false interpretation of the phrase, "for the remission of sins." Remember Eve! She was deceived by a false interpretation of God's words. How appropriate to these interpreters the words of the old prophet addressed to Israel: "Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture, saith the Lord. I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied. But if they had stood in my counsel and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way and from the evil of their doings." Jer. 2-3.

"Then they that gladly received His word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about 3000 souls." Acts 2, 41.

Were they built upon the one foundation? They were. How? By faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins.

A few thoughts more, and for the present I must leave the subject with you. By your faith in Christ and obedience to His authority you are built upon the foundation Jesus the Christ. The confession of your faith in Him imposes upon you the obligation to accept HIS teachings, and not that of man; you must obey HIS commands, and not the rules or commands of any man or set of men, however wise or good they may be. You must be always abounding in the work of the Lord, and, finally, "whatsoever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks unto God and the Father by Him." In return you will have the happy assurance that your labor is not in vain; that His grace will be sufficient for you in every trial, every sorrow. Your hope, having a solid basis of faith in Christ, will grow brighter and stronger as you near the shores of the "Beautiful Land." And when the summons comes to leave these scenes of trouble, sin and sorrow, death will have no sting, but be to you the portal to that rest that remaineth for the people of God.

THE GOOD CONFESSION.

At the request of the editors of the "Firm Foundation." I will offer a few thoughts on the caption of this paper.

This is a very important subject. Its importance consists not only in the subject matter of the confession, but in its necessity and its proper place in the plan of salvation. If it is a necessary condition, it must be demanded! If it is not necessary it should not be demanded, and our practice should be modified! Again—if it is necessary, it certainly has its proper place in the order of the conditions of pardon. If we change the order of these conditions, our practice is unscriptural and subversive of the truth. Therefore, it is necessary that the subject should be carefully examined. The commands of God must be obeyed. No one can obey a command unless it be comprehended. When God's commands are obeyed, the obedient receives and enjoys the blessing contingent upon such obedience. The necessity of obeying God need not be presented. The necessity of understanding a command in order to obey it will be briefly noticed. I have frequently seen it stated that God does not withhold his blessings because we do not understand his commands—the commands being obeyed, the blessings will follow whether we understand them or not. I do not believe that God ever commanded man to do anything, without the necessary implication that he could and should understand Him. How can any one obey unless the command is understood? Obedience evidently implies receiving, believing, understanding and doing.

Now, we all are agreed that the great truth to be believed is that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. I presume it is also agreed that this is to be confessed by the penitent believer with the mouth. The necessity, however, as a prerequisite to the remission of past sins is denied by some. The incontrovertible position is here referred to so often taken by our best writers and students of the Bible. "Where salvation is promised upon a compliance with a condition or conditions, while it may depend on more, it cannot depend on less." We are said to believe into Christ. Would it be correct to deduce from this statement the theory of salvation by faith alone? In the eleventh chapter of Acts, 18th verse, the Apostles state—"Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto (eis) life." From this we could as reasonably deduce a theory of salvation by repentance alone. In Rom. 10-10, Paul says—"With the mouth confession is made unto (eis) salvation." Here is another theory then of salvation by the confession alone. Again Paul teaches that we are baptized into Christ, Rom. 6-3, Gal. 3-27; and Peter that we are saved by baptism. 1 Peter 3-21.

Now, my dear reader, will you with your puny hand strike from, or add to these conditions? But I am gravely told that the confession was not demanded by primitive teachers and that there is no evidence of it in Acts of Apostles. While I might not be able to prove to the satisfaction of all, from the Acts of Apostles, that it was demanded, will you not permit me to prove it from another standpoint of equal authority? Paul by inspiration says—"Confession is made unto (eis) salvation." Do you believe that? Paul being true, it follows that the confession is a necessary condition in order to salvation; and those who were saved under the preaching of these primitive ambassadors, made the confession, for it was a part of the word of faith everywhere preached. Rom. 10-8.

Fellow travelers to the tomb—a less number of conditions than those named, will not do. If so you can confidently espouse the doctrine of faith alone as a safe anchor to the soul! I learn that recently the following question was submitted in the query box at the State meeting—"Is confession with the mouth a necessary pre-requisite to scriptural baptism." Our distinguished Bro. McGarvey, noted for his great devotion to the cause of truth, remarked that—"the person who asked that question, might just as well have asked, is baptism necessary." Dear reader, that answer, although indirect, covered the issue. If it was correct, then in the very nature of things, none are baptised scripturally without it. But we will next notice—"by whom is it to be made?" Evidently by the penitent believer. Faith in God leads one to turn away from his sins, and the penitent believer confesses from or with all the heart, the Lord Jesus, and is thus prepared to pass into the building by the transitional act of baptism.

The Eunuch made this confession, Act^s 8th. While this may be spurious, the statement is nevertheless true. This interpolation (if it be one) was known as early as the year 170. The interpolator not only inserts the customs of the age, but it coincides with Paul's teaching in Rom. 10-8. Then if my position is correct, the confession must be made with the mouth, by the penitent believer, that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God; and then be baptized by the authority of Christ into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Now, suppose a Baptist should present himself for the purpose of taking his stand with us on the one foundation. He has never made the confession. Then does it not follow that he did not, when he was made a Baptist, receive the seed into a good and understanding heart? for he that receives the seed into the good ground, is he that heareth the word and understandeth it. I have seen some of our brethren take the confession from a Baptist and not baptize him! This is reversing Heaven's order, and is therefore a perversion of the truth. Notwithstanding this, an aged brother has recently subscribed his name to the statement that to baptize such an one "would be a grievous sin." Another would receive such an one without taking the confession at all. This is leaving out a condition, and therefore is as great a perversion of the truth as to change the order of the conditions. But says the objector "his baptism was the result of faith in Christ." But how about his neglect to make the confession? But "he was baptized to obey God, and therefore honored God in his appointments." Now I am impressed with the truth that we honor God in his appointment—not out of them. God appointed faith, repentance, confession "with the mouth," and baptism for the remission of sins, as His law of induction into the Kingdom, the Church, the "one body." If there is any other way of coming into this divine relationship with the Heavenly Father, than this one in all its details, respecting both condition and order of condition, then we may please God by desecrating the appointments of His Son!

It is His appointment that the unbeliever must believe, must repent, must confess him with the mouth, must be baptized in his name for the remission of sins. Remember that it is God's appointment that baptism is for the penitent believer, who has confessed his Son with the mouth. It is no appointment for God to be baptized before confession, or without it. This subversive work comes from some unholy quarter. "Let God be true, but every man a liar."

JOHN S. DURST.

BRO. BURNETT FOR PLUNGING ANYHOW, DESIGN OR NO DESIGN.

1. We do not understand an act to be valid simply because the formula is used. There is a preparation of heart necessary.

2. Ignorance of the design of an act does not invalidate the act, else Abraham's journey out of his own land would have been a failure. He went out, "not knowing whither he went." If we hire a man to build a house, and he builds it, the act is performed, whether the builder knows the design of the building or not.

3. Christ never authorized the baptism of a saved person, and no saved person was ever baptised. Some persons are baptized who think they are saved, but their think-so is only a fancy, and they receive the results of baptism despite their fancy.

4. The kingdom of Christ was never in the Baptist Church, but many Baptists are in the kingdom of Christ. All persons who have been born of water and the Spirit are in the kingdom, though they may be illegally shut up in some party pen. We call upon them to come out of their party inclosure, and be one with all baptized believers.—Christian Messenger.

Bro. Burnett has in these answers followed the old stereotyped form. He fails to tell what that preparation of the heart is. I presume he would be quite latitudinous, though, were he to explain. While Bro. B. does not employ the mourner's bench process in preparing the hearts of his converts, he virtually admits it to be one means, and a good one, too, in preparing hearts for Christ, when he accepts that portion that are ducked. He is ready with eager hands to shake them into Christ; it matters not with him what they were taught, just so they take water. So, like the old negro's coon trap, he "ketches 'em a comin' and a gwine." Again, Bro. B. says that "ignorance of the design of an act does not invalidate the act, else Abraham's journey out of his own land would have been a failure." Now, for a man who enjoys the reputation that Bro. B. does as a logician to bring up this case as an illustration to prove that it is not necessary to understand the design of baptism, shows how utterly blind one may become to real issues in questions. We will lay the cases down and look at them side by side for the benefit of our blinded Brother, indulging the hope that he may never again display such blindness. Did God tell Abraham to go? and what for? Does God command persons to be baptised, and tell them what for? If God had told Abraham what his journey was for, then Abraham would have known, unless some enemy of God should have interfered with that faithful man and told him that he would gain that end without taking the journey. Now, if this had been the case, and Abraham had believed the enemy instead of God, then Bro. B. might bring up his case as a fair illustration of those who listen to the enemies of God as to the design of baptism. But "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness." Of course, then, if he had not believed God, it would have been accounted to him for unrighteousness. Who will deny it? Well, this is just the thing those have done who have believed the enemies of God instead of God with reference to the design of baptism. Paul asks: "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness?" Bro. B. would say, plenty of it, Bro. Paul, if they will come through water! And if you do not cease to talk this way, Bro. Paul, we Campbellites will class you with the "hobbyists." You see, brethren, the trouble with Bro. B. class is, that when they strike this question they have water on the brain! Yes, they verily believe that water can wash away unbelief, or infidelity! If they could invent some way to entice Mr. Ingersoll into the water, what a shining light they would have for "Our Plea"! It is true Mr. Ingersoll does not believe that Jesus is the son of God—the Christ; but why should that exclude him? That proposition is surely much more difficult to believe than that baptism is for the remission of sins! God has affirmed both, and for a man to disbelieve either one is to disbelieve God! For my part, if I were to find God saying anything that I did not believe, it would, in the very nature of things, be this proposition, that Jesus Christ was His son! This was the hardest thing in the book for me, and I never could have believed the rest if I had not first believed this. Remember, brethren, it is not the voice of inspiration that says "ignorance of the design of an act does not invalidate the act"; but it is the voice of poor fallible man, and he blinded, too, by the foibles and prejudices of the flesh. Again, it is a clear dodge of real issues to say that we do not know all the blessings that flow through baptism, and that if ignorance is fatal in one particular, it is in all others. The real issue has to do with revealed truth. God has revealed what baptism is for, so far as He wanted us to know. He has clearly stated that it is "for the remission of sins." For a man to withhold his assent to it is to magnify man's word above God's—to disbelieve God! To immerse such a person into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit is to perpetrate the grandest farce under the heavens, and is a prostitution of an ordinance of God to the very lowest and basest purposes of the spirit of the Anti-Christ! The man who would thus baptize such a person would grossly insult God; and the man who would give countenance to such an act by accepting it as the "one baptism" of God's appointment, is a rebel against the Son of God none the less for his conscientiousness! He is virtually lending his influence to the subversion of the way that the Apostles "bound" on earth, and Christ bound in heaven! Then, instead of Bro. B. putting his word forward for so much, he should find his readers some place where God has said that a man may believe a part of His Word and deny another part; and in this frame of mind "honor" Him in baptism. Who believes Bro. B. can do this! His house-building illustration is just as wide of the mark as anything else he has said. He is right in saying a carpenter might build a house and not know the design of the building; but, if Bro. B. were to tell his carpenter what the design was, and some other man should dispute this to the carpenter and give some other design, and the carpenter should believe the other man, then he would be the other man's convert. Now, what is there in this to prove that a man should not believe God before baptism? He says Christ never authorized the baptism of a saved person! He might have added with perfect safety that Christ never authorized the baptism of an unbelieving or untaught person; but this might not have answered his purpose so well. Bro. B. says "some persons are baptized who think they are saved, but their think-so is only a fancy, and they receive the results of baptism despite their fancy." Yes, they receive the natural results of such a baptism, which is a good wetting; but it is highly fanciful in Bro. B. to think that they receive remission of sins; it is only his think-so, nothing more, that such persons have to rely on! Again, he says: "The Kingdom of Christ was never in the Baptist Church, but many Baptists are in the Kingdom of Christ." Yes, many Baptists have heard the truth and obeyed it, despite the palliating inconsistencies of "Our Plea," and have thus become citizens of the Kingdom of Christ. Twelve up at Ephesus heard Bro. Paul, who was such a "hobbyist" as to contend for the "one baptism," and teach that sins were remitted, when it was obeyed from the heart; so these Baptists obeyed from the heart, and entered the kingdom. I wonder if Bro. B. will console his Baptist brethren by admitting that that good man John the Baptist was in the Kingdom of Christ! Come, now, Bro. B., be charitable. He says all persons who have been born of water and the Spirit are in the kingdom. Now, we will agree with the brother here, if he means the Holy Spirit; but if he means any other Spirit, we dissent, though such an one were washed in an ocean! In conclusion, I wonder why Bro. B. will try to satisfy his readers, and dismount "hobby riders" with the power of his word! Why not give us something that "liveth and abideth forever" on this question? Perhaps the good brother has nothing higher to give than his word, or Bro. Campbell's! If this is the case, I can account for his reticence when called on for proof. He is afraid, if he tries to strengthen his word by Bro. C.'s, he will put himself in a shape to pass through Dr. Price's "Campbellite Sifter." It is well enough, Bro. B., to be a little careful just here, or Dr. P. might give us a damaging sequel to "Campbellism Sifted," that might hurt the sale of your book! In conclusion, I would like to know if the great and learned men who are wedded to the watery idol of sectarianism are determined to offer us nothing more authoritative than their bare word for its validity. Do they think that and the cry of "hobby" will deter conscientious brethren from advocating the truth, God's word? Brethren, let me say to you, one and all, as a brother in the dearest cause that can possibly cement heart to heart: "Come out in a fair and honest proposition, affirming what you teach on this question, for it is not what we 'hobbyists' teach, but what you teach, that raises the issue. We 'hobbyists' are ready to weigh the question in the light of eternal truth, and abide the consequences. Until you do this we must consider you unfair and wanting in courage. Let's have the truth before the people, and it will bless man and honor God—no Popery in any degree; much less by thereby three! Yes, weigh this question by God's word. The truth has nothing to fear."

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again;
The eternal years of God are her's;
But Error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshippers."

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

A GOOD MEETING.

We have just heard that Bro., Hansbrough, who has been preaching this summer in Virginia and the two Carolinas, but whose home is Texas, has just closed a meeting at Mocksville, N. C., where he had twenty-six additions. If these converts did not "obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered" by the Apostles, we are sure it was not because they did not have an opportunity to learn it under this old brother's preaching. Bro. H. preaches what Paul told Timothy to preach, without addition or subtraction. He has neither part nor lot with the modern mixtures of popular theology, but wields the old Jerusalem blade with telling effect. A majority of the brethren in the vicinity of Austin are too slacktisted to appreciate Bro. H.'s preaching. We are truly rejoiced to know that he has found a place where they will receive the word with gladness. Even Bro. H.'s preaching brethren here, or most of them, while they admit that he preaches the word, try to but him to death because he will not fall into line with them in their sugar-coating plans. Bro. H., however, is not the only old soldier, be it said to the dishonor of professing Christians, who is jeered and scoffed at because they will not adulterate the word of God to please popular clamor. The Austin Church, knowing well the defenseless position they have been led into by the modern pastor mania and rule, have adopted the plan of hedging off all such soldiers, old or young, as are guilty of using the "two-edged sword" very dextrously. When the Sword of the Spirit is freely used it divides their soul and spirit, joints and marrow, and discovers the thoughts and intents of their hearts. Who blames them for shunning it? They have heaped unto themselves teachers, having itching ears. Yes, they have heaped up one hundred dollars worth of "ear tickling" per month! While it is sad, sad indeed, to see a large, wealthy Church, in which are many ardently pursuing the blinded paths of outright apostasy, in the vain belief that they are traversing "the straight and narrow way," yet it is but a verification of the warning words of the Apostle Paul eighteen hundred years ago, when he told that the day would come when they would depart from the limits of the "perfect law that thoroughly furnishes unto all good works"; that they would not "endure sound doctrine." Yes, brethren, all of the Apostles have pointed with the prophetic finger to just such times, just such brethren, and just such things as the Austin Church, and, I dare say, as a majority of the Churches, are doing to-day! Oh! that these brethren would halt in their rapid flight to destruction! That they would ponder the words uttered to a Church not half so worldly, through apocalyptic warning, and, doubling their awful import, take them home to themselves: "Because thou sayest I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich: and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that thy nakedness do not appear: and anoint thine eyes with eye salve, that thou mayest see. As many as I love I rebuke and chasten: be zealous, therefore, and repent."

Brethren, let me prevail on you to check up in your mad career. "Beware of false teachers who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are raving wolves." Compare the inordinate greed of these "wolves" with that grand old Apostle who was willing "to spend and be spent" for his brethren in Christ. He who said, "I covet no man's silver, or gold, or apparel: yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me." How unlike the modern pastor! He wants all the silver, and gold, and "gay clothing" he can get! They will take two thousand dollars per year: and if they can't get one hundred dollars per month they will "resign"! How far they are from ministering to their necessities, and the necessities of those with them, with their own "tender" hands, while they preach! Their rule is "no pay no preach"! Brethren of Austin and elsewhere, take your one hundred dollars per month, or your two thousand per year, and lift loads of sorrow from the hearts of the poor widows and orphans of your city—loads fastened there by the pressing hand of poverty. Gladden the hearts of ragged boys and girls that are hourly passing up and down your streets, and thereby disarm scoffing infidels of their most hurtful thrusts at the real cause of Christ. Send away your time-serving, place-hunting, God-dishonoring "modern pastors," who are loitering around the "fold" yawning for the fleece! Yes, raise such an alarm against them as will resound throughout the realms of Christendom and echo with such a terrible voice of determination as will clothe them in sackcloth and ashes, or drive them to their "own place."

It is high time that all who are on the Lord's side should wake up. The battle must be carried into the once consecrated precincts of the Church. "Buckle on the whole armor of God," true soldiers! There is no time for parly-ing: the day is now far spent! But we must retrieve the lost fortunes of the Church or lose that crown of righteousness "which is promised to those who fight the good fight" to the end.

The present popular system is a failure, because there is no God nor Christ in it. It is all of man. Christ's Church must begin to "edify itself in love." It must begin the practice of "pure and undefiled religion before God the Father." To do this, the system of the "modern pastor" must be relegated to the bats and owls with all its worldly trumpery. These things have well nigh frozen out all brotherly love! Call in the old pioneer preachers, who have been pushed aside to give place to gay college striplings who have been taught preaching as a trade, and let these old soldiers reorganize the Churches after God's plan. Ah! methinks I hear the secularized Sunday Christian say, oh! these old fogies can't draw well! Cheer up blessed old soldiers of the cross! the time is not long that you will have to bear these insults! Remember, that "those who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." The time will come when false brethren will find that a farce in this life will meet its reward here! Verily they have their reward. But there is a day coming when those who have suffered persecution here for the truth will get that reward of the faithful that will grow brighter and brighter as the cycles of eternity roll on! Who would exchange the bright and never ending glory of that crown which awaits the faithful old soldiers of the cross for the waning, wasting, God-denying, soul-blackening tiara that the God of this world has decked the brow of the "modern pastor" with? Old soldiers! and young ones! God grant that your nerves may be strengthened for the apparently unequal conflict against sin on the outside, and worse than all, against the devices of false brethren.

BRO. POE BRANDING WITH THE CAMPBELLITE IRON.

Bro. J. T. Poe, editor of the Texas Department of the Gospel Advocate, says: "Bro. A. McGary was 'at the State Meeting. He did not ride a donkey, as some suggested, but he rode his hobby. He thinks a great deal of the old horse, and is going to spend much money to take care of him." Bro. Poe, like the rest of his Campbellite brethren, has a branding-iron with the word "hobby." Whenever they find anything that is adverse to the deductions of Bro. A. Campbell, they stick this iron to it. They seem to think that no one will ever examine anything, after finding their brand "hobby" on it, but will respect the brand, under all circumstances. If contending that a person should believe in Christ and his Apostles before baptism, is a "hobby," then I was riding a hobby over at Bryan. Bro. Poe's brand shall not deter me from such hobby riding either.

It is astonishing how adroitly these brethren can elude detection in their sophistical dodges of the real issues in this baptismal question, when they raise the false alarm of "hobby." I am sure Bro. Poe did not mean to intimate that I could not find a "donkey" at Bryan! This newsy Bro. informs his readers that I am going to "spend much money" to take care of my "old horse." Well, now, this will be a remarkable case in the eyes of some brethren. The usual way, nowadays, is to have all expenses and remuneration secured before they will even saddle up their "horses." Who could expect me to financier a "hobby horse" through, clear of expense, while so many brethren of brisk business tact are failing to clear expenses on their pedigreed "horses"? Now, if I were Bro. Poe, I would swap my "horse" off; not that he costs Bro. P. "much money to take care of him"—for I believe the "old horse" balks when the load gets too heavy—but I would swap him because he will not carry him out of Babylon. Bro. P. first mounted him on Methodist street, in the city of Babylon. It took him some time to rein him out of this street, where he found water too scarce; but at length, he spurred him into Baptist street, where there was plenty of water. Baptist street appeared too narrow for Bro. P. to spread himself in, so he commenced trying to coax his "old horse" into some other. It was hard to do, but being a strong believer in final perseverance he ultimately succeeded in riding into the most imposing street in the ill fated city—Campbell street! Water was plentiful here, and Bro. P. met with such a hearty hand shaking that he was deluded into the idea that he had reached Jerusalem. So Bro. P.'s "old horse," has been blundering up and down this street with him ever since. Bro. P. has caught occasional glimpses of the road to Jerusalem, but every time he tries to rein his "old horse" into this road he balks, and when pressed he turns somersaults so rapidly that Bro. P. gets water on the brain, and loses sight of the road. Swap him off, Bro P., for a "donkey" or a "hobby horse" even, if he is branded all over by the Campbellite joint stock company. Come out of Babylon, Bro. P.: swap off your old horse, or dismount—anything to get out and escape her "sins and plagues." Flee to the Firm Foundation of Apostles and Prophets Jesus Christ himself being the chief-corner stone: "then you will not be forced to admit that "we practice some things that are not taught in the Bible, but the brethren are not ready for the change"! The man is certainly pur-blind who cannot see that the day is fast approaching, Bro. P., when you, and all of that class of brethren who hold with you, will have to confess that they, you, have greatly erred in upholding the practice of receiving sectarian converts into fellowship, by your illegitimate process, or meet the issue fairly and squarely like courageous and conscientious men, or under the frowning indignation of the fearless defenders of an outraged cause, you will have to skulk away under the shadow of Isaac Erutt's wing of slack-twisted, expediential free-booters, and thereby acknowledge that you have not the courage to hold up to the gaze of a secularized and popularized church the blessed religion with all of its details, inaugurated by unlearned fishermen. Oh, pride, how you do overshadow judgment and truth by the "lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life"! Being lifted up with pride, "many fall into the condemnation of the devil." Did such possess that humility enjoined by God's word, they would be content to consecrate their lives to the defense of a languishing, bleeding cause, and arm themselves with a mind to "suffer shame and reproach for the name of Christ, esteeming it greater riches than the treasures of the world." If you will not brand it as a "hobby," I will insist again that you, who are recognizing the inconsistent, clap-trap process of filling up the Church with unconverted material from the sects and other quarters, will cease to do so, and "contend for the faith once delivered to the saints."

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

A. MCGARY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

VOL. I.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, OCTOBER, 1884.

No. 2.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

J. W. JACKSON.

In a former article it was shown that the foundation upon which Christians are built is, "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God." Paul laid this foundation in Corinth when "he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath and persuaded the Jews and Greeks * * * and testified to the Jews that Jesus is Christ." (Acts, 18: 4, 5.) As a wise master builder he had laid a solid foundation, but another in building thereon had brought in bad material, and this would result: First, in the loss of reward to the preacher. Second, in the loss of the material. Third, in the defilement of the Church. Fourth, in the destruction of the false teacher, and the possible salvation of the ignorant though honest one.

"They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." (Dan., 12: 3.) Paul was wise, and his wisdom was not "in enticing words of man's wisdom." Nor did he walk in craftiness nor handle the word of God deceitfully, but declared unto them the testimony of God which had been taught him by revelation, speaking in words taught by the Holy Spirit, and thus by manifestation of the truth he fulfilled his ministry and reached the consciences of his hearers, and the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ shines into their hearts, carrying with it peace, joy, love and hope.

False teachers had crept into the Church (2 Cor., 11: 13), men claiming to be apostles of Christ, but were messengers of Satan. Through their eloquence and wisdom of words bad material had been brought into the Church, and contention, strife and carnality was the result. Two classes of false teachers are evidently alluded to in the Epistle to Corinthians; one hypocritical, inwardly ravening wolves, though wearing the garb of Apostles; the other ignorant, though honest, zealous and eloquent. The effect was the same, then and now; bad material is brought into the Church. "If the blind lead the blind both will fall into the ditch." "Jewish fables and commandments of men turn away from the truth." (Titus, 1: 14.)

How important that the preacher should be right! When he realizes that the salvation of men depends upon what he preaches, and that an anathema is pronounced against man or angel for preaching anything different from the Gospel of Christ, he should adhere closely and literally to the truth as it is in Jesus. "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things." Hold fast to the faithful word, for by so doing you will save yourself and them that hear you. (1 Tim., 4: 16.) It is evident from the reasoning of Paul that the quality of the material depends largely upon the preacher. It is what he preaches that moulds the material into shape, and he should see that none but "lively stones," "partakers of the divine nature," are built upon the divine foundation. He must take heed how he builds; he should preach that which Paul preached, the Gospel of Christ. This is the Sword of the Spirit by which preachers shape the material into proper form for the building.

In preaching the Gospel, it is necessary to preach facts. This constitutes the strength and solidity of Christianity. It is built upon a golden chain of facts, logically demonstrating the truth of the proposition, "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God."

"The meaning of a fact is the doctrine of scripture;" hence, in preaching facts, their meaning must be made manifest, and the hearer must understand the word. A fact, believed, has no power to move man to action, unless he is directly related to that fact; hence he must not only believe the fact, but also understand his relation to it. Herein lies the power of the Gospel; it is a motive power in the believer, not because of the certainty of the facts, but because he understands his relationship to those facts. To illustrate: Paul preached the Gospel to the Corinthians. (1 Cor., xv, 1-4.) "I delivered unto you, first of all, how that Jesus died." What effect would such an announcement have upon a heathen audience? They would wish to know why He died, and the reason or meaning is given, "for our sins;" "and we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead, and that He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again." From His death for sin, Paul proceeded to prove that "Jesus is Christ." Why preach this fact? Why proclaim him "both Lord and Christ?" Is there no meaning in this sublime fact? Can we render obedience to authority without understanding who has all authority, and how we must submit to it?

All the exceeding great and precious promises are centred in Christ; all authority is His, and God has determined that every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that Christ is LORD, to the glory of God the Father. (Phil., ii, 10, 11.)

Remission of sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit, the hope of immortality, are promises so immediately linked to the facts of the Gospel that the one cannot be preached without the other. The "great salvation" brought to man by our Savior, and of which he first began to speak, is made sure to us by the Apostles, who teach us how the salvation was procured for us, and how it may be secured by us. (Heb., ii, 1-4.)

Faith is a condition necessary to salvation, because by it man's heart is brought into a proper state of love and submission to the will of God. Here, however, our modern builders mystify the people's minds by their metaphysical jargon about "kinds of faith," just so much theological nonsense, that contributes more to the upbuilding of infidelity than anything ever said or written by Thomas Paine or R. G. Ingersoll. Our brethren have insisted upon a personal faith; that is, faith in a person, faith in Jesus the Christ, the Son of God. While this is correct, some err in confining this faith simply to what Jesus is, personally and officially. Faith must include the promises made in Christ. These exceeding great and precious promises are given (as motives), that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. (2 Pet., i, 3, 4.) God has set before us a hope, and has made it certain by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, and relying upon God's promise, we have fled for refuge to Christ to lay hold upon the hope thus set before us (Heb., 6: 17, 18), of which hope we heard in the word of the truth of the Gospel. (Col., 1: 5.) Faith in God always embraced the promises, "for he that cometh to God must believe that He is and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." (Heb., 11: 6.) Faith, then, is the fundamental element in the Gospel by which God purifies the heart. (Act., 15: 9.) It apprehends the facts of the Gospel and the promises connected with them.

"Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Ro., 10: 17.) Neither pray I for these alone but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." (Jo., 17: 20.) Hence, faith comes through the testimony of God, declared by apostles. (1 Cor., 2: 1; Jo., 20: 30, 31.)

Note this, ye preachers, who talk about God giving faith direct, and teach your "seekers" to pray for faith. If it were possible for them to obtain faith through any other channel than "the word of God," it would not be a saving faith, and would exclude them from all interest in the Savior's prayer. The testimony given by the Father is sufficient to produce all the faith He requires of us, and he who rejects this testimony is an infidel. (1 Jo., 5: 9, 10.) When men pray to God "to send down convicting and converting power" do they not reject God's word? When they declare the word of God "a dead letter" and pray for God's spirit to quicken it and apply it, etc., are they not unbelievers? "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." (Jo., 6: 63.)

Men who preach a perverted Gospel do not convert men to Christ. "Faith comes by hearing," hence if a perversion of the Gospel is preached, the result will be a perverted faith. Faith in the Gospel of Christ purifies the heart, and if faith in a perversion of the Gospel produces the same effect, let us bid sectarianism God speed. Why contend for a pure, primitive Gospel if the perverted systems preached by men will save men? Salvation from sin is what all men desire, what they hope for, and if the traditions of the fathers and the commandments of men will bring us to that salvation let us cease our debates and discussions and all join together in one grand onslaught upon Satan. But such faith, dear friends, is not the faith of the Gospel. Our Savior teaches that the doctrines and commandments of men make God's word of no effect, and is vain worship. (Mat. 15: 1-9.) God has no pleasure in service that is "taught by the precept of men" (Isa. 29: 13-19), and Paul preached the Gospel in its simplicity and purity to the Corinthians that their faith should not stand in the wisdom of men but in the power of God. (1 Cor., 2, 5.) In the Gospel as preached in its purity we have facts, something done for man, and promises something to be received and enjoyed by them. Between these two stands obedience, or the means of enjoyment. It is generally taught that there are three commands given in the Gospel, viz: first, believe; second, repent; third, be baptized, all of which must be obeyed in order to the enjoyment of the promises. Strictly speaking, obedience to the authority of Christ is baptism. Faith and repentance prepare the heart of man so that he may obey from the heart the form of doctrine delivered to him. (Ro., 6: 17.) In the discussion of these conditions, it is necessary to examine each one, and trace the effect of each in the successive steps taken by the sinner in coming to God. I say necessary, because the traditions of men as held and and taught by sectarianism, have cast a veil over the minds of the people which blinds them to the true honor and glory of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This veil of creedism must be removed, and then they will turn to God. Faith in Christ, then, is taught as the fundamental principle of the Gospel. To the subject it is the principle of action, the basis upon which hope is predicated and the cause of every subsequent step taken in the divine life. Many, in order to uphold a theological system, hold to a theory of repentance before faith, and discard as heterodox every man that denies this. They predicate their theory on the order in which these two items are mentioned in certain passages, and overlook the natural order in which these acts of the mind must succeed each other. It is faith that purifies the heart; these theological doctors, however, would make the heart pure first, and then have it exercise "saving faith."

"The proclamation of repentance is a proclamation of mercy, and that mercy propounds motives in the Gospel to induce to repentance" which ought to satisfy every reflecting mind that the connection between faith and repentance is that of cause and effect, or of means and end. Unless the motives are accredited, the arguments of mercy are impotent and unavailing. Nay, indeed, they are as though they were not. So true is it that "he that cometh to God must not only 'believe that he exists,' but also 'that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.' But how could anyone believe that God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him, unless God has so promised in the Gospel? Repentance, indeed, antecedent to faith, to me appears impossible, for how could anyone repent of sin against God if he did not believe that he had sinned against God? And how could the mercy of God afford any encouragement to repentance unless that mercy is reported to us and believed? So, then, repentance comes by faith, as faith by hearing, as hearing by the word of God. As no one could hear God unless God had first spoken, and as no one could believe a message that he has never heard, so no one could repent of sin as respects God who has not first believed in His mercy." (A. Campbell.)

Repentance is preached in the name of Jesus Christ, and began from Jerusalem. (Luke, 24: 46, 47; Acts, 2: 38.) It is a change of will or purpose, worked in us by a godly sorrow (2 Cor., 7: 10), which is the effect of faith in "the goodness of God." (Ro., 2: 4.) We are thus crucified with Christ; we die to sin. (Ro., 6: 6.) The material thus far is prepared in heart; his mind enlightened, his affections purified, a godly sorrow for sin, a changed will. How is the builder or preacher to know the state of his heart?

There is but one divinely appointed means, viz., the confession with the mouth of the Lord Jesus. (Ro., 10: 9, 10.) The proposition confessed is the foundation upon which the church is built; it is a divine foundation, upon which a divine superstructure, a living temple, is to be reared. Each member coming to this temple must first appropriate this truth, and make it his foundation, by believing it with all his heart, and a determination to submit himself unreservedly to the authority of Christ. It is then necessary that he confess with the mouth his faith in the creed of the church, he must declare before witnesses his faith in Jesus the Son of God, the Christ. Thus renouncing his allegiance to all other powers, surrendering his will to that of Jesus. This is not a confession of sins, nor is it a confession of what we think God has done for us; it is a confession of Christ. The opposite of this is denial. The sinner's life prior to coming to Christ is a public denial of Christ in word and act; he now repudiates that life by his confession of Jesus. Further, the confession obligates him to accept all that Jesus teaches him, and to do all that he commands.

Obedience is next in order. Having died to sin and obligated himself to render obedience to Christ, he yields obedience from the heart to the form of doctrine, viz., baptism. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein ye also are risen with him through faith in the power of God who raised him from the dead."

Here we are met again by tradition and theories. Baptism is a non-essential; it makes no difference about baptism just so the heart is right; it is only a duty, a door into the church, and necessary to church privileges, and simply declarative of something already passed. If tradition makes the word of God of no effect (Mat., 15: 3), what about those who have the form of godliness and deny the power thereof? Remember it is the altar that sanctifieth the gift (Mat., 23: 19), because God's name is recorded there. (Ex., 20: 24.) Baptism is the only institution under Christ where God's name is recorded. It is by the authority of the Lord Jesus and "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." It is not a door in any sense of the word, but a step into the door. "I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." (John, 10: 9.) By baptism we enter the door, Christ: "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal., 3: 27.) All the promises are in Christ, and can be reached only by being in Christ. Out of Christ the sinner is without God and without hope; in Christ he is saved, pardoned, old things have passed away, all things have become new. Baptism is the act of obedience to authority, which translates the person from one state to another, and when he has obeyed this command he has the assurance of God's word that his sins are forgiven. How can faith include Christ and his promises, and leave out of view the commands, as means of enjoyment? If baptism for the remission of sins is a part of the gospel, preach it; if it is not, and only necessary to something called church privileges, why can't we get along altogether without it?

But to conclude: In order to build upon the one foundation, good material that will stand the fires of persecution and the temptations of sin, the preacher must preach the pure gospel of Christ in its facts, commands and promises.

The sinner hearing believes with all his heart, this faith purifies the heart and causes a godly sorrow for sin, which in turn works a change of will; thus disposed in heart, confession of Christ is made unto salvation, and the penitent believer being buried with Christ in baptism, rises therefrom to walk in a new life. Being risen with Christ, his affections are placed upon heavenly things; he realizes that he is a stranger and a pilgrim here, and walking by faith he looks "for a city whose builder and maker is God."

REMISSION OF SINS.

J. W. JACKSON.

The remission of sins is something done for man through the authority of Jesus the Christ. It is a gracious act of mercy, by which our sins are blotted out, and we relieved of the guilt and condemnation of sin. The remission of sins includes more than the act of pardon; our hearts are purified, our consciences cleansed, and, in full assurance of faith, we rejoice in the hope of eternal life.

Remission is through the name of Jesus (Acts, x, 43); "neither is there salvation in any other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." (Acts, iv, 12; Acts, xiii, 38, 39.) The things He suffered were in order that remission of sins might be preached among all nations in His name. (Luke, xxiv, 36, 47.) This preaching was to begin in Jerusalem, and did so begin, when Peter proclaimed remission of sins in the name of Jesus Christ. (Acts, ii, 38.)

Jesus is Lord of all, enthroned at the right hand of the Father. (Phil., ii, 9, 10.) He must reign until all enemies are put under his feet (1 Cor., xv, 25); hence every act of obedience from the sinner, and every act of worship from the Christian, must be in the name of Jesus Christ (Col., ii, 17); otherwise it is not acceptable to God.

Christ's kingdom is among men, and for the benefit of man; hence this authority or power is given among men. (See, above, Acts, iv, 12.) It is expressed in the law of remission, the word of Jesus, through which we are made clean. (John, vx, 3.) Hence the inquiry is not "who shall ascend into heaven to bring down Christ from above, or who shall descend into the deep to bring up Christ from the dead, but the word is nigh thee, even in thy heart, and in thy mouth, that is the word of faith which we preach." The Apostles preached remission of sins by the authority of Christ. They made known the conditions required of man, and persuaded them to obedience.

If authority is the basis of law, that authority must be preached and believed in before any acceptable obedience. Again, the law is but the clothing of the authority, the expression of it. To accept the law and obey it, is to honor the source or power whence it came; to reject the law, treat it with indifference, or to alter it to suit ourselves, is to insult the author of it. The authority of Christ, then, is here on earth. Jesus no longer "speaks pardon" to the sinner in person, nor does He work the knowledge of pardon into his heart in some mysterious way. He saves man, bestows upon him remission of sins, through the divine appointments of the Gospel. While it is true, as our beloved brother Paul has said, that "the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation," it is also true that God's power is in each specific item of the Gospel, and when they are believed and obeyed, the salvation will be received.

We are seriously told, however, that our faith must be in Christ, and not in his appointments. We are not to trust in the conditions or appointments of God as procuring causes, but we believe them to be divine appointments and clothed with divine power, to accomplish that whereunto God hath sent or ordained them. Faith in Christ includes the appointments by which or through which the blessing is received. What benefit will man derive through prayer, if he denies the power of prayer? It is not that we must understand how God answers prayer, for I confess that I do not understand this, but I believe that prayer is a divine appointment in which I may approach God and find grace to help in time of need. Some deny its power, and they might say their prayers seven times a day and God would not hear them. The principle enunciated by our Savior in healing the centurion's servant (Mat., viii, 5-13) is of universal application: "As THOU HAST BELIEVED, SO BE IT DONE UNTO THEE."

The centurion believed in Jesus; he believed in His power to heal diseases; he believed that He was willing to heal, hence his appeal for help. But his faith went farther, "speak the word only." He believed in the power of Jesus' word, and when Jesus spoke the word his servant was healed the self-same hour. The sinner now comes by faith to Jesus; he comes to be cleansed from sin, to be healed of spiritual disease. He believes that Jesus "has all power in heaven and upon earth to forgive sins;" he believes that he is willing to save him; and believing this, can he, centurion-like, say "speak the word only?" Jesus is not here in person now to speak, but He has spoken the word, and spoken so plainly that the penitent sinner can make no mistake. "And he commanded them (penitent believers) to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts, 10: 48; Acts, 2: 38; Acts, 19: 5, etc.)

"The first shall live by his faith"; then your faith in the power of Jesus is embodied in baptism, and leads you to remission."

No power, human or divine, ever pardoned a rebel simply for believing in the authority. There must be an acknowledgment or confession of authority, and obedience to it, before pardon. Faith in the power leads to the use of the means through which that power is manifested. If the power of the means be denied, then no benefit is derived through them.

I may not understand the connection between baptism and remission of sins; it is not necessary that I do; but I must believe that there is such a connection. If I deny this, I deny the word spoken. It is not necessary that I know all that Jesus has done and said before I go to Him for salvation; but it is necessary that I believe myself a sinner in need of salvation, and that I believe Him to be an all-sufficient Savior; and it is necessary for me to believe what He speaks, as I hear it. The sinner learns obedience first, then sitting in the school of Christ he learns of the many joys and blessings bestowed upon him through obedience. But here another view of this question presents itself. The law of Christ is proclaimed far and wide, and all persons have access to it. Men, however, through false interpretations, and love of party more than of Christ, have publicly and persistently denied the power of baptism. They tell us it is a door into the church, a mere duty by which you are admitted to church privileges—a non-essential. This is their faith, and according to the above quoted principle, "As thou has believed, so be it done unto thee," they have their reward. It is a door into a human institution, admitting them to the privileges of a church of which the Scriptures know nothing, and being to them a non-essential, they certainly do not enjoy the remission of sins, which is connected with it by divine appointment.

Reader, weigh well the words of the Savior, and remember that God's power on earth for the conversion and forgiveness of man is in His divine appointments, revealed to us in His word, spoken by the Son and confirmed to us by them that heard Him. If you believe the word of God to be a dead letter, "so be it unto thee;" if you, through tradition or ignorance, believe His divine commands to be non-essential, "so be it unto thee." If, however, you wish to enjoy that salvation of which Jesus is the author; if you want to enjoy all the blessings of the Church of which He is head; if you want to have the full assurance of faith, and a confirmed hope of eternal life, believe in Christ, repent of your sins, ignore no longer the divine confession, but with the mouth confess the Lord Jesus and be baptized for the remission of sins. If you believe the word spoken, it is well, obey it, and you will be accepted; if you believe the word of men that denies the power of God's appointments, you will have the true effects of such human fellowship. Only those who walk in the light have fellowship one with another and with God, and this fellowship is through the word of God abiding in us by faith.

“AS THOU HAST BELIEVED SO BE IT DONE UNTO THEE.”

THE PARABLE OF THE UNJUST STEWARD.

J. W. JACKSON.

[A part of this article was written and published about seven years since in the “Messenger.” I reproduce it because of the important lesson taught in it.]

The parables of the Lord Jesus were designed to teach his disciples and not others. (Mat. 13: 10-16.) This parable was spoken to the disciples, in the hearing of publicans, sinners, Pharisees and scribes. Some of the Pharisees understood the application (v. 14,) but derided him. The point of illustration in the parable is the wisdom of the steward. The lord of the steward commended him (the steward) for his wisdom (v. 8,) and Jesus comments on this thus: “For the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.” Men of the world use more diligence, perseverance, forethought and circumspection in their temporal affairs than Christians do in obtaining an eternal home. This, then, is the point d'appui of the lesson. It is wisdom to make careful provision for the future. Jesus then addresses himself direct to his disciples (v. 9): “Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations.” The context, together with the parable of talents in Matthew, 25; and that of pounds in

Luke, 19, and the point in the parable, lead me to interpret this verse thus: "You, my disciples, exercise wisdom (not cunning), diligence, prudence, forethought and honesty in the proper use and distribution of the riches of this world which is entrusted to your care, as stewards, by your Heavenly Father; by so doing you will secure the friendship of the Father, the Son and the holy angels (see John, 15: 14; Luke, 15: 7-10, and Ps., 34: 7), who, when your stewardship here ceases, will receive you into an everlasting inheritance, the true riches to be sought after."

All Christians are stewards, having under care the riches of this world. We must some day give an account of our stewardship; how will your account stand, my brother? How much have you spent upon your appetites, or in decking your body in gaudy apparel; or how much have you hoarded up in vaults to leave behind you when you fail?

Use your money, brethren; use it wisely. The Lord's work must go on, and if we are unfaithful to the trust committed to us He will raise up other servants who will work and give. The Gospel must be preached; preacher's families must have something to eat and wear; orphans must be fed, clothed and educated; churches must be built, and as wise stewards we must do it.

EDITORIAL NOTICE.

"We have received first copy of Firm Foundation, a twenty-four page monthly published at Austin, Texas, by Bro. A. McGary. It is especially devoted to enforcing the idea that those not baptized with the idea that baptism is for the remission of sins, are not scripturally baptized and should be rebaptized. While we believe baptism must be submitted to as an act of obedience to God, we think the making of its validity turn upon any other point than this, upon any understanding we may have of its purpose and end outside of this, is transferring the healing virtue from God to ourselves. And we believe it is an undue exaltation of the remission of sins above other objects and ends, so is doing violence to the word of God. The end that embodies all ends and duties it puts into Christ where is found all blessings; remission of sins is one of these. We see no reason why it should be exalted above the others."—Gospel Advocate, Sept. 17.

Thank you, Brother Lipscomb, for the notice given our pamphlet.

What is "an act of obedience"? Is it an act of obedience to submit to the form of baptism, while denying the end for which it was ordained? It is not the understanding we may have of its end or purpose, but faith in God's spoken word. The authority through which men obtain remission of sins is given here among men, and to obey in the manner and for the purpose to which ordained is an exaltation of God's word above the traditions and commandments of men. It is generally said that we are authorized by the New Testament to ask a penitent believer but one question, and this in order to the confession of Christ. There is authority to ask those who come to us and say that they have been baptized the question asked by Paul: "Unto what were you baptized?" "Unto church privileges in the Baptist Church," and mark you, remission is not one of these; their faith claims remission through feeling, and also claims to be in Christ, then how can baptism put such an individual into Christ any more than an unconscious babe? The enjoyment of all the promises in Christ depends upon the remission of sins; remission of sins is through the authority of Jesus, and this authority is embodied in a command "be baptized for the remission of sins." This is the end, the only purpose, for which baptism is ordained, and if I believe the word of God that there is such a connection between baptism and remission, I need not understand all the other blessings consequent to it.

The denominations submit to baptism as "a door into the church," a "mere duty," "a declarative act of a past act," a "non-essential." If this obedience to a form brings remission of sins, I ask when are their sins remitted? When they are baptized, or when they change their views, when they are converted from a faith in tradition to faith in God's word. If the former act is obedience, then we should cease preaching baptism for the remission of sins, and bid our immersionist neighbors God speed. If the latter view is correct, then we can have obedience without faith, and we must cease our objections to infant baptism.

Will Bro. L. please answer the question, What is obedience?

EDITOR'S DEPARTMENT.

J. W. J.

We propose opening a "question drawer" and invite correspondence. Questions should be short and to the point. Send all questions to J. W. Jackson, Breckinridge, Stephens county, Texas.

I held a meeting at Wayland, Stephens county, including the fifth Lord's day in August and the first in September. Result, five additions to the congregation. Brother S. N. Thomas, a young and worthy brother, was with me and aided much.

A letter received last week from a preaching brother expresses "the hope that we may do good with our Magazine, but he fears we will not, owing to the extreme positions taken." Christianity is the result of extremes; it is extreme in all its measures and in all its tendencies. We desire nothing but the truth and in the fear of God, with an abiding faith in the power of His word and a fervent charity for all who love our Lord Jesus, we will contend for the faith as once delivered to the Saints. In the service of God mistakes are fatal, and surrounded as we are by deceptive influences that draw us away from God, we need to watch and pray and live nearer to the word of God. We can not go wrong, if we honestly and sincerely take God's word for our guide and lay aside our worldly wisdom and human speculations.

PURIFY THE CHURCH.

BY JOHN S. DURST.

The will of God has reached poor, fallen man through Jesus Christ, his Son, and the inspired recorders. This was intended to be the great guide book through all coming time. Jesus prayed for them who should believe on him through the apostles' words. When the apostles preached, the people heard, investigated, understood, believed and obeyed. Thus sprang into existence the first and model church. These disciples "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." We therefore conclude that any number of persons under the yoke of Christ, keeping house for the Lord, presents to the world a perfect exhibition of the family of God.

To each disciple of Christ comes with force the admonition given by Paul to Timothy: "O, Timothy, keep that which was committed to thy trust." Again: "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." The subject matter of his teaching was given him. Jesus gave it to Paul, Paul gave it to Timothy. The same inspired directions were handed down to Barnabas, Silas, Luke, Titus and others. These things have been transmitted through the ages to us of the nineteenth century. Patent, indeed, do they appear, coming under the authority of the God of Heaven! Man's puny arm must not be raised to strike from these things a single line. Neither must he add to them, for it will be at the peril of his eternal happy existence. These things contain the doctrine of Christ. "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." (2 Jno., 1: 9.) In the past the doctrine of Christ was not regarded as a sufficient guide to men, and men's doctrines supplemented the doctrine of Christ.

O! that all would rally around that grand old maxim enunciated by the brave soldiers of the cross in their efforts to restore the primitive order of things: "To present nothing except as taught by precept or example." Each one of those pioneers went to work unsolicited. Each was a missionary, Their authority emanated from a divine source. They realized the weighty responsibility placed upon them by the command, "go." They armed themselves with the bright old sword, the Word of God. Glistening with its heaven-born brilliancy, they held it up, ready to strike. When the time came to strike, it fell into the enemies' ranks. Need I say its force was felt?

Man's efforts to improve upon the works of nature have fallen abortive. Man cannot improve upon God's work. No change can be made in God's plan of salvation from past sins; neither can we introduce human wisdom in the family of God without spiritual disaster. Sure as we abandon or attempt to amend the practices of the model churches, we are at sea without chart or compass. The Word must be preached. It must be obeyed. It is compared to a two-edged sword, but is sharper. If it is used, it will cut. It was intended to cut. Do not be deterred from using it by those who exclaim: "O, you are like the Indian's tree, that was so straight that it leaned over!" The trouble with these brethren is that the Gospel pruning knife strikes the leaning limbs. Let it strike, brethren, until the Church is purified, and the weak knees are strengthened. Individual and congregational work must not be supplanted by human devices. A faithful application of the Gospel pruning knife will cut off many so-called fine things. Bear it, dear brethren. No matter how close it prunes, we must submit, or forever surrender our "plea for a restoration of the primitive order of things." God legislated where it was needed. Where he did not legislate it was not needed. Paul tells us that we are thoroughly furnished unto every good work. A legitimate conclusion is, that if we are practicing anything untaught by the Word of God, it is not a good work, and the pruning knife should lop it off.

We entreat you, then, to take God's Book and its teaching. Here we have the express declarations of our Master. It is heaven's golden measuring reed. Stand upon the Rock of Ages, the platform of never-dying truths given by God to man. It alone can support you when the storm and tempest comes. It is God's light. It will throw the celestial radiance of a coming day around your sin-darkened path. It will do more. It will hang the radiant bow of hope above your death shadowed couch. It will lead you into that blessed City, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Then be ye steadfast, immovable. Be true to Jesus; and may God strengthen you for renewed work, is my prayer.

INCONSISTENCIES.

As there is no authority in that word by which the faithful workman is "bound" to "prove all things,"—"try all spirits,"—for receiving into the family of God those who have not "obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine delivered" by the ambassadors of our Lord, the advocates of this pernicious, perverting, God-rejecting plan of man, have been too astute to place themselves in a fair and honest attitude before those they would teach on this question. Every one who will take an impartial view of this question, will see at a glance that those who advocate the validity of sectarian baptism—that is, baptism that preceded the "teaching" of the word of truth—are in equity bound to affirm their teaching. As they do not deny that those were baptized into Christ, who did understand the design of baptism, and were baptized for the remission of sins, and who, before said baptism, confessed the Lord "with the mouth," then the controversy is over another class of persons; a class whom they say were scripturally baptized, and hence are "in Christ," and whom we deny were scripturally baptized, or that they are "in Christ." An intelligent people will hold them responsible for the proof of their teaching on this question, as well as all others that "pertain to life and Godliness." If they can not "prove" it, then they must not teach it; if they do, they should remember that they are answerable to God for teaching for His doctrine the "commandments of men." But, as we began to say, there is no proof in God's word for it, hence it is without his authority—a practice authorized by the "wisdom of this world," and is "foolishness with God." Its advocates know this, and cannot be induced to make the effort to prove the practice "good;" but they are trying to "hold fast to it" anyway. Hence those who are opposed to placing the wisdom of this world on a level with that wisdom that is from above, and who "speak God's word faithfully," as the only means of keeping pure the sanctuary of the Lord, have urgently besought these worldly wise brethren to prove their teaching or cease to "trouble Israel." But, as said above, they know they cannot prove it, but hold on to it for the same reason that Mr. Beecher holds to baby sprinkling—"because it works well." The advocates of this practice try to intimidate those who contend for carrying on the Lord's work by the direction of the Apostles, with the cry of "hobby," "disturbing the peace of the church," etc.

Hence, as we can not induce them to pursue the course marked out by fairness and honesty, the course that courageous men in quest of truth would pursue, we as soldiers engaged in the defense of the "faith once delivered to the saints" are forced, by the cowardly way of these lovers of a way not ordained of God, to gather together their inconsistent teachings and thus throw their human system out of joint, so that its nakedness may appear in all of its real deformity, that all God-loving men may flee from it, as the most dangerous substitute of all humanisms. We feel sure that all candid brethren will acknowledge that our plan of exposing the inconsistencies of the leading advocates of this worldly-wise plan, in order to make their error apparent to all who are willing to look, is perfectly fair and honorable under the circumstances. We would much prefer a fair, free, logical and scriptural discussion of the question, by well defined propositions upon which the real issues hinge; but our opponents are too well aware of the weakness of their side of the question to risk its fortunes to a fair and open conflict; hence we beg our brethren to excuse us for "bushwhacking." We hope to be able to show up this humanism, by this process even, so palpably, that many of its advocates will abandon the practice, and honor God by eliminating all humanisms from His appointments.

In the September issue of our pamphlet we claim that we showed language from the pen of Bro. Campbell—than whom no more devout or worthy man ever wrote without the guidance of inspiration—as to how persons are built upon the divine foundation, that is perfectly inconsistent, irreconcilable with his teaching and practice in reference to taking sectarians into fellowship on their baptism. We boldly assert that it is beyond the power of man to reconcile these two teachings of Brother Campbell. Let him try it who will. We did not give this language of Brother C.'s, and our comment, through any lack of appreciation for the name and writings of Brother C. Our love for truth, "the truth as it is in Jesus," prompted us to those comments. Those who appreciate the writings of Brother C. more than the writer, do so because they are more able to grasp the depths of his great mind, and not because they have stronger convictions of his sincerity. I can show other things from the pen of Brother C. that are just as inconsistent with his practices on the baptismal question, as those referred to, but I will now invite your attention to one of our prominent living teachers; one who, in my opinion, has no superior as a teacher on general religious questions; and one whom I love for his many labors and sacrifices for the cause of Christ; but I fear that he is culpable in the sight of God for allowing his predilections and prejudices to blind him to the truth on this question. Before quoting some of his language, which we wish our readers to weigh well, and compare with other things he has said, I desire to inform our readers—those that are not readers of the Gospel Advocate—that Brother D. Lipscomb labored very hard in that paper last spring in a series of articles, to prove that Baptist baptism was valid; that it brought persons into Christ. Now, when the ink is hardly dry upon those sage productions, furnishing excuses for those who have believed Baptist teaching, their defender comes before his readers with these words:

“I believe no sinner is converted, save as God converts him. My objection to Baptist teaching is, that they practically deny that God does or can convert sinners in the use of his own appointed means, and they substitute for God’s appointments man’s inventions and devices, and accept, as evidence of pardon, human dreams, visions and imaginations, instead of God’s assurance. But God works through his appointments, men through their inventions; hence Baptist practice converts men through devices, and is a conversion by men. Their course drives God out of the work. They have more faith in human dreams, visions and imaginations than in the promises of God, given by the Holy Spirit, sealed by the blood of Christ, and confirmed by the oath of Jehovah. Baptist conversion is wholly of men.”

To-day, Bro. L., I dare say, would take Baptist converts on their Baptist baptism. We have quite a number of Baptist subscribers, several of whom are preachers; also Methodist subscribers, among whom are some preachers. If “Baptist conversion is wholly of men,” so is Methodist conversion; they will stand or fall together. I desire our friends of these churches to carefully read what Bro. L. has here said about them. With due deference to the opinions of these friends, our solemn conviction is, that Bro. L. has here told the truth about them; they do drive God out of the work by substituting for His doctrine the commandments of men. It is "vain worship." It is not the "straight and narrow way" ordained of God, and given us through His word. Its advocates will learn in a day when it is too late, that the relentless war they have waged against the plain, simple way inaugurated through Galilean fishermen is the way that is "bound on earth and in heaven," and that their substitutes, invented by men, have caused honest persons to look too high for God's way. That, Naaman-like, they lose souls by causing them to expect "some great thing," instead of teaching them Christ crucified, His commands, and the importance of observing them. Ever since the birth of the world's Redeemer in a manger, persons have been taught to look too high—expect great things—instead of believing in Him and trusting to Him, through his own appointments, for deliverance. Friends, every time you pray for God to send down converting power, you evince a lack of faith in His word. The Gospel is God's power to convert and save men; hence, when you pray for some power outside of God's word, you show that you are not satisfied with His word. If you believe the Gospel is His power, then in such prayers you virtually deny that His word contains the Gospel! If you have the faith that saves the soul—I know of but one kind—you will weigh well the word of God; because no man can have faith and doubt God's word! If you pray for God to send you something else to convert men with, then, of course, you manifest a doubt as to its ability to save. Such prayers are not for God's word, because you have that; and James says: "Therefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." (James, 1: 21, 22.) If you say James was writing to those who had already been converted and made "heirs" by direct impact of the Holy Spirit, hear him again: "Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of His creatures." (James, 1: 18.) You will also see that in verse 17 he says there is no variableness, or shadow of turning, with God. Then, friends, cease to pray God to "vary" His way by converting some one with your man-made way. Yes, lay down all such "superfluity of naughtiness" and teach your seekers to meekly receive God's word. It is able to save their souls; what more do they want? But to return to what Bro. L. has said. I say I believe as he does about Baptist conversion, and all other human plans for converting sinners or worshiping God. Hence, I am forced, by the law of consistency, if by nothing else, to contend that all who have been converted by any of the processes of sectarianism are as far from God as though they had never been immersed at all. Immersion was not appointed by our Lord as a trap to catch unsuspecting sectarians in and wash away their sins, whether they wanted it that way or not. Boys often immerse one another in bathing, using the heaven-appointed formula; but they do not intend to be "buried with Christ by baptism," and they are not. Neither do sectarian converts intend by the act of baptism to be buried with Christ, nor for the remission of sins. God permits boys in their plays to immerse each other; and so He does sectarians. The boys use it in their play; sectarians use it as a door into their church; but it was not appointed for either of these purposes by God, and hence, in neither case does it change one's relationship towards God. God appointed baptism for the remission of sins to those who hear and believe the preaching of His apostles. He did not appoint baptism for those who hear and believe a denial of what His apostles preached. The devil may, for aught I know. Right here I would like for Bro. Lipscomb to explain upon what grounds he charges me with trying to transfer the "healing virtue from God to ourselves" because I contend that the converts of a system that he says is "wholly of men," are not in Christ. Will he please inform us who he is "transferring the healing virtue to" when he is insisting that the converts of a church that "drives God out of the work" are in Christ? I, like Bro.

L., "believe that no sinner is converted save as God converts him." Like Bro. L. I believe that our Baptist friends "drive God out of the work." I believe, also, that "God works through His appointments; men through their inventions; hence Baptist practice converts men through human devices, and is a conversion by men." These are precisely, in a nutshell, my reasons for wanting Baptists and other sectarians taught the truth, and baptized as directed by the Spirit before receiving them into the church. Now, Bro. Lipscomb, it is in order for you to tell us why you want to recognize those who have "driven God out of the work." as being in Christ. It will not suffice for you to say that if they were baptized to "honor God" their baptism is valid. There never was any authority for saying that if it was done to "honor God" it is valid. And, if this was not the language of Ashdod, it will not do to say that God can be "honored" by a system that drives Him out of the work. Once you said that if a person believed it his duty to be baptized, and was baptized to honor God, it would be sinful to be baptized again. This is some of your best sophistry. The baptism of the twelve at Ephesus will convict you, though, of folly. Paul did not chide them for their first baptism, and yet they were "rebaptized."

I remember how Bro. L. "reproved and rebuked" Bro. Allen for having said that a certain human society was "unsound, unsafe and unscriptural," and afterward continued to work through said society. I thought, and think now, that Bro. L. showed that Bro. A.'s course in the premises was very inconsistent. I could not see how Bro. A. could withhold a full and free confession of his error in the matter; but it seems that he did. "Confess your faults one to another" is a scripture that seems to be oftener violated, or less heeded, than any other. It is hard for men who are regarded as the very humblest, to comply with it. As for men who have acted long in the capacity of teachers, it seems out of the question for them to confess their faults; but, as Bro. L. has put himself in really a more glaring attitude of error and inconsistency than the one he caught Bro. A. in, we do believe that it is possible for him to see it, and confess it. He has here said that "Baptist conversion drives God out of the work;" that it "is wholly of men;" that "they substitute for God's appointments man's devices;" and yet he advocates the continuance of the practice of accepting them on that conversion. Bro. L. had just as well try to convince his readers that two bodies can occupy the same space at the same time, as to try to convince them that he conscientiously entertains the belief that it is right to receive Baptist and Methodist converts without teaching them the truth, and baptizing them, while he conscientiously believes that "God is driven out of the work" by which they are converted. I know his friends would believe him if it were possible; but it is not. Candor and honesty demand of him that he abandon one of these positions, and he doubtless will have sufficient courage to do so through the Advocate. Which will he abandon? Let us hope that he will calmly, coolly and dispassionately look this question fairly in the face, and espouse the side of truth—take a position that is in harmony with every word that inspiration has recorded upon the subject of salvation—the position that persons must "obey, from the heart, the form of doctrine delivered." A. McG.

BROTHER POE AFTER BROTHER McPHERSON.

Is it a sin to take advantage of a good thing, even if we borrow it from the denominations? Maj. Penn baptized seventy-seven persons at Waxahachie, and they went into the Baptist church. A large number of them are not excitable persons, and were not 'excited' into the church; many of them were good solid men, heads of families and men of sense. He reserved the front seats for inquirers, and urged all he could to occupy them. They felt that the address was personal; they felt free to ask any questions; they had no one at their elbow who would try to occupy their attention, and I believe that this much of Major Penn's work is worthy of imitation. What say you, brethren? Let us hear from you. Shall we practice it in our meetings? If not, why not?—McPherson in Old Path Guide.

There he goes, State meeting to imitate Baptist conventions. Next, Major Penn's mourner's bench works well, and Brother McPherson wants to copy that. Never mind Penn, my brother; you follow Christ. Instead of reading Penn, you read your New Testament, and be content to follow that. Cease this restless, wandering spirit; let us follow Christ. Now, my brother, what does your New Testament say about Penn's flagged seat experiment? Not a word. You say it worked well, though, and therefore you would adopt it. But the flagged seat is not all—could you tell the death-bed yarns Penn tells? Could you pray for the mourners as he prays? Could you consent to frighten men and women up to the flagged seats as he does? If not, your flagged seats would be a failure, even in a sectarian point of view. You have but one way scripturally, my brother. If you choose to be scriptural in your evangelistic work, you must preach the word. It is your business to sow the seed God gives you to sow; you are to sow it broadcast, into all the hearts in your congregation. Some may fall by the wayside, others into stony places, and some into good ground. You are not responsible either for the ground or fruit, but for the sowing. Now, Bro. Mc., don't run off after Penn, nor Harrison, the boy preacher, nor any other sensational fellow, but stick to your Bible—follow Christ and the apostles. Don't get impatient; do your duty and leave results with God. You, my dear brother, have had a terrible outpouring upon you from the State meeting spirit. You seem to have been thoroughly baptized into sectarianism. Turn now to the old paths again, and may the Lord direct you.—John Poe's Gospel Advocate.

Brother Poe, you are after a fast one. If you would hobble yourself you might catch him, but as it is, your legs are so unequal that you have to go in such a limping gait that Brother McP. has nothing to fear from your chase. Why don't you throw the branding-iron at him? Now let's take a look at your wabbling, wriggling chase. What right have you to object to Brother McP.'s copying all of Major Penn's plans? By these plans he Penns them in the same pen that you are in, unless you were shaken out of it. You contend that Baptists convert persons to Christ, and if you are right, Major Penn is doing a better work than you; because, I dare say he makes ten converts to your one. Hence, if Brother McPherson should fall into the Major's plans and ways, if you are right, he would still be engaged in a good work. Why do you not urge Brother McP. to make the change? He would doubtless make more converts. Besides, I think it is the very thing for him, suits his taste; and I think you ought to go with him instead of objecting to a plan that will so much more rapidly convert persons to Christ. Yes, the mourner's bench does work well, if you are right, and it is sinful in you to oppose it, because it is certain that Baptists will not work without it. To stop the use of the mourner's bench would drive Baptists out of the work ; and as you contend that Baptists are bringing persons into Christ, to do anything that would stop, or hinder their work, if you are right, would be wicked. Cease your wicked war against the mourner's bench, my brother ; you virtually admit that it is doing a good work. From your stand point, Brother P., you can not even class it with "meat eating," because no one has any right to become offended at anything that contributes towards bringing persons into Christ. Brother P., you are too good a Baptist to be finding fault with Major Penn's plans. When Brother P. was at Dupree, he offered five dollars for every passage of scripture that could be produced teaching a certain practice that he was opposing. As Brother P. considers money such a desideratum in the dissemination of the Gospel, I will here make him the offer of five times the amount he offered at Dupree for every passage of scripture that he can produce that authorizes our brethren to accept sectarian converts without baptizing them. Now, brethren, if Brother P. does not make the effort, you may know that he realizes that he can not do it. Brother Poe, however, gave Brother McP. some good advice. I regard it as being so good that I am going to give it to him verbatim, except to use Brother Campbell's name where he used Major Penn's. "Never mind (Brother Campbell), my brother, you follow Christ. Instead of reading (Brother C.) you read your New Testament, and be content to follow that. Cease this restless, wandering spirit ; let us follow Christ. Now, my brother, what does your New Testament say about (receiving, in the name of Christ, those who have not "obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered," by the Apostles.)

A. McG.

From another column it will be seen that Elder A. McGary, of the reformation, will issue a monthly in Austin, Texas, exposing Campbellism. He has ample material to work on.—Baptist Herald.

You are right, my friend. Indeed I have "ample material to work on." Some of this material is very tough, too. You see, Mr. Herald, this material has been gathered up from every point of the theological compass, and squeezed into this elastic thing called "Our Plea." We have Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Mormon material, and some tough old Baptist sticks—you know yourself how hard the last named is to work up—one has to work on it with a perseverance as determined as the final perseverance of the saints. Mr. Herald, I need your sympathy, and help, in my arduous undertaking; and, while I have my pen in hand, will thank you for the meagre shadow of sympathy that you have here manifested, (I thank you for all but the title "Elder" that you have so gratuitously conferred on me. The reason that I do not thank you for this title, is because I am afraid I will be taken for Presiding Elder of the Campbellite Church of Austin, and cheat somebody out of their merits.) I want to persuade you to help me work up this "ample material." I will lay before you the style of work I desire to do. I have a pattern to work by that "thoroughly furnishes me unto all good works," and as I do not want to do any other kind, I will not be troubled about plans. You know when Peter was asked, by those who believed his sermon at Pentecost, about the resurrection of our Savior, what they should do, that he said: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."

Well, now, you further know that if these persons had said to him that baptism "is not for the remission," and had contended with Peter that they were already saved by faith, that he would not have baptized them while in that frame of mind, for when Peter was sent out he was sent to "preach the Gospel," or "teach all nations, baptizing them"; and those who believed what Peter preached and were baptized were to be saved, and those who "believed not" were to be damned. Well, you know that Peter placed the salvation after the baptism in that sermon. This is all plain to your mind. Now, what I want to work "this material" up to, is to that point that makes the belief of what Peter taught then as necessary to be believed now as it was then: That as Peter's teaching is bound on earth and in heaven, no man to-day is a fit subject for baptism until he has fully and freely accepted this teaching—until he is willing to let the salvation remain where Peter put it. Much of this material seems imperious to this plain teaching of Peter's, even when they see where the Savior taught precisely the same. Now, you will agree with me that they are tough. As you are such a good exponent of faith, I want to get you to quote the following language of our Savior to this tough material and enforce upon them, in your logical way, that until they do believe what the Savior and His apostles have said on this question, they cannot appropriate the promise that is in it to themselves, but that they are without doubt the subjects of the threat contained in it. Here is the language: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." You see, my friend, there is a terrible doom awaiting those brethren and friends unless they become convinced that the Son and His apostles told the truth when they said the salvation was after the baptism. Are you not alarmed at their fate? Then help me persuade them out of it. Will you do it? A. McG.

We have received some very encouraging letters from brethren from different parts of the country. Some preaching brethren have subscribed and bid us Godspeed in the work, while others have given us some novel reasons for opposing it. If we were at liberty to give some reasons to the public, that have been given us, privately, by preachers for not advocating the same views that the FIRM FOUNDATION does on the baptismal question, it would be seen that all of the "loaves and fishes" hunters are not dead yet. One brother writes us that he will not only do all he can in the way of sending us subscribers, but that he will help to carry the burden, if it gets too heavy for us financially. As Brother Poe would say, this good brother will help "to take care of the old horse." Many thanks to him; he is not scared much by the alarm, "hobby." Some of our very religious journals have treated our little pamphlet with silent contempt. But we are not surprised in the least, at this course; they are controlled by the "Kingdom of the clergy." Brethren, we feel encouraged in the work, but we ask you every one to bestir yourselves to widen our circulation. We did not begin this work as a financial enterprise, but because we deemed it an imperative duty, in this day so replete with the introduction of humanisms and innovations into the church; to contend for lopping off all things, old or new, that are at variance with "the perfect law of liberty." With the help of true brethren the work will succeed; without their co-operation we must fail. We are willing to abide the issue. A. McG.

We have received several letters stating that their writers had long since forwarded, by mail, orders for our pamphlet, which have not been received by us. Hereafter, those desiring the paper may deduct the amount of price of money order from all amounts of one dollar or upwards. We would rather that our subscribers would not send us postage stamps, if they can make other arrangements. We have a full supply on hand for present purposes. But if they cannot procure money orders we will take stamps. Brethren, please, each of you, try to send us a club of five.

WHAT MUST I DO TO BE SAVED?

This is a momentous question; of infinite importance to everyone. There are but two classes in the world, as regards salvation. One is saved, redeemed, adopted, and heirs of the eternal inheritance. The other is unsaved, lost, condemned, and destined to "eternal destruction from the presence of God." Reader are you unsaved? If so, are you willing to be saved? Are you willing to be saved upon the Lord's plan, or have you already thought up a plan by which to be saved? If you are anxious to be saved I will endeavor briefly to point out to you the means. The above question is answered by inspiration: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." This is the first step you must take; Jesus the Christ, our Prophet, Priest, and King, is presented as the object of faith. Do not stop and spend your precious moments inquiring about kinds of faith, and how much faith you must have, nor how faith saves you. Your first business is to have faith. But note particularly, it is faith in Jesus; not faith in creeds; not faith in the operation of the Holy Spirit; not faith in tradition, nor faith in the Church, but faith in Christ. To obtain this faith you must go to inspiration. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this, it is because there is no light in them." And mark you, faith does not stop to question the Savior or His Apostles as to the merit or demerit of an action; if you believe in Him, it certainly implies your willingness to do what HE says in lieu of all that man may say.

Do you believe? If so, you are "begotten of God."

“Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God.” As you are to be made a “partaker of the divine nature,” you must be “added to the Lord.” Hence, every act, mental or physical, must have important bearing upon this union. The successive steps or things done by you constitute so many links in the divine chain of grace by which you are to be bound to Christ and be saved. Having taken the first step, you learn from the word of God, “the seed of the kingdom,” that you must repent of your sins, confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and be baptized for the remission of sins. (See Acts 2: 38; Mk. 16: 15, 16; Ro. 10: 9, et al.)

Now, are you willing to be saved by doing these things? You cannot deny the authority of this teaching. You must believe in the Lord Jesus, “for without faith it is impossible to please God.” You must repent of your sins, “for except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish,” and all men are commanded to repent. You must confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, “for with the mouth confession is made unto salvation,” and the time will come when “every (unwilling) knee shall bow and every (unwilling) tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.” You must be baptized for the remission of sins; for it is the only ordinance commanded to the alien for the remission of sins. If you refuse to be baptized you disobey a positive command, and Jesus will not save the disobedient. If you are baptized simply to “join the Church,” you dishonor Christ, and have no assurance of pardon. If you do not understand what baptism is for, turn to your New Testament and read the following passages:

“He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.” Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.” “To Him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins.” “And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.”

“Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.” Do you believe these inspired words from Jesus, Peter and Annanias? Remember that faith comes by hearing the word of God, and the above selections are an important part of God's word. If you believe these you will obey, and then you have the assurance of faith in God's word that your sins are forgiven. Remember that those who received the seed of the Kingdom (the word of God), into good and honest hearts, were those who understood the word and brought forth fruit. Paul says that the Gentiles were "alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them." Faith in God's word enlightens and instructs and gives us a good understanding. "I have more understanding than all my teachers; for thy testimonies are my meditation. Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way." There is but one right way, and this the Lord teaches. Are you willing to be saved in His way? Then obey Him.

A word to those who think they have obeyed Christ when they entered "human institutions" claiming to be Churches of Christ. "Examine yourselves whether you be in the faith; prove your own selves." Take as a basis or standard by which to conduct this examination "the faith once delivered to the saints." The faith or the word of faith which Paul preached is the same as the Gospel of Christ. Christ is preached and the essential elements of "the faith" are: 1. Believe in the Lord Jesus. 2. Repentance. 3. Confession. 4. Baptism for remission of sins. You are "in the faith" if you have taken "the faith" as your guide and obeyed these essential commands. If you omitted them, no matter for what cause, can you claim the promise? If it take certain essential steps to put you "in the faith," and you have not taken them or have omitted them, you would do well to hasten and obey the word of God. Jesus invites you to come to Him; if you are in human institutions, turn your back upon them and their traditions and acknowledge the authority of Jesus, and by obedience to His command secure the remission of your sins.

J. W. J.

SLIGHTLY MIXED.

During Bro. Homan's meeting in Waxahachie, a member of the Baptist church at that place left that church and took membership with the Christian Church. A letter from her was soon after published in the Old Path Guide, explanatory of the change thus made, in which the writer said: "Neither have I lately joined the Christian Church; I did that long ago, when I first obeyed my Savior." The editor of the Texas Baptist Herald, commenting on this says: "However unpalatable it may be to her new associates, she states what is undeniably true—that when she united with the Baptists, she did join the Christian Church. She has now cast her lot with those whose origin begins with Alex. Campbell, not with Christ, and has left the Christian Church for a body which must forever bear the name of the man who gave it birth."

Bro. McPherson in reply, says: "Not so fast, my good brother. She became a member of the body of Christ at her baptism, not in the Baptist Church, but in spite of the Baptist Church. By going into that institution of which the Bible says not a word, and which was established by man and wears the name of a man, she became identified with a human institution; she simply threw off the human part and kept that which was divine."

What a strange medley of ideas are here set forth. The Baptist Church, "a human institution," one "of which the Bible says not a word," and yet in joining it she became a member of the body of Christ. When did she become a member of the body of Christ? At her baptism. But her baptism was a door into the Baptist Church, and that was the end unto which she was baptized. She obeyed Baptist baptism, and that baptism put her into a human institution. Yes; but being immersed with the proper formula, she joined the Christian Church. True, she did not know she was in the Church of Christ; nor did she understand the design of baptism; she thought she was obeying the Lord in joining the Baptist Church. After a while she discovers that she really joined the Christian Church, and by mistake got into the Baptist institution; so she left that and went back to the Church she joined.

This may be good Baptist theology, but it does not accord with New Testament teaching. Can an individual be in the Kingdom of Heaven in the Church, or in the one body, and not know it? In the New Covenant the Lord says "all shall know Me, from the least to the greatest." Can one be in the New Covenant without an assurance of pardon? The chief blessing in this New Covenant is, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." (Heb., 8: 8-12.) If they are assured of pardon, upon what is that assurance based? Upon the Word of God, or upon Baptist tradition? Evidently the aforesaid sister believed the latter, for Baptists do not teach the scriptural assurance of pardon. They teach that baptism is a non-essential, or that it is essential to Christian duty — a door into the Church, and that a person is saved before baptism. This is their understanding of it; this they preach and practice; and now Bro. Mc. says that one believing this preaching, and baptized in obedience to it, is made a member of the Church of Christ in spite of the Baptist Church. If this be true, double your energies, ye Baptists, and send out more flagged-seat preachers, for in spite of your human name and your being a human institution, and your depreciation of God's Word, and your denial of the power placed in His own appointments, you can make converts to the Church of Christ. How applicable the words of the Savior: "Woe unto you lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge; ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered." (Lu., 11: 52; also Mat., 23: 13.) "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees! hypocrites! for ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in."

How did these doctors of the law shut the Kingdom of Heaven against men? They had authority to expound the law. "The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat." (Mat., 23: 2.) They believed the prophecies concerning a kingdom, but did not understand the nature of it. It was not given to them to know these things, because they clung with tenacity to tradition and commandments of men, and thus made the Word of God of no effect. (Mat., 15: 1-9.) The people believed their teaching, and were thus shut out from that knowledge by which they might have entered in. So now God's Word teaches that to become a member of Christ's body we must have faith in Christ, repent of our sins, confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and be baptized for the remission of sins. But theological doctors, denying the power of God's Word, and polluting His ordinances by tradition and false interpretations, shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against those who are desirous of entering in. How that sister could find Christ in a human institution is a mystery to me; and when she learned the way of the Lord she should have repudiated not only the human institution and human name, but also the human ordinances by which she entered it, and been baptized for the remission of sins.

"The wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way." Yet some brethren tell us that our immersed friends are in the right way, although they do not understand the true design of acts done by them. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." The way seems to be right to them, but does it seem right to God? The way of the Lord is the right way; find it, understand it, and walk in it.

Brother L. W. Scott, author of Handbook of Christian Evidence, and the writer held a week's meeting in Albany, Shackleford county, closing the night of first Lord's day in this month. Four additions to the congregation there, one by baptism and three by letter. There are in the town and vicinity several Christians who are so indifferent to Christ as to take no part in his service. Brother Scott compared them to "bricks," and some to "brick bats." Any preacher desiring the analysis of a sermon on "brick bats" can write to him.

in this county. Brother S. N. Thomas, a young and zealous On third Lord's day in this month preached at Wayland, preacher, lives here. On Monday three were baptized. Two of these had formerly been added to the Baptist Church, but not enjoying that full assurance of faith arising from obedience to Christ, they were baptized for the remission of sins.

OUR PLEA FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

NO. I.

BY JOHN S. DURST.

The popular way of presenting this subject has, I think, done incalculable injury to the cause of Christ. The general idea is that Christians are scattered all through Sectdom, notwithstanding they were taught and baptized according to sectarian usages. That all are in the Church of God who have been immersed, whether they have scripturally confessed the Christ or not. If they were immersed to honor God in His appointments they are Christians; and if Christians they are children of God; and if children of God they have been so acknowledged by the Father, and hence should be so acknowledged by us. At the risk of being called an extremist I will offer a few thoughts against this, our popular plea for the unity of Christians. Simply because a person has been baptized to honor the Christ in his appointment (when in fact he had not, or it would have been done according to His appointment), will not suffice. When God appoints a thing to be done, it must be done as He appoints. He has a way by which we are to become His children. By this way we are translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of His dear Son.

In Rev. 18: 4, John says: "And I heard another voice from heaven saying, come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that you receive not of her plagues." From this passage and its context it is argued that God has a people in Babylon. That Babylon is Sect-dom; and that any other view necessitates the abandonment of this "our plea for Christian union." Let's not be too hasty in jumping to conclusions, unless we know our premises are correct. In one sense we are all God's people, in another sense only a certain class are. We will turn to 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18, and read: "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean." What for Paul? "And I will receive you. And will be a father unto you." Now please notice that this was further necessary for the claim of heirship. "And ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord." In the spiritual sense of sons and daughters I argue that God has not a people in Babylon. We become such by passing into His kingdom or family in His appointed way. We remain such by holding fast our confidence firm unto the end. A child of God may apostatize and go into Babylon, and thus become a wanderer from his Father's house. To such comes the admonition, "come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins."

"God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all the Churches of the Saints." Christians are "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that they should show forth the praises of Him who hath called them out of darkness into His marvelous light, which, in times past, were not a people of God, but are now the people of God; which had not obtained merey, but now have obtained mercy." All of these privileges are enjoyed by God's people in the sense of sons and daughters, i. e., Christians. Into this glorious state we are led by faith in God's word. Faith comes by hearing the word of God. Words are signs of ideas. We receive the words of God in the sense of understanding them, when we get the ideas embosomed within them. Faith in God's word does not lead us to the "mourners' bench;" neither does it lead us to the "confessional;" nor to accept of pardon before baptism; nor to the position that baptism is the door into the visible church; nor to confess that "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins before baptism." Then to the question: Are any of this class the people of God in the sense of spiritual sons and daughters?

Our Savior prayed for the union of all who should believe on Him through the words of His apostles. There is unity in their testimony. Their testimony produces the "one faith." The one faith leads to a reformation of life, to the good confession, and to the "one baptism." This introduces us into the "one body." Just here I submit another question: Can a person enter the "one body" and a "sectarian body" at one and the same time? For instance: If I believe that immersion is the door into the visible Church (the Baptist Church), and I desire to become a Christian, i. e., a Baptist Christian, can I pass through the same door into these divine and human bodies at one and the same time? It is accepted as an incontrovertible fact that "two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time." It has been left to critics of the nineteenth century to announce the position that "one body can occupy two different places at the same time." Are these so-called Christians in a saved state? If so, how is their condition improved by a change of states? A Christian is in Christ. All of the promises are in Christ. Can you claim a promise, then, that is not theirs? If they are not in a saved state, then they are not Christians. We cannot be partly in and partly out. We stand on the one side or the other.

My dear reader, where are you to-day?

J. D. SHAW, THE EX-METHODIST REVIVALIST AND INFIDEL.

Mr. Shaw is editing a monthly in Waco, Texas, called the Independent Pulpit, which is devoted to the wicked work of traducing God's Word. He exchanges with us, and we take some interest in him because he was a friend in our boyhood days, and also of many of our readers. After reading some of his blasphemous articles, we feel constrained to notice him to a small extent. It seems to be the prevailing idea among those who claim to be Christians that the safest and surest way to beat back the swift and steady tide of infidelity that is threatening to sweep over our entire land is to treat its leaders with silent contempt. But this is a very lame and false system of defense—a system that has grown out of very weak reasoning and a weaker faith. No true soldier of King Emmanuel can ever consent to let His banner trail in the dust, as these counsel. This cowardly, retreating system of warfare was not learned in the Book of Tactics that “thoroughly furnishes” those who have been chosen as true soldiers to fight the “good fight of faith.” If so-called Christians were living as they should, as true and faithful Christians would, then there might be some coloring of plausibility in such counseling; for others, seeing their good works, might be led “to glorify our Father which is in Heaven.” But when the various so-called Christian Churches all over so-called Christendom have lapsed into so many Sunday or seventh day societies, with two short meetings on Lord’s Day — and these two meetings a sort of recreation between two busy weeks, where the giddy-headed devotees of fashion resort to display themselves, bedecked in the height of forbidden “adorning”; a sort of orthodox play ground, where all sorts of fashionable carousals are indulged in to satiety — I say, when such is the most prominent aspect of what the world regards as the “body” or Church of Christ, and it is led to believe that such is authorized by His Word, for true soldiers to be silent means to surrender! But these shoddy Christians say: “If we will ignore the attacks of infidels, they will die of inattention, the people will not go to hear them,” etc. This is false reasoning. I dare say that Mr. Ingersoll can come into any town in Texas and lecture through a week of bad weather and have larger audiences than any minister in the United States would have, in fair weather. Yes, church members who have not darkened a church door in months would be on hand to hear him. This counseling of silence and inaction is the breath of sheer impotence, whether it has reference to the attacks of false brethren or of open and avowed infidelity. Christians must “put on the whole armor of God,” and come up to the conflict. They need not console themselves with the false idea that they can complacently fold their arms and remain in their present state of inaction, for the enemy is industriously marshaling his forces for a grand onslaught. He is flushed with his victories real, over orthodoxy, and now threatens to storm the very citadel of Truth. Brethren, the only way we can withstand the assaults of the enemy is to institute a most rigorous and vigorous discipline—just such as the tactics of the “Captain of our salvation” demands—and thus clear our ranks of stragglers, substitutes and hirelings of every description. Then, panoplied in the armor of true and faithful soldiers of the Cross, unfurl the spotless banner of Truth, disdaining any and all of the decorative inscriptions that the finger of orthodoxy might wish to inscribe upon this banner, and march like brave soldiers to the open field, or even upon the very ramparts of the enemy!

We have received two copies of J. D. Shaw's Independent Pulpit, in which he and his coadjutors are endeavoring to overturn the “faith once delivered to the Saints.” Thus far, however, we have encountered nothing that militates very heavily against “the faith.” Orthodoxy, however, has received some severe and just drubbings. As we are after truth, we are willing to recognize it wherever met, and hence can shake hands cordially with the Independent Pulpit even, on much it says. J. D. Shaw may fire away at orthodoxy to his heart's content without drawing any tears from us, although Isaac Errett's troop became so anxious for it as to sue in the courts for it, and obtained it, too. We have no sympathy for orthodoxy, but when J. D. Shaw, or any other man begins to wage war against the faith that Christians are bidden to “earnestly contend for,” silence is not to be relied upon, for it is not an “earnest contention.” If J. D. Shaw has any vailid reasons to offer as to why the Scriptures should not be received as trustworthy documents, we have no objection to him telling them in their most glowing colors. By all means, we say, let him tell them all! If the Scriptures are false, or can ever be made to appear so by the sophistry of Mr. Shaw or others, we say let it come. For if they are false the world would be better off to know it, and the sooner the better. In the very nature of things falsehood cannot benefit any one, but will always prove hurtful to those who nurse and perpetuate it. We thank God that our faith in His word and reverence for it, does not make us so cowardly as are some men, who profess to abound in faith of a superior quality. True faith, such as comes by hearing the word of God, brings love, and "perfect love casteth out fear." It is only this bogus faith, such as comes out of straw piles and wooden idols, etc., that needs to crouch and hide at any process of investigation. The light of reason burns up such combustible stuff. It being founded in nonsense and fiction, instead of reason and revelation, must, of necessity, hide when reason stalks abroad. Mr. Shaw's denial of Scripture is nothing new to us. We can find men who are venders of orthodoxy at very remunerative figures, nearer home than Mr. Shaw, who greatly excel him in denying the Bible, notwithstanding they raise such a pious wail over his course. But these men deny it by such a system of circumlocution that it takes an expert to catch them. Mr. Shaw used to follow this system himself, but has become a little more open and honest about it in later years. Christians are told to "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason for the hope that is in them, with meekness and fear." Not with the fear, however, that they are going to be found in a false position; because if they are, they should rejoice to learn it and change to truth; for the man who trades error for truth, makes a good trade every time. But they should fear lest they deport themselves so as to bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. The Bible does not command us to contend for the hallucinations and apparitions of Romish offspring but "for the faith once delivered to the saints;" and the man or woman who fails to do so, forfeits his or her right to be called a Christian, and rests under God's condemnation. I am sorry to have to confess here, that many of our brethren are in this sad condition, by recognizing the bogus, counterfeit baptism, instituted by the craftiest and most clandestine enemies of that "faith once delivered to the saints." That faith demands that faithful men go and teach the truth, and baptize those who hear, understand and obey it from the heart. Hence, Paul could say he was "not sent to baptize, but to preach the gospel." Preaching the gospel faithfully, as Paul did, prepared them for the baptism. We challenge the ingenuity of the brain-power of man to escape the logical conclusion, that Paul in this language was reproving some man's practice of baptizing people before preparing them by teaching. If Mr. Shaw does not believe the Bible, we say that he is worthy of more respect for saying so, than he would have been, had he stifled his conscientious convictions and remained where he was, for pay, as many of his old friends are doubtless doing, who shun him as they would a pest-house. A careful reading of Jim Shaw's writings shows that he considers orthodox and Bible teaching the same. We firmly believe from what we have read from his pen, that the light of the glorious Gospel might have been shown him, without much difficulty, when he first vomited up his inside baptism—Methodism. He, however, may now be a hopeless case; but, for our part, we had rather undertake to convert him and a dozen of his colleagues to the truth of the Bible than one of these long-faced, sanctimonious specimens of orthodoxy; especially one that is led by a "still small voice" that leads him where the Bible never leads any one. A heathen fable would be just as efficacious as God's word in bringing such to true repentance; because they "have been sent a delusion, that they might believe a lie, that they might all be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." 2 Thes. 2: 11, 12. All such as walk by the fitful star of delusion consider it degrading to labor with avowed infidels, when if they only knew the truth, their pet religious tenets and inconsistent dogmas are often the basis, the very ground-work, of the very worst types of infidelity that infest our land! The most virulent and flagitious enemies of Christianity are to be found among that class, who, like J. D. Shaw, were reared under the bewildering influences of some one of the branches of orthodoxy.

I know something of Jim Shaw's early training. We were brought up in the same part of Texas backwoods, Madison county. After he left Madison, however, I lost sight of him until about the time he became so very liberal in his religious views. His father was a good, moral man; one of the pioneers of Madison. The boys, Jim and Will,—the latter a very dear friend of ours in those days that have penciled their deeds so deeply on memory's page—were regarded as honest, straightforward boys. About the only complaint ever urged against them was for their fighting propensities, which was well founded; so, if Jim has not lost the courage of his boyhood, there is not much danger of orthodoxy backing him down. His father was a very devout Methodist,—we presume our readers know pretty well what that signifies. The old gentleman rarely let a meeting of his church go by without treating the audience to an exhortation, which was always warm; so warm that he rarely failed to bubble and boil over. I suppose Jim was pretty well drilled in the tactics of this orthodox branch before he left Madison, as it was generally understood that he was to make a Methodist preacher. At any rate, it is safe to say, that he went to the pulpit, as all other orthodox preachers do, filled to repletion with dogmas diametrically clashing with the very plainest teachings of Scripture. He was regarded as a bright boy, and we suppose he made a man of some brain-power—his leaving Methodism under the circumstances would indicate as much. Now, when he paused amid the maddening conflicts and confusions of orthodoxy, to reason upon the thing, we can imagine him trying to reconcile the following bits of the component parts of Methodism: 1. Man can do nothing until God sends His spirit, independent of His word, and opens his heart to the reception of the truth. 2. The sinner must wait God's own good time—it may be one, ten or twenty years—and if he dies before God sends it, he is damned. 3. God is just, etc. We might mention more, just as stunning to reason, but lack of space forbids. These are sufficient, however, to liberalize a whole orthodox campmeeting, if they would ever stop to reason, which they rarely do. I imagine that nowhere within the domain of reason, could Shaw, poor fellow, find reconciliation or rest for his troubled, honest brain. He was bound to and did see that if the sinner is entirely helpless, and must remain so until God sends this mysterious something to him, and he were to die without it, it would be God's fault that he did not have it, and hence, if God punished him because he did not have what He would not send him, that God was unjust. I do not blame him for such a decision: so long as he had to hold to the first two dogmas, his conclusion was inevitable; an abandonment of either of the propositions would have been equally as clear a rejection of Methodism. He, doubtless remembered, too, that the Bible says that "God is no respecter of persons." But reason taught him that if God would send His spirit to one man, and bless and save him, and withhold His spirit from another man and damn him for not having it, He "is a respecter of persons." So he thought he had caught the Bible in a falsehood, and thinks so yet, when it was only Methodism at fault. The Bible is not responsible for a bit of the foolishness and falsehood of orthodoxy, and we are sorry Mr. Shaw tries to saddle it off on it. If he will prove to us that the Bible is to blame for the inconsistencies, foolishness and falsehood of orthodoxy, we will help him to abuse it. Yes, we will give it a liberal abusing. We will be even more liberal than that: If he will prove it is responsible for one-tenth of this foolishness, we will yield to his liberalism. J. D. Shaw is really as ignorant as a horse concerning the teachings of the book he is trying to bring to shame. But this is not from a lack of sense, but because he was reared in an institution that fosters Bible ignorance. Not that they do not read the book, but because they are converted by this patent inside process, and afterwards, in reading the Bible they force it to bend to this process. From my personal knowledge of Mr. Shaw in the past, and from his writings, we are led to believe he is honest, and hence prompted to his course by laudable and conscientious motives. We believe that his old consorts have grossly slandered him in saying that his change is due to a failure to reach the tempting prize of a Bishopric. It, however, is well enough, we presume; he deserves all they can say of him for not reasoning himself out of their company long before he did. We may be partial to Jim Shaw, owing to the reminiscences of boyhood alluded to above, and sympathize with him deeply in his condition of spiritual darkness; but, if we know our own hearts, we had as soon stand before the great judgment seat of Christ as J. D. Shaw, editor of the Independent Pulpit, as to have stood before Him as J. D. Shaw, the popular orthodox revivalist. There is something so much more noble about open, avowed enmity than there is in this dissembling, disingenuous, hypocritical way of orthodoxy. In our estimation, J. D. Shaw, as baneful to real virtue and happiness as his course is, stands pre-eminently above Wm. Price and all of the liege-lords of orthodoxy, whether under the peculiar branch of Methodism, Baptistism, or Campbellism. We mean, from a worldly point of view, we would rather occupy Mr. Shaw's position, and before the bar of judgment, we would have no preference.

Infidelity is to deny the Scriptures; hence we had rather deny openly, as Mr. Shaw does, than clandestinely, but virtually, as do Wm. Price, Isaac Errett, and the orthodox world generally. Mr. Shaw is now in the midst of a discussion with Mr. Price, of the Texas Methodist, over the inspiration or truthfulness of the Scriptures. The latter, in this discussion, is pretending to defend the Bible, when, in fact, it is only one limb of the orthodox tree that he cares a fig for, viz.: Methodism. He may think that he has a high reverence for the Bible; if so, he is deceived. He will deny the Bible as flatly as Mr. Shaw will wherever it conflicts with his particular branch of orthodoxy! Let Mr. Shaw take up the New Testament and catechize the Reverend gentleman a little, and see if he will not deny it. For instance, let him ask him if he believes that a man can enter the Kingdom of God without being born of water and the Spirit, and see if he will not deny the essentiality of water. Again, let him ask him if the sinner must receive the Spirit to prepare his heart for the reception and obedience of the truth. See how flatly his answer to the first will contradict John 3: 5: "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God," and his answer to the last. John 14: 16, 17: "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another comforter. * * * Even the Spirit of Truth; whom the world cannot receive." Many other questions might be propounded to him that would call forth a denial of Scripture, but these will suffice to show that it is not the Bible for which he entertains such a holy reverence, but Methodism! A man who professes a greater respect for any of the isms, in this creed-bound age, than he does for what Mr. Shaw calls Liberalism, is either badly deceived as to what the New Testament teaches, or he is a hypocrite! We do not propose any premiums for infidelity; but from our heart and a due respect for God's word, we think it due a higher rank among men than orthodoxy or those seeking orthodoxy! Mr. Shaw is not now virtually denying the Bible any more than he was when wearing the name of Methodist; and all that prevents his knowing this to be true, is his utter ignorance of Scripture! Had he only known it, he could have waged a much more effective warfare against the Bible right where he was, and could have, at the same time, enjoyed the caresses and helps of the legions of orthodoxy. Hence, if Mr. Shaw had any particular spite against the Bible, and changed positions to do it harm, he made a bad exchange; he "traded the devil for the witch." But we believe honesty and real courage led him out of the mists of Methodism. We would suggest to him that he direct his efforts to disprove the resurrection of Jesus, as Christianity hinges upon this proposition. Why will he waste his time trying to fasten the charge of vulgarity and obscenity upon the Author of the Bible, as he is doing in his discussion with Dr. Price? Suppose that these expressions that he finds in the Bible, at which he is so horrified, should turn out to be an exact representation of the Divine mind: he forgets that God wrote or spoke to man in words or symbols that man was familiar with; hence, as man in Old Testament times was far behind man in our enlightened day in thoughts, and words to express his thoughts, God did not speak to him as a polished (?) gentleman of the nineteenth century, nor in its polite and fastidious phraseology. To have done which he would have had to first perform the miracle of transforming men of twenty-five hundred years ago into such specimens of gentility and taste as Mr. Shaw. But God went to man as he was, with ideas and language that he could understand. Yet, with all Mr. Shaw's advantages over these crude men of ages ago, I dare say that he has said many things that, were they put in print just as uttered by him, would look much worse than those expressions at which he is so shocked. A comparison of the Old Testament with the New, which is called a "better covenant," will show that there is a decided improvement in the ideas and expressions, which we hope Mr. Shaw does not think is owing to any improvement in God! This will show that, by gradual development, God has improved man until he is capable of understanding and appreciating nobler aims, conveyed to him through more elegant language. Mr. Shaw ought to be thankful for these evident marks of improvement, and ought to have been when he was a Methodist. It is clinging to this obsolete Testament, which, according to Mr. Shaw, is so replete with indecencies, that ever made Methodism possible, and that now perpetuates it. We are astonished that a man of his sense did not see it sooner, and instead of waging war against God and His word, because the people of twenty-five hundred years ago were uncouth ignoramuses, we think that he ought to give Him all the praise for whatever outcome is manifest in man, seeing that that outcome or improvement is strictly confined to that portion of the earth where His word has been more or less received and allowed to have free course, as vulgar and obscene as Mr. Shaw regards it. In conclusion, we repeat that if Christ arose from the dead, and we affirm that He did, Christianity rests upon an impregnable basis; a foundation that bids defiance to all such weak, silly movements as our friend Shaw is depending on, to move it one jot; or any mode of attack that he may plan in the future. Even if he were to prove to the satisfaction of everybody that there are expressions in the Old Testament that are really indecent, who would be responsible for the indecency, God or man? However this question may be decided between those two deniers of God's word, the question of our Lord's resurrection remains the same. Mr. Shaw accuses the God of the Bible of vulgarity; and Mr. Price accuses Him of teachings which, if true, would convict Him of folly!

If Mr. Shaw would take a look at the Bible without the use of Methodist spectacles, it would be a new book to him.

He never will see it really and truly, while he looks after it through such hindrances, or any other glasses of orthodox manufacture. He had as well try to see the full orb'd sun at midnight! We conclude that if Mr. Shaw should become convinced that the Methodist discipline is a book of reversals and contradictions of the Bible, that he would then have to re-read the Bible in order to reach clear conclusions as to what it does teach! Try the experiment, Mr. Shaw, and we would not be astonished to yet see you contend for the faith that you have so long and violently assailed, both as a Methodist and a liberalist.

A. McG.

TRYING TO ELUDE DETECTION BY POINTING TO SIDE ISSUES AND DODGING BEHIND TECHNICALITIES.

Bro. McGary states that I defend "Baptist baptism." He has had ample opportunity to know this is not true, and if he expects to be regarded as a truthful man, he must not repeat it. We have no more faith in Baptist baptism, than we have in Bro. McGary's. Both are sinful. Bro. McGary accuses his brethren of being Campbellites, yet will receive no baptism unless performed by these same Campbellites. Verily, he is the most complete Campbellite I know. We say that men may submit to the baptism ordained by Christ, whether performed by Baptists or by Bro. McGary. When this is done, it is acceptable to God. When done to please Bro. McGary or the Baptists, or when done through his reasoning or theirs, it is sinful. Bro. McGary must not get so far over, like other sectarians, that he cannot correctly represent his brethren. At least he must not leap clear over into such unfair sectarianism as this at once. By the by, Bro. McGary never told us whether he thought A. Campbell, T. Fanning, and that host of heroes who suffered all to obey God, committed a sin when they, having learned that Baptism was a command of God, gladly obeyed the command before they learned it was for the remission of sins. Sometimes clear examples help more than human reasoning.—D. Lipscomb, in Gospel Advocate.

We are really sorry to see a man of Bro. D. Lipscomb's strength and usual show of courage get into a situation where he has to chafe and squirm as he has done here. He richly deserves the castigation that is in store for him, and he should stand up bravely and take it. He plaited the whip with his own hands, and if he aimed it for a plaything, he should not have made it so heavy! As we have repeatedly said, we love Bro. L. for his earnestness and devotion to the truth as he sees it. But our fealty to the "Captain of our salvation," who has commanded us, through His chosen witnesses, to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," forces us to pain Bro. L. as we do. He has some "commandments of men"—a "host of heroes who suffered all to obey God"—that he persistently holds on to and "teaches for doctrine." So long as he holds to this "vain worship" we intend to "reprove, rebuke and exhort him with long suffering and doctrine," even if we have to employ weapons, of his own manufacture in our work against him. As a faithful soldier in the service of our King, which we try to be, we could not consent to permit our love for Bro. L., or anyone else, even though it were father, mother, brother or sister, to stand between us and that duty that devolves upon all who have been chosen as His soldiers. We will here kindly apprise Bro. L. that he has only thus far been subjected to the initial part of our contemplated attacks upon his inconsistencies. We intend to attack at different points all along the line, from his attack of Fort Grubax to his gallant victory at Fort Griffin! unless he surrenders, which those who know him best say he will not do. I tell you this, Bro. L., that you may put yourself in training for the exercise of more patience. Every mail brings us subscribers who are old readers of the Advocate, and occasionally a bit of news that will help in our work. But, if you will affirm your teaching on this baptismal question and go to work from that standpoint to defend it by Scripture teaching, we would much prefer to test its strength in that way than the one indicated; besides, it would save us great space and trouble. This is the course that Bro. L. should pursue. It is a surprise to many of his readers that he has not pursued this course long ago. If he will not do this, he has no right to complain at our course, which we deem the surest and safest left us, by which to show earnest brethren how the body of Christ is being jumbled together with those human institutions that are perpetuated by the power of "men's commandments." Bro. L. has gained such a hold upon the minds of many of his readers that an error taught by him is liable to gain a foothold in many honest and conscientious minds. He has told his readers that baptism submitted to "to honor God," is valid, whether its obedience springs from an understanding heart or not. In this he does not "speak as the oracles of God speak," but as D. Lipscomb! Many of his readers quote him quite glibly on this question, instead of inspiration.

We challenge Brother L., or any of his readers, to show where God's word says that "baptism is valid when submitted to, to honor God;" or that anything authorizes him, or them to say it. Brother L. claims to have great reverence for God's word; but we are beginning to fear that his reverence for a human plea outweighs his reverence for God's word. He violently opposes missionary societies because they are not authorized by God's word, as he says, and yet he clings to "Our Plea," for the union of sects in the "one body," which is no more authorized by God's word than missionary societies. He knows this as well as any one. Why this difference and inconsistency? If reverence for the word of God, in one instance, leads him to oppose that which is unauthorized, why not in the other? We do not mean to be understood as saying that he has lost all love for God's word, but certain "wisdom which is earthly, sensual, devilish," leads him sometimes to see a distinction where there is no difference, except in his own fertile imagination. A man who will not confess his inconsistencies to his brethren, when they are pointed out to him as plainly as we pointed out Brother L.'s in the October issue of our pamphlet, is, beyond all cavil, a dangerous leader of the blind. Right here we will say to such as have subscribed since that issue, who may want to see just the condition Brother L. is in, on this question, to send us two cents postage, and we will furnish it to them, even if we have to reprint to supply them. Brother L. says: "Brother McGary states that I defend Baptist baptism. He has had ample opportunity to know that this is not true, and if he expects to be regarded as a truthful man he must not repeat it."

We would inform our indignant brother that we do value very highly our reputation for truthfulness; and shall ever vindicate it when we consider it in any danger of suffering damage; yet, under a very jealous watch-care of it, we repeat, "that Brother D. Lipscomb labored very hard in the Advocate, last spring, in a series of articles, to prove that Baptist baptism was valid." We have no fears of Brother L. being artful enough in his dodging to find a technicality large enough to hide behind, from which he can very seriously impair our veracity, his uncharitable insinuation to the contrary notwithstanding! We showed up some very glaring inconsistencies in Brother L.'s teaching, and instead of mud-slinging as he has, we dare say many of his readers expected him to evince a better spirit. We care nothing for his fling about his lack of faith "in Brother McGary's baptism." We have no baptism. If any one has just grounds of complaint it is the writer. Brother L. has misrepresented us when he says that we will not take any baptism that is not performed by "Campbellites." Every brother who has talked with us on this question, lengthily, knows that we raise no issue as to the administrator, but always maintained that it makes no difference who he is, or what his faith is. But we do not charge Brother L. with wilfully misrepresenting us. I presume the reason is that we are not "mad; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness." Brother L. says: "By the by; Brother McGary never told us whether he thought A. Campbell, T. Fanning, and that host of heroes who suffered all to obey God, committed a sin when they, having learned that baptism was a command of God, gladly obeyed the command, before they learned that it was for the remission of sins." Brother L., why do you consider it incumbent on us to answer this? What issue, or principle does your distorted vision think it sees in there? Are you trying to coax us off from the real issue, after a jack-'o-lantern? This is, at least, the second time you have asked us this question. As a reward for your industry on it, we will answer it for you in a way that we dare say will cause you to give a rest on it for a while, at least. But, before giving the answer, we must let our readers—such as have not read you on this question—know why you want the answer. Brethren, Bro. L. has said that if a man learns baptism to be a command of God, it is right for him to obey it, whether he knows the end to be gained or not. He called upon us to deny this, if we could. He further states, that if it is right for a man to obey the command of God, to be baptized, as soon as he learns that it is a command, then it is wrong for him to be baptized again, even though he did not know its design at first. By what parity of reasoning he reaches this conclusion, we know not! Well, for the present, to save time, we will answer Bro. L.'s question, by asking him one, viz.: Was it right in the twelve whom Paul found at Ephesus, to be baptized "unto John's baptism," when they "learned" that baptism was a command of God? Again, if it was right in them, was it wrong in Paul to cause them to be baptized again? Now, you answer this, Brother L., and we will take it for our answer to yours, if you will give a fair one. "Sometimes clear examples help more than human reasonings!" Will you do it? "If not, why not?" But why should Brother Campbell and Brother Fanning, or other heroes, be dragged into this question? We think that Brother L. is infringing upon a sectarian patent right when he resorts to such silly questions. By the by, if we have been correctly informed, and we think we have, very recently, Brother Fanning's brother, who lives in Brother L.'s State, says that Brother L. is mistaken about Brother F. not understanding the design of baptism before he obeyed. Also, there is a report in that same State that Brother D. Lipscomb is the man who did not understand the design when he was baptized. If this is true, it may help to explain why Brother L. holds so tenaciously to a lost case—a forlorn hope. Try it over, Brother L., and "honor God" in fact.

We would remind Brother L. that there was "a host of heroes" in this world before those he mentions, "who suffered all to obey God," too. These suffered stripes, imprisonment, and death, to bequeath to earth's wandering lost their richest heritage, the way of salvation. This way is bound in earth and heaven by its Author. Every other way but this "bound" one, is of the devil, even if their inaugurators have imitated certain appointments of this "bound" way. True followers of Christ will refuse to recognize any of the work wrought through the commands of these foreign ways. Our Lord sent his chosen men into all the world, to teach the truth on all things that pertain to life and Godliness. These men left the idea in the world, clearly taught from their mouths and their pens, that baptism is for the remission of sins. Those who inaugurated these other ways, left a denial that baptism is for the remission of sins. According to the provisions of the commission under which the God-sent men taught, those who believed what they said and were baptized, were promised salvation from past sins. These other ways are "wholly of men" and "drive God out of the work." Now, some men, who claim to be earnestly contending for the way "delivered" to these God-sent men, say that it is not necessary to believe that baptism was for what they said it was. That question, if these teachers are right, is a non-essential. Thus they pervert the Savior's words and promises. Who believes that if some man had preached this denial of Peter's words on the day of Pentecost, as is done in this day by the sectarian world—and virtually endorsed by Brother L.,—that Peter would have united his converts and the deniers in one body? The "truth" is to be known before it can be obeyed from the heart, and until it is obeyed from the heart, it does not liberate from past sins.

In conclusion, I want to say to Brother L. that I desire to show him due respect in what I may have to say about some of his very inconsistent teachings. I ask him to bear it as patiently as he can; I have great respect for him; and yet hope to see him accept the truth. But I can not permit my respect for him, or any one else, to deter me from showing up false teaching.

"By-the by," Bro. Lipscomb never told us what course he intended to pursue in the future, with reference to those who come to us from a church that converted them by a "course that is wholly of men, and one that drives God out of the work?" Tell us, my brother; we are anxious to know! Are you going to be blinded by rage, and vent your spleen by ugly insinuations at us? I assure you that I will not wilfully misrepresent you. God grant that you may be able to see your inconsistencies, and that in fleeing from them you may leave behind all humanisms, whether advocated by Bro. Campbell, Bro. Fanning, or yourself! It is not an understanding of their teaching, or what condition this or that change would leave them in, that should so much concern us; but what saith the Scriptures? If you point me to the practices of this "host of heroes," or their faith, I would point you to those sent by our Lord in person, and "the faith once delivered to them!" Forgive me, my brother, for wounding you; I love you; but you are trying to defend and perpetuate a humanism. A. McG.

A QUEER GOSPEL.

We have received a letter from a dear friend, who insists that "the Gospel" is the miracles contained in the Bible. He says for a man to preach the Gospel he must go into the world and tell these miracles. We have no objection to the wonderful manifestations of God's power being told, for everybody ought to know of them; but to call this the Gospel, in that abstract sense that our friend does, can only grow out of a morbid, distorted, and imaginative brain. A little attention to the rules of common sense, in connection with Revelation, it seems, ought to clear this matter up for him. We have wasted much time trying to show him the truth on these questions, and have heretofore met with such ill success, that we have not the heart to go very lengthily into a discussion of the subject now. However, as he requested us to give some attention to his view, we will do so by propounding some questions to him:

1. Did not the Lord send the Apostles to preach the Gospel?
2. Did they go and preach the Gospel?
3. If we can find a record of what they preached under that commission, will we not have a record of the Gospel?
4. What book gives us this record?
5. Does that book record no preaching but the kind suggested by my friend? Again, Paul says that when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from Heaven with his mighty angels, "He will take vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ." Now, if my friend is right, such things as the great deluge, the burning bush, the plagues of Egypt, the passage of the children of Israel, dry shod, through the Red Sea and over Jordan, the supply of manna while in the wilderness, the fate of Lot's wife, etc., constitute the Gospel wholly! If he is right, will he please inform us how we can "obey" such a queer Gospel? For obey it we must, or God will take vengeance on us. I would suggest to my friend that the best way for us to come to an agreement on this—for we are a long way apart—is for us to start with our Lord's commission when He said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," and follow by the eye of faith these "sent" men and see what they preached. That is the Gospel that I want to contend for, whether it agrees with my friend's view of the case or not; because our Savior said whoever believed this Gospel and was baptized should be saved. A. A WORD TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

To those who have written us so heartily endorsing the course that the FIRM FOUNDATION is struggling to pursue, as well as to all who have reserved to themselves the God-given prerogative of reviewing His word in the light of reason, unclouded and undimmed by the lowering and murky shadows of that partisanship that now so seriously threatens to blind the people against "the straight and narrow way," we desire to say a few special words. We are receiving, brethren, counsel from so-called Christian editors and others, asking us to cease to agitate the baptismal question! They all virtually admit that it will produce a revolution among us; and they all intimate that there are some things that it is not best for the masses of our brethren to see discussed! Great God and Father! has it come to this, that those who have so long clamored for the unshackling and untrammelling of the mind from the iron fetters of party spirit, are in this day of boasted enlightenment engaged in the wicked work of restraining, by indirect processes, the exercise of religious liberty on the part of the masses! Brethren, it is an outright insult to your good sense; a long stride in the direction of a most dreadful ec-clesiasticism, to thus call in question, by insinuation, your right to measure by reason and revelation, the length, breadth, depth and height of all that can be said pro and con upon this, as well as all questions that pertain to life and Godliness. The FIRM FOUNDATION has, from the outset, thrown its columns open to any man who will freely and fairly discuss this question. It is only truth that we want. God's word contains nothing but truth; hence, if we contend for nothing but God's word, we cannot be contending for a "new gospel," as some say we are. The brethren are capable of sorting out truth from error, the insulting insinuations of the clergy to the contrary notwithstanding. If we counsel the brethren to a stricter, closer observance of God's word, speaking where it speaks and remaining silent where it does not speak, how can we be proclaiming "another Gospel"? If this course "disturbs peaceful churches," then every faithful "soldier of our Captain" is commanded to prosecute just such "disturbances," and is promised "a crown of righteousness" at the hands of "the Lord, the Righteous Judge," as an unfading reward for his faithful adherence to the duty! The sportive toys and blandishments of the world, and treacherous brethren, may lure some into the devil's service, in party harness; but THE FIRM FOUNDATION, eschewing such temptations, will continue to contend for all of the ordinances of the Lord, freed from the blighting admixtures of man, faithfully to the end of its days, which we hope and believe is not very close at hand.

Brethren, we want you to make an earnest effort for the work within the next thirty days, for we desire to begin in the December issue a series of articles on "the one baptism." From this time forth, we aim to use such financial means as we may accumulate through our subscription list in enlarging the pamphlet. Many old pioneers from different States have written to us that they desired to be heard through our columns on this question, and we desire that our subscribers shall hear them. Help us, brethren, to enlarge the work. Each of you can send us a club of five, if you will try, which, if you will do, we will double the size of the pamphlet.

A MODERN PASTOR ON THE WING.

Brethren, look out for a wandering "dudeish" pastor. We presume that he is hunting a job! He is quite small; but by the aid of Isaac Errett's magnifying powers he was made to look large enough for the Austin Church. I warn you against making any rash engagements with him, as you might in these hard times, fall short of your obligations, and he might levy on your Church building for his pay, as I hear he threatened to do here. Pastor Hall, of St. Louis, who used to be boss of the Austin Church, was down here in the spring, soon after the Church had "called" this hanger-on of Errett's; and he told this Church that if it wanted to be a "live Church, it must stand up to its pastor." But since that advice, they have even refused to retain their pastor at the pittance of one hundred dollars per month! Also, they have re-instated one of the old elders that Pastor Hall is said to have manipulated out of the "office!" So it will be seen that they have rejected the counsel of the St. Louis prelate, to no small extent. Now, if they would just turn to the New Testament, and be guided by it a while, they would be able to determine as to which is the best, "modern pastoral" rule or God's government. I hope they will try it.

HUMILITY.

We know a preacher who used to be a menial for a friend of ours, and we are told that he was a very humble servant, so much so, that he even bore slaps on his cheeks without "reviling." But now, he is so popular as a preacher that he seems to be "lifted up with pride!" We are told that he now fairly struts in his "gay clothing" and golden spectacles! How strange that a servant of the humblest Being that ever trod the earth, should lose his humility in that sphere! The best time to be humble is when one is preaching humility. It does seem that we all ought to be as humble as the "King" of heaven and earth, but we are far from it. I shall mail this pamphlet to the preacher referred to, whom we love for his work's sake in the past. We hope and trust that he may see himself in it, and instead of becoming offended, as most men would, measure himself and lop off all worldliness. A. MCG.

UNTO WHAT THEN WERE YOU BAPTIZED?

J. W. J.

“And it came to pass that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the uppercoasts, came to Ephesus, and finding certain disciples, he said unto them: Have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed? And they said unto him: We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Spirit. And he said unto them: Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said: Unto John's baptism. Then, said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.” Acts xix, 1-5.

1. Who were the parties found at Ephesus by Paul? “Certain disciples.” The qualifying word here indicates these disciples as a distinct class. That they were in the Church and recognized as members, is evident from the context.

2. What was their character? They are called disciples, and judging from the prompt and hearty obedience rendered when they learned the way of the Lord more perfectly, were devout believers and worshipers of God.

3. They were evidently satisfied with their spiritual status, and doubtless thought themselves entitled to all the promises in Christ. But an insuperable difficulty presents itself; they do not understand the baptism of Christ, and their not understanding it, results from not having heard or learned of it. I say the ignorance was in reference to baptism, because the question asked had direct reference to that promise directly connected with baptism. “Have you received the Holy Spirit since you believed?” “We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Spirit.” “Unto what, then, were you baptised?” “Unto John's baptism.” That explains the whole matter. Paul knew just where to begin and what to teach these disciples in order to give them an understanding of the doctrine of Christ. But why should they be “re-baptized?” Was it the absence of the formula “into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit?” No one, I hope, will fall into the Catholic superstition that the naming or calling of this formula over a thing or action makes it sacred in the estimation of God. While I believe the formula necessary, I believe it to be more necessary for the convert to understand the meaning of it.

John's baptism was simply another baptism, and not valid under the reign of Christ. It was obedience, but not obedience to Christ. One of the essential elements of every act of obedience is that the authority of the lawgiver must be apprehended and recognized by the actor. These disciples did not understand certain things connected with baptism. When they learned the truth they obeyed it, and we never hear of Paul being called a re-baptizer because he taught and commanded Christian baptism and did not accept John's baptism.

I wish, however, to pursue this subject still further and contrast these baptisms. First as to John's baptism:

1. The authority was from God.
2. It was preached only to Jews, who believed in God. Hence, the faith required of them was faith in God.
3. Repentance toward God. The Jews were transgressors of the law given by God to them.
4. Confession of their sins.
5. It was immersion in water.
6. It was for the remission of sins.
7. John taught these "prepared people" to look for a coming Messiah.
8. Their baptism did not change the relation of the subject. They were Jews, subjects of the Kingdom of God instituted at Mount Sinai, and they remained under the law after their baptism.

9. It had no relation to the Holy Spirit. Now contrast these items with the baptism commanded by Christ:

1. It is by the authority of Christ.
2. Faith in the Christ the Son of God an absolute pre-requisite.
3. Repentance, in His name, precedes it.
4. With the mouth confession of the Lord Jesus is made unto salvation.
5. It is immersion in water.
6. It is for the remission of sins.
7. It changes the relationship of the subject. There is now neither Jew (under the law) nor Gentile (without law), but all are one body in Christ. God is our Father, the Son of God our Prophet, Priest and King, and the Spirit of God our Comforter.

A similar analysis of the baptism practised by the denominations will show that they are not by the authority of Christ, but by the authority of the respective bodies practising it.

The authority that prescribes our act must necessarily include within its scope every antecedent step necessary to bring the subject to the act commanded. If these antecedent steps are not always expressed, they are necessarily implied. These antecedents thus become a part of the main act and give to it a quality which it can not possess without them. Authority, however, reaches further and commands a certain act for a certain purpose. Now, if authority must include those things antecedent to the act, whether expressed or implied, it certainly must include that consequent purpose unto which every antecedent step, and even the act itself, is commanded. If this reasoning be true, and I see no escape from it, then every disciple who has been baptized unto some other baptism should be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

The remission of sins is by the authority of Christ; no one will deny this. It is connected with baptism; this is not denied. It is the end or purpose unto which we must be baptized. This the Apostles teach and some deny. To deny Christ's authority in one point, is just as bad as to deny it altogether. Faith in Christ obeys Christ, and does not deny Him.

There are certain disciples in our land who can be easily found, and though we cannot expect that they ever will receive the miraculous gift of the Holy Spirit, still we might press them with the question, "Unto what then were you baptized?"

If you say authority should be supplied here, I will ask then, unto what authority were you baptized? Remember that Christ does not share His authority with man nor with any body of men since the Apostles; and that obedience to Him recognizes His authority in everything. Faith purifies the heart, because it is faith in Christ; repentance is unto life, because it brings us a step nearer to God; confession of the Lord Jesus is unto salvation, because it is acknowledgment of our allegiance to the Lord of all; baptism is unto salvation or remission of sins, because here the returning prodigal meets the crowning acts of Christ's authority, and in full assurance of faith he can press on seeing in every act commanded a binding power that brings life to the soul, and animates it with a cheering hope of everlasting bliss; and all this because Christ is in all He commanded. To accept these and abide in them by faith and love is to live; to deny them is to deny Christ and die.

MIRACLES AND PREACHING.

J. W. J.

In order to assist the friend alluded to in last number of the FIRM FOUNDATION, who thinks that the Gospel is the miracles contained in the Bible, I ask his attention to a few Bible facts.

The Apostle Paul says that the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation.—Rom. i: 16. This is simple and conclusive. It needs no comment. Miracles are also the power of God. "No man can do these miracles except God be with him." "God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul." But miracles are not the power of God unto salvation.

Miracles have no necessary connection with the Gospel, consequently no necessary connection with salvation. Indeed, a miracle unexplained, was just as likely to produce a false impression as a true one. Note the visit of Paul and Barnabas to Lystra, when the cripple was healed. The ignorant multitude saw the effect, but not understanding the cause, nor the reason, said the gods have come down to us, and set about to offer sacrifices to these men.

Why, then, did God thus exhibit His power? In order to "bear witness" to the persons whom He sent. To confirm their mission as divine; for, as no man could work these miracles, except God was with him, so the miracle wrought was evidence to those who saw it, that God had sent the worker of it, and what he might say was entitled to credence as the word of God. Miracles were necessary in the days of the Apostles to demonstrate their divine mission. They did not confirm the truth, as some think, but confirmed the men as God's messengers.—Heb. ii: 1-4. Our faith is predicated upon evidence, the very same evidence that convinced the Pentecostians, and Cornelius and his household, and the only confirmation truth can have is additional testimony. Do not fall into the error of the early Jews, who were constantly asking for a sign from heaven, nor indeed into the folly of the Greeks who sought after Philosophy, but accept the Gospel of Christ as the power of God unto salvation to every believer. The Apostles worked miracles and preached the Gospel, and Paul says that "after that, in the wisdom of God, the world, by wisdom, knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching (not working miracles) to save them that believe."

THE DESIGN OF BAPTISM.

"We have no authority for interpreting or teaching what the design of baptism is. Here we have done foolishly. We do not preach about the design of faith, the design of repentance, and yet we could get up plausible theories about these and display much learned ignorance. As we teach that a man should believe and repent, so we should teach that men should be baptized. As to the design of these, that is wholly with God. If we submit he gives the blessing, regardless of our theories of design."—Old Path Guide, Sept. 26, 1884.

The above is broad and liberal enough for this progressive age. Evidently the writer thinks that there has been a great deal of foolish preaching and foolish writing by such men as Campbell, Stone, Scott, Creath, Hall and others. They made a great mistake in their attempts to restore to baptism its true value and significance. Theories had made it a "non-essential," and these theories continue to be preached and obeyed, and we must cease preaching the design of baptism and let these theories alone. The blessing will be given, no matter what the theory. Another step towards orthodoxy: Come now, Bro. Baptist, as we admit that you are in the kingdom, and we agree to keep silent as to the design of baptism, and we admit that your flagged seats are a good thing, you certainly can't refuse to acknowledge our orthodoxy.

Progression—towards Babylon or Jericho, or the Dead Sea, which?

It is necessary to preach the design of baptism:

1. Because God has connected with baptism a design. Hence the design is a part of the counsel of God and a preacher cannot declare the whole counsel of God unless he declares the design of baptism.

2. It must be preached because this design "remission of sins" is the one grand reason for seeking Christ. Remission of sins is by the authority of Christ; this authority is embodied in the command, "be baptized," but does not terminate there. The same authority that commanded the action, annexed thereto the promise; hence, the promise is clothed with just as much authority as the command, and being thus connected by divine authority and expressed by inspiration, man must not put them asunder.

3. The design must be preached because it must be known and believed in order to the "full assurance of pardon."

What assurance of pardon have those persons who ignore, or do not understand the design of baptism? None whatever. Oh, but God gives the blessing regardless of their theories. It is certainly a blessing in disguise, for they think they are pardoned when they believe; the Church thinks they are pardoned when the experience is related, and they decide it to be so by a vote; the Church and its convert think baptism a "non-essential," but still insist that in order to enjoy Church privileges it is very essential to obey this non-essential. Theory preached and believed has caused all this confusion; turn to God's word and preach it in its purity and plainness, and all these "think so's" vanish away, and the convert rejoices in the knowledge of remission of sins.

J. W. J.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

"For he that takes up the opinions of any Church in the lump, without examining them, has truly neither searched after, nor found truth, but has only found those that he thinks have found truth, and so receives what they say with an implicit faith, and so pays them the homage that is due only to God, who cannot be deceived, nor deceive. In this way the several Churches (in which, as one may observe, opinions are preferred to life, and orthodoxy is that which they are concerned for, and not morals) put the terms of salvation on that which the Author of our salvation does not put them in. The believing of a collection of certain propositions, which are called and esteemed fundamental articles, because it has pleased the compilers to put them into their confessions of faith, is made the condition of salvation."

—Locke.

"There can be no question as to the fact that obedience is necessary to the value and efficacy of the states of the mind and head which, in turn, give value to obedience. While this is the case, it must be understood that the obedience is that which was prescribed by the law-givers, and not some other which men may think will answer the same purpose. If the law prescribes wine as an element of the Eucharistic feast, it can hardly be safe and respectful to put in its place colored water, sweetened, and of like specific gravity. If the law has prescribed one form of baptism (to speak after the manner of men) it is an assumption of the divine prerogative to employ any other. Human authority allows no such privilege to the subjects of a State to alter, modify or amend its ordinances at will. When equivalents may be substituted, the law must state what those equivalents are, for no other party knows. If a court of equity is permitted to regard and determine equivalents, the law-making power must establish such a court. Such a court for spiritual cases may sit in the heavens, and may, in the end, pass on equivalents or substitutes; but we have no advice of the existence of such a court, and it can not be less than presumption to act on the assumption that there is. The only safe course, therefore, is to render obedience in the way prescribed. Any other course will obliterate all lines of distinction between the Church, and the world, and oblige toleration of the most latitudinarian views, and any mode of obedience men may prefer, and indeed no obedience at all."—Christian Quarterly.

BY JOHN S. DURST.

In the memorable prayer of our Saviour recorded in John 17, after praying for himself and his Apostles, He offered the following petition: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. I in thee and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." Our Saviour dwells with his disciples in his body and through his words. Christians are members of the body of Christ. Christ is the head of the body. Hence the body possesses the mind of Christ. The body is composed of individual members. The body without the spirit is dead. If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His. For as many as are led by the spirit of God are the sons of God. Therefore have we the admonition, "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." The petition is for those who should believe on Him through the words of the Apostles. They were given words emanating from the Father and coming through the Son. "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." Words are signs of ideas. No one can receive the words of our Saviour in order to salvation from sins, without understanding them. "He that receives the seed into good ground is he that heareth the word and understandeth it." We rejoice that the law of remission of sins, through which we become the sons of God, is plain and easy of comprehension. The Prophet says: "And a highway shall be there, and a way; and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.—Isaiah xxxv: 8. Unless we comprehend the simple and plain teachings that lead unto the way of holiness, the Gospel of Christ must fail to prove "The power of God unto (or in order to) salvation."

The Gospel saves when received by faith into an honest and understanding heart. "Without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." It is not only necessary to believe that He is, but our faith must embrace more. A reward awaits those who diligently seek Him. Now, it will be conceded that the seeking must be as He has directed, and not as man has directed.

The Gospel is a savor of life unto life unto the intelligent believer. It is not a savor of life unto life unto those who fail to comprehend its divine significance.

The elements essential for the lost to be delivered from the power of darkness, and to be translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, are few and simple; and still they are so essential that without their reception in the exact order revealed, no one can claim to have complied with the will of God. With the denominations we have different beginnings.

tism, and that without prayer or mourning; with others repentance is urged as the first great commandment. Without a more accurate knowledge than is here indicated of the divine will, it could scarcely be hoped that any could become wise unto salvation. Hence we can not too earnestly urge the value of the first elements which lead into this state. That which comes before all others, and without the existence of which everything else is useless, is faith. Without faith it is impossible to please Him. Whatsoever is not of faith is sin. That is, whatsoever is not the fruit, product or offspring of faith, can prove of no value. No demand can be made of any one before faith. Many teachers in the sects array against this the declaration of Paul: "I have testified both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ." Also, that of the Saviour, "Repent ye, and believe the Gospel." In the first quotation, Paul simply declares what he had taught, i. e., amendment of life toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, without reference to the order of the items. If we inquire of Paul, what is the first requirement made of the Greeks? We turn to the very first commandment he ever gave a Greek, at Phillipi, about the hour of midnight, where the question was asked, "What must I do to be saved?" And hear him answer: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved and thy house. And he spake the word of the Lord to all that were in his house, and the same hour of the night he was baptized and all his, straightway, and rejoiced, believing in God, with all his house."

The passage in Mark, referred to above, was applicable to the Jews only who were then believers in God, and had been from childhood, but who had practically forsaken God in violating His holy law. Therefore, to the Jews who acknowledged the authority of the God of Israel, the order was reformation towards God as a necessary pre-requisite for the exercise of the faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. But it is the extreme of folly to teach a Greek who was without God and without hope, repentance and afterwards faith. A person who believes nothing can not be sensible of repentance; and as the indispensable condition to an intelligent amendment of life, the subject must believe that God is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. To those, then, who would enjoy the salvation of Christ, faith stands forth as the first possible requirement. It is now in order to ask, what is faith? The Bible defines it but once: "Now faith is the substance (confidence) of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen." Heb. 12: 1. What we look upon, is a subject of demonstration, and not a subject of faith. We walk by faith, not by sight. Consequently our confidence upon the testimony that God is, and is a rewarder of all who diligently seek Him, is faith.

An opinion, conjecture, impression or dream, can not be the ground of faith, or of what exists, or will exist. Much, therefore, that is generally accepted as faith, has no connection with it at all.

Faith comes by hearing the word of God. The Savior prayed that all who shall believe on Him through the words of the Apostles might be one. The blessing is to all who shall believe on me as the scriptures say.

P. S.—As I purpose continuing this subject through a number of papers, I ask a careful perusal connectedly, when I am done, by the readers of the FIRM FOUNDATION, and then I will read with interest, (and I trust, with an unbiased mind) any friendly criticism that may appear.

J. S. D.

BRIDGEPORT, ILL.,
November 1, 1884.

Dear Bro. McGary:

I have concluded, as I have a little spare time this morning, to give the readers of the FIRM FOUNDATION a few thoughts. Many of our preachers and scribes have become so slack in their utterances and so liberal in their expressed views, that they have to a great extent obscured the true poctrine of Christ. And because other people manifest much real and some moral character they are ever ready to admit their acceptance with God, and to accord to them true Christian character. Now, we are expressly told by the Apostle Paul that if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. In order, therefore, to be a Christian, one must first be in Christ. And as there is but one way by which we can enter into Christ, it necessarily follows that those who have not followed that way are not in Christ at all. It certainly makes no difference how moral or pious one may be; if he has not obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered (Rom. 6), he has not been made free from sin, nor become a servant of righteousness. The form of doctrine is to become dead to sin, and to be buried with Christ in baptism, wherein also we are risen with Him. (Col. 2:12.) And this leads me here to speak of intelligent baptism. It is true the subject has been ably presented by you in the FIRM FOUNDATION, as well as in the Advocate, but yet I desire to add my thoughts.

Now, if we are to obey from the heart the form, or model of doctrine delivered, it is necessary to know what is meant by "from the heart." In order to illustrate the meaning of the expression, "from the heart," it will be necessary to take an example from the New Testament. Take then the example of the three thousand at the great Pentecost. There we are told that they were pierced in heart. What was it that pierced their hearts? It was evidently the words spoken by Peter. Was it their fleshly hearts that were cut? No; it was their consciences that were reached through their understandings by hearing the truth. In the parable of the sower and the seed, the seed that brought forth fruit fell into good ground; explained to be into good and honest hearts. Take notice they were honest hearts. What are we to infer from the word honest? A heart or mind willing to receive the word and to comply with its requirements. A heart to be willing to comply with the requirements of the word, must know those requirements. The next question, then, is, how do we know anything, or what is the process by which we take cognizance of any fact or proposition? It is through some one or more of the five senses. Now, let us go back to Pentecost. Peter preached the word; it reached the auditory nerve; sensation was produced; then followed perception, then reason, then judgment, and finally will. Now this is the natural process of affecting the hearts of the people. Now go again to the sower. He sowed one kind of seed; and every seed produces its own kind. (See 1 Cor., 15th chap.) Only the seed that reaches the soil produces fruit, and that fruit according to the seed.

Now, according to the foregoing reasoning, how is any one to hear one thing and do another? If, then, we are baptized for any other reason than the true one, the fruit is not legitimate. If we happen to do a thing commanded for some imaginary purpose of our own, when God has commanded it for some other purpose, can we reasonably conclude that God will conform to our imaginations? Such a conclusion is altogether derogatory to the character of God. Such doctrine simply nullifies all divine law and makes the commandments of God of no effect.

I. C. STONE.

JOHN T. POE HEARD FROM.

In the Gospel Advocate, last July, John T. Poe arraigned us before his "six thousand readers," as a hobbyist. He employed some figurative language in that brief production, and we used the language in reply. We tried to make the best possible use of him. By making him a lesson, we showed how by a shaking law of man, he was metamorphosed from one state to another, without the employment of any divine means. We aimed to be understood as holding that he and all others occupying the same grounds, are out of Christ, and suppose we were so understood. With the Bible as our arbiter, we have, all along, been perfectly willing to engage, by the fairest rules of argumentation known to us, and in the very kindest and most friendly spirit that could possibly exist between a Baptist and a Christian, in the defense of our position then taken. Again, we called attention to his inconsistency, in attacking Bro. McPherson, when Bro. McPherson suggested that some of Major Penn's plans were worthy of imitation. We did not endorse Bro. McP.'s proposition in the least; but endorsed, fully, everything John T. Poe said in response to him. But we claimed then, as we do now, that it was inconsistent in him to be raising objections and hurling insinuations at Major Penn's plans, while he (Poe) was contending that Penn was bringing his converts into the body of Christ. As Major Penn was making Baptist Christians (?) by the same old regime that John T. Poe, and all others who accept Baptist teaching, are made Christians—if they are Christians, we thought it a remarkable piece of impudence and inconsistency in him to make war upon the very system that gave him birth! He showed us what he had to say about our "hobby riding" at Bryan, prior to sending it to the Advocate, and we had a laugh over it. We told him about how we would answer if it should appear, and he said, "Come on;" but we suppose he did not think our then contemplated publication would ever have a real existence. We are confident that his wounds would not have become so deep seated under his nursing had not Bros. Burnett and McPherson aggravated them by reopening them so often.

Poe and McPherson got into such a billing and cooing way at their Campbellite conference at Bryan that Bro. Mc. seems to want all of his brethren to play the dove, even when they have a "crow to pick." But as Bro. Mc. is so partial to Baptists anyway, we are disposed to make liberal allowances for his criticism of our reply to the Longview Baptist. We can very conscientiously say, that in anything heretofore said by us about J. T. Poe, that we were not even in the remotest degree moved by a spirit of bitterness or exasperation, and am truly sorry that he and others have seen anything in what we have said that furnishes them a pretext for discoloring our intention. J. T. Poe's splenetic production in the Advocate, of November 12, was a surprise to us. We knew that he could not pitch out of the Baptist-Campbellite harness, in which we had geared him up, as a very inconsistent "old horse," but we did not expect him to make such merciless kicks at us, for simply fitting the harness of his own selection upon him. But most "old horses" have tricks peculiar to themselves. It seems that John T. Poe is going to take care of his "old horse," with all his tricks, even if he has to do it at the cost of other people's character! We are truly sorry that he is in such a desperate strait, that he feels justified in shutting his eyes against all rights and interests but self; and is trying to blindly ride rough-shod over the character of others, in his eagerness to escape the judgment of inconsistency and hypocrisy, that naturally and inevitably attaches to him, or any one else, who tries to occupy the antipodal positions that he does. His arraignment of us before the readers of the Gospel Advocate, in issue of the 12th of November, contains about eight specific counts, besides some general ones. Several of our readers have asked us to pass it by in silence.

But we ask our readers to bear with us while we give him a brief notice. We shall not try to do for him what he has tried to do for us. If it were necessary to the advancement of the truth that his character should be attacked, we might pursue a different course. But John T. Poe is not the kind of a man whose character, whether good or bad, weighs very heavily, one way or another, upon the cause of Christ. He is simply an aper. He rolls along in the ruts that heavier vehicles have cut; where they have jolted he jolts, and where they were smooth he is smooth. He says that he has known us a long time, and knows us "to be very earnest in anything we undertake." He says of us: "While he served the devil, he worked with all his might; and now he is just as earnest about serving the Lord." As we are not entirely impervious to that very general weakness of the flesh, love of approbation, we thank him for even this meager bit of praise. It is quite noticeable as a very small island in the great flood of bile in which it is found. It seems that his pen must have slipped, unintentionally, when it made him speak of our "zeal in serving the Lord." Does he mean to say that we are serving the Lord while we are engaged, with such free indulgence in the foul work that he so unstintedly charges upon us? This thin layer that he put on top, is too transparent to hide the dark, muddy undercurrent that goes madly, but stealthily on, till it becomes a vortex of anger in which our character is intended to be dashed to pieces against the jagged ends of his own murderously set snags. And why? Because we have used him as a lesson of inconsistency. Instead of showing his readers that our reasoning in the premises was defective, the product of "zeal without knowledge," which he ought to be fully able to show, if his charges are well founded, he has sought to weaken our influence by low-flung insinuations at our veracity, and a garbling use of some of our language. We do not intend to yield obedience to the fleshly impulse that would take hold of our pen now, to paint J. T. Poe's picture, as it reappears to us from the by-gone days of that old acquaintanceship to which he alluded. But, at Huntsville, Texas, where the writer was born, J. T. Poe lived many years. During that time, and ever since, till we became a disciple of Christ, we kept up a wide acquaintance at that place and the surrounding country. We deem it not out of place to add here, that we were generally and to some extent intimately acquainted in the several adjoining counties during the eight or ten years next preceding our obedience of the Gospel. While we are sorry to have to admit that our extensive acquaintance was somewhat attributable to the "might" with which we "served the devil," we are proud to say that during all that time, and while J. T. Poe was cloaked in the livery of heaven, our reputation for truthfulness stood at least as high as his! And to-day, if the test had to be made between us before that people, upon the point of veracity or character generally, while we do not say it in any boasting spirit, we do say that we would have no fears of the issue.

We will now give the gist of his several allegations against us:

1. That we have zeal without knowledge.
2. That we believe in an hundred fold fruit-bearer or nothing.
3. That we are guilty of disseminating in publishing an advertisement in a sectarian paper, and wording it so as to make sectarians believe that we are their friend and an enemy to the Church of Christ.

4. That we are a false accuser of our brethren.

5. That we call all our brethren Campbellites.

6. That we have undertaken to destroy the Church of Christ, and call it Campbellism.

7. That we profess much perfection.

Now, the general charges are so very general that we will not attempt to give them.

To all of these charges we file the plea of not guilty—save to one; and we are ready for trial without a single continuance of either case. We are guilty of count No. 1. We may or may not be reprehensible for having "zeal without knowledge." We are glad we have the zeal, even if we are without the knowledge. It is a great blessing, no doubt, to have both, and quite sad to be without either. After all, we would, even if left to our choice, prefer zeal without knowledge, to knowledge without zeal. We have known some men in the latter condition, and hence have seen some of its deleterious workings. A preacher with all knowledge and no zeal, has to have his zeal braced up with something before he can undertake arduous work. The Lord has said, "go and preach the gospel;" and has put all power for converting souls and supplying the wants of the proclaimer while engaged in the work, in the gospel, and has told us so. But these preachers who have all knowledge are afraid that the Lord's arrangement will not "work well;" and hence they have to be tempted to the work by "filthy lucre." "Money makes the mare go," and some "old horses," too.

Last summer we knew one of these all-knowledge preachers to try to improve on the Lord's plan, by making a seventy-five dollar arrangement of his own, with the church at Dupree, Texas. We suppose this arrangement did not work well either, from the howl that went up about it by said preacher. If he had had some zeal with his much knowledge, we do not believe that this howl would have been made so public. The same man of all-knowledge notified his "six thousand" readers that he would go to Alabama to preach if they would stiffen his zeal with a sufficient amount of "filthy lucre;" but this did not work well either, we presume, as he did not "go." It is better to be lacking some in knowledge, with zeal enough to comply with the Lord's way, even though it is sometimes checkered with trials, tribulations and crosses, than to have such a superabundance of knowledge as will lead us to prefer our own ways to the Lord's. But, however this may all be, we plead guilty to count No. 1, and not guilty to all the rest. We will wait to see if our accuser tries to prove these charges, before we have anything further to say upon them. But while we are more than willing to meet him on them, or any one of them, we would much prefer to discuss the main question, in some shape, that underlies his whole indictment. We prefer not to discuss personal matters further than they involve questions of worth to the cause of our Redeemer. We think that J. T. Poe is guilty of a great sin in this attack of us; but we do not want to nurse any ill will towards him. If we considered him a member of the body of Christ, we would, in reference to this matter, simply advise him, in the language of an Apostle, to "repent of this wickedness and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." And we would cheerfully pray for him; but as we consider his status much worse than that of the sorcerer, we believe that it would take Peter's following words, together with the little addition that J. T. Poe's Baptist brethren have so stoutly insisted, belonged there, to cover his case, thus: "I perceive that thou art (yet) in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." Yet, we are not willing that he should be "drowned in perdition;" hence, in all candor and seriousness, we beseech him to bow to the authority of the Lord, by confessing with the mouth the Lord Jesus and being baptized for the remission of his sins. This he will have to do before he ever gets remission of them! It matters not how long he has preached it to others, so long as he stiffens his neck against obedience to the Gospel, after he he has believed the preaching of God's Apostles—not before—so long will his soul be borne down by all the sins of his life. God is no respecter of persons; but will hold J. T. Poe and all other sectarians and aliens to a strict accountability for their self-shielding excuses that weigh against God's plan in the sight of men.

J. T. Poe says: "Now, Bro. McGary knows that we baptize no one who does not first confess that he believes with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." (Italics Poe's.) Now, for a man who holds to his position on the baptismal question, and occupies the very status that he does, and having all the knowledge that he has, this is rather a strange sentence for him to stress as he has here. We would ask him: What is the difference in baptizing them ourselves without their making this confession, and receiving those who, like J. T. Poe, had been baptized by others without making it? In other words, What is the difference in principle, in our doing such unauthorized baptizing and in recognizing it when done by others? Will he answer this like a man? Or does he prefer mud-slinging, like a professional blackguard? We will wait and see. He thinks that Bro. Burnett got off something good, when he fixed up a creed for us with the words, "I believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and that baptism is for the remission of sins." How unequal are the legs of these lame men! It is a rule of universal application, that a man may be tried by his own logic. Now, Brother Burnett and J. T. Poe will both agree that any one, to become a Christian, must believe that Jesus Christ arose from the dead. Well, then, according to their logic, the confession in their creed ought to read: "I believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and that he rose from the dead." Why not? Many more applications of their logic could be made just as damaging to the cause of these new logicians. Their logic is remarkably inconclusive sometimes. Yes, we do say that no one can be scripturally baptized, that is, put on Christ, until they have heard, and believed in what the Apostles preached. That that they taught before, or in order to prepare for baptism, must now and until Christ comes again, be taught to prepare for the same ordinance. The reason we hold that persons must believe that baptism is for the remission of sins, is because "without faith it is impossible to please God." And as "faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of God," and as the word of God says: "He that believes and is baptized shall be saved. * * * Except a man be born of water and the spirit he can not enter into the Kingdom God. * * * Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins. * * * God be thanked that though ye were the servants of sin ye have obeyed from the heart (understanding) that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then (not before) made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness," etc., etc. we maintain that no one can have a faith that is pleasing to God, so long as they deny these plain asseverations of His word. Our Savior said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." They were to preach. What they were to preach, and did preach, is the Gospel that was to be believed before the baptism, and is yet to be believed before baptism, unless some wise man can show where God has changed that law and order. Nothing said in our Savior's language about saving anybody on any baptism save that preceded by the preaching and belief of the preaching, too, of the Apostles.

Shield yourselves behind the poor thief on the cross, ye preachers of much knowledge, or "obey from the heart the form of doctrine delivered" through those chosen to deliver it. J. T. Poe says again: "Bro. McGary can find plenty of Sauls to give consent and hold his clothes while he stones us, if he wishes to throw stones at us." This is surely a badly deformed picture he is trying to draw of those primitive and sanguinary days, especially if J.T. Poe is to represent Stephen!!! In conclusion, we will give our readers some of the wisdom of the wise, and then a conclusion of the whole matter:

When a person has been baptized only to make them a Baptist, a Methodist, or anything else of like nature, we say they should, of course, be baptized, not re-baptized, for such have never received a Christian baptism. But where the purpose and object has been to obey God, to be baptized because God commanded it to be done, such persons have been rightly and truly baptized, whether they knew it was "for the remission of sins" or not. That which they sought was salvation. They believed salvation or pardon could be found in obedience to God. God commanded them to be baptized; they obeyed, that God might save, and he will. A man who has been baptized thus, and who doubts his salvation on such baptism, is an unbeliever in God. He believes more in Bro. McGary than in God. Jesus says: "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." Bro. McGary says, "Provided he knows it is for the remission of sins." Thus adding to the word of the Lord. We are wont to believe and teach that the great commission, as given by the inspired writers, Matthew, Mark and Luke, contain all the terms of pardon to man. We believe it does. If so, then the confession as given in the scriptures covers the whole ground of our necessary faith. If it had been necessary to believe baptism to be "for the remission of sins," God would have put it in the commission. It seems so to us at least.

We call upon Bro. McGary to retract his false accusations against our brethren. If his cause must thrive upon such as this, we do not envy him all the applause he may get from the enemies of Christ and his people. We think it unkind in an enemy to misrepresent us; but when a professed brother in the Lord does it, we feel it is a great sin.—J. T. Poe, in Gospel Advocate.

He says where a person has been baptized only to make them a Baptist, etc., of course "they should be baptized, not re-baptized, for such have never received Christian baptism." One might infer from this, that he meant that they might be baptized partly to be made a Baptist, etc., but not wholly so. We do not care to raise any additional issues with him; neither are we at all partial to the compound, "re-baptism" or "re-baptize." We have heretofore used it inside of quotation marks; but if the "twelve" were baptized unto John's baptism, then they were re-baptized. And if John T. Poe, and other Baptists, were baptized when they are immersed upon human antecedents, into a human institution, we are just zealous enough to be decidedly in favor of a re-baptism. He says that when they are baptized to obey God, "they have been rightly and truly baptized whether they knew it was 'for the remission of sins,' or not" This is sanctified "knowledge" from the Longview sanctum sanctorum. If our readers should desire the chapter and verse, they may find it in the last chapter of Nonsense, by John T. Poe—the Baptist. But this is a hard book to understand on this question, because, away back, in another chapter, it says: "Peter told earnest, mourning penitents, on the day of Pentecost, to 'be baptized for the remission of sins.' They asked, What must we do? Peter, being filled with the Holy Spirit, and speaking as it gave him utterance, answered that they should 'repent and be baptized for the remission of sins.'" (Italics Poe's.) Reader, please notice closely what he has here said and how he has said it. These italics speak loudly against his consistency, occurring just where they do. Notice that where he first uses the expression, "for the remission of sins," he does not stress it. Intelligent readers will see his inconsistency. They will agree with the writer that his book, with all his knowledge, is hard to understand. There is an "uncertain sound" about it which comes of mixing worldly wisdom with that which is "from above." For him to be right, he must find in Holy Writ such language as this: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, to honor God"! But "the oracles of God" nowhere say it. It is the product of his knowledge and his logic. A scripture that I would commend to his careful and prayerful reading, says: "Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," (that persons should be baptized to honor God; and that they are validly baptized, is wholly the wisdom of this world, and hence is "foolishness with God." No inspired man ever said so, or anything to justify uninspired ones to say it. If so, where is it?)—for it is written "He taketh the wise in their own craftiness." And again, "the Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain," Cor. iii; 18–20. Yes, our Saviour did say, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." But, believeth what? What they preached! Will he deny this? Again he says: "We are wont to believe and teach that the great commission as given by the inspired writers, Matthew, Mark and Luke, contain all the terms of pardon to man. We believe it does. If so, then the confession, as given in the Scriptures, covers the whole ground of our necessary faith." Well, does not the great commission place the salvation beyond the baptism? Is that not plain? That is just why we say that persons should believe it, before their baptism. To disbelieve it, when our Saviour and the Apostles have said it, is to lack faith, without which, we claim, that immersion, under any formula is a meaningless piece of "worldly wisdom," which is "foolishness with God." In the commission, the teaching or preaching comes before the baptism. It does our heart good to see persons "obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered," but we desire that the right form of doctrine shall be delivered, so that they will not go down into the water, denying the Lord by saying they believe their sins were forgiven, where he never promised it. Yea, where he has positively said it can not be found. "Except a man be born of water and the spirit, he CAN NOT enter into the kingdom of God." Why will J. T. Poe be so inconsistent as to mention the confession "as given in the scriptures" as he does here? His position on it here cuts him adrift from his other position! He knows that he did not make that confession before his Baptist baptism. And he knows that no sectarian converts make that confession. We will retract anything we have said whenever it is disproven. To his last sentence, we have to say that we are not his brother. We were inconsistent enough for a while to call him, and some others who are with us on their sectarian baptism, by the endearing name of brother and sister; but hereafter we do not intend to do so, when we know it. We desire to be more consistent, and less disrespectful to our King, in the future. If we could conscientiously be as lax in this particular as Brother Lipscomb seems to be, judging by his answer to Brother Stone, we could very consistently call all such brothers or sisters. But by Brother L.'s rule, when we undertook to show Mr. Shaw, or Mr. Ingersoll "their errors," consistency would require that we call them brother. Verily, the legs of the lame are unequal. We have some very dear friends standing where J. T. Poe does. We would rejoice to see him, and them, obey the Gospel and be freed from their sins, and become "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." We are glad to know that many, all over the country, are doing so, and even some preachers. Four of the Madisonville Church threw away their no-account Baptist baptism—just like J. T. Poe's—a few days ago. By the by, one was a good and intelligent lady whom J. T. Poe had gathered into the folds of "our plea" by the shake. She wanted to be baptized then, for the remission of sins, but this wise Baptist-Campbellite dissuaded her, telling her that "her baptism was as good as his." But as she "grew in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," (not in worldly wisdom), she did not want to stand before the "Judge of the quick and the dead" relying upon such "foolishness;" she wanted a better article than J. T. Poe, or other Baptists have. We hope that J. T. Poe may do likewise, if he can do it "from the heart;" "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God?"

MORE ABOUT "HUMILITY."

We understand that the brethren in a certain locality disapproved of our remarks upon "Humility" in last issue. We are not surprised at this in the least, for when brethren and sisters so far forget God as to lend themselves to the wicked work of trying to shield from guilt and to cover up the public sins and offenses of selfish and licentious preachers, because they are our preachers, as these brethren and sisters have done. they soon become totally blind to the most "presumptuous sins," and hence are wholly unprepared to hear or read any kind of criticism in that direction, however kind it may be. This same preacher, of whom we wrote in reference to "Humility," was notoriously guilty of tipling in that same town, and was a conspicuous actor in slandering a young lady of that town. The writer was one of the elders of the church at that place at the time this disgraceful tipling was done; and, while he was strongly attached to this preacher, he earnestly contended that he should make amends by a strict compliance with the law of the Lord. But another elder (?) whom we loved and still love, although he has never been baptized for the remission of sins, nor upon confession with the mouth the Lord Jesus, (!) objected, saying that it would "ruin the cause at that place to demand a public confession on the part of the transgressor:" and he was seconded by many of the brethren and sisters!—About the same element, we presume, that was so horrified at "Humility." But, notwithstanding said opposition, the three elders joined in a letter to said preacher, setting forth the grievance, and demanding his return and open acknowledgement before the Church. About that time, the writer moved away. If we had remained there, the matter would not have rested where it did! The last time we saw this preacher he said to us that he was going to make a trip to Austin, some day, and added: "I will be as well dressed as any of them, too!" Now these were some of our reasons for writing "Humility." We have ever held this preacher in high esteem as an effective proselyter. We were converted to Christ under his preaching, and to-day, we regard him as the most effective field preacher we have ever known. But the very Book that he caused to appear so simple, yet so grand and lovely to us, teaches us that those who sin shall be "rebuked before all," and we are "charged before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that we observe this without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality." And that none should "think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office (work), so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." "Therefore let no man glory in men; for all things are yours, whether Paul or Appollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." These things teach us, brethren, "that we might learn not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of us be puffed up for one against another." We love these brethren to whom we have alluded; but we consider them by their flattery and failure to do their whole duty in not holding this preacher to a strict accountability to the law of the Lord, as the chief cause of his being so "lifted up with pride." Such action as this is what has led to the substitution of boss rule in the churches, at the hands of petted and spoiled preachers, known as "modern pastors"—giving the elders a back seat, and making them mere figureheads. Our brethren themselves, seeing how well human government "works," with the neighboring tribes of sectarians, are, like the Israelites when surrounded by idolatrous nations, crying for a King, and God, as He did with the Israelites, is permitting them to have Kings. But it is our work, not God's. Thus we are paving the way for a universal captivity. Some "Shalmaneser" has long since made his successful raid; and his "gold-headed" successor is now in hot pursuit of "Zedekiah," almost in sight of the ill-fated "plains of Jericho."

Brethren, let's halt and make a determined stand against the enemy. By buckling on the whole armor of God, and with a faithful use of the two-edged sword, victory will yet perch upon the drooping banner of Israel. If we do not, a certain and speedy sojourn, as captives in Babylon, inevitably awaits us. May God avert the calamity.

A. McG.

We would have said nothing about the "slaps" mentioned in "Humility," but we have heard this preacher tell it in crowds several times. Besides, we think it highly commendable in any man to have the courage to brave such treatment without "reviling."

From N. W. Ayer & Son, Advertising Agents, Times building, Philadelphia.

To the Publisher:

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly send us by return mail, in inclosed wrapper, a sample copy of your paper? We would like to include it in our "Newspaper Annual," which is now in course of preparation, and wish to see a copy in order that we may be able to class it correctly.

If you do not publish your advertising rates in the paper, please inclose a card giving them. Prompt attention will oblige

Yours very truly,

N. W. AYER & SON.

Yes, we will send you a sample copy of our paper; but as we are not in the market, at any price, as a play-ground for humbug advertisements to revel in, while we are trying to work for the Lord, we have no "rates" to send. If we should ever come to believe that we can "serve God and mammon" at one and the same time, we will fix up "rates" and forward to you. We have many papers that will furnish you with "rates," for this business; but we deem it unnecessary to name them as they all seem to be filled up.

Very respectfully,

A. McG.

BRO. LIPSCOMB'S DISMISSAL OF US.

Just as we are going to press, the Advocate, containing Bro. Lipscomb's very graceful dismissal of us from his "further notice," reaches us. We could not repress tears while reading such marked evidences of stark blindness, in particular directions, on the part of one who is usually so very clear-sighted. It is not the thought that we are not to be noticed that grieves us; viewing it from a selfish standpoint, we are much better off unnoticed than when noticed through such ugly and unwarranted insinuations as our brother has recently "noticed" us. Although we have been written up by one who claims to know us so well, as a believer in "an hundred-fold fruit-bearer or nothing," we never expect to find perfection in flesh. Hence, while we find Bro. Lipscomb wedded to some idols with such a fondness that he can't be just to those that oppose them, we yet see a very great predominance of sound teaching and shining virtues in him, that commend themselves to our respect, admiration and love. If we know our own heart, we do love him dearly for his consecration to and self-abnegation in the cause of Christ, so far as permitted to see it. Ever since we have been trying to tread the slippery way of life, under the banner of "Our King," we have been a close student of Bro. L.'s pen. Our readers know our estimate of him, in the main, without a repetition of it here. We say these things without the least guileful or sycophantic intent. But the FIRM FOUNDATION has come to stay in defense of truth, and expects to call very marked attention to the inconsistencies of Bro. L. and others whom we love. In the future, as in the past, we shall try to be led on and guided in our work by motives emanating from a love for the cause of the Redeemer. As for the past, we cannot claim that everything we have said was just as it should have been, and we fear the same will have to be said of our future, as it slips into the past. No man ever has, or ever will speak or write to perfection, so long as he is trammelled by the flesh and its "earthly, sensual, devilish" impulses. But I can joyfully and triumphantly declare here and elsewhere, that I have in the past been entirely "freed from any desire, whatever to misrepresent in any way any one. So long as we retain our very deep hatred for lying in any form, as we were bred to hate it, we shall confidently expect to avoid becoming a liar. As for faults, that we confess, while we do not plead the same in others as an extenuation of our own, we will here remind Bro. Lipscomb, that a careful review on his part, of his own productions in answer to us and others who have differed with him within the last twelve months, will disclose to him the fact that he has not always been guided by the strictest rules of propriety, or "brotherly love", himself. I shall not permit my heart to become steeled against him for what he has said of me, but shall group it with other crosses that it is my duty to bear, and wait for the "crown" at the end of the race, which I hope he and I, as well as all others who love and serve God, may receive. In conclusion, I will say that I will review what Bro. L. has said in our next issue; and will try to do so in proper spirit. Bro. L. has always expressed himself freely against striking in the dark, and has been the victim of some such strikes himself, hence we can rather confidently ask him to say to his readers, that all who will send us their names will receive our reply to him, free.

NOTICE.

Brethren, we have read "Types and Shadows," a work of Brother A. B. Smith's, and find many good thoughts. He asks $1 00 for the book. If you want it, write him at Caldwell, Kansas. No wonder Isaac Errett has some uncomplimentary words for this book. His kith and kin are handled "without gloves" by Brother Smith.

He draws some very striking pictures of the city congregations and their modern paraphernalia. While there are many things in this book that the fastidious can not relish, and some that we do not heartily approve, we would not sell our copy for $5 00 and do without it. A. McG.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Brethren, we have asked Bro. Lipscomb to notify his readers that we intend to reply to his last argument, and defend ourselves against his grave charge, in our next issue. But as the promptings of our fleshly impulses sometimes triumphantly forbid our "doing unto others as we would have them do unto us," I ask you to say to all Advocate readers of your acquaintance, that as many of them as will forward to this office their names, will receive, free, our January issue. Brethren, please bear this in mind. We ask no favors, but an impartial hearing. A. McG.

Dear Bro. McGary:

Do you believe that Matthias was an Apostle? Answer in the FIRM FOUNDATION. A SUBSCRIBER.

I do. If you will read the first and second verses of the sixth chapter of Acts carefully, you will, too.

A brother writes us: "My soul is stirred within me when I see the tendencies of the brethren generally to drift into the broad sea of Liberalism. Cincinnati's purse-strings now control the Guide, and it is only a question of time for it to take an open stand for progression." We have considered the Old Path Guide really a new path guide for at least eighteen months. Its tendency will be no more away from primitive Christianity, and towards the magnet of orthodoxy, now gained by law-suit, under the control of the man with a Catholic wife, than it has been under its "fence riding" masters of the past. The course of the Guide, since we have been reading it, if we are not badly mistaken, clearly indicates that its first and foremost object, all along, has been "filthy lucre." Hence its sails have been set and changed, from time to time, to catch the most propitious winds—those that would drive towards the richest mines. This same brother writes somewhat prognosticatingly of the future fortunes of the Church, linked to the prohibition question. In fact it is a very interesting letter, and would be published, but for some of its private features; although it was not intended for publication. The writer says, "already the voice of proscription is raised by some who voted that ticket, and the time will come when the leaders will make allegiance to this party a test of Christian standing. Mark it! What shall we do in the premises?" We answer that we should "add to our faith" the Christian graces enumerated by the apostle. The second that comes in Peter's order of enumeration, will lead us out of all connections with human government, further than to yield to it what Christ's law requires of its subjects. We fully and heartily agree with Bro. Lipscomb on this question, believing that he has clearly sustained it by Scripture. And we are at a loss to know how those who have read him on it can find any foothold for a contrary stand. If the Scriptures "thoroughly furnish us unto all good works. * * * All things that pertain unto life and Godliness;" if whatsoever we do in word or deed must be done by the authority of the Lord (in the name) Jesus; if we "can not please Him who hath chosen us as soldiers, while we are entangling ourselves with the affairs of this life;" if we are to avoid "the works of the flesh and walk in the Spirit;" and, if the works of the flesh are hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, * * * envyings, revilings and such like, how can the "man of God" exercise the American franchise, and at the same time be "unblamable and unreprouvable in the sight of God?" We have heretofore gone heart and soul into politics; but in the election that has just passed we took "neither part nor lot," although the voting place was in sight of us. The "old man" yearned to vote for Cleveland and Hendricks, but was kept "under subjection" by a law that is higher in our estimation, than those of earthly governments and potentates.

ONE MORE YEAR GONE.

Yes! One more year has been chronicled upon time's tablet, and its page turned into eternity, past! Those who have no love of God in them, and hence no hope beyond the brink of time, if they would look the present square in the face, and read its stern facts, in the light of past experience, reason and revelation, they could not fail to be pungently impressed by its lesson. They would see one more year subtracted from their unholy and unprofitable lives; one more year nearer a grave with its awful forebodings, a grave that cannot be escaped! One more year nearer the bar of an outraged and insulted God, where the follies, mistakes and 'sinfulness of a misspent life, will rise up and condemn them! Reader, the year that is coming on may be your last; in the very nature of things, it will be the last with thousands—thousands who will be imprisoned in the dark vaults of the grave "without one ray of hope, there to await the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, when he shall be revealed from heaven with His mighty angles, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." What an awful thought is this! Professing Christians!—those who have once enlisted in the army of the faithful, one more year of inaction, a year that can not stand the test, before the "Righteous Judge," has been spent in idleness by you. A year in which you have fled the great battle against sin; a year in which your actions have not only been watched by the all-seeing eye of God, but by the enemies of God, by whom, by reason of your ways, "the way of truth has been evil spoken of!" Though cleansed by the efficacious blood of a crucified Lord, King and son of God, from the stains of past sins, you, like "the sow that was washed and turned to her wallowing in the mire again," have turned back to the world again! The toys, and bubbles of time, that waste, and are gone with this "life that is as a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away," are leading your souls away from an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away. How sad the thought! My brother, my sister, if you do not repent and turn to God with the coming year, it had been better for you not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after having known it, to have turned from the holy commandment unto you! Remember that they only have hope who are led by the Spirit; "for if ye live after the flesh ye shall die!" Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these : "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like." But the fruit of the Spirit is "love, joy, peace (where there is peace ; not such peace as will command silence while God's ways are being perverted), long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Therefore, brethren, make new resolves for the coming year, and "be steadfast, unmoveable, always (not simply on Lord's day) abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Rest is for those who have become tired by work here!

But, brethren, we must close up and cease this straggling. We must make God's ways our ways; caring nought for what others may say or think. We must remember that we have a law, a perfect law, to live by, and that he or she who lives by this law will receive a crown, while he or she who trudges through life by the dictates of an inner light, will, at the end, meet condemnation. "If a man strive for masteries, yet he is not crowned except he strive lawfully. To strive lawfully is to strive by the law; by its guidance—do the things it bids us do. Brethren, this is the kind of striving THE FIRM FOUNDATION is going to try to do this year. It will not be swayed from its purpose by that class, who, in seeking their own ease, have carried the thoughtless masses into unholy alliances. Neither will it halt at the bidding of the popular commands of the "kingdoms of the clergy." But realizing that God, who judges righteously, seeth all things, even the secrets of men's hearts, it will continue to "preach the word ; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine," wherever and whenever it sees a necessity; even if the time has come when our brethren will not endure sound doctrine. God grant that we may all come to the Law of the Lord and go to work by it — go to practicing pure and undefiled religion before God. Yes, brethren, let's bury our differences and "be of one mind."

One more year is dead and buried in Time's great sepulchre! Brethren, "forgetting the things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, let us press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

"This sweetly solemn thought comes to me
o'er and o'er,
I'm nearer home to-day, than I have been before;
Nearer the bound of life, where burdens are laid down,
Nearer to leave the Cross to-day, and nearer to the Crown."

OUR PLEA FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

NUMBER III.

Every element of faith is found in God's word. Paul gave the exhortation, "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." II Tim., i, 13. The Christian's faith is confined to the form of sound words taught by the Spirit. Outside of the words of the Spirit there can be no such thing as Christian faith. "All things that pertain to life and godliness hath been given." II Pet., i, 3.

The power of faith is exemplified in the unity of the Saints. Hence there is "one faith." Every one that diligently seeks God by faith, is conveyed by God's word along the same pathway into His body. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path.

Where the light of revelation does not shine, gross darkness prevails. Neither the learning of men nor the superstitions of the past or present can furnish data upon which we can build a hope for the future. The opinions set forth in the Greek, Roman and Protestant creeds will not give us the faith that prompts to obedience in order to the salvation of the soul. Therefore denominationalism never transfers one from a state of sin to a state of righteousness.

The various religions of the age fail to put men in a condition to act spiritually. This failure is from inherent defects in their systems. If every man and woman on the globe were converted to the Greek, Roman, or Protestant religion, a Savior would still be needed to convert the soul and to pardon the sins of the people.

The idea prevails that we must look up to heaven for faith as a direct impartation. Paul says, "Say not who shall ascend into heaven; that is to bring Christ down from above (to give faith), or who shall go down into the deep; that is to bring up Christ from the dead (to bestow faith). But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy heart, and in thy mouth; that is, the word of faith which we preach; that, if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

All the faith on earth originated from the word of the Lord. Obedience proceeds from, and is the result of faith. Hence no faith, no obedience. The word of the Spirit given by inspired penmen produces the faith that moves to action and saves the soul. All spiritual light comes alone through the truth.

Faith was never given as the condition of forgiveness, but is to prepare the way for it. Consequently we are nowhere commanded to believe for the remission of sins. Actuated by faith in Christ, we move forward through each successive step, till we, through his name (by his authority), receive the remission of sins. While faith alone cannot convey us out of darkness into light, it leads to the gate, and claims the right of entrance upon a submission to the authority of the King. The one testimony is given to all by the one spirit, and hence the one faith. In accepting this one testimony, all will necessarily come to the unity of the faith. Nothing can be of the faith which is not in the words of the faith. As to the Divine authenticity of the Holy Scriptures, men may differ; and he who rejects the Bible does it at his peril. But with those who accept it as Divine, there should be no difference as to what is written. Hence the prayer, "That all might be one, believing through the Apostles words." John xvii, 20.

When our faith is bounded by God's word, there is no place for differences.

Faith never looks backward, but always forward, in order to pardon. It precedes repentance, the confession and baptism. Any one of these steps taken not in accordance with the directions of the word, is null and without the desired effect. "Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin." Faith antedates and gives all real value to every other religious obligation. Repentance, the confession and baptism springing from the faith of the Gospel, is acceptable to God; but without it, it is imaginary service, and is but sheer mockery.

We conclude, therefore, that those who have not passed through the door in God's appointed way, although perfectly honest in thinking they have passed from "death into life," and even have rejoiced at the thought, are deceived, and must be taught the way of the Lord more perfectly, that they may accept the truth, and be led by the Spirit into the one body, governed by the one faith, and henceforth be animated by the one hope. If, dear reader, you have not been led through each successive step by the Word, you are certainly not the child of God. "My words are spirit and they are life." "For as many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God." "Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of the disciples which are not written in this book; but these are written that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ, and believing might have life through His name."

A. Campbell reasoned well, when in calling attention to the word as the "Sword of the Spirit" he said: "The power of the sword is not in the scabbard, but in the blade. The power of faith is in that which is believed. The efficacy of faith is in sense, not in sound. The sense is that which is believed, and not the words that contain that sense."

We must understand Christ, where he designs to be understood. Thus we become "wise unto salvation." Isaiah says: "By the knowledge of Him shall my righteous servant justify many." Jesus says: "If you continue in my word, you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The poet caught the true idea—

"He leadeth me: Oh, blessed thought!
Oh words with heavenly comfort fraught!
* * * * *
His faithful follower I would be,
For by His hand He leadeth me."

To His name be honor and power
everlasting. J. S. D.

"SOME THOUGHTS ON FAITH."

Romans v, 1—"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God," etc.

DEAR BRETHREN.—I desire space in the columns of your excellent paper to present some thoughts for the consideration of your readers, upon the subject of Faith. I apprehend that the term faith, as used in the New Testament (it will be remembered that it occurs but once in the Old Testament), at least, in eight out of every ten places where the word occurs, comprehends more than the simple belief of the heart, or conviction of the mind, of the truth of a given proposition. In the passage heading this article, the Apostle is arguing the sufficiency of the Gospel as a system for salvation, without the law of Moses. Hence, he employs the term, faith, comprehending the gospel in all of its requirements and provisions, as a system, in contrast with the law dispensation. The Gospel, he calls Faith, and the Mosaic economy, as a system, he calls Works. Hence he has Faith and Works, in contrast, as systems of justification. It is an admitted rule of logic, that where a term is ambiguous—admits of more than one meaning—the true meaning may be supplied; and if the harmony and sense of the sentence be not disturbed thereby, the supplied meaning is accepted. Try this rule in the passage quoted, dispense with the word faith, and insert Gospel, reading thus: "Therefore being justified by the Gospel," etc.

The reader discovers that no violence is done to the sense and harmony of the reading. Paul says, "Therefore," which signifies that a logical conclusion is now reached, from the facts and arguments going before in the preceding chapters of this epistle, establishing the fact clearly to his Jewish brethren, that they can now be justified by the Gospel, and have peace with God, without longer observing the requirements of the law given by Moses. The Judaizing teachers had taught them that they could not be saved unless they be circumcised and keep the law of Moses. We see wisdom displayed in the call of Paul to the apostolic college. He was a Jew, educated by Gamahel, taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the Jewish fathers; was, therefore, qualified to discuss the transcendent superiority of the Gospel as a system of justification, superceding the observance of the law of Moses. Hence, the sufficiency of the Gospel, for the justification of both Jew and Gentile, became the central idea in nearly all of Paul's epistles. We have said that eight out of every ten times where the word faith occurs, the word Gospel may be supplied, making harmony and good sense, whether the definite article "the" (as the faith) is used or not. Example, Acts xv, 9: "And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." Here, the Gospel is evidently meant. See I Peter, i, 22: "Seeing ye have purified your souls (by faith? no!) in obeying the truth." My object in writing now, is to call the attention of abler scribes than myself to the subject, rather than argue the matter. To be brief and outline the subject, I will simply request the reader to be careful in reading, when he comes to the word, faith, to note carefully the qualifying terms going before, such as "thy faith" "your faith, his faith," etc., supplying Gospel for faith in at least eight out of ten of its occurrences; and by this means, we find consistency throughout; the plan of salvation a harmonious whole, and are rid of all the sectarian twaddle of "justification by faith only," which is true, when viewed as set forth by Paul—the entire Gospel as a system of faith, in contrast with the law of Moses as a system of Works. Your brother in search of truth,

R. B. TRIMBLE.

NEW BURNSIDE, ILL., Dec. 18, 1884.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL? OF WHAT IS IT COMPOSED?

When we consider the language of the Savior, as recorded by Math. xxviii, 18-20, Mark xvi, 15, Luke xxiv, 46-47, and John xx, 22-23, is it not highly important that we decide definitely (not from our think-sos, feelings or imaginations) from the teachings of the infallible Spirit, as recorded in the New Testament, what that Gospel is? If composed of parts or elements, what they are? Surely this is the wisest and safest course, since our salvation from past sins and entrance into Christ depends upon our hearing, believing and obeying "the Gospel"—not a perverted one. Then, what does the word Gospel mean? Speaking indefinitely, it means good news; but speaking definitely, it means that good news of salvation for a lost and ruined world, as proclaimed through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Then to "the law and to the testimony" that God has given we must go to decide this much mooted question. We want to know what that gospel is that God's Son sent men to preach; not the ones that colleges and synods have manufactured by their new and patent processes!

The prophet Isaiah, who spoke as he was guided by the Holy Spirit, described the introduction of the gospel dispensation into the world some seven hundred years B. C. He said that it should be so plain that way-faring men, though fools, should not err therein. Isaiah xxxv, 8.

Now I don't suppose that any of us would like to be considered lower down in the scale of intellect than fools. The prophet had told them, however, to "Seek out of the book of the Lord and read, and they should not fail;" xxxiv, 16; but how do we know that he was speaking of the introduction of the Gospel Age? From what he says in the fourth, fifth and sixth verses, "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not, behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense;

He will come and save you. Then (at that time) the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped, then shall the lame leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."

Now when did these things occur? Not till the Saviour came, and Jesus says: "Go and show John again those things which you do hear and see; the blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them." Matt. xi, 4, 5; also, John ix, 32. The prophet describes two ways, a high way, and a way, or the way of holiness, over which the unclean (unconverted) should not pass; but it shall be for those (that is, those that seek out of the book of the Lord and read), and the "a way" is the plain way.

The Saviour describes the same two ways in different language: "Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat; because straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth to life and few there be that find it." Matt. vii, 13, 14.

The highway of the prophet is the broad way of the Saviour, and the "a way," or way of holiness of the prophet, is the straight and narrow way of the Saviour. But is not the Saviour's language sad? He says many go in the broad way, the way of destruction, and but few find the straight and narrow way. He does not say they can't find it (that would be still be more sad); but that they don't find it. Why don't they find it? Because they go to men to seek, instead of doing as the prophet said, "Seek out of the book of the Lord!"

Let us turn now to what the Apostle Paul says in the first chapter of his letter to the Gallatian brethren. After his introductory remarks, embracing the first five verses, he says: "I marvel, or I wonder, that you are so soon removed from Him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel." What! are there two gospels? or six hundred and forty gospels? as there ought to be, to suit the divided condition of the religious world. Why no! There is but one Gospel, and Paul corrects himself in the next breath; he says: "Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert (turn or change) the Gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from Heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that we preached unto you, let him be accursed." Gal. i, 6-8. Can we believe for a moment that our Heavenly Father, through His inspired apostle, would have pronounced such a curse as that on any man, or angel, that would preach a different gospel from what Paul preached, unless that gospel is, as the prophet said it should be, so plain that the wayfaring men, though fools, should not err therein? No! the thought is revolting.

Let us look at that language in the eighth verse, again. We often hear people say that they have heard voices from heaven, speaking peace to their souls. Suppose they do! If it is just like the Gospel, then there is no use in its being brought from heaven, for it is already here; and they can read it every day, and if it differs from the Gospel, then Paul says, "let the bringer of that voice be accursed!" How careful then, we ought to be about giving heed to voices outside of the Bible: let them come from above or below!

But what is the Gospel? Paul says (Rom. i, 16), "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power (not a power, as though God had many powers) unto salvation to every one that believes (take notice, they must believe it), to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." But Paul was not aiming to define the gospel in its parts in the above quotation, but was laying the foundation of an argument to cut off some Judaizing teachers, who were contending that they must observe the law of Moses, as well as the Gospel; and they thereby perverted the Gospel, as the Gallatians did; and Paul lets them know that the gospel (and not the law of Moses), is God's power unto salvation. 1 Cor. xv, 1-4, is often quoted, to prove that the Gospel is the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. But the apostle was not aiming to define the Gospel in parts there; but was correcting another class of false teachers, who were denying the resurrection and endeavoring thereby to overthrow the Gospel. In the first verse, he says the Corinthians were saved by the Gospel, and people are not saved without obeying the conditions of the Gospel! We learn from Acts xviii, 8, "that many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed and were baptized," thereby complying with what the Saviour said, Mark xvi, 16; just like all the others; for God is no respecter of persons.

Now, let me ask, were the apostles faithful to the commission under which the Saviour sent them out to preach? Did they preach the Gospel; nothing more, or nothing less? If they preached more, then they will have the plagues of God's book added to them; if they preached less, then they will have their part taken out of the Book of Life. The conclusion, then, forces itself upon our minds, that they preached the Gospel; nothing more, and nothing less! Now, if we will follow them in their preaching, and see what they preached, will we not learn, beyond a doubt, what constitutes the Gospel or good news? Let us go, then, to the memorable day of Pentecost, to the first preaching, after the descent of the Holy Spirit that was to guide the apostles into all the truth necessary to the salvation of man. Jesus had told them that it was necessary that he should suffer and rise again the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name (or by his authority) "among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem; and you are witnesses of these things, and behold I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until you be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv, 46-49.

They obeyed instructions, and when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. The multitude coming together were astonished at what they saw and heard. Peter explains it by the following quotation from the Prophet Joel: "And it shall come to pass in the last days (not of the world, but of the Jewish dispensation) that I will pour out of my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; and on my servants and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of my spirit, and they shall prophesy; and I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood and fire and vapor of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come, and it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name (or authority) of the Lord, shall be saved." Acts ii, 17-21.

You will notice the baptism of the Holy Spirit is confined to the last days of the Jewish dispensation in verses 17 and 18; but the calling on the name of the Lord, extends through the reign of Christ, and we want to notice, after awhile, what that calling on the name of the Lord is, for on doing it depends our salvation!

Peter now begins to preach, and what did he preach? First, the great facts of the gospel, the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, also his ascension and coronation, as king of kings, and Lord of Lords. Three thousand believed these facts, and what effect did their faith have? It pricked their hearts and caused them to say to Peter and the rest of the apostles: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" How shall we call on the name or authority of the Lord; for in doing that, we have the promise of salvation. Evidently, up to this time, they had not heard the gospel (or good news), for good news never pricks the heart; but causes it to rejoice! In answer to their question, Peter (or rather the Holy Spirit through Peter), said: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name (or by the authority) of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins (for pardon or salvation) and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts ii, 38.

What were they to repent and be baptized for? For the remission of sins! Was it necessary that they should understand the facts of the gospel? All of our brethren say yes! or the Holy Spirit would not have preached them! Was it necessary that they should understand the commands of the gospel? Yes, or the Holy Spirit would not have preached them! Was it necessary that they should understand the design of the commands? Yes; if not, why not? The design of the commands, was as plainly preached as the facts and commands; and by the same infallible spirit. Besides, it was after they had learned the commands, and their design, that they received what had been preached as good news or glad tidings, which we learn from the forty-first verse: "Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized, and the same day were added unto them about three thousand souls." We find that Peter preached facts, commands and promises in preaching the gospel, and are they not all, as the prophet said they should be, "So plain that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein?"

Jesus says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not, shall be damned." Language can not be made plainer than that. Now if the apostles, acting under that simple commission, preached the gospel, nothing more or less,

Another popular way of preaching, says, he that believes is saved, and must be baptized, because he is saved! What is the condition of the converts, made by such preaching? Are they converted to God or man? Brethren, is not the nature, or character of the conversion, always according to the nature, or character of the power brought to bear upon the person converted? To illustrate, I may have a neighbor who is a radical, politically, and I want to convert him to democracy; what power will I bring to bear upon him? Not radical power, but democratic. I have friends who are sectarians, and I want to make christians of them; what power shall I bring to bear upon them? God's power, the gospel! Just as I would one who makes no pretensions to Christianity. Brethren, let us stick to God's word, and let the doctrines and commandments of men go as unworthy our notice.

ELIJAH HANSBROUGH.

TALKS TO THE SISTERS.

Dear Brother McGary:

Accept a few words of encouragement from a sister, who has seen some numbers of your monthly, and highly approves your work, believing, indeed, that it rests on a "sure foundation," that of "Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself, being the chief corner stone." I am perfectly in harmony with you on the momentous questions now agitating the brotherhood, viz: the "One Bap'tism" and the "modern pastor" system. Also, heartily endorse your views on the higher christian life, which seems to have been lost sight of by the majority of our brethren, in their mad race after the sects, to overtake them in numbers, and fine carpeted cathedrals and many other innovations. A sister would speak to the sisters, through your paper, of the errors that are creeping in through their instrumentality. Will you let me in? From the pure tone of your paper, I judge you do not belong to that class of our brethren that would take woman from that modest but supremely important sphere God has assigned her, and place her in the pulpit. Neither, judge I, would you confine her exclusively to the fireside. Right here I will say, Paul did not, as many seem to think, say "I suffer not a woman to teach at all," but "I suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over the man," or, to permit a transposition, "I suffer not a woman to teach the man, nor to usurp authority over him." To separate the first phrase of the sentence from the other would exclude fireside teaching, and thus cause Scripture to conflict. For we are told to "bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and how are we to do this unless we teach them what the law of the Lord is? Then again, we have a clear example of woman teaching in the case of Priscilla with Aquila teaching Apollas the "way of God more perfectly." Of course woman has her sphere in the church, but we deeply deplore the disposition among some of our most prominent brethren, that is becoming more manifest every day, to elevate woman to the duties of the pulpit. No matter how gifted, intellectually, a woman may be, the moment she enters the field as an evangelist or lecturer, she forfeits her native modesty, loses the esteem of her own and the respect of the opposite sex. Her God-given sphere is not limited. On her, chiefly, depends the rearing of the little ones who are to represent Christ's cause when we have "fallen asleep;" she is to make them "meet for the Master's use." She is also to visit the sick and afflicted, the poor and needy, administer to their necessities, alleviate their suffering, soothe the dying with the "old, old story, of Jesus and His love," and when this is all done, and home made happy for husband and children, there will be little time left for public duties! But I have strayed from my purpose, nevertheless will ascertain your opinion, as to the propriety of woman teaching through a paper, by your acceptance or rejection of this letter. If accepted, and permission granted, I may write occasionally, under the heading of "Talks with the Sisters."

Now for some words on the FIRM FOUNDATION. It certainly was not "born out of due time," but is sadly needed as a brake to check the rapid progress of our brethren toward sectarianism, and may God bless your earnest efforts with success. The whole object with us now, seems to be, to get numbers; thus, many hundreds are brought into the Church, and left without teaching, the elders, who should teach them, being, as a general thing, superseded by a "modern pastor." Consequently, they go back to their old sins; then, lest they should become offended, and quit the Church, they are allowed to go unrebuked, and thus bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. This reminds me to say a few words in regard to your article on Humility. I was surprised to learn that any of our brethren or sisters, especially sisters, would be willing to shield a "tippling" preacher, simply because he is an efficient proselyter. This is sectarianism, indeed! Certainly, he should be duly admonished and every effort made to reclaim him, but if he is too much "lifted up with pride," to make an humble confession of his sins, then he should be "delivered unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." These brethren and sisters who are glorying in him and shielding him, ought to know that "their glorying is not good." Have they not read that "a little leaven, leaveneth the whole lump? They should "purge out the old leaven, that they may be a new lump."

Bro. J. W. Jackson's articles are certainly to the point. Bro. J. S. Durst's no less so; Bro. I. C. Stone's "so plain;" but, Bro. McGary, my first impression of yours was, that you were sound and logical, but too personal. But upon reflection I remembered that "Paul withstood Peter to the face, before them all;" also, that he wrote a letter to be read publicly, in which he said "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world;" also, that he hesitated not to tell the Corinthian brethren that "they of the house of Chloe" had informed him of contentions among them. No doubt, the members of Sister Chloe's household would rather not have had the name of tale-bearers among the brethren of Corinth; but Paul cared not for this, when the cause he loved was in danger. There are other "personalities" of brother Paul's, that I will not enumerate, as these will suffice to show that you have apostolic example for your outspoken style. Paul says, "those things which you have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do; and the God of peace shall be with you." So you have the promise of God's blessing, as long as you take Paul for an example; but be careful not to transcend him! Our brethren show their tendency to sectarianism by becoming so incensed when a "big preacher" is arraigned publicly for teaching error. If some of our "big preachers" have become false teachers and will not "cease to pervert the right way of the Lord," why should they not be "rebuked before all?"

But enough for this time, and I fear you will say "more than enough!" With an earnest wish for your success, I subscribe myself your sister, in the one hope. SARAL.

This sister has not only our permission to "talk to the sisters" through our columns, but we hail her proposition with joy and gladness. Of course we reserve the privilege of criticising what she may have to say, in the light of that word she seems, and doubtless does, reverence so highly, should occasion present itself to our mind at any time. However, we do not mean to be understood as anticipating such necessity; far from it! Her tone in this letter gives "no uncertain sound," but is highly evincive of a mind and heart well stored with that knowledge and love which is from above. We sincerely hope that she may, in her "talks with her sisters," win them away from the fashion plates through which Butterick and Demorest, etc., etc., are appealing to "the lust of their flesh, the lust of their eyes, and the pride of life," and leading them captive to the god of this world. Paul and Peter have furnished Christian women with a fashion plate that will please the eye of the true and living God. We presume that this sister has given this heaven appointed, plate of fashion, due consideration. Will she urge the attention of her sisters—so many of whom are adorning themselves after the styles of Demorest and Butterick—to a due consideration of their wicked rebellious course? How sad it is to contemplate the hold that the god of this world has upon professing Christians! One may attend the Church of Austin—which we suppose is no exception—on Lord's day, and find useless and forbidden "adorning" enough, worn by sisters, in such articles as jewelry, bangs, frizzes, silks, satins, fine hats, etc., to relieve all of the actual wants of the poor of this city of twenty thousand population! And this is saying nothing of the wastefulness and sinfulness, indulged in by the other churches, that would be corrected, and finally won to Christ, if Christians would add to their faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. My sister, will you "talk to your sisters" seriously, about these things? If so what a grand and glorious work awaits you! We do not mean to intimate that there is more sinfulness in this respect among the sisters than among the brethren. My sister, I feel encouraged by the very sensible view you have taken of our "personalities." I will try not to transcend the examples of our beloved brother Paul, but I can hardly hope to succeed every time. I ask your prayers, as well as that of all true brothers and sisters. Christianity can only be read in the perfect law of liberty. What a pity! what a shame! what a sin! that it is not exemplified in the lives of those professing it, after it has been read so many hundreds of years! Our Saviour intended that it should be read in the lives of those who believed on Him through the words of His witnesses. Brethren and sisters, judgment will begin at the house of God, and to make our calling and election sure and gain an entrance in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we must turn from the world, and denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we must live soberly, righteously and Godly in this present world! We may then look for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

THE "ONE BAPTISM"—WHAT ARE ITS CHARACTERISTICS?

Before attempting to enter into a close and connected inquiry of the question propounded in our caption, we will offer such preliminary remarks as the nature and importance of the question seems, to us at least, to demand. This inquiry will doubtless necessitate a series of articles, so that the last lingering doubt may be removed from the minds of many brethren, who are now, almost persuaded,

of the rightfulness of the course that the FIRM FOUNDATION has taken in relation to this question, and is urging all brethren to duly consider; also, that all conscientious brethren of that class, who are treating its work as divisive and unrighteous, may—if they will favor us with an impartial reading—see that the sum of its offense before God and man, consists in its strict adherence to and “earnest contention for the faith once delivered to the saints.” The defensibility of the grounds upon which we place the “one baptism” seems, to us, to be so abundantly provided for, by the Scriptures, that it would be exceedingly difficult for us to determine which of the many modes in which this question might be presented, would be best. That is, which promises the most logical, concise and scriptural view of the question, to such as have not hitherto looked it squarely in the face! If we maintain these grounds, in the light of Truth—support them by exemplifying their perfect agreement and consistency with “the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus”—why may we not expect our brethren to abandon all such connection with the pleas of men, as are out of consonance with these grounds? No one should ever feel so over-confident in relation to this or kindred questions, as to refuse to look at or re-examine points upon which life or death hinge; or to correct mistakes when clearly pointed out to them in that “light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.” To refuse to correct errors, when clearly shown to be such by the word of God, is to lightly esteem the heaven-appointed way and virtually place it on a level with man’s ways, is to virtually expose one’s infidelity, while prating about the importance of faith. To have a well grounded hope of “an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away,” one must be an heir of God—a joint heir with Christ—a member of the “one body.” To become a member of the “one body” is to hear, understand and believe in its Author; and to hear, understand, believe in and yield obedience to the law appointed for induction into it, because of its divine appointment. I fear that many of our brethren, in their eagerness to wear the satanic badge—orthodoxy—are beginning to spirit away the beautiful simplicity of the gospel of God’s son. Brethren, there is something more matter-of-fact about becoming a Christian, and living a life of Christianity too, than most of us seem willing to admit. To enjoy the privileges and blessings purchased for us by Christ, we must become citizens of the “commonwealth of Israel;” and then go to work for the Lord. Now, the difference between those who are citizens of this commonwealth, and those who are not, lies, wholly, in what those who are citizens, have heard, understood, believed and obeyed, that those who are not, have not heard, or if they have heard, have not understood, or if they have understood, have not believed, or if they have believed have not obeyed. For example, foreigners may become citizens of America by a fixed law of naturalization. Many Irish have availed themselves of the liberties of American citizenship. But the difference between a naturalized Irishman and a foreign one, is not to be looked for, in the color

of their hair or eyes, nor in their difference in stature; but the difference lies in the fact, that the naturalized one has heard, understood, believed and obeyed a law that the other has not heard, understood, believed and obeyed. So it is between those in Christ and those out of Christ,—except that one may, by outward show, so deceive the heads of human governments as to entitle himself to all of the privileges and blessings they promise and afford, while the great Head of "Israel's commonwealth" sees the "inner man" as well as the outer. If these promises are regarded by any as being too broad, we insist that they are just broad enough to be covered by the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, as sealed by the blood of the new institution. If they are considered too narrow, we have to say that they are just narrow enough to shut out the products of "corruptible seed." Hence it is as broad or narrow as the "measuring reed" will justify us to make it. The man who would linger around the primary steps or appointments of the gospel—the law of induction into Christ—to the exclusion of the graduating steps of the higher Christian life—"Virtue (courage), knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity" (love)—would not only soon forget that he was purged from his old sins, but would shut up that abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, against himself and all who might follow his pernicious ways. So of the man who would lightly esteem the primary steps—law of induction into Christ. To satisfy his own carnal mind, he would vitiate and even nullify that way washed clean and holy by the blood of his Saviour! God's way must be let alone, left as it is. Those who do not like it, without a glossing luster of progressive hues, should say so by a written creed, setting forth the changes they desire! This way of selling the "birth right" for a mess of sectarian pottage, is not only contemptible in the sight of all true disciples of Christ, but is the very worst phase of treason against God, and will surely bring its soul-blighting penalty when the "secrets of men's hearts are made manifest in the day when God shall judge men by Jesus Christ according to the gospel." The great orthodox army—which of all enemies of God, have waged the most effective warfare against Him—whenever they have applied their touch-stone to our plea, have found it wanting, because it was not "charitable" enough to yield up some of God's appointments, to win recognition under its shibboleth.

But alas! the day has arrived when we are about to become another sect; "when all men shall speak well of us." A strict adherence to the law of the spirit of life, would have led us farther and farther away from these wicked bodies, instead of bringing us, as we are, into such close proximity to them, as to regard them as "our brethren" in Christ. The false teaching of our popular preachers, in this day when they are hired at large salaries to expound the law to the "lalty," is doing the work of wiping out the dividing lines between the church of God and worldly institutions, most effectively. The man who can do this work the most rapidly and effectually commands the highest price now in the pastor market. Oh! what a shame it is, that true soldiers all over the land will not rise up in the strength of a true soldier's armor—in Israel's strength—and battle in obedience to the command of their "King!" Why have they not long ago, in the light of the solemn warning of God, to the elders of the Church of Ephesus, through the great apostle to the Gentiles, cast out these "grievous wolves, who are not sparing the flock?" The only safeguard against them, now, is the same one that Paul commended unto his brethren, then, "the word of God's grace." Brethren, will we make use of it and shield the "fold" of the living God, against these voracious wolves in sheep's clothing? or will we desert the post of duty and succumb to popular clamor? One or the other we must do, and that quickly! Our Saviour said to His disciples: "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Immediately after this language to them, He says. "Beware of false prophets, teachers which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Matt. vii, 13-15. The "ravening wolves" of our Saviour's language, must be the "grievous wolves" of Paul's language found in Acts xx, 29. Now, brethren, is it not highly important that we heed these plain and solemn warnings of inspiration, too? Or shall we conclude that the grievous wolves passed away with the miraculous age? If so, we have been spoiled through the philosophy and vain deceit of worldly wise man-made "pastors" and "elders," grievous or ravening wolves!

It is not our special purpose to point out these "wolves" in sheep's clothing of the nineteenth century, but brethren, they are among us, and their name is legion. Our Savior said we should know them by their fruits, Math., vii, 16-20. Remember, brethren, it is our duty to watch for these characters, else how can we "beware of them?" Again, remember when we undertake to identify them, that we must not conclude that every one who says, "Lord, Lord," thereby proves himself; for we may expect these "wolves" to do just that thing. Remember how they are clad! They must be tried in the light of eternal Truth. We may know them by their fruits. At the time that Paul warned the elders of Ephesus, against these deceitful enemies of God, some of their fruits were to enter in among the disciples, not "sparing the flock." Also, there were some of them to arise from among the disciples, and draw away disciples by speaking perverse things. See Acts xx, 30. Now, if we have the same kind of fruits to-day, it comes from the same kind of trees—characters—"grievous wolves." Have we not a class, who are robbing true and tried gospel preachers of a living, that the churches ought, and would give them, but for the philosophy and vain deceit, by which they win their hearers away from the "truth as it is in Jesus?" Are they not consuming upon their lusts, that which should go to alleviate the pinchings of poverty and general destitution among the fatherless and widows, and the poor in general? Those who are not prepared to answer these queries should acquaint themselves with the modus operandi of our popular churches of the cities. They hire pastors at figures ranging from fifteen hundred to thirty-five hundred dollars per annum, which amounts are wasted in a style of life wholly condemned by God's word. While they are thus wallowing in the luxuries of sensuous living, purchased at the price of hunger and rags, even sometimes in hearing of their long prayers, old pioneers of the gospel, because they have not passed through colleges, are pushed into heat and cold and all manner of privations and trial at their own charges. The "pastor" who will not rebuke sin is considered worthy of his reward, while he who heeds Paul's admonition to "reprove, rebuke and exhort with all long suffering and doctrine," is branded as an old fogey and is driven into seclusion. But we have strayed somewhat from our subject. But what is it to "draw away disciples by speaking perverse things?" What is it to speak "perverse things?" Is it not to speak without authority for what is spoken? Is it not to "pervert the right ways of the Lord?" Yes, and that is done every time any "prophet" (teacher) speaks for God (?) without "speaking as His oracles speak." Then, to teach that one may be "born of water and the Spirit"—baptized into Christ—before they have been taught, or been begotten by the words of the Spirit spoken through apostles and "bound," as "the law of the life in Christ Jesus—in earth and heaven," is surely a perversion—is surely "speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples;" and all who accept such teaching, are drawn away from the truth. "The truth as it is in Jesus," so far as it was necessary for us to know that truth, can be found in God's word, else that word would not be the thorough furnishing that it claims to be. It is the language of a false prophet, which says: "All who are baptized to honor God are Christians, whether or not they believed baptism was for the remission of sins." If this were true, then the word of God would lack just that much of giving us the whole truth, and would be responsible for the division among us to-day on the baptismal question. We would cease to hold to any theory that would fasten such a charge upon Jehovah! We do not mean that these very words would have to be found in God's word, but a clear and necessary inference, leading to them, must be there, or our reasoning above is self-evident! There could possibly be no broader grounds of difference between disciples than to differ as widely as we do upon the law of induction into Christ. The passages of Scripture, which are so abundant, teaching the extreme sinfulness of division among Christians, and which have been so long kept in constant use by us, in our war against, what we call Sectarianism, might now be used, with telling effect, nearer home! In fact, they were written for just such use. Our Saviour's prayer, as found in xvii John, for union, was for the union of those who might believe on Him through the words of the men He sent to preach—to tell the "truth," which was to be "known" in order that it might "make those who heard it and believed it, free," by obeying its terms. The apostles told nothing but "the truth;" but some of our wise "prophets" in their eagerness to lead away disciples by speaking "perverse things," evidently think that the spirit spoke some things about baptism that need not have been spoken. In fact, if these teachers are right, the spirit only laid grounds of contention and division, when it said that baptism was for the remission of sin! Again, Paul, in I. Cor. i, 10, was not speaking of a division that existed between Pharisees, Sadduces and Christians; but he was speaking of division among Christians. In Paul's letter to the Christians at Rome, he said: "Now, I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." Now, brethren, no fair mind will undertake to deny that there is contention among us on this question, that will in the very nature of things, ultimately cause divisions." In fact there is a virtual division among us now on many questions; and it is but reasonable to suppose that these contentions and virtual divisions will ultimately result in open rupture. But who is responsible for the division and contention now existing among us on the Missionary Convention question? It is the man, or men, who have introduced practices "contrary to the doctrine we have learned." They are the men who should be "marked and avoided." Mark you! It is not the man who contends—for Christians must contend for the truth—for the faith, but it is that man who introduces something contrary to the doctrine we have learned, and contends for it. True disciples must contend against such things. "It must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" Brethren, we need not expect that God's way will roll smoothly on in a world so full of lust and rebellion as is this sin-cursed one. That class of brethren who are clamoring so for peace, on false grounds, while they profess to be actuated by the spirit of Christ, are just about as good as the devil would have them. The trouble with nine-tenths of them, we believe, is that they have about forgotten God, and hence "have become ignorant of God's righteousness and are going about to establish their own righteousness;" and "by good words and fair speeches are deceiving the hearts of the simple," into their own cowardly and ungodly ways. But we will say more upon this point at another time. Who is to be "marked and avoided" among us for this contention over the baptismal question? We have been quite recently "dismissed (avoided) from the further notice" of a very prominent brother, concerning this question; but in all seriousness and candor, and in the fear of God, we ask, which of us should be avoided, judging the matter in the light of Paul's solemn admonition? Must the one be marked and avoided who claims that the words spoken by the Holy Spirit, through men chosen and sent by our Lord to speak them, is "the doctrine that must be learned," before any one can become a member of the "one body;" or is it the one who teaches that some things said through these men, by the Spirit, need not be learned? Is it the one who shows a "thus saith the Lord" for what he teaches on this question? Or is it he who speaks where the oracles of God have not spoken, thereby making a portion of God's word a nullity? Brethren, these men who cling to, and try to shield a human plea, who advocate things that cannot be found in "the doctrine we have learned," are surely the men who cause contentions and division contrary to the doctrine of Christ! They are "false prophets," (teachers). They are leading disciples away from God. They are careless "builders" on a foundation that has been laid in the wisdom and knowledge of God. We fear naught that these false teachers may say or do against our work; for so long as we advocate the appointments of God's Son, and counsel against ways that He did not teach us, they will not be able to do our work much real harm. Would to God they would cease to fight against God, for a human plea! These teachers are like the false prophets of old, who stole the words of the Lord from their neighbors." These nineteenth century prophets have turned their backs upon the Lord's way and their faces towards a human plea. They have assumed to speak for the Lord and say what will please Him, from the imagination of their own hearts. "How shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? They are prophets of the deceit of their own hearts, which think to cause the Lord's people to forget His name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbor, as the fathers forgot His name for Baal." These modern teachers (prophets) may advocate their "dreams and imaginations," and enjoy all of the popular applause that such a course will bring them, but we intend to speak the word of God unmixed with these popular adulterations. "Is not His word as a fire, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Yes! And we intend to try this fire and hammer of truth upon a formation hardened by more than a quarter of a century's crystallization around a human plea. We are told that God is no stickler, to require us to look for the whys and wherefores of His commands." And He is not; but when He has plainly and repeatedly told us anything He expects us to believe it, and to obey and defend it against all of the dreams and imaginations of false prophets; or, any connection with any part of their dreams and imaginations! The Lord has not sent these prophets, "yet they ran: He has not spoken to them, yet they have prophesied." If they had stood in his counsel and had caused the people to hear His words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings. "Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name; saying I have dreamed." To say that God has promised to adopt, as sons and daughters, those who have believed in and obeyed the preaching of those who have preached human plans, creeds and dogmas; because those creeds mixed some truth in with their many lies, is to "prophesy lies in His name." Oh! how many "lying prophets" are abroad in our land! To say for the Lord, what He has not authorized to be said, through those "sent" and guided by the Spirit, is to "prophecy lies in his name." "Thus shall ye say, every one to his neighbor, and every one to his brother, what hath the Lord answered? and what the Lord spoken?" This is the question that should sink deep down into the hearts of us all, and especially, into the hearts of those who have so loudly and persistently cried that "His words are a sufficient rule of faith and practice." Let those who try to justify their human and inconsistent ways, by saying that "God is no stickler," remember Lot's wife, the case of the prophet of God, Uzzah, and Achan; and they will see that while it is true that "God is no stickler," He is very "jealous of His words."

It was the great Apostle to the Gentiles, who said: "There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism." The "one body" is the body—the church—the kingdom of Christ. The "one spirit" is the spirit that actuates and vivifies the "one body"—the spirit that brought to the remembrance of the apostles the "all things" whatsoever the son of God had said to them—the spirit that guided their tongues and pens while they promulgated to the world the way, the only way, the "bound" way, into remission of sins—into the "one body." The "one hope" is the hope of eternal life through faith in the promises of God—that hope that Christians have "as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." The "one Lord" is the Son of God—the Lord Jesus Christ—our prophet, priest and king, who has

To all of these, as far as we have gone, our brethren will doubtless all agree. But the "one baptism!" What is it? What its characteristics? This is the question, reader, to which your attention from this time forth will be invited. Is it simply immersion in water? No! None of my brethren will so far forget the commission of our Lord, to His "witnesses," when He sent them forth into "all the world to preach the gospel to every creature," or to "teach all nations," as to say that there are no antecedent or preparatory steps, or conditions, which are to be coupled with immersion, to make up the sum of the "one baptism" spoken of by Paul—the one baptism by which our past sins are "washed away" and we buried with Christ. Brethren, we have taken up more space in these preliminaries than we intended. In our next issue we will begin that process of inquiry which we hold will answer the question, "What is the one baptism—what its characteristics?" We confidently expect to make many converts to the truth on this question, from those who are now, violently opposed to the course we hold and advocate. We will now give some idea of the process of inquiry we purpose to pursue. Our Saviour spoke of what we call the law of induction into His "body," both literally and figuratively. He then sent the apostles forth to the work. Now, we intend to take all that our Saviour said upon this question, and try the theory of those who attempt to defend sectarian baptism by what He said. That is, we intend to "try" their work by His literal teaching and by His figurative teaching. Also, we have a record of the work done by these chosen men, and letters from them with allusions to this work, in which we find also literal teaching and figurative. Now, if this modern theory fails to accord with any of this teaching, after it has had a fair trial, it must be wrong. We may invite our readers to journey with us, by faith, with the apostles, beginning at Jerusalem, from thence into all Judea; then into Samaria, and then into the uttermost parts of the earth. We intend to give "our plea" a thorough test, under the weight of the "fire and hammer of God's word." If it will not bear a close analogy to the new birth, to the "sowing and growth of the incorruptible seed;" in fact, to all the teaching of this style, it must be abandoned by all true soldiers of Christ.

GIVE THE RED MAN THE GOSPEL!

Brethren, we have received a short article from Bro. Officer, laying before our readers some facts relative to the Indian mission—a good work! But we have mislaid it, and though we have made diligent search, cannot find it. If he will favor us with another, we here promise to be more careful with it. Brethren, if you believe this work of Bro. Officer's a good one, can't you send to him

(R. W. Officer) at Paris, Texas, something to aid in the work? Remember, brethren, that the white man drove the "red man" from his hunting grounds, and plowed them up, and built wicked cities upon them, in which cities the Gospel of Christ is being grossly perverted! Now, brethren, help to send the good news of the certainty of the "happy hunting ground"—salvation in heaven for the much-abused red man—and it will amply pay him for his loss in time.

BRO. JACKSON TAKEN TO TASK.

A brother has written us taking Bro. Jackson to task for something he said in his article, "Unto what then were you Baptized?" The trouble is, Bro. Jackson said that these twelve disciples whom Paul "disturbed" about their baptism at Ephesus, were in the church. This old brother, who wrote about this matter, is sound to the core, and wants "sound speech that cannot be condemned." He is right! We cannot be too particular in the use of our words upon these momentous themes. But we have not the remotest idea, that Bro. Jackson intended to convey the thought that these were real bona fide members of Christ's body, Christians, but that they were acting in conjunction with the Ephesian brethren in the work of the Lord, and considered by them as Christians and brethren. But when Paul, who was "determined to know nothing but Christ, and Him crucified," came along and found that these had not complied with "the law of the Spirit, of life in Christ Jesus," the same "law that had made him free," he had them baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, "re-baptized," just as he would do now, were he to come along and find many that are with the churches on a baptism not half as good as that of the twelve, if there is any difference. These nineteenth-century kind might contend that they were "baptized to honor God," and draw the "Christian system" on Paul, and charge him with "hobby riding," "riding roughshod through our peaceful churches." And when they saw that none of these things "moved him," he might be "dismissed from their further notice," until he would consent to gulp down "our plea" without even making a wry face! If these twelve had told Paul that they were "baptized to honor God," he could have told them that he used to "bind, and cast into prison, both men and women," to honor God; but that he had since learned that there was not much honor to God in such work.

We do not pretend to speak for Bro. Jackson on the issue raised against his language, but hope he will "rise and explain" to his brethren. We are sure he will in his next. Bro. Jackson will not, in the future, appear as an editor of our pamphlet. His work elsewhere will not permit it; but he promises to write occasionally for our readers. His writings, in our pamphlet, have been very highly appreciated by our readers, and he will, doubtless, be sadly missed from our columns. But let us here say to our readers, that Bro. Jackson has lost none of his zeal for the work that he has taken part in, in the pamphlet. He knows the truth, and if we are not badly deceived in him, he will not shun to declare it wherever he goes. We truly and sincerely wish him success.

WE take great pleasure in adding Bro. R. B. Renick's name to our list of authorized agents. Bro. Renick is one of our young preachers, though about fifty years old, so we are told by one who knows him. He was converted to Christ some years ago, from a human institution known as the Presbyterian Church. While in this human institution, where he thought that he was honoring and serving God, he had the good fortune to hear that valient old soldier, A. B. West, of Blanco county, who won him to Christ, since which time he has gone into the work of proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ, with a very marked earnestness and success. About one month and a half ago, Bro. Renick's name was sent us in a club with others, by Bro. Larrimore, who is one of our most successful agents. Since Bro. Renick has been a reader of the FIRM FOUNDATION, he has sent us two clubs of subscribers, aggregating forty or more. We consider it quite a compliment to our pamphlet for men who are as sound in the faith and as well spoken of by those who know them, as these brethren, to manifest so much interest in its circulation. They evidently do not coincide with that Bonham editor and brother, who says that it is proclaiming a "new gospel," and that he can't bid it God speed. It would rejoice our heart to have an opportunity to clasp the hand and exchange words of love and encouragement, with that remnant of our brethren who have not yet "bowed the knee to Baal"—those who are for God's way, just as He "thoroughly

Oh! will they not cease to pervert that way that is bound by the acts and writings of God's apostles? Do their writings, which thoroughly furnish us with all things that pertain unto life and godliness, show that persons may be baptized into the "one body" without understanding that the "one baptism" is for the remission of sins? No! Brethren, will you not deny it anywhere? Do these writings of the Galilean fisherman, and Saul (Paul) of Tarsus, who were chosen by our Savior to be His witnesses, show that "confession with the mouth" is a necessary antecedent to the "one baptism?" Yes! Brethren, will you not affirm it against the allied hosts of earth, if need be? Then, brethren, while you are standing up for God's law of enlisting recruits into the service of His son, will you not draw the "sword" in defense of the "fatherless and the widows," who are being robbed by the modern "pastor," of what Christ intended they should have? Are you, brethren, going to remain silent and inactive, while the old pioneer proclaimers of a pure gospel, who have borne the heat and burden of the day, are being pushed to one side to make room for a mixed, an adulterated, new-fangled article, vended by diplomacy, by college fledglings? Shall their venerable heads and gray hair be bowed down in sorrow, and the residue of their valuable days be buried in seclusion, to make places for "grievous" "wolves" "in sheeps' clothing?" These place-hunting college boys demand from two to three thousand dollars per year, and they will not drill the churches up to progressive tactics for less. So "old foggy" preachers must go at their own charges, taking heat and cold; and widows and orphans must beg and cry for bread; while brussels carpets, silver communion sets and organs are being provided to make everything meet for the "pastor's" use. How much longer will true soldiers wait to strike for truth?

A. McG.

To the brother who asks us if we consider the word "kingdom," wherever it occurs in the Scriptures, as relating to the church of Christ on earth, we have to say that we do not so restrict its import. It reaches to a higher development, but of the same institution that is now being so badly corrupted. We wish we had room to say more here, and may do so at another time. We would like to hear from the brother who asked the question.

We have deferred our answer to Bro. Lipscomb to next issue, for reasons that our readers would doubtless decide good.

BAPTIST BAPTISM.

"If Baptists have any other use for baptism than to make Baptists, we would be glad to have them rise and explain. Will some of the wise Baptist editors answer the following?

1. What do Baptists baptize for?
2. Does their baptism take place out of the church, or in it?
3. If out, how can it be a "Church ordinance?"
4. If in, how can it be a door to the Baptist Church?
5. Has God commanded that believing penitents shall be baptized?
6. If yes, why do they vote whether they will do it or not? Has the Church a right to vote whether it will obey God or not? We would like some good, solid, square answers to these six interrogatories."

The above is from the pen of J. T. Poe. It looks to us like double-distilled impudence. How inconsistent some of our teachers are, when you compare their attempts to defend "our plea" at this point, with what they have to say about sectarian work at other times. Whenever J. T. Poe condemns Baptist baptism he condemns himself. It seems to offend these brethren to show up their in-

If he is now penitent of this and his other sins, it is a good time to be baptized for the remission of sins. We hope our old friend Poe has not become our enemy, "because we have told him the truth." But in telling him and others the truth, we are now aware that we said some things we ought not to have said, and we are sorry for it.

"PERSONALITIES."

We hear a great deal said about "personalities." Quite a number of our readers have written us, urging us to cease to be so personal in what we write. Like brother Harding's readers, many of ours tell us how to make our pamphlet popular. Now, in the outset, we freely confess that we have made many mistakes in our efforts to correct the mistakes of others. We have not, every time, said just the thing we ought to have said, nor in the way it should have been said. We have said cutting things sometimes, that we are now sorry for; but who has not? If there are any among our legion of scribes who cannot find something that they have written that they are now sorry for, or that they could improve upon after maturer reflection, then that man is not fit to teach Christianity. Even Paul, under the spur of the moment, said things that he ought not to have said; but he was not so full of himself, like most of us, as to let such things go long unconfessed. Again, we here take occasion to assure those who have written us upon this question, that we entertain no doubts as to their purposes or intentions. We thank them, every one, from the depths of our heart, for the interest they have thus manifested in our welfare. The trouble they have taken, to write us long and kind letters, instead of remaining silent to us and heralding their disapproval in every other direction, as is generally done, is proof conclusive to us that their intentions are praiseworthy. Besides, some of them are our tried and truest friends. We have said these things, that our readers may understand, that what follows has not grown out of even a semblance of resentment at anything that has been written us on this subject; for this is called forth by said letters, and is designed to give clearer conceptions to some of our brethren, especially to that class who are for peace, peace, peace! Peace with the organ, the grab-bag, the church sociable, jug-breaking, parlor-dancing, modern pastor (who lords it over God's heritage), immodest apparel (such as jewelry, bangs, frizzes, silks, satins, etc., etc., jockey caps and fine hats, with tropical birds roosting on them), and—a-n-d the silk "beegum" or "plug hat" of the dudsish pastor; the "missionary society," and sectarian immersion. Yes, peace with anything and everything; peace with the devil and his angels even, that the code of ethics inaugurated by "wolves in sheep's clothing," and approved by the "kingdom of the clergy," may adjudge your peaceful(?) course to be dictated by the spirit of Christ—that the devil may be all in all. Brethren, those of you who are readers of the Advocate, please read carefully brother J. A. Harding's article on "The Spirit of Christ," issue of January 7, 1885. We did intend to publish it for the benefit of our readers, and may at another time; but this time it has been crowded out by other matter, because most of our readers are also Advocate readers. Those of you who are not readers of the Advocate, borrow it from your neighbors who are; it is well worth the trouble. But, brethren, the man who proclaims "the truth as it is in Jesus" faithfully, in this day of looseness, must wound a large per cent of the people, both saint and sinner; must render himself, by so doing, unpopular. Then, brethren, cease to expect popularity in this world while you are warring against the "children of this world." Your Saviour, with all of His goodness and meekness, could not do what most of you seem to be hoping to do. When He spoke, those who loved the truth became His friends and followers, while those who did not love the truth, became His foes and persecutors. The story of the cross tells which was the popular side then. It will be so till Christ comes back. Those who are not willing to be on the side of the unpopular, are not willing to be on Christ's side—would have been against Him had they lived in His day. Brethren, "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." And if he love not the world, of course the world will not love him, but will hate him. "The lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life" are not of God but are of the world. If you war against these things the world will hate you, and God will love you. Brethren, "choose ye this day whom ye will serve." "Yes, but," says some brother, "we must not use such plain or personal language in our war against these things; fight measures, not men. We must war in the spirit of Christ." This is the issue. We presume no one would undertake to justify little sharp cuts and insinuating flings that spring out of personal dislikes or grudges. We shall not, however much of it we may have done in the past; and we fear we are not perfectly innocent here. But who is going to shape our course as to how we shall war against sin in high or low places? Shall the kingdom of the clergy, who have ingrafted in their code of ethics the metes and bounds of the world's formulated rules of etiquette for polite society? Or shall we take our Saviour and those He sent to guide us, for our exemplars? We prefer the latter. We have examples recorded by the pen of inspiration, where our Saviour and the apostles dealt with error in and out of the Church. These examples show us, that they dealt with both "men and measures," they were quite "personal." If they were here in person, in this day, which is so full of nineteenth century Phariseeism, where they had to give an account of their way of dealing with men and measures, before the tribunal of the kingdom of the clergy, they would stand a poor show. The modern pastor's influence would overshadow and condemn them. But says one, "I know that Christ and the apostles dealt in personalities, but we have not the authority they had; we can't presume to do what they did." We often hear this! But is it true? Are we in danger of God's wrath and condemnation, when we ignore the ways of the world, and try to shape our course in all things, by the examples of these men who were led about by the spirit of God? If we can't "presume" to do things they did, why did Paul say to his Philipian brethren, "Brethren, be followers together of me?" Why did he say to them, "Those things which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do, and the God of peace shall be with you?" Why did he say to them, "For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us?" Paul said to his Roman brethren, and through them to us, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." But brethren, we are not heeding him. We want to make money like the world does, dress like the world, vote as the world, dance like the world, attend the skating rink like the world, and fawn and flatter like the world. In short, if we are a peculiar people, zealous of good works, so is the world. Where is that "peculiarity" to be found, that is to distinguish us from the world?

Brethren, we should no more "conform" to the world in our way of speaking or writing, than in other things. We should speak the truth in love (and lie not), but in the love of God, not in the love of his enemies. We do not and cannot love the ways of the man who lords it over God's heritage. We care not how long and well rounded his prayers may be. If God expects us to love such, He demands what we can't do, which we know he does not. This is not saying that we could not love such men, if they would change their course, and humble themselves down to God's way. Not to perfection, for we deny that we ever claimed it for ourself, or expected it in others. A few days ago a brother told us that he could always tell when anything was said or written in the spirit of Christ. He said that nothing wounding, was ever written in the spirit of Christ. We asked him what he thought of ye "stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears," and "He that saith, I know him and keepeth not his commandments is a liar and the truth is not in him;" and many other passages of the same character? We asked him if he thought these were wounding. One wounded those to whom it was said, so deeply that they killed the devout man who said it. Who doubts that the other has wounded its thousands? And yet if these men were not actuated by the love of God, the Spirit of Christ, who ever has been? Brethren, we need never look for higher standards among those who write in defense of Chistianity, than were the apostles of our Lord. The modern pastor and his adoring followers may deal with the question in a pleasing style, so as to cause "all men to speak well of them;" but while they are charming the world, the flesh and the devil, they are being led by the wicked spirit. To be transformed from the ways of the world by the renewing of one's mind, to a state approved by God, is to exchange popularity for unpopularity. The man who preaches the word of God faithfully, and lives a godly life, is apt to be a poor man in this world's goods. Wealth and Bible Chistianity (for the world has another kind) are not often found walking hand in hand. The man who does just what the word of God teaches cannot lay up a surplus of this world's goods, and hence cannot be a rich man, from a worldly standpoint. If he does lay it up, "its rust will be a witness against him." We care naught for how unpopular the saying of these things may render us; they are true, whoever they may condemn; even if we are among them. If we were seeking popularity, we would either plünge into the broad current of liberalism and float upon its bosom, or we would attend some popular Bible college, and learn by rote, the well established methods of acquiring power and control over the "laity," how to be popular by stereotyped and never failing rules. Brethren, many of you have no idea to what low and sinful courses our leading men are stooping to gain popularity! They deal in "personalities," but only in a way to help themselves to place and power. Some time ago, we knew one of our very popular preachers to hold a protracted meeting for a certain church in this State. During the progress of this meeting, as the preacher would visit around among his brethren, he expressed himself as being deeply impressed by the many evidences of lifelessness and worldliness of the church. But he took care to speak this where it would not wound. He said that if he had known the condition of the church, in this respect, and its divided condition, he could not have been induced to visit it. He spoke of its pastor, in certain places, in uncomplimentary terms. He spoke of another preacher as a bad man, one who was always trying to "undermine the character of other preachers." He said he had never preached for such a church, and hoped he would never have to again; that he did not know how to preach to please them—whether to "preach it round or flat." Now, this preacher went away from that place, and wrote that church up in the papers as the best church he ever knew, all working unitedly and harmoniously! He spoke of the pastor in the very highest terms, as he also did of the "undermining" preacher! In short, he praised everything and everybody that he saw at that place! Now, that man is one of the most popular men in the State. Let him 'who wants popularity at such fearful cost have it and enjoy it; for in it he has his reward. We remonstrated with this preacher for his course in this matter, but in doing it we brought ourself under his disfavor, as well as that of some of his friends, we fear.

I tell you, brethren, it is unpopular to speak the truth openly. We are not at all in doubt as to our course in THE FIRM FOUNDATION being unpopular; and, while we thank our brethren for their letters on this subject and others, and shall at all times be pleased to hear from them with such advice as they may offer us, we here take occasion to assure them that we need no further argument upon the subject, as to whether or not our course is unpopular. We have not written this to justify anything we have heretofore written, of a cutting or sarcastic nature. There is a happy mean, between two dangerous extremes, in dealing with error. That mean is to be found in the examples of God's apostles. We try to follow it, but confess that we have fallen far short of it.

OUR REPLY TO BROTHER D. LIPSCOMB.

This will not be as elaborate as we intended to make it when we first promised it to our readers. Brother Lipscomb's silence upon our request of him to inform his readers that we would send them our reply, free, if they would send in their names, demonstrates to us his utter inability to treat us fairly. We fear he has resisted the truth and sought ways and means to obtain vantage grounds over it, till he has beclouded his vision by delusions and blunted his finer sensibilities with virus, till there is no ground for hope left of his trying to see, or of his ever being willing to treat any opponent on this question impartially. Hence we will curtail our defense against his unjust charges (that we had wilfully misrepresented him) down to the mere mention of a few facts, and rely upon their weight to exonerate us. It is hard to have to tamely submit to being accused, before five thousand brethren, of misrepresenting a brother, and not be permitted to even submit a defense. But those who dare to turn their backs upon all human pleas and plans, and boldly proclaim the sinfulness of such things, as subversive of God's redemptive plan, always have been, and doubtless always will be badly treated, till Christ comes back.

Brother Lipscomb thought right hard of Elder Errett, for refusing to allow him to defend himself against some charges brought against him in the Standard. Brother L. said many hard things against Elder Errett for his course in this matter. "Thou art inexcusable, O, man, for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things." Brethren, we are poor disciples of our Lord, and very unprofitable servants until we learn to "do unto others as we would have them do unto us." If brother L. can satisfy himself that he has treated us on this principle, we have made up our mind to bear it, and not to recur to it again. But we cannot consent to "dismiss" brother

L. "from our further notice." If we could feel justified in following the bent of our own inclinations, irrespective of the demands of duty to the cause we owe fealty to, we might then do so. But brother L.'s logical and scriptural aggressions upon some of the innovations that are now so seriously disturbing the churches, and greatly hindering the truth, are so potent, that all who want to stand against these things, should read his manner of attack. Again, his widespread influence makes him such a formidable foe to the truth, on the baptismal question, that we cannot be true to our convictions, or preserve an unflinching fidelity to that which is committed to the trust of all disciples, and ignore him, by refusing to weaken his position against the truth, whenever an opportunity presents itself. With these remarks we pass on to the criticism of his article. He says:

"Brother McGary writes about us (he never meets an argument) several pages in his paper. But in response to our query as to whether A. Campbell, T. Fanning and others of the pioneers in the effort to return to apostolic ways, sinned in being baptized in obedience to Christ, before they knew it was for the remission of sins," he spends much time in telling it was I, and not brother Fanning, that did not understand that baptism was for the remission of sins. It makes not the least difference so far as the principle is concerned, whether it was I or brother Fanning, or both of us. (These personalities only divert from the question. I only wanted an example in the person of one against whom there was no prejudice.)

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

Brother L. says we never meet an argument. Well, the reason is very obvious. We have thus far had no chance to meet one. Brother Lipscomb, in all his efforts to appear as standing upon plausible grounds, has shown us nothing as authority for his position, but his word. We have repeatedly called on him for higher authority; but thus far he has failed to point us to one solitary passage in God's word, that we remember of, to sustain himself. So long as he regards his word as sufficient to settle the controversy, so long will it be impossible to reach him with an argument. When brother Lipscomb has sought to strengthen his own word, he has appealed to brother Campbell and brother Fanning, knowing at the same time that "personalities divert from the question." But, when we added the name of D. Lipscomb, was the first time he thought it necessary to call attention to the fact that personalities divert from the question. If, as he says, personalities divert from the question, why has he all the time claimed that this question hinged upon the status of these dead heroes of the faith. We have thought, all the while, that personalities diverted from the question. And we have further thought that if we wanted to use persons, we would call on the living, and let the dead rest. If personalities divert from the question, who then has tried most to divert? It is quite suggestive, to see a man of brother Lipscomb's ability, invading the silent precincts of the tombs, and summoning the most revered names from their sacred slumber, to stand in defense of his word, his untenable theories, and vague speculations. The high standing and universal appreciation and love among the brotherhood, for these revered dead, has all the more helped to divert from the question. Hence, they have served brother L. a valuable part, although he has not permitted them to speak for themselves. Brother L.'s use of these names on this question, can only find its counterpart in the course of our sectarian friends, when they point to their illustrious dead, who had depended on sprinkling for baptism: condemn sprinkling, and you condemn them! But brother L. never complains about personalities, or seems to see that they divert from the question, until his name is put in the same crucible that he puts brother Campbell's and brother Fanning's in!

We do not believe that this course of brother L.'s proceeds from an innate principle, but that it is the product of a blindness, brought on by gradually drifting farther and farther into untenable and unholy attitudes. He has never stated the issues on this question. Had he or any one else done so, and courageously come up to the discussion of it in the light of Scripture (all else is darkness), away would have gone this human and sinful feature of our plea long ago! Brother L. says:

"The question is, did that failure to see all the promises, or to realize the exact point in the path of obedience at which each promised blessing would be received, so vitiate the obedience as to render the act, intended by them as obedience to God, a sin in his sight?"

Now, we deny that this is a fair, cogent statement of the issues. Here are the issues in a nutshell, and any fair, unprejudiced mind will see it at a glance.

1. Do the Scriptures teach that one may be baptized into Christ before believing that baptism is for the remission of sins?

2. Is confession with the mouth a necessary antecedent to Scriptural baptism?

There is no use in trying to dodge these issues. They are here clearly and fairly stated. And we will here take occasion to state that any brother, or any one else, who may feel disposed to discuss them, from proper motives, can have a fair division of our columns for that purpose; or we will furnish a man who will deny the first and affirm the second, in oral discussion, anywhere in the State of Texas. But some of our brethren say it ought not to be discussed! Why not, brethren? What has truth to fear; it comes out of all conflicts strengthened and brightened, or ought to. It does not sound well to hear our brethren, who would cross the continent to discuss the design of baptism, say that it is wrong to discuss this question; or that it is not necessary that one should understand that design. This never will have a consistent look, brethren. It is a sin to preach what it is not necessary for persons to believe. But enough of this for the present. Bro. L. says:

"Now, was A. Campbell's baptism so vitiated by his failure to see that it was for the remission of sins, as to render it so void in the sight of God, that his failure to turn from it and be baptized for the remission of sins, caused his rejection by God? There is the naked issue that brother Mc-

Gary, like all other sectarians, will never meet."

My brother is mistaken. We will meet it, so far as it is possible for us to meet it. If brother Campbell was not baptized upon a hearing and a believing of the gospel (in which gospel, baptism for the remission was heard and believed), his baptism was null and void; because God never authorized such a baptism. And if it was a sin to be baptized "to John's baptism after it had ceased," as brother L. claims, then it was a sin in brother C or any other man (for God is no respecter of persons) to be baptized by a baptism which was never authorized by God. But as brother L. has put brother C. on trial, we are willing to let him speak for himself, and when he does, he does not strengthen brother L.'s side. We think that brother L. misrepresents brother Campbell's case, not intentionally. Hear brother Campbell. He says on page 248, "Campbell on Baptism," while on the design of baptism:

"The appeal, therefore, must be made to the proper tribunal. It must be carried up to the apostles and evangelists of Jesus Christ." On page 252 of the same book, brother Campbell said:

"In the first place, then, no one is commanded to be baptized for anything else, and no one is ever said to have been baptized for anything else, than for the remission of sins. This is a very important fact, and worthy of much reflection." (Italics, brother Campbell's.)

Again, on page 253, he says:

"Evident then it is, that there is no specific design on account of which any one can constitutionally be baptized,

except it be for the remission of sins previously committed."

On page 252, "Campbell on Baptism," brother C. says:

"It is the only purpose for which it was ordained; whether in the hands of John or of the twelve Apostles. What could be more plain or intelligible than such forms of expression as the following:

"John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.' It was not a baptism, but the baptism of repentance. It was not for remission of sins, but for the remission of sins. The fixtures of language could not more safely secure the intention of an institution. It was not because your sins have been remitted, but it is for, or in order to the remission of sins." In the Christian Baptist, page 521, brother C. says:

"Knowing that the efficacy of this blood is to be communicated to our consciences, in the way that God has pleased to appoint—we 'stagger not at the promise of God,' but flee to the sacred ordinance which brings the blood of Jesus in contact with our consciences. Without knowing and believing this, immersion is as empty as a blasted nut. The shell is there but the kernel is wanting." If then, brother C. was baptized without knowing the design of baptism, according to his own words he was not constitutionally baptized. His baptism was as a "blasted nut." Why will brother L. persist in placing this great man in such an attitude? If he was not baptized for the remission of past sins, and if he did not "confess with the mouth" as an antecedent to that baptism, he stifled his own conscientious convictions. Who believes that he did this? We do not! Brother Lipscomb may, if he can find it in his heart to thus judge that good man. We say, let the dead rest, but if they must be ushered before the sinful "hypocritical" living (as we agree with Brother L. that we all are, to some extent), do pray let them speak for themselves! Reader, note brother Campbell's italics, as we have given them in his own language. Will brother L. have the hardihood to again contend that brother C. went to his grave on an "unconstitutional baptism"—a baptism that was as a "blasted nut," according to his own conscientious convictions? How does he know that brother C. did not understand the design of baptism, when he was first baptized, or that he did not make the confession? And if he did not, how dare he say that that conscientious man did not afterwards correct it, by making his baptism constitutional? We know old preachers we have made their baptism constitutional, within the past few months, who have been preaching a quarter of a century. The writer was the administrator in one such case. Thank God! some brethren, who have spent more than a score of years in preaching Christ, are able to see themselves in a small enough light to discern that they are not special pets and favorites with the God of heaven!

Brother L. is deceiving himself on this question! When he has not the "re-baptism hobby" immediately before his eyes, he sees the work of sectarians in its true light, as we see it. Hear him express himself while in that condition:

"I believe no sinner is converted,

save as God converts him. My objection to Baptist teaching is, that they practically deny that God does or can convert sinners in the use of His own appointed means; and they substitute for God's appointments, man's inventions and devices, and accept as evidence of pardon, human dreams, visions and imaginations, instead of God's assurance. But God works through his appointments — men through their inventions; hence Baptist practice converts men through devices, and is a conversion by men. Their course drives God out of the work. They have more faith in human dreams, visions and imaginations than in the promises of God, given by the Holy Spirit, sealed by the blood of Christ and confirmed by the oath of Jehovah. Baptist conversion is wholly of men."

We have given this language of brother L.'s before, and commented on it; but we have many readers who have not seen it. We will not here criticise it, further than to say that no man can entertain this view of the Baptists, and then take Baptists into the church, without demanding all of the requirements that would be required of one who never made pretensions to Christianity, and be a consistent man! It will stamp any man, before intelligent minds, as inconsistent! Brother L. has appeared quite peevish and snappish at us, for handling his inconsistencies as we have. His course has offended some, who have been reading his paper for many years, and they have declared to us their intention of dropping the Advocate. But we will here say to all such that we hope they will not do so. We all do wrong, and perhaps we are guilty of as great a wrong in our manner towards brother L. as he has been in his treatment of us. Besides, brethren, no paper that we have ever seen can fill the place of the Advocate. Brother L. has sometimes handled the word of God deceitfully, in trying to extricate himself from his difficulties and glaring inconsistencies, on this question; but who of us are not guilty of hypocrisies?

Brother L. said that the "Holy Spirit, to quiet the fears" of the converts on the day of Pentecost, "told them that their sins would be forgiven." This was handling God's word deceitfully, and every intelligent reader of God's word knows it. The Holy Spirit told the truth because it was the truth, and not to quiet anybody's fears! If it was told to quiet their fears, and not to teach them the truth, that they might be made free by the truth, where did our brother learn it? We can, like the great apostle to the Gentiles, most truthfully say that we are not "mad, but speak the words of truth and soberness." We should prize the cause of Christ more highly than our love and friendship for men, brethren, and when they put themselves in the way of the truth and hinder it, they should be reprov'd and rebuk'd before all. In order that persons might be brought "into Christ, be born of water and the Spirit," the Holy Spirit, sent down from heaven to guide as many as the Lord our God shall call, from that time until His Son shall revisit this earth, spoke what God sent it to speak. Those who then believed just what the Spirit said, and obeyed its voice, were baptized into Christ, were born of water and the Spirit; and so they are now. But those who did not believe the Spirit's words then, were not baptized; and, if they had been, would not have been born of water and the Spirit. Neither now are such born of water and the Spirit, though they may be born of water—water is not enough! God is the same, yesterday, to-day and forever. We are still under the same dispensation. What was then authorized to be preached, and was preached and believed, is now authorized to be preached, and must be preached and believed in order that persons may be led by the Spirit—be born of water and the Spirit. Substitutes introduced at any point, change the word of God and make it a lie. A. McG.

To the Editor:

DEAR BROTHER—By your request, I will give to the readers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, a short article in regard to our Indian Mission. It has been four years since I induced Elder M. Askew (an Indian), to come out from Alabama, to sow the "good seed of the kingdom" among his more unfortunate and wilder brethren. Brother Askew had a good understanding of the ancient gospel, and presented it in a simple manner, but with great power.

One year ago his spirit returned to "God who gave it." He created an undying interest where he preached. My work among the Indians has been chiefly at their councils. I have been in both the Chickasaw and Choctaw councils, and would preach to them at night, by their request. I have been warmly received by them, and my preaching has had a good effect. So by this time, the Christian's King is accepted into some of the hearts of the leading minds among them. Up to this writing, all that I have done among them has been at my own charges. But the Church in this city has agreed to send me out as evangelist one-half of my time this year. The Indian Mission work is in the hands of the Church here. Elder W. H. Sluder receives all money sent here for it. Up to this time there has been but little spent out of the Indian Mission fund. We have but little on hand; not enough to make much effort towards building. We want to connect with the mission an industrial school, and will, when we can, so that we may teach the boys to work, give them an education and a trade, a practical idea of life, as well as Christianize them. Develop the moral, mental and physical man together. We hope in the near future to make the mission self-sustaining, by means of the industrial school. All that is produced by farming, or any mechanical work which may be added, will go towards the support of the school and mission.

The tuition and board will be paid out of the public fund of the nation. The boys will be expected to work on the farm, or at some trade, a part of each day, Lord's day excepted. All means above the amount which will be necessary in order to the support of the mission, which is now in its infancy, will be expended in the support of the preaching of the Gospel at other points in the Indian Territory. I have circulated books, pamphlets and papers among them, and they receive them gladly. I have written a number of long letters bearing on Christian duty, to the few disciples among them, and as an expression of their appreciation for them, they have been gathered up and returned to me for publication in pamphlet form. It was the last request of the true and tried soldier, brother Askew. Governor B. F. Overton (their principal chief at that time) proposed to pay the expenses of printing, etc., but within a few weeks he died, and therefore the work has been delayed; but I will have it out of the press (1000 copies) by the first of March, at my own expense, for circulation among them. They are appropriately adapted to their needs, as I understood them, and as I am favorably known among them, I hope something will be accomplished thereby.

Sister Josie Martin, of this congregation, a zealous Christian woman, full of good works, will travel this spring and summer, authorized by the Church, to solicit help, and take subscriptions, so much to be paid yearly for three years, at the expiration of which time we hope to make our Indian mission and industrial school self-sustaining. Nature has taught our wilder and more unfortunate brethren by her seasons, in sunshine and storm, in the flashing lightnings and roaring thunders, the green grass, the bursting buds and the blooming flowers, the rolling prairies, the rugged mountains and thick tangled forests, the flowing rivers and frisking brooks, the gurgling springs and the sparkling heavens, and in many other ways has mother nature taught her children. But every lesson taught them has been dipped in blood. Their condition is a peculiar one, neither civilized nor savage. Struggling to rise above the one, and bending their weary steps toward the other. The lessons drawn from mother nature's bosom did not, could not, unfold to them the true and living God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The name of Jesus Christ is not in their language, nor can they in their mother tongue express the thought which we convey by the word aspire, "to desire eagerly to rise." But, "His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." And we are blessed with lessons of love, written in letters of blood upon the cross. At their council in last October, after I had preached to them in their council house, Peter Fulsome, a native Indian, who had just returned from Washington, D. C., where he had been in the interest of his people, lifted his form, which had passed him through about seventy-five winters, befor his children, and told them something of old times; his tears flowed freely while he exhorted them to struggle on. Those moving tears shook my frame, and melted within me the soul which threats could never shake, when I remembered the odds with which they had contended, in contrast with the blessing we had slighted. O, God! in mercy forgive us for our indifference about so great a matter as "teaching all nations" the good news of salvation. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us all.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

MY DEAR SISTERS—Since my letter to THE FIRM FOUNDATION was so kindly received, and such a hearty invitation extended to write again, I will offer a few thoughts to you on the subject of the dress of Christian women, since brother McGary has requested me to do so. Perhaps I might have chosen some other subject for the present, but there is none that needs attention more than this. The women of the Church of Christ are bringing reproach upon His cause every day, by the expensive, gaudy and ridiculous style in which they adorn(?) themselves. I shall endeavor in this article to show, from the Scriptures, why Christian women should not conform to the disgusting and silly fashions of the day. We often hear the excuse made for unlawful dressing, that it is inconsistent with God's character to suppose that He cares for the way in which we dress, or other such trivial things, if we do our duty otherwise. If this be true, then why did He inspire His chosen apostles to lay down such plain rules for our guidance in this matter? Again, it is just as sinful to violate these commands or rules as it would be to steal, or commit adultery; because, when the four grand initiatory commands have been obeyed that put us into Christ's body or Church, then all others coming after are of equal importance, however trivial they may appear to us. Sin is a violation of the law of Christ. To dress expensively or elaborately is to violate a part of the law; hence it is a sin. But what saith the Scriptures? Paul says (Rom. xii., 23), "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your spirit," etc. Were there not another passage bearing on this subject, this one would answer every objection with those who are anxious to know and do God's will. To be conformed to a thing is to be in harmony with it, to be like it; hence, to be conformed to this world is to follow in the footsteps of the children of the world, forgetting "that we have been purged from our old sins"—that we have "arisen to walk in newness of life." "But be ye transformed," or completely changed, "by the renewing of your spirit." That is, if we (Christians) have formerly loved the ball room, the circus, skating rink, theatre, opera, novel reading, fine dressing, etc., etc., now we should turn our backs on such sinful, unprofitable pleasures and our faces heavenward, having our minds renewed with better and more heavenly things. Next, John says, in his first letter, ii., 15-16: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life, are not of the Father, but of the world." Fine dressing most certainly comes under the head of the "lust of the eye and the pride of life;" hence, is of the world, and not of God.

But hear Peter, who is much more explicit on this subject: First epistle, 33—"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold or of putting on of apparel," etc. But, says one, "Peter did not mean not to adorn ourselves, but not to let the outward adorning be all, but couple it with the adorning of "the hidden man of the heart." But, to get this meaning from it, we would have to supply the qualifying term only, as, "let not your adorning be only that outward adorning," which is wrong, for Peter expressly says, "let it not be," using no qualifying term whatever. Besides, any sister who has tried to follow the bewildering styles of the day, knows that when she has fulfilled every requirement of the capricious goddess, Fashion, there is precious little time left for the adorning of our minds or hearts. Even the few moments we might snatch, after children are tucked away for the night, for storing our minds with heavenly knowledge, are taken up in rolling the hair in curl-papers or on "crisping pins." Again, any sister who tries thus to dispose of this passage shows her unwillingness to give up the world; is trying to cling to it with one hand and to the cross with the other, but the hold on the world is by far the tighter. Judging from profane and sacred history, personal vanity and elaborate and foolish dressing have been the besetting sins of woman from time immemorial. Had the Prophet Isaiah been writing of these very times he could not better have described the styles of the present day. We refer those sisters who have not looked into this prophetic mirror, to turn to the third chapter of Isaiah, and behold a most perfect reflection of those who have bowed the knee to Fashion. This tyrant demands so many foolish things that one hardly knows which to notice first. We see plainly from Peter that the wearing of gold and plaiting of hair is forbidden, but Paul is still more specific; 1st Tim., ii., 9, he says: "In like manner also, (I will) that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety, not with braided hair or gold or pearls or costly array." First, "modest apparel." This does not mean to exclude only such apparel as makes an undue exposure of the person, but all apparel that is calculated to attract the eye and excite the admiration or envy of others. Therefore, when a woman arrays herself in a manner that will do this, she is arrayed immodestly, according to Paul, as well as Webster. "With shamefacedness." This is most decidedly against the wearing of bangs, as this foolish style is vulgarly called, as well as frizzes, Bernhardt waves, and I must not fail to mention the popular Langtry bangs. No one will deny, I presume, that the wearing of bangs gives a bold, impudent expression to the face, bespeaking levity rather than "sobriety." No doubt the silly fashion originated with some lewd woman, who had some facial defect which she wished to hide. Bernhardt waves and Langtry bangs! Have my sisters ever thought of the character of the women they are aping? Mrs. Langtry is a woman who, being gifted with great personal beauty, was not content to let it brighten a husband's heart and hearthstone, but must needs ascend the stage and travel from place to place to display this gift to thousands of sensuous men and women. Sarah Bernhardt is an actress, and is alleged to be the mother of five unlawful children, no two having the same father. What patterns for God's daughters! But, to proceed: "Not with braided hair or gold, or costly array." If this does not include silks, satins, velvets, jewelry, etc., then I am utterly unable to grasp the meaning of any passage of Scripture. Oh, it is so sad and dispiriting to go into the Church of Christ, anywhere, especially in the cities, and see to what an extent extravagant dressing is carried; to hear the rustling of silks and see the gleaming of diamonds, pearls, gold, rubies, etc.—even the preacher (or rather “pastor”) and his wife being decked with them! Side by side may be seen a so-called Christian and a woman making no claim to godliness, both equally resplendent in ruffles, lace and jewelry; or, perhaps, as is often the case, the woman out of Christ will be found dressed more in harmony with the Bible fashion plate than the other. Here you will see laborers’ wives—men who toil from early morning till sunset, through heat and cold—clad in elaborate garments, gleaming with jewelry, aping the wealthier sisters. “But,” says one, “that watch or chain or brooch, that that poor sister wore, was a gift from her husband or sister or mother; it cost her nothing.” That makes no difference. The apostles made no exception in favor of gifts. Another says: “But this silk dress is really cheaper than a less costly one. I have worn it three seasons, while a less costly one would have lasted only one.” Again, that is not the question. Silks come under the head of costly array; hence are sinful. Then comes one who cannot defend herself against Scripture, and is somewhat angered, says: “Well, if a person is able to wear such things, and pays for them, it is nobody’s business.” But right here, my sister, you are mistaken. It is somebody’s business. It is the business of every Christian who desires to see Christ’s cause prosper. We are told what and what not to do, in unmistakable terms; and we are also told that, if a brother or sister walk disorderly—or, in other words, does what he or she is forbidden to do—to admonish him or her; then, if he or she continue in evil doing, to withdraw fellowship from such. And if the Church of Christ were what it should be, to-day, whenever a sister entered the house of worship arrayed contrary to the Scriptures, as it is a public offense, she would be required to make a public confession of her fault. It is a lack of discipline in the church that has opened the way for fine dressing, as well as all other innovations.

But I am about to omit the most popular excuse for unlawful dressing, which is generally expressed thus: “I do not care so much for style, but my husband likes me to dress stylishly, and I do it to please him.” Indeed! Then you prefer to please your husband rather than Christ. “Do I seek to please men? For, if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.”—Paul; Gal., i. 2. How impressive! Christ is king, head over all; and every fleshly impulse and affection must be brought into subjection to His authority. When I hear this excuse rendered, I think of Adam: “The woman gave me of the tree and I did eat.” I also wonder if the husband of one of these submissive sisters, should desire her to dress in some obsolete, unbecoming style; for instance, request her to cut short a beautiful suit of hair of which she was very proud, because he admired short hair, would she yield such ready obedience? I think not. When such willing obedience is given, it is generally obedience to her fleshly impulses as well as his. If your unbelieving husband should desire you to attend a ball or theatre, would you do so? If not, why dress to please him? Either is a violation of the law, hence they are equally sinful. When we are thus tempted, we should say, as did our Savior to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan. Thou savorest not of the things that be of God, but the things that be of men." Can any of us, who have unbelieving husbands, hope to win them to Christ by falling in with their sinful ways? Peter says, if any have husbands who obey not the word, they may, without the word, be won by the chaste conversation or conduct of the wives; conduct coupled with fear (not the fear of the husband, however, but of God). Therefore, the moment a man sees that his wife's love for him is stronger than her fear of God or desire to please Christ, right then she loses her last chance to convert him, for he at once loses respect for her religion. On the other hand, an unbeliever can not help but respect a faith that is sufficiently real and strong to put aside all earthly affections and impulses that come in conflict with its convictions. Many a wicked man has been won to Christ by the chaste and godly conversation of a Christian wife. My dear sisters, if we desired as earnestly as we ought to do God's will, we would not seek such weak excuses for our worldliness. If we would pause oftener, and think calmly of a Christian's responsibilities, and of the straightness and narrowness of that way that leadeth to life everlasting, it would make us sober and earnest, and teach us to value our precious time and be slow to waste it in decorating our frail bodies, which are as the grass of the field, "which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven." May God help us realize our responsibilities! The humblest of us liveth not to herself! We know not the extent of our influence for good or evil. We know not how many are watching us and being strengthened or misled by us. How many poor sisters, whose dress must of necessity be plain, are kept from "assembling" because of the great contrast between their dress and that of their wealthier sisters. Would this be so if we heeded the apostle's instruction? And at the great day of reckoning, when they account for this dereliction, will we be held wholly blameless? Do you answer that these poor sisters should have courage to undergo this humiliating contrast? Ah, that is it! Courage! That is what we all lack. The Spirit knew our weakness when he inspired Peter to tell us to add to our faith, first of all, virtue or courage. Our Savior, "who was tempted in all points like as we are," knows how much courage it takes to turn from all the world's allurements and bear the taunts and scorn of men! He trod the same path! If we would only add the requisite courage to our faith, then our weaker sisters would have no occasion to stumble. It takes oh! so much courage to live righteously and godly. If we succeed, we may expect to be called cranks, extremists, etc., by the world; but care not for this. "The world passeth away, and the lust

thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever! Precious promise! "But," says one, "where are we to draw the line? What peculiar way must we fashion our dresses?" The apostles have drawn the line. We are to dress soberly, modestly, letting our ornament be a meek and quiet spirit and (as becoming women professing godliness) "good works." But if so much time and means is taken up with these trifles, where will the good works come in? If we could only summon courage sufficient to cease to yield obedience to fashion's thralldom, it would astonish us to see how expenses would be curtailed, and time and means saved for good works. Suppose that, whenever fashion demanded of us a new hat or dress, we would ask ourselves the question: "Do I need this? or, does the fear of God demand this, or the fear of the world's criticism?" How many dollars it would save! My sisters, the lesson which the apostles wished to teach is that the "life is more than meat, and the body than raiment," and that time is too precious to be wasted on these trivial things. Are we letting "our light shine?" Can the unbelieving see any difference between us and those not professing godliness? Nay, verily! We are to overcome the world. John makes this a test of faith when he says: "Who is it that overcometh the world, but he that beliveth that Jesus Christ is the Son of God?" My dear sisters, we are to show, by our godly life and light esteem of this world, that "we seek a better country, one that is an heavenly;" and others, seeing our good works, may be led to glorify God. If the words I have written serve to set one sister to thinking, or turn one from the world to her duty, I will feel that I have not written in vain.

Think the subject over carefully and prayerfully, sisters. Let not the question be, "How far can I please myself and the world, in this matter, without doing violence to my conscience?" but "What is my duty as a child of God, a professed follower of Christ Jesus?" Remember! Ye cannot serve God and the world! May our loving Father help us to rise superior to all temptations, and at last attain to "that city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." SARAI.

HOW DOES THE SPIRIT OF GOD LEAD THE PEOPLE?

The Apostle Paul, in writing to the Roman brethren, says: "For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom., 8:14.

We expect to write two or three articles for THE FIRM FOUNDATION, on the subject of being led by the spirit of God; but before taking up that subject, we will ask our readers to read carefully the first seventeen verses of the eighth chapter of Romans, and we want to notice some other things in the lesson before taking up the subject of being led by the spirit.

In order to understand any speaker or writer on any subject, we must take into consideration who it is speaking or writing, who they are speaking or writing to, what they are speaking or writing about, and the object they have in view in speaking or writing; which is another way of expressing the admonition of the Apostle Paul to Timothy, to rightly divide the word of truth.—ii. Tim., ii.,

15. The writer in this instance is the Apostle Paul, who spake or wrote as he was moved or guided by the Holy Spirit; he was writing to the Roman brethren, to Christians; he was writing about the law of Moses and the Gospel, contrasting the two, and showing the great superiority of the Gospel over the law, and his main object in that part of the letter was to cut off the Judaizing teachers among those brethren, who were contending that they must keep the law of Moses as well as the Gospel.

Paul begins the eighth chapter with the conclusion to which he is brought, by the premises previously laid down. He says: "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit; for (or because) the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death." Under the law of Moses they were under condemnation until Christ came and shed his blood, which reached back and cleansed those who had obeyed the law from sin. Under the Gospel it is different. His blood reaches forward and cleanses those who believe and obey it, from sin, as soon as they obey from the heart the form of doctrine delivered to them, or obey the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which he (Paul) argues is one of the great superiorities of the Gospel over the law.

The apostle says the law of the Spirit made him free from the law of sin and death.

"What is law?" It is a very small word, but it expresses a great deal. Law is a rule of action for the government of those that are, or ought to be, under the law; it is also an expression of the will of the law giver. Human law is the expression of human will, divine law of divine will. The will may exist without being expressed in or by law, as was the case with the law of the Spirit, previous to the day of Pentecost, before which time it was the gospel in a mystery, or unrevealed. The Holy Spirit has a law or rule of action, by obedience to which people are made free from sin. Paul says it also made him free from the law of death, having reference to the law of Moses, which is called the letter that killeth, or the ministration of death. 2nd Cor., 3:6-7. But the Gentiles have never been under the ministration or law of death. The Apostle brings up the same idea to the Judaizing teachers in the beginning of the 7th of Rom., under the figure of marriage and being loosed by death from the law of the husband, and shows his Jewish brethren that they were loosed from the law of Moses, and married to Christ. Jesus also teaches the same lesson in Luke 16: 16-18. The Apostle tells the Roman brethren, and also Christians of the present day, that they are not under condemnation, provided they live not after the flesh but after the Spirit. He also tells them that if they live after the flesh they shall die, verse 13, having reference to eternal death; for the Christian has to die the temporal death, just like the sinner; and he says in the ninth verse, if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. How plain and simple and easy of comprehension these declarations of the Apostle are. He says, verse 16: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." (Can we tell how the Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God?) If we cannot, why did the Apostle make use of that language? Take notice, he does not say the Spirit bears witness to our spirits that we are the children of God, as he should say, to suit the popular preaching of the day; but he says with our spirits, a very different idea from to. Then how does the Spirit bear witness with our spirits? Witnesses, in order to testify, must use language, and first, the Spirit says we must believe with all our hearts (that is, without a doubt) that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. Acts 8:37; Matthew 16:16. Now, I know whether I believe or not, and no one else does know, for no man knows the things of a man, save the spirit of man that is in him. 1st Cor., 2:11. I may act the hypocrite and pretend to believe, when I don't; but if I do believe, then the Spirit bears witness with (not to) my spirit that that far I am a child of God. Second, the Spirit says that I must repent of my sins. I know whether I have repented or not, made up my mind to turn from my sins and serve the Lord, and if I have, the Spirit bears witness with my spirit that I have taken another step towards becoming a child of God. Third, the Spirit says I must confess the Lord Jesus, confess with my mouth what I believe in my heart. I know whether I have made the scriptural confession or not, and if I have, the Holy Spirit and my Spirit bear witness with each other that I am another step nearer the kingdom or church of Christ. Fourth, the Spirit says I must be baptized; I know whether I have been baptized or not, and if I have, the Spirit bears witness with my spirit that I am saved from my sins; translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear son; born of water and the Spirit, and consequently a child of God. But I meet some of my neighbors and talk to them about these things, and they tell me they know they have believed in Christ, they have repented of their sins, confessed their Saviour "many a time," and have been baptized and are children of God; but I question them a little closely about the last item (baptism), and ask them when they were baptized, and they reply "away back yonder when I was an infant." Well, how do you know that you were baptized then? "Why, my mother, or my father, or my preacher, or the old church book tells me so." Yes, but they are not good witnesses in this court; they may be very good people, but there are only two witnesses to testify in this case, and they are the Holy Spirit with your spirit; besides, if what your preacher did to you and called it baptism had been baptism, it would not have been the baptism required by the Holy Spirit, for at that time you had not committed any sins, and the baptism required by the Holy Spirit is for the remission of sins.

Now, for the fourteenth verse. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." How many are the sons of God? As many as are led by the Spirit of God, no more, no less.

Can we tell how we are led by the Spirit? If we cannot, why that language? The sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty have always been led by the Spirit of God, and we can tell beyond a doubt how they are and were led. Let us go back now to the ninth chapter of Nehemiah, and we find that the prophet, after rehearsing many of the blessings of the Heavenly Father in his dealings with the Jews, says "Thou gavest also thy good Spirit (what for?) to instruct them." Verse 20. I have asked people who contend for a direct and indescribable influence of the Spirit, what instruction they ever received, and never have I found one that could tell me of any. Then, if they are not mistaken about receiving that influence, it was given to them for a different purpose from that for which God gave it to the Jewish people. The prophet goes on, however, rehearsing the blessings and the curses, as they were obedient or disobedient, and in the thirtieth verse he says: "Yet many years didst thou forbear them and testified against them (how?) by thy spirit (where?) in thy prophets." Hence the Jews killed the prophets who spoke or wrote as they were moved, guided or led by the Holy Spirit. The Spirit was in the prophets instructing them, telling them how to serve the Lord, and reproofing them for their sins. They got tired of the reproof and killed the prophets to stop it. But suppose the popular theory is true, that the Spirit comes down direct from heaven and enters into the hearts of sinners, and reproves them for their sins, what good would it do them to kill one or more of their neighbors? Would that stop the reproof? No! But if the Spirit was in the prophets then we can see some sense in their killing the prophets to stop His reproofs.

Let us turn now to the New Testament, and quote a few of the many passages that might be cited to prove that the Holy Spirit leads by intracting the led.

The Saviour told his Apostles the first time he promised them the Holy Spirit to "take no thought how or what you shall speak; for it shall be given you in that same hour, what you shall speak, for it is not you that speak, but the spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." Matt., 10: 19, 20. We see from the above quotation, that the spirit promised by the Saviour was to be a speaking spirit, and the object of good speakers is to instruct, not to mystify, and it was to be in the Apostles and speak through them. In John, 14:26, 15:26 and 16: 13, the above promise is renewed, and the Saviour says "He (the Spirit) shall teach you, shall testify of me, and guide (or lead) you into all (the) truth." We might quote many other passages to the same effect, but he who will not believe God when He speaks once, will not believe if He speaks forty times. The Apostle Paul in speaking of the Spirit after he had received it, says: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them unto us (us, who? the Apostles and prophets. Eph., 3:5) by the Spirit;" and when we read what they write we may understand their knowledge in the mystery of Christ. Eph., 3:4. The Apostle Peter, after receiving it on the day of Pentecost, says (in speaking of Christ): He hath shed forth this which you now see and hear. Acts, 2:33. It was the Spirit speaking to that vast congregation; three thousand were reproofed or convicted of sin, pricked in their heart by Godly sorrow, which sorrow was the result of Godly faith, the faith being produced by Godly or divine testimony, the testimony of the Spirit. Being pricked in their heart they cry out "men and brethren what shall we do?" The Spirit gives them the necessary instruction (nothing unnecessary). They comply with the requirements, are made free from sin, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. Now, were they not led by the Spirit? No one who has any respect for the word of the Lord will deny it, and if they continued to be led by it, they landed safely in the haven of eternal rest.

We learn from the declaration of the Apostle that the sons of God are led by the Spirit of God, and we learn both from the Old and New Testaments that to be led by the Spirit is to be led by his instructions, and in our next article we want to speak more particularly about where the Spirit leads.

OUR PLEA FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

No. 4.

While we pass to a brief consideration of the subject of repentance, be it understood that we are not done with the subject of faith. All along the pathway to celestial bliss, faith prompts to action.

The repentance presented as a condition of pardon is one of the results of faith. God's system of faith portrays to us the sinfulness of sin, and the great need of a Savior. In this our extreme want, a remedy is presented. It is in the hands of one who is able, willing and ever ready to save.

He proposes to save, however, in His own way. (It is conceded that repent at one time signifies to sorrow, to lament.) At another, to reform the entire course of being. When, therefore, the Apostle Peter, on Pentecost, commanded those Jews to repent, he did not command them to mourn, lament or bewail for the murder they had committed. They had given indisputable evidence of such a frame of mind, in their anxious inquiry. Peter's command implied a complete change of their purposes, antedating, but coupled with their immersion in the name of Christ for the remission of sins. To these broken hearted and anxious penitent believers, the command to mourn, to sorrow, to feel regret for their conduct would have been mockery. To such a command they could have reasonably replied, "Peter, we have weighed well the evidence presented. We believe we have shed innocent blood in the murder of Heaven's anointed one. It fills our hearts with grief, and besides, for this great crime there is no pardon under our law, and extreme sorrow affords us no relief. What shall we do?" The answer of the Apostle was intended to teach them that salvation from sins was not to be obtained alone by mourning, sorrow, or regret; but it must induce them to change their minds, purposes and lives as a necessary prerequisite to a submission to the authority of Christ.

This change is required of all persons to prepare them for an understanding submission to the Redeemer, with the whole heart.

In "our plea for Christian union," can we include any who have not been translated into the body as the law giver has directed? No one can be translated into the body of Christ, while disregarding His initiatory law. I am free to admit the honesty and good intentions of those who claim to have been miraculously converted by Christ. I am also free to admit their great sorrow for sins. But their sorrow made them agonize, pray and wrestle with God for a direct impartation of saving faith, instead of inducing them to at once change their minds or purposes as a necessary prerequisite to a submission to the authority of Christ in baptism for the remission of sins. In all spiritual things the word of God is our only guide. To justify a departure in one instance, is sinful in the extreme. In the very nature of things, repentance cannot precede faith. No one thus taught was ever immersed scripturally, no matter how solemn or imposing the occasion, or how touching and impressive the songs and petitions of both the principal and the attendants. The charity taught in Gods word is not so elastic that it may include any who claim heirship through the doctrines of men. My dear brethren, let's work by the Great Guide Book.

Brother C. McPherson says he is glad to read that Brother J. W. Jackson has severed his connection with THE FIRM FOUNDATION. Why is he glad? If Brother Jackson would now turn upon our pamphlet and help these theological quacks to treat its case according to their diagnosis, he could make himself quite popular with them. The great adversary of truth has always been pleased to see obstacles thrown in its way. We are not surprised to hear those who oppose truth, rejoice at any event that will in any way hinder it. When Paul (who was preaching the same truth that THE FIRM FOUNDATION is now urging Christians to stand up to, and gauge themselves and their work by), was imprisoned, no doubt that Bar-Jesus and his kind were pleased at it. Hence we are not surprised at the same kind, finding pleasure to-day in anything they think will hinder truth. But if these brethren could see our last letter from Brother J., and an article from him, for our next issue, they would not find room for such rejoicing!

We receive on exchange the Living Age, a sixteen page monthly, edited by Brother J. T. Walsh, assisted by his two daughters. What the Living Age lacks in size it fully makes up in quality. We hope our readers will subscribe for it, for it is fraught with matter that is invaluable to those who desire to add to their faith "knowledge," and while brethren may be greatly aided in the acquisition of knowledge by Brother Walsh's cogent reasoning, they can, by subscribing for his paper, help to hold up the hands of an aged brother, whose past services, as well as his present consecration to the cause of Christ, make him, in an eminent degree, worthy of the aid, love and sympathy of his brethren. The price of the Living Age is $1.00 per annum. We will send THE FIRM FOUNDATION and it to one subscriber, till January, for $1.50.

Our "One Baptism" article has given place this issue to others, but will appear next time.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

Our delay in the last two issues has not been our fault; the office where we have our work done has been so crowded with work for the Nineteenth Legislature, that our matter has had to play the mill-boy—wait its turn. We hope to do better in the future. Some of our subscribers are insisting on THE FIRM FOUNDATION becoming a weekly, not more weakly, for we need more strength to oppose the invasion of false brethren that is setting in upon our work, as they have always assailed truth. We will confer with the old heads of the F. F. and decide what we will do about it soon. In the meantime we would like to hear from as many of our subscribers as favor the change.

Sisters, please read carefully Sister Sarai's article, and pass it around.

Another good article just arrived from Brother Trimble, but too late for this issue.

Our offer for new subscribers, to be found in this issue, means to begin with the March number and end with the December.

More subscribers wanted! We offer the pamphlet from now till January for 75 cents; or clubs of ten 50 cents. We expect many new subscribers on this offer.

Will the readers of the "Firm Foundation," please turn to its first issue and read again my article on "The Good Confession"? I will add but few thoughts more on this subject. We have seen what the confession is. That it is a condition of salvation. That it must be made with the mouth. That it has its place in the order of conditions. This confession (or rather the thing confessed) is the Rock on which our Savior said he would build his church. Matt. 16-13-18. The believer in this elect and precious corner stone was not to be confounded. He is on a solid foundation. The scriptures do not contain an intimation of any other foundation besides Jesus the Christ. Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. About 1451 years B. C., God said to the Israelites, "When thou art come into the land which the Lord God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. There shalt not be found among you any one that maketh his son or daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizzard, or a necromancer. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren like unto me; and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto thee all that I shall command him, and it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." Deut. 18th.

Christ alone, and his authority must be presented "as the way, the truth the life:" The form of the confession is in the words of the Good Spirit. Hence the Lord pronounces blessings on all "who believe on him as the scriptures say." John 7-38.

Every element of religious instruction is to be found in the scriptures. We are to believe and confess in the words of Jesus, and in the words given by his chosen Embassadors, who were pronounced "blessed" because "they brought glad tidings of good things." There can be no Christian confession, but in the terms given by the Spirit. The confessions of faith which resultes from man's devices, have no connection whatever with the "good confession" authorized by the Savior.

When men say, this confession is a light matter, that any one can say "I believe in Jesus Christ," they do not appreciate its import. He who receives the word into an understanding heart, counts the cost of the service of God, takes up the cross, and humbly confesses in the presence of God, angels, and men, that he places his full confidence in Jesus, who is exalted to the right hand of the Father as a Prince and a Savior, makes the greatest confession ever uttered by man. No confession is so solemn, none so gigantic in its proportions, and none could be imagined involving such consequences. It cannot be scripturally made without a realization of the weighty responsibilities assumed in so great a confession.

My dear reader, there is a day approaching when "the good confession" will be placed in full contrast with all others, and when the choicest blessings of heaven will be the inheritance of such as shall have confided in him as "the scriptures say." J. S. D.

The Eldership, What Does it Mean? Rule or to be Ruled - Which?

BRO. MCGARY:—May I be indulged while I offer a few thoughts and suggestions in regard to the subject indicated by the heading of this article? A subject, which I regard as standing in a more important relationship to the great cause we plead, than, perhaps, any other, just at this juncture of the wants of the church of God on earth.

We, as the people of God, have accomplished wonders in discovering and shedding abroad, far and near, the true light of inspired Christianity, in regard to the all important steps necessary to Scriptural induction into the body of Christ. "Which is the church of the living God, the pillar and support of the truth."

What is now the great need as regards the work already done in disciplining the nation? We answer, unhesitatingly, a scriptural eldership over the house of God. "Men full of the Holy Spirit, and of Wisdom," sanctified (set apart) to the work of "overseeing and feeding the flock, (church) of God," to rule the church of God in all that appertains to her spiritual growth and development in the divine life. Not to be ruled, but to bear rule absolute and positive. "Not as lords over God's heritage," but as humble, intelligent, discreet men, in the fear of God, who must give account to God, for the manner of their rule and oversight of the lambs gathered into the fold of Christ. And, to such, all must submit themselves as unto God. The main trouble afflicting the churches, and standing in the way of the growth and increase of the churches in knowledge and in their true work, has been the disregard of Apostolic teaching by the evangelists.

We have planted the churches, in appointing bishops and deacons to take the oversight and rule of churches. While they are yet few in numbers, and in their novitiate state, men are selected and appointed to the oversight and care of these small and untaught congregations, without regard to scriptural qualifications. I have found, not unfrequently, in my visitations among the churches, that the evangelist who had organised them, had, in his haste, appointed men to the bishopric, who could not read a word in God's book. These good brethren occupy their seats in the assembly and never open their mouths, not even to sing, much less to pray, teach and exhort.

How long will be required to develop the New Testament church as established by the Apostles while this state, or plan of procedure is persisted in?

The church can never return to her apostolic stature and beauty till she is placed again under the teaching and watchcare of a competent and truly devoted Eldership, who shall devote their whole time, (or so much thereof as the needs of the church require) in instructing and edifying the churches, while they (Elders) in turn, shall be cared for by the churches, for whose godly edification they labor and devote their time and talents. The idea seems to prevail that almost any moderately pious, orderly walking man is eligible to the bishopric, regardless of his ability to instruct in the divine law of Christ.

I believe, brethren, that a truly scriptural Eldership is the highest and most important and most responsible class of men known in the church of God on earth. To them, God has intrusted the spiritual education and training of his children on earth, for eternal salvation and a home in Heaven.

How responsible the work, then, assigned to them!

In conclusion, a word in regard to the absoluteness of the rule they are to sway in the church. Their decision, when pronounced, in regard to any matter affecting the interest and welfare of the church, is final. From their decision there is no appeal.

Of course, this is based upon the hypothesis that they are men possessing all of the scriptural qualifications. The church of God is not a Democracy, but an absolute Monarchy. It is a kingdom, under a ruling King. His edict is final. From it, there is no appeal. No voting to be had on any question of divine authority.

There can be nothing more destructive to the unity and prosperity of the church of God, than the practice of submitting questions decided by a Scriptural Eldership, to a vote of the church for ratification or rejection. How can any man or woman, for one moment, suppose that fifty or seventy-five boys and girls, many of these perhaps, have not been in the church six weeks, should be more competent to decide upon a grave question of divine authority than these aged men of wisdom and experience chosen and ordained by the Holy Spirit, to judge and pronounce decision, guided by the authority of divine law?

It might be well just here to suggest a thought or two in regard to church organization.

It is not at all uncommon to hear brethren talking of the Elders and Deacons of the church. The Elders, say they, are to have the oversight of the spiritual interest, and the Deacons, the temporalities of the church. Where in the New Testament did any brother read any thing of this kind? In which chapter in the New Testament, do you, my brother, read of Elders and Deacons, as such officially? We read of Elders, and we read of Deacons, but not as two classes of officers. Again, I ask, where do we find this classification of spiritual and temporal work in the church? Is there any work to be performed in the church, that is not spiritual, not given as required by the Holy Spirit? This leads us to enquire who constitutes the Eldership, or the executive head of the church?

We answer, the Bishop (or Bishops, as the needs of the Church may require), and the Deacons. The Bishop being the chairman of this board, before whom all the matters of interest to the Church must come for adjudication and settlement. Paul to Titus, says: "For this purpose, I left you in Crete, to set in order the things wanted, and to ordain elders (not novices), in every city." He does not say, ordain them to be elders, to make them elders, but because they are elders. He instructs Titus as to who is eligible to ordination, to the bishoprick and deaconship in the Church. They must be elders. Youths are not eligible. "The Holy Spirit, makes them overseers," through His divinely appointed agent (the church). When the church, acting under the direction of her Head, selects those men, and they are solemnly set apart to this task, the Holy Spirit has then made them overseers. And henceforth, all are solemnly commanded "to submit themselves as unto God." "For they watch for your souls as they that must give account, etc.

It now becomes the privilege, yea, the indispensable duty of these men, to watch over the flock, in all that pertains to the highest interest and development of the church. But says one, how are we to attain to this full stature of a perfect model of the Apostolic church, seeing that the churches have not the men in them qualified to do this work? I see but one way to approximate this at once. To begin this work, the churches must reverse the prevailing order of calling the young preachers to have the care of the churches—send them to the front to break the brush and bridge the ways for the onward spread of Zions conquests—call those old veterans who have worn out their physical man, carrying Zions victories on to the frontiers, who have by long service and self-sacrifice dotted the country over with congregations, who had made themselves familiar with the wants and needs of the churches. Let the churches call these old veterans home to the bosom of the churches, to instruct, edify and build them up in all that pertains to house keeping for the Lord, teaching them to tenderly care for those dear young brethren whom they send to evangelize the world, teaching the churches their duty in holding up the hands of those young men, who in their turn have gone forth, "to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ." Let them know that they have behind them a sanctified host, under the care and tutelage of one who has endured their trials and knows how to sympathise with them. At the same time this old veteran, selects from the brethren those whom he is educating to take the oversight, after him. Thus can the churches be developed and educated up to apostolic stature. Never can the churches be brought up to apostolic manhood, until she learns that preachers and preaching and church going, are not designed to be things and places for mere selfish gratification and personal entertainment.

I hope that thoughts are herein outlined, that may be profitable to those who have Zions good and prosperity at heart. The longer I live and the more I observe, the more patent it becomes to me, that the greatest hinderance in the way of the conversion of sinners is the lack in the churches of a competent membership; until this is remedied, that banner stained with hallowed blood, must trail in the dust.

This paper is becoming too lengthy, hoping that these thoughts may arouse into lively activity, some abler minds and pens, I here close, by subscribing myself your brother in Christ, in search of the truth.

Fun and Frolic.

A real old fashion candy-pulling will be given by the young ladies of the Christian Church, on next Tuesday night in the basement of the church. Admission only 25 cents. Do not fail to attend.—Austin Statesman.

This institution called "the Christian church," at Austin, is a real fun-loving institution. We fear it has about froliced away its days of grace. It has about as many genuine marks left to identify it as the "body of Christ" as the great mother of harlots which graces a neighboring hill. If our Savior had put in an appearance at this "Christian Church," last Tuesday night, with His "scourge of small cords" there would, in all probability, have been another other "overthrowing of tables and pouring out of the changer's money and a driving out" of another set who were "making His Father's house an house of merchandise." These merry-making "young ladies of the Christian Church," and the dancing, amusement-seeking young men, of the same institution, are ever ready for anything new or old that makes for fun and hilarity, while the old men and old women seem more than willing for the young folks to enjoy life, and to lend them a helping hand. How sad it is to behold the inroads the god of this world has made upon the Church! The time has come when the unadulterated gospel of God's Son finds few friends. When Christ returns shall He find faith on the earth? "False apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into ministers of righteousness"—"modern pastors" are doing valiant service for their master—mammon. Satan is filling the pulpits with his ministers, who, "by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple"—and the simple compose the great body of the brotherhood—simple because they have not made use of that which is able to make them wise—that which Paul "commended—the word of God's grace which is able to build us up, and give us an inheritance among all them which are sanctified" if we will only make use of it. But the world has petted, coaxed, and courted the church, till it has charmed her into its treacherous embrace. Yes, she has left her first love and now loves the world with all her heart. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. "Oh! how Christ is being wounded in the house of His friends." We suppose the Austin Church is no worse than hundreds of others. There are a few of its members as true as we ever expect to find Christians in the flesh; but the main body of the Church seems to have no higher aspirations than to have a fashionable pastor who will feed them on the popular pabulum of the day, and sanction their saturnalian carousals, where "the god of this world" holds high carnival. The writer has become quite unpopular with this frolicing element of the "Christian Church" of Austin, because he has dared to criticise their "modern pastors;" and by other old fogy attitudes. We only wish we were worthy of their disapprobation, on the principle enunciated by our Lord, found in I uke 6:22. But we are sorry to have to confess that we can not claim it altogether on this principle. We here append a poem, which in many points, portrays the status of the Austin Church, much better than we can. It has gone the rounds of our papers. We hope our progressive brethren will read and weigh it:

WALKING WITH THE WORLD.

The Church and the World walked far apart,
On the changing shore of time:
The World was singing a giddy song,
And the Church a hymn sublime.

"Come, give us your hand," cried the merry World.

"And walk with me this way."
But the good Church hid her snowy hands,
And solemnly answered, 'Nay:
I will not give you my hand at all,
And I will not walk with you;
Your way is the way of endless death,
Your words are all untrue."

'Nay, walk with me but a little space,"
Said the World with a kindly air;
'The road I walk is a pleasant road,
And the sun shines always there;
Thy path is thorny and rough and rude,
And mine is broad and plain;
My road is paved with flowers and dews,
And your's with fears and pain,
The sky above me is always blue,
Nor want nor toil I know;
The sky above you is always dark;
Your lot is a lot of woe;
My path, you see, is a broad, fair one,
And my gate is high and wide;
There is room enough for you and for me
To travel side by side."

Half shyly the Church approached the World,
And gave him her hand of snow;
The old World grasped it and walked along,
Saying in accents low:

"Your dress is too simple to please my taste;
I will give you pearls to wear,
Rich velvets and silks for your graceful form,
And diamonds to deck your hair."
The Church looked down at her plain white robes,

And then at the dazzling World,
And blushed as she saw his handsome lip,
With a smile contemptuous curled,
"I will change my dress for a costlier one."
Said the Church with a smile of grace,

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

Then her pure, white garments drifted away,
And the World gave in their place
Beautiful satins and shining silks,
And roses and gems and pearls;
And over her head her bright hair fell,
Crisped in a thousand curls.

"Your house is too plain," said the proud old World;

"I'll build you one like mine;
Carpets of brussels and curtains of lace,
And furniture ever so fine"
So he built her a costly and beautiful house:
Splendid it was to behold,
Her sons and her beautiful daughters dwelt there,

Gleaming in purple and gold,
And fairs and shows in the halls were held,
And the World with his children was there,
And laughter and music and feasts were heard
In the place that was meant for prayer.
She had cushioned pews for the rich and great,
To sit in their pomp and pride,
While the poor folks, clad in their shabby suits,
Sat meekly down outside.

The angel of mercy flew over the Church,
And whispered, "I know thy sins."
Then the Church looked back with a sigh, and longed

To gather her children in;
But some were off at a midnight ball,
And some were off at the play,
And some were drinking in gay saloons;
So she quietly went her way.
Then the sly World gallantly said to her,
"Your children mean no harm, Merely indulging in innocent sport:"
So she leaned on his proffered arm,
And smiled and chatted, and gathered flowers
As she walked along with the World;
While millions and millions of hopeless souls
To that horrible gulf were hurled.

"Your preachers are all too old and plain,"
Said the gay World with a sneer;
"They frighten my children with dreadful tales,

Which I like not for them to hear;
They talk of brimstone, and fire and pain,
And the horrors of endless night;
They talk of a place which should not be Mentioned to ears polite.

I will send you some of the better stamp,
Brilliant and gay and fast, Who will tell them that people may live as they list,

And go to heaven at last.
The Father is merciful, great and good,
Tender, and true, and kind;
Do you think he would take one child to heaven,

And leave the rest behind?"
So he filled her house with gay divines,
Gifted and great and learned:
And the plain old men that preached the Cross,
Were out of her pulpits turned.

"You give too much to the poor," said the World,

"Far more than you ought to do;
If the poor need shelter and food and clothes,
Why need it trouble you?
Go, take your money and buy rich robes,
And horses and carriages fine,
And pearls and jewels and dainty food,
And the rarest and costliest wine;
My children they dote on all such things,
And if you their love would win
You must do as they do, and walk in the ways

That they are walking in."
Then the Church held tightly the strings of her purse.

And gracefully lowered her head,
And simpered, "I've given too much away—
I'll do as you have said."

So the poor were turned from her door in scorn.

And she heard not the orphan's cry;
And she drew her beautiful robes aside
As the widows went weeping by.
And the sons of the World and the sons of the Church

Walked closely, hand and heart;
And only the Master, who Knoweth all,
Could tell the two apart.
Then the Church sat down at her ease, and said,

"I am rich, and in goods increased;
I have need of nothing and naught to do
But to laugh and dance and feast."
And the sly World heard her, and laughed in his sleeve.

And mockingly said, aside,
"The Church is fallen, the beautiful Church,
And her shame is her boast and her pride."

The angel drew near to the mercy seat,
And whispered in sighs her name,
And the saints their anthems of rapture hushed,

And covered their heads with shame.
And a voice came down from the hush of heaven,

From Him who sat on the throne,
"I know thy work, and how thou hast said,
'I am rich,' and hast not known
That thou art naked, poor and blind,
And wretched before my face,
And hence, from my presence I cast thee out,
And blot thy name from its place."

A Good old Brother Figures Himself out—"Figures Won't Lie" Says an old Addage—True in this Case—The Sum Correct.

We give to our readers an article from dear old Brother Creath. It appeared in the A. C. Review, December the 11th, 1884. We append to it a letter from Brother Hansbrough to Brother Creath, which was written a short time after Brother Creath's article appeared. Brother Hansbrough has received no reply to his letter.

"That which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God."

Editors A. C. Review:

I propose in this essay to show that when God commands a thing to be done, he tells the way or manner of doing it; that the way and manner of doing it is as infallible and binding upon us as the thing to be done is. I will illustrate the subject by the science of mathematics. The whole science of mathematics is worked by ten figures—0, 1, 2, 3, and so up to 9. By adding, subtracting, multiplying, and dividing these ten figures, we get all the answers to all the sums. This rule applies to each one of the above rules or divisions. If one figure is misapplied, or worked not according to the law of mathematics, the answer can never be obtained. There is a law or rule by which everything is to be tried or measured—a touchstone of its truth.

There are certain truths which compose the gospel of the Son of the living God; that he died for our sins and was buried, and arose from the dead the third day, according to the Scriptures (1 Cor. xv.). The above order is as sound and as infallible as the truths expressed in the words. Acts xviii make us acquainted with the introduction of the gospel into Corinth, and the manner of doing it. Verse 5: "Paul testified to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ." Verse 8: "And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed, and were immersed." If we derange this infallible order, we can never preach Christ crucified as Paul did at Corinth. All the one hundred, or six hundred and forty isms, sects, opinions, churches and denominations, are made out of the above truths, by deranging them, by misapplying them, by wresting and twisting them.

"All sorts of doctrines are preached by all sorts of men" I will give one illustration: The Pope or Popes changed immersion into pouring or sprinkling, and put them before hearing or believing. Can the Papist ever get the answer Paul got, from working his figures or sums? Never! He may work at his figures till all the Popes are dead, and paying the "penalty of their deeds in the penal fires of hell," as Purcell allowed some of them were doing. The sacred and infallible order of the gospel is broken, and Paul's answer to the sum can never be had. It is as impossible to get his answer as to create a world. His answers to his figures, or sums, are in 1 Cor. vi. 9-11. After enumerating the worst crimes known among men, he says (verse 11): "And such were some of you: but you are washed [immersed], but you are sanctified, but you are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." This is the same answer that Peter and the other apostles obtained from the Holy Spirit in Acts ii, 38. This is the infallible answer obtained in every place where they worked these figures, which was every place where they preached the gospel. They preached one gospel, and got one answer. If they had had as many figures, and deranged them, as the modern sects do, they would have had as many things called sects and gospels as the moderns have. Paul tells these Corinthians (xv. 2), "By which gospel you will be saved, unless you have believed in vain." All the daughters of this "mother church," that practice as she does, will never get Paul's answer to the day of doom! You may put immersion before faith, as was done for thirteen centuries, for "without faith it is impossible to please God" (Heb. xi. 6). You have not worked the sum right, and you will never get the right answer till you do work the figures according to the law of mathematics. Preach the gospel as Paul did, and you will obtain the same answer he did. Justification goes before sanctification. The former is instantaneous; the latter is gradual. There is no justification, nor scriptural regeneration without faith, and immersion. If either of these latter things could have been obtained by faith alone, water would not have been connected with faith in the commission, "He that believes and is immersed, shall be saved." A sinner is justified by faith, confession, repentance and immersion into the names of the Sacred Three, and a Saint or a Christian is justified by good works (James ii). A believing Jew came to the water with his Judaism and sins upon him. He went down into the water and was buried with Christ into his death, and left his Judaism and sins in the grave of waters and arose a Christian like the Ethiopian nobleman, and went on his way rejoicing (Acts viii). And so of a Samaritan, and so of all the different sects of Gentiles, and so of all the modern sects. A Catholic, with a true, believing heart, comes to the water of salvation. He makes the good confession, he is immersed, he leaves his Catholicism and his old sins in the watery grave, he arises and "rejoices with a joy unspeakable and full of glory." And so of all the Protestant parties. They leave their "isms," and their old sins in the grave of immersion (Rom. ii 1--23; 2 Peter i. 9). He that does not add to his original faith the cluster of graces named in 2 Peter, hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins in his immersion. Immersion impresses and enlists all his bodily and external feelings—a shock which he can never forget while he retains his memory. This may be one reason why God chose immersion rather than sprinkling.

After the day of Pentecost, spreading the gospel devolved upon congregations and individuals. Brother Rowe showed in eight or ten clear cases that single congregations spread the gospel. Nothing can be plainer than the instances he produced from the New Testament. By these examples, God has forbidden us to spread the gospel in any other way. All the sophisms offered for conventions have been also offered for Romanist, Jesuitical and all clerical assemblies. If there is no way revealed in the New Testament for the spreading of the gospel, then there is no obligation resting on any one to do what he does not know how to do. No person in the Bible ever told God that he did not know what he said, therefore he had not done it, or that he told him to do more than he could do, therefore he had not done it. Look at the evils of the last 1200 years that have been brought upon the human race by deranging these scriptural facts.

Those persons who put regeneration before faith, will never obtain Paul's answer. His arrangement was facts—testimony, faith, repentance, confession, immersion, in order to the remission of sins, the Holy Spirit, perseverance in well doing, seeking for glory and honor, a resurrection from the dead, and eternal life—these ten facts answering to the ten figures in the science of mathematics. One letter too many or too few, spoils the governmental dollar. Christians are made the same way to-day as they were in Paul's day. We have lost much by calling sects, churches. I prefer the word "kingdom" to "church," as the older word, as the word used by Daniel, by John the Immerser, and by our Savior, "My kingdom is not of this world." The word "kingdom" has not been so much abused as the word church, which is a heathen word (Acts xix). It was adopted by the early writers. It is compounded of ek (out), and kaleo (to call or invite). The infants of sects are not called out; they are brought out by force. They all have the strongest feature of Judaism in them. The creeds of sects answer to the traditions of Papists. They have other names than those in the Scriptures. They have other ordinances than those in the Scriptures. They are too young by fifteen hundred years to be the one body. Why do they not give the Supper to the infants as well as sprinkling, like the Greek and Roman schisms? They are as deserving of the one as of the other.

Yours truly, JACOB CREATH.

LIBERTY HILL, WILLIAMSON CO.,

DEAR BROTHER CREATH: I don't know whether you will remember me or not, but I do you, and with much pleasure. The first time I ever saw you, was at Independence, Missouri, in the 1835 or 1836, when I was eleven or twelve years old, and I heard you preach and lecture often between that time and 1860. In 1844 I went to Harrisonville to live, and you preached there, and lectured, and you generally stayed with my brother, Dr. G. D. Hansbrough. In the spring of 1861, just before the war commenced, I moved to Austin, Texas, and have been in this vicinity since, except when my wife and I have been in Virginia on visits to her old home. I was a reader of the A. C. Review before the war and have been since, (could not get it during the war.) I always read your pieces in it and the Gospel Advocate, with much pleasure, and I trust with some profit. In the Review of December 11th, 1884, is one of the best pieces I ever read from you, or any one else, on that subject. The illustration of ten figures working the all sums and bringing all the answers, is splendid; but the figures must not be deranged, they must be worked according to the law governing in mathematics, in order to obtain the correct answer. It is so in Christianity, as you so plainly showed. The right number of figures, and the proper order must be observed, in order to obtain the right answer, which is justification or remission of sins.

Now Brother Creath, is there a religious party in the world that has the right number of figures, and observes the proper order, except our brethren? If there is, I am not acquainted with it. They all have too few figures, and derange the order of those they have. That being so, do they get the right answer and if they do not, are they in the kingdom or church of Jesus Christ? and if they are not, ought they to be received among us without observing the proper and order of the figures?

I commenced preaching some about the close of the war, spend most of my time at it now. I have written a piece on "What is the gospel of Christ, of what is it composed," which will be published in the January No. of "The Firm Foundation," a monthly, published by one of our brethren, in Austin, which I will send to you, and I wish you would read it, and if I have taken any wrong position in it please write to me and tell me what it is. I have great confidence in your knowledge of the Bible, in your judgment as to the right application of its teachings, and your independence and honesty; and if I am wrong in my teaching I want to know it, and I believe you can point it out. I know it is asking a good deal of you to write to me, at your age of life, and feeble, as I suppose you are; but my desire to be corrected, if I am in the wrong, induces me to make the request. Your brother in Christ.

ELIJAH HANSBROUGH.

FEB. 12th, 1885.

To the Brethren scattered throughout the State of Texas, greeting:

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—Have you fully resolved to buckle on the whole armor of God, with a view of doing valiant battle for the Lord, who is the captain of our salvation?

If so, will you let an humble child whom God has chosen to be a soldier, make a suggestion or two? I deem it altogether unnecessary to say anything in regard to how we enlist soldiers, as doubtless all are aware that the how is fully made known in that Book we all profess to revere so highly. (See Matt. 28: 18-19; Mark, 16: 15-16; Luke, 24: 45-46-47-48).

It is true, that some among us insist on improving on the Lord's plan just a little; just enough however, to incur the displeasure of our captain. Now brethren, it seems to me, that we should obey orders, yea, we must obey orders if we would please Him who has chosen us to be soldiers.

Do you ask me whose orders?

I answer, Christ Jesus. I believe that it is universally conceded that the Bible recognizes but two kingdoms. All responsible characters are in these, there is no neutral ground. Salvation from sin, is promised to these characters, by Jesus who is the King of one of these kingdoms; but salvation can only be enjoyed in one of these kingdoms; that kingdom is called by various names in the New Testament, such as one body, Eph., 4: 4, the church of God; the household of faith; the kingdom of God's dear son; Col. 1st chapter.

Now, brethren, is it not a fact, that we have stepped aside in our work of enlisting soldiers in this army, or which is the same thing, inducting men and women into this kingdom? I confess I have; and I say now, God being my helper, I will never be guilty of the like again! I read that the King has required all to confess Him before men. Paul tells how this confession is to be made Rom. 10. Luke tells how it was made, Acts 8. Now which, of all the conflicting sects, require candidates to make this confession? None! Then consistency, in thunder tones, speaks to us who profess to be engaged in enlisting soldiers, to require a confession of Christ prior to an immersion in water by the authority of Christ! But, enough on this subject. One other suggestion, relating to the well being of those enlisted:

1. We should, at our appointments, insist with all earnestness, that they meet on the first day of the week, for the purpose of reading God's word, and praying with and for each other; and exhortation, singing, partaking of the Supper and contributing.

These things, diligently observed, develop the talent of the Church. We are required to fight the good fight of faith, that we may lay hold on eternal life, at last.

May God help us all to be faithful.

B. P. SWEENEY.

We have never had the pleasure of shaking Bro. Bas' hand. But, in our boyhood days we were familiarly acquainted with his two brothers, Bros. T. M. and Benton Sweeney. (sometimes they were a little more familiar with us than we liked them to be, we went to school to them.) We know they were earnest christians, as Bro. Tom is yet. Bro. Benton fell asleep in 1867.

But while we are not personally acquainted with Bro. Bas, we know him through other brethren, and are rejoiced to hear one so well spoken of for good works as he, say, about our unauthorized practice of taking into the Church those who were baptised without complying with one of the antecedents of baptism—Confession: "God being my helper, I will never be guilty of the like again."

My brother, many of your brethren have made the same resolution, and many more would if they had the true courage, that you here manifest, when you confess that you have done wrong. Some of our leading brethren would rather go away into everlasting punishment, it seems, than confess that they have done wrong.

"Confess your faults to one another," brethren, and do as Bro. Sweeney has.

NO. I.

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, fear God and keep (obey) His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man"

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom;" happy is he, then, whose wisdom is built upon this foundation. Hopefully and faithfully he progresses onward and upward to his "whole duty;" realizing that nothing less than "all the commandments" will constitute duty. Luke, 17, 10. He looks for a city whose builder and maker is God, (Heb. xi, 10.) and knows that his right to an entrance in, to that city depends upon 'doing' the commandments. Rev. 22, 14.

That he may not forfeit this right, he takes the "lamp of life" (Ps. 119, 105) to light him to a knowledge of those good works or commands by which he may be perfected, (2 Tim, 3, 16, 17,) and finally obtain the inheritance. Ac. xx, 32.

There are some, however, like the rich young man who asked, "what shall I do that I may have eternal life?" When told to "keep the commandments," he asked, "which?" Can I not omit one? "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Jas. 2, 10. The neglect or omission of a known duty is sin. Jas. 4, 17. Are not some of the commandments more important than others? He who would ask this question must think to attain to his "whole duty" by doing only the most important things. Like Naaman he would do some great thing, and let the small matters take care of themselves.

If there is any distinction to be drawn between the commandments of God so as to make some essential, others non-essential; some important, others without value, who shall perform the work? He who fears God will never undertake such a work, for such a course would be prima facie evidence that his heart was not right, that he was a rebel against God. It is, perhaps, not my province to accuse any particular individual or class of beings guilty of this sin. The Psalmist tells us that God has magnified his

Keeping the commandments of God is obedience. Not keeping them is disobedience. Obedience is "to do that which is commanded or required, or to forbear doing that which is prohibited. To constitute obedience, the act or forbearance to act must be in submission to authority; the command must be known to the person, and the compliance must be in consequence of it or it is not obedience. Obedience may be voluntary or involuntary. Voluntary obedience alone can be acceptable to God."—Webster.

Authority is the basis of the command, for without authority the command is of no force. This authority, however, must be first acknowledged or recognized. We might have knowledge of laws good and wholesome in themselves, but not knowing their origin, or by what authority they were given, we would feel under no obligation to obey them. A very close relationship exists between authority and the law based upon it. We might say that the command was the embodiment of authority. God said to Moses: "In all places where I record my name there I will meet with thee and bless thee." Ex 20, 24. This was spoken primarily of the altar which God commanded Moses to erect. His name, power or authority was in it, because commanded by Him. To despise the altar or to offer polluted things upon it was to insult God, and whosoever now despises or rejects the command insults the authority who gave it. "The command must be known." Knowledge constitutes an important part of responsibility. How far our lack of knowledge may excuse us in the eyes of God we know not. This, we do know, that ignorance of the law is not a valid plea in the courts of our country for any violation of law. Willful ignorance of law is certainly disobedience. Those who so persistently plead their conscientiousness as a ground of acceptance with God, would do well to heed this point. Conscience may be a good witness to us of the nature of our actions, if it will submit to the proper teacher, and His authority. But, as soon as you invest conscience with authority, and plead its dictates as law, you ignore the Lord of conscience, and make his word of non-effect.

When an action is commanded to be done by the authority of Jesus, man must know what is commanded; second, who commands, His authority and power. The question with him then is to do, or not to do. If he do what is commanded, because commanded by Him, and all this "from the heart" it is obedience, and if obedience it is perfect obedience. In speaking of a course of life where reference is made to many actions we might draw such a distinction as "perfect and imperfect." A perfect obedience constituting a life in which every command had been obeyed; an imperfect obedience, one in which some commands had been disobeyed. But in reference to any particular command the terms are not applicable. The only distinction I see clearly is that drawn above viz: voluntary and involuntary. A man driven to obedience like a slave under the lash can never have the spirit or feelings of a son, and will never be blessed as a son. Christians are the children of promise, "a willing people" made willing by a knowledge of God's love through Jesus, and are constrained by love to do the will of their Father who is in Heaven. It is argued, however, that the circumstances by which we are surrounded; and early training in the schools of tradition our prejudices; and the standpoint from which we view the command from so many extenuating causes for the exercise of mercy, and that God will accept an "imperfect obedience," when these causes are present, if the subject only be in earnest and have a desire to do God's will. Paul teaches us that the "gospel is hid from some," that the god of this world had so blinded their minds that they could believe in Jesus. 2 Cor. 4, 3-4. Peter was once so full of prejudice that he could not carry the gospel to Gentiles, when convinced of his error he acknowledged the truth and opened to them the door of faith. Acts x. God's word is not sealed, it is not a mystery, neither is it hidden in a corner. All have, or may have access to it, and if they will let the light shine into their hearts, the "extenuating circumstances" pleaded for above will give place to faith. There are many examples in Scripture illustrative of the principles of God's government. By a proper study of these I think that we can ascertain fully all the elements which enter into that obedience which is from the heart and which secures to us peace and joy in the Holy Spirit.

In my next article, I shall examine the case of Nadab and Abihu, recorded in Levit. x. In the mean time I hope that the reader will turn and read Rev. 32, 14, then answer these questions. Have I a right to enter into that Holy City? Am I doing His commandment? Or am I drifting along on the tide of time farther and farther away from God and the Holy City, soon to be launched into the ocean of eternity, doomed to eternal despair? Turn then to Jesus the Light of the world, obey His commands, walk in His ways, and the God of Peace, and joy and love, will ever bless you.

Questions for J. T. Poe.

1. I am still going under the commission given in Mark xvi: 15-16, but not under authority of any board. I have Peter yet, and have rode him this year hunting up the lost sheep, but have not received over $30 up to date. Ought not those who cry missionary help me if I do not belong to a conference?

2. Our Baptist brethren say baptism is not essential to salvation. Also that many in the different sectarian churches are converted men, are Christians; but though some of these converted sects have been immersed, yet they will not receive them into their churches, unless they immerse these Christians over again. Is not that something like water salvation? Putting too much stress on water?

3. Are not those among us who claim that baptised believers, are not baptized according to the gospel, unless their faith was extended so far as to believe that baptism is for the remission of sins, making faith in the water essential to salvation? Are not they and Baptists putting too much stress on baptism?

4. Is not asking what God's commands are for, rather an exhibition of the want of faith? Abraham asked no questions, but just obeyed. Paul, in Hebrews, xi., says: "Abraham obeyed and went out, not knowing whither he went." Paul seems to extol Abraham's ignorance of the why.

5. Then have those who must know all the whys of God's commands before they obey, the faith of Abraham?

6. Is not true obedience to God, just doing his commands, asking no questions?

Your answer to these questions may strengthen the faith of some.

JAMES L. THORNBERRY.

Jonesborough, Coryell County, Texas, May 16.

These questions have all been answered in Texas Department, and it is plain from the queries put by Bro. T., that he coincides with my views previously expressed on these questions.

Salvation is predicated on obedience, and the soul that from love to God obeys, even when he does not see the reason why, will reap the blessing as surely as do those who know all the whys and wherefores. His faith is even greater than those who have a reason for their obedience beyond the fact that God commands it.—J. T. Poe, in Department G. A.

These men have here gone to record as teaching that baptism submitted to without understanding its design, is more valid than with an understanding! "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise." Why then, teach that baptism is for the remission of sins? Every time they preach it, if their theory is correct, they willfully endeavor to unfit the minds of their hearers for "true obedience!" Why not expurgate from their creed—"our plea"—this barrier to "true obedience?"

If men WILL find out that which impairs their obedience, let them go some where else to get it! Yes, let us propagate that which will advance towards "true obedience," and not that which retards!

If an earnest inquirer should be led by the wicked spirit to want to know the design of baptism, and should go to one of these teachers for instruction, the answer should be: "it is best that you should not know this; to be asking what God's commands are for, is rather an exhibition of the want of faith; be baptized before you find out what it is for, and it will be more acceptable to God!" If they did not make such a reply, under such circumstances, they would be palpably inconsistent. Oh! how their unequal legs cause them to limp.

Brethren, away with such contradictory teaching! A theory that leads one into such tangling alliances is dangerous, extremely so. "Water salvation," indeed! We have heard a great deal about it, but if this and the sprinkling of unconscious babes, is not "water salvation," then we are at a loss to know what is. The brother says, "Paul seems to extol Abraham's ignorance of the why."

Suppose it is admitted that Paul does, how does that weigh in favor of this dogmatic feature of "our plea?" Paul would not have extolled unbelief in Abraham or any one else. If Abraham had disbelieved and persistently denied God's word, and Paul had "extolled" him for that, our brother might have brought up the case to strengthen the side of unbelief, that he is trying to help and justify!

But God did not tell Abraham what it was for; if He had, it would have been because He wanted him to know. So the cases are quite different. God has told us to be baptized, and has told us what it is for—over and over has the "why" been given! These teachers must think that God put the "why" in, just to furnish debatable grounds for theologians—to develop the muscles of polemics; but not to be enquired after by the "laity"—common folks. If it is not necessary to believe that baptism is for the remission of sins, then baptism has no necessary antecedents. A. McG.

Peter's Second Key.

This is the apostle to whom were committed the "keys of the kingdom," which kingdom was opened on the day of Pentecost, after the apostles had been endued with power from on high or baptized with the Holy Spirit. We learn from him and the rest of the apostles, in their various sermons, that there are four grand steps to be taken or commands to be obeyed to get into this kingdom, viz: belief on the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance or turning from sin, confession of the Savior with the mouth and baptism. When these steps have been taken, we become subjects of King Emanuel and obtain the promise incident to the obedience of these commands. Having thus briefly noticed the law of induction into the church or kingdom here on earth, we pass on to notice the law of induction into the eternal kingdom.

Paul says in Heb. xii, 9-24: "For we are not come unto the mount that might be touched and that burned with fire, etc., but to Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem * * * * * and to Jesus, the mediator of the New Covenant, etc. And now we come to the point: Listen, ye Christians, at the voice of inspiration! Paul says: "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh, for if they escaped not, (that is, the Jews,) who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from Him that speaketh from heaven." Brethren, how does he speak to us and what are the conditions of entrance into the eternal city? Inspiration answers through the apostle Peter thus: "Besides, giving all diligence, add to your faith, courage; and to courage, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, love; for if these things be in you and abound, they make you, that you shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

This is Peter's second key, the one which opens the heavenly kingdom; the first being the one that opens the earthly kingdom. But he goes on to say: "But he that lacketh these things, (that is, these christian graces,) is blind and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he hath been purged from his old sins. Therefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. For if we do these things we shall never fall; (notwithstanding the Baptists contend that we cannot fall, whether we do them or not) For so entrance shall be ministered unto you (Christians) abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of your Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. 2 Peter, 1-5-. Here we have the question fully answered. Brethren, those of you, who have been waging war upon the doctrine of "faith alone," where do you stand upon the ladder of faith? Have you added courage? Having crossed the Red Sea, been baptized into Christ, have you courage to go forward through the wilderness to the promised land? "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." Put on the whole armor of God, that ye be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Have you added knowledge? Are you becoming wise unto salvation, or do you need some one to teach you again? Oh, my brethren, study the Word of God with the view of learning His will. Fling these sectarian newspapers, that are filled up with quack advertisements, missionary reports and sentimental nonsense, to the four winds and read God's word. Meditate upon it by day and by night. For how can we do the will of the Lord, unless we first learn what that will is? And if we comply not with His will, how can we expect to convert the nations of earth? We must show our faith by our works. Having taken the first step in ascending this ladder, let us not rest, but ascend each successive round, viz: courage, knowledge, temperance, etc., and thus fulfill the law of the Spirit. When we shall have reached the topmost round of this ladder, then we "have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Oh! may the Lord help us all to be faithful to the end.

"Two Corner Stones"

Yesterday, March the 2nd, was a gala day for this the "City of the hills." It was surcharged with a surging, scathing mass of human souls, rampant with the "lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," and bent upon hoisting them to the highest niche of human folly. Old and young, great and small, rich and poor, robust and infirm, virtue and prostitution, black, white, tawny and mixed, saint (?) and sinner, were hugged together, one mighty throng, in the embrace of the "god of this world," and marched with impatient tread, up Congress Avenue, with martial music, streaming banners and booming cannon, to pay homage to a consummating act of "lust, pride, and worldly wisdom." It is not our intention to say, or in the slightest degree insinuate, that this mighty concourse, which beggars description, was not grand and magnificent, viewed from a worldly standpoint. But what we have to say of it is, that those who profess to be the disciples of Christ, that aided or abetted in any way this carnalized outburst and enthusiastic endorsement of the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the "children of disobedience," should bow their heads in shame and penitently plead at the Throne of an outraged God for forgiveness for having rebelled against him and bowed at the shrine of mammon's god. Under this "Corner stone" of the Capitol of Texas, which was laid on Monday, and for which professing Christians spent, in various ways, thousands of dollars of the Lord's cash, was buried three millions of acres of the public domain!

Thus, Christians, (?) who profess to be the special friends of the poor, were led, by mad enthusiasm to clap hands and send up loud hurrahs at seeing this "Corner stone" of worldly pride and sinful ambition, laid at the sacrifice of that which would have made seventy-five thousand homes for the poor! Where was room found in this for a real Christian to "rejoice?" O, ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame? How long will ye love vanity? "Be ye not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." God has laid a "corner stone," and whoever clings to that "Stone shall not be confounded." But whoever sees beauty or loveliness in the things of the god of this world, even though it be such grand things as the "laying of the Corner Stone of the Capitol of the empire State," sees no beauty in the one laid in the mercy, wisdom and infinite love of God. Upon all such, that "Stone will some day fall and grind them to powder!"

On one occasion, when our Savior had taught, by parable, how his disciples should use the means at their command, saying: "Ye cannot serve God and mannan," the covetous Pharisees derided him. He said to them: "Ye justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that, which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."

Truth Will Prevail.

In the Advocate of the 25th of February, under "Difficulties on Religion Considered," Bro. D. Lipscomb, in a most cogent and convincing way, vindicates truth. In this very successful exposition and eradication of a most popular error, popular alike, in the circles of skepticism, infidelity and orthodoxy, Brother Lipscomb plants the banner of Truth high above the quaggy sloughs and pitfalls of inconsistencies, into which he has sometimes stumbled, while trying to defend an unauthorized feature of "Our plea."

This is the only plane upon which Truth can be defended; because this is its straight and narrow way." We desire our readers to read what Brother Lipscomb has said in his masterly defense of Truth; for it is replete with a high order of instruction. Besides, we intend to show that it is a virtual abandonment of his former position in reference to the baptismal controversy.

A Voice From the Tomb.

As Brother D. Lipscomb, in his arduousness for the defense and perpetuation of our practice of receiving persons upon an unauthorized baptism, has been led to place Brother Campbell and Brother Fanning with that class who did not know what they were being baptized for when they were being baptized; and, as we gave space for one of these great dead to speak in our last issue, we herewith present the other to be heard, in vindication of his name against misrepresentation and false impression. This course is not intended to give strength to our side of this controversy; but as it seems to be the strongest argument (?) that our most formidable opponents can bring to the support of their side, we have reluctantly followed them thus far into it. We are not familiar with the writings of Brother Fanning, but a brother from another state has kindly furnished us some copies of the "Religious Historian" and some quotations from others, which will show how Brother Fanning regarded intelligent baptism; and that he understood that it was for the remission of sins when he was baptized. Hear him: Writing of the things he learned without a teacher, Brother Fanning says: "After learning these facts, we heard B. F. Hall preach the word, in a manner which was so simple and plain that any one could understand it. At the first hearing we made the confession and submitted to baptism, at Cypress, six miles north of Florence, Alabama. As we stepped from the water, a very earnest Baptist friend exclaimed, "O bless me when did you get religion?" We, possibly, did not make a satisfactory reply; but our confidence was that God was true, and when He promises there is perfect safety." Again, in Religious Historian of June 1873, in noticing Brother B. F. Hall's death, he says: "in 1827 we heard him preach salvation through obedience to Christ, for which we shall ever feel thankful."

In March 1874 he said: "On Pentecost the apostle said to the pierced hearted inquirers, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you upon the name of Jesus Christ in order to remission. But does this prove that repentance was required as a condition of pardon? It is true, it always precedes, as faith also did, remission; but we have never been satisfied the words in Acts 2, 38 convey the idea of repentance and baptism jointly for remission of sins.

It is written "John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Do the words imply that repentance or baptism, one or both, were for remission? Do the words of Peter, "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins," imply that the Jews were to repent for the remission of sins, and also be baptized for remission? The words imply to us, that; the inquirers, were first, to amend their lives, and secondly, the repentants were to be immersed, in order to the remission of past sins. Notice, he says, but "we never have been satisfied," implying that he so understood when baptized himself.

Many more quotations can be furnished, showing how thoroughly Bro. Fanning understood this question when he obeyed. But, after all, suppose Bro. Campbell, Bro. Fanning and thousands of others had not understood it, would that nullify God's word or make it of non-effect? A. McG.

If we change our pamphlet from a monthly to a weekly paper, it will be a small, well-printed, four page, that we can furnish for $1 per annum. We mention this to answer some questions asked us by subscribers.

Hydraulic Theology—To be Tried.

A few years ago the Methodist Manufacturing Company, through one of its very ingenious members put forth a Nichol plated "Grub Ax," which they claimed was the very implement to up-root "Campbellism." But Brother D. Lipscomb took this "ax" through a crucial test, in which the Nichol, (a soft metal) soon wore off and the "ax" was left wholly unfit for use even in the softest "Campbellite" diggings. Hence the "Grub-ax" enterprise was worse than a failure. But Mr. Nichol being of quite an inventive turn of mind, comes this time with a "pump," which he is pleased to term the "Theological Pump." We have never seen this hydraulic apparatus; but some brethren have requested us to test its claims. We dare say it is warranted to "pump" Jordan dry and the watering place at "Enon near Saline" down to a scant supply for culinary purposes, at a few strokes! We are not much acquainted with the pump business, but if this "Pump" is intended to pump the Holy Land, and the balance of the world dry, to make the world ready for some patent sprinkling machine, to come out of the brain of this same enterprising genius, Nichol, we would like to try our hand at throwing the valves of the "Pump" out of working order, by main strength and awkwardness. One brother says he will take 50 copies of our pamphlet per month, for distribution, while we are detaching the "Pump." Of course other brethren in his locality will help him pay for and distribute them. Who next? We will furnish them at five cents apiece while engaged in that work, if we do it.

The "One Baptism"—What are its Characteristics.

In the pursuit of this inquiry as little extraneous weight as possible should be carried along or allowed to cumber the question. Where there is agreement—"one mind"—it would be a waste of time to dwell. Hence, what is known as the "action" of baptism furnishes no debatable grounds between my own brethren, although, it is one of the characteristics of the "one baptism." But we have some readers who wholly ignore the question of "modality." The "action" of baptism, with these is immaterial just so it is one of three! Sprinkling, pouring or immersing! As we desire to avoid being a specialist; but hope always to keep the truth uppermost in our heart and act as an humble vindicator of God's appointments and way—we deem it proper here and in this connection to give, at least, a passing notice to the question of action. Not long ago an elder (?)—and one who has acted for many years in that responsible capacity, told the writer that those who believed that sprinkling or pouring was God's appointed action for baptism, and submitted to either of these "modes," in good conscience, would be accepted by God as baptized persons.

He said that the masses, who were not acquainted with the Greek language, were wholly dependent upon and at the mercy of men who were. Bro. Caskey said the same, in substance, to us. Now, we deny this and without reservation, and in the fear and love of God, say, that no man who entertains such vague conceptions of God's plain, simple and perfect system of salvation from past sins, is prepared to "teach," in the name of Christ, in any capacity from the first steps or dawning rays of discipleship to the consummating step of 'perfect love.' Such men "need to be taught again the first principles of the oracles of God." They need "milk" while they are teachers, and authors on "strong meat!"

All brethren who bid such, God speed, in any way, while they are thus infusing the poison of "worldly wisdom"—the doctrine of men—"are partakers of their evil deeds." If the idea of baptism had never been expressed or in any way conveyed to us, except through the greek word from which the anglicized words, baptize, baptized and baptism are extracted, this hurtful theory of our old and reputable brethren might find some footing. But we have abundant room to thank God for the wisdom He has displayed in putting the very marked characteristics of His appointed ordinance—the "one baptism"—beyond the reach of learned D. D.'s or others who "become wise above what is written." And we verily believe, that this is one reason why all of God's appointments are not to be found in any one place, but are given here and there and in type, pat-able, literality and symbol, etc., etc. Hence, the man who believes that any of these substitutes is the "one baptism," believes it upon human and not upon divine testimony. Their faith is not the "one faith." Without this "one faith" they cannot please God; hence without it they can never approach the "one baptism." Whoever comes to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. To diligently seek God, is to act as did the Bereans! The man who is really anxious to know God's will, is sure to do this. He will follow the God-sent preachers into their fields of labor, which though done nearly two thousand years ago, is by faith drawn nigh. With God's word open before him and he actuated by that faith that comes by hearing or reading God's word, he has a telescope that reaches far beyond the narrow limits of the vain worship of man's commandments. When he sees Philip descend into the water with the Eunuch, he is not circumscribed within the narrow limits of a greek or anglicised word, to learn the action; but he compares spiritual with spirtual, by which he is told that the Eunuch was there "planted in the likeness of Christ death—buried with him by baptism—buried with him (Christ) in baptism—born of water and the Spirit." So long as such an one has the "one faith" all of the D. D.'s and other false teachers that are or ever were engaged in the devil's work—and they all are—could not make him believe that one could be buried, planted or born of a few drops or a pitcher of water! The mere suggestion of such a thought would be revolting and preposterous to him, and he would be ready to say: "get behind me Satan thou savorest of the things which be of men, and not of the things that be of God."

For the present we must let this suffice for our affusion readers and those of our brethren who are willing to deny the faith to palliate or condone them. But in leaving this feature or characteristic of the "one baptism," we should like to know why this charitable and elastic theory can't be stretched out, so as to take in all of the "modes" that might be introduced? Why be so uncharitable" as to confine it to these three? But, what are the characteristics of the "one baptism."

Whatever is a part of the law of induction into Christ into the remission of sins—whatever is a part of the process of regeneration—the new birth—is a part of the "one baptism." As we are wholly dependent on and bound to God's word for all information relative to this change from darkness to light—from death unto life—under any of the multiform ways it is expressed—so we are dependent on the same high source, and it alone, for the characteristics of the "one baptism."

It is not the characteristics of John's baptism, which ceased as a divine ordinance more than eighteen centuries ago, nor of the many baptisms (?) that have been invented by men—whether performed by immersion or any other "mode"—and which were never divine. We say, it is not after the characteristics of any of these that we inquire: but what are the characteristics of that baptism of which it is said: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us:" Again, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration. Again, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water: Again, God be thanked, that though you were the servants of sin, ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you, being then made free: Again, repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins: Again, go teach all nations, baptizing them: Again, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." All of these have the same characteristics, for they relate to one and the same thing; ordained of the same Lord, superinduced by the same faith, they are the "one baptism" spoken of by Paul. Hence when the characteristics of one of these is found, whatever they are, they are alike the characteristics of the rest, for they are all the same, the "one baptism." It matters not that conditions or characteristics are mentioned in one of these places that are not mentioned in others, for whatever is mentioned in one was present in all the others whether mentioned or not. It is not for us to criticise God for giving, here a little and there a little. for it has been done is His wisdom and though our carnal minds may suggest a wiser plan, thereby discovering weak points in the divine plan, the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. Hence the characteristics of the "one baptism" cannot consist of less than is mentioned in any one of these; it may, and does consist of more than is mentioned in any one place. Some of our brethren say it is only necessary to believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God as a preparation for baptism. This, they claim, is "believing the gospel," regardless of other things preached by New Testament preachers. This theory is a virtual impeachment of the wisdom of God as displayed in the words of those through whom the Holy Spirit has spoken to us. It makes the response of Peter, to the inquiry made him on Pentecost, idle words! When Philip was down in Samaria preaching, it was said that after the people believed him preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized," after they had believed these things, not before. Now what were these things concerning the Kingdom of God that these people believed before Philip baptized them? A correct answer to this will furnish us the characteristics of the "one baptism." It is very evident that they understood and believed more concerning the kingdom of God than that Jesus was God's Son. True, this is a grand proposition, and furnishes the basis for all the balance to rest upon; but, he preached things "concerning the kingdom" that they believed, what were they?

Bro. C. McPherson. is now ready to add to his flagged seats and general stock of new things learned of Major Penn, a stock obtained of Pearson, the "boy preacher." We suggest that the "State Meeting" set Bro. McPherson apart, to travel alternately, one year with Penn and Pearson. Let him gather up all they have! It is a pity for such a paragon of progress to be confined within the narrow limits of a "thus saith the Lord." Brother McPherson has had, "go forward," for a motto so long that he is bound to go faster! faster!! and faster!!! When the Guide Company first found him, if they had taken down this motto of his, and put in its stead: "Whatsoever you do in word or deed, do all in the name (by the authority) of Jesus Christ," he might have been narrowed down some; but it is now too late to begin. He is calling for an example of a church ever having sent out and sustained an evangelist. Why don't he ask for what he needs, authority or a "State Meeting" or a Convention doing it? A. McG.

Brother Jackson sent us a splendid short article on "Unto what then were you baptized?" but we have mislaid it. He will re-write it, we hope; and excuse our negligence.

There is a storm gathering over the heads of those who recognize sect baptism as valid, that will burst upon them, ere long, and drive them under the shelter of truth or into the arms of the sects. If they could see the letters we read, they would meet the question in honest discussion or prepare to be more liberal towards seetdom.

Many brethren—and not a few among the pioneers—are giving up former positions on this question, and will be heard in defense of truth, when their present timidity wears off a little. We would suggest to that class who have depended, in the past, upon the cry of “hobby!” to quell the truth, that they must now bring up something more potent, to stay the on-gathering tide of pent-up Truth. It is coming, brethren, and you had as well begin preparations to meet it, or get out of the way! “Truth is mighty and will prevail!”

Our articles on the “one baptism” have been held up, because we have been informed that a brother who entertains diverse views is trying to work up sufficient courage to discuss the question with either Bro. Jackson or the writer. Come on brother, choose between us, and come up like a man. You shall be treated fairly and kindly in these columns.

We learn that the “Christian Church” (?) at Austin, is on the eve of, and in a perfect fever of excitement, over a grand bazar, where they are going to merchandise largely in the Lord’s house! What spirit is it “working” so industriously in these people, both to will and to do of its good pleasure? It surely must be the spirit of the modern pastor as this effort is to raise funds to pay W. E. Hall—a very modern edition. “Whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name (by the authority) of the Lord Jesus.” Will some of these brethren please show us the chapter and verse for selling dolls by his authority?

IN the next issue will begin a discussion of the baptismal question, between Brother Gibson and the writer. Brother Gibson is one of our old preachers who has recently moved to Austin. He will be able to make his side of this question a good fight we presume. He affirms that persons may be baptized into Christ before they believe, that baptism is for the remission of sins. Brethren bestir yourselves to circulate the pamphlet so that the strength of this human “plea” may be seen.

Those sending us clubs will please be particular in writing and spelling names. We always spell the name as it is spelt to us. Some brethren have complained that their names are spelt wrong. Even Postoffices sometimes seem to us, to be spelt wrong, but we never attempt to correct except when we know there is a mistake. All communications of this character should be written in a legible hand; hence we suggest to some of our agents that they be more particular in the future. However, we thank them none the less because of their bad spelling and illegible writing.

A Correction.

Some time ago we made some reference to an elder at Madisonville, Texas, as an unbaptized elder; since which he has written us informing us that we were mistaken. We are glad that we were mistaken; but sorry that we placed him in a false attitude before our readers and gave him any trouble. But we had no doubt, at the time, of the correctness of what we wrote. We beg his pardon, as well as all who are in any way concerned.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

A. MCGARY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

VOL. 1.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, APRIL, 1885.

No. 8.

What is it to be Led by the Spirit?

(No. 2.)

In our article in the February No. of "The Firm Foundation," I showed from the declaration of the Apostle Paul, that the children of God are led by the Spirit of God. I also showed from the Old and New Testaments, that to be led by the Spirit of God is to be led by the instructions of the Spirit, as revealed in the word of God.

The object of this, and perhaps another article, will be to show from the same infallible source, where the Spirit does and does not lead people. And now, brethren, most of us like to hear the first part of the commission, as recorded by Matt. 28: 20. plainly taught; and that is right: (but some are becoming tender-footed even on that part). But, ought we not to desire to hear the latter part, the instructions of the Spirit to the children, plainly taught also? All must say we ought; and brethren, if I take any position on this, or any other subject, that is contrary to or not clearly sustained by the word of the Lord, tell me of it in kindness, in the spirit of our Master, and I will retract it.

But to the subject under consideration: If I lead my horse, I lead him somewhere. I can't lead him without leading him somewhere. If I put a rope around his neck and pull him, I use physical force or power; but suppose he is in the pasture and I want to catch him to use; he suspects what I want, and will not let me come near him. I go to the crib and get some corn, and lay it upon my arm and walk out into the pasture where he is, he sees the corn, is hungry, and follows me back into the lot. What power do I use now; not physical, but motive power; he wants to gratify his appetite. But if, when I go out into the pasture with the corn on my arm, I take a sack along and cover it up, will he follow me to the stable? No! Why? Because the power to lead is gone; he cannot see the motive. So, the Holy Spirit through the gospel, (the corn) presents to our minds the grandest, the most sublime motives of which the human mind can conceive; but if the motives are covered up, or veiled in a mystery (as is the popular teaching) where is the power to lead? Simply, nowhere. It is all mockery!

We want to notice now, some of the many places where the Spirit does not lead Christians or the children of God.

The Spirit never leads a child of God into a drinking or gambling saloon. Never! Never!! Nor does the Spirit ever lead any one into a ball room, or theater, or skating rink, or any such places! For they are places of revelling; and that the Spirit condemns. Gal. 5: 19-21. The Spirit never leads a Christian to these abominable low-down circuses that are roaming over this country and demoralizing every class of society; but then, "the children must go, as they have never seen any thing of the kind, and the old folks must go to take care of them," and many dollars are spent by those who are in debt for their food and clothing, and yet many of such claim to be Christians, to be led by the Spirit, and have not even common honesty. The Spirit never leads a child of God to these State and County fairs, where gambling, drinking, horse racing and all manner of wickedness is carried on, and I have my doubts whether the Spirit ever leads a child of God to these great expositions that are so popular, to spend their money in building up such institutions as foster the love of money, the root of all evil, while they have at their doors many poor widows and orphans who are destitute of the necessaries of life, and surrounded by many of their fellow beings who have never heard the Gospel. Now, brethren and sisters, when we use our time, talents and money in that way, are we making to ourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when we fail they (the friends) may receive us into everlasting habitations? Luke 16: 9. The Spirit of God never leads sisters, young or old, rich or poor, into a jeweler's or a milliner's shop, to bedeck their poor, vile bodies with gold or pearls or costly array. Now sisters, don't become offended; but, read the instructions of the Spirit in 1st Tim., 2: 9, and 1st Peter, 3: 1-6 and remember that "as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God." The Spirit of God never led a child of God to the marriage altar to be married to one out of Christ. If they marry, they are to marry in the Lord. 1st. Cor., 7: 39. The Spirit of God never leads a child of God into such societies as Odd Fellow or Free Mason fraternities, where they spend their money, time and talents in building them up, instead of the church of Christ! They are the unfruitful works of darkness. Eph. 5: 11. The Spirit never leads a child of God out upon the battle-field to take the life of his brother or his fellow beings; for (or because) the weapons of the christian's warfare are not carnal. The Spirit says, "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after (or according to) the flesh; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal; but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong-holds (not of righteousness but sin)." Cor. 10. 3-4.

And the description of the Christian's armor in Eph. 6: 14-18, shows conclusively that his fighting is not to be for wicked human governments; but for the King of Kings and Lord of Lords; besides, the Apostle says in the same connection, that we (Christians) wrestle (or fight) not against flesh and blood, verse 12, (exactly what the soldier in human government does), but Paul says the Christians do not fight that sort of fighting, and their armor is not adapted to it.

I know that Abraham, David, Solomon and many other good men used carnal weapons acceptably to the Heavenly Father: but Christians are under a different dispensation, the government of the King of peace. Neither does the Spirit lead a child of God to the ballot box, to vote for wicked men, who get up wars, making it necessary that men should kill each other. If the Lord had made it the duty of Christians to vote, as some of our scribes say he has, then he would have told them who to vote for, whether old line whig or democrat, republican or monarchist, and when they go to vote, instead of voting against each other as they do, they would all vote alike. Now would they not, if they were led by the Spirit? They are led by a spirit, but it is the spirit of a political party! The Spirit never leads a congregation of Christians to go into these grab bag, post-office, fair and festival arrangements, for the purpose of raising money to pay off pastors and defray other expenses of the church! No, nor the Spirit never led a congregation to make a contract with a pastor, "So much preach, so much pay," for that is making merchandise of the gospel! Nor did the Spirit ever lead a congregation to introduce instrumental music into the worship! I care not if every member of the congregation is in favor of it, for the Spirit says whatever you do in word or deed, do all in the name (or by the authority) of the Lord Jesus, not of Moses or David. Col., 3: 17, and the Lord has never authorized instrumental music.

The Spirit of God never led the children of God into any of these Missionary Societies for the purpose of raising money to send the gospel to home and foreign fields. Now, brethren, don't say I have gone too far in this declaration, unless you show plain instructions of the Spirit sustaining such societies, or where they are necessarily implied; and if you can't do either, ought you not to give them up, regarding, as we profess to do, the silence of the Bible as much as what it says?

The Apostle Paul says "all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness (now the object of it), that the man may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2d Tim., 3:16. That language is very plain. The scriptures tell us about all good works, or the Apostle did not tell the truth, they do not tell us about these Missionary Societies; therefore, they can't be classed among good works; they are necessarily classed among bad works, for there are but the two classes. If the Lord has not made provision in the Scriptures for the raising of money for Missionary purposes, he doesn't want it raised, it is not a good work. Now brethren, the same objections, we have also to Bible Colleges, only to a greater extent, as they are more injurious to the cause of Christ; for the Missionary departure is sustained, I believe, mostly by the preachers that have been made by Bible Colleges, as well as many other departures, especially the pastorate departure, which sets aside the elders, and requires a stipulated salary for doing that, that the Spirit never required them to do, and are consequently not led by the Spirit. And now brethren, let us not become offended; but remember that it is only those who are led by the Spirit of God that are the Sons of God.

Christ our Lord, founded the only School or College in which he designed preachers should be made; and He is President of that College, the inspired Apostles the professors, and the Bible THE ONLY TEXT BOOK; and one of the professors who opened the college to the Jews and Gentiles, declares that in that text book, is revealed all things that pertain to life and Godliness; it thoroughly (not partially) furnishes the man of God to all good works. Will Brother McGarvey, or Brother Graham, or some other brother, who is a worker in and defender of Bible Colleges, please inform the brotherhood when, where, and by whom the first Bible College was founded, in which uninspired professors did, and do teach, and other books than the Bible were and are taught?

Having shown some of the places where the spirit does not lead the children of God, we will now show some where it does lead them, and bring this article to a close; and in our next show where the Spirit does and does not lead the sinner.

The Spirit of God leads the children of God to the assembly of the Saints on the first day of the week, that they may read the Scriptures together, sing the songs of Zion, pray with and for each other, and partake of the emblems of Christ's broken body and shed blood, that they may show forth his death till he comes again, and to contribute of their means as the Lord hath prospered them through the past week. "And they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine (or teaching) and fellowship, and breaking of bread and prayers. Acts 2:42. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow." Acts 20:7. This quotation shows that it was their custom to meet together on the (not a) first day of the week to break the loaf, and Paul says, Heb. 10:25. Not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is. Brethren we ought to be careful about that. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come, 1st Cor. 16:2. This shows the weekly contribution. The Spirit of God leads the children of God to the bedside of the sick to minister to and comfort them, it leads them to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, especially they of the household of faith. "If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled: notwithstanding you give them not those things which are needful to the body: what doth it profit." James 2:15-16. Now they that tell them to depart in peace and be warmed and filled are not led by the Spirit. The Spirit leads Christians to diligently follow every good work, and to search the Scriptures to learn what are good works. The Spirit leads the children of God to add to their faith, virtue (or courage), knowledge, temperance, patience, Godliness, brotherly kindness and charity." 2d Peter 1:5-7. There are some that have enlisted as soldiers and have been recognized as such for years, that have not courage enough to say no, when their old, wicked associates ask them to go into the drinking saloon or ball room with them, and to tell them they have quit serving that master. Yes, and some of them have not courage enough to say brother and sister, in talking to and about their fellow soldiers, and others have not enough to refuse to call sectarians, brother and sister, when they know they are not in the kingdom of Christ, have not been born of water and the Spirit: but as a preaching brother once said to me, "we are brethren in Adam," Yes, and so are Bob Ingersoll and his kind, but I can't dwell on all these items, in this article. In every well regulated human government there is an armory, and in that armory are all the arms necessary, and extend or enlarge that government, so Christ, the Christian's king, has a government (a monarchy) and in that government is an armory, and in that armory is all the armor necessary for his soldiers to use in defending and extending his government, and every piece of that armor is labelled in plain language, language selected by the Holy Spirit, so that every soldier can tell, beyond a doubt, when he has it all on, and the Spirit says "put on the whole armor of God that you may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil," Eph. 6:11, "and to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked," verse 16. Now the Spirit leads the children of God, the soldiers of the cross, to that armory, where they can be equipped and completely panoplied, for the battles of life, that they may come off conquerors through him that loved them, and now, brethren, let us "examine ourselves whether we are in the faith," are we being led by the Spirit in all that we do, have we put on the whole armor of God, and are we as faithful soldiers, fighting the good fight of faith (not against flesh and blood), but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places? If we are thus living, and continue thus to live, when we lay this armor by, we can say with that grand old hero and Apostle to the Gentiles: We have fought the good fight, (not a bad fight, as all are that take our fellow beings lives) we have finished our course, we have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for us a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give us at that day, and not to us only, but unto all of them, also that love his appearing.

To all those who recognize the existence among men of a divine government, and who have prepared their hearts to serve the Lord Jesus, the question of pardon or rather, of the assurance of pardon, is of paramount importance. The journey of life is traveled but once, and when the end is reached, the record for eternity is closed. While in life, mistakes may be corrected; in eternity we have judgment, not correction. To have doubts as to our acceptance with God, and as to our future life, is to be unhappy. I can conceive of no state more unhappy than of one who realizes his true condition as a sinner, and is convinced of the future judgment, and is nevertheless tormented with constant doubts and fears and anxieties as to his relationship to the divine government. Such doubts frequently drive men and women to despair, and with shattered minds and blasted hopes, they find a home in some lunatic asylum.

There is an opposite extreme, however, that must be avoided, viz: Presumption. Men may claim the favor of God, and persuade themselves that "they can read their titles clear to mansions in the skies," and yet be fearfully mistaken. There will be some teachers who "in that day," will lay claim to the everlasting reward, because they had prophesied in the name of Jesus, and in His name done many wonderful works. But Jesus will dismiss them. "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity, I never approved you." Mat. 7: 21-23.

If our eternal salvation depends upon doing the will of God HERE, and if this hope of immortality is set before us, in order to obtain our consolation and peace and happiness, let us examine carefully the grounds of our acceptance, so that we may be fully assured of the divine favor.

Are you a child of God? Are your sins forgiven? If you answer yes, then give us your evidence of these facts. A great many will answer:

I know that I am forgiven because I love God and the brethren; thus making their feelings, the evidence of what God has done for them. A little thought here shows the fallacy of this idea. Pardon is an act of divine clemency, and all evidence as to this divine act must come from God and not from man. Our feelings are the result of faith, and may deceive us. In Gen. 37, we have an account of the sale of Joseph by his brethren; and their dipping his coat in blood and taking it to their father. The latter, from the evidence before him believed Joseph to be dead, and his heart was filled with sorrow. He believed a falsehood, yet the effect was the same as if it had been true. His feelings, however, were not evidence in this case, but the effect of faith in the evidence presented to him. And so it is with all those who predicate their acceptance with God upon feelings. They believe human tradition, that a certain state of feeling is pardon; they look inward for these feelings, and they work to obtain them, and as soon as they possess them they declare themselves pardoned. Dear friends, rely no longer upon feelings as evidence of pardon, do not look into your own hearts for this evidence, look to God; He will not leave you comfortless.

Others predicate their acceptance with God upon their good and pious parents who have passed from earth to Heaven. This is not a new plea, for when John the Immerser came to the Jews preaching repentance, some of them claimed the privileges and blessings of God by virtue of their kinship to Abraham. Matt 3:9.

I would not for any consideration say any thing to weaken the obligation of children to parents. One great evil now stares us in the face, and it is daily becoming more wide-spread, threatening the foundation, not only of society and religion, but of all good government, and that is the lack of parental government. It is a great relief to us now and then to find children who reverence their parents, and to such it is but natural that they should walk in the steps of their fathers. But, my dear friends, natural ties cannot save us; these ties of nature belong only to this life. In eternity, each of us must give account of himself to God." Rom., 14: 12. The tie that saves us there is a super-natural one;

we must be made partakers of the divine nature, and this by being born of the incorruptible seed of the Kingdom, the word of God. Being individually responsible to God, I cannot plead what my parents did as any evidence of my being right.

Others, plead morality or self-righteousness. I have heard some say: "I live honestly, I do not swear, nor lie, nor drink, nor gamble, and I treat all men as I wish to be treated; besides this, I contribute to the poor and even to the churches. Besides this, you have persons in the church that are guilty of many evil practices that I would scorn to do; I could not fellowship such people." These people go farther and predicate their acceptance with God upon the attribute of Mercy. Let us examine their claims.

The self-righteous man is clearly pictured in Luke 18: 9-14. This man, and all such, look first at their own good deeds; secondly, they contrast these good deeds with some man's bad deeds, and conclude that God certainly will accept them. The standard of righteousness to which I must conform comes from above and is revealed to us in the gospel. Rom., 1: 16, 17. To make the wickedness of man a standard by which to measure my goodness, is a fearful departure from the divine plan. We must not "measure ourselves by ourselves," nor by others, but as Jesus is righteous, so must we be. I John, 3: 7. Piety is no evidence of acceptance with God. In Acts x, we have an account of a pious man, one who feared God, who gave much alms to the people and prayed to God always. Yet this man had to hear words whereby he and his house should be saved. Acts xi, 14.

Good feelings, good parents, self-righteousness, morality or piety, can not be urged as evidence of pardon. Pardon or remission of sins is an act of authority, something done for us by the Head of the divine government. In order to our assurance of this fact, the evidence must be divine; must come to us fully authenticated. It then remains for us, either to accept the divine testimony, or rejecting it, substitute some one or more of the above theories originating in tradition and perpetuated by party-ism or creed-ism.

Jesus being the Lord of all, and remission of sins being by his authority, (Acts x, 45.) we must look for some evidence coming from Him. As salvation or remission of sins is by no other authority given under heaven among men, Acts 4: 12; we cannot look for the evidence of this salvation prior to the beginning of this authority among men. Now, Jesus, while on earth, claimed no authority of his own, but worked in the name of the Father. After His ascension and exaltation to the right hand of the throne of God; thus receiving all power in Heaven and on earth. Phil. 2.

He sends the Holy Spirit to His chosen Ambassadors in order to inaugurate His reign upon earth among men. His authority is proclaimed, and the law of remission laid down by the Holy Spirit. Now, there are to my mind, but two ways in which the Head of a government may make known the pardon of a criminal.

1st. In person, as Jesus did to the palsied man. Mark 2: 5.

2nd. By proclamation. Jesus having left the earth, leaves his proclamation of peace and pardon, and selects officers to publish it; gives them the Holy Spirit that they may show to the world their credentials as Ambassadors of Christ, so that our faith in their testimony may be just as strong as if the word was spoken audibly to us by the Lord himself.

Again, Paul reasoning upon this, teaches us that the Holy Spirit is a witness, and if a witness it must give evidence. This evidence is through the preaching and works of the Apostles. Hence God's word, spoken by the Holy Spirit through the Apostles constitutes the divine evidence of pardon.

The proclamation of pardon is to all men, and expressly stipulates the conditions upon which it can be received and enjoyed. Is there any doubt as to the authority of this document? No it comes from Jesus; it is published by the Spirit of Truth and confirmed to us by the chosen ambassadors or officers of the kingdom. The stipulations are that man must believe the Gospel, repent of his sins, confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and be baptized for the remission of sins. Having complied with these conditions I have God's word that I am pardoned. But it is argued Paul says, that "the spirit itself bears witness with our spirits that we are the children of God." Here we have two witnesses, the Holy Spirit, and our spirit. "Each bears witness," that is, gives evidence and that evidence is "we are the children of God." Not we have become the children of God, but we are now children of God. This evidence of a present fact is based upon certain facts occurring before this, and verified by other testimony or evidence. Having the divine testimony as to remission of sins offered upon conditions, I can examine myself as to whether I have accepted and obeyed these conditions or not. In this case my Spirit "bears witness" that I have done certain things. My faith in God's word or testimony assures me of pardon. Now, I am a child of God, being led by the Spirit of God, and the Holy Spirit says you are a child of God, they are the sons of God."

I agree with you says one, that the evidence of pardon must be divine; that we have this evidence in the word of God, and that our faith in this evidence, is to us "the assurance of pardon contained in the statement "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten son, that whosoever believe on Him might not perish but have everlasting life." "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." These and similar passages make faith the sole condition required of man, hence when I believe on Jesus, I have the evidence of pardon without baptism.

To all of which I reply:

1. That no terms or conditions of pardon were proclaimed by the authority of Jesus prior to His ascension and exaltation to the right of the Father.

2. That "to believe on the Lord Jesus" in Scriptural language, includes obedience to His commands.

3. That justification by faith only excludes divine testimony and predicates pardon on a State or condition of the heart—that is on feeling.

4. That no one has a Scriptural assurance of pardon who has not been baptized for the remission of sins.

In proof of the first proposition it is only necessary to read the New Testament and find in Act 2, 38, the first command ever given on earth among men for the remission of sins by the authority of the Lord Jesus. In proof of second proposition, I refer to the following scriptures: Act. 4:4, Act ix, 42, xvii, 4:12, etc. In proof of third proposition, it is only necessary to quote the commission as given by Mark, 16, 15:16. Acts 2, 38. If it be admitted that Jesus has all authority, I ask how is that authority manifested? In what form must all authority be manifested? In what form must all authority be clothed in order to reach man? It must take the "form of sound words," "the form of doctrine," coming from Jesus. But merely believing in the power or authority of Jesus, does not make me a subject of His, nor does it bring to me remission of sins. I believe in the existence of the kingdom of Great Britain, and in the power of the Queen, but my faith does not make me a subject of that power.

Nor does faith alone bring any of the promises to man. You must acknowledge that authority openly by confessing His name and by obedience to His command, "be baptized" for the remission of sins.

In conclusion I would ask, whether it is better to live in a state of doubt and uncertainty or by yielding obedience to simple conditions of God's word, have the full assurance of faith in divine testimony as to our pardon? "Examine yourselves whether you be in the faith." Take your New Testament and in the fear of God, read, reflect and obey,

1. Do I believe with all my heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God?
2. Have I repented of my sins?
3. Have I confessed with the mouth the Lord Jesus?
4. Have I been baptized for the remission of sins?

Reader, can you answer these questions affirmatively? If so there can never be a doubt upon your mind as to the pardon of your sins. If you can not answer them affirmatively then there must necessarily exist some doubt as to your pardon. God's word is sure and carries light and joy and peace with it. Man's traditions are fallible, weak, and carry with them doubt. Turn then to God, take that which is sure and steadfast, and your reward will be sure. J. W. J.

Unto What Then Were You Baptized?

Some brother has written to "Firm Foundation," objecting to portions of the article on above subject in No. 4.

The objectionable phrase is that the certain disciples found at Ephesus were "in the church and recognized as members." If they were "in the church" when Paul found them, and "baptism is a transitional act," where were they after they were baptized by authority of Jesus?

1. There is no "mystical body" of Christ into which we may enter by obedience. The church at Ephesus was composed of disciples, a title then given to the followers of Christ. The certain disciples were in the city of Ephesus, and RECOGNIZED as members or believers. Sec. v., 2. Paul speaks of "false brethren unawares brought in," Gal. 2:4; and cautions preachers to take heed HOW they build upon the one foundation. 1 Cor. 3:10. Men may be numbered here with the disciples, and be RECOGNIZED as members of the church and yet NOT be in the Kingdom of God. In speaking of baptism as a "transitional act," we are apt to lose sight of its true design. Baptism transfers or translates us into a state of favor or peace, when it is preceded by faith "Faith is confidence as to things hoped for; conviction as to things unseen." Hence faith embraces the promises, (Heb. xi, 13), has respect unto the recompense of reward (Heb. xi, 26), and has confidence in Christ as to their reception. The authority of Christ, however, intervenes, clothed in "that form of doctrine" once delivered to the Saints. Obedience from the heart translates us into the Kingdom of Gods dear Son.

2. It is objected that I missed the point altogether in my article, and that the only question involved was of authority. John's disciples were baptized by authority of God, and hence had to be baptized by authority of Jesus.

Unto what AUTHORITY then were you baptized? Unto baptist authority! Every member of the Baptist Church must give this answer, and it places them in the same state of the certain disciples at Ephesus. Baptists do not recognize as valid any baptism but that performed by a licensed minister of their own denomination. Ask these preachers by what authority they minister the ordinances, and they answer by the authority of the Church, that is the Baptist Church. Hence Baptist baptism is a peculiar institution, and no more akin to Christian baptism than was the baptism of John.

1. It is by the authority of the Baptist Church.

2. It is NOT for the remission of sins.

The power or virtue in baptism does not lie in the action—immersion—though this is necessary; nor does it lie in the fact of calling over a special formula—"Unto the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit."

Its special power lies in this—the remission of sins by the authority of Jesus. It is to be hoped that those disciples now "in the church and recognized as members" who have been baptized unto Baptist authority or methodist authority, will submit to the authority of Christ and be baptized for the remission of sins.

Another answer is sometimes given to this question, which deserves a passing notice. Some parties say that they are "baptized unto obedience," or that they were baptized to honor God.

1. Baptism is itself obedience; hence it is obedience unto something else. Obedience is not the END for which an act is performed, it is the MEANS to an end. The order in the divine government has always been faith, obedience, blessing; the latter being the end for which or to which the act is done. In God's word, remission of sins is a promise, blessing or end connected with baptism by divine authority. To deny this shows a lack of faith; to claim the promise without obedience is presumption, and to attach some human design in the place of the divine, is dishonoring to God.

2. It is the will of the Father, that all men shall honor the Son even as they honor the Father. Jo. 5: 23. To honor God or His Son is to hear His words and obey them. "He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken the same shall judge him in the last day." Jo. 12: 48. Does it honor God or the Son to claim a promise or blessing without obedience to that act to which such blessing is connected? Does it honor God to deny flatly the design of baptism, and practice it to some other end? No, God is honored by obedience, and we must not think to obtain mercy by pleading ignorance. When we consider how much importance is attached to ignorance by some of our scribes, we can but exclaim :

"Hail modest ignorance, thou goal and prize Thou last, best knowledge of the simply wise."

Paul, however, refers to some that were alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that was in them, (Eph. 4: 18) blinded by the god of this world, so that the gospel is hid from them. 2 Cor. 4: 3, 4.

There is a veil over the minds of many, a veil of prejudice, partyism, &c., &c., which prevents their seeing to the END of that which is ordained by the authority of Christ. Nevertheless, when they shall turn away from tradition, to the Lord, then will they enjoy the blessings of the New Covenant.

Explanatory

Bro. McPherson's notice of my severance from the "Firm Foundation" omitted one word. It should have read: "Bro. Jackson has severed his editorial connection with the "Firm Foundation." When I wrote to him I anticipated going into a business that would have engaged my whole time and attention, and make it impossible for me to act as editor or contributor to any paper. Since then, I have determined to follow no business but that of preaching the gospel, and as opportunity offers, I shall write for the "Firm Foundation" and solicit subscribers for it.

Bro. McPherson, and perhaps others, might from their standpoint, express joy or gladness at my withdrawal from the "F. F." This is their privilege; and for their interest in my welfare I feel truly grateful; nevertheless I think they are mistaken.

The "Firm Foundation" is not "riding a hobby." It will contend earnestly for every item of "the faith once delivered to the saints;" it will inculcate purity of life, and work for a pure church; and will urge a constant, faithful and earnest work in evangelizing. The brethren above alluded to, have been freely tendered the columns of the "F. F." for a full and free discussion of every subject or point of difference. They prefer, however, to quietly ignore argument and seek to crush us by crying out "hobby," "crank," &c., &c.

But this is enough. I am no hobbyist." I preach "baptism for (in order to) the remission of sins," because I believe the word of God, and deny the validity of the various ablutions performed by religious bodies for some other purpose.

With good will for all and with an earnest and sincere desire that more CHARITY prevail among us, I remain—'not an editor'—an humble contributor.

(No. 6.)

The subject of the "One Baptism," is being so fully presented by Bro. McGary, that perhaps no necessity exists for this article. But as it comes up just here, in the series of papers being presented. I will offer a few thoughts with the hope of aiding in the confirmation of the faithful. When our Savior commanded: "Go preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he did not teach that belief ALONE, qualified a person for baptism and salvation from sins.

We have seen that repentance and the confession result from faith and precede baptism. All of these conditions must be complied with, as the Lord has enjoined in his system of faith. We have seen that obedience results from an understanding heart. Ignorance in reference to either one of these conditions, disqualifies a person to that extent, to acceptably obey the Lord. Otherwise an extension of the rule would render the commission of Christ a nullity. We have to again emphasize the statement that IGNORANCE AND HEART WORK DO NOT CO-OPERATE IN THE SALVATION OF MAN. Let's not drift out upon the sea of speculation without chart or compass. In the discussion of this question brethren Campbell and Fanning have been brought forward to illustrate the results of the position advocated by Bro. McGary on this question.

In the February No. of the "F. F.," he gave quite a number of quotations from the writings of Campbell, the most of which I had already marked for this article. I will here simply add some thoughts from the pen of Bro. Fanning. In the year 1874, the following question was propounded to him by W. T.

Alexander, of St. Ledger, Mo. :

"Should members be received from the Sects without baptism?"

The reply was as follows :

"If the party believed with all the heart, made the confession that Jesus is the Savior, was baptized to follow Christ, we presume nothing more should be required in regard to baptism.

If, however, the persons were baptized in IGNORANCE of the truth, under the vague impression that they were obeying John's baptism, as the twelve at Ephesus; or they were pardoned, saved, adopted into the "mystical" body by "getting religion," or by the direct conversion of some strange spirit, and they were baptized to join the Baptist, Methodist or some other sect, they should by all means, upon an intelligent confession of their faith in Christ, be immersed into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, in order to the remission of sins and adoption into the Church of Jesus Christ. No substitution will answer in the place of the baptism enjoined by the Savior. See "Religious Historian," April No., page 126, A. D. 1874. In the July No., 1873, page 208, we have the following: "He that is baptized because he imagines himself pardoned, regenerated and saved, or because he supposes that he has the witness of the Spirit, merely as a duty, or condition to become a member of the Baptist or any other denomination, obeys not Christ, and in such obedience, the convert, having no proper conception of the meaning of the ordinance, when his heart is opened by the truth, should put on Jesus Christ by being baptized into him." In fact, we have not a brother who has written in defense of the truth, I care not how much opposed to re-baptism he may be, who has not from some standpoint taught its necessity. No one can intelligibly present the scriptures, without setting forth principles of interpretation that will alike bind him to the "One Baptism," in all of its features. I have been, I think, a reasonably careful reader of our literature for twenty years past. I think I can show from the writings of Campbell, Stone, Franklin, Fanning, Fall, Brents, Elley, Errett, Goodwyn, Wilkes, Lard, Pendleton, McGarvey, Creath and many others, the presentation of thoughts that will logically hold them to the baptism resulting from an understanding heart. It avails nothing to refer to the names above mentioned who oppose re-baptism. This only shows their inconsistency. The union contemplated in God's word can only be brought about in God's appointed way—through the truth. Will the readers of the "F. F." please turn to an article (if convenient) in the "Old Path Guide," of February 13, this year, by Bro. R. B. Trimble, of New Burnside, Ill. This has the ring of the pure metal.

I can conceive of but one way, to oppose the truths therein presented; and that is to argue from a standpoint of that gum elastic kind of charity that stretches over and beyond God's word. My dear brethren, this will not do. "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."

I will now present a brief summary of what has been presented, and leave the subject with you:

1. We are indebted alone to the words of inspiration for all that we know of God, and our responsibility to Him.

2. In His word is found all things that pertain to life and godliness. Nothing can be added or taken therefrom.

3. We walk by faith in His directions, in all that pertains to pardon, adoption into His family, and the future life.

4. All who have obeyed the words of the Spirit, are one with God, with his Son, and have been translated into the same Body—the Body of Christ.

5. In the faith of Jesus, the Christ, as revealed in the New Testament, is the only hope of immortality and the SPIRITUAL ONENESS, of the disciples of the Master.

6. All can only come to the unity of the faith through the instructions of the Good Spirit. For

There is one God—our common Father.

One Lord Jesus Christ—the one law-giver.

One Faith—for all Christians.

One Baptism—by which we get into Christ.

One Body—the Church.

One Spirit—testifying alike to all.

One Hope—the Anchor of the Soul.

I close with an earnest request, that errors be noticed, if any, in the series of articles now concluded. May we all be directed aright, and God's truth be vindicated.

Talks With the Sisters.

MY DEAR SISTERS:—As an appendix to my letter on the dress of christian women, I subjoin the following clipping, with a few more thoughts. It teaches a lesson, more pleasantly perhaps, if not more forcibly, than I have done. This may or may not be an imaginary case; however, it is a weakness of poor human nature to prefer to see a cap fitted on any one rather than one's self, though a character have to be manufactured for the purpose. This story simply verifies the old proverb that "Money is power," and shows what an influence the wealthy exert. It has been observed by some one, that if you would find elegance, refinement and intellect, never look for these graces in mansions; which is true to a certain extent, nowadays, when colossal fortunes are often made or secured in a day; suddenly lifting the poverty-stricken to the heights of opulence. But whether true or not, we all know that money covers a multitude of deficiencies, and that it is another weakness of human nature, and a despicable one, too, to look up to the rich as something superior. In regard to the matter of dress, therefore, those christian women who possess riches, should be so careful to array themselves so as to avoid causing their poorer sisters to stumble into the pit-falls of envy and discontent.

Knowing their power, they should be very careful to use it for good. When a christian clothes herself in gorgeous apparel, other than the spirit of Christ prompts it; it is prompted by pride and vainglory; or in other words, the spirit of the Evil one; since there are only two spirits that lead men, the one of Christ, the other of the devil. Costly adorning arouses a spirit of emulation, which is of the flesh. The rich vie with each other as to costly clothing, which emulation often, very often, leads to hatred and variance. Gal. 5: 20. As I said before, the humblest of us possess some influence; therefore, those who do not possess riches, yet lack for nothing, should be equally careful to set a christian example; because the poor, who cannot hope to vie with the rich, are apt to select some sister or sisters nearer their equals in worldly possessions, and set them up as a standard and strain every point to appear as well.

Hence, we often see those, whom we know to be almost destitute of the necessaries of life, decked out in silks and velvets, purchased perhaps, by money earned at the expense of physical strength; or worse still, by some charitable gift; or worse than all, because actually dishonest, by money borrowed on the plea of actual want, and then prostituted to this purpose. Now, dear sisters, all these evils, (and they are not imaginary) arise from a violation of scriptural instruction in regard to this matter. The Spirit made no exception in favor of the rich, nor any provision for them to dress according to their means; on the contrary it commands all to dress alike, that is soberly, modestly; leaving, therefore, no ground for the argument, that wealth is a comparative matter and what is considered costly to one person, is cheap to another; an argument often brought forward in defense of sinful dressing. If we would pause and consider the multitude of evil consequences that would be averted, by an observance of the Spirit's instructions, we would appreciate the great wisdom displayed in these instructions. The apostle Paul, after enumerating the works of the flesh. Gal. v, 19, 20, 21, says, "They which do such things, shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Now, stop right here, and read the verses indicated, let your mind dwell upon and take them in, and oh! what a solemn thought it is. And yet, each one of us is guilty of some of these evil works! Dear sisters, remember that, "He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption! Therefore, "Let us walk in the Spirit. Let us not be desirous of vainglory, provoking one another, envying one another." Gal 5: 25, 26. SARAI.

Mrs. Archer's Reform.

BY KATE SUMNER GATES.

Evidently something had occurred to trouble Mr. Archer. He made but a mere pretence of eating, though the roast was the very best cut and done to a turn.

"What is it, Robert?" asked Mrs. Archer, a trifle anxiously, as he toyed with his favorite dessert.

"I made a very unpleasant discovery this morning, and I cannot get over it," was the reply. "You know young Cleveland, head of the lace department. Well, I have discovered that he has taken $200 or over from us, in little sums, from time to time. I declare it cut me to the quick to accuse him, for I have always had a strong fancy for him."

"How did you happen to suspect him?"

"From his manner of living; I've wondered for some time how his wife could dress so well on his salary, and they've lived well, too; but I trusted him implicitly. Demond, the cashier, however, noticed it just as I did. He was suspicious, though; so he has been watchful for some time past. Yesterday he discovered him. Cleveland confessed all at once."

"What shall you do about it?" asked Mrs. Archer, as she rose from the table.

"That is just what troubles me," was her husband's reply as he followed her into the library.

"I do not know what to do. Somehow, Alice, I cannot help feeling that we are somewhat to blame, and if we are—"

"Robert," interrupted his wife, "of all your notions, this is certainly the wildest. What do you mean? How can we be connected in any way with Mr. Cleveland's sin? I am sure we have been very kind to them both. We invited them to our church and here to our home. What do you mean?"

"Simply this. When I asked Cleveland what could have tempted him to such an act, he said, living beyond his means."

"I could not bear," he said, "to have my wife feel ashamed of herself everywhere she went, church and all, and this is what it has come to. The bills came in faster than I could meet them, and I 'borrowed' money, intending to pay you back when my salary was raised."

"I have been wondering all this morning, Alice, if it was RIGHT for a follower of Christ to do anything, even to wear a dress that should tempt another to do wrong. I can afford, for instance, to dress you in velvet if you wish. Frank Cleveland ought not to afford his wife more than one silk dress a year, if he does that—"

"And because Mrs. Frank Cleveland, who ought to dress in cashmere, is tempted by my velvet, which, as you admit, I am abundantly able to afford, I must forsooth put on calico; is that your idea? Really, Robert, you are carrying it too far altogether. Mrs. Cleveland cannot be very strong minded, or she would not be tempted. She would know that no amount of dress makes a lady."

"Consequently, Alice, you would be just as much a lady in a black silk or even cashmere as in the velvet you are intending to get," said Mr. Archer with a smile.

"Doubtless I should," replied his wife, a trifle stiffly; "that is, providing I could only afford the silk. But I consider the velvet more suited to my station in life, and since I can afford it, I see no reason why I should give it up on account of Mrs. Cleveland or any one else. I am sure I do not know of any one who governs her dress on any such principles, and I do not believe you do."

"No," replied Mr. Archer, sadly, "I am afraid I do not, but I know of some one who would, if he were only living, and that is Paul, for you know he said that if meat made his brother to offend, he was willing to eat no more meat while the world should stand."

"Oh, Alice," said Mr. Archer, rising and coming over to her side, "it will make no material difference whether you wear the proper amount of silk and velvet prescribed for your station in life or not, but it will matter if you lead one of His little ones astray. Think it over earnestly and prayerfully, Alice, and let us remember that even Christ pleased not himself. Is it necessary we should always?"

Mrs. Archer sat for a long time after her husband left her, buried in deep thought. She was by nature and cultivation elegant; she was never showy in her dress, but rich and elegant. She called to mind the costume she had just planned, wondering as she did so how she would feel if she was Mrs. Frank Cleveland in her best of cashmere coming out of church beside Mrs. Robert Archer in this costume of velvet and lace.

"I shall endeavor to forget Paul entirely if I get that," was her mental decision. "Why not go without it?" whispered the still, small voice.

But Mrs. Archer was by no means willing to assent to that proposal, and then she was dismayed to find how averse she was to it. She had prided herself on not caring for dress, because when once her dresses were planned, she spent no more thought on the subject, except to be satisfied in a well bred sort of way: She had been quite Pharisical about it, had been devoutly thankful she was not as some women. After all, was she entirely exempt from the condemnation she had so unhesitatingly passed upon other's? It was a long, hard-fought battle.

If she could only have made herself believe that it was a matter of vital importance that she dressed elegantly, as heretofore; but do her best, her "station" in life and what befitted it seemed small affairs just now. What would it all profit if a human soul were lost thereby?

And there was that word of Paul's inquiry in her ears—should she be less willing? Had she given herself body and soul, all that she was and had to Christ, to let herself be used in any way on the other side?

Mr. Archer received the following note late that afternoon:

"DEAR ROBERT: I have found out a great deal about myself that I never knew or mistrusted before. I thought I was not as 'other men,' but I find I am, if anything, more so.

"I have taken a great deal of pains to dress as I thought befitted my station in life, but I have failed, because I forgot that that station was on CHRIST'S side, where I was to be a 'bright and shining light.' Cannot we help Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland?

ALICE.

The First Church experienced a sensation the next Sunday. It flashed from pew to pew quietly, but every one was reached by it, at least amongst the sisters. Mrs. Robert Archer, who was wont to be the most richly and elegantly attired lady in church, came quietly to her accustomed seat in the broad aisle, in a simple, neatly made suit of black cashmere.

It was the very finest and softest of cashmere, the lace at her throat and sleeves was real, but the dress was simply made.

"What do you think of it?" she said to her husband, as he wrapped her fur-lined circular about her before they started.

"I think," was the reply, as he bent to kiss her lips, "that I was never so proud of you in my life."

Mrs. George Benton, whose husband had only $800 per annum, had been wondering all the week if they could not leave the First Church and go to some other.

"I know it is wrong, George, but the elegant dresses tempt me, and make me feel so uncomfortable in my alpaca that the sermon does not do me half the good it ought."

"Well, Lucy," said Mr. Benton, as they walked home from church that noon "how was it to day?"

"Oh, George! I think Mrs. Archer was beautiful, but wouldn't she be surprised to know how she helped and encouraged me just by her dress? It must be so nice to have the power she has to help others."

"I am not sure, my dear, that she has, any more than you have."

"ME! Why, George, what do you mean?"

"Why, that there are people who look up to us as we do to Mr. and Mrs. Archer, and if we are extravagant on a small scale I suppose we fill their hearts with envy just as surely as ours ache because we can not compare with those above us."

"George!" said Mrs. Benton, almost stopping in her excitement, "there isn't any one who lives to himself, is there, not even the humblest?"

"No; it is freely ye have received, freely give, the world over, I guess."

DALLAS, TEXAS.

BRO. MCGARY:—I respond most heartily to Sister Sarai's letter to the sisters in the church of the living God, on dress, which I have read in the "Firm Foundation." Oh, that every God-fearing sister would read that letter over and over again, and determine in their own minds, to set the example that Paul said in Rom., 12:2. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind or spirit."

I have been living in a large city for a few months, and have been attending church right regularly, and oh, my heart has been made sad at the vain dressing of the sisters of the so-called Church of Christ; the silks, satins, and the great humps on the backs, the frizzes, the bangs, and almost every deformity. It is mortifying to any plain sister or brother!

There has been a splendid meeting going on here, and would have (it seemed to me) been complete, could such worldly dressing have been left out, especially jewelry, and plenty of it, which ought not to have any place in the house of God. Such dressing is keeping the poor out of the house of God! I ask, is it right? Well, who will or can remedy the trouble? Our teachers, our elders, our preachers and our sisters!

But will they do it? If they were as God-fearing as they ought to be, they would. I, for one, will take a stand among the first that will set a determined example to dress only plainly and neatly, so that the poorest sister or brother can go, and worship God aright. Oh, for such a place to worship our God in spirit and in truth! Dear brethren and sisters, can't we have a congregation that will worship God without trying to carry the world and fashion in one hand and God in the other? I repeat, can we not? It is a serious matter! The foolish fashions of this wicked world are taking the so-called christians to destruction! Let some teaching brother put this test to the brethren and sisters of the church, and see how many will serve God as He has directed. I will rejoice to-see the time come when one congregation of disciples, at least, will follow the meek and lowly Jesus and "keep themselves unspotted from the world;" so that when we go into the house of God, we can know who God's people are, can tell them on sight. God loves his children; but who are his children? Not those who are "conforming to this world," no, but those who walk according to his commandments, and "they are not grievous."

It is time our teachers and preachers were awake to their duty! We poor, weak sisters cannot do much toward reforming or checking those richly-dressed sisters and brethren; no, we can only help after they have started the work. There are a great many of us who will put in our mite. Oh, let us all be up and doing while it is called to-day. Now, Bro. McGary, I will add no more, as I only wanted to express my approbation of Sister Sarai's letter. Wishing you success with your paper, I subscribe myself your sister in Christ.

M. A. BURNARD.

Doubtless many more sisters feel as this one does, about the rebellious and blasting influence that dame fashion is exerting within the sacred precincts of the church of the living God. But it takes fortitude of a high order (just such though as Christian women should possess), to brave the jeers and insolent indignities, that the votaries of fashion—the children of the world—fling at those who through the guidance of that Spirit from above, desire to tread the paths of "lowliness and meekness" as He who was poorer than the "foxes and birds of the air" hath shown them. It is only through unfeigned faith that this high order of "virtue" is reached. Not dead faith, but true, living, moving faith—faith that halts not at the watery tomb of the "old man," but that rises to walk in "newness of life—adding to itself, virtue (fortitude), knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness and love." That faith that halts short of these graces, dies! and far better would it have been for its possessor, had he or she never been born, than after "having once known the way of truth, to have turned from the holy commandment delivered unto them—turned back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world." Peter compares such a course, to a "dog turning to his own vomit again, or a washed sow to her wallowing in the mire,"—oh how "filthy!" Will not other sisters respond in cheering words and godly resolutions to this sister from Dallas, so that those sisters all over the land, who desire to live "Godly and righteously" may mutually strengthen each other in breaking away from the "filthiness and superfluity of this worlds naughtiness?" Why not sisters? As you value your souls, and the souls of those you are capable of leading from the "broad way" of impending woe, you should act, and that quickly! Sisters, while it is true that the brothers, who are by nature better adapted to lead in reform, you have it in your power, NOW to rescue the church of God from the fearful maelstrom of darkness and destruction in which it is already whirling, if you will but clothe yourselves in a meek and quiet spirit, and walk as becometh the daughters of God. What a grand work and glorious reward lies before you! Will you do it and save yourselves and others a home in that "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens?" We know a few sisters even in this center of sin—Austin—who truly love God and who would gladly consecrate their lives to His service if they only had that support that an humble band of disciples could give. But here, the so-called church, instead of imparting true spirituality, exerts a freezing influence all around. We trust that the time is drawing nigh, when those who yet have Christ enthroned in their hearts, will "withdraw from every one that walketh disorderly," and let Him rule over them. Their hearts will then become knit together in love. "If any one is in Christ, he (or she) is a new creature—remember the IF brethren. Old things must pass away; behold all things are to become new. But this can only come through subjecting all things to Christ, and doing the work of the Lord—remaining patient in well doing. The very FIRST thing a Christian must add to faith, is fortitude ("virtue") He, or she, must contend earnestly for the faith, and it requires fortitude to do it. Yes, we are commanded to withdraw from all who walk disorderly. If one hundred are together and ninety-nine are disorderly, that one must withdraw or become a partaker of their evils and rebellion. For example, the Austin church has refused to let Christ, the rightful Head, rule over them. They have prostituted His authority to the wishes of their rebellious hearts—having defeated Him by a majority vote, electing men to rule over them, whom He has positively forbidden to be His elders. Thus a King, exercising the prerogative of earth and heaven has been subjected to the test of an election and voted out! Hence the church at Austin, as well as every other church that has acted like it, has become a disorderly body and the only way for true disciples to act is to withdraw themselves from such. It requires fortitude to do so and bear their opposition and patiently struggle on for Christ, under the many difficulties that this disorderly, rebellious, but popular body interposes.

To walk disorderly, is to walk (live-contrary to the teachings of God's word—in violation of the holy commandments delivered unto us, to be conformed to the world. We hope other sisters will respond to the sentiments of these sisters, and that, now, the initial steps of a mighty revolution may begin, that will purge the churches, throughout the land, of that fashionable, riotous element, that has well-nigh sapped them of all true righteousness. Brethren and sisters, let us work while it is day, for "the night cometh when no man can work." Yes, the night is rapidly approaching upon us all. We appeal to both brothers and sisters, to aid us in getting subscribers for this pamphlet. We admit we make mistakes, brethren; but we love the cause of God's Son, which is so full of inestimable promises to those who will humble themselves and live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world; and we try to keep His holy banner above all worldly impulses. Help the "Firm Foundation" to "contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints;" urging that to live godly, is to do the things enjoined by God's word; beginning at baptism and scrupulously shape our Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, as well as Sundays, by that word. A. MCG.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.—I want a copy of Bro. D. Lipscomb's reply to the Grub-Ax; also, a copy of the Hydraulic Pump, by Mr. Nichol. If you can send me a copy of each, please do so, and I will send pay by return mail. If you can't get them conveniently, please give address of publishers through the columns of "The Firm Foundation and oblige your Brother in "one faith." JAS. R. GRAHAM, Field Creek, Texas.

P. S.—I like the "Firm Foundation" as it now is, but would be pleased with the change to a weekly. Just read the Grub-Ax—Satan transformed.

J. R. G.

Bro. Lipscomb's reply to the "Grub-Ax" has never been put in pamphlet form; so you could only get it by getting the issues of the "Gospel Advocate" containing it, which you could hardly do. You mean by the "Hydraulic Pump," Mr. Nichols' "Ecclesiastical Pump." I called it, in my reference to it, the "Theological Pump." I had never seen it, but called it as it had been called to me. If you want to see it, you can do so by addressing its author, "Rev." J. H. Nichol's, and enclosing ten cents. I do not know his address, but suppose you can reach him through the "Southern Methodist Publishing House," at Nashville, Tenn. We have been requested to review this "Pump" through our monthly; but we can see no good to grow out of it in such a review. The only way we would be willing to review, after having examined it, would be to leave out what Mr. Nichols has made his man Friday, "Campbellite" say, and supply such answers, in place, as truth demands. This plan would leave it in a condition for distribution among the sects, where it might accomplish good. It could be gotten up, in this shape for about ten cents per copy. If our brethren still desire us to review it, and will send us the money to pay for it, or agree to, we will do the work, cheerfully. The friends of the "Pump," who alone attach value to it, could not fail to give it a fair reading, as Mr. Nichols has cautiously expressed himself in his own way.

Church Bazaar and Festivals.

Gambling at church bazaars and festivals is almost universally practiced. If you want to be robbed right and left, go to one of them. It has become such an evil, that the United Presbyterian Presbytery, of Aberdeen, Scotland, has declared in unmeasured terms against the "gambling" and "lotteries" of such occasions.—Statesman.

It is rare that we find anything so good as the above in the Statesman and we heartily endorse it. We especially commend it to the consideration of those church members, who so bitterly denounced the writer of a few items, on this subject in our local columns on the 10th instant. Do not their bazaars and festivals indeed convert the church of God into just such a den, as the venders of doves for the sacrifice, made of the holy temple in the days of Christ? Many church members are very anxious to have gambling made a felony, and profess to look with holy horror on gamblers and gambling saloons. Yet we know that at some of these church bazaars and festivals the very worst species of gambling has been carried on, and men have been worse fleeced than in any gambling saloon. We have seen men, induced by the smiles and pleadings of pretty ladies' pay two and three prices for articles they really could not afford to purchase at a fair price. We really think that our church people should reform themselves in this matter before making so much noise about reforming others. We hope the day is not distant when the houses of God will cease to be defiled in this way.—Dispatch.

The above we clipped from the Austin Dispatch. Our remarks, in our March issue, under "Fun and Frolic" wrought a certain element of this frolic society, called the Austin church, up to a state of high dudgeon. One of the proprietors of this apostate band, who is falsely called an elder, and while wrought up to white-heat of anger, took us severely to task for noising abroad their apostasy. What will they do about these remarks of the secular press of the city? See what reproach they are bringing upon the true cause of Christ! How much longer will true lovers of God, bid these degenerate sons and daughters, God speed in their rebellious and apostate course?—for it is bidding them Godspeed, to continue to affiliate with them instead of withdrawing from them as we are commanded to do. Some brethren, seem to think that one can't withdraw from one hundred; but that the command to "withdraw ourselves from every one that walketh disorderly," can only be complied with by the majority, against one, or a minority! With our present convictions, we had as soon affiliate with the Roman church of this city, as with the so-called "Christian church of Austin." As bodies, they are both "harlots." The so-called "Christian church" has long since dethroned the rightful Head, by heaping to themselves teachers. By a majority vote, they have overridden the Kings authority and voted to the rulership, men who are expressly forbidden by Him to be elders! We know it is unpopular to give expression to these ideas, but what is to become of the dearest cause on earth to perishing man, when those who ought to "contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints,"—those who are charged before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, to reprove, rebuke and exhort with long suffering and doctrine," are deterred, through the fear of unpopularity, to do so? Let the Demas' pursue the course that the God of this world bids them; but we intend to look to the true and living God, the God of heaven, for instructions; and though often stumbling, through weaknesses of the flesh, we intend to contribute our mite in defense of the faith, even if it must be done to the wounding of the brotherhood from one end to the other of the land. Brethren, just think of the Austin Statesman, a secular paper, and edited by men who are considered infidels, finding these JUST grounds of reproving those who claim to compose the church of Christ—rather "the Christian church." Is it not time to call a halt? Is it not time to use plain language? A. McG.

Evasion.

Some brother, of McMinnville, Tenn., asked Bro. Lipscomb, "why the people do not understand that baptism is for the remission of sins?" Bro. Lipscomb, in response, treated his readers to two columns of ingenious evasion. We have been requested to review his very lame effort to hide truth; but for the present, we have but to refer all "Advocate" readers, to "Difficulties In Religion Considered," as a most puisant refutation by D. L. of D. L!

It would have taken Bro. Lipscomb but a few words to have answered this query correctly; but it took a long article on his part, to deny the faith once delivered to the Saints, without openly expressing his preference for "Our plea," over God's plea.

However fleshy minded Bro. L. may have become, in reference to this question, he yet knows, very well, that the reason that the people do not understand that baptism is for the remission of sins, is because human creeds instead of God's word, are preached. And these creeds flatly deny that baptism is for the remission of sins, and the people believe the CREEDS. This is the VERY reason, and NO man knows it better than Bro. L. Why then did he not say so? Will he tell his readers?—for it was old "Advocate" readers who asked us to notice it.

In our next issue, we may give this matter further notice. A. McG.

Has Not Come to Time.

Bro. Gibson has not come to time upon his promised affirmative agreement on sect baptism. He notified us, in person, that he would be on the ground on time, panoplied in the best coat of mail that could be gotten up by his side of that question. We had reasons for suspecting that we would not only have to meet Bro. G., in this discussion, but the joint strength of himself and an able second. Yet, we felt the strength of our position, and were ANXIOUS for the issue, even against all odds!

We take Bro. Gibson to be a conscientious Christian, and hence we conclude that when he set about for real authority to sustain such an argument, that he found, IT WAS NOT THERE. We would have proceeded, in this issue, on the "one baptism," but while we were waiting and hoping for Bro. Gibson's matter, Bro. Durst's article came to hand, which far more than covers what we could have said.

We commend it to our readers, believing it to be unanswerable. Will some brother, of opposite views, on this question, avail himself of the use of our columns to join issue with Bro. D.? We here, in earnest desire for the prevalence of truth, tender them.

A. McG.

We hear of a certain would-be "pastor" who lives a few railroad stations south of Austin, spitting out his bile and venom very profusely against us and our work. We know that we often fall far short of what is exactly right, and are truly sorry for our weaknesses and short comings. But we neither expect nor wish to pursue such a course as would win the approbation of said supernumerary "pastor." When a man uses the ministry, as a trade, as he would carpentering, restaurant keeping and postoffice keeping, just for the money he can make out of it, we do not expect him to be a very warm friend of the "Firm Foundation." The men who set a price on their preaching, saying: "If you brethren will pay me ten dollars, I will come down and preach for you Saturday night and Sunday," are not the class of men who are giving support to our paper. Such parties may be able to say harder things of us and our work, than we can of them and their work—for filthy lucre—but we assure them that their estimate of us and our work, cannot run much below our estimate of their mammon service. A. McG.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:—I take pleasure in asking you to send a copy of the March number of the "Firm Foundation," to ———— Louisville, Lincoln county, Missouri; enclosed find ten cents to pay for it. I have just written to the above named party, asking him to get you up a club of subscribers, and I think he will do so. On the baptismal question, I have discoursed to him as follows: "To my mind, the baptisms in vogue with the denominations are not Scriptural. There are none of our brethren who will take the position that one can be Scripturally immersed before believing the gospel. Then, if it can be shown that the preaching of remission of sins, through baptism, constitutes part of the gospel, it must be admitted that no one can be Scripturally immersed until they believe that the ordinance of baptism is for the remission of sins. Well, now, from Acts 15: 7, we learn, that when the Apostles came together at Jerusalem, to consider the question of circumcision of the Gentiles, and when Peter spoke, he said: "Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe." There can be no doubt, that Peter referred to the conversion of Cornelius and his house; because we find that God did make choice of Peter to preach to Cornelius and his friends (who were the first Gentiles converted to Christ), and that the choice was made at the very time that Peter refers to. And now, by going back to the account of the preaching to Cornelius, to the time when, according to Peter's statement made afterwards, he preached the word of the gospel; we find from Acts 10: 43, that a part of this word of the gospel was. "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Then this is a part of the word of the gospel; and if it can be shown from this that Peter intended to convey the idea that remission of sins is to be obtained at baptism, it will be seen, that before anyone can be scripturally baptized, they must believe that remission of sins is to be obtained at baptism. We find that the preposition, through, as used in Peter's language means, "by means of." Then, substituting the meaning in the place of the word through, we have it; "To him give all the Prophets witness that BY MEANS of his Name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins." And as proof of the fact, that this change of words does not alter the meaning, we have the words of the Apostle John, in the 12th verse, and 2d chap. of his first Epistle; he says: "These things write I unto you little ones because your sins are forgiven for his Name's sake." Then Cornelius was to receive remission, for Christs' Names sake, or, Peter meant that Cornelius was to receive remission of sins, by means of the Name of Jesus. And we find that Peter said, "To him give all the Prophets witness, etc," and by going back to Joel, one of the prophets referred to, we find that he said, "It shall come to pass in the last days that whosoever shall call on the Name of the Lord shall be saved." Then Cornelius and house were to receive remission of sins, by means of the Name of the Lord, or they were to call on the Name of the Lord. And the question that now comes up, is, at what what point of obedience did Peter intend, Cornelius should call on the Name of the Lord? There can be no doubt, that Peter meant to have Cornelius call on the Name of the Lord at the same step of obedience. at which other converts of that day and time, called on the Name, and this, we find from Saul's conversion, was at baptism. Hence, from all this, we infer that when Peter preached, "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his Name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins;" his meaning was, "The Prophets give witness to the fact, that whoever believes in him, shall receive remission of sins at baptism when calling on the Name of the Lord." Then, if this is what Peter meant, this is what he preached, because Peter preached meaning, and not words. And if what Peter preached in that language, is a part of the Word of Gospel, the preaching of remission of sins through baptism, is a part of the Word of the Gospel. And if the Gospel must be believed before baptism, remission of sins through baptism must be preached and must be believed before baptism, and hence, the baptisms in vogue with the denominations are "null and void."

MECHANICAL RELIGION.

"If brother Livesy could prove that it is necessary that we should understand all that clusters 'round about and connects itself with baptism, (italics mine) before we can be baptized, then his points are well taken, and then he will find that not only should Baptists be rebaptized, but a large percentage of those who have been baptized directly into the church of Christ. I apprehend that not half who are baptized by our own brethren do so with the express understanding that it is for the remission of sins. They are baptized to obey God. They learn the terms of pardon as given in the great commission, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." They understand that God requires this, and they do it in humble obedience to His command. Let us cite a case by way of illustration: A or B believes on Christ, desires to give himself to the service of God; he looks about to see what he must do. The command stares him in the face, "Repent and be baptized." He is already repenting, he needs only baptism; he applies to the Baptists—knows no other doctrine, is made to relate an experience, not because he wishes to, or really because it is so, but by a series of adroit questions he is made to say many things he had rather not say, and some really not true, perhaps. But he does it all mechanically (italics mine) because there is no way to reach obedience to the command "be baptized," but by travelling this road. If he falters, and refuses to give satisfactory answers to the queries he is cut off from obedience, and hence he goes on; he is taught that this is right; his purpose is to be baptized, and he can only obtain it thus. He is finally baptized in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. He has honestly and faithfully done his part in the best way he could. He believes on Christ, he repented of sin, and has been immersed, and Jesus said, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," pardoned. But you say he was not baptized for the remission of sins, but to make him a "Baptist." So we might retort that many who join us directly are not baptized for remission of sins, but to make them Campbellites. We believe that everyone immersed into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, believing on Christ and repenting of sin, are pardoned whether they understand all about baptism or not—no matter by whom baptized."

reasons; one is that the readers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION may have a specimen of that logic which builds "wood, hay and stubble" upon the one foundation, and the other is, that I may examine into this mechanical way of "getting religion," and expose its weakness. Bro. Poe, is a silversmith, and understands the mechanism of a watch, and will tell us that all the parts of this mechanism must not only be perfect in themselves, but set in perfect order, in order to constitute a perfect watch and keep good time. If the balance wheel is lacking, or the mainspring, or one of the wheels, it disarranges the whole thing, and the end, good time, is not obtained. Now, christianity is a system, a plan, a mechanism, which works for the salvation of man. All of its parts must not only be perfect, but must work in that harmonious order constituted by its divine founder. I say ALL of its parts; it has no superfluities; it needs none; but, to accomplish the purpose for which given or made, it must have ALL the parts. Neither must any addition be made to it, for unskilled workmen often ruin good watches in this way. Brother Poe will certainly acknowledge that christianity has suffered much by additions at the hands of unskilled workmen. I do not refer to members added, but to human doctrines. Brother Poe will admit, doubtless, that the following parts enter into this mechanism, and in the order here stated:

1. Believing with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God. • Jo. XX, 21.

2. Repentance "in His name." Luke XXIX, 47.

3. Confession of Jesus the Christ. Rom. x, 9, 10; Phil. II, 10, 11.

4. Baptism for the remission of sins. Act II, 38, et al.

Can we omit one or more of these parts and still have enough left to obtain the desired end, remission of sins? Baptists omit two of them; confession and baptism, and claim the end without them. In addition to this, they substitute some human machinery in their places, viz: experience, in place of confession, and baptism as a door to church privileges. This "experience" is ingeniously extorted from the candidate; he tells in this experience some things that are not true, but he does it because he has been taught that it is right, he does it mechanically—nevertheless he obeys God—mechanically, too, I suppose—and of course he is pardoned—mechanically. Well, my brother, if a mechanical untruth is necessary in order to obey God, and you say that this was the only way he could reach obedience, why not do evil that good may come? Ro. III, 8, also 7. "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory why yet am I also judged as a sinner." Will the end justify the means? Remember Nadab and Abihu.

But A or B, you say "honestly and faithfully did his part." How a man can honestly and faithfully tell a mechanical untruth, and by so doing obtain a spiritual blessing, is a mystery, seen into perhaps by the orthodox, and may be good baptist theology, but certain it is that Jesus the Son of God said "ye shall know the truth, (not a mechanical untruth) and the truth shall make you free." Jo. VIII, 32.

Bro. Poe, wants some one to prove that we must understand "ALL that clusters 'round about and connects itself with baptism." That is not the issue; no one has ever claimed that we must understand ALL the blessings clustering around baptism in order to its validity. We do say that a man must understand those things immediately connected with baptism, whether antecedent or consequent, which enter into it as constituent parts or elements. Remission of sins is the design of baptism; is connected with it by divine command, and the hope of the trembling sinner, whose faith is in Christ and His promises, looks for salvation through obedience to the institution commanded for that purpose. Sectarians deny connection between baptism and remission. You say they are honest in this denial; they do as they are taught. So was Eve honest in eating the forbidden fruit. She was deceived and honestly believed a false interpretation of God's command, acted upon her honest belief and was punished; according to modern logic she should have been blessed. Paul was honest and conscientious in his persecution of christians, but not right. If men will honestly, faithfully, and diligently follow a system that substitutes tradition for the word of God, and denies not only the power of His word, but of His ordinances, they are deceived, mistaken, and are not in the kingdom of God. But Baptists submit to baptism "to obey God." Are you sure of this? Obedience to God is to submit to or obey a command coming from Him. Our obedience must be of faith, else it is not perfect.

Faith embraces not only the fact of God's existence and of His authority, but also embraces the promises, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi, 6. Baptist baptism has no promise of God connected with it; they say it is for church privileges. He says it is for the remission of sins; they say it is the door into the church; Jesus says "I am the door;" they say it declares something done for man already obtained and past; God says it is something

This article however is growing too lengthy, and I close, hoping that Bro. Poe will study this question more, and bring out more clearly all the divine parts or elements of christianity. Pilate asked 1800 years ago, "What is truth?" Jesus tells us "I am the way, the truth, the life." "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "The word is the truth." The diamond embowelled in the earth gives no light; brought forth and relieved of its rubbish it gives forth brilliant rays; so, truth, enveloped and obscured by traditions and commandments of men—human wisdom—gives no light; tear away this human rubbish and the light of knowledge of the glory of God, the truth as it is in Jesus shines into our hearts and its benign rays falling upon fruitful soil produces in us a rich harvest of the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

We must not give heed to Jewish (or Gentile) fables and commandments of men that turn from the truth." Titus 1, 14. As preachers our work is "to renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." 2 Cor. 4, 2. How then can we approve a system that handles God's word deceitfully; that denies its power, and that evil teach things that turn from the truth and extort from poor trembling sinners anxious to be saved, two or three mechanical untruths in order to serve God?

Is God's word true, or is it not? If it is truth, and we obey it, there is no doubt, no uncertainty. He will accept us. There are grave doubts as to the validity of baptism as taught and pracfled by the sects. Earthly wisdom even teaches to take the certain instead of the doubtful, and heavenly wisdom has given the certain in order that in full assurance of faith we may draw near to God, and have strong consolation in the joyous hope of an eternal Home beyond the shores of time.

OBEDIENCE.

"And Nahab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which He commanded them not. And there went out fire from the Lord and devoured them, and they died before the Lord." Lev. x, 1, 2.

The altar of incense stood in the Holy place before the vail, and upon it the priests were to burn sweet incense morning and night. Ex. xxx, 7, 8.

Special directions had been given as to the form and material of this altar, and where it should be placed; Ex. xxx, 1, 6; also as to the composition of the incense; Ex. xxx, 34. A command was given to offer no strange incense, nor any offering upon this altar than that commanded. Ex. xxx, 9.

God in His wisdom had prescribed the worship by which they were to serve Him. Nothing on His part was left undone in order to obedience on man's part. That is, God's word plainly taught who should make the offering; when and where it should be made, and what they should offer, and how it should be done. Every thing connected with the service should be holy, that which was sanctified to God's service. The Alter, the incense, the fire, were all divine appointments. For the "fire upon the altar must be kept continually burning." Lev. vi, 9, 12. God having so plainly commanded this service, shows us, in the above case, that He will expect a literal compliance with His commands, and that He will not permit the introduction of a foreign element into His worship.

Positive commands enjoining certain duties, not only require exact obedience, but necessarily forbid or prohibit the addition or substitution of a foreign element. Every command of God is positive, and points out clearly certain acts to be performed by man. To do these "acts," as commanded, is obedience; to add to them something of human origin, or to substitute some strange human element in lieu of the divine, is presumption.

God has in these last days spoken to us by His son. He says "Hear ye Him." If the word or law spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression was promptly punished, how shall we escape if we refuse to hear Him who speaks to us from heaven of a great salvation? Is not God's word plain and clear, the duties enjoined easy to be complied with? All men are invited to come to Jesus. "Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden." They must come to the King of Heaven, however, in the manner prescribed. Believing with all their heart, they must repent of their sins, confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and be baptized for the remission of sins. No one, (who believes in God's word) can deny that these four things are required of man; no one can doubt that when, in strict compliance with the word, man has obeyed them, he will enjoy the favor of God. Then, why cling to the doubtful theories preached and practiced by the denominations generally? Do they not substitute strange elements into the service of God when they plead for the abstract operation of the Holy Spirit; use the anxious-seat, pouring, sprinkling, etc? Nadab and Abihu used fire; this was a necessary element to consume the incense, and they might have argued that there is no harm in it; it produces the desired effect, and God has not forbidden it. Just so with modern innovations; church fairs, missionary societies, organs, pastors, etc., are all supported by just such pleas. There is no harm in them; they are not forbidden, the effect is good, and we have been called to liberty. True liberty is that which is secured by good and wholesome laws. The absence of law is license, leading to anarchy and confusion. The divine government, of which Jesus is Head, guarantees liberty, the liberty of the sons of God to all obedient subjects. If our time is occupied in doing the things commanded, we will have no need to plead for liberty in things not forbidden.

The lesson of Nadab and Abihu teaches us that the introduction into the service of God of a strange element, though not forbidden, is presumption. The addition of a human element to a divine ordinance is an insult offered to God, and the action thus performed is not "obedience." One thing was lacking in the offering these priests made, viz: holy fire, and the lack of this element vitiated the offering. Now, I ask of our Methodist friends, if this principle is not applicable to them, inasmuch as they substitute sprinkling, an ordinance of human origin, in the place of immersion, a divine ordinance?

Further than this, they mingle "strange fire" with numerous other commands, thus polluting God's ordinances. Our Baptist neighbors, it seems to me, are in the same condition.

While they contend earnestly for the form of baptism, they deny its power, and attach to it "strange" designs, of which God has not spoken, nor did it even enter into His mind. See Jer. vii. 21. Godliness is to do the things required of us by God; anciently there were some who had "the form of godliness, while they denied the power thereof." How is it then with those who submit to the form of baptism, while they deny its power? Is it obedience? Is such an act acceptable to God? But I close with an extract from Caskey's book page 45, relative to all such acts.

"It is my unprejudiced judgment, after a large acquaintance with heathen ceremonies, and with the initiatory rites of human invention, that in neither, nor in all of them together, is there so poor, unmeaning, worthless or pitiful a ceremony as baptism, as now taught and practiced by the sectarian schools, or one that promises so little to the initiated. It does not rise to the dignity of a poor burlesque, a miserable farce, badly gotten up, and worse played. After all the mock solemnity attending its administration, even among the Baptists, who immerse into the awful name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, the baptized person is no wiser, no better, no happier, and has attained to nothing but to be denominated a Baptist. If this is all our Lord intended by this institution, a more signal failure never distinguished any system. Baptists ought to change their teachings on the design of baptism, or ought to quit baptizing, utterly ashamed of their folly. To make the manner essential, while the act itself is non-essential, is too bad."

J. W. J.

Yes, and Bro. Caskey is one of the most ardent advocates for accepting those who have been carried through these farcical processes, without demanding that the law of the Lord be complied with. He is, however, no more inconsistent than others who hold as he does, on this question, only that he has "written a book." Oh! "that our adversaries would all write a book." They can't faithfully and freely present the gospel of God's son and expose false systems of religion, without virtually condemning "our plea" at this point. Which point will Bro. Caskey yield? for they must ever remain glaringly irreconcilable, after he has expended his whole magazine of logic at them. Oh, consistency!

BEING LED BY THE SPIRIT.

We showed, by the infallible teaching of the scriptures in our second article, on being led by the spirit, some of the places where the spirit does and does not lead christians, or the children of God, and in this article we want to take the sinners case under consideration, and show from the same source where the spirit does and does not lead him; but does the spirit lead the sinner? Yes.

How? In the same way he leads the christian, by his instruction; and brethren I feel confident that most of you will agree with me in the positions taken in this article, and I don't expect to stick any closer to the book in this article than I did in the second; that being so, why are we not equally agreed in both? I leave that question to be answered by those who practice those things that the spirit has not left any instruction about.

And now we want to notice first, some of the many places that the spirit never leads a sinner to. The spirit never leads a sinner to a catholic priest to confess to him his sins, and pay him (sometimes) his last hard earned dime to forgive them; now, does it brethren?

But, suppose the scriptures told sinners to go to the priest and confess their sins to him, and pay him their money to forgive them, and they were to go as the scriptures directed, could we not truthfully say that they were led by the spirit? why, yes; but because there are no such instructions on record we therefore conclude that they are not led by the spirit.

We will now come a little nearer home, to a little closer quarters. The spirit never leads sinners to a mourners bench, or flag seat, to pray and be prayed for, in order to the forgiveness of their sins, though it seems that some of our progressives are about ready to adopt Major Penn's flag seat arrangements. We find, however, that sinners go to these places. Now, what leads them there? why, it is the spirit of their false teachers, put forth through their words into the ears of those that are led, and through their ears into their hearts or understandings, and having confidence in their teachers, they are deluded, misled.

It is the same thing that some of our wise scribes and teachers (wise above what is written) call "Sanctified common sense," which sanctified common sense leads them into things no more sanctioned by the Holy Spirit than the confessional, or mourners bench, some of which I mentioned in my last piece.

Oh, brethren, let us turn away from those things unauthorized by the word of the Lord, and be led by the spirit (not a spirit.)

We will now notice briefly where the spirit does lead the sinner, and bring our talk to a close on this subject, hoping that we may have aroused a spirit of investigation on the subject that will prove beneficial to some, at least; and, first that the spirit of God leads sinners to examine the evidence or testimony that our heavenly Father has given in reference to his son, Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, which evidence is found in the first four books of the New Testament, Mathew, Mark, Luke and John, and in the Acts of the Apostles, which is mostly the spirits testimony after the Savior ascended to heaven, and was crowned King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, a fair, impartial and earnest investigation of which will produce or beget faith in their hearts or minds.

Proof: "Ye men of Israel, hear these words." Acts II, 22. So, then, "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. x, 17. And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written (what for, John?) that you might believe (believe what? Not Catholicism, nor Calvinism, nor Mormonism, nor Campbellism, nor any other isms) that Jesus is the Christ, the son of God, and that believing you might have life through his name." John XX, 30.

The sinner being thus brought to believe in Christ with all his heart (that is, without a doubt) is pricked in his heart by godly sorrow, because it is produced by godly or divine faith, and the faith is godly or divine because the testimony is divine; he is then prepared to repent.

Proof: Now, when they heard this they were pricked in their hearts and said unto Peter and the rest of the Apostles, men and brethren, what shall we do?" Acts II, 37. "For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death. 2nd Cor. VII, 10.

Thus the spirit leads sinners to repent, to make up their minds to cease to do evil and learn to do well, to quit serving satan and serve the Lord, who loved them and died for them, was buried and rose again, ascended to heaven, and is at the right hand of his Father, having all authority in heaven and earth, is King of Kings and Lord of Lords; and he shed forth the Holy Spirit which the Pentecostians saw and heard Acts II, 33; and which we ought to hear now, and being thus brought to repentance by the testimony of the spirit which begets faith, and the faith the godly sorrow, the sinner is then prepared to take the next step, which is to confess with his mouth what he believes in his heart, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Acts VIII, 37; Matt. XVI, 16; Rom. X, 10; and now he is prepared to take the last step to be baptized, which brings him into Christ, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. Gal. III, 27. He is baptized by the one spirit into the one church or body of Christ; 1 Cor. XII, 13; evidently by the instruction of the spirit, just as Paul and Barnabas were sent forth by the spirit. See Acts XIII, 1, 4, and the three-thousand on the day of Pentecost were baptized by the instruction of the Holy Spirit, for it was the Holy Spirit they heard, and they were told to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins; they complied, and the same day were added to the church.

Now, as on the day of Pentecost, when sinners believe with all their hearts in Christ as the son of God, and their Savior, are sorry enough for their sins to make up their minds so turn away from them and serve the Lord, confess him before men, and are baptized for the remission of sins, they are inducted into the Kingdom of Christ, are born of water and the spirit, and are by virtue thereof children of God, are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ and they have complied with the conditions of the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which Paul says made him free from the law of sin, and if it made Paul free, it has made all others free, since the law was given on Pentecost, that have been freed, for the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law; Heb. vii, 12; and God is no respecter of persons. Acts x, 34; and they then have the spirit, bearing witness with (not to) their spirit, that they are children of God, and they are then led by the spirit of God into the kingdom of Christ, and if they continue faithful, continue to be led by it, adding to their faith virtue, (or courage) knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, (or love for all) they will have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Now, brethren, let us examine ourselves and see whether or not we have been led into the kingdom, or church of Christ by the spirit, and whether or not we are walking in the spirit, or within the limits prescribed by the spirit, for Paul says "Walk in the spirit and you shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." Gal. v, 16.

LIBERTY HILL, TEXAS.

LETTER TO BRO. M'GARVEY.

DEAR BRO. M'GARVEY:

I received your letter dated March 21, 1885, a few days since, in reply to mine requesting you to point out any wrong position that I might have taken in an article that I wrote in the January number of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, on "What is the Gospel of Christ?" and one in the February number, on "Being Led by the Spirit."

I was glad that you endorsed the article on "Being Led by the Spirit," and somewhat astonished, or surprised, that you objected to the position taken in the article on "What is the Gospel?" that we must understand the design of baptism in order to be benefitted by it; and more surprised at your illustrations to show that it is not necessary; and yet still more surprised that you did not quote a passage of scripture to prove that it is not necessary, or refer to an instance where the party or parties received the blessing without understanding that it was for the remission of sins, or salvation.

But, perhaps you will say that it was not your duty to do that, as you were not the affirmant; but I quoted the language of Peter on Pentecost, and showed that the design of baptism was as plainly taught as the death, burial, resurrection and ascension of Christ; and that the three thousand understood it to be for the remission of sins; for they gladly received what Peter told them to do after being pricked in their hearts by believing the facts of the gospel. Acts ii, 41.

Paul also understood its design when Ananias went to him and told him to "arise and be baptized, and wash away his sins," (or for the remission of sins) calling on the name of the Lord." Acts xxii, 16. The commission plainly sets it forth, and so do all the scriptures that speak of its design.

Now, Bro. McGarvey, is it necessary that the people understand the action, or as it is usually called, the mode of baptism, in order to acceptbible obedience in reference to that institution, or will sprinkling and pouring do as well? Why should it be any more necessary to understand the action than the design, when it is the design that gives it worth?

And again, Bro. McGarvey, why is it that you will (or you would several years ago, and I trust your zeal for the truth has not abated any) almost compass sea and earth to debate with sectarians on the design of baptism, unless it is necessary that the people understand it, or do you go about preaching and debating on subjects that it is not necessary to understand? I had not thought you would spend your time and talent in this way.

But now I will notice your illustrations. You say in your letter, "in regard to the validity of baptism when it is not understood to be for remission of sins. I think you are wrong. My reason for thinking so is brief. It is because God has not made the blessing attached to baptism dependent on our understanding the design of the ordinance. The blessing of eating or taking proper medicine follows, whether we understand it or not. So, if God promised pardon to the penitent believer, who is baptized, the blessing comes whether the sinner expects it or not."

Now, in regard to eating food to nourish the physical man, and in regard to taking medicine to heal the physical man, I grant that your position is true, because there is no law governing in the case; but in regard to the growth and health of the spiritual man, it is different. The food and medicine must be taken according to the directions, and the directions must be understood.

We learn from this that some of the Corinthian brethren had eaten and drank to gluttony and drunkenness, and were thereby not in a condition to discern the Lord's body. To discern means to understand. They did not know what they did, nor what they did it for, nor was it acceptable to the Lord. The Lord had revealed plainly what he wanted done, and what he wanted it done for. See verses 23, 26; but not any plainer than he has his will in regard to baptism, what it is, and what it is to be done for; and Paul further says in regard to the supper, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you;" verse 30.

For what cause? Why, not discerning the Lord's body; and they did not discern it because they were drunk; and I verily believe there are many among us that are weakly and sick, and one of the causes that they are so, is that they did not discern the design of baptism, and they did not discern it because of the bad teaching they had received, the doctrines and commandments of men; and they are not only sick and weak themselves, but they require much of the time and attention of the well ones to nurse them and keep them out of forbidden places when they ought to be engaged otherwise.

Paul also says in the same epistle, "I will pray with the spirit, and I will sing with the spirit and I will sing with the understanding also. 14, 15."

Now, is prayer and singing that is not done with the understanding, acceptable to the Lord?

Now, for the medical illustration. We hear the great physician of souls saying in reference to the Jews, "This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed, lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." Mat. XIII, 15. Mark says "forgive them." iv, 12. Here he gives the prescription, and one item of it is an understanding heart, or mind, and in verse nineteen he says, "When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. That seed of course produced no fruit;" but in the twenty-third verse he says, "But he that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word and understandeth it." All the fruit bearers understand the word. Some bear thirty, some sixty, and some one-hundred fold.

Now, Bro. McGarvey, is not that plain? I know the same great physician in his last prescription for the healing of all nations says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark XVI, 15, 16. Peter, acting under that commission, and speaking as he was guided or directed by the Holy Spirit, preached the gospel of Christ for the first time, on the day of Pentecost; the first time that repentance and remission of sins was ever preached in the name or by the authority of that great physician, the Lord Jesus Christ, three-thousand sin sick souls, who heard and believed the testimony concerning this physician, manifested a desire to put themselves under his treatment, by asking what they should do. The prescription was given them in language so plain that the wayfaring men, though fools, could understand it; they complied with its requisitions, were made free from their sins, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ.

Now, is it not safe to give the same

prescription to the same character of diseased people, and is it not very unsafe, both to the diseased and the muse, (the preacher,) to give any other medicine?

I will keep a copy of this letter and have it published in THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and I would be glad you would reply to it, if you think it worth a reply, and I will have it published also, if you have no objection.

Your brother in Christ,

E. HANSBROUGH.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

EDITOR FIRM FOUNDATION:

Dear Brother:—As I see you are so valiantly waging war against error in the church of God, I desire to call your attention to a most grievous sin, which we must put away from us or fail of Gods blessing. It is strange to me that while many of our talented men are spending their God given time and talents for building up plans for carrying the bible into foreign lands. They do not, instead, bestow their care and attention to the building of Israel. The bookless heathen, if he could look over into our camp, might ask "why do they not practice what they preach, or follow the book they are offering to us?" The sin I allude to I shall call divorce and remarriage. Of course I do not think for a moment, of grappling with the terrible social evil that divorce in the world has grown to be thus overturning the whole social fabric and threatening, if it grows much worse, a state almost if not quite, as bad as mormonism. I shall only call attention to the evil as it exists in the church. It is getting quite common for christians of good standing, zealous in the cause, and seemingly trying to live right lives, to leave husband or wife and sue for divorce. Some corrupt judge of Caesar's government gives them "a bill of divorcement," and presto, they are married to a more congenial companion, and brethren and sisters offer congratulations and many wishes for their future happiness! Are the parties to this transaction, as well as the brethren and sisters, ignorant of the fact that God beholds in them adulterers and adulteresses, and that He judges them unworthy to inherit the kingdom of God? 1 Cor. vi, 9.

On studying our Savior's words on this subject, it is plain that his new and purer law permits, for the cause of adultery, the "putting away;" but where does he give permission to marry another? Read Matt. v, 31. It hath been said, whosoever shall put away his wife let him give her a writing of divorcement; 32; but I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery, and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery. Matt. ix, 3, 9; Mark. x, 11. And he saith unto them, whosoever shall put away his wife and marry another, committeth adultery against her. 12. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery. Luke. xvi, 18; 1 Cor. vii, 10, 11; Rom. vii, 2, 3. Please turn to your bibles and read above quotations carefully. The putting away loses the pure from living in bondage to one who is unfaithful to the marriage obligation; but search in vain for permission to be bound to another—only death can give that release. I am aware this is not the generally received view, but to the law the testimony! Oh how many guilty ones there are among us, many ignorant, perhaps, of their true position in God's sight. Is this because our preachers fail to declare the whole counsel of God? Why will they not boldly, yet in meekness and love, teach the disciples on this and every question of life just what the word teaches? There are two kingdoms—let them as earnestly teach the conditions of entrance into the eternal Kingdom as into the church.

Let us hear from you, Bro. McGary.

A BROTHER.

We have not the space this time to go into anything like an exhaustive argument of this question. However, it appears very clear to our mind, that this Bro. is in error. In the language of our Savior, that he quotes, there is an implied right for those who have put away their wives, for the one cause—the exception—to marry again. The rule is that they must not marry, only under this exception; can they marry without infracting the divine law.

The marriage relation is of God's wisdom. It is a great blessing to our race. But, to construe the Saviors language, as this brother has, makes the innocent party to the marriage compact the sufferer. An unfaithful wife or husband, can, by proving recreant to the marriage compact, if this brother's construction of our Savior's language be correct, deprive the other, the faithful party, of the companionship of husband or wife, as the case may be, for life; thus, the guilty party would bring upon the innocent, the penalty of his or her wicked act.

So, we see that this construction of our Savior's language is as revolting to reason as it is contrary to scripture.

This brother, or others who hold with him on this question, may see the teaching that is from above, on this question, by supplying the ellipsis in every passage of scripture where it forbids remarriage, with this exception; "Saving for the cause of fornication."

For instance, let him read 1 Cor. vii, 10, 11, thus: "And unto the married

I command, yet not I, but the Lord, let not the wife depart from her husband (except for the cause of fornication): But, and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, (except for the cause of fornication) and let not the husband put away his wife (except for the cause of fornication)."

So in all places where the scriptures speak on this question. It is only in its own bright light—that light that lighteth every man, if he will let it, that we can see truth.

There is no use in demanding that this exception be expressed every time when the question is treated upon. Such a rule as that demanded would overturn the whole christian system.

When God speaks once plainly, let it stand as immutably as though He had spoken one thousand times.

A. MCG.

We will add to what we have already said, in reply to our brother who teaches us so much by his marriage example, that he is mistaken about our teaching that persons who are married to christ do not obtain the inheritance, unless while the marriage ceremony was being performed they understood that baptism was for the remission of sins." If we are to call the law of induction into Christ's body the marriage ceremony, then we say that we deny that we have ever taught that those who had complied with that ceremony would not get the inheritance.

What we have taught, and expect to continue to teach on this question, is, that those who have complied with a substitute in stead of the real ceremony are in no closer relationship to Christ than if they had never complied with any ceremony.

Take the "ceremony" of Christ, and reject all others, is what we teach. Those who recognize other "ceremonies" are rebels against Christ, however much they may prate about their love for him.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I received the FIRM FOUNDATION some ten days ago. I am much pleased with it, tried to get you some subscribers, but only got one. I send, in this, a postal order for $2, for which please send to the two names.

I also enclose some lines from my wife, who is 76 years old. I am 80 years old next September. I am what is termed, by the retrogrationists, an uncompromising old fogey.

May you live long to do battle for the truth separated from worldly adjuncts, and in the great hereafter hear our Captain say, well done faithful soldier, enter into the joys of the Redeemer.

I am your Brother,

WOODLAND, CAL.

My brother in Christ, I give you my hand,
In faith and in hope of that better land,
For which we are striving, and earnestly pray,
That others may enter that straight, narrow
way.

The cause of the Savior you earnestly plead
For success in your efforts, I wish you God
speed;

The world with its pleasures are potent to gain;
The hearts of the thoughtless, their allegi-

But truth, which is mighty, will baffle its foes,
And overcome error, and all who oppose;
The church, as its agent, must rise in her might,
Do battle with falsehood, establish the right.

The times are portentous of evil and sin,
To catch the unwary, the world will begin With pleasing temptations, with parties and balls,

And with them the heart of the youthful enthralls.

And many church members are thus led astray;
They lose their first love, and fall out by the
way;

Bring disgrace and reproach on the cause of the Lord;

Disregard all the precepts contained in His word.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

My threescore and sixteen long years I have told;

Have seen very many brought into the fold;
Have seen very many who once bore His name,
Turn back to the world, and put Jesus to shame.

The day has arrived when the friends of the cause

Must burnish their armor and fight for the cross;

Must vanquish its foes, and defend gospel truth;

Must chide all back-sliders, and save erring youth.

The world and its follies are blinding the eyes
Of those for whom God made His great sacrifice.

The gift of His son, for a perishing race,
To save them and give them in heaven a place.

The scriptures speak plainly, and teach us
God's will,

Which christians must study, and try to fulfill;

"My cause you must honor, and ever defend,
And prove to the world that on me you depend."

The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eye,
The church must ignore, or languish and die.

For fashion and folly belong to the world;
Their friends from the presence of God will be hurled.

May God give you strength, and an increase of days

In his vineyard to labor, and sound forth His praise.

To bring to His fold many wandering sheep,
Determined henceforth His commandments to keep.

And now, my dear brother, I'll bid you adieu,
And pray to our Father your strength to renew;

That when you are called from your labors below,

Your crown you'll receive, heavens joys you will know.

Your sister in hope,

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

Dear Sisters: I purpose talking awhile with you on the subject of lunacy. "Merely!" says one. "what a strange subject. What ever suggested it?" I am sure many things of recent occurrence. This is a fearful disease, and its most fruitful sources are the many false religions of the day; but this is not the kind of lunacy I set out to talk about. My theme is lunacy, falsely so-called, produced by the religion of the bible, or true religion, or obedience of the gospel, and a determination to walk in the ways that God hath ordained. For instance, a number of christian women conclude that they want to be actively engaged in doing good, so determine to organize a sewing, or Dorcas society. Each and every sister is solicited to join in with them, and all goes smoothly until a sister comes along who says, "I would like to join you in this work, but I can't find any example for such a society in the New Testament. I see where Dorcas made garments, but not a word is said of her belonging to a society." "Oh!" says one, "you are too particular. You needn't expect to find a rule laid down for everything." "But Paul says the scriptures thoroughly furnish unto all good works." Ah, I see we can't agree. You are a stickler and of course will not endorse our work. "So, this sister, seeing she is a stumbling block, leaves. Now listen to the remarks made on her exit. "Did you ever hear of such a silly idea? New Testament indeed! Next she will be calling for New Testament example for our ice-cream festivals, private theatricals, bazaars, and every other little innocent amusement. Says another, "Why, would you believe it, she asked Bro. B. (the pastor) what he thought of christians wearing silks, jewelry, etc., as if he would dare disapprove, when his wife leads the fashion. "Don't mind what she says," says another, she's crack-brained. I've thought her mind was wrong ever since she lost her husband. Don't you know no sane woman would dress as plainly as she does, in such glaring contrast to everyone else? She's cranky, to say the least, and I would not be a bit surprised any day to hear of her being in the lunatic asylum." And so it goes, each sister more than willing to tell her neighbor that it is reported that sister B is going crazy. Why? Because she wants to follow New Testament teaching. Thus it is with any brother or brethren desiring scriptural authority for certain practices prevalent in the church. Thus you see, dear sisters, the time has come in the world's history that when a man or woman avows a determination to take the word of God for a guide through life, at once, epithets such as crank, extremists, etc., are hurled at them. It is all right, if one attaches one's self to one of the six hundred societies, claiming to be founded on the bible, since their parlance, "all of them are right;" but, the moment one ignores all these, and claims that a strict adherence to God's word alone will gain heaven, the cry of "crank" is raised, and the cranks bitterest foes are they of his own household. As example, we take the case of a woman who has a large connection by whom the denominations are represented. She has been nourished on the mysteries of sectarianism. She hears the gospel presented in its purity, finds that it is something her reason can grasp, and not the intangible, unreasonable thing she has been taught to regard it. She believes and obeys it, ignoring the various human creeds represented by the various members of her family. She makes God's word a daily study, and the more she reads the more evident it becomes to her mind that her relatives are all wrong, honestly wrong, perhaps, but none the less culpable in God's sight, since the foundation of all knowledge, God's word, is in their possession. She realizes that they are condemned unless they turn from their human creeds to this living fountain, and her heart yearns toward them. She loses no opportunity to remonstrate with them and show them "the true and living way." She urges them oh, so earnestly, to "search the Scriptures and see whether these things be so," and not to risk their soul's salvation on any man's word or creed, however talented or learned he may be, since God hath said, "the wisdom of man is foolishness with Him." How do they receive her warnings, think you? Some in derision, some in anger, some in jest, others saying, like Felix, go thy way for this time. At some more convenient season, I will hear thee concerning this matter. When I get tired of dancing and frolicing I will read my bible and see who is right, and join some church. There's plenty of time!" So her exhortations are unheeded, and they begin, among themselves, to deplore this religious mania and express fears that it may lead to something far more serious. As time goes on, and her interest is unabated, they begin to say "her mind is certainly not right." How strangely she talks! No matter what subject you bring up, she works religion in some way, and what could be more tiresome? Religion is very well in its place, but I do not believe in harping on it eternally! She used to be so pleasant, but what a bore she is now. "What," says a disinterested listener, does she say that is so offensive? "Why, she does not hesitate to tell us every one that we are wrong, and bound for destruction. That we are following commandments of men instead of God, and are lost eternally, unless we change." "But doesn't she prove what she says by the bible?" Oh, she brings up some very plausible passages, but they applied to the Jews only. She's constantly harping on using common sense in reading the scriptures and properly dividing the word before we can properly understand it. Why, God never intended us to understand the bible! It is a book of mysteries! She also contends that we must read it, connectedly, as we would any other book, when learned men for centuries have been taking it verse at a time, and preaching it.

Oh, she's the most conceited and self-righteous creature imaginable, and awfully presumptuous! She even went so far as to tell an aged relative, who had been a consistent member of the — church forty years, that no one was in Christ's church who had not been baptized for the remission of sins, when she well knew that this relative had not been baptized for that purpose. Even if she were right about it, it would have been more respectful, at least, and better, any way, to let her gray haired relative alone, and let her die in peace. She is conscientiously wrong, if wrong at all, so God will take the will for the deed.

I have never been baptized. I have been sprinkled. That will do me, and I will get to heaven as quick as she will on her immersion.

"These are not imaginary conversations, dear sisters, but real, almost verbatim, and I only quote them to show how far from the truth the world is, and how important it is that we let our light shine brighter each day, that a few at least, may be won to the truth.

These are true specimens of the remarks to which those who contend for God's ways are subjected, and these contentious ones are the lunatics referred to above. Oh, that there were more such, but alas, they are deplorably scarce! Such are truly hated of men, especially of false brethren and sisters, those who wish to walk hand in hand with the world; but rejoice, ye cranks, inasmuch as you know "the friendship of the world is enmity with God." But it is hard to combat our relatives and friends, and how few of us have courage to do it.

"I agree with you perfectly," says one, "in your views of scripture, but I can't afford to defend it at all, as I make my living sewing, or trimming hats, or keeping boarders, or teaching school, and such sentiments would drive away custom." As much as to say their money is the great desideratum, and if I get that their souls may go to destruction.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" Oh! how unlike grand old Paul, who counted all things but loss for Christ, for whom he suffered the loss of all things; and what base ingratitude to that dear Savior that "loved us and gave Himself for us!" Show me a sister or brother who thus excuses his or her failure to give a reason for the hope of eternal life, and I will show you one who does not believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God! To such, the word is very real and attractive, while heaven, which is to be brought nigh by faith, is very vague and far off, in fact, more a myth than a reality, not worth the striving after! To such I will say, think not to say within yourselves, "I have been born of water and the spirit, and am considered an earnest, zealous christian by every one," ye can justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth the heart.

In the awful day of judgement, you will hear pronounced on you, and all who are ashamed to confess the Savior

But, to those dear, earnest sisters, whose contention for God's way has won for them these unjust appellations. I say, cultivate this crankiness to the utmost. You are in good company. The Jews said of our Savior, "He hath a devil," and his friends said, "He is beside himself." Paul was called mad because he preached the resurrection to wicked kings and governors.

— And, no doubt, the antediluvians said "poor, crazy old creature," as they watched Noah at work on that wonderful ark, and heard him tell of the coming flood. "I don't believe a word he says; but if it is so we will laugh and dance and feast for years yet, and if we see any signs of a flood we have men that can plan and build us much handsomer boats than that; one boat will do as well as another." So it is with the post-diluvians. They scorn to take refuge in God's ark, the church, in which alone salvation is to be found.

They prefer the six hundred man-devised boats, where they can laugh, dance and feast with impunity. And when one comes reasoning with them of "righteousness, temperance and judgement to come," they cry, "you are beside yourself. Reading the bible so much has made you mad." "Rejoice," says the Savior, "when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company and shall reproach you, for the son of man's sake." This is the reward you will get on earth, if we are faithful, but there is a blessed heaven for just such cranks; and sweet will be to you the Savior's welcome, "Well done, good and faithful servants, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

BRIDGEPORT, ILLINOIS, /
APRIL 1, 1885. \

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I shall start next week to LaPort, Indiana. I am going there to preach a year, or perhaps longer. You will therefore send the April number of the FIRM FOUNDATION to me at LaPort, Indiana.

I intend to try to get some subscribers there. I expect to write some articles also for the FOUNDATION.

I should have written already more than I have, but I have not had the opportunity. I greatly admire the spirit and tone of the paper, and hope that it may have a glorious success.

So many of our preachers and editors are seeking popularity with the sects and are afraid to speak the truth, that they have greatly hindered its progress.

Many of our congregations to-day are but little better than the sects, and I don't know but some are even worse. Every one knows, who knows anything, that God has but one plan of salvation. One system of truth, and will accept nothing in opposition to that system.

Many men act as if they had authority to change or modify God's laws and ordinances, and the people follow as if they thought they could.

Let us try to teach the people better. Let us labor to elevate God's word, and debase human creeds. Let us fearlessly defend the right way of the Lord.

If our brethren had done this all the time we would now be far in advance of all sects.

May God bless you and all the true friends of truth.

I remain,

Yours in hope,

I. C. STONE.

A LETTER FROM A BROTHER.

BROTHER MCGARY:

After having read with care three numbers of the FIRM FOUNDATION, I am constrained to write you this, not for publication, but in a private way, to call your attention to the importance of union among the disciples of Christ, and to show you that you are entering a wedge that will, sooner or later, disrupt the brotherhood and destroy the peace of zion all over the land.

I must say that I admire your pamphlet for its general dealing with what I might call practical christianity. I had been led to believe, before I saw a copy of it, that its teachings were strictly confined to the baptismal controversy.

I find two serious objections to the general tone of your paper, and to these I will now direct my remarks.

1. I object to your general denunciation of what you are pleased to term the "modern pastor." Among these pastors are many good men, men who are as conscientious as you or I. The great bulk of brains and intellect among us is to be found among this class of men.

Many of our illiterate, old foggy preachers, war upon what they call the modern pastor, through the bad spirit of envy and jealousy. I am not classing you among them.

But many of our back-woods preachers look upon our educated preachers with envious eyes. This class of men will rally around your paper because you war against the educated ministry.

Cease this, my brother, and wield your powerful pen against instrumental music in the church, and for missionary work, for an educated ministry, and for the work of the Lord generally. Then your paper will be engaged in a holy work, and will be sustained by the wisest and best brethren throughout the country.

2. I object to your position in reference to baptism. You have been accused of being puffed up, though I do not say so. I am going to try you on this baptism question and see if you are. I am going to make it so plain that unless you are puffed up you can't help seeing your error, and confessing it, if you will calmly weigh it.

Now, we can sometimes teach more by example than in any other way. So I am going to give you an example, and ask you to give due weight to points in it. I shall be brief. I know you can see the points without my going into detail, and this letter is already growing lengthy. I would ask you to publish it, but for its length. My example does not originate with the writer. I believe it owes its origin to Bro. Franklin. Here it is.

Suppose a lady falls in love with a young man who has been courting her. Suppose he is rich, but tells her nothing about his property, but marries her while she supposes him to be poor. Suppose he dies; will she be deprived of the inheritance because she did not know what she was getting when she married him?

The thought is preposterous. And yet, Brother McGary, you teach that persons who are married to Christ do not obtain the inheritance, unless while the marriage ceremony was being performed they understood that baptism was for the remission of sins. Don't you see the point? Now, be candid.

You may publish this example if you desire, and waste your time on it, for it will be a waste of time to try to evade its force against your position.

Whatever course you may pursue, withhold my name, for I would not be pulled into a newspaper controversy for anything. Even if your position in reference to baptism was tenable, you ought not to spend your whole time (as you do) in writing on that question.

Your brother for the whole truth.

We publish this brother's letter in full, but lest he should be drawn into a controversy, at his request we withhold his name. If we are "puffed up", and need treatment for that malady, we can not indulge, even a hope of being benefited by his, designed, curative epistle—unless paradoxes are a sovereign remedy for that complaint.

All careful readers will see, that in the first part of his letter he throws in a compliment for our pamphlet, for its general treatment on practical christianity. And in concluding, he charges us with spending our "whole time" writing on the baptismal question! But we shall not dwell on this discrepancy. We assure him, that we have been "candid" and will be.

We have looked hard, and have failed to "see the point" that his example was intended to make so clear! But we will notice his in its own order. He urges two objections to our work.

1. He does not like our opposition to "modern pastors." Well, we grant that we do not like them much. We love the cause of Christ, for through it we look for deliverance from satan, and for an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, that fadeth not away. Loving His cause forbids our loving the commercial system of the "modern pastor."

Christ's teaching points to the paths of humility, and His life is an example showing how they are to be trodden.

The "modern pastor" prays with high sounding words for humility; preaches at the stars, and reproves Romanism and Ingersollism, and lords it over God's heritage with high-handed misrule.

He dares not reprove sin in "his charge," lest he should wound his salary! He attires himself in conformity to the laws of fashion as scrupulously as a black leg; talks politics six days in the week, and palliates all forms of sectarianism on the seventh. In short he is a perfect specimen of worldly gentility, except his "long prayers in the synagogue" every seventh day. He teaches, by his daily example, that men and women may live as they list if they will only pray.

Although "charged before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and his kingdom," to "preach the word," the "modern pastor" shirks this responsibility and pours into the "itching ears" of "his charge" soothing balms, concocted of the gist of modern orthodoxy and worldly wisdom.

To preach the word—declare all the counsel of God, would condemn himself as well as those he had taken charge of for filthy lucre—would despoil himself of his salary.

The second objection is to our views of baptism. But before we put his example to the test, we will give a passing notice to other things.

As to education, we do not claim that degree of literary attainment that would entitle us to recognition as an educated man. But we deny, most emphatically, that we make war upon educated men. Again, as to this brother's remarks about uneducated and old fogy brethren rallying around our paper, we might say a great deal, but we will let it pass for what it is worth to him who seeks to besmirch, by low insinuation, that which he can't cope with by fair argument.

We only urge our brethren to "rally"

around God's word, and not around our pamphlet. Well, now to our brother's example:

He takes an example of a perfect marriage to justify an imperfect one. He makes up his victory wholly of assumption. Now, as examples teach so much, and so briefly, we will give him one.

Suppose a young man and lady are in love, and engaged to be married; suppose they send for marriage license; but suppose instead of the party going to the officer authorized to issue the license he writes it out himself, and they are married upon this bogus license. Now suppose the husband dies and leaves an estate, and suppose his brother sets up claim to the estate and goes into court and proves that this wife (?) was married to him on a forged license. Would she, under the law, get his property?

No! Now, my brother, you know she would not. "Can't you see the point?" "Will you be candid?" This is all I have room for on this question at present.

If you are not too averse to a "newspaper controversy" you can proceed in our columns, with or without a name. We want the truth, but we do not expect to hear from you.

Should any one else, holding your views, desire to go on from where you have left off, we tender them our columns.

A. McG.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I wrote you a card some time ago asking you to continue my paper, and to send the F. F. to —. I herewith send $1.00 to pay for her paper for six months, and my extension. Bro. Mc. I wish you success in your efforts to influence the brethren to walk by the same rule (not two rules),—all speak the same things, contend for the "one faith." That old two-edged sword is death to all innovations—departures from the "one faith." Were the Savior on earth think you He would sanction any sectarian doctrine. No! No! He would drive out the modern money changers, who sell dolls, candy, tickets and such like, just as He did the vendors of doves, etc. Men fought for their country with carnal weapons for $13.00 per month, underwent the hardships of camp life, but soldiers of king Emanuel must live in ease and style at from $50.00 to $200.00 per month, or they will serve mammon. So many men love "the root of all evil" so well, that I must say to you to cry aloud and spare not.

Your private brother,

C. S. M.

FROM ARCOLA, MISSOURI.

DEAR BROTHER:

I am glad to find a few more yet who are ready and willing to stand for the "faith delivered to the saints," unmixed with the doctrines of men. Some of our preachers are so afraid they will not be popular with everybody, that they have yielded the original grounds of this reformation, and many others are doing worse by trying to carry the whole church with them into sectdom. The latter class are numerous. They say there are as good Christians among the sects as any where. Surely the Bible does not teach this.

This class of our brethren, virtually pronounce the mourners bench, and all modern Baal worship, good work, for they take those who have been made christians (?) by these processes, "shake them in." Go on my dear brother and shake down their rickety and rotten work upon their unhallowed heads. They will hate you for it, but you will be rewarded with a crown of righteousness, and they will hear the awful sentence "depart from me ye that work iniquity." You have already put the old rotten fabric to tottering, and it is only a question of time, for it to fall. Think of our oldest editors turning to defend the processes of sectarian conversion to shield themselves.

Why don't they come out like men and christians and confess their faults, seen of all candid minds?

Yours for the straight and narrow way.

A SISTER.

ARCOLA, MO.

We have published several letters from different brothers and sisters in this issue. We could fill every issue with just such letters, but heretofore we have not taken the liberty to make such letters public. Some of these published in this issue were not intended for publication, but they are so full of interest to lovers of truth, that we have given them to our readers.

We ask all of our subscribers, both brothers and sisters, to go to work for the paper and double its circulation. Let every subscriber determine to send us a new subscriber this month. This can be done easily. We have some subscribers who average ten per month. Think how little trouble it will be for each of you to send us one, and how much it will help the work.

Now, if we can double our circulation we will change the pamphlet to a weekly paper, about the size of the Texas Christian, and without any rise in price, $1 per annum.

Push the work brethren, and let's follow our compromising papers to the very hearthstones that they are poisoning with an adulterated gospel, and declare all the counsel of God—lets strive together for the faith of the gospel of Christ.

A. MCG.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

Please continue your much esteemed paper, the FIRM FOUNDATION. It is the only paper that can stand. I am over sixty years old. I have been a member of the church forty-five years. You are in the right direction for reformation.

I have read two numbers. Please send me the next number and I will send the pay soon.

Yours in faith,

J. W. SHRYGLEY.

LANDERSVILLE, ALA.

We find that we made the impression on some of our readers, that our contemplated weekly would contain no more matter than four pages of our present pamphlet. If we change to a weekly there will be very little difference in the amount of its matter and the matter of our present monthly. We say this by way of explanation.

Brethren, give "Mechanical Religion" and "Obedience number two" a careful reading. We think that Bro. Jackson has, in these articles, laid the "ax of truth unto the root of the tree" of error, and gone far towards "hewing it down."

Those who are trying to prop the rotten old trunk up, through respect for those who planted it, will soon find that they have to stand from under, or be buried beneath its falling crash. Why not take out your flimsy props, brethren, and let it fall now?

THE EVANGELIST AND HIS WORK.

J. W. JACKSON.

The great object or end to be accomplished in the mission of Jesus to the world, was the salvation of man; not simply "remission of sins," but that great salvation which includes the "adoption of the body," and eternal life. This great salvation was brought to man, and all the means instituted by which it might be enjoyed. The church, with its institutions, are so many means or instrumentalities for the accomplishment of this end—the salvation of man.

It is too often the case that preachers and writers inculcate the idea that the end or design of the gospel is attained "by joining the church." The church is preached as the "ark of safety," and salvation by, or in the church, instead of preaching Christ and salvation by Him.

It is true that the church is an important and a necessary factor in the work of saving man, for it is declared to be the purpose of God "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one (body or church) all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him," and, "that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of His promise in Christ by the Gospel," and that by the church the manifold wisdom of God should be made known.—Eph. 1, 10, and III. 6, 10.

As important however as is the church, other means antedate it in time, if not in importance. Leaving out of this discussion the typical dispensation and the personal work of Jesus in procuring salvation, we call attention to the agents by whom the "gathering in" was to be done, and to the means by which they confirmed to man the great salvation.

God works through agents; in past ages His work was carried on by prophets, and by angels; now He speaks to us by His Son and His Apostles. The latter are agents divinely commissioned to go out into the world with the message of peace and reconciliation.

tion is of grace, and that if we make the preaching of the gospel, or obedience to its commands, necessary to salvation, our salvation then depends upon a fellow creature, and the latter stands in the relation of a mediator between the penitent and God. This sounds well in popular ears, but when brought to the light of God's word, its fallacy is clearly seen.

There is one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. A mediator in order to bring together or reconcile two parties alienated from each other, must have full power or authority to make those conditions or terms by which the parties can be brought into agreement. These conditions when made are equally binding upon the parties. Jesus, as mediator, has this power; He has, on God's part, made certain promises; on man's part, imposed certain things to be done, and has sent His ambassadors forth to make known these things and confirm to man the promises of God by persuading them to compliance with the terms of reconciliation. Jesus began to speak of this great salvation, His Apostles confirmed it to us, God bearing witness to them as divine messengers fully competent to make known the way of life.—Heb. ii, 1, 4.

This agrees with what Paul says—“that in the wisdom of God, after that the world by wisdom knew not God; it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.” 1 Cor. i, 21. Jesus had said that He would build on earth a church; He had taught that the seed of the kingdom was the word of God; and that this seed had to be sown in fruitful soil in order to produce fruit. The Apostle's commentary on these teachings is, that the Gospel preached is both the power of God and the wisdom of God, (1 Cor. i, 24.) in saving men and adding them to the church.

This being true, God would make the necessary provision for the preaching of the gospel, the “gathering in” of men and women, and for their edification in the one body when thus brought in. Hence, He gave to the church Apostles, prophets, evangelists, teachers, overseers and deacons. Mark! These were given to the church.

Our essay will be limited to the examination of the evangelist and his work. The primary signification of this word, which occurs but three times in the New Testament, is one who proclaims glad tidings, and in this sense might readily be applied to all who preached or proclaimed the gospel. But the use of it in the New Testament clearly indicates a distinct class of men in the church. This is shown by the distinction drawn.—Eph. iv, 11.

The enumeration of these different classes, given “for the work of the ministry,” indicates not only distinct classes of workers in the church, but a distinct work to be done by each. Philip is spoken of as “the evangelist,”—(Act. xxi, 8,) and Timothy is exhorted to “do the work of an evangelist.”—2 Tim. iv, 5.

The qualifications of the New Testament evangelists are easily known. They were full of wisdom and of Holy Spirit, and had the power to work miracles. They were preachers; this is the primary thought; men who knew the gospel, who could and would proclaim the glad tidings of salvation; and who were moved with compassion for their fellow creatures. In their case as well as in the Apostles, the power to work miracles was but the testimony of God to the world, that these men were sent of God. What they preached and commanded was authoritative, and constituted the work to be done by them as a class.

Some are greatly exercised as to whether the evangelist is an officer in the church or not. The work to be done will certainly define his position in the church, and his relations to it. As to authority, they can claim none by virtue of position; as earthen vessels to whom heavenly treasure is committed, as bearers of the message of peace and reconciliation they plead the authority of Jesus in His official relations to man as Prophet, Priest, King and Judge, and themselves as servants.

It is denied by some that there is now in the church any such class of evangelists as above indicated. This denial is based upon the word, and claims that if the Greek word was translated it would destroy all idea of class. No more than the translation of the word episkopos into plain English, giving us "overseers," which, all admit, points out a very important class in the church.

So the word evangelist translated "proclaimer of glad tidings or preacher of the gospel" still indicates a class of men to whom a particular work is assigned.

Others, looking at the supernatural qualifications of Philip, Timothy and Titus, suppose that these gifts of the Holy Spirit are necessary to and inseparable from the position of evangelist; and that as all these gifts have passed away, there is no longer such a class as evangelist in the church.

The same reasoning will do away with overseers, deacons, and even preachers. The working of miracles was no qualification for preaching the gospel in either the Apostles or Evangelists, nor would such power, if now possessed, be a qualification for preaching. Philip learned the gospel through the preaching and teaching of the Apostles in Jerusalem. Timothy knew the Scriptures from a child, and was taught the gospel by Paul.

To such objectors I would ask: Is the work of an evangelist now necessary? If so, who is to do it? If a class of men now do this work, are we not authorized to call them evangelists? To escape the force of these queries the objector must argue that the work to be done by the evangelist necessarily included the performing of miracles. But this cannot be done, as the working of miracles was confined to no special class in the church. "God distributing His gifts according to His own will." 1 Cor. x, 11; Heb. ii, 2, 5.

What then is the work of an evangelist? Primarily that which is signified by the word—the preaching of the gospel. Here, some would confine the work to preaching the gospel in its elementary principles to the world. But evidently Paul's instructions to Timothy and Titus with regard to their work must be taken into consideration. They were to preach the gospel, set things in order, teach, reprove, rebuke, exhort, and appoint properly qualified overseers and deacons.

Time and growth in the divine life are required for these things, and until a congregation of christians is fully set in order the evangelist is a "ruler" in that congregation. Having called them into the kingdom, he proceeds to teach and train them in the duties to be done by them in order to their growth and to the enjoyment of the divine promises. When they are of themselves enabled to choose scripturally qualified overseers, then they can dispense with an evangelist.

The overseers are then to teach and watch over the flock, as they who shall give account of their souls; but until they arrive at this point the evangelist should remain with them as their teacher and ruler. To do these things the evangelist must have a knowledge of the gospel. He must study the scriptures that he may be a true workman, and must be faithful to the word of God and diligent in every good work. But it is objected: "Timothy and Titus were sent by the Apostle Paul upon their missions, and the work enjoined upon them was a special work, they having received special authority from Paul to do this work for him or in his stead."

Paul's epistles to Timothy and Titus as to the work to be done in the church, and the preaching of the word, are either applicable to proclaimers of the gospel, now, or they are not. If not, they should either be eliminated from the New Testament, or preserved only as literary curiosities. If they are applicable to preachers now, then they may consider that the Lord sends them into a certain field that they may preach the word, set things in order, and by faithful work make full proof of their ministry.

But this brings us to the question, who sends the Evangelist?

The salvation of the world depends upon the gospel. But how can they be saved by a gospel they do not believe; and how can they believe that of which they never heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? So, reasons Paul, and so I hold. The evangelist or preacher must be sent.

In every mission, as recorded in scripture, whether that of Moses, John the immerser, the Twelve, or that of Jesus, we have.

1. The sender.
2. The one sent.
3. The field of operation, and those to whom sent.
4. The work to be done.

We might follow this order and be sure that we are acting scripturally to that degree. But there are those who contend for a mission by self-sent preachers. They deny that a church ever sent out any one on a mission, and claim that every christian has a divine right to go and preach.

Dr. Herndon, in the Christian Quarterly, makes this statement: "Congregations as congregations are nowhere in the New Testament commanded and expected to evangelize, or to send any one to evangelize or to prevent any one from evangelizing." The force of the above statement rests upon the word, "commanded."

By the same reasoning we can get rid of the Lord's day, the Lord's supper, and other things. "Ye are not under law, but under grace." You are not to go as a slave to your duties, driven to them through fear of the penalties annexed to law, but in the spirit of a son, animated by love, obey the Father.

That the congregation "as a congregation" were "expected" to evangelize is, I think, clearly taught. It is stated as a part of the purpose of God that by the church might be known the manifold wisdom of God. The wisdom of God which had been hid for ages was made known to the Apostles by the Holy Spirit, even the hidden wisdom of God which the world did not know; they preached it and taught it, and the church was to be in God's hands the instrument to make known to all principalities and powers His manifold wisdom.

This the church could do in two ways:

1. By works; not only individual purity of life, but their work "as a congregation."

2. By sounding out the word of truth as did the church in Thessalonica.—1 Thes. i, 7; or holding forth the word of life.—Phil. ii, 16.

It is answered, however, that all this can be done individually. Not so; the language is not distributive, and the work must be done by the congregation "as a congregation," just as Paul exhorts the church at Corinth to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord."

The work of the Lord, which He began to do and teach while on earth, was carried on after He ascended on high. The Lord added to the church daily the saved; He worked with and by the Apostles, and for the salvation of man.

The church must carry on the work, always abound in it. As a light-bearer represented by the golden candlestick, it must send the light of the knowledge of the glory of God into the benighted hearts of men, and this is done through the preaching of the gospel.

Such is the title of an article in the Texas Department of the Gospel Advocate, April 1, 1885. The design of the article is to prove that baptism is valid when the person baptized is ignorant of the promise of "remission of sins" connected with the act, provided only that he obeys the act simply from "a love and desire to obey God."

When truth is so clear, so simple, so strong, why choose the doubtful, murky teachings of Babylon? If preachers and editors are "set for the defence" of the gospel of Christ, why will they give aid and comfort to human institutions by defending and upholding their doctrines and practices? Why bring far-fetched suppositions and isolated cases to oppose the truth of Jesus? The article referred to should have been headed "Invalid Baptism."

The baptism commanded by the Lord Jesus, and enforced by apostolic teaching, needs no doctoring: sectarian baptism is the poor invalid that is now being doctored by some preachers and editors.

Stop your futile efforts brethren, the poor thing is sick even unto death; your soothing anodynes are only palliative, not curative, and serve only to embitter the dying agonies of the patient by holding forth to it hopes of peace and security, which are doomed to disappointment.

There is "one baptism."—Eph. iv, 5.

This "one baptism" is immersion in water.—Acts viii, 38, x, 47, 48.

It is by the authority of the Lord Jesus.—Acts ii, 38, x, 48, xix, 5.

The "one baptism" is for the remission of sins.—Mark xvi, 16, Acts ii, 38, Acts xxii, 16.

This "one baptism" will certainly secure to a properly prepared individual the promise of salvation. The necessary preparation is included in the following steps taken, or, as Bro. Poe says, these antecedents:

1. Faith. 2. Repentance. 3. Confession with the mouth of the Lord Jesus.

Now, suppose a person complies with the above, will there exist any doubt as to the validity of his baptism?

But, says the brother, "we repeat again that the man who firmly, stoutly goes forward thus, and does what God commands, without knowing all that God has promised to give him in his obedience, is a man of more faith than he who is told of all God's promises.

The one does the work purely from principle, a desire to obey, knowing God will love and bless the obedient, while the other may have a selfish motive to reach the pay or promise.

This is right, to expect the promise, and to labor for it, but if one obeys without this incentive, simply from a love and desire to obey, he is saved as sure as he obeys."

Now, Bro. Poe, did you ever in all your life find an individual who had "a love and desire to obey God" without being moved thereto by faith in the promises of God? Please give us one such case of "obedience."

We are not under law, but under grace. There is no love manifested in law, or in a command. God has shown His love to us by deed, and by the exceeding great and precious promises given to us.—1 Jon iv. 9, 10; 2 Peter 1. 4. These promises are made sure to "the heirs of promise" by the oath of God.—Heb. vi. 13, 20. All the promises are in Christ, yea, and amen.—2 Cor. i. 20.

Faith embraces the promises and obeys the command to which they are annexed in order to their enjoyment. "By faith we understand" that the remission of sins is promised in the name of Jesus Christ to all penitent believers who will acknowledge His authority and obey His command; and following the example of Moses, who "had respect unto the recompense of reward," we obey.

Nay, more! We walk exactly in the "steps of that faith our father Abraham had being, yet uncircumcised."—Rom. iv. 12.

"By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out not knowing whither he went." Heb. xi. 8.

This is the faith my brethren we walk in. Paul draws the same contrast here that he does in 2 Cor. v. 7. "For we walk by faith, not by sight." Abraham had no knowledge of that promised place, nor perhaps of the way leading to it, but his faith in the promise of God supplied the motive power that obeyed.

So, now, the sinner is called out of Satan's kingdom; God promises to forgive his sins through Jesus Christ, and make him an heir of "the heavenly country." By faith in God's word when he is thus called to go out into a place which he shall after receive for an inheritance, he obeys, and he goes out not knowing (but believing) whither he goes.

I hope that brethren will cease their efforts to rebuild the things against which they have waged such an unremitting and successful warfare for so many years past. "Contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." Take the "one baptism" with its antecedents and consequents, and you will never have to seek out supposed cases in order to justify your teaching and practice.

The scriptures furnish us with plain examples, and he who can justify his practice by conformity to them may be sure that he is on the Lord's side.

"Hobby:—A subject or plan upon which one is constantly setting off; a favorite and ever recurring theme of discourse, thought or effort; that which occupies one's attention unduly, or to the weariness of others."—Webster.

Paul's "favorite and ever recurring theme of discourse," was the gospel of Christ, of which he was not ashamed. Rom. i. 16. He determined to know nothing else but this gospel. 1 Cor. ii. 2. He was constantly "setting off" on this theme in every place he visited, and some of his hearers, at various times, thought him either a madman or fanatic. See Acts xxvi. 24; 1 Cor. i. 23; 1 Cor. iv. 10; 2 Cor. v. 13, et al.

Paul preached the gospel of Christ to the exclusion of everything else in order that the faith of his hearers might stand in the "wisdom and power of God." Rom. i, 16, 1 Cor. i, 24, and 1 Cor. ii, 2, 5.

He declared that if man or angel should preach any other gospel than that he preached, they should be accursed. Gal. i, 7, 9. He tells us that this gospel must be obeyed, or vengeance will be visited upon us. 2 Thes. i, 7, 9. And after we have believed the gospel of Christ and obeyed it, we must live by it. Gal. ii, 20.

Brethren, let us be as Paul was, full of zeal and courage and love, and preach the gospel of Christ in all its fullness.

Some will call us "hobbyist," "extremist," "fanatics," "bigots," etc. This is to be expected; take Paul's example here as to bonds, affections, and all kinds of persecutors. Act xx, 24.

The ministry of the gospel of Christ having been committed to you, see that you renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, do not walk in craftiness, nor handle God's word deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commend yourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. 2 Cor. iv, 1, 7.

THE CHURCH, THE PILLAR AND SUPPORT OF THE TRUTH.

The church of God in a congregational capacity is composed of individuals called out from the world and at work for the Master. The will of our heavenly Father given through His Son, furnishes us with a rule of action. Every member of this body must work for Jesus Christ, the Head, through or in the church, which is His Body.

Now, there have been many institutions of charity and good works established by man. Many brethren have become members of these institutions. The writer joined one in the year 1865, when he merged into manhood. I know whereof I speak, when I say that many brethren are more faithful to the tenets of these institutions of man than they are to the commands of our Savior. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

They are more prompt at their meetings; will travel farther to them; will often encounter the inclement blast of winter; will sit longer and more composedly at their meetings; and give more of their hard earnings to their success than to the Master's cause.

Recently, while in conversation with a brother on this subject, he said, "We do this because the church fails to exemplify what she teaches."

I press the question—upon whose shoulders rests the responsibilities of the failure? Is our Master's rule of work imperfect? Can men furnish a better one than our Savior? Does a neglect of duty in the body of Christ justify the adoption of a system devised by men?

Suppose the poor widows are not looked after by the church; and the orphans are not hunted up and cared for, and the sick and the distressed are not ministered unto, and their sufferings alleviated by the watch-care and attention of the children of God, who above all others should know how to bestow that consolation and comfort designed by the Great Physician of souls?

If, dear brother, we have failed to work by the divine rule, we had better bestir ourselves to action, than run to a human plan to try to remedy the evil. The church should be the greatly coveted asylum for the poor and the oppressed. It would be if we possessed the spirit of our Master.

It was my lot within the last eighteen months to be called upon to assist in depositing the remains of a poor sister in the silent tomb. She lived in the outskirts of a city. In this city there is a congregation of disciples of Christ. I had the burial announced at the regular Lord's day meeting. It was to take place at four in the evening. When the hour arrived, to my astonishment, not one that heard the announcement was present. A few friends and sorrowing relatives accompanied the corpse to the cemetery. Brethren, that soul was as precious in the sight of God as the richest son or daughter in that proud city. Will you please to remember that Lazarus was comforted, and the rich man was tormented.

But, since then, I accompanied another lifeless body to the tomb. Was he a Christian? He professed to be. He was also a prominent worker in a popular human organization. With pomp and display he was escorted to the city of the dead. Men arrayed in regalia, glistening swords, and badges of mourning, surrounded the brilliant coffin with its rapidly decaying contents. Professed christians and men of the world joined in the responses of ritual and in prayers. This display brought saints and sinner, believer and skeptic, from far and near, and unitedly they sang.

"Hark from the tomb a doleful sound,
Mine ears attend the cry;
Ye living men come view the ground,
Where you must shortly lie."

Perhaps men went away from that spot with the determination to try to gain an entrance into that organization that showed such an interest in a departed brother. The moral is apparent to every thinker. We need greater zeal and stronger faith in God's plan of redemption from sins. How full of excuses we are! I know brethren who do not meet to worship with the children of God, because of the wife's infirmities. I know others who live too far away from the meeting house. These same brethren are promptly at their stations at the regular periods of the assembly of the lodge? Is the health of the good wife any better, my brother? Have you moved any nearer town? Ah! it is summed up "in a nut-shell." You had rather attend these meetings than to meet with your brethren in the worship in the "One Body." You say I like "our fraternity." The members are compelled to see to the wants of the needy. A committee is at once appointed to see to the sick. The widow must be cared for. The orphan must be educated. Who says this must be done? The laws of "our institution" demand it sir.

My dear brother, the laws of "our King" are no less imperative. These things, and more too, are demanded of His subjects. Will you be more obedient to the laws of man than to the laws of King Jesus?

You tell me again that in your order all necessary expenses are met, because there is system in "our finances." Dues must be paid, and as a consequence our treasury is always supplied. Is the law that regulates your finances any more binding than the laws of Christ on that subject? Away with such reasoning!

I am oftentimes surprised and shocked to hear such positions taken by my brethren. I do not abuse these institutions, but, dear brethren, I would labor to exalt the church in your estimation. I appeal to you to work in the body of Christ. I apprehend when this is done, your time, your talent, your charity, your good work, your means, your all, will have been taxed to a sufficient enlargement of your soul to qualify you for an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God.

The Master Overseer has a vineyard in which he intends for you to labor. Let's stand shoulder to shoulder in the contest against sin.

J. S. D.

The very same excuse is rendered by the advocate of "missionary societies." The church will not send the gospel to the heathen, hence the "missionary society" is born to do this work." If the men who claim to be Christians, and who pay into these human societies from ten to twenty dollars per year, would contribute that amount and put forth the same exertion in other ways for the church that they do for these societies the church could do a thousand-fold more good, and God would be glorified where He is now scoffed at.

LIGHT WANTED.

In the Texas Department of the "O. P. G.," March 27, I find a letter from Bro. Young, giving an account of his trip from Burnet to Llano, Mason and Menardville. In a former number of the same paper I notice that Bro. Young had been sent out an evangelist by the Sherman congregation to work in Menard county. Brother Young was located at Burnet, and it is presumed was a member of the Burnet congregation. Is it in accordance with the teaching of the scriptures for a congregation in one section of the country to send a member of a congregation from another section work as an evangelist in a destitute field, and a congregation in still another section to formerly set apart this evangelist for the work by fasting, prayer, and the imposition of hands?

Bro. Young went to Mason to have this done. He says, "I can never forget the deep solemnity of the occasion, and the weighty responsibilities assigned to me." Sherman sends him out and supports him in the work, and Mason consigns to him the weighty responsibilities of the work. Dear brethren is this procedure scriptural?

Would that all destitute fields were supplied with God fearing, earnest workers for the master. God has instituted the way that it is to be done. Is this the way to begin the work?

J. S. D.

No! it is not "Scriptural," but we suppose it "works well" for all parties participating in it. It is only slothful "old fogies" who cling to scriptural ways. Progress calls for "state meetings" and "State boards." You are behind the times, away out there in the back woods of Kimble county, Bro. Durst; you must attend the next state meeting and catch up. I move that Maior Penn and the "boy preacher," Pearson, be declared honorary members of the "State meeting." Now, Bro. McPherson, please don't oppose this move.

DAUBING WITH UNTEMPERED MORTAR.

The Prophet Ezekiel, in chapter XIII, 10, 14, says, "because, even because they have reduced my people, saying, peace, and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar. Say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall; there shall be an overflowing shower, and ye, oh great hailstones shall fall, and a strong wind shall rend it.

Lo, when the wall is fallen shall it not be said unto you, where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it? Therefore, thus saith the Lord God, I will even rend it with a stormy wind, in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to consume it.

So will I bring down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof, and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

I ask the reader to turn to the chapter and read all of it. The lesson that we may learn from this quotation is:

1. It is wrong to cry peace when there is no peace.
2. The true prophets of God will not hold their peace (cease to cry aloud and spare not) while those false prophets, (preachers) builders, are doing this daubing business.

Let it not be forgotten that I am writing for my own brethren, (spiritual Israel). The trouble with some of them is, they have turned their ears away from the truth, (just what is the matter with the Austin church).

I do hope that all true soldiers of the cross (preachers and editors) will not cease to shower down the great hailstones of divine truth upon this mass of untempered mortar until it is annihilated, consumed—too much wood, hay and stubble, "philosophy and vain deceit," being built on the divine foundation.

Brethren, let us not play around the outer court of this pile of sectarian rubbish, (false churches), but let us enter the inner temple, walk up its broad aisles, survey its lofty domes, and, if possible, lay hold of its main pillars and bring down the whole superstructure with a crash.

The Prophet says, in the fourteenth verse, "the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall." The Prophet says, God will do it. How will he do it? I answer through his word. Paul said the time would come when they (that is, his disciples), will not endure sound doctrine, and that time is now.

The Austin church won't endure it, and many others that I know of, but let them chafe if they want to, notwithstanding. Paul says, "preach the word."

Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? Yes, brethren, if we will preach the word it will burn up this wood, hay and stubble, "the modern pastor, missionary societies, sect baptism," and such like.

God's word is like a hammer that breaks in pieces, therefore, let us use the sledge hammer of divine truth on these sectarian idols that we may break them in pieces, and then build upon the divine foundation gold, silver, and precious stones, to God only wise be glory, through Jesus Christ forever.

A. MCGARY.

DEAR BROTHER: Please answer the following:

1. Is it right for an Elder to have or allow a play party at his house?
2. Does it accord with the teaching of the word of God for another Elder to play the violin at such a party for the amusement of those assembled?

3. Is an Elder justifiable, with his son, to meet with those without the body of Christ with Fiddle and Accordion, to practise in order to give an entertainment for the purpose of raising money to buy an organ?

VOX.

We answer:

1. That it does not seem to us to comport with christian character for any member of Christ's body to have at his own house, or participate in at the house of another, what we understand to be meant by "a play party. These parties never tend towards spiritual improvement, but are actuated and vivified by a spirit of hilarity that never fails to mark them as the "works of the flesh." See Gal. v, 19, 22. And "they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit."

We think that at one of these "play parties" would be an uncomfortable place for Christ's disciples to be found when He returns to the earth. We dare say that none of them would be pleased to know that He would find them at such a place. Why, then, attend them? We cannot keep anything secret from God. Open unto Him are all of our actions.

2. We do not consider playing the Violin at such places any worse than taking any other part in such giddy and frivolous merry-making entertainments. Christians should abound in the work of the Lord. Those who go to and take part in these worldly amusements, if they do not lose all interest in church work, lose their influence upon others for good, and, hence, are become unprofitable servants.

When a christian begins fiddling for parties, if he is not in the devils service it looks very much like he is trying to be. There is no more harm or sin in a fiddle than in any other inanimate thing, but the harm is to be found in the taste of christians for the things of the world—"the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life which are not of the Father, but of the world." "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

3. We answer, that this would look like "killing two birds with one stone" for the devil. Fiddling and frolicing is no part of the "work of the Lord;" then it must be the work of the devil, since there are but the two sources.

Then, again, any work that has for its end the putting of an organ in the congregation of the Lord, is bound to be the work of the adversary! An organ brought in the church always brings discord; hence, no one but a servant of the devil would do such work. It adds to what God has appointed. See Col. III, 16, 17.

Persons may innocently do this work, but that does not make it any more the work of the Lord, nor any less the work

LAPORT, IND., APRIL, 24, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I have just entered a new field of labor. I am located in the city of LaPort, a city of 8000 inhabitants. The city is almost wholly given to idolatry, or sectism, which is no better. There are a few, however, who endeavor to worship in the spirit and truth. For the sake of that few, and at their request, I have come here to try to establish true christianity.

There is a congregation here of the Progressionists, as they are sometimes called. (They call themselves Christians). I expect more opposition from them than from the other sects.

When persons who know the truth purposely depart from it they become much more obstinate, spiteful and perverse than those who never knew the truth. With them it is a willful abandonment of the truth, and it opens the way for the ingress of all manner of evil and wickedness into the heart.

These broad gaugers are seeking the honor of the world, the honor of men, and hence they try to please all. Paul says, "for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."—Gal. I, 10.

It seems to me very strange that any person should be willing to displease God to please men. It must be an offence to God for one to acknowledge falsehood to be truth; or that any one may believe and practice falsehood, and yet be acceptable to God. But such is the position of all those who admit that among all sects there are many good christians.

What a monstrous idea! Each sect has its creed. Each creed differs from every other creed. As they all differ the one from the other, no two of them can be true. And if one be true all the others must of necessity be false. Then, all those who are governed by those false creeds must be offensive to God, unless God takes as much delight in falsehood as in truth.

But, each party says, my creed is like the bible. This is false, for if each creed was like the bible the creeds would be alike, which is not true. But, suppose that we admit that all the creeds are like the bible, what then?

Why, if they are all like the bible, then surely the bible would answer in their stead. If they are not like the bible they are false. If they are false, they are sinful. If they are sinful, then all who are governed by them are living under sin. If living under sin, they are not acceptable to God. If not acceptable to God, we cannot be acceptable to God if we bid them God speed by accepting them as christians, and engaging in their worship, as many of our people, and even preachers, do.

With some who claim to be christians it appears to be a favorite idea that all religious parties should affiliate and reconize each other as christians. But if we were to do this, would we be a peculiar people? Would this be loyalty to Christ to admit that all religions are pure and as good as His?

If we do this, do we not admit that all the systems of religion extant are of God; or else that any system, though man-made, is as good as God's system? Such a course as the above is degrading the authority of God, and tends to lead the people to disregard the bible, and to ignore its teaching.

The man who will attempt to preach or write, and ignore the difference between the church and the various denominations, and who will leave the impression on the minds of the people that it makes no particular difference what one believes or teaches, so they are sincere, is not a safe guide for the people.

He is either too ignorant, or too dishonest to teach. God is one, the truth is one, the faith is one, the church is one. There is one body and one spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one immersion, one God and Father of all.

I am glad that you and many others are earnestly contending for the faith that was once delivered to the saints. Let us hold fast to the form of sound words. Let us vigorously wield the sword of the spirit until the hosts of false teachers are vanquished.

I remain, yours for the defense of the truth,

I. C. STONE.

“SIGNS.”

We have received a letter from a brother of this State, calling our attention to some positions of a friend of ours, who once claimed to be of us, but who went out from us that it might be made manifest that he was not of us.

This brother writes that our friend says that we repudiate God's word, only so much of it as subserves our purpose in the propagation of "Alexander Campbell's plea."

He says that we use part of the Savior's language in His commission, as given by Mark, and throw the balance away. He claims that the signs which our Savior said should "follow them that believe," extends to our time, and that the only reason that these signs and wonders are not being manifested now, is because we do not believe—have not faith.

As to our friend's charge that only so much of God's word as will serve the purpose of defending "Alexander Campbell's plea"—"our plea"—is used by us, we are sorry to have to agree that it is true with a large and popular element of our brethren. They are sacrificing much of the holy language of God's Apostles on the altar of "our plea."

But when we come to this friend's position, that the promise of "these signs" extends to our time, we protest against it as being wholly without a shadow of authority.

When he says that the reason these signs are not manifested now is because we have not the faith, we will agree with him, under proper restrictions or limitations.

Faith comes by hearing the word of God (or reading it) in its proper diviions. Out of its proper divisions God's word is made into a confused mass of jargon. This is the way our friend uses it. His failure to comply with Paul's injunction, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," has led him "into the ditch," and he is crying out for a sign! Poor benighted creature. He "needeth to be ashamed," because he does not "rightly divide the word of truth." Yes, the reason we do not look for these signs today is because we have not the faith. The reason we have not the faith, is because when we study God's words in its proper divisions—from which faith comes, we see that these signs passed away with those men who gave us the word.

While these God-sent men were preparing the terms of the new and better covenant, in which, "according to God's divine power, he has given to us all things that pertain unto life and Godliness," these signs were with them to be used themselves, or imparted to others, as the circumstances demanded.

A man who will divest himself of the bias and prejudice of his early training—empty himself of himself—and with an honest heart (for in a dishonest heart truth will not take root,) take the New Testament as the instruction of God, with the sole purpose of learning what it teaches, and determine to subject his thoughts and vain imaginations to its teaching, can not fail to see that those "signs" were an actual necessity for that age—the age in which the New Testament was being made—and that since the “perfect law of liberty” has been completed and furnished to the world, that necessity for “signs” has ceased to exist, and hence these “signs” have ceased to follow the believers.

Where and when there was a necessity, God furnished the “signs;” When the necessity ceased to exist, He ceased to give the “signs.” It is only the idle curiosity of a wicked and adulterous people that clamor for a “sign.”

It is the very worst phase of rebellion to “demand a sign,” or anything more than God’s word. God has left all such rebels without excuse, by furnishing all of the evidence that reason could ask.

About fifteen hundred years before the babe of the manger was born, God separated the seed of Abraham from all other peoples of earth by a partition wall—the law of Moses. He became the God of these people for the good of the world. Through them He manifested his wisdom and power to the bystanding world and to unborn generations. When he separated these people and became their God, it was as if He had said to all other peoples, born and unborn, “All hail! I am going to tell the fortunes of this people that the world may know that I, God, have spoken.”

Through them He promised the Christ; told of whom (a virgin) he should be born, and where. He said, “then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing.”

His Son, the Christ, did come at the time, the place, and of the virgin, as He had said. When He came, He did open the eyes of many blind, loosed the tongue of the dumb, and caused the lame to leap for joy. In short, this Jesus was accompanied with such miracle working power as to compel right reason to recognize His God-hood.

Those who rejected Him as Christ, did so from prejudiced blindness, or a dishonest heart, and not because He failed to give signs, or work enough miracles.

If He had not worked miracles among the people, they and we would have been armed with some excuse for rejecting Him as the Christ of God.

He said to a caviling multitude: “If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. There is another that beareth witness of me. Ye sent unto John, and he bears witness unto the truth. * * * He was a burning and a shining light, and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.

But I have greater witness than that of John; for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me. * * *

If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in Him. But Christ left nothing undone that reason could demand.

And, when He had done all His work

even awaking out of the deep sleep of the tomb, to verify His word and show forth the power of Him whose will He came to do, He ascended to His Throne at the right hand of His Father, and from that center of power, sent to His chosen witnesses a promised Spirit, by which they were led into all truth, that God desired the world to have, and by which they were given "Signs," and the power of transferring them to other believers, as they might see a necessity.

The mission of the apostles was to do Christ's will as He had done His Fathers. As He needed this power to exemplify or to attest His claim of having come from the Father, so they needed it to show that they were sent and authorized and empowered of Him.

Now, we have four books, Mathew, Mark, Luke and John, telling us of Christ's birth, life and wonderful and beneficent works. These books also tell us of His choosing certain men to "go and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe," etc, etc.

We also have a book telling us that they did "go." It also tells us that these signs did follow them and certain believers. If a man believes that these men went as directed, and that Christ fulfilled his promise to them, we need only to ask him to go with us to the record of their labor, under that commission, and in the light of that record, and in the spirit of honest inquiry, see how Christ's language is to be understood when He said these signs shall follow them that believe." For just as these signs "followed," as taught us in that record, is just as Christ must be understood upon this point.

If these signs were to follow immediately upon belief—that is without any sort of intervention, then we shall expect the the record to show that they did; and if they were to follow mediately—that is through some intervening medium, we shall expect that to be shown.

Now, what does the record show? In the first preaching done under that commission, we see that about three thousand believed; but nothing is said as to how they received these signs, whether immediately or mediate.

But we have an account of Philip preachig in Samaria; and when they believed his preaching they were baptized, both men and women. Then Simon, the sorcerer, believed, and when he was baptized he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done."

According to our friend's theory, Simon, instead of wondering, ought to have been working these miracles himself, and so ought the other men and women who had not only "believed," but had been baptized.

But we see that when John and Peter came down from Jerusalem and laid their hands on them, they received the Holy Spirit; who believes that they were able to work miracles before this? and yet they "believed." So the Savior's language must be studied in the light of subsequent events.

Our friend says, that only faith is necessary to a possession of this miracle working power. We see, in the record of the above, that he is mistaken. Again, Paul, in writing to the Roman brethren, says: I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end that you may be established."

Our friend would say there was no use in Paul's contemplated visit to them. Why? Because Paul had just said of them, "I thank God, through Jesus Christ, for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world."

Paul did not write under the hallucinating influences that our friend does. He knew that for them to possess these powers or signs, that hands must be laid upon them. Then in the light of God's word, why are not those signs with us to day?

The answer is found when we find why they were not with these Roman brethren when the apostle wrote his letter.

Paul has not made a journey to us. But we have what they did not, and "it is able to build us up in the most holy faith, and give us an inheritance among all them that are sanctified" the word of Christ, telling his chosen preachers to go and preach the gospel that should save all nations. And, thanks to God, while we have not their "signs," we have that gospel in its perfectness, and it is able to make us wise unto salvation.

The man who does not feel armed and equipped for the conflict with spiritual wickedness, with the word of God, the sword of the spirit, but clamors for "signs," would bring the apostles to the death of martyrdom and Christ upon the cross a second time.

Oh, how thick must be the veil that obscures from an honest heart the light that is so clear, and that would so effectually hush the cry for a "sign!"

In the day when our primitive brethren had the New Testament in earthen vessels, and workers of miracles, they were preparing for the world a perfect system, and Paul said that, "when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

They were God's means or instruments working by parts to make the perfect. God's word is perfect without "signs, and will live and abide forever.

When a man will denounce a people as infidels, because they do not believe that these "signs" extend to our time, and he claims to believe that they do and that belief is all that is necessary to the working of miracles, he ought to know that if he can't work them, that he is a refutation of his own theory.

We have heard of such a man being called on to exemplify his faith, but instead of doing so he said, "I am not in the sneak business!"

TO THE READERS OF FIRM FOUNDATION.

DEAR BRETHREN, SISTERS AND FRIENDS: I feel like having a good family talk with all of you about our paper, and in our talk we want to speak loud enough for others to hear. You know that in many places THE FIRM FOUNDATION has met with violent opposition, and, strange to say, some of the most violent opposers of it are those who never read it.

"It is too personal;" "it is riding a hobby;" "it will cause division;" etc. etc. They cannot say that its teachings are untrue. But another method of opposition has been adopted by some, that rivals the low trickery so common in American politics, and vulgarly called "mud slinging."

Some preachers, and some not preachers, unable to answer the arguments and reasonings against their unscriptural practices, have sought to deaden the influence of THE FIRM FOUNDATION by "evil surmisings" and insinuations against Bro. A. McGary, and some of the writers.

I tried to ascertain, in one community, the source of these evil surmisings, and of course failed. "They say" seems to be the envious fellow, who, not content with discarding the truth, seeks to pull down and besmirch a christians' character by evil surmisings, dark hints, and doubtful shakes of the head.

Well, as to myself, I have but little to say. In the past I have committed some grave errors, made false steps; nor do I now claim either infallibility or pefection. But, realizing my own weakness, I lean for support upon God's word, upon His exceeding great and precious promises in Christ, and press onward for the glorious prize to be awarded to the faithful.

I desire, however, to say some things about Bro. McGary. Brethren have asked me "what about this report that Bro. McGary don't stand well with the Austin church?" Having visited Austin I am enabled to say this much: That there is no charge whatever against Bro. McGary's character, either at Austin, or Madisonville, where he was an Elder in the congregation.

The difleulty in Austin is, that Bro. McGary first wrote a series of letters to Gospel Advocate about the unscriptural teachings and doings of Pastor W. E. Hall, and rebuked the church for their worldly-mindedness. Bro. McGary was granted a letter of commendation by this Austin church, while W. E. Hall was pastor.

There are some true, earnest christians in Austin, who approve Bro. McGary's course. Should any one desire any more information about this matter let them address the Elders of the church at Austin. I should not have mentioned these matters at all, but for the interest I feel in THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and in its circulation.

Friends, bestir yourselves, extend the circulation, let'the people have the truth, and let them know that there are yet many in Israel who have not bowed the knee to "the God of this world."

The destructive flood of humanisms now being poured upon the church must be stayed. Every true soldier of the cross must rally to the standard of truth. Let us have God's word pure and unmingled; the seed of the kingdom must be sown, not the seed of sectarianism. God's word sown in the heart produces christians, not sectarians.

Bro. Lipscomb, in G. A., January 7, 1885, says, "The word of God is the seed of the kingdom. Every good plant in that kingdom grows from this seed. Every plant in that kingdom should spring direct from the word of God. Any plant that does not spring from that seed must be rooted up. God is the husbandman. He trained the plants just as He would have them grow. So, any plant in the vineyard of the Lord not according to the original pattern, is trained by another husbandman than God. It becomes the degenerated plant of a strange vine to God, and must be destroyed." Amen!

Let every reader get up a club; remember that the summer campaign is at hand; the questions discussed in FIRM FOUNDATION are vital ones, and should be read far and near.

Sectarianism, folly, fashion and liberalism are deadly foes to truth, whether in or out of the church, and we ask your help that we may reach the minds and hearts of the people.

Yours for the truth,

J. W. JACKSON.

HILLSBORO, HILL COUNTY TEXAS.

We were not apprised of the fact that a report was being circulated that the Austin church had withdrawn from us, until Bro. Jackson's visit to Austin recently.

The only complaint that we have ever known of the church making, was at our opposition to "modern pastors," and our unstinted protestations against their vieing with other human institutions in their hobnobbing "sociables."

Bro. Jackson is correct in stating that the church gave us a letter of commendation while W. E. Hall was its "pastor." We do not claim to "stand well" with the ruling element of this church, and here take occasion to state that we never will so long as that boon is only to be purchased at the price of a surrendered conscience.

And yet, we have a sufficient confidence in the honor and veracity of the Elders (?) to refer all who may be concerned in this report, to them, and we appeal to their answer as a refutation of this calumnious report.

We do not claim to be free from faults and sins; but we do say that, during the something more than two years that we have spent at Austin, we have heard of no charge against us, nor complaint, save such as are mentioned above.

If there are such charges, although we are disconnected from this church, we are ready to waive that and meet any charge they may have against us. Yet we do not recognize the "Austin church" as Christ's body—think we are fully prepared to show that they are not.

If they have not apostatized from the faith once delivered to the saints, then every "body" in the land that uses the Bible, in any way, and song books, and bread and wine, are all alike, the church of Christ.

RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—2 Tim. II, 15.

Our object in quoting this scripture is to call the attention of our readers mostly to the admonition of the Apostle Paul to Timothy to rightly divide the word of truth; but, before we do that, we desire our readers to carefully read the first fifteen verses of this chapter, as we wish to call their attention to other matters in the lesson.

You will notice in the first verse that Paul calls Timothy his son. In what sense was Timothy Paul's son? not in a natural sense, or according to the flesh, but he was his son in the sense in which he addressed him as his son.

Paul had been one of the greatest persecutors of christians that ever lived. He said he verily thought he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, and he did so, and he shut many of the saints up in prison, and gave his voice against them when they were put to death, and punished them in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme, and being exceedingly mad against them persecuted them even unto strange cities.

Oh, how honest and how zealous he was in the service of the devil, but his honesty and zeal did not make him right, nor do the same traits make people right now, unless they are directed by the word of the Lord.

He was on his way to Damascus with authority from the chief priests to bind all who called upon the name of the Lord, and at midday he saw a light shining round about him, and those that were with him, above the brightness of the sun, and when they were all fallen to the earth he heard a voice saying unto him Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the goads; and he said, who art thou, Lord? and the Savior said, I am Jesus whom thou persecuted.

This language shows plainly that when christians are persecuted, Christ is persecuted. The above facts are recorded.—Acts xxvi, 9, 15. And now the Savior says, but arise and stand upon thy feet for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose (notice the language of the Savior) to make thee a minister and witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee, delivering thee from the people and the gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, (what for?) to open their eyes, (what eyes, the eyes of their understanding—Eph. i, 18), to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan to God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith that is in me."—Acts xxi, 16, 18.

Notice the language of the Savior; he did not appear to Paul to convert him, because he had committed the converting power (the gospel) into the hands of his apostles, earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power might be of God, and not of men; but he appeared to him to make him a minister and a witness, and send him to the people and the gentiles, (what for?) to open their eyes (what eyes?) the eyes of their understanding—Eph. 1, 18; to turn them from darkness to light; that light that was adapted to the eyes of their understanding, and from the power of satan to god, (and now the object of that), that they might receive the forgiveness of their sins, and if they continued faithful until death, an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

We find that Paul was faithful to the truth committed to him, and went to preaching immediately, verse 19; and he preached to Timothy, opened his eyes, turned him from darkness to light, begot him, quickened him, made him alive to the subject of christianity, in reference to which he had previously been dead, hence he calls him his son, his son in the gospel.

He also writes to that large congregation at Corinth, calls them sons, reproves them of their sins, and then says "though you have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have you not many fathers, for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

Here he speaks definitely and plainly of the means he used to beget them, quicken them, or make them alive. They had been dead in trespasses and sins, but now they are made alive by Paul's preaching.

Well, says one, did the Holy Spirit have nothing to do in that great work? Why, yes; the Holy Spirit was in Paul preaching through him to the people, just as he did through Peter, on the day of Pentecost, and when sinners give heed to the same gospel now that Paul and Peter preached they are begotten, or made alike in the same way.

Let me give a money illustration, and that will attract attention, and be understood. A man with whom we have been acquainted all our lives, and know him to be strictly truthful and honest, concludes that he is not making money fast enough, and that he will go out on our western plains in search of gold, and finding a district of country abounding in the precious metal he determines to write back to his friends and invite them to go out and share with him in the rich mines he has discovered.

His friends, previous to this time, have been dead to the subject of gold diggings, but when they get his letter giving such a glorious description of the mines, and they believe what he says, it begets a desire in them to get some of that gold. They are now made alive in reference to a subject about which they had been dead. Ask them what brought about that change, and one will tell you that that friends letter did it, and another will tell you that the writer did it, and both tell the truth, and no mystery about it. Their friend did it by or through his letter.

So our Heavenly Father, by his spirit through his Apostles, writes to us about a country up yonder that abounds in riches that are incorruptible, undefiled, and that will never fade away. He tells us how to get there, and the dangers that beset us on the road, but assures us if we continue faithful, having started right, that we will obtain the inheritance.

Now, these things are revealed in the gospel, and is there not more power in that to quicken, beget, or make alive, than there is in the word of man? After calling Timothy his son, Paul tells him to be strong, (strong in what?) not in politics, or philosophy, or astronomy, but in the grace (or system of favor) that is in Christ Jesus.

He speaks of the same grace in Titus II, 11, "For the grace of God that brings salvation (and that is the grace that we are interested in,) hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly. Now, what teaches these things but the gospel? Then Timothy was admonished to be strong in the gospel.

He illustrates the christian life by that of a soldier, and says that the soldier does not entangle himself with the affairs of this life, and the reason why he does not, is, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. Brethren, let us be careful that we don't become so entangled with the affairs of this life that we will not please the Captain of our salvation.

He also tells him that if a man strive for masteries, (or strives in the games), yet is he not crowned except he strives lawfully, (or according to law). What is law? A rule of action for the government of those under the law. What law was he talking about? The law of the Lord—Psalms IX, 7. The law of the spirit—Rom. VIII, 2. The perfect law of liberty.—James I, 25. The royal law, 2, 8; all having reference to the same law.

How important that we learn that law, and strive according to it; he also assures us that if we believe not, yet Christ abides faithful; he cannot deny himself, he cannot go back on his word, he will keep all of his promises and execute all his threats, whether we believe or not.

Now for the subject of rightly dividing the word of truth, verse 15. You will notice the Apostle not only tells Timothy to divide the truth, but to divide it right. A regiment of soldiers may be in the employ of our government defending our western frontier, their time of service is out, they want their pay, the pay master at Washington sends the requisite amount to the pay master of the regiment and tells him to rightly divide it amongst the regiment, and he divides it equally, but that is not right, for the Colonel and the subordinate officers are entitled to more pay than the common soldiery, and an equal division is not right. So there are portions of scripture that applied to the Apostles, and to no one else, other portions to the elders of the congregation and to no one else, others to the deacons, others to christians generally and to no one else, others to sinners, those out of Christ, aliens and no one else.

But what is the word of truth that Paul tells Timoty to rightly divide; is it the whole bible? Must sinners begin at Gnesis and read to Revelation in order to learn what they must do to be saved? If so, but few will be saved. I am intimately acquainted with a lady who became deeply concerned about her salvation, and she went to her preacher and asked him what she must do, and his reply was "wait on the Lord, wait, I say, on the Lord." Last of 27th Psalm. The trouble with that preacher was, he knew nothing about the word of truth, let alone rightly dividing it.

No man can go back of Matthew and tell a sinner what is necessary for him to do to be saved, or a christian how to live the christian life. The word of truth is the New Testament. Now for the proof, for no man has a right to take any position in reference to christianity that he cannot establish by the word of the Lord.

When the Savior arrived at that age that he should begin his public ministry, he went to John the Baptist and demanded baptism of him; but John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? John was baptizing the people unto repentance for the remission of sins, he knew the savior intimately as his cousin, (not as the son of God) he had never heard of his committing a sin, hence he refused to baptize him—Mark 1, 4.

Jesus answering him said, suffer it to be so now, thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness.—Matt. III, 13, 15. John baptized him in the River Jordan, and when he came up out of the water the heavens were parted above, and the spirit of God descended in the form of a dove, and abode upon him, and the heavenly Father for the first time acknowledged him publicly to be his son. What a lesson is taught here.

When he obeyed his Father in that institution he acknowledged him to be his son; but now, people claim that God acknowledged them to be his sons and daughters before he would his own son, and that baptism is a non-essential no account. That is the popular teaching. Will God hold such teachers guiltless? Some two or more years after this the Savior took Peter, James and John upon a high mountain and was transfigured before them. Moses and Elias, or Elijah, or John the baptist, I don't know which, were present, and the Heavenly Father again acknowledged him to be his son in whom he was well pleased, and added this time, "hear ye him." You have been hearing Moses the law giver of the old dispensation, and the prophets, of whose prophecies my son is the fulfillment, and now hear him, and they

Again, this same Moses said, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, unto him shall you hearken."—Deut. XVIII, 15. "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I command him, and it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name I will require it of him."—Verses 18, 19.

Stephen in his speech, Acts VII, says that Christ is that prophet of whom Moses spake. John says, "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.—John 1, 17; and the Apostle Paul says, in arguing with the Jews and cutting them loose from the law, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip; for if the word spoken by angels (the law) was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken (who by? not by Abraham, not by Moses, not by David, not by John the baptist,) but by the Lord.—Heb. II, 1, 3; and the Apostle Peter in preaching to Cornelius, says, "The word which God sent unto the children of Israel preaching peace by Jesus Christ (he is lord of all,) that word I say you know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Gallilee, after the baptism which John preached.—Acts x, 36, 37.

And again the Apostle Paul says,

This word of truth is certainly the word of truth that Paul told Timothy to rightly divide. Surely the above quotations prove beyond a doubt that the New Testament is the word of truth of which Paul was speaking; that being so, what is the proper division of the New Testament? And before answering that question I will ask, what is the first step that a sinner must take in order to become a christian?

A man told me, several years ago, that he had been a member of the church seven years. I asked him what was the first step he took to become a member, and he said he did not know. I did not believe he had become a member of the church, but only a member of a church, a human organization.

The first step that a sinner must take to become a christian, is to believe in Christ as the son of God, and his savior, with all his heart, without a doubt, and the first thing the savior has done is to give him the testimony upon which he believes that grand proposition, which testimony is found in Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, which is the principal object of these four books.

Proof: John says, “Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written (what for, John?) that you might believe (believe what; not Catholicism, nor Calvinism, nor Mormonism; nor Campbellism, nor any other ism? for the bible is opposed to and condemns all isms,) that Jesus is the Christ, the son of God, and that believing, you might have life through his name, (or his authority).—John xx, 30, 31.

Luke says he wrote to Theophilus that he might know the certainty of the things wherein he had been instructed.—Luke 1, 4. What John calls belief, Luke calls knowledge, and if Luke and John wrote for the purpose of producing faith in the hearts of those who heard or examined their testimony, did not Matthew and Mark write for the same purpose? And Paul says, “faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.”—Romans x, 17.

When sinners have heard or examined this testimony and believe in Christ, what next? Why, they want, or ought to want to become christians, followers of him in whom they believe, and the next book, the Acts of the Apostles, furnishes them the necessary information, (and no other book does), tells them what the inspired Apostles preached, what the people believed, what they did in order to enter into the kingdom or church of Christ, in order to be translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear son, and after they become christians then comes the epistles, written alone to christians, telling them how to live the christians life, what armors they must wear as soldiers of the cross, that they may fight the good fight of faith until death, that they may obtain an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; then comes the book of Revelation that tells of the revolutions through which the church would pass from the time John was in the Isle of Patmos to the winding up of this dispensation, and describes more particularly and minutely than any of the other writers the happy home the Christians will enjoy beyond the grave, and the rich inheritance that is in store for all the saints, for they are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ.

How exactly the gospel is adapted to man, as he is. No mystery about it.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I do heartily and sincerely agree with Sister Sarai in regard to the dress of the sisters in the church of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. M. A. Barnard asks, is it right to keep the poor away from the house of God, by fine dress? I say it is not; I hope to live to see the day when we will know our sisters and brothers by their dress, conversation and conduct. I am not able to dress extravagantly, but if I were, I would not do it; it would not be setting the right example for others. We, the daughters of God, ought to come out from the world, and let our light shine; it cannot shine through so much finery.

I am willing to do anything the blessed Savior has commanded me, and I believe it is the duty of every sister to take delight in doing the will of the Lord. I hope others will come out and show themselves on the Lord's side. Wishing you success with your valuable paper, I remain your sister in Christ.

The Apostolic Times and Old Path Guide have consolidated under the name of The Apostolic Guide. That is sensible, because it is an economy of forces that will produce better results alike for publishers and patrons. If only some ambitious writer, anxious to bestow the fruit of his wonderful genius on a needy world, and thus "meet a great public want," does not start a new paper under the title of The Old-Path Times! We hope the Guide will be truly apostolic, and that the union may prove every way prosperous.—Standard.

We have thought for a long time that it was willing and ready to trade off the "Old Path," for something new. If it does not cease to participate in and advocate things which it denominates as "unwise, unsafe and unscriptural," it would be well for it to trade off its "Guide" next time, for something else "Apostolic."

[Concluded.]

Another objector says that when the church was persecuted in Jerusalem they were all scattered abroad, except the Apostles, and they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word, therefore, every christian has the divine right to go out and preach the gospel, and "whoever will, let him say come."

The persecution of the church at Jerusalem was the occasion of the going of these preachers; hence, they were not sent, nor did they go voluntarily; they were driven through fear of death.

The narrative does not necessarily imply that every individual christian except the Apostles left Jerusalem. I think it more probable that the "all" refers to those teachers who had rendered themselves extremely obnoxious to the Jews by their ministry of the gospel, and who, for this reason, were the first and principal subjects of persecution.

Besides this, all christians are not qualified to preach the gospel, neither then or now. We may admit that every christian has a right to preach the gospel, and yet prove conclusively that every christian can not preach it.

In the apostolic age the preachers who carried this "strange doctrine" to the people had power to work miracles in order to prove their mission. Some of those scattered abroad are mentioned—Philip—Acts VIII, and others in Acts XI, 19, 21. All of those worked miracles.

Shall we take this scattering abroad as a criterion to govern our going? If so, in what particulars must we be guided by it? Must we wait for the same occasion to arise? A little persecution perhaps might do some of our churches good, by purifying them of the dross that now drags them downward to decay.

If not the occasion, shall we adopt the manner of going afoot and in haste, looking back ever and anon for fear that some fiery Saul may overtake us, and subject us to cruel scourgings? No; this going furnishes us no example of sending the gospel. It rather teaches that God will have His gospel preached to the world, and hence suffered His people to be persecuted and scattered.

If the church now is so selfish, so neglectful of the work assigned to it as to sit at ease in Zion and do nothing to "spread the Gospel," let them heed the above lesson. God may scatter them, subject them to persecution, trials and difficulties, and teach by hard lessons the full measure of their responsibilities.

Individually christians cannot "scatter abroad" and preach the gospel; collectively they can select one or more of their number who are qualified to preach, and send them out to preach Christ and Him crucified. It is claimed, however, that every christian has the right to evangelize, and there is no power to prevent him.

If it is a birth-right, then women should evangelize as well as men; if it is an acquired right, a right other than birth-right, how is it acquired? Will some one please answer? Again, if the whole church were scattered abroad preaching, (except our big preachers) there would be no congregation or assembly, no overseers, no deacons; the whole church would be mouth.

The church must send the preachers, as did the church at Antioch.—Acts XIII. It is denied that Paul and Barnabas were sent out by the church at Antioch. If by this denial is meant that the church conferred no authority upon them, nor added in any way to their

Paul and Barnabas seemed to be content to remain in Antioch; but the church had grown and prospered under their tuition till now it had native teachers and prophets filled with the Holy Spirit and wisdom, and fully capable of teaching and ruling the church. Other fields must be cultivated, other cities hear the word of truth, and the Lord by His Spirit directs the separation and sending away of Paul and Barnabas to the work.

The church at Antioch as the means, in the hands of the Lord, obey the Holy Spirit. It is objected here it was not the church, but certain prophets and teacher in the church acting under the direction of the Holy Spirit. Let us examine the record. "Now, there were in the church that was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers, as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius, of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrach and Saul.

As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Spirit said, separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and lain their hands on them they sent them away."—They went out, and after preaching in many places they returned "to Antioch from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles."—Acts XIV, 26, 27.

Here were five teachers ministering to the Lord. Was it simply a "preachers meeting," or were others present? Evidently their ministering was for the benefit of the church. Even admitting that none were present but the five when the command of the Holy Spirit was given, is it presumable that the three would have sent away Paul and Barnabas without notifying the disciples thereof? It was an important occasion; to send away the two men by whose labors the church had been built up, and further, to send them into places where trials and persecutions awaited them, made this an important occasion,

The prophets certainly did inform the church, for when the two returned they realized that the church had a joint interest in the work that had been done, hence their report was made to them. They were recommended to the grace of God by the laying on of hands, and prayer and fasting. In following this example we are safe and sure to succeed.

Another example of a preacher sent by a congregation we find in Timothy. After his conversion by Paul in his first trip to Lystra, Timothy must have made considerable proficiency in the gospel, so that he was well reported of by the brethren, and Paul wanted him for a companion. Having been pointed out or selected as a competent person to preach the gospel, he was separated to the work by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.—1 Tim. iv, 4. Being thus recommended to the grace of God for the ministry to which he was called, Paul lays his hands on him to bestow the power of working miracles, and thus he is sent by the church and not by Paul.

If there are teachers now in a congregation does not the Holy Spirit speak to them as they minister before the Lord? "The spirit and the bride say come." Does the spirit dwell in the church? If the bride speaks, it must do so by its mouthpiece, the evangelist.

Perhaps our difficulty will be lessened by defining what we mean by "sent." It does not mean official authority, for Paul's authority was received directly from Jesus. Self-sent preachers cannot claim official authority, for if the power sending Him must confer official authority, he being self-sent, has a self-given authority, which, coming from a human source, amounts to nothing.

Jesus, the Christ, is the fountain head of all power and authority in the kingdom of God. His word is the medium through which this is ministered. His subjects here, christians, have the word of truth—the perfect law of liberty—giving full and explicit directions how each one must behave himself in the kingdom, and what each must do to carry on the work of the master.

Hence, the church, or congregation, is directed by the Holy Spirit, through the word, to separate certain ones to the work of an evangelist. They must be sound in the faith, well instructed in the kingdom of God, followers after righteousness, charity, peace, and their hearts aglow with the love of God and tender compassion for their fellow men. If such you have, the congregation, or the overseers say to him, you must not remain here idle, you must go to work, go and preach—and they separate him, or recommend him to the grace of God through fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands.

But is this all? no; the preacher goes out, as did Paul and Barnabas, recommended to the grace of God by the united prayers of the church, carrying with him the recommendation of the church, as did the Apollos when he left Ephesus and went down to Corinth, so that he can say that he was chosen by the church, or churches, to travel and minister to the people the true grace of God.

The church thus sending him is a co-operator or co-worker with him. Nay, more, it realizes that the evangelist is the servant of the church, and hence they "send once and again unto his necessities." They contribute of their substance to his support, rather than to his salary.

"The pay of the preacher." I hate that expression, and yet popular use has made it—almost a part of the gospel. Money, brethren, will not pay the preacher for his preaching, his anxieties and cares, his sacrifices, and his deep and constant solicitude for the welfare of the souls to whom he ministers. No, you cannot pay him with all your wealth, but he will be paid when

Nevertheless, we must talk about the money necessary to his support, and to his help in the work. They that preach the gospel should live of the gospel, is an ordained law of the Lord. Christians are the Lord's stewards, and should give of their substance for the support of the needy, and for the assistance and support of the preacher. "Order is Heaven's first law." In the remedial system all is order and harmony, if one will only follow that which is taught us.

Our contribution should be made regularly, and systematically, hence the injunction to cast into the treasury every Lord's day, as the Lord has prospered us.—1 Cor. XVI, 1, 2. This being done, the service performed for the preacher is by the church, and not individually.

This works good for the preacher, in this respect; it prevents his feeling under obligations to individuals; not knowing who contributes, nor how much each contributes, it lays no ground for a distinction in his mind of "good paying members" and "bad paying ones." On the part of the brethren it does away, to some extent, with that self-glorying principle of "what I did for the preacher." Our contributions should go through this divinely ordained channel. But the money does not come, and plans are devised and set in operation to "raise funds for evangelizing."

The fault or reason that the money does not come is found, first, in the preacher or teacher who has failed to teach the brethren their duties and responsibilities in this matter. Secondly, the lack of liberality on the part of the brethren arises from covetousness, avarice, or lust. Proper teaching in the churches will correct the evil. It must not be supposed that any objection is here urged against any free-will offering that christians may desire to make either in support of a preacher or the poor of the church.

Brethren, the field lies before us, and truly the harvest is plenteous, the laborers few. Daily petitions ascend to God for more laborers, and yet the churches are remiss in their duty. How many are sending out preachers? How many gather into the treasury more than a pittance, and then perhaps give it grudgingly. How many christians give as the Lord has prospered them? and how many preachers are forced to quit the field and engage in "tent-making" for lack of support?

J. W. JACKSON.

One of the most important lessons taught in the holy scriptures will be found in 1 Samuel xv. The principles therein taught are as true now as then, and human nature as exemplified in the conduct of Saul, king of Israel, finds its counterpart now in the camps of spiritual Israel.

Saul, king of Israel, was commanded to "go and smite Amalek and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not, but slay both men and women, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass."

The Amalekites were a sinful nation, descended from Esau, who fought against Israel on their journey through the wilderness. They "feared not God," and had, in common with the Canaanites, "filled up the cup of their iniquity." God determined to destroy them, and Saul is commanded to do the work.

In obedience to the command he gathered his army, went down to the country of the Amalekites and "utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword. But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatling, and of the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them; but everything that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly."

With the booty thus spared, Saul and his army start out on their return home and are met on the way by the prophet of God, Samuel, to whom Saul hastens to report his obedience: "Blessed be thou of the Lord, I have performed the commandment of the Lord." The man of God replies: "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? And Saul said, they have brought them from the Amalekites, for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God, and the rest we have utterly destroyed.

Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the Lord, and have gone the way which the Lord sent me, and have brought Agag, the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. But the people took of the spoils, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal.

And Samuel said, hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold! to obey is better than sacrifice! and to hearken, than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, He hath also rejected thee from being King. And Saul said unto Samuel, I have sinned, for I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord and thy words, because I feared the people, and obeyed their voice."

The first principle I deduce from this lesson is, that partial obedience is disobedience. Saul had obeyed in part the things commanded, and on his return claimed to "have obeyed the voice of the Lord." Samuel, however, tells him that he had been guilty of rebellion and stubbornness in rejecting the word of the Lord. What he had not done rendered null and void even that which was done. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Jas. II, 10. To neglect God's word and leave undone the things commanded, is evidence of the existence in the heart of rebellion and stubbornness.

Human nature is the same now as in the days of Saul. There are hundreds of men and women claiming to be christians, protesting solemnly that they have obeyed the voice of the Lord, and flattering themselves that their partial obedience will receive the divine approval. God now speaks to us by His son, who is made unto us both Lord and Christ. The Apostles, as ambassadors, teach us plainly what is the will of the Lord.

If, in the former dispensations which have been characterized as the star-light and moon-light ages of religion, every transgression and disobedience was promptly punished, how shall we, who live in the light of the sun of righteousness, escape condemnation if we refuse to hear the voice of Him who speaks to us from Heaven?

A curse is pronounced upon man or angel who will preach any other gospel than the gospel of Christ. Gal. I, 9. The same gospel must be believed (Romans I, 16), and obeyed in order to salvation.—Thes. I, 8. How many of them "teach the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," as they are taught in the New Testament? People do as they are taught. Will their obedience to a perverted gospel, or to

The voice of the Lord requires that man must confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus. This confession is made unto salvation, and was a part of the word of faith or gospel that Paul preached.—Rom. x, 8, 10. It is well known that this confession is not made by those who join the denominations; nay, more, they reject it as insufficient, and substitute in lieu of it some of the good things of human wisdom. It is very plain then, that those who have left undone this plain requirement of the word of faith have never obeyed from the heart the teachings of Christ.

The word of God plainly teaches us that "baptism is for the remission of sins;" that it is a burial in water, and a resurrection therefrom; and yet, hundreds will hear the plain words of scripture read, and, Saul like, bring something of their own choosing as a sacrifice to God. This principle of half-hearted service, partly doing a thing commanded, or only doing a part of the things commanded, must not be confined to the elementary principles of the faith. Christians must work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, and this is to be done by hearkening to the voice of the Lord.

I shall next notice the reason assigned by Saul for his disobedience. They spared the best of the sheep and oxen in order to sacrifice them to God. Men always find an excuse for not doing what the Lord requires. The human heart is very stubborn; it must say what is good to be offered to God; yes, it must be satisfied, and it generally succeeds in satisfying itself with that service which harmonizes best with its own lusts. But such service is an abomination to God; "he that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." Saul had turned away his ear from the voice of the Lord, and hearkened to the voice of the people; and they, in disobedience, bring a polluted offering to God. "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice!" The sacrifice intended here was of animals that had been devoted to destruction, condemned as unclean; hence, obedience is better than such sacrifices.

It appears from the narrative that the idea of offering this sacrifice originated with the people. It would gratify their pride to make such a great offering to God, and be an exhibition to all of the prowess of their arms.

Saul feared the people and obeyed their voice. Ah! you say, how weak he must have been, and how sinful such a course of action. God had blessed him abundantly, and made him king over His people, and he weakly submits to their dictation and disobeys God. Before you proceed too far, my dear reader, just ask yourself how often you have obeyed the voice of the people instead of the voice of the Lord? How often have you been influenced in your actions by the thought, "what will the people say?"

and republics have heard this voice and tremblingly obeyed it. In our own legislative halls "the voice of the people is regarded as the voice of God." The baneful effects of this old adage, "vox populi, vox dei," "the voice of the people is the voice of God," are seen not only in society and government, but also in the church. Everywhere it has been heard, and obeyed; sin disgrace and shame has been the result.

It was the voice of the people that said to Aaron, "Up, make us gods which shall go before us," and Aaron obeyed their voice and made them a golden calf, and thus brought a great sin upon them.—Ex. xxxii.

It was the voice of the people that demanded of Samuel a king like unto the nations that surrounded them, and God permitted them to have their own way, under the solemn protest that He would not deliver them from the sore evils into which their perverse spirit was leading them.—I Sam. viii.

The voice of the people also demanded prophets who should prophesy smooth things unto them, and priests like to themselves, who would burn incense to their idol Gods.—See Isa. xxx, 10; Hos. iv, 6, 14; Mal. ii, 1, 9.

The same sad story repeated again and again. Kings, prophets and priests through fear, obey the voice of the people and bring upon themselves the wrath of God.

It was the voice of the people that would have made Jesus a king.—Jo. vi, 10, and only a short time after this the voice of the people demanded His life.

The voice of the people is not the voice of God. Jesus left us an example that we should follow in His steps. He did always the things that pleased the Father.—Jo. viii, 28. Peter and the other apostles when arraigned before the Sanhedrim for preaching the resurrection of Jesus, said: "We ought to obey God rather than man."—Act 5, 20. And Paul, the apostle to the gentiles, says: "Do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men I should not be the servant of Christ."—Gal. i, 10.

This is so plain that comment is unnecessary; nevertheless, to-day this mighty voice is making such clamorous demands of christians that we can scarcely hear a whisper from God's word.

What introduced the organ into the worship of the church?" The voice of the people.

What is it that introduces into the church of God the wicked customs of the world, such as fairs, festivals, jugg-breakings, lotteries, etc? The voice of the people. Such abominations are no more acceptable to God than was the polluted sacrifice of Saul.

What voice is it that is clamoring so loudly for missionary societies? "We want to be like the religious nations around us; see what organizations they have, what sums of money they raise, and what glory and honor is given them for their missionary spirit."

Israel rejected God and demanded a king, that they might be like the nations around them; will you, brethren, reject your King that you may fashion after the religious bodies that now deny His authority?

What has become of that motto of the elder Campbell, "When the bible speaks, we speak, where it is silent, we are silent?" Does God speak plain enough for us to understand? Yes; His word thoroughly furnishes us unto all good works. It tells us what to preach, how, where and when to preach; it tells us how to live as individuals, or as congregations, and if we are constantly doing what the Lord tells us to do, we will have no time to waste with organs, festivals, or societies of any kind. The best society this side of heaven is the church of Christ; He is the head of it, and his word is the rule of action for it to be guided by. Let us heed that word, walk according to his rule, and leave the result with Him.

Christians have been called out of satan's kingdom. They are soldiers, and must put on the heavenly armor furnished them; but they must fight, yes, and be valiant in battle. The Lord has no use for cowards, hence, we must add to our faith, courage. We must not fear what man may do or say, for the Lord has promised "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Remember then that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought, to the obedience of Christ."

As faithful soldiers we must maintain, at all hazards, the authority of our King. The strongholds of sectarianism must be broken down; the vain imaginations of the people in their sinful devices and innovations must be destroyed, not captured as good things and brought into the church; and we must bring all of our thoughts, words and actions in obedience to the word of Christ.

Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice. Do not think to please God by the number of your good deeds, nor by any of your sacrifices that originate in the voice of the people. The commandments of God are not grievous; let us walk humbly in them, and it will be our happy privilege to swell the numbers of those obedient ones who shall be admitted into the heavenly city.

LETTER FROM I. C. STONE.

LAPORTE, IND., May 20, 1885.

DEAR BROTHER MCGARY:

There has been a great deal said and written on the subject of baptism, and especially sect baptism, but I think the subject of so much importance that I feel like writing a few things more with reference to it.

In the first place I desire to ascertain from the scriptures as clearly as possible, what the design of baptism is.

We will, accordingly, go to 1st Peter III, 20. Here the apostle declares that eight persons were saved in an ark by water. In the next verse he declares that it was a corresponding example to baptism that also now saves us.

This declaration of the apostle ought to settle this matter forever; but it is a lamentable truth that with many the declaration of an apostle carries with it little or no authority.

But Peter does not say that those eight persons were saved by water alone; yet, he does declare that they were saved by water. And he further declares that it was a corresponding example to baptism that now saves us.

Then we wish to inquire, in what particulars do the two examples correspond? We read in this same twentieth verse that Noah prepared an ark in which he and his family were saved. So you see they were not saved by the water alone, but by the ark and the water.

But then they were not saved by the ark and the water together, without anything else, for we read again in Heb. XI, 7, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, etc. So we see that it required faith, the ark and the water, all to save them. Does not this correspond to baptism that also saves us? It certainly does.

The water alone will not save us. We must be prepared for the water, as Noah and his family were. He must first have faith, next, he must make the necessary preparations—prepare the ark—a work which he must do himself; and he and his family must enter the ark, all according to the Lord's directions. Now, when they had done all this, then it was that they were saved by the water. So it is with baptism.

When the individual has faith, and makes the necessary preparations for baptism as commanded, then it is that baptism saves him. So they are truly corresponding examples, both ordained of God wholly, and therefore, effective.

Once more they correspond in this: Noah was instructed of God to build the ark, and given precise instructions as to the pattern, and by no means left to guess at the pattern. He was plainly warned of God that he was going to bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy man from off the face of the earth, and that therefore he should prepare the ark. Hence, he was moved with fear.

So it is with baptism; Jesus told precisely what it is for. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Mark XVI, 16. Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—Peter, Acts II, 38. So you see that in this statement of design they correspond.

Another example is found in Romans VI, 2. Here Paul says, "know you not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death, etc. Here he declares that they were all baptized into Jesus Christ. Salvation is in Christ, and if they were baptized into Christ it was evidently to reach salvation. Here, again, the design is most manifest, and nowhere is anyone left to guess at the design.

But some one may say that the baptism in these instances was the baptism of the holy spirit. I scarcely think it necessary to answer so silly an objection; but I will quote Paul a little further for the edification of such. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we also should walk in a new life. So, whatever it was, it was an act of burial, and a resurrection; and they are hardly buried in the holy spirit and resurrected out of it again." If they get out of it they surely lose it. And here it is that we begin to walk in the new life, showing the design that it starts us in a new life.

Again, in Gal. III, 27, Paul says, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. Here the apostle states this fact, that in the act of baptism they had put on Christ. It was an act which they had done, and not something the holy spirit had done for them. They had put on Christ by an act which Christ had prescribed for them, and to which they must yield themselves.

Now, from what has gone before, I think any one who desires, can see the design of immersion, and that it must be an intelligent act of the individual submitting to it. But, to further demonstrate the necessity of an intelligent submission to it, I wish to return to Rom. VI, 17. Here, Paul says, "But God be thanked that notwithstanding you were the servants of sin, you have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you; being then made free from sin you became the servants of righteousness.

When were they made free from sin? When they obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which had been delivered to them.

How had they obeyed the form of doctrine? From the heart. What does the phrase "from the heart," mean? It means with full purpose, understandingly. It is further most evident that the form of doctrine had been clearly stated as a command so they could obey it, and could know when they had obeyed it. By such act they had been made free from sin, because it was an act of faith, without which it is impossible to please God. No act was ever an act of faith performed in obedience to a command when the command was not understood.

The idea that many of our friends and brethren have, that it makes no difference whether persons understand what they do in religious matters or not, is a dreadful idea. If the idea were a correct one, then I see no good reason why the Lord and the apostles should have been so very particular in giving instructions. Why not say to all, do what you suppose to be right, and all will be well?

Such ideas have, in a great degree, been imbibed from the sects. Bringing sectarians into the church under the impression that they were christians before they came into the church, and that they need no change but to step out of Babylon into the church of Christ, has been the fatal mistake of this reformation. Campbell made the mistake, and Campbellites have been,

and yet are, following him. It has filled the church with sectarians. They have so divided the doctrine with sectism that it, in many places, is very thin.

They are now trying to puff it up by boasting and bragging of what great things they are performing with this diluted doctrine. They aim to evaporate it—that is, get it so thin that no one can tell what it is, and then sublimate or condense it into solid sectarianism. I think one or two reverends and an honorable or two took a trip east last week for this very object.

But, my article is growing too long, so farewell for the present.

May God bless you, and all who defend the truth.

I. C. STONE.

A "VENTURE."

"How would our Texas brethren receive Sunday school literature from the Gospel Advocate office? The editors of the Advocate contemplate such a venture, and would be glad to hear from the brethren through the south generally, and especially the Texas brethren, on the subject. It is true this field is pretty well occupied, but we think there is something lacking yet, and these things they hope to supply."

The above we find in the Texas Christian, under "Paragraphs from Tenn., by T. F. Rawlins. We once loved the Gospel Advocate very dearly, because it seemed to have its prow set zionward, and wearing an air of resignation to all obstacles that

It then seemed to fully realize that to steer for zion was to stem the strong, swift current of the broad stream of popularity, and for awhile it nobly and bravely rode the angry waves that rose up in its course, with an air of triumph that gave promise of a safe anchorage in the still waters of truth." But, alas! the current became too strong, and rivals were speeding past with such tempting prize and velocity that the infectious air of emulation struck the Advocate.

In full view and straight ahead the way was still "narrowing," and the billows of opposition running higher and higher. The old pilot who had out-riden so many storms seems to have become panic-stricken. Pulling up stream, with a decreasing cargo, while so many were flying past him smoothly floating with the current and increasing their cargo as they gathered speed, seems to have discouraged the old man at the helm, and he seems to have regarded the wreck of the Advocate on the shore of time even with its prow up stream, as a worse fate than that of changing and running swiftly to an opposite point of the compass.

Brethren, the "Gospel Advocate", which used to stand as a synonym for all such phrases, as stood for the defense of the faith once delivered to the saints, has broken loose from her original mooring and is gradually swinging round to enter the mad race for lucre and the applause of men.

How sad! That grand old paper, which was doubtless inaugurated for the sole purpose of casting the rays of gospel light upon the narrow way, marked by the footprints of the men whose way is bound in earth and heaven, as the way of the king of kings and lord of lords, and whose pages have for so many years shone along that way so brightly, is now beginning to emit only flickering rays.

It is not alone this proposition to engage in the manufacture of "Sunday school literature" that marks so evidently and distinctly a change of base on the part of the Advocate. But when Bro. Lipscomb made an effort to unite with the "Old Path Guide," after his long continued and violent protestations against the course of that paper, he convinced our mind that he either expected to buy the course of Bro. Allen with so many dollars, or sell his own.

His course since has only served to strengthen us in that opinion. He has procured an office editor whose sympathies were wholly with that "missionary society" element, and who has spared no pains, since his connection with the Advocate, to let its readers know that he has undergone no change in sentiment, (and we admire him for it.)

But how does it look to candid minds, on Bro. Lipscomb's part? Of course he has offered his readers some plausible looking excuses for his action in reference to his effort to combine with the "O. P. G."—that is plausible looking when superficially viewed, but when studied in the light of past and subsequent events they seem, to us, to dwindle into mere hollow pretenses.

Brethren, the Advocate is to-day less worthy of the support of those who desire to stand for the defense of the faith of the gospel, than the Standard, or any other paper in the land. It has stood and seen the other papers go into the popular ways of the clamorous, time-serving, degenerating and orthodox-hunting throng, and has disputed every inch of the unhallowed ground that they have traveled over in reaching the treacherous stand point from which they satisfy the demands of false brethren, and lay up for themselves treasure on earth.

And now, the Advocate swings off in the same direction, only gauging its speed by the popular pulse, as it serenely glides over and rides down its own barriers, erected upon the battlefield upon which it has so recently fought its rivals.

Of course the catering element of our brethren will say that we should not have said these things, even if they are true, because Bro. Lipscomb has previously been offended with some things said by us. But we feel it our duty to the cause we love and plead, to speak out against these lamentable facts and circumstances that are conspiring to draw the forces of the Lord into the maelstrom of the god of this world.

There is too much consideration exercised towards men who are prostituting the Lord's institutions to their own fleshly ends and fell purposes. Men are thus often "respected" at the expense of truth. When we come to lay our own plans and interests at the foot of the cross and yield all up to Christ, men's ways and reputations will not be so assiduously guarded, but will suffer exposure just in proportion to the extent that they hinder truth.

We once had great confidence in Bro. Lipscomb as a safe man, as one who would sacrifice self for truth and glory of God, but we confess that we have lost that confidence. Although he treated us in a very unbrotherly way, that was not the cause for our loss of confidence in him. His course in the changes that the Advocate has made, and others sought to be made, are not all.

I will mention one circumstance that proves beyond the possibility of a doubt that he will immolate upon the altar of his own ambition the rights and reputation of others. All of our readers remember that in the argument of the baptismal question, Bro. Lipscomb repeatedly told his readers that Bros. Campbell and Fanning did not understand, prior to their baptism, that baptism was for the remission of sins.

This he might have very honestly and conscientiously done; but we have long since shown, from their own pens, that they did understand that proposition, and hence, that he had misrepresented them, and we called his attention to it. But he has never yet made the correction that the ordinary rules of fairness, much less christainity, demand. We regard his silence upon this matter as a willful misrepresentation of these dead and revered brethren. In what other light can it possibly appear to candid minds?

So long as he could use their names to the advantage of his dogma by giving to them attitudes that they never occupied, palpably misrepresenting them upon a point vital to their relationship to God, his pages were treated to a flippant use of them; they were dragged from their graves and made to stand sentinels over the interests of heresy that they had waged a relentless war upon in life.

Pity upon the man who can become so wedded to any tenet as to surrender his own consistency to its demands; and a thousand times more pity for the poor helpless serf whose fealty is so complete that even when the hallowed memories of the dead are to be insulted by gross misrepresentation, he has not the liberty to say nay!

Such men would consume heaven and earth upon the altar of their ambition if they could. They are dangerous guides in this day, when so much is received from men, and so little is sought out of the pure fountain of truth and life.

After we have seen that the chief editor of the Advocate has made an effort to level the differences between his paper and the O. P. G. by barter; after we have seen him take into the sanctum of the Advocate one who is in full sympathy with the "missionary society;" after we have learned that he tried to put the "Texas Department" in the hands of a stripling of the "missionary society" stamp, and, after we have seen him misrepresent the dead and refuse to correct it when it was shown to him, to support a dogma; after seeing all of these we are not surprised to learn that the Advocate will soon begin the manufacture of lesson leaves, or engage in anything else that will bring it gain or prestige.

THIS IS OUR MOTTO.

"TRUTH FIRST, UNION AFTERWARD, AND UNION ONLY IN THE TRUTH."

The following extract is from J. W. McGarvey, in the Old Path Guide:

"In conclusion I will add, that I have but little sympathy with those brethren who seem to dread disunion among ourselves as the direst of all evils. If we would inspire sensible men around us with a desire for union with us, we must be careful to show them that we do not and will not maintain unity with anything unscriptural, whether it shows itself within our ranks or outside of them. Truth first, union afterward, and union only in the truth. This is our motto."

These are true words, and they need to be repeated many times in these days. If we walk in through the straight gate, and travel in the narrow way, we are united with all who do the same thing. We should not desire to be united with any who walk otherwise. Jesus says, "follow me." All who follow him are in the same company. They teach the same things, they act in the same way. What did Jesus say? How did the Apostles teach and act? These should be the questions.

The divisions that spring up grow out of some departure from the narrow way, some effort to improve upon the things revealed. Then some brother who dreads discord, shouts, "Divisions are dreadful things; let us also adopt this innovation lest there be divisions among us." God forbid! Better be divided from every man in the world, and be right, than to be united to every man in the world at the sacrifice of one single conviction. Jesus expressly says that he came to send divisions; he came to send a sword, not peace, to kindle a fire, and he said he cared not if it were already lighted. We are expressly told to "mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine," and to avoid them. No Christian grows out of neglecting this duty. If men who ruthlessly divide churches by forcing their "expedients" and innovations upon them had been avoided from the beginning, we would now be much freer from the leprosy of schism than we are.

J. A. HARDING.

The above extract is from the Gospel Advocate. It is gratifying indeed to have such "good words and comfortable words" from these distinguished brethren. "Our motto" is an easy solution of a difficult problem, if it be put in practice. Mottoes, however, are more easily formulated than operated, especially when their principles are revolutionary.

The influences brought to bear upon poor weak human nature to hinder the practice of a true principle are both numerous and powerful. The devices of the wicked one are always opposed to the truth, and satan, knowing that a direct denial of the truth would arouse our suspicions as to his true character, comes to us, as he did to mother Eve, with: "Yea, God hath said thou shalt surely die, but he did not mean it."

Tradition and false interpretation make the truth of God of no effect, and when men, inspired with courage, determine to rescue the word of God from the clutches of satan, their efforts are met on every hand by violent opposition, and in the struggle principle is in danger of being swallowed up in human expedients.

What has been the fate of the motto once formulated as the watchword of Protestants: "The Bible and the Bible alone is the religion of Protestants." The answer to this will be a sad commentary on the fidelity of man.

What about the motto of the Elder Campbell: "Where the bible speaks, we speak, where it is silent, we are silent." Ask the pastors, and organists, and society men.

But we are progressing in mottoes, at least, and I believe that the progression is in the right direction. "Our motto" as formulated by Bro. McGarvey, and indorsed by Bro. Harding, is the best of all: "Truth first, union afterwards, and union only in the truth."

True progression is always towards an infallible standard; we have the standard, the truth as it is in Jesus, and it only remains for us to add to our faith courage enough to do what we know to be right.

"What did Jesus say? How did the Apostles teach and act?" Jesus said to those who believed on Him: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—Jo. VIII, 31, 32. John, the beloved Apostle said:—"Look to yourselves that we lose not things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward; whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ he hath both the Father and the Son."—2 Jo. ix, 10.

The seed of the kingdom is the word of God; the word of God is the doctrine of Christ, and the doctrine of Christ is the truth which, by the gospel, is preached unto us. This word of truth works effectually in those who believe it.—Thes. ii, 13. Fables and commandments of men turn the people—not to God—but away from the truth, and consequently away from freedom.—Titus i, 14.

There is consistency, harmony and power in the truth. Herein is displayed the wisdom and love of our heavenly Father who has given to us this word of truth that we may be begotten to a new life, (Jas. i, 18,) and made holy.

It is evident, however, that the truth must be preached, believed, and obeyed (1 Pet. i, 22,) in order to be free. This cannot be denied by those who believe the bible to be the book of God.

What one of the denominations preach the truth as it is in Jesus? How many of them teach and practice what the Apostles taught and practiced? And how many of them are abiding in the doctrine of Christ?

"Oh!" says some apologist for human weakness, "they all teach and believe in the Christ-hood of Jesus; that He is an all sufficient Savior and King, and will come again to judge the world.

They are pious and devoted people, zealous of good works, etc; honest and conscientious, and God will certainly bless them in their imperfect obedience.

Human nature is to-day the same as when Jesus walked this earth and taught the people heavenly lessons of wisdom and truth. Then, there were some who believed on Him, but would not confess Him; they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God.—Jo. XII, 42, 43.

Now, many do not confess Him, for the same reason. Many followed Jesus for the loaves and fishes he distributed.—Jo. vi, 26. Just so, now; many think that the kingdom of heaven is meat and drink, and they make merchandise of the work of God.

But space forbids an extension of these examples of the followers or believers in Christ. I do not say that all who now profess to follow Christ (among the sects) are to be classed as above, but that while they profess to follow Jesus, they deny Him by not continuing or abiding in His word. That they are honest I doubt not, but men may honestly believe a lie and act upon it. So these honestly believe the false interpretations of the scripture, the fables of men about church succession, spiritual regeneration, and are turned away from the truth.

Just now we realize the necessity of adhering more closely to the truth as it is in Jesus. Liberalism is flooding the church with her spurious ideas of charity, and many good brethren being deceived thereby are setting themselves forward as apologists and defenders of the doctrines and traditions of men.

Sectism differs from liberalism only in degree. The adherents of either system may profess to believe in Jesus; nay, more, they may do wonderful works in his name, but so long as they deny the authority of His word, and continue not in the teachings and practices of apostles, they are not free.

There was once a "partition wall" separating Jews and Gentiles; it was broken down in order that "the faith" or "the truth" might be revealed, and serve as a bond of union.

Henceforth there was to be no class distinction of any kind whatever, but in the one body all should be one. All were freemen, made free by the truth, bound together by the truth, and sanctified by the truth. Some, however, who came into the one body boasted of the authority, power and excellency of that old "partition wall," the law of Moses, and professed to have received their blessings through it.

Paul condemns them, and demonstrates fully and clearly that only those who are freed by the truth are the children of promise, and heirs of God. See Galatians, third and fourth chapters.

Now, there are hundreds of "partition walls," authoritative creeds, separating the people into distinct bodies commonly called churches. These creeds not only antagonize each other, but are directly opposed to the authority of Jesus the Christ. While they profess to give freedom to man, they bind the hearts and consciences with chains of error and superstition. A great many, however, after learning "the way of the Lord more perfectly," repudiate these human institutions and their "partition walls," and associate themselves with us—the Christians—who acknowledge no authority but that of Jesus, and no rule of faith or practice but the truth as it is in Jesus.

When they come to us, however, some of them still cling to the old partition wall, especially those who have been immersed, and claim that they have obeyed the truth from the heart, and are freemen in the Lord.

To this I object. There is but one narrow way, one straight gate; to enter that way, and, as our brother says above, "if we walk in through the straight gate, and travel in the narrow way, we are united (italics mine) with all who do the same thing." We are not united with the Baptists and other immersed persons, and hence it is conclusive proof that we did not all enter through the same gate. If we are right in our preaching and practice they are wrong, and vice versa.

"Truth first." When they are disposed to repudiate their human institutions and acknowledge the authority of Jesus, let them do as did Jew and Gentile, obey the truth that they may be free; then will we be one indeed.

Why all this controversy about "re-baptism," "valid baptism," etc? Brethren have not the courage to put in practice the principles that they know to be right. It will cause division, some say, if we insist on obedience to the gospel by all who come from the sects. I answer in Bro. Harding's words: "The divisions that spring up grow out of some departure from the narrow way, some effort to improve upon the things revealed. Better be divided from every man in the world and be right, than to be united to every man in the world at the sacrifice of one single conviction.

To this I add an extract or two from an editorial in the Apostolic Guide, No. 37. "However desirable union may be it cannot be purchased at the sacrifice of truth. There is no value in union except on the truth. In all our "union meetings," and things of like nature, the brethren should remember that there are some things more important to the cause of Christ than union with sectarians in any enterprise whatever, and that is the unadulterated truth of God."

The church is the pillar and support of the truth, and we should not compromise that truth by admitting into its fellowship persons claiming to have been pardoned without obedience. Truth first, last, and all the time. How is the world to be freed from the tyranny of human creeds? By the truth. But how can truth succeed in breaking down these partition walls so long as our brethren will patch up the breaches made in it, and apologize for having "hit so hard?"

If the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and others are human institutions, they are so by virtue of their respective human creeds. The authority upon which they are based is human authority, and is opposed to the authority of Jesus. Obedience to their creeds (and remember, the creed makes the preacher, and he preaches the creed), is obedience to human authority. Such obedience does not "make free," no matter how well satisfied the person may be with it, and when they learn the truth as it is in Jesus, and wish to unite with us, they should be requested to obey the truth.

I pray that we may all learn more of the truth; that we may be more earnest and zealous in preaching the truth, and above all, that we may more diligently and faithfully practice the truth; if we continue thus we will be one in Christ.

A SHORT RECESS,

BUT TO BE FOLLOWED BY A MORE DETERMINED EFFORT FOR THE MAINTAINANCE OF TRUTH.

No. 12 of THE FIRM FOUNDATION will not be published till some time in September. When we commenced the work last September we did not contemplate its extension beyond one year; but there has been such a marked and rapid declination, on the part of other papers, from scriptural and tenable attitudes then occupied by them, and such a fierce and vehement opposition by them, against the surrender of humanistic parts of "our plea" which marks "SECT" with such an indellible impress upon that "plea," that we have determined to cooperate with other brethren in fixing THE FIRM FOUNDATION as a weekly paper, upon a permanent basis.

There has been a very general request on the part of our readers for this course. We appeal to these good brethren who have stood by the work so nobly and bravely while it was struggling into its present hopeful aspect against all of the wicked adjuncts that belong to false theories, or that sectism, hate and spite could invent, to redouble their energies for the work while it is making more determined efforts to stem the flood of popular sectism and outride the storms whose mad waves are capped with the infamous calumny that only false and cowardly brethren employ.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION will do uncompromising battle for unadulterated truth—truth as it is in Jesus—in the spirit of love for that truth! It has been urged against the pamphlet, by weak-kneed and time-serving deserters from the army of the faith, that it "fights too much." Yes, it does fight, and aims to fight. It was born in war times, and of the very spirit of conflict! When the day of peace arrives; when the time for the "sword" to be sheathed comes, then and not till then does THE FIRM FOUNDATION propose to retire from the field. There will be no place for it when the fight is over; the soft places, the "flowery beds of ease" will all be taken up by those papers that are now bartering away their columns to mounte bank advertisers, and selling their conscience for such amounts as they can make in the publication of Sunday School literature, etc.

The contributors and readers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION want no peace purchased at the cost of one jot or tittle of "the law of the spirit of life." They are determined to war to the very hilt of "the sword" for the faith once delivered to the saints. Yet, our war is not "against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

But because we do not "conform to the world," by decorating our words with a cloak of flattery, and by diluting our language with an admixture of what the world calls politeness and charity, till they have no point or force in them, we are adjudged a disturber of the peace of zion, a mischievous fellow.

Yes, we are in for a fight, but it is "the good fight of faith" that we want THE FIRM FOUNDATION to engage in—that "fight" that the old soldier Paul said he had been doing when "the time of his departure was at hand." Brethren, we have a record of Paul's "fighting. He did not cater to the demand for "easy things," as the tender footed soldiery of the rank and file of the army of modern progress want done to-day.

Paul says that when he went to Thessalonica "we were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention. For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile, but as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts."

How would those wise teachers be able to stand the scathing rebuke that Paul would give them, were he here now, for teaching that it is not necessary to believe what he and his fellow apostles said when they taught that baptism was for the remission of sins? How could they stand before the grand old apostle, in the face of their writings, designed by them to repudiate confession with the mouth as a "ritual that need not be gone through with"? Yes, how could they, when he said that it was part of the "faith we preach"?

Brethren, these deceivers are truly "waxing worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." But we must "continue in the things we have learned and have been assured of, knowing of whom we have learned them".

Yea! though all the wise men of "our plea"—"this reformation"—stand in solid phalanx and blend their stento-rian voices in our mighty acclaim against "confession as a ritual to be gone through with every time," let us remember of whom we learned it to be a part of the faith preached by Paul and his associate "saints," to whom it was delivered to be preached, and for which we are told to earnestly contend.—See Rom. x, 8, 9, 10, and Jude III.

It is not enough with these time-servers that they sanction a denial of what Christ and His apostles said when they appointed baptism as the appointment of heaven, for the remission of sins. We say it is not enough for them to say persons may go down into the water of immersion, denying the words of inspiration as to its design, and yet be honoring God; But, seeing that "the good confession" stands in their unholy and rebellious way they lay unrighteous hands on it and seek to sever it from things with which God has joined it!

THE FIRM FOUNDATION desires to live to protest against these ungodly outrages against the faith, and to inculcate the holy doctrine from the first step in the direction of this faith to its grand consummation.

Yes, we want to contend for the whole ground of faith. Nothing can be spared from God's appointments without detriment to the faith.

A. MCG.

THE SCRIPTURAL HEART.

Many have never fully comprehended the scriptural import of the term heart. It is a comprehensive term.

1. David said Israel had more than heart could wish.—Psalm, LXXIII, 7.

2. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.—Matt. XII, 34.

3. When they heard this they were cut to the heart.—Acts II, 37. Also Psalm CXIX, 14.

4. Thoughts of his heart were evil.—Gen. VI, 5. Mary pondered in her heart.—Luke II, XIX. Let the meditations of my heart, etc.—Psalm XIX, 14.

5. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness.—Rom. x, 10.

6. Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart.—Deut. VI, 5.

7. These words shall be in thy heart.—Deut. VI, 6.

8. The people understand with the heart.—Matt. XIII, 15.

9. Obeey from the heart.—Rom. VI, 17.

We conclude, therefore, that the scriptural heart in its comprehensive import, includes all of these capabilities, and hence the statement that the hearts of the gentiles were purified by faith, does not mean faith alone, but faith as an active principle ever present in the successive steps into Christ. These successive steps are speaking, hearing, thinking, understanding remembering, believing, loving, and obeying. Therefore, in the acceptance of God's system of justification, which is consummated by obedience, the heart is changed or purified.

My dear reader has your heart been purified by faith?

J. S. D.

SOME WHOLESOME WORDS FROM
ELDER JACOB CREATH.

RELIGIOUS FEELINGS ARE SUB-
STITUTED FOR FAITH
AND OBEDIENCE.

EDITORS OF THE ADVOCATE:—We do not question the work of the Holy Spirit as taught in the Acts of the Apostles; we only question the teaching of the modern sects on this subject. Christians must sleep the greater part of their time, and wake up once and awhile and rub their eyes and bluster about and co-operate, and then fall to sleep again, like a sleepy child. There is a state of religious society far preferable to these periodical excitements. It is that discussed in Acts II, from verse 41 to 47. They that received Peter's words were immersed; and they continued steadfastly in the Apostles teaching, and so on throughout the book of Acts and the epistles.

All the fables told by the Papists to prove that Romanism is the gospel as preached by the Apostles in Acts II, become falsehoods, because the Apostles preached in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost and not in Rome. This applies to all the protestant sects as well as to the Papists. If your ism is not the gospel preached by the Apostles in Acts II, then all the truths you tell to prove that truth, becomes falsehoods. Then the sample of this revival—of this sermon and church forbids all other revivals.

of these spasmodic revivals, did you ever in one instance return the answer to your converts that the Holy Spirit did to these 3,000 converts? Did you do it? If you were to do it would you not lose your standing with your sects, and probably be called to an account for doing it? Now, let me tell you, if a man tells eleven truths to prove one falsehood and he fails to prove the falsehood a truth, these eleven truths in that connection and told for that purpose, become a falsehood.

Let us notice some of the features of the revivals in the 2nd of Acts. 1st. And it was the fulfillment of prophecy; Joel II. 2nd. It was the promise of Christ.—Acts I, 4, 6. You shall be immersed with the Holy Spirit not many days hence. Does many days hence mean 1885? Where are the wild fires that have been called immersion in the Holy Spirit for 1885? 3d. It was the promise of the Father.—Luke XXIV, 49; Acts I, 4, 5. 4th. It came upon the 120 disciple believers; now these modern falsely called immersions of the Holy Spirit come upon the unbelievers to produce faiths of different kinds. 5th. The outpouring in Acts II was visible, that which you now see, these sectarian outpourings are invisible. 6th. The outpouring and immersion in Acts 2, was audible, that which you hear speaking in all the languages then present, seventeen. What language do these sectarian converts speak in? These revival of feelings begin in one sect and end in them.

ple of coins thereby forbids all counterfeits, and if a dollar has one letter too many or too few, it is a counterfeit and the possessor of it is arrested as a passer of counterfeit money. The revivalists are as bad as the thief. If A owes D a guinea and gets deceived and takes a copper for a guinea, I will not take the copper for the guinea, because A took it for one. God will not take our errors for obedience to His ordinances. All sectarian preaching, sects and revivals are forbidden by the sample we have in Acts II, as certainly as if God had said you shall not have them. Apostolic examples for these revivals are as good as apostolic precepts. We are forbidden by Acts to pardon sins by faith alone. We are forbidden to pour or sprinkle water on any person who has not faith alone.

We are constrained through love of the cause of our Redeemer, and fidelity to the faith He delivered to His called and sent apostles and saints, to make a personal application of these very cogent words from the pen of Elder Jacob Creath. We recognize the Elder's words as pure speech, metal that has the gospel ring. They are true, as the gospel is true. Being true, and the ripest fruitage of the Elder's deepest rooted cogitations, he, of course, is as triable by them as any one else.

We are sure the Elder could give no valid reason for excluding his logic and truth from the radius of their own emanation. The old as well as the young may be mistaken. If they sow and cultivate to the flesh, they, too, will reap corruption. God is no respecter of persons. Without faith—the "one faith"—it is impossible to please God.

Though one may consecrate his whole life, from the dawning day of responsibility to the very verge of decrepitude's grave, yea, and even then give his body to be burned for a human plea, it will profit him nothing. It is the truth as it is in Jesus that gives vantage ground to the soul—that truth must be heard, believed and obeyed.

Being immersed in water gives no efficacy to previously inculcated and received error. No such power was ever vested in water, save by the fanatical advocates for a human "plea." Conscientiousness avails nothing so long as it stands against truth.

A man might eat sawdust, conscientiously believing it to be wholesome diet, but this would not lessen its deleterious results to his system. So with a man who hears error, believes it and obeys it in good conscience. He may be immersed in water, under the most solemn sound of the most awful formula that lips can give vent to, and yet that error remains the same. Christ did not authorize the immersion of the ignorant. He said, "go teach all nations, baptizing them, (the taught). They went under that instruction and taught and baptized. Did they not teach in the gospel they preached that baptism was for the remission of sins? If they had taught that sins were remitted on faith alone, and that baptism was a non-essential, would they have taught what He sent them to teach?

If Peter had taught, as he did, to "be baptized for the remission of sins," and Paul had taught that sins were remitted before baptism, that baptism was only an outward sign of an inward grace, and that Peter was preaching "water salvation," but that baptism must be complied with "to honor God," would they have been preaching the same gospel? Would both have been preaching the truth? Would they have been "uniting" their converts in the same mind and in the same judgment? Would both have been guided by the same Spirit—the Holy Spirit? Would they have been advocating the same baptism—the "one baptism?" If so, then the efficacy is solely in the water!

We urge the attention of the Elder and those who hold with him to a human plea, to the consideration of these questions. If these two doctrines could not have been propagated in the days of the apostles, by the same spirit, how can they now? If Peter had preached baptism for the remission of sins, and Paul had denied that baptism was for the remission of sins, and both had been, in such preaching, guided by the same spirit, then the spirit would have been contradicting itself!

"We are all baptized by one spirit into one body," (that is, all who get into the "one body.") The only way that we are baptized by the spirit is by its directions. Can any one suggest any other way that the spirit has ever baptized persons into the "one body?" If not, where are its directions? If the teachings of the apostles are its directions, and teaching is antecedent—preparatory to baptism, then we ask, is the spirit guiding those who are hearing and believing a contradiction of its words uttered through the apostles?

Can it, in justice to the sacrificed Nazarene, be said that the "Spirit has baptized into the one body" that class who went to immersion under the guidance of teachers who vehemently contradict its words, voiced by apostles? No, brethren, the thought is impious! It is only that wicked spirit that would exalt "our plea" above the way bound in earth and heaven that can entertain such blasphemous doctrines of men.

The man who maintains that persons who have been immersed are in Christ, whether they believed what the apostles said about the design of baptism or not, or whether they made the good confession or not, occupy the attitude that it matters not what kind of seed is sown, just so the soil is good.

Christ, in one of His most beautiful parables, represented His preachers under the figure of sowers of seed. The soil He represented by the human heart, and the seed by the word of truth. But these "our plea" fanatics would have us believe that there is nothing in the seed. Yes, with them it is "go preach or teach Methodism, Bapticism, Episcopalianism, Presbyterianism, Mormonism, or any other ism, just so you duck them; "our plea is broad enough for all such!"

Yes, sow the seeds of all of these noxious weeds of discord and division, these pernicious branches or offshoots from the great Romish harlot, this bedlam of human tradition and commandments of men, water levels them all upon "our plea!" It matters not what is sown, enough water makes all alike, christians! Now, why will Elder Creath "question the teaching of the modern sects?" Why does he not narrow the controversy down to the action of baptism? If it only takes immersion to make christians, then it is worse than folly to waste time and embitter feelings over points upon which nothing essential hinges.

The only authorized work of Christ is to make disciples, baptize them into His body, and teach them how to live as christians. If this can be done by "sowing" any kind of seed, just so it brings forth immersion, then, in heavens name, in the name of peace, why not cease the agitation of "non-essential" points? Let each sow the seed of his own choice.

Why does the Elder want to know of these sectarian teachers, "teachers of these spasmodic revivals," if they ever in one instance returned the answer to their converts that the Holy Spirit did to the 3,000 at Pentecost? Why should they do so if it makes no difference whether they hear or understand it? Will this gray headed sire of the reformation give us a little light right here? We would be highly pleased to have it. We would ask the Elder if this answer was given to him when he was made a convert Baptist? And if it was, we would ask him if he was "baptized for the remission of sins?" We would further ask him if he made the "good confession" which Paul says was part of the faith he preached? If he did not, and yet is in Christ, why does he labor so hard to impress these truths and appointments on others since he got into Christ without knowing or doing them?

God is no respecter of persons. Hence, if the Elder found his way into Christ while he was disbelieving the preaching of the apostles, others may too. Then preach the popular doctrines of the day, only insisting on immersion "to honor God," and not for the remission of sins. This course will broaden the grounds of union out to more popular bounds.

The man who entertains the views expressed above, can not, in good conscience, advocate the acceptance of sectarians on their immersion any more than two bodies can occupy the same space at the same time! We could make out a strong case of inconsistency against the Elder by taking up, in detail, the many points that obtrude themselves with such marked palpability out of these words of his; but, as this is already growing lengthy, we will select only a few, leaving our readers to make their own application of the others.

The Elder, in contrasting what he calls "the wild fires that have been called immersion in the Holy Spirit," with that which really was immersion in the Holy Spirit, very appositely contrasts the characteristics of the one with the characteristics of the other.

terfeit of real Holy Spirit baptism, for as certain as it is that like causes produce like results, so certain is it that unlike results are traceable to unlike causes. Well, as this is a most forcible way to expose the fallacy of counterfeit "Holy Spirit baptism," why may we not, with equal propriety, resort to it to expose bogus water baptism?

Will the Elder and those who coincide with him in denying Christ in favor of a human plea, permit us to disprove the validity of sect immersion by his logic? Or will they be like the lawyer, "the case being altered, alters the case?" Now, when we contrast the characteristics of that baptism authorized by our Savior, as found in His commission given to those He chose and sent with the terms of reconciliation, with any of the bogus baptisms, or immersions practiced by the sectarian bodies, called churches, we find as great a disparity between them as the Elder has found to exist between real Holy Spirit baptism, or immersion, and "the wild fires that have been called immersion in the Holy Spirit."

Hence, we feel fully justified, as well by the Elder's logic as by all rules for the acquisition of truth, to pronounce sect baptism a nullity. Then have we not the same right to repudiate that which differs from the divine in water baptism, as bogus and invalid, that the Elder has to repudiate that which differs from the divine in Holy Spirit baptism, as counterfeit—"wild fires?"

If it is true, as the Elder says, (and we are not disposed to call it in question)

"that eleven truths told to prove one falsehood, become untrue because of their connection and purpose," what is to become of the few truths connected with the many falsehoods, and told to substantiate the legion of lies that perpetuates the great anti-Christ of sectarianism? Does a certain action in water correct them all? If, as the Elder says, the great revival of Pentecost forbids all other revivals unlike it, then what becomes of the converts made under the preaching of Baptist doctrine, a doctrine requiring the contradiction of the design that Peter gave to baptism, and the doctrine under which the Elder was immersed? Does water render valid the "eleven falsehoods?" (we might say eleven hundred)?

If, as the Elder says, "God will not take our errors for obedience to His ordinances," and if all "sectarian preaching, sects and revivals are forbidden by the sample we have in Acts II, as certainly as if God had said you shall not have them," then we ask what becomes of the Elders conversion to Baptist teaching, which is as unlike Peter's apostolic teaching as night is unlike day? Does a certain action in water render things differing as broadly as Apostolic and Baptist teaching, one and the same? Oh, Elder! let me persuade you to practice what you preach—go to work on the beam in your own eye. Let me urge upon you the necessity of subjecting all things to Christ, neither immersing those who have not heard and believed the gospel that He sent the Apostles into all the world to preach, nor recognizing as scripturally baptized, those who have been immersed by others while in a different frame of mind or heart.

Elder Creath, far be it from the intention of the writer to offend you. I respect your age, and greatly admire the zeal and ability that you have bestowed upon a cause that you feel you owe your consecration to. But as you are standing upon Pisgah's top, near the Jordan of death, I desire to impress you with the importance of removing every cause that might hinder your entrance into the promised land.

Oh! how gladly Moses would have embraced the opportunity that is yours, but he could not. You can. Do you say you are too old? Or do you look back to your pioneer comrades and measure yourself by them? Noble men they were, but where in that word which you and they have so often said was "a sufficient rule of faith and practice," do you find authority for accepting, in the name of Christ, an immersion whose antecedents are different from what He authorized?

He who baptizes, or recognizes as baptized, those who hear and believe the gospel that the apostles preached, "abideth in the doctrine of Christ." He who recognizes a baptism differing from this, dishonors the teaching of apostles, and hath neither the Father nor the Son.

That gospel is the recorded discourses by the apostles to be found in the book of their "acts." Elder, I beseech you, in the love and fear of God, to "finish your course by examining yourself and see if you are in the faith." Never cease till the spirit bears witness with your spirit that you are a child of God. Then fight the good fight of faith the residue of your days. Thus finish your course, and you will be sure to receive the crown of righteousness.

WHY IS IT SO?

Years ago, when all seemed eager to know the truth, and to tread the scriptural pathway, the brethren were quite a loving band, and when editors and scribes differed, they searched the scriptures diligently to find the truth, and generally kept in good temper in the face of the severest test of criticism. As a result the truth was generally found and embraced. Under these circumstances primitive christianity prospered.

Laterly, however, quite a different state of affairs exists. It now seems almost impossible for many brethren to examine any subject with the sole view of learning the truth. We can now scarcely expect a manly and christian discussion of any point of difference in a loving and patient spirit.

When we oppose each other, the purpose seems to be to destroy and kill, and as a consequence our writings tend to wound and offend. Why is it so? I will venture a solution. We were once eager to escape from Babylon, and readily seized every scriptural thought that aided in this object. We are now falling backward to the burning and falling city.

May we arouse from our lethargy, and with the glistening sword of the spirit move forward, conquering and to conquer.

ONE BAPTISM.

BY JAMES L. THORNBERRY.

Paul, 4th chapter Eph., says, there is one faith and one baptism. All agree that the one faith is scripturally expressed thus: "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God."

Well, all who are bible men say that faith is expressed in John, 17th chapter, when Christ prays for "all who believe on Him through their (the apostles) word."

We bible men say there is only one way to believe—that is, with all the heart. And the evidence of bible faith is, it leads to sorrow for sin, so as to reform one's life so as to lead one to publicly put on Christ in immersion.

All bible men say this is right, and there is only one faith. But what about the one baptism? All bible men say Christ's command to baptize is filled "when a truly converted one is buried with Christ in immersion, and raised up into a new state and life. Some may say some other mode will do, but all bible men will say my definition fills the bill.

Now, the question, can such converted one be immersed into Christ but once in life? I say not; and to reimmerge such I think not only playing in the water—but a sin.

Then, all truly penitent believers in Christ who are thus immersed "are in Christ, and have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins," or, if not, the bible fails. Then, I say, to redip such believers is not only silly nonsense, but a sin, for it is saying that an honest doing of one of Christ's commands is a failure.

Nothing can invalidate obedience to Christ in baptism but the want of faith on the part of the subject. The bible requires faith in Christ as above. That is, I believe that Christ is the son of God.

The disqualification of the administrator can not vitiate the obedience of the believer if unknown to Him. So, then, a true believer who has been immersed by Baptist, Methodist, or Presbyterian, I receive on the bible in faith in our union plea.

When one from a sect church comes to unite on the bible, I say to such, have you been immersed? This settled, then I say, were you converted a true believer in Christ when immersed?

If the answer is yes, then I say, leave sect creeds and opinions behind and stand with us on the bible.

But some of my earnest, good brethren say, unless the subject believe that baptism is for the remission of sins the baptism is invalid.

Now, I say the phrase, baptism for the remission of sins, is not bible. Still, Peter said to believers, repent and be baptized for the remission of sins.

But he gave two conditions. Repent and be baptized. They were believers. Then it is faith, repentance and baptism, all.

I prefer bible style, and to say, "obedience to the faith—that is, obedience to the gospel for remission of sins." This covers the whole ground, and does not put too much stress on any one command. If my brethren, or some of them, were not afraid I should be a leader in thought, and would not be jealous, and be humble enough in my honesty and want of honor due, I could show them many things.

But I am made ashamed when Jews, gentiles, sects, and good brethren say to me, "your talents and toils are neither acknowledged or rewarded."

Do, brethren, take this reproach off of yourselves and christianity. Please do. In Christ.

GEORGETOWN, KY., May, 1885.

Bro. Thornberry, like all who advocate this unauthorized practice, has made up his case wholly of assumption. The very ground in dispute has been passed over by him without giving the real issue even a passing notice.

He says: "Now, the question, can such converted one be immersed into Christ but once in life? I say not; and to re-immersed such I think not only playing in the water but a sin." So say we. And there is another way to "play in water," and that is to immerse persons who do not know what it is being done for! This is a very common "play," and we are very sorry to see old brethren, who ought to be more dignified, become parties to such frivolous "playing," by winking at it. We say that persons can't be immersed into Christ but once in life, and that they can't be that time unless they believe the gospel preached by the apostles.

We don't know which of our brethren are afraid of Bro. Thornberry's becoming a leader in thought." Very likely some are, for we have some who are watchful of those who think for themselves.

Will say to Bro. Thornberry that if he will prove his position on this question we will accord to him the name of "leader in thought" among his coadjutors, and will forever afterwards confer all of the honor upon him possible from our mean station.

A. MCG.

LETTER FROM BROTHER STONE.

LAPORTE, IND., June 11, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I again take my pen to write a few lines for THE FIRM FOUNDATION. There are so many things that our people never knew, or have forgotten, that some one needs to stir up their minds, either by way of remembrance, or by instruction. And perhaps I might as well say now, as well as at any time, that I fear that we have in our ranks too many Campbellites.

Now, I don't mean to say that Bro. Campbell was not a great and good man, but, coming as he did, out of sectdom, it was hardly to be expected that he would throw that all away at once. We all know now that the church is wonderfully confused, if not to say divided.

We now have many congregations, as well as many individuals and preachers, who are acknowledging and practicing many things that the sects do. Their idea seems to be that all who claim to be christians should unite their forces without uniting their faith, and all work together.

This, I think, a dangerous experiment, for this reason: if you undertake to work with any of them you must do one of two things. You must either admit their false teachings, or else you must suppress the truth. If you do not do the one or the other, they will not work with you at all. Now, no honest person can afford to do either. It is an act of disloyalty to Christ to withhold the truth, or to acknowledge falsehoods.

know the truth for themselves. Just so I fear that too many trusted to Bro. Campbell, and took all he said for granted. And I believe he mistakenly planted the seeds of dissolution in the reformation at the beginning.

The first, and perhaps the greatest mistake, was the receiving of persons from the sects simply on the ground that they had been immersed. Immersion never made anyone a christian simply and alone. Without the faith which comes by hearing the word of God, (the truth) genuine repentance and confession of Christ, baptism amounts to nothing. Many persons were received into the fellowship who did not believe that faith comes by hearing the word of God; who never had confessed the Lord Jesus with the mouth, and who retained many of their sectarian ideas, and who still believed in getting religion, or receiving some great miraculous gift from heaven.

All such would naturally believe that others had received this same wonderful gift, and notwithstanding they still remained among the various sects, were good christians. This, I think, Bro. Campbell believed, and I know that hundreds among us now believe. I know that this is about the religion of thousands, but it is a mere deception. It is religion, but not christianity. This is one thing that has created so much confusion in the church. This is the source whence most of the innovations have come.

Now, I have said that I believe that Bro. Campbell made the mistake here, and in order to show why I believe so I will quote from him a few sentences. I take the quotations from an article published in the Church Union, a paper published in New York, January 15, 1885. The Church Union quotes from the Millennial Harbinger of 1837. The article is a long one, so that I can only quote a few full sentences.

Campbell says: "But who is a christian? I answer, everyone that believes in his heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, the son of God, repents of his sins, and obeys Him in all things according to his measure of knowledge, etc." This implies that we may obey according to our own idea of right. If, then, we do what we think God requires, whether we are correct or not, God will accept the will for the deed. This really sets aside God's law, and makes our will supreme.

Now, this is the idea to-day of all sectarians and Campbellites. Again, Bro. Campbell says, "Should I find a Pedo-Baptist more intelligent in the christian scriptures, more spiritually minded, and more devoted to the Lord than a Baptist, or one immersed on a profession of the ancient faith, I could not hesitate a moment in giving the preference of my heart to him who loveth most."

Now, what does he say here? Why, that if he should find one who had been sprinkled for baptism, but who was more intelligent in the christian scriptures, and who was more devoted to the Lord than one who had obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered, or who had been immersed on a profession of the ancient faith, that he preferred the sprinkled individual in his heart. Equivalent to saying, I believe that a sprinkled individual may be a christian and entitled to my brotherly love.

This clearly gives away all else that he ever said on the subject of obedience to God. This is simply Campbellism, and has no truth in it. Every well informed christian must repudiate it.

After arguing on a little further he says, "There is no occasion then for making immersion of faith absolutely essential to a christian, though it may be greatly essential to his sanctification and comfort."

If he had made that statement in his debate with N. L. Rice, where would all his arguments on baptism have gone? I have made these quotations to show that we need not depend on uninspired men, and that many of our present troubles are the legitimate outgrowth of dreadful mistakes made by some of the inaugurators of this reformation.

Our experience ought to give us the advantage, and we ought now to throw aside every weight and stand square on the truth. How are we to compromise the truth? Can truth and falsehood be mixed? If we admit that people can be saved without understanding and obeying the truth, then certainly the truth is of no practical value.

If people can substitute opinion for faith, and God will accept them, then, faith is worthless. Are there any so blind as not to see this? Is it so, that if faith comes by hearing the word of God, that one may have faith without receiving the intelligence that the word is intended to convey? How can faith lay hold on things not understood? Will some one give an example?

That individual who is sprinkled for baptism, whence his faith? From heaven, or of men? Will God accept such faith? I think not. Campbell seemed to think he would; so, too, many think now; but the thought is vain, or truth cuts no figure at all in the salvation of men.

But this article is already long enough, and I must close, wishing you success in the defense of the truth.

My daughter also sends a short communication to your paper, which you will find inclosed.

I. C. STONE.

A BAPTIST, NOT A CHRISTIAN.

"I have just had a conversation with Bro. W. W. Carter, who has recently left us and gone to the Baptists. He gives no definite reason for the step he has taken, but claims that he has contemplated a change for some time. I am glad he has gone from us, and hope if we have others who feel as he does, that they will do likewise.

No man can succeed in working with a people with whom he is dissatisfied. I hope Bro. Carter will do a good work among the Baptists. They did much in preparing the way for the reformation of the nineteenth century, as John the Baptist prepared the way for Christ. If I were not a Christian I would be a Baptist."

The above we clip from the so-called Apostolic Guide, but such words as these, which seem to bear the approval of that "Guide," show conclusively that it has no right whatever to the name it wears. The apostles never guided into such contradictory meshes.

Such "Guiding" as this originated in and is perpetuated by those Guides who are blind—blinded by the god of this world—who not only fall into the ditch themselves, but cause all whom they lead to do likewise.

We do not know who the author of these words is; it is not necessary, as it is an editorial. He voices the common sentiment of that class of brethren who are, Ephraim like, wedded to their idol—a human plea for the union of all in one body—not the one built upon the "one foundation," however.

Their vernacular in common bears the impression of Ashdod. It sticketh close to them. They must wear it so long as they have a humanism to defend.

Give ear to this one, oh ye advocates for union with Baptists! "If I were not a Christian I would be a Baptist!!" Oh, consistency! hast thou fled from these benighted zealots, and hidest thou thy holy face in shame while they outrage thee!

His line of demarcation between a "Christian" and a "Baptist" is here broadly and deeply laid. But the "plea" that he and his coadjutors make to the distracted religious world proposes to eradicate this deep laid mark and barrier by a shake of the hand! Where is to be found divine authority for this efficacious shake? Give us the chapter and verse that says it, or that even hints at it, and we will forever advocate it with all the fervor of our soul.

"Baptists" and Christians" are very different until these brethren come, by rote, to their stereotyped sermons on "Christian Union," or till they find themselves called upon to defend a practice inaugurated by worldly wisdom; then all who have been immersed "to honor god," are "Christians!!"

To say that "if I were not a Christian I would be a Baptist," in the connection that this light of the Apostolic Guide has said it, is equivalent to saying that one cannot be a Baptist and a Christian at one and the same time. So much for the consistency of the Apostolic Guide.

We ask our readers to weigh well what he has said about the "Baptists preparing the way for the nineteenth century reformation." It seems that he sees as much fitness in the existence of the Baptists as forerunners of the "reformation of the nineteenth century" as he sees in John's appearance before Christ.

But, as John was to "decrease" and Christ "increase" if the Baptists occupy precisely the attitude to the "reformation of the nineteenth" that John did to Christ, which seems to be the theory of the Apostolic Guide, then, how can this Bro., W. W. Carter, turn away from this "reformation" and back to that which should decrease, and at the same time be doing "good," as this editorial of the Guide hopes he will do?

To "hope" a thing is to regard it possible. When Christ's time to increase and John's time to decrease came, could one possibly have been doing good by turning back to John? Brethren, these words of the Guide are only some more of the diction and twaddle of Ashdod.

We are sorry for that class of our brethren whose minds have become so muddled that they can't really see the inconsistent and untenable attitudes that the theology of Bethany, Virginia, Lexington, Kentucky, and other pastor manufacturing institutions had inveigled them into.

Many of these brethren labor with a zeal and conscientiousness worthy of a better cause than that of a human plea. Though they have never seen a written, formulated exhibit of the human creed that has shackled them with its unyielding bands, they are none the less victims to such a creed than those who have in their libraries and avow allegiance to "disciplines," confessions of faith, etc., other than the bible.

The leaders of this human plea have a common argument for those who can not conscientiously come into line under the exactions of their plea in full. That argument is to cry "hobby! extremist!" etc., at everyone who dare to call in question their right to do, in the name of Christ, what no inspired man ever did or even ever hinted at—legislate where God left off.

A. MCG.

"NICE THINGS."

"We have put a nice baptistery into our house of worship, at a cost of $125.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

Last Lord's day we immersed three candidates in it, in the presence of a large audience. It is so much better to have a nice pool of water in the house of worship than to have to go to these muddy and filthy ponds. It is true, we have no "thus saith the Lord" for a baptistery, or organ, or bell, yet we find them useful and expedient, and therefore under the law we introduce and use them to the much benefit of the congregation."

The above extract I clip from the Mission Department of the Apostolic Guide, of June 12. One of the positions formerly taken by the advocates of immersion, was that the parties repaired to the water, instead of bringing the water to them. This has been considered one of the strong arguments in favor of immersion. It will have to be abandoned however by all advocates for "a nice pool of water, in a nice house of worship."

One would very naturally conclude that in reach of Bro. Creels' work there are nothing but muddy and filthy ponds. Is this so, Bro. Creel? How easy it would be to obey Christ if something nice greeted us from every avenue of approach into His Kingdom! If "it is so much better" for one pool of water to be made nicer than another, then the niciest house, the niciest bell, the niciest organ, the niciest pastor, the niciest people, the niciest choir, are useful expedients that must be urged and introduced "to the much benefit of every congregation."

It is true we have no "thus saith the Lord" for these things, but then you know they are useful and expedient. In the mean time, why not have the niciest and most attractive fashioned mourner's bench imaginable? To change the monotony of appearances, flags could be occasionally erected on them. This would be so nice and attractive.

Would it not be a good idea too, to have an improvement added to these nice baptisteries, in the way of a heater, so as to render the temperature of the water very nice on a cold winter day: It is so trying on one's constitution to have to break the ice, or even to go into cold water. Could it not be used also to the much benefit of the congregation?

Would it not be nice then to immerse candidates in the presence of large audiences?

J. S. D.

"A GENEROUS CITIZEN."

We copy the following words from Bro. J. T. Smith, in the Christian Standard, of June 20.

"A generous citizen of Omaha, Nebraska, has offered a lot and one thousand dollars to build a mission church in that city. Such men are tending toward the kingdom. The Lord loves a cheerful giver."

This last clause in reference to aliens is misleading. It occurs in Paul's 2nd Letter to the church of God, at Corinth, 9th chapter, and 7th verse, and is spoken of Christians.

While sinners live in disobedience, there should be given no such palliations. It is deceptive. God's love toward the world was manifested in the gift of His Son, and the establishment through Him of the remedial system.

LETTER FROM SISTER STONE.

LA PORTE, IND., June 10, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I can remain silent no longer. I must speak out and let Sister Sarah, and the rest of the sisterhood, know that I heartily endorse every word that she has written upon the subject of christian women's dress. I have given this subject much serious thought, and think it very sinful to dress as extravagantly as some do.

I have many times been pained to see the coolness with which the poor sisters of congregations were met with by the wealthier ones, and have oftentimes wondered how the sister that wore the fine silk dress, gold watch and chain, and heavy gold bracelets around her white arms could go home on Lord's-day evening and hang her rich dress away and turn the lock on her elegant jewelry, and then pray, "Father forgive us our trespasses as we would forgive those that trespass against us; and we would ask thee, Holy Father, to bless the widow and the orphan, and all those that are in distressed circumstances, either in body or mind, etc.;" or do such christians ever pray?

Now, dear sisters, if any of you whose eyes may chance to read these lines, are guilty of the foregoing, let me plead with you to lay aside your idols and never look back to them with regret, but keep your face heavenward, and with both hands clinging to the cross.

Oh! if I could only say something that would cause every sister who reads these lines to pause and think that she helps to constitute the bride, the lamb's wife, and ask herself "am I as pure as I ought to be?"

What is more beautiful than a lovely bride arrayed in a snowy white robe, and how careful she is to keep her robe unsoiled till the bridegroom comes.

Oh! how much more careful ought the lamb's bride be to keep her robe spotless until the appearing of the bridegroom, that she may present herself to him as he desired she should, a glorious church, (bride) not having spot or wrinkle, or any such things, but holy and without blemish.

Then, dear sisters, as we always represent the bride in the fleshly sense, and as mother Eve was in the transgression, and caused so much of the sin and folly abroad in our land, let us christian women of the present generation try to reform and purify the church, which is taking up all the frivolous and ridiculous fashions of the world, thereby excluding the poor from the worship of God.

Go sell your golden idols and provide the poor sister of your congregation with decent clothes in which to appear at the Lord's house, and encourage her to come. Tell her that you have chosen whom you will serve, and it is the God of the universe, and all you that have sufficient knowledge go to preaching, (behind the pulpit).

Go spend the afternoon with sister L or sister K, and tell them what you have decided to do, and plead with them to help you. Refer them to 1st Timothy, ii, 9; 1st Peter, iii, 4; also, James ii, 10, and tell her that

“Not one precept nor one promise,
From God’s word shall pass away;
All shall be fulfilled in Jesus;
Each command we must obey.”

And, sisters, all of you turn as many of the gilt-edged leaves of your family bible each day as you possibly can. Do not allow them to become dust-covered and forgotten, and do remember as you read that it is your God talking with you, and also remember that He will talk with you in the hereafter, and if you refuse to live up to His requirements here you will have no chance to obey Him there. It will be too late.

There will be no chance to reply to His “Depart from me, etc.”

Oh! then let me urge you once more before I close to be up and doing while it is day, for the night will come in the which our labors must cease, and we go to be judged out of the very book that I have been exhorting you to read.

I read the FIRM FOUNDATION and hand it to my neighbors. How many of you who read it do likewise? If you have not done so heretofore, begin with this number. No matter whether they are members of the church of Christ or not; hand it to members of human organizations, and help them to see the light of the glorious gospel of the son of God.

Bro. McGary I send with this the first dollar I ever earned (did some sewing for a lady acquaintance) to help support the FIRM FOUNDATION, and long may you live to wield the “sword of the spirit,” for you and some of your contributors wield it vigorously. But I see the waste basket, so I will close.

Blessed Savior,
“May we love Thee more and more,
Till this fleeting life is o’er;
Till our souls are lost in love,
In a brighter world above.
Till with pure hands and voices sweet,
We cast our crown at Jesus’ feet,
And sing of everlasting love,
In everlasting strains above.

Yours for the truth,

MAGGIE L. STONE..

LETTER FROM BRO. GRAHAM.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

It is not often I have the pleasure of talking to so many brethren as can be reached through the FIRM FOUNDATION, and as I think a large majority of them need to be talked to, I ask you to please publish the following:

Throughout the christian era there have been men whose prime intention was to serve God aright, but they started wrong, and of course continued so unless corrected by the kind words of some friend. To all such, I would say, stop a moment and think.

But, who are they? “Why my neighbors, of course," some would say. Well, do you think your neighbors will say the same of you? If you do, just ask the school teachers of the community in which you live, what your neighbors think of you. Nine times out of ten, if he will stoop so low as to tell you, your neighbors estimate of you, you will find, is fully as low as yours of them. And is this right in the church! Brethren, shall we backbite and defraud each other, and at the same time rest in hope of future happiness? If we do our hopes are surely vain.

We all know that this is the case in almost every neighborhood. I will tell you brethren, the wrath of God rests on the church wherever the members do this way. Shall we continue in this manner? Let us awake to a sense of duty; go to work for the Lord; put down all evil speaking from among us; and then we will be armed to fight for our Master against "spiritual wickedness in high places."

But some one will say, well, I am doing better than brother Smith, and he pretends to be 'mighty' good. If he ever gets to Heaven, I'll be sure to get there." Now, is there a brother, a single one, who has espoused christianity, who is this weak; and does he expect the "well done" in the end? If there is such, and he expects that plaudit, his salvation rests on a poor plea.

I am proud to say that I live in a community where the brethren are too high minded to talk about one another.

The writer thinks that Bro. McGary has embarked in a good work; wishes him success, and will render his (the writer's) little mite in that direction. Brethren, let's correct all these little wrong practices.

JAS. R. GRAHAM.

VOCA, TEXAS

DENOMINATIONAL PREACHERS

SHOULD MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH HEAR THEM?

BROTHER MCGARY:

The foregoing question has been presented to my mind quite often during the past year, and I have at last decided in the affirmative.

I feel confident that many will fail to agree with me, and doubtless have reasons for so doing. Some of my reasons for deciding as I have are as follows:

It has been about one year since I obeyed the gospel, and the more I listen to sectarians the less confidence I have in them; especially those who are always endeavoring to raise some excitement, or "trying to scare people into the kingdom."

Here at Blanco we have besides the church of Christ, Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists, each occupying their respective Lord's day each month.

One who objects to hearing denominational preachers at this or similar places has the liberty of listening to talks on the scripture only once each month, as the Christians occupy but one day for preaching, the rest being used in holding social meetings, but at such hours as not to interfere with services of others.

If all members of the church of Christ refused to listen to the sects then who would know the variations of different creeds or doctrines, or how much they all varied from the true doctrine.

We are commanded to "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good." Sectarian preachers sometimes say good things whether it is their intention to do so or not, therefore, it is only our duty to cleave to the good and let the bad escape our notice so far as giving heed to it.

It is evidently the sincere desire as well as the duty of every christian to unite with the Savior in that prayer "that all may be one as he and the Father are one." It is also their duty to use every reasonable effort to bring about that much desired union, and I can think of no more speedy or effective plan than to listen attentively to sectarian preachers, treat them kindly, and when they misapply scripture notify them of the fact in a kind way, then, having done this, we cannot be accused of selfishness, or of not being willing to reason together."

Among the sects the opinion appears to be prevalent that the numerous human names will never be blotted out, and some even boldly assert that it was intended from the beginning that the church should be thus divided and known by numerous human names for all time. This I cannot agree to as it is impossible for me to believe, for one moment, that Christ ever uttered an idle word or offered a prayer in vain.

Not for one moment would I pretend to compare the lives of sinful men with that of the Savior; yet they certainly will not be asking amiss when they repeat the prayer that "all may be one as Christ and the Father are one."

Neither are we doing more than our duty when we are exercising every influence upon the sects in order to bring about that much desired union; and what more effective way can be adopted than to attend their meetings and reason with them. While we are free to admit that many things are done, many plans adopted by modern sectarians to carry points altogether unscriptural, yet, how can we know these things, or adopt any means of correction unless we give them a hearing?

I have been reading THE FIRM FOUNDATION since the first of January, and have been highly pleased with its contents. I have thought it second to none, even as a monthly, but trust it will be even better when changed to a weekly. Wishing you success, and bidding you God speed, I remain

Your brother in Christ,

R. W. GILLESPIE.

P. S. Thinking perhaps your subscription price will advance when you change to a weekly, I send you 50 cents, which amount please place to my credit.

R. W. G.

It seems that some of our subscribers are expecting the change from a monthly to a weekly to take place immediately. We are sorry that we were not more explicit in what we had to say about that change.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

We here take occasion to state that that change will, in all probability, take place between this and the first day of January. But we hope to be able to give the weekly at the same price we are now publishing the monthly. We hope that all of our subscribers whose time expires with this number of the pamphlet will renew immediately. We promise all who do, the paper for one year at one dollar, whether monthly or weekly, and the same offer is extended to all new subscribers.

In conclusion, we again appeal to you, brethren, to bestir yourselves in vigorous efforts to spread a paper that dares to declare the whole counsel of God, whether it condemns unscriptural practices in or out of the church, and while false and time-serving brethren and renegades hope to deter it from its duty by the cry of hobby, extremist, etc.

Help us, brethren, to lift the banner of King Jesus out of the dusty slums of sectarianism in which it is now being dabbled by false brethren, who labor more for gain than Godliness. Help us, brethren, to plant the ensign of our King upon the very ramparts of the adversary, and forever do battle under it for the Captain of our salvation.

ASLEEP.

At Mineral Wells, on the 8th of August, our precious baby, Miriam, fell asleep, gently, peacefully. Though ours for only eleven months, she was unspeakably precious, and the very light of our home. How sadly we miss her little presence only those who have had a similar bereavement can know.

But we can say from the depths of our hearts, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. But how did he give? By the operation of His established law. How did he take? In the same way, and not by any display of wrath, for He is no respecter of persons."

We would not have her back, as dear as she was, for we know she is

"Safe from corroding care,
Safe from the world's temptations;
Sin cannot harm her there."

Sorrow is the lot of man, but we know that all things work together for good to those that love God, and if we only love Him, the veriest afflictions will work out to our eternal gain. Thanks be to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ for the glorious hope of the resurrection.

"She cannot return to us, but we can go to her." Blessed assurance! Oh! dear brethren and sisters, let us all, with renewed earnestness, determine to meet our precious dead, in that sweet home where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes."

OVER-ESTIMATION.

John Poe says that Bro. Jackson and I seem to be running the FIRM FOUNDATION for his special benefit. In this he is mistaken. It is true that we aim to benefit all sinners as much as we can.

As all the promises that pertain to salvation are in Christ, yea, and in Him, amen, unto the glory of God by those divinely sent and commissioned to preach and to bind the truth as it was, and ever will be in Jesus, we try to direct without partiality, all unto Christ,—unto the remission of sins, first, and then try to point out the “work of the Lord” which is to be done in the “vineyard,” to give an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God’s Son.

As Christ, more than eighteen hundred years ago, bound in heaven the appointments preached on earth by His apostles as steps or conditions of entrance into His body, which is a positive institution—a real entity—we are running our paper “solely in the interest of these appointments and the work of the Lord” that follow after.

The salvation of one soul is enough to stimulate a true soldier of Christ to edit and publish a paper, “hobby” or “no hobby,” but while this is admitted, candor forces us to say that Mr. Poe has figured our aim down to too narrow a compass, for he, like “Ephraim, is joined to his idols,” and were it not that he is joining others with him, our “paper” would “let him alone.”

It is time to let our modern Ephraim’s alone (so far as being actuated by any hope of doing them good) when they will publish to the world, that obedience is better, more pleasing to God—when done without knowing the end connected with the act.

That is, that it is better not to inquire after what God took pains to have clearly taught on almost every page of the last Will and Testament. Again, it is time to “let Ephraim alone” when he becomes so nervous over his untenable attitude, that he imagines every time his errors are being corrected, that it is an effort to “draw him into a discussion.”

When a man who is so polemical by nature, and by practice as Mr. Poe is, says, he has had “all to say on any question that he expects to say, we may know that it is a conscious weakness in his cause that extorts such words from him.

Mr. Poe must not feel so self-important as to conclude that brethren could afford to run a paper for his “special benefit” until they could first have some evidence that he would accept truth when it is shown him. Such an over estimate of self does not grow out of that humility that comes of the Spirit of Christ.

We take occasion to say to friend Poe, or other friends and brethren, that we shall ever exercise the liberty of showing the inconsistencies of any who may teach falsely, without regard to the motives that may be assigned for our course.

A CONTRAST.

1. Christ said: You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

“Our Plea” says: You shall be made free whether you know the truth or not, if you will be baptized to “honor God.”

2. Christ said: In vain do you worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men.

"Our Plea" says: It is not vain if it leads to baptism to "honor God."

3. Christ said: If the blind lead the blind they will all fall in the ditch.

"Our Plea" says: They will not fall in the ditch if they will be baptized to "honor God."

4. Christ said: No man can come to me except the Father who hath sent me draw him.

"Our Plea" says: They can come if they will be baptized to "honor God."

5. Christ said: He that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word and understandeth it.

"Our Plea" says: It is better not to understand it—that to be baptized to "honor God" without understanding is evincible of a higher order of faith.

6. On the day of Pentecost inspired men baptized those that gladly received the word of the apostle.

"Our Plea," eighteen hundred years after, endorses the baptism of those that reject and openly dispute the word of that same apostle.

7. Peter said: Seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit; * * * being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. * * * And this is the word which, by the gospel, is preached unto you.

"Our Plea" says: You have purified your souls in obeying the teaching of sectarianism through the doctors of divinity, * * * being born again, not of incorruptible, but of corruptible seed, by the word of doctors of divinity which is this worlds wisdom, and foolishness with God, and this is the word which, by false teachers, is preached unto you, and by which ye are saved if you have been baptized to "honor God."

"Our Plea" says: There is no danger of erring, beloved brethren, just so you are baptized to "honor God." Some good gifts come from above, from the Father of lights with whom there is variableness, and turning to accept all who are baptized to "honor God." Of his own will beget he some of us with the word of truth, and some with the word of doctors of divinity. So, beloved brethren, you need not be afraid of filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, but receive it and the truth too, with meekness, and either will save your souls in baptism to "honor God."

When the advocates of this human plea straighten up these apparent discrepancies we have something over one hundred more to put them to work on. Will they please begin the work?

A STARTLING PROPOSITION IN THE TEXAS CHRISTIAN OF AUGUST 13.

Bro. A. Clark, in an article devoted to "The State Meeting," says some things that reach out to the very farthest lengths of worldly wisdom. In concluding his article Bro. Clark says:

"I close with this proposition: The right thing can't be done in the wrong way." However much logic may be in reserve by this reputed logician to substantiate this extravagant proposition, every right-thinking man will see in it the very gist of rebellion against the authority of king Jesus.

If there were any kind of authority in the annals of inspiration for such machinery as is known in our day as State Meetings, Missionary Societies, etc., Bro. A. Clark could doubtless point it out.

The startling proposition that he has laid down, when studied in the light of the circumstances that cluster around it, becomes ominous of untold mischief brooding over the cause of Christ in this State.

Remember that Bro. Clark penned this "proposition" immediately upon the heels of the State Meeting, while the enthusiastic fires of its wisest councils were still glowing and lighting up the well mapped route of departure that has been settled upon by the engineering corps of the State Meeting.

This "proposition" speaks for itself, and notifies the brethren in no uncertain way, that it is useless to try to bind such brethren as A. Clark, C. McPherson, Dimmitt, Caskey, Carlton, etc., etc., within the narrow limits of scriptural precept or example.

With these wise brethren at the helm of an institution inaugurated to meet the demands of a highly cultivated spirit of modern progress in religion, and supply the defects and mistakes of the antiquated way of twelve fisher men, mossed over by eighteen centuries growth, we may look for great and rapid changes.

Bro. Clark's "proposition" may be laid down and bolstered up by bold assumption and the winding intrigues of sophistry, but when tried before right-reason, in the blaze of revealed truth, its puerility is seen at a glance.

Among other "right things" for christians to do, is the sending of evangelists into destitute and heathen fields. But this can be done in a wrong way. For instance, horse racing, card playing, jug breaking, doll selling, or giving church fairs, festivals, etc., to sustain him in his labors, is doing it in a wrong way.

But it is no more wrong than to organize a human society or State Meeting, and through it do a "right thing," to the glory of men instead of God! Moses did a "right thing in a wrong way" when he smote the rock, and his penalty ought to serve as a lesson to those over zealous brethren who can't be contented with God's appointments for His work.

Bro. Clark says of the State Meeting: "It is a matter of universal regret that all our preaching brethren cannot attend these meetings. Now, while Bro. Clark and other brethren were going to, attending, and returning from the State Meeting at Sherman, Bro. Durst won 22 persons to Christ, Bro. Kennedy 48, and Bro. W. E. Hawkins quite a number, we do not remember just how many.

Now, does Bro. Clark regret that these brethren were not at Sherman? Will he tell us how many were won to Christ by that gathering at Sherman? Bro. Clark says: "That any brother should deny the right or the wisdom of such annual gatherings is one of the wonders of the day."

We presume that none will deny that in some sense these brethren have "the right" to take part in these meetings. But they have no christian right to do it—no right as subjects of Jesus, the Christ, for his subjects may not do that for which they have no authority; see Col. III, 17.

As for the "wisdom," there is a kind that is "foolishness with God;" we know many who do not deny this kind, to such annual meetings, but think they are founded in, and perpetuated wholly upon such wisdom—the wisdom of this world.

Again, Bro. Clark says: "There is what we call the brotherhood of Texas. There is the ability and the obligation on the part of that brotherhood to evangelize our State. How, we ask, can this be done without concert of action?"

This same question may have been asked eighteen hundred years ago, when it not only cost dollars and cents to promulge the story of the cross, but men's lives; but God appointed the way, and faithful men executed it then, as the same class will do to-day.

Paul and Barnabas went right on as directed, without even thinking of a State meeting or missionary society, while John and Mark turned back; doubtless Mark would have been a State meeting or missionary society man if he could have found such an institution to have found him a field, and guaranteed him good pay for his work.

The difference, however, in Mark and modern State meeting and missionary society men, lies in the fact that he seems to have repented of his proclivities in that direction, and won the commendation of Paul for his submission to the Lord's way, while our modern sort clamor louder and louder for pledges and assurances by State Meetings, etc. Is not God's way as good for Texas, as it was for the whole world eighteen hundred years ago? Why is it not?

A. MCG.

BEWARE, "HOBBYISTS."

Bro. A. Clark, in a recent article reporting a meeting he held at Cisco, has this to say: "The little band at Cisco extend an invitation to any preaching brother of good standing, and free from cranks and hobbies, and who has no ax to grind, to call and preach for them."

Maybe their "grindstone" is about worn out. When these brethren who have big schools to carry in connection with the promulgation of the sound doctrine, which always has and always will meet a fierce opposition, find a good place they grind their axes well. Such preachers need sharp axes, they can't get along without them, for it takes sharp work to faithfully work for Jesus, and any worldly enterprise at the same strokes.

It seems from Bro. Clark's Cisco report that he has been doing some sharp work there; we judge so from his finding such an "unusual amount of good feeling and fidelity among the other churches."

But in this we may be mistaken, as we are aware that Bro. Clark writes some things that are hard to be understood sometimes. He tells us in this article of his "kind and courteous Baptist brother" that he met at Cisco.

Bro. Clark has, or used to have, a habit of calling on sectarians to lead in prayer on his preaching tours, even those who had never been immersed. We remember that his excuse for it was that he "did it as a courtesy." He is full of courtesy until he comes in contact with what he is pleased to term a "cranky" or "hobby-riding" brother; he does not want their axes ground.

He was the leading spirit of thirty-three, who, something more than a year ago, signed a decree debarring this class of brethren from the use of any "grindstone" in the State. If they would work, he was determined they should do so with dull axes.

Now, again, he issues a sort of an edict, forbidding them to "grind" at Cisco. Now, if Bro. Clark issued this Cisco edict by direction of the church, we would like to know what they mean when they forbid "hobbyists." If they mean by "hobbyist" what Bro. Clark does, then we know that they mean to forbid a declaration of the whole counsel of God; then they have judged themselves unworthy of the truth as it is in Jesus, and men who love God's plea more than a human plea, should go there and save from the wreck such as should be saved.

But, knowing Bro. Clark as we do, we doubt his authority for his forbidding notice. The time has come that when a man determines to stand firmly in defense of the "faith once delivered to the saints"—the gospel precisely as it was preached by the apostles, taking it as they have given it, nothing more, nothing less—must at the same time determine to submit to such indignities as will be heaped upon him by time-serving brethren.

They will call him an extremist, hobbyist, cranky, etc., but they will not meet him in fair and open inquiry for truth. "All things will work together for the good of them that love God," which makes these slanders and indignities supportable.

We heard that Bro. A. Clark said recently at Weatherford, publicly, that he was sorry that he had any brethren who were silly enough to be going over the country teaching that persons must believe that baptism was for the remission of sins before they could be scripturally baptized; and he branded such with his handy and oft repeated appellation, "hobbyist."

Bro. Clark has brethren who are sorry that they have a class of brethren going over the country, and their name is legion, telling the people that "the apostles of Christ said that baptism was for the remission of sins, but that it is not necessary for them to believe what they said." This class of teachers, instead of teaching the church, and trying to bring it "unto the measure of the fullness of Christ," are, by their sleight and cunning craftiness, in which they are waxing worse and worse, deceiving, and, perhaps, being deceived, tossing it to and fro with every wind of doctrine. They are trying to make the biggest sect in all sectdom out of the church of Christ, by swallowing up all other sects.

Those who love the faith delivered to the apostles too well to barter it off in the construction of this mammoth sect, are "hobbyists, extremists," etc. We, for one, had rather wear their opprobrious names than accept their false doctrine and become their fellow rebels.

The apostles spoke God's words. They said that baptism was for the remission of sins; we are to know the truth to be made free. Then, "let God be true, but every man a liar."

SALVATION BY DEATH.

The writer once knew a man whose talent for money making was wonderful. From a penniless boy he worked his way up to great wealth. The end and aim of his life seemed to be money. Night and day he schemed and worked to amass wealth, and it seemed that everything he touched turned to money; though it was often said that the ignorant and the widow and orphan were made to groan under the oppression of his avarice.

Be this true or not, his possessions were great, but just as he reached the prime of manhood nature entered her protest against such protracted and unremitting efforts, and like the rich man of old, who was increased with goods, and was just ready to pull down his old barns and build greater, his soul was required of him.

He was suddenly stretched on a bed of intense suffering. He exhausted every remedy that medical skill could devise, but in vain. When he realized that death was inevitable, he expressed a wish to be baptized. So a Methodist divine was summoned, who came and sprinkled a few drops of water on his head. He then expressed himself ready for death, which soon claimed him. Thus the miserable dregs of a mispent life, a life wholly devoted to the service of mammon, were offered to his maker.

After his body had been consigned to the earth, many spoke softly of his repentant (?) death, many who were bitter against him in life; and, no doubt, many of them really believed that he was saved from the wrath to come.

Again, I knew a woman who had been a very negative character all her life, but about four years before her death she was roused from her lethargic state by hearing the pure gospel preached in its simplicity, with much force.

She began to be interested in the bible, but being already a member of a human society, she steadfastly and repeatedly refused to accept the "truth as it is in Jesus," preferring the "doctrines and commandments of men," thereby judging herself unworthy of eternal life.

She was very suddenly called to die. As her children and friends stood around her dying bed, she asked them to sing of heaven, and begged them to meet her there. She expressed a perfect resignation to death, and in a few hours her eyes closed on earthly scenes forever.

I have given these two sketches, dear reader, that you may understand the meaning of my caption, "salvation by death." It is not a quotation from Peter, Paul, James or John, but, from the credulity with which people accept statements of the dying, one would be led to think that some such passage is to be found in the bible. But not so; it simply means believing or pretending to believe that persons are saved because they say so, when dying, just because you are sorry for them, and want to believe it, whether it is so or not. But, doubtless, many of the friends and relatives of the subjects of the above sketches, being ignorant of bible teaching, honestly believed them to be safe, for such consider dying words as oracular. Many, I know, who claim to know

"the way of truth" perfectly, had their faith shaken by one of these happy deaths, saying, "well, if she did not go to heaven, I do not see why. How very strange that any one claiming to know the terms of salvation cannot see why!" But, says a good old Baptist lady, "how are we to know they are going to heaven, unless they say so?" which is parallel to the remark of old negro, upon hearing of the death of a thief, killed in the act of stealing; "poor thing! neber eben had time to tell whar she was gwine!" Yes, and after they tell us "whar they are gwine," we are as ignorant as we were before.

If such statements can save us, then we can, indeed, eat, drink, and be merry, praying the good old Episcopal prayer, "from perils by sea, and perils by land, from storms and sudden death, good Lord deliver us." Again, if we save the moral on such statements, we are forced to do the same for the murderer on the gallows, who swings into eternity with such a statement on his lips, as is nearly always the case.

Dear reader, all of God's promises are in Christ Jesus, in Him, yea, and in Him amen! He has promised to save no one outside of Christ's body, the church, and the way into His church is so plain, we are told, "that a fool shall not err therein." So, then, there is no excuse for any honest person not finding this way, if earnestly sought after.

If, therefore, any such die out of Christ's body, it is because they closed their eyes lest they should see the way into it, and the utmost we can do for them is to trust them in God's hands, for He is just and merciful. Our opinion as to their salvation will not affect them one way or another; but it will and does affect the living. For, if we, who have found the "straight and narrow way," stumble at these 'happy deaths,' then we make the church of Christ a useless institution, His agonizing death a vain sacrifice, and our doubts a stumbling block to thousands of sinners; for you need not think that they do not see the inconsistency of contending that there is but one church, and no salvation outside of this church, and then being puzzled over the happy death of persons in human societies.

Reader, it is hard to have to say these things, and very unpopular; but shall we withhold the truth because it wounds the living? God forbid! Better to wound them a thousand, yea, ten thousand times, than that their souls should be lost eternally. "Let God be true, and every man a liar."

L. B. M.

MR. BANTA'S ARGUMENT.

CENTRE POINT, KERR CO., TEX.,
August 23, 1885.

MR. A. MCGARY.

DEAR FRIEND:—In accordance with our mutual agreement at the annual gathering of the Christadelphians at Lampasas Springs about the 7th inst., I take up my pen in defence of the proposition enunciated in a discourse by Bro. A. R. Miller, on the subject of the regathering of the twelve tribes of fleshly Israel from their present dispersion.

Here is the proposition: "No one can be scripturally baptized into Christ who does not understand and believe that the twelve tribes of fleshly Israel will be gathered from their present dispersion and settled again in their own land."

Before entering into a scriptural exposition of the affirmative side of this proposition, we will remind you of what you said in the March number of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, viz: "When Philip was down in Samaria preaching, it was said that after the people believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women," (Acts VIII, 12); after they had believed these things, not before. Now, what were those things concerning the kingdom of God which the people believed before Philip baptized them? A correct answer to this question will furnish us the characteristics of the one baptism. It is evident that they understood and believed more concerning the kingdom of God than that Jesus was God's son.

True, this is a grand proposition, and furnishes the basis for all the balance to rest upon, but he preached "things concerning the kingdom of God," which they believed; "what were they?" March number of FIRM FOUNDATION, page 24. We now propose to answer this question according to scripture, and in doing this we will establish the affirmative of the proposition under consideration.

tiles, having received the gospel by a direct revelation from God. By tracing the history of Paul as recorded in Acts it will be plainly seen that he and Philip preached one and the same gospel; for instance, in Acts xx, 25, we read, "And now behold I know that ye all among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God shall see my face no more;" also, in Acts xxviii. 31, "Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ," etc. And at verse 23, "to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets, from morning till evening."

In this he followed Christ, who, after he arose from the dead, addressed his incredulous disciples thus, "O, fools! and slow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have spoken, and beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." Luke xxiv, 25. Now, it is an undeniable fact, that Christ and Paul both referred to the writings of Moses and the prophets in proof of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ which they preached.

By following Paul (as he also followed Jesus Christ), back into the old testament, and diligently searching its pages we find not one word said about a church kingdom, nor a kingdom up in the skies, nor beyond the skies, but we do find those writings full of importance concerning the Ancient kingdom of Israel, called also "the kingdom of the Lord," or of God.

This kingdom, as is well known to all bible readers, was composed of seven elements:

1. A territory; (Canaan).
2. A capitol city; (Jerusalem).
3. A king; (Saul, David, and others who were anointed of God—God's Christs).
4. Subjects; (the twelve tribes of fleshly Israel).
5. Laws; (the law of God, given by His mediator, Moses).
6. Subordinate rulers; (the princes or heads of the tribes of Israel).
7. An empire or secondary dominion; (the nations conquered by David, and made tributary to the kingdom of God).

It is also well known to bible readers that this ancient kingdom of God was overturned, see Ezekiel xxi, 25, 28, and would remain overturned until he came whose right it is, and I will give it him, saith Jehovah. This kingdom, according to prophets and apostles, and the testimony of Christ and the angel Gabriel, will be restored again with

1. Christ as its king.
2. The saints of the Most High as subordinate rulers, with Christ their head.
3. The twelve tribes of Israel as the mortal subjects of the first dominion of the kingdom.
4. Jerusalem, the capitol city.
5. The law of God will be the law of the realm.
6. The territory of the first dominion will be Canaan.

7. The empire of secondary dominion will be all the nations from the river to the ends of the earth.

Christ was born to be king of the Jews, see Matthew II, 2, 7, and to reign on David's throne, over the house of Jacob, see Luke I, 31, 37, and Acts II. He was put to death for claiming to be the born king of the Jews, John XVIII, 37. God raised him from the dead to set him on David's throne—Acts II, 30. God will send him at the time of the restitution (restoring again) of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began.

And the spirit speaking by the mouth of Peter and James, in Acts xv, 14, 17, said, "How God at the first did visit the gentiles to take out of them a people for His name, and to this agree the words of the prophets as it is written. After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up."

Jesus said to the Jews, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." And to the disciples he said, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom;" and again he said to the twelve, "In the regeneration, when the son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, then ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."—Matthew XIX, 23.

What more natural then than the question propounded by the twelve disciples after His resurrection, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"—Acts I, 6. Our modern Illuminati affirm that the disciples entertained carnal ideas in reference to the kingdom, but Christ did not rebuke them for their views of the kingdom, but only corrected their misunderstanding in reference to the time of its establishment.

To be ignorant and faithless in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, as they are taught in the writings of Moses, is to be ignorant of the gospel, and therefore without the faith which comes by hearing the word of God, and without faith it is impossible to please God.—Heb. XI, 6. It matters not how often a man is dipped in the water, if he is not in possession of the one faith it will fail to please God.

That the gathering of the Jews and their settlement in their own land is an essential element of the gospel is as clearly taught as any other element. See Paul's teaching, in Rom. IX, X, XI chapters, concerning his kinsman according to the flesh.

JOHN BANTA.

In the discussion now pending between friend Banta and myself, I beg leave to tighten up the taps a little, in the outset, so that no extra or irrelevant ground will be traveled over.

While he has not couched his proposition in exactly the same words agreed upon by us at Lampasas, they are substantially so, and we will urge no further change in his wording than a slight abbreviation, which will, at the same time, relieve the proposition of its tautological appearance. To this we presume he will have no objection.

Instead of "No one can be scripturally baptized into Christ," we suggest "No one can be scripturally baptized," or "no one can be baptized into Christ, etc." Either will satisfy us, and will embody the thought fully.

Now, we desire to be understood as denying this proposition without any further reference to the restoration of the "twelve tribes of fleshly Israel" than its relation to the issue herein involved demands. We say this through no disposition to ignore any part of truth, but to narrow the controversy into reasonable and readable bounds.

Again, we shall try to discuss this question without using the word "kingdom" as interchangeable with the word church. We have decided upon this, too, to cut off occasion from friend Banta to lengthen out on irrelevant matter. We however reserve the right to show that these words "kingdom" and "church" are sometimes interchangeable words, if we should deem it necessary to the substantiation of truth that we have set out to contend for. But we intend and believe that we can settle this question without riding the "kingdom" question into kingdom come.

This is a question that, under certain limitations, at some future time, we would not object to discussing; but, now, we want to confine our friend

Banta and ourself, if we can, to the main issue.

We agree with Mr. Banta that Paul and Philip preached the same gospel, and so did Peter and all divine preachers. But what Mr. Banta has engaged to do is to show to us that these preachers preached to alien sinners, as a necessary antecedent teaching to baptism, that the "twelve tribes of fleshly Israel will be gathered from their present dispersion and settled again in their own land." Has he done this, or has he made any progress in that direction in this first effort? We say that he has not.

Whatever view Mr. Banta may take of the word kingdom as it occurs in the statement, "after the people believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women," we do not think that he can gather any strength from this passage to help his christadelphian doctrine, or advance him in his effort to make his proposition appear plausible.

If we should admit the most extreme construction that he could put upon this word kingdom, here, it would not militate in the least against our side of this question. It was "the things concerning the kingdom of God" that Philip is here said to have preached, and it was these things that the men and women believed before they were baptized.

Now, every condition connected in any way with our salvation from sins, is concerning the kingdom. Yea, every step of divine appointment concerns the kingdom of God. Hence, it is just as reasonable to suppose that Philip discoursed to these people about "adding to their faith, virtue, knowledge, and all of the christian graces," as that he preached to them the terms of my friends proposition. If he had done so he would have been violating his instruction as given by the Lord in the words, "go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

A glance at this commission under which these chosen and qualified men were to preach, will show a marked regard for the grand and beautiful law of progressive development so beautifully expressed by the Lord in these words: "So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first, the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."—Mark iv, 26, 28.

Again, we find the recognition of this same law by Paul, in these words: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ, I have fed you with milk, and not with meet, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able." 1 Cor. iii, 1, 2.

Again, he says: "Every one that

useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age."—Heb. 5, 13. Again, the apostle Peter recognized this same law of development, as is evinced by these words: "As new born babes, desire the milk of the world that ye may grow thereby."—1 Peter ii, 2.

But our friend Banta comes along with a proposition, which, if true, destroys the order of that commission, takes snap judgement on the law of development, mixes "milk" and "strong meat," and crams these incompatibles down the throats of "babes" unborn, even!!! No wonder that he rears up christadelphians instead of christians, since he violates the law by which christians are made.

We conclude by calling Mr. Banta's attention to the fact that Christ chose his representatives, empowered them and sent them into the world to "teach and baptize." Again, that He bound in heaven what they bound on earth. He has, through divine instrumentality, given us a record—a book of those bound terms. Is that book not plain and easy of comprehension? Does that book not give us a record of the questions of unbaptized persons as to what they should do to be saved—what hindered their baptism, etc? Can he, out of that book of "bound" terms or conditions, give us the answer that he has embodied in his proposition? If he can not, he has lost his proposition. If he can, he has gained it.

In vain will he endeavor to shift this responsibility in the presence of candid and rational minds. Will he come up to his work like a fair disputant, or will he flounder about among the shades of the types and shadows? We will see.

MY TRIP TO FIELD CREEK.

According to promise, I visited the congregation worshipping at the above place, and commenced a meeting on Friday night before the second Lord's day in August. Brethren Larimore and Maxwell were on hand, and on Lord's day evening Bro. Paige put in an appearance.

In connection with these good brethren we labored 'till the night of the third Lord's day. The meeting was not without good results. Besides those added to the congregation from the world, a number of christians identified themselves as workers in the body at Field Creek.

Many others seemed impressed with the truth to soberness and reflection. I shall ever remember the associations formed at Field Creek. Two good brethren residing there, viz, Rufus Cobb and Matt Cavness, received the sanction, appointment or ordination by their colaborers to the work of proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation. May they ever present the word in its purity, and never be moved by the frowns or applause of men.

On Monday morning I turned homeward to wife and children, the dearest spot to me this side of heaven. When I reached Mason I found Bro. Dimmitt, of Sherman, Texas, in a meeting, and I turned in to Bro. Ben Gooch's to enjoy his hospitality for the night, and to hear Bro. Dimmitt.

I found Bro. Dimmitt at Bro. Gooch's, and we were soon engaged in pleasant conversation. Before many moments had passed, however, he called attention to the FIRM FOUNDATION, and remarked that it was unfortunate that it was in existence. This brought to light the objectionable features as urged by Bro. Dimmitt, and we discussed fully for some time sect baptism and its effects.

Bro. Dimmitt dealt feelingly in warnings and forebodings. Dr. Thomas had run off into side issues, served his time, and sank into shame and forgetfulness. So had Jesse Furgason. The FIRM FOUNDATION would soon do likewise; its financial supporters become bankrupt, and its founder ignominiously pass away.

I reminded Bro. Dimmitt of the fact that its circulation was steadily increasing, and endorsements of its teaching were continually pouring in, and its prospects brightening every day. In view of these facts, I insisted that he and others of the same mind would be derelict in duty if they persisted in their seemingly determined course not to avail themselves of the use of its columns (so generously offered) to expose its fallacious teaching.

I have no interest in the FIRM FOUNDATION, only to see it circulated and prove a success if it promulgates the truth, or to see it go down if it teaches error. I shall believe it to be closely adhering to the old landmarks 'till shown to the contrary. Will Bro. Dimmitt embrace the opportunity to expose its errors? We shall see. It will not be frightened by the ghost of Dr. Thomas, Jesse Furgason, or any other erratic man. The unadulterated milk of the word is the food upon which it proposes to feed. I make this statement from a standpoint of intimacy with its founder, and I think I know whereof I speak.

From the run of the conversation at Bro. Gooch's, one would readily think that persecution was at hand. Bro. Gooch plainly told me that he did not want me or any other man to preach at Mason that advocated the teaching of the FIRM FOUNDATION.

My dear brethren, many doors in my humble judgment will be closed against us. Of one thing I am thankful, that "the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. It has been the custom of my brethren to boldly attack everything unscriptural. Why are you now lying on your oars? I promise for myself a fair investigation of these questions with any brother. I will affirm that the alien is commanded to believe, to repent, to confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and to be baptized by the authority of Christ for the remission of sins. If there appears no one to deny this, I will affirm that these things can not be obeyed without they proceed from an understanding heart. Will Bro. Dimmitt, Bro. Gooch, or any other brother avail themselves of the opportunity thus offered?

JOHN S. DURST.

We pity such unfortunate brethren as these. They are so desirous of appearing "broad and liberal," and yet they are so very narrow. Poor souls, they are small enough to rattle in the hollow of a horse hair. There is no hope of ever enlisting such men under the banner of a poor Nazarene carpenter. They have a mortal dread of the "voice of the people." They, like their ancient sort, "love the praise of men more than the praise of God." If they had been with Paul when severe afflictions came upon him, we might expect to find their names linked with that of Demas, because he did not love this present world any better than they.

This class of brethren have chafed under the yoke of Christ until they have long since thrown it off. They, too, want a king like their neighbors. So, Christ rules over them no longer. They are rapidly enacting human laws and "expedients" through other organizations than Christ's church.

Bro. Dimmitt is the "pastor" who negotiated with the Austin church to take "charge" of it, but he laid the amount of his Sherman stipend before them, telling them that they would have to over bid that. They did not do it, so their "call" was unheeded by this "lover of the Lord." (?)

Who could expect such men to advocate or endure the teaching of the FIRM FOUNDATION? We are not so unreason-unable as that. We would like to know when Bro. Gooch became sponsor for Mason, or the brethren in that section? Bro. Gooch has lavished his talent so on Bro. Dimmitt, (who loves a cheerful giver so well that he can't stay away from him), and Bro. Dimmitt has puffed and stimulated Bro. Gooch so through the papers, till we fear they are beside themselves. However this may be, we want to inform Bro. Gooch, and he can tell Bro. Dimmitt if he desires—that the very doctrine that the FIRM FOUNDATION advocates and propagates—which is the gospel of Christ—will be preached in Mason before many more new moons. The proclaimer will not expect any favors of Bro. Gooch either, since he has judged himself unworthy of bidding God speed to the truth as it in Jesus.

Paul used to preach the gospel in his "own hired house" in Rome; so can that same gospel be preached in Mason, Bro. Gooch's forbidding message to the contrary notwithstanding.

BRO. A. J. McCARTY'S WORK.

We have just heard from Bro. A. J. McCarty's work. He, too, while other brethren were at the great State Conclave planning to supply the deficiency so patent to them in our Savior's work, was up to his elbows in the work of saving souls.

Does Bro. A. Clark wish that Bro. McCarty had been at the "State Meeting" instead of holding himself aloof in the good work? During this time Bro. McCarty baptized sixteen for the remission of sins. Ten of these were Baptists, but Bro. McCarty did not ask them the unscriptural question "Are you satisfied with your baptism?" Neither did he think that there was power enough in man's puny grasp to shake them into Christ.

Sister Maggie L. Stone, who has favored us with a very worthy article found in another column, is only twenty-one years of age. This ought to put some of our older sisters to the blush, and spur others into work.

A GOLDEN TEXT.

ADEL MACDONALD.

One of the faithful went her way
From the holy aisles of prayer;
For great the burden seemed that day
For the Christian heart to bear.

The dear old church that stood like rock,
Nearly half a century past,
Lifting her head from every shock,
Was bent like a reed at last.

You've seen it, doubtless, the fiery test,
That gold alone can endure,
Which every church must sometimes breast,
That she may rise strong and pure.

But sore was that sister's heart to-day,
And darkness blinded her sight;
"Where lieth my duty, I can not say;
Lord, wilt thou guide me aright?"

"Do I not err to thus attend
Where I know deceit and fraud
With every form of worship blend
To pervert the house of God?"

"Here is the word, I'll search it out."
With the book upon her knee,
She found a text which cleared all doubt—
"T was only: "Follow thou Me."

Others, perhaps, may stand in doubt,
Others may question, like her,
Whether 't were better to stand without,
Or mingle with those who err.

It matters not how others do,
For here is the golden key;
Remember, all He asks of you
Is simply, Follow thou Me.

A LETTER FROM A SISTER.

FAIRVIEW, WILSON CO., TEXAS, }
May 17, 1885. }

DEAR BROTHER MCGARY:

I beg space in your excellent pamphlet, THE FIRM FOUNDATION, to respond to the stirring appeals and admonitions of Sister—I wish I knew her real name—Sarai.

Although I have never written a line, or thought of doing so, for the press, yet, when I read the timely letters addressed to the sisters in THE FIRM FOUNDATION handed me by Bro. Apple, the sentiment being so near my own, I felt constrained, though the effort be a feeble one, to offer all the encouragement in my power to the sister beloved, though a stranger, who is making such strong and laudable efforts to bring the minds of the sisters to contemplate the simplicity of the gospel path, and to practice the simple manners and customs of primitive christianity.

Oh! how far have we, my dear sisters in Christ, departed from the simplicity of the gospel ways of our predecessors, and in our self-exaltation, forgotten the admonition of the apostles, the ambassadors of Christ, to whom were the words of reconciliation committed, and who spake for the Lord when the following was uttered:

"Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time, casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."

Oh! dear sisters in Christ, where e'er you are, or what e'er may be your station in life, shall we forget or refuse to submit to the heaven-born admonition and humble ourselves before our Lord and our King? Who can or who does care more for us than the meek and lowly Jesus, who left the courts of glory and came to this poor world of sin and death in humble submission to his Father's will?

Can we walk with our blessed Master while we, in our self-exaltation, ignore the commands of Him, our great exemplar, our great law-giver? Let us, my dear sisters, go with Him in His travels with His chosen few, and witness the deeds of love, compassion and mercy. Though He was the son of God, yet we see Him mingling with the poor, the very poorest, speaking words of comfort to all who sought and cried to Him. Hear Him in a strain of love and sadness, as well as triumph, when He spake to John's messengers:

"The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." Thus we see the lowest grade of humanity was not neglected, but He kindly, lovingly and mercifully stooped to lift them up from the degradation of sin and corruption, and all of them to a higher and nobler plane.

He wept with those that wept. He was "a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief." Then, oh, children of God, who can look on the condescension, the humility and sufferings of our guide and feel any pride of heart? None, oh, none, if we have the spirit of our Master; can we lust after the things, the fashions of the world, the gaudy dress, the dazzling apparel, and the broad acres with the princely mansion, and be led by the spirit of the crucified One at the same time? Let us, oh, let us, each one, answer this now.

Then, seeing the tendency of our course, let us begin, yes, begin now, to disencumber our souls of the grievous burdens so ardently heaped upon them that we may, in the great day of the Lord, be able to stand before the great white throne.

Our riches and costly attire, our lordly wealth will not avail us then. We will be dispossessed and disrobed, and stand exposed at that trying time. Oh, then, would it not be far better for us, and would we not feel and realize that joy and happiness that would inevitably come to or attend the dying moments of a dutiful child of God? And at this moment to know, that instead of hoarding up wealth to canker and rust, we have by our means caused one or more poor souls to rejoice in the hope of glory, would be enough to raise such an

one above the pains of death, and cause their thoughts to soar beyond the chilly Jordan of death, over there to the realms of the blessed.

What a crown! bedecked with so many gems! Then will all realize who have been faithful, and have spent their means in sending the word of life to perishing men and women, the good they have accomplished. But, on the other hand, if for selfish purposes we have withheld and bestowed our means upon our lust, we will realize our inevitable doom, and sadly, but irretrievably, view opportunity slighted, and precious moments wasted.

And now, in conclusion, my dear sisters, who may read this, let me entreat, in the name of our Lord, the Christ, let us all, every one, heed the godly admonition of Sister Sarai, and arouse from our fearful slumber, and awake to a sense of our whole duty, for the day is fast passing away, and there are yet many thousands of poor, deluded souls groping in ignorance of the glorious plan of human redemption. May all our efforts be directed by the infallible word of God, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

And now, Bro. McGary, I feel that I have occupied too much space with this article, but, having read the dear sister's letters to us, I did wish so much to respond and offer a word of encouragement, however humble and weak the effort.

And now, in conclusion, permit me to thank you for conceiving the idea, and putting it into execution, of publishing a paper of such sterling worth, because of its close adherence to the truth.

May the blessings of heaven rest upon you and strengthen you to stand for the King Eternal.

Yours in hope of immortality,

TENNIE C. TITSWORTH.

“THE CHURCH!”

OF WHAT IS IT COMPOSED, OR WHAT CONSTITUTES THE CHURCH OF OUR LORD?

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

Owing to a somewhat mistaken idea that is prevailing among some of our brethren, we will attempt to make an exposition on the subject designated by the above caption, hoping it may be of some benefit to some of the precious lambs, and also benefit some of the older sheep, and also to draw out some more abler advocates than the writer.

In discussing a question of this kind we should always keep the scriptural use or definition of the term before us, because,

1. The English word “church,” according to Webster, has three distinct meanings, therefore, there would be a great doubt about getting the proper scriptural meaning of the word.

2. If possible, when a discussion of this kind arises, it should be settled by a “thus saith the Lord.” Therefore, with these propositions laid out before us, we will confine ourself to the “law and testimony” as close as possible.

In the first place, we will call attention to the most correct meaning of the word in English, attested by the "word of life." The three definitions as given by Webster, rather agree in the second definition given, which is, "An organized body of christian believers."

Now, let us see what Paul's definition of the term is. But we will first consider the general use of the term church as it is used in the scriptures. The term is used in a two-fold sense in the scriptures. It is sometimes used in the abstract sense, and again it is used in its concrete sense. We will give scriptural illustrations:

1. I will illustrate the use of the term in the abstract sense. Acts II, 47; "Praising God and having favor with all the people, and the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Now, I contend that, according to Webster, the term is here used in an abstract sense. Webster says of abstract definition, first, "Distinct from something else;" second, "Withdrawn from the concrete, etc." Now, we have in this illustration,

1. "The Lord added to the church," (a distinct body of organized christians), "daily such as should be saved." The question naturally arises, where did the additions come from? Did not they come from the original concrete body? Most assuredly this was the case. We have now illustrated the use term in its abstract sense.

2. We will illustrate the use of the term in its concrete sense. I will refer to the xvi, Chapter of Matthew; you know when Jesus came into the coast Cesarea, Phillipi, he asked his disciples "Whom do men say that I, the son of man, am? and they answered and said, some say that Thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias, and others, Jeremiah, or one of the prophets." But he said unto them, "Who do ye say that I am?" Then Peter answered and said, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God;" and in the 18th verse Christ says, "And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church, etc."

We have in this passage an illustration of the use of the term in its concrete sense. For, upon this rock, or, upon the fact of his being the only begotten son of God. He was to build His church, and, brethren, to-day, as an organized body of christians, we stand and rest our hopes upon this fact. As I said, this passage illustrates the use of the term in its concrete sense. Every christian that ever was or ever will be has stood or will stand upon this foundation.

Now, for Paul's definition of the term church. Ephs. iv, 4; "There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in the one hope of your calling." Rom. xii, 5; "So, we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." 1st Cor. xii, 13; "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body being many, are one body, so also is Christ, for by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, etc."

We see what body Paul had reference to when he said that Christ was the Savior of the body. It was the church. He himself is represented as the head, and we as the body. Could this be made any plainer? If the Lord does not say so himself He authorized Paul by the holy spirit to say so, and Paul was just as earnest in teaching this as he was in presenting the facts of the gospel.

What more can be said on this subject? What more is necessary to be said? Absolutely nothing. Paul very plainly teaches that Christ is the head, and we are the body of the church.

In the hope of immortality, I subscribe myself the brother of all those who are seeking the straight and narrow way.

J. M. AITON.

CREEDMORE, TEXAS, May 26, 1885.

LETTER FROM BRO. HOBSON.

LLANO, TEXAS, May 24, 1885.

BRO. MCGARY:

I am not a subscriber to THE FIRM FOUNDATION, but I am a reader of it, as several of the brethren are taking it. Neither am I a controversialist, nor do I aspire to become famous through the pages of a magazine, but will you allow a brother to ask a few questions, and to submit for your consideration a few thoughts in regard to the points in controversy between you and others of the brethren?

Understand me in all I say to be actuated by a spirit of kindness and love toward you and all others who are striving to walk in the old paths. I am opposed to any and all innovations in the way of theories that are not in harmony with the pure law of the spirit; and it pleases me to see so many of our newspaper brethren standing so firm, but I sometimes think that some of them stand so straight as to lean just a little the other way.

I fear there is a tendency, to a certain extent, to ignore matters of equal importance with baptism, in the continued discussions on that point, giving our enemies good grounds to accuse us of teaching a "water salvation" exclusively, as you know they now do.

You may answer my questions without publishing my letter if you are crowded for room, or you may publish it if you deem it worthy of notice. My first question, is this:

Do you think that in order for baptism to be valid that it should be known and believed to be for the remission of sin?

2. Do you think a person from the Baptist church upon joining the church should in all cases be baptized?

3. Was not the command give to preach the gospel and to baptize believers? If so, what were they to believe? Did Philip baptize the eunuch upon an admission that he believed baptism to be for the remission of sins?

Peter said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Suppose we write this sentence in proper form for analysis, "Every one of you repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." Now, in this sentence we evidently have two verbs in the predicate: Repent and be baptized. One a command to do something, the other a command to submit to something. Then, the phrase, "for the remission of sins," is adverbial, and modifies the predicate; the same relation existing between repentance and the phrase as does between baptism and the phrase. Am I right? If so, is not repentance as much for the remission of sins as baptism? Would either accomplish the desired result without the other?

"Preach the gospel; whoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Believe what? Evidently the gospel is meant; the plan of salvation is a unit, and every principle connected with it is necessarily a part of it; therefore, it can not be complete with any of those parts omitted.

There can be no faith without testimony, no repentance without faith, no confession without repentance, no baptism without confession; hence, no remission of sins without all of these, which, combined, is God's order of pardon to the alien.

It is not faith alone, repentance alone, confession alone, nor baptism alone, but all in their regular order that secures for us remission of sins through the merits of the blood of Christ.

"The gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation: to every one that believeth it."—Romans 1, 16.

"And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."—Acts xvii, 30.

"And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—Luke xxiv, 47.

"For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."—Romans x, 10.

"Whosoever therefore will confess me before men, him will I confess also before my father who is in heaven."—Matt. x, 32.

When the believing penitent has reached this point he is dead to sin, and is prepared for burial. He is then buried "by baptism into death."—Romans vi, 4.

Now, where does pardon, or remission of sins take place? In faith? No. In repentance? No. In confession? No. In baptism? Certainly not. But in the mind of God, when all of the conditions that lead to it are complied with.

Each one of these principles is a unit of the plan of salvation to the alien. Taken together they are the plan. Therefore, I think that controversies upon any one principle, that have a tendency to make it of more importance than the others, weaken the cause and gender strife, and the enemy will say, "Lo, they are divided!" Do you not think so, my brother? or, as one of your correspondents said, "do you see the point?"

This is my first attempt at writing on these subjects, and my letter is longer than I intended. If its place is the waste basket I will not complain. If you deem it worthy of notice, I may write again.

Yours in the one hope,

J. E. H.

In response to what Bro. J. E. H. has said, we are somewhat at a loss to know where to join issue with him. When he says "the plan of salvation is a unit, and every principle connected with it is necessarily a part of it, therefore, it cannot be complete with any of these parts omitted," we cannot find ground to dissent.

Again, when he says: "There can be no faith without testimony, no repentance without faith, no confession without repentance, no baptism without confession, hence, no remission of sins without all of these, which, combined, is God's order of pardon to the alien," we are compelled, by our love for the truth, to say, amen!

But he seems determined to make an opponent of us. "By a very tight squeeze" he thinks that he has made us "lean just a little." Well, as he desires it, we are willing to stand our position by the side of his before our readers, and let them by the use of the "measuring reed" see who "leans just a little."

We have industriously sought for some issue, but when we think that we have found it, it seems to disappear when read in the light of his language quoted above. Perhaps his inquiries might lead us into the desired attitude. We will see.

I. "Do you think that in order for baptism to be valid that it should be known and believed to be for the remission of sins?" We answer that Christ said to the apostles: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them, etc.," or, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, etc."

No authority can be claimed from Christ for baptizing any but the taught, any but those that believe the gospel that they preached. Then, if we are right, and they preached baptism as a condition of salvation, the one who believes it along with other things they preached, believes the gospel that they preached, and may be baptized by the authority of Christ, which gives salvation from past sins; but the one who does not believe what they preached about baptism, does not believe the gospel they preached, and, hence, can not be baptized by the authority of Christ while in that frame of mind.

"They shall all be taught of God. Every one that hath heard from the Father, and hath learned, cometh unto Christ." They are to be taught of God, hence, the apostles were sent to teach. Any other teaching will fail to bring to Christ, even if it is followed up by a baptism.

There are many baptisms, but there is but "one" that brings to Christ; that "one" is a "birth of water and the Spirit"—as Paul begot the Corinthians—and a birth of water, which is a "birth of water and the Spirit," without which no one can see the kingdom of God. There is no other "valid" baptism found in the light of truth—the truth as it is in Jesus. Then we "do think that in order for baptism to be valid, it should be believed to be for the remission of sins!"

2. "Do you think a person from the Baptist church upon joining the church should in all cases be baptized?"

As there can be no "faith without testimony, no repentance without faith, no confession without repentance, no baptism without confession," and, "hence, no remission of sins without all of these, which, combined, is God's order of pardon to the alien," we think they should.

To rear a crop of Baptists, Baptist seed must be sown. So with Methodists, Presbyterians, etc. And to raise a crop of Christians, the good seed of the kingdom, the incorruptible seed—the word of God—must be sown. Mixed seed are all corruptible, for the human corrupts the divine in such mixture. The whole counsel of God must be declared for the seed to be incorruptible.

Baptists teach that sins are forgiven before baptism. This is what their Christ authorizes them to teach, hence, he is a false Christ, an anti-Christ, because the real, true Christ authorizes the teaching that baptism is for the remission of sins. Not "baptism alone," for His baptism—the "one baptism"—never is, and can not be alone, for it is always a birth of water and the Spirit—it has every antecedent laid down by the Spirit. Baptist baptism does not have these antecedents, and, besides,

3. Was not the command given to preach the gospel and to baptize believers? If so, what were they to believe?"

Yes, that was the command. They were to believe the gospel they preached, of course; what else could we suppose? Did they preach some things that we must believe, and others that we need not believe? This seems to be the idea with many brethren. It is a pernicious "plea" that demands such a theory.

Did Philip baptize the Eunuch upon an admission that he believed baptism to be for the remission of sins?"

No; nor upon the admission that he believed that Christ rose from the dead. Yet, we are sure he believed both, for both were surely preached to him if the gospel was preached to him. If he had disbelieved either he would have lacked that much of believing the gospel, and lacked that much of being ready for the baptism authorized by Christ—the "one baptism."

The gospel is composed of facts for belief, commands for obedience, and promises for enjoyment. Our brethren who are so fondly wedded to a human plea as to become disloyal to Christ, to obey its behests, have tried hard to press the apostle Paul into their service. They are trying to distort his language found in 1st Cor. xv, 1, 4, into such a deformity as is required to fit their human "plea."

Paul says: "Now I make known unto you, brethren, the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye received, wherein also ye stand, by which also ye are saved, I make known, I say, in what words I preached it to you, if ye hold it fast, except ye believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which also I received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that He was buried; and that he hath been raised on the third day according to the scriptures, etc."

Now, to insist that Paul is here defining the gospel and delivering it, by these words, in its several details, is to insist that the apostle is inconsistent.

Further, whoever proves that Paul has here fully defined the gospel, convicts that apostle of folly. And why? Because there is nothing in the facts of Christ's death, burial and resurrection that can be obeyed. It is utterly impossible to obey any fact; and yet Paul teaches that the Lord Jesus will come in flaming fire and take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of the Lord Jesus: see 2nd Thess. 1, 8.

How foolish to talk about obeying either, or all three of the facts named above! And yet this human "plea" demands that we place Paul in just such an attitude. Why will men not learn to give up their theories when they cause an apostle to cross himself? Any theory now entertained, or that ever will be, which depends upon an interpretation of scripture that will not harmonize with every other passage of scripture, may be known to be wrong.

The spirit of God bears true witness, it never crosses itself.

Peter says: "The time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" What can be obeyed? Can facts or promises? Only commands can be obeyed. Then the gospel of Christ has commands in it, or Paul would not have said that the "Lord Jesus would take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ;" neither would Peter have asked "what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God." Would they?

Now, who is it that "leans just a little?" Is it not the "our plea" advocates, and do they not try to make the apostle "lean" with them?

SYNOPSIS.

During the past three months, from June 6, to September 6, I have spent in active service, traveling and preaching, 89 days, have been at home 3 days, preached at 19 places, traveled 1700 miles, preached 136 discourses, added, in all, 164, including 80 added at one meeting, in company with Bro's. Lincoln, Dyches and Wood.

Yesterday I failed, unavoidably, to meet my liability in the bank, and was gloomy and sad; to-day, that I am with my dearest ones, I am cheerful and happy. On the 1st of October, to which rigid payment of said liability is deferred, I expect to be left homeless and destitute, and then to weep in despair after all over the death of my book, The Great Legacy.

This calamity can be avoided, and thousands of precious souls ultimately be saved, and everybody who will, be benefitted and made happy, if all who desire a copy of The Great Legacy, and wish to perpetuate its existence, will send me $1.00 and get it before the first of October next.

Brethren, do send now, not for my sake, but for the good that would thereby accrue to the Master's cause, for which I have earnestly sacrificed all, and labored and endured for so many long years. This statement is real, as thousands can testify. This is my last extremity, and I hope and pray it may be my last call.

P. S.—A Brother from Tehuacana, Texas, writes: "Dear Bro. Ezzell: I send you $1.00 for one copy of the revised edition of THE GREAT LEGACY. I bought one from you before, and gave it to a Presbyterian family. It convinced them, and I don't know how many more. I want this copy for a similar purpose.

God speed you."

LETTER FROM BRO. HURLEY.

LAMKIN, TEXAS, Sept. 13, 1885.

MR. A. MCGARY.

DEAR BROTHER: I take the present opportunity of writing you a few lines. I have just returned from Fairview, where you preached when you were here this summer.

A Methodist preached there to-day on baptism and its designs. His argument was based on the "Nichol Plated Ecclesiastical Pump and Grub Ax." I could scarcely keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace while he spoke such delusions to blind the people.

I want to know if you will write a treatise in reply to the Ecclesiastical Pump? If you will, I will sell everyone I can, and if I can't sell them I will buy enough for this country and give them away.

He has distributed the Pump here, and I would like to distribute an answer to it. If you have not a copy, and will answer it, I will send you a copy.

I will close with many good wishes for your success with THE FIRM FOUNDATION, praying that the truth may conquer.

Your brother in Christ.

W. H. HURLEY.

This makes the eighth request for us to answer that Methodist nonsense. While we would prefer that some one else would do this work, we are willing to try our hand at it if the brethren who have requested us to do so will, like this brother and two others who wrote us some months ago upon the subject, insure us that our labor will not be in vain, but find a circulation where the "Pump" has been perambulating.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

Come on with your orders, brethren, and we will send one thousand copies to pumping the "Pump."

A. MCG.

SELF CONVICTED.

In the Gospel Advocate, of August 29, is an obituary written by Bro. J. M. Barnes, of two old persons over whose remains Bro. Barnes spoke prior to their interment. Those two old persons had lived and died strict members of the Baptist church.

It is not our purpose to write one word fraught with a single reflective ray upon these, or other dead. But we conceive it our duty to labor for truth and speak in its defense even if we should have to invade the silence of the tomb to do so.

Truth is immutably the same everywhere, and under all circumstances. It is worthy of homage, unhesitating fealty, and an untrammelled voice anywhere, any time, and under any kind of surroundings throughout the universe of God. Truth—the truth as it is in Jesus, should be as full and freely spoken amid the anguish of a funeral procession as though it were the most august concourse that ever assembled under the most enthusiastic promptings of mirth and healthfulness.

But our brethren seem to have caught the popular infection which has been so industriously and thoroughly disseminated by orthodox doctors, that they are helping these doctors to disease the whole religious world with it. The malady is one generated by the use of a theological narcotic concocted by the doctors to palliate the disturbed state of the living for the condition that a pure gospel leaves the rebellious dead in. "The voice of the people" demand it; "sound doctrine" will not supply it! Hence, the "itching" condition of the popular "ear" has "heaped" to the people, the "teachers," (doctors) who meet the demand.

So the religious world has "turned away their ears from the truth to this fabled doctrine," born of love for those who died in their sins—those who were "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."—2nd Tim. III, 4. (Remember that one who has never turned his or her ear to the truth can not turn from it).

This false doctrine originated in the desire of those who loved "brothers or sisters, or father or mother, or wife or children better than Christ, and hence they were never worthy of Him." It is being perpetuated by those who, Saul like, "fear the voice of the people." If such were ever true servants of Christ they have ceased to be so, because they seek to please men rather than God."—Gal. I, 18.

Bro. Barnes closes the obituary referred to with these words: "I never stood over the graves of two old persons and talked with more confidence of their future than these. They are at rest in Jesus. They were both strict members of the Baptist church."

Bro. Barnes is one of our most prominent men. He is a popular teacher of "our plea"—a representative r

“this reformation.” Hence, his words, carry weight with them; they are well worthy of our consideration. If his words are harmonious with the truth, the gospel of Christ, then they are calculated to extend and strengthen the cause, because of his popularity; but if he speaks or writes contrary to the “oracles of God,” his error is the more potent for evil in retarding the cause of Christ.

We ask our readers to weigh well his words given here; they not only voice the convictions of Bro. Barnes, but they speak for a large majority of our brethren—all of that class who hold that immersion under sectarian teaching is valid, or scriptural “baptism.”

He says: “They are at rest in Jesus.” The emphasis with which he says this leaves no room for even the shadow of a doubt in his mind. He is sure that they are “at rest in Jesus.” What reason does he assign for having no doubt about the salvation of these persons? Hear him give the assurance: “They were both strict members of the Baptist church.” Then, with Brother Barnes and those who believe with him, to be a “strict member of the Baptist church” is equivalent to salvation in the “everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.”

Now, we do not intend to pursue these words of Bro. Barnes into the manifold avenues of thought that they open out and invite the inquirer after truth into; but we desire to call special attention to the precise attitude that we their author in.

We state without any kind of reservation that the idea that Bro. Barnes has here conveyed, and evidently intended to convey, leaves him standing before all candid, right-thinking minds, a self-convicted partisan—a very schismatic.

And why do we say this? Because he can never, without modifying these words of his, give one plausible excuse for holding himself aloof from the Baptist church! He knows that the Baptist church had an existence long before “our plea” or “this reformation.” He further knows that the Baptist Church is more able to propagate its doctrine to the world, and is more popular with the world than “our plea.” He knows that three persons are being converted to Baptist doctrine for every one that is being won by “our plea.” Brother Barnes knows full well that he could turn his influence to the Baptist church and win more persons to it than to “our plea.” Since, then, he considers “strict obedience to the Baptist church equal to salvation,” can he give one valid excuse for withdrawing himself from the Baptists? We challenge him to try it.

From his stand point nothing higher than a selfish excuse can be furnished—unless “our plea” has something more desirable to offer to her votaries than “rest in Jesus” beyond the vale of shadows. What more can be offered? And if Bro. Barnes is right, this can be attained just as well by being a “strict member of the Baptist church.” Let me believe this, and in vain would any man appeal to me to remain with an insignificant few to plead with men and women to leave a church whose "strict members" were sure to "rest in Jesus."

Brethren, why not, if Bro. Barnes and those who held with him are right, cease to fight against God, by trying to draw persons away from connections that, if "strictly" adhered to, will ultimately give them rest in Jesus? Why not act more nobly, as did Dr. Foy and others who have gone out from us? Why not act more consistently and go the full length of Bro. Barnes' proposition, which would be to accept W. T. Moore's proposition?

Brethren, we must, sooner or later, take Moore's stand, or take the word of God as our rule, which we say is a sufficient rule. Are these great lights of "our plea" so obtuse as not to see that the same rule that will insure "a strict member of the Baptist church" and "a strict member of any other church both rest in Jesus, will insure the same to a strict member of any church that claims Christ for its head?" Then, where does our right to claim that we are the "one body," come from? Then, why oppose W. T. Moore's consistent and conciliatory proposition?

But it is all false from its alpha to its omega—from Bro. Barnes and his rebellious coadjutors, to W. T. Moore and his more consistent fellow-rebels. The children of God who are dutiful will all walk by the same rule, which will cause them all to wear the same name, and all speak the same thing, that there be no divisions among them; and they will be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.

How is it when one says one thing is necessary to entrance into the "body of Christ," and another disputes it? Are they of the same mind and judgment? Do they speak the same thing? If, at whose door does the fault lie? It because they do not both go by the same rule.

One is an "old foggy, an extremist, a hobbyist;" the other is of "liberal views, charitable, a progressive gentleman," unfettered by the rule of illiterate fishermen. The former want to walk and live by this rule—the doctrine delivered by God-sent men; the latter want more latitude; he cares naught for Paul having said: "Mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them." He has all of the worldly wise on his side, and he knows that too many of the former class regard it as an honor to have the attention and apparent friendship of his wise and popular brethren (would-be doctors) to attempt to "avoid" them.

The one rule that is to guide the disciples of Christ, is to first preach the same gospel to the people that the apostles preached, and baptize those who believe that gospel; no more and no less than this will fill up the measure of that "rule."

Paul's course with the 12, at Ephesus, will furnish us a rule to be guided by when we find those who have been baptized upon the belief of any other gospel, or unto any other doctrine. Then, when we have been baptized into Christ we must work by the one rule

“with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace,” remembering that “there is one body and one Spirit, * * * one Lord, one faith, one baptism—a birth of water and the Spirit.”

When one has heard and believed the gospel that Peter and all the other inspired men preached to aliens, which leads to an understanding obedience, they are begotten by the Spirit—born of water and the Spirit—born of incorruptible seed—the word of God. But when one has heard other terms than those embodied in the gospel preached by the apostles, and believes them, he is not begotten by the Spirit, and hence can not be born of water and the Spirit while in that condition, for he has in his heart instead of the good seed of the kingdom, corruptible seed, and all of the waters of the world cannot change corruptible seed into incorruptible.

This was precisely the condition of those poor dead persons over whom Bro. Barnes talked with so “much confidence.” He misled those who heard him, and did the dead no good. “Let God be true, and every man a liar.”

CLEMMONSVILLE, N. C.

MY DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

Bro. Hansbrough, from your State, has just closed a meeting of about two weeks continuance at Rogers' School House, in Forsyth county; also, one of about the same length at old Muddy Creek meeting house, in Davidson county, N. C. Bro. Hansbrough did the principal part of the preaching.

To those who know Bro. Hansbrough and his manner of preaching, it is needless to say that he neither added to nor left anything off from the old gospel. He preached the word, and did it to the satisfaction of all lovers of truth—but not to the satisfaction of the sects, except a portion that were won by the truth. The result was, eight added to the church, five from the Methodists, and three from the world.

Yours truly,

RICHARD POINDEXTER.

LETTER FROM A D. D.

PUB. FIRM FOUNDATION.

DEAR SIR: I think the time for which I subscribed for your magazine must have expired, but still it comes. Please to take a look at the books, and if my time is out, let it be discontinued.

I subscribed out of curiosity, and I have read with some interest your tilts with the Rabbi's of your own party, but I've had enough of it now; not that I couldn't still read it with interest. When a man is as much in earnest as you are, he is always interesting—whatever else he may be.

One thing may safely be said in your favor: Your position is more consistent than that of your opponents. If I owe you anything, send bill.

The above is a letter from one of our D. D. subscribers. As his letter was not written for publication, we withhold his name. We hope that he has had his "curiosity" gratified, at least to the full value of his subscription.

We are glad that he has seen the inconsistencies of our "Rabbi's," as he calls them. We have but one class for him and these "Rabbi's." There will be but one in the final day, which will be, "depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

Our wise brethren, presidents of bible colleges, and those they indoctrinate with bible-college theology—vampires that infest the whole land, sucking the very life-blood from the "body of Christ," and turning its lifeless form over to the god of sectarianism to become a prominent factor of "orthodoxy"—will stand side by side with the D. D's. in that class if they do not repent of their wicked work and cease their rebellion against King Jesus.

This is a sad thought, brethren, but a true picture, drawn in the light of inspiration. When Christ comes back to take vengeance on his enemies, many who now think they are doing God service in bartering away the appointments of His Son, will have a common lot with many others who will say to the Lord: "Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out demons, and in thy name done many wonderful works?"

Brethren, you had better discard the "expedient" tenets of Lexington, and even Bethany. To build upon them, mixed with truth, even, is to build on "sand;" and when the "rain and floods and winds" of God's wrath comes it will all fall on your own wise heads. Better learn the bible under the apostles, even if they were mostly unlearned fishermen.

A. MCG,

LETTER FROM A SISTER.

BRO. MCGARY:

I wish to have a few words with the sisters about christians being conformed to the world: Dear sisters, had we not better heed the warning words of Paul? We are assured that we have to be judged by his gospel—the gospel through him. He says:

"I beseech you that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. XII.

Now, sisters, can we do this by conforming ourselves to the world? Never, no, never! "Be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever we sow that also we shall reap. If we sow to the flesh we shall of the flesh reap corruption, but if we sow to the Spirit we shall reap life everlasting."

Oh! dear sisters, what a difference in sowing to the flesh and sowing to the Spirit. I ask you, in the name of our loving Savior, had you not better lay apart all superfluity of naughtiness, all immodest dressing and costly array, for the hope of entering through the gates into the city? There is no promise to those who conform to the follies and fashions of this present evil world. We are specifically told not to "adorn ourselves by plaiting the hair, wearing of gold, or putting on costly apparel. Now, sisters, are you heeding these heaven-sent commands? If not, how can you hope for the reward offered to the faithful in Christ Jesus?

Oh! how can my sisters go on in their devotion to the god of this world in the face of these plain commands from God, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, and yet hope to be spared by Him in that awful day of His wrath? We must deny ourselves of ungodliness and worldly lusts. We are not to fashion ourselves according to former lusts in ignorance. Yet, my dear sisters will strive to find what the latest style of the god of this world is. If it is ruffles or stripes, they will make their dress in that manner; if it is with an apron in front all puckered here and there, and one on the back, one side puckered up and the other lopped down, then they will make it that way. Now, my sisters, this looks more like lunacy than anything else.

Ah! my sisters, if you will not obey His commands while it is called to-day, while you have the opportunity, the day will come when your rebellious souls will have to meet the penalty of an outraged God. A thousand years of such lives as you are now living to the flesh would not compensate for one of those awful moments of woe that will surely come upon all the disobedient. Dear sisters, please think of these things seriously.

A preachers wife told me that she did not like to dress so fashionably, but she thought his preaching would have a better effect than if she dressed plainly. I told her that if all preachers wives would dress according to the Spirit's directions, it would have, in fact, a very marked effect upon their husbands preaching.

We are commanded to always abound in the work of the Lord. Now, my sisters, can you claim that your assiduous devotion to dame fashion, which occupies a greater portion of your time, is any part of "the work of the Lord?" If not, then, as you value your souls you had better leave it off. Christians are to be a "peculiar people, zealous of good works."

But some sister will say: The apostle did not mean that you should not wear gold or costly array; he meant, not set your affections on these things. O, you had better be trying to change yourselves than that word which liveth and abideth forever—which will judge you in the last day. Be careful my sisters how you try to pervert God's word.

I heard a sister say that she studied God's word faithfully, and endeavored to live up to its commands. At that very time she had gold rings on her fingers, and she was arrayed in costly apparel. I saw nothing about her to indicate that she was trying to obey God's commands. It seems that the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, blind many so that they can not see the commands about gold rings and forbidden adorning.

We are to walk in the Spirit, and not fulfill the lust of the flesh. If we live in the Spirit let us also walk in the Spirit; see Gal. v. I heard a sister say, "I want my daughter to be proud." I don't want mine to be proud, for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Sisters, if you never looked in the perfect law to find out how many kinds of pride is spoken of, you would do well to do so.

Ah! my sisters, we need all of the christian graces to add to our faith that we may bear the fruit of the Spirit. We must put on and wear the whole armor of God that we may be able to withstand the wiles of the devil.

Bro. McGary, may God assist you, that you may go on earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, is my earnest desire.

A SISTER.

We are highly pleased at the interest that many sisters are manifesting for THE FIRM FOUNDATION. When a true sister in Christ becomes a friend to a paper it means real help for that paper, for where their warm hearts go, their hands go too. With enough sisters to befriend THE FIRM FOUNDATION and work for its circulation, it will outride the angry storm of place-hunting, filthy-lucre loving "pastors."

If the sisters were against us, that is, the true ones, we would entertain fears of success. But many of them are on our side of these questions—the bible side. Many more have promised to write for us. With a fair proportion of sisters, and God's word on our side, we can boldly bid defiance to the thirty-three would-be popes of Texas, and their auxiliaries, who think more highly of men than is written.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION has no ax to grind; it does not use an ax, but the "sword," which is sharp on both edges. Ax grinders have no part with it.

A. MCG.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

MY DEAR SISTERS:

I have not written to you for some time, for a good many reasons, which it is needless to state; but this much I will say, that sometimes I feel so discouraged and so doubtful as to effecting any change in my sisters, that I almost feel as if my time was wasted. But, lately, I have felt much encouraged by the appearance in THE FIRM FOUNDATION of so many letters from my sisters of exhortation and approbation, which shows that there are a few faithful ones, at least, whose hearts are torn by the contemplation of the backslidden state of God's people.

Let us hope that there are many more whom lack of self-confidence deters from writing, but whose prayers are attending us. Faithful sisters, it behoves us who love the truth, to work early and late to increase the circulation of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, it being the only paper of all our publications that dares to declare all the counsel of God; that dares run on its own merits, trusting to lovers of God to support it, rather than to bogus advertisements, etc.

I ask each sister who reads this to raise a club for it, and the one who raises the largest shall receive a nice gift from me, independent of any offers made by Bro. McGary. Sister Stone sets us a good example in sewing and paying her subscription. Any of us by one days labor can pay for the F. F. this way. Now, all who are willing to work on this plan should send their subscriptions and names to Bro. McGary, who will keep a list and turn them over to me.

I have promised to take the Sister's department in the F. F., therefore ask your aid in every way, especially by contribution. We can do a good work, sisters, by working to extend the circulation of the F. F. It aims boldly at error, and sets christians to thinking, wherever it is read.

But, just as I took up my pen, I was musing over an interesting story I recently read in one of our popular papers. It was called The Tale of a Dinner, and taught a good lesson. Doubtless many of you have read it, also, but for the benefit of those who have not, I will give a brief synopsis of it, and see how many agree with me in my opinion as to the lesson it teaches.

The hero and heroine of this story were a poor, honest preacher and his patient wife. The story opens with the wife up to her elbows in the wash tub, and the preacher ushering two well-to-do brethren into the parlor to await dinner.

When he announces the fact to his wife she is quite overwhelmed, as the larder is destitute of sugar, coffee, meat and flour, save two pounds which she had intended using for starch. But with a tearful "I will make out some way," she sets to work, using the flour for crusts to peach and also chicken pie, reserving some for biscuits. She sweetened the peach pie with a little honey she had to make some cough medicine for herself, little Bennie's pet chicken furnished the meat for the chicken pie, over which loss he sobbed himself to sleep that night.

She sent her last quarter to a neighbor for a pound of butter and a few fresh eggs, at the same time borrowing a cup of coffee. Adding potato salad and corn bread to all this, she had quite an appetizing dinner, spread tastily on a snowy cloth, with napkins to match, and a tall cut-glass fruit stand filled with flowers for ornament.

As she prepared to summon her guests to dinner, her little daughter protests against her appearing in that "ragged wrapper." "But my only good everyday dress is in the tub." Well, then, "put on your only Sunday dress." So she dons her ten-year-old black lawn, and with hair nicely smoothed, and an old lace fichu full of holes added, but deftly arranged with holes inside, she presents quite a nice appearance. In the mean time, the preacher had been haunted by the fear that his wife, Elisha-like, could not produce oil and meal from empty vessels, but the sight of the table revived his spirits, and he overflowed with good humor and hospitality.

The brethren, who, let me state, had been sent to ascertain the pecuniary state of the preacher's family, were charmed with both preacher and wife, to say nothing of the dinner. As they rode home, one of them said, "Well, the parson is not near as poor as I expected to find him." "Nothing like it, nothing like it," was the hearty response. Thus they discussed the nice dinner, hoping Sister S. was not wasteful, but "pie sweetened with honey looked very like it, when honey was twenty and sugar five cents a pound," remarked the merchant brother. Sister S. was dressed well, remarkably well to be at home on a week day; even fine lace around her neck.

To curtail the story, the outcome of the visit was a decision that people that could appear so well did not need help. They did not ask the preacher, for they "could see for themselves," so no help was left. And I think they came to a very natural conclusion, don't you? I thought of course the author would think so too, but instead she wound up by eulogising "the poor, patient, heroic preacher's wife."

Now, I think that preacher's wife did very wrong in creating such a false impression; rather acted an untruth. She should have set those brethren down to just such as she had in the house, and appeared in her ragged wrapper, making a truthful apology for the same, and perhaps her deserving husband would have received the pecuniary aid he so much needed, and which they meant to give him had they not been deterred therefrom by the false appearance of things.

This certainly must be a true story; it is at least a fine counterfeit, for I have seen one preacher's wife sit and talk about the brethren failing to pay her preacher, and how needy her family were, what they owed, etc., while she emphasized her remarks with a hand decked with three large gold rings. Now, it would be very hard for her to make people believe these things while she wears those rings, because it seems to be human nature to judge people's circumstances by the appearance they make. Furthermore, preachers wives are expected to be and should be worthy exemplars for their sisters; therefore, when people see a preacher's wife violating scriptural commands, they can't help but lose confidence in that preachers home teaching, and feel like exclaiming, "physician, heal thyself!"

But, sisters, this fault lies partly at our door. Preacher's wives are but human; they have not wings, even in embryo; therefore, it is very hard for them to dress according to divine law when they are constantly thrown with sisters showily and extravagantly dressed. How careful was Paul lest he should cause his brethren to stumble. Will we never learn to be like him?

But, speaking of rings reminds me of what I started to say about my discouragements at the outset. Nothing but an earnest desire to do good could have ever induced me to write; hence, all of my characters have been drawn from real life, as I well know they have their fac-similes in every congregation in the land. I have heard and read unstinted praise of Sarai's articles, but Sarai feels rather crestfallen when some dear sister who has furnished her a character, and afterwards expressed admiration of her productions, comes out with a new crop of bangs and another character, still clings to that handsome gold ring; and when remonstrated with, confidently exclaims, "Why, this my engagement ring! My husband put it on, and I can't take it off." You can't? Then you prefer to please your husband rather than your Savior. There was no exception made by the Spirit in favor of engagement rings.

Ah, sisters, you had better cut off these "right hands" and pluck out these "right eyes" ere it be too late! But is it love of husband that prompts to this every time? I think not, because I have seen women wear these "love tokens" when they and their husbands were scarcely on speaking terms. Yes, and this tells the tale. It is not love of husband, but pure vanity that prompts you to wear these forbidden things. Were your husband to ask you to remove that ornamental gold band and substitute for it a steel one, you would not do it. Oh that we would earnestly desire to ornament our hands with loving deeds, with "good works."

This recalls such a pathetic scene witnessed by me, years ago. A dear old lady had very suddenly dropped the burden of life, and as we stood around her bier to take a last look at the loved face, her daughter with whom she lived entered the room. She went and knelt by the side of her dead mother, and kissed the cold lips once, twice. Then turning she laid her cheeks lovingly, tenderly on the homely, wrinkled hands, and as she kissed them over and over again, she cried, "Oh, these willing hands, these willing hands; always so ready to minister to others!"

As my tears fell fast, I thought, what a beautiful tribute to the dead one's memory! And was it not, dear sisters? Let us, then, strive to ornament our hands, our lives, with noble, Christ-like deeds, to humble ourselves to implicit obedience, that we may have a "right to the tree of life, and enter through the gates into the city."

Bro. Ezzell has sent us an appeal to the brethren for help for his book, the Great Legacy, requesting us to publish it, which we have done.

We are sorry for Bro. Ezzell or any other Bro. who becomes so embarrassed. But we conceive it to be our duty to state in this connection that we believe there are some egregious errors in his Great Legacy. We are sure that some are promised an interest in the heavenly estate by Bro. Ezzell upon different terms to those embodied in the last Will and Testament of God, which is sealed by the blood of His Son.

However, there are many good things in Bro. Ezzell's Legacy, enough to be worth what he asks for the book if they are carefully separated from the illegal items.

A LIBERAL OFFER.

For every subscriber sent us between the 15th of October and the 15th of September, we will allow 25 per cent commission. Besides this, we offer the following premium on clubs: One-half of the largest club that is sent to us between the above dates will be returned to the sender of such club, as a premium.

That this may be fully understood we will suppose the largest club to be 40. In such case the getter up of the club would take out $10 for commission, and send us $30; and when it proved to be the largest club we would return to its sender $15.

Brethren, we offer no such premiums as silver communion sets, because such things find no place among true christians. The use of such things in a congregation of the Lord's people is a corruption of the true spirit of christianity into a vain, lustful spirit of worldly pride, from which christians must turn away.

We could, by offering such premiums, make a more showy offer, and at less expense to us, but in doing so we would become a party to the introduction of the devils-ware into the house of the Lord. Some of our publishers are doing just this thing. They have associates who are silver-smiths (a very strange avocation for a christian) and these associates have a fine opening to merchandise through the columns of such papers by holding out these shining premiums.

I tell you brethren, the devil is a pushing, enterprising old fellow; he is becoming full partner—the Co. part—of some enterprises that he ought not to be taken into. We are truly sorry to see such a selling out mania among those who use to stand so firm for their convictions.

But we offer, in the first place, full value for the work of those who are willing to help extend the circulation of THE FIRM FOUNDATION. Then, in addition, we offer a premium in money, which can be used to the good of the cause—we deny that a silver communion set can be thus used.

Send in your clubs brethren and sisters, taking courage in your work at the thought that you are helping a paper that, whatever its faults may be, it is ready and anxious to correct them whenever pointed out—a paper that is not circumscribed by the metes and bounds of a human “plea.”

Subscription price, $1.00, which holds good for twelve months, even after the change to a weekly.

THE MOORE PROPOSITION.

After having read what has been said pro and con by our leading journalists, especially the controversy between Bro. Allen and the piquant defenders of Mr. Moore, we are forced to the conclusion that Moore is guilty of having advocated the union and fellowship of all who claim to be christians, without regard to baptism—that is, making no difference between sprinkled and immersed persons. This must be the decision of all candid and dispassionate minds that have weighed the discussion upon both sides.

And those who have attempted to shield Mr. Moore from the well merited reproofs and rebukings that have been directed at him by his brethren who look with disfavor upon his proposition, are as virtually linked to that proposition as he. They really deserve less respect and sharper censure than Moore at the hands of all christians, and even those who make no pretension to christianity, who admire a straight, manly course. They are willing to appear before the world as his defenders, under the aspect of "charitable" protectors of a persecuted man, who is being set upon by his enemies, armed with the destructive bludgeons of malevolence.

The cast that they are trying to give to that controversy will serve them a double purpose:

1. It will have a tendency to draw attention from the real issues involved in Mr. Moore's proposition.

2. It will gain prestige for them in the ranks of "orthodoxy," which will be made available when the right time comes. Their hearts are ablaze with the gist of that "proposition," but they lack the courage to take the chances of an open advocacy of it at this time, but will keep it pent up till their schemes for its easy accomplishment are fully matured.

Isaac Evrett, their astute chief, probably has a creed in his pocket now, subscribed to by that horde of impatient

"pastors" who are ever ready to do his bidding for the lucrative "calls" that he works up for them. With the acumen of this arch-rebel to engineer the movement of the restless army of "progress," we may expect Mr. Moore's position to be reached by it in a very short while. In the mean time Mr. Moore need not suffer uneasiness; he will be well cared for by those who have defended him. He will still have the fittest place across the waters that is within their power to give.

A careful retrospection is now in order, to see what causes have conspired to bring about this state of affairs, and who are now, directly or indirectly, hastening on such a union as Mr. Moore proposes, which is an ultimate and inevitable sequence to causes that are rooted and bedded in the very fundamental principles of "our plea for christian union."

It is high time that this re-examination should be made, and if anything is found in the make-up of "our plea," from its inception to this distracted hour, that will not square up by the "measuring reed," that thing, whatever it may be, or however sacred it may be held, by virtue of its originator or long use, should be removed at once. Whatever has found a place in "our plea" that is not provided for by the "perfect law," has been introduced at the instigation of the great adversary of truth—"the prince of the power of the air, that now worketh in the children of disobedience."

ple among our brethren, that one unscriptural step or practice calls for, and is followed and supported by another and another, etc., until points of great departure from truth are reached. Giant strides away from truth would be unsuccessful in their efforts to harm the cause of Christ, because the watchmen on the walls of Zion would not fail to perceive them, and successfully point out their direction.

The devil has always been too cunning to attempt to disrupt "the body of Christ" by open and bold attacks upon it, or by the introduction of extreme moves into it, save by piecemeal. His most successful agents are men "transformed as the ministers of righteousness," who, by one small encroachment after another, succeed in leading away disciples into the realms of the kingdom of darkness. In his satanic boundaries are many institutions to engage the activities of those who do not think "a right thing can be done in a wrong way." All such institutions as "State meetings, missionary societies, and their auxiliaries, are his. Christ has no use for such things. He is "head over all things to the church."—Eph. 1, 22.

We, then, very naturally conclude that good work cannot be done in any of these human and satanic institutions. "The perfect law in which we are given all things that pertain unto life and godliness; and which things are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," is as silent as the tongue of death about any such institutions, except, perhaps, to include them with the "unfruitful works of darkness."

A man who works for Christ must work in that institution over which He is head—which is the church of God. The apostles of Christ have given us perfect and complete rules for working in this heaven-born institution. To work by other rules or in other institutions is to work for the union proposed by Mr. Moore, which is the broad channel into which all human practices and institutions are tending, and into which they will ultimately be merged.

But we neither have the space nor the inclination now to point out all of the feeders to Mr. Moore's grand trunk line to purgatory. But unless we make immediate and vigorous efforts to return to primitive grounds—not of "our plea," but scriptural grounds—many who now think they are every whit primitive will be carried away with the popular current and drowned in perdition.

We will give a short quotation from an article of Bro. J. A. Hardings, in the Gospel Advocate, of September 23, on "the Moore controversy." We greatly admire Bro. Hardings' manly and courageous manner and methods of opposing error. We believe him to be scrupulously honest and conscientious. We were forced to the conclusion that F. M. Green wilfully and maliciously attempted to destroy him; and we further believe that Bro. Harding was correct in all he had to say about them. Yet we believe that Bro. Harding is remotely doing a work that will, sooner or later, eventuate in just such a union as that proposed by W. T. Moore.

I allude to his practice of receiving converts from the sects on an immersion that has not the characteristics of the "one baptism," and hence is not authorized by Christ. Immersion without those antecedents that preceded the "one baptism" practiced by the apostles, is no more of God than is sprinkling or pouring. Bro. Harding knows this, and yet he continues to recognize such as scriptural baptism. This work of his is as antagonistic to "the faith once delivered to the saints," as if he were to advocate Mr. Moore's proposition for union.

Bro. Harding closes his article with these words: But what will Allen and McGarvey and Grubbs and such men do about it? Those babies are still life members; Prof. Neville is still a life director; (at least if any changes have been made except in the withdrawal of one infant, I have never heard of it;) Moore will certainly be sustained; and the society will thus take another step towards infant sprinkling.

I do not doubt but that within a few years—ten or fifteen perhaps—many of the society leaders will be ardently advocating the reception of all sprinkled people who want to come among us; and many churches will be acting on the advice." Neither do we doubt this. There is a strong element among us ripe for it now. See how few have

But why is it that Bro. Harding opposes such a union? Why does he oppose the "missionary society" so vehemently? Is it not because such things and practices are not authorized by that which "thoroughly furnishes"—that which is a sufficient rule of faith and practice? If so, that is the very same reason why we are opposed to the practice of Bro. Harding and others of taking in sectarians upon a baptism that is no more authorized by the scriptures than those things he opposes. Is it his respect for the word of God, or "our plea" that causes him to continue this practice?

We here promise Bro. Harding that we will produce scriptural authority for the "missionary society," baby-sprinkling, and Mr. Moore's proposition for union, whenever he produces if for his practice that we have called in question. Will he put us to the test? We hope he will.

A. MCG.

We have just received eleven pages of M. S. from Mr. Banta. In these eleven pages cannot be found even a hint at what he promised to do. He is now crowing for a fight over the church-kingdom question. What kind of a chicken is he any way? We have never thought there was much game about this very small breed. He had a great deal to say at Lampasas about my brethren not being willing to discuss with Christadelphians. If they all flop about as he does, it is no wonder. His next article, for aught I know, might be a denial that the moon is made of green cheese.

NEGLECTED DUTIES.

WRITTEN FOR THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

AMONG professors of the christian religion perhaps there is no duty more seriously neglected than that of meeting on the first day of the week and partaking of the bread and wine in remembrance of Jesus.

How often are we commanded to partake, and how often do we give heed to the command, are questions that should be well considered by all, especially by those who are in the habit of neglecting this all-important duty entirely, or only discharge it when time and opportunity suit their convenience.

The frivolous excuses we may offer for non-attendance may be accepted by men to whom they may appear reasonable, but how will it be with "God who searcheth the hearts?" ought to be the question.

We are taught that the immediate followers of our Lord Jesus Christ partook of the bread and wine on the first day of the week, so we are justified in the conclusion that christians ought to partake once each week at least, and certainly those who meet less frequent fail to discharge their whole duty.

The performance of this duty is perhaps meaningless to those who have never tasted the sweets of redeeming grace, or felt the effects of "pure and undefiled religion;" but to christians nothing is more consoling in time of sorrow, nothing affords more relief in time of distress, and I can think of no duty so well calculated to prepare us for the discharge of all other duties incumbent upon us as professors of the christian religion.

It is to be regretted here at Blanco (perhaps this is only one among many places) that only a very small fraction of the members enrolled in the Christian church attend regularly to this all-important duty, and some neglect it entirely, while, if some new preacher holds a protracted meeting, or a big camp-meeting is being carried on, though several miles away, most of these negligent members find the time and opportunity to attend very often.

Notwithstanding it is discouraging to realize the above state of affairs in the church, yet, all who are faithful have every reason to be thankful for the precious promise the Lord has left, "that where only two or three are assembled together I will be in their midst to own and to bless."

With the foregoing facts, and numerous others constantly before our minds, it behoves every follower of Christ to lose no time or spare no pains endeavoring to reclaim these cold, negligent, and apparently dead members.

Therefore, let each one of us who are endeavoring, by the help of God, to do our whole christian duty, to practice brotherly kindness, and in so doing let each one of us try to persuade some brother or sister to come up to the house of the Lord at the time appointed for our social meetings, and if they will come in the right spirit we can promise to do them good—neither should we neglect to pray that our efforts may not be in vain.

It may be the duty of husbands to encourage wives, or wives to encourage husbands; brothers or sisters, parents or children may accomplish great good by speaking some kind, proper words at the proper time and place. All of us are ready to say we have little or no influence; whether this be true or false we have no means of ascertaining, except by trial, and, if after a lifetime spent in trying to persuade others we are the means of turning only one soul to Christ, who can estimate the value of an immortal soul? Or what are a few brief years of time compared to an endless eternity to which we are hastening?

When all professors of the christian religion will endeavor to teach that obedience to all christian duties taught in the scriptures is essential to salvation; then show by their daily practices they believe what they teach, then we may reasonably expect a revival in the Christian church unparalleled in the annals of the world.

The Christian church is being watched continually by all non-professors without the least degree of allowance, and neglect of any duty leaves a lasting impression on their minds, especially those who are ready and ever willing to find fault. This neglect of duty gives rise to the oft-repeated saying, "I am just as good or perhaps better than many who profess to be christians."

We are well aware that none of us can attain to perfection in this life, but all of us know equally well that with very little effort on our part each of us can make wonderful improvement in religious life, first, by a faithful discharge of all duties we are commanded to perform, then by leaving undone many things as we are commanded by divine authority, then by planting ourselves upon the firm foundation, the word of God, and taking for our guide daily the last will and testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

It is to be hoped that in the future

ministers will more frequently present this all-important subject to the minds of their congregations, and that congregations will give the more earnest heed to this all important duty lest some of our members "let it slip" so often that finally they will forget it entirely.

We know of some denominations who make it the duty of their congregations to assemble for the purpose of partaking of the Lord's supper only three or four times during each year, or in other words, just when it suits their convenience best. Such denominations have just as much scriptural authority for waiting a whole year or more as for only a few months, and those who never attend except at times when no sacrifice must be made or inconvenience experienced most likely had as well stay away altogether.

This neglect of duty upon the part of church members no doubt gives rise to the frivolous excuses rendered by non-professors for the small amount of interest manifested by them in the up-building and sustenance of Christ's kingdom, or church.

It is nothing uncommon to hear men boldly assert that they have not attended church once during the last five years, and don't expect to for five to come. Then, if asked their reasons for so doing, the reply is most likely to be "Well, I am as good or perhaps better than some of your church members, for they never attend church except on rare occasions."

Now, fellow traveler to the bar of God, if your name is enrolled in the Christian church book, stop and ask yourself the question, am I included in the above named list? and if you are, lose no time in "laying aside the weight and every sin that doth so easily beset us, and run the race set before you," praying that our skirts may be clear of the blood of these fault-finding fellow creatures if they will not be persuaded.

R. W. GILLESPIE.

BLANCO, TEXAS.

LaPORTE, IND., Sept. 29, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I undertake once more to write a few lines for the FIRM FOUNDATION. These are perilous times for the church of Christ. As Paul says in 2nd Timothy III, 1, This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those who are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

All the above described characters we now have. But the worst of the matter is, we have them in the congregations of the disciples. Who but the heady, high-minded lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, have introduced into the church the music box, the festival, the Sunday school picnic, the church sociable, and all such mischievous devices? Who but the lovers of themselves and the despisers of those who are good, call those who adhere to the bible and defend the truth, old fogies and mossbacks?

Who but traitors have departed from the faith, and are giving heed to seducing spirits and dictrines of devils, and are speaking lies in hypocrisy, having callous consciences as if seared with a hot iron? Are they not such as claim to be christians, and to stand on the bible, and at the same time affiliate with and hold union services with heretics, whose doctrines they know to be false, and whose practices they know to be unscriptural?

When we have such men as W. T. Moore, the great London missionary, and Isaac Errett and A. I. Hobbs, C. McPherson, N. S. Haynes, and many others among us laboring to lead the people to recognize all the sects as christians, we think that the perilous times have come. Moore suggests a plan for all christians to unite. It is the same suggestion given a few years since by one Mr. Lamar, of Georgia, who then wrote for the Standard. The proposition is to admit all persons of all denominations to church fellowship whether they have been sprinkled, poured or baptized. If they choose to be baptized, baptize them; if not, let them remain unbaptized. This they say would leave each one's conscience free. This, as everyone can see at a glance, allows one's conscience to be his guide, and wholly nullifies the law of Christ.

Whence a man's conscience? Evidently from his education and training.

If a man has been educated to be a Methodist, he has a Methodist conscience; if he has been trained to be a Baptist, he has a Baptist conscience, and so of all other sects. Now, they will each retain his conscience until he is converted. If he be converted to christianity he will no longer have a sectarian conscience, but a christian conscience. He will at once divest himself of every vestige of sectarian conscience. He will wholly repudiate sectism and adhere to christianity and the bible. It is impossible that christianity and sectism can be identical. Christianity is one, sectarianism implies division. It indicates that the parties are distinct—different.

But Moore, Lamar and company would have a union destitute of unity; a whole made up of incoherent parts. How long would such an arrangement of heterogeneous parts continue, does any intelligent person suppose? Judging from the early departure of these same men from the christian system to their present position, it certainly would not be long until they themselves would abandon such a mass of corruption, unless indeed, as seems probable, they love corruption more than purity. I am sure, however, that there is no probability of any of the sects abandoning their beloved heresies to embark in so silly an enterprise; and all the harm this uncalled for suggestion will do will be to expose the ignorance and infidelity of many who heretofore have borne the name christian, but who never fully accepted the doctrine of Christ, either because they never fully understood it, or because they never fully believed it.

W. T. Moore and all his class of thinkers seem to think that because many persons who have been sprinkled conscientiously believe that they have been baptized, that their consciences therefore ought not to be disturbed.

With equal propriety it might be urged that because many persons sincerely believe that their sins were pardoned at a mourners bench, therefore, their consciences ought not to be disturbed by teaching them the gospel plan of salvation, which differs from the mourners bench system in all its parts. In fact, Moore's suggestion is an entire abandonment of the gospel of the truth of Revelation, and an accession to false doctrine and false practice. It can not be otherwise, and yet the Standard, the Christian Evangelist, and perhaps some other papers are favorable to it.

Are not the times perilous when such men as the editors of the above papers either wilfully or ignorantly abandon the truth? If there was any probability of persons being saved who believe and practice falsehood, then I would think the chance of the common sectarian for salvation far better than the chance of those who have known the truth and have abandoned it.

According to the scriptures, there is absolutely no such thing as finding pardon or salvation at a mourners bench, or any other place outside of faithful obedience to the law of Christ—the truth.

There is no such thing as sprinkling or pouring for baptism. There is no such thing as entering the church in infancy. Now, all these things have been claimed by those whom W. T. Moore proposes to receive into the fellowship. He knows that there are no such terms of admission into Christ's kingdom, and yet he and his coadjutors are willing to substitute such a procedure for the law of the Lord, the King.

I have not been at all surprised at this monstrous suggestion of W. T. Moore. I have been looking for and expecting no better fruits of this advanced wing of the church. It is on a line with modern Sunday schools, organs, choirs, festivals, Sunday school picnics, conventions, missionary societies, etc. All these are sectarian tricks and inventions. A love of money and popularity have led all the advance leaders into these things. They are not to be trusted nor followed, and I hope that all true disciples will abandon them and their teaching, and maintain the truth and stand by those who defend it.

I hope also that all true brethren will assist in supporting THE FIRM FOUNDATION in its defense of the truth. It is a necessity, as there is no other paper that will so fearlessly defend the whole truth.

Come to the rescue, brethren, and help sustain the truth. With love for all true brethren, and prayers for the success of truth and righteousness, I remain,

Your brother in the faith,

I. C. STONE.

FUDGING.

When I was a boy I used to play marbles; sometimes the boys would say, "now, Jack, don't fudge, if you do, it won't count." The word had a different meaning when I was a boy to what it has now.

The dictionary defines the word to be nonsense. What we boys meant by fudging was this: we had a line or mark to start from, and each boy had to rest his hand on this line, and not "fudge," (go beyond)—pass over.

Now, the point I wish to make is this: the brethren in discussing the baptismal question remind me of the time when I was a boy—they will fudge! The very ground in dispute is passed over by them without giving the real issue any notice whatever.

They quote, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." They say the Baptists have believed and have been immersed in water, therefore, they are saved.

I ask, what have they believed? That God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned their sins, of course; made to confess a falsehood!! Is this confession to precede the "one baptism?" No, my dear brethren, it is an antecedent of Baptist baptism, done by the authority of the Baptist church, and not by the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul says: "Whatsoever we do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Cal. III, 17.

The real issue in this question is, What is obedience? Can a person obey God without the proper faith in Jesus Christ? Are there not false Christs in the world? Jesus has warned us. He says, "Then if any man (Baptist or Methodist) shall say unto you, lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not, for there shall arise false Christs and false prophets—teachers—and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect. Behold I have told you before."—Matthew xxiv, 23, 25.

No one will deny that we have false prophets—teachers—in this age of the world, and false Christs. The Baptists say He is in the desert, or they found Him by some old stump or tree. The Methodists say He is to be found at the mourner's bench, in a pile of straw. The Baptists find Christ and get their sins pardoned before they are dipped.

Have we not false prophets or teachers? They represent a false Christ to the people, and the result is they are deceived, deluded; their faith is not in the Christ of God—the true Christ, who is found in His own appointments, and represented to us by Paul, Peter, James, John, and others of His apostles who have the authority.

Bro. Thornberry talks about "playing in the water!" but this fudging business is worse; yes, much worse than playing in the water.

Now, brethren, quit all of this nonsense—fudging—and come to the real issue like men, and let us have this question settled. Don't be dodging and fudging so much; "if you do, it won't count."

Yours for the whole truth,

A. J. MCCARTY.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

HOMER, LA., May 28, 1882.

A. MCGARY, }
AUSTIN, TEX. }

DEAR BRO: Enclosed find postal note for one dollar in payment for THE FIRM FOUNDATION for one year, to be sent to W. S. Hollis, Marion, Union Parish, La.

Most of the F. F. I like, but I object to a hobby on any one subject. If you wish you can send an occasional copy to me, and I will show it to the brethren, and if they want it I will send for it for them.

QUERY: The disciples are accustomed to stand to give thanks when they break bread. Where is either precept or example in the scriptures for the example?

Truly your brother,
Box 81. J. B. DAVIS.

My Brother, I can't cite you to precept or example for this practice of standing while giving thanks, or in prayers. The class of teachers who have introduced this popular posture into the church care very little for precept or example; when they set their heads to do a thing they just do it. Their own wisdom is sufficient with them and those who do their bidding.

We have been intending to offer an argument against standing in prayers, but when we do we expect those who favor the practice to "object to it as a hobby on one subject." However this may be, we believe that it is just assiduous to refuse to be guided by the example of apostles in this matter as any other. It shows that those who do so are not satisfied with the way the apostles did, and hence abandon it for a way of their own.

So it is about many other practices we could mention, but as so many of our brethren are afraid of hobbies we will desist this time, only saying that whatever is done under the claim of having been done by the authority of Christ, that has not in the New Testament a direct command, clear example or necessary inference to sustain it, is presumptuous sin in whoever does it.

GONE TO REST.

Died at her home near Leona, Leon county, Texas, on the 23d of September, 1885, Mrs. Harriet M. Durst, at the advanced age of 82 years.

Time has accomplished its work! The sting of death is passed, and the grave claims the decaying body. If all ended here, an everlasting farewell would go forth from our sad hearts; but, inasmuch as we are taught by inspiration that "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality," and that death is the gateway into a future state, or the paradise of God, our broken hearts turn "over there," and we gladly contemplate the future meeting.

In the year 1864 she obeyed the Lord and was translated into His body. Her interest in the Master's cause grew with increasing years, and she was ever found at the post of duty.

Our Father, we need help to say,

"Thy will be done." We are frail, and cling tenaciously to the beings of earth with love often greater than we give to Thee. Lord, pity us in our weakness and sorrow, and help us to submit patiently to Thy will.

When I think that I have seen my mother for the last time on earth, and that her regular precious letters, always ending with "God bless you, my dear children," have ceased to come, my heart is filled with sadness and grief. Farewell, dear mother, 'till the happy meeting in the beyond.

HER SON, JOHN.

STATE EVANGELIST.

We frequently hear or read something about "State Evangelist Young." What is meant by "State Evangelist?" Does it signify that this man Young is to preach in every city, town and hamlet in the great State of Texas—that his voice shall be heard from Red River to the Rio Grande, and from the northernmost tip of the panhandle to the Gulf?

Oh no, this can't be what is meant by "State Evangelist," because such evangelists rarely ever visit the remote or inaccessible points in their "journeyings and sojournings"—in fact, they do not have time from one "State meeting" to another to go all over the State. Then, "State Evangelist" has some other signification. It must be that they are creatures of the "State meeting"—officers wholly dependent on that institution for their existence. This view of it will suit all around.

In the scriptures we see no mention of such a class of men, hence, we very naturally conclude that they were not in existence then—were not needed. Then, there was no such things as "State meetings;" if there had been we suppose they would have had State Evangelists, State Solicitors, etc., etc., as these all go together.

Everything must have a name. Scriptural things have scriptural names, but unscriptural things, such, for instance, as "State meetings, State Evangelists, State Solicitors," etc., etc., must have an unscriptural name, such as State Evangelist. We first heard that Young was "State Solicitor," but we now hear him referred to as "State Evangelist."

If such men as McPherson and Ho-man remain in the lead, as they now seem to be in State meeting lore, we may expect organ, flagged seat and "Apostolic Guide" solicitors sent and sustained by the "State meeting." These are progressive times.

PENN CHALLENGED.

In the Texas Christian we see that our brethren at Abilene, Texas, are trying to get up a discussion with Major Penn, the great Baptist evangelist of prayer-killing notoriety. We think their effort is vain and foolish

1. Because Major Penn is proverbially unfair and unreliable in what he says in public, if there is any coloring of truth in current reports about him.

2. Because our brethren ought to know that Penn is too smart to put his fulsome system of dogmatism in the light of truth where intelligent men and women of his own church, even, can take a fair look at it, freed from the perplexing and obscuring influences of his little pandemonium under a tent.

3. Because our brethren ought to place too high an estimate on the plan of redemption from sins to attempt to make a plaything of it to while away their time.

From the standpoint occupied by our representative men, such as McGarvey, Allen, Errett, Lipscomb and Sewell, J. A. Harding, and Barnes, of other states, and Wilmeth and Rawlins, the Clarks, Carlton; McPherson, Homan, and others too numerous to mention, of Texas, there is not an essential difference between us and the Baptists. They are in Christ as well as we; when they die "strict Baptists" they go to rest in Jesus." Then there is nothing that we have learned that it is at all necessary for Major Penn or any other Baptist to learn. So, when our brethren want to measure polemical swords with Mr. Penn, or other Baptist divines, for pastime, let them use some question in their play that is not held so sacred. We would suggest for this would-be discussion, something like this: If you have hold of a lions tail, which is the wisest, to hold on, or turn loose? This will be amusing.

We dare say that when Major Penn was at Abilene he baptized more persons than any other man that ever baptized there, in the same length of time. It is safe to say that he baptizes five times as many as any of the brethren mentioned above.

While we hold that Major Penn never baptized a person into Christ in all his work, (not because he was the administrator, but because the persons baptized were not properly taught, and did not confess the good confession with the mouth) we could consistently oppose him. But these brethren mentioned above, and the large majority who hold with them, can not consistently oppose him, but should bid him God-speed. Such brethren should feel the full force of the Major's reply to these Abilene brethren, when, in reply to their challenge to discuss with them, he said: "I am doing a great work, so that I can not come; why should the work cease whilst I leave it and come down to you?" The Major quoted this from Neh. vi. 3.

If he is baptizing persons into Christ, as many of my brethren contend that he is, he is doing a "great work," and it is shame on any man who loves Christ to desire him to leave such a work to discuss points that need not be known.

Only the spirit of jealousy on the part of any of our preachers could furnish an adequate cause for their challenging him for a discussion, so long as they believe he is baptizing persons into Christ. Every fair-minded brother can see this inconsistency; and all who do, and who, after seeing it, continue to give countenance to those who persist in continuing this course, are surely as sinful in the eye of God as they possibly could be.

LETTER FROM BRO. OATMAN.

LLANO, TEXAS, Sep. 27, 1885.

A. MCGARY, }
AUSTIN, TEX, }

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: My subscription expires with No. 12, of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and I herewith hand you postoffice money note for one dollar, the price of another years subscription, for which please receipt me.

I have seen many things in the FOUNDATION that I heartily endorse, and many others that I candidly denounce; and during the coming year I wish to discuss some of your very strange positions with you, for either you or I are wrong, and need setting right.

As for myself I do not claim to be infallible, but do claim to be ready to accept the good grain wherever I find it, but it must have sprung from the ancient seed, that sown by the apostles, to be worth anything to me; and in order that I may not be deceived or mistaken about your positions, I hope you will, through the columns of the FOUNDATION, give me plain and unequivocal answers to the following questions:

1. Who do you fellowship as brothers and sisters in Christ? I see that you unchristianize nearly all the preachers of any note in the churches, some of whom are known to me personally to be men of unquestionable piety.

2. Who were the pastors spoken of by Paul? What office or position did they hold?

2. Do you receive any members from the denominations on their baptism at all?

From the run of your arguments I have been led to believe that you ignored all baptisms except those performed by a member of the Christian church, and that even then it was not valid unless the convert made the confession with his own mouth, unassisted, and not merely by giving his consent.

4. What do you consider the gospel? Does it not consist of facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed, and promises to be enjoyed? And if so, please designate what facts are necessary to be believed, and what commands are to be obeyed before we can expect to enjoy the promises?

When your premises are clearly stated we may not differ materially, for I may have misunderstood some of your positions; but if we do, I assure you that I will discuss them with you in a Christian spirit, or not at all.

Your Bro. in Christ,

JOHN C. OATMAN.

We are more than willing to discuss points of difference with Bro. Oatman, or any other brother who may find in anything that we write on the plan of redemption, grounds for well defined issue.

But, as Bro. Oatman is a lawyer, and hence familiar with the rules of argument, we believe that we can submit to him propositions that will more fully and clearly embody the issues between us than these he has presented. Here they are:

1. Can persons be baptized scripturally who do not believe that baptism is for the remission of sins?

J. C. Oatman to affirm.

2. Is confession with the mouth that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, or words of equal import, an indispensable prerequisite to scriptural baptism?

A. McGary to affirm.

Now, from Bro. Oatman's seeming anxiety to discuss these questions, and his reputation for integrity, we believe that he cannot fail to see in these propositions fair opportunities for a free, full, and fair discussion on these points. We submit them to him, believing that he can not reasonably object to them.

We have no objection whatever to answering his questions, save that it would widen out the grounds till the main issues would not appear so clear, and hence require more time and space to reach conclusions.

If, after we have discussed these questions, Bro. Oatman finds other issues among "our very strange positions" that he desires to discuss, we shall not object to discussing them also. We, too, promise to discuss these differences in proper spirit.

If Bro. Oatman will accept the propositions above, let him write out his affirmative argument on the first proposition and send it forward.

We hope that all of our readers will give Bro. Stone's article a careful reading. Bro. Stone is a close reasoner, and we hope he will favor our readers with an article every issue. There would not be much footing left in the church for these popular "pastors" and "our plea" D. D's. who are "causing divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which we have learned," if a few brethren in every section would put them to the "sword" as Bro. Stone does.

LETTER FROM BRO. McDONALD.

ALEXANDER, ERATH CO., TEXAS, }
September 28, 1885. }

MR. A. MCGARY, }
AUSTIN, TEXAS. }

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST: Thinking that a few lines from this part of the State would not be out of place, I thought I would write you in regard to the advancement of the one cause.

I commenced a protracted effort at Union Grove, in Comanche county, on Friday night before the second Lord's day in July, continuing until the Friday following, the result being nine added to the one body by confession and baptism.

From this point I went to the Curtis School-House, where I had four accessions by confession and baptism. From this point I went to Dublin, in this county, where I had twenty-nine accessions, some by faith and obedience, and some restored.

From here I went to Jewel, in Eastland county; had four added, one from the Methodists, one from the Baptists, and two by letter. From here I went to Stapp's Store, in Comanche county, where there was thirty-three added, seventeen by faith and baptism, two from the Baptists, the remainder by reclamation.

From here I went to Live Oak Grove, in this county; had twenty-two accessions, two from the Baptists, the rest by confession and baptism. From this point I went to the Henderson School-House, in Eastland county; had four by confession and baptism, making a total of one hundred and five.

I see an article in THE FIRM FOUNDATION headed, "Beware, Hobbyists!" You then proceed to speak of Brother Clark's meeting at Cisco, and of the little band at Cisco extending an invitation to any preaching brother in good standing, and free from cranks and hobbies, and who have no ax to grind, to call and preach for them.

I do not believe Bro. Clark so much to blame as the band at Cisco, for they are governed by the one man system, and that man is W. C. Tully, who has told the writer that none who had anything to say that would reflect on the denominations would be allowed to preach in Cisco as long as he could help it. But Brother Clark did one thing at Cisco that I cannot and will not do. In thanking the sectarian part of the town for the courtesy they had extended him he said he prayed God that they might ever prove themselves christians in the future as they had done in the past.

May the good Lord help us all 'o learn the truth and contend for it, and "rebuke and reprove" those of the contrary with all long suffering; is my prayer.

May the good Lord bless all who labor in truth and in deed.

I remain, yours in the one faith,

WM. C. McDONALD.

We are glad to have such reports as this of Bro. McDonald's to give to our readers as items of church news, but we are sorry that our brethren who are sound on other questions will take into the churches Baptists and Methodists upon different conditions than those required of aliens, and different from those that any inspired man ever taught by precept, example, or necessary inference.

A. MCG.

BROTHER MCGARY:

Please give us your idea of 1st Cor. xv, 29. How were they baptized for the dead?

Your sister in Christ,

Sometimes we see one question answered by asking another, or others. Suppose we pursue that course in answering this one? Paul said to the Roman brethren: "Know ye not that so many of us (christians) as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we (christians) also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin."—Rom. vi. 3. 6.

To the Colossian brethren the same apostle says: "Buried with Him in baptism wherein also ye (christians) are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised Him from the dead." Now, the apostles language to the Corinthian brethren, which is under consideration, says: "Else what shall they (those christians) do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why then are they baptized for them?"

What Paul said to the Roman, Colossian and Corinthian brethren, as quoted above, may be said of all brethren in Christ.

Now for some questions in answer to this sister's question: Who were the "old men" that Paul speaks of as having "been crucified with Christ?" and in other places spoken of as "put off?" See Col. iii, 9, and Eph. iv, 22. Were they not their former sinful selves? Yes, they were the lustful, uncurbed, fleshly-wise creatures that became "old when these brethren became new creatures in Christ Jesus?"

When were these "old men put off?" We answer, when the "new men were put on." This was when they were baptized. Baptism, while it was a birth of the new creature, was a grave for the "old." Hence, when these brethren, and all others who come to Christ, went into the baptismal waters they were baptized for the living and the dead.

Paul goes on to say: "And why stand we in jeopardy every hour? I protest by your rejoicing which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily. If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantage it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

Yes, that was just what those "old crucified men" would have done; and Paul says that if there is to be no resurrection of the dead, it were better to do it. It was sheer folly to be baptized, putting away these "old men" who would have gotten all of the sweets out of life had they not been crucified and baptized—buried in their watery graves.

If the above is not the idea of Paul's language, then we are at a loss to discover anything that has the remotest semblance to it. We do not expect our readers who have already seen these Corinthians baptized for their dead relations, to agree with our idea. We care very little for such differences anyway, as they are differences upon matters of opinion. But when it comes to such wide differences in matters of faith, as now exists between us, it has a fearful look to us.

But, thanks to God for the consoling thought, that those who are on the Lord's side here, will be on His side "over there."

A. MCG.

ABOUT OUR CIRCULATION.

And now again about the circulation of THE FIRM FOUNDATION. Brethren and sisters, those of you who believe that it is contending for the faith ought to put forth vigorous efforts to extend its circulation.

Its enemies who are beginning to see that it is gaining ground, and that it has entered the field of conflict with every character of innovation to stay, are very industrious in putting forth every effort in their power to cripple or hinder it.

They know full well that they can't meet its positions in fair, open argument, and they are resorting to the dark, underhanded tricks that the wicked votaries of wounded error, who have not the courage to confess their faults one to another, might be expected to resort to.

Some are saying that we began the publication of THE FIRM FOUNDATION as a financial enterprise; that we expected to make money out of it; while others are saying that its founders will bankrupt, and their names pass into ignominy. Others are manufacturing defamatory reports about these founders.

Now, why do our opponents act in this way? Suppose all they say were true, would it change the truths that we are advocating?

But we never expected to make money out of the paper. If we keep even and lose our time only we will do much better than we expected at the outset. We determined not to make money out of it, but would like for it to meet expenses and remunerate some of our worthy contributors; further than this we have never indulged a hope from a financial standpoint.

We do hope to make the paper more attractive and worthy by enlarging it and by enlisting other contributors to its columns. Now, if our subscribers will help us some, we will succeed in all these things, and the unperverted gospel will rise triumphant over all human "pleas," sectism, and devices of worldly wisdom.

We are highly pleased at the way our old subscribers are renewing. We are sorry to have to confess that the writer's pen has too often marred the pages of the paper with things that wore a vindictive hue. We hope to do better in future. But, brethren, it is not an easy matter, when you know you are advocating truth, to refer to false brethren and expose their inconsistencies and sophistries to evade the force of truth, in what everyone would say was the proper spirit.

In conclusion, we urge the attention of the friends of THE FIRM FOUNDATION to active and immediate work in its behalf, that it may be able to reach out and take hold of popular error and sin in high places. Do you want it to be able to do this? Then work for it.

A prominent preaching brother wrote us yesterday that he thought it was to be the paper of Texas.

A. MCG.

COME OUT ON THE LORD'S SIDE, BRETHREN!

One of our very successful evangelists dropped into the office of THE FIRM FOUNDATION a few days ago, and we had a short, but very pleasant conversation with him. He has hitherto been very much opposed to our work, and was candid enough to tell us so, which we admired in him, though we knew it before he told us.

We met this brother once before, but had no conversation with him. In the run of our conversation in our office, he said: "Brother McGary, you have the advantage on this baptismal question, because you have the bible on us!" Again, he said that everything in reference to religion ought to be made as sure as possible—made "as sure as you can," and, said he, "your position is the surest."

Now, brethren, when our preachers will make such admissions as these, under such tranquil surroundings as this, and yet continue in public to teach and practice different, what are we to think? Which has the strongest hold upon such men's affections, think you, a human "plea," or God's plain, heaven-and-earth bound plan of redemption?

We do not mention this circumstance out of any desire to gain an advantage over our brethren on this question. We have God's word—the "bible, on them," as our brother said, and nothing more is needed. What will become of the cause under such teachers? W. T. Moore's proposition is surely not much in advance of the logical outcome of the present teaching and practice of those who legalize sect baptism.

When men lack the courage to stand upon the side that they recognize and confess to be the safest—the side that has "the bible on us"—do they not lack that without which they can not "please Him who hath chosen them to be soldiers?"

Truly, brethren, these are "perilous times." Who will be able to stand faithful to the authority of King Immanuel against the hosts that have deserted His cause, and are now proudly trooping in hot haste under the banner of a human "plea," and led on by worldly-wise men?

Come out, brethren, those of you who do not desire to follow in the wake of this rebellious army into Babylon. Get off of the "fence"—the neutral ground that you are trying to occupy, and unsheathe the "sword," and while it is yet day do battle for that King who is to give the crown to the faithful and righteous—those who love His appearing.

The night will soon come when none can work. To sit idly by—on the fence—and see the Lord's authority trodden under foot, and His blood crimsoned banner trailed in the dust, is to act the part of cowards and lose the crown.

A. MCG.

TO THOSE IN ARREARS.

Some of our subscribers are owing us for the paper from its beginning. Others, who paid, some for one year, and some for six months, have written us to let them know when they were due, and they would renew.

Now, brethren, everyone of you know whether you owe us anything or not. Those who subscribed and paid for twelve months know whether they have received twelve copies or not; and if they have they know that they are in arrears. And so with those who subscribed and paid for six months; if they have received more than six copies they are in arrears. We hope none of our readers are so stupid that they can't count twelve. Those who have subscribed and never paid, know it without notice from us.

One brother wrote us ten months ago, saying: "I have not the dollar at hand, but I give you my word and honor as a christian that I will send it to you within thirty days." That dollar has never come. We presume he is dead, or had no honor to begin with. If he is dead, and we knew it, we would give him a free obituary. We may do so anyway on presumptive evidence.

But, brethren, all who owe us, know it; then send it to us. It is not much with you, but it will help us when it is all put together: "there is strength in union;," then unite in sending forward what you owe us.

ENQUIRER.

PLEASANT VALLEY, TEXAS, {
October 16, 1885. }

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I noticed in one of your articles that you mentioned a brother who was a silver-smith, and said it was a strange calling for a christian. I have often thought I would write and ask you what ought to be done with a brother who follows a business that necessitates constant traveling, and who always seeks out his brethren to stop with, to save bills.

I know such a brother, and have known him to drive till late at night to reach a brother's house, and stop with a double team to feed, and often times he has been known to feed to his horses the last ear of corn the poor brother had for bread for his family.

Not only this, but he is notorious for tricky dealing, often defrauding these brethren upon whom he imposes. He is held up to us by outsiders as "your good brother, that knows the bible so well."

He always makes it convenient to meet with the brethren somewhere on Lord's day, and being a good speaker, and well instructed, he often officiates at the Lord's table, thereby debarring many, who have no confidence in him, from partaking.

Now, what do you think of such a christian, and what ought a congregation to do with him?

Yours in the faith,

ENQUIRER.

We hardly know how to answer these questions. Perhaps this brother does not seek out his brethren, to save a bill, but loves them as all christians should do. It is very natural for a traveling brother to prefer to put up with his brethren, and they are generally glad to have their brethren stop with them; this has been our experience with brethren.

But when a man is engaged in a business that calls him frequently among his brethren, in which business he is making money, he surely ought not to feed up the last corn they have for bread, but he ought to carry them help occasionally, instead of being burdensome to them.

Now, if this brother stops with his poor brethren, or rich one's either, to save a bill, that is, if this enters into his calculations, and influences him in the least to stop with them, he is making merchandise of the gospel. If he does stop with poor brethren and feeds up their last bread of corn for his own gain, then we would consider him a worse man than Judas Iscariot. He is a sort of a cheap-John or a Judas. Such a man would sell Christ if he could for one-fourth of what Judas Iscariot received for Him, and would take that in nickles with a hole in them.

Well, as for what the church ought to do with him, it seems to us that he ought to be "delivered to satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." It is surely very wrong to encourage such a brother to lead in the Lord's day meeting. He ought to be talked to by brethren, and shown the evil of his course, if he has not seen it, and then be very summarily dealt with by the church if he does not confess and ask forgiveness, besides remunerating the poor brethren he has imposed on, or offer to.

If this is not an overdrawn case, and that man is permitted to continue in such a course, apparently bearing the recognition of the christians in that section, which he does so long as they make no effort to restrain him and have him officiate at the Lord's table, the cause will suffer greatly there because of him.

Brethren who will permit such things as this to go on long are unworthy of the name christian. If the cause is not well nigh dead there now this case must be overdrawn.

A. MCG.

FROM THE GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

We have had on hand for some time an article from Bro. Duke, of Gnatville, Ala., on rebaptism. If he had not been mistaken as to what he wanted when he wrote before, we would not have said a word on the subject. He asked what he should do with Baptists who wished to unite with a church of Christ, when clearly he wanted to tell me what to do. If he had only known this was what he wanted, I would have listened to him without a word of response. I am willing to hear or to talk as occasion demands, but as he asked me and I gave the best advice I had, and as room is scarce with us now, and I don't want to discuss the matter, he will have to submit as it is; next time let him be certain what he wants and he shall have it. The mistake was one of his, next time will hear him without a word of reply. But I had as soon commit sacrilege in any other way as to rebaptize a person who tells me he has been baptized to obey God.

The above we found in the Gospel Advocate which sometimes preaches "another gospel" regardless of what Paul said about those that did such things: See Gal. I, 8, 9. The author of these words is such a fanatical adherent to "our plea" that he does not hesitate to virtually bring the charge of "sacrilligious" conduct upon the apostle Paul.

He says: "But I had as soon commit sacrilege in any other way as to rebaptize a person who tells me he has been baptized to "obey God." Then he makes it sacrilege to baptize those who have been once baptized to "obey God." Well, if it is sacrilege now it was sacrilege eighteen hundred years ago; then Paul committed sacrilege when he baptized the twelve at Ephesus, unless it can be shown that these twelve did not intend to "obey God" when they were baptized in the first instance. Poor Paul, we are sorry to see him so summarily dealt with by the wise of today.

But with all the disreputable things that they can charge on Paul they will never be able to condemn him with that

We dare say that that "best advice" that he gave was not some passage of scripture. We challenge any man to produce a passage of scripture that teaches it by precept, example, or by the deductions of fair inference. Brethren, it can't be produced by the combined powers of these "wise" adherents to the "plea" that authorizes it. To continue the practice under these circumstances is presumptuous sin.

SULLIVAN, IND., Oct. 12, 1885.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I herein send you two dollars by post office money order, for which please send THE FIRM FOUNDATION to S. R. Engle and B. C. Sherman, both to Sullivan, Sullivan county, Indiana.

Yours for the whole truth,

B. C. SHERMAN.

[P. S.] I hope to send you some more names soon. Let me say, go on dear brother; we want the truth proclaimed as THE FIRM FOUNDATION is doing.

B. C. S.

THE BAPTISTS IN JEWRY.

In the Gospel Advocate of October 14th, is, we think, a very true and instructive article on "Repentance," by Bro. W. Lipscomb, jr. Bro. L. closes with these words: "If our Baptist friends insist that repentance precedes faith, I must conclude that they are yet in Jewry. I am confirmed in this conclusion by their holding to a church established before Pentecost, which, according to the scripture, could only have been that of the Jews."

Well, they surely "insist that repentance precedes faith." Now, what will Bro. L. do about these Baptists when they decide to come out of Jewry? Will he continue the process of "our plea"—shake them out? or will he baptize them out of "Jewry" and into Christ?

As Bro. Lipscomb is "confirmed in this conclusion" we suppose he will act up to his convictions. Then how long will it be before his uncle, Bro. D. Lipscomb, will have him mounted on a hobby?—that convenient old horse upon which he packs everything that he can't make fit "our plea."

As we have said, we regard Brother Lipscomb's article, as to main points, true. But when he says: "I can not believe these a mere fortuitous arrangement of terms: I do not believe such a style of writing consistent with the character of a book of so great importance as the bible," we would like to know of him how he would dispose of that "style" as it appears in Acts v, 30?

We do not call attention to this point in a criticising spirit, but for information. We have always thought it was an awkward way of expressing the idea, that perhaps some of our Greek scholars might be able to account for through defective translation. We would be glad to hear from Bro. W. L. jr., on this.

But it speeds from us all like a bird on the wing.

They loved, but the story we can not unfold;

They scorned, but the heart of the naughty is cold;

They grieved, but no wail from their slumber will come,

They joyed, but the tongue of their glad-

From the gilded saloon, to the bier and
the shroud,

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be

The church at Sherman has sent out
our live and energetic worker, Bro. F.
S. Young, as State Solicitor. We earnestly urge the brethren throughout the State to respond to his appeals as liberally as they can. We will have a chance this year to see whose desire for missionary work or evangelizing work extends down into their pockets. Come, brethren, don't become hard of hearing just at this time.—Texas Christian.

This whole system, in our opinion, is chiefly directed at the "pockets" of men.
It seems that the machine men had

rather convert one pocket than a score of hearts. We hope never to say anything having a tendency to disparage real "willing," scriptural giving. But we had rather know that not one farthing would be contributed this year in Texas, than that it should flow profusely through an unscriptural channel—such as "State Solicitor" or any other "Society" or "State Meeting" invention.

Of course this will sound awful to that class who think "a right thing can't be done in a wrong way."

Bro. Young is sending in lists to the papers for publication. Here is a sample:

But Bro. Young and these brethren are not alone in this practice.

We wonder if brethren never think of the following language when they see their contributions paraded before the world: "When thou doest thine alms do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."—Matt. vi, 2, 3.

Our brethren avoid that ancient way, by putting an account of their doings in the papers, or permit others to.

LETTER FROM SISTER SARAI.

DEAR SISTERS:

Have you all read the sisters' communications in the last issue of THE FIRM FOUNDATION? If not, you ought to have done so, and if so, were they not good? I mean Sister Tennie Titsworth's and the anonymous sisters'? They both said much that was impressive, and I think the anonymous Sister's reply to the sister who wanted her daughter to be proud was simply splendid.

Oh, how fitting are the words of divine inspiration in any place or argument! Her suggestion to hunt out all said about pride in God's word sent me at once to the concordance, where I found fifty passages concerning the proud, and forty-four containing the word pride, to say nothing of its synonyms.

So it seems that pride has been the besetting sin of poor fallen man from the beginning. All of us possess it, some to a greater extent than others, however. But there is such a thing as laudable pride, which prompts us to be neat and keep our children so; to strive to make home attractive, etc.; but even this becomes sinful when we devote our whole time and thoughts to these things, neglecting the weightier matter of cultivating the minds of ourselves and children, thereby rooting out the noxious weeds that are ever ready to spring up in an uncultivated field.

A woman who possesses too much of this pride is very apt to be overworked and cross, making home anything but a paradise. Such a woman's husband might be tempted to say, as did Deacon Jones upon being congratulated upon having just such a wife: "Yes, it is as you say, farmer Brown:

A treasure to me has been given,
But sometimes I fain would be glad
To lay up my treasure in heaven."

I have in mind such a beautiful woman, so gentle and lovable, who possesses this housewifely pride to the exclusion of almost every other virtue. To look at her intelligent, lovely face, one could think of nothing else but a mind in harmony with it; but not so. Though possessed of a bright mind, she never reads a book or paper, but has spent all the years of her married life with a broom and dust brush in her hands, seeming to think the acme of existence is to make war on cobwebs and dust, little heeding the cobwebs of ignorance and vice that may be forming around the neglected minds of her children.

But this is not the worst kind of pride after all, as it is necessarily attended by industry and energy, which are admirable always. But oh, the many kinds of pride, almost too numerous to mention. Perhaps the most contemptible and common is that manifested by wealthy owners of fine residences and dashing teams. They drive along the highways, holding high heads, as if scorning to breathe the same air with the honest, humble laborer, whose soul is just as valuable in God's sight as theirs. "Him that hath a high look and a proud heart will I not suffer," saith the good book, and I am sorry to say that many who call themselves christians come under this head.

How often do we see men and women arrayed in costly apparel stepping proudly along with supercilious stare, careful lest even their skirts should touch the poor working man or beggar in the way, and looking as if it were a pity that their aristocratic feet must touch common earth. "The Lord hateth a proud look," Solomon tells us, and classes it with a lying tongue.

Again, some manifest an undue pride in their children, some in their wives and husbands, and some in their personal beauty. Alas! alas! that any should glory in these frail bodies, that come forth like flowers and are cut down, that flee like shadows and continue not!

Physical beauty is truly of short duration. In a few fleeting years the fairest faces will be seamed with care, the eyes lose their brightness, the cheeks their rosy hue, but oh! if the soul be pure and true, the mind cultivated and filled with noble aspirations, the life rich in good deeds, then, indeed, are they possessed of a beauty that will bloom throughout all eternity, a beauty that our dear heavenly Father will be proud of!

Dear sisters, I am speaking of christians all along. We can expect nothing better than these weaknesses of the world, of those who have never been called out of darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel. Then what shall we say of a pride that prompts a christian man or woman to pass by the poor among God's children without the faintest recognition, simply because they are humbly and poorly attired, thereby wounding sorely hearts precious in God's sight? James says, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom promised to them that love Him? "But ye have despised the poor." This can be truly said of many wealthy christians of to-day.

Our dear lowly Savior taught us a grand lesson in humility when He chose His followers from among the poor and unlearned, and scorned not to touch the vile lepers of old, and think you He will say to these proud christians, "Enter ye into the joys of your Lord." Nay! For "everyone proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord," saith the wise man of old.

Again, there is a false, a despicable pride that prompts people to live beyond their means, to spend more than their income to decorate their bodies in sinful apparel; such pride often leads them to borrow money of trusting friends, when they have no hope or intention of returning it, perhaps, simply because their pride (?) will not let them be outdone by their neighbors. Such pride often leads to dishonesty, and surely God will bring it low. "The Lord will destroy the house of the proud."

In conclusion, I will say that perhaps the silliest pride of all is that felt in natural endowments, hereditaments of birth, such as fine intellects, etc. Such foolish pride often causes its owner to look with scorn upon those beneath them in the scale of intelligence, and to imagine some natural antagonism between them, which can not be overcome.

But what a mistake! Are we not all members of Christ's body? "And the eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee, nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more; those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary. * * * * *

But God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked, that there should be no schism in the body, but that the members should have the same care one for another."—Cor. XII.

Again, why should any feel such undue pride in the possession of fine intellects? They are born with them, hence, deserve no credit for them. We should only be humbly grateful to God from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, for this best gift, and no more.

Our Savior classes pride with "evil thoughts, fornications, adulteries, murders, thefts," and all of the very worst forms of wickedness. Then, shall we let it find lodgement in our hearts? God forbid! Life is too short for us to spend the time wounding our fellow-creatures by displays of pride. Christianity is the great leveler that exalteih the brother of low degree, and bringeth low the rich, thus uniting them on one plane.

Our dear Savior's life was one of complete humility, and He has bidden us follow Him. Shall we not heed His call? Then, let us put pride out of our hearts, and "serve the Lord with all humility of mind." Let us "be subject one to another, clothed with humility." Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another, that we may rejoice in the hope of a "crown that fadeth not away."

SARAI.

After this we expect to have regular contributions from Bro. Hansbrough, Bro. Jackson and Bro. Durst. These brethren have been prevented by one cause and another from writing for the press for some months.

Bro. Hansbrough has been preaching in North and South Carolina this summer, where he has done a good work for the Master. The last we heard from this old soldier he had just baptized four while a heavy rain was pouring down. Some preachers would have put on a gum suit (baptizing suit) and sought a baptistery; but Bro. Hansbrough believes in the primitive way of working for Christ.

Bro. Jackson has also been doing a good work in Hill county, Texas. These brethren are all faithful gospel preachers, and they are staunch friends of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, as are many other true proclaimers of the whole truth as it is in Jesus.

PREMIUMS OFFERED.

For all subscribers sent us between the 15th of November and the 15th of December, 25 per cent may be retained by the sender. Then, as premiums on clubs we offer in addition the following: For the largest club that is sent to us between these dates we will return 50 per cent of such amount as is received at this office upon that club. For the next (2nd) largest we will return 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent, (one third). For the next largest (3d) we will give 25 per cent, (one fourth).

Now, we hope that the very best friends that the paper has will get these premiums. The reason we say this is because some of them have refused to take out even commissions for their work. Names may be sent right along as they are received, and we will keep a careful list, so that perfect fairness will be observed.

Under this offer a big work may be done for THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and those who do the work will be amply remunerated for it. We expect some sister to get the first premium, because they are the most successful, generally, in such work. Go right to work brothers and sisters, and you will be astonished at your success. Even many enemies of the paper will take it, because some of them are honest and want to see both sides of the question.

VOL. 1. AUSTIN, TEXAS, JANUARY, 1885. No. 5.

ONE MORE YEAR GONE.

Yes! One more year has been chronicled upon time's tablet, and its page turned into eternity, past! Those who have no love of God in them, and hence no hope beyond the brink of time, if they would look the present square in the face, and read its stern facts, in the light of past experience, reason and revelation, they could not fail to be pungently impressed by its lesson. They would see one more year subtracted from their unholy and unprofitable lives; one more year nearer a grave with its awful forebodings, a grave that cannot be escaped! One more year nearer the bar of an outraged and insulted God, where the follies, mistakes and sinfulness of a misspent life, will rise up and condemn them! Reader, the year that is coming on may be your last; in the very nature of things, it will be the last with thousands—thousands who will be imprisoned in the dark vaults of the grave "without one ray of hope, there to await the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, when he shall be revealed from heaven with His mighty angles, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." What an awful thought is this! Professing Christians!—those who have once enlisted in the army of the faithful, one more year of inaction, a year that can not stand the test, before the "Righteous Judge," has been spent in idleness by you. A year in which you have fled the great battle against sin; a year in which your actions have not only been watched by the all-seeing eye of God, but by the enemies of God, by whom, by reason of your ways, "the way of truth has been evil spoken of!" Though cleansed by the efficacious blood of a crucified Lord, King and son of God, from the stains of past sins, you, like "the sow that was washed and turned to her wallowing in the mire again," have turned back to the world again! The toys, and bubbles of time, that waste, and are gone with this "life that is as a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away," are leading your souls away from an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away. How sad the thought! My brother, my sister, if you do not repent and turn to God with the coming year, it had been better for you not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after having known it, to have turned from the holy commandment unto you! Remember that they only have hope who are led by the Spirit; "for if ye live after the flesh ye shall die!" Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like." But the fruit of the Spirit is "love, joy, peace (where there is peace; not such peace as will command silence while God's ways are being perverted), long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Therefore, brethren, make new resolves for the coming year, and "be steadfast, unmoveable, always (not simply on Lord's day) abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Rest is for those who have become tired by work here!

But, brethren, we must close up and cease this straggling. We must make God's ways our ways; caring nought for what others may say or think. We must remember that we have a law, a perfect law, to live by, and that he or she who lives by this law will receive a crown, while he or she who trudges through life by the dictates of an inner light, will, at the end, meet condemnation. "If a man strive for masteries, yet he is not crowned except he strive lawfully. To strive lawfully is to strive by the law; by its guidance—do the things it bids us do. Brethren, this is the kind of striving. THE FIRM FOUNDATION is going to try to do this year. It will not be swayed from its purpose by that class, who, in seeking their own ease, have carried the thoughtless masses into unholy alliances. Neither will it halt at the bidding of the popular commands of the "kingdoms of the clergy." But realizing that God, who judges righteously, seeth all things, even the secrets of men's hearts, it will continue to "preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine," wherever and whenever it sees a necessity; even if the time has come when our brethren will not endure sound doctrine. God grant that we may all come to the Law of the Lord and go to work by it — go to practicing pure and undefiled religion before God. Yes, brethren, let's bury our differences and "be of one mind."

One more year is dead and buried in Time's great sepulchre! Brethren, "forgetting the things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, let us press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

"This sweetly solemn thought comes to me
o'er and o'er,
I'm nearer home to-day, than I have been before;
Nearer the bound of life, where burdens are
laid down,
Nearer to leave the Cross to-day, and nearer to the Crown."

A. McG.

OUR PLEA FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

NUMBER III.

Every element of faith is found in God's word. Paul gave the exhortation, "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." II Tim., i, 13. The Christian's faith is confined to the form of sound words taught by the Spirit. Outside of the words of the Spirit there can be no such thing as Christian faith. "All things that pertain to life and godliness hath been given." II Pet., i, 3.

The power of faith is exemplified in the unity of the Saints. Hence there is "one faith." Every one that diligently seeks God by faith, is conveyed by God's word along the same pathway into His body. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path.

Where the light of revelation does not shine, gross darkness prevails. Neither the learning of men nor the superstitions of the past or present can furnish data upon which we can build a hope for the future. The opinions set forth in the Greek, Roman and Protestant creeds will not give us the faith that prompts to obedience in order to the salvation of the soul. Therefore denominationalism never transfers one from a state of sin to a state of righteousness.

The various religions of the age fail to put men in a condition to act spiritually. This failure is from inherent defects in their systems. If every man and woman on the globe were converted to the Greek, Roman, or Protestant religion, a Savior would still be needed to convert the soul and to pardon the sins of the people.

The idea prevails that we must look up to heaven for faith as a direct impartation. Paul says, "Say not who shall ascend into heaven; that is to bring Christ down from above (to give faith), or who shall go down into the deep; that is to bring up Christ from the dead (to bestow faith). But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy heart, and in thy mouth; that is, the word of faith which we preach; that, if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

All the faith on earth originated from the word of the Lord. Obedience proceeds from, and is the result of faith. Hence no faith, no obedience. The word of the Spirit given by inspired penmen produces the faith that moves to action and saves the soul. All spiritual light comes alone through the truth.

Faith was never given as the condition of forgiveness, but is to prepare the way for it. Consequently we are nowhere commanded to believe for the remission of sins. Actuated by faith in Christ, we move forward through each successive step, till we, through his name (by his authority), receive the remission of sins. While faith alone cannot convey us out of darkness into light, it leads to the gate, and claims the right of entrance upon a submission to the authority of the King. The one testimony is given to all by the one spirit, and hence the one faith. In accepting this one testimony, all will necessarily come to the unity of the faith. Nothing can be of the faith which is not in the words of the faith. As to the Divine authenticity of the Holy Scriptures, men may differ; and he who rejects the Bible does it at his peril. But with those who accept it as Divine, there should be no difference as to what is written. Hence the prayer, "That all might be one, believing through the Apostles words." John xvii, 20.

When our faith is bounded by God's word, there is no place for differences.

Faith never looks backward, but always forward, in order to pardon. It precedes repentance, the confession and baptism. Any one of these steps taken not in accordance with the directions of the word, is null and without the desired effect. "Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin." Faith antedates and gives all real value to every other religious obligation. Repentance, the confession and baptism springing from the faith of the Gospel, is acceptable to God; but without it, it is imaginary service, and is but sheer mockery.

We conclude, therefore, that those who have not passed through the door in God's appointed way, although perfectly honest in thinking they have passed from "death into life," and even have rejoiced at the thought, are deceived, and must be taught the way of the Lord more perfectly, that they may accept the truth, and be led by the Spirit into the one body, governed by the one faith, and henceforth be animated by the one hope. If, dear reader, you have not been led through each successive step by the Word, you are certainly not the child of God. "My words are spirit and they are life." "For as many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God." "Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of the disciples which are not written in this book; but these are written that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ, and believing might have life through His name."

A. Campbell reasoned well, when in calling attention to the word as the "Sword of the Spirit" he said: "The power of the sword is not in the scabbard, but in the blade. The power of

We must understand Christ, where he designs to be understood. Thus we become "wise unto salvation." Isaiah says: "By the knowledge of Him shall my righteous servant justify many." Jesus says: "If you continue in my word, you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The poet caught the true idea—

"He leadeth me: Oh, blessed thought!
Oh words with heavenly comfort fraught!

* * * * *
His faithful follower I would be,
For by His hand He leadeth me."

To His name be honor and power
everlasting. J. S. D.

"SOME THOUGHTS ON FAITH."

DEAR BROTHERS.—I desire space in the columns of your excellent paper to present some thoughts for the consideration of your readers, upon the subject of Faith. I apprehend that the term faith, as used in the New Testament (it will be remembered that it occurs but once in the Old Testament), at least, in eight out of every ten places where the word occurs, comprehends more than the simple belief of the heart, or conviction of the mind, of the truth of a given proposition. In the passage heading this article, the Apostle is arguing the sufficiency of the Gospel as a system for salvation, without the law of Moses. Hence, he employs the term, faith, comprehending the gospel in all of its requirements and provisions, as a system, in contrast with the law dispensation. The Gospel, he calls Faith, and the Mosaic economy, as a system, he calls Works. Hence he has Faith and Works, in contrast, as systems of justification. It is an admitted rule of logic, that where a term is ambiguous—admits of more than one meaning—the true meaning may be supplied; and if the harmony and sense of the sentence be not disturbed thereby, the supplied meaning is accepted. Try this rule in the passage quoted, dispense with the word faith, and insert Gospel, reading thus:—"Therefore being justified by the Gospel," etc.

The reader discovers that no violence is done to the sense and harmony of the reading. Paul says, "Therefore," which signifies that a logical conclusion is now reached, from the facts and arguments going before in the preceding chapters of this epistle, establishing the fact clearly to his Jewish brethren, that they can now be justified by the Gospel, and have peace with God, without longer observing the requirements of the law given by Moses. The Judaizing teachers had taught them that they could not be saved unless they be circumcised and keep the law of Moses. We see wisdom displayed in the call of Paul to the apostolic college. He was a Jew, educated by Gamaliel, taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the Jewish fathers; was, therefore, qualified to discuss the transcendent superiority of the Gospel as a system of justification, superceding the observance of the law of Moses. Hence, the sufficiency of the Gospel, for the justification of both Jew and Gentile, became the central idea in nearly all of Paul's epistles. We have said that eight out of every ten times where the word faith occurs, the word Gospel may be supplied, making harmony and good sense, whether the definite article "the" (as the faith) is used or not. Example, Acts xv, 9:—"And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." Here, the Gospel is evidently meant. See I Peter, i, 22:—"Seeing ye have purified your souls (by faith? no!) in obeying the truth." My object in writing now, is to call the attention of abler scribes than myself to the subject, rather than argue the matter. To be brief and outline the subject, I will simply request the reader to be careful in reading, when he comes to the word, faith, to note carefully the qualifying terms going before, such as "thy faith" "your faith, his faith," etc., supplying Gospel for faith in at least eight out of ten of its occurrences; and by this means, we find consistency throughout; the plan of salvation a harmonious whole, and are rid of all the sectarian twaddle of "justification by faith only;" which is true, when viewed as set forth by Paul—the entire Gospel as a system of faith, in contrast with the law of Moses as a system of Works. Your brother in search of truth,

R. B. TRIMBLE.

NEW BURNSIDE, ILL., Dec. 18, 1884.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL? OF WHAT IS IT COMPOSED?

When we consider the language of the Savior, as recorded by Math. xxviii, 18-20, Mark xvi, 15, Luke xxiv, 46-47, and John xx, 22-23, is it not highly important that we decide definitely (not from our thoughts, feelings or imaginations) from the teachings of the infallible Spirit, as recorded in the New Testament, what that Gospel is? If composed of parts or elements, what they are? Surely this is the wisest and safest course, since our salvation from past sins and entrance into Christ depends upon our hearing, believing and obeying "the Gospel"—not a perverted one. Then, what does the word Gospel mean? Speaking indefinitely, it means good news; but speaking definitely, it means that good news of salvation for a lost and ruined world, as proclaimed through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Then to "the law and to the testimony" that God has given we must go to decide this much mooted question. We want to know what that gospel is that God's Son sent men to preach; not the ones that colleges and synods have manufactured by their new and patent processes!

The prophet Isaiah, who spoke as he was guided by the Holy Spirit, described the introduction of the gospel dispensation into the world some seven hundred years B. C. He said that it should be so plain that way-faring men, though fools, should not err therein. Isaiah xxxv, 8.

Now I don't suppose that any of us would like to be considered lower down in the scale of intellect than fools. The prophet had told them, however, to "Seek out of the book of the Lord and read, and they should not fail;" xxxiv, 16; but how do we know that he was speaking of the introduction of the Gospel Age? From what he says in the fourth, fifth and sixth verses, "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not, behold your God, will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense;

He will come and save you. Then (at that time) the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped, then shall the lame leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."

Now when did these things occur? Not till the Saviour came, and Jesus says: "Go and show John again those things which you do hear and see; the blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them." Matt. xi, 4, 5; also, John ix, 32. The prophet describes two ways, a high way, and a way, or the way of holiness, over which the unclean (unconverted) should not pass; but it shall be for those (that is, those that seek out of the book of the Lord and read), and the "a way" is the plain way.

The Saviour describes the same two ways in different language: "Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat; because straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth to life and few there be that find it." Matt. vii, 13, 14.

The highway of the prophet is the broad way of the Saviour, and the "a way," or way of holiness of the prophet, is the straight and narrow way of the Saviour. But is not the Saviour's language sad? He says many go in the broad way, the way of destruction, and but few find the straight and narrow way. He does not say they can't find it (that would be still be more sad); but that they don't find it. Why don't they find it? Because they go to men to seek, instead of

Let us turn now to what the Apostle Paul says in the first chapter of his letter to the Gallatian brethren. After his introductory remarks, embracing the first five verses, he says: "I marvel, or I wonder, that you are so soon removed from Him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel." What! are there two gospels? or six hundred and forty gospels? as there ought to be, to suit the divided condition of the religious world. Why no! There is but one Gospel, and Paul corrects himself in the next breath; he says: "Which is not another;" but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert (turn or change) the Gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from Heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that we preached unto you, let him be accursed." Gal. i, 6-8. Can we believe for a moment that our Heavenly Father, through His inspired apostle, would have pronounced such a curse as that on any man, or angel, that would preach a different gospel from what Paul preached, unless that gospel is, as the prophet said it should be, so plain that the wayfaring men, though fools, should not err therein? No! the thought is revolting.

Let us look at that language in the eighth verse, again. We often hear people say that they have heard voices from heaven, speaking peace to their souls. Suppose they do! If it is just like the Gospel, then there is no use in its being brought from heaven, for it is already here; and they can read it every day, and if it differs from the Gospel, then Paul says, "let the bringer of that voice be accursed!" How careful then, we ought to be about giving heed to voices outside of the Bible: let them come from above or below!

But what is the Gospel? Paul says (Rom. i, 16), "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power (not a power, as though God had many powers) unto salvation to every one that believes (take notice, they must believe it), to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." But Paul was not aiming to define the gospel in its parts in the above quotation, but was laying the foundation of an argument to cut off some Judaizing teachers, who were contending that they must observe the law of Moses, as well as the Gospel; and they thereby perverted the Gospel, as the Gallatians did; and Paul lets them know that the gospel (and not the law of Moses), is God's power unto salvation. 1 Cor. xv, 1-4, is often quoted, to prove that the Gospel is the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. But the apostle was not aiming to define the Gospel in parts there; but was correcting another class of false teachers, who were denying the resurrection and endeavoring thereby to overthrow the Gospel. In the first verse, he says the Corinthians were saved by the Gospel, and people are not saved without obeying the conditions of the Gospel! We learn from Acts xviii, 8, "that many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed and were baptized," thereby complying with what the Saviour said, Mark xvi, 16; just like all the others; for God is no respecter of persons.

Now, let me ask, were the apostles faithful to the commission under which the Saviour sent them out to preach? Did they preach the Gospel; nothing more, or nothing less? If they preached more, then they will have the plagues of God's book added to them; if they preached less, then they will have their part taken out of the Book of Life. The conclusion, then, forces itself upon our minds, that they preached the Gospel; nothing more, and nothing less! Now, if we will follow them in their preaching, and see what they preached, will we not learn, beyond a doubt, what constitutes the Gospel or good news? Let us go, then, to the memorable day of Pentecost, to the first preaching, after the descent of the Holy Spirit that was to guide the apostles into all the truth necessary to the salvation of man. Jesus had told them that it was necessary that he should suffer and rise again the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name (or by his authority) "among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem; and you are witnesses of these things, and behold I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until you be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv, 46-49.

They obeyed instructions, and when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. The multitude coming together were astonished at what they saw and heard. Peter explains it by the following quotation from the Prophet Joel: "And it shall come to pass, in the last days (not of the world, but of the Jewish dispensation) that I will pour out of my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; and on my servants and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of my spirit, and they shall prophesy; and I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood and fire and vapor of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come, and it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name (or authority) of the Lord, shall be saved." Acts ii, 17-21.

You will notice the baptism of the Holy Spirit is confined to the last days of the Jewish dispensation in verses 17 and 18; but the calling on the name of the Lord, extends through the reign of Christ, and we want to notice, after awhile, what that calling on the name of the Lord is, for on doing it depends our salvation!

Peter now begins to preach, and what did he preach? First, the great facts of the gospel, the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, also his ascension and coronation, as king of kings, and Lord of Lords. Three thousand believed these facts, and what effect did their faith have? It pricked their hearts and caused them to say to Peter and the rest of the apostles: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" How shall we call on the name or authority of the Lord; for in doing that, we have the promise of salvation. Evidently, up to this time, they had not heard the gospel (or good news), for good news never pricks the heart; but causes it to rejoice! In answer to their question, Peter (or rather the Holy Spirit through Peter), said: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name (or by the authority) of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins (for pardon or salvation) and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts ii, 38.

What were they to repent and be baptized for? For the remission of sins! Was it necessary that they should understand the facts of the gospel? All of our brethren say yes! or the Holy Spirit would not have preached them! Was it necessary that they should understand the commands of the gospel? Yes, or the Holy Spirit would not have preached them! Was it necessary that they should understand the design of the commands? Yes; if not, why not? The design of the commands, was as plainly preached as the facts and commands; and by the same infallible spirit. Besides, it was after they had learned the commands, and their design, that they received what had been preached as good news or glad tidings, which we learn from the forty-first verse: "Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized, and the same day were added unto them about three thousand souls." We find that Peter preached facts, commands and promises in preaching the gospel, and are they not all, as the prophet said they should be, "So plain that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein?"

Jesus says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not, shall be damned." Language can not be made plainer than that. Now if the apostles, acting under that simple commission, preached the gospel, nothing more or less,

Another popular way of preaching, says, he that believes is saved, and must be baptized, because he is saved! What is the condition of the converts, made by such preaching? Are they converted to God or man? Brethren, is not the nature, or character of the conversion, always according to the nature, or character of the power brought to bear upon the person converted? To illustrate, I may have a neighbor who is a radical, politically, and I want to convert him to democracy; what power will I bring to bear upon him? Not radical power, but democratic. I have friends who are sectarians, and I want to make christians of them; what power shall I bring to bear upon them? God's power, the gospel! Just as I would one who makes no pretensions to Christianity. Brethren, let us stick to God's word, and let the doctrines and commandments of men go as unworthy our notice.

ELIJAH HANSBROUGH.

TALKS TO THE SISTERS.

Dear Brother McGary:

Accept a few words of encouragement from a sister, who has seen some numbers of your monthly, and highly approves your work, believing, indeed, that it rests on a "sure foundation," that of "Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself, being the chief corner stone." I am perfectly in harmony with you on the momentous questions now agitating the brotherhood, viz: the "One Bap-tism" and the "modern pastor" system. Also, heartily endorse your views on the higher christian life, which seems to have been lost sight of by the majority of our brethren, in their mad race after the sects, to overtake them in numbers, and fine carpeted cathedrals and many other innovations. A sister would speak to the sisters, through your paper, of the errors that are creeping in through their instrumentality. Will you let me in? From the pure tone of your paper, I judge you do not belong to that class of our brethren that would take woman from that modest but supremely important sphere God has assigned her, and place her in the pulpit. Neither, judge I, would you confine her exclusively to the fireside. Right here I will say, Paul did not, as many seem to think, say "I suffer not a woman to teach at all," but "I suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over the man," or, to permit a transposition, "I suffer not a woman to teach the man, nor to usurp authority over him." To separate the first phrase of the sentence from the other would exclude fireside teaching, and thus cause Scripture to conflict. For we are told to "bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and how are we to do this unless we teach them what the law of the Lord is? Then again, we have a clear example of woman teaching in the case of Priscilla with Aquila teaching Apollas the "way of God more perfectly." Of course woman has her sphere in the church, but we deeply deplore the disposition among some of our most prominent brethren, that is becoming more manifest every day, to elevate woman to the duties of the pulpit. No matter how gifted, intellectually, a woman may be, the moment she enters the field as an evangelist or lecturer, she forfeits her native modesty, loses the esteem of her own and the respect of the opposite sex. Her God-given sphere is not limited. On her, chiefly, depends the rearing of the little ones who are to represent Christ's cause when we have "fallen asleep;" she is to make them "meet for the Master's use." She is also to visit the sick and afflicted, the poor and needy, administer to their necessities, alleviate their suffering, soothe the dying with the "old, old story, of Jesus and His love," and when this is all done, and home made happy for husband and children, there will be little time left for public duties! But I have strayed from my purpose, nevertheless will ascertain your opinion, as to the propriety of woman teaching through a paper, by your acceptance or rejection of this letter. If accepted, and permission granted, I may write occasionally, under the heading of "Talks with the Sisters."

Now for some words on the Firm Foundation. It certainly was not "born out of due time," but is sadly needed as a brake to check the rapid progress of our brethren toward sectarianism, and may God bless your earnest efforts with success. The whole object with us now, seems to be, to get numbers; thus, many hundreds are brought into the Church, and left without teaching, the elders, who should teach them, being, as a general thing, superseded by a "modern pastor." Consequently, they go back to their old sins; then, lest they should become offended, and quit the Church, they are allowed to go unrebuked, and thus bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. This reminds me to say a few words in regard to your article on Humility. I was surprised to learn that any of our brethren or sisters, especially sisters, would be willing to shield a "tippling" preacher, simply because he is an efficient proselyter. This is sectarianism, indeed! Certainly, he should be duly admonished and every effort made to reclaim him, but if he is too much "lifted up with pride," to make an humble confession of his sins, then he should be "delivered unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." These brethren and sisters who are glorying in him and shielding him, ought to know that "their glorying is not good." Have they not read that "a little leaven, leaveneth the whole lump? They should "purge out the old leaven, that they may be a new lump."

Bro. J. W. Jackson's articles are certainly to the point. Bro. J. S. Durst's no less so; Bro. I. C. Stone's "so plain;" but, Bro. McGary, my first impression of yours was, that you were sound and logical, but too personal. But upon reflection I remembered that "Paul withstood Peter to the face, before them all;" also, that he wrote a letter to be read publicly, in which he said "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world;" also, that he hesitated not to tell the Corinthian brethren that "they of the house of Chloe" had informed him of contentions among them. No doubt, the members of Sister Chloe's household would rather not have had the name of tale-bearers among the brethren of Corinth; but Paul cared not for this, when the cause he loved was in danger. There are other "personalities" of brother Paul's, that I will not enumerate, as these will suffice to show that you have apostolic example for your outspoken style. Paul says, "those things which you have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do; and the God of peace shall be with you." So you have the promise of God's blessing, as long as you take Paul for an example; but be careful not to transcend him! Our brethren show their tendency to sectarianism by becoming so incensed when a "big preacher" is arraigned publicly for teaching error. If some of our "big preachers" have become false teachers and will not "cease to pervert the right way of the Lord," why should they not be "rebuked before all?"

But enough for this time, and I fear you will say "more than enough!" With an earnest wish for your success, I subscribe myself your

This sister has not only our permission to "talk to the sisters" through our columns, but we hail her proposition with joy and gladness. Of course we reserve the privilege of criticising what she may have to say, in the light of that word she seems, and doubtless does, reverence so highly, should occasion present itself to our mind at any time. However, we do not mean to be understood as anticipating such necessity; far from it! Her tone in this letter gives "no uncertain sound," but is highly evincive of a mind and heart well stored with that knowledge and love which is from above. We sincerely hope that she may, in her "talks with her sisters," win them away from the fashion plates through which Butterick and Demorest, etc., are appealing to "the lust of their flesh, the lust of their eyes, and the pride of life," and leading them captive to the god of this world. Paul and Peter have furnished Christian women with a fashion plate that will please the eye of the true and living God. We presume that this sister has given this heaven appointed, plate of fashion, due consideration. Will she urge the attention of her sisters—so many of whom are adorning themselves after the styles of Demorest and Butterick—to a due consideration of their wicked rebellious course? How sad it is to contemplate the hold that the god of this world has upon professing Christians! One may attend the Church of Austin—which we suppose is no exception—on Lord's day, and find useless and forbidden "adorning" enough, worn by sisters, in such articles as jewelry, bangs, frizzes, silks, satins, fine hats, etc., to relieve all of the actual wants of the poor of this city of twenty thousand population! And this is saying nothing of the wastefulness and sinfulness, indulged in by the other churches, that would be corrected, and finally won to Christ, if Christians would add to their faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. My sister, will you "talk to your sisters" seriously, about these things? If so what a grand and glorious work awaits you! We do not mean to intimate that there is more sinfulness in this respect among the sisters than among the brethren. My sister, I feel encouraged by the very sensible view you have taken of our "personalities." I will try not to transcend the examples of our beloved brother Paul, but I can hardly hope to succeed every time. I ask your prayers, as well as that of all true brothers and sisters. Christianity can only be read in the perfect law of liberty. What a pity! what a shame! what a sin! that it is not exemplified in the lives of those professing it, after it has been read so many hundreds of years! Our Saviour intended that it should be read in the lives of those who believed on Him through the words of His witnesses. Brethren and sisters, judgment will begin at the house of God, and to make our calling and election sure and gain an entrance in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we must turn from the world, and denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we must live soberly, righteously and Godly in this present world! We may then look for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

THE "ONE BAPTISM"—WHAT ARE ITS CHARACTERISTICS?

Before attempting to enter into a close and connected inquiry of the question propounded in our caption, we will offer such preliminary remarks as the nature and importance of the question seems, to us at least, to demand. This inquiry will doubtless necessitate a series of articles, so that the last lingering doubt may be removed from the minds of many brethren, who are now, almost persuaded,

of the rightfulness of the course that the FIRM FOUNDATION has taken in relation to this question, and is urging all brethren to duly consider; also, that all conscientious brethren of that class, who are treating its work as divisive and unrighteous, may—if they will favor us with an impartial reading—see that the sum of its offense before God and man, consists in its strict adherence to and “earnest contention for the faith once delivered to the saints.” The defensibility of the grounds upon which we place the “one baptism” seems, to us, to be so abundantly provided for, by the Scriptures, that it would be exceedingly difficult for us to determine which of the many modes in which this question might be presented, would be best. That is, which promises the most logical, concise and scriptural view of the question, to such as have not hitherto looked it squarely in the face! If we maintain these grounds, in the light of Truth—support them by exemplifying their perfect agreement and consistency with “the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus”—why may we not expect our brethren to abandon all such connection with the pleas of men, as are out of consonance with these grounds? No one should ever feel so over-confident in relation to this or kindred questions, as to refuse to look at or re-examine points upon which life or death hinge; or to correct mistakes when clearly pointed out to them in that “light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.” To refuse to correct errors, when clearly shown to be such by the word of God, is to lightly esteem the heaven-appointed way and virtually place it on a level with man's ways, is to virtually expose one's infidelity, while prating about the importance of faith. To have a well grounded hope of “an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away,” one must be an heir of God—a joint heir with Christ—a member of the “one body.” To become a member of the “one body” is to hear, understand and believe in its Author; and to hear, understand, believe in and yield obedience to the law appointed for induction into it, because of its divine appointment. I fear that many of our brethren, in their eagerness to wear the satanic badge—orthodoxy—are beginning to spirit away the beautiful simplicity of the gospel of God's son. Brethren, there is something more matter-of-fact about becoming a Christian, and living a life of Christianity too, than most of us seem willing to admit. To enjoy the privileges and blessings purchased for us by Christ, we must become citizens of the “commonwealth of Israel;” and then go to work for the Lord. Now, the difference between those who are citizens of this commonwealth, and those who are not, lies, wholly, in what those who are citizens, have heard, understood, believed and obeyed, that those who are not, have not heard, or if they have heard, have not understood, or if they have understood, have not believed, or if they have believed have not obeyed. For example, foreigners may become citizens of America by a fixed law of naturalization. Many Irish have availed themselves of the liberties of American citizenship. But the difference between a naturalized Irishman and a foreign one, is not to be looked for, in the color of their hair or eyes, nor in their difference in stature; but the difference lies in the fact, that the naturalized one has heard, understood, believed and obeyed a law that the other has not heard, understood, believed and obeyed. So it is between those in Christ and those out of Christ,—except that one may, by outward show, so deceive the heads of human governments as to entitle himself to all of the privileges and blessings they promise and afford, while the great Head of "Israel's commonwealth" sees the "inner man" as well as the outer. If these premises are regarded by any as being too broad, we insist that they are just broad enough to be covered by the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, as sealed by the blood of the new institution. If they are considered too narrow, we have to say that they are just narrow enough to shut out the products of "corruptible seed." Hence it is as broad or narrow as the "measuring reed" will justify us to make it. The man who would linger around the primary steps or appointments of the gospel—the law of induction into Christ—to the exclusion of the graduating steps of the higher Christian life—"Virtue (courage), knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity" (love)—would not only soon forget that he was purged from his old sins, but would shut up that abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, against himself and all who might follow his pernicious ways. So of the man who would lightly esteem the primary steps—law of induction into Christ. To satisfy his own carnal mind, he would vitiate and even nullify that way washed clean and holy by the blood of his Saviour! God's way must be let alone, left as it is. Those who do not like it, without a glossing luster of progressive hues, should say so by a written creed, setting forth the changes they desire! This way of selling the "birth right" for a mess of sectarian pottage, is not only contemptible in the sight of all true disciples of Christ, but is the very worst phase of treason against God, and will surely bring its soul-blighting penalty when the "secrets of men's hearts are made manifest in the day when God shall judge men by Jesus Christ according to the gospel." The great orthodox army—which of all enemies of God, have waged the most effective warfare against Him—whenever they have applied their touch-stone to our plea, have found it wanting, because it was not "charitable" enough to yield up some of God's appointments, to win recognition under its shibboleth.

But alas! the day has arrived when we are about to become another sect; "when all men shall speak well of us." A strict adherence to the law of the spirit of life, would have led us farther and farther away from these wicked bodies, instead of bringing us, as we are, into such close proximity to them, as to regard them as "our brethren" in Christ. The false teaching of our popular preachers, in this day when they are hired at large salaries to expound the law to the "laity," is doing the work of wiping out the dividing lines between the church of God and worldly institutions, most effectively. The man who can do this work the most rapidly and effectually commands the highest price now in the pastor market. Oh! what a shame it is, that true soldiers all over the land will not rise up in the strength of a true soldier's armor—in Israel's strength—and battle in obedience to the command of their "King!" Why have they not long ago, in the light of the solemn warning of God, to the elders of the Church of Ephesus, through the great apostle to the Gentiles, cast out these "grievous wolves, who are not sparing the flock?" The only safeguard against them, now, is the same one that Paul commended unto his brethren, then, "the word of God's grace." Brethren, will we make use of it and shield the "fold" of the living God, against these voracious wolves in sheep's clothing? or will we desert the post of duty and succumb to popular clamor? One or the other we must do, and that quickly! Our Saviour said to His disciples: "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Immediately after this language to them, He says. "Beware of false prophets, teachers which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Matt. vii, 13-15. The "ravening wolves" of our Saviour's language, must be the "grievous wolves" of Paul's language found in Acts xx, 29. Now, brethren, is it not highly important that we heed these plain and solemn warnings of inspiration, too? Or shall we conclude that the grievous wolves passed away with the miraculous age? If so, we have been spoiled through the philosophy and vain deceit of worldly wise, man-made "pastors" and "elders," grievous or ravening wolves!

It is not our special purpose to point out these "wolves" in sheep's clothing of the nineteenth century, but brethren, they are among us, and their name is legion. Our Savior said we should know them by their fruits. Math., vii, 16-20. Remember, brethren, it is our duty to watch for these characters, else how can we "beware of them?" Again, remember when we undertake to identify them, that we must not conclude that every one who says, "Lord, Lord," thereby proves himself; for we may expect these "wolves" to do just that thing. Remember how they are clad! They must be tried in the light of eternal Truth. We may know them by their fruits. At the time that Paul warned the elders of Ephesus, against these deceitful enemies of God, some of their fruits were to enter in among the disciples, not "sparing the flock." Also, there were some of them to arise from among the disciples, and draw away disciples by speaking perverse things. See Acts xx, 30. Now, if we have the same kind of fruits to-day, it comes from the same kind of trees—characters—"grievous wolves." Have we not a class, who are robbing true and tried gospel preachers of a living, that the churches ought, and would give them, but for the philosophy and vain deceit, by which they win their hearers away from the "truth as it is in Jesus?" Are they not consuming upon their lusts, that which should go to alleviate the pinchings of poverty and gen-

draw away disciples;" and all who accept such teaching, are drawn away from the truth. "The truth as it is in Jesus," so far as it was necessary for us to know that truth, can be found in God's word, else that word would not be the thorough furnishing that it claims to be. It is the language of a false prophet, which says: "All who are baptized to honor God are Christians, whether or not they believed baptism was for the remission of sins." If this were true, then the word of God would lack just that much of giving us the whole truth, and would be responsible for the division among us to-day on the baptismal question. We would cease to hold to any theory that would fasten such a charge upon Jehovah! We do not mean that these very words would have to be found in God's word, but a clear and necessary inference, leading to them, must be there, or our reasoning above is self-evident! There could possibly be no broader grounds of difference between disciples than to differ as widely as we do upon the law of induction into Christ. The passages of Scripture, which are so abundant, teaching the extreme sinfulness of division among Christians, and which have been so long kept in constant use by us, in our war against, what we call Sectarianism, might now be used, with telling effect, nearer home! In fact, they were written for just such use. Our Saviour's prayer, as found in xvii John, for union, was for the union of those who might believe on Him through the words of the men He sent to preach — to tell the "truth," which was to be "known" in order that it might "make those

for it. True disciples must contend against such things. It must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" Brethren, we need not expect that God's way will roll smoothly on in a world so full of lust and rebellion as is this sin-cursed one. That class of brethren who are clamoring so for peace, on false grounds, while they profess to be actuated by the spirit of Christ, are just about as good as the devil would have them. The trouble with nine-tenths of them, we believe, is that they have about forgotten God, and hence "have become ignorant of God's righteousness and are going about to establish their own righteousness;" and "by good words and fair speeches are deceiving the hearts of the simple," into their own cowardly and ungodly ways. But we will say more upon this point at another time. Who is to be "marked and avoided" among us for this contention over the baptismal question? We have been quite recently "dismissed (avoided) from the further notice" of a very prominent brother, concerning this question; but in all seriousness and candor, and in the fear of God, we ask, which of us should be avoided, judging the matter in the light of Paul's solemn admonition? Must the one be marked and avoided who claims that the words spoken by the Holy Spirit, through men chosen and sent by our Lord to speak them, is "the doctrine that must be learned," before any one can become a member of the "one body;" or is it the one who teaches that some things said through these men, by the Spirit, need not be learned? Is it the one who shows a "thus saith the Lord" for eral destitution among the fatherless and widows, and the poor in general? These who are not prepared to answer these queries should acquaint themselves with the modus operandi of our popular churches of the cities. They hire pastors at figures ranging from fifteen hundred to thirty-five hundred dollars per annum, which amounts are wasted in a style of life wholly condemned by God's word. Brethren, we need not expect that God's way will roll smoothly on in a world so full of lust and rebellion as is this sin-cursed one. That class of brethren who are clamoring so for peace, on false grounds, while they profess to be actuated by the spirit of Christ, are just about as good as the devil would have them. The trouble with nine-tenths of them, we believe, is that they have about forgotten God, and hence "have become ignorant of God's righteousness and are going about to establish their own righteousness;" and "by good words and fair speeches are deceiving the hearts of the simple," into their own cowardly and ungodly ways. But we will say more upon this point at another time. Who is to be "marked and avoided" among us for this contention over the baptismal question? We have been quite recently "dismissed (avoided) from the further notice" of a very prominent brother, concerning this question; but in all seriousness and candor, and in the fear of God, we ask, which of us should be avoided, judging the matter in the light of Paul's solemn admonition? Must the one be marked and avoided who claims that the words spoken by the Holy Spirit, through men chosen and sent by our Lord to speak them, is "the doctrine that must be learned," before any one can become a member of the "one body;" or is it the one who teaches that some things said through these men, by the Spirit, need not be learned? Is it the one who shows a "thus saith the Lord" for

course will bring them, but we intend to speak the word of God unmixed with these popular adulterations. "Is not His word as a fire, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Yes! And we intend to try this fire and hammer of truth upon a formation hardened by more than a quarter of a century's crystallization around a human plea. We are told that God is no stickler, to require us to look for the whys and wherefores of His commands." And He is not; but when He has plainly and repeatedly told us anything He expects us to believe it, and to obey and defend it against all of the dreams and imaginations of false prophets; or, any connection with any part of their dreams and imaginations! The Lord has not sent these prophets, "yet they ran: He has not spoken to them, yet they have prophesied." If they had stood in his counsel and had caused the people to hear His words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings. "Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name: saying I have dreamed." To say that God has promised to adopt, as sons and daughters, those who have believed in and obeyed the preaching of those who have preached human plans, creeds and dogmas; because those creeds mixed some truth in with their many lies, is to "prophesy lies in His name." Oh! how many "lying prophets" are abroad in our land! To say for the Lord, what He has not authorized to be said, through those "sent" and guided by the Spirit, is to "prophesy lies in his name." "Thus shall ye say, every one to his neighbor, and every one to his brother, what hath the Lord answered? and what the Lord spoken?" This is the question that should sink deep down into the hearts of us all, and especially, into the hearts of those who have so loudly and persistently cried that "His words are a sufficient rule of faith and practice." Let those who try to justify their human and inconsistent ways, by saying that "God is no stickler," remember Lot's wife, the case of the prophet of God, Uzzah, and Achan; and they will see that while it is true that "God is no stickler," He is very "jealous of His words."

It was the great Apostle to the Gentiles, who said: "There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism." The "one body" is the body—the church—the kingdom of Christ. The "one spirit" is the spirit that actuates and vivifies the "one body"—the spirit that brought to the remembrance of the apostles the "all things" whatsoever the son of God had said to them—the spirit that guided their tongues and pens while they promulgated to the world the way, the only way, the "bound" way, into remission of sins—into the "one body." The "one hope" is the hope of eternal life through faith in the promises of God—that hope that Christians have "as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." The "one Lord" is the Son of God—the Lord Jesus Christ—our prophet, priest and king, who has "thoroughly furnished us unto all good works," through chosen ambassadors. The "one faith" is that system of salvation offered to the world through the son of God: consecrated, hallowed and sealed by His blood—that "faith which was once delivered to the saints," and for which we should earnestly contend—that faith that comes by hearing the word of God.

To all of these, as far as we have gone, our brethren will doubtless all agree. But the "one baptism!" What is it? What its characteristics? This is the question, reader, to which your attention from this time forth will be invited. Is it simply immersion in water? No! None of my brethren will so far forget the commission of our Lord, to His "witnesses," when He sent them forth into "all the world to preach the gospel to every creature," or to "teach all nations," as to say that there are no antecedent or preparatory steps, or conditions, which are to be coupled with immersion, to make up the sum of the "one baptism" spoken of by Paul—the one baptism by which our past sins are "washed away" and we buried with Christ. Brethren, we have taken up more space in these preliminaries than we intended. In our next issue we will begin that process of inquiry which we hold will answer the question, "What is the one baptism—what its characteristics?" We confidently expect to make many converts to the truth on this question, from those who are now, violently opposed to the course we hold and advocate. We will now give some idea of the process of inquiry we purpose to pursue. Our Saviour spoke of what we call the law of induction into His "body," both literally and figuratively. He then sent the apostles forth to the work. Now, we intend to take all that our Saviour said upon this question, and try the theory of those who attempt to defend sectarian baptism by what He said. That is, we intend to "try" their work by His literal teaching and by His figurative teaching. Also, we have a record of the work done by these chosen men, and letters from them with allusions to this work, in which we find also literal teaching and figurative. Now, if this modern theory fails to accord with any of this teaching, after it has had a fair trial, it must be wrong. We may invite our readers to journey with us, by faith, with the apostles, beginning at Jerusalem, from thence into all Judea; then into Samaria, and then into the uttermost parts of the earth. We intend to give "our plea" a thorough test, under the weight of the "fire and hammer of God's word." If it will not bear a close analogy to the new birth, to the "sowing and growth of the incorruptible seed;" in fact, to all the teaching of this style, it must be abandoned by all true soldiers of Christ.

GIVE THE RED MAN THE GOSPEL!

Brethren, we have received a short article from Bro. Officer, laying before our readers some facts relative to the Indian mission—a good work! But we have mislaid it, and though we have made diligent search, cannot find it. If he will favor us with another, we here promise to be more careful with it. Brethren, if you believe this work of Bro. Officer's a good one, can't you send to him

(R. W. Officer) at Paris, Texas, something to aid in the work? Remember, brethren, that the white man drove the "red man" from his hunting grounds, and plowed them up, and built wicked cities upon them, in which cities the Gospel of Christ is being grossly perverted! Now, brethren, help to send the good news of the certainty of the "happy hunting ground"—salvation in heaven for the much-abused red man—and it will amply pay him for his loss in time.

BRO. JACKSON TAKEN TO TASK.

A brother has written us taking Bro. Jackson to task for something he said in his article, "Unto what then were you Baptized?" The trouble is, Bro. Jackson said that these twelve disciples whom Paul "disturbed" about their baptism at Ephesus, were in the church. This old brother, who wrote about this matter, is sound to the core, and wants "sound speech that cannot be condemned." He is right! We cannot be too particular in the use of our words upon these momentous themes. But we have not the remotest idea, that Bro. Jackson intended to convey the thought that these were real bona fide members of Christ's body, Christians, but that they were acting in conjunction with the Ephesian brethren in the work of the Lord, and considered by them as Christians and brethren. But when Paul, who was "determined to know nothing but Christ, and Him crucified," came along and found that these had not complied with "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," the same "law that had made him free," he had them baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, "re-baptized," just as he would do now, were he to come along and find many that are with the churches on a baptism not half as good as that of the twelve, if there is any difference. These nineteenth-century kind might contend that they were "baptized to honor God," and draw the "Christian System" on Paul, and charge him with "hobby riding," "riding roughshod through our peaceful churches." And when they saw that none of these things "moved him," he might be "dismissed from their further notice," until he would consent to gulp down "our plea" without even making a wry face! If these twelve had told Paul that they were "baptized to honor God," he could have told them that he used to "bind, and cast into prison, both men and women," to honor God; but that he had since learned that there was not much honor to God in such work.

We do not pretend to speak for Bro. Jackson on the issue raised against his language, but hope he will "rise and explain" to his brethren. We are sure he will in his next. Bro. Jackson will not, in the future, appear as an editor of our pamphlet. His work elsewhere will not permit it; but he promises to write occasionally for our readers. His writings, in our pamphlet, have been very highly appreciated by our readers, and he will, doubtless, be sadly missed from our column. But let us here say to our readers, that Bro. Jackson has lost none of his zeal for the work that he has taken part in, in the pamphlet. He knows the truth, and if we are not badly deceived in him, he will not shun to declare it wherever he goes. We truly and sincerely wish him success.

We take great pleasure in adding Bro. R. R. Renick's name to our list of authorized agents. Bro. Renick is one of our young preachers, though about fifty years old, so we are told by one who knows him. He was converted to Christ some years ago, from a human institution known as the Presbyterian Church. While in this human institution, where he thought that he was honoring and serving God, he had the good fortune to hear that valiant old soldier, A. B. West, of Blanco county, who won him to Christ, since which time he has gone into the work of proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ, with a very marked earnestness and success. About one month and a half ago, Bro. Renick's name was sent us in a club with others, by Bro. Larrimore, who is one of our most successful agents. Since Bro. Renick has been a reader of the FIRM FOUNDATION, he has sent us two clubs of subscribers, aggregating forty or more. We consider it quite a compliment to our pamphlet for men who are as sound in the faith and as well spoken of by those who know them, as these brethren, to manifest so much interest in its circulation. They evidently do not coincide with that Baham editor and brother, who says that it is proclaiming a "new gospel," and that he can't bid it God speed. It would rejoice our heart to have an opportunity to clasp the hand and exchange words of love and encouragement, with that remnant of our brethren who have not yet "bowed the knee to Baal"—those who are for God's way, just as He "thoroughly

Oh! will they not cease to pervert that way that is bound by the acts and writings of God's apostles? Do their writings, which thoroughly furnish us with all things that pertain unto life and godliness, show that persons may be baptized into the "one body" without understanding that the "one baptism" is for the remission of sins? No! Brethren, will you not deny it anywhere? Do these writings of the Galilean fisherman, and Saul (Paul) of Tarsus, who were chosen by our Savior to be His witnesses, show that "confession with the mouth" is a necessary antecedent to the "one baptism"? Yes! Brethren, will you not affirm it against the allied hosts of earth, if need be? Then, brethren, while you are standing up for God's law of enlisting recruits into the service of His son, will you not draw the "sword" in defense of the "fatherless and the widows," who are being robbed by the modern "pastor," of what Christ intended they should have? Are you, brethren, going to remain silent and inactive, while the old pioneer proclaimers of a pure gospel, who have borne the heat and burden of the day, are being pushed to one side to make room for a mixed, an adulterated, new-fangled article, vended by diplomacy, by college fledglings? Shall their venerable heads and gray hair be bowed down in sorrow, and the residue of their valuable days be buried in seclusion, to make places for "grievous" "wolves" "in sheeps' clothing?" These place-hunting college boys demand from two to three thousand dollars per year, and they will not drill the churches up to progressive tactics for less. So "old foggy" preachers must go at their own charges, taking heat and cold; and widows and orphans must beg and cry for bread; while brussels carpets, silver communion sets and organs are being provided to make everything meet for the "pastor's" use. How much longer will true soldiers wait to strike for truth?

A. McG.

To the brother who asks us if we consider the word "kingdom," wherever it occurs in the Scriptures, as relating to the church of Christ on earth, we have to say that we do not so restrict its import. It reaches to a higher development, but of the same institution that is now being so badly corrupted. We wish we had room to say more here, and may do so at another time. We would like to hear from the brother who asked the question.

We have deferred our answer to Bro. Lipscomb to next issue, for reasons that our readers would doubtless decide good.

BAPTIST BAPTISM.

"If Baptists have any other use for baptism than to make Baptists, we would be glad to have them rise and explain. Will some of the wise Baptist editors answer the following?

1. What do Baptists baptize for?
2. Does their baptism take place out of the church, or in it?
3. If out, how can it be a "Church ordinance?"
4. If in, how can it be a door to the Baptist Church?
5. Has God commanded that believing penitents shall be baptized?
6. If yes, why do they vote whether they will do it or not? Has the Church a right to vote whether it will obey God or not? We would like some good, solid, square answers to these six interrogatories."

The above is from the pen of J. T. Poe. It looks to us like double-distilled impudence. How inconsistent some of our teachers are, when you compare their attempts to defend "our plea" at this point, with what they have to say about sectarian work at other times. Whenever J. T. Poe condemns Baptist baptism he condemns himself. It seems to offend these brethren to show up their in-

If he is now penitent of this and his other sins, it is a good time to be baptized for the remission of sins. We hope our old friend Poe has not become our enemy, "because we have told him the truth." But in telling him and others the truth, we are now aware that we said some things we ought not to have said, and we are sorry for it.

"PERSONALITIES."

We hear a great deal said about "personalities." Quite a number of our readers have written us, urging us to cease to be so personal in what we write. Like brother Harding's readers, many of ours tell us how to make our pamphlet popular. Now, in the outset, we freely confess that we have made many mistakes in our efforts to correct the mistakes of others. We have not, every time, said just the thing we ought to have said, nor in the way it should have been said. We have said cutting things sometimes, that we are now sorry for; but who has not? If there are any among our legion of scribes who cannot find something that they have written that they are now sorry for, or that they could improve upon after maturer reflection, then that man is not fit to teach Christianity. Even Paul, under the spur of the moment, said things that he ought not to have said; but he was not so full of himself, like most of us, as to let such things go long unconfessed. Again, we here take occasion to assure those who have written us upon this question, that we entertain no doubts as to their purposes or intentions. We thank them, every one, from the depths of our heart, for the interest they have thus manifested in our welfare. The trouble they have taken, to write us long and kind letters, instead of remaining silent to us and heralding their disapproval in every other direction, as is generally done, is proof conclusive to us that their intentions are praiseworthy. Besides, some of them are our tried and truest friends. We have said these things, that our readers may understand, that what follows has not grown out of even a semblance of resentment at anything that has been written us on this subject; for this is called forth by said letters, and is designed to give clearer conceptions to some of our brethren, especially to that class who are for peace, peace, peace! Peace with the organ, the grab-bag, the church, sociable, jug-breaking, parlor-dancing, modern pastor (who lords it over God's heritage), immodest apparel (such as jewelry, banga, frizzes, silks, satins, etc., etc., jockey caps and fine hats, with tropical birds roosting on them), and—a-n-d the silk "beegum" or "plug hat" of the dudish pastor; the "missionary society," and sectarian immersion. Yes, peace with anything and everything; peace with the devil and his angels even, that the code of ethics inaugurated by "wolves in sheep's clothing," and approved by the "kingdom of the clergy," may adjudge your peaceful(?) course to be dictated by the spirit of Christ—that the devil may be all in all. Brethren, those of you who are readers of the Advocate, please read carefully brother J. A. Harding's article on "The Spirit of Christ," issue of January 7, 1885. We did intend to publish it for the benefit of our readers, and may at another time; but this time it has been crowded out by other matter, because most of our readers are also Advocate readers. Those of you who are not readers of the Advocate, borrow it from your neighbors who are; it is well worth the trouble. But, brethren, the man who proclaims "the truth as it is in Jesus" faithfully, in this day of looseness, must wound a large per cent of the people, both saint and sinner; must render himself, by so doing, unpopular. Then, brethren, cease to expect popularity in this world while you are warring against the "children of this world." Your Saviour, with all of His goodness and meekness, could not do what most of you seem to be hoping to do. When He spoke, those who loved the truth became His friends and followers, while those who did not love the truth, became His foes and persecutors. The story of the cross tells which was the popular side then. It will be so till Christ comes back. Those who are not willing to be on the side of the unpopular, are not willing to be on Christ's side—would have been against Him had they lived in His day. Brethren, "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." And if he love not the world, of course the world will not love him, but will hate him. "The lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life" are not of God but are of the world. If you war against these things the world will hate you, and God will love you. Brethren, "choose ye this day whom ye will serve." "Yes, but," says some brother, "we must not use such plain or personal language in our war against these things; fight measures, not men. We must war in the spirit of Christ." This is the issue. We presume no one would undertake to justify little sharp cuts and insinuating flings that spring out of personal dislikes or grudges. We shall not, however much of it we may have done in the past; and we fear we are not perfectly innocent here. But who is going to shape our course as to how we shall war against sin in high or low places? Shall the kingdom of the clergy, who have ingrafted in their code of ethics the metes and bounds of the world's formulated rules of etiquette for polite society? Or shall we take our Saviour and those He sent to guide us, for our exemplars? We prefer the latter. We have examples recorded by the pen of inspiration, where our Saviour and the apostles dealt with error in and out of the Church. These examples show us, that they dealt with both "men and measures," they were quite "personal." If they were here in person, in this day, which is so full of nineteenth century Phariseeism, where they had to give an account of their way of dealing with men and measures, before the tribunal of the kingdom of the clergy, they would stand a poor show. The modern pastor's influence would overshadow and condemn them. But says one, "I know that Christ and the apostles dealt in personalities, but we have not the authority they had; we can't presume to do what they did." We often hear this! But is it true? Are we in danger of God's wrath and condemnation, when we ignore the ways of the world, and try to shape our course in all things, by the examples of these men who were led about by the spirit of God? If we can't "presume" to do things they did, why did Paul say to his Philipian brethren, "Brethren, be followers together of me?" Why did he say to them, "Those things which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do, and the God of peace shall be with you?" Why did he say to them, "For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us?" Paul said to his Roman brethren, and through them to us, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." But brethren, we are not heeding him. We want to make money like the world does, dress like the world, vote as the world, dance like the world, attend the skating rink like the world, and fawn and flatter like the world. In short, if we are a peculiar people, zealous of good works, so is the world. Where is that "peculiarity" to be found, that is to distinguish us from the world?

Brethren, we should no more "conform" to the world in our way of speaking or writing, than in other things. We should speak the truth in love (and lie not), but in the love of God, not in the love of his enemies. We do not and cannot love the ways of the man who lords it over God's heritage. We care not how long and well rounded his prayers may be. If God expects us to love such, He demands what we can't do, which we know he does not. This is not saying that we could not love such men, if they would change their course, and humble themselves down to God's way. Not to perfection, for we deny that we ever claimed it for ourself, or expected it in others. A few days ago a brother told us that he could always tell when anything was said or written in the spirit of Christ. He said that nothing wounding, was ever written in the spirit of Christ. We asked him what he thought of ye "stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears," and "He that saith, I know him and keepeth not his commandments is a liar and the truth is not in him;" and many other passages of the same character? We asked him if he thought these were wounding. One wounded those to whom it was said, so deeply that they killed the devout man who said it. Who doubts that the other has wounded its thousands? And yet if these men were not actuated by the love of God, the Spirit of Christ, who ever has been? Brethren, we need never look for higher standards among those who write in defense of Christianity, than were the apostles of our Lord. The modern pastor and his adoring followers may deal with the question in a pleasing style, so as to cause "all men to speak well of them;" but while they are charming the world, the flesh and the devil, they are being led by the wicked spirit. To be transformed from the ways of the world by the renewing of one's mind, to a state approved by God, is to exchange popularity for unpopularity. The man who preaches the word of God faithfully, and lives a godly life, is apt to be a poor man in this world's goods. Wealth and Bible Christianity (for the world has another kind) are not often found walking hand in hand. The man who does just what the word of God teaches cannot lay up a surplus of this world's goods, and hence cannot be a rich man, from a worldly standpoint. If he does lay it up, "its rust will be a witness against him." We care naught for how unpopular the saying of these things may render us; they are true, whoever they may condemn; even if we are among them. If we were seeking popularity, we would either plunge into the broad current of liberalism and float upon its bosom, or we would attend some popular Bible college, and learn by rote, the well established methods of acquiring power and control over the "laity," how to be popular by stereotyped and never failing rules. Brethren, many of you have no idea to what low and sinful courses our leading men are stooping to gain popularity! They deal in "personalities," but only in a way to help themselves to place and power. Some time ago, we knew one of our very popular preachers to hold a protracted meeting for a certain church in this State. During the progress of this meeting, as the preacher would visit around among his brethren, he expressed himself as being deeply impressed by the many evidences of lifelessness and worldliness of the church. But he took care to speak this where it would not wound. He said that if he had known the condition of the church, in this respect, and its divided condition, he could not have been induced to visit it. He spoke of its pastor, in certain places, in uncomplimentary terms. He spoke of another preacher as a bad man, one who was always trying to "undermine the character of other preachers." He said he had never preached for such a church, and hoped he would never have to again; that he did not know how to preach to please them—whether to "preach it round or flat." Now, this preacher went away from that place, and wrote that church up in the papers as the best church he ever knew, all working unitedly and harmoniously! He spoke of the pastor in the very highest terms, as he also did of the "undermining" preacher! In short, he

I tell you, brethren, it is unpopular to speak the truth openly. We are not at all in doubt as to our course in THE FIRM FOUNDATION being unpopular; and, while we thank our brethren for their letters on this subject and others, and shall at all times be pleased to hear from them with such advice as they may offer us, we here take occasion to assure them that we need no further argument upon the subject, as to whether or not our course is unpopular. We have not written this to justify anything we have heretofore written, of a cutting or sarcastic nature. There is a happy mean, between two dangerous extremes, in dealing with error. That mean is to be found in the examples of God's apostles. We try to follow it, but confess that we have fallen far short of it.

OUR REPLY TO BROTHER D. LIPSCOMB.

This will not be as elaborate as we intended to make it when we first promised it to our readers. Brother Lipscomb's silence upon our request of him to inform his readers that we would send them our reply, free, if they would send in their names, demonstrates to us his utter inability to treat us fairly. We fear he has resisted the truth and sought ways and means to obtain vantage grounds over it, till he has beclouded his vision by delusions and blunted his finer sensibilities with virus, till there is no ground for hope left of his trying to see, or of his ever being willing to treat any opponent on this question impartially. Hence we will curtail our defense against his unjust charges (that we had wilfully misrepresented him); down to the mere mention of a few facts, and rely upon their weight to exonerate us. It is hard to have to tamely submit to being accused, before five thousand brethren, of misrepresenting a brother, and not be permitted to even submit a defense. But those who dare to turn their backs upon all human pleas and plans, and boldly proclaim the sinfulness of such things, as subversive of God's redemptive plan, always have been, and doubtless always will be badly treated, till Christ comes back.

Brother Lipscomb thought right hard of Elder Errett, for refusing to allow him to defend himself against some charges brought against him in the Standard. Brother L. said many hard things against Elder Errett for his course in this matter. "Thou art inexcusable, O, man, for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things." Brethren, we are poor disciples of our Lord, and very unprofitable servants until we learn to "do unto others as we would have them do unto us." If brother L. can satisfy himself that he has treated us on this principle, we have made made up our mind to bear it, and not to recur to it again. But we cannot consent to "dismiss" brother

L. "from our further notice." If we could feel justified in following the bent of our own inclinations, irrespective of the demands of duty to the cause we owe fealty to, we might then do so. But brother L.'s logical and scriptural aggressions upon some of the innovations that are now so seriously disturbing the churches, and greatly hindering the truth, are so potent, that all who want to stand against these things, should read his manner of attack. Again, his widespread influence makes him such a formidable foe to the truth, on the baptismal question, that we cannot be true to our convictions, or preserve an unfaltering fidelity to that which is committed to the trust of all disciples, and ignore him, by refusing to weaken his position against the truth, whenever an opportunity presents itself. With these remarks we pass on to the criticism of his article. He says:

"Brother McGary writes about us (he never meets an argument) several pages in his paper. But in response to our query as to whether A. Campbell, T. Fanning and others of the pioneers in the effort to return to apostolic ways, sinned in being baptized in obedience to Christ, before they knew it was for the remission of sins," he spends much time in telling it was I, and not brother Fanning, that did not understand that baptism was for the remission of sins. It makes not the least difference so far as the principle is concerned, whether it was I or brother Fanning, or both of us. (These personalities only divert from the question. I only wanted an example in the person of one against whom there was no prejudice.)

Brother L. says we never meet an argument. Well, the reason is very obvious. We have thus far had no chance to meet one. Brother Lipscomb, in all his efforts to appear as standing upon plausible grounds, has shown us nothing as authority for his position, but his word. We have repeatedly called on him for higher authority; but thus far he has failed to point us to one solitary passage in God's word, that we remember of, to sustain himself. So long as he regards his word as sufficient to settle the controversy, so long will it be impossible to reach him with an argument. When brother Lipscomb has sought to strengthen his own word, he has appealed to brother Campbell and brother Fanning, knowing at the same time that "personalities divert from the question." But, when we added the name of D. Lipscomb, was the first time he thought it necessary to call attention to the fact that personalities divert from the question. If, as he says, personalities divert from the question, why has he all the time claimed that this question hinged upon the status of these dead heroes of the faith. We have thought, all the while, that personalities diverted from the question. And we have further thought that if we wanted to use persons, we would call on the living, and let the dead rest. If personalities divert from the question, who then has tried most to divert? It is quite suggestive, to see a man of brother Lipscomb's ability, invading the silent precincts of the tombs, and summoning the most revered names from their sacred slumber, to stand in defense of his word, his untenable theories, and vague speculations. The high standing and universal appreciation and love among the brotherhood, for these revered dead, has all the more helped to divert from the question. Hence, they have served brother L. a valuable part, although he has not permitted them to speak for themselves. Brother L.'s use of these names on this question, can only find its counterpart in the course of our sectarian friends, when they point to their illustrious dead, who had depended on sprinkling for baptism: condemn sprinkling, and you condemn them! But brother L. never complains about personalities, or seems to see that they divert from the question, until his name is put in the same crucible that he puts brother Campbell's and brother Fanning's in!

We do not believe that this course of brother L.'s proceeds from an innate principle, but that it is the product of a blindness, brought on by gradually drifting farther and farther into untenable and unholy attitudes. He has never stated the issues on this question. Had he or any one else done so, and courageously come up to the discussion of it in the light of Scripture (all else is darkness), away would have gone this human and sinful feature of our plea long ago! Brother L. says:

"The question is, did that failure to see all the promises, or to realize the exact point in the path of obedience at which each promised blessing would be received, so vitiate the obedience as to render the act, intended by them as obedience to God, a sin in his sight?"

Now, we deny that this is a fair, cogent statement of the issues. Here are the issues in a nutshell, and any fair, unprejudiced mind will see it at a glance.

1. Do the Scriptures teach that one may be baptized into Christ before believing that baptism is for the remission of sins?

2. Is confession with the mouth a necessary antecedent to Scriptural baptism?

There is no use in trying to dodge these issues. They are here clearly and fairly stated. And we will here take occasion to state that any brother, or any one else, who may feel disposed to discuss them, from proper motives, can have a fair division of our columns for that purpose; or we will furnish a man who will deny the first and affirm the second, in oral discussion, anywhere in the State of Texas. But some of our brethren say it ought not to be discussed! Why not, brethren? What has truth to fear; it comes out of all conflicts strengthened and brightened, or ought to. It does not sound well to hear our brethren, who would cross the continent to discuss the design of baptism, say that it is wrong to discuss this question; or that it is not necessary that one should understand that design. This never will have a consistent look, brethren. It is a sin to preach what it is not necessary for persons to believe. But enough of this for the present. Bro. L. says:

"Now, was A. Campbell's baptism so vitiated by his failure to see that it was for the remission of sins, as to render it so void in the sight of God, that his failure to turn from it and be baptized for the remission of sins, caused his rejection by God? There is the naked issue that brother Mc-

Gary, like all other sectarians, will never meet."

My brother is mistaken. We will meet it, so far as it is possible for us to meet it. If brother Campbell was not baptized upon a hearing and a believing of the gospel (in which gospel, baptism for the remission was heard and believed), his baptism was null and void; because God never authorized such a baptism. And if it was a sin to be baptized "to John's baptism after it had ceased," as brother L. claims, then it was a sin in brother C. or any other man (for God is no respecter of persons) to be baptized by a baptism which was never authorized by God. But as brother L. has put brother C. on trial, we are willing to let him speak for himself, and when he does, he does not strengthen brother L.'s side. We think that brother L. misrepresents brother Campbell's case, not intentionally. Hear brother Campbell. He says on page 248, "Campbell on Baptism," while on the design of baptism:

"The appeal, therefore, must be made to the proper tribunal. It must be carried up to the apostles and evangelists of Jesus Christ." On page 252 of the same book, brother Campbell said:

"In the first place, then, no one is commanded to be baptized for anything else, and no one is ever said to have been baptized for anything else, than for the remission of sins. This is a very important fact, and worthy of much reflection." (Italics, brother Campbell's.)

Again, on page 253, he says:

"Evident then it is, that there is no specific design on account of which any one can constitutionally be baptized,

On page 252, "Campbell on Baptism," brother C. says:

"It is the only purpose for which it was ordained; whether in the hands of John or of the twelve Apostles. What could be more plain or intelligible than such forms of expression as the following:

"John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.' It was not a baptism, but the baptism of repentance. It was not for remission of sins, but for the remission of sins. The fixtures of language could not more safely secure the intention of an institution. It was not because your sins have been remitted, but it is for, or in order to the remission of sins." In the Christian Baptist, page 521, brother C. says:

"Knowing that the efficacy of this blood is to be communicated to our consciences in the way that God has pleased to appoint—we 'stagger not at the promise of God,' but flee to the sacred ordinance which brings the blood of Jesus in contact with our consciences. Without knowing and believing this, immersion is as empty as a blasted nut. The shell is there but the kernel is wanting." If then, brother C. was baptized without knowing the design of baptism, according to his own words he was not constitutionally baptized. His baptism was as a "blasted nut." Why will brother L. persist in placing this great man in such an attitude? If he was not baptized for the remission of past sins, and if he did not "confess with the mouth" as an antecedent to that baptism, he stifled his own conscientious convictions. Who believes that he did this? We do not! Brother Lipscomb may, if he can find it in his heart to thus judge that good man. We say, let the dead rest, but if they must be ushered before the sinful "hypocritical" living (as we agree with Brother L. that we all are, to some extent), do pray let them speak for themselves! Reader, note brother Campbell's italics, as we have given them in his own language. Will brother L. have the hardihood to again contend that brother C. went to his grave on an "unconstitutional baptism"—a baptism that was as a "blasted nut," according to his own conscientious convictions? How does he know that brother C. did not understand the design of baptism, when he was first baptized, or that he did not make the confession? And if he did not, how dare he say that that conscientious man did not afterwards correct it, by making his baptism constitutional? We know old preachers we have made their baptism constitutional, within the past few months, who have been preaching a quarter of a century. The writer was the administrator in one such case. Thank God! some brethren, who have spent more than a score of years in preaching Christ, are able to see themselves in a small enough light to discern that they are not special pets and favorites with the God of heaven!

Brother L. is deceiving himself on this question! When he has not the "re-baptism hobby" immediately before his eyes, he sees the work of sectarians in its true light, as we see it. Hear him express himself while in that condition:

"I believe no sinner is converted,

We have given this language of brother L.'s before, and commented on it; but we have many readers who have not seen it. We will not here criticise it, further than to say that no man can entertain this view of the Baptists, and then take Baptists into the church, without demanding all of the requirements that would be required of one who never made pretensions to Christianity, and be a consistent man! It will stamp any man, before intelligent minds, as inconsistent! Brother L. has appeared quite peevish and snappish at us, for handling his inconsistencies as we have. His course has offended some, who have been reading his paper for many years, and they have declared to us their intention of dropping the Advocate. But we will here say to all such that we hope they will not do so. We all do wrong, and perhaps we are guilty of as great a wrong in our manner towards brother L. as he has been in his treatment of us. Besides, brethren, no paper that we have ever seen can fill the place of the Advocate. Brother L. has sometimes handled the word of God deceitfully, in trying to extricate himself from his difficulties and glaring inconsistencies, on this question; but who of us are not guilty of hypocrisies?

Brother L. said that the "Holy Spirit, to quiet the fears" of the converts on the day of Pentecost, "told them that their sins would be forgiven." This was handling God's word deceitfully, and every intelligent reader of God's word knows it. The Holy Spirit told the truth because it was the truth, and not to quiet anybody's fears! If it was told to quiet their fears, and not to teach them the truth, that they might be made free by the truth, where did our brother learn it? We can, like the great apostle to the Gentiles, most truthfully say that we are not "mad, but speak the words of truth and soberness." We should prize the cause of Christ more highly than our love and friendship for men, brethren, and when they put themselves in the way of the truth and hinder it, they should be reprovèd and rebukèd before all. In order that persons might be brought "into Christ, be born of water and the Spirit," the Holy Spirit, sent down from heaven to guide as many as the Lord our God shall call, from that time until His Son shall revisit this earth, spoke what God sent it to speak. Those who then believed just what the Spirit said, and obeyed its voice, were baptized into Christ, were born of water and the Spirit; and so they are now. But those who did not believe the Spirit's words then, were not baptized; and, if they had been, would not have been born of water and the Spirit. Neither now are such born of water and the Spirit, though they may be born of water—water is not enough! God is the same, yesterday, to-day and forever. We are still under the same dispensation. What was then authorized to be preached, and was preached and believed, is now authorized to be preached, and must be preached and believed in order that persons may be led by the Spirit—be born of water and the Spirit. Substitutes introduced at any point, change the word of God and make it a lie.

To the Editor;

DEAR BROTHER—By your request, I will give to the readers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, a short article in regard to our Indian Mission. It has been four years since I induced Elder M. Askew (an Indian), to come out from Alabama, to sow the "good seed of the kingdom" among his inore unfortunate and wilder brethren. Brother Askew had a good understanding of the ancient gospel, and presented it in a simple manner, but with great power.

One year ago his spirit returned to "God who gave it." He created an undying interest where he preached. My work among the Indians has been chiefly at their councils. I have been in both the Chickasaw and Choctaw councils, and would preach to them at night, by their request. I have been warmly received by them, and my preaching has had a good effect. So by this time, the Christian's King is accepted into some of the hearts of the leading minds among them. Up to this writing, all that I have done among them has been at my own charges. But the Church in this city has agreed to send me out as evangelist one-half of my time this year. The Indian Mission work is in the hands of the Church here. Elder W. H. Sluder receives all money sent here for it. Up to this time there has been but little spent out of the Indian Mission fund. We have but little on hand; not enough to make much effort towards building. We want to connect with the mission an industrial school, and will, when we can, so that we may teach the boys to work, give them an education and a trade, a practical idea of life, as well as Christianize them. Develop the moral, mental and physical man together. We hope in the near future to make the mission self-sustaining, by means of the industrial school. All that is produced by farming, or any mechanical work which may be added, will go towards the support of the school and mission.

The tuition and board will be paid out of the public fund of the nation. The boys will be expected to work on the farm, or at some trade, a part of each day, Lord's day excepted. All means above the amount which will be necessary in order to the support of the mission, which is now in its infancy, will be expended in the support of the preaching of the Gospel at other points in the Indian Territory. I have circulated books, pamphlets and papers among them, and they receive them gladly. I have written a number of long letters bearing on Christian duty, to the few disciples among them, and as an expression of their appreciation for them, they have been gathered up and returned to me for publication in pamphlet form. It was the last request of the true and tried soldier, brother Askew. Governor B. F. Overton (their principal chief at that time) proposed to pay the expenses of printing, etc., but within a few weeks he died, and therefore the work has been delayed; but I will have it out of the press (1000 copies) by the first of March, at my own expense, for circulation among them. They are appropriately adapted to their needs, as I understood them, and as I am favorably known among them, I hope something will be accomplished thereby.

Sister Josie Martin, of this congregation, a zealous Christian woman, full of good works, will travel this spring and summer, authorized by the Church, to solicit help, and take subscriptions, so much to be paid yearly for three years, at the expiration of which time we hope to make our Indian mission and industrial school self-sustaining. Nature has taught our wilder and more unfortunate brethren by her seasons, in sunshine and storm, in the flashing lightnings and roaring thunders, the green grass, the bursting buds and the blooming flowers, the rolling prairies, the rugged mountains and thick tangled forests, the flowing rivers and frisking brooks, the gurgling springs and the sparkling heavens, and in many other ways has mother nature taught her children. But every lesson taught them has been dipped in blood. Their condition is a peculiar one, neither civilized nor savage. Struggling to rise above the one, and bending their weary steps toward the other. The lessons drawn from mother nature's bosom did not, could not, unfold to them the true and living God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The name of Jesus Christ is not in their language, nor can they in their mother tongue express the thought which we convey by the word aspire, "to desire eagerly to rise." But, "His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." And we are blessed with lessons of love, written in letters of blood upon the cross. At their council in last October, after I had preached to them in their council house, Peter Fulsome, a native Indian, who had just returned from Washington, D. C., where he had been in the interest of his people, lifted his form, which had passed him through about seventy-five winters, before his children, and told them something of old times; his tears flowed freely while he exhorted them to struggle on. Those moving tears shook my frame, and melted within me the soul which threats could never shake, when I remembered the odds with which they had contended, in contrast with the blessing we had slighted. O, God! in mercy forgive us for our indifference about so great a matter as "teaching all nations" the good news of salvation. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us all.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

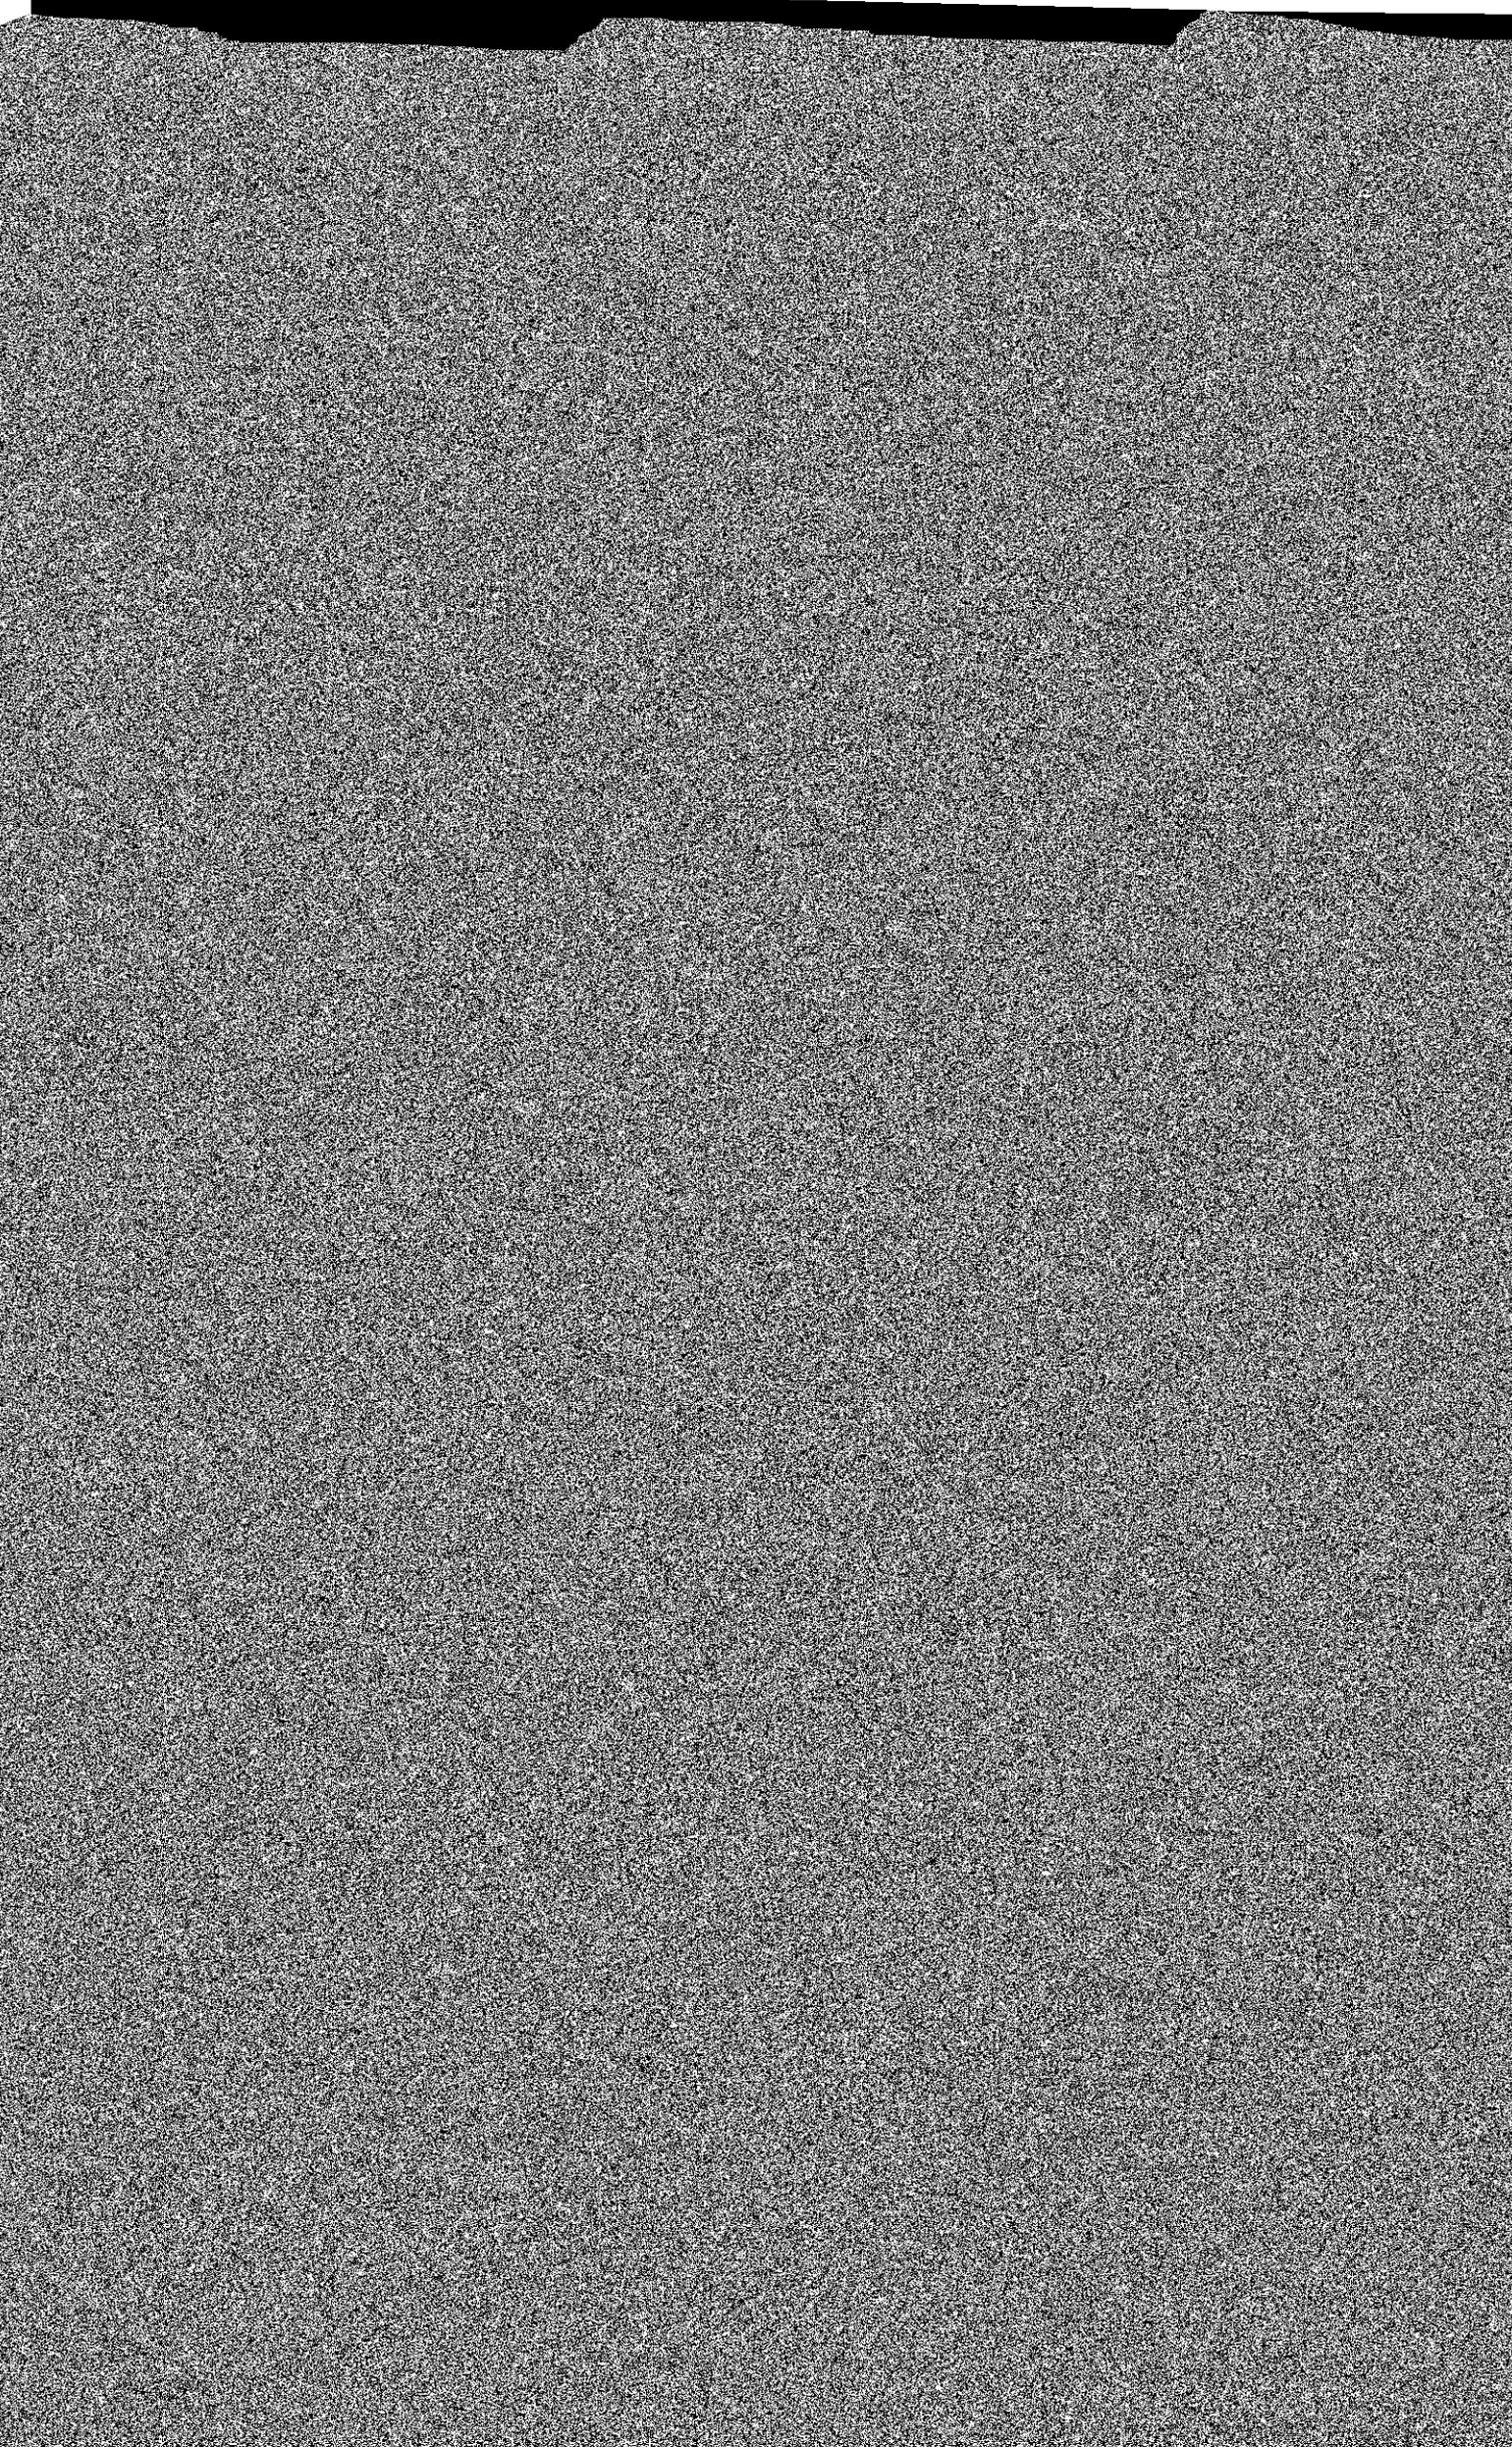

MY DEAR SISTERS—Since my letter to THE FIRM FOUNDATION was so kindly received, and such a hearty invitation extended to write again, I will offer a few thoughts to you on the subject of the dress of Christian women, since brother McGary has requested me to do so. Perhaps I might have chosen some other subject for the present, but there is none that needs attention more than this. The women of the Church of Christ are bringing reproach upon His cause every day, by the expensive, gaudy and ridiculous style in which they adorn(?) themselves. I shall endeavor in this article to show, from the Scriptures, why Christian women should not conform to the disgusting and silly fashions of the day. We often hear the excuse made for unlawful dressing, that it is inconsistent with God's character to suppose that He cares for the way in which we dress, or other such trivial things, if we do our duty otherwise. If this be true, then why did He inspire His chosen apostles to lay down such plain rules for our guidance in this matter? Again, it is just as sinful to violate these commands or rules as it would be to steal, or commit adultery; because, when the four grand initiatory commands have been obeyed that put us into Christ's body or Church, then all others coming after are of equal importance, however trivial they may appear to us. Sin is a violation of the law of Christ. To dress expensively or elaborately is to violate a part of the law; hence it is a sin. But what saith the Scriptures? Paul says (Rom. xii., 23), "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your spirit," etc. Were there not another passage bearing on this subject, this one would answer every objection with those who are anxious to know and do God's will. To be conformed to a thing is to be in harmony with it, to be like it; hence, to be conformed to this world is to follow in the footsteps of the children of the world, forgetting "that we have been purged from our old sins"—that we have "arisen to walk in newness of life." "But be ye transformed," or completely changed, "by the renewing of your spirit." That is, if we (Christians) have formerly loved the ball room, the circus, skating rink, theatre, opera, novel reading, fine dressing, etc., etc., now we should turn our backs on such sinful, unprofitable pleasures and our faces heavenward, having our minds renewed with better and more heavenly things. Next, John says, in his first letter, ii., 15-16: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life, are not of the Father, but of the world." Fine dressing most certainly comes under the head of the "lust of the eye and the pride of life;" hence, is of the world, and not of God.

But hear Peter, who is much more explicit on this subject: First epistle, 33—"Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold or of putting on of apparel," etc. But, says one, "Peter did not mean not to adorn ourselves, but not to let the outward adorning be all, but couple it with the adorning of "the hidden man of the heart." But, to get this meaning from it, we would have to supply the qualifying term only, as, "let not your adorning be only that outward adorning," which is wrong, for Peter expressly says, "let it not be," using no qualifying term whatever. Besides, any sister who has tried to follow the bewildering styles of the day, knows that when she has fulfilled every requirement of the capricious goddess, Fashion, there is precious little time left for the adorning of our minds or hearts. Even the few moments we might snatch, after children are tucked away for the night, for storing our minds with heavenly knowledge, are taken up in rolling the hair in curl-papers or on "crisping pins." Again, any sister who tries thus to dispose of this passage shows her unwillingness to give up the world; is trying to cling to it with one hand and to the cross with the other, but she holds on the world as by the

ner also, (I will) that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety, not with braided hair or gold or pearls or costly array." First, "modest apparel." This does not mean to exclude only such apparel as makes an undue exposure of the person, but all apparel that is calculated to attract the eye and excite the admiration or envy of others. Therefore, when a woman arrays herself in a manner that will do this, she is arrayed immodestly, according to Paul, as well as Webster. "With shamefacedness." This is most decidedly against the wearing of bangs, as this foolish style is vulgarly called, as well as frizzes, Bernhardts waves, and I must not fail to mention the popular Langtry bangs. No one will deny, I presume, that the wearing of bangs gives a bold, impudent expression to the face, bespeaking levity rather than "sobriety." No doubt the silly fashion originated ready obedience? I think not. When such willing obedience is given, it is generally obedience to her fleshly impulses as well as his. If your unbelieving husband should desire you to attend a ball or theatre, would you do so? If not, why dress to please him? Either is a violation of the law, hence they are equally sinful. When we are thus tempted, we should say, as did our Savior to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan. Thou savorest would make us sober and earnest, and teach us to value our precious time and be slow to waste it in decorating our frail bodies, which are as the grass of the field, "which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven." May God help us realize our responsibilities! The humblest of us liveth not to herself! We know not the extent of our influence for good or evil. We know not how many are watching us and being thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever! Precious promise! "But," says one, "where are we to draw the line? What peculiar way must we fashion our dresses?" The apostles have drawn the line. We

ing, or turn one from the world to her duty, I will feel that I have not written in vain.

Think the subject over carefully and prayerfully, sisters. Let not the question be, "How far can I please myself

we are the children of God." (Can we tell how the Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God?" If we cannot, why did the Apostle make use of that language? Take notice, he does not say the Spirit bears witness to our spirits that we are the children of God, as he should say, to suit the popular preaching of the day; but he says with our spirits, a very different idea from to. Then how does the Spirit bear witness with our spirits? Witnesses, in order to testify, must use language, and first, the Spirit says we must believe with all our hearts (that is, without a doubt) that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. Acts 8:37; Matthew baptized or not, and if I have, the Spirit bears witness with my spirit that I am saved from my sins; translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear son; born of water and the Spirit, and consequently a child of God. But I meet some of my neighbors and talk to them about these things, and they tell me they know they have believed in Christ, they have repented of their sins, confessed their Saviour "many a time," and have been baptized and are children of God; but I question them a little closely about the last item (baptism), and ask them when they were baptized, and they reply "away back yonder when I was an infant."

led by the Spirit of God, and we can tell beyond a doubt how they are and were led. Let us go back now to the ninth chapter of Nehemiah, and we find that the prophet, after rehearsing many of the blessings of the Heavenly Father in his dealings with the Jews, says, "Thou gavest also thy good ment, and quote a few of the many passages that might be cited to prove that the Holy Spirit leads by instructing the led.

The Saviour told his Apostles the first time he promised them the Holy Spirit to "take no thought how or what you shall speak: for it shall be

sin, pricked in their heart by Godly sorrow, which sorrow was the result of Godly faith, the faith being produced by Godly or divine testimony, the testimony of the Spirit.] [Being pricked in their heart they cry out "men and brethren what shall we do?" The Spirit gives them the necessary instruction (nothing unnecessary). They comply with the requirements, are made free from sin, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. Now, were they not led by the Spirit? No one who has any respect for the word of the Lord will deny it, and if they continued to be led by it, they landed safely in the haven of eternal rest.

We learn from the declaration of the Apostle that the sons of God are led by the Spirit of God, and we learn both from the Old and New Testa-

He proposes to save, however, in His own way. (It is conceded that repent at one time signifies to sorrow, to lament.) At another, to reform the entire course of being. When, therefore, the Apostle Peter, on Pentecost, commanded those Jews to repent, he did not command them to mourn, lament or bewail for the murder they had committed. They had given indisputable evidence of such a frame of mind, in their anxious inquiry. Peter's command implied a complete change of their purposes, antedating, but coupled with their immersion in the name of Christ for the remission of sins. To these broken hearted and anxious penitent believers, the command to mourn, to sorrow, to feel regret for their conduct would have been mockery. To such a command they could

Our delay in the last two issues has not been our fault; the office where we have our work done has been so crowded with work for the Nineteenth Legislature, that our matter has had to play the mill-boy—wait its turn. We hope to do better in the future. Some of our subscribers are insisting on THE FIRM FOUNDATION becoming a weekly, not more weakly, for we need more strength to oppose the invasion of false brethren that is setting in upon our work, as they have always assailed truth. We will confer with the old heads of the F. F. and decide what we will do about it soon. In the meantime we would like to hear from as many of our subscribers as favor the change.

We, as the people of God, have accomplished wonders in discovering and shedding abroad, far and near, the true light of inspired Christianity, in regard to the all important steps necessary to Scriptural induction into the body of Christ, "Which is the church of the living God, the pillar and support of the truth."

they, are to have the oversight of the spiritual interest, and the Deacons, the temporalities of the church. Where in the New Testament did any brother read any thing of this kind? In which chapter in the New Testament, do you, my brother, read of Elders and Deacons, as such officially? We read of Elders, and we read of Deacons, but not as two classes of officers. Again, I ask, where do we find this classification of spiritual and temporal work in the church? Is there any work to be performed in the church, that is not spiritual, not given as required by the Holy Spirit? This leads us to enquire who constitutes the Eldership, or the executive head of the church?

We answer, the Bishop (or Bishops, as the needs of the Church may require), and the Deacons. The Bishop being the chairman of this board, before whom all the matters of interest set apart to this task, the Holy Spirit has then made them overseers. And henceforth, all are solemnly commanded "to submit themselves as unto God." "For they watch for your souls as they that must give account, etc.

It now becomes the privilege, yea, the indispensable duty of these men, to watch over the flock, in all that pertains to the highest interest and development of the church. But says one, how are we to attain to this full stature of a perfect model of the Apostolic church, seeing that the churches have not the men in them qualified to do this work? I see but one way to approximate this at once. To begin this work, the churches must reverse the prevailing order of calling the young preachers to have the care of the churches—send them to the front to break the brush and bridge the ways for the onward spread of Zion's

Let them know that they have behind them a sanctified host, under the care and tutelage of one who has endured their trials and knows how to sympathise with them. At the same time this old veteran, selects from the brethren those whom he is educating to take the oversight, after him. Thus can the churches be developed and educated up to apostolic stature. Never can the churches be brought up to apostolic manhood, until she learns that preachers and preaching and church going, are not designed to be things and places for mere selfish gratification and personal entertainment.

I hope that thoughts are herein outlined, that may be profitable to those who have Zions good and prosperity at heart. The longer I live and the more I observe, the more patent it becomes to me, that the greatest hinderance in the way of the conversion of sinners is the lack in the churches of a competent membership; until this is remedied, that banner stained with hallowed blood, must trail in the dust.

This paper is becoming too lengthy, hoping that these thoughts may arouse into lively activity, some abler minds and pens, I here close, by subscribing myself your brother in Christ, in search of the truth.

Fun and Frolic.

A real old fashion candy-pulling will be given by the young ladies of the Christian Church, on next Tuesday night in the basement of the church. Admission only 25 cents. Do not fail to attend.—Austin Statesman.

This institution called "the Christian church," at Austin, is a real fun-loving institution. We fear it has about froliced away its days of grace. It has about as many genuine marks left to identify it as the "body of Christ" as the great mother of harlots which graces a neighboring hill. If our Savior had put in an appearance at this "Christian Church," last Tuesday night, with His "scourge of small cords" there would, in all probability, have been another other "overthrowing of tables and pouring out of the changer's money and a driving out" of another set who were "making His Father's house an house of merchandise." These merry-making "young ladies of the Christian Church," and the dancing, amusement-seeking young men, of the same institution, are ever ready for anything new or old that makes for fun and hilarity, while the old men and old women seem more than willing for the young folks to enjoy life, and to lend them a helping hand. How sad it is to behold the inroads the god of this world has made upon the Church! The time has come when the unadulterated gospel of God's Son finds few friends. When Christ returns shall He find faith on the earth? "False apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into ministers of righteousness"—"modern pastors" are doing valiant service for their master—mammon. Satan is filling the pulpits with his ministers, who, "by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple"—and the simple compose the great body of the brotherhood—simple because they have not made use of that which is able to make them wise—that which Paul "commended—the word of God's grace which is able to build us up, and give us an inheritance among all them which are sanctified" if we will only make use of it. But the world has petted, coaxed, and courted the church, till it has charmed her into its treacherous embrace. Yes, she has left her first love and now loves the world with all her heart. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a Lord, found in Luke 6:22. But we are sorry to have to confess that we can not claim it altogether on this principle. We here append a poem, which in many points, portrays the status of the Austin Church, much better than we can. It has gone the rounds of our papers. We hope our progressive brethren will read and weigh it:

WALKING WITH THE WORLD.

The Church and the World walked far apart,
On the changing shore of time:
The World was singing a giddy song,
And the Church a hymn sublime.
"Come, give us your hand," cried the merry
World.

"And walk with me this way."
But the good Church hid her snowy hands,
And solemnly answered, "Nay:
I will not give you my hand at all,
And I will not walk with you;

Peter's Second Key.

This is the apostle to whom were committed the "keys of the kingdom," which kingdom was opened on the day of Pentecost, after the apostles had been endued with power from on high or baptized with the Holy Spirit. We learn from him and the rest of the apostles, in their various sermons, that there are four grand steps to be taken or commands to be obeyed to get into this kingdom.

Inspiration answers through the apostle Peter thus: "Besides, giving all diligence, add to your faith, courage; and to courage, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, love; for if these things be in you and abound, they make you, that you shall neither be barren nor

Have you added knowledge? Are you becoming wise unto salvation, or do you need some one to teach you again? Oh, my brethren, study the Word of God with the view of learning His will. Fling these sectarian newspapers, that are filled up with quack advertisements, missionary reports and sentimental nonsense, to the four winds and read God's word. Meditate upon it by day and by night. For how can we do the will of the Lord, unless we first learn what that will is? And if we comply not with His will, how can we expect to convert the nations of earth? We must show our faith by our works. Having taken the first step in ascending this ladder, let us not rest, but ascend each successive round, viz: courage, knowledge, tempeance, etc., and thus fulfill the law of the Spirit. When we shall have reached the topmost round of this ladder, then we "have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Oh! may the Lord help us all to be faithful to the end.

"Two Corner Stones"

Yesterday, March the 2nd, was a gala day for this the "City of the hills." It was surcharged with a surging, seathing mass of human souls, rampant with the "lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," and bent upon hoisting them to the highest niche of human folly. Old and young, great and small, rich and poor, robust and infirm, virtue and prostitution, black, white, tawny and mixed, saint (?) and sinner, were hugged together, one mighty throng, in the embrace of the "god of this world," and marched with impatient tread, up Congress Avenue, with martial music, streaming banners and booming cannon, to pay homage to a consummating act of "lust, pride, and worldly wisdom." It is not our intention to say, or in the slightest degree insinuate, that this mighty concourse, which beggars description, was not grand and magnificent, viewed from a worldly standpoint. But what we have to say of it is, that those who profess to be the disciples of Christ, that aided or abetted in any way this carnalized outburst and enthusiastic endorsement of the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the "children of disobedience," should bow their heads in shame and penitently plead at the Throne of an outraged God for forgiveness for having rebelled against him and bowed at the shrine of mammon's god. Under this "Corner stone" of the Capitol of Texas, which was laid on Monday, and for which professing Christians spent, in various ways, thousands of dollars of the Lord's cash, was buried three millions of acres of the public domain!

Thus, Christians, (?) who profess to be the special friends of the poor, were led, by mad enthusiasm to clap hands

Hydraulic Theology—To be Tried.

A few years ago the Methodist Manufacturing Company, through one of its very ingenious members put forth a Nichol plated "Grub Ax," which they claimed was the very implement to up-root "Campbellism." But Brother D. Lipscomb took this "ax" through a crucial test, in which the Nichol, (a soft metal) soon wore off and the "ax" was left wholly unfit for use even in the softest "Campbellite" diggings.

The "One Baptism"—What are its Characteristics.

In the pursuit of this inquiry as little extraneous weight as possible should be carried along or allowed to cumber the question. Where there is agreement—"one mind"—it would be a waste of time to dwell. Hence, what is known as the "action" of baptism

There is a storm gathering over the heads of those who recognize sect baptism as valid, that will burst upon them; ere long, and drive them under the shelter of truth or into the arms of the sects. If they could see the letters we read, they would meet the question in honest discussion or prepare to be more liberal towards seetdom.

Many brethren—and not a few among the pioneers—are giving up former positions on this question, and will be heard in defense of truth, when their present timidity wears off a little. We would suggest to that class who have depended, in the past, upon the cry of "hobby!" to quell the truth, that they must now bring up something more potent, to stay the on-gathering tide of pent-up Truth. It is coming, brethren, and you had as well begin preparations to meet it, or get out of the way! "Truth is mighty and will prevail!"

Our articles on the "one baptism" have been held up, because we have been informed that a brother who entertains diverse views is trying to work up sufficient courage to discuss the question with either Bro. Jackson or the writer. Come on brother, choose between us, and come up like a man. You shall be treated fairly and kindly in these columns.

We learn that the "Christian Church" (?) at Austin, is on the eve of, and in a perfect fever of excitement, over a grand bazar, where they are going to merchandise largely in the Lord's house! What spirit is it "working" so industriously in these people, both to will and to do of its good pleasure? It surely must be the spirit of the modern pastor as this effort is to raise funds to pay W. E. Hall—a very modern edition. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name (by the authority) of the Lord Jesus." Will some of these brethren please show us the chapter and verse for selling dolls by his authority?

In the next issue will begin a discussion of the baptismal question, between Brother Gibson and the writer. Brother Gibson is one of our old preachers who has recently moved to Austin. He will be able to make his side of this question a good fight we presume. He affirms that persons may be baptized into Christ before they believe; that baptism is for the remission of sins. Brethren bestir yourselves to circulate the pamphlet so that the strength of this human "plea" may be seen.

That "to believe on the Lord"

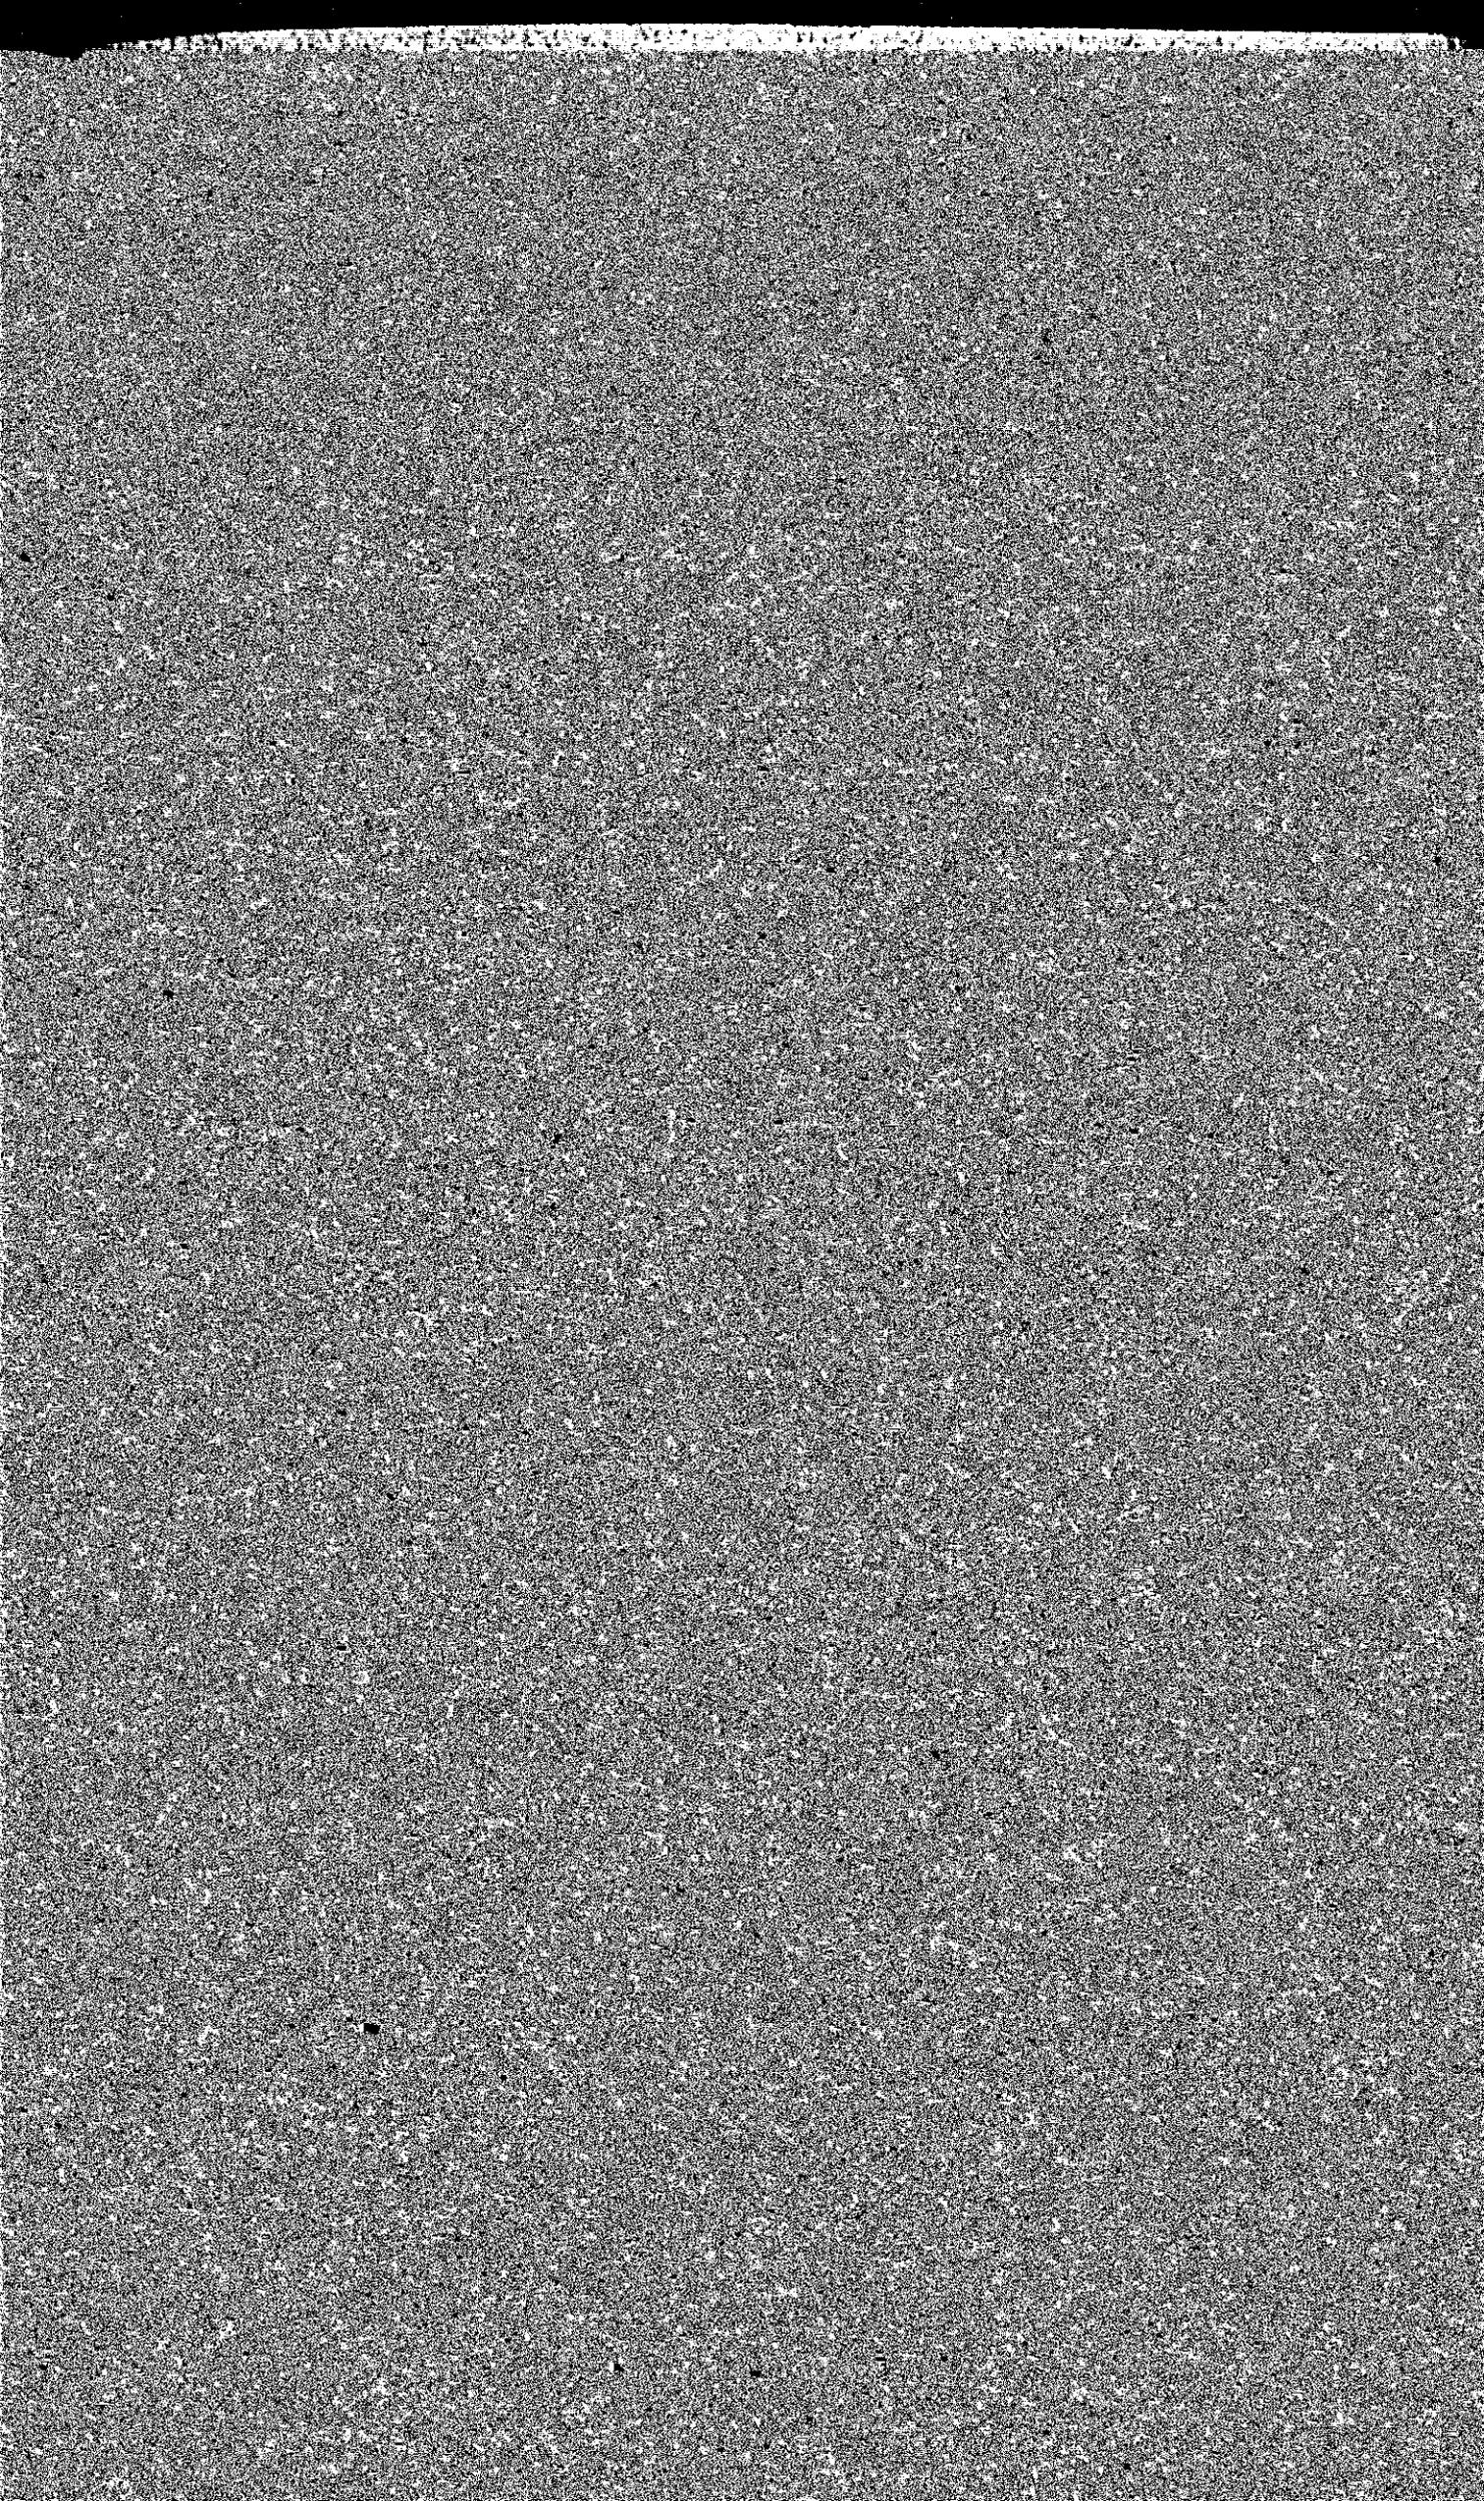

we consider how much importance is attached to ignorance by some of our scribes, we can but exclaim :

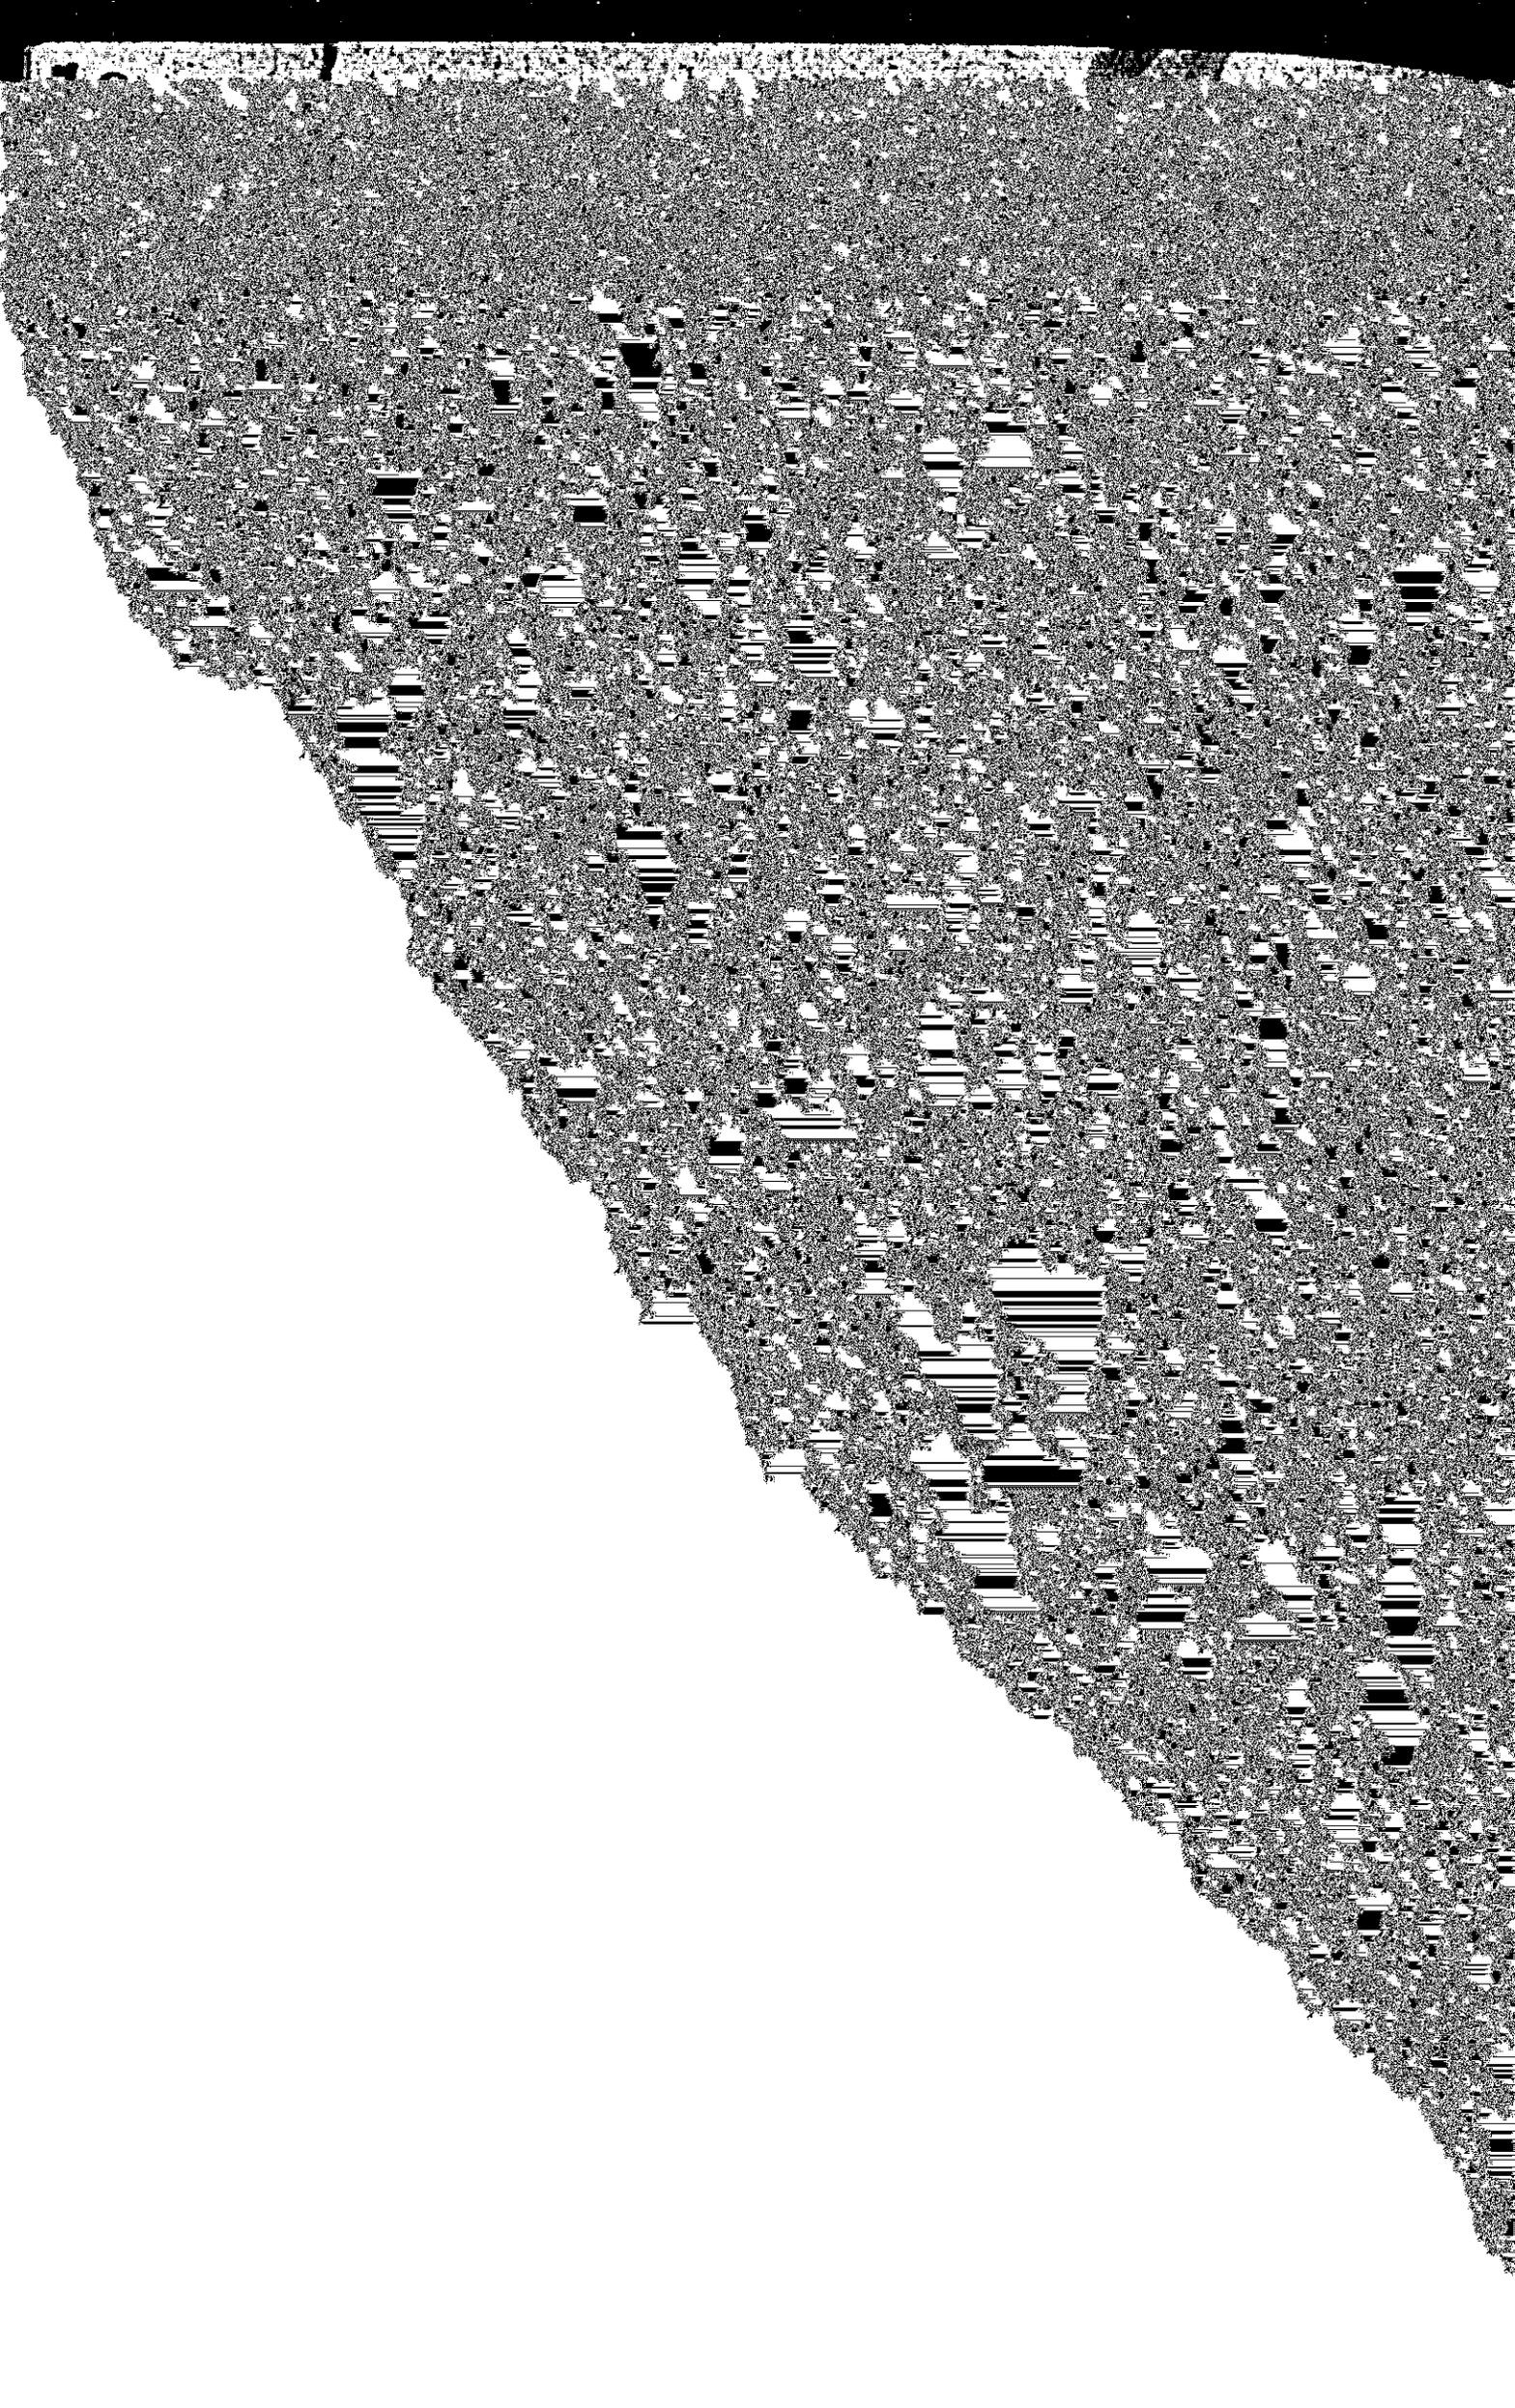

"Hail modest ignorance, thou goal and prize
Thou last, best knowledge of the simply

Paul, however, refers to some that were alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that was in joy or gladness at my withdrawal from the "F. F." This is their privilege; and for their interest in my welfare I feel truly grateful ; nevertheless I think they are mistaken.

The "Firm Foundation" is not "riding a hobby." It will contend earnestly for every item of "the faith once delivered to the saints;" it will incul-

erence to it, the "Theological Pump." I had never seen it, but called it as it had been called to me. If you want to see it, you can do so by addressing its author, "Rev." J. H. Nichol's, and enclosing ten cents. I do not know his address, but suppose you can reach him through the "Southern Methodist Publishing House," at Nashville, Tenn. We have been requested to review this "Pump" through our monthly; but we can see no good to grow out of it in such a review. The only way we would be willing to review, after having examined it, would be to leave out what Mr. Nichols has made his man Friday, "Campbellite" say, and supply such answers, in place, as truth demands. This plan would leave it in a condition for distribution among the sects, where it might accomplish good. It could be gotten up, in this shape for about ten cents per copy. If our brethren still desire us to review it, and will send us the money to pay for it, or agree to, we will do the work, cheerfully. The friends of the "Pump," who alone attach value to it, could not fail to give it a fair reading, as Mr. Nichols has cautiously expressed himself in his own way.

Church Bazaar and Festivals.

Gambling at church bazaars and festivals is almost universally practiced. If you want to be robbed right and left, go to one of them. It has become such an evil, that the United Presbyterian Presbytery, of Aberdeen, Scotland, has declared in unmeasured terms against the "gambling" and "lotteries" of such occasions.—Statesman.

It is rare that we find anything so good as the above in the Statesman and we heartily endorse it. We especially commend it to the consideration of those church members, who so bitterly denounced the writer of a few items, on this subject in our local columns on the 10th instant. Do not their bazaars and festivals indeed convert the church of God into just such a den, as the venders of doves for the sacrifice, made of the holy temple in the days of Christ? Many church members are very anxious to have gambling made a felony, and profess to look with holy horror on gamblers and gambling saloons. Yet we know that at some of these church bazaars and festivals the very worst species of gambling has been carried on, and men have been worse fleeced than in any gambling saloon. We have seen men, induced by the smiles and pleadings of pretty ladies' pay two and three prices for articles they really could not afford to purchase at a fair price. We really think that our church people should reform themselves in this matter before making so much noise about reforming others. We hope the day is not distant when the houses of God will cease to be defiled in this way.—Dispatch.

The above we clipped from the Austin Dispatch. Our remarks, in our March issue, under "Fun and Frolic" wrought a certain element of this frolic society, called the Austin church, up to a state of high dudgeon. One of the proprietors of this apostate band, who is falsely called an elder, and while wrought up to white-heat of anger, took us severely to task for noising abroad their apostasy. What will they do about these remarks of the secular press of the city? See what reproach they are bringing upon the true cause of Christ! How much longer will true lovers of God, bid these degenerate sons and daughters, God speed in their rebellious and apostate course?—for it is bidding them Godspeed, to continue to affiliate with them instead of withdrawing from them as we are commanded to do. Some brethren, seem to think that one can't withdraw from one hundred; but that the command to "withdraw ourselves from every one that walketh disorderly," can only be complied with by the majority, against one, or a minority! With our present convictions, we had as soon affiliate with the Roman church of this city, as with the so-called "Christian church of Austin." As bodies, they are both "harlots." The so-called "Christian church" has long since dethroned the rightful Head, by heaping to themselves teachers. By a majority vote, they have overridden the Kings authority and voted to the rulership, men who are expressly forbidden by Him to be elders! We know it is unpopular to give expression to these ideas, but what is to become of the dearest cause on earth to perishing man, when those who ought to "contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints,"—those who are charged before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, to reprove, rebuke and exhort with long suffering and doctrine," are deterred, through the fear of unpopularity, to do so? Let the Demas' pursue the course that the God of this world bids them; but we intend to look to the true and living God, the God of heaven, for instructions; and though often stumbling, through weaknesses of the flesh, we intend to contribute our mite in defense of the faith, even if it must be done to the wounding of the brotherhood from one end to the other of the land. Brethren, just think of the Austin Statesman, a secular paper, and edited by men who are considered infidels, finding these JUST grounds of reproving those who claim to compose the church of Christ—rather "the Christian church." Is it not time to call a halt? Is it not time to use plain language? A. McG.

Evasion.

Some brother, of McMinnville, Tenn., asked Bro. Lipscomb, "why the people do not understand that baptism is for the remission of sins?" Bro. Lipscomb, in response, treated his readers to two columns of ingenious evasion. We have been requested to review his very lame effort to hide truth; but for the present, we have but to refer all "Advocate" readers, to "Difficulties In Religion Considered," as a most puiant refutation by D. L. of D. L!

It would have taken Bro. Lipscomb but a few words to have answered this query correctly; but it took a long article on his part, to deny the faith once delivered to the Saints, without openly expressing his preference for "Our plea," over God's plea.

However fleshy minded Bro. L. may have become, in reference to this question, he yet knows, very well, that the reason that the people do not understand that baptism is for the remission of sins, is because human creeds instead of God's word, are preached. And these creeds flatly deny that baptism is for the remission of sins, and the people believe the CREEDS. This is the VERY reason, and NO man knows it better than Bro. L. Why then did he not say so? Will he tell his readers?—for it was old "Advocate" readers who asked us to notice it.

In our next issue, we may give this matter further notice. A. McG.

Has Not Come to Time.

Bro. Gibson has not come to time upon his promised^d affirmative agreement on sect baptism. He notified us, in person, that he would be on the ground on time, panoplied in the best coat of mail that could be gotten up by his side of that question. We had reasons for suspecting that we would not only have to meet Bro. G., in this discussion, but the joint strength of himself and an able second. Yet, we felt the strength of our position, and were ANXIOUS for the issue, even against all odds!

We take Bro. Gibson to be a conscientious Christian, and hence we conclude that when he set about for real authority to sustain such an argument, that he found, IT WAS NOT THERE. We would have proceeded, in this issue, on the "one baptism," but while we were waiting and hoping for Bro. Gibson's matter, Bro. Durst's article came to hand, which far more than covers what we could have said.

We commend it to our readers, believing it to be unanswerable. Will some brother, of opposite views, on this question, avail himself of the use of our columns to join issue with Bro. D.? We here, in earnest desire for the prevalence of truth, tender them.

A. McG.

We hear of a certain would-be "pastor" who lives a few railroad stations south of Austin, spitting out his bile and venom very profusely against us and our work. We know that we often fall far short of what is exactly right, and are truly sorry for our weaknesses and short comings. But we neither expect nor wish to pursue such a course as would win the approbation of said supernumerary "pastor." When a man uses the ministry, as a trade, as he would carpentering, restaurant keeping and postoffice keeping, just for the money he can make out of it, we do not expect him to be a very warm friend of the "Firm Foundation." The men who set a price on their preaching, saying: "If you brethren will pay me ten dollars, I will come down and preach for you Saturday night and Sunday," are not the class of men who are giving support to our paper. Such parties may be able to say harder things of us and our work, than we can of them and their work—for filthy lucre—but we assure them that their estimate of us and our work, cannot run much below our estimate of their mammon service. A. McG.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:—I take pleasure in asking you to send a copy of the March number of the "Firm Foundation," to _____, Louisville, Lincoln county, Missouri; enclosed find ten cents to pay for it. I have just written to the above named party, asking him to get you up a club of subscribers, and I think he will do so. On the baptismal question, I have discoursed to him as follows: "To my mind, the baptisms in vogue with the denominations are not Scriptural. There are none of our brethren who will take the position that one can be Scripturally immersed before believing the gospel. Then, if it can be shown that the preaching of remission of sins, through baptism, constitutes part of the gospel, it must be admitted that no one can be Scripturally immersed until they believe that the ordinance of baptism is for the remission of sins. Well, now, from Acts 15: 7, we learn, that when the Apostles came together at Jerusalem, to consider the question of circumcision of the Gentiles, and when Peter spoke, he said: "Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe." There can be no doubt, that Peter referred to the conversion of Cornelius and his house; because we find that God did make choice of Peter to preach to Cornelius and his friends (who were the first Gentiles converted to Christ), and that the choice was made at the very time that Peter refers to. And now, by going back to the account of the preaching to Cornelius, to the time when, according to Peter's statement made afterwards, he preached the word of the gospel; we find from Acts 10: 43, that a part of this word of the gospel was. "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Then this is a part of the word of the gospel; and if it can be shown from this that Peter intended to convey the idea that remission of sins is to be obtained at baptism, it will be seen, that before anyone can be scripturally baptized, they must believe that remission of sins is to be obtained at baptism. We find that the preposition, through, as used in Peter's language means, "by means of." Then, substituting the meaning in the place of the word through, we have it; "To him give all the Prophets witness that BY MEANS of his Name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins." And as proof of the fact, that this change of words does not alter the meaning, we have the words of the Apostle John, in the 12th verse, and 2d chap. of his first Epistle; he says: "These things write I unto you little ones because your sins are forgiven for his Name's sake." Then Cornelius was to receive remission, for Christ's Names sake, or, Peter meant that Cornelius was to receive remission of sins, by means of the Name of Jesus. And we find that Peter said, "To him give all the Prophets witness, etc," and by going back to Joel, one of the prophets referred to, we find that he said, "It shall come to pass in the last days that whosoever shall call on the Name of the Lord shall be saved." Then Cornelius and house were to receive remission of sins, by means of the Name of the Lord, or they were to call on the Name of the Lord. And the question that now comes up, is, at what point of obedience did Peter intend, Cornelius should call on the Name of the Lord? There can be no doubt, that Peter meant to have Cornelius call on the Name of the Lord at the same step of obedience, at which other converts of that day and time, called on the Name, and this, we find from Saul's conversion, was at baptism. Hence, from all this, we infer that when Peter preached, "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his Name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins;" his meaning was, "The Prophets give witness to the fact, that whoever believes in him, shall receive remission of sins at baptism when calling on the Name of the Lord." Then, if this is what Peter meant, this is what he preached, because Peter preached meaning, and not words. And if what Peter preached in that language, is a part of the Word of Gospel, the preaching of remission of sins through baptism, is a part of the Word of the Gospel. And if the Gospel must be believed before baptism, remission of sins through baptism must be preached and must be believed before baptism, and hence, the baptisms in vogue with the denominations are "null and void."

MECHANICAL RELIGION.

In the Gospel Advocate of January 25, 1883, Bro. J. T. Poe, in answer to some queries relative to "rebaptizing baptists," makes use of the following language:—

"If brother Livesy could prove that it is necessary that we should understand all that clusters 'round about and connects itself with baptism, (italics mine) before we can be baptized, then his points are well taken, and then he will find that not only should Baptists be rebaptized, but a large percentage of those who have been baptized directly into the church of Christ. I apprehend that not half who are baptized by our own brethren do so with the express understanding that it is for the remission of sins. They are baptized to obey God. They learn the terms of pardon as given in the great commission, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." They understand that God requires this, and they do it in humble obedience to His command. Let us cite a case by way of illustration: A or B believes on Christ, desires to give himself to the service of God; he looks about to see what he must do. The command stares him in the face, "Repent and be baptized." He is already repenting, he needs only baptism; he applies to the Baptists—knows no other doctrine, is made to relate an experience, not because he wishes to, or really because it is so, but by a series of adroit questions he is made to say many things he had rather not say, and some really not true, perhaps. But he does it, all mechanically (italics mine) because there is no way to reach obedience to the command "be baptized," but by travelling this road. If he falters, and refuses to give satisfactory answers to the queries he is cut off from obedience, and hence he goes on; he is taught that this is right; his purpose is to be baptized, and he can only obtain it thus. He is finally baptized in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. He has honestly and faithfully done his part in the best way he could. He believes on Christ, he repented of sin, and has been immersed, and Jesus said, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," pardoned. But you say he was not baptized for the remission of sins, but to make him a "Baptist." So we might retort that many who join us directly are not baptized for remission of sins, but to make them Campbellites. We believe that everyone immersed into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, believing on Christ and repenting of sin, are pardoned whether they understand all about baptism or not—no matter by whom baptized." The above extract is given for two reasons; one is that the readers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION may have a specimen of that logic which builds "wood, hay and stubble" upon the one foundation, and the other is, that I may examine into this mechanical way of "getting religion," and expose its weakness. Bro. Poe, is a silversmith, and understands the mechanism of a watch, and will tell us that all the parts of this mechanism must not only be perfect in themselves, but set in perfect order, in order to constitute a perfect watch and keep good time. If the balance-wheel is lacking, or the mainspring, or one of the wheels, it disarranges the whole thing, and the end, good time, is not obtained. Now, christianity is a system, a plan, a mechanism, which works for the salvation of man. All of its parts must not only be perfect, but must work in that harmonious order constituted by its divine founder. I say ALL of its parts; it has no superfluities; it needs none; but, to accomplish the purpose for which given or made, it must have ALL the parts. Neither must any addition be made to it, for unskilled workmen often ruin good watches in this way. Brother Poe will certainly acknowledge that christianity has suffered much by additions at the hands of unskilled workmen. I do not refer to members added, but to human doctrines. Brother Poe will admit, doubtless, that the following parts enter into this mechanism, and in the order here stated:

1. Believing with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God. Jo. xx, 21.

2. Repentance "in His name." Luke xxix, 47.

3. Confession of Jesus the Christ. Rom. x, 9, 10; Phil. ii, 10, 11.

4. Baptism for the remission of sins. Act ii, 38, et al.

Can we omit one or more of these parts and still have enough left to obtain the desired end, remission of sins? Baptists omit two of them: confession and baptism, and claim the end without them. In addition to this, they substitute some human machinery in their places, viz: experience, in place of confession, and baptism as a door to church privileges. This "experience" is ingeniously extorted from the candidate; he tells in this experience some things that are not true, but he does it because he has been taught that it is right, he does it mechanically—nevertheless he obeys God—mechanically, too, I suppose—and of course he is pardoned—mechanically. Well, my brother, if a mechanical untruth is necessary in order to obey God, and you say that this was the only way he could reach obedience, why not do evil that good may come? Ro. iii, 8, also 7. "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory why yet am I also judged as a sinner." Will the end justify the means? Remember Nadab and Abihu.

But A or B, you say "honestly and faithfully did his part." How a man can honestly and faithfully tell a mechanical untruth, and by so doing obtain a spiritual blessing, is a mystery, seen into perhaps by the orthodox, and may be good baptist theology, but certain it is that Jesus the Son of God said "ye shall know the truth, (not a mechanical untruth) and the truth shall make you free." Jo. viii, 32.

Bro. Poe, wants some one to prove that we must understand "ALL that clusters round about and connects itself with baptism." That is not the issue; no one has ever claimed that we must understand ALL the blessings clustering around baptism in order to its validity. We do say that a man must understand those things immediately connected with baptism, whether antecedent or consequent, which enter into it as constituent parts or elements. Remission of sins is the design of baptism; is connected with it by divine command, and the hope of the trembling sinner, whose faith is in Christ and His promises, looks for salvation through obedience to the institution commanded for that purpose. Sectarians deny connection between baptism and remission. You say they are honest in this denial; they do as they are taught. So was Eve honest in eating the forbidden fruit. She was deceived and honestly believed a false interpretation of God's command, acted upon her honest belief and was punished; according to modern logic she should have been blessed. Paul was honest and conscientious in his persecution of christians, but not right. If men will honestly, faithfully, and diligently follow a system that substitutes tradition for the word of God, and denies not only the power of His word, but of His ordinances, they are deceived, mistaken, and are not in the kingdom of God. But Baptists submit to baptism "to obey God." Are you sure of this? Obedience to God is to submit to or obey a command coming from Him. Our obedience must be of faith, else it is not perfect.

Faith embraces not only the fact of God's existence and of His authority, but also embraces the promises, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. XI, 6. Baptist baptism has no promise of God connected with it; they say it is for church privileges. He says it is for the remission of sins; they say it is the door into the church; Jesus says "I am the door," they say it declares something done for man already obtained and past; God says it is something done by man in order to reach the divine declaration of remission of sins.

This article however is growing too lengthy, and I close, hoping that Bro. Poe will study this question more, and bring out more clearly all the divine parts or elements of christianity. Pilate asked 1800 years ago, "What is truth?" Jesus tells us "I am the way, the truth, the life." "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "The word is the truth." The diamond embowelled in the earth gives no light; brought forth and relieved of its rubbish it gives forth brilliant rays; so, truth, enveloped and obscured by traditions and commandments of men—human wisdom—gives no light; tear away this human rubbish and the light of knowledge of the glory of God, the truth as it is in Jesus shines into our hearts and its benign rays falling upon fruitful soil produces in us a rich harvest of the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

We must not give heed to Jewish (nor Gentile) fables and commandments of men that turn from the truth." Titus 1, 14. As preachers our work is "to renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." 2 Cor. 4, 2. How then can we approve a system that handles God's word deceitfully; that denies its power, and that evil teach things that turn from the truth and extort from poor trembling sinners anxious to be saved, two or three mechanical untruths in order to serve God?

Is God's word true, or is it not? If it is truth, and we obey it, there is no doubt, no uncertainty. He will accept us. There are grave doubts as to the validity of baptism as taught and practiced by the sects. Earthly wisdom even teaches to take the certain instead of the doubtful, and heavenly wisdom has given the certain in order that in full assurance of faith we may draw near to God, and have strong consolation in the joyous hope of an eternal Home beyond the shores of time.

OBEDIENCE.

[No. 2.]

“And Nahab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which He commanded them not. And there went out fire from the Lord and devoured them, and they died before the Lord.” Lev. x, 1, 2.

The alter of incense stood in the Holy place before the vail, and upon it the priests were to burn sweet incense morning and night. Ex. xxx. 7, 8.

Special directions had been given as to the form and material of this alter, and where it should be placed; Ex. xxx. 1, 6; also as to the composition of the incense; Ex. xxx. 34. A command was given to offer no strange incense, nor any offering upon this alter than that commanded. Ex. xxx, 9.

God in His wisdom had prescribed the worship by which they were to serve Him. Nothing on His part was left undone in order to obedience on mans part. That is, God's word plainly taught who should make the offering; when and where it should be made, and what they should offer, and how it should be done. Every thing connected with the service should be holy, that which was sanctified to God's service. The Alter, the incense, the fire, were all divine appointments. For the “fire upon the alter must be kept continually burning.” Lev. vi, 9, 12. God having so plainly commanded this service, shows us, in the above case, that He will expect a literal compliance with His commands, and that He will not permit the introduction of a foreign element into His worship.

These priests were in the right place, and offered the right thing, incense, but with their offering they mingled “strange fire,” concerning which God had given no command.

Positive commands enjoining certain duties, not only require exact obedience, but necessarily forbid or prohibit the addition or substitution of a foreign element. Every command of God is positive, and points out clearly certain acts to be performed by man. To do these “acts,” as commanded, is obedience; to add to them something of human origin, or to substitute some strange human element in lieu of the divine, is presumption.

God has in these last days, spoken to us by His son. He says “Hear ye Him.” If the word or law spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression was promptly punished, how shall we escape if we refuse to hear Him who speaks to us from heaven of a great salvation? Is not God's word plain and clear, the duties enjoined easy to be complied with? All men are invited to come to Jesus. “Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden.” They must come to the King of Heaven, however, in the manner prescribed. Believing with all their heart, they must repent of their sins, confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and be baptized for the remission of sins. No one, (who believes in God's word) can deny that these four things are required of man; no one can doubt that when, in strict compliance with the word, man has obeyed them, he will enjoy the favor of God. Then, why cling to the doubtful theories preached and practiced by the denominations generally? Do they not substitute strange elements into the service of God when they plead for the abstract operation of the Holy Spirit; use the anxious-seat, pouring, sprinkling, etc? Nadab and Abihu used fire; this was a necessary element to consume the incense, and they might have argued that there is no harm in it; it produces the desired effect, and God has not forbidden it. Just so with modern innovations; church fairs, missionary societies, organs, pastors, etc., are all supported by just such pleas. There is no harm in them; they are not forbidden, the effect is good, and we have been called to liberty. True liberty is that which is secured by good and wholesome laws. The absence of law is license, leading to anarchy and confusion. The divine government, of which Jesus is Head, guarantees liberty, the liberty of the sons of God to all obedient subjects. If our time is occupied in doing the things commanded, we will have no need to plead for liberty in things not forbidden.

The lesson of Nadab and Abihu teaches us that the introduction into the service of God of a strange element, though not forbidden, is presumption. The addition of a human element to a divine ordinance is an insult offered to God, and the action thus performed is not "obedience." One thing was lacking in the offering these priests made, viz: holy fire, and the lack of this element vitiated the offering. Now, I ask of our Methodist friends, if this principle is not applicable to them, inasmuch as they substitute sprinkling, an ordinance of human origin, in the place of immersion, a divine ordinance? Further than this, they mingle "strange fire" with numerous other commands, thus polluting God's ordinances. Our Baptist neighbors, it seems to me, are in the same condition.

While they contend earnestly for the form of baptism, they deny its power, and attach to it "strange" designs, of which God has not spoken, nor did it even enter into His mind. See Jer. vii. 21. Godliness is to do the things required of us by God; anciently there were some who had "the form of godliness, while they denied the power thereof." How is it then with those who submit to the form of baptism, while they deny its power? Is it obedience? Is such an act acceptable to God? But I close with an extract from Caskey's book page 45, relative to all such acts.

"It is my unprejudiced judgment, after a large acquaintance with heathen ceremonies, and with the initiatory rites of human invention, that in neither, nor in all of them together, is there so poor, unmeaning, worthless or pitiful a ceremony as baptism, as now taught and practiced by the sectarian schools, or one that promises so little to the initiated. It does not rise to the dignity of a poor burlesque; a miserable farce, badly gotten up, and worse played. After all the mock solemnity attending its administration, even among the Baptists, who immerse into the awful name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, the baptized person is no wiser, no better, no happier, and has attained to nothing but to be denominated a Baptist. If this is all our Lord intended by this institution, a more signal failure never distinguished any system. Baptists ought to change their teachings on the design of baptism, or ought to quit baptizing, utterly ashamed of their folly. To make the manner essential, while the act itself is non-essential, is too bad."

J. W. J.

Yes, and Bro. Caskey is one of the most ardent advocates for accepting those who have been carried through these farcical processes, without demanding that the law of the Lord be complied with. He is, however, no more inconsistent than others who hold as he does, on this question, only that he has "written a book." Oh! "that our adversaries would all write a book." They can't faithfully and freely present the gospel of God's son and expose false systems of religion, without virtually condemning "our plea" at this point. Which point will Bro. Caskey yield? for they must ever remain glaringly irreconcilable, after he has expended his whole magazine of logic at them. Oh, consistency!

BEING LED BY THE SPIRIT.

We showed, by the infallible teaching of the scriptures in our second article, on being led by the spirit, some of the places where the spirit does and does not lead christians, or the children of God, and in this article we want to take the sinners case under consideration, and show from the same source where the spirit does and does not lead him; but does the spirit lead the sinner? Yes.

How? In the same way he leads the christian, by his instruction; and brethren I feel confident that most of you will agree with me in the positions taken in this article, and I don't expect to stick any closer to the book in this article than I did in the second; that being so, why are we not equally agreed in both? I leave that question to be answered by those who practice those things that the spirit has not left any instruction about.

And now we want to notice first, some of the many places that the spirit never leads a sinner to. The spirit never leads a sinner to a catholic priest to confess to him his sins, and pay him (sometimes) his last hard earned dime to forgive them; now, does it brethren?

But, suppose the scriptures told sinners to go to the priest and confess their sins to him, and pay him their money to forgive them, and they were to go as the scriptures directed, could we not truthfully say that they were led by the spirit? why, yes; but because there are no such instructions on record we therefore conclude that they are not led by the spirit.

We will now come a little nearer home, to a little closer quarters. The spirit never leads sinners to a mourners bench, or flag seat, to pray and be prayed for, in order to the forgiveness of their sins, though it seems that some of our progressives are about ready to adopt Major Penn's flag seat arrangements. We find, however, that sinners go to these places. Now, what leads them there? why, it is the spirit of their false teachers, put forth through their words into the ears of those that are led, and through their ears into their hearts or understandings, and having confidence in their teachers, they are deluded, misled.

It is the same thing that some of our wise scribes and teachers (wise above what is written), call "Sanctified common sense," which sanctified common sense leads them into things no more sanctioned by the Holy Spirit than the confessional, or mourners bench, some of which I mentioned in my last piece.

Oh, brethren, let us turn away from those things unauthorized by the word of the Lord, and be led by the spirit (not a spirit.)

We will now notice briefly where the spirit does lead the sinner, and bring our talk to a close on this subject, hoping that we may have aroused a spirit of investigation on the subject that will prove beneficial to some, at least; and, first that the spirit of God leads sinners to examine the evidence or tes-testimony that our heavenly Father has given in reference to his son, Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, which evidence is found in the first four books of the New Testament, Mathew, Mark, Luke and John, and in the Acts of the Apostles, which is mostly the spirits testimony after the Savior ascended to heaven, and was crowned King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, a fair, impartial and earnest investigation of which will produce or beget faith in their hearts or minds.

Proof: "Ye men of Israel, hear these words." Acts ii, 22. So, then, "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. x, 17. And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written (what for, John?) that you might believe (believe what? Not Catholicism, nor Calvinism, nor Mormonism, nor Campbellism, nor any other isms) that Jesus is the Christ, the son of God, and that believing you might have life through his name." John xx, 30.

The sinner being thus brought to believe in Christ with all his heart (that is, without a doubt) is pricked in his heart by godly sorrow, because it is produced by godly or divine faith, and the faith is godly or divine because the testimony is divine; he is then prepared to repent.

Proof: Now, when they heard this they were pricked in their hearts and said unto Peter and the rest of the Apostles, men and brethren, what shall we do?" Acts ii, 37. "For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death. 2nd Cor. vii, 10.

Thus the spirit leads sinners to repent, to make up their minds to cease to do evil and learn to do well, to quit serving satan and serve the Lord, who loved them and died for them, was buried and rose again, ascended to heaven, and is at the right hand of his Father, having all authority in heaven and earth, is King of Kings and Lord of Lords; and he shed forth the Holy Spirit which the Pentecostians saw and heard Acts ii, 33; and which we ought to hear now, and being thus brought to repentance by the testimony of the spirit which begets faith, and the faith the godly sorrow, the sinner is then prepared to take the next step, which is to confess with his mouth what he believes in his heart, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Acts viii, 37; Matt. xvi, 16; Rom. x, 10; and now he is prepared to take the last step to be baptized, which brings him into Christ, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. Gal. iii, 27. He is baptized by the one spirit into the one church or body of Christ; 1 Cor. xii, 13; evidently by the instruction of the spirit, just as Paul and Barnabas were sent forth by the spirit. See Acts xiii, 1, 4, and the three-thousand on the day of Pentecost were baptized by the instruction of the Holy Spirit, for it was the Holy Spirit they heard, and they were told to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins; they complied, and the same day were added to the church.

Now, as on the day of Pentecost, when sinners believe with all their hearts in Christ as the son of God, and their Savior, are sorry enough for their sins to make up their minds so turn away from them and serve the Lord, confess him before men, and are baptized for the remission of sins, they are inducted into the Kingdom of Christ, are born of water and the spirit, and are by virtue thereof children of God, are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ and they have complied with the conditions of the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which Paul says made him free from the law of sin, and if it made Paul free, it has made all others free, since the law was given on Pentecost, that have been freed, for the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law; Heb. vii, 12; and God is no respecter of persons. Acts x, 34; and they then have the spirit, bearing witness with (not to) their spirit, that they are children of God, and they are then led by the spirit of God into the kingdom of Christ, and if they continue faithful, continue to be led by it, adding to their faith virtue, (or courage) knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, (or love for all) they will have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Now, brethren, let us examine ourselves and see whether or not we have been led, into the kingdom, or church of Christ by the spirit, and whether or not we are walking in the spirit, or within the limits prescribed by the spirit, for Paul says "Walk in the spirit and you shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." Gal. v, 16.

LIBERTY HILL, TEXAS.

LETTER TO BRO. MCGARVEY.

DEAR BRO. MCGARVEY:

I received your letter dated March 21, 1885, a few days since, in reply to mine requesting you to point out any wrong position that I might have taken in an article that I wrote in the January number of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, on "What is the Gospel of Christ?" and one in the February number, on "Being Led by the Spirit."

I was glad that you endorsed the article on "Being Led by the Spirit," and somewhat astonished, or surprised, that you objected to the position taken in the article on "What is the Gospel?" that we must understand the design of baptism in order to be benefitted by it; and more surprised at your illustrations to show that it is not necessary; and yet still more surprised that you did not quote a passage of scripture to prove that it is not necessary, or refer to an instance where the party or parties received the blessing without understanding that it was for the remission of sins, or salvation.

But, perhaps you will say that it was not your duty to do that, as you were not the affirmant; but I quoted the language of Peter on Pentecost, and showed that the design of baptism was as plainly taught as the death, burial, resurrection and ascension of Christ; and that the three thousand understood it to be for the remission of sins; for they gladly received what Peter told them to do after being pricked in their hearts by believing the facts of the gospel. Acts ii, 41.

Paul also understood its design when Ananias went to him and told him to "arise and be baptized, and wash away his sins," (or for the remission of sins) calling on the name of the Lord." Acts xxii, 16. The commission plainly sets it forth, and so do all the scriptures that speak of its design.

Now, Bro. McGarvey, is it necessary that the people understand the action, or as it is usually called, the mode of baptism, in order to acceptable obedience in reference to that institution, or will sprinkling and pouring do as well? Why should it be any more necessary to understand the action than the design, when it is the design that gives it worth?

And again, Bro. McGarvey, why is it that you will (or you would several years ago, and I trust your zeal for the truth has not abated any) almost compass sea and earth to debate with sectarians on the design of baptism, unless it is necessary that the people understand it, or do you go about preaching and debating on subjects that it is not necessary to understand? I had not thought you would spend your time and talent in this way.

But now I will notice your illustrations. You say in your letter, "in regard to the validity of baptism when it is not understood to be for remission of sins. I think you are wrong. My reason for thinking so is brief. It is because God has not made the blessing attached to baptism dependent on our understanding the design of the ordinance. The blessing of eating or taking proper medicine follows, whether we understand it or not. So, if God promised pardon to the penitent believer, who is baptized, the blessing comes whether the sinner expects it or not."

Now, in regard to eating food to nourish the physical man, and in regard to taking medicine to heal the physical man, I grant that your position is true, because there is no law governing in the case; but in regard to the growth and health of the spiritual man, it is different. The food and medicine must be taken according to the directions, and the directions must be understood.

Now, for the proof. The Apostle Paul, speaking of eating and drinking in order to the growth of the spiritual man, says, "Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord; but let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup, for he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. 1 Cor. xi, 27, 29."

We learn from this that some of the Corinthian brethren had eaten and drunk to gluttony and drunkenness, and were thereby not in a condition to discern the Lord's body. To discern means to understand. They did not know what they did, nor what they did it for, nor was it acceptable to the Lord. The Lord had revealed plainly what he wanted done, and what he wanted it done for. See verses 23, 26; but not any plainer than he has his will in regard to baptism, what it is, and what it is to be done for; and Paul further says in regard to the supper, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you;" verse 30.

For what cause? Why, not discerning the Lord's body; and they did not discern it because they were drunk; and I verily believe there are many among us that are weakly and sick, and one of the causes that they are so, is that they did not discern the design of baptism, and they did not discern it because of the bad teaching they had received, the doctrines and commandments of men; and they are not only sick and weak themselves, but they require much of the time and attention of the well ones to nurse them and keep them out of forbidden places when they ought to be engaged otherwise.

Paul also says in the same epistle, "I will pray with the spirit, and I will sing with the spirit and I will sing with the understanding also. 14, 15."

Now, is prayer and singing that is not done with the understanding, acceptable to the Lord?

Now, for the medical illustration. We hear the great physician of souls saying in reference to the Jews, "This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed, lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." Mat. XIII, 15. Mark says "forgive them." IV, 12. Here he gives the prescription, and one item of it is an understanding heart, or mind, and in verse nineteen he says, "When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. That seed of course produced no fruit;" but in the twenty-third verse he says, "But he that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word and understandeth it." All the fruit bearers understand the word. Some bear thirty, some sixty, and some one-hundred fold.

Now, Bro. McGarvey, is not that plain? I know the same great physician in his last prescription for the healing of all nations says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark XVI, 15, 16. Peter, acting under that commission; and speaking as he was guided or directed by the Holy Spirit, preached the gospel of Christ for the first time, on the day of Pentecost; the first time that repentance and remission of sins was ever preached in the name or by the authority of that great physician, the Lord Jesus Christ, three-thousand sin sick souls, who heard and believed the testimony concerning this physician, manifested a desire to put themselves under his treatment, by asking what they should do. The prescription was given them in language so plain that the wayfaring men, though fools, could understand it; they complied with its requisitions, were made free from their sins, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ.

Now, is it not safe to give the same

prescription to the same character of diseased people, and is it not very unsafe, both to the diseased and the muse, (the preacher,) to give any other medicine?

I will keep a copy of this letter and have it published in THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and I would be glad you would reply to it, if you think it worth a reply, and I will have it published also, if you have no objection.

Your brother in Christ,

E. HANSBROUGH.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

EDITOR FIRM FOUNDATION:

Dear Brother:—As I see you are so valiantly waging war against error in the church of God, I desire to call your attention to a most grievous sin, which we must put away from us or fail of God's blessing. It is strange to me that while many of our talented men are spending their God given time and talents for building up plans for carrying the bible into foreign lands. They do not, instead, bestow their care and attention to the building of Israel. The bookless heathen, if he could look over into our camp, might ask "why do they not practice what they preach, or follow the book they are offering to us?" The sin I allude to I shall call divorce and remarriage. Of course I do not think for a moment, of grappling with the terrible social evil that divorce in the world has grown to be thus overturning the whole social fabric and threatening, if it grows much worse, a state almost if not quite, as bad as mormonism. I shall only call attention to the evil as it exists in the church. It is getting quite common for christians of good standing, zealous in the cause, and seemingly trying to live right lives, to leave husband or wife and sue for divorce. Some corrupt judge of Caesar's government gives them "a bill of divorcement," and presto, they are married to a more congenial companion, and brethren and sisters offer congratulations and many wishes for their future happiness! Are the parties to this transaction, as well as the brethren and sisters, ignorant of the fact that God beholds in them adulterers and adulteresses, and that He judges them unworthy to inherit the kingdom of God? 1 Cor. vi, 9.

On studying our Savior's words on this subject, it is plain that his new and purer law permits, for the cause of adultery, the "putting away;" but where does he give permission to marry another? Read Matt. v, 31. It hath been said, whosoever shall put away his wife let him give her a writing of divorcement; 32; but I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery, and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery. Matt. ix, 3, 9; Mark. x, 11. And he saith unto them, whosoever shall put away his wife and marry another, committeth adultery against her. 12. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery. Luke. xvi, 18; 1 Cor. vii, 10, 11; Rom. vii, 2, 3. Please turn to your bibles and read above quotations carefully. The putting away loses the pure from living in bondage to one who is unfaithful to the marriage obligation; but search in vain for permission to be bound to another—only death can give that release. I am aware this is not the generally received view, but to the law the testimony! Oh how many guilty ones there are among us, many ignorant, perhaps, of their true position in God's sight. Is this because our preachers fail to declare the whole counsel of God? Why will they not boldly, yet in meekness and love, teach the disciples on this and every question of life just what the word teaches? There are two kingdoms—let them as earnestly teach the conditions of entrance into the eternal Kingdom as into the church.

Let us hear from you, Bro. McGary.

A BROTHER.

We have not the space this time to go into anything like an exhaustive argument of this question. However, it appears very clear to our mind, that this Bro. is in error. In the language of our Savior, that he quotes, there is an implied right for those who have put away their wives, for the one cause—the exception—to marry again. The rule is that they must not marry, only under this exception; can they marry without infracting the divine law.

The marriage relation is of God's wisdom. It is a great blessing to our race. But, to construe the Savior's language, as this brother has, makes the innocent party to the marriage compact the sufferer. An unfaithful wife or husband, can, by proving recreant to the marriage compact, if this brother's construction of our Savior's language be correct, deprive the other, the faithful party, of the companionship of husband or wife, as the case may be, for life; thus, the guilty party would bring upon the innocent, the penalty of his or her wicked act.

So, we see that this construction of our Savior's language is as revolting to reason as it is contrary to scripture.

This brother, or others who hold with him on this question, may see the teaching that is from above, on this question, by supplying the ellipsis in every passage of scripture where it forbids remarriage, with this exception; "Saving for the cause of fornication."

For instance, let him read 1 Cor. vii, 10, 11, thus: "And unto the married

I command, yet not I, but the Lord, let not the wife depart from her husband (except for the cause of fornication): But, and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, (except for the cause of fornication) and let not the husband put away his wife (except for the cause of fornication)."

So in all places where the scriptures speak on this question. It is only in its own bright light—that light that lighteth every man, if he will let it, that we can see truth.

There is no use in demanding that this exception be expressed every time when the question is treated upon. Such a rule as that demanded would overturn the whole christian system.

When God speaks once plainly, let it stand as immutably as though He had spoken one thousand times.

A. McG.

We will add to what we have already said, in reply to our brother who teaches us so much by his marriage example, that he is mistaken about our "teaching that persons who are married to christ do not obtain the inheritance, unless while the marriage ceremony was being performed they understood that baptism was for the remission of sins." If we are to call the law of induction into Christ's body the marriage ceremony, then we say that we deny that we have ever taught that those who had complied with that ceremony would not get the inheritance:

What we have taught, and expect to continue to teach on this question, is, that those who have complied with a substitute in stead of the real ceremony are in no closer relationship to Christ than if they had never complied with any ceremony.

Take the "ceremony" of Christ, and reject all others, is what we teach. Those who recognize other "ceremonies" are rebels against Christ, however much they may prate about their love for him.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I received the FIRM FOUNDATION some ten days ago. I am much pleased with it, tried to get you some subscribers, but only got one. I send, in this, a postal order for $2, for which please send to the two names.

I also enclose some lines from my wife, who is 76 years old. I am 80 years old next September. I am what is termed, by the retrogrationists, an uncompromising old fogey.

May you live long to do battle for the truth separated from worldly adjuncts, and in the great hereafter hear our Captain say, well done faithful soldier, enter into the joys of the Redeemer.

I am your Brother,

THOS. S. ELSTON.

WOODLAND, CAL.

My brother in Christ, I give you my hand,
In faith and in hope of that better land,
For which we are striving, and earnestly pray,
That others may enter that straight, narrow
way.

The cause of the Savior you earnestly plead
For success in your efforts, I wish you God
speed;

The world with its pleasures are potent to gain;
The hearts of the thoughtless, their allegiance obtain.

But truth, which is mighty, will baffle its foes,
And overcome error, and all who oppose;
The church; as its agent, must rise in her might,
Do battle with falsehood, establish the right.

The times are portentous of evil and sin,
To catch the unwary, the world will begin With pleasing temptations; with parties and bills,
And with them the heart of the youthful enthralls.

And many church members are thus led astray:
They lose their first love, and fall out by the
way;

Bring disgrace and reproach on the cause of the Lord;

Disregard all the precepts contained in His word.

My threescore and sixteen long years I have told;

Have seen very many brought into the fold;
Have seen very many who once bore His name,
Turn back to the world, and put Jesus to shame.

The day has arrived when the friends of the cause
Must burnish their armor and fight for the cross;
Must vanquish its foes, and defend gospel-truth;
Must chide all back-sliders, and save erring youth,

The world and its follies are blinding the eyes
Of those for whom God made His great sacrifice,

The gift of His son, for a perishing race,
To save them and give them in heaven a place.

The scriptures speak plainly, and teach us
God's will,
Which christians must study, and try to fulfill;

"My cause you must honor, and ever defend,
And prove to the world that on me you depend."

The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eye,
The church must ignore, or languish and die,
For fashion and folly belong to the world;
Their friends from the presence of God will be hurled.

May God give you strength, and an increase of days
In his vineyard to labor, and sound forth His praise,

To bring to His fold many wandering sheep,
Determined henceforth His commandments to keep.

And now, my dear brother, I'll bid you adieu,
And pray to our Father your strength to renew;

That when you are called from your labors below,
Your crown you'll receive, heavens joys you will know.

Your sister in hope,

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

Dear Sisters: I purpose talking awhile with you on the subject of lunacy. "Mercy!" says one, "what a strange subject. What ever suggested it?" I am sure, many things of recent occurrence. This is a fearful disease, and its most fruitful sources are the many false religions of the day; but this is not the kind of lunacy I set out to talk about. My theme is lunacy, falsely so-called, produced by the religion of the bible, or true religion, or obedience of the gospel, and a determination to walk in the ways that God hath ordained. For instance, a number of christian women conclude that they want to be actively engaged in doing good, so determine to organize a sewing, or Dorcas society. Each and every sister is solicited to join in with them, and all goes smoothly until a sister comes along who says, "I would like to join you in this work, but I can't find any example for such a society in the New Testament. I see where Dorcas made garments, but not a word is said of her belonging to a society." "Oh!" says one, "you are too particular. You needn't expect to find a rule laid down for everything." "But Paul says the scriptures thoroughly furnish unto all good works." Ah, I see we can't agree. You are a stickler and of course will not endorse our work. "So, this sister, seeing she is a stumbling block, leaves. Now listen to the remarks made on her exit. "Did you ever hear of such a silly idea? New Testament indeed! Next she will be calling for New Testament example for our ice-cream festivals, private theatricals, bazaars, and every other little innocent amusement. Says another, "Why, would you believe it, she asked Bro. B, (the pastor) what he thought of christians wearing silks, jewelry, etc., as if he would dare disapprove; when his wife leads the fashion. "Don't mind what she says," says another, she's crack-brained. I've thought her mind was wrong ever since she lost her husband. Don't you know no sane woman would dress as plainly as she does, in such glaring contrast to everyone else? She's cranky, to say the least, and I would not be a bit surprised any day to hear of her being in the lunatic asylum." And so it goes; each sister more than willing to tell her neighbor that it is reported that sister B--is going crazy. Why? Because she wants to follow New Testament teaching. Thus it is with any brother or brethren desiring scriptural authority for certain practices prevalent in the church. Thus you see, dear sisters, the time has come in the world's history that when a man or woman avows a determination to take the word of God for a guide through life, at once, epithets such as crank, extremists, etc., are hurled at them. It is all right, if one attaches one's self to one of the six hundred societies, claiming to be founded on the bible, since their parlance, "all of them are right;" but, the moment one ignores all these, and claims that a strict adherence to God's word alone will gain heaven, the cry of "crank" is raised, and the cranks bitterest foes are they of his own household. As example, we take the case of a woman who has a large connection by whom the denominations are represented. She has been nourished on the mysteries of sectarianism. She hears the gospel presented in its purity, finds that it is something her reason can grasp, and not the intangible, unreasonable thing she has been taught to regard it. She believes and obeys it, ignoring the various human creeds represented by the various members of her family. She makes God's word a daily study, and the more she reads the more evident it becomes to her mind that her relatives are all wrong, honestly wrong, perhaps, but none the less culpable in God's sight, since the foundation of all knowledge, God's word, is in their possession. She realizes that they are condemned unless they turn from their human creeds to this living fountain, and her heart yearns toward them. She loses no opportunity to remonstrate with them and show them "the true and living way." She urges them on, so earnestly, to "search the Scriptures and see whether these things be so," and not to risk their soul's salvation on any man's word or creed, however talented or learned he may be, since God hath said, "the wisdom of man is foolishness with Him." How do they receive her warnings, think you? Some in derision, some in anger, some in jest, others saying, like Felix, go thy way for this time. At some more convenient season, I will hear thee concerning this matter. When I get tired of dancing and frolicing I will read my bible and see who is right, and join some church. There's plenty of time!" So her exhortations are unheeded, and they begin, among themselves, to deplore this religious mania and express fears that it may lead to something far more serious. As time goes on, and her interest is unabated, they begin to say "her mind is certainly not right." How strangely she talks! No matter what subject you bring up, she works religion in some way, and what could be more tiresome? Religion is very well in its place, but I do not believe in harping on it eternally! She used to be so pleasant, but what a bore she is now. "What," says a disinterested listener, does she say that is so offensive? "Why, she does not hesitate to tell us every one that we are wrong, and bound for destruction. That we are following commandments of men instead of God, and are lost eternally, unless we change." "But doesn't she prove what she says by the bible?" Oh, she brings up some very plausible passages, but they applied to the Jews only. She's constantly harping on using common sense in reading the scriptures and properly dividing the word before we can properly understand it. Why, God never intended us to understand the bible! It is a book of mysteries! She also contends that we must read it, connectedly, as we would any other book, when learned men for centuries have been taking it verse at a time, and preaching it.

Oh, she's the most conceited and self-righteous creature imaginable, and awfully presumptuous! She even went so far as to tell an aged relative, who had been a consistent member of the — church forty years, that no one was in Christ's church who had not been baptized for the remission of sins, when she well knew that this relative had not been baptized for that purpose. Even if she were right about it, it would have been more respectful, at least, and better, any way, to let her gray haired relative alone, and let her die in peace. She is conscientiously wrong, if wrong at all, so God will take the will for the deed.

I have never been baptized. I have been sprinkled. That will do me, and I will get to heaven as quick as she will on her immersion.

"These are not imaginary conversations, dear sisters, but real, almost verbatim, and I only quote them to show how far from the truth the world is, and how important it is that we let our light shine brighter each day, that a few at least, may be won to the truth.

These are true specimens of the remarks to which those who contend for God's ways are subjected, and these contentious ones are the lunatics referred to above. Oh, that there were more such, but alas, they are deplorably scarce! Such are truly hated of men, especially of false brethren and sisters, those who wish to walk hand in hand with the world; but rejoice, ye cranks, inasmuch as you know "the friendship of the world is enmity with God." But it is hard to combat our relatives and friends, and how few of us have courage to do it.

"I agree with you perfectly," says one, "in your views of scripture, but I can't afford to defend it at all, as I make my living sewing, or trimming hats, or keeping boarders, or teaching school, and such sentiments would drive away custom." As much as to say their money is the great desideratum, and if I get that their souls may go to destruction.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" Oh! how unlike grand old Paul, who counted all things but loss for Christ, for whom he suffered the loss of all things; and what base ingratitude to that dear Savior that "loved us and gave Himself for us!" Show me a sister or brother who thus excuses his or her failure to give a reason for the hope of eternal life, and I will show you one who does not believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God! To such, the word is very real and attractive, while heaven, which is to be brought nigh by faith, is very vague and far off, in fact, more a myth than a reality, not worth the striving after. To such I will say, think not to say within yourselves, "I have been born of water and the spirit, and am considered an earnest, zealous christian by every one," ye can justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth the heart.

In the awful day of judgement, you will hear pronounced on you, and all who are ashamed to confess the Savior

before men, the awful sentence, "Depart from me, I never knew you."

But, to those dear, earnest sisters, whose contention for God's way has won for them these unjust appellations, I say, cultivate this crankiness to the utmost. You are in good company, The Jews said of our Savior, "He hath a devil," and his friends said, "He is beside himself." Paul was called mad because he preached the resurrection to wicked kings and governors.

— And, no doubt, the antediluvians said "poor, crazy old creature," as they watched Noah at work on that wonderful ark, and heard him tell of the coming flood. "I don't believe a word he says; but if it is so we will laugh and dance and feast for years yet, and if we see any signs of a flood we have men that can plan and build us much handsomer boats than that; one boat will do as well as another." So it is with the post-diluvians. They scorn to take refuge in God's ark, the church, in which alone salvation is to be found.

They prefer the six hundred man-devised boats, where they can laugh, dance and feast with impunity. And when one comes reasoning with them of "righteousness, temperance and judgement to come," they cry, "you are beside yourself. Reading the bible so much has made you mad." "Rejoice," says the Savior, "when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company and shall reproach you, for the son of man's sake." This is the reward you will get on earth, if we are faithful, but there is a blessed heaven for just such cranks; and sweet will be to you the Savior's welcome, "Well done, good and faithful servants, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

—SARAL—

BRIDGEPORT, ILLINOIS,
APRIL 1, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I shall start next week to LaPort, Indiana. I am going there to preach a year, or perhaps longer. You will therefore send the April number of the FIRM FOUNDATION to me at LaPort, Indiana.

I intend to try to get some subscribers there. I expect to write some articles also for the FOUNDATION.

I should have written already more than I have, but I have not had the opportunity. I greatly admire the spirit and tone of the paper, and hope that it may have a glorious success.

So many of our preachers and editors are seeking popularity with the sects and are afraid to speak the truth, that they have greatly hindered its progress.

Many of our congregations to-day are but little better than the sects, and I don't know but some are even worse. Every one knows, who knows anything, that God has but one plan of salvation. One system of truth, and will accept nothing in opposition to that system.

Many men act as if they had authority to change or modify God's laws and ordinances, and the people follow as if they thought they could.

Let us try to teach the people better. Let us labor to elevate God's word, and debase human creeds. Let us fearlessly defend the right way of the Lord.

If our brethren had done this all the time we would now be far in advance of all sects.

May God bless you and all the true friends of truth.

I remain,

Yours in hope,

L. C. STONE.

A LETTER FROM A BROTHER.

BROTHER MCGARY:

After having read with care three numbers of the FIRM FOUNDATION, I am constrained to write you this, not for publication, but in a private way, to call your attention to the importance of union among the disciples of Christ, and to show you that you are entering a wedge that will, sooner or later, disrupt the brotherhood and destroy the peace of Zion all over the land.

I must say that I admire your pamphlet for its general dealing with what I might call practical christianity. I had been led to believe, before I saw a copy of it, that its teachings were strictly confined to the baptismal controversy.

I find two serious objections to the general tone of your paper, and to these I will now direct my remarks.

1. I object to your general denunciation of what you are pleased to term the "modern pastor." Among these pastors are many good men, men who are as conscientious as you or I. The great bulk of brains and intellect among us is to be found among this class of men.

Many of our illiterate, old foggy preachers, war upon what they call the modern pastor, through the bad spirit of envy and jealousy. I am not classing you among them.

But many of our back-woods preachers look upon our educated preachers with envious eyes. This class of men will rally around your paper because you war against the educated ministry.

Cease this, my brother, and wield your powerful pen against instrumental music in the church, and for missionary work, for an educated ministry, and for the work of the Lord generally. Then your paper will be engaged in a holy work, and will be sustained by the wisest and best brethren throughout the country.

2. I object to your position in reference to baptism. You have been accused of being puffed up, though I do not say so. I am going to try you on this baptism question and see if you are. I am going to make it so plain that unless you are puffed up you can't help seeing your error, and confessing it, if you will calmly weigh it.

Now, we can sometimes teach more by example than in any other way. So I am going to give you an example, and ask you to give due weight to points in it. I shall be brief. I know you can see the points without my going into detail, and this letter is already growing lengthy. I would ask you to publish it, but for its length. My example does not originate with the writer. I believe it owes its origin to Bro. Franklin. Here it is.

Suppose a lady falls in love with a young man who has been courting her. Suppose he is rich, but tells her nothing about his property, but marries her while she supposes him to be poor. Suppose he dies; will she be deprived of the inheritance because she did not know what she was getting when she married him?

The thought is preposterous. And yet, Brother McGary, you teach that persons who are married to Christ do not obtain the inheritance, unless while the marriage ceremony was being performed they understood that baptism was for the remission of sins. Don't you see the point? Now, be candid.

You may publish this example if you desire, and waste your time on it, for it will be a waste of time to try to evade its force against your position.

Whatever course you may pursue, withhold my name, for I would not be pulled into a newspaper controversy for anything. Even if your position in reference to baptism was tenable, you ought not to spend your whole time (as you do) in writing on that question.

Your brother for the whole truth.

We publish this brother's letter in full, but lest he should be drawn into a controversy, at his request we withhold his name. If we are "puffed up", and need treatment for that malady, we can not indulge, even a hope of being benefited by his, designed, curative epistle—unless paradoxes are a sovereign remedy for that complaint.

All careful readers will see, that in the first part of his letter he throws in a compliment for our pamphlet, for its general treatment on practical christianity. And in concluding, he charges us with spending our "whole time" writing on the baptismal question! But we shall not dwell on this discrepancy. We assure him, that we have been "candid" and will be.

We have looked hard, and have failed to "see the point" that his example was intended to make so clear! But we will notice his in its own order. He urges two objections to our work.

1. He does not like our opposition to "modern pastors." Well, we grant that we do not like them much. We love the cause of Christ, for through it we look for deliverance from satan, and for an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, that fadeth not away. Loving His cause forbids our loving the commercial system of the "modern pastor."

Christ's teaching points to the paths of humility, and His life is an example showing how they are to be trodden.

The "modern pastor" prays with high sounding words for humility; preaches at the stars, and reproveth Romanism and Ingersollism, and lords it over God's heritage with high-handed misrule.

He dares not reprove sin in "his charge," lest he should wound his salary! He attires himself in conformity to the laws of fashion as scrupulously as a black leg; talks politics six days in the week, and palliates all forms of sectarianism on the seventh. In short he is a perfect specimen of worldly gentility, except his "long prayers in the synagogue" every seventh day. He teaches, by his daily example, that men and women may live as they list if they will only pray.

Although "charged before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and his kingdom," to "preach the word," the "modern pastor" shirks this responsibility and pours into the "itching ears" of "his charge" soothing balms, concocted of the gist of modern orthodoxy and worldly wisdom.

To preach the word—declare all the counsel of God, would condemn himself as well as those he had taken charge of for filthy lucre—would despoil himself of his salary.

The second objection is to our views of baptism. But before we put his example to the test, we will give a passing notice to other things.

As to education, we do not claim that degree of literary attainment that would entitle us to recognition as an educated man. But we deny, most emphatically, that we make war upon educated men. Again, as to this brother's remarks about uneducated and old foggy brethren rallying around our paper, we might say a great deal, but we will let it pass for what it is worth to him who seeks to besmirch, by low insinuation, that which he can't cope with by fair argument.

We only urge our brethren to "rally"

around God's word, and not around our pamphlet. Well, now to our brother's example:

He takes an example of a perfect marriage to justify an imperfect one. He makes up his victory wholly of assumption. Now, as examples teach so much, and so briefly, we will give him one.

Suppose a young man and lady are in love, and engaged to be married; suppose they send for marriage license; but suppose instead of the party going to the officer authorized to issue the license he writes it out himself, and they are married upon this bogus license. Now suppose the husband dies and leaves an estate, and suppose his brother sets up claim to the estate and goes into court and proves that this wife (?) was married to him on a forged license. Would she, under the law, get his property?

No! Now, my brother, you know she would not. "Can't you see the point?" "Will you be candid?" This is all I have room for on this question at present.

If you are not too averse to a "newspaper controversy"—you can proceed in our columns, with or without a name. We want the truth, but we do not expect to hear from you.

Should any one else, holding your views, desire to go on from where you have left off, we tender them our columns.

A. McG.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I wrote you a card some time ago asking you to continue my paper, and to send the F. F. to ——. I herewith send $1.00 to pay for her paper for six months, and my extension. Bro. Mc. I wish you success in your efforts to influence the brethren to walk by the same rule (not two rules),—all speak the same things, contend for the "one faith." That old two-edged sword is death to all innovations—departures from the "one faith." Were the Savior on earth think you He would sanction any sectarian doctrine. No! No! He would drive out the modern money changers, who sell dolls, candy, tickets and such like, just as He did the vendors of doves, etc. Men fought for their country with carnal weapons for $13.00 per month, underwent the hardships of camp life, but soldiers of King Emanuel must live in ease and style at from $50.00 to $200.00 per month, or they will serve mammon. So many men love "the root of all evil" so well, that I must say to you to cry aloud and spare not.

Your private brother,

C. S. M.

FROM ARCOLA, MISSOURI.

DEAR BROTHER:

I am glad to find a few more yet who are ready and willing to stand for the "faith delivered to the saints," unmixed with the doctrines of men. Some of our preachers are so afraid they will not be popular with everybody, that they have yielded the original grounds of this reformation, and many others are doing worse by trying to carry the whole church with them into sectdom. The latter class are numerous. They say there are as good Christians among the sects as any where. Surely the Bible does not teach this.

This class of our brethren, virtually pronounce the mourners bench, and all modern Baal worship, good work, for they take those who have been made christians (?) by these processes, "shake them in." Go on my dear brother and shake down their rickety and rotten work upon their unhallowed heads. They will hate you for it, but you will be rewarded with a crown of righteousness, and they will hear the awful sentence: "depart from me ye that work iniquity." You have already put the old rotten fabric to tottering, and it is only a question of time, for it to fall. Think of our oldest editors turning to defend the processes of sectarian conversion to shield themselves.

Why don't they come out like men and christians and confess their faults, seen of all candid minds?

Yours for the straight and narrow way,

A SISTER.

ARCOLA, MO.

We have published several letters from different brothers and sisters in this issue. We could fill every issue with just such letters, but heretofore we have not taken the liberty to make such letters public. Some of these published in this issue were not intended for publication, but they are so full of interest to lovers of truth, that we have given them to our readers.

We ask all of our subscribers, both brothers and sisters, to go to work for the paper and double its circulation. Let every subscriber determine to send us a new subscriber this month. This can be done easily. We have some subscribers who average ten per month. Think how little trouble it will be for each of you to send us one, and how much it will help the work.

Now, if we can double our circulation we will change the pamphlet to a weekly paper, about the size of the Texas Christian, and without any rise in price, $1 per annum.

Push the work brethren, and let's follow our compromising papers to the very hearthstones that they are poisoning with an adulterated gospel, and declare all the counsel of God—lets strive together for the faith of the gospel of Christ.

A. MCG.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

Please continue your much esteemed paper, the FIRM FOUNDATION. It is the only paper that can stand. I am over sixty years old. I have been a member of the church forty-five years. You are in the right direction for reformation.

I have read two numbers. Please send me the next number and I will send the pay soon.

Yours in faith,

J. W. SHRYGLEY.

LANDERSVILLE, ALA.

We find that we made the impression on some of our readers, that our contemplated weekly would contain no more matter than four pages of our present pamphlet. If we change to a weekly there will be very little difference in the amount of its matter and the matter of our present monthly. We say this by way of explanation.

Brethren, give "Mechanical Religion" and "Obedience number two" a careful reading. We think that Bro. Jackson has, in these articles, laid the "ax of truth unto the root of the tree" of error, and gone far towards "hewing it down."

Those who are trying to prop the rotten old trunk up, through respect for those who planted it, will soon find that they have to stand from under, or be buried beneath its falling crash. Why not take out your flimsy props, brethren, and let it fall now?

No. 10.

THE EVANGELIST AND HIS WORK.

J. W. JACKSON.

The great object or end to be accomplished in the mission of Jesus to the world, was the salvation of man; not simply "remission of sins," but that great salvation which includes the "adoption of the body," and eternal life. This great salvation was brought to man, and all the means instituted by which it might be enjoyed. The church, with its institutions, are so many means or instrumentalities for the accomplishment of this end—the salvation of man.

It is too often the case that preachers and writers inculcate the idea that the end or design of the gospel is attained "by joining the church." The church is preached as the "ark of safety," and salvation by, or in the church, instead of preaching Christ and salvation by Him.

It is true that the church is an important and a necessary factor in the work of saving man, for it is declared to be the purpose of God "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one (body or church) all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him," and, "that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of His promise in Christ by the Gospel," and that by the church the manifold wisdom of God should be made known.—Eph. 1, 10, and III. 6, 10.

As important however as is the church, other means antedate it in time, if not in importance. Leaving out of this discussion the typical dispensation and the personal work of Jesus in procuring salvation, we call attention to the agents by whom the "gathering in" was to be done, and to the means by which they confirmed to man the great salvation.

God works through agents; in past ages His work was carried on by prophets, and by angels; now He speaks to us by His Son and His Apostles. The latter are agents divinely commissioned to go out into the world with the message of peace and reconciliation.

tion is of grace, and that if we make the preaching of the gospel, or obedience to its commands, necessary to salvation, our salvation then depends upon a fellow creature, and the latter stands in the relation of a mediator between the penitent and God. This sounds well in popular ears, but when brought to the light of God's word, its fallacy is clearly seen.

There is one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. A mediator in order to bring together or reconcile two parties alienated from each other, must have full power or authority to make those conditions or terms by which the parties can be brought into agreement. These conditions when made are equally binding upon the parties. Jesus, as mediator, has this power; He has, on God's part, made certain promises; on man's part, imposed certain things to be done, and has sent His ambassadors forth to make known these things and confirm to man the promises of God by persuading them to compliance with the terms of reconciliation. Jesus began to speak of this great salvation, His Apostles confirmed it to us, God bearing witness to them as divine messengers fully competent to make known the way of life.—Heb. ii, 1, 4.

This agrees with what Paul says—"that in the wisdom of God, after that the world by wisdom knew not God; it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." 1 Cor. i, 21. Jesus had said that He would build on earth a church; He had taught that the seed of the kingdom was the word of God; and that this seed had to be sown in fruitful soil in order to produce fruit. The Apostle's commentary on these teachings is, that the Gospel preached is both the power of God and the wisdom of God, (1 Cor. i, 24.) in saving men and adding them to the church.

This being true, God would make the necessary provision for the preaching of the gospel, the "gathering in" of men and women, and for their edification in the one body when thus brought in. Hence, He gave to the church Apostles, prophets, evangelists, teachers, overseers and deacons. Mark! These were given to the church.

Our essay will be limited to the examination of the evangelist and his work. The primary signification of this word, which occurs but three times in the New Testament, is one who proclaims glad tidings, and in this sense might readily be applied to all who preached or proclaimed the gospel. But the use of it in the New Testament clearly indicates a distinct class of men in the church. This is shown by the distinction drawn.—Eph. iv, 11.

The enumeration of these different classes, given "for the work of the ministry," indicates not only distinct classes of workers in the church, but a distinct work to be done by each. Phillip is spoken of as "the evangelist,"—(Act. xxi, 8,) and Timothy is exhorted to "do the work of an evangelist."—2 Tim. iv, 5.

Phillip, Timothy, Titus and others evidently belonged to that class of men in the church called evangelists; the work to be done by these had become so well known at the time of Paul's letter to Timothy that it is simply referred to as "the work of an evangelist."

The qualifications of the New Testament evangelists are easily known. They were full of wisdom and of Holy Spirit, and had the power to work miracles. They were preachers; this is the primary thought; men who knew the gospel, who could and would proclaim the glad tidings of salvation; and who were moved with compassion for their fellow creatures. In their case as well as in the Apostles, the power to work miracles was but the testimony of God to the world, that these men were sent of God. What they preached and commanded was authoritative, and constituted the work to be done by them as a class.

Some are greatly exercised as to whether the evangelist is an officer in the church or not. The work to be done will certainly define his position in the church, and his relations to it. As to authority, they can claim none by virtue of position; as earthen vessels to whom heavenly treasure is committed, as bearers of the message of peace and reconciliation they plead the authority of Jesus in His official relations to man as Prophet, Priest, King and Judge, and themselves as servants.

It is denied by some that there is now in the church any such class of evangelists as above indicated. This denial is based upon the word, and claims that if the Greek word was translated it would destroy all idea of class. No more than the translation of the word episkopos into plain English, giving us "overseers," which, all admit, points out a very important class in the church.

So the word evangelist translated "proclaimer of glad tidings or preacher of the gospel" still indicates a class of men to whom a particular work is assigned.

Others, looking at the supernatural qualifications of Philip, Timothy and Titus, suppose that these gifts of the Holy Spirit are necessary to and inseparable from the position of evangelist; and that as all these gifts have passed away, there is no longer such a class as evangelist in the church.

The same reasoning will do away with overseers, deacons, and even preachers. The working of miracles was no qualification for preaching the gospel in either the Apostles or Evangelists, nor would such power, if now possessed, be a qualification for preaching. Philip learned the gospel through the preaching and teaching of the Apostles in Jerusalem. Timothy knew the Scriptures from a child, and was taught the gospel by Paul.

To such objectors I would ask: Is the work of an evangelist now necessary? If so, who is to do it? If a class of men now do this work, are we not authorized to call them evangelists? To escape the force of these queries the objector must argue that the work to be done by the evangelist necessarily included the performing of miracles. But this cannot be done, as the working of miracles was confined to no special class in the church. "God distributing His gifts according to His own will." 1 Cor. x, 11; Heb. ii, 2, 5.

What then is the work of an evangelist? Primarily that which is signified by the word—the preaching of the gospel. Here, some would confine the work to preaching the gospel in its elementary principles to the world. But evidently Paul's instructions to Timothy and Titus with regard to their work must be taken into consideration. They were to preach the gospel, set things in order, teach, reprove, rebuke, exhort, and appoint properly qualified overseers and deacons.

Time and growth in the divine life are required for these things, and until a congregation of christians is fully set in order the evangelist is a "ruler" in that congregation. Having called them into the kingdom, he proceeds to teach and train them in the duties to be done by them in order to their growth and to the enjoyment of the divine promises. When they are of themselves enabled to choose scripturally qualified overseers, then they can dispense with an evangelist.

The overseers are then to teach and watch over the flock, as they who shall give account of their souls; but until they arrive at this point the evangelist should remain with them as their teacher and ruler. To do these things the evangelist must have a knowledge of the gospel. He must study the scriptures that he may be a true workman, and must be faithful to the word of God and diligent in every good work. But it is objected: "Timothy and Titus were sent by the Apostle Paul upon their missions, and the work enjoined upon them was a special work, they having received special authority from Paul to do this work for him or in his stead."

Paul's epistles to Timothy and Titus as to the work to be done in the church, and the preaching of the word, are either applicable to proclaimers of the gospel, now, or they are not. If not, they should either be eliminated from the New Testament, or preserved only as literary curiosities. If they are applicable to preachers now, then they may consider that the Lord sends them into a certain field that they may preach the word, set things in order, and by faithful work make full proof of their ministry.

But this brings us to the question, who sends the Evangelist?

The salvation of the world depends upon the gospel. But how can they be saved by a gospel they do not believe; and how can they believe that of which they never heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? So, reasons Paul, and so I hold. The evangelist or preacher must be sent.

In every mission, as recorded in scripture, whether that of Moses, John the immerger, the Twelve, or that of Jesus, we have.

1. The sender.
2. The one sent.
3. The field of operation, and those to whom sent.
4. The work to be done.

We might follow this order and be sure that we are acting scripturally to that degree. But there are those who contend for a mission by self-sent preachers. They deny that a church ever sent out any one on a mission, and claim that every christian has a divine right to go and preach.

Dr. Herndon, in the Christian Quarterly, makes this statement: "Congregations as congregations are nowhere in the New Testament commanded and expected to evangelize, or to send any one to evangelize or to prevent any one from evangelizing." The force of the above statement rests upon the word, "commanded."

By the same reasoning we can get rid of the Lord's day, the Lord's supper, and other things. "Ye are not under law, but under grace." You are not to go as a slave to your duties, driven to them through fear of the penalties annexed to law, but in the spirit of a son, animated by love, obey the Father.

That the congregation (as a congregation) were "expected" to evangelize is, I think, clearly taught. It is stated as a part of the purpose of God that by the church might be known the manifold wisdom of God. The wisdom of God which had been hid for ages was made known to the Apostles by the Holy Spirit, even the hidden wisdom of God which the world did not know; they preached it and taught it, and the church was to be in God's hands the instrument to make known to all principalities and powers His manifold wisdom.

This the church could do in two ways:

1. By works; not only individual purity of life, but their work "as a congregation."

2. By sounding out the word of truth as did the church in Thessalonica.—1 Thes. i, 7; or holding forth the word of life.—Phil. ii, 16.

It is answered, however, that all this can be done individually. Not so; the language is not distributive, and the work must be done by the congregation "as a congregation," just as Paul exhorts the church at Corinth to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord."

The work of the Lord, which He began to do and teach while on earth, was carried on after He ascended on high. The Lord added to the church daily the saved; He worked with and by the Apostles, and for the salvation of man.

The church must carry on the work, always abound in it. As a light-bearer represented by the golden candlestick, it must send the light of the knowledge of the glory of God into the benighted hearts of men, and this is done through the preaching of the gospel.

Such is the title of an article in the Texas Department of the Gospel Advocate, April 1, 1885. The design of the article is to prove that baptism is valid when the person baptized is ignorant of the promise of "remission of sins" connected with the act, provided only that he obeys the act simply from "a love and desire to obey God."

When truth is so clear, so simple, so strong, why choose the doubtful, murky teachings of Babylon? If preachers and editors are "set for the defence" of the gospel of Christ, why will they give aid and comfort to human institutions by defending and upholding their doctrines and practices? Why bring far-fetched suppositions and isolated cases to oppose the truth of Jesus? The article referred to should have been headed "Invalid Baptism."

The baptism commanded by the Lord Jesus, and enforced by apostolic teaching, needs no doctoring; sectarian baptism is the poor invalid that is now being doctored by some preachers and editors.

Stop your futile efforts brethren, the poor thing is sick even unto death; your soothing anodynes are only palliative, not curative, and serve only to embitter the dying agonies of the patient by holding forth to it hopes of peace and security, which are doomed to disappointment.

There is "one baptism."—Eph. iv, 5.

This "one baptism" is immersion in water.—Acts viii, 38, x, 47, 48.

It is by the authority of the Lord Jesus.—Acts ii, 38, x, 48, xix, 5.

The "one baptism" is for the remission of sins.—Mark xvi, 16, Acts ii, 38, Acts xxii, 16.

This "one baptism" will certainly secure to a properly prepared individual the promise of salvation. The necessary preparation is included in the following steps taken, or, as Bro. Poe says, these antecedents:

- 1. Faith. 2. Repentance. 3. Confession with the mouth of the Lord Jesus.

Now, suppose a person complies with the above, will there exist any doubt as to the validity of his baptism?

But, says the brother, "we repeat again that the man who firmly, stoutly goes forward thus, and does what God commands, without knowing all that God has promised to give him in his obedience, is a man of more faith than he who is told of all God's promises."

The one does the work purely from principle, a desire to obey, knowing God will love and bless the obedient, while the other may have a selfish motive to reach the pay or promise.

This is right, to expect the promise, and to labor for it, but if one obeys without this incentive, simply from a love and desire to obey, he is saved as sure as he obeys."

Now, Bro. Poe, did you ever in all your life find an individual who had "a love and desire to obey God" without being moved thereto by faith in the promises of God? Please give us one such case of "obedience."

We are not under law, but under grace. There is no love manifested in law, or in a command. God has shown His love to us by deed, and by the exceeding great and precious promises given to us.—1 Jon iv, 9, 10; 2 Peter i, 4. These promises are made sure to "the heirs of promise" by the oath of God.—Heb. vi, 13, 20. All the promises are in Christ, yea, and amen.—2 Cor. i, 20.

Faith embraces the promises and obeys the command to which they are annexed in order to their enjoyment. "By faith we understand" that the remission of sins is promised in the name of Jesus Christ to all penitent believers who will acknowledge His authority and obey His command; and following the example of Moses, who "had respect unto the recompense of reward," we obey.

Nay, more! We walk exactly in the "steps of that faith our father Abraham had being, yet uncircumcised."—Rom. iv, 12.

"By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out not knowing whither he went." Heb. xi, 8.

This is the faith my brethren we walk in. Paul draws the same contrast here that he does in 2 Cor. v, 7. "For we walk by faith, not by sight." Abraham had no knowledge of that promised place, nor perhaps of the way leading to it, but his faith in the promise of God supplied the motive power that obeyed.

So, now, the sinner is called out of Satan's kingdom; God promises to forgive his sins through Jesus Christ, and make him an heir of "the heavenly country." By faith in God's word when he is thus called to go out into a place which he shall after receive for an inheritance, he obeys, and he goes out not knowing (but believing) whither he goes.

I hope that brethren will cease their efforts to rebuild the things against which they have waged such an unrelenting and successful warfare for so many years past. "Contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." Take the "one baptism" with its antecedents and consequents, and you will never have to seek out supposed cases in order to justify your teaching and practice.

The scriptures furnish us with plain examples, and he who can justify his practice by conformity to them may be sure that he is on the Lord's side.

WAS PAUL A HOBBYIST?

"Hobby:—A subject or plan upon which one is constantly setting off; a favorite and ever recurring theme of discourse, thought or effort; that which occupies one's attention unduly, or to the weariness of others."—Webster.

Paul's "favorite and ever recurring theme of discourse," was the gospel of Christ, of which he was not ashamed. Rom. i, 16. He determined to know nothing else but this gospel. 1 Cor. ii, 2. He was constantly "setting off" on this theme in every place he visited, and some of his hearers, at various times, thought him either a madman or fanatic. See Acts xxvi, 24; 1 Cor. i, 23; 1 Cor. iv, 10; 2 Cor. v, 13, et al.

Paul preached the gospel of Christ to the exclusion of everything else in order that the faith of his hearers might stand in the "wisdom and power of God." Rom. i, 16, 1 Cor. i, 24, and 1 Cor. ii, 2, 5.

He declared that if man or angel should preach any other gospel than that he preached, they should be accursed. Gal. i, 7, 9. He tells us that this gospel must be obeyed, or vengeance will be visited upon us. 2 Thes. i, 7, 9. And after we have believed the gospel of Christ and obeyed it, we must live by it. Gal. ii, 20.

Brethren, let us be as Paul was, full of zeal and courage and love, and preach the gospel of Christ in all its fullness.

Some will call us "hobbyist," "extremist," "fanatics," "bigots," etc. This is to be expected; take Paul's example here as to bonds, afflictions, and all kinds of persecutors. Act xx, 24.

The ministry of the gospel of Christ having been committed to you, see that you renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, do not walk in craftiness, nor handle God's word deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commend yourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. 2 Cor. iv, 1, 7.

THE CHURCH. THE PILLAR AND SUPPORT OF THE TRUTH.

The church of God in a congregational capacity is composed of individuals called out from the world and at work for the Master. The will of our heavenly Father given through His Son, furnishes us with a rule of action. Every member of this body must work for Jesus Christ, the Head, through or in the church, which is His Body.

Now, there have been many institutions of charity and good works established by man. Many brethren have become members of these institutions. The writer joined one in the year 1865, when he merged into manhood. I know whereof I speak, when I say that many brethren are more faithful to the tenets of these institutions of man than they are to the commands of our Savior. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

They are more prompt at their meetings; will travel farther to them; will often encounter the inclement blast of winter; will sit longer and more composedly at their meetings; and give more of their hard earnings to their success than to the Master's cause.

Recently, while in conversation with a brother on this subject, he said, "We do this because the church fails to exemplify what she teaches."

I press the question—upon whose shoulders rests the responsibilities of the failure? Is our Master's rule of work imperfect? Can men furnish a better one than our Savior? Does a neglect of duty in the body of Christ justify the adoption of a system devised by men?

Suppose the poor widows are not looked after by the church; and the orphans are not hunted up and cared for, and the sick and the distressed are not ministered unto, and their sufferings alleviated by the watch-care and attention of the children of God, who above all others should know how to bestow that consolation and comfort designed by the Great Physician of souls?

If, dear brother, we have failed to work by the divine rule, we had better bestir ourselves to action, than run to a human plan to try to remedy the evil. The church should be the greatly coveted asylum for the poor and the oppressed. It would be if we possessed the spirit of our Master.

It was my lot within the last eighteen months to be called upon to assist in depositing the remains of a poor sister in the silent tomb. She lived in the outskirts of a city. In this city there is a congregation of disciples of Christ. I had the burial announced at the regular Lord's day meeting. It was to take place at four, in the evening. When the hour arrived, to my astonishment, not one that heard the announcement was present. A few friends and sorrowing relatives accompanied the corpse to the cemetery. Brethren, that soul was as precious in the sight of God as the richest son or daughter in that proud city. Will you please to remember that Lazarus was comforted, and the rich man was tormented.

But, since then, I accompanied another lifeless body to the tomb. Was he a Christian? He professed to be. He was also a prominent worker in a popular human organization. With pomp and display he was escorted to the city of the dead. Men arrayed in regalia, glistening swords, and badges of mourning, surrounded the brilliant coffin with its rapidly decaying contents. Professed christians and men of the world joined in the responses of ritual and in prayers. This display brought saints and sinner, believer and skeptic, from far and near, and unitedly they sang.

"Hark from the tomb a doleful sound,
Mine ears attend the cry;
Ye living men come view the ground,
Where you must shortly lie."

Perhaps men went away from that spot with the determination to try to gain an entrance into that organization that showed such an interest in a departed brother. The moral is apparent to every thinker. We need greater zeal and stronger faith in God's plan of redemption from sins. How full of excuses we are! I know brethren who do not meet to worship with the children of God, because of the wife's infirmities. I know others who live too far away from the meeting house. These same brethren are promptly at their stations at the regular periods of the assembly of the lodge? Is the health of the good wife any better, my brother? Have you moved any nearer town? Ah! it is summed up "in a nut-shell." You had rather attend these meetings than to meet with your brethren in the worship in the "One Body." You say I like "our fraternity." The members are compelled to see to the wants of the needy. A committee is at once appointed to see to the sick. The widow must be cared for. The orphan must be educated. Who says this must be done? The laws of "our institution" demand it sir.

My dear brother, the laws of "our King" are no less imperative. These things, and more too, are demanded of His subjects. Will you be more obedient to the laws of man than to the laws of King Jesus?

You tell me again that in your order all necessary expenses are met, because there is system in "our finances." Dues must be paid, and as a consequence our treasury is always supplied. Is the law that regulates your finances any more binding than the laws of Christ on that subject? Away with such reasoning!

I am oftentimes surprised and shocked to hear such positions taken by my brethren. I do not abuse these institutions, but, dear brethren, I would labor to exalt the church in your estimation. I appeal to you to work in the body of Christ. I apprehend when this is done, your time, your talent, your charity, your good work, your means, your all, will have been taxed to a sufficient enlargement of your soul to qualify you for an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God.

The Master Overseer has a vineyard in which he intends for you to labor. Let's stand shoulder to shoulder in the contest against sin.

J. S. D.

The very same excuse is rendered by the advocate of "missionary societies." The church will not send the gospel to the heathen, hence the "missionary society" is born to do this work." If the men who claim to be Christians, and who pay into these human societies from ten to twenty dollars per year, would contribute that amount and put forth the same exertion in other ways for the church that they do for these societies the church could do a thousand-fold more good, and God would be glorified where He is now scoffed at.

LIGHT WANTED.

In the Texas Department of the "O. P. G.," March 27, I find a letter from Bro. Young, giving an account of his trip from Burnet to Llano, Mason and Menardville. In a former number of the same paper I notice that Bro. Young had been sent out an evangelist by the Sherman congregation to work in Menard county. Brother Young was located at Burnet, and it is presumed was a member of the Burnet congregation. Is it in accordance with the teaching of the scriptures for a congregation in one section of the country to send a member of a congregation from another section work as an evangelist in a destitute field, and a congregation in still another section to formerly set apart this evangelist for the work by fasting, prayer, and the imposition of hands?

Bro. Young went to Mason to have this done. He says, "I can never forget the deep solemnity of the occasion, and the weighty responsibilities consigned to me." Sherman sends him out and supports him in the work, and Mason consigns to him the weighty responsibilities of the work. Dear brethren is this procedure scriptural?

Would that all destitute fields were supplied with God fearing, earnest workers for the master. God has instituted the way that it is to be done. Is this the way to begin the work?

J. S. D.

No! it is not "Scriptural," but we suppose it "works well" for all parties participating in it. It is only slothful "old fogies" who cling to scriptural ways. Progress calls for "state meetings" and "State boards." You are behind the times, away out there in the back woods of Kimble county, Bro. Durst; you must attend the next state meeting and catch up. I move that Maior Penn and the "boy preacher," Pearson, be declared honorary members of the "State meeting." Now, Bro. McPherson, please don't oppose this move.

DAUBING WITH UNTEMPERED MORTAR.

The Prophet Ezekiel, in chapter XIII, 10, 14, says, "because, even because they have reduced my people, saying, peace, and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar. Say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall; there shall be an overflowing shower, and ye, oh great hailstones shall fall, and a strong wind shall rend it.

Lo, when the wall is fallen shall it not be said unto you, where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it? Therefore, thus saith the Lord God, I will even rend it with a stormy wind, in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to consume it.

So will I bring down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof, and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

I ask the reader to turn to the chapter and read all of it. The lesson that we may learn from this quotation is:

1. It is wrong to cry peace when there is no peace.
2. The true prophets of God will not hold their peace (cease to cry aloud and spare not) while those false prophets, (preachers) builders, are doing this daubing business.

Let it not be forgotten that I am writing for my own brethren, (spiritual Israel). The trouble with some of them is, they have turned their ears away from the truth, (just what is the matter with the Austin church).

I do hope that all true soldiers of the cross (preachers and editors) will not cease to shower down the great hailstones of divine truth upon this mass of untempered mortar until it is annihilated, consumed—too much wood, hay and stubble, "philosophy and vain deceit," being built on the divine foundation.

Brethren, let us not play around the outer court of this pile of sectarian rubbish, (false churches), but let us enter the inner temple, walk up its broad aisles, survey its lofty domes, and, if possible, lay hold of its main pillars and bring down the whole superstructure with a crash.

The Prophet says, in the fourteenth verse, "the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall." The Prophet says, God will do it. How will he do it? I answer through his word. Paul said the time would come when they (that is, his disciples), will not endure sound doctrine, and that time is now.

The Austin church won't endure it, and many others that I know of, but let them chafe if they want to, notwithstanding. Paul says, "preach the word."

Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? Yes, brethren, if we will preach the word it will burn up this wood, hay and stubble, "the modern pastor, missionary societies, sect baptism," and such like.

God's word is like a hammer that breaks in pieces, therefore, let us use the sledge hammer of divine truth on these sectarian idols that we may break them in pieces, and then build upon the divine foundation gold, silver, and precious stones, to God only wise be glory, through Jesus Christ forever.

A. MCGARY.

DEAR BROTHER: Please answer the following:

1. Is it right for an Elder to have or allow a play party at his house?
2. Does it accord with the teaching of the word of God for another Elder to play the violin at such a party for the amusement of those assembled?

3. Is an Elder justifiable, with his son, to meet with those without the body of Christ with Fiddle and Accordion, to practise in order to give an entertainment for the purpose of raising money to buy an organ?

Vox.

We answer:

1. That it does not seem to us to comport with christian character for any member of Christ's body to have at his own house, or participate in at the house of another, what we understand to be meant by "a play party. These parties never tend towards spiritual improvement, but are actuated and vivified by a spirit of hilarity that never fails to mark them as the "works of the flesh." See Gal. v, 19, 22. And "they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit."

We think that at one of these "play parties" would be an uncomfortable place for Christ's disciples to be found when He returns to the earth. We dare say that none of them would be pleased to know that He would find them at such a place. Why, then, attend them? We cannot keep anything secret from God. Open unto Him are all of our actions.

2. We do not consider playing the Violin at such places any worse than taking any other part in such giddy and frivolous merry-making entertainments. Christians should abound in the work of the Lord. Those who go to and take part in these worldly amusements, if they do not lose all interest in church work, lose their influence upon others for good, and hence, are become unprofitable servants.

When a christian begins fiddling for parties, if he is not in the devils service it looks very much like he is trying to be. There is no more harm or sin in a fiddle than in any other inanimate thing, but the harm is to be found in the taste of christians for the things of the world—"the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life which are not of the Father, but of the world." "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

3. We answer, that this would look like "killing two birds with one stone" for the devil. Fiddling and frolicing is no part of the "work of the Lord;" then it must be the work of the devil, since there are but the two sources.

Then, again, any work that has for its end the putting of an organ in the congregation of the Lord, is bound to be the work of the adversary! An organ brought in the church always brings discord; hence, no one but a servant of the devil would do such work. It adds to what God has appointed. See Col. iii, 16, 17.

Persons may innocently do this work, but that does not make it any more the work of the Lord, nor any less the work of the devil; neither does it render the consequences less hurtful.

LAPORT, IND., APRIL, 24, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I have just entered a new field of labor. I am located in the city of LaPort, a city of 8000 inhabitants. The city is almost wholly given to idolatry, or sectism, which is no better. There are a few, however, who endeavor to worship in the spirit and truth. For the sake of that few, and at their request, I have come here to try to establish true christianity.

There is a congregation here of the Progressionists, as they are sometimes called. (They call themselves Christians). I expect more opposition from them than from the other sects.

When persons who know the truth purposely depart from it they become much more obstinate; spiteful and perverse than those who never knew the truth. With them it is a willful abandonment of the truth, and it opens the way for the ingress of all manner of evil and wickedness into the heart.

These broad gaugers are seeking the honor of the world, the honor of men, and hence they try to please all. Paul says, "for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."—Gal. i, 10.

It seems to me very strange that any person should be willing to displease God to please men. It must be an offence to God for one to acknowledge falsehood to be truth; or that any one may believe and practice falsehood, and yet be acceptable to God. But such is the position of all those who admit that among all sects there are many good christians.

What a monstrous idea! Each sect has its creed. Each creed differs from every other creed. As they all differ the one from the other, no two of them can be true. And if one be true all the others must of necessity be false. Then, all those who are governed by those false creeds must be offensive to God, unless God takes as much delight in falsehood as in truth.

But, each party says, my creed is like the bible. This is false, for if each creed was like the bible the creeds would be alike, which is not true. But, suppose that we admit that all the creeds are like the bible, what then?

Why, if they are all like the bible, then surely the bible would answer in their stead. If they are not like the bible they are false. If they are false, they are sinful. If they are sinful, then all who are governed by them are living under sin. If living under sin, they are not acceptable to God. If not acceptable to God, we cannot be acceptable to God if we bid them God speed by accepting them as christians, and engaging in their worship, as many of our people, and even preachers, do.

With some who claim to be christians it appears to be a favorite idea that all religious parties should affiliate and reconize each other as christians. But if we were to do this, would we be a peculiar people? Would this be loyalty to Christ to admit that all religions are pure and as good as His?

If we do this, do we not admit that all the systems of religion extant are of God; or else that any system, though man-made, is as good as God's system? Such a course as the above is degrading the authority of God, and tends to lead the people to disregard the bible, and to ignore its teaching.

The man who will attempt to preach or write, and ignore the difference between the church and the various denominations, and who will leave the impression on the minds of the people that it makes no particular difference what one believes or teaches, so they are sincere, is not a safe guide for the people.

He is either too ignorant, or too dishonest to teach. God is one, the truth is one, the faith is one, the church is one. There is one body and one spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one immersion, one God and Father of all.

I am glad that you and many others are earnestly contending for the faith that was once delivered to the saints. Let us hold fast to the form of sound words. Let us vigorously wield the sword of the spirit until the hosts of false teachers are vanquished.

I remain, yours for the defense of the truth,

I. C. STONE.

"SIGNS."

We have received a letter from a brother of this State, calling our attention to some positions of a friend of ours, who once claimed to be of us, but who went out from us that it might be made manifest that he was not of us.

This brother writes that our friend says that we repudiate God's word, only so much of it as subserves our purpose in the propagation of "Alexander Campbell's plea,"

He says that we use part of the Savior's language in His commission, as given by Mark, and throw the balance away. He claims that the signs which our Savior said should "follow them that believe," extends to our time, and that the only reason that these signs and wonders are not being manifested now, is because we do not believe—have not faith.

As to our friend's charge that only so much of God's word as will serve the purpose of defending "Alexander Campbell's plea"—"our plea"—is used by us, we are sorry to have to agree that it is true with a large and popular element of our brethren. They are sacrificing much of the holy language of God's Apostles on the altar of "our plea."

But when we come to this friend's position, that the promise of "these signs" extends to our time, we protest against it as being wholly without a shadow of authority.

When he says that the reason these signs are not manifested now is because we have not the faith, we will agree with him, under proper restrictions or limitations.

Faith comes by hearing the word of God (or reading it) in its proper divisions. Out of its proper divisions God's word is made into a confused mass of jargon. This is the way our friend uses it. His failure to comply with Paul's injunction, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," has led him "into the ditch," and he is crying out for a sign! Poor benighted creature. He "needeth to be ashamed," because he does not "rightly divide the word of truth." Yes, the reason we do not look for these signs today is because we have not the faith. The reason we have not the faith, is because when we study God's words in its proper divisions—from which faith comes, we see that these signs passed away with those men who gave us the word.

While these God-sent men were preparing the terms of the new and better covenant, in which, "according to God's divine power, he has given to us all things that pertain unto life and Godliness," these signs were with them to be used themselves, or imparted to others, as the circumstances demanded.

A man who will divest himself of the bias and prejudice of his early training—empty himself of himself—and with an honest heart (for in a dishonest heart truth will not take root,) take the New Testament as the instruction of God, with the sole purpose of learning what it teaches, and determine to subject his thoughts and vain imaginations to its teaching, can not fail to see that those "signs" were an actual necessity for that age—the age in which the New Testament was being made—and that since the “perfect law of liberty” has been completed and furnished to the world, that necessity for “signs” has ceased to exist, and hence these “signs” have ceased to follow the believers.

Where and when there was a necessity, God furnished the “signs;” When the necessity ceased to exist, He ceased to give the “signs.” It is only the idle curiosity of a wicked and adulterous people that clamor for a “sign.”

It is the very worst phase of rebellion to “demand a sign,” or anything more than God’s word. God has left all such rebels without excuse, by furnishing all of the evidence that reason could ask.

About fifteen hundred years before the babe of the manger was born, God separated the seed of Abraham from all other peoples of earth by a partition wall—the law of Moses. He became the God of these people for the good of the world. Through them He manifested his wisdom and power to the bystanding world and to unborn generations. When he separated these people and became their God, it was as if He had said to all other peoples, born and unborn, “All hail! I am going to tell the fortunes of this people that the world may know that I, God, have spoken.”

Through them He promised the Christ; told of whom (a virgin) he should be born, and where. He said, “then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing.”

His Son, the Christ, did come at the time, the place, and of the virgin, as He had said. When He came, He did open the eyes of many blind, loosed the tongue of the dumb, and caused the lame to leap for joy. In short, this Jesus was accompanied with such miracle working power as to compel right reason to recognize His God-hood.

Those who rejected Him as Christ, did so from prejudiced blindness, or a dishonest heart, and not because He failed to give signs, or work enough miracles.

If He had not worked miracles among the people, they and we would have been armed with some excuse for rejecting Him as the Christ of God.

He said to a caviling multitude: “If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. There is another that beareth witness of me. Ye sent unto John, and he bears witness unto the truth. * * * He was a burning and a shining light, and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.

But I have greater witness than that of John; for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me. * * *

If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in Him. But Christ left nothing undone that reason could demand.

And, when He had done all His work

even awaking out of the deep sleep of the tomb, to verify His word and show forth the power of Him whose will He came to do, He ascended to His Throne at the right hand of His Father, and from that center of power, sent to His chosen witnesses a promised Spirit, by which they were led into all truth, that God desired the world to have, and by which they were given "Signs," and the power of transferring them to other believers, as they might see a necessity.

The mission of the apostles was to do Christ's will as He had done His Fathers. As He needed this power to exemplify or to attest His claim of having come from the Father, so they needed it to show that they were sent and authorized and empowered of Him.

Now, we have four books, Mathew, Mark, Luke and John, telling us of Christ's birth, life and wonderful and beneficent works. These books also tell us of His choosing certain men to "go and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe," etc, etc.

We also have a book telling us that they did "go." It also tells us that these signs did follow them and certain believers. If a man believes that these men went as directed, and that Christ fulfilled his promise to them, we need only to ask him to go with us to the record of their labor, under that commission, and in the light of that record, and in the spirit of honest inquiry, see how Christ's language is to be understood when He said these signs shall follow them that believe." For just as these signs "followed," as taught us in that record, is just as Christ must be understood upon this point.

If these signs were to follow immediately upon belief—that is without any sort of intervention, then we shall expect the the record to show that they did; and if they were to follow mediately—that is through some intervening medium, we shall expect that to be shown.

Now, what does the record show? In the first preaching done under that commission, we see that about three thousand believed; but nothing is said as to how they received these signs, whether immediately or mediately.

But we have an account of Philip preachig in Samaria; and when they believed his preaching they were baptized, both men and women. Then Simon, the sorcerer, believed, and when he was baptized he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done."

According to our friend's theory, Simon, instead of wondering, ought to have been working these miracles himself, and so ought the other men and women who had not only "believed," but had been baptized.

But we see that when John and Peter came down from Jerusalem and laid their hands on them, they received the Holy Spirit; who believes that they were able to work miracles before this? and yet they "believed." So the Savior's language must be studied in the light of subsequent events.

Our friend says, that only faith is necessary to a possession of this miracle working power. We see, in the record of the above, that he is mistaken. Again, Paul, in writing to the Roman brethren, says: I long to see you; that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end that you may be established."

Our friend would say there was no use in Paul's contemplated visit to them. Why? Because Paul had just said of them, "I thank God, through Jesus Christ, for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world."

Paul did not write under the hallucinating influences that our friend does. He knew that for them to possess these powers or signs, that hands must be laid upon them. Then in the light of God's word, why are not those signs with us to day?

The answer is found when we find why they were not with these Roman brethren when the apostle wrote his letter.

Paul has not made a journey to us. But we have what they did not, and "it is able to build us up in the most holy faith, and give us an inheritance among all them that are sanctified" the word of Christ, telling his chosen preachers to go and preach the gospel that should save all nations. And, thanks to God, while we have not their "signs," we have that gospel in its perfectness, and it is able to make us wise unto salvation.

The man who does not feel armed and equipped for the conflict with spiritual wickedness, with the word of God, the sword of the spirit, but clamors for "signs," would bring the apostles to the death of martyrdom and Christ upon the cross a second time.

Oh, how thick must be the veil that obscures from an honest heart the light that is so clear, and that would so effectually hush the cry for a "sign!"

In the day when our primitive brethren had the New Testament in earthen vessels, and workers of miracles, they were preparing for the world a perfect system, and Paul said that, "when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

They were God's means or instruments working by parts to make the perfect. God's word is perfect without "signs, and will live and abide forever.

When a man will denounce a people as infidels, because they do not believe that these "signs" extend to our time, and he claims to believe that they do and that belief is all that is necessary to the working of miracles, he ought to know that if he can't work them, that he is a refutation of his own theory.

We have heard of such a man being called on to exemplify his faith, but instead of doing so he said, "I am not in the sneak business!"

TO THE READERS OF FIRM FOUNDATION:

DEAR BRETHERN, SISTERS AND FRIENDS: I feel like having a good family talk with all of you about our paper, and in our talk we want to speak loud enough for others to hear. You know that in many places THE FIRM FOUNDATION has met with violent opposition, and, strange to say, some of the most violent opposers of it are those who never read it.

"It is too personal;" "it is riding a hobby;" "it will cause division;" etc, etc. They cannot say that its teachings are untrue. But another method of opposition has been adopted by some, that rivals the low trickery so common in American politics, and vulgarly called "mud slinging."

Some preachers, and some not preachers, unable to answer the arguments and reasonings against their unscriptural practices, have sought to deaden the influence of THE FIRM FOUNDATION by "evil surmising" and insinuations against Bro. A. McGary, and some of the writers.

I tried to ascertain, in one community, the source of these evil surmising, and of course failed. "They say" seems to be the envious fellow, who, not content with discarding the truth, seeks to pull down and besmirch a Christians' character by evil surmising, dark hints, and doubtful shakes of the head.

Well, as to myself, I have but little to say. In the past I have committed some grave errors, made false steps; nor do I now claim either infallibility or perfection. But, realizing my own weakness, I lean for support upon God's word, upon His exceeding great and precious promises in Christ, and press onward for the glorious prize to be awarded to the faithful.

I desire, however, to say some things about Bro. McGary. Brethren have asked me "what about this report that Bro. McGary don't stand well with the Austin church?" Having visited Austin I am enabled to say this much: That there is no charge whatever against Bro. McGary's character, either at Austin, or Madisonville, where he was an Elder in the congregation.

The difficulty in Austin is, that Bro. McGary first wrote a series of letters to Gospel Advocate about the unscriptural teachings and doings of Pastor W. E. Hall, and rebuked the church for their worldly-mindedness. Bro. McGary was granted a letter of commendation by this Austin church, while W. E. Hall was pastor.

There are some true, earnest Christians in Austin, who approve Bro. McGary's course. Should any one desire any more information about this matter let them address the Elders of the church at Austin. I should not have mentioned these matters at all, but for the interest I feel in THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and in its circulation.

Friends, bestir yourselves, extend the circulation, let the people have the truth, and let them know that there are yet many in Israel who have not bowed the knee to "the God of this world."

The destructive flood of humanisms now being poured upon the church must be stayed. Every true soldier of the cross must rally to the standard of truth. Let us have God's word pure and unmixed; the seed of the kingdom must be sown, not the seed of sectarianism. God's word sown in the heart produces christians, not sectarians.

Bro. Lipscomb, in G. A., January 7, 1885, says, "The word of God is the seed of the kingdom. Every good plant in that kingdom grows from this seed. Every plant in that kingdom should spring direct from the word of God. Any plant that does not spring from that seed must be rooted up. God is the husbandman. He trained the plants just as He would have them grow. So, any plant in the vineyard of the Lord not according to the original pattern, is trained by another husbandman than God. It becomes the degenerated plant of a strange vine, to God, and must be destroyed." Amen!

Let every reader get up a club; remember that the summer campaign is at hand; the questions discussed in FIRM FOUNDATION are vital ones, and should be read far and near.

Sectarianism, folly, fashion and liberalism are deadly foes to truth; whether in or out of the church, and we ask your help that we may reach the minds and hearts of the people.

Yours for the truth,

J. W. JACKSON,
HILLSBORO, HILL COUNTY TEXAS.

We were not apprised of the fact that a report was being circulated that the Austin church had withdrawn from us, until Bro. Jackson's visit to Austin recently.

The only complaint that we have ever known of the church making, was, at our opposition to "modern pastors," and our unstinted protestations against their vieing with other human institutions in their hobnobbing "sociables."

Bro. Jackson is correct in stating that the church gave us a letter of commendation while W. E. Hall was its "pastor." We do not claim to "stand well" with the ruling element of this church, and here take occasion to state that we never will so long as that boon is only to be purchased at the price of a surrendered conscience.

And yet, we have a sufficient confidence in the honor and veracity of the Elders (?) to refer all who may be concerned in this report, to them, and we appeal to their answer as a refutation of this calumnious report.

We do not claim to be free from faults and sins; but we do say that, during the something more than two years that we have spent at Austin, we have heard of no charge against us, nor complaint, save such as are mentioned above.

If there are such charges, although we are disconnected from this church, we are ready to waive that and meet any charge they may have against us. Yet we do not recognize the "Austin church" as Christ's body—think we are fully prepared to show that they are not.

If they have not apostatized from the faith once delivered to the saints, then every "body" in the land that uses the Bible, in any way, and song books, and bread and wine, are all alike, the church of Christ.

RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—2 Tim. II, 15.

Our object in quoting this scripture is to call the attention of our readers mostly to the admonition of the Apostle Paul to Timothy to rightly divide the word of truth; but, before we do that, we desire our readers to carefully read the first fifteen verses of this chapter, as we wish to call their attention to other matters in the lesson.

You will notice in the first verse that Paul calls Timothy his son. In what sense was Timothy Paul's son? not in a natural sense, or according to the flesh, but he was his son in the sense in which he addressed him as his son.

Paul had been one of the greatest persecutors of christians that ever lived. He said he verily thought he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, and he did so, and he shut many of the saints up in prison, and gave his voice against them when they were put to death, and punished them in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme, and being exceedingly mad against them persecuted them even unto strange cities.

Oh, how honest and how zealous he was in the service of the devil, but his honesty and zeal did not make him right, nor do the same traits make people right now, unless they are directed by the word of the Lord.

He was on his way to Damascus with authority from the chief priests to bind all who called upon the name of the Lord, and at midday he saw a light shining round about him, and those that were with him, above the brightness of the sun, and when they were all fallen to the earth he heard a voice saying unto him Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the goads; and he said, who art thou, Lord? and the Savior said, I am Jesus whom thou persecuted.

This language shows plainly that when christians are persecuted, Christ is persecuted. The above facts are recorded.—Acts xxvi, 9, 15. And now the Savior says, but arise and stand upon thy feet for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose (notice the language of the Savior) to make thee a minister and witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee, delivering thee from the people and the gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, (what for?) to open their eyes, (what eyes, the eyes of their understanding—Eph. I, 18), to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan to God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith that is in me."—Acts xxi, 16, 18.

Notice the language of the Savior; he did not appear to Paul to convert him, because he had committed the converting power (the gospel) into the hands of his apostles, earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power might be of God, and not of men; but he appeared to him to make him a minister and a witness, and send him to the people and the gentiles, (what for?) to open their eyes (what eyes?) the eyes of their understanding—Eph. 1, 18; to turn them from darkness to light; that light that was adapted to the eyes of their understanding, and from the power of satan to god, (and now the object of that), that they might receive the forgiveness of their sins, and if they continued faithful until death, an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

We find that Paul was faithful to the truth committed to him, and went to preaching immediately, verse 19; and he preached to Timothy, opened his eyes, turned him from darkness to light, begot him, quickened him, made him alive to the subject of christianity, in reference to which he had previously been dead, hence he calls him his son, his son in the gospel.

He also writes to that large congregation at Corinth, calls them sons, reproves them of their sins, and then says "though you have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have you not many fathers, for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

Here he speaks definitely and plainly of the means he used to beget them, quicken them, or make them alive. They had been dead in trespasses and sins, but now they are made alive by Paul's preaching.

Well, says one, did the Holy Spirit have nothing to do in that great work? Why, yes; the Holy Spirit was in Paul preaching through him to the people, just as he did through Peter, on the day of Pentecost, and when sinners give heed to the same gospel now that Paul and Peter preached they are begotten, or made alike in the same way.

Let me give a money illustration, and that will attract attention, and be understood. A man with whom we have been acquainted all our lives, and know him to be strictly truthful and honest, concludes that he is not making money fast enough, and that he will go out on our western plains in search of gold, and finding a district of country abounding in the precious metal he determines to write back to his friends and invite them to go out and share with him in the rich mines he has discovered.

His friends, previous to this time, have been dead to the subject of gold diggings, but when they get his letter giving such a glorious description of the mines, and they believe what he says, it begets a desire in them to get some of that gold. They are now made alive in reference to a subject about which they had been dead. Ask them what brought about that change, and one will tell you that that friends letter did it, and another will tell you that the writer did it, and both tell the truth, and no mystery about it. Their friend did it by or through his letter.

So our Heavenly Father, by his spirit through his Apostles, writes to us about a country up yonder that abounds in riches that are incorruptible, undefiled, and that will never fade away. He tells us how to get there, and the dangers that beset us on the road, but assures us if we continue faithful, having started right, that we will obtain the inheritance.

Now, these things are revealed in the gospel, and is there not more power in that to quicken, beget, or make alive, than there is in the word of man? After calling Timothy his son, Paul tells him to be strong, (strong in what?) not in politics, or philosophy, or astronomy, but in the grace (or system of favor) that is in Christ Jesus.

He speaks of the same grace in Titus II, 11, "For the grace of God that brings salvation (and that is the grace that we are interested in,) hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly. Now, what teaches these things but the gospel? Then Timothy was admonished to be strong in the gospel.

He illustrates the christian life by that of a soldier, and says that the soldier does not entangle himself with the affairs of this life, and the reason why he does not, is, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. Brethren, let us be careful that we don't become so entangled with the affairs of this life that we will not please the Captain of our salvation.

He also tells him that if a man strive for masteries, (or strives in the games), yet is he not crowned except he strives lawfully, (or according to law). What is law? A rule of action for the government of those under the law. What law was he talking about? The law of the Lord—Psalms IX, 7. The law of the spirit—Rom. VIII, 2. The perfect law of liberty.—James I, 25. The royal law, 2, 8; all having reference to the same law.

How important that we learn that law, and strive according to it; he also assures us that if we believe not, yet Christ abides faithful; he cannot deny himself, he cannot go back on his word, he will keep all of his promises and execute all his threats, whether we believe or not.

Now for the subject of rightly dividing the word of truth, verse 15. You will notice the Apostle not only tells Timothy to divide the truth, but to divide it right. A regiment of soldiers may be in the employ of our government defending our western frontier, their time of service is out, they want their pay, the pay master at Washington sends the requisite amount to the pay master of the regiment and tells him to rightly divide it amongst the regiment, and he divides it equally, but that is not right, for the Colonel and the subordinate officers are entitled to more pay than the common soldiery, and an equal division is not right. So there are portions of scripture that applied to the Apostles, and to no one else, other portions to the elders of the congregation and to no one else, others to the deacons, others to christians generally and to no one else, others to sinners, those out of Christ, aliens and no one else.

But what is the word of truth that Paul tells Timoty to rightly divide; is it the whole bible? Must sinners begin at Genesis and read to Revelation in order to learn what they must do to be saved? If so, but few will be saved. I am intimately acquainted with a lady who became deeply concerned about her salvation, and she went to her preacher and asked him what she must do, and his reply was "wait on the Lord, wait, I say, on the Lord." Last of 27th Psalm. The trouble with that preacher was, he knew nothing about the word of truth, let alone rightly dividing it.

No man can go back of Matthew and tell a sinner what is necessary for him to do to be saved, or a christian how to live the christian life. The word of truth is the New Testament. Now for the proof, for no man has a right to take any position in reference to christianity that he cannot establish by the word of the Lord.

When the Savior arrived at that age that he should begin his public ministry, he went to John the Baptist and demanded baptism of him; but John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? John was baptising the people unto repentance for the remission of sins, he knew the savior intimately as his cousin, (not as the son of God) he had never heard of his committing a sin, hence he refused to baptize him—Mark I, 4.

Jesus answering him said, suffer it to be so now, thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness.—Matt. III, 13, 15. John baptized him in the River Jordan, and when he came up out of the water the heavens were parted above, and the spirit of God descended in the form of a dove, and abode upon him, and the heavenly Father for the first time acknowledged him publicly to be his son. What a lesson is taught here.

When he obeyed his Father in that institution he acknowledged him to be his son; but now, people claim that God acknowledged them to be his sons and daughters before he would his own son, and that baptism is a non-essential no account. That is the popular teaching. Will God hold such teachers guiltless? Some two or more years after this the Savior took Peter, James and John upon a high mountain and was transfigured before them. Moses and Elias, or Elijah, or John the baptist, I don't know which, were present, and the Heavenly Father again acknowledged him to be his son in whom he was well pleased, and added this time, "hear ye him." You have been hearing Moses the law giver, of the old dispensation, and the prophets, of whose prophecies my son is the fulfillment, and now hear him, and they were present to witness the authority passing out of their hand into the hands of the Lord Jesus. No man can go back of Mattew and hear the Savior.

Again, this same Moses said, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, unto him shall you hearken."—Deut. XVIII, 15. "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I command him, and it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name I will require it of him."—Verses 18, 19.

Stephen in his speech, Acts VII, says that Christ is that prophet of whom Moses spake. John says, "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.—John I, 17; and the Apostle Paul says, in arguing with the Jews and cutting them loose from the law, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip; for if the word spoken by angels (the law) was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken (who by? not by Abraham, not by Moses, not by David, not by John the baptist,) but by the Lord.—Heb. II, 1, 3; and the Apostle Peter in preaching to Cornelius, says, "The word which God sent unto the children of Israel preaching peace by Jesus Christ (he is lord of all,) that word I say you know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Gallilee, after the baptism which John preached.—Acts X, 36, 37.

And again the Apostle Paul says,

"In whom ye also trusted, after that you heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation.—Eph. 1, 13.

This word of truth is certainly the word of truth that Paul told Timothy to rightly divide. Surely the above quotations prove beyond a doubt that the New Testament is the word of truth of which Paul was speaking; that being so, what is the proper division of the New Testament? And before answering that question I will ask, what is the first step that a sinner must take in order to become a christian?

A man told me, several years ago, that he had been a member of the church seven years. I asked him what was the first step he took to become a member, and he said he did not know. I did not believe he had become a member of the church, but only a member of a church, a human organization.

The first step that a sinner must take to become a christian, is to believe in Christ as the son of God, and his savior, with all his heart, without a doubt, and the first thing the savior has done is to give him the testimony upon which he believes that grand proposition, which testimony is found in Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, which is the principal object of these four books.

Proof: John says, "Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written (what for, John?) that you might believe (believe what; not Catholicism, nor Calvinism, nor Mormonism, nor Campbellism, nor any other ism? for the bible is opposed to and condemns all isms,) that Jesus is the Christ, the son of God, and that believing, you might have life through his name, (or his authority).—John xx, 30, 31.

Luke says he wrote to Theophilus that he might know the certainty of the things wherein he had been instructed.—Luke 1, 4. What John calls belief, Luke calls knowledge, and if Luke and John wrote for the purpose of producing faith in the hearts of those who heard or examined their testimony, did not Matthew and Mark write for the same purpose? And Paul says, "faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Romans x, 17.

When sinners have heard or examined this testimony and believe in Christ, what next? Why, they want, or ought to want to become christians, followers of him in whom they believe, and the next book, the Acts of the Apostles, furnishes them the necessary information; (and no other book does), tells them what the inspired Apostles preached, what the people believed, what they did in order to enter into the kingdom or church of Christ, in order to be translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear son, and after they become christians then comes the epistles, written alone to christians, telling them how to live the christians life, what armors they must wear as soldiers of the cross, that they may fight the good fight of faith until death, that they may obtain an abundant entrance into the everlast-tianity that he cannot establish by the word of the Lord.

When the Savior arrived at that age that he should begin his public ministry, he went to John the Baptist and demanded baptism of him; but John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? John was baptizing the people unto repentance for the remission of sins; he knew the savior intimately as his cousin; (not as the son of God) he had never heard of his committing a sin, hence he refused to baptize him—Mark I, 4.

Jesus answering him said, suffer it to be so now, thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness.—Matt. III, 13, 15. to and condemns all isms,) that Jesus is the Christ, the son of God, and that believing, you might have life through his name, (or his authority).—John xx, 30, 31.

Luke says he wrote to Theophilus that he might know the certainty of the things wherein he had been instructed.—Luke 1, 4. What John calls belief, Luke calls knowledge, and if Luke and John wrote for the purpose of producing faith in the hearts of those who heard or examined their testimony, did not Matthew and Mark write for the same purpose? And Paul says, "faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Romans x, 17.

When sinners have heard or examined this testimony and believe in Christ, what next? Why, they want, or ought to want to become christians, followers of him in whom they believe, and the next book, the Acts of the Apostles, furnishes them the necessary information, (and no other book does), tells them what the inspired Apostles preached, what the people believed, what they did in order to enter into the kingdom or church of Christ, in order to be translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear son, and after they become christians then comes the epistles, written alone to christians, telling them how to live the christians life, what armors they must wear as soldiers of the cross, that they may fight the good fight of faith until death, that they may obtain an abundant entrance into the everlasting

ing kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; then comes the book of Revelation that tells of the revolutions through which the church would pass from the time John was in the Isle of Patmos to the winding up of this dispensation, and describes more particularly and minutely than any of the other writers the happy home the Christians will enjoy beyond the grave, and the rich inheritance that is in store for all the saints, for they are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ.

How exactly the gospel is adapted to man, as he is! No mystery about it.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I do heartily and sincerely agree with Sister Sarah in regard to the dress of the sisters in the church of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. M. A. Barnard asks, is it right to keep the poor away from the house of God, by fine dress? I say it is not; I hope to live to see the day when we will know our sisters and brothers by their dress, conversation and conduct. I am not able to dress extravagantly, but if I were, I would not do it; it would not be setting the right example for others. We, the daughters of God, ought to come out from the world, and let our light shine; it cannot shine through so much finery.

I am willing to do anything the blessed Savior has commanded me, and I believe it is the duty of every sister to take delight in doing the will of the Lord. I hope others will come out and show themselves, on the Lord's side. Wishing you success with your valuable paper, I remain your sister in Christ.

The Apostolic Times and Old Path Guide have consolidated under the name of The Apostolic Guide. That is sensible, because it is an economy of forces that will produce better results alike for publishers and patrons. If only some ambitious writer, anxious to bestow the fruit of his wonderful genius on a needy world, and thus "meet a great public want," does not start a new paper under the title of The Old-Path Times! We hope the Guide will be truly apostolic, and that the union may prove every way prosperous.—Standard.

We have thought for a long time that it was willing and ready to trade off the "Old Path," for something new. If it does not cease to participate in and advocate things which it denominates as "unwise, unsafe and unscriptural," it would be well for it to trade off its "Guide" next time, for something else "Apostolic."

THE EVANGELIST AND HIS WORK.

J. W. JACKSON,

[Concluded.]

Another objector says that when the church was persecuted in Jerusalem they were all scattered abroad, except the Apostles, and they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word, therefore, every christian has the divine right to go out and preach the gospel, and "whoever will, let him say come."

The persecution of the church at Jerusalem was the occasion of the going of these preachers; hence, they were not sent, nor did they go voluntarily; they were driven through fear of death.

The narrative does not necessarily imply that every individual christian except the Apostles left Jerusalem. I think it more probable that the "all" refers to those teachers who had rendered themselves extremely obnoxious to the Jews by their ministry of the gospel, and who, for this reason, were the first and principal subjects of persecution.

Besides this, all christians are not qualified to preach the gospel, neither then or now. We may admit, that every christian has a right to preach the gospel, and yet prove conclusively that every christian can not preach it.

In the apostolic age the preachers who carried this "strange doctrine" to the people had power to work miracles in order to prove their mission. Some of those scattered abroad are mentioned—Philip—Acts VIII, and others in Acts XI, 19, 21. All of those worked miracles.

Shall we take this scattering abroad as a criterion to govern our going? If so, in what particulars must we be guided by it? Must we wait for the same occasion to arise? A little persecution perhaps might do some of our churches good, by purifying them of the dross that now drags them downward to decay.

If not the occasion, shall we adopt the manner of going afoot and in haste, looking back ever and anon for fear that some fiery Saul may overtake us, and subject us to cruel scourgings? No; this going furnishes us no example of sending the gospel. It rather teaches that God will have His gospel preached to the world, and hence suffered His people to be persecuted and scattered.

If the church now is so selfish, so neglectful of the work assigned to it as to sit at ease in Zion and do nothing to "spread the Gospel," let them heed the above lesson. God may scatter them, subject them to persecution, trials and difficulties, and teach by hard lessons the full measure of their responsibilities.

Individually Christians cannot "scatter abroad" and preach the gospel; collectively they can select one or more of their number who are qualified to preach, and send them out to preach Christ and Him crucified. It is claimed, however, that every Christian has the right to evangelize, and there is no power to prevent him.

If it is a birth-right, then women should evangelize as well as men; if it is an acquired right, a right other than birth-right, how is it acquired? Will some one please answer? Again, if the whole church were scattered abroad preaching, (except our big preachers) there would be no congregation or assembly, no overseers, no deacons; the whole church would be mouth.

The church must send the preachers, as did the church at Antioch.—Acts XIII. It is denied that Paul and Barnabas were sent out by the church at Antioch. If by this denial is meant that the church conferred no authority upon them, nor added in any way to their qualifications, nor originated the idea of sending them, it is true.

Paul and Barnabas seemed to be content to remain in Antioch; but the church had grown and prospered under their tuition till now it had native teachers and prophets filled with the Holy Spirit and wisdom, and fully capable of teaching and ruling the church. Other fields must be cultivated, other cities hear the word of truth, and the Lord by His Spirit directs the separation and sending away of Paul and Barnabas to the work.

The church at Antioch as the means, in the hands of the Lord, obey the Holy Spirit. It is objected here it was not the church, but certain prophets and teacher in the church acting under the direction of the Holy Spirit. Let us examine the record. "Now, there were in the church that was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers, as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius, of Cyrene, and Manan, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrach and Saul.

As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Spirit said, separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and lain their hands on them they sent them away."—They went out, and after preaching in many places they returned "to Antioch from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles."—Acts xiv, 26, 27.

Here were five teachers ministering to the Lord. Was it simply a "preachers meeting," or were others present? Evidently their ministering was for the benefit of the church. Even admitting that none were present but the five when the command of the Holy Spirit was given, is it presumable that the three would have sent away Paul and Barnabas without notifying the disciples thereof? It was an important occasion; to send away the two men by whose labors the church had been built up, and further, to send them into places where trials and persecutions awaited them, made this an important occasion.

The prophets certainly did inform the church, for when the two returned they realized that the church had a joint interest in the work that had been done, hence their report was made to them. They were recommended to the grace of God by the laying on of hands, and prayer and fasting. In following this example we are safe and sure to succeed.

Another example of a preacher sent by a congregation we find in Timothy. After his conversion by Paul in his first trip to Lystra, Timothy must have made considerable proficiency in the gospel, so that he was well reported of by the brethren, and Paul wanted him for a companion. Having been pointed out or selected as a competent person to preach the gospel, he was separated to the work by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.—1 Tim. iv, 4. Being thus recommended to the grace of God for the ministry to which he was called, Paul lays his hands on him to bestow the power of working miracles, and thus he is sent by the church and not by Paul.

If there are teachers now in a congregation does not the Holy Spirit speak to them as they minister before the Lord? "The spirit and the bride say come." Does the spirit dwell in the church? If the bride speaks, it must do so by its mouthpiece, the evangelist.

Perhaps our difficulty will be lessened by defining what we mean by "sent." It does not mean official authority, for Paul's authority was received directly from Jesus. Self-sent preachers cannot claim official authority, for if the power sending Him must confer official authority, he being self-sent, has a self-given authority, which, coming from a human source, amounts to nothing.

Jesus, the Christ, is the fountain head of all power and authority in the kingdom of God. His word is the medium through which this is ministered. His subjects here, Christians, have the word of truth—the perfect law of liberty—giving full and explicit directions how each one must behave himself in the kingdom, and what each must do to carry on the work of the master.

Hence, the church, or congregation, is directed by the Holy Spirit, through the word, to separate certain ones to the work of an evangelist. They must be sound in the faith, well instructed in the kingdom of God, followers after righteousness, charity, peace, and their hearts aglow with the love of God and tender compassion for their fellow men. If such you have, the congregation, or the overseers say to him, you must not remain here idle, you must go to work, go and preach—and they separate him, or recommend him to the grace of God through fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands.

But is this all? no; the preacher goes out, as did Paul and Barnabas, recommended to the grace of God by the united prayers of the church, carrying with him the recommendation of the church, as did the Apollos when he left Ephesus and went down to Corinth, so that he can say that he was chosen by the church, or churches, to travel and minister to the people the true grace of God.

The church thus sending him is a co-operator or co-worker with him. Nay, more, it realizes that the evangelist is the servant of the church, and hence they "send once and again unto his necessities." They contribute of their substance to his support, rather than to his salary.

"The pay of the preacher." I hate that expression; and yet popular use has made it—almost a part of the gospel. Money, brethren, will not pay the preacher for his preaching, his anxieties and cares, his sacrifices, and his deep and constant solicitude for the welfare of the souls to whom he ministers. No, you cannot pay him with all your wealth, but he will be paid when Jesus takes him to the world of glory and bestows upon him the crown of unfading glory.

Nevertheless, we must talk about the money necessary to his support, and to his help in the work. They that preach the gospel should live of the gospel; is an ordained law of the Lord. Christians are the Lord's stewards, and should give of their substance for the support of the needy, and for the assistance and support of the preacher. "Order is Heaven's first law." In the remedial system all is order and harmony, if one will only follow that which is taught us.

Our contribution should be made regularly, and systematically, hence the injunction to cast into the treasury every Lord's day, as the Lord has prospered us.—1 Cor. xvi, 1, 2. This being done, the service performed for the preacher is by the church, and not individually.

This works good for the preacher, in this respect; it prevents his feeling under obligations to individuals; not knowing who contributes, nor how much each contributes, it lays no ground for a distinction in his mind of "good paying members" and "bad paying ones." On the part of the brethren it does away, to some extent, with that self-glorying principle of "what I did for the preacher." Our contributions should go through this divinely ordained channel. But the money does not come, and plans are devised and set in operation to "raise funds for evangelizing."

The fault or reason that the money does not come is found, first, in the preacher or teacher who has failed to teach the brethren their duties and responsibilities in this matter. Secondly, the lack of liberality on the part of the brethren arises from covetousness, avarice, or lust. Proper teaching in the churches will correct the evil. It must not be supposed that any objection is here urged against any free-will offering that christians may desire to make either in support of a preacher or the poor of the church.

Brethren, the field lies before us, and truly the harvest is plenteous, the laborers few. Daily petitions ascend to God for more laborers, and yet the churches are remiss in their duty. How many are sending out preachers? How many gather into the treasury more than a pittance, and then perhaps give it grudgingly. How many christians give as the Lord has prospered them? and how many preachers are forced to quit the field and engage in "tent-making" for lack of support?

Nevertheless, many go, giving up the wealth and emoluments of this world; sacrificing home, comfort, and ease, and bearing the precious seed of the kingdom.

OBEDIENCE.

[No. 3.]

J. W. JACKSON.

One of the most important lessons taught in the holy scriptures will be found in 1 Samuel xv. The principles therein taught are as true now as then, and human nature as exemplified in the conduct of Saul, king of Israel, finds its counterpart now in the camps of spiritual Israel.

Saul, king of Israel, was commanded to "go and smite Amalek and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not, but slay both men and women, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass."

The Amalekites were a sinful nation, descended from Esau, who fought against Israel on their journey through the wilderness. They "feared not God," and had, in common with the Canaanites, "filled up the cup of their iniquity." God determined to destroy them, and Saul is commanded to do the work.

In obedience to the command he gathered his army, went down to the country of the Amalekites and "utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword. But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatling, and of the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them; but everything that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly."

With the booty thus spared, Saul and his army start out on their return home and are met on the way by the prophet of God, Samuel, to whom Saul hastens to report his obedience: "Blessed be thou of the Lord, I have performed the commandment of the Lord." The man of God replies: "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? And Saul said, they have brought them from the Amalekites, for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God, and the rest we have utterly destroyed.

* * * * *

Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the Lord, and have gone the way which the Lord sent me, and have brought Agag, the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. But the people took of the spoils, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal.

And Samuel said, hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold! to obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken, than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, He hath also rejected thee from being King. And Saul said unto Samuel, I have sinned, for I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord and thy words, because I feared the people, and obeyed their voice."

The first principle I deduce from this lesson is, that partial obedience is disobedience. Saul had obeyed in part the things commanded, and on his return claimed to "have obeyed the voice of the Lord." Samuel, however, tells him that he had been guilty of rebellion and stubbornness in rejecting the word of the Lord. What he had not done rendered null and void even that which was done. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Jas. II, 10. To neglect God's word and leave undone the things commanded, is evidence of the existence in the heart of rebellion and stubbornness.

Human nature is the same now as in the days of Saul. There are hundreds of men and women claiming to be christians, protesting solemnly that they have obeyed the voice of the Lord, and flattering themselves that their partial obedience will receive the divine approval. God now speaks to us by His son, who is made unto us both Lord and Christ. The Apostles, as ambassadors, teach us plainly what is the will of the Lord.

If, in the former dispensations which have been characterized as the star-light and moon-light ages of religion, every transgression and disobedience was promptly punished, how shall we, who live in the light of the sun of righteousness, escape condemnation if we refuse to hear the voice of Him who speaks to us from Heaven?

A curse is pronounced upon man or angel who will preach any other gospel than the gospel of Christ. Gal. I, 9. This same gospel must be believed (Romans I, 16), and obeyed in order to salvation. —Thes. I, 8. How many of them "teach the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," as they are taught in the New Testament? People do as they are taught. Will their obedience to a perverted gospel, or to some parts of the gospel, secure divine approval?

The voice of the Lord requires that man must confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus. This confession is made unto salvation, and was a part of the word of faith or gospel that Paul preached.—Rom. x, 8, 10. It is well known that this confession is not made by those who join the denominations; nay, more, they reject it as insufficient, and substitute in lieu of it some of the good things of human wisdom. It is very plain then, that those who have left undone this plain requirement of the word of faith have never obeyed from the heart the teachings of Christ.

The word of God plainly teaches us that "baptism is for the remission of sins;" that it is a burial in water, and a resurrection therefrom; and yet, hundreds will hear the plain words of scripture read, and, *Saul, like, bring something of their own choosing as a sacrifice to God. This principle of half-hearted service, partly doing a thing commanded, or only doing a part of the things commanded, must not be confined to the elementary principles of the faith. Christians must work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, and this is to be done by hearkening to the voice of the Lord.

I shall next notice the reason assigned by Saul for his disobedience. They spared the best of the sheep and oxen in order to sacrifice them to God. Men always find an excuse for not doing what the Lord requires. The human heart is very stubborn; it must say what is good to be offered to God; yes, it must be satisfied, and it generally succeeds in satisfying itself with that service which harmonizes best with its own lusts. But such service is an abomination to God; "he that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." Saul had turned away his ear from the voice of the Lord, and hearkened to the voice of the people; and they, in disobedience, bring a polluted offering to God. "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." The sacrifice intended here was of animals that had been devoted to destruction, condemned as unclean; hence, obedience is better than such sacrifices.

It appears from the narrative that the idea of offering this sacrifice originated with the people. It would gratify their pride to make such a great offering to God, and be an exhibition to all of the prowess of their arms.

Saul feared the people and obeyed their voice. Ah! you say, how weak he must have been, and how sinful such a course of action. God had blessed him abundantly, and made him king over His people, and he weakly submits to their dictation and disobeys God. Before you proceed too far, my dear reader, just ask yourself how often you have obeyed the voice of the people instead of the voice of the Lord? How often have you been influenced in your actions by the thought, "what will the people say?"

and republics have heard this voice and tremblingly obeyed it. In our own legislative halls "the voice of the people is regarded as the voice of God." The baneful effects of this old adage, "vox populi, vox dei," "the voice of the people is the voice of God," are seen not only in society and government, but also in the church. Everywhere it has been heard, and obeyed; sin, disgrace and shame has been the result.

It was the voice of the people that said to Aaron, "Up, make us gods which shall go before us," and Aaron obeyed their voice and made them a golden calf, and thus brought a great sin upon them.—Ex. XXXII.

It was the voice of the people that demanded of Samuel a king like unto the nations that surrounded them, and God permitted them to have their own way, under the solemn protest that He would not deliver them from the sore evils into which their perverse spirit was leading them.—I Sam. VIII.

The voice of the people also demanded prophets who should prophesy smooth things unto them, and priests like to themselves, who would burn incense to their idol Gods.—See Isa. XXX, 10; Hos. IV, 6, 14; Mal. II, 1, 9.

The same sad story repeated again and again. Kings, prophets and priests through fear, obey the voice of the people and bring upon themselves the wrath of God.

It was the voice of the people that would have made Jesus a king.—Jo. VI, 10, and only a short time after this, the voice of the people demanded His life.

The voice of the people is not the voice of God. Jesus left us an example that we should follow in His steps. He did always the things that pleased the Father.—Jo. VIII, 28. Peter and the other apostles when arraigned before the Sanhedrim for preaching the resurrection of Jesus, said: "We ought to obey God rather than man."—Act 5, 20. And Paul, the apostle to the gentiles, says: "Do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men I should not be the servant of Christ."—Gal. I, 10.

This is so plain that comment is unnecessary; nevertheless, to-day this mighty voice is making such clamorous demands of christians that we can scarcely hear a whisper from God's word.

What introduced the organ into the worship of the church?" The voice of the people.

What is it that introduces into the church of God the wicked customs of the world, such as fairs, festivals, jug-breakings, lotteries, etc? The voice of the people. Such abominations are no more acceptable to God than was the polluted sacrifice of Saul.

What voice is it that is clamoring so loudly for missionary societies? "We want to be like the religious nations around us; see what organizations they have, what sums of money they raise, and what glory and honor is given them for their missionary spirit."

Israel rejected God and demanded a king, that they might be like the nations around them; will you, brethren, reject your King that you may fashion

after the religious bodies that now deny His authority?

What has become of that motto of the elder Campbell, "When the bible speaks, we speak, where it is silent, we are silent?" Does God speak plain enough for us to understand? Yes; His word thoroughly furnishes us unto all good works. It tells us what to preach, how, where and when to preach; it tells us how to live as individuals, or as congregations, and if we are constantly doing what the Lord tells us to do, we will have no time to waste with organs, festivals, or societies of any kind. The best society this side of heaven is the church of Christ; He is the head of it, and his word is the rule of action for it to be guided by. Let us heed that word, walk according to his rule, and leave the result with Him.

Christians have been called out of satan's kingdom. They are soldiers, and must put on the heavenly armor furnished them; but they must fight, yes, and be valiant in battle. The Lord has no use for cowards, hence, we must add to our faith, courage. We must not fear what man may do or say, for the Lord has promised "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Remember then that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought, to the obedience of Christ."

As faithful soldiers we must maintain, at all hazards, the authority of our King. The strongholds of sectarianism must be broken down; the vain imaginations of the people in their sinful devices and innovations must be destroyed, not captured as good things and brought into the church; and we must bring all of our thoughts, words and actions in obedience to the word of Christ.

Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice. Do not think to please God by the number of your good deeds, nor by any of your sacrifices that originate in the voice of the people. The commandments of God are not grievous; let us walk humbly in them, and it will be our happy privilege to swell the numbers of those obedient ones who shall be admitted into the heavenly city.

LETTER FROM I. C. STONE.

LAPORTE, IND., May 20, 1835.

DEAR BROTHER MCGARY:

There has been a great deal said and written on the subject of baptism, and especially sect baptism, but I think the subject of so much importance that I feel like writing a few things more with reference to it.

In the first place I desire to ascertain from the scriptures as clearly as possible, what the design of baptism is.

We will, accordingly, go to 1st Peter III, 20. Here the apostle declares that eight persons were saved in an ark by water. In the next verse he declares that it was a corresponding example to baptism that also now saves us.

This declaration of the apostle ought to settle this matter forever; but it is a lamentable truth that with many the declaration of an apostle carries with it little or no authority.

But Peter does not say that those eight persons were saved by water alone; yet, he does declare that they were saved by water. And he further declares that it was a corresponding example to baptism that now saves us.

Then we wish to inquire, in what particulars do the two examples correspond? We read in this same twentieth verse that Noah prepared an ark in which he and his family were saved! So you see they were not saved by the water alone, but by the ark and the water.

But then they were not saved by the ark and the water together, without anything else, for we read again in Heb. xi, 7, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, etc. So we see that it required faith, the ark and the water, all to save them. Does not this correspond to baptism that also saves us? It certainly does.

The water alone will not save us. We must be prepared for the water, as Noah and his family were. He must first have faith, next, he must make the necessary preparations—prepare the ark—a work which he must do himself; and he and his family must enter the ark, all according to the Lord's directions. Now, when they had done all this, then it was that they were saved by the water. So it is with baptism.

When the individual has faith, and makes the necessary preparations for baptism as commanded, then it is that baptism saves him. So they are truly corresponding examples, both ordained of God wholly, and therefore, effective.

Once more they correspond in this: Noah was instructed of God to build the ark, and given precise instructions as to the pattern, and by no means left to guess at the pattern. He was plainly warned of God that he was going to bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy man from off the face of the earth, and that therefore he should prepare the ark. Hence, he was moved with fear.

So it is with baptism; Jesus told precisely what it is for. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Mark xvi, 16. Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—Peter, Acts ii, 38. So you see that in this statement of design they correspond.

Another example is found in Romans vi, 2. Here Paul says, "know you not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death, etc. Here he declares that they were all baptized into Jesus Christ. Salvation is in Christ, and if they were baptized into Christ it was evidently to reach salvation. Here, again, the design is most manifest, and nowhere is anyone left to guess at the design.

But some one may say that the baptism in these instances was the baptism of the holy spirit. I scarcely think it necessary to answer so silly an objection; but I will quote Paul a little further for the edification of such. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we also should walk in a new life. So, whatever it was, it was an act of burial, and a resurrection; and they are hardly buried in the holy spirit and resurrected out of it again." If they get out of it they surely lose it. And here it is that we begin to walk in the new life, showing the design that it starts us in a new life.

Again, in Gal. iii, 27, Paul says, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. Here the apostle states this fact, that in the act of baptism they had put on Christ. It was an act which they had done, and not something the holy spirit had done for them. They had put on Christ by an act which Christ had prescribed for them, and to which they must yield themselves.

Now, from what has gone before, I think any one who desires, can see the design of immersion, and that it must be an intelligent act of the individual submitting to it. But, to further demonstrate the necessity of an intelligent submission to it, I wish to return to Rom. vi, 17. Here, Paul says, "But God be thanked that notwithstanding you were the servants of sin, you have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you; being then made free from sin you became the servants of righteousness.

When were they made free from sin? When they obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which had been delivered to them.

How had they obeyed the form of doctrine? From the heart. What does the phrase "from the heart," mean? It means with full purpose, understandingly. It is further most evident that the form of doctrine had been clearly stated as a command so they could obey it, and could know when they had obeyed it. By such act they had been made free from sin, because it was an act of faith, without which it is impossible to please God. No act was ever an act of faith performed in obedience to a command when the command was not understood.

The idea that many of our friends and brethren have, that it makes no difference whether persons understand what they do in religious matters or not, is a dreadful idea. If the idea were a correct one, then I see no good reason why the Lord and the apostles should have been so very particular in giving instructions. Why not say to all, do what you suppose to be right, and all will be well?

Such ideas have, in a great degree, been imbibed from the sects. Bringing sectarians into the church under the impression that they were christians before they came into the church, and that they need no change but to step out of Babylon into the church of Christ, has been the fatal mistake of this reformation. Campbell made the mistake, and Campbellites have been,

and yet are, following him. It has filled the church with sectarians. They have so divided the doctrine with sectism that it, in many places, is very thin.

They are now trying to puff it up by boasting and bragging of what great things they are performing with this diluted doctrine. They aim to evaporate it—that is, get it so thin that no one can tell what it is, and then sublimate or condense it into solid sectarianism. I think one or two reverends and an honorable or two took a trip east last week for this very object.

But, my article is growing too long, so farewell for the present.

May God bless you, and all who defend the truth.

I. C. STONE.

A "VENTURE."

"How would our Texas brethren receive Sunday school literature from the Gospel Advocate office? The editors of the Advocate contemplate such a venture, and would be glad to hear from the brethren through the south generally, and especially the Texas brethren, on the subject. It is true this field is pretty well occupied; but we think there is something lacking yet, and these things they hope to supply."

The above we find in the Texas Christian, under "Paragraphs from Tenn., by T. F. Rawlins. We once loved the Gospel Advocate very dearly, because it seemed to have its prow set zionward, and wearing an air of resignation to all obstacles that might beat against it from adverse directions.

It then seemed to fully realize that to steer for zion was to stem the strong, swift current of the broad stream of popularity, and for awhile it nobly and bravely rode the angry waves that rose up in its course, with an air of triumph that gave promise of a safe anchorage in the still waters of truth." But, alas! the current became too strong, and rivals were speeding past with such tempting prize and velocity that the infectious air of emulation struck the Advocate.

In full view and straight ahead the way was still "narrowing," and the billows of opposition running higher and higher. The old pilot who had out-riden so many storms seems to have become panic-stricken. Pulling up stream, with a decreasing cargo, while so many were flying past him smoothly floating with the current and increasing their cargo as they gathered speed, seems to have discouraged the old man at the helm, and he seems to have regarded the wreck of the Advocate on the shore of time even with its prow up stream, as a worse fate than that of changing and running swiftly to an opposite point of the compass.

Brethren, the "Gospel Advocate", which used to stand as a synonym for all such phrases, as stood for the defense of the faith once delivered to the saints, has broken loose from her original mooring and is gradually swinging round to enter the mad race for lucre and the applause of men.

How sad! That grand old paper, which was doubtless inaugurated for the sole purpose of casting the rays of gospel light upon the narrow way, marked by the footprints of the men whose way is bound in earth and heaven, as the way of the king of kings and lord of lords, and whose pages have for so many years shone along that way so brightly, is now beginning to emit only flickering rays.

It is not alone this proposition to engage in the manufacture of "Sunday school literature" that marks so evidently and distinctly a change of base on the part of the Advocate. But when Bro. Lipscomb made an effort to unite with the "Old Path Guide," after his long continued and violent protestations against the course of that paper, he convinced our mind that he either expected to buy the course of Bro. Allen with so many dollars, or sell his own.

His course since has only served to strengthen us in that opinion. He has procured an office editor whose sympathies were wholly with that "missionary society" element, and who has spared no pains, since his connection with the Advocate, to let its readers know that he has undergone no change in sentiment, (and we admire him for it.)

But how does it look to candid minds, on Bro. Lipscomb's part? Of course he has offered his readers some plausible looking excuses for his action in reference to his effort to combine with the "O. P. G."—that is plausible looking when superficially viewed, but when studied in the light of past and subsequent events they seem, to us, to dwindle into mere hollow pretenses.

Brethren, the Advocate is to-day less worthy of the support of those who desire to stand for the defense of the faith of the gospel, than the Standard, or any other paper in the land. It has stood and seen the other papers go into the popular ways of the clamorous, time-serving, degenerating and orthodox-hunting throng, and has disputed every inch of the unhallowed ground that they have traveled over in reaching the treacherous stand point from which they satisfy the demands of false brethren, and lay up for themselves treasure on earth.

And now, the Advocate swings off in the same direction, only gauging its speed by the popular pulse, as it serenely glides over and rides down its own barriers, erected upon the battlefield upon which it has so recently fought its rivals.

Of course the catering element of our brethren will say that we should not have said these things, even if they are true, because Bro. Lipscomb has previously been offended with some things said by us. But we feel it our duty to the cause we love and plead, to speak out against these lamentable facts and circumstances that are conspiring to draw the forces of the Lord into the maelstrom of the god of this world.

There is too much consideration exercised towards men who are prostituting the Lord's institutions to their own fleshly ends and fell purposes. Men are thus often "respected" at the expense of truth. When we come to lay our own plans and interests at the foot of the cross and yield all up to Christ, men's ways and reputations will not be so assiduously guarded, but will suffer exposure just in proportion to the extent that they hinder truth.

We once had great confidence in Bro. Lipscomb as a safe man, as one who would sacrifice self for truth and glory of God, but we confess that we have lost that confidence. Although he treated us in a very unbrotherly way, that was not the cause for our loss of confidence in him. His course in the changes that the Advocate has made, and others sought to be made, are not all.

We will mention one circumstance that proves beyond the possibility of a doubt that he will immolate upon the altar of his own ambition the rights and reputation of others. All of our readers remember that in the argument of the baptismal question, Bro. Lipscomb repeatedly told his readers that Bros. Campbell and Fanning did not understand, prior to their baptism, that baptism was for the remission of sins.

This he might have very honestly and conscientiously done; but we have long since shown, from their own pens, that they did understand that proposition, and hence, that he had misrepresented them, and we called his attention to it. But he has never yet made the correction that the ordinary rules of fairness, much less christainity, demand. We regard his silence upon this matter as a willful misrepresentation of these dead and revered brethren. In what other light can it possibly appear to candid minds?

So long as he could use their names to the advantage of his dogma by giving to them attitudes that they never occupied, palpably misrepresenting them upon a point vital to their relationship to God, his pages were treated to a slipshod use of them; they were dragged from their graves and made to stand sentinels over the interests of heresy that they had waged a relentless war upon in life.

Pity upon the man who can become so wedded to any tenet as to surrender his own consistency to its demands; and a thousand times more pity for the poor helpless serf whose fealty is so complete that even when the hallowed memories of the dead are to be insulted by gross misrepresentation, he has not the liberty to say nay!

Such men would consume heaven and earth upon the altar of their ambition if they could. They are dangerous guides in this day, when so much is received from men, and so little is sought out of the pure fountain of truth and life.

After we have seen that the chief editor of the Advocate has made an effort to level the differences between his paper and the O. P. G. by barter; after we have seen him take into the sanctum of the Advocate one who is in full sympathy with the "missionary society;" after we have learned that he tried to put the "Texas Department" in the hands of a stripling of the "missionary society" stamp, and, after we have seen him misrepresent the dead and refuse to correct it when it was shown to him, to support a dogma; after seeing all of these we are not surprised to learn that the Advocate will soon begin the manufacture of lesson leaves, or engage in anything else that will bring it gain or prestige.

THIS IS OUR MOTTO.

"TRUTH FIRST, UNION AFTERWARD,
AND UNION ONLY IN THE TRUTH."

The following extract is from J. W. McGarvey, in the Old Path Guide:

"In conclusion I will add, that I have but little sympathy with those brethren who seem to dread disunion among ourselves as the direst of all evils. If we would inspire sensible men around us with a desire for union with us, we must be careful to show them that we do not and will not maintain unity with anything unscriptural, whether it shows itself within our ranks or outside of them. Truth first, union afterward, and union only in the truth. This is our motto."

These are true words, and they need to be repeated many times in these days. If we walk in through the straight gate, and travel in the narrow way, we are united with all who do the same thing. We should not desire to be united with any who walk otherwise. Jesus says, "follow me." All who follow him are in the same company. They teach the same things, they act in the same way. What did Jesus say? How did the Apostles teach and act? These should be the questions.

The divisions that spring up grow out of some departure from the narrow way, some effort to improve upon the things revealed. Then some brother who dreads discord, shouts, "Divisions are dreadful things; let us also adopt this innovation lest there be divisions among us." God forbid! Better be divided from every man in the world, and be right, than to be united to every man in the world at the sacrifice of one single conviction. Jesus expressly says that he came to send divisions; he came to send a sword, not peace, to kindle a fire, and he said he cared not if it were already lighted. We are expressly told to "mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine," and to avoid them. No Christian grows out of neglecting this duty. If men who ruthlessly divide churches by forcing their "expedients" and innovations upon them had been avoided from the beginning, we would now be much freer from the leprosy of schism than we are.

J. A. HARDING.

The above extract is from the Gospel Advocate. It is gratifying indeed to have such "good words and comfortable words" from these distinguished brethren. "Our motto" is an easy solution of a difficult problem, if it be put in practice. Mottoes, however, are more easily formulated than operated, especially when their principles are revolutionary.

The influences brought to bear upon poor weak human nature to hinder the practice of a true principle are both numerous and powerful. The devices of the wicked one are always opposed to the truth, and satan, knowing that a direct denial of the truth would arouse our suspicions as to his true character, comes to us, as he did to mother Eve, with: "Yea, God hath said thou shalt surely die, but he did not mean it."

Tradition and false interpretation make the truth of God of no effect, and when men, inspired with courage, determine to rescue the word of God from the clutches of satan, their efforts are met on every hand by violent opposition, and in the struggle principle is in danger of being swallowed up in human expedients.

What has been the fate of the motto once formulated as the watchword of Protestants: "The Bible and the Bible alone is the religion of Protestants." The answer to this will be a sad commentary on the fidelity of man.

What about the motto of the Elder Campbell: "Where the bible speaks, we speak, where it is silent, we are silent." Ask the pastors, and organists, and society men.

But we are progressing in mottoes, at least, and I believe that the progression is in the right direction. "Our motto" as formulated by Bro. McGarvey, and indorsed by Bro. Harding, is the best of all: "Truth first, union afterwards, and union only in the truth."

True progression is always towards an infallible standard; we have the standard, the truth as it is in Jesus, and it only remains for us to add to our faith courage enough to do what we know to be right.

"What did Jesus say? How did the Apostles teach and act?" Jesus said to those who believed on Him: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—Jo. VIII, 31, 32. John, the beloved Apostle said:—"Look to yourselves that we lose not things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward; whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ he hath both the Father and the Son."—2 Jo. ix, 10.

The seed of the kingdom is the word of God; the word of God is the doctrine of Christ, and the doctrine of Christ is the truth which, by the gospel, is preached unto us. This word of truth works effectually in those who believe it.—Thes. II, 13. Fables and commandments of men turn the people—not to God—but away from the truth, and consequently away from freedom.—Titus I, 14.

There is consistency, harmony and power in the truth. Herein is displayed the wisdom and love of our heavenly Father who has given to us this word of truth that we may be begotten to a new life, (Jas. I, 18,) and made holy.

It is evident, however, that the truth must be preached, believed, and obeyed (1 Pet. i, 22,) in order to be free. This cannot be denied by those who believe the bible to be the book of God.

What one of the denominations preach the truth as it is in Jesus? How many of them teach and practice what the Apostles taught and practiced? And how many of them are abiding in the doctrine of Christ?

"Oh!" says some apologist for human weakness, "they all teach and believe in the Christ-hood of Jesus; that He is an all sufficient Savior and King, and will come again to judge the world.

They are pious and devoted people, zealous of good works, etc; honest and conscientious, and God will certainly bless them in their imperfect obedience.

Human nature is to-day the same as when Jesus walked this earth and taught the people heavenly lessons of wisdom and truth. Then, there were some who believed on Him, but would not confess Him; they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God.—Jo. xii, 42, 43.

Now, many do not confess Him, for the same reason. Many followed Jesus for the loaves and fishes he distributed.—Jo. vi, 26. Just so, now; many think that the kingdom of heaven is meat and drink, and they make merchandise of the work of God.

But space forbids an extension of these examples of the followers or believers in Christ. I do not say that all who now profess to follow Christ (among the sects) are to be classed as above, but that while they profess to follow Jesus, they deny Him by not continuing or abiding in His word. That they are honest I doubt not, but men may honestly believe a lie and act upon it. So these honestly believe the false interpretations of the scripture, the fables of men about church succession, spiritual regeneration, and are turned away from the truth.

Just now we realize the necessity of adhering more closely to the truth as it is in Jesus. Liberalism is flooding the church with her spurious ideas of charity, and many good brethren being deceived thereby are setting themselves forward as apologists and defenders of the doctrines and traditions of men.

Sectism differs from liberalism only in degree. The adherents of either system may profess to believe in Jesus; nay, more, they may do wonderful works in his name, but so long as they deny the authority of His word, and continue not in the teachings and practices of apostles, they are not free.

There was once a "partition wall" separating Jews and Gentiles; it was broken down in order that "the faith" or "the truth" might be revealed, and serve as a bond of union.

Henceforth there was to be no class distinction of any kind whatever, but in the one body all should be one. All were freemen, made free by the truth, bound together by the truth, and sanctified by the truth. Some, however, who came into the one body boasted of the authority, power and excellency of that old "partition wall," the law of Moses, and professed to have received their blessings through it.

Paul condemns them, and demonstrates fully and clearly that only those who are freed by the truth are the children of promise, and heirs of God. See Galatians, third and fourth chapters.

Now, there are hundreds of "partition walls," authoritative creeds, separating the people into distinct bodies commonly called churches. These creeds not only antagonize each other, but are directly opposed to the authority of Jesus the Christ. While they profess to give freedom to man, they bind the hearts and consciences with chains of error and superstition. A great many, however, after learning "the way of the Lord more perfectly," repudiate these human institutions and their "partition walls," and associate themselves with us—the Christians—who acknowledge no authority but that of Jesus, and no rule of faith or practice but the truth as it is in Jesus.

When they come to us, however, some of them still cling to the old partition wall, especially those who have been immersed, and claim that they have obeyed the truth from the heart, and are freemen in the Lord.

To this I object. There is but one narrow way, one straight gate; to enter that way, and, as our brother says above, "if we walk in through the straight gate, and travel in the narrow way, we are united (italics mine) with all who do the same thing." We are not united with the Baptists and other immersed persons, and hence it is conclusive proof that we did not all enter through the same gate. If we are right in our preaching and practice they are wrong, and vice versa.

"Truth first." When they are disposed to repudiate their human institutions and acknowledge the authority of Jesus, let them do as did Jew and Gentile, obey the truth that they may be free; then will we be one indeed.

Why all this controversy about "re-baptism," "valid baptism," etc? Brethren have not the courage to put in practice the principles that they know to be right. It will cause division; some say, if we insist on obedience to the gospel by all who come from the sects. I answer in Bro. Harding's words: "The divisions that spring up grow out of some departure from the narrow way, some effort to improve upon the things revealed. Better be divided from every man in the world and be right, than to be united to every man in the world at the sacrifice of one single conviction."

To this I add an extract or two from an editorial in the Apostolic Guide, No. 37. "However desirable union may be it cannot be purchased at the sacrifice of truth. There is no value in union except on the truth. In all our "union meetings," and things of like nature, the brethren should remember that there are some things more important to the cause of Christ than union with sectarians in any enterprise whatever, and that is the unadulterated truth of God."

The church is the pillar and support of the truth, and we should not compromise that truth by admitting into its fellowship persons claiming to have been pardoned without obedience. Truth first, last, and all the time. How is the world to be freed from the tyranny of human creeds? By the truth. But how can truth succeed in breaking down these partition walls so long as our brethren will patch up the breaches made in it, and apologize for having "hit so hard?"

If the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and others are human institutions, they are so by virtue of their respective human creeds. The authority upon which they are based is human authority, and is opposed to the authority of Jesus. Obedience to their creeds (and remember, the creed makes the preacher, and he preaches the creed), is obedience to human authority. Such obedience does not "make free," no matter how well satisfied the person may be with it, and when they learn the truth as it is in Jesus, and wish to unite with us, they should be requested to obey the truth.

I pray that we may all learn more of the truth; that we may be more earnest and zealous in preaching the truth, and above all, that we may more diligently and faithfully practice the truth; if we continue thus we will be one in Christ.

A SHORT RECESS,

BUT TO BE FOLLOWED BY A MORE DETERMINED EFFORT FOR THE MAINTAINANCE OF TRUTH.

No. 12 of THE FIRM FOUNDATION will not be published till some time in September. When we commenced the work last September we did not contemplate its extension beyond one year; but there has been such a marked and rapid declination, on the part of other papers, from scriptural and tenable attitudes then occupied by them, and such a fierce and vehement opposition by them, against the surrender of humanistic parts of "our plea" which marks "SECT" with such an indelible impress upon that "plea," that we have determined to cooperate with other brethren in fixing THE FIRM FOUNDATION as a weekly paper, upon a permanent basis.

There has been a very general request on the part of our readers for this course. We appeal to these good brethren who have stood by the work so nobly and bravely while it was struggling into its present hopeful aspect against all of the wicked adjuncts that belong to false theories, or that sectism, hate and spite could invent, to redouble their energies for the work while it is making more determined efforts to stem the flood of popular sectism and outride the storms whose mad waves are capped with the infamous calumny that only false and cowardly brethren employ.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION will do uncompromising battle for unadulterated truth—truth as it is in Jesus—in the spirit of love for that truth! It has been urged against the pamphlet, by weak-kneed and time-serving deserters from the army of the faith, that it "fights too much." Yes, it does fight, and aims to fight. It was born in war times, and of the very spirit of conflict! When the day of peace arrives; when the time for the "sword" to be sheathed comes, then and not till then does THE FIRM FOUNDATION propose to retire from the field. There will be no place for it when the fight is over; the soft places, the "flowery beds of ease" will all be taken up by those papers that are now bartering away their columns to mounte bank advertisers, and selling their conscience for such amounts as they can make in the publication of Sunday School literature, etc.

The contributors and readers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION want no peace purchased at the cost of one jot or tittle of "the law of the spirit of life." They are determined to war to the very hilt of "the sword" for the faith once delivered to the saints. Yet, our war is not "against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

But because we do not "conform to the world," by decorating our words with a cloak of flattery, and by diluting our language with an admixture of what the world calls politeness and charity, till they have no point or force in them, we are adjudged a disturber of the peace of zion, a mischievous fellow.

Yes, we are in for a fight, but it is "the good fight of faith" that we want THE FIRM FOUNDATION to engage in—that "fight" that the old soldier Paul said he had been doing when "the time of his departure was at hand." Brethren, we have a record of Paul's "fighting. He did not cater to the demand for "easy things," as the tender footed soldiery of the rank and file of the army of modern progress want done to-day.

Paul says that when he went to Thessalonica "we were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention. For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile, but as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts."

How would those wise teachers be able to stand the scathing rebuke that Paul would give them, were he here now, for teaching that it is not necessary to believe what he and his fellow apostles said when they taught that baptism was for the remission of sins? How could they stand before the grand old apostle, in the face of their writings, designed by them to repudiate confession with the mouth as a "ritual that need not be gone through with"? Yes, how could they, when he said that it was part of the "faith we preach"?

Brethren, these deceivers are truly "waxing worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." But we must "continue in the things we have learned and have been assured of, knowing of whom we have learned them".

Yeal though all the wise men of "our plea"—"this reformation"—stand in solid phalanx and blend their stento-rian voices in our mighty acclaim against "confession as a ritual to be gone through with every time," let us remember of whom we learned it to be a part of the faith preached by Paul and his associate "saints," to whom it was delivered to be preached, and for which we are told to earnestly contend.—See Rom. x, 8, 9, 10, and Jude III.

It is not enough with these time-servers that they sanction a denial of what Christ and His apostles said when they appointed baptism as the appointment of heaven, for the remission of sins. We say it is not enough for them to say persons may go down into the water of immersion, denying the words of inspiration as to its design, and yet be honoring God; But, seeing that "the good confession" stands in their unholy and rebellious way they lay unrighteous hands on it and seek to sever it from things with which God has joined it!

THE FIRM FOUNDATION desires to live to protest against these ungodly outrages against the faith, and to inculcate the holy doctrine from the first step in the direction of this faith to its grand consummation.

Yes, we want to contend for the whole ground of faith. Nothing can be spared from God's appointments without detriment to the faith.

A. MCG.

THE SCRIPTURAL HEART.

Many have never fully comprehended the scriptural import of the term heart. It is a comprehensive term.

1. David said Israel had more than heart could wish.—Psalm, LXXIII, 7.

2. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.—Matt. XII, 34.

3. When they heard this they were cut to the heart.—Acts II, 37. Also Psalm CXIX, 14.

4. Thoughts of his heart were evil.—Gen. VI, 5. Mary pondered in her heart.—Luke II, XIX. Let the meditations of my heart, etc.—Psalm XIX, 14.

5. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness.—Rom. x, 10.

6. Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart.—Deut. VI, 5.

7. These words shall be in thy heart.—Deut. VI, 6.

8. The people understand with the heart.—Matt. XIII, 15.

9. Obeys from the heart.—Rom. VI, 17.

We conclude, therefore, that the scriptural heart in its comprehensive import, includes all of these capabilities, and hence the statement that the hearts of the gentiles were purified by faith, does not mean faith alone, but faith as an active principle ever present in the successive steps into Christ. These successive steps are speaking, hearing, thinking, understanding remembering, believing, loving, and obeying. Therefore, in the acceptance of God's system of justification, which is consummated by obedience, the heart is changed or purified.

My dear reader has your heart been purified by faith?

J. S. D.

SOME WHOLESOME WORDS FROM
ELDER JACOB CREATH.

RELIGIOUS FEELINGS ARE SUB-
STITUTED FOR FAITH
AND OBEDIENCE.

EDITORS OF THE ADVOCATE:—We do not question the work of the Holy Spirit as taught in the Acts of the Apostles; we only question the teaching of the modern sects on this subject. Christians must sleep the greater part of their time, and wake up once and awhile and rub their eyes and bluster about and co-operate, and then fall to sleep again, like a sleepy child. There is a state of religious society far preferable to these periodical excitements. It is that discussed in Acts II, from verse 41 to 47. They that received Peter's words were immersed; and they continued steadfastly in the Apostles teaching, and so on throughout the book of Acts and the epistles.

All the fables told by the Papists to prove that Romanism is the gospel as preached by the Apostles in Acts II, become falsehoods, because the Apostles preached in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost and not in Rome. This applies to all the protestant sects as well as to the Papists. If your isms is not the gospel preached by the Apostles in Acts II, then all the truths you tell to prove that truth, becomes falsehoods. Then the sample of this revival—of this sermon and church forbids all other revivals.

I now ask all the leaders and teachers

of these spasmodic revivals, did you ever in one instance return the answer to your converts that the Holy Spirit did to these 3,000 converts? Did you do it? If you were to do it would you not lose your standing with your sects, and probably be called to an account for doing it? Now, let me tell you, if a man tells eleven truths to prove one falsehood and he fails to prove the falsehood a truth, these eleven truths in that connection and told for that purpose, become a falsehood.

Let us notice some of the features of the revivals in the 2nd of Acts. 1st. And it was the fulfillment of prophecy; Joel II. 2nd. It was the promise of Christ.—Acts I, 4, 6. You shall be immersed with the Holy Spirit not many days hence. Does many days hence mean 1835? Where are the wild fires that have been called immersion in the Holy Spirit for 1835? 3d. It was the promise of the Father.—Luke XXIV, 49; Acts I, 4, 5. 4th. It came upon the 120 disciple believers; now these modern falsely called immersions of the Holy Spirit come upon the unbelievers to produce faiths of different kinds. 5th. The outpouring in Acts II, was visible, that which you now see, these sectarian outpourings are invisible. 6th. The outpouring and immersion in Acts 2, was audible, that which you hear speaking in all the languages then present, seventeen. What language do these sectarian converts speak in? These revival of feelings begin in one sect and end in them.

ple of coins thereby forbids all counterfeits, and if a dollar has one letter too many or too few, it is a counterfeit and the possessor of it is arrested as a passer of counterfeit money. The revivalists are as bad as the thief. If A owes B a guinea and gets deceived and takes a copper for a guinea, I will not take the copper for the guinea, because A took it for one. God will not take our errors for obedience to His ordinances. All sectarian preaching, sects and revivals are forbidden by the sample we have in Acts II, as certainly as if God had said you shall not have them. Apostolic examples for these revivals are as good as apostolic precepts. We are forbidden by Acts to pardon sins by faith alone. We are forbidden to pour or sprinkle water on any person who has not faith alone.

We are constrained through love of the cause of our Redeemer, and fidelity to the faith He delivered to His called and sent apostles and saints, to make a personal application of these very cogent words from the pen of Elder Jacob Creath. We recognize the Elder's words as pure speech, metal that has the gospel ring. They are true, as the gospel is true. Being true, and the ripest fruitage of the Elder's deepest rooted cogitations, he, of course, is as triable by them as any one else.

We are sure the Elder could give no valid reason for excluding his logic and truth from the radius of their own emanation. The old as well as the young may be mistaken. If they sow and cultivate to the flesh, they, too, will reap corruption. God is no respecter of persons. Without faith—the "one faith"—it is impossible to please God.

Though one may consecrate his whole life, from the dawning day of responsibility to the very verge of decrepitude's grave, yea, and even then give his body to be burned for a human plea, it will profit him nothing. It is the truth as it is in Jesus that gives vantage ground to the soul—that truth must be heard, believed and obeyed.

Being immersed in water gives no efficacy to previously inculcated and received error. No such power was ever vested in water, save by the fanatical advocates for a human "plea." Conscientiousness avails nothing so long as it stands against truth.

A man might eat sawdust, conscientiously believing it to be wholesome diet, but this would not lessen its deleterious results to his system. So with a man who hears error, believes it and obeys it in good conscience. He may be immersed in water, under the most solemn sound of the most awful formula that lips can give vent to, and yet that error remains the same. Christ did not authorize the immersion of the ignorant. He said, "go teach all nations, baptizing them, (the taught). They went under that instruction and taught and baptized. Did they not teach in the gospel they preached that baptism was for the remission of sins? If they had taught that sins were remitted on faith alone, and that baptism was a non-essential, would they have taught what He sent them to teach?

If Peter had taught, as he did, to "be baptized for the remission of sins," and Paul had taught that sins were remitted before baptism, that baptism was only an outward sign of an inward grace, and that Peter was preaching "water salvation," but that baptism must be complied with "to honor God," would they have been preaching the same gospel? Would both have been preaching the truth? Would they have been "uniting" their converts in the same mind and in the same judgment? Would both have been guided by the same Spirit—the Holy Spirit? Would they have been advocating the same baptism—the "one baptism?" If so, then the efficacy is solely in the water!

We urge the attention of the Elder and those who hold with him to a human plea, to the consideration of these questions. If these two doctrines could not have been propagated in the days of the apostles, by the same spirit, how can they now? If Peter had preached baptism for the remission of sins, and Paul had denied that baptism was for the remission of sins, and both had been, in such preaching, guided by the same spirit, then the spirit would have been contradicting itself!

"We are all baptized by one spirit into one body," (that is, all who get into the "one body.") The only way that we are baptized by the spirit is by its directions. Can any one suggest any other way that the spirit has ever baptized persons into the "one body?" If not, where are its directions? If the teachings of the apostles are its directions, and teaching is antecedent—preparatory to baptism, then we ask, is the spirit guiding those who are hearing and believing a contradiction of its words uttered through the apostles?

Can it, in justice to the sacrificed Nazarene, be said that the "Spirit has baptized into the one body" that class who went to immersion under the guidance of teachers who vehemently contradict its words, voiced by apostles? No, brethren, the thought is impious! It is only that wicked spirit that would exalt "our plea" above the way bound in earth and heaven that can entertain such blasphemous doctrines of men.

The man who maintains that persons who have been immersed are in Christ, whether they believed what the apostles said about the design of baptism or not, or whether they made the good confession or not, occupy the attitude that it matters not what kind of seed is sown, just so the soil is good.

Christ, in one of His most beautiful parables, represented His preachers under the figure of sowers of seed. The soil He represented by the human heart, and the seed by the word of truth. But these "our plea" fanatics would have us believe that there is nothing in the seed. Yes, with them it is "go preach or teach Methodism, Bapticism, Episcopalianism, Presbyterianism, Mormonism, or any other ism, just so you duck them; "our plea is broad enough for all such!"

Yes, sow the seeds of all of these noxious weeds of discord and division, these pernicious branches or offshoots from the great Romish harlot, this bedlam of human tradition and commandments of men, water levels them all upon "our plea!" It matters not what is sown, enough water makes all alike, christians! Now, why will Elder Creath "question the teaching of the modern sects?" Why does he not narrow the controversy down to the action of baptism? If it only takes immersion to make christians, then it is worse than folly to waste time and embitter feelings over points upon which nothing essential hinges.

The only authorized work of Christ is to make disciples, baptize them into His body, and teach them how to live as christians. If this can be done by "sowing" any kind of seed, just so it brings forth immersion, then, in heavens name, in the name of peace, why not cease the agitation of "non-essential" points? Let each sow the seed of his own choice.

Why does the Elder want to know of these sectarian teachers, "teachers of these spasmodic revivals," if they ever in one instance returned the answer to their converts that the Holy Spirit did to the 3,000 at Pentecost? Why should they do so if it makes no difference whether they hear or understand it? Will this gray headed sire of the reformation give us a little light right here? We would be highly pleased to have it. We would ask the Elder if this answer was given to him when he was made a convert Baptist? And if it was, we would ask him if he was "baptized for the remission of sins?" We would further ask him if he made the "good confession" which Paul says was part of the faith he preached? If he did not, and yet is in Christ, why does he labor so hard to impress these truths and appointments on others since he got into Christ without knowing or doing them?

God is no respecter of persons. Hence, if the Elder found his way into Christ while he was disbelieving the preaching of the apostles, others may too. Then preach the popular doctrines of the day, only insisting on immersion "to honor God," and not for the remission of sins. This course will broaden the grounds of union out to more popular bounds.

The man who entertains the views expressed above, can not, in good conscience, advocate the acceptance of sectarians on their immersion any more than two bodies can occupy the same space at the same time! We could make out a strong case of inconsistency against the Elder by taking up, in detail, the many points that obtrude themselves with such marked palpability out of these words of his; but, as this is already growing lengthy, we will select only a few, leaving our readers to make their own application of the others.

The Elder, in contrasting what he calls "the wild fires that have been called immersion in the Holy Spirit," with that which really was immersion in the Holy Spirit, very appositely contrasts the characteristics of the one with the characteristics of the other.

terfeit of real Holy Spirit baptism, for as certain as it is that like causes produce like results, so certain is it that unlike results are traceable to unlike causes. Well, as this is a most forcible way to expose the fallacy of counterfeit "Holy Spirit baptism," why may we not, with equal propriety, resort to it to expose bogus water baptism?

Will the Elder and those who coincide with him in denying Christ in favor of a human plea, permit us to disprove the validity of sect immersion by his logic? Or will they be like the lawyer, "the case being altered, alters the case?" Now, when we contrast the characteristics of that baptism authorized by our Savior, as found in His commission given to those He chose and sent with the terms of reconciliation, with any of the bogus baptisms, or immersions practiced by the sectarian bodies, called churches, we find as great a disparity between them as the Elder has found to exist between real Holy Spirit baptism, or immersion, and "the wild fires that have been called immersion in the Holy Spirit."

Hence, we feel fully justified, as well by the Elder's logic as by all rules for the acquisition of truth, to pronounce sect baptism a nullity. Then have we not the same right to repudiate that which differs from the divine in water baptism, as bogus and invalid, that the Elder has to repudiate that which differs from the divine in Holy Spirit baptism, as counterfeit—"wild fires?"

If it is true, as the Elder says, (and we are not disposed to call it in question)

"that eleven truths told to prove one falsehood, become untrue because of their connection and purpose," what is to become of the few truths connected with the many falsehoods, and told to substantiate the legion of lies that perpetuates the great anti-Christ of sectarianism? Does a certain action in water correct them all? If, as the Elder says, the great revival of Pentecost forbids all other revivals unlike it, then what becomes of the converts made under the preaching of Baptist doctrine, a doctrine requiring the contradiction of the design that Peter gave to baptism, and the doctrine under which the Elder was immersed? Does water render valid the "eleven falsehoods?" (we might say eleven hundred)?

If, as the Elder says, "God will not take our errors for obedience to His ordinances," and if all "sectarian preaching, sects and revivals are forbidden by the sample we have in Acts II, as certainly as if God had said you shall not have them," then we ask what becomes of the Elders conversion to Baptist teaching, which is as unlike Peter's apostolic teaching as night is unlike day? Does a certain action in water render things differing as broadly as Apostolic and Baptist teaching, one and the same? Oh, Elder! let me persuade you to practice what you preach—go to work on the beam in your own eye. Let me urge upon you the necessity of subjecting all things to Christ, neither immersing those who have not heard and believed the gospel that He sent the Apostles into all the world to preach, nor recognizing as scripturally baptized, those who have been immersed by others while in a different frame of mind or heart.

Elder Creath, far be it from the intention of the writer to offend you. I respect your age, and greatly admire the zeal and ability that you have bestowed upon a cause that you feel you owe your consecration to. But as you are standing upon Pisgah's top, near the Jordan of death, I desire to impress you with the importance of removing every cause that might hinder your entrance into the promised land.

Oh! how gladly Moses would have embraced the opportunity that is yours, but he could not. You can. Do you say you are too old? Or do you look back to your pioneer comrades and measure yourself by them? Noble men they were, but where in that word which you and they have so often said was "a sufficient rule of faith and practice," do you find authority for accepting, in the name of Christ, an immersion whose antecedents are different from what He authorized?

He who baptizes, or recognizes as baptized, those who hear and believe the gospel that the apostles preached, "abideth in the doctrine of Christ." He who recognizes a baptism differing from this, dishonors the teaching of apostles, and hath neither the Father nor the Son.

That gospel is the recorded discourses by the apostles to be found in the book of their "acts." Elder, I beseech you, in the love and fear of God, to "finish your course by examining yourself and see if you are in the faith." Never cease till the spirit bears witness with your spirit that you are a child of God. Then fight the good fight of faith the residue of your days. Thus finish your course, and you will be sure to receive the crown of righteousness.

WHY IS IT SO?

Years ago, when all seemed eager to know the truth, and to tread the scriptural pathway, the brethren were quite a loving band, and when editors and scribes differed, they searched the scriptures diligently to find the truth, and generally kept in good temper in the face of the severest test of criticism. As a result the truth was generally found and embraced. Under these circumstances primitive christianity prospered.

Laterly, however, quite a different state of affairs exists. It now seems almost impossible for many brethren to examine any subject with the sole view of learning the truth. We can now scarcely expect a manly and christian discussion of any point of difference in a loving and patient spirit.

When we oppose each other, the purpose seems to be to destroy and kill, and as a consequence our writings tend to wound and offend. Why is it so? I will venture a solution. We were once eager to escape from Babylon, and readily seized every scriptural thought that aided in this object. We are now falling backward to the burning and falling city.

May we arouse from our lethargy, and with the glistening sword of the spirit move forward, conquering and to conquer.

ONE BAPTISM.

BY JAMES L. THORNBERRY.

Paul, 4th chapter Eph., says, there is one faith and one baptism. All agree that the one faith is scripturally expressed thus: "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God."

Well, all who are bible men say that faith is expressed in John, 17th chapter, when Christ prays for "all who believe on Him through their (the apostles) word."

We bible men say there is only one way to believe—that is, with all the heart. And the evidence of bible faith is, it leads to sorrow for sin, so as to reform one's life so as to lead one to publicly put on Christ in immersion.

All bible men say this is right, and there is only one faith. But what about the one baptism? All bible men say Christ's command to baptize is filled "when a truly converted one is buried with Christ in immersion, and raised up into a new state and life. Some may say some other mode will do, but all bible men will say my definition fills the bill.

Now, the question, can such converted one be immersed into Christ but once in life? I say not; and to reimmerse such I think not only playing in the water—but a sin.

Then, all truly penitent believers in Christ who are thus immersed "are in Christ, and have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins," or, if not, the bible fails. Then, I say, to redip such believers is not only silly nonsense, but a sin, for it is saying that an honest doing of one of Christ's commands is a failure.

Nothing can invalidate obedience to Christ in baptism but the want of faith on the part of the subject. The bible requires faith in Christ as above. That is, I believe that Christ is the son of God.

The disqualification of the administrator can not vitiate the obedience of the believer if unknown to Him. So, then, a true believer who has been immersed by Baptist, Methodist, or Presbyterian, I receive on the bible in faith in our union plea.

When one from a sect church comes to unite on the bible, I say to such, have you been immersed? This settled, then I say, were you converted a true believer in Christ when immersed?

If the answer is yes, then I say, leave sect creeds and opinions behind and stand with us on the bible.

But some of my earnest, good brethren say, unless the subject believe that baptism is for the remission of sins the baptism is invalid.

Now, I say the phrase, baptism for the remission of sins, is not bible. Still, Peter said to believers, repent and be baptized for the remission of sins.

But he gave two conditions. Repent and be baptized. They were believers. Then it is faith, repentance and baptism, all.

I prefer bible style, and to say, "obedience to the faith—that is, obedience to the gospel for remission of sins." This covers the whole ground, and does not put too much stress on any one command. If my brethren, or some of them, were not afraid I should be a leader in thought, and would not be jealous, and be humble enough in my honesty and want of honor due, I could show them many things.

But I am made ashamed when Jews, gentiles, sects, and good brethren say to me, "your talents and toils are neither acknowledged or rewarded."

Do, brethren, take this reproach off of yourselves and christiandy. Please do. In Christ.

GEORGETOWN, Ky., May, 1885.

Bro. Thornberry, like all who advocate this unauthorized practice, has made up his case wholly of assumption. The very ground in dispute has been passed over by him without giving the real issue even a passing notice.

He says: "Now, the question, can such converted one be immersed into Christ but once in life? I say not; and to re-immersed such I think not only playing in the water but a sin." So say we. And there is another way to "play in water," and that is to immerse persons who do not know what it is being done for! This is a very common "play," and we are very sorry to see old brethren, who ought to be more dignified, become parties to such frivolous "playing," by winking at it. We say that persons can't be immersed into Christ but once in life, and that they can't be that time unless they believe the gospel preached by the apostles.

We don't know which of our brethren are afraid of Bro. Thornberry's becoming a leader in thought." Very likely some are, for we have some who are watchful of those who think for themselves.

Will say to Bro. Thornberry that if he will prove his position on this question we will accord to him the name of "leader in thought" among his coadjutors, and will forever afterwards confer all of the honor, upon him possible, from our mean station.

LETTER FROM BROTHER STONE.

LAPORTE, IND., June 11, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I again take my pen to write a few lines for THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

There are so many things that our people never knew, or have forgotten, that some one needs to stir up their minds, either by way of remembrance, or by instruction. And perhaps I might as well say now, as well as at any time, that I fear that we have in our ranks too many Campbellites.

Now, I don't mean to say that Bro. Campbell was not a great and good man, but, coming as he did, out of secedom, it was hardly to be expected that he would throw that all away at once. We all know now that the church is wonderfully confused, if not to say divided.

We now have many congregations, as well as many individuals and preachers, who are acknowledging and practicing many things that the sects do. Their idea seems to be that all who claim to be christians should unite their forces without uniting their faith, and all work together.

This, I think, a dangerous experiment, for this reason: if you undertake to work with any of them you must do one of two things. You must either admit their false teachings, or else you must suppress the truth. If you do not do the one or the other, they will not work with you at all. Now, no honest person can afford to do either. It is an act of disloyalty to Christ to withhold the truth, or to acknowledge falsehoods.

One trouble is, that too many are willing to risk the opinions of others, and therefore do not read enough to know the truth for themselves. Just so I fear that too many trusted to Bro. Campbell, and took all he said for granted. And I believe he mistakenly planted the seeds of dissolution in the reformation at the beginning.

The first, and perhaps the greatest mistake, was the receiving of persons from the sects simply on the ground that they had been immersed. Immersion never made anyone a christian simply and alone. Without the faith which comes by hearing the word of God, (the truth) genuine repentance and confession of Christ, baptism amounts to nothing. Many persons were received into the fellowship who did not believe that faith comes by hearing the word of God; who never had confessed the Lord Jesus with the mouth, and who retained many of their sectarian ideas, and who still believed in getting religion, or receiving some great miraculous gift from heaven.

All such would naturally believe that others had received this same wonderful gift, and notwithstanding they still remained among the various sects, were good christians. This, I think, Bro. Campbell believed, and I know that hundreds among us now believe. I know that this is about the religion of thousands, but it is a mere deception. It is religion, but not christianity. This is one thing that has created so much confusion in the church. This is the source whence most of the innovations have come.

Now, I have said that I believe that Bro. Campbell made the mistake here, and in order to show why I believe so I will quote from him a few sentences. I take the quotations from an article published in the Church Union, a paper published in New York, January 15, 1885. The Church Union quotes from the Millennial Harbinger of 1837. The article is a long one, so that I can only quote a few full sentences.

Campbell says: "But who is a christian? I answer, everyone that believes in his heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, the son of God, repents of his sins, and obeys Him in all things according to his measure of knowledge, etc." This implies that we may obey according to our own idea of right. If, then, we do what we think God requires, whether we are correct or not, God will accept the will for the deed. This really sets aside God's law, and makes our will supreme.

Now, this is the idea to-day of all sectarians and Campbellites. Again, Bro. Campbell says, "Should I find a Pedo-Baptist more intelligent in the christian scriptures, more spiritually minded, and more devoted to the Lord than a Baptist, or one immersed on a profession of the ancient faith, I could not hesitate a moment in giving the preference of my heart to him who loveth most."

Now, what does he say here? Why, that if he should find one who had been sprinkled for baptism, but who was more intelligent in the christian scriptures, and who was more devoted to the Lord than one who had obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered, or who had been immersed on a profession of the ancient faith, that he preferred the sprinkled individual in his heart. Equivalent to saying, I believe that a sprinkled individual may be a christian and entitled to my brotherly love.

This clearly gives away all else that he ever said on the subject of obedience to God. This is simply Campbellism, and has no truth in it. Every well informed christian must repudiate it.

After arguing on a little further he says, "There is no occasion then for making immersion of faith absolutely essential to a christian, though it may be greatly essential to his sanctification and comfort."

If he had made that statement in his debate with N. L. Rice, where would all his arguments on baptism have gone? I have made these quotations to show that we need not depend on uninspired men, and that many of our present troubles are the legitimate outgrowth of dreadful mistakes made by some of the inaugurators of this reformation.

Our experience ought to give us the advantage, and we ought now to throw aside every weight and stand squarely on the truth. How are we to compromise the truth? Can truth and falsehood be mixed? If we admit that people can be saved without understanding and obeying the truth, then certainly the truth is of no practical value.

If people can substitute opinion for faith, and God will accept them, then faith is worthless. Are there any so blind as not to see this? Is it so, that if faith comes by hearing the word of God, that one may have faith without receiving the intelligence that the word is intended to convey? How can faith be hold on things not understood? Will some one give an example?

That individual who is sprinkled for baptism, whence his faith? From heaven, or of men? Will God accept such faith? I think not. Campbell seemed to think he would; so, too, many think now; but the thought is vain, or truth cuts no figure at all in the salvation of men.

But this article is already long enough, and I must close, wishing you success in the defense of the truth.

My daughter also sends a short communication to your paper, which you will find inclosed.

I. C. STONE.

A BAPTIST, NOT A CHRISTIAN.

"I have just had a conversation with Bro. W. W. Carter, who has recently left us and gone to the Baptists. He gives no definite reason for the step he has taken, but claims that he has contemplated a change for some time. I am glad he has gone from us, and hope if we have others who feel as he does, that they will do likewise.

No man can succeed in working with a people with whom he is dissatisfied. I hope Bro. Carter will do a good work among the Baptists. They did much in preparing the way for the reformation of the nineteenth century, as John the Baptist prepared the way for Christ. If I were not a Christian I would be a Baptist."

The above we clip from the so-called Apostolic Guide, but such words as these, which seem to bear the approval of that "Guide," show conclusively that it has no right whatever to the name it wears. The apostles never guided into such contradictory meshes.

Such "Guiding" as this originated in and is perpetuated by those Guides who are blind—blinded by the god of this world—who not only fall into the ditch themselves, but cause all whom they lead to do likewise.

We do not know who the author of these words is; it is not necessary, as it is an editorial. He voices the common sentiment of that class of brethren who are, Ephraim like, wedded to their idol—a human plea for the union of all in one body—not the one built upon the "one foundation," however.

Their vernacular in common bears the impression of Ashdod. It sticketh close to them. They must wear it so long as they have a humanism to defend.

Give ear to this one, oh ye advocates for union with Baptists! "If I were not a Christian I would be a Baptist!" Oh, consistency! hast thou fled from these benighted zealots, and hidest thou thy holy face in shame while they outrage thee!

His line of demarkation between a "Christian" and a "Baptist" is here broadly and deeply laid. But the "plea" that he and his coadjutors make to the distracted religious world proposes to eradicate this deep laid mark and barrier by a shake of the hand! Where is to be found divine authority for this efficacious shake? Give us the chapter and verse that says it, or that even hints at it, and we will forever advocate it with all the fervor of our soul.

"Baptists" and Christians" are very different until these brethren come, by rote, to their stereotyped sermons on "Christian Union," or till they find themselves called upon to defend a practice inaugurated by worldly wisdom; then all who have been immersed "to honor god," are "Christians!!"

To say that "if I were not a Christian I would be a Baptist," in the connection that this light of the Apostolic Guide has said it, is equivalent to saying that one cannot be a Baptist and a Christian at one and the same time. So much for the consistency of the Apostolic Guide.

We ask our readers to weigh well what he has said about the "Baptists preparing the way for the nineteenth century reformation." It seems that he sees as much fitness in the existence of the Baptists as forerunners of the "reformation of the nineteenth century" as he sees in John's appearance before Christ.

But, as John was to "decrease" and Christ "increase" if the Baptists occupy precisely the attitude to the "reformation of the nineteenth" that John did to Christ, which seems to be the theory of the Apostolic Guide, then, how can this Bro., W. W. Carter, turn away from this "reformation" and back to that which should decrease, and at the same time be doing "good," as this editorial of the Guide hopes he will do?

To "hope" a thing is to regard it possible. When Christ's time to increase and John's time to decrease came, could one possibly have been doing good by turning back to John? Brethren, these words of the Guide are only some more of the diction and twaddle of Ashdod.

We are sorry for that class of our brethren whose minds have become so muddled that they can't really see the inconsistent and untenable attitudes that the theology of Bethany, Virginia, Lexington, Kentucky, and other pastor manufacturing institutions had inveigled them into.

Many of these brethren labor with a zeal and conscientiousness worthy of a better cause than that of a human plea. Though they have never seen a written, formulated exhibit of the human creed that has shackled them with its unyielding bands, they are none the less victims to such a creed than those who have in their libraries and avow allegiance to "disciplines," confessions of faith, etc., other than the bible.

The leaders of this human plea have a common argument for those who cannot conscientiously come into line under the exactions of their plea in full. That argument is to cry "hobby! extremist!" etc., at everyone who dares to call in question their right to do, in the name of Christ, what no inspired man ever did or even ever hinted at—legislate where God left off.

A. MCG.

"NICE THINGS."

"We have put a nice baptistery into our house of worship, at a cost of $15.

Last Lord's day we immersed three candidates in it, in the presence of a large audience. It is so much better to have a nice pool of water in the house of worship than to have to go to these muddy and filthy ponds. It is true, we have no "thus saith the Lord" for a baptistery, or organ, or bell, yet we find them useful and expedient, and therefore under the law we introduce and use them to the much benefit of the congregation."

The above extract I clip from the Mission Department of the Apostolic Guide, of June 12. One of the positions formerly taken by the advocates of immersion, was that the parties repaired to the water, instead of bringing the water to them. This has been considered one of the strong arguments in favor of immersion. It will have to be abandoned however by all advocates for "a nice pool of water, in a nice house of worship."

One would very naturally conclude that in reach of Bro. Creels' work there are nothing but muddy and filthy ponds. Is this so, Bro. Creel? How easy it would be to obey Christ if something nice greeted us from every avenue of approach into His Kingdom! If "it is so much better" for one pool of water to be made nicer than another, then the niciest house, the niciest bell, the niciest organ, the niciest pastor, the niciest people, the niciest choir, are useful expedients that must be urged and introduced "to the much benefit of every congregation."

It is true we have no "thus saith the Lord" for these things, but then you know they are useful and expedient. In the mean time, why not have the niciest and most attractive cushioned mourner's bench imaginable? To change the monotony of appearances, flags could be occasionally erected on them. This would be so nice and attractive.

Would it not be a good idea too, to have an improvement added to these nice baptisteries, in the way of a heater, so as to render the temperature of the water very nice on a cold winter day: It is so trying on one's constitution to have to break the ice, or even to go into cold water. Could it not be used also to the much benefit of the congregation?

Would it not be nice then to immerse candidates in the presence of large audiences?

J. S. D.

"A GENEROUS CITIZEN."

We copy the following words from Bro. J. T. Smith, in the Christian Standard, of June 20.

"A generous citizen of Omaha, Nebraska, has offered a lot and one thousand dollars to build a mission church in that city. Such men are tending toward the kingdom. The Lord loves a cheerful giver."

This last clause in reference to aliens is misleading. It occurs in Paul's 2nd Letter to the church of God, at Corinth, 9th chapter, and 7th verse, and is spoken of Christians.

While sinners live in disobedience, there should be given no such palliations. It is deceptive. God's love toward the world was manifested in the gift of His Son, and the establishment through Him of the remedial system.

The sinner's first duty is to obey the Gospel. Then he is in duty bound to advance the Master's cause as much as his ability will permit.

J. S. D.

LETTER FROM SISTER STONE.

LAPORTE, IND., June 10, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I can remain silent no longer. I must speak out and let Sister Sarah, and the rest of the sisterhood, know that I heartily endorse every word that she has written upon the subject of christian women's dress. I have given this subject much serious thought, and think it very sinful to dress as extravagantly as some do.

I have many times been pained to see the coolness with which the poor sisters of congregations were met with by the wealthier ones, and have oftentimes wondered how the sister that wore the fine silk dress, gold watch and chain, and heavy gold bracelets around her white arms could go home on Lord's-day evening and hang her rich dress away and turn the lock on her elegant jewelry, and then pray, "Father forgive us our trespasses as we would forgive those that trespass against us; and we would ask thee, Holy Father, to bless the widow and the orphan, and all those that are in distressed circumstances, either in body or mind, etc;" or do such christians ever pray?

Now, dear sisters, if any of you

whose eyes may chance to read these lines, are guilty of the foregoing, let me plead with you to lay aside your idols and never look back to them with regret, but keep your face heavenward, and with both hands cling to the cross.

Oh! if I could only say something that would cause every sister who reads these lines to pause and think that she helps to constitute the bride, the lamb's wife, and ask herself "am I as pure as I ought to be?"

What is more beautiful than a lovely bride arrayed in a snowy white robe, and how careful she is to keep her robe unsoiled till the bridegroom comes.

Oh! how much more careful ought the lamb's bride be to keep her robe spotless until the appearing of the bridegroom, that she may present herself to him as he desired she should, a glorious church, (bride) not having spot or wrinkle, or any such things, but holy and without blemish.

Then, dear sisters, as we always represent the bride in the fleshly sense, and as mother Eve was in the transgression, and caused so much of the sin and folly abroad in our land, let us christian women of the present generation try to reform and purify the church, which is taking up all the frivolous and ridiculous fashions of the world, thereby excluding the poor from the worship of God.

Go sell your golden idols and provide the poor sister of your congregation with decent clothes in which to appear at the Lord's house, and encourage her to come. Tell her that you have chosen whom you will serve, and it is the God of the universe, and all you that have sufficient knowledge go to preaching, (behind the pulpit).

Go spend the afternoon with sister L or sister K, and tell them what you have decided to do, and plead with them to help you. Refer them to 1st Timothy, II, 9; 1st Peter, III, 4; also, James II, 10, and tell her that

“Not one precept nor one promise,
From God’s word shall pass away;
All shall be fulfilled in Jesus;
Each command we must obey.”

And, sisters, all of you turn as many of the gilt-edged leaves of your family bible each day as you possibly can. Do not allow them to become dust-covered and forgotten, and do remember as you read that it is your God talking with you, and also remember that He will talk with you in the hereafter, and if you refuse to live up to His requirements here you will have no chance to obey Him there. It will be too late.

There will be no chance to reply to His “Depart from me, etc.”

Oh! then let me urge you once more before I close to be up and doing while it is day, for the night will come in the which our labors must cease, and we go to be judged out of the very book that I have been exhorting you to read.

I read the FIRM FOUNDATION and hand it to my neighbors. How many of you who read it do likewise? If you have not done so heretofore, begin with this number. No matter whether they are members of the church of Christ or not; hand it to members of human organizations, and help them to see the light of the glorious gospel of the son of God.

Bro. McGary I send with this the first dollar I ever earned (did some sewing for a lady acquaintance) to help support the FIRM FOUNDATION, and long may you live to wield the “sword of the spirit,” for you and some of your contributors wield it vigorously. But I see the waste basket, so I will close.

Blessed Savior,

“May we love Thee more and more,
Till this fleeting life is o’er;
Till our souls are lost in love,
In a brighter world above.

Till with pure hands and voices sweet,
We cast our crown at Jesus’ feet,
And sing of everlasting love,
In everlasting strains above.

Yours for the truth,

MAGGIE L. STONE.

LETTER FROM BRO. GRAHAM.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

It is not often I have the pleasure of talking to so many brethren as can be reached through the FIRM FOUNDATION, and as I think a large majority of them need to be talked to, I ask you to please publish the following:

Throughout the christian era there have been men whose prime intention was to serve God aright, but they started wrong, and of course continued so unless corrected by the kind words of some friend. To all such, I would say, stop a moment and think.

But, who are they? “Why my neighbors, of course," some would say. Well, do you think your neighbors will say the same of you? If you do, just ask the school teachers of the community in which you live, what your neighbors think of you. Nine times out of ten, if he will stoop so low as to tell you, your neighbors estimate of you, you will find, is fully as low as yours of them. And is this right in the church! Brethren, shall we back-bite and defraud each other, and at the same time rest in hope of future happiness? If we do our hopes are surely vain.

We all know that this is the case in almost every neighborhood. I will tell you brethren, the wrath of God rests on the church wherever the members do this way. Shall we continue in this manner? Let us awake to a sense of duty; go to work for the Lord; put down all evil speaking from among us; and then we will be armed to fight for our Master against "spiritual wickedness in high places."

But some one will say, well, I am doing better than brother Smith, and he pretends to be 'mighty' good. If he ever gets to Heaven, I'll be sure to get there." Now, is there a brother, a single one, who has espoused christianity, who is this weak; and does he expect the "well done" in the end? If there is such, and he expects that plaudit, his salvation rests on a poor plea.

I am proud to say that I live in a community where the brethren are too high minded to talk about one another.

The writer thinks that Bro. McGary

has embarked in a good work; wishes him success, and will render his (the writer's) little mite in that direction. Brethren, let's correct all these little wrong practices. ←

DENOMINATIONAL PREACHERS

OUGHT MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH HEAR THEM?

BROTHER MCGARY:

The foregoing question has been presented to my mind quite often during the past year, and I have at last decided in the affirmative.

I feel confident that many will fail to agree with me, and doubtless have reasons for so doing. Some of my reasons for deciding as I have are as follows:

It has been about one year since I obeyed the gospel, and the more I listen to sectarians the less confidence I have in them; especially those who are always endeavoring to raise some excitement, or "trying to scare people into the kingdom."

Here at Blanco we have besides the church of Christ, Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists, each occupying their respective Lord's day each month.

One who objects to hearing denominational preachers at this or similar places has the liberty of listening to talks on the scripture only once each month, as the Christians occupy but one day for preaching, the rest being used in holding social meetings, but at such hours as not to interfere with services of others.

If all members of the church of Christ refused to listen to the sects then who would know the variations of different creeds or doctrines, or how much they all varied from the true doctrine.

We are commanded to "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good." Sectarian preachers sometimes say good things whether it is their intention to do so or not, therefore, it is only our duty to cleave to the good and let the bad escape our notice so far as giving heed to it.

It is evidently the sincere desire as well as the duty of every christian to unite with the Savior in that prayer "that all may be one as he and the Father are one." It is also their duty to use every reasonable effort to bring about that much desired union, and I can think of no more speedy or effective plan than to listen attentively to sectarian preachers, treat them kindly, and when they misapply scripture notify them of the fact in a kind way, then, having done this, we cannot be accused of selfishness, or of not being willing to reason together."

Among the sects the opinion appears to be prevalent that the numerous human names will never be blotted out, and some even boldly assert that it was intended from the beginning that the church should be thus divided and known by numerous human names for all time. This I cannot agree to as it is impossible for me to believe, for one moment, that Christ ever uttered an idle word or offered a prayer in vain.

Not for one moment would I pretend to compare the lives of sinful men with that of the Savior; yet they certainly will not be asking amiss when they repeat the prayer that "all may be one as Christ and the Father are one."

Neither are we doing more than our duty when we are exercising every influence upon the sects in order to bring about that much desired union; and what more effective way can be adopted than to attend their meetings and reason with them. While we are free to admit that many things are done, many plans adopted by modern sectarians to carry points altogether unscriptural, yet, how can we know these things, or adopt any means of correction unless we give them a hearing?

I have been reading THE FIRM FOUNDATION since the first of January, and have been highly pleased with its contents. I have thought it second to none, even as a monthly, but trust it will be even better when changed to a weekly. Wishing you success, and bidding you God speed, I remain

Your brother in Christ,

R. W. GILLESPIE.

P. S. Thinking perhaps your subscription price will advance when you change to a weekly, I send you 50 cents, which amount please place to my credit.

R. W. G.

It seems that some of our subscribers are expecting the change from a monthly to a weekly to take place immediately. We are sorry that we were not more explicit in what we had to say about that change.

We here take occasion to state that that change will, in all probability, take place between this and the first day of January. But we hope to be able to give the weekly at the same price we are now publishing the monthly. We hope that all of our subscribers whose time expires with this number of the pamphlet will renew immediately. We promise all who do, the paper for one year at one dollar, whether monthly or weekly, and the same offer is extended to all new subscribers.

In conclusion, we again appeal to you, brethren, to bestir yourselves in vigorous efforts to spread a paper that dares to declare the whole counsel of God, whether it condemns unscriptural practices in or out of the church, and while false and time-serving brethren and renegades hope to deter it from its duty by the cry of hobby, extremist, etc.

Help us, brethren, to lift the banner of King Jesus out of the dusty slums of sectarianism in which it is now being dabbled by false brethren, who labor more for gain than Godliness. Help us, brethren, to plant the ensign of our King upon the very ramparts of the adversary, and forever do battle under it for the Captain of our salvation.

ASLEEP.

At Mineral Wells, on the 8th of August, our precious baby, Miriam, fell asleep, gently, peacefully. Though ours for only eleven months, she was unspeakably precious, and the very light of our home. How sadly we miss her little presence only those who have had a similar bereavement can know.

But we can say from the depths of our hearts, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. But how did he give? By the operation of His established law. How did he take? In the same way, and not by any display of wrath, for He is no respecter of persons."

We would not have her back, as dear as she was, for we know she is

"Safe from corroding care,
Safe from the world's temptations;
Sin cannot harm her there."

Sorrow is the lot of man, but we know that all things work together for good to those that love God, and if we only love Him, the veriest afflictions will work out to our eternal gain. Thanks be to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ for the glorious hope of the resurrection.

"She cannot return to us, but we can go to her." Blessed assurance! Oh! dear brethren and sisters, let us all, with renewed earnestness, determine to meet our precious dead, in that sweet home where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes."

OVER-ESTIMATION.

John Poe says that Bro. Jackson and I seem to be running the FIRM FOUNDATION for his special benefit. In this he is mistaken. It is true that we aim to benefit all sinners as much as we can.

As all the promises that pertain to salvation are in Christ, yea, and in Him, amen, unto the glory of God by those divinely sent and commissioned to preach and to bind the truth as it was, and ever will be in Jesus, we try to direct without partiality, all unto Christ,—unto the remission of sins, first, and then try to point out the “work of the Lord” which is to be done in the “vineyard,” to give an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God’s Son.

As Christ, more than eighteen hundred years ago, bound in heaven the appointments preached on earth by His apostles as steps or conditions of entrance into His body, which is a positive institution—a real entity—we are running our paper “solely in the interest of these appointments and the work of the Lord” that follow after.

The salvation of one soul is enough to stimulate a true soldier of Christ to edit and publish a paper, “hobby” or “no hobby,” but while this is admitted, candor forces us to say that Mr. Poe has figured our aim down to too narrow a compass, for he, like “Ephraim, is joined to his idols,” and were it not that he is joining others with him, our “paper” would “let him alone.”

It is time to let our modern Ephraim’s alone (so far as being actuated by any hope of doing them good) when they will publish to the world, that obedience is better, more pleasing to God—when done without knowing the end connected with the act.

That is, that it is better not to inquire after what God took pains to have clearly taught on almost every page of the last Will and Testament. Again, it is time to “let Ephraim alone” when he becomes so nervous over his untenable attitude, that he imagines every time his errors are being corrected, that it is an effort to “draw him into a discussion.”

When a man who is so polemical by nature, and by practice as Mr. Poe is, says, he has had “all to say on any question that he expects to say, we may know that it is a conscious weakness in his cause that extorts such words from him.

Mr. Poe must not feel so self-important as to conclude that brethren could afford to run a paper for his “special benefit” until they could first have some evidence that he would accept truth when it is shown him. Such an overestimate of self does not grow out of that humility that comes of the Spirit of Christ.

We take occasion to say to friend Poe, or other friends and brethren, that we shall ever exercise the liberty of showing the inconsistencies of any who may teach falsely, without regard to the motives that may be assigned for our course.

A CONTRAST.

1. Christ said: You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

“Our Plea” says: You shall be made free whether you know the truth or not, if you will be baptized to “honor God.”

2. Christ said: In vain do you worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men.

"Our Plea" says: It is not vain if it leads to baptism to "honor God."

3. Christ said: If the blind lead the blind they will all fall in the ditch.

"Our Plea" says: They will not fall in the ditch if they will be baptized to "honor God."

4. Christ said: No man can come to me except the Father who hath sent me draw him.

"Our Plea" says: They can come if they will be baptized to "honor God."

5. Christ said: He that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word and understandeth it.

"Our Plea" says: It is better not to understand it—that to be baptized to "honor God" without understanding is evincive of a higher order of faith.

6. On the day of Pentecost inspired men baptized those that gladly received the word of the apostle.

"Our Plea," eighteen hundred years after, endorses the baptism of those that reject and openly dispute the word of that same apostle.

7. Peter said: Seeing you have purified your souls, in obeying the truth through the spirit; * * * being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. * *

* And this is the word which, by the gospel, is preached unto you.

"Our Plea" says: You have purified your souls in obeying the teaching of sectarianism through the doctors of divinity, * * * being born again, not of incorruptible, but of corruptible seed, by the word of doctors of divinity which is this worlds wisdom, and foolishness with God, and this is the word which, by false teachers, is preached unto you, and by which ye are saved if you have been baptized to "honor God."

8. James says: Do not err, my beloved brethren; every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, * * * wherefore, lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word which is able to save your souls.

"Our Plea" says: There is no danger of erring, beloved brethren, just so you are baptized to "honor God." Some good gifts come from above, from the Father of lights with whom there is variableness, and turning to accept all who are baptized to "honor God." Of his own will begat he some of us with the word of truth, and some with the word of doctors of divinity. So, beloved brethren, you need not be afraid of filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, but receive it and the truth too, with meekness, and either will save your souls in baptism to "honor God."

When the advocates of this human plea straighten up these apparent discrepancies we have something over one hundred more to put them to work on. Will they please begin the work?

A STARTLING PROPOSITION IN THE TEXAS CHRISTIAN OF AUGUST 13.

Bro. A. Clark, in an article devoted to "The State Meeting," says some things that reach out to the very farthest lengths of worldly wisdom. In concluding his article Bro. Clark says:

"I close with this proposition: The right thing can't be done in the wrong way." However much logic may be in reserve by this reputed logician to substantiate this extravagant proposition, every right-thinking man will see in it the very gist of rebellion against the authority of king Jesus.

If there were any kind of authority in the annals of inspiration for such machinery as is known in our day as State Meetings, Missionary Societies, etc., Bro. A. Clark could doubtless point it out.

The startling proposition that he has laid down, when studied in the light of the circumstances that cluster around it, becomes ominous of untold mischief brooding over the cause of Christ in this State.

Remember that Bro. Clark penned this "proposition" immediately upon the heels of the State Meeting, while the enthusiastic fires of its wisest councils were still glowing and lighting up the well mapped route of departure that has been settled upon by the engineering corps of the State Meeting.

This "proposition" speaks for itself, and notifies the brethren in no uncertain way, that it is useless to try to bind such brethren as A. Clark, C. McPherson, Dimmitt, Caskey, Carlton, etc., etc., within the narrow limits of scriptural precept or example.

With these wise brethren at the helm of an institution inaugurated to meet the demands of a highly cultivated spirit of modern progress in religion, and supply the defects and mistakes of the antiquated way of twelve fisher men, mossed over by eighteen centuries growth, we may look for great and rapid changes.

Bro. Clark's "proposition" may be laid down and bolstered up by bold assumption and the winding intrigues of sophistry, but when tried before right-reason, in the blaze of revealed truth, its puerility is seen at a glance.

Among other "right things" for christians to do, is the sending of evangelists into destitute and heathen fields. But this can be done in a wrong way. For instance, horse racing, card playing, jug breaking, doll selling, or giving church fairs, festivals, etc., to sustain him in his labors, is doing it in a wrong way.

But it is no more wrong than to organize a human society or State Meeting, and through it do a "right thing," to the glory of men instead of God! Moses did a "right thing in a wrong way" when he smote the rock, and his penalty ought to serve as a lesson to those over zealous brethren who can't be contented with God's appointments for His work.

Bro. Clark says of the State Meeting: "It is a matter of universal regret that all our preaching brethren cannot attend these meetings. Now, while Bro. Clark and other brethren were going to, attending, and returning from the State Meeting at Sherman, Bro. Durst won 22 persons to Christ, Bro. Kennedy 48, and Bro. W. E. Hawkins quite a number, we do not remember just how many.

Now, does Bro. Clark regret that these brethren were not at Sherman? Will he tell us how many were won to Christ by that gathering at Sherman? Bro. Clark says: "That any brother should deny the right or the wisdom of such annual gatherings is one of the wonders of the day."

We presume that none will deny that in some sense these brethren have "the right" to take part in these meetings. But they have no christian right to do it—no right as subjects of Jesus, the Christ, for his subjects may not do that for which they have no authority; see Col. iii, 17.

As for the "wisdom," there is a kind that is "foolishness with God;" we know many who do not deny this kind, to such annual meetings, but think they are founded in, and perpetuated wholly upon such wisdom—the wisdom of this world.

Again, Bro. Clark says: "There is what we call the brotherhood of Texas. There is the ability and the obligation on the part of that brotherhood to evangelize our State. How, we ask, can this be done without concert of action?"

This same question may have been asked eighteen hundred years ago, when it not only cost dollars and cents to promulge the story of the cross, but men's lives; but God appointed the way, and faithful men executed it then, as the same class will do to-day.

Paul and Barnabas went right on as directed, without even thinking of a State meeting or missionary society, while John and Mark turned back; doubtless Mark would have been a State meeting or missionary society man if he could have found such an institution to have found him a field, and guaranteed him good pay for his work.

The difference, however, in Mark and modern State meeting and missionary society men, lies in the fact that he seems to have repented of his proclivities in that direction, and won the commendation of Paul for his submission to the Lord's way, while our modern sort clamor louder and louder for pledges and assurances by State Meetings, etc. Is not God's way as good for Texas, as it was for the whole world eighteen hundred years ago? Why is it not?

A. McG.

BEWARE, "HOBBYISTS."

Bro. A. Clark, in a recent article reporting a meeting he held at Cisco, has this to say: "The little band at Cisco extend an invitation to any preaching brother of good standing, and free from cranks and hobbies, and who has no ax to grind, to call and preach for them."

Maybe their "grindstone" is about worn out. When these brethren who have big schools to carry in connection with the promulgation of the sound doctrine, which always has and always will meet a fierce opposition, find a good place they grind their axes well. Such preachers need sharp axes, they can't get along without them, for it takes sharp work to faithfully work for Jesus, and any worldly enterprise at the same strokes.

It seems from Bro. Clark's Cisco report that he has been doing some sharp work there; we judge so from his finding such an "unusual amount of good feeling and fidelity among the other churches."

But in this we may be mistaken, as we are aware that Bro. Clark writes some things that are hard to be understood sometimes. He tells us in this article of his "kind and courteous Baptist brother" that he met at Cisco.

Bro. Clark has, or used to have, a habit of calling on sectarians to lead in prayer on his preaching tours, even those who had never been immersed. We remember that his excuse for it was that he "did it as a courtesy." He is full of courtesy until he comes in contact with what he is pleased to term a "cranky" or "hobby-riding" brother; he does not want their axes ground.

He was the leading spirit of thirty-three, who, something more than a year ago, signed a decree debarring this class of brethren from the use of any "grindstone" in the State. If they would work, he was determined they should do so with dull axes.

Now, again, he issues a sort of an edict, forbidding them to "grind" at Cisco. Now, if Bro. Clark issued this Cisco edict by direction of the church, we would like to know what they mean when they forbid "hobbyists." If they mean by "hobbyist" what Bro. Clark does, then we know that they mean to forbid a declaration of the whole counsel of God; then they have judged themselves unworthy of the truth as it is in Jesus, and men who love God's plea more than a human plea, should go there and save from the wreck such as should be saved.

But, knowing Bro. Clark as we do, we doubt his authority for his forbidding notice. The time has come that when a man determines to stand firmly in defense of the "faith once delivered to the saints"—the gospel precisely as it was preached by the apostles, taking it as they have given it, nothing more, nothing less—must at the same time determine to submit to such indignities as will be heaped upon him by time-serving brethren.

They will call him an extremist, hobbyist, cranky, etc., but they will not meet him in fair and open inquiry for truth. "All things will work together for the good of them that love God," which makes these slanders and indignities supportable.

We heard that Bro. A. Clark said recently at Weatherford, publicly, that he was sorry that he had any brethren who were silly enough to be going over the country teaching that persons must believe that baptism was for the remission of sins before they could be scripturally baptized, and he branded such

Bro. Clark has brethren who are sorry that they have a class of brethren going over the country, and their name is legion, telling the people that "the apostles of Christ said that baptism was for the remission of sins, but that it is not necessary for them to believe what they said."

This class of teachers, instead of teaching the church, and trying to bring it "unto the measure of the fullness of Christ," are, by their sleight and cunning craftiness, in which they are waxing worse and worse, deceiving, and priests, being deceived, tossing it to and fro with every wind of doctrine. They are trying to make the biggest sect in all sectdom out of the church of Christ, by swallowing up all other eccles.

Those who love the faith delivered to the apostles too well to barter it off in the construction of this mammoth sect, are "hobbyists, extremists," etc. We, for one, had rather wear their opprobrious names than accept their false doctrine and become their fellow rebels.

The apostles spoke God's words. They said that baptism was for the remission of sins; we are to know the truth to be made free. Then, "let God be true, but every man a liar."

SALVATION BY DEATH.

The writer once knew a man whose talent for money making was wonderful. From a penniless boy he worked his way up to great wealth. The end and aim of his life seemed to be money. Night and day he schemed and worked to amass wealth, and it seemed that everything he touched turned to money, though it was often said that the ignorant and the widow and orphan were made to groan under the oppression of his avarice.

Be this true or not, his possessions were great, but just as he reached the prime of manhood nature entered her protest against such protracted and unremitting efforts, and like the rich man of old, who was increased with goods, and was just ready to pull down his old barns and build greater, his soul was required of him.

He was suddenly stretched on a bed of intense suffering. He exhausted every remedy that medical skill could devise, but in vain. When he realized that death was inevitable, he expressed a wish to be baptized. So a Methodist divine was summoned, who came and sprinkled a few drops of water on his head. He then expressed himself ready for death, which soon claimed him. Thus the miserable dregs of a mispent life, a life wholly devoted to the service of mammon, were offered to his maker.

After his body had been consigned to the earth, many spoke softly of his repentant (?) death, many who were bitter against him in life; and, no doubt, many of them really believed that he was saved from the wrath to come.

Again, I knew a woman who had been a very negative character all her life, but about four years before her death she was roused from her lethargic state by hearing the pure gospel preached in its simplicity, with much force.

She began to be interested in the bible, but being already a member of a human society, she steadfastly and repeatedly refused to accept the "truth as it is in Jesus," preferring the "doctrines and commandments of men," thereby judging herself unworthy of eternal life.

She was very suddenly called to die. As her children and friends stood around her dying bed, she asked them to sing of heaven, and begged them to meet her there. She expressed a perfect resignation to death, and in a few hours her eyes closed on earthly scenes forever.

I have given these two sketches, dear reader, that you may understand the meaning of my caption, "salvation by death." It is not a quotation from Peter, Paul, James or John, but, from the credulity with which people accept statements of the dying, one would be led to think that some such passage is to be found in the bible. But not so; it simply means believing or pretending to believe that persons are saved because they say so, when dying, just because you are sorry for them, and want to believe it, whether it is so or not. But, doubtless, many of the friends and relatives of the subjects of the above sketches, being ignorant of bible teaching, honestly believed them to be safe, for such consider dying words as oracular. Many know, who claim to know

"the way of truth" perfectly, had their faith shaken by one of these happy deaths, saying, "well, if she did not go to heaven, I do not see why. How very strange that any one claiming to know the terms of salvation cannot see why!" But, says a good old Baptist lady, "how are we to know they are going to heaven, unless they say so?" which is parallel to the remark of old negro, upon hearing of the death of a thief, killed in the act of stealing; "poor thing! neber eben had time to tell whar she was gwine!" Yes, and after they tell us "whar they are gwine," we are as ignorant as we were before.

If such statements can save us, then we can, indeed, eat, drink, and be merry, praying the good old Episcopal prayer, "from perils by sea, and perils by land, from storms and sudden death, good Lord deliver us." Again, if we save the moral on such statements, we are forced to do the same for the murderer on the gallows, who swings into eternity with such a statement on his lips, as is nearly always the case.

Dear reader, all of God's promises are in Christ Jesus, in Him, yea, and in Him amen! He has promised to save no one outside of Christ's body, the church, and the way into His church is so plain, we are told, "that a fool shall not err therein." So, then, there is no excuse for any honest person not finding this way, if earnestly sought after.

If, therefore, any such die out of Christ's body, it is because they closed their eyes lest they should see the way into it, and the utmost we can do for them is to trust them in God's hands, for He is just and merciful. Our opinion as to their salvation will not affect them one way or another; but it will and does affect the living. For, if we, who have found the "straight and narrow way," stumble at these 'happy deaths,' then we make the church of Christ a useless institution, His agonizing death a vain sacrifice, and our doubts a stumbling block to thousands of sinners; for you need not think that they do not see the inconsistency of contending that there is but one church, and no salvation outside of this church, and then being puzzled over the happy death of persons in human societies.

Reader, it is hard to have to say these things, and very unpopular; but shall we withhold the truth because it wounds the living? God forbid! Better to wound them a thousand, yea, ten thousand times, than that their souls should be lost eternally. "Let God be true, and every man a liar."

L. B. M.

MR. BANTA'S ARGUMENT.

CENTRE POINT, KERR CO., TEX.,
August 23, 1885.

MR. A. MCGARY.

DEAR FRIEND:—In accordance with our mutual agreement at the annual gathering of the Christadelphians at Lampasas Springs about the 7th inst., I take up my pen in defence of the proposition announced in a discourse by Bro. A. B. Miller, on the subject of the re-gathering of the twelve tribes of fleshly Israel from their present dispersion.

Here is the proposition: "No one can be scripturally baptized into Christ who does not understand and believe that the twelve tribes of fleshly Israel will be gathered from their present dispersion and settled again in their own land."

Before entering into a scriptural exposition of the affirmative side of this proposition, we will remind you of what you said in the March number of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, viz: "When Philip was down in Samaria preaching, it was said that after the people believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women," (Acts VIII, 12); after they had believed these things, not before. Now, what were those things concerning the kingdom of God which the people believed before Philip baptized them? A correct answer to this question will furnish us the characteristics of the one baptism. It is evident that they understood and believed more concerning the kingdom of God than that Jesus was God's son.

True, this is a grand proposition, and furnishes the basis for all the balance to rest upon, but he preached "things concerning the kingdom of God," which they believed; "what were they?" March number of FIRM FOUNDATION, page 24. We now propose to answer this question according to scripture, and in doing this we will establish the affirmative of the proposition under consideration.

bles, having received the gospel by a direct revelation from God. By tracing the history of Paul as recorded in Acts it will be plainly seen that he and Phillip preached one and the same gospel; for instance, in Acts xx, 25, we read, "And now behold I know that ye all among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God shall see my face no more;" also; in Acts xxviii. 31, "Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ," etc. And at verse 23, "to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets, from morning till evening."

In this he followed Christ, who, after he arose from the dead, addressed his incredulous disciples thus, "O, fools! and slow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have spoken; and beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." Luke xxiv. 25. Now, it is an undeniable fact, that Christ and Paul both referred to the writings of Moses and the prophets in proof of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ which they preached.

By following Paul (as he also followed Jesus Christ), back into the old testament, and diligently searching its pages, we find not one word said about a church kingdom, nor a kingdom up in the skies, nor beyond the skies, but we do find those writings full of importance concerning the Ancient kingdom of Israel, called also "the kingdom of the Lord," or of God.

This kingdom, as is well known to all bible readers, was composed of seven elements:

1. A territory; (Canaan).
2. A capitol city; (Jerusalem).
3. A king; (Saul, David, and others who were anointed of God—God's Christs).
4. Subjects; (the twelve tribes of fleshly Israel).
5. Laws; (the law of God, given by His mediator, Moses).
6. Subordinate rulers; (the princes or heads of the tribes of Israel).
7. An empire or secondary dominion; (the nations conquered by David, and made tributary to the kingdom of God).

It is also well known to bible readers that this ancient kingdom of God was overturned, see Ezekiel xxi, 25, 28, and would remain overturned until he came whose right it is, and I will give it him, saith Jehovah. This kingdom, according to prophets and apostles, and the testimony of Christ and the angel Gabriel, will be restored again with

1. Christ as its king.
2. The saints of the Most High as subordinate rulers, with Christ their head.
3. The twelve tribes of Israel as their mortal subjects of the first dominion of the kingdom.
4. Jerusalem, the capitol city.
5. The law of God will be the law of the realm.
6. The territory of the first dominion will be Canaan.

7. The empire or secondary dominion will be all the nations from the river to the ends of the earth.

Christ was born to be king of the Jews, see Matthew II, 2, 7, and to reign on David's throne, over the house of Jacob, see Luke I, 31, 37, and Acts II. He was put to death for claiming to be the born king of the Jews, John XVIII, 37. God raised him from the dead to set him on David's throne—Acts II, 30. God will send him at the time of the restitution (restoring again) of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began.

And the spirit speaking by the mouth of Peter and James, in Acts XV, 14, 17, said, "How God at the first did visit the gentiles to take out of them a people for His name, and to this agree the words of the prophets as it is written. After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up."

Jesus said to the Jews, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." And to the disciples he said, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom;" and again he said to the twelve, "In the regeneration, when the son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, then ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."—Matthew

What more natural then than the question propounded by the twelve disciples after His resurrection, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"—Acts I, 6. Our modern Illuminati affirm that the disciples entertained carnal ideas in reference to the kingdom, but Christ did not rebuke them for their views of the kingdom, but only corrected their misunderstanding in reference to the time of its establishment.

To be ignorant and faithless in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, as they are taught in the writings of Moses, is to be ignorant of the gospel, and therefore without the faith which comes by hearing the word of God, and without faith it is impossible to please God.—Heb. XI, 6. It matters not how often a man is dipped in the water, if he is not in possession of the one faith it will fail to please God.

That the gathering of the Jews and their settlement in their own land is an essential element of the gospel is as clearly taught as any other element. See Paul's teaching, in Rom. IX, X, XI chapters, concerning his kinsman according to the flesh.

JOHN BANTA.

In the discussion now pending between friend Banta and myself, I beg leave to tighten up the taps a little, in the outset, so that no extra or irrelevant ground will be traveled over.

While he has not couched his proposition in exactly the same words agreed upon by us at Lampasas, they are substantially so, and we will urge no further change in his wording than a slight abbreviation, which will, at the same time, relieve the proposition of its tautological appearance. To this we presume he will have no objection.

Instead of "No one can be scripturally baptized into Christ," we suggest "No one can be scripturally baptized," or "no one can be baptized into Christ, etc." Either will satisfy us, and will embody the thought fully.

Now, we desire to be understood as denying this proposition without any further reference to the restoration of the "twelve tribes of fleshly Israel" than its relation to the issue herein involved demands. We say this through no disposition to ignore any part of truth, but to narrow the controversy into reasonable and readable bounds.

Again, we shall try to discuss this question without using the word "kingdom" as interchangeable with the word church. We have decided upon this, too, to cut off occasion from friend Banta to lengthen out on irrelevant matter. We however reserve the right to show that these words "kingdom" and "church" are sometimes interchangeable words, if we should deem it necessary to the substantiation of truth that we have set out to contend for. But we intend and believe that we can settle this question without riding the "kingdom" question into kingdom come.

This is a question that, under certain limitations, at some future time, we would not object to discussing, but, now, we want to confine our friend

Banta and ourself, if we can, to the main issue.

We agree with Mr. Banta that Paul and Philip preached the same gospel, and so did Peter and all divine preachers. But what Mr. Banta has engaged to do is to show to us that these preachers preached to alien sinners, as a necessary antecedent teaching to baptism, that the "twelve tribes of fleshly Israel will be gathered from their present dispersion and settled again in their own land." Has he done this, or has he made any progress in that direction in this first effort? We say that he has not.

Whatever view Mr. Banta may take of the word kingdom as it occurs in the statement, "after the people believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women," we do not think that he can gather any strength from this passage to help his christadelphian doctrine, or advance him in his effort to make his proposition appear plausible.

If we should admit the most extreme construction that he could put upon this word kingdom, here, it would not militate in the least against our side of this question. It was "the things concerning the kingdom of God" that Philip is here said to have preached, and it was these things that the men and women believed before they were baptized.

Now, every condition connected in any way with our salvation from sin, is concerning the kingdom. Yes, every step of divine appointment concerns the kingdom of God. Hence, it is just as reasonable to suppose that Philip discoursed to these people about "adding to their faith, virtue, knowledge, and all of the christian graces," as that he preached to them the terms of my friends proposition. If he had done so he would have been violating his instruction as given by the Lord in the words, "go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

A glance at this commission under which these chosen and qualified men were to preach, will show a marked regard for the grand and beautiful law of progressive development so beautifully expressed by the Lord in these words: "So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first, the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."—Mark iv, 26, 28.

Again, we find the recognition of this same law by Paul, in these words: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ, I have fed you with milk, and not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able."—1 Cor. iii, 1, 2.

Again, he says: "Every one that

useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age."—Heb. 5, 13. Again, the apostle Peter recognized this same law of development, as is evinced by these words: "As new born babes, desire the milk of the world that ye may grow thereby."—1 Peter ii, 2.

But our friend Banta comes along with a proposition, which, if true, destroys the order of that commission, takes snap judgement on the law of development, mixes "milk" and "strong meat," and crams these incompatibles down the throats of "babes" unborn, even!!! No wonder that he rears up christadelphians instead of christians, since he violates the law by which christians are made.

We conclude by calling Mr. Banta's attention to the fact that Christ chose his representatives, empowered them and sent them into the world to "teach and baptize." Again, that He bound in heaven what they bound on earth. He has, through divine instrumentality, given us a record—a book of those bound terms. Is that book not plain and easy of comprehension? Does that book not give us a record of the questions of unbaptized persons as to what they should do to be saved—what hindered their baptism, etc? Can he, out of that book of "bound" terms or conditions, give us the answer that he has embodied in his proposition? If he can not, he has lost his proposition. If he can, he has gained it.

In vain will he endeavor to shift this responsibility in the presence of candid and rational minds. Will he come up to his work like a fair disputant, or will he flounder about among the shades of the types and shadows? We will see.

MY TRIP TO FIELD CREEK.

According to promise, I visited the congregation worshipping at the above place, and commenced a meeting on Friday night before the second Lord's day in August. Brethren Larimore and Maxwell were on hand, and on Lord's day evening Bro. Paige put in an appearance.

In connection with these good brethren we labored 'till the night of the third Lord's day. The meeting was not without good results. Besides those added to the congregation from the world, a number of christians identified themselves as workers in the body at Field Creek.

Many others seemed impressed with the truth to soberness and reflection. I shall ever remember the associations formed at Field Creek. Two good brethren residing there, viz, Rufus Cobb and Matt Cavness, received the sanction, appointment or ordination by their colaborers to the work of proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation. May they ever present the word in its purity, and never be moved by the frowns or applause of men.

On Monday morning I turned homeward to wife and children, the dearest spot to me this side of heaven. When I reached Mason I found Bro. Dimmitt, of Sherman, Texas, in a meeting, and I turned in to Bro. Ben Gooch's to enjoy his hospitality for the night, and to hear Bro. Dimmitt.

I found Bro. Dimmitt at Bro. Gooch's, and we were soon engaged in pleasant conversation. Before many moments had passed, however, he called attention to the FIRM FOUNDATION, and remarked that it was unfortunate that it was in existence. This brought to light the objectionable features as urged by Bro. Dimmitt, and we discussed fully for some time sect baptism and its effects.

Bro. Dimmitt dealt feelingly in warnings and forebodings. Dr. Thomas had run off into side issues, served his time, and sank into shame and forgetfulness. So had Jesse Furgason. The FIRM FOUNDATION would soon do likewise; its financial supporters become bankrupt, and its founder ignominiously pass away.

I reminded Bro. Dimmitt of the fact that its circulation was steadily increasing, and endorsements of its teaching were continually pouring in, and its prospects brightening every day. In view of these facts, I insisted that he and others of the same mind would be derelict in duty if they persisted in their seemingly determined course not to avail themselves of the use of its columns (so generously offered) to expose its fallacious teaching.

I have no interest in the FIRM FOUNDATION, only to see it circulated and prove a success if it promulgates the truth, or to see it go down if it teaches error. I shall believe it to be closely adhering to the old landmarks till shown to the contrary. Will Bro. Dimmitt embrace the opportunity to expose its errors? We shall see. It will not be frightened by the ghost of Dr. Thomas, Jesse Furgason, or any other erratic man. The unadulterated milk of the word is the food upon which it proposes to feed. I make this statement from a standpoint of intimacy with its founder, and I think I know whereof I speak.

From the run of the conversation at Bro. Gooch's, one would readily think that persecution was at hand. Bro. Gooch plainly told me that he did not want me or any other man to preach at Mason that advocated the teaching of the FIRM FOUNDATION.

My dear brethren, many doors in my humble judgment will be closed against us. Of one thing I am thankful, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. It has been the custom of my brethren to boldly attack everything unscriptural. Why are you now lying on your oars? I promise for myself a fair investigation of these questions with any brother. I will affirm that the alien is commanded to believe, to repent, to confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and to be baptized by the authority of Christ for the remission of sins. If there appears no one to deny this, I will affirm that these things can not be obeyed without they proceed from an understanding heart. Will Bro. Dimmitt, Bro. Gooch, or any other brother avail themselves of the opportunity thus offered?

JOHN S. DURST.

We pity such unfortunate brethren as these. They are so desirous of appearing "broad and liberal," and yet they are so very narrow. Poor souls, they are small enough to rattle in the hollow of a horse hair. There is no hope of ever enlisting such men under the banner of a poor Nazarene carpenter. They have a mortal dread of the "voice of the people." They, like their ancient sort, "love the praise of men more than the praise of God." If they had been with Paul when severe afflictions came upon him, we might expect to find their names linked with that of Demas, because he did not love this present world any better than they.

This class of brethren have chafed under the yoke of Christ until they have long since thrown it off. They, too, want a king like their neighbors. So, Christ rules over them no longer. They are rapidly enacting human laws and "expedients" through other organizations than Christ's church.

Bro. Dimmitt is the "pastor" who negotiated with the Austin church to take "charge" of it, but he laid the amount of his Sherman stipend before them, telling them that they would have to over bid that. They did not do it, so their "call" was unheeded by this "lover of the Lord," (?).

Who could expect such men to advocate or endure the teaching of the FIRM FOUNDATION? We are not so unreasenable as that. We would like to know when Bro. Gooch became sponsor for Mason, or the brethren in that section? Bro. Gooch has lavished his talent so on Bro. Dimmitt, (who loves a cheerful giver so well that he can't stay away from him), and Bro. Dimmitt has puffed and stimulated Bro. Gooch so through the papers, till we fear they are beside themselves. However this may be, we want to inform Bro. Gooch, and he can tell Bro. Dimmitt if he desires—that the very doctrine that the FIRM FOUNDATION advocates and propagates—which is the gospel of Christ—will be preached in Mason before many more new moons. The proclaimer will not expect any favors of Bro. Gooch either, since he has judged himself unworthy of bidding God speed to the truth as it is in Jesus.

Paul used to preach the gospel in his "own hired house" in Rome; so can that same gospel be preached in Mason, Bro. Gooch's forbidding message to the contrary notwithstanding.

BRO. A. J. McCARTY'S WORK.

We have just heard from Bro. A. J. McCarty's work. He, too, while other brethren were at the great State Conclave planning to supply the deficiency so patent to them in our Savior's work, was up to his elbows in the work of saving souls.

Does Bro. A. Clark wish that Bro. McCarty had been at the "State Meeting" instead of holding himself aloof in the good work? During this time Bro. McCarty baptized sixteen for the remission of sins. Ten of these were Baptists, but Bro. McCarty did not ask them the unscriptural question "Are you satisfied with your baptism?" Neither did he think that there was power enough in man's puny grasp to shake them into Christ.

A GOLDEN TEXT.

ADEL MACDONALD.

One of the faithful went her way
 From the holy aisles of prayer;
 For great the burden seemed that day
 For the Christian heart to bear.

The dear old church that stood like rock,
 Nearly half a century past,
 Lifting her head from every abock,
 Was bent like a reed at last.

You've seen it, doubtless, the fiery test,
 That gold alone can endure,
 Which every church must sometimes breast,
 That she may rise strong and pure.

But soon was that sister's heart to-day,
 And darkness blinded her sight;
 "Where lieth my duty, I can not say;
 Lord, wilt thou guide me aright?"

"Do I not err to thus attend
 Where I know deceit and fraud
 With every form of worship blend
 To pervert the house of God?"

"Here is the word, I'll search it out."
 With the book upon her knee,
 She found a text which cleared all doubt—
 'T was only: "Follow thou Me."

Others, perhaps, may stand in doubt,
 Others may question, like her,
 Whether 't were better to stand without,
 Or mingle with those who err.

It matters not how others do,
 For here is the golden key;
 Remember, all the acts of you
 Is simply, Follow thou Me.

A LETTER FROM A SISTER.

FAIRVIEW, WILSON CO., TEXAS,
May 17, 1885.

DEAR BROTHER MCGARY:

I beg space in your excellent pamphlet, THE FIRM FOUNDATION, to respond to the stirring appeals and admonitions of Sister—I wish I knew her real name—Sarai.

Although I have never written a line, or thought of doing so, for the press, yet, when I read the timely letters addressed to the sisters in THE FIRM FOUNDATION handed me by Bro. Appling, the sentiment being so near my own, I felt constrained, though the effort be a feeble one, to offer all the encouragement in my power to the sister beloved, though a stranger, who is making such strong and laudable efforts to bring the minds of the sisters to contemplate the simplicity of the gospel path, and to practice the simple manners and customs of primitive christianity.

Oh! how far have we, my dear sisters in Christ, departed from the simplicity of the gospel ways of our predecessors, and in our self-exaltation, forgotten the admonition of the apostles, the ambassadors of Christ, to whom were the words of reconciliation committed, and who spake for the Lord when the following was uttered:

"Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time, casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."

Oh! dear sisters in Christ, where e'er you are, or what e'er may be your station in life, shall we forget or refuse to submit to the heaven-born admonition and humble ourselves before our Lord and our King? Who can or who does care more for us than the meek and lowly Jesus, who left the courts of glory and came to this poor world of sin and death in humble submission to his Father's will?

Can we walk with our blessed Master while we, in our self-exaltation, ignore the commands of Him, our great exemplar, our great law-giver? Let us, my dear sisters, go with Him in His travels with His chosen few, and witness the deeds of love, compassion and mercy. Though He was the son of God, yet we see Him mingling with the poor, the very poorest, speaking words of comfort to all who sought and cried to Him. Hear Him in a strain of love and sadness, as well as triumph, when He spake to John's messengers:

"The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." Thus we see the lowest grade of humanity was not neglected, but He kindly, lovingly and mercifully stooped to lift them up from the degradation of sin and corruption, and all of them to a higher and nobler plane.

He wept with those that wept. He was "a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief." Then, oh, children of God, who can look on the condescension, the humility and sufferings of our guide and feel any pride of heart? None, oh, none, if we have the spirit of our Master; can we lust after the things, the fashions of the world, the gaudy dress, the dazzling apparel, and the broad acres with the princely mansion, and be led by the spirit of the crucified One at the same time? Let us, oh, let us, each one, answer this now.

Then, seeing the tendency of our course, let us begin, yes, begin now, to disencumber our souls of the grievous burdens so ardently heaped upon them that we may, in the great day of the Lord, be able to stand before the great white throne.

Our riches and costly attire, our lordly wealth will not avail us then. We will be dispossessed and disrobed, and stand exposed at that trying time. Oh, then, would it not be far better for us, and would we not feel and realize that joy and happiness that would inevitably come to or attend the dying moments of a dutiful child of God? And at this moment to know, that instead of hoarding up wealth to canker and rust, we have by our means caused one or more poor souls to rejoice in the hope of glory, would be enough to raise such an

one above the pains of death, and cause their thoughts to soar beyond the chilly Jordan of death, over there to the realms of the blessed.

What a crown! bedecked with so many gems! Then will all realize who have been faithful, and have spent their means in sending the word of life to perishing men and women, the good they have accomplished. But, on the other hand, if for selfish purposes we have withheld and bestowed our means upon our lust, we will realize our inevitable doom, and sadly, but irretrievably, view opportunity slighted, and precious moments wasted.

And now, in conclusion, my dear sisters, who may read this, let me entreat, in the name of our Lord, the Christ, let us all, every one, heed the godly admonition of Sister Sarai, and arouse from our fearful slumber, and awake to a sense of our whole duty, for the day is fast passing away, and there are yet many thousands of poor, deluded souls groping in ignorance of the glorious plan of human redemption. May all our efforts be directed by the infallible word of God, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

And now, Bro. McGary, I feel that I have occupied too much space with this article, but, having read the dear sister's letters to us, I did wish so much to respond and offer a word of encouragement, however humble and weak the effort.

And now, in conclusion, permit me to thank you for conceiving the idea, and putting it into execution, of publishing a paper of such sterling worth, because of its close adherence to the truth.

May the blessings of heaven rest upon you and strengthen you to stand for the King Eternal.

Yours in hope of immortality,

TENNIE C. TITSWORTH.

"THE CHURCH!"

OF WHAT IS IT COMPOSED, OR WHAT CONSTITUTES THE CHURCH OF OUR LORD?

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

Owing to a somewhat mistaken idea that is prevailing among some of our brethren, we will attempt to make an exposition on the subject designated by the above caption, hoping it may be of some benefit to some of the precious lambs, and also benefit some of the older sheep, and also to draw out some more abler advocates than the writer.

In discussing a question of this kind we should always keep the scriptural use or definition of the term before us, because,

1. The English word "church," according to Webster, has three distinct meanings, therefore, there would be a great doubt about getting the proper scriptural meaning of the word.

2. If possible, when a discussion of this kind arises, it should be settled by a "thus saith the Lord." Therefore, with these propositions laid out before us, we will confine ourself to the "law and testimony" as close as possible.

In the first place, we will call attention to the most correct meaning of the word in English, attested by the "word of life." The three definitions as given by Webster, rather agree in the second definition given, which is, "An organized body of christian believers."

Now, let us see what Paul's definition of the term is. But we will first consider the general use of the term church as it is used in the scriptures. The term is used in a two-fold sense in the scriptures. It is sometimes used in the abstract sense, and again it is used in its concrete sense. We will give scriptural illustrations:

1. I will illustrate the use of the term in the abstract sense. Acts II, 47; "Praising God and having favor with all the people, and the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Now, I contend that, according to Webster, the term is here used in an abstract sense. Webster says of abstract definition, first, "Distinct from something else;" second, "Withdrawn from the concrete, etc." Now, we have in this illustration,

1. "The Lord added to the church," (a distinct body of organized christians), "daily such as should be saved." The question naturally arises, where did the additions come from? Did not they come from the original concrete body? Most assuredly this was the case. We have now illustrated the use of the term in its abstract sense.

2. We will illustrate the use of the term in its concrete sense. I will refer to the XVI. Chapter of Matthew; you know when Jesus came into the coast Cesarea, Philippi, he asked his disciples "Whom do men say that I, the son of man, am?" and they answered and said, some say that Thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias, and others, Jeremiah, or one of the prophets." But he said unto them, "Who do ye say that I am?" Then Peter answered and said, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God;" and in the 18th verse Christ says, "And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church, etc."

We have in this passage an illustration of the use of the term in its concrete sense. For, upon this rock, or, upon the fact of his being the only begotten son of God, He was to build His church, and, brethren, to-day, as an organized body of christians, we stand and rest our hopes upon this fact. As I said, this passage illustrates the use of the term in its concrete sense. Every christian that ever was or ever will be has stood or will stand upon this foundation.

Now, for Paul's definition of the term church. Ephs. IV, 4; "There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in the one hope of your calling." Rom. XII, 5; "So, we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." 1st Cor. XII, 13; "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body being many, are one body, so also is Christ, for by one spirit are all baptized into one body, etc."

We see what body Paul had reference to when he said that Christ was the Savior of the body. It was the church. He himself is represented as the head, and we as the body. Could this be made any plainer? If the Lord does not say so himself He authorized Paul by the holy spirit to say so, and Paul was just as earnest in teaching this as he was in presenting the facts of the gospel.

What more can be said on this subject? What more is necessary to be said? Absolutely nothing. Paul very plainly teaches that Christ is the head, and we are the body of the church.

In the hope of immortality, I subscribe myself the brother of all those who are seeking the straight and narrow way.

J. M. AITON.

CREEDMORE, TEXAS, May 26, 1885.

LETTER FROM BRO. HOBSON.

LLANO, TEXAS, May 24, 1885.

BRO. MCGARY:

I am not a subscriber to THE FIRM FOUNDATION, but I am a reader of it, as several of the brethren are taking it. Neither am I a controversialist, nor do I aspire to become famous through the pages of a magazine, but will you allow a brother to ask a few questions, and to submit for your consideration a few thoughts in regard to the points in controversy between you and others of the brethren?

Understand me in all I say to be actuated by a spirit of kindness and love toward you and all others who are striving to walk in the old paths. I am opposed to any and all innovations in the way of theories that are not in harmony with the pure law of the spirit; and it pleases me to see so many of our newspaper brethren standing so firm, but I sometimes think that some of them stand so straight as to lean just a little the other way.

I fear there is a tendency, to a certain extent, to ignore matters of equal importance with baptism, in the continued discussions on that point, giving our enemies good grounds to accuse us of teaching a "water salvation" exclusively, as you know they now do.

You may answer my questions without publishing my letter if you are crowded for room; or you may publish it if you deem it worthy of notice. My first question, is this:

1. Do you think that in order for baptism to be valid that it should be known and believed to be for the remission of sin?

2. Do you think a person from the Baptist church upon joining the church should in all cases be baptized?

3. Was not the command give to preach the gospel and to baptize believers? If so, what were they to believe? Did Phillip baptize the eunuch upon an admission that he believed baptism to be for the remission of sins?

Peter said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Suppose we write this sentence in proper form for analysis, "Every one of you repent and be baptized for the remission of sins."

sion of sins." Now, in this sentence we evidently have two verbs in the predicate; Repent and be baptized. One a command to do something, the other a command to submit to something. Then, the phrase, "for the remission of sins," is adverbial, and modifies the predicate; the same relation existing between repentance and the phrase as does between baptism and the phrase. Am I right? If so, is not repentance as much for the remission of sins as baptism? Would either accomplish the desired result without the other?

"Preach the gospel; whoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Believe what? Evidently the gospel is meant; the plan of salvation is a unit, and every principle connected with it is necessarily a part of it; therefore, it can not be complete with any of those parts omitted.

There can be no faith without testimony, no repentance without faith, no confession without repentance, no baptism without confession; hence, no remission of sins without all of these, which, combined, is God's order of pardon to the alien.

It is not faith alone, repentance alone, confession alone, nor baptism alone, but all in their regular order that secures for us remission of sins through all men everywhere to repent."—Acts xvii, 30.

"And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—Luke xxiv, 47.

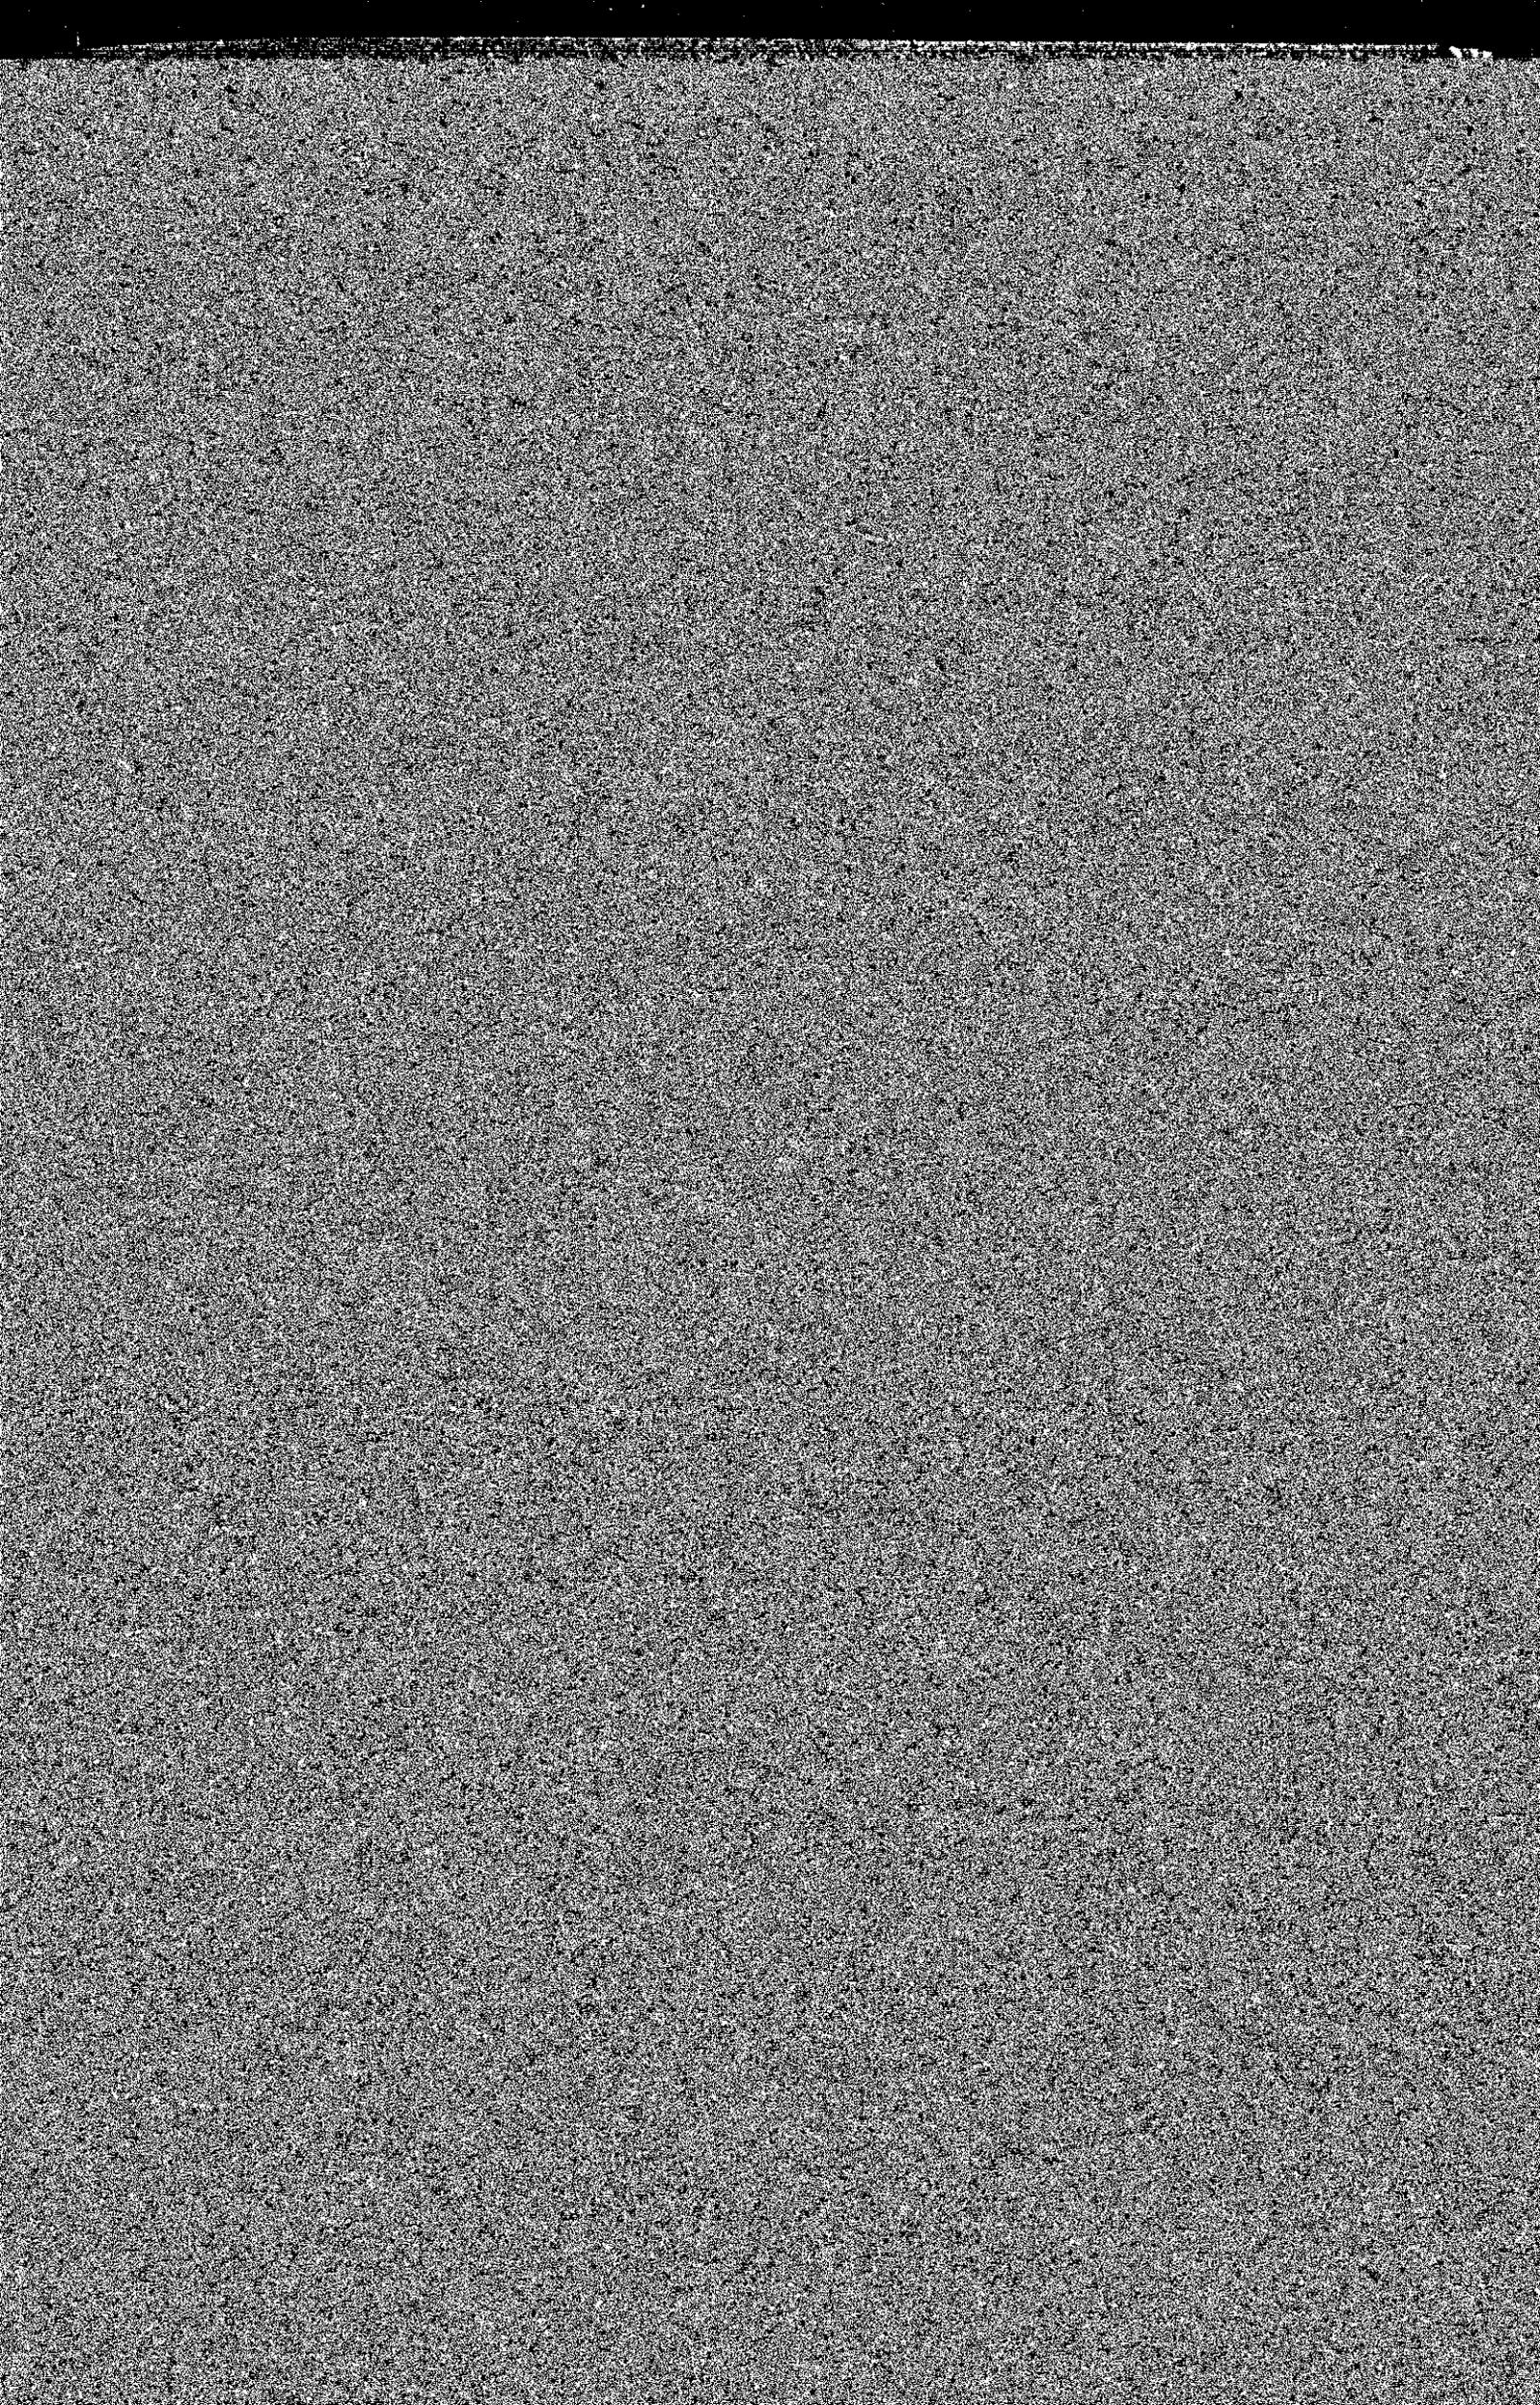

"For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."—Romans x, 10.

"Whosoever therefore will confess me before men, him will I confess also before my father who is in heaven."—Matt. x, 32.

When the believing penitent has reached this point he is dead to sin, and is prepared for burial. He is then buried "by baptism into death."—Romans vi, 4.

Now, where does pardon, or remission of sins take place? In faith? No. In repentance? No. In confession? No. In baptism? Certainly not. But in the mind of God, when all of the conditions that lead to it are complied with.

Each one of these principles is a unit of the plan of salvation to the alien. Taken together they are the plan. Therefore, I think that controversies upon any one principle, that have a tendency to make it of more importance than the others, weaken the cause and gender strife, and the enemy will say, no one can see the kingdom of God. There is no other "valid" baptism found in the light of truth—the truth as it is in Jesus. Then we "do think that in order for baptism to be valid, it should be believed to be for the remission of sins."

2. "Do you think a person from the Baptist church upon joining the church should in all cases be baptized?"

As there can be no "faith without testimony, no repentance without faith, no confession without repentance, no baptism without confession," and, "hence, no remission of sins without all of these, which, combined, is God's order of pardon to the alien," we think they should.

To rear a crop of Baptists, Baptist seed must be sown. So with Methodists, Presbyterians, etc. And to raise a crop of Christians, the good seed of the kingdom, the incorruptible seed—the word of God—must be sown. Mixed seed are all corruptible, for the human corrupts the divine in such mixture. The whole counsel of God must be declared for the seed to be incorruptible.

Baptists teach that sins are forgiven before baptism. This is what their Christ authorizes them to teach, hence, he is a false Christ, an anti-Christ, because the real, true Christ authorizes the teaching that baptism is for the remission of sins. Not "baptism alone," for His baptism—the "one baptism"—never is, and can not be alone, for it is always a birth of water and the Spirit—it has every antecedent laid down by the Spirit. Baptist baptism does not have these antecedents, and besides, has not the same end, purpose or design, which renders it peculiarly distinctive from the "one."

3. Was not the command given to preach the gospel and to baptize believers? If so, what were they to believe?"

Yes, that was the command. They were to believe the gospel they preached, of course; what else could we suppose? Did they preach some things that we must believe, and others that we need not believe? This seems to be the idea with many brethren. It is a pernicious "plea" that demands such a theory.

Did Philip baptize the Eunuch upon an admission that he believed baptism to be for the remission of sins?"

No; nor upon the admission that he believed that Christ rose from the dead. Yet, we are sure he believed both, for both were surely preached to him if the gospel was preached to him. If he had disbelieved either he would have lacked that much of believing the gospel, and lacked that much of being ready for the baptism authorized by Christ—the "one baptism."

The gospel is composed of facts for belief, commands for obedience, and promises for enjoyment. Our brethren who are so fondly wedded to a human plea as to become disloyal to Christ, to obey its behests, have tried hard to press the apostle Paul into their service. They are trying to distort his language found in 1st Cor. xv, 1, 4, into such a deformity as is required to fit their human "plea."

Paul says: "Now I make known unto you, brethren, the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye received, wherein also ye stand, by which also ye are saved, I make known, I say, in what words I preached it to you, if ye hold it fast, except ye believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which also I received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that He was buried; and that he hath been raised on the third day according to the scriptures, etc."

Now, to insist that Paul is here defining the gospel and delivering it, by these words, in its several details, is to insist that the apostle is inconsistent.

Further, whoever proves that Paul has here fully defined the gospel, convicts that apostle of folly. And why? Because there is nothing in the facts of Christ's death, burial and resurrection that can be obeyed. It is utterly impossible to obey any fact; and yet Paul teaches that the Lord Jesus will come in flaming fire and take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of the Lord Jesus: see 2nd Thess. 1, 8.

How foolish to talk about obeying either, or all three of the facts named above! And yet this human "plea" demands that we place Paul in just such an attitude. Why will men not learn to give up their theories when they cause an apostle to cross himself? Any theory now entertained, or that ever will be, which depends upon an interpretation of scripture that will not harmonize with every other passage of scripture, may be known to be wrong.

The spirit of God bears true witness, it never crosses itself.

Peter says: "The time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" What can be obeyed? Can facts or promises? Only commands can be obeyed. Then the gospel of Christ has commands in it, or Paul would not have said that the "Lord Jesus would take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ;" neither would Peter have asked "what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God." Would they?

Now, who is it that "leans just a little?" Is it not the "our plea" advocates, and do they not try to make the apostle "lean" with them?

SYNOPSIS.

During the past three months, from June 6, to September 6, I have spent in active service, traveling and preaching, 89 days, have been at home 3 days, preached at 19 places, traveled 1700 miles, preached 136 discourses, added, in all, 164, including 80 added at one meeting, in company with Bro's. Lincoln, Dyches and Wood.

Yesterday I failed, unavoidably, to meet my liability in the bank, and was gloomy and sad; to-day, that I am with my dearest ones, I am cheerful and happy. On the 1st of October, to which rigid payment of said liability is deferred, I expect to be left homeless and destitute, and then to weep in despair after all over the death of my book, The Great Legacy.

This calamity can be avoided, and thousands of precious souls ultimately be saved, and everybody who will, be benefited and made happy, if all who desire a copy of The Great Legacy, and wish to perpetuate its existence, will send me $1.00 and get it before the first of October next.

Brethren, do send now, not for my sake, but for the good that would thereby accrue to the Master's cause, for which I have earnestly sacrificed all, and labored and endured for so many long years. This statement is real, as thousands can testify. This is my last extremity, and I hope and pray it may be my last call.

P. S.—A Brother from Tehuacana, Texas, writes: "Dear Bro. Ezzell: I send you $1.00 for one copy of the revised edition of THE GREAT LEGACY. I bought one from you before, and gave it to a Presbyterian family. It convinced them, and I don't know how many more. I want this copy for a similar purpose.

God speed you."

LETTER FROM BRO. HURLEY

LAMKIN, TEXAS, Sept. 13, 1885.

MR. A. MOGARY.

DEAR BROTHER: I take the present opportunity of writing you a few lines. I have just returned from Fairview, where you preached when you were here this summer.

A Methodist preached there to-day on baptism and its designs. His argument was based on the "Nichol Plated Ecclesiastical Pump and Grub Ax." I could scarcely keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace while he spoke such delusions to blind the people.

I want to know if you will write a treatise in reply to the Ecclesiastical Pump? If you will, I will sell everyone I can, and if I can't sell them I will buy enough for this country and give them away.

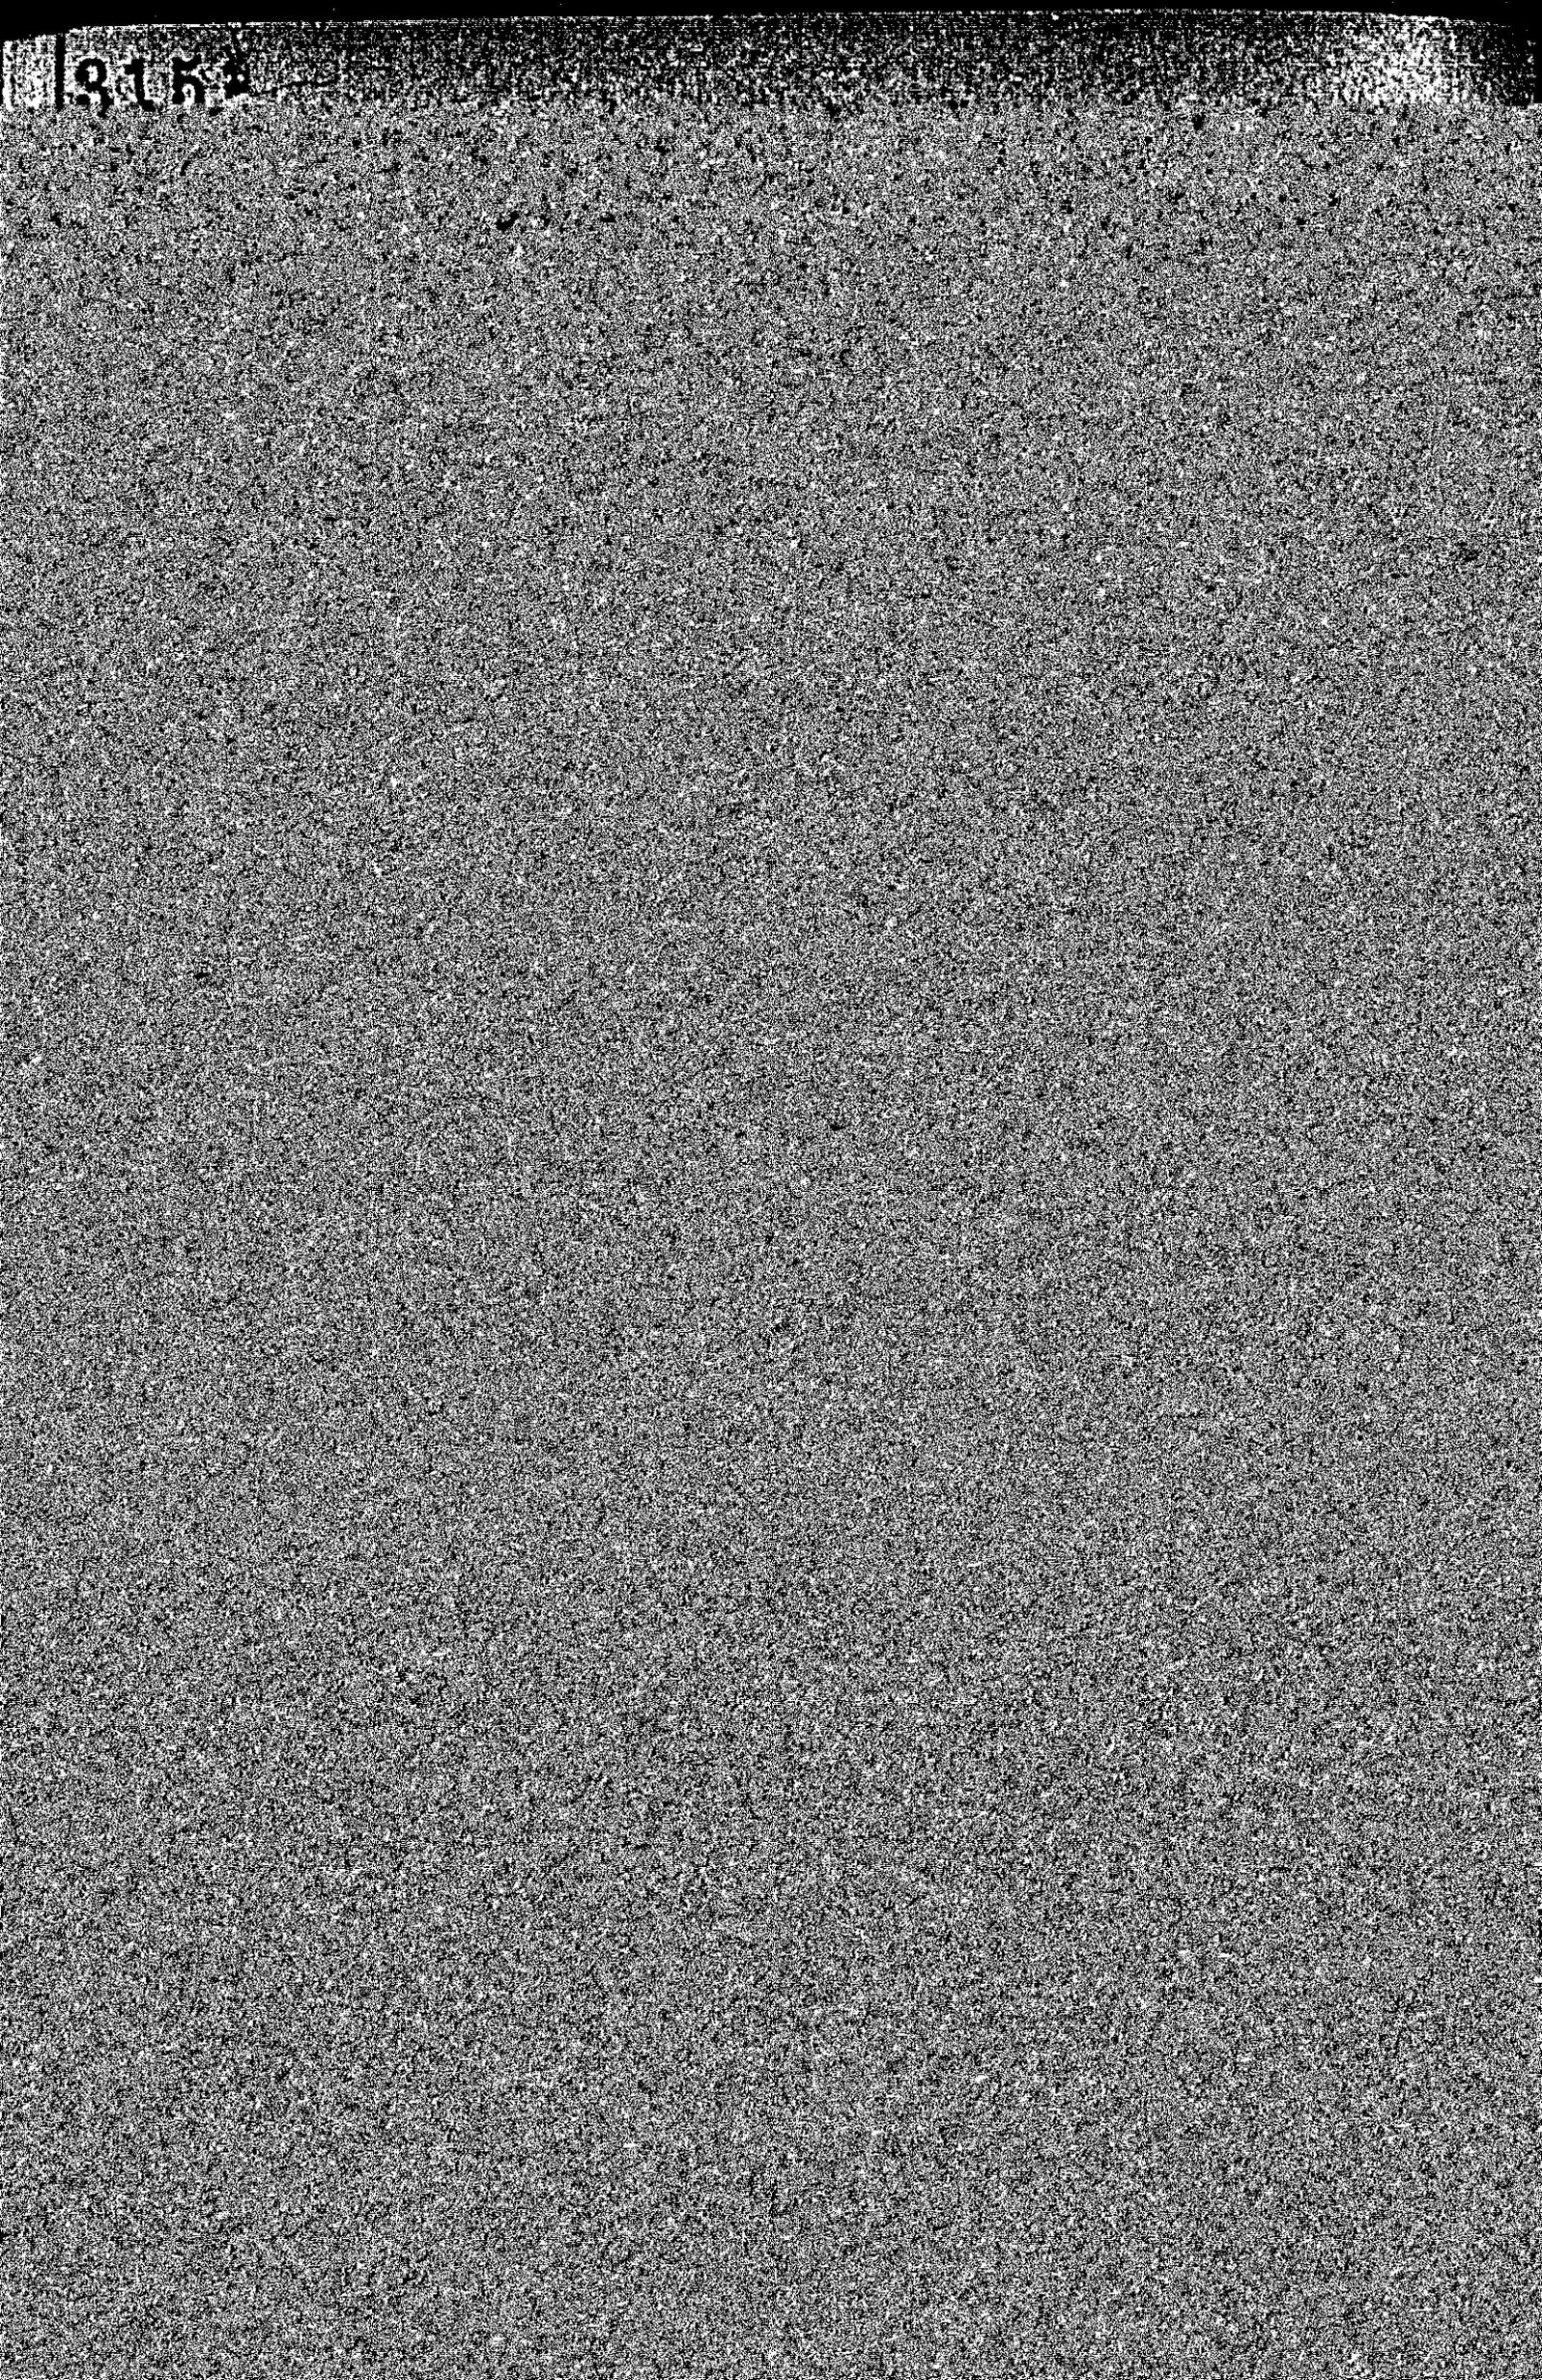

He has distributed the Pump here, and I would like to distribute an answer to it. If you have not a copy, and will answer it, I will send you a copy.

I will close with many good wishes for your success with THE FIRM FOUNDATION, praying that the truth may conquer.

Your brother in Christ.

W. H. HURLEY.

This makes the eighth request for us to answer that Methodist nonsense. While we would prefer that some one else would do this work, we are willing to try our hand at it if the brethren who have requested us to do so will, like this brother and two others who wrote us some months ago upon the subject, insure us that our labor will not be in vain, but find a circulation where the "Pump" has been perambulating.

withhold his name. We hope that he has had his "curiosity" gratified, at least to the full value of his subscription.

We are glad that he has seen the inconsistencies of our "Rabbi's," as he calls them. We have but one class for him and these "Rabbi's." There will be but one in the final day, which will be, "depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

Our wise brethren, presidents of bible colleges, and those they indoctrinate with bible-college theology—vampires that infest the whole land, sucking the very life-blood from the "body of Christ," and turning its lifeless form over to the god of sectarianism to become a prominent factor of "orthodoxy"—will stand side by side with the D.D's. in that class if they do not repent of their wicked work and cease their rebellion against King Jesus.

This is a sad thought, brethren, but a true picture, drawn in the light of inspiration. When Christ comes back to take vengeance on his enemies, many who now think they are doing God service in bartering away the appointments of His Son, will have a common lot with many others who will say to the Lord: "Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out demons, and in thy name done many wonderful works?"

Brethren, you had better discard the "expedient" tenets of Lexington, and even Bethany. To build upon them, mixed with truth, even is to build on "sand;" and when the "rain and floods and winds" of God's wrath comes it will all fall on your own wise heads. Better learn the bible under the apostles, even if they were mostly unlearned fishermen.

LETTER FROM A SISTER.

BRO. MCGARY:

I wish to have a few words with the sisters about christians being conformed to the world: Dear sisters, had we not better heed the warning words of Paul? We are assured that we have to be judged by his gospel—the gospel through him. He says:

"I beseech you that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. xii.

Now, sisters, can we do this by conforming ourselves to the world? Never, no, never! "Be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever we sow that also we shall reap. If we sow to the flesh we shall of the flesh reap corruption, but if we sow to the Spirit we shall reap life everlasting."

Oh! dear sisters, what a difference in sowing to the flesh and sowing to the Spirit. I ask you, in the name of our loving Savior, had you not better lay apart all superfluity of naughtiness, all immodest dressing and costly array, for the hope of entering through the gates into the city? There is no promise to those who conform to the follies and fashions of this present evil world. We are specifically told not to "adorn our selves by plaiting the hair, wearing of gold, or putting on costly apparel. Now, sisters, are you heeding these heaven-sent commands? If not, how can you hope for the reward offered to the faithful in Christ Jesus?

Oh! how can my sisters go on in their devotion to the god of this world in the face of these plain commands from God, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, and yet hope to be spared by Him in that awful day of His wrath? We must deny ourselves of ungodliness and worldly lusts. We are not to fashion ourselves according to former lusts in ignorance. Yet, my dear sisters will strive to find what the latest style of the god of this world is. If it is ruffles or stripes, they will make their dress in that manner; if it is with an apron in front all puckered here and there, and one on the back, one side puckered up and the other lopped down, then they will make it that way. Now, my sisters, this looks more like lunacy than anything else.

Ah! my sisters, if you will not obey His commands while it is called to-day, while you have the opportunity, the day will come when your rebellious souls will have to meet the penalty of an outraged God. A thousand years of such lives as you are now living to the flesh would not compensate for one of those awful moments of woe that will surely come upon all the disobedient. Dear sisters, please think of these things seriously.

A sister once wrote to me that she did not like to dress in anything but she thought his preaching would have a better effect than if she dressed plainly. I told her that if all preachers wives would dress according to the Spirit's directions, it would have, in fact, a very marked effect upon their husbands preaching.

We are commanded to always abound in the work of the Lord. Now, my sisters, can you claim that your assiduous devotion to dame fashion, which occupies a greater portion of your time, is any part of "the work of the Lord?" If not, then, as you value your souls you had better leave it off. Christians are to be a "peculiar people, zealous of good works."

But some sister will say: "The apostle did not mean that you should not wear gold or costly array; he meant, not set your affections on these things. O, you had better be trying to change yourselves than that word which liveth and abideth forever—which will judge you in the last day. Be careful my sisters how you try to pervert God's word."

I heard a sister say that she studied God's word faithfully, and endeavored to live up to its commands. At that very time she had gold rings on her fingers, and she was arrayed in costly apparel. I saw nothing about her to indicate that she was trying to obey God's commands. It seems that the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life blind many so that they can not see the commands about gold rings and forbidden adorning.

We are to walk in the Spirit, and not fulfill the lust of the flesh. If we live in the Spirit let us also walk in the Spirit; see Gal. v. I heard a sister say, "I want my daughter to be proud." I don't want mine to be proud, for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Sisters, if you never looked in the perfect law to find out how many kinds of pride is spoken of, you would do well to do so.

Ah! my sisters, we need all of the christian graces to add to our faith that we may bear the fruit of the Spirit. We must put on and wear the whole armor of God that we may be able to withstand the wiles of the devil.

Bro. McGary, may God assist you, that you may go on earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, is my earnest desire.

A SISTER.

We are highly pleased at the interest that many sisters are manifesting for THE FIRM FOUNDATION. When a true sister in Christ becomes a friend to a paper, it means real help for that paper, for where their warm hearts go, their hands go too. With enough sisters to befriend THE FIRM FOUNDATION and work for its circulation, it will outride the angry storm of place-hunting, filthy-lucres loving "pastors."

If the sisters were against us, that is, the true ones, we would entertain fears of success. But many of them are on our side, of these questions—the bible side. Many more have promised to write for us. With a fair proportion of sisters, and God's word on our side, we can boldly bid defiance to the thirty-three would-be popes of Texas, and their auxiliaries, who think more highly of men than is written.

THE FIRM FOUNDATION has no ax to grind; it does not use an ax, but the "sword," which is sharp on both edges. Ax grinders have no part with it.

A. MCG.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

MY DEAR SISTERS:

I have not written to you for some time, for a good many reasons, which it is needless to state; but this much I will say, that sometimes I feel so discouraged and so doubtful as to effecting any change in my sisters, that I almost feel as if my time was wasted. But, lately, I have felt much encouraged by the appearance in THE FIRM FOUNDATION of so many letters from my sisters of exhortation and approbation, which shows that there are a few faithful ones, at least, whose hearts are torn by the contemplation of the backslidden state of God's people.

Let us hope that there are many more whom lack of self-confidence deters from writing, but whose prayers are attending us. Faithful sisters, it behoves us who love the truth, to work early and late to increase the circulation of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, it being the only paper of all our publications that dares to declare all the counsel of God; that dares run on its own merits, trusting to lovers of God to support it, rather than to bogus advertisements, etc.

I ask each sister who reads this to raise a club for it, and the one who raises the largest shall receive a nice gift from me, independent of any offers made by Bro. McGary. Sister Stone sets us a good example in sewing and paying her subscription. Any of us by one days labor can pay for the F. F. this way. Now, all who are willing to work on this plan should send their subscriptions and names to Bro. McGary, who will keep a list and turn them over to me.

I have promised to take the Sister's department in the F. F., therefore ask your aid in every way, especially by contribution. We can do a good work, sisters, by working to extend the circulation of the F. F. It aims boldly at error, and sets christians to thinking, wherever it is read.

But, just as I took up my pen, I was musing over an interesting story I recently read in one of our popular papers. It was called The Tale of a Dinner, and taught a good lesson. Doubtless many of you have read it, also, but for the benefit of those who have not, I will give a brief synopsis of it, and see how many agree with me in my opinion as to the lesson it teaches.

The hero and heroine of this story were a poor, honest preacher and his patient wife. The story opens with the wife up to her elbows in the wash tub, and the preacher ushering two well-to-do brethren into the parlor to await dinner.

When he announces the fact to his wife she is quite overwhelmed, as the larder is destitute of sugar, coffee, meat and flour, save two pounds which she had intended using for starch. But with a tearful "I will make out some way," she sets to work, using the flour for crusts to peach and also chicken pie, reserving some for biscuits. She sweetened the peach pie with a little honey she had to make some cough medicine for herself, little Bennie's pet chicken furnished the meat for the chicken pie, over which loss he sobbed himself to sleep that night.

She sent her last quarter to a neighbor for a pound of butter and a few fresh eggs, at the same time borrowing a cup of coffee. Adding potato salad and corn bread to all this, she had quite an appetizing dinner, spread tastily on a snowy cloth, with napkins to match, and a tall cut-glass fruit stand filled with flowers for ornament.

As she prepared to summon her guests to dinner, her little daughter protests against her appearing in that "ragged wrapper." "But my only good everyday dress is in the tub." Well, then, "put on your only Sunday dress." So she dons her ten-year-old black lawn, and with hair nicely smoothed, and an old lace fichu full of holes added, but deftly arranged with holes inside, she presents quite a nice appearance. In the mean time, the preacher had been haunted by the fear that his wife, Elisha-like, could not produce oil and meal from empty vessels, but the sight of the table revived his spirits, and he overflowed with good humor and hospitality.

The brethren, who, let me state, had been sent to ascertain the pecuniary state of the preacher's family, were charmed with both preacher and wife, to say nothing of the dinner. As they rode home, one of them said, "Well, the parson is not near as poor as I expected to find him." "Nothing like it, nothing like it," was the hearty response. Thus they discussed the nice dinner, hoping Sister S. was not wasteful, but "pie sweetened with honey looked very like it, when honey was twenty and sugar five cents a pound," remarked the merchant brother. Sister S. was dressed well, remarkably well to be at home on a week day; even fine lace around her neck.

To curtail the story, the outcome of the visit was a decision that people that could appear so well did not need help. They did not ask the preacher, for they "could see for themselves," so no help was left. And I think they came to a very natural conclusion, don't you? I thought of course the author would think so too, but instead she wound up by eulogising "the poor, patient, heroic preacher's wife."

Now, I think that preacher's wife did very wrong in creating such a false impression; rather acted an untruth. She should have set those brethren down to just such as she had in the house, and appeared in her ragged wrapper, making a truthful apology for the same, and perhaps her deserving husband would have received the pecuniary aid he so much needed, and which they meant to give him had they not been deterred therefrom by the false appearance of things.

This certainly must be a true story; it is at least a fine counterfeit, for I have seen one preacher's wife sit and talk about the brethren failing to pay her preacher, and how needy her family were, what they owed, etc., while she emphasized her remarks with a hand decked with three large gold rings. Now, it would be very hard for her to make people believe these things while she wears those rings, because it seems to be human nature to judge people's circumstances by the appearance they make. Furthermore, preachers wives are expected to be and should be worthy exemplars for their sisters; therefore, when people see a preacher's wife violating scriptural commands, they can't help but lose confidence in that preachers home teaching, and feel like exclaiming, "physician, heal thyself!"

But, sisters, this fault lies partly at our door. Preacher's wives are but human; they have not wings, even in embryo; therefore, it is very hard for them to dress according to divine law when they are constantly thrown with sisters showily and extravagantly dressed. How careful was Paul lest he should cause his brethren to stumble. Will we never learn to be like him?

But, speaking of rings reminds me of what I started to say about my discouragements at the outset. Nothing but an earnest desire to do good could have ever induced me to write; hence, all of my characters have been drawn from real life, as I well know they have their fac-similes in every congregation in the land. I have heard and read unstinted praise of Sarai's articles, but Sarai feels rather crestfallen when some dear sister who has furnished her a character, and afterwards expressed admiration of her productions, comes out with a new crop of bangs and another character, still clings to that handsome gold ring; and when remonstrated with, confidently exclaims, "Why, this my engagement ring! My husband put it on, and I can't take it off." You can't? Then you prefer to please your husband rather than your Savior. There was no exception made by the Spirit in favor of engagement rings.

Ah, sisters, you had better cut off these "right hands" and pluck out these "right eyes" ere it be too late! But is it love of husband that prompts to this every time? I think not, because I have seen women wear these "love tokens" when they and their husbands were scarcely on speaking terms. Yes, and this tells the tale. It is not love of husband, but pure vanity that prompts you to wear these forbidden things. Were your husband to ask you to remove that ornamental gold band and substitute for it a steel one, you would not do it. Oh that we would earnestly desire to ornament our hands with loving deeds, with "good works."

This recalls such a pathetic scene witnessed by me, years ago. A dear old lady had very suddenly dropped the burden of life, and as we stood around her bier to take a last look at the loved face, her daughter with whom she lived entered the room. She went and knelt by the side of her dead mother, and kissed the cold lips once, twice. Then turning she laid her cheeks lovingly, tenderly on the homely, wrinkled hands, and as she kissed them over and over again, she cried, "Oh, these willing hands, these willing hands; always so ready to minister to others!"

As my tears fell fast, I thought, what a beautiful tribute to the dead one's memory! And was it not, dear sisters? Let us, then, strive to ornament our hands, our lives, with noble, Christ-like deeds, to humble ourselves to implicit obedience, that we may have a "right to the tree of life, and enter through the gates into the city."

SARAI.

Bro. Ezzell has sent us an appeal to the brethren for help for his book, the Great Legacy, requesting us to publish it, which we have done.

We are sorry for Bro. Ezzell or any other Bro. who becomes so embarrassed. But we conceive it to be our duty to state in this connection that we believe there are some egregious errors in his Great Legacy. We are sure that some are promised an interest in the heavenly estate by Bro. Ezzell upon different terms to those embodied in the last Will and Testament of God, which is sealed by the blood of His Son.

However, there are many good things in Bro. Ezzell's Legacy, enough to be worth what he asks for the book if they are carefully separated from the illegal items.

A LIBERAL OFFER.

For every subscriber sent us between the 15th of October and the 15th of September, we will allow 25 per cent commission. Besides this, we offer the following premium on clubs: One-half of the largest club that is sent to us between the above dates will be returned to the sender of such club, as a premium.

That this may be fully understood we will suppose the largest club to be 40. In such case the getter up of the club would take out $10 for commission, and send us $30; and when it proved to be the largest club we would return to its sender $15.

Brethren, we offer no such premiums as silver communion sets, because such things find no place among true christians. The use of such things in a congregation of the Lord's people is a corruption of the true spirit of christianity into a vain, lustful spirit of worldly pride, from which christians must turn away.

We could, by offering such premiums, make a more showy offer, and at less expense to us, but in doing so we would become a party to the introduction of the devils-ware into the house of the Lord. Some of our publishers are doing just this thing. They have associates who are silver-smiths (a very strange avocation for a christian) and these associates have a fine opening to merchandise through the columns of such papers by holding out these shining premiums.

I tell you brethren, the devil is a pushing, enterprising old fellow; he is becoming full partner—the Co. part—of some enterprises that he ought not to be taken into. We are truly sorry to see such a selling out mania among those who use to stand so firm for their convictions.

But we offer, in the first place, full value for the work of those who are willing to help extend the circulation of THE FIRM FOUNDATION. Then, in addition, we offer a premium in money, which can be used to the good of the cause—we deny that a silver communion set can be thus used.

Send in your clubs brethren and sisters, taking courage in your work at the thought that you are helping a paper that, whatever its faults may be, it is ready and anxious to correct them whenever pointed out—a paper that is not circumscribed by the metes and bounds of a human "plea."

Subscription price, $1.00, which holds good for twelve months, even after the change to a weekly.

THE MOORE PROPOSITION.

After having read what has been said pro and con by our leading journalists, especially the controversy between Bro. Allen and the piquant defenders of Mr. Moore, we are forced to the conclusion that Moore is guilty of having advocated the union and fellowship of all who claim to be christians, without regard to baptism—that is, making no difference between sprinkled and immersed persons. This must be the decision of all candid and dispassionate minds that have weighed the discussion upon both sides.

And those who have attempted to shield Mr. Moore from the well merited reproofs and rebukings that have been directed at him by his brethren who look with disfavor upon his proposition, are as virtually linked to that proposition as he. They really deserve less respect and sharper censure than Moore at the hands of all christians, and even those who make no pretension to christianity, who admire a straight, manly course. They are willing to appear before the world as his defenders, under the aspect of "charitable" protectors of a persecuted man, who is being set upon by his enemies, armed with the destructive bludgeons of malevolence.

The cast that they are trying to give to that controversy will serve them a double purpose:

1. It will have a tendency to draw attention from the real issues involved in Mr. Moore's proposition.

2. It will gain prestige for them in the ranks of "orthodoxy," which will be made available when the right time comes. Their hearts are ablaze with the gist of that "proposition," but they lack the courage to take the chances of an open advocacy of it at this time, but will keep it pent up till their schemes for its easy accomplishment are fully matured.

Isaac Everett, their astute chief, probably has a creed in his pocket now, subscribed to by that horde of impatient

"pastors" who are ever ready to do his bidding for the lucrative "calls" that he works up for them. With the acumen of this arch-rebel to engineer the movement of the restless army of "progress," we may expect Mr. Moore's position to be reached by it in a very short while. In the mean time Mr. Moore need not suffer uneasiness; he will be well cared for by those who have defended him. He will still have the fatest place across the waters that is within their power to give.

A careful retrospection is now in order, to see what causes have conspired to bring about this state of affairs, and who are now, directly or indirectly, hastening on such a union as Mr. Moore proposes, which is an ultimate and inevitable sequence to causes that are rooted and bedded in the very fundamental principles of "our plea for christian union."

It is high time that this re-examination should be made, and if anything is found in the make-up of "our plea," from its inception to this distracted hour, that will not square up by the "measuring reed," that thing, whatever it may be, or however sacred it may be held, by virtue of its originator or long use, should be removed at once. Whatever has found a place in "our plea" that is not provided for by the "perfect law," has been introduced at the instigation of the great adversary of truth—"the prince of the power of the air, that now worketh in the children of disobedience."

ple among our brethren, that one unscriptural step or practice calls for, and is followed and supported by another and another, etc., until points of great departure from truth are reached. Giant strides away from truth would be unsuccessful in their efforts to harm the cause of Christ, because the watchmen on the walls of Zion would not fail to perceive them; and successfully point out their direction.

The devil has always been too cunning to attempt to disrupt "the body of Christ" by open and bold attacks upon it, or by the introduction of extreme moves into it, save by piecemeal. His most successful agents are men "transformed as the ministers of righteousness," who, by one small encroachment after another, succeed in leading away disciples into the realms of the kingdom of darkness. In his satanic boundaries are many institutions to engage the activities of those who do not think "a right thing can be done in a wrong way." All such institutions as "State meetings, missionary societies, and their auxiliaries, are his. Christ has no use for such things. He is "head over all things to the church."—Eph. 1, 22.

We, then, very naturally conclude that good work cannot be done in any of these human and satanic institutions. "The perfect law in which we are given all things that pertain unto life and godliness; and which things are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," is as silent as the tongue of death about any such institutions, except, perhaps, to include them with the "unfruitful works of darkness."

A man who works for Christ must work in that institution over which He is head—which is the church of God. The apostles of Christ have given us perfect and complete rules for working in this heaven-born institution. To work by other rules or in other institutions is to work for the union proposed by Mr. Moore, which is the broad channel into which all human practices and institutions are tending, and into which they will ultimately be merged.

But we neither have the space nor the inclination now to point out all of the feeders to Mr. Moore's grand trunk line to purgatory. But unless we make immediate and vigorous efforts to return to primitive grounds—not of "our plea," but scriptural grounds—many who now think they are every whit primitive will be carried away with the popular current and drowned in perdition.

We will give a short quotation from an article of Bro. J. A. Hardings, in the Gospel Advocate, of September 23, on "the Moore controversy." We greatly admire Bro. Hardings' manly and courageous manner and methods of opposing error. We believe him to be scrupulously honest and conscientious. We were forced to the conclusion that F. M. Green wilfully and maliciously attempted to destroy him; and we further believe that Bro. Harding was correct in all he had to say about them. Yet we believe that Bro. Harding is remotely doing a work that will, sooner or later, eventuate in just such a union as that proposed by W. T. Moore.

I allude to his practice of receiving converts from the sects on an immersion that has not the characteristics of the "one baptism," and hence is not authorized by Christ. Immersion without those antecedents that preceded the "one baptism" practiced by the apostles, is no more of God than is sprinkling or pouring. Bro. Harding knows this, and yet he continues to recognize such as scriptural baptism. This work of his is as antagonistic to "the faith once delivered to the saints," as if he were to advocate Mr. Moore's proposition for union.

Bro. Harding closes his article with these words: But what will Allen and McGarvey and Grubbs and such men do about it? Those babies are still life members; Prof. Neville is still a life director; (at least if any changes have been made except in the withdrawal of one infant, I have never heard of it;) Moore will certainly be sustained; and the society will thus take another step towards infant sprinkling.

I do not doubt but that within a few years—ten or fifteen perhaps—many of the society leaders will be ardently advocating the reception of all sprinkled people who want to come among us; and many churches will be acting on the advice." Neither do we doubt this. There is a strong element among us ripe for it now. See how few have spoken against Moore's proposition, and how furiously some of our most popular men have inveighed against Bro. Allen for his opposition to Moore.

But why is it that Bro. Harding opposes such a union? Why does he oppose the "missionary society" so vehemently? Is it not because such things and practices are not authorized by that which "thoroughly furnishes"—that which is a sufficient rule of faith and practice? If so, that is the very same reason why we are opposed to the practice of Bro. Harding and others of taking in sectarians upon a baptism that is no more authorized by the scriptures than those things he opposes. Is it his respect for the word of God, or "our plea" that causes him to continue this practice?

We here promise Bro. Harding that we will produce scriptural authority for the "missionary society," baby-sprinkling, and Mr. Moore's proposition for union, whenever he produces if for his practice that we have called in question. Will he put us to the test? We hope he will.

A. McG.

We have just received eleven pages of M. S. from Mr. Banta. In these eleven pages cannot be found even a hint at what he promised to do. He is now crowing for a fight over the church-kingdom question. What kind of a chicken is he any way? We have never thought there was much game about this very small breed. He had a great deal to say at Lampasas about my brethren not being willing to discuss with Christadelphians. If they all stop about as he does, it is no wonder. His next article, for aught I know, might be a denial that the moon is made of green cheese.

NEGLECTED DUTIES.

WRITTEN FOR THE FIRM FOUNDATION.

AMONG professors of the christian religion perhaps there is no duty more seriously neglected than that of meeting on the first day of the week and partaking of the bread and wine in remembrance of Jesus.

How often are we commanded to partake, and how often do we give heed to the command, are questions that should be well considered by all, especially by those who are in the habit of neglecting this all-important duty entirely, or only discharge it when time and opportunity suit their convenience.

The frivolous excuses we may offer for non-attendance may be accepted by men to whom they may appear reasonable, but how will it be with "God who searcheth the hearts?" ought to be the question.

We are taught that the immediate followers of our Lord Jesus Christ partook of the bread and wine on the first day of the week, so we are justified in the conclusion that christians ought to partake once each week at least, and certainly those who meet less frequent fail to discharge their whole duty.

The performance of this duty is perhaps meaningless to those who have never tasted the sweets of redeeming grace, or felt the effects of "pure and undefiled religion;" but to christians nothing is more consoling in time of sorrow, nothing affords more relief in time of distress, and I can think of no duty so well calculated to prepare us for the discharge of all other duties incumbent upon us as professors of the christian religion.

It is to be regretted here at Blanco (perhaps this is only one among many places) that only a very small fraction of the members enrolled in the Christian church attend regularly to this all-important duty, and some neglect it entirely, while, if some new preacher holds a protracted meeting, or a big camp-meeting is being carried on, though several miles away, most of these negligent members find the time and opportunity to attend very often.

Notwithstanding it is discouraging to realize the above state of affairs in the church, yet, all who are faithful have every reason to be thankful for the precious promise the Lord has left, "that where only two or three are assembled together I will be in their midst to own and to bless."

With the foregoing facts, and numerous others constantly before our minds, it behoves every follower of Christ to lose no time or spare no pains endeavoring to reclaim these cold, negligent, and apparently dead members.

Therefore, let each one of us who are endeavoring, by the help of God, to do our whole christian duty, to practice brotherly kindness, and in so doing let each one of us try to persuade some brother or sister to come up to the house of the Lord at the time appointed for our social meetings, and if they will come in the right spirit we can promise to do them good—neither should we neglect to pray that our efforts may not be in vain.

It may be the duty of husbands to encourage wives, or wives to encourage husbands; brothers or sisters, parents or children may accomplish great good by speaking some kind, proper words at the proper time and place. All of us are ready to say we have little or no influence; whether this be true or false we have no means of ascertaining, except by trial, and, if after a lifetime spent in trying to persuade others we are the means of turning only one soul to Christ, who can estimate the value of an immortal soul? Or what are a few brief years of time compared to an endless eternity to which we are hastening?

When all professors of the christian religion will endeavor to teach that obedience to all christian duties taught in the scriptures is essential to salvation; then show by their daily practices they believe what they teach, then we may reasonably expect a revival in the Christian church unparalleled in the annals of the world.

The Christian church is being watched continually by all non-professors without the least degree of allowance, and neglect of any duty leaves a lasting impression on their minds, especially those who are ready and ever willing to find fault. This neglect of duty gives rise to the oft-repeated saying, "I am just as good or perhaps better than many who profess to be christians."

We are well aware that none of us can attain to perfection in this life, but all of us know equally well that with very little effort on our part each of us can make wonderful improvement in religious life, first, by a faithful discharge of all duties we are commanded to perform, then by leaving undone many things as we are commanded by divine authority, then by planting ourselves upon the firm foundation, the word of God, and taking for our guide daily the last will and testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

It is to be hoped that in the future

ministers will more frequently present this all-important subject to the minds of their congregations, and that congregations will give the more earnest heed to this all important duty lest some of our members "let it slip" so often that finally they will forget it entirely.

We know of some denominations who make it the duty of their congregations to assemble for the purpose of partaking of the Lord's supper only three or four times during each year, or in other words, just when it suits their convenience best. Such denominations have just as much scriptural authority for waiting a whole year or more as for only a few months, and those who never attend except at times when no sacrifice must be made or inconvenience experienced most likely had as well stay away altogether.

This neglect of duty upon the part of church members no doubt gives rise to the frivolous excuses rendered by non-professors for the small amount of interest manifested by them in the up-building and sustenance of Christ's kingdom, or church.

It is nothing uncommon to hear men boldly assert that they have not attended church once during the last five years, and don't expect to for five to come. Then, if asked their reasons for so doing, the reply is most likely to be "Well, I am as good or perhaps better than some of your church members, for they never attend church except on rare occasions."

Now, fellow traveler to the bar of God, if your name is enrolled in the Christian church book, stop and ask yourself the question, am I included in the above named list? and if you are, lose no time in "laying aside the weight and every sin that doth so easily beset us, and run the race set before you," praying that our skirts may be clear of the blood of these fault-finding fellow creatures if they will not be persuaded.

R. W. GILLESPIE.

BLANCO, TEXAS.

LA PORTE, IND., Sept. 29, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I undertake once more to write a few lines for the FIRM FOUNDATION. These are perilous times for the church of Christ. As Paul says in 2nd Timothy III, 1, This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those who are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

All the above described characters we now have. But the worst of the matter is, we have them in the congregations of the disciples. Who but the heady, high-minded lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, have introduced into the church the music box, the festival, the Sunday school picnic, the church sociable, and all such mischievous devices? Who but the lovers of themselves and the despisers of those who are good, call those who adhere to the bible and defend the truth, old fogies and mossbacks?

Who but traitors have departed from the faith, and are giving heed to seducing spirits and dictrines of devils, and are speaking lies in hypocrisy, having callous consciences as if seared with a hot iron? Are they not such as claim to be christians, and to stand on the bible, and at the same time affiliate with and hold union services with heretics, whose doctrines they know to be false, and whose practices they know to be unscriptural?

When we have such men as W. T. Moore, the great London missionary, and Isaac Errett and A. I. Hobbs, C. McPherson, N. S. Haynes, and many others among us laboring, to lead the people to recognize all the sects as christians, we think that the perilous times have come. Moore suggests a plan for all christians to unite. It is the same suggestion given a few years since by one Mr. Lamar, of Georgia, who then wrote for the Standard. The proposition is to admit all persons of all denominations to church fellowship whether they have been sprinkled, poured or baptized. If they choose to be baptized, baptize them; if not, let them remain unbaptized. This they say would leave each one's conscience free. This, as everyone can see at a glance, allows one's conscience to be his guide, and wholly nullifies the law of Christ.

Whence a man's conscience? Evidently from his education and training.

If a man has been educated to be a Methodist, he has a Methodist conscience; if he has been trained to be a Baptist, he has a Baptist conscience, and so of all other sects. Now, they will each retain his conscience until he is converted. If he be converted to christianity he will no longer have a sectarian conscience, but a christian conscience. He will at once divest himself of every vestige of sectarian conscience. He will wholly repudiate sectism and adhere to christianity and the bible. It is impossible that christianity and sectism can be identical. Christianity is one, sectarianism implies division. It indicates that the parties are distinct—different.

But Moore, Lamar and company would have a union destitute of unity; a whole made up of incoherent parts. How long would such an arrangement of heterogeneous parts continue, does any intelligent person suppose? Judging from the early departure of these same men from the christian system to their present position, it certainly would not be long until they themselves would abandon such a mass of corruption, unless indeed, as seems probable, they love corruption more than purity. I am sure, however, that there is no probability of any of the sects abandoning their beloved heresies to embark in so silly an enterprise; and all the harm this uncalled for suggestion will do will be to expose the ignorance and infidelity of many who heretofore have borne the name christian, but who never fully accepted the doctrine of Christ, either because they never fully understood it, or because they never fully believed it.

W. T. Moore and all his class of thinkers seem to think that because many persons who have been sprinkled conscientiously believe that they have been baptized, that their consciences therefore ought not to be disturbed.

With equal propriety it might be urged that because many persons sincerely believe that their sins were pardoned at a mourners bench, therefore, their consciences ought not to be disturbed by teaching them the gospel plan of salvation, which differs from the mourners bench system in all its parts. In fact, Moore's suggestion is an entire abandonment of the gospel of the truth of Revelation, and an accession to false doctrine and false practice. It can not be otherwise, and yet the Standard, the Christian Evangelist, and perhaps some other papers are favorable to it.

Are not the times perilous when such men as the editors of the above papers either wilfully or ignorantly abandon the truth? If there was any probability of persons being saved who believe and practice falsehood, then I would think the chance of the common sectarian for salvation far better than the chance of those who have known the truth and have abandoned it.

According to the scriptures, there is absolutely no such thing as finding pardon or salvation at a mourners bench, or any other place outside of faithful obedience to the law of Christ—the truth.

There is no such thing as sprinkling or pouring for baptism. There is no such thing as entering the church in infancy. Now, all these things have been claimed by those whom W. T. Moore proposes to receive into the fellowship. He knows that there are no such terms of admission into Christ's kingdom, and yet he and his coadjutors are willing to substitute such a procedure for the law of the Lord, the King.

I have not been at all surprised at this monstrous suggestion of W. T. Moore. I have been looking for and expecting no better fruits of this advanced wing of the church. It is on a line with modern Sunday schools, organs, choirs, festivals, Sunday school picnics, conventions, missionary societies, etc. All these are sectarian tricks and inventions. A love of money and popularity have led all the advance leaders into these things. They are not to be trusted nor followed, and I hope that all true disciples will abandon them and their teaching, and maintain the truth and stand by those who defend it.

I hope also that all true brethren will assist in supporting THE FIRM FOUNDATION in its defense of the truth. It is a necessity, as there is no other paper that will so fearlessly defend the whole truth.

Come to the rescue, brethren, and help sustain the truth. With love for all true brethren, and prayers for the success of truth and righteousness, I remain,

Your brother in the faith,

I. O. STONE.

FUDGING.

When I was a boy I used to play marbles; sometimes the boys would say, "now, Jack, don't fudge, if you do, it won't count." The word had a different meaning when I was a boy to what it has now.

The dictionary defines the word to be nonsense. What we boys meant by fudging was this: we had a line or mark to start from, and each boy had to rest his hand on this line, and not "fudge," (go beyond)—pass over.

Now, the point I wish to make is this: the brethren in discussing the baptismal question remind me of the time when I was a boy—they will fudge! The very ground in dispute is passed over by them without giving the real issue any notice whatever.

They quote, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." They say the Baptists have believed and have been immersed in water, therefore, they are saved.

I ask, what have they believed? That God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned their sins, of course; made to confess a falsehood!! Is this confession to precede the "one baptism?" No, my dear brethren, it is an antecedent of Baptist baptism, done by the authority of the Baptist church, and not by the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul says: "Whatsoever we do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Cal. III, 17.

The real issue in this question is, What is obedience? Can a person obey God without the proper faith in Jesus Christ? Are there not false Christs in the world? Jesus has warned us. He says, "Then if any man (Baptist or Methodist) shall say unto you, lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not, for there shall arise false Christs and false prophets—teachers—and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect. Behold I have told you before."—Matthew xxiv, 23, 25.

No one will deny that we have false prophets—teachers—in this age of the world, and false Christs. The Baptists say He is in the desert, or they found Him by some old stump or tree. The Methodists say He is to be found at the mourner's bench, in a pile of straw. The Baptists find Christ and get their sins pardoned before they are dipped.

Have we not false prophets or teachers? They represent a false Christ to the people, and the result is they are deceived, deluded; their faith is not in the Christ of God—the true Christ, who is found in His own appointments, and represented to us by Paul, Peter, James, John, and others of His apostles who have the authority.

Bro. Thornberry talks about "playing in the water!" but this fudging business is worse; yes, much worse than playing in the water.

Now, brethren, quit all of this nonsense—fudging—and come to the real issue like men, and let us have this question settled. Don't be dodging and fudging so much; "if you do, it won't count."

Yours for the whole truth,
A. J. McCARTY.

AUSTIN, TEX. }

DEAR BRO: Enclosed find postal note for one dollar in payment for THE FIRM FOUNDATION for one year, to be sent to W. S. Hollis, Marion, Union Parish, La.

Most of the F. F. I like, but I object to a hobby on any one subject. If you wish you can send an occasional copy to me, and I will show it to the brethren, and if they want it I will send for it for them.

QUERY: The disciples are accustomed to stand to give thanks when they break bread. Where is either precept or example in the scriptures for the example?

Truly your brother,
Box 81. J. B. DAVIS.

My Brother, I can't cite you to precept or example for this practice of standing while giving thanks, or in prayers. The class of teachers who have introduced this popular posture into the church care very little for precept or example; when they set their heads to do a thing they just do it. Their own wisdom is sufficient with them and those who do their bidding.

We have been intending to offer an argument against standing in prayers, but when we do we expect those who favor the practice to "object to it as a hobby on one subject." However this may be, we believe that it is just assinnful to refuse to be guided by the example of apostles in this matter as any other. It shows that those who do so are not satisfied with the way the apostles did, and hence abandon it for a way of their own.

So it is about many other practices we could mention, but as so many of our brethren are afraid of hobbies we will desist this time, only saying that whatever is done under the claim of having been done by the authority of Christ, that has not in the New Testament a direct command, clear example or necessary inference to sustain it, is presumptuous sin in whoever does it.

GONE TO REST.

Died at her home near Leona, Leon county, Texas, on the 23d of September, 1885, Mrs. Harriet M. Durst, at the advanced age of 82 years.

Time has accomplished its work! The sting of death is passed, and the grave claims the decaying body. If all ended here, an everlasting farewell would go forth from our sad hearts; but, inasmuch as we are taught by inspiration that "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality," and that death is the gateway into a future state, or the paradise of God, our broken hearts turn "over there," and we gladly contemplate the future meeting.

In the year 1864 she obeyed the Lord and was translated into His body. Her interest in the Master's cause grew with increasing years, and she was ever found at the post of duty.

Our Father, we need help to say,

"Thy will be done." We are frail, and cling tenaciously to the beings of earth with love often greater than we give to Thee. Lord, pity us in our weakness and sorrow, and help us to submit patiently to Thy will.

When I think that I have seen my mother for the last time on earth, and that her regular precious letters, always ending with "God bless you, my dear children," have ceased to come, my heart is filled with sadness and grief. Farewell, dear mother, 'till the happy meeting in the beyond.

HER SON, JOHN.

STATE "EVANGELIST."

We frequently hear or read something about "State Evangelist Young." What is meant by "State Evangelist?" Does it signify that this man Young is to preach in every city, town and hamlet in the great State of Texas—that his voice shall be heard from Red River to the Rio Grande, and from the northernmost tip of the panhandle to the Gulf?

Oh no, this can't be what is meant by "State Evangelist," because such evangelists rarely ever visit the remote or inaccessible points in their "journeyings and sojournings"—in fact, they do not have time from one "State meeting" to another to go all over the State. Then, "State Evangelist" has some other signification. It must be that they are creatures of the "State meeting"—officers wholly dependent on that institution for their existence. This view of it will suit all around.

In the scriptures we see no mention of such a class of men, hence, we very naturally conclude that they were not in existence then—were not needed. Then, there was no such things as "State meetings;" if there had been we suppose they would have had State Evangelists, State Solicitors, etc., etc., as these all go together.

Everything must have a name. Scriptural things have scriptural names, but unscriptural things, such, for instance, as "State meetings, State Evangelists, State Solicitors," etc., etc., must have an unscriptural name, such as State Evangelist. We first heard that Young was "State Solicitor," but we now hear him referred to as "State Evangelist."

If such men as McPherson and Homan remain in the lead, as they now seem to be in State meeting lore, we may expect organ, flanged seat and "Apostolic Guide" solicitors sent and sustained by the "State meeting." These are progressive times.

PENN CHALLENGED.

In the Texas Christian we see that our brethren at Abilene, Texas, are trying to get up a discussion with Major Penn, the great Baptist evangelist of prayer-killing notoriety. We think their effort is vain and foolish

1. Because Major Penn is proverbially unfair and unreliable in what he says in public, if there is any coloring of truth in current reports about him.

2. Because our brethren ought to know that Penn is too smart to put his fulsome system of dogmatism in the light of truth where intelligent men and women of his own church, even, can take a fair look at it, freed from the perplexing and obscuring influences of his little pandemonium under a tent.

3. Because our brethren ought to place too high an estimate on the plan of redemption from sins to attempt to make a plaything of it to while away their time.

From the standpoint occupied by our representative men, such as McGarvey, Allen, Errett, Lipscomb and Sewell, J. A. Harding, and Barnes, of other states; and Wilmeth and Rawlins, the Clarks, Carlton; McPherson, Homan, and others too numerous to mention, of Texas, there is not an essential difference between us and the Baptists. They are in Christ as well as we; when they die "strict Baptists" they go to rest in Jesus." Then there is nothing that we have learned that it is at all necessary for Major Penn or any other Baptist to learn. So, when our brethren want to measure polemical swords with Mr. Penn, or other Baptist divines, for pastime, let them use some question in their play that is not held so sacred. We would suggest for this would-be discussion, something like this: If you have hold of a lions tail, which is the wisest, to hold on, or turn loose? This will be amusing.

We dare say that when Major Penn was at Abilene he baptized more persons than any other man that ever baptized there, in the same length of time. It is safe to say that he baptizes five times as many as any of the brethren mentioned above.

While we hold that Major Penn never baptized a person into Christ in all his work, (not because he was the administrator, but because the persons baptized were not properly taught, and did not confess the good confession with the mouth) we could consistently oppose him. But these brethren mentioned above, and the large majority who hold with them, can not consistently oppose him, but should bid him God-speed. Such brethren should feel the full force of the Major's reply to these Abilene brethren, when, in reply to their challenge to discuss with them, he said: "I am doing a great work, so that I can not come; why should the work cease whilst I leave it and come down to you?" The Major quoted this from Neh. vi, 3.

If he is baptizing persons into Christ, as many of my brethren contend that he is, he is doing a "great work," and it is shame on any man who loves Christ to desire him to leave such a work to discuss points that need not be known.

Only the spirit of jealousy on the part of any of our preachers could furnish an adequate cause for their challenging him for a discussion, so long as they believe he is baptizing persons into Christ. Every fair-minded brother can see this inconsistency; and all who do, and who, after seeing it, continue to give countenance to those who persist in continuing this course, are surely as sinful in the eye of God as they possibly could be.

LETTER FROM BRO. OATMAN.

LLANO, TEXAS, Sep. 27, 1885.

A. MCGARY,
AUSTIN, TEX., }

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: My subscription expires with No. 12, of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and I herewith hand you postoffice money note for one dollar, the price of another years subscription, for which please receipt me.

I have seen many things in the FOUNDATION that I heartily endorse, and many others that I candidly denounce; and during the coming year I wish to discuss some of your very strange positions with you, for either you or I are wrong, and need setting right.

As for myself I do not claim to be infallible, but do claim to be ready to accept the good grain wherever I find it, but it must have sprung from the ancient seed, that sown by the apostles, to be worth anything to me; and in order that I may not be deceived or mistaken about your positions, I hope you will, through the columns of the FOUNDATION, give me plain and unequivocal answers to the following questions:

1. Who do you fellowship as brothers and sisters in Christ? I see that you unchristianize nearly all the preachers of any note in the churches, some of whom are known to me personally to be men of unquestionable piety.

2. Who were the pastors spoken of by Paul? What office or position did they hold?

2. Do you receive any members from the denominations on their baptism at all?

From the run of your arguments I have been led to believe that you ignored all baptisms except those performed by a member of the Christian church, and that even then it was not valid unless the convert made the confession with his own mouth, unassisted, and not merely by giving his consent.

4. What do you consider the gospel? Does it not consist of facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed, and promises to be enjoyed? And if so, please designate what facts are necessary to be believed, and what commands are to be obeyed before we can expect to enjoy the promises?

When your premises are clearly stated we may not differ materially, for I may have misunderstood some of your positions; but if we do, I assure you that I will discuss them with you in a Christian spirit, or not at all.

Your Bro. in Christ,

JOHN C. OATMAN.

We are more than willing to discuss points of difference with Bro. Oatman, or any other brother who may find in anything that we write on the plan of redemption, grounds for well defined issue.

But, as Bro. Oatman is a lawyer, and hence familiar with the rules of argument, we believe that we can submit to him propositions that will more fully and clearly embody the issues between us than these he has presented. Here they are:

1. Can persons be baptized scripturally who do not believe that baptism is for the remission of sins?

J. C. Oatman to affirm.

2. Is confession with the mouth that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, or words of equal import, an indispensable prerequisite to scriptural baptism?

A. McGary to affirm.

Now, from Bro. Oatman's seeming anxiety to discuss these questions, and his reputation for integrity, we believe that he cannot fail to see in these propositions fair opportunities for a free, full, and fair discussion on these points. We submit them to him, believing that he can not reasonably object to them.

We have no objection whatever to answering his questions, save that it would widen out the grounds till the main issues would not appear so clear, and hence require more time and space to reach conclusions.

If, after we have discussed these questions, Bro. Oatman finds other issues among "our very strange positions" that he desires to discuss, we shall not object to discussing them also. We, too, promise to discuss these differences in proper spirit.

If Bro. Oatman will accept the propositions above, let him write out his affirmative argument on the first proposition and send it forward.

We hope that all of our readers will give Bro. Stone's article a careful reading. Bro. Stone is a close reasoner, and we hope he will favor our readers with an article every issue. There would not be much footing left in the church for these popular "pastors" and "our plea" D. D's. who are "causing divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which we have learned," if a few brethren in every section would put them to the "sword" as Bro. Stone does.

LETTER FROM BRO. McDONALD.

ALEXANDER, ERATH CO., TEXAS,
September 23, 1885.

Mr. A. MCGARY,
AUSTIN, TEXAS.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST: Thinking that a few lines from this part of the State would not be out of place, I thought I would write you in regard to the advancement of the one cause.

I commenced a protracted effort at Union Grove, in Comanche county, on Friday night before the second Lord's day in July, continuing until the Friday following, the result being nine added to the one body by confession and baptism.

From this point I went to the Curtis School-House, where I had four accessions by confession and baptism. From this point I went to Dublin, in this county, where I had twenty-nine accessions, some by faith and obedience, and some restored.

From here I went to Jewel, in Eastland county; had four added, one from the Methodists, one from the Baptists, and two by letter. From here I went to Stapp's Store, in Comanche county, where there was thirty-three added, seventeen by faith and baptism, two from the Baptists, the remainder by reclamation.

From here I went to Live Oak Grove, in this county; had twenty-two accessions, two from the Baptists, the rest by confession and baptism. From this point I went to the Henderson School-House, in Eastland county; had four by confession and baptism, making a total of one hundred and five.

I see an article in THE FIRM FOUNDATION headed, "Beware, Hobbyists!" You then proceed to speak of Brother Clark's meeting at Cisco, and of the little band at Cisco extending an invitation to any preaching brother in good standing, and free from cranks and hobbies, and who have no ax to grind, to call and preach for them.

I do not believe Bro. Clark so much to blame as the band at Cisco, for they are governed by the one man system, and that man is W. C. Tully, who has told the writer that none who had anything to say that would reflect on the denominations would be allowed to preach in Cisco as long as he could help it. But Brother Clark did one thing at Cisco that I cannot and will not do. In thanking the sectarian part of the town for the courtesy they had extended him he said he prayed God that they might ever prove themselves christians in the future as they had done in the past.

May the good Lord help us all to learn the truth and contend for it, and "rebuke and reprove" those of the contrary with all long suffering; is my prayer.

May the good Lord bless all who labor in truth and in deed.

I remain, yours in the one faith,

WM. C. McDONALD.

We are glad to have such reports as this of Bro. McDonald's to give to our readers as items of church news, but we are sorry that our brethren who are sound on other questions will take into the churches Baptists and Methodists upon different conditions than those required of aliens, and different from those that any inspired man ever taught by precept, example, or necessary inference.

A. MCG.

BROTHER MCGARY:

Please give us your idea of 1st Cor. xv, 29. How were they baptized for the dead?

Your sister in Christ,

M. L.

Sometimes we see one question answered by asking another, or others. Suppose we pursue that course in answering this one? Paul said to the Roman brethren: "Know ye not that so many of us (christians) as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we (christians) also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin."—Rom. vi, 3, 6.

To the Colossian brethren the same apostle says: "Buried with Him in baptism wherein also ye (christians) are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised Him from the dead." Now, the apostles language to the Corinthian brethren, which is under consideration, says: "Else what shall they (those christians) do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why then are they baptized for them?"

What Paul said to the Roman, Colossian and Corinthian brethren, as quoted above, may be said of all brethren in Christ.

Now for some questions in answer to this sister's question: Who were the "old men" that Paul speaks of as having "been crucified with Christ?" and in other places spoken of as "put off?" See Col. iii, 9, and Eph. iv, 22. Were they not their former sinful selves? Yes, they were the lustful, uncurbed, fleshly-wise creatures that became "old" when these brethren became new creatures in Christ Jesus?"

When were these "old men put off?" We answer, when the "new men were put on." This was when they were baptized. Baptism, while it was a birth of the new creature, was a grave for the "old." Hence, when these brethren, and all others who come to Christ, went into the baptismal waters they were baptized for the living and the dead.

Paul goes on to say: "And why stand we in jeopardy every hour? I protest by your rejoicing which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily. If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantage it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

Yes, that was just what those "old crucified men" would have done; and Paul says that if there is to be no resurrection of the dead, it were better to do it. It was sheer folly to be baptized, putting away these "old men" who would have gotten all of the sweets out of life had they not been crucified and baptized—buried in their watery graves.

If the above is not the idea of Paul's language, then we are at a loss to discover anything that has the remotest semblance to it. We do not expect our readers who have already seen these Corinthians baptized for their dead relations, to agree with our idea. We care very little for such differences anyway, as they are differences upon matters of opinion. But when it comes to such wide differences in matters of faith, as now exists between us, it has a fearful look to us.

But, thanks to God for the consoling thought, that those who are on the Lord's side here, will be on His side "over there."

 ABOUT OUR CIRCULATION.

And now again about the circulation of THE FIRM FOUNDATION. Brethren and sisters, those of you who believe that it is contending for the faith ought to put forth vigorous efforts to extend its circulation,

Its enemies who are beginning to see that it is gaining ground, and that it has entered the field of conflict with every character of innovation to stay, are very industrious in putting forth every effort in their power to cripple or hinder it.

They know full well that they can't meet its positions in fair, open argument, and they are resorting to the dark, underhanded tricks that the wicked votaries of wounded error, who have not the courage to confess their faults one to another, might be expected to resort to.

Some are saying that we began the publication of THE FIRM FOUNDATION as a financial enterprise; that we expected to make money out of it; while others are saying that its founders will bankrupt, and their names pass into ignominy. Others are manufacturing defamatory reports about these founders.

Now, why do our opponents act in this way? Suppose all they say were true, would it change the truths that we are advocating?

But we never expected to make money out of the paper. If we keep even and lose our time only we will do much better than we expected at the outset. We determined not to make money out of it, but would like for it to meet expenses and remunerate some of our worthy contributors; further than this we have never indulged a hope from a financial standpoint.

We do hope to make the paper more attractive and worthy by enlarging it and by enlisting other contributors to its columns. Now, if our subscribers will help us some, we will succeed in all these things, and the unperverted gospel will rise triumphant over all human "pleas," sectism, and devices of worldly wisdom.

We are highly pleased at the way our old subscribers are renewing. We are sorry to have to confess that the writer's pen has too often marred the pages of the paper with things that wore a vindictive hue. We hope to do better in future. But, brethren, it is not an easy matter, when you know you are advocating truth, to refer to false brethren and expose their inconsistencies and sophistries to evade the force of truth, in what everyone would say was the proper spirit.

In conclusion, we urge the attention of the friends of THE FIRM FOUNDATION to active and immediate work in its behalf, that it may be able to reach out and take hold of popular error and sin in high places. Do you want it to be able to do this? Then work for it.

A prominent preaching brother wrote us yesterday that he thought it was to be the paper of Texas.

A. MCG.

COME OUT ON THE LORD'S SIDE, BRETHREN!

One of our very successful evangelists dropped into the office of THE FIRM FOUNDATION a few days ago, and we had a short, but very pleasant conversation with him. He has hitherto been very much opposed to our work, and was candid enough to tell us so, which we admired in him, though we knew it before he told us.

We met this brother once before, but had no conversation with him. In the run of our conversation in our office, he said: "Brother McGary, you have the advantage on this baptismal question, because you have the bible on us!" Again, he said that everything in reference to religion ought to be made as sure as possible—made "as sure as you can," and, said he, "your position is the surest."

Now, brethren, when our preachers will make such admissions as these, under such tranquil surroundings as this, and yet continue in public to teach and practice different, what are we to think? Which has the strongest hold upon such men's affections; think you, a human "plea," or God's plain, heaven-and-earth bound plan of redemption?

We do not mention this circumstance out of any desire to gain an advantage over our brethren on this question. We have God's word—the "bible, on them," as our brother said, and nothing more is needed. What will become of the cause under such teachers? W. T. Moore's proposition is surely not much in advance of the logical outcome of the present teaching and practice of those who legalize sect baptism.

When men lack the courage to stand upon the side that they recognize and confess to be the safest—the side that has "the bible on us"—do they not lack that without which they can not "please Him who hath chosen them to be soldiers?"

Truly, brethren, these are "perilous times." Who will be able to stand faithful to the authority of King Immanuel against the hosts that have deserted His cause, and are now proudly trooping in hot haste under the banner of a human "plea," and led on by worldly-wise men?

Come out, brethren, those of you who do not desire to follow in the wake of this rebellious army into Babylon. Get off of the "fence"—the neutral ground that you are trying to occupy, and unsheathe the "sword," and while it is yet day do battle for that King who is to give the crown to the faithful and righteous—those who love His appearing.

The night will soon come when none can work. To sit idly by—on the fence—and see the Lord's authority trodden under foot, and His blood crimsoned banner trailed in the dust, is to act the part of cowards and lose the crown.

A. MCG.

TO THOSE IN ARREARS.

Some of our subscribers are owing us for the paper from its beginning. Others, who paid, some for one year, and some for six months, have written us to let them know when they were due, and they would renew.

Now, brethren, everyone of you know whether you owe us anything or not. Those who subscribed and paid for twelve months know whether they have received twelve copies or not; and if they have they know that they are in arrears. And so with those who subscribed and paid for six months; if they have received more than six copies they are in arrears. We hope none of our readers are so stupid that they can't count twelve. Those who have subscribed and never paid, know it without notice from us.

One brother wrote us ten months ago, saying: "I have not the dollar at hand, but I give you my word and honor as a christian that I will send it to you within thirty days." That dollar has never come. We presume he is dead, or had no honor to begin with. If he is dead, and we knew it, we would give him a free obituary. We may do so anyway on presumptive evidence.

But, brethren, all who owe us, know it; then send it to us. It is not much with you, but it will help us when it is all put together: "there is strength in union;" then unite in sending forward what you owe us.

ENQUIRER.

PLEASANT VALLEY, TEXAS,
October 16, 1885. }

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I noticed in one of your articles that you mentioned a brother who was a silver-smith, and said it was a strange calling for a christian. I have often thought I would write and ask you what ought to be done with a brother who follows a business that necessitates constant traveling, and who always seeks out his brethren to stop with, to save bills.

I know such a brother, and have known him to drive till late at night to reach a brother's house, and stop with a double team to feed, and often times he has been known to feed to his horses the last ear of corn the poor brother had for bread for his family.

Not only this, but he is notorious for tricky dealing, often defrauding these brethren upon whom he imposes. He is held up to us by outsiders as "your good brother, that knows the bible so well."

He always makes it convenient to meet with the brethren somewhere on Lord's day, and being a good speaker, and well instructed, he often officiates at the Lord's table, thereby debarring many, who have no confidence in him, from partaking.

Now, what do you think of such a christian, and what ought a congregation to do with him?

Yours in the faith,

ENQUIRER.

We hardly know how to answer these questions. Perhaps this brother does not seek out his brethren, to save a bill, but loves them as all christians should do. It is very natural for a traveling brother to prefer to put up with his brethren, and they are generally glad to have their brethren stop with them; this has been our experience with brethren.

But when a man is engaged in a business that calls him frequently among his brethren, in which business he is making money, he surely ought not to feed up the last corn they have for bread, but he ought to carry them help occasionally, instead of being burdensome to them.

Now, if this brother stops with his poor brethren, or rich one's either, to save a bill, that is, if this enters into his calculations, and influences him in the least to stop with them, he is making merchandise of the gospel. If he does stop with poor brethren and feeds up their last bread of corn for his own gain, then we would consider him a worse man than Judas Iscariot. He is a sort of a cheap-John of a Judas. Such a man would sell Christ if he could for one-fourth of what Judas Iscariot received for Him, and would take that in nickles with a hole in them.

Well, as for what the church ought to do with him, it seems to us that he ought to be "delivered to satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." It is surely very wrong to encourage such a brother to lead in the Lord's day meeting. He ought to be talked to by brethren, and shown the evil of his course, if he has not seen it, and then be very summarily dealt with by the church if he does not confess and ask forgiveness, besides remunerating the poor brethren he has imposed on, or offer to.

If this is not an overdrawn case, and that man is permitted to continue in such a course, apparently bearing the recognition of the christians in that section, which he does so long as they make no effort to restrain him and have him officiate at the Lord's table, the cause will suffer greatly there because of him.

Brethren who will permit such things as this to go on long are unworthy of the name christian. If the cause is not well nigh dead there now this case must be overdrawn.

A. MCG.

FROM THE GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

We have had on hand for some time an article from Bro. Duke, of Gnatville, Ala., on rebaptism. If he had not been mistaken as to what he wanted when he wrote before, we would not have said a word on the subject. He asked what he should do with Baptists who wished to unite with a church of Christ, when clearly he wanted to tell me what to do. If he had only known this was what he wanted, I would have listened to him without a word of response. I am willing to hear or to talk as occasion demands, but as he asked me and I gave the best advice I had,

and as room is scarce with us now, and I don't want to discuss the matter, he will have to submit as it is; next time let him be certain what he wants and he shall have it. The mistake was one of his, next time will hear him without a word of reply. But I had as soon commit sacrilege in any other way as to rebaptize a person who tells me he has been baptized to obey God.

The above we found in the Gospel Advocate which sometimes preaches "another gospel" regardless of what Paul said about those that did such things: See Gal. 1, 8, 9. The author of these words is such a fanatical adherent to "our plea" that he does not hesitate to virtually bring the charge of "sacrilegious" conduct upon the apostle Paul.

He says: "But I had as soon commit sacrilege in any other way as to rebaptize a person who tells me he has been baptized to 'obey God.'" Then he makes it sacrilege to baptize those who have been once baptized to "obey God." Well, if it is sacrilege now it was sacrilege eighteen hundred years ago; then Paul committed sacrilege when he baptized the twelve at Ephesus, unless it can be shown that these twelve did not intend to "obey God" when they were baptized in the first instance. Poor Paul, we are sorry to see him so summarily dealt with by the wise of today.

But with all the disreputable things that they can charge on Paul they will never be able to condemn him with that degree of severity with which he has condemned their class throughout all ages. This censor of Paul says: "I am willing to hear or talk as occasion demands, but as he asked me and I gave the best advice I had, and as room is scarce with us now, and I don't want to discuss the matter, he will have to submit as it is."

We dare say that that "best advice" that he gave was not some passage of scripture. We challenge any man to produce a passage of scripture that teaches it by precept, example, or by the deductions of fair inference. Brethren, it can't be produced by the combined powers of these "wise" adherents to the "plea" that authorizes it. To continue the practice under these circumstances is presumptuous sin.

SULLIVAN, IND., Oct. 12, 1885.

BROTHER MCGARY:

I herein send you two dollars by post office money order, for which please send THE FIRM FOUNDATION to S. R. Engle and B. C. Sherman, both to Sullivan, Sullivan county, Indiana.

Yours for the whole truth,

B. C. SHERMAN.

[P. S.] I hope to send you some more names soon. Let me say, go on dear brother; we want the truth proclaimed as THE FIRM FOUNDATION is doing.

THE BAPTISTS IN JEWRY.

In the Gospel Advocate of October 14th, is, we think, a very true and instructive article on "Repentance," by Bro. W. Lipscomb, jr. Bro. L. closes with these words: "If our Baptist friends insist that repentance precedes faith, I must conclude that they are yet in Jewry. I am confirmed in this conclusion by their holding to a church established before Pentecost, which, according to the scripture, could only have been that of the Jews."

Well, they surely "insist that repentance precedes faith." Now, what will Bro. L. do about these Baptists when they decide to come out of Jewry? Will he continue the process of "our plea"—shake them out? or will he baptize them out of "Jewry" and into Christ?

As Bro. Lipscomb is "confirmed in this conclusion" we suppose he will act up to his convictions. Then how long will it be before his uncle, Bro. D. Lipscomb, will have him mounted on a hobby?—that convenient old horse upon which he packs everything that he can't make fit "our plea."

As we have said, we regard Brother Lipscomb's article, as to main points, true. But when he says: "I can not believe these a mere fortuitous arrangement of terms: I do not believe such a style of writing consistent with the character of a book of so great importance as the bible," we would like to know of him how he would dispose of that "style" as it appears in Acts v; 30?

We do not call attention to this point in a criticising spirit, but for information. We have always thought it was an awkward way of expressing the idea, that perhaps some of our Greek scholars might be able to account for through defective translation. We would be glad to hear from Bro. W. L. jr., on this:

A. McG.

"OH! WHY SHOULD THE SPIRIT OF MORTAL BE PROUD?"

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud,
Like a swift fleeting meteor, a fast flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
He passeth from life, to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak, and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around, and together be laid,
And the young and the old, and the low and the high,
Shall moulder to dust, and together shall lie.

The infant and mother, attended and loved,
The mother that infant's affections who proved,
The husband, that mother and infant who blessed,
Each, all, are away to their dwelling of rest.

The head of the King, that the scepter hath borne,
The brow of the priest, that the mitre hath worn,
The eyes of the sage, and the heart of the brave,

Are hidden and lost in the depth of the grave.

The peasant, whose lot was to sow and to reap,

The herdsman, who climbed with his goats up the steep,

The beggar who wandered in search of his bread,

Have faded away like the grass we tread.

So the multitude goes, like the flower on the weed,

That wither away to let others succeed;

So the multitude comes, even those we behold,

To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same our fathers have been,

We see the same sights our fathers have seen,

We drink the same stream and view the same sun,

And run the same course our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking, our fathers would think,

From the death we are shrinking, our fathers would shrink,

To the life we are clinging, they also would cling,

But it speeds from us all like a bird on
the wing.

They loved, but the story we can not unfold;

They scorned, but the heart of the haughty is cold;

They grieved, but no wail from their
slumber will come,

They joyed, but the tongue of their gladness is gone.

They died, aye, they died, we things that are now,

That walk on the turf that lies over their brow,

And make in their dwellings a transient abode,

Meet the things they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yeal hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,

We mingle together in sunshine and rain,

And the smile and the tear, the song and the dirge,

Still follow each other, like surge upon surge.

'Tis the wink of an eye, the draught of a breath,

From the blossom of health to the pale-ness of death,

From the gilded saloon, to the bier and
the shroud,

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?—Selected.

The church at Sherman has sent out
our live and energetic worker, Bro. F.
S. Young, as State Solicitor. We earnestly urge the brethren throughout the State to respond to his appeals as liberally as they can. We will have a chance this year to see whose desire for missionary work or evangelizing work extends down into their pockets. Come, brethren, don't become hard of hearing just
at this time.—Texas Christian.

This whole system, in our opinion, is chiefly directed at the "pockets" of men.
It seems that the machine men had rather convert one pocket than a score of hearts. We hope never to say anything having a tendency to disparage real "willing," scriptural giving. But we had rather know that not one farthing would be contributed this year in Texas, than that it should flow profusely through an unscriptural channel—such as "State Solicitor" or any other "Society" or "State Meeting" invention.

Of course this will sound awful to that class who think "a right thing can't be done in a wrong way."

Bro. Young is sending in lists to the papers for publication. Here is a sample:

LIST OF NAMES OF CONTRIBUTORS FROM SEPTEMBER 1ST TO 30TH.

But Bro. Young and these brethren are not alone in this practice.

We wonder if brethren never think of the following language when they see their contributions paraded before the world: "When thou doest thine alms do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."—Matt. vi, 2, 3.

Our brethren avoid that ancient way, by putting an account of their doings in the papers, or permit others to.

LETTER FROM SISTER SARAI.

DEAR SISTERS:

Have you all read the sisters' communications in the last issue of THE FIRM FOUNDATION? If not, you ought to have done so, and if so, were they not good? I mean Sister Tennie Titsworth's and the anonymous sisters'? They both said much that was impressive, and I think the anonymous Sister's reply to the sister who wanted her daughter to be proud was simply splendid.

Oh, how fitting are the words of divine inspiration in any place or argument! Her suggestion to hunt out all said about pride in God's word sent me at once to the concordance, where I found fifty passages concerning the proud, and forty-four containing the word pride, to say nothing of its synonyms.

So it seems that pride has been the besetting sin of poor fallen man from the beginning. All of us possess it, some to a greater extent than others, however. But there is such a thing as laudable pride, which prompts us to be neat and keep our children so; to strive to make home attractive, etc.; but even this becomes sinful when we devote our whole time and thoughts to these things, neglecting the weightier matter of cultivating the minds of ourselves and children, thereby rooting out the noxious weeds that are ever ready to spring up in an uncultivated field.

A woman who possesses too much of this pride is very apt to be overworked and cross, making home anything but a paradise. Such a woman's husband might be tempted to say, as did Deacon Jones upon being congratulated upon having just such a wife: "Yes, it is as you say, farmer Brown:

A treasure to me has been given,
But sometimes I fain would be glad
To lay up my treasure in heaven."

I have in mind such a beautiful woman, so gentle and lovable, who possesses this housewifely pride to the exclusion of almost every other virtue. To look at her intelligent, lovely face, one could think of nothing else but a mind in harmony with it; but not so. Though possessed of a bright mind, she never reads a book or paper, but has spent all the years of her married life with a broom and dust brush in her hands, seeming to think the acme of existence is to make war on cobwebs and dust, little heeding the cobwebs of ignorance and vice that may be forming around the neglected minds of her children.

But this is not the worst kind of pride after all, as it is necessarily attended by industry and energy, which are admirable always. But oh, the many kinds of pride, almost too numerous to mention. Perhaps the most contemptible and common is that manifested by wealthy owners of fine residences and dashing teams. They drive along the highways, holding high heads, as if scorning to breathe the same air with the honest, humble laborer, whose soul is just as valuable in God's sight as theirs. "Him that hath a high look and a proud heart will I not suffer," saith the good book, and I am sorry to say that many who call themselves christians come under this head.

How often do we see men and women arrayed in costly apparel stepping proudly along with supercilious stare, careful lest even their skirts should touch the poor working man or beggar in the way, and looking as if it were a pity that their aristocratic feet must touch common earth. "The Lord hateth a proud look," Solomon tells us, and classes it with a lying tongue.

Again, some manifest an undue pride in their children, some in their wives and husbands, and some in their personal beauty. Alas! alas! that any should glory in these frail bodies, that come forth like flowers and are cut down; that flee like shadows and continue not!

Physical beauty is truly of short duration. In a few fleeting years the fairest faces will be seamed with care, the eyes lose their brightness, the cheeks their rosy hue, but oh! if the soul be pure and true, the mind cultivated and filled with noble aspirations, the life rich in good deeds, then, indeed, are they possessed of a beauty that will bloom throughout all eternity, a beauty that our dear heavenly Father will be proud of!

Dear sisters, I am speaking of christians all along. We can expect nothing better than these weaknesses of the world, of those who have never been called out of darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel. Then what shall we say of a pride that prompts a christian man or woman to pass by the poor among God's children without the faintest recognition, simply because they are humbly and poorly attired, thereby wounding sorely hearts precious in God's sight? James says, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom promised to them that love Him? "But ye have despised the poor." This can be truly said of many wealthy christians of to-day.

Our dear lowly Savior taught us a grand lesson in humility when He chose His followers from among the poor and unlearned, and scorned not to touch the vile lepers of old, and think you He will say to these proud christians, "Enter ye into the joys of your Lord." Nay! For "everyone proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord," saith the wise man of old.

Again, there is a false, a despicable pride that prompts people to live beyond their means, to spend more than their income to decorate their bodies in sinful apparel; such pride often leads them to borrow money of trusting friends, when they have no hope or intention of returning it, perhaps, simply because their pride (?) will not let them be outdone by their neighbors. Such pride often leads to dishonesty, and surely God will bring it low. "The Lord will destroy the house of the proud."

In conclusion, I will say that perhaps the silliest pride of all is that felt in natural endowments, hereditaments of birth, such as fine intellects, etc. Such foolish pride often causes its owner to look with scorn upon those beneath them in the scale of intelligence, and to imagine some natural antagonism between them, which can not be overcome.

But what a mistake! Are we not all members of Christ's body? "And the eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee, nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more; those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary. * * * * *

But God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked, that there should be no schism in the body, but that the members should have the same care one for another."—Cor. XII. . .

Again, why should any feel such undue pride in the possession of fine intellects? They are born with them, hence, deserve no credit for them. . . We should only be humbly grateful to God from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, for this best gift, and no more.

Our Savior classes pride with "evil thoughts, fornications, adulteries, murders, thefts," and all of the very worst forms of wickedness. Then, shall we let it find lodgement in our hearts? God forbid! Life is too short for us to spend the time wounding our fellow-creatures by displays of pride. Christianity is the great leveler that exalteth the brother of low degree, and bringeth low the rich, thus uniting them on one plane.

Our dear Savior's life was one of complete humility; and He has bidden us follow Him. Shall we not heed His call? Then, let us put pride out of our hearts, and "serve the Lord with all humility of mind." Let us "be subject one to another, clothed with humility." Let love be without dissimulation: Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another, that we may rejoice in the hope of a "crown that fadeth not away."

SARAI.

After this we expect to have regular contributions from Bro. Hansbrough, Bro. Jackson and Bro. Durst. These brethren have been prevented by one cause and another from writing for the press for some months.

Bro. Hansbrough has been preaching in North and South Carolina this summer, where he has done a good work for the Master. The last we heard from this old soldier he had just baptized four while a heavy rain was pouring down. Some preachers would have put on a gum suit (baptizing suit) and sought a baptistery; but Bro. Hansbrough believes in the primitive way of working for Christ.

Bro. Jackson has also been doing a good work in Hill county, Texas. These brethren are all faithful gospel preachers, and they are staunch friends of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, as are many other true proclaimers of the whole truth as it is in Jesus.

PREMIUMS OFFERED.

For all subscribers sent us between the 15th of November and the 15th of December, 25 per cent may be retained by the sender. Then, as premiums on clubs we offer in addition the following: For the largest club that is sent to us between these dates we will return 50 per cent of such amount as is received at this office upon that club. For the next (2nd) largest we will return 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent, (one third). For the next largest (3d) we will give 25 per cent, (one fourth).

Now, we hope that the very best friends that the paper has will get these premiums. The reason we say this is because some of them have refused to take out even commissions for their work. Names may be sent right along as they are received, and we will keep a careful list, so that perfect fairness will be observed.

Under this offer a big work may be done for THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and those who do the work will be amply remunerated for it. We expect some sister to get the first premium, because they are the most successful, generally, in such work. You work brothers and sisters, and you will be astonished at your success. Even many enemies of the paper will take it, because some of them are honest and want to see both sides of the question.

The Firm Foundation.

VOL. 11.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, DECEMBER 1, 1885.

NO. 3

THE changes in the make-up of this issue of THE FIRM FOUNDATION must be credited to our printer who, for reasons of his own, disposed of the type in which the paper has heretofore been set. While the present size will doubtless be appreciated by our older brethren and sisters, there will be no loss in amount of matter.

MISCELLANEOUS SUBJECTS.

LAPORTE, IND., October 14, 1885.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

I again feel inclined to pen a few thoughts for the readers of your valuable pamphlet. When I read of many of the sayings and doings of those who were once christians, or who claimed and still claim to be, my spirit is stirred within me as Paul's was when he saw the great city of Athens wholly given to idolatry.

I read, in the papers of Yearly Meetings, State Meetings, Quarterly Meetings, Missionary Meetings, Missionary Conventions, Sunday School Conventions, Bethany Assembly, Eureka Encampment, etc. In the name of reason and christianity I ask, what does all this mean? What confounds me most, is, that persons who once claimed to be followers of the apostles, and who claimed to have returned to apostolic practice are engaged in these novelties. In apostolic times we read of none of these.

Why should one meeting be distinguished as a Yearly Meeting? For what purpose is a yearly meeting held that differs from the purpose of any other meeting? May it not be that a few pompous preachers want to collect to adopt a few prudential rules and pass some resolutions which they feel to be more congenial to their minds than the law of the Lord?

The apostles and early christians went everywhere preaching the word, giving no heed to yearly, or quarterly, or State Meetings, waiting for no call by any society to go and preach to the heathen. They stopped not to organize any societies, save the congregations of the Lord, nor to hold any annual meetings, and organize Sunday Schools. In fact, they knew of no such trumpery. If the bible does really furnish us to all good works, then let us engage in those only, and be careful upon what ground we tread.

B. B. Tyler, of New York, a pretended Christian preacher, in the Erret Standard of last week, gives quite a glowing account of the sending of W. L. Hayden, of Pennsylvania, and A. S. Hale, of New York, by the pretended christians of those two States, with fraternal greetings to the Free-will Baptist association held in North Parma, New York, on the 15-17th of September. When Hayden and Hale get there they state that they represent a people who stand on substantially the same ground that those Baptists stand on; and there they fraternize and declare that the Baptists are disciples and the disciples are Baptists. And then after they had entirely given away the plea for christianity and the establishment of the church of Christ, that is, as far as they were able to give it away, as Brother Rowe says, they billed and cooed with the Baptist heresy as amicably as two doves.

Yes, my christian friends, this is what progression has accomplished at last. These very same men labored for years to convert the Baptists to Christianity, and but for their perfidy it might have yet been accomplished; but in the heat of the contest for truth they have turned traitor, and have turned and joined the enemy. Thus, Jesus, with all His love and truth, is being betrayed by His professed friends.

W. T. Moore's proposition will not work with the other sects, and the sectarians in our ranks, or who used to be in our ranks, have at last bolted, and I want every one to go who is at heart a sectarian. Let the good work go on until every sectarian has left the church, and then we shall have peace, and not till then. As long as our congregations are filled with sectarianism we will have trouble in endeavoring to maintain unity of sentiment as a bond of peace.

Brothers, think of the disciples of our Lord, who were once brethren, and are now enemies, and greet each other with brotherly greetings! Yes, they declare that those Baptists who believe in getting religion; who believe that a person should not be baptized until he is a christian, or is in Christ, are christians, and that they occupy the same ground as the disciples. They certainly could not believe this. They must have known that it is false, and yet all these progressionists indorse this so far as I know. The Standard publishes all such trash.

"The Worcester, Mass., annual meeting was not as largely attended by brethren from abroad this year as usual, on account of the feast of dedication in Boston, which was observed only the week before. The meeting was, however, in no sense a failure. A larger number of people heard the word than on any similar occasion in the history of this unique autumnal gathering of New England disciples."—Christian Standard, Oct. 10, 1885.

From the foregoing I understand that the pretended disciples of Boston and vicinity observed the feast of dedication. They certainly observed it at the wrong season of the year, as we are told in John x, 22, that the feast of dedication was in the winter.

I see some things in the Standard about the great Sunday School Convention. No! The Christian State Sunday School Convention. That's it. I will here give one item as a specimen. "We venture to prophesy that in less than five years many will learn that a State S. S. Convention is of far more importance than a protracted meeting."

What logical conclusion may we draw from the above statement? Why, that if one Sunday School Convention is of far more importance than a protracted meeting, then, two conventions are of more importance than two meetings, and so on to any extent. I have known and said for some time that all these Sunday school workers held Sunday school work in higher estimation than church work. Now it is proven. Now let everybody engage in the most important work. Let the preaching of the gospel cease. Let protracted meetings be stopped, and let Sunday School Conventions be the cry. In these conventions you hear the sound of the organ, and through the Sunday school all the innovations and expediences can be voted in, and all the old fogies voted out. In these conventions tricksters and apostates can lead the young in any direction desired. The Sunday school is simply a sectarian trick. It is the plea where the mind of the young can be led to conformity to the world, and in evil paths as well as good, and I see that in a large majority of cases the evil predominates.

I believe every word that Jesus ever uttered. There are a great many who do not. Jesus said, straight is the gate and narrow is the way that lead to life, and few there be that find it.—Matt. vii, 3. Very many do not believe this. They believe that all the sects will be saved, and the heathen and all honest people, and nearly everyone else. I believe that all who hear the sayings of Jesus and do them will be saved. As to the rest, I do not expect them to be saved. I have no doubt but many at the judgment who will expect to hear the Lord say to them, well done good and faithful servant, will hear the Savior say, "depart from me you that work iniquity, I never knew you."

I am sorry to learn that J. M. Barnes has proved to be a sectarian after all his former pretensions. But day by day they desert to the enemy, so let them go until we know exactly who are of us. If they were of us they would no doubt remain with us. All who are friends to THE FIRM FOUNDATION we may, I think, depend on; but of the rest, we know not what day they may desert us. I desire all true christians to take and read THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and then we would know each other. Now, we do not know who the friends of Jesus are.

I wrote and sent you an article some time since for THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and also a postal note of one dollar. The article did not appear, but I had this partly written when I received the paper, and so I thought I would send it on. And if you have enough of contributions without mine, you can throw it into the waste basket. I hope there are many people in other parts who will subscribe for your paper, as true christians are exceedingly scarce in these parts.

I am convinced fully that all is not gold that glitters. Words may deceive, but straws, it is said, show from what direction the wind blows. I hope God may bless and prosper you and all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity.

I. C. STONE.

INACTIVE CHURCHES.

Churches that have grown cold and inactive are quite numerous throughout the country. In pointing out some of the reasons for this I must be brief. There is a general neglect in discipline. I have my mind on quite a number of congregations that have gone down on this account. Many years are permitted to pass without an effort to remedy existing evils. This will certainly ultimate in spiritual death in any congregation.

Suppose years have been permitted to pass in this way, and an effort is then made to purify the church. Where shall they begin? It will be found the oldest cases and dispose of them one by one in their regular order, from the fact that some parties important in point of testimony may have died or moved away, and other causes too numerous to mention may hinder a proper investigation.

Again, it will give offence and create hard feelings and alienation to take up the most recent cases and pass by the others. Partiality will be the cry. Lost opportunities and neglected duties have produced this sad state of things. My dear brethren, if you wish to prosper and to exert an influence for good, you must either cure diseased members of the body, or, in the event of a failure, sever them from said members. Delay produces the death of the entire body. Remember also, that the poorest member of your congregation is as precious in the sight of God as the richest, and is entitled to the same privileges as those who occupy exalted positions by virtue of blood, office, or wealth.

Another great hindrance to progress is that too many persons have been converted to the preacher instead of Christ. Their interest increases as the preacher's regular visit approaches, and they turn out in a body to hear another big sermon. So long as their preacher comes they possess a periodical interest. In the cities, as a rule, the interest is at high water mark while their preacher is with them. When he leaves them the tide begins to ebb, and all the debris of their frail natures, hitherto concealed by the flow of interest in their preacher, is brought to view. While this is the case you may write of the downfall of such people. While disciples of Christ depend on the preacher for their spiritual food and life, and while the only instruction they get comes from his pastoral lips at stated intervals, advancement in the divine life is impossible. Better sit at the Master's feet day by day and take copious draughts from the "fountain of life." The Psalmist could say, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Can you do likewise, my readers?

Congregations that permit members to pass along unrebuked for their sinful practices, are nursing eating sores that will eventuate in death. An important question is here presented. What is to be done with such congregations? The Apostle Paul wrote a very cutting but affectionate letter to one of the most corrupt congregations that has ever existed. They were guilty

1. Of the sin of division, created by their preferences for men.

2. They were guilty of keeping among their number a man who had married his father's wife.

3. They had been litigating their differences in stead of settling them by the law of love in the church.

4. They had perverted the Lord's supper into a drunken feast.

5. Some of them had denied the resurrection of the dead.

Notwithstanding all this he addressed them as "The church of God at Corinth." The whole tenor of his letter was to win them back to the law of Christ. After a time he wrote them another letter, and from many expressions found therein we plainly see that the first letter had the desired effect. He says that he wrote the first letter that he might prove them whether they were obedient or not in all things.—2nd Cor. ii, 9.

In proof that his first letter had the desired effect he says in the 7th Chapter, 2nd letter, "For though I made you sorry with my letter, I do not regret it, though I did regret it." Again, "I now rejoice not that you were made sorry, but that you were made sorry unto repentance." From this we learn that they reformed their lives. We gain the following lessons from this:

1. It is the duty of all true disciples to labor to reform corrupt congregations by affectionately calling attention to their departures from the truth and the scriptural remedies.

2. That it is their duty to at once reform their lives.

Just how long we are to labor with them before we abandon them to their evil proclivities I am not prepared to say authoritatively. I know that Paul says in his instructions to Timothy, (1st Tim. vi, 5,) "Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself." Again, in 2nd Thes. i, 6, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly."

I am aware of the fact that we are creatures of education. Things instilled into the mind by false teachers are hard to erase. Some receive the truth much more readily than others, but may not those who at first seem impervious to good impressions be reached? An effort is, I think, commendable.

LETTER FROM BROTHER WILKERSON

SUNK LAND, CRAIGHEAD COUNTY, ARK.,
November 1, 1865.

Bro. McGary,

Please publish the following. Mark xvii, and 16

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. It is necessary for all who are guided by this language to know what the gospel is in order to preach the gospel, and I know of no better way to learn what the gospel is than to find out what those preached that were sent out to preach under this commission.

First, when the Savior entered upon His public life or ministry, there was an issue made up like this: Jesus and His followers, or those that believed in Jesus, contended that Jesus was the Christ. The unbelieving Jews joined issue with Christ and His disciples, denying Jesus being the son of God, and for three years and six months this was the true issue.

But after the resurrection of Christ there was a new issue which was made up on the day Christ was crucified, on the part of the Jews, and the making up of this issue on the part of the Jews was this: They went to Pontius Pilate and said to him that they remembered that this deceiver had said that after three days He would rise again from the dead, and for fear that His disciples would come by night and steal Him away, and the last error would be worse than the first they wanted the King to aid them in the matter.

So they placed a guard around the tomb, sealing the stone with the King's seal, which was death by the Roman law for any man to break that seal. But when Jesus arose from the dead, the Jews hired the guard to say that he slept, and while he slept His disciple came and stole Him away. The issue is now made up on the part of the Jews, and after His resurrection the issue is made up on the part of the disciples. On the day of Pentecost the issue is joined. On the part of the Jews they deny His resurrection from the dead, and on the part of the disciples they declare His resurrection from the dead, which bring life and immortality to light through the gospel or His resurrection from the dead.

Fifty days before that time the Jews had tried Jesus by their law, and had examined their witnesses, and had condemned Him to death. Then there was no power on earth to revoke that sentence. Jesus then goes to the higher courts into heaven, and there that sentence is revoked, and Jesus received and crowned King and Priest of the universe. Now, under the law of Jesus as King on the day of Pentecost, this cause began to be investigated with power by the Holy Spirit being sent down.

What cause? Why, the cause of Jesus. And guilty of death by their own law. The issue is now joined, and a new one—one that had never been altered before the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. The evidence was so forcible that the Jews could not withstand it. What did the witnesses testify? Acts II, and 32nd verse: This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we are all witnesses, and in Peter's final appeal to them he said, and let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made this same Jesus both Lord and Christ. This is what they, the apostles, were chosen for.

Let us examine and see: Luke 24th Chapter, 45th verse, shows that Jesus opened their understanding; 46th shows that it was necessary for Him to suffer and to arise from the dead; 47th verse shows what for; that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name; and 48th verse tells them that they are witnesses of these things, because this is the issue, one side claiming the resurrection, the other denying.

Now, turn with us to Acts, 1st Chapter and 2nd verse. Peter there shows that they were to witness His resurrection from the dead, and as a witness in the new issue, so testifies Peter on the day of Pentecost, and his evidence was so piercing that three thousand were converted and asked for the terms of pardon that was to be granted by the resurrection from the dead; and Jesus is declared to be the Son of God, with power of holiness by the resurrection from the dead.

This new issue could not be advocated by the part of Christ until His witnesses received power. Salvation was too costly to be trusted to the guidance of frail man. He must tarry until he received power to go out under the commission by Mark. When received he went out preaching Jesus and the resurrection, and as many as believed and demanded it were baptized. This is the way that people in the apostles days were chosen unto sanctification and belief of the truth. If Jesus was preached the world over without preaching the resurrection, those that would be baptized could not tell why they were baptized for the dead. But preach Jesus and the resurrection from the dead, and then men and women can tell, in the language of Paul, 6th Chapter of 1st Cor., 10th verse, why they are baptized for the dead to obey from the heart that form of doctrine that they could not obey any other way, only in baptism, and that by being buried in water in or after the form of Christ's burial. This will bring men and women to see that they must be immersed or be lost.

It is in that baptism that the power being all death, burial and resurrection from the dead, Paul says to Thesalonians, to you that are troubled, rest with us when the Lord shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord.

I have been preaching to-day, and have written this to night by promise. More anon.

Your Brother in Christ,

WM. Z. M. WILKERSON.

REMARKS.

If we have been correctly informed, brother Wilkerson takes issue with THE FIRM FOUNDATION in reference to the subject of baptism. The above is not sufficiently explicit to enable us to see just how he does so. If he will state plainly his points of difference we can then intelligently proceed. We should know what is before us, and then deal directly with the subject. Both space and the intelligence of our readers demand this. Bro. Wilkerson will therefore please embody his belief on this subject in the form of a proposition, and then come before us with his proof. We may or we may not materially differ.

BOTH SIDES.

J. S. D.

I once heard a good brother remark that "every question had two sides, and God had given to man two eyes that he might examine both sides, and two ears that he might hear both sides, and thus by a careful and attentive hearing and examination be enabled to choose the right, and refuse the evil." I thought this not only sensible, but also scriptural. That it is scriptural is evident from these scriptures: "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing, therefore choose life that thou and thy seed may live."—Deu. xxx, 19. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—Thes. v, 21. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world."—Jo. iv, 1. The Savior admonished His disciples to "take heed how you hear, and to take heed what you hear."

We hear now a-days a great deal about Sunday Schools, Missionary Societies, Re-baptism and Organs. We find good brethren advocating the affirmative of each of these things, and just as good denying the right to use or practice them. Some brethren the region of speculation and will neither hear nor examine, but just go ahead and do as they please. For instance, with regard to Sunday Schools, some deny the scriptural authority for the Sunday School; others are perfectly indignant at such denial, and go ahead with their Sunday School Institutes, Conventions, etc. The result is that both parties entertain an unchristian attitude toward each other, which leads to harsh words and harsher actions.

All christians will agree that it is their duty to "bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Experience also confirms the proverb of Solomon, "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."—Prov. xxii, 6. We agree that the way in which our children should go is "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." This is the way of life, and only those can walk in it to profit who hear instruction and obey it. But whose duty is it to thus train the children? It is individual, personal and parental. See Eph. vi. It is nowhere expressed or implied in the scriptures that the church, as a church, must perform this work.

It is true that schools are places of instruction, and the Sunday School a place where children are instructed; but great objections can be legitimately urged against much that is taught, and the manner of teaching. The school, however, (it is claimed) is "the nursery of the church." This is an assumption. The church itself should be a school of instruction, in which the disciples might be instructed and edified. But to create a separate institution, called a "Sunday School," virtually does away with the church assembly, or rather with the true intent of such assembly, and it leads the parent to shift his responsibility to the Sunday School.

The great question to be decided is, how shall we train up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? "And thou shalt teach them (the words and statutes of God) diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deut. vi, 7. Home rule, home training, is always best when it is in accordance with God's word. Now, the question arises, did the Sunday School originate from a failure on the part of parents to do their duty? Evidently if did, for Sunday School workers can urge no greater plea for the existence and necessity of the school than this: the children are growing up without training; parents neglect their duties, shift their responsibilities and the children are growing up without training; parents neglect their duties, shift their responsibilities and the children are growing up without training.

The disease is apparent, but the remedy is insufficient, as it fails entirely in affecting or reaching the seat of the disease. The parent is more likely to be confirmed in his negligence of duty, and be thankful that he is relieved of such irksome work. Begin by removing the cause of the evil. Parents should be taught and made to realize the necessity and importance of this duty; that when they shall be judged according to their works, this is one work in which they will be found totally deficient. What a splendid excuse some will have. Oh! they will say, "we had a splendid Sunday School in our town, with good teachers, and once in a while when they had a big convention, or an institute, I went, and saw they got along so nicely, had such good music, and the children seemed so delighted, that I just let them manage the whole thing."

Then you never taught your children at home; never spoke to them about Jesus; never told them of heaven, and the necessity of purity of life in order to live there; never talked with them or prayed with them when you lay down to rest at night, and when you rose up in the morning—then depart—the servant who knew his Master's will and did it not shall be beaten with many stripes. But I will endeavor to range some of these ideas on both sides:

1. It is a good work, and supplies a long-felt want. The other side: It is not a good work, being unauthorized by scripture. It does not supply a long-felt want, but usurps the place of parental training.

2. It is the most effectual method of reaching the children, and through them, the parents. Other side: It thus subverts the law of God in both nature and revelation, for this teaches that the children are to be reached through the parents.

It is unnecessary to weary the reader with further ideas pro or con. There is evidently a great wrong somewhere, and the Sunday School system was inaugurated as a remedy for the wrong. That it has been a failure, and will continue a failure, all careful observers must admit. If we wish to strike at the root of the disease, begin with the parents—christian parents; open their eyes to the great responsibility resting upon them, not only as parents, but as christians, and when you succeed in this step, the training of the children in this nurture and admonition of the Lord is sure to follow.

The Sunday School system as advocated and practiced by the religious world is gradually but surely sapping the life of the church. Good men and women, earnest and devoted workers in this cause, are tic glow on the consumptive's cheek, are sure evidences of the fatal poison that consumes the vital strength within.

J. W. J.

"Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on earth?"—JESUS.

Is there not here an implied doubt as to the existence of faith at the coming of the Lord? If it be possible and probable that faith be not found then, may we not inquire, can faith be found now on earth? Thousands will readily answer this latter query in the affirmative, and doubtless be indignant at me for presuming to pen it. But, stop, brethren, look around you; take a calm survey of the religious world; sweep your eye from horizon to horizon, and tell us the meaning of all those clouds, some not larger than a man's hand, some larger, and growing deeper and darker every hour, threatening soon to shut out from us the bright beams of the sun of righteousness.

Oh! I hear some one say, "Here is an alarmist! an old foggy, scared at a shadow! a crank who is opposed to all progression!" So I imagine the Antediluvians said when good old Noah preached righteousness to them. A world was then destroyed, and only eight souls saved. Faith was a scarce commodity in the earth at that time. Only two men of faith out of a vast number of redeemed ones ever reached the promised land. The rest fell by the way in the wilderness because of unbelief.

When the Lord of all the earth comes again to lead the host into the "heavenly country," the purchased possession, how many of us will be able to enter in? None but men of faith can enter there. My brother, do you not feel an abiding interest in that prayer that Jesus uttered for Peter? "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." "He ever liveth to make intercession for us, and if our faith fail it will be our fault. Faith in God is manifested or shown by our works."—Jas. ii, 26. The works which give substance to faith are ordained of God.—Eph. ii, 10. The scriptures given by inspiration teach us what these works are that God has ordained.—2nd Tim. iii, 17. Faith comes by hearing God's word.—Rom. x, 17.

Men may have faith, and this faith may abound in works, and thus they may persuade themselves that they are doing God's will. Many of this class of self-deceived people talk loudly and learnedly of faith, while they forget the apostolic injunction, "whatsoever you do in word or deed, do it in the name of the Lord Jesus, and give thanks to the Father by Him."—Col. iii, 17.

By their fruits or works you shall know them; that is, you can tell whether they are men of faith or not, by the works they do. Faith and works answer the one to the other as face to face in a mirror; the one is an exact and faithful representation of the other. As is the faith so will be the works, both in nature and degree. Faith lives, acts, and shows itself in the world. Truth is the soul of faith, and works its body, its visible form, that which manifests the life.

Those who profess faith in God, and then do not the things commanded, or do some things not commanded, deceive themselves and others, and will fall short of that abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom promised to those who work according to God's plan. Of such faith and its works it may well be said, "full well ye reject the commandment of God that ye may keep your own tradition."—Mark VIII, 9. The general statement of the apostle that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin" should satisfy every sincere christian that every work or practice which is not the legitimate and direct fruit of an unfeigned faith in God's word will not receive God's blessing.

It is very evident that the religious world are active and zealous in works. It is also plainly seen that the works so diligently persevered in serve to divide the professed Christians, and are hindrances to the spread of the truth. Many zealous brethren think that they can see a oneness of faith in the various denominations. If this be true, if they all hold to the one faith, or all have faith, they deny it by their works. "Can a good tree bring forth corrupt fruit? Do you gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

Does faith—the faith that saves—produce such works as are seen in the popular revivals of the day? Does faith in God ever work a person into a human organization? The faith that takes a person into the various denominations is not the faith described by Paul.—Rom. x, 16. There is "one faith;" if all had this "one faith" it would work them into the "one body," but all professed christians are not in one body, hence they have not the "one faith." We claim to be in the one body, of which Jesus is Head. We came into this one body according to the expressed will of God. We believe the truth as it is in Jesus, and our works were such as are ordained of God. To the world we say come, the way is plain, the truth is uncovered, and you may be blessed now and forever by doing the will of God.

To the denominations we would say, "show your faith by your works." Repudiate your human au-

Jesus. If you love Jesus, hear Him: "He that hath my commandments and keepeth, he it is that loveth me; if a man love me he will keep my words. He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings."—Jo. XIV, 21, 24.

How can any man say he believes in Jesus, and that he loves God, and then stand up before men and preach that a person can be saved from sin by obedience to the works taught by the various denominations? The things to be done in order to be saved are plainly revealed. Faith in God's word always does these things. It leads man through Godly sorrow to repentance, on to the confession with the mouth of the Lord Jesus, then on to baptism for the remission of sins. Frequently persons present themselves to unite with the church of Christ, who have been members of some denomination, and were immersed when they "joined the church." The custom has been to receive such persons to full fellowship on their baptism. They tell the church that "they are satisfied with their baptism."

Now, brethren, I ask, "where is your faith?" If your faith is by hearing God's word, your action in thus building upon the "one foundation" is contrary to the word of God. If you are hunting for satisfied people you can easily find them. It is your duty to stir up these satisfied people and see that they satisfy the demands of the gospel by a full and hearty obedience thereto. The faith of these satisfied persons was not the faith required by the Son of God; had it been the faith it would have produced the right fruit.

Many other things are crowding themselves forward to be said on this subject, but for the present I defer them. Brethren, let us work, but remember that "God worketh all things according to the counsel of His own will," and hence we can please God only by working all things, and always according to the expressed will of God.

JACOB DITZLER SURRENDERED THE OLD COVENANTS.

RICHLAND SPRINGS, SAN SABA CO., TEXAS, }
November 5, 1885. }

NOTE BY REPORTERS: As Dr. Graves was about to commence, Eld. Ditzler motioned him to his seat, where a short conference was held, at the conclusion of which Eld. Ditzler arose and said: "We have agreed not to debate the question of the covenants further, as I here express my conviction that the old covenants have nothing to do with infant baptism."

Dr. Graves then said: "I am rejoiced to hear of that frank admission that I am rejoiced to hear of that frank admission that I am rejoiced to hear him say this. The Old Testament Covenants have been the basis of their right heretofore, and I am glad this ground is at last abandoned by the Methodists. So much is gained by this discussion.

From this day onward, so long as Elder Ditzler bears the endorsement of the Bishop of his church that he is a representative of their doctrines, let no Methodist Elder or preacher in all the South ever go back to the Old Covenants with Abraham or the Jews to find a ground for infant baptism. I was never better prepared to so discuss the covenants, one and all, than now, but Eld. Ditzler has at last fully surrendered them. "I close the Old Testament." After the mutual explanation Dr. Graves commenced his sixth reply.—Graves-Ditzler Debate, page 692.

REMARKS: I think it is time that post-oak scrubs quit preaching that infant baptism comes in the room of circumcision, as Jacob Ditzler, the scape-goat of the Methodist Church South, like a man, has fully surrendered the Old Covenants, saying: "I here express my conviction that the Covenants of the Old Testament have nothing to do with infant baptism." But after all it seems like these post-oak scrubs will rush where Jacob Ditzler dares to tread.

LETTER FROM BROTHER THURMAN.

McMINNVILLE, TENN., October 21, 1885.

DEAR BROTHER MCGARY:

THE FIRM FOUNDATION, to my mind, generally has a clear gospel ring, but I see one very objectionable idea in it, to which I desire to call attention. Our religious papers are often filled with the same, but I do not see how THE FIRM FOUNDATION can afford to even publish such a thought. See October No., on page 14, where Bro. Richard Poindexter gives the result of a meeting held by Bro. Hansbrough, and we have these words: The result was, eight added to the church, five from the Methodists, and three from the world. Will Bro. Poindexter be so kind as to tell us from whence the five, if not from the world? Light wanted.

O. M. THURMAN.

We thank Bro. Thurman for calling attention to this matter. We had never noticed it. We admit that we ought to be too watchful over all things that go into the columns of THE FIRM FOUNDATION to let anything unscriptural, when we know it, be said without calling attention to it. We are glad that speech, and who will "cry aloud and spare not" when the Idiom of Ashdod is sounded.

Of course Bro. Poindexter will stand corrected and thank Bro. Thurman for thus giving the well-merited correction. That's it, brethren, speak out every time, and lets rid ourselves of all of this impure speech.

But we feel safe in saying to our readers that Bro. Poindexter did not mean by this expression that the Methodists were received on their Methodist baptism, not that we have heard anything about these conversions more than that Bro. Hansbrough was the preacher. We know that his practice is like Paul's at Ephesus when he found about twelve who had been "baptized unto John's baptism" ("to honor God") after John's baptism had "gone out of date"—when Bro. Hansbrough finds "five," "twelve," or any other number who have been baptized unto Methodist, Baptist, or any other baptism that has never been in date, "to honor God," he baptizes them "in the name of the Lord Jesus"—just as Paul would do, even if it has a "sacrilegious" look to the very wisest of the worldly-wise.

In conclusion, may both old and young be sober minded, in all things showing ourselves patterns of good works; in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech that can not be condemned; that they that are of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil to say of us."

WHAT IS VALID BAPTISM?

PEYTONSBURG, KY., October 29, 1885.

DEAR BROTHER MCGARY:

I have just received and carefully read No. 1, of Vol. 2, of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and after expressing my approbation of the sister's momentous and laudable admonitions to the sisters, I wish to ask you a few questions concerning the validity of Baptism. This matter has long agitated the minds of many. Now, Bro. McGary, as you have written very dogmatically in THE FIRM FOUNDATION on the above caption, I trust you will take some pains in answering the following momentous question. If no baptism be valid because of the administrator being a Baptist or Methodist, or the candidate not believing that baptism is for the remission of sins, what about the baptism of Mr. Campbell and his co-laborers? Let us see. On Wednesday, the 12th day of June, 1812, Alexander Campbell, his wife, his father, his mother, his sister, James Hanes and his wife—just seven of them—were present at the baptism of a man named [name obscured] upon the simple confession of this faith in Christ, by Elder Matheas Luce, a baptisminister.

Brother McGary, was their baptism valid at that time, being immersed by a Baptist minister? If not, why not? If so, why is not baptism, when performed by a similar administrator, valid now? If their baptism was not valid because of its administrator, where are they to-day? Again, if their baptism was not valid, was the baptism performed by Campbell, or any of his coadjutors, valid?

Your position, if I do not misunderstand you, leads us to the conclusion that in order that we obtain the blessings of God, we must understand the design of each ordinance. Am I right? If so, what is going to become of a large number that have cast their lots with us? No doubt there are many today in our rank that know the design neither of faith or repentance.

Now, Brother McGary, I have written very briefly. I have left out many momentous questions I would like to have asked you, but I hope you will fully answer the above questions for the benefit of myself and many others.

Your Brother in the one faith,

I. W. WILLIAMS.

First, we deny that we ever wrote "dogmatically" otherwise, or ever thought the administrator could vitiate the baptism of any one. This, then, will answer most of Bro. Williams' article. We do believe, though, that persons must believe baptism to be for the remission of sins before they can be baptized by the authority of Christ. We shall continue to believe this until we come to believe that the Holy Spirit talked too much on the day of Pentecost, and everywhere else He addressed those inquiring for the way of life. So far as Bro. Williams' bit of history goes about the baptism of Bro. A.
Campbell, his wife, his father, mother, sister and others, making seven in all, baptized in 1812, in Buffalo Creek—while it is not without interest to us; and, while we would not be understood as saying one word tinged even with the slightest coloring of disrespect towards the great and good Bro. A.
Campbell, or those names here connected with his,
we do say, in all candor, that their baptism cuts no more figure in determining the question at issue than would a like baptism of seven of the blackest negroes that ever left foot-prints upon the hot sands of Africa; and we feel it no more incumbent on us to locate the present habitation of the one than the other.

Such questions as these only serve to show how hard pressed for footing are such men as Brother Williams, Bro. D. Lipscomb, and others who ask them. And yet such men are not willing to wear the name "Campbellite!" If I were willing to pin my faith to Bro. Campbell I would insist upon wearing his name. Bro. Williams is also mistaken in saying that we hold "that in order to obtain the blessings of God we must understand the design of each ordinance." We do hold that when God says a thing and man says to the contrary, that we must believe God. In all the book of God there is nothing plainer taught than that baptism is for the remission of sins. God had this taught because it was necessary that it should be believed—Buffalo Creek, A. Campbell, 1812, and Elder Matheas

Luce, et al, to the contrary notwithstanding. Brethren, why will you thus infringe on sectarian patent rights?

A. MCG.

SOME QUERIES.

1. Can any one become a christian without believing and obeying the gospel of Christ?
2. Is the "confession" a part of the gospel of Christ?
3. Is the promise "remission of sins" a part of the gospel of Christ?
4. If the above questions be answered in the affirmative, then, I ask, can any one become a christian by believing and obeying a gospel that leaves out the confession?
5. Did God ever promise to bless man for obedience to a part of the gospel?
6. And finally, what authority is there in the bible for asking any person, "are you satisfied with your baptism?"

The "Gospel Advocate" and "Christian Messenger" will please give us some light on above.

OBEDIENCE. NO. 4.

The beloved apostle has left upon record this plain statement: "Blessed are they that do His commandments that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."—Rev. xxii, 14. "To do His commandments" is obedience, and obedience secures the right to the tree of life. Our inquiry in this paper shall be as to the motives preceding and prompting the action. How are these things which are placed before considered are those things which are placed before been sent to him who teaches in all uses of the tower and the seed us as incentives to action. There must necessarily be some strong attraction, something very desirable in the motive to induce man to do that which the author of the motive commands. In this sense promises, objectively considered, are motives. The exceeding great and precious promises that pertain to life and godliness are given to us in the gospel of Christ in order that we may be partakers of the divine nature.—2nd Peter I, 3, 4. Then, promises are preached and men must believe them. I say must believe, for a motive or promise can not influence man until believed. When it is believed it becomes, subjectively, a motive power inducing action. It is thus the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes it.—Ro. I, 16. Faith embraces the promises, and the obedience resulting from this inward power is called "obedience from the heart."

We frequently speak of the motives of men when referring to those principles of the heart which control or direct their life. A great variety of expression on this topic prevails and we hear much said about right and wrong motives, pure and impure motives, etc. Correctly speaking, the motive exists objectively first; it appeals to certain innate or native principles in the heart; its power to move man depends upon faith. When believed it creates in man desire, expectation, purpose, and these in turn urge the man forward to the attainment of the good promised.

In popular phraseology the term motive is applied to the intention, purpose or design, and finds expression in such proverbs as these: "If the heart is right, all is right." "If a man is conscientious in what he does, God will save him." "If a man desires to honor God, his imperfect obedience will not prevent the blessing, etc."

Human nature has ever been prompt in framing excuses (not reasons) for not following Jesus. To accept the truth as it is in Christ, to follow Him implicitly, we must cut loose from every earthly tie. With a great many the hard struggle, the great cross, is to cut loose from the popular teachings of sectarian theology. They still cling to the old idea that the church of Christ is composed of the christians in all the denominations, and through moral cowardice they compromise the truth and help build up the enemies of the cause. The very worst enemies to the advancement of the cause of Christ are those who loudly profess their faith and love for Jesus, and by their works deny Him.

But, I shall introduce here an illustration from 1 Chron. XIII and XV, which will perhaps shed light on the subject under consideration. During the days of the Judges (see 1 Sam. xiii) the ark of God was captured by the Philistines, and finally found a resting place at Kirjath jearim. When David had been crowned he determined to bring the ark to Jerusalem and place it in a tabernacle which he had erected. To this end he gathered the people together, and consulted the chief men and captains and told them his purpose; they agreed to it, "for the thing was right in the eyes of all the people." With great pomp and ceremony they repaired to the village, placed the ark on a new cart with Ahio and Uzza as drivers, "and when they came unto the threshing floor of Chidon, Uzza put forth his hand to hold the ark, for the oxen stumbled. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzza, and He smote him because he put his hand to the ark and there he died before God." After this occurrence David was afraid to proceed, and the ark rested for three months in the house of Obed-Edom; at the end of this time David having learned an important lesson determined to bring up the ark. He now says: "None ought to carry the ark of God but the Levites, for them hath the Lord chosen to carry the ark of God and to minister unto Him forever." So he gathered the people together and called the priests and Levites and said to them: "Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites, sanctify yourselves both ye and your brethren that ye may bring up the ark of the Lord God of Israel unto the place I have prepared for it. For because ye did it not at the first the Lord our God made a breach upon us, for that we sought Him not after the due order." Under the leadership of the Levites the ark was brought up "as Moses commanded according to the word of the Lord."

In this lesson we are taught:

1. That there is a due order by which God is sought.
2. That this due order is, according to the word of the Lord.
3. That the violation of this due order incurs the anger of the Lord.
5. That good intentions, or purity of motive, will not make a wrong act right.

God had said: "I will be sanctified in them that come nigh unto me, and before all the people I will be glorified." The order of service pertaining to the ark had been minutely prescribed, and David did wrong in not following this "due order." Uzza, with good intention to prevent the ark falling from the wagon, put forth his hand to stay it; in this the due order was again violated. (See Numbers I, 50, 51, etc.)

Now, "the thing was right in the eyes of all the people" and yet there was a right thing to be done. They were anxious to serve God, to bring up the ark of the covenant, the symbol of His presence among them, and place it in their chief city. Their desire was, by thus doing, to honor God, but not proceeding according to the due order, the attendant blessings were diverted into another channel, and Uzza lost his life.

We now live under a dispensation of liberty; we are not bound down to the cumbersome rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic Institution. Nevertheless, there is now a due order by which man must seek God. We are made freemen "by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," and our greatest liberty is enjoyed when we continue in the law of liberty, doing all things contained therein.

We are told that God "worketh all things according to the counsel of His own will;"—Eph. i, 2; and that this will is made known to apostles and prophets.—Rom. xvi, 25, 29; 1 Cor. ii, 7, 10, et al.; apostles in turn have made known this will to all nations. This will teaches us that we must seek God; must go to Him in order to be blessed. Men are alienated from God, enemies in their mind by wicked works; they walk in their own ways, follow after their own will. God's love has provided salvation, redemption, and an eternal inheritance for them, but they must come to these things, or rather come to God.

Would it not be presumption to approach God in a way of our own devising? Will He accept any man who treats His will with disrespect, and substitutes "the will of man," or "the will of the flesh" for the will of God? I assume, as an undisputed proposition, that there is made known in the gospel of Christ the due order by which man must approach God, and I suppose that all bible readers will admit that God will bless those who seek Him according to His will. But there are some who think that God blesses man whether he comes according to the due order or not.

In the popular interpretation of scripture as preached by the theologians of the day we have the following orders taught: 1. Prayer. 2. Regeneration. 3. Repentance. 4. Faith. 5. Experience. 6. Pardon. 7. In Christ, a christian. Baptism.

An order somewhat different to this is thus practiced: 1. Baptism. 2. Prayer. 3. Regeneration. 4. Repentance. 5. Faith. 6. Experience or feeling. 7. Pardon. 8. In Christ.

All who have heard Baptist and Methodist teaching, and witnessed their anxious seat ceremonies, in contrast with them I present the following as the gospel order: 1. Faith. 2. Repentance. 3. Confession. 4. Baptism. 5. In Christ, pardoned; a christian, and entitled to call on God through Jesus Christ.

The limits of this paper precludes the possibility of a full discussion of these points. All will admit that obedience has reference to a command. Paul tells us that the gospel must be obeyed, (2nd Thes. i, 3), hence there is a command in the gospel. In our obedience to this command our hearts must be interested. Now, the command of the gospel is baptism, and our obedience to baptism must be from the heart, not in the heart. The good desires, good intentions and pious purposes of men can never benefit them until carried into execution. Now, remember that if there is a right thing to be done, especially a thing commanded by the Lord, that there is also a right way or order in which it must be done. On man's part the right motive must exist. What is this right motive? Some brethren tell us that it is an earnest desire to honor God and submit to His will. Admitting this, and admitting that the person comes to baptism, but having been improperly taught he says that he prefers to be sprinkled; that he is satisfied with it, etc., would his act be obedience? No, you answer, he did the wrong thing.

Well, people will do as they are taught; suppose the man chooses immersion, will this act then be obedience? No, the act is of the will of man, and is obeyed not as God's will, but as the choice of his own will. But in the two first orders presented, as generally taught and practiced by Baptists and Methodists, is the baptism there mentioned obedience to the will of God? I answer, no; they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge, and have endeavored to establish their righteousness by their own plans, and have not submitted to the righteousness of God, which is of faith. Faith in God and His Son the Lord Jesus accepts unreservedly what He teaches. He teaches us plainly that we must "be baptized for the remission of sins." "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey His servants ye are to whom ye obey."

Do men obey the will of God in being baptized because their sins are forgiven, or as a christian duty, or as a door into the church? Is it not the will of man that has propagated and perpetuated this false interpretation of God's will, and will God accept the man who, though innocent, and with good intentions, yet puts unholy hands upon that which is consecrated by His holy name? I hear of some who say they are satisfied with their baptism, that they understood their duty when they "joined the church." Then what is the duty of the christian institutions and come to the church of Christ?

If this faith was right, then they acted inconsistently in going into a human institution. But they did not believe then as they do now; they were taught a perverted gospel, they believed it, and were deceived into the idea that God had pardoned their sins, and being pronounced christians by a vote of the church they joined the church of their choice by being baptized. If such a procedure is according to the will of God, then the sooner we adopt some of the good things taught by sectdom the better.

To conclude, however, our obedience must be according to God's will. The promises of the gospel are set before us as inducements to make us willing people. God's love is portrayed to us in the sublime facts of the Gospel. But facts and promises do not constitute the whole gospel; there is a way by which man may attain the blessings, a due order by which to approach God and be reconciled. These are all preached to man; he hears, believes with all the heart; and remember that all the heart includes the intellect or judgment, will, affections and conscience. Having the eyes of his understanding enlightened he walks by faith in the way appointed, and will always find himself in the right church.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

I do not think I shall write connectedly this time, my dear sisters, as there are many things on different subjects that I desire to say. Oh, how I do wish that I could meet all of my true sisters; all those who are willing to abide by God's laws; that I could see them face to face and exchange views with them; ask their advice, and thus each help the other over the difficult places that beset the straight way that we are walking, the way that leads to eternal life! Eternal life! Sisters, do you ever pause and think of all these two words express? I fear, in the hurried rush of every day life, as we battle with the many cares that cumber us as they did Martha of old, that we fail to think of the goal to which we are all so surely hastening, and beyond which are the gates of pearl and the streets of gold that John, the beloved, tells of. And when we consider the temperate, simple language employed by the spirit in recording the wonderful deeds of our Master and His followers; and remember that the same Spirit guided the pen of the aged John as he recorded his vision on Patmos, we readily see that our finite mind is utterly unable to picture the grandeur of that "city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Though we give imagination unfettered wings, aided by the revelations of apostles and prophets and bid it soar to the utmost limits of finitude, yet will we have failed utterly to comprehend the beauty and peace of the New Jerusalem.

"Jerusalem, the golden;
I languish for one gleam
Of all thy beauty folden
In distance and in dream,
My thoughts, like palms in exile,
Climb up to look and pray
For a glimpse of that dear country
That lies so far away"

Oh, I love to think of "that dear country." It is such a sweet, restful theme for thought, and we should every day steal a while away from every cumbering care, and let our mind dwell on this grand theme, and thus will the world seem less real, and our zeal and courage be renewed for our journey thither. My dear young sisters, to you the world is very attractive; its pleasures varied and alluring, and your untried feet are too apt to be beguiled away from the "narrow way," but ere you have strayed too far, pause and weigh well the odds between a life of empty pleasure here, and one of eternal happiness hereafter! I oft times try to picture that after life to imagine a place free from pain and sorrow; and ah, sisters, the oft-recurring sorrows, the fleeting joys, the bitter disappointments and bereavements of this sad life argue far more eloquently of that better life to come than pen of poet, sage or philosopher! But, perhaps one of the grandest thoughts concerning heaven is that there all our noble longings will be gratified. We see so many, many things here that we can not account for; the grand wonders of nature, the lofty mountain standing forth in the midst of a level plain, its rocky summit crowned with loveliest flowers; a rich crimson blossom nodding to one of the most delicate azure hue; here a pink, there a white, all nourished by the same soil; and when our minds grow weary in trying to solve these enigmas, the sweet thought comes that "some day," if we live aright, all these mysteries shall be revealed unto us. To the mathematician, doubtless, all the intricacies of the grand science of numbers shall be unravelled. Upon the artists eye the scenery of heaven will fall in a fairer picture than fancy in her wildest moments ever painted. The astronomer will need no telescope there. To those of us who love music, whose souls are filled with an intense longing to penetrate the heights and depths of harmony, whose hearts vibrate and throb as we listen to the strains of some masterpiece, over such the grand harmony of heaven will burst in waves of blissful beauty, and our forth from ten thousand harps, as we tune ours to sing God's praises throughout the eternal years!

Next comes the precious thought of meeting the loved ones gone before. And who is there of us who has not some dear one waiting for us "beyond the tide?" I read such a sweet poem not long since descriptive of heaven and the joyful meeting of loved ones long parted, when our dear Lord shall have come in the clouds in His glory, and we shall be forever with Him. Every line of it was beautiful, but only two remain in my memory, which run thus:

"The baby will want its mother, and I wonder if this is the way it will be! If the dear babies will be babies still, and all our loved ones be just the same in feature, only glorified? Oh, I hope so! But perhaps I should not say this. God knows best, and however it will all be, that way will be the best! This thought comforts me so often when I have talked to relatives and friends and tried to turn their footsteps into the way of truth, and they have repelled me and turned a deaf ear to my pleadings. Though it grieves me, oh, so deeply, yet I know that if I remain faithful, and they are lost, it will be but just, since the water of life has been offered to them freely and they have refused to drink of it, that they might never thirst. When we no longer "see through a glass darkly, but face to face," we shall appreciate the wisdom and justice of all God's plans. Our mental vision, unclouded by mists of fleshly weakness, shall be able to penetrate the grand mystery and comprehend the magnitude of the atonement; and if those we love here fall through disobedience to gain the inheritance bought for them with such a precious price, we will realize there that it is but just. It will cause us no sorrow, since there will be no sorrow there, but God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes. It will all be right there, thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ! Then, last and greatest comes the promise that they that "hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled. What an incentive to right doing!"
The mother reach out for her child;"

But, sisters, I had no thought of writing this when I took up my pen this evening; but when I spoke of wishing to see you face to face, I at once thought that this would never be 'til we all clasp hands on the other shore, and thus my thoughts were directed into this channel, and I have been carried on and on, until I have no space left to speak of the many things mentioned at the first of this letter. However, I have only obeyed the injunction of Paul, who after writing to the Thessalonians concerning "them that are asleep, how they should arise and all be caught up in the air with the Lord," closed with the words "wherefore comfort one another with these words." And this is what I have striven to do. One of the things which I started out to write about was training children, and I ask, can not some sister or sisters who have succeeded in bringing up their children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord" give us some advice on this subject? We hope the sisters will come forward and write more for the F.F. There are so many interesting subjects that could be written on to edifying.

SARAI.

Since Bro. Oatman has refused to discuss our differences on the grounds proposed by us, and has written us taking us severely to task for not answering his questions, we will comply with his request as nearly as we can.

Query 1. "Who do you fellowship as brothers and sisters?"

Answer. Those who have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered to them by the apostles of Christ, and who walk in the Spirit.

Query 2. "Who were pastors spoken of by Paul? What office did they hold?"

Answer. They were just such pastors as Christ, through the Holy Spirit, authorized. If they held any office it was that of pastor—not "modern pastor," but good shepherd.

Query 3. "Do you receive any members from the denominations on their baptism at all?"

Answer. No—because "their baptism" is not the "one baptism," but THEIRS.

Query 4. "What do you consider the gospel? Does it not consist of facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed, and promises to be enjoyed? And if so, please designate what facts are necessary to be believed and what commands are to be obeyed before we can expect to enjoy the promises."

Answer. We consider the gospel to be what the apostles preached under the commission of Christ. Yes, it consists of facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed, and promises to be enjoyed. Well, when it comes to us designating what facts of the gospel are to be believed, we beg leave to be excused from pointing out some to be believed. If we did this it would indicate that we regarded some of them as unworthy of belief, or at least immaterial. This work of sorting out which are to be believed and which may be disbelieved we will leave for Bro. Oatman and his fellow-consorts in this little rebellion to do. We contend for the belief of all of the facts. Then turn to their preaching at your leisure, Bro. Oat-

you to consult the standard, Mr. Webster, on the word fact, before you begin this assorting business.

We are astonished to see so many of our brethren unable to get more than three facts in their heads at once. The three-fact gospel is not the one preached by Paul; then it is one upon which he called down curses. You had better be careful brethren how you corrupt the gospel.

A. McG.

DEAR BROTHER MCGARY:

I acknowledge your kindness in sending me the first two numbers of current volume of FIRM FOUNDATION. Herewith find an invitation to continue sending them. In reply to your kindly notice of my article on repentance in a late Advocate, I would say, first, that the last paragraph was, perhaps, not written in as serious a vein as the balance of the article.

I know the Baptists insist that repentance precedes faith, but does that make it true—even in their own case? Bro. McGary and myself know that it is a mental impossibility for a man to repent before he believes. Bro. McGary insists that baptism is not valid unless the candidate believes it is for the remission of sins, but does his insisting make it absolutely necessary for a person to so believe in order to be blessed of God?

But to the question: "What will Bro. L. do when they wish to come out of Jewry?" A week or two after I came to the State of Texas I attended a meeting of the Baptists in this neighborhood. It was shortly after a revival of theirs. After his sermon the preacher invited forward those who had professed religion and had been baptized, and also those who had professed and had not yet been baptized. To the former the hand of church fellowship was extended, while to the latter the hand of christian fellowship was extended, with the promise of the hand of church fellowship after baptism. I afterwards asked a Baptist if this was the doctrine and usual practice of the Baptist church, and was answered in the affirmative.

This doctrine indicated to me that the Baptist church laid no higher appreciation on the ordinance of baptism than as a door to their narrow, exclusive sect. This being the case, I can not believe them scripturally baptized, for if they submit to the operation without faith in it as a condition on which God promises blessing, they violate the law of "whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

While this is the doctrine of the Baptists as a church, I know members of that body who, individually, believed at the time of their baptism, and still hold, that baptism is a condition without obedience to which they could not receive pardon of their sins. When such as these see the sin of sectism and wish to unite with me in healing all division among the lovers of God, by laying aside human creeds and names, I should call it sacrilege to ask them to be immersed again. And whether I know he believed baptism a condition of pardon or not, when a man who has been a member of the Baptist church hears me preach the truth of the design of baptism, and, on my invitation, comes and expresses himself satisfied with his baptism, and wishes to join in the work of our plea, who am I that I should set myself up to judge his conscience? But enough. This is my belief at present. Perhaps you will pronounce it a "straddle," or say that I am holding on to the tail of my uncle's hobby. So be it. But if it be a tail-holding, I do not purpose turning go that tail until I find a surer place to light.

The expression "whom ye slew and hanged on a tree" is, I suppose, the one you find awkward.—Acts v, 30. It is the translation of a participle and verb. This form is a Greek idiom frequently found in the New Testament, in which the participle expressed the action, and the verb the result of the action. Literally translated, this is "whom ye, having hanged on a gibbet, (and as a result of the hanging) slew. I make no claim to being a "Greek scholar," but think I may say the above without egotism.

Your brother in the truth,

W. LIPSCOMB, JR.,

AZLE, TEXAS.

SOME of us will offer some thoughts on what Bro. Lipscomb has said, in our next issue. We thank Bro. L. for his article.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Let every subscriber become an active agent for the FIRM FOUNDATION for one day only, and what grand results would flow from their efforts. Brethren and sisters, are you not willing to try it? Are we not contending for the whole truth, and nothing but the "truth as it is in Jesus?" Then, in view of the fact that the Christian's birth-right, as it was sent down from the Father of Lights on the day of Pentecost, is being sold for "a mess of (sectarian) pottage," "by good words and fair speeches that deceive the hearts of the simple," is it not high time to go to work? Then let each one select one day during the month of January to get subscribers. Those who have proven themselves true friends to the paper have influenced us to continue it as a monthly for one year longer; but you will see that the matter has been increased at least one-third. There will be no change in the present make-up of the paper while it continues a monthly; unless, perhaps, to add more matter from time to time, as we feel able. The paper is gaining ground every day in the way of subscribers. We do not know how to express our thanks strongly enough to those who have helped us to this present hopeful outlook. May God's blessings rest upon them, is the prayer of their humble brother, who, with all his faults—and their name is legion—is determined to cling to the "old ship of Zion," though the tempest may rage fiercer and fiercer. With whatever of purse we may possess, at her service, and with the "sword of the Spirit" in her defense, we propose to out-ride the fury of the storm till "the Captain of our Salvation" returns, or till death sweeps us from her deck. Is there any better place to "fight the good fight?" Let us work now, brethren, for remember, "the night is coming, when no man can work."

LA PORTE, IND., Dec. 2, 1885.

Dear Bro. McGary:

I am glad to have such means as the FIRM FOUNDATION through which I can communicate with at least some of the brethren. Through its columns we may become acquainted with many of the most faithful brethren. This is what we greatly desire and need. We are exceedingly glad that there are yet a few bold and faithful soldiers of the Cross. I think that finally the FIRM FOUNDATION will be the only paper that will stand firm in the defense of the truth. I have taken and read the American Christian Review for many years, and had great hope that it would remain firm; but, alas! of late it is wavering and endorsing society work and eulogizing society men.

We are told in the good book that the love of money is the root of all evil. The rule is that in order to get money, as a preacher or editor, a man must be popular. To be popular, the editor or preacher must say many soft things to the people. He must not dwell too much upon the crimes and follies of the people. He must rather float with the current. He must be a sort of Bunyan by ends; he must not be bold and fearless as Paul in his defense of Christ and His glorious cause; he must be soft and pliable, ready to admit that all religious people are Christians, and that it makes no great difference what one believes or does, so the heart is right. I suppose by this they mean that the person desires to do right. Now if this position be the true one, then the New Testament, it seems to me, might have been reduced to a very small book. Would it not have been sufficient, then, for Jesus to have said to all, do what you think to be right? If, at last, it is to be reduced to this, notwithstanding the law of Christ, would it not be equally available without the law of Christ? What a waste of time and labor it was for Christ to enjoin a law on His disciples, and have it go forth from Mt. Zion, according to the prophets when, at the same time, no one would be bound to observe it. Sectarians for ages have held to the silly idea that what a man esteems to be right is right. But for persons claiming to be familiar with the law of the Lord to manifest such folly, is surprising. I am candid when I say that all intelligent persons know better, and that popularity and a love of praise and money is at the bottom of it.

But they say the heart is right. The heart is never right when the individual is actuated by false impressions. All intelligent people know that in Scripture the heart always includes intelligence. Many persons, I fear, make serious mistakes just here. They suppose many times that they do things heartily, when there is more imagination than understanding in it.

The heart to be right, must be rightly impressed. We reach men's hearts through their senses, and if through these senses we make good and proper impressions, then the acts that proceed from such impressions are good. If, how-of the reader mostly to the faithful, perable that the S

ness of the cover and th

ever, evil impressions are made, evil acts will follow. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart brings forth good things, and an evil man, out of the evil treasure, evil things. Mat. xii; 35. The heart is spoken of as a treasure. A treasure is a place where things are stored away. Things then in the heart (understanding) have been stored there; evidently learned, and kept for future use. So if the treasure of the heart is stored with the truth, the heart is right; but, if with falsehood and error, the heart is wrong. What items in the gospel of our salvation are left for us to opine about and draw our own conclusions without peril? On nearly all of them there are various opinions, as if God had revealed nothing on these subjects. Is it not downright infidelity and disloyalty to Christ to give an opinion in the face of revelation? Take, for example, the subject of faith. Can we venture an opinion with regard to faith, when the whole subject is revealed?

Is it not declared that, without faith, it is impossible to please God? Would God then leave us to opine or conjecture concerning the means by which we come into possession of faith, when our salvation depends upon it? I certainly think not. The Apostle Paul tells us clearly that faith comes by hearing the word of God. Rom. x; 17. Suppose that I, in the face of this plain declaration of Paul, declare that I received the faith as a direct gift from heaven in answer to prayer, keeping in mind, the while, that the same Apostle says there is one faith—Eph.—have I told the truth? Have I the faith? If an individual contradicts Paul, does he believe Christ? If he does not believe Christ, has he the faith? If he has not the faith, does he please God? If he does not please God, will he be saved? It, doubtless, is the opinion of very many that they have obtained faith as above stated, as a direct gift of God; but if it be so, then it does not come by hearing the word of God. True faith lays hold of the word of God and confides in that word; hence faith knows nothing except what it learns from facts. It entertains no opinions. Opinions never produce faith. Faith itself is stronger than opinion.

Opinion rises no higher than opinion; and hence those who deal so largely in opinions are always in doubt. They frequently say I hope I am a Christian; I hope my sins have been pardoned, etc. Then they sing:

'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought;
Do I love the Lord or not—
Am I His, or am I not?

If I love, why am I thus?
Why this dull and lifeless frame?
Hardly sure, can they be worse,
Who never knew his name?

Again, what opinion can we have regarding repentance? Is it not stated plainly by the Apostle that Godly sorrow works repentance, etc. II Cor. vii; 10. Godly sorrow stands as cause, and repentance as effect. It is the work of sorrow—it is reformation then; in fact, not in opinion. It is necessary, in fact, unto salvation, as the Apostle and Jesus both declare. No room here for any opinion.

So, also, of confession. Jesus says if any will confess Him before men, He will confess them before the angels of God. Paul says with the heart (understanding), man believes unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Rom. x; 10. For the confession of the Saviour, he offers a glorious reward. Too high a reward for an unnecessary act. If we confess Him, He will confess us in the presence of the angels of God. Ought any to treat this glorious promise with indifference and fail or refuse to confess Christ? Certainly if one should, he would do so at his own peril. And yet how many fail to do so? Neither are we left to an opinion on the subject of baptism. Suppose we, as many have done, should opine that baptism is not necessary, or that it is not sufficiently defined to confine us to one act, would we be justifiable in such opinion? Did not Jesus say, Except a man (not a child) be born of water and the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God? Did he not say, also, Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; he who believes and is baptized shall be saved? In this commission there is no promise only to the baptized. Did he not say, Go and teach all and baptize them? Certainly he did. Did he not mean what he said? Certainly.

Is it then a duty to teach and baptize? I think it is yet a duty although the command was given to the Apostles more than eighteen hundred years ago.

Jesus certainly did not organize, or authorize any other society but the church but His body; and I think it evident that He contemplated its perpetuity by the same Gospel by which it was founded. Therefore the same baptism that then brought penitent believers into the church is just as essential now, notwithstanding men's opinions and notions. But may we hold and practice an opinion as to the action performed in baptism? If, at the time Jesus used the word, there had been no definite meaning to the word, and the Apostles had seen fit to practice many ways because of the ambiguity of the word, there might be an excuse formed for different actions.

As Jesus desired a certain thing done, for a certain end or purpose, he therefore used the very word that would convey His idea to the understanding of the disciples. The Apostle Paul speaks of it Rom. vii. as being buried with Christ by baptism. In Col. ii. 12, He says buried with Him in baptism, wherein also you are risen, or raised, with Him, having faith in God's operation when He raised Him from the dead. It then represents a burial and a resurrection, and no one can suppose that either sprinkling or pouring does this. So if any have an opinion that they may sprinkle or pour water on another for baptism, that opinion leads him to do a thing that Jesus never authorized, and contrary to the very thing He commanded. For it is evident that if Jesus commanded to baptize, He did not command to rantize, for the two words have not a similar meaning, much less the same meaning.

In the system of salvation presented by Jesus and the Apostles, every item is clearly stated; and when men add or subtract any item they place themselves under the curse of God, according to Paul's Galatian letter. How is it, then, that men who make pretensions to common sense, can conclude that all the sects and heretics are in a fair way for salvation? I have noticed some of our brethren of late, who seemed heretofore to be sound, who are acknowledging that among the sects there are many Christians—and, especially, if they have been immersed. It seems to make no difference whether their religion rests on faith or opinion; no difference if they have ignored Christ's name and law, if they, in obedience to some opinion, have been immersed. Our brethren, many of them, will bid them God speed, and give them the right hand of fellowship.

But John says: "If any come unto you and bring not this doctrine (the doctrine of Christ), and

THE above caption I noticed in the columns of the BAPTIST GLEANER just under an article by R. W. Mahan, issued Jan. 6th, 1892, and refers to the "work and object" of the American Baptist Publication Society. The work referred to and the object in view is of course expected to be effected through the publication of said society.

It is an axiom that a tree is known by its fruit. The name does not change the nature of the tree. We do not gather grapes of thorns nor figs of thistles.

In the light of these facts let us proceed to examine some of the fruit produced by the press of the American Baptist Pub. Society.

1. In a Sunday-school Publication of said society called "Our Young People," issued May, 1887, I copy the following, as quoted in the American Baptist, June 1, 1887: "The First Baptist church, of Providence, R. I., is the oldest church of our denomination in this country. It was founded by Roger Williams in 1639. From this small beginning the Baptists of America have grown to their present number and power."

In this unfortunate statement, coming from such a source, I notice three palpable falsehoods: 1. "The First Baptist Church of Providence, R. I., is the oldest church of our denomination in this country.

Which is not the truth: the New Port church was founded one year before this by John Clark and others.

2. "It was founded by Roger Williams in 1639." This also is not true. Roger Williams never organized, nor was he ever a member of a true legitimate Baptist church.

3. "From this small beginning the Baptists of America have grown to their present number and power."

This is another false statement of history. The facts are that within four months after

THE COMING QUESTION:

Is the confession, as taught by our brethren, necessary to remission of sins, or any way necessary to salvation? If it is not, we should quit the practice. If it is necessary to remission of sins, it should stand as prominently before the world as any other condition of salvation. If it is necessary to salvation, there is no salvation without it. If it is not necessary to salvation, there is no good in it. When why not cease to practice it? The conditions of salvation have been regarded by our brethren as so many steps toward Christ. Every one of these steps implies action upon the part of those to be saved and these steps or actions are motions toward salvation. Hence, Paul says: "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation." If the confession is a step toward salvation, who are they that have not made the confession and yet have attained salvation? As it is generally desired, at this stage of this investigation, to exchange one issue for another or to change the issue, we turn to consider a question of form. It may be admitted that confession is necessary, but assumed that the practice of our brethren in requiring everyone to confess with the mouth that he believes that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God is necessary and that another form of it would do just as well. Perhaps no form will do as well as the Bible form, since the Bible says: "Hold fast the form of sound words." What is the Bible form? It is this: "I believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God; Acts 8, 37. But I would that this is an interpolation and therefore cannot settle the question as to the form. Peter of Christ: "Thou art the Christ the son of the living God." The Savior replies: "Upon this I will build my church."— Perhaps one will say: Jesus referred to the truth expressed, rather than to the manner of expression. Yes, may be so, but this expressed in this manner is not acceptable to the Savior, and therefore to me. John says: "No other signs truly did Jesus do that are not written in this book, but these are written that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of living God." Here is the same form of expression. Is it the right form, or is it not? If it is the right form, a form differing from it would be the wrong form. We now consider another question. Where does the confession stand in the divine arrangement? Does it stand before hearing? No. Because one must hear of Christ before he can confess him. Does it stand before faith? No. Because the confession is a confession of faith. Does it stand before repentance? I suppose not since one without repentance would be hardly able to say (and tell the truth) that he believed with all his heart. Does it come after baptism? No. Because with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Baptism is the consummating step, confession is unto salvation, therefore confession is not after baptism. If confession is not after baptism and not before repentance, it stands between repentance and baptism and to baptism an antecedent. Are the antecedents to baptism necessary to baptism? Could I baptize one in the scriptural sense who had not heard? No. Could I baptize one who had not believed? No. Could I baptize one who had not repented? No. Could I baptize one who had not confessed? No, I reckon not. Would baptism to one who had never heard, do any good? No. Would it do one who had not believed any good? No. Would it do one who had not repented any good? No. Would it do one who had not confessed any good? No, I reckon not, if so baptism has one black sheep in its flock of antecedents. The Bible teaches the confession. The Bible places the confession before baptism. The Bible form of the confession is: Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God, or perhaps I should say this is the the form, if the Bible gives any. I believe, however, I should be careful about this. Because if I should intimate that the bible required the confession, and did not give the form thereof, some Methodist preacher would tell me that the Bible required baptism, but did not give the form thereof. Then I would give that Methodist preacher my hat, and go home bare-headed. One form of confession is God for Christ's sake has forgiven my sins. This form is not in the Bible at all, it is therefore a false form. Brethren, should we accept it, will you say yes? Let us see if you will. One form of baptism is sprinkling. This form is not in with the Louisiana Chronicle, there is no reason why it should not succeed and accomplish great good for the Master's cause in that wicked city.

In addition to the paper, a school enterprise is contemplated which will greatly add to the mission work. We truly wish that success may crown the efforts, and that we may soon hear of great good accomplished for the Master in New Orleans.

THE Baptist Standard of Dallas, Tex., may 26th has an excellent article by Dr. R. R. White, in which he says some very plain things about centralization. Here is a sentence which seems to us to have the right ring: "No power has in the past, can in the present, or will in the future, awe into acquiescence the opposition in the Baptist ranks of any and all seeming approach to a concentration of power in a directory." That is exactly right. If it were not, Jesus would not have said to His church, "Go teach all nations;" but He would have located a great central power at Jerusalem and given instruction to it to manage the affairs of His kingdom just as this great Board should direct. If the denomination should meet in convention and the representatives of the Churches should decide that all mission and educational work should be governed and controlled by our Board, we might receive it, but even then it would be dangerous. The Lord knew it and hence He arranged that all should be done through His churches as they may decide. We think there is too much tendency toward centralization of power. A few men control the great body. Let the voice of the people be heard.

THE report offered by Eld. C. O. Brown, of S. C., which was repeated by the convention, at Atlanta is furnishing considerable food for comment by several of the papers in the east. The report suggested that the Home Board had not done all that it might have done in evangelizing the negroes. Bro. Brown

If so, does, then the Christian (so-called) does not, for they teach heretically. The tree is to be known by its fruit, says Jesus. No Methodist tree bears Methodist fruit, the Baptist tree bears Baptist fruit, and the Christian tree bears, or ought to, Christian fruit. The doctrine identifies the man, and not the man the doctrine. If we preach heresy, we are heretics: If we fellowship heresy, we are partakers of the heresy, and are no better than the heretic. I exceedingly regret that many who have known the truth are dissuaded to abandon it in so short a time and in so shameful a manner. If the various sects are, by their teaching and practice, bringing the people to Christ and into the kingdom of heaven, then, in the name of common sense, let us oppose them no longer. Why do our teachers and editors keep up any strife with them? What use are they in the world if sectarians are teaching the right way of the word? It makes no sort of difference what they teach or practice if thereby they save the people. Why debate any proposition with a Baptist or a Methodist, or any one else, if their teaching will save their adherents. If there be no law, let us have peace; but if there be law, then let us maintain the law. If the Lord be God, we will serve Him; if Baal, serve him. What use was there for the reformation inaugurated by Campbell, Stone, Scott, Johnson, Smith, Rogers, and others, if there is no salvation in the various and opposite theories now extant? None whatever. Campbell and Smith might properly have remained with the Baptists, B. W. Stone with the Presbyterians, Johnson and Rogers with some other sect, and avoided the long period of strife and debate that followed. Why did Campbell, Stone, Scott, and others preach the truth? Did they go back to apostolic teaching? If they did, then they taught the truth. Then those who opposed them taught falsehood. And, unless falsehood is as good as the truth, it is right and safe to hold to the doctrine of the Apostles; if it is wrong and hazardous, to avoid the heresies of this age. There is no position safe if it be untrue. And for this reason all should seek after truth. All should avoid error as a deadly poison.

W. P. RICHARDSON.

"GOING TO EXTREMES."

Written for the FIRM FOUNDATION.

The above expression is so often made use of especially by professors of the Christian religion, that I sometimes wonder if those using the expression understand or even think of the import.

One is often heard to say of another, "Oh, he is an extremist," and more especially is this remark referred to those preaching the gospel or publishers of papers in the interest of Christianity.

Can any professed Christian do more, or do less, than obey the gospel, the whole gospel and nothing but the gospel that will be acceptable in the sight of God? If any think they can let them read that portion of Revelation which declares: "He that addeth to the things which are written in this book, God will add the plagues written in this book," also, "he that taketh away anything written in this book God will take away his part out of the book of life." From the foregoing we are forced to the conclusion that man has no promise of salvation short of obedience to the whole law.

"If a man obey the whole law, and yet fail in one point, he shall be punished as guilty of all." By reference to the last quotation all ought to see that man has a certain work to do, short of which he can claim no part with the finally faithful.

While if he obeys the gospel in every particular to the best of his ability, "he shall have a right to the tree of life, and shall enter in through the gates into the City." The world is full of sects to-day, all of which have added to or taken from, with some who have done both, thereby showing by their creeds that they are not content as extremists, but go beyond or outside the Bible in order to find something on which to build their faith.

But we are not compelled to go among the sects to find those opposed to extremes.

Among our own brethren are to be found those who find fault with preachers, also publishers, simply because they "declare the whole counsel of God." Such individuals are often heard to say of Christian men and women, "Oh, well they are very clever, but I think most too strict," or "so straight they lean over just a little."

Some similar remarks are often made with reference to publishers, such as, "Oh, well, I like his paper tolerably well, but he is a little, or entirely too much on the extreme."

All true Christians have one consolation in the promise, that God, and not man, is the judge, also that by His judgment, and not by what I think each one's destiny will be forever sealed.

Our standard authors define an extremist to be a supporter of extreme doctrines or practices. Now take in connection the meaning of extremity by the same author, viz: Utmost point or degree, necessity, and we can come to a pretty correct conclusion of what is required to constitute true Christianity. It is presumable that in the days of Noah he was called an extremist by those who did not believe, yet by his working just according to God's plan or commands—doing all—nothing more, nothing less, he and his house were saved—all doubtful hearers, or partial doers were lost! All the foregoing having been completed by a period of about 2,350 years, during which the earth was again inhabited, the time drew near when a new era in the history of the world, also in the plan of salvation were about to take place, viz: The birth, life, death, burial and resurrection of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Was not the foregoing a case of extremity? Only think, reader, if you can, of the Great-I-Am undergoing all that for your and my salvation, which was not secured until all had been fulfilled; then talk of an extremist in the fulfillment of His commands, and show the consistency of such doctrine!

Many passages of scripture, treating on the foregoing, could be referred to, but trusting all will read and understand for themselves, I hope and trust that none will become so self-righteous as to entertain fears of having done too much for the Master's cause and kingdom.

Each and every day of our lives any who may desire can see the extreme necessity of Christian union. For example: In many localities union church-houses are erected, in which all denominations that contribute are interested, and entitled to the use thereof.

All disciples of Christ, Christians, are commanded to meet on the first day of the week to commemorate the death of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ by partaking of the emblems in token of his broken body and shed blood.

Doubtless all who are not negligent in the performance of this all-important duty have been interfered with to some extent by their fellow beings, many of whom are church members. The above may be a strange assertion to some, but listen: Christian brother or sister, how many times have you met at the time and place appointed, to participate in this all-important duty, and upon arrival at the "Old Union Church," found the house occupied by congregation made up of different denominations, among which are often preachers who desire to speak.

Through courtesy, the brethren of course give way for the time being, appointing some other hour to attend to the above named duty. Some, perhaps, are ready to say: Well, if that be all, I can see nothing wrong nor inconsistent upon the part of anybody interested. Very well! but right here is such a fitting place for the application of our text.

If every preacher were just extremist enough to declare the whole counsel of God, and every professor just extremist enough to take His word without creeds and other things of human invention what a glorious difference there would be. All professors of the Christian Religion could remain together, partake of the emblems together, sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, then sail together over the rough seas of time till landed safely on the beautiful shores beyond the confines of time and the slumbers of the grave.

But alas! How many of our fellow creatures remain to partake of the emblems, each one being granted the privilege of "examining himself and so let him eat." Some go away because the rules of their church forbid their partaking with any other. Others refuse because their creeds say it is not "our time," thus losing sight of all scripture by divine authority, and even the examples of Christ and his immediate followers are set at naught, and are substituted by something of human invention.

My brother or sister in Christ when we do all omit none of the duties as given in God's law, taking heed that we go not beyond His commands, making this the rule of our faith and practice, we may rest assured that we are traveling "strait and narrow way" by which all must travel in order to reach the one extreme, Heaven, where all will be extremely happy.

While, if we fail to do our sole duty, following the broad road, we are promised nothing but hell of extreme misery, and that, throughout endless eternity. Eye hath not seen nor ear heard neither hath it entered the heart of man what God hath in store for them that serve him."

Who then is not willing to be led an extremist in order to be on the Lord's side, not only in this life, but in that coming day in which all shall be judged and rewarded according to the deeds done in the body. Then there will be only two parties. The good and the bad awaiting their sentence to be pronounced upon them, "Come ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world;" or "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." Reader, you will be included in one of the above named parties; which do you prefer? This is for you to choose, and the side you choose now, however extreme it may appear, will seal forever your destiny. Endeavor to make a wise choice, and come out on the Lord's side.

R. W. GILLESPIE.

We do not know that we fully understand Bro. Gillespie, on the part of his supposed congregation rendering the different excuses for not partaking the emblems of each other. We hope we do not; but we fear he has fallen into a very popular error of turning his words, "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat," into a butcher pen of our popular politicians, such as W. E. Hall and others, who have ceased to be the servants of Christ because they are seeking to please men." Though we do not wish to be understood as attaching such aim to Bro. Gillespie. We find that many good brethren have fallen into the error of misconstruing the language of the Apostle so as to justify Christians in inviting people outside of Christ's body, to take with them. A little thought of the language under the rule of the man who speaks or writes, who writes to and upon what subject, and in all the surroundings that surround him, gathered from the context, would soon dispel this delusion. Many popularity-seekers have foisted into the minds of those who put too much credence to popular preachers. Now, when Paul used this language, to whom was he writing? To Christians at Corinth—those who had "obeyed that form of doctrine from the heart, which was delivered to them by the Apostles of Christ." Then, it was Christians who were to "examine themselves and eat," and no one else. It is that same class today, and that class alone, who can do so by the authority of Christ. "Wolves in sheep's clothing—transformed as ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works," apply this language indiscriminately. And, if they were consistent in it, they would invite Mr. Ingersoll and his ilk along with the balance. Never will this class of preachers reap the just merits of retribution for their manifold schemes for obliterating the lines between Christians and the children of darkness till an outraged God and an avenging justice rings out in their ears, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity; I never knew you." What a terrible day for false teachers!

"CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD."

"And now, why tarriest thou; arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts xxii; 16. The above language was spoken to Saul (afterwards called Paul) by Ananias, a man sent by the Lord to tell him what he must do to be saved. Acts ix; 6. Our object in quoting the verse is to call the attention of the reader to the latter part of it; and if we can arrive at a definite conclusion as to the meaning of the language by comparing it with other Scriptures that teach on the same subject, and thereby compare "Spiritual things with Spiritual." I Cor. ii; 13.

And, first, we will call attention to a position taken by one of our leading brethren in this State (he now lives in California), twenty-three years ago, in reference to this same language, "calling on the name of the Lord." He was preaching on the three questions, as found in Acts ii, 37; asked by the 3,000, and the next asked by Saul of Tarsus, Acts ix, 6; and answered by the Saviour and Ananias, Acts xxii, 10 and 16, and the last asked by the jailor, Acts xvi, 30, and answered by Paul and Silas, verse 31. He (the preacher) reasoned very well, and showed very conclusively that the questions were the same, and that the answers are harmonious when we take into consideration the surroundings or condition of the parties asking the questions; and he said, in the course of his remarks, that no inspired man ever told a sinner to do what they had already done in order to be saved, which was all right; but he wound up on the answer of Ananias to Saul, and said, that calling on the name of the Lord meant praying to the Lord. After preaching, I called his attention to what he had said and its inconsistency, and his face reddened with anger and he would not speak to me any more that evening:

Now, is it not strange that poor, fallen, fallible men will get mad when their attention is called to their inconsistencies, and yet claim to have been made free by the truth and to be led by the Spirit of God?

But to the subject: The Saviour says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord! shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father, who is in heaven." Mat. vii; 21. In this quotation the Saviour evidently has reference to prayer, and teaches that prayer alone will not entitle a man to an entrance into the kingdom of heaven.

We will now make a quotation from the prophet Joel: "And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered. Joel ii; 32. The Apostle Peter, on the day of Pentecost, quotes what Joel says, and applies it as having reference to that day for its beginning, and what Joel calls deliverance, Peter, speaking by the same Spirit that guided Joel, calls salvation. Acts ii; 21. Paul also uses the same quotation, saying, "For whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be saved." Rom. x; 13. Now if the prophet Joel and the Apostles Peter and Paul have reference to prayer in the above quotations, then they and the Saviour cross or contradict each other; for the Saviour says not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord! or pray to me, shall be saved; while the prophet and Apostles say that whosoever shall call on the name of or pray to the Lord shall be saved. Thereby contradicting each other. But we don't believe they contradict each other, do we? We learn that Abraham ~~was called~~ and called upon the name of the Lord. Gen. xii; 8. Why did he build an altar? He did it that he might offer the sacrifices authorized or required by the Lord.

We find in 1st Sam'l. xxy, 5 and 9, that David sent out ten young men to greet Nabal in his name (or by his authority), and the young men did as they were told, and greeted him in his name.

We learn a lesson of great importance in the 12th chap. of Deut., that the Lord chose a certain place to record his name or authority, and there the Jews were to bring all of their offerings and sacrifices, that they might offer them according to the law, and not offer their sacrifices any and everywhere as it might seem right in their own eyes. See verse 8. And our brethren ought to learn from these lessons of admonition not to make their offerings and sacrifices through missionary societies, church festivals, old and young men's societies, ladies' societies, and other institutions unauthorized by the word of the Lord, but which seemeth right in their own eyes. Paul says there are lessons of admonition: I Cor. x; 11; and, oh, brethren, let us be admonished. The Lord says, "in all places where I record my name (or authority) I will come unto thee and I will bless thee." Exodus xx; 24. But, perhaps, some one is ready to ask what has all that to do with what Annanias said to Saul. We will see after a while.

John says "He (that is, Christ) came to His own and His own received Him not; but as many as received Him, to them gave He power (or privilege) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name." John i; 12. Showing that, after receiving after receiving Him by faith, as the Son of God, they must believe in His name, or authority. The same idea is expressed in John xx; 30-31, where he says many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of His disciples, which are not written in this book, but these are written that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing you might have life through His name (or by whatever He authorizes). To Him give all the prophets witness that through His name whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins. Acts x; 43. Showing conclusively that we receive remission of sins through His name (or by whatever He authorizes) after we have believed in Him. John i; 12. "All power (or authority) is given unto Me in heaven and in earth; go ye, therefore (that is because I have all authority), and teach all nations," etc. Mat. xxviii; 18-19. Oh, what a King the Christian's King is, in spite of the Christadelphians. It is by virtue of His authority that the Gospel has been preached from the day of Pentecost till now, and will be to the end of the Christian age. He (the King) says, "thus it is written; and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Luke xxiv; 46-47. The Apostles to whom this last quotation was addressed, remained in Jerusalem, as the Saviour told them, until they were endued with power from on high, or were filled with the Holy Spirit—Acts ii, 4—which guided them into all truth—John xvi, 13—and taught them all things (necessary to salvation). John xiv; 26.

Peter, to whom the keys of the kingdom (not of the church, unless the church and kingdom are held synonymously in that place) were committed—Mat. xvi, 19—arose and began to preach, and quoted what their own prophet, Joel, said: "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Acts ii; 21. And told them that they had with wicked hands crucified the Lord Jesus; that He was buried and had risen and ascended to heaven, and had shed forth that which they then saw and heard. Now when they heard this, or believed what Peter preached, they were pricked in their heart, and said to Peter and the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Acts ii; 37. Now did they not want to be saved, and had not Peter shown them, from their own prophet, that if they called on the name of the Lord they should be saved? This being so, they wanted to know how to call on the name or authority of the Lord. Peter, or the Holy Spirit, said: Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Acts ii; 28.

Now, brethren, did not repentance and remission of sins begin to be preached in His name, at Jerusalem, as He directed, and did not 3,000 comply with the conditions? and were they not made free from their sins by calling on the authority of the Lord Jesus, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords? God is no respecter of persons. Acts x; 34. If the 3,000 were saved on the day of Pentecost by calling on the name of the Lord, was not Saul or Paul saved in the same way? He was told to arise and be baptized, and wash away his sins, or, for the remission of his sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Did not the Lord authorize baptism for the remission of sins to just such characters as Saul was when Annanias went to Him? and did he not obey from the heart (that is, understandingly) the form of doctrine delivered to him? and was he not then made free from sins, an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ? If so, calling on the name of the Lord does not refer to prayer in his case, but to doing what the Lord had authorized in order to his salvation.

And now, brethren, having called on the name or authority of the Lord, and having made free from sins, as were the Pentecostians, Paul and others, shall we conclude that we are no longer under obligations to be governed by our King, or shall we continue to give ear to His sayings? He says, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine and doeth them, I will liken him to a wise man who built his house upon a rock." Mat. vii; 24. So you see we must continue to hear his sayings and not the sayings of uninspired men. Paul says, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name (or authority) of our Lord Jesus Christ that you all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that you be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." I Cor. i; 10. Are we speaking the same thing as we are admonished to do in this quotation? If so, how is it that some are speaking in favor of instrumental music in the worship, and others are opposing it? some in favor of missionary societies, while others oppose them? some in favor of Bible colleges, others opposed to them? some for church festivals, grab bags, and all other wicked arrangements for raising money to pay the salaries of unscriptural pastors, others opposed to them? some in favor of receiving sectarians on their baptism, or dipping, others opposing it? Why all these divisions or contentions among us? It is because we are not speaking the same things. What things are we to speak? Peter says if any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God, I Peter iv; 11. Do the oracles of God speak of the above-named things? No; whose fault is it that these troubles are among us? Why, it is the fault of those who introduce them; and, brethren, I do believe if you do not turn away from these unauthorized things, that the Lord will condemn you at the last day, as the Apostle Paul says, in writing to Christians, "whatsoever you do, in word or deed, do all in the name (or by the authority) of the Lord Jesus." Coll. ii; 16. The Lord does not authorize the above-named things and many others that are being practiced. And again Paul says "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof for correction, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." II Tim. iii; 16. Now if the Scriptures do not teach us about these things, then they are not good works, and are of necessity bad works.

LOSING FRIENDS.

I find an article in Gospel Advocate on this subject, from the pen of Brother J. T. Poe. Some of his progressive friends feel aggrieved because of his opposition to State Meetings, Missionary Societies, etc. The good brother takes consolation in the thought that the loss of these friends (?) is because of his close adherence to the truth as it is in Jesus, and assigns as a reason for so much progression, an unconverted membership. He says: "We have brought into this reformation from the sects thousands who have come to us unconverted, and who have brought with them their sectarian opinions and dogmas, and have exercised them among us until Israel—spiritual Israel—is corrupted. We have been too eager for members—too anxious to get the sects at any sacrifice. We need to examine the law again to come back fully to the word of God. (Italics mine.)

Just so, my brother; and I rejoice to see that you recognize the true standard by which true friends are made and kept. "Come back fully to the word of God." Jesus said: "Ye are my friends if you do whatsoever I command you." We may lose the friendship of men, but then we win Christ. Yes, my brother, just as sure as you 'come back fully to the word of God' the love of many will wax cold; when you meet them they have a far-off look in their eyes that says very plainly, "I don't want to see you."

Their cold greetings show them capable of great abstraction, and just as soon as they can, they abstract their precious persons from our presence and society.

Yes, they will try several processes on you. The high and lofty air of superior knowledge and dignity is assumed, and if you persist in pushing yourself in their way they then try "to set down on you." If you do not understand this latter method now, you will, by the time you visit a few congregations that are pastured by a progressive.

Progression and Liberalism would shake hands with Sectarianism. It would not do, however, to take in the whole mass of corruption at one time, so they take it in broken doses. First welcome the sects—get members especially the influential. Get them unconverted; and every one they get, who is satisfied with the obedience given to sectarian baptism is unconverted.

What will you do about it my brother? Have you the courage to heed your own exhortation? You will certainly lose many so-called friends, but you will have the happy consciousness that you are walking in the ordinances as delivered to us by divine authority, and by coming "back fully to the word of God" you will build "gold, silver and precious stones" upon the one Foundation, and not contribute to that unconverted state of the church which you deplore.

DISAFFECTION.

From the Baptist Herald:

"It is sad to think of the disaffection that sometimes originates among our brethren. Sometimes a brother, whom we regarded as firm and established in the distinguishing doctrines of the church, is brought to change his views, and to conclude that he has failed in the past of having a clear and correct perception of the teachings of the gospel.

I have recently had a lengthy interview with a member of one of my charges, who has become very much exercised about a matter which he has come to think vital to his salvation. In short, he is about to adopt the views common to a sect known as Campbellites, or Christians, as they prefer to be called, but avows his determination to search diligently for the truth before he will make any change in his church relationship. I tried to convince him of his error, but he seemed still to hold tenaciously to his adopted views. He has come to believe that, as baptism is made so important and so prominent an ordinance in the gospels, and that as Peter seemed to enjoin baptism upon the converts on the day of Pentecost as necessary to the remission of sins, it must, therefore, have been instituted by our Saviour and designed to accompany faith and repentance, (his order,) thereby constituting with these one whole, without which the blessing of salvation cannot be enjoyed.

I tried to teach him that baptism was an after consideration, so to speak, with the convert; that repentance and faith were essential to bring him into the relationship of a child to God, for we are "all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus;" that baptism was an act of a child in obedience to the Father, and that until the subject was brought into this relationship he was carnal, and that "the carnal mind was enmity against God, not subject to his law, neither indeed could be," so that this carnality must needs be supplanted by spirituality before the subject was competent to perform an obedient act.

Again, I tried to impress upon him that it was Christ's righteousness, or, as otherwise expressed, perfect obedience to all the requirements of God's broken law, that formed the basis of our salvation; that the subject must be convicted for sin, the sin of transgression of the law of God; that this was effected by the quickening, through the Holy Spirit, and he thereby brought to comprehend his need of a Saviour; the need arising from law claims he could not himself comply with, but which must be met before he could have any basis upon which to rest for salvation. This basis thus formed by the perfect righteousness of Christ, must be rested upon by the subject, and this act of resting or trusting is styled faith, and the moment the soul thus exercises it, the righteousness of Christ becomes his imputation, and thus God, the father, accepts him as innocent, when justification follows as naturally as an effect follows a cause, and this is what Paul meant when he declared that being justified by faith, we have peace in God.

I tried to show him that this justification was unto life, and that there could be no interim between the two states of life and death; that as the law condemns the subject, while under it possessed a life claimed by the law, and when justified he became dead to the law by the body of Christ, and so passed out from under the law into that spiritual life, that is at the end of faith, even the salvation of the soul. And now, as his death to the law had taken place—a death in the person of his substitute, the Lord Jesus—it was fitting that he should be buried; just as much so as it is to put away the bodies of our friends in the tomb when natural life becomes extinct, and that this is the proper light in which to view baptism—a demonstration of our death to sin and of a life unto God.

I tried further to show him, that if, as he maintained, it requires faith, repentance and baptism, (his order,) to make one whole, without which three and the last with a view to the remission of sins there could be no salvation, such a thing as harmonizing the word of God, was an impossibility; because, according to the Saviour, belief in him brought life everlasting, while unbelief wrought condemnation; and according to Paul, faith brought justification, which was instantaneous spiritual life, and that baptism, from the very nature of the ordinance, separated itself from the two former in point of time, so as to necessitate an interim, between life and death, and leave the subject suspended between the law and the grace. Having died to the law, the law had no dominion over him, but not being alive unto God until he should emerge from the water, he was destitute of grace, as grace brought life, and according to his own interpretation he had no life till after baptism.

Then, I tried to reason with him concerning the difference between a physical act of obedience, for the performance of which he was dependent upon the will of another and the acts of repentance and faith, that were between himself and God alone; and that if it required this physical act or baptism to complete a righteousness for the soul, then, the "It is finished" which was pronounced by our Saviour upon the cross, was premature.

I have thus given you the principle arguments used to convince him; and as I am interested about him, and as he holds himself open to conviction, I ask that you, Bro. Editor, or any other brother who reads this, will present some more convincing arguments that will reach him through the HERALD, he being a subscriber to that paper.

A. PASTOR."

We publish the above and such remarks as may follow, by request.

We are informed that the "Pastor" is "Mr. Farrer, a Baptist preacher; that "the member of his charge" is Bro. Elbert Day; and, that the setter-forth of these "views common to a sect known as Campbellites, or Christians, as they prefer to be called," is Bro. A. J. McCarty. Since the "pastor" wrote this article, Bro. Day has cast his lot with this "sect everywhere spoken against" as "Campbellites." All of these parties are residents of Madison county, Texas. We are well acquainted with Bros. McCarty and Day, but only know "pastor" Farrer from character; and, in this way, we know him to be a man of strict integrity, and, if we regarded Baptist doctrine as a doctrine, which, when "obeyed from the heart," would make a Christian, we could add that he is an upright Christian. But as it is, we can cheerfully say that he bears the character of a conscientious gentleman. We have good reasons for giving the names of the parties. We have been thus particular in speaking of the character borne by the "pastor," that our criticism of his article may not be thought to grow out of any animus on our part towards him. We do, though, "hate" all false doctrines, as our Lord and Master "hated the deeds and doctrine of the Nicolaitanes." We regard Baptist doctrine as different from that doctrine propagated by Christ's Apostles in His name, that is, by His authority. This, if true, makes it false doctrine. He who loves Christ loves His doctrine, and, must in the very nature of things, hate all other doctrines—which are the "commandments of men" and are "vain." If Baptist doctrine can be shown to be Christ's doctrine, we here tender our columns to Mr. Farrer to that end, promising him perfect fairness at our hands.

The "Pastor" says: "Sometimes a brother, whom we regarded as firm and established in the distinguishing doctrines of the church, is brought to change his views and to conclude that he has failed in the past of having a clear and correct perception of the teachings of the gospel."

Yes, this is often the case, Mr. Farrer. So this one, which seemed to perplex you to such an extent as to cause you to write your article calling on the editor of the Baptist Herald for help to hold this member of your "charge" in Baptist harness, is by no means a novel one. If you will turn to the 19th chapter of Acts of Apostles and read it carefully, you will see that away back in that time, "about twelve," who met with a proclaimer of the same doctrine that you and many others now call "Campbellism," "concluded that they had failed in the past of having clear and correct perceptions of the teachings of the Gospel." So, my friend, before you made such a miration over this case, you should have remembered that a very wise man said, "There is no new thing under the sun." Need I remind you that in this same neighborhood, where Bro. Day lives, several others of "your charge," whom you "regarded as firm and established in the distinguishing doctrines of the church, were brought to change their views and to conclude that they had failed in the past of having clear and correct perceptions of the teachings of the Gospel?" And that they, having been duped into the water by a false doctrine--Baptist doctrine--turned and "obeyed the doctrine of Christ from the heart?"

Remember, friend, that we are not denying that you are conscientious in waging your war upon the doctrine of Christ in behalf of Baptist doctrine, and, in your profanation of it by calling it "Campbellism." We have admitted that, in the outset. As strange as it may appear that a man will oppose the doctrine of God's Son, while he is conscientiously endeavoring to serve God, it is no new thing. Even the learned student of Gamaliel, while under the hallucinating influences of the religion of his fathers, "verily thought with himself, that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." He, even sought out men and women who were "of this way" that you now call Campbellism, in order that he might "bind them and cast them in prison," we have never heard of you casting any "Campbellites" into the Madisonville jail, and really, we do not believe you would push your opposition to that extent, even if the "high priests" of your doctrine--Baptist doctrine--had the authority to grant you "letters" to that effect. So, my friend, you see that Paul's opposition to this same doctrine, that you call "Campbellism," was more furious and vehement than yours, and yet he turned and preached "the faith which he once destroyed"—that same faith that you now call "Campbellism." In view of the fact that the wise man said, "there is no new thing under the sun," may we—who are now called "Campbellites" by you—not indulge the fond hope that you will follow the example of the Apostle, and that some day we may say of you, "that he who persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he called Campbellism?" You can dispel this hope only in one of two ways, viz.: First, by causing us to lose confidence in your integrity and consciousness; or, second, by causing us to believe that you will never have the opportunity of seeing "the distinguishing doctrines of the church"—your church—and the "truth as it is in Jesus" laid down side by side, for you to compare and weigh. But we intend to intercept the second by submitting to you, in this article, for your candid consideration, the doctrine of the Baptist Church vs. the teaching of the Holy Spirit, on the very point that, upon examination, is found to constitute the very warp and woof of your article of appeal to the editor of the Baptist Herald. If, then, we succeed in showing that the doctrine of the Baptist Church, on this point or others, differs from the teaching of the Holy Spirit, we shall then hinge the whole issue as to our hope of your following Paul's example, wholly upon the question of conscientiousness; for we cannot doubt your capacity for seeing and weighing. You speak of the "distinguishing doctrines of the church"—the Baptist Church. Of course, you use the word "distinguishing" in its proper sense. Well, what is that sense? Mr. Webster defines the word: "Constituting difference, or distinction from everything else; peculiar; characteristic." Now, my dear sir, I would have you bear in mind that, upon this point of the design of baptism, which you hold is because of remission of sins, or is "an act of a child in obedience to the father." You do not differ from many other religious bodies that I could name, as you well know. But there is a difference, at this point, between your doctrine, Baptist doctrine, and "the doctrine or faith once delivered to the saints;" and that difference is as wide as that between yea and nay, or as the north is from the south. This difference or "distinguishing" feature of Baptist doctrine becomes the measure, in length, breadth or depth of Baptist error, mistake or fallacy at this point, as well as at every other point wherein that doctrine differs from the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Will you, sir, accept the results that follow a fair measurement by this rule? Can you find in your conscience room to nurse Baptist doctrine, wherein it differs from that doctrine delivered by those of whom it was said: He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that rejecteth you rejecteth me? And "whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven?" If you cannot, then we shall look upon your conversion, from the Baptist dogma to the truth relative to the design of baptism, as an easy task, since your own words indicate that you are now almost persuaded on this point, when you say: "He has come to believe that, as baptism is made so important and so prominent an ordinance in the gospels, and that as Peter seemed to enjoin baptism upon the converts on the day of Pentecost as necessary to the remission of sins (italics mine), it must, therefore, have been instituted by our Saviour and designed to accompany faith and repentance (his order) thereby with these, constituting one whole, without which the blessing of salvation cannot be enjoyed."

As Peter seemed to you to enjoin baptism on this occasion, as necessary to remission of sins, we invite your attention to other language of the Spirit on that point which seems to set the matter at rest. But before we proceed, we beg you, friend, to bear in mind that whatever the word "repent" was for, as it occurs in Peter's language—Acts ii; 38—baptism, as connected with it by the conjunction and, is for the very same. So if they were commanded to be baptized because their sins were forgiven, they were to repent for identically the same thing. My friend, do you Baptists have your people to repent because their sins have been forgiven them? If so, then we must exclaim, what strange theology! If not, then your logic out limps a three-legged calf. Or, as the conjunction joins repentance and baptism inseparably together for the same end; and as you say that "baptism is an act of a child in obedience to the father," and hence, when Peter told them to be baptized, it was a command to those who were already children, then these same children were told to "repent and be baptized."

So you see, my friend, your theory, "the distinguishing doctrines of the church"—Baptist Church—makes them children before they repented!! Don't you see how the thing limps all along here? But we will now invite your attention to other language that seems to make baptism "necessary to the remission of sins." Take the commission under which Peter preached, when he seemed to you, and to all other candid men, to make baptism "necessary to the remission of sins." Our Saviour said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Where does He locate the salvation or remission of sins? Salvation from sins or remission of sins amount to precisely the same. Does He say he that believes shall be saved? No? But He does say that he that believes, and is baptized, shall be saved. Then this language of the Lord seems to enjoin baptism as necessary to the remission of sins," also. When the persecuting Saul was hasting to Damascus to pour out the venom of his sectarian wrath upon a class that you call "Campbellites" now, he was very suddenly checked in his mad career by the beams of a light whose brightness far exceeded that of the noonday sun. While you, my friend, have not the one-thousandth part, perhaps, of the blinding influences that led Saul to stiffen his neck against Christ, you have, perhaps, a thousand times the advantage of him, upon the other hand, to read the truth as it is in Jesus in the nineteenth century blaze of "that light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world," if every man will open his eyes to it.

But this same Saul, when brought to a sense of his madness and wickedness, asked what was exacted of him. He was directed to a certain place, where he could gain the then, desire of his heart. And when he reached the appointed place, doubtless feeling as pungent conviction of sin and as deep penitence as ever wrung a human heart, he, nevertheless, reached it a sinner, and, out of Christ. What direction did the appointed agent of God, Ananias, give him when they met? Did he say, "Saul, thy sins are forgiven, now be baptized because of it? Nay, verily! Although the broken-hearted persecutor had been repenting for three days, the conjunction with which the Holy Spirit had for all time, both in heaven and earth, bound together, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, was also binding Saul's penitence to that condition yet to be told him. Listen, my friend, to the words of Ananias, and see if you can catch in them even a glimpse of the "distinguishing doctrines of the church"—the Baptist church: "And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Honor bright, does not this lan-gauge seem to you to put the "washing away of sins" as the result of the baptism? Not baptism alone, but baptism with all that precedes or is connected with it in the divine arrangement.

REPLY TO BRO. W. LIPSCOMB, JR.

In our last issue was an article from Bro. W. Lipscomb, Jr. As we did not have space then to offer any comments on his article, we do so now. Not that we think there seems to be any urgent reasons for replying to it; but we remember that we gave notice then that we would offer some thoughts on it, which we will now proceed to do briefly. Bro. L. said: "I know the Baptists insist that repentance precedes faith; but does that make it true—even in their own case? * * * Bro. McGary insists that baptism is not valid unless the candidate believes that it is for the remission of sins; but does his insisting make it absolutely necessary for a person to so believe in order to be blessed of God?"

In reply to his query, as to whether the insisting of the Baptists makes their theory of repentance before faith, true, we reply that we are astonished at a man of his sense asking such a question. Surely Bro. L. does not understand us to hold that man's earnestness in an opinion makes it true, whether Baptists or others. Again, does he understand me to rest the question of the validity of sect baptism on my insisting? If so he is surely on a cold trail. The reason we say that such baptism is invalid, is because the Lord never authorized such baptism, and hence, no baptism is valid that is not by His authority. He said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." There is no authority here for baptizing the "damned" class. All who do not believe the gospel—the entire gospel—that they preached, are of that class and remain of it, baptism or no baptism, so long as they are unbelievers of that gospel—not the "three-fact gospel of Bethany and Lexington, but the whole gospel of Jerusalem. The gospel that tells of Christ's death, burial and resurrection, and that tells of repentance and remission of sins in the "name of Christ," that began to be preached at Jerusalem eighteen hundred years ago, and was preached "among all nations," just as Peter preached it at Jerusalem. Show where Peter preached remission of sins, and his words on that point are a part of that same gospel that a man must believe, just as he preached it, or remain in that "damned" state in which the Lord of lords and King of kings has pronounced him. Neither the renowned dead of Bethany nor the wise living of Lexington can change what the enthroned King of Heaven and earth has bound throughout His Realm. This way of saying that "the Scriptures are a sufficient rule of faith and practice," and then acting in such an important matter as taking people into the church (?) in a way that the Scriptures are as silent as the tomb upon, never can be made to appear right or consistent to those who think for themselves. If it is God's desire that we shall accept sectarian baptism as valid, then it is false that the "Scriptures are a sufficient rule of faith and practice," for the Scriptures nowhere lay down any such a rule. So we hope that Bro. L. will come to understand that it is not our insisting that cuts any figure in the case, but the word of the Lord, spoken with as much earnestness as when it testified of the God-hood of Jesus. And yet it is not wholly upon the misunderstanding of the design of baptism, on the part of immersed sectarians, that we repudiate their baptism; but, also, because they have not, in proper order, "confessed with the mouth the Lord Jesus." We call the attention of Bro. L. and others, who believe as he does, to an article in another column, by Bro. Richardson, on the Confession.

In conclusion, we appeal to all who really love Christ and His truth, to the imperative duty on our part as Christians, of "speaking the same thing, and of having no divisions among us; but of being perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." This, brethren, can only be the case with us, when we "let Christ dwell in us richly," so that we many "have the mind of Christ," and when we speak, speak as the oracles of God. It is a terrible state of affairs for those who have preached to the religious world so loudly and lustily on this point, to now be divided themselves upon how persons come into Christ! Brethren, let's find who is at fault in this matter, and correct it speedily, or we are sure to go to pieces, because He who spake as never man spoke, has said: "A house divided against itself cannot stand." A. McG.

In the Apostolic Guide of December 11, under the caption of "Baptist Claims and Failures," the editor-in-chief, as we might expect, makes out a strong case against the Baptists. As Brother Allen has been the target of so many envenomed shafts from the Goliaths of the grand army of "progress" in battling for a point reached across the "dark blue sea," where W. T. Moore "holds the fort," we feel somewhat reluctant to rush in upon him through some gaps he left down around his own premises, in his eagerness to build a strong fence against the Baptists. But, as truth is at all times entitled to the pre-eminence, and, as our popular editors and teachers, who fight and pet the Baptists, consider themselves out of the range of such small shot as the FIRM FOUNDATION, we shall herein call Brother Allen's attention to some thoughts that were suggested to our mind while reading his article above referred to. In enumerating other flaws in Baptist doctrine, Brother Allen says: "Did they (meaning primitive Christians) baptize believers on a simple confession of their faith in Christ, without an experience involving a sense of pardon? So do the Disciples; but so do not the Baptists.

"Did they tell inquiring sinners who believed that Jesus was the Christ, to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins? So do the Disciples; but so do not the Baptists." Now, Brother Allen, will you please tell us why you have this fault to find with your Baptist brethren? Do you not receive these same Baptists upon their baptism? And if you do (which I know you do), do you not do so because you consider them in Christ? And if you consider them in Christ by virtue of such baptism, would a baptism preceded by the practice of the early Disciples, and which you claim is strictly followed by the Disciples of this day, have done anything more than brought them where their Baptist baptism brought them? If not, is not the practice of the early Disciples and the Disciples of this day simply on a par with Baptist usage? And, if this is true, in view of the fact that Baptist practice is the most popular, are you not acting wickedly in not adopting it when more people will se-cept it and come to Christ (?) through it than through your teaching?

Will you, my brother, be so kind as to answer these questions? We will see; for we intend to see that you are furnished with them. And they are plain, leaving no room for misunderstanding.

A. McG.

THE PETTYTOWN DEBATE.

The above discussion began on the the second day of December and continued for five days. There were two sessions each day of two hours each. The disputants were C. M. Wilmeth, of the Church of God, and Dr. W. A. Oatman, a Christadelphian. A want of space forbids anything like a full report, but an attempt will be made to impartially present some of the principal points at issue.

Dr. Oatman opened by affirming that "The one only Kingdom of God taught in the Bible will be re-established at Christ's second coming, and that a belief of the things concerning this kingdom is necessary to salvation." He first noticed that the term kingdom, when used in reference to God, is always singular, and gave many scriptures in proof, such as Lk. 12, 32; Matt. 6, 32, etc. He then referred to the fact that there is "One Hope," and that it is the one hope of our calling, 1st Thea., 2, 12, and that we are called to His kingdom. The things taught by Apostles and Prophets concerned this kingdom. Even Jesus was sent to preach the things concerning this kingdom. Matt. 4, 23. The gospel of this kingdom shall continue to be preached till Christ's second coming. Matt. 24, 14. This kingdom began before the foundation of the world. Matt. 24, 34. Must go to Moses and the prophets for information concerning this kingdom. King David was a type of our Savior, and was inointed fourteen years before he was crowned king.

To this Brother Wilmeth replied as follows: Because the word kingdom is singular it does not militate against the fact that more than one kingdom could exist at the same time. In Matt. 8, 2, we have two recognized kingdoms, and the singular number is used. I ask the Doctor what is meant by the language in Matt. 3, if a kingdom was not approaching or near at hand; and if near, what kingdom was it? Christ's disciples were taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come." Christ said to them he would give them the kingdom. Lk. 12, 32. In Matt. 25, 34, reference is made to a kingdom prepared (not organized) from the foundation of the world. The Doctor referred to the "Gospel of the Kingdom." Now will he show during this discussion where "the Gospel of the Kingdom" was ever preached after the resurrection of Christ? Yes, we are to go to Moses and the Prophets to prove what? Not that the kingdom of Christ is yet in the future, but to examine their prophesies concerning it. The Covenant with Abraham contains two lines of promises; one temporal, the other spiritual. Gen. 12, 1-3; Gall. 3, 16; Gall. 4, 22-31. In reference to the anointing and crowning of David, I will ask what the Doctor wishes to show from this. Certainly not that Christ the Antitype was crowned fourteen years after his anointing as was David the type. Is that it, Doctor?

Dr. O. replied: Mr. W. believes in a plurality of Kingdoms, but he surrendered this point when he quoted "seek ye first the kingdom of God."

He then brought up the petition "Thy kingdom come." Why did he not go on with it? "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Has this come to pass? If not it refers to a future kingdom.

Hebrew 11, 8, foreshadows the future inheritance. This has reference to the blessings under the reign of Christ in his coming kingdom. Read to the conclusion of the chapter. Will Mr. W. give a thus saith the Lord for the crowning of Jesus as king? He occupies the same position towards the church that the husband does towards his wife. Eph. 5, 23. I refer to 1st Chron., 28, 5, and 20, 23. Also 89 Ps., 34, 33.

Finally the kingdom was divided. The ten tribes were lost; and the remaining two occupied the land for 430 years, and finally, because of idolatry, they were destroyed. See Ezek. 21, 24, 27. The kingdom will be restored. When it is restored it will be a perfect and real kingdom, just like the original in every particular. In proof read Jer. 23, 15. Jesus has never assumed the reins of government, and consequently has no power.

Wilmeth replied: When I quoted the language "seek ye first the kingdom of God," I wished to enforce the thought, simply that man's first duty is to seek the kingdom of God. In order to get more directly at the issue, I ask the Doctor are the things that contest shows are to be added take place in His future kingdom. If not, then what kingdom is that we must first seek?

I think the Doctor a little fast when he said that because will of the Lord was not done earth, that therefore it had reference to a future kingdom. There are many things required of that are not complied with. Even the blessed Savior prayed that it were possible, to let the cup suffering pass from him. Every time we obey the Savior, the will of the Lord is done on earth. The Doctor's references to 1st Chron. 28, 5, and 29, 23, are affirmed Solomon; as the context shows. The house of David means the family of David, and not the kingdom of David. But we are told that when the kingdom is established it will have all the features of the former kingdom. Will those bloody sacrifices be re-established? Then circumcision will be in force, too, will it? The Doctor had better take time by the forelock and be prepared as proper subject in his coming kingdom. I refer to Isaiah 2, 1-4; Micah, 4, 1-4; Lk. 24, 44-49; Zec. 6, 12-13; Acts 2, 33, to prove that Jesus is enthroned as king.

I refer to Dan. 2 to show that the days of the Cæsars the God of Heaven set up his kingdom. But we are told that Jesus has no power, for he is not king. In contrast with this look at the testimony of the spirit in Matt. 28, 18. Which is true, the Doctor or the Bible?

Dr. O. Replied: My reference did not refer to Solomon, for I was to be the Son of God: House means dynasty, and not family. If the church is the Lord's kingdom, then it is a failure, for the will of the Lord is not done on earth.

If all power has been given Christ, then there is no power in reserve. Paul was wrong, was he in his instructions contained in 3rd ch. Gall., for we find there blessings held in reserve till Jesus comes again. To show that Jesus is not now King, I refer to Heb. 1-2; 2d ch. 7-8. He is High Priest and not King. If Jesus is King, who will he intercede with? If he is King, we should pray to Jesus. No sensible man ever thinks of praying to Jesus.

If Jesus is King, he forgives sins, and not the Father.

Wilmeth replied: Solomon was certainly the Son of God alluded to in the Dr.'s references. The context shows this: When of ...saya God, he is called the Son of God. But where is Christ's throne? He is on the throne with the Father, and at His right hand, and the council of peace is between them both, as I have shown.

By the way, the Doctor has not yet shown where "the gospel of the kingdom was preached after Christ's ascension." This is pertinent to the question before us. Will you do it, Doctor? When the Lord said "all authority in Heaven and on earth is given unto Me," He was not talking about real estate. His is a spiritual reign. But we were told that Christ is simply heir of all things. Well can not one be an heir in possession of all the blessings? The Doctor admits that he possesses the Priesthood. Why not the Kingship, too? He is a Priest on his throne, yes, and a King on His throne, too.

But a sensible man never prays to Jesus.

Then Stephen, the protomartyr, was not a sensible man, was he, Doctor? See Acts 7, 59.

I will read Phil. 2, 8-12; Heb. 2, 9; Eph. 1, 20-23; Jno. 18, 36-39; Lk. 23, 2; Jno. 13, 13-14. For want of space we will continue till through. Our readers will please preserve the numbers of the FIRM FOUNDATION till we are done and then examine connectedly the argument presented by the disputants in enforcing the lessons drawn from the many references made, will have to be inferred by the careful reader. It was quite interesting and entertaining throughout.

Our next number will contain the remainder of our main notes on the first proposition. Then we will take up the second proposition, affirmed by Bro. Wilmerth. "There is a conscious existence between death and the resurrection." J. S. D.

Bro. McGary:

I am very much pleased with the change made in form and letter of this month's FIRM FOUNDATION.

I am daily thanking God for men who, under all circumstances, continue to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." What a grand, encouraging and glorious thing it is to hear from brethren who stand in one Spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel, and in nothing terrified by their adversaries. "The form of godliness," and that only, is a fearful feature. How near the genuine a form can be made, and how skilful some persons are in maintaining the form, though guilty of all the fearful characteristics in the catalogue of crimes mentioned by Paul in the 3d chap. of his second epistle to Timothy: Lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent (without self-control), fierce, despisers of those that are good; traitors, heady, high-minded lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. With all of this, holding a FORM OF GODLINESS. No wonder that Paul cautioned and advised Timothy to "turn from them." "For what fellowship hath righteousness with iniquity? What communion hath light with darkness? and concord hath Christ with Beliel? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" etc.

Bro. McGary, let us stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

Enclosed, $1 for the FIRM FOUNDATION. I am for truth.

R. T. DAVIES.

SALUTATION.

To the readers of the FIRM FOUNDATION:

It is with an earnest desire to facilitate the proclamation of pure, primitive gospel teaching, that I have accepted a position on the staff as one of the editors of the FIRM FOUNDATION—not with a view to becoming rich, for I understand that editors as a general rule are poor. But, of course, I have some other reasons for accepting a position with the FIRM FOUNDATION, and not associating or seeking to associate myself with some of the other numerous papers published by our brethren.

Among them I will mention (1) that some of our papers have too many advertisements in them, (2) some advocate "missionary societies," which are unauthorized by the Bible, (3) while some who profess to be very sound in some things concerning "missionary societies," are just as unsound on the "Sunday School," another unauthorized practice. They all, together, recognize, in many instances, the practice of sectarians in that which is not scriptural, while the FIRM FOUNDATION has always heretofore, and we trust will hereafter, maintain scriptural teaching and practice.

(4) It is a Texas paper and published in our own State, and will reach all parts of the State in a very short time after issued.

Now, brethren, we propose, by your help, to make the paper what it ought to be. I have never asked a man, who was not taking one or two other religious papers, to take the FIRM FOUNDATION, who did not do so without complaining at price, hard times, or anything of the kind. Then let us rally to the front and "show our faith by our works." Subscribe for the FIRM FOUNDATION, show it to your neighbor and get him to subscribe for it also. J. F. GRUBBS.

EDITORIAL MISCELLANY.

We wonder if Paul wrote back, from Ephesus reporting his meeting there to his Jerusalem brethren, saying, "I have had great success, a great many by primary obedience, some by relation," etc. Or, "five from the Pharisees, three from the Sadducees, about twelve from John's disciples (Baptists), and fifteen from the world." We have never seen such a report from Paul, but it would seem that there ought to be such to justify modern reports and reporters.

Homan, McPherson, Bush & Co. seem to be casting about for a suitable place to hold their proposed meeting to organize that institution over which Christ is not "head." Bush proposed Thorp's Springs, but McP. does not favor that place. He says: "It should be with a church where all the members, as nearly as possible, are in sympathy with the movement." Yes, that's it. Hide out from these pestilent fellows who cry out for "a thus saith the Lord." The very place for these brethren to hold this little Romish pow-wow, is at Waco, in "Liberal Hall," the walls of which, are accustomed to echoing kindred sentiments to those that will be voiced at this "proposed meeting, when these brethren will decry against the sufficiency of that organization "over which Christ is head," to do the work they pretend to want done. We suggest that they also give Mr. Shaw an honorary membership at least. How Christ is being wounded in the house of pretended friends.

All sending us five subscribers, or more, during this month, at $1 each, may reserve one-third of the amount as commission. This offer is good for January only. Try your hands brethren and thereby help us and yourselves, too.

BRO. MCGARVEY "CLINGING" TO THE CONFESSION.

FOR the reasons therein given we addressed the following letter to Bro. McGarvey:

AUSTIN, TEXAS, Dec. 18, 1885.

J. W. MCGARVEY,
LEXINGTON, KY.

Dear Bro. McGarvey:

I am constrained to write you and ask you to write a strong article for the press, on the necessity of the confession, as to its scriptural import and order. You could so easily do so through the "Apostolic Guide."

My reason for urging this upon you is because not a few of our brethren in Texas, as well as some of our editors elsewhere, have taken the position that the confession as heretofore practiced and demanded by the brotherhood as necessarily antecedent to baptism is not, in fact, an absolute scriptural condition.

At the Bryan meeting in July, 1884, I put the question of the necessity of the confession to that meeting, and after it had been lightly touched by the house I requested you to express your views (which you doubtless remember) upon it, which you did.

I know your views from having read, with a great deal of interest, your "Commentary on Acts of Apostles." Your answer to the question at Bryan, I shall never forget. You said: "Whoever asked that question might as well have asked if baptism was absolutely necessary."

The question was, "Is a formal confession with the mouth that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, an absolute antecedent to scriptural baptism?"

Now, Bro. McGarvey, I suspect that the reason our brethren are trying to weaken the force of this condition, is because it takes their view of the matter to at all justify us in receiving persons baptized under sectarian teaching into the church.

He who holds your views, my brother, on the confession, as expressed at Bryan, and in your invaluable book on Acts of Apostles, must, in the very nature of things, be opposed to this practice of receiving sectarians on their baptism, or occupy an inconsistent attitude in the eyes of all right-thinking people.

But, my brother, this is not my reason for requesting you to come out on the necessity of the confession. But I request it because the dearest cause ever bequeathed to man is, I fear, upon the very brink of dissolution because of this deep-seated division upon so vital a point.

The Son of God said, "A house divided against itself can not stand." In the light of this language—that can have no exception, but must be strictly true, till the deceptive appearances of man's pride puts forth a resultant denial of it—ought not Herculean efforts to be put forth by those who love God and desire victory for truth, for a speedy return to that basis upon which alone UNION can be restored and perpetuated?

Bro. McGarvey, will you, as a true soldier of our King; a soldier blessed with, perhaps, the maximum number of "talents," go to work in shielding the appointments of Christ from the ruthless invasions and encroachments of disloyal and traitorous subjects? Or will you permit the weapon of warfare that you have buckled on and have on so many former occasions wielded so gallantly and successfully to dangle at your side as a useless appendage because it might perhaps cut both ways? As such a course has not been characteristic of your past, may we not hope that it will not become so since you have gained a very eminent degree of influence over your brethren throughout more than one continent? This influence can now be made to conduce largely to the defense of truth and to the glory of the heavenly Throne. My brother, will you not exert it in defence of that which you have published to the world as a divine appointment, or will you shrink from this duty bound by all of the impulses that could possibly spring out of a heart loyal to Christ, and thereby surrender the banner of King Jesus to a human "plea?"

Wishing you much success in your labors for Christ, I am your brother in His cause.

A. MCGARY.

P. S.—Will you please acknowledge this?

A. McG.

In due time we received the following reply:

LEXINGTON, KY., Dec. 22, '85.

A. MCGARVEY.

Dear Brother: Yours of the 18th is before me. In reply I would say that I am too closely engaged just now to write the article which you propose, and that if I were to do so I would have to take ground in opposition to yours, for, while I believe that a confession of Jesus with the mouth is a prerequisite to baptism, I find in the Scriptures no prescribed form in which this confession must be made.

The Baptists and others who immerse do require a statement before baptism of faith in Jesus Christ, and consequently, although they do not put it in the form which I think the best, they do not omit it.

Fraternally yours,

J. W. MCGARVEY.

Though we try our utmost we cannot believe the views expressed in this letter are really conscientious, because those expressed in Bro. McGarvey's "Commentary on Acts"—views that must surely have been reached by depth of thought, and firmly bedded in conscience before he clothed them with expression to go forth upon their spacious mission—forbid that we should make them yield to these later and diverse ones. However, we are ready to accept the most charitable view of the matter that can be made to retain the slightest coloring of concord or harmony of parts when viewed in the light of the attendant circumstances of each; but, to our mind, it would outrage the laws of thought to do this in this case.

We know that this view of the matter on our part has not grown out of any prejudice against Bro. McGarvey, for we have never read the productions of any man that, to our mind, more faithfully guarded and defended "the faith," or that bore more of the marks of real earnestness and conscientiousness in the teachings therein contained, than does "McGarvey's Commentary on Acts;" and we never met a man whose personal appearance and general bearing struck us as being more consonant with his teaching, or with our idea of christi-tian decorum than did Bro. McGarvey's.

But no man is worthy of an exaltation so high in our estimation, as christians, as to be regarded as out of the range of probable mistake or error, or, even contamination by the temptations and allurements of this age of excessive sinfulness. Man-worship has been the curse of this age, as well as those that have preceded it. It is just as dangerous to trust men very far now in religious matters as it has ever been. It has ever retarded the growth and development of true christianity, and now lies at the very threshold of every false system of religion that has, in this boasted age, so hopelessly engulfed so many honest millions in the most woeful and benighting darkness that ever shed its baleful influences on a free and religious land. The same cause is now dwarfing the church of Christ.

Since the King that was born in the stable at Bethlehem died—these eighteen hundred years—there has not a man of the born billions set his foot upon earth who was worthy of being blindly followed in his religious teaching.

From the vast amount of controversy and verimonious contention going on now between christians, in which the aspersion of character, pro and con, is no very dim feature, and, in which the "confession of faults, one to another," is so rare, we are led to conclude that leading theologians are about as untrustworthy as ever.

For the sake of truth we beg our readers to forget, as far as possible, for the time being, while reading what follows, that it is Bro. McGarvey's teaching that is being tried. Again, we desire that after they have read and weighed it in the candid frame of mind requested, that they will then bear in mind that these diverse, inconsistent, and wholly irreconcilable views are from the most learned, influential and deservedly popular bible college professor of the church—that he is the same man who came to Texas in July, 1884, and dispensed theology at Bryan; and that his pupils on said occasion were the preachers of Texas, both old and young, who scribbled their (our) little books full of it. Brethren, when all of these facts are borne in mind it will help us to understand the danger of following men very far. With this we now invite attention to the "Commentary."

On page 100 of Bro. McGarvey's "Commentary on Acts," after admitting that verse 37 of Chapter VIII, of Acts of Apostles, is an interpolation, he says: "This verse has been used chiefly for the purpose of determining the confession which was made originally by candidates for immersion. The fact that it is an interpolation must modify the argument on this subject, but does not invalidate it.

The fact that such a confession as is here put into the mouth of the eunuch was uniformly required by the apostles, is evident from other passages of Scripture. It is quite certain that it was confessed by Timothy. Paul says to him: "Fight the good fight of faith: lay hold on eternal life, into which you were called and did confess the good confession before many witnesses." This confession was made at the beginning of his religious career; for it is connected with his call to eternal life. It is the same confession which is attributed to the eunuch; for Paul immediately adds: "I charge thee before God, who gives life to all things, and Jesus Christ, who bore testimony under Pontius Pilate to the good confession, etc.

Now, what is here called "the good confession" is certainly the confession that He was the Christ, made before the Sanhedrim, under Pontius Pilate. But this is identified by the terms employed with the confession which Timothy had made, which is also "the good confession." Timothy then made the confession that Jesus is the Christ, the same attributed to the eunuch. Moreover, this confession was so conspicuous at the time of Paul's writing that it was known as the confession, and so highly esteemed as to be styled "the good confession"—italics Bro. McGarvey's, which is worthy of note.

It is not our purpose to try to amplify the argument on the necessity or identity of the confession. In fact, we do not see how it is possible to make the argument stronger than it is made by Bro. McGarvey in the "Commentary," which we endorse, and challenge all of its opposers to answer.

We had rather be the author of this masterly defense of the truth than of all the eloquent "christian union" sermons that have been delivered from the standpoint of "our plea," since that plea was born of "the wisdom of men." But we want to show how Bro. McGarvey, like others of our learned and popular teachers, has surrendered his conscientious convictions to the exactions of a human plea; and, how his teaching at other times when his mind was free from the special demands of this plea, rise up now, panoplied in the armor and strength of truth, and pronounce a summary and condign verdict against the disloyal sentiment couched in the language of his letter of December 22.

If the view presented in his letter be the conviction of his heart, then that in the Commentary can not, in the very nature of things, be held by him any longer. He can no more hold them both than he can be in Lexington and Austin at the same time. Then it would seem that fidelity to truth would dictate, and an enlightened conscience demand that the teaching of the "Commentary" be corrected without delay, if the views of the letter are real and conscientious.

The points in Bro. McGarvey's letter run about thus:

1. He is too closely engaged to write just now an article on the confession.

2. If he did write it, it would be against our grounds, for while he believes that a confession of Jesus with the mouth is a prerequisite to baptism, he does not find in the Scriptures a prescribed form in which it must be made.

3. Baptists and others who immerse do require "a statement" before baptism, of faith in Jesus Christ, and consequently, although they do not put it in the form he thinks best, they do not omit it.

Well, as to his first, we only have to say that his time must be very precious indeed, if enough of it to correct the, to him, egregious blunder of his "Commentary," can not be spared.

He surely can not be engaged in a better work than would be that of correcting his own false teaching, especially when that teaching is of the nature of adding to the appointments of God, which the teaching of his "Commentary" is, if his view expressed in his letter is correct.

To his (2,) we only have to say that it would not be very alarming to us if he did take ground in opposition to us since we would only have to turn his own ready, unlimbered batteries that we find planted all along from page 100 to 106 of his Commentary, loose upon him to demolish any cob-house that he can construct by the specifications of "our plea."

Oh no, brother! it is not the invasion of our grounds that you need to be careful about; but it is well enough to be a little careful how you tread upon your own grounds once so well chosen. He also says that "a confession of Jesus with the mouth" is a prerequisite to baptism, but that he can't find in the Scriptures any prescribed form in which it must be made.

What is a prerequisite? Webster defines it thus: "Something that is previously required, or necessary to an end." And Worcester thus: "Something previously necessary; requirement." Then, Bro. McGarvey means that "a confession" is required before baptism. If this be true—and we believe it, except that we prefer the language of the "Commentary," because it is the language of inspiration, thus: "the good confession"—there can be no scriptural baptism without it, because, to leave off what God has required as a step towards baptism is to fail to reach that baptism ordained of God.

Again, if God requires "a confession," and Bro. McGarvey fails to find any prescribed form in the Scriptures in which this confession must be made, how does he know that he or any one else has made it? This is throwing too much doubt around that which is represented as being "so plain that the way-faring man, though a fool, shall not err therein." Peter and Paul agree in saying that God has given us "all things that pertain unto life and godliness"—all things necessary for "doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Then, if this "good confession" can't be found in the Scriptures, it cannot be a "prerequisite," and there is no good in it or it would have had a place in the "thorough furnishing." Neither does it help the matter to modify it down to a confession.

We do not believe that God has ever required anything of man, and then withheld from him the means of determining what it is, or how it is to be done. To us this would be impeaching the character of God. But bear in mind, reader, that Bro. McGarvey does not say that there is no prescribed form in the Scriptures for the good confession, but that he can't find it. But, his own words for it, he used to know right where to find it.

Read again the quotation we have given from page 100 of his "Commentary," and see if he does not talk like a man who had found it. Yes, he knew right where it was then; and you will see that he was so certain of it that he emphasized it as the confession; and further, as the good confession. But we have higher evidence than his, or any man's word, that he found it. He who reads that "Commentary" in the spirit of candor can not fail to see that Bro. McGarvey demonstrates that he has found it—not "a confession" as he now puts it, but "the good confession."

But now we come to the conclusion of the whole matter so far as his letter is concerned. He says: "The Baptists and others who immerse do require a statement before baptism of faith in Jesus Christ, and consequently, although they do not put it in the form which I think the best, they do not omit it." This language hedges in the fondling that his heart dotes on to such an excessive degree of fervor as to bedim his vision so that he can't now "find in the Scriptures any prescribed form in which this confession must be made."

He need not expect to find it so long as he is forestalled by the decision that an invented "statement" is worthy to supplant it after it is found. To find it in that exclusive light in which he once found it and viewed it, when he wrote his "Commentary," would be to see the sinfulness of our "plea for christian union," in which he has acted such a prominent part. Oh, it is so hard to see that which will, when seen, condemn your own practice, and that of so many esteemed brethren and co-laborers: that which will blight so much of the labor of so many eventful years; that which will demand the pulling of the cord that will sound the death knell of that "plea" that has been hugged so long with such a fond embrace, and which has been modified until it is just now becoming palatable to popular taste.

But, lest some who read this should fail to discover the inconsistency between the views of the letter and the "Commentary," by reason of having their perception blunted by the same magical influences that seems to have veiled the good confession from Bro. McGarvey so effectually, we will now try to draw some of the points out more prominently.

He says, in the quotation given from his Commentary, that "Timothy then made the confession that Jesus is the Christ, the same attributed to the eunuch." Well, then, to find that confession "attributed" to the eunuch is to find "such" as Timothy made. All readers of the New Testament know where to find the one "attributed" to the eunuch. Ac's VIII, 37.

Bro. McGarvey was correct in saying that such a confession as is put in the mouth of the eunuch is made evident by other passages as the apostolic practice. See Matt. XVI, 15-18: Rom. X, 8-10, etc. Matt. XVI, 16, is "such" as is attributed to the eunuch. But will he say that the "statement" made by Baptists and others is "such" as any found in the Scriptures? If so, we would like to see the one it bears similarity to.

We now invite attention to page 101 of the "Commentary." He says: "Both the custom of confessing Christ, and the formula employed, originated in the most natural way." How does he know there was any formula, since he can't find it? He must have been sporting in the fields of speculation at a reckless rate when he wrote the "Commentary," if his letter rests on solid facts.

And now, lest it should be thought that we have not dealt fairly with the language we have quoted from Bro. McGarvey, we will study it in the light of his own language again found on page 103 of the "Commentary." Here he says: "That this confession was the only one required of candidates for immersion by the apostles, is universally admitted by those who are competent to judge. It is likewise admitted that they regarded it as a sufficient confession. This fact alone should teach men to be satisfied with it now. He, indeed, who is guided by the bible alone can not require of men any other confession than such as he finds authorized by bible precedents. Neither is it possible that he who implicitly follows the apostolic precedent can be misled, unless the apostles, the Holy Spirit, the New Testament, can mislead him. Fidelity to the word of God, therefore, BINDS US TO THIS CONFESSION ALONE, and, in CLINGING TO IT we have every assurance which inspiration can give that we are right! (Italics curs.)"

Who can read his words here and say that we have dealt unfairly with his words that precede these? Who can stray so far from the rules by which language is interpreted, or become so un candid as to fail to see from a comparison of Bro. McGarvey's words here, with those in his letter, that he has surrendered his conscientious convictions to meet the demands of a human plea; or, that he is most woefully deceiving himself on this question?

Brothers, this is truly a sad thought! but true "soldiers" should not become discouraged! but they should rise up in the strength of christian manhood and repel this insidious foe to the "faith once delivered to the saints," before it deceives the nations. Its plausibility and proximity to truth renders it only the more dangerous. It has already deceived some of the noblest men that have ever sought "the truth as it is in Jesus." Then, shall we bid it God-speed longer?

But we desire to give further attention to Bro. McGarvey's words. In our last quotation from him we have italicized that portion that seems to us to deserve the closest attention. We did this that we might gain some space by referring our readers to this language without lingering on the points that obtrude themselves so palpably. But we do not feel justified in passing on without calling special attention to his saying that "He who is guided by the bible alone can not require of men any other confession than such as he finds authorized by bible precedents."

Well, that is just what Bro. McGarvey claims to be "guided by." He will not, we presume, deny that to recognize a confession that is not "such" as is found authorized by bible precedents, that has been required by another, is the same in principle as to "require" that very same confession ourselves. Will he say that such "a confession" as the "statement" required by Baptists before their baptism is authorized by bible precedents? No, brethren, altho' his zeal for a human "plea" has led him into some deplorable inconsistencies, Bro. McGarvey is not going to say that there is a bible precedent for "I believe that God for Christ's sake has pardoned my sins," as an antecedent to baptism.

Now, let's see how effectually Bro. McGarvey condemns that "statement," and hence, virtually repudiates the baptism of every Baptist, Methodist, or other sectarian in the world at one fell swoop. On page 105 of his "Commentary" he, while writing of the "exclusiveness of the good confession," says: "It will exclude the Unitarian and the Universalist, for while they are willing to confess that Jesus is the Christ, in the next breath they deny Him by contradicting some of His most emphatic declarations"—italics mine.

Now, brethren, do you believe that Bro. McGarvey can fail to see that this language as virtually condemns this Baptist "statement" that he is now trying to defend as a valid confession, as if he had named Baptists instead of Unitarians.

Christ said, except a man be born of water and the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of heaven

—He that believes and is baptized shall be saved." The Baptists require a virtual denial of these words before they will baptize an applicant, thus: "I believe God for Christ's sake has pardoned my sins. Is this not "contradicting the emphatic declaration of Christ just quoted?"

But, again, on the same page, Bro. McGarvey says: "It will exclude the devotee of the mourning bench, who waits for an operation of the Spirit before he comes to Christ." We will not, by comment, insult the intelligence of our readers by trying to make this language more impressive, as condemnatory of Baptist baptism, as well as every other baptism practiced by the sectarian world. But, in the same connection, upon the same page, he says: "None of these characters can scripturally make the good confession without some specific change in view or in character." That is, none that deny Christ by "contradicting his emphatic declarations!" or that are devoted to the mourning bench! or that wait for an operation of the Spirit before they come to Christ!!

Brethren, is it not sad indeed to see such a mind as Bro. McGarvey's thus warped by a doctrine of men? Remember that he says on page 108: "Fidelity to the word of God, therefore, binds us to this confession alone, and, in clinging to it, we have every assurance which inspiration can give that we are right"—(italics ours.) But does his letter look much like he felt bound to "the good confession" that his Commentary so ably defends? Does it look like he was now clinging to "the good confession" very tenaciously? Does he not rather seem to be willing to turn the good confession loose for a mere statement, and it, too, one that flatly contradicts the word of God?

If Baptists and other sectarians would require applicants for immersion to state that: "I believe that Jesus entered into Jerusalem mounted on an ass," he could, after publishing to the world the views quoted from him, defend their statement with more show of consistency. There would be, in such a statement as suggested, no "contradiction of emphatic declarations of Christ."

We do trust that Bro. McGarvey will not become wounded by anything in this. If we know ourselves we have not been actuated by an improper motive in one line of it, though it may appear different to others. Bro. McGarvey is not alone in his inconsistency; we are sorry to say that all of our leading men that we have read after much are every whit as inconsistent as he. They ought to remember that no man can "serve two masters," which every one who at times preaches a pure gospel and then attempts to defend this feature of "our plea" is trying to do.

In conclusion, we will say, that we expect to have more to say upon this in our next, and to show wherein Bro. McGarvey has set the seal of his condemnation upon this practice of recognizing sect baptism, from another standpoint. God grant that our leaders may become willing to surrender this dogma and humble themselves down to the truth.

TO OUR READERS.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We are engaged in a grand work, and we need to "be strong and very courageous" in order that we may observe to do all things as it is written in the Book of the Lord. THE FIRM FOUNDATION has visited your homes for more than a year. We have sought to make it what its name purports, and our efforts shall ever be directed in the same channel. The truth—the truth as it is in Jesus—first, last, and all the time. The success of the paper has been truly gratifying, and even now subscriptions are coming in rapidly. But we want THE FIRM FOUNDATION to visit every congregation and if possible, every home in Texas. You, my brother, my sister, can aid materially in this work. Show the book to your friends, or neighbors, ask them to subscribe. Do not be easily discouraged, but persevere in your efforts, and thus place a reliable teacher of the religion of Jesus in other households. The encouragement you have already given to the work, both in words and deeds, inspires us with the hope that you will abound more and more in the good work.

This year promises to be an eventful one in the history of the church of Christ in Texas. The advocates of missionary societies are outspoken in their purposes to fasten upon us "an organized society." Other innovations fatal to the peace and prosperity of the church are being imported, and efforts will be made to thrust them upon us. Faint-hearted preachers are permitting the life, purity and strength of the church to be wasted away through fallacious ideas of liberality and progression. These evils must be checked; errors must be corrected, and so far as lies in our power, God being our helper, we will work to this end.

Do not understand us as claiming to be infallible or free from error; we make no such claim, but realize fully our weakness, and our columns are freely tendered to all who may believe us in error, and desire to correct us. Give us, then, your help, by sending us some more subscribers

WHAT HAS CONSCIENCE TO DO WITH BAPTISM?

One of the differences between the law of Moses and the gospel of Christ is, that the sacrifices offered under the former could not perfect the conscience.—Heb. IX, 9; under the latter the conscience is purged, cleansed, or perfected. The Christian is taught to draw near to God in full assurance of faith, having had his heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, and his body washed in pure water.—Heb. X, 22. It is the blood of Christ that cleanses from all sin (1 Jo, 19) and purges the conscience.—Heb. IX, 14. But, by the testimony above cited (Heb. X, 22) this is done when the body is washed in pure water, or as the Apostle Peter expresses the same thought: "Baptism doth also now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."—1 Peter, III, 21.

The divine record thus unites to—gether the blood of Christ, baptism, and conscience. The wisdom of this arrangement is more clearly seen when we take into consideration the workings of conscience. This is the faculty of the soul to which the guilt of sin attaches. A "seared conscience" can not be reached because it has no sense of guilt. Conscience does not drive or prompt us to do a thing; it merely decides or testifies as to the nature of the act presented. The nature of an act can be determined only by reference to an authoritative standard of right and wrong. Such a standard we have in the gospel of Christ, and our faith in that gospel furnishes the infallible standard according to which our consciences should act. Every man's conscience will act according to the creed in which he has been educated. This is necessarily so, for his creed—that which he believes, whether written or preached—is to him not only an authoritative standard, but that upon which he bases all his hopes of salvation. Hence, the popular plea "of being conscientious in certain things" amounts to no more than this: That a man is sincere in doing that which he believes. How important then, that we believe the truth—the truth as it is in Jesus.

The Gospel of Christ proclaims "the remission of sins." To obtain this precious gift we must come to the blood of sprinkling (Heb. XII. 24.) Literally we cannot do this; hence, God, in His wisdom and love, provided means by which we might secure and enjoy the blessings purchased by the sacrifice of Jesus. He teaches us that baptism is for the remission of sins; that in it we come to the blood of Christ, by which we are cleansed.

Under the former dispensation the blood was given upon the altar to make atonement for their souls.—Lev. XVII, 11. The altar was an appointment or ordinance wherein God's name was recorded.—Ex. XX, 24. God promised to meet the children of Israel at the altar appointed by Himself, (Ex. XXIX, 40.) and forbid their offering sacrifices in any other place.—Lev. XVII, 1-5. Under the Gospel of Christ we have one institution to which the sinner is invited in order to the remission of his sins, and that is baptism.

1. It is commanded "in the name" of the Lord Jesus.—Acts. II. 38; X, 48; XIX, 5.

2. God's name is recorded in it.—Mat. XXVIII, 19, 20.

3. It is for the remission of sins.—Act. II, 38; Mark XVI, 15, 16; Act. XXII, 16.

4. It saves us by bringing us to the blood of Christ.—Heb. X, 22; 1 Pet. I, 21.

By faith a Jew under the law of Moses selected a lamb without spot or blemish, carried it to the proper place, the brazen altar, where God had promised to meet him; and having killed it the blood was sprinkled on the altar as an atonement for his sins. Now, faith leads the sinner to accept Jesus the Lamb of God without spot or blemish; it takes him to the ordinance of baptism and humbly he yields himself obedient to the authority of Christ. Rising from the baptismal waters he rejoices in a good conscience; in sins forgiven. He has no more conscience of sins. Why? He has taken God at His word, and conscience, recognizing baptism as an authoritative act for the putting away of sin, and obeying it for this purpose, is, according to God's word, purged from sin.

But I find a conscience, yes, many of them, claiming to be good, to be purged or cleansed, before it reaches baptism. The religious world generally teach that remission of sins is reached before baptism, and some of our brethren are conscientiously (?) aiding and abetting this delusion. If remission of sins is reached before baptism it must be that faith in the blood of Christ purges the conscience. But this cannot be, as faith only supplies us with a standard by which conscience is to be guided. Faith is not the act of obedience, but baptism is "the obedience of faith;" hence, conscience looks at baptism through faith. It is prima facie evidence then that a conscience that claims the remission of sins prior to baptism does not base that claim upon faith in the Gospel of Christ, but upon some perversion of the Gospel. Such a conscience may be satisfied with what is done, acting as it does in accordance with its faith. To be right, faith must be right, and this faith must embrace just what Jesus gave us in His gospel.

How can any one who once submitted to baptism, believing at the time that it was not for the remission of sins, and afterwards believing what the word of God says, that "baptism is for the remission of sins," claim to have a good conscience? Was their conscience made good in their baptism? Verily not—they claimed a good conscience before their baptism? Their conscience testified to them that their guilt was gone and that baptism was not for remission; hence, in their case, conscience did not recognize the Heaven appointed means by which we are to obtain remission. Conscience, though, was not to blame; it acted promptly; faith was wrong; they believed in human tradition or interpretation and hence obeyed human authority. "The end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."—1 Tim. I, 5.

The same thought is here given: 1. An unfeigned faith. This gives us a standard of action. One that is authoritative and infallible.

2. A good conscience. One that acts in accordance with the standard—or the unfeigned faith. Necessarily, then, such a conscience will accept baptism for the remission of sins.

3. A pure heart. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that you love one another with pure hearts fervently."

EXTRACTS AND COMMENTS.

Bro. McPherson, in the A. G., of January 1, says: "We all know that there are three classes of brethren in the State. One class will oppose anything in the world suggested by anyone but themselves. They will favor no co-operation, and will contribute neither money nor labor to this end." Now, is this not a broad assertion? Bro. McPherson's experience is perhaps much larger than mine, but in all of my work, for twelve years past, I have never met a brother about whom this could be said. Will Bro. McP. name a few?

In contrast with the above we clip from the Guide of December 18, page 4, the following language penned by Bro. Allen, its editor-in-chief. "We have no anti-missionary brethren. Though a large and worthy class of brethren are constantly written down as anti-missionary, they are not so. They repudiate the charge as false, and to continue to thus charge them is unjust and untruthful.

Again, he says: "This class of brethren are as true to Christ, and as noble in heart, as live on the earth." And again: "These brethren constantly called anti-missionary, have as much faith in preaching the gospel to men to save them, and do, we presume, about as much of it, with as good results as those who claim to monopolize the missionary spirit. These men are anti-society, not anti-missionary." Now Bro. McP., who is correct, Bro. Allen or yourself? Really, don't you think you were a little off when you wrote that article?

In the A. G., December 25, Bro. Allen says: "We put missionary societies just where we put the mode of baptism; the baptism is divinely required, but the mode of it is not. On this the bible says nothing. That mode is best which best accomplishes the end." We do not think this is sound reasoning. Baptism is demanded by the Savior; missionary societies are not. Going down into the water and an immersion of the person is necessary to obey the command; but will Brother Allen say that missionary societies are necessary to the preaching of the gospel to the world?

In the Guide of December 25, we were led to believe that Bro. Allen was going to give the objectionable features of the societies. He said he regarded some features about them as wrong. He furthermore said he was not prepared to fully endorse any of them as they are now. Bro. Jones wrote to him and asked for his objections to the Kentucky Society. His answer in January 1, is, "In the use of that expression we had in mind more of what they lack, than the wrongfulness of what they have." Now, we shall expect to hear from the pen of our good brother of the things that will bring the societies up to the bible standard.

In the Western Recorder (Baptist) of October 22, the editor put this question to the Guide: "We should be glad if some discriminating brother would show us on what principle you and your churches are willing to commune at the Lord's table with such persons as you would not and could not receive into your church?" To which Bro. Allen replied in the Guide of November 13: "The editor of the Guide does not justify communion at the Lord's table with such as he could not receive into the church. He gives the Baptists his hand in condemnation of such inconsistency.

And now I ask, is it not strange that many disciples of the Lord apply the language of Paul to the church of God at Corinth, 1 Cor. XI, 28, to everyone in seclusion and the church? And this is not the only inconsistency among us. The F. F. proposes to notice many of them from time to time.

A writer over the signature F. T. in one of our most popular religious weeklies, says: "In masonry we become associates of all sorts of characters; among the rest, men who are practically infidels, and others not associates with any of the religious societies, but who claim to have found an equivalent in the man-made system. The qualifications for climbing the ladder of honor are a good memory and a long purse. The law of Christ is, that we are to "do good to all men, but especially to the household of faith," but the masonic law traverses the Master's will, and says, "Thou shalt do good first and foremost unto the persons and families of all Free and accepted Masons." And I will suggest that it is impossible to serve two masters. It is even impossible to serve one, only as He directs. It would indeed be appalling to know the large number of our brethren who are giving more of their time, money, and influence to the upbuilding of these secret man-made institutions than they are to the cause of the Master. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The Central Baptist, after observing that one of our journals has no hesitancy in recognizing Baptist churches as churches of Christ, inquires: "Then, how can it fail to see the wrongfulness of the endeavor to persuade Baptists to give up their churches with all their glorious history?"

We would like to see this question answered by some of our scribes who claim as above stated. Let the answer be dictated by divine truth.

In the Guide of October 30, Bro. R. O. Charles says: "In my report of the meeting here, I am made to say that the result of the meeting was 25 additions, eight baptisms, two of whom had been baptized by the Baptists. It should have read, 8 baptized, and 2 who had been baptized by the Baptists. As it appeared, the impression is made that those who had been baptized by the Baptists were rebaptized, which was not the case, as neither I nor Bro. Dimmitt believe in any such practice where persons have once obeyed that command from the heart, as these persons said they had."

But, my dear brother, what about the confession? Had these persons made with the mouth the confession required by the Savior as a prerequisite to baptism? We are getting anxious to see what disposition many brethren are going to make of this question. Again were they baptized for or because of remission of sins? If they were baptized because of remission of sins, was their baptism scriptural obedience from the heart. Will Bro. Charles or Bro. Dimmitt answer?

LETTER FROM BRO. STONE.

LAPORTE, IND., Jan. 6, 1886.

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

After thanking you for your high appreciation of my ability to teach the way of truth and righteousness, as is shown by your honoring me with a place among your corresponding editors of THE FIRM FOUNDATION, and after expressing my fraternal affection for its readers, I desire to communicate some thoughts relative to a proverb of the wise man, Solomon, found in Proverbs XXII, 6. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." As some are wont to speak of the mistakes of Moses, so others say this was a mistake of Solomon. They say that they see very many who were brought up or trained in the right way, who have departed from it. Now, it is possible that there may be some who were much better trained than others who have forsaken their training, but they might not have been trained entirely in the right way. It might be difficult to show, after all, that their training was all that it should have been.

It is true that a large majority of people are not walking in the way they should go; but I suppose that in about ninety-nine cases out of every hundred they were trained in the way they should not go, and are following their training. Now, the very fact that they are adhering so closely to their training, although it be wrong, proves Solomon's statement, that if they were trained in the way they should go, that they would also adhere to that. The Catholics and all Pedo-Baptists understand this matter, and hence they capture the children in infancy and bind them down to their own peculiar systems of religion, and then train them accordingly. And you see that the rule is, they will not depart from it. There are exceptions to be sure, as there are to most general rules.

These things being true, how important it is that children should be properly trained. What a fearful responsibility rests upon parents with regard to this matter. If all had been properly trained since Solomon wrote that sentence the world would now be very different from what it is. But it has been so shamefully neglected that now there are but few who are competent to the task of training their children. And too many, alas, feeling themselves incompetent, turn over the children to others for their training. But it is a truth that no one is so capable of training a child as an intelligent parent. Two of the leading qualifications of a trainer is to have the confidence and affections of the trained. These the parent has, in an eminent degree, if they are fit to be a parent at all. This the Apostle Paul understood when he said, "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Eph. VII, 4. What a wilful neglect then it is for a parent to send a child to a Sunday school to be trained perhaps by some person who has never had any training. Perhaps a young girl who has not one qualification for the task. I witness many such cases myself. In this way the children are growing up with as good as no training, religiously, and sometimes worse than none.

I will here relate a case that was told me but a few days ago by a man in this city. He said that once in the Methodist Sunday school here, (and he was a Methodist himself) that there was a little boy who had a parrot, and his parrot got sick, and he prayed for his parrot to get well. (Now, his teacher in the Sunday school had taught him to pray to God for what he desired and God would give it to him.) He prayed twice in the morning before he went to school. While at school the bird died, and when he came home at noon he asked his mother how his parrot was, expecting him, of course, to be well. His mother told him to go and look into the cage, and when he did so, he beheld the dead bird. After contemplating the scene for a moment, he swore that he would never pray another prayer. This is a strong example of wrong or false training. How many cases of injudicious training there are, and how important it is that those to whom the training of the young is committed should have the necessary intelligence.

It is all right for persons to pray who can pray intelligently, according to God's will, but to pray for things indiscriminately—things which God has not promised; and to teach little children to pray, is wrong. A little child can not understand the conditions upon which God bestows blessings, and when they pray for things and do not receive them, they will naturally become discouraged, lose confidence, and often become infidels. I look upon the popular Sunday schools of the present day as being extremely detrimental to society. Infidelity is evidently on the increase. The children are sent to Sunday school at an early age, placed under the training, frequently, of some young person who is almost totally ignorant of moral obligations, as well as almost everything else. They have a lot of lesson leaves, and drag the little children through a lot of bible lessons that they know as little about as they do about astronomy; lessons about which it is impossible to interest them, and they become tired, restless, and give no attention. Then they will boast of their grand Sunday school—of how many attend the Sunday school. And after they have had a child in Sunday school for ten years, if you will ask it almost any plain bible question you will find that it knows nothing of it; it has not been trained at all; it has been kept in Sunday school where it was not interested, and where it grew tired of hearing so much, and became disgusted and was made worse, instead of better.

This is no fancy sketch; if it is, why is it, since there are so many such Sunday schools, and the whole population attend them, that wickedness and infidelity are on the increase? Why is it? Can any one answer?

Let the parents train their children in the right way? Let the parents first learn the truth, and then impart it to the young, and impress the minds of their children with both the propriety and necessity of doing right. Let them be shown that it is to their own interest, as well as the interest of all, that they should do justice, love, mercy, and walk humbly with God, and you will soon see a marked difference. Never, until the home training is better, and more truth is diffused among the people, will infidelity be checked and crime abated. Dear brethren, we have a great work to perform. Will we show ourselves ready and willing to meet the emergency, or will we turn traitor, as many others have done, and are still doing?

May God strengthen our hands and hearts to meet our responsibilities.

I remain yours in the one faith,

L. C. STONE.

THE WILL OF GOD.

There are many ways in which a thought can be expressed, and, I suppose the Bible abounds more in variety of expression than any book published; how could it be otherwise and be its own interpreter? Should we thus regard the Bible, we would inquire, what is meant by the language of the above caption? Jesus said: "not every one that says unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of my father who is in Heaven." Father's will. May we then inquire, what is that will?

The apostle John said, He (Jesus) came to His own and His own received Him not; but to as many as did receive Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name; who were born again, not of blood, nor of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."—John I, 11-18. James says: "of His own will begat He us with the word of truth."

We learn from the foregoing Scriptures that we are made children of God by His will, not man's. Let us examine farther into the use of this phrase. Paul, an apostle to the church at Corinth says, it was by the will of God. Again, the same language is used to the churches at Ephesus, Philippi, etc. But in writing to Timothy, in the 2nd epistle, he says: "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God according to the promise of life in Christ which is our hope, etc."—2 Tim. I, 1.

Thus far we have not found a definition of the language. Let us next examine 1 Tim. I, 1. We find this language: "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the commandment of God our Savior, etc." Here we maintain we have a clear interpretation by the apostle. God expresses His will to us in commands, and he that does the commands of Jesus does the will of God. God commanded the disciples in the presence of Moses and Elias to hear Jesus. We are no longer under Moses or Elias (John the Baptist) as lawgivers. When the apostle found persons performing the things contained in the old law, they taught them that this did not profit but a new creature, and a new creature was attained through hearing, believing, repenting, confessing and being baptized into Christ where all are new creatures. All who do the above commands do the will of God.

Again, when Paul went to Ephesus he found some who were still holding John's baptism; but Paul taught them the way of the Lord, and they were baptized in the name of the Lord, or in other words, they did the will of God.

Now, suppose Bro. A. (a christian preacher) delivers a discourse before a large audience of various classes; suppose at the conclusion of the sermon four gentlemen present themselves. Bro. A. proceeds to ask the usual questions. For convenience we will name the four gentlemen, B. C. D. and E. From B. he learns that he is a member of the church of Christ in Tennessee, but has recently moved out to Texas and wishes to be identified with this congregation. He approaches C., learns that he is a member of the Missionary Baptist church in good standing, etc; that he has been convinced that the name Baptist, is unscriptural; that faith precedes repentance; that the mourners bench is unscriptural; that voting men into the church, or experience telling, or that the doctrine that we could not "fall away" was contrary to scripture and is satisfied with his baptism. He says he has not made "the good confession." Bro. A. next approaches D., from whom he learns that he is a member of the M. E. Church South. He, like C., has been convinced of numerous errors; has been convinced that the name Methodist is unscriptural, and wishes to take the name Christian; is "satisfied with his baptism;" was immersed, had his choice, and chose immersion. Has never made the "good confession." Bro. A. next approaches E. from whom he learns that he also is a member of the M. E. Church; joined the church at the same time D. did, and had his choice, and chose sprinkling, and is "satisfied with his baptism." E. also says he never made "that good confession." Bro. A. scratches his head a little and mutters inaudibly, "I can't interfere with the conscience of another."

er." But it is plain that E. has never been baptized; neither has C. or D. made the good confession," though they have been immersed.

Brethren, we claim to take the "Bible alone:" do we act as though we do? Do our actions show it? The world is looking on and demanding us to practice what we preach. Now, what I want is to get a sufficient number of scribes to get Bro. A. out of his dilemma—he is about to interfere with some "man's conscience"—before he closes these services. We wish to know whose will C. D. and E. obeys? A. is impatient; but he has nothing else to do till this question is decided—but cultivate patience. Let me repeat again the language of our Savior, "not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in Heaven." This will is expressed to us in commandments: Proof: Blessed are they that do His commandments that they may have a right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.—Rev. XXII, 14.

GOING TO EXTREMES.

PUBLISHER FIRM FOUNDATION.
AUSTIN.

Bro. McGary: After carefully perusing the 4th and 5th pages of January number I was much pleased, then sorry, but afterwards more pleased. In the first place, I was much pleased to know that you considered the article, "Going to Extremes," worthy a place in the columns of your worthy paper. In the second place, I am very sorry to learn you do not fully understand me on "the point of my supposed congregation rendering different excuses for not partaking the emblems with each other;" while last, but not least, I am more pleased to know that you "do not wish to be understood as attaching such aim to me" as that of "turning Paul's words into the butcher pen of our popular theologians, etc. The supposed congregation was not so much of a supposition as a reality. The Union church house at Blanco was built by the community at large, but at present is used by Christians, Baptists and Presbyterians, each occupying one Lord's day each month for regular preaching, and our brethren and sisters endeavor to meet on every Lord's day (when not interfered with by the denominations) for the purpose of partaking of the Lord's supper. The time referred to was one Lord's day last autumn, and the place was at the Union church house above named. However, the day was not one appointed for regular preaching, there were two denominations present. At the conclusion of Sunday school services it was made known that one of the preachers desired to speak. Notwithstanding we had met there for the express purpose of partaking of the Lord's supper, the majority of the brethren consented to give way and meet again afternoon. The majority, if not all present, remained to hear the discourse about to be delivered, and it was during said discourse that I began to study about the subject, "Going to Extremes."

I think at least three denominations were represented, and doubtless this is what gave rise to the portion of my article which you failed to comprehend. If this comes before the eyes of any of the same denomination I hope they will pardon me for stating that the preacher was a close communion Baptist, which prevented him and others of like faith from communing with Christians. It was not quarterly meeting day, consequently Methodists could not or would not partake, while Presbyterians and others, if present, would have refused for equally as trivial excuses.

Now, if all members of the above named denominations had been just extremists enough to have laid aside all creeds except the word of God, all names except Christian, and all doctrines except those taught by Christ and his apostles, then, after preaching, all of us could have partaken of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood, in obedience to the commands of Him who said, "do this in remembrance of me." If such were realities we could all soon realize that the time is very near at hand when the prayer of our blessed Savior "that all may be one as He and the Father are one." will be answered.

No, Bro. McGary, I do not endorse the doctrine or favor the idea of inviting sectarians to commune with Christians, because I am fully persuaded that when Paul said, "Let a man examine himself and so let him eat," he was addressing Christians only. It is not my desire that Christians would "bend" to fit the crook of some popular denomination, but my regret is that the various denominations will not only bend, but break off entirely from their various human creeds, enlist under the banner of King Jesus, and march straight into the ranks of all true soldiers of the cross. Then the world would soon be convinced of the realities of a pure and undefiled christian religion, and thousands who are now cut of the ark of safety would soon be found traveling the straight and narrow way, just extreme enough to be genuine Christians.

I know there are many who abhor the idea of being called an extremist, because it is not popular. Others apply the term to those who point out errors among the sects, even if such errors are proven by direct reference to the Scriptures. The sectarian who does more than is commanded by divine authority is as guilty as the one who does less.

By way of illustration, suppose a man purchases material to build a house: then employs a foreman to lay off the work according to some chosen plan; then employs mechanics to execute the work. If, per chance, one of them cut all his pieces of timber too long, and the other cut his pieces too short, which one will be considered the greatest botch? Evidently neither one can be called a mechanic, and why? Not because they are extremists, but because one went too far beyond the measurement, while the other stopped before reaching the extreme. If, per chance, the third party had been employed, and in his haste would have cut some timbers too long and others too short, he would undoubtedly have been pronounced the worst botch of all.

Now for the application: The minister who fails to preach the whole truth may be likened to the botch who cut his timbers all too short; the one who goes outside the Scriptures to the one who cut the timbers all too long; While the hasty man may be likened to a preacher who sometimes may be found speaking strictly from Scriptural authority, then, during the same discourse, will present ideas entirely foreign to divine authority or human reason, proving themselves quite clearly to be the greatest botches of all; none content as only extremists; some stopping short of the work; others going beyond.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

DEAR SISTERS: I do not think I shall write a long letter this time, (but if I do, remember it is easy to promise,) as I have on hand several letters from different sisters, some of which I wish to appear in this number of the F. F. I wish to say to those who write for our department, to remember to write only on one side of the paper, as a violation of this rule dooms letters to the waste basket or necessitates a rewriting of them, which requires much time. I will also say, should any one's article fail to appear in one number, look for it in the next, as the old rule, "first come, first served," must be observed in the editorial business, as well as in all others. But should any fail entirely to appear, it should not offend, because our department is necessarily limited in so small a pamphlet as the F. F. and we must be accorded the right to select, for publication, those letters best suited to the purpose of our department.

I was indirectly informed of a criticism a good sister passed on an expression in my article on pride; I spoke of a "beauty our heavenly Father would be proud of." She objected to the application of the term "pride" to God. I meant "approve," but thank her for the correction. From another quarter a brother raises as his only objection to the F. F., "women write in it, and Paul said I suffer not a woman to teach." But he does not go on with it, "nor to usurp authority over the man." Paul, here, evidently meant to teach wives to be in subjection to their husbands, since "man is the head of the woman." In 1 Cor. XI, he does not forbid a woman to prophesy or pray, but says she must not do so with uncovered head," or in a brazen manner. He simply teaches modesty, the heaven given attribute of woman, which greatest charm she casts aside whenever she enters the rostrum or pulpit. But the sisters of the F. F. neither desire, I hope, to rule their husbands, nor become pulpit teachers, but in a modest, christianly manner are striving to lead their thoughtless, erring sisters back to the narrow path from which so many have strayed.

Again, woman loves to read from the pen of woman. A man may write eloquently of the cares that besets a woman's path, yet it will not touch a woman's heart like the words of a sister, because she knows he does not, cannot write from experience. A man can no more realize the thousands of petty, carping cares that burdens a woman's life, than one who has never known hunger and cold for one moment can sympathize with the cold and hungry. Ah, but how few women have not felt that intense weariness that sets every nerve in a tremor, and causes her to repulse with impatience the caresses of the dimpled hands of her little children; that weariness that makes the rest of the grave sweet in anticipation? Very few, indeed; therefore, women naturally look to women for pure, genuine sympathy and help, which, I hope will be found in this department.

Again, in the brother's exclusive acceptance of this passage he makes it conflict with Eph. VI, 4, for who will dispute that woman has the greater part of the "bringing up" of children to do? Further, what will he do with Priscilla's case? I must say that if our preaching brethren had courage to reprove the many follies practiced by christian women, this department would perhaps not exist. But the fear of unpopularity prevents the majority of them from doing this, and until it is proven to us by Scripture that it is wrong for women to write to women through a public medium, this department will remain open to the sisters.

Let me urge you all to work for the F. F. this year. It is a good work that we can do without neglecting home. Let us make it a point in visiting to talk of spiritual things, instead of talking of our neighbors, and urge every friend to take it, and if read, it will induce study of the Scriptures and promote spiritual growth. God grant it long life and prosperity? God grant, also, dearly beloved, that this new year may be filled with good deeds. The past is irrevocably gone, the future lies all unveiled before us, the present only is ours. Let us make the most of it. Let us crucify the lust of eye, the lust of the flesh, the pride of life, subdue every evil desire, curb that unruly member, the tongue, so that there will be no unkind words to regret as we bid this year adieu. Doubtless it will bring some sorrow to each and everyone of us, perhaps some joy! But if it be only sorrow and deepest disappointment, let us remember that "All things work together for good to them that love God."

COPPERAS COVE, TEXAS.

DEAR SISTERS: I read an article in the F. F. asking some sister or sisters to write on training children, so I will write a few lines on the subject. We must begin early to train children. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." Now, mothers, if this responsibility rests on us, let us arise and do our duty. We must be positive with our children if we expect to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. If you say no, let it be no. My motto was, for my children to keep good company, or none. Call them in when you see them with naughty children; they will think hard of you at the time, but in after years "will rise up and call you blessed." Home is also a school for the culture of your children. No one can wander so far from a christian home as to be beyond the reach of its religious associations and influences. They may take up their abode in a distant city or country, still the home training hovers around the heart.

Yours in the one faith,

ANNIE MCCARTY.

BROTHER MCGARY:

Seeing that my letter did not pass into the waste basket I will attempt to write another, though in a weak manner, as you see. I want to put in my little mite against christians being conformed to the world. O, say some, you had as well be talking about something else; you do no good in that. O, yes, sisters, we can do what we are commanded, earnestly contend for the faith; there is some good in doing what we are commanded, is there not?

Yes, sisters, some of you are so proud that you dress so as to look like you were deformed. God has said in His holy word, the proud in heart are an abomination; they shall not go unpunished. God resists the proud, but giveth grace to the humble. Sisters, do you believe this? If so, oh how can you be proud? How can you conform to the world when our loving Savior has commanded you not; can you believe you will hear our Savior say, in that great accountable day, "well done good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of the Lord?" When we transgress the law of God we sin. Sisters, I ask you in the name of heaven's King, do you believe you can go along all the days of your life in this besetting sin, willfully, knowingly, and be called good and faithful servants. Never, no never! His word is true, and we must believe and obey it, if we would have a hope in Jesus.

Pride is mentioned three times in the New Testament, and "proud," six. Now, sisters, look at all of them and see whether our Heavenly Father approved of "pride or proud" being applied to anything that is good. I am not proud that our Heavenly Father has told us in His Holy word what to do that we may live with Him forever, but I am thankful.

Again, we must be very careful to strive according to the law given, for many shall strive and shall not enter that happy land, because they do not strive lawfully. It is said "the highway of the upright is to depart from evil." Oh, then, let us all, as soon as we find that we are doing evil, depart from it I know no other way of going on to perfection.

When Jesus comes with His holy angels, every eye shall see Him. Are we ready to see Him, sisters? If not, we had better lose no time making ready, for when He comes, taking vengeance on them that have not obeyed His commandments, there will be no time then to make any change in anything whatever. If we do not obey them He will bid you depart from His presence forever into everlasting punishment. Oh, then, let us all walk by the same rule, mind the same things, that there be no division among us. Yes, let us be Partakers of the Savior's grace, "The same in mind and heart, Nor joy, nor grief, nor time, nor place, Nor life, nor death can part."

Sisters, read, if you please, 2nd Cor. VI, from verse 11. It seems that some had gone in forbidden things. Look and see what was said to them in the two last verses, and think what would be said to us if we do not come out of forbidden things. Oh, Sister Sarai, if I were with some of you faithful ones this rainy Lord's day, I feel that it would be much pleasure to hear you talk about the glorious things that await the faithful. I would be glad to meet and know you. Perhaps you will not hear from me soon again; not on this subject, any way.

A SISTER.

THE SCRIPTURES FURNISH US TO ALL GOOD WORKS.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2nd Tim. III, 16, 18. The Apostle Peter teaches the same lesson, 2nd Pet. I, 8., and the Savior says "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established"—Matt. XVIII, 16. The witnesses of whom the Savior spoke were not inspired, and surely if uninspired witnesses are competent to establish things, inspired witnesses are much more so.

Brethren do these two inspired witnesses tell the truth when they say that the Scriptures tell us about all things that pertain to life and godliness, furnish us instruction in reference to all good works? If so, then, I ask where do the Scriptures speak of these great Missionary Societies, or institutions into which so many of our brethren are going, and through which so many are expending their means for the spread of the gospel, instead of the Church of Christ, which is the pillar and ground or support of the truth, 1 Tim. III, 15.

On the second Lord's day in this month (Jan.) I had the privilege of meeting at the Rock Church, in Travis county, Texas, the State Solicitor of the great State of Texas, who was sent out at the suggestion (as I learned that day) of the great State Meeting, which assembled last year at Sherman. Now, brethren of the State Meeting, why did you not suggest that Bro. Young be sent out by the higher authorities at the city of Rome direct, and not take that round about way through Sherman, for at Rome, or a city similar, (for instance, London,) is where such conduct leads, and by the way, that reminds me of an expression that was made use of that day (not by Bro. Young,) in reference to the missionary work of "our Methodist brethren," and a Methodist preacher sitting by.

Now, brethren, are those who have not been born of water and the Spirit in the Kingdom or church of Christ? if not, why deceive them by calling them brethren; and once more, why will deacons hand them the emblems of Christ's broken body and shed blood, knowing at the time they do it that they are not in His kingdom, and consequently can not come to His table, for the table is in the kingdom: see Luke XXII, 28, 30, also, John III, 5.

Well, but says one, (no, not one, but hundreds,) does not the apostle Paul say, "let a man examine himself and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup?"—1 Cor. XI, 28. Yes, he does, but he was not talking to Pedo-Baptist Sectarians, for there were no such beings in existence at that time; but he was admonishing those who had been born of water and the Spirit; see Acts XVIII, 8; and they had perverted the supper, turned it into a drunken feast, hence the necessity of self-examination; and again, if I were in favor of an institution unauthorized by the Lord, as Bro. Young says the one through which he is operating is, I would prefer the Methodist, because it has the advantage of age and experience, and works well, like Mr. Beecher's ox yoke, while the one through which our brethren operate does not work well; it caused division among the brethren, and oh how the Lord condemns such as do that; see Romans XVI, 16 and 17.

Bro. Young preached on said occasion from Mark XVI, 16, 17. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." He spoke very well; showed the necessity first of going, then of preaching as they went, and what they were to preach, the gospel, God's power unto salvation. After preaching and partaking of the supper, he requested the congregation to remain, and then he told them that the preacher in order to go must have money, and in order get the money the people must be stirred up to the giving point, and the State Meeting suggested that the church at Sherman select a suitable man for that stirring up, and the church at Sherman had selected him as that man; and he was traveling hither and thither trying to induce the people to give, not only as the Lord had prospered them, but taking their pledges for future prosperity. In the conclusion of his talk he said that any one wishing to ask any questions could do so. I asked him if he had any scriptural authority for doing what he did; he said he did not, a very frank and truthful acknowledgement.

Now, Bro. Young, the work you are engaged in is not a good work according to Paul to Timothy; it does not pertain to life and godliness, according to Peter to the brethren, you are not doing it by the authority of the Lord Jesus, as Paul says all christians should do; Col. III, 16, 17, and it is of human origin, a doctrine and command of men, according to your own admission, and the Savior says "in vain they do worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Matt. XV, 9. Bro. Young, be careful lest your worship be vain!

But Bro. Young asked me to tell him what the scriptural plan for raising money for Missionary purposes was, and I thought from the manner in which he asked the question that he did not believe the scriptures revealed any plan. Well, Bro. Young, if they do not, then the Lord does not want any raised, for he has given us a perfect system.

Now, I suppose that all will admit (though I may be mistaken in this, judging from some reports I see in the papers) that Peter, Paul and the other Apostles and primitive preachers were the most zealous and successful Missionaries the world ever saw. They went, they preached, and preached the gospel, and so extensive were their Missionary operations that the Apostle could say (and I suppose he told the truth) that it had been preached to every creature under heaven. Col. I, 28.

But how did they go? They walked or rode on horses, or other animals, or went on ships, or used any means of traveling that was used in that age of the world, and that is an example for us to do likewise; but suppose the Lord had told them when they went, to walk, then that would have cut them off from these other modes of conveyance or going, would it not? He told them as they went, to preach the gospel. He did not tell them to preach their opinions, their feelings, dreams or imaginations, philosophy or astronomy, but the gospel; then he limited their preaching to the gospel, did he not; but who sent them when they went? First the Lord Jesus sent them in person, as when he gave them the commission as recorded by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John; and secondly they were sent, by the Lord Jesus, through His authorized agent, the church, the pillar and support of the truth, the gospel; See Acts IX, 29, 30; XI, 22; XIII, 8, XV, 27.

The reader will learn by reading the above quotations that the church did the sending. Read them reader and see that I have not misapplied them. But then who paid the expenses, who footed the bill? Ah, that is the question, that is the rub, at least in this age of the world, though it did not seem to have been in the apostolic age, or if it was we are not informed of it, unless the information is found in the 8d Epistle of Peter: see Christian Baptist, page 166. I wish Bro. Young and all of our young pastors and would-be pastors, and stipulated salary preachers would read that epistle that they might be profited thereby; but then they have all got epistles nearer at home of much higher authority that would correct their wrongs if they would believe and practice them, and for fear they are not acquainted with them I will cite them to them in the New Testament: Paul, Peter, James, John and Jude, who spake and wrote as they were guided or directed by the Holy Spirit.

But to the question, who footed the bill? The churches or congregations who sent them. But did they not have any Missionary Society or Societies, or something of the kind through which their moneys were collected and paid out? No, they did not, according to the admissions of even the strongest advocates of such societies. All these old men's, young men's, old ladies and young ladies societies, church festivals, concerts, grab-bags, etc., are the inventions of uninspired and money loving men, who are not satisfied with the Lord's way of doing things.

We learn that Paul admonished the church at Corinth, and also the churches in Gallatia to lay-by them in store upon the first day of the week as the Lord had prospered them, that they might not have any collections to make when he came.—1 Cor. XVI, 1, 3; and we learn from Rom. XV, 26, 31, that the church in Macedonia had made certain contributions for the poor saints in Jerusalem. Now, did not the churches in Macedonia and the churches in Gallatia, and at Corinth all raise their contributions in the same way? They had all been converted by the Apostle Paul, and taught alike.

It is true these contributions were raised for the poor saints at Jerusalem, and I only quote these passages to show how the money was raised, and that it was not done by gambling or on future prosperity, as is often the case now; and we learn also from these quotations and their connections that the churches co-operated for the purpose of relieving the poor saints at Jerusalem, just as they may now co-operate for the benefit of the poor saints, and include the poor preachers, for being a preacher does not keep a man from being a saint, though it does not necessarily make him one.

Paul commends the Phillipian brethren very highly for their care of him, and for ministering to his necessities.—Phil. IV, 10, 18. We learn from this case that the Phillipians had contributed means for the support of the apostle as a preacher; and that they sent their bounty to him by Epaphroditus, their messenger. How does the way in which W. T. Moore is sustained in London compare with this? "The Lord hath ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel, 1 Cor. IX, 14; but how shall they live of the gospel?" the same apostle says: "Let him that taught in the word communicate unto him that teaches, in all good things."—Gal. VI, 6.

Now, is not money one of the all good things that Paul speaks of? I should judge it was from the efforts of so many to get it; but then, how would the Gallatians get it to Paul or other preachers; send it by their own selected messenger, like the Phillipians sent to Paul by Epaphroditus when he (Paul) was preaching for the Thessalonians, and they whipped him, paid him off with thirty-nine stripes; or in these fast days send it by drafts and P. O. orders. There is not much difficulty about getting it sent, if it is collected. Now, Brethren, you that favor and you that oppose Missionary Societies, let us do our duty, be diligent in the service of the Lord, give freely for the spread of the gospel, for the Lord loves a cheerful giver, and they that sow sparingly shall also reap sparingly; but let us give and sow and reap, and do all things according to the divine rule, Gal. VI, 16, then we will live in union, harmony and love, and not be alienated in our affections towards each other, as we now are.

Now, Bro. Young, I want to send you a copy of THE FIRM FOUNDATION in which this is published, and let me say to you, that I love you with all your faults, but I must say that I do not love you as well as I would if we were walking by the same rule, the word of the Lord, though you said you loved those that differed with as well as you did those that agreed with you; but Paul says, how can two walk together except they be agreed? "Did you ever think of that Bro. Young?" Many, very many, have progressed far beyond Paul in this age of the world; but I confess I am so dull of comprehension that I have never yet learned how they can walk together unless they are agreed.

E. HANSBROUGH.

LAPORTE, IND., Jan. 10, 1886

DEAR BRO. MCGARY:

In this article I wish to speak of some things prevalent among the congregations of the disciples, which I think very wrong, and which ought to be corrected. The first of which I shall speak, is the shameful neglect of our aged preachers. Many of the congregations, if they wish the services of a preacher, sometimes advertise for a young man. Perhaps the advertisement will run thus, A young man wanted to take charge of the congregation at B., a man without a family, well educated, and a good mixer, etc.

A good mixer I suppose, means one who can meet the sects with a bland smile, greet them brother or sister A, B, and C; one with whom every one is good, and better. One who will make merriment with the young people, and who is always the jolliest fellow in the company. Then, they say, what an influence our preacher has over the young people? A great many young people join the church under the ministrations of such preachers, 'tis true; but of what benefit, either to the possessor or the church, is such religion as that which is induced by the admiration of the preacher? A preacher is a good mixer—one who is genial and full of mirth and jesting—he wins to himself the affections of the young, they become attached to the young preacher, and in order to please him they join the church. This is no fancy sketch. It is a serious reality in hundreds of instances. Where this is the case, there is not one particle of christianity in it. It is not on account of a love of truth, or a love of God, because he first loved them and gave the Savior to redeem them. It is not because they have been taught to feel their obligation and responsibility to God, but because they admire the handsome young preacher, and desire to please him. I do not say that this is always the case; but it is too often the case. It is so prevalent, that many of the young seem to think that old preachers are comparatively worthless, and many of the heroes of the cross are neglected—unappreciated and their knowledge, experience and example ignored.

What difference does it make if one really desires to know and obey the gospel, whose mouth he hears it from? Is the truth any better, purer, or more powerful from the mouth of the young preacher than the old? Do not the old know the gospel as well as the young? Are they not as apt to love it as much, and are they not as able to present and defend it? Why then should the old soldiers be thrown aside entirely to make room for the young? There is no reason in the plea, neither is there any justice in it. Do not understand me to oppose young men preaching. I desire that many more preach than do, if they will heed the advice of Paul to Timothy, Second Timothy, second and fourth chapters, especially. The young preacher who will heed this advice of the apostle is worthy of acceptance and honor; but he who does not strictly follow the admonition is not worthy to be heard. Let us not neglect the aged preachers, but let all esteem them highly if they hold to the faith without wavering. If, however, an old preacher has departed in any degree from the truth in doctrine or practice, he is more to blame than the young, and needs to be rebuked by others who are old and experienced. The church has many needs which ought to be attended to, but especially ought the evils above named be redressed.

There are some other things I wish here to speak of. There are very many persons in the congregations who feel little or no obligation to give of their substance, of that with which God has blessed them, to the support of the gospel and the church. Everyone knows, who knows anything else, that God has always demanded of His subjects, sacrifices. It has always cost the subjects of every kingdom something to maintain government; and so it does the subjects of Christ's kingdom. It is necessary that the gospel be preached; it is necessary that the ordinances of the Lord's house be attended to; it is necessary that the sick poor be provided for. All this requires means. Those means are to be furnished by the citizens of the kingdom. Then, everyone of the citizens should feel his obligation in this matter, and is in duty bound to give according to his ability, until the work be accomplished.

I have found it too frequently the case that a few of the most liberal and determined brethren have to furnish the necessary means to keep the work in motion. There are many who seldom give anything into the church treasury, who spend from five to ten dollars or more every year for tobacco, and I suppose that there are very few who are really benefitted by the use of tobacco. What a vast amount of money would the Lord's treasury receive if the one-half of the money that is annually spent for tobacco was given to the church. Take a church, say, of one hundred members, and allow that fifty of them are females, and poor, who could not be expected to give because they have no income; but say that the other fifty can give an average of one quarter of a dollar each first day of the week, and that gives you twelve and one-half dollars per week. There are fifty-two weeks in a year, so you have six hundred and twenty-five dollars per year; enough to pay for all the preaching they need themselves, pay all necessary expenses for lights, fuel, and taking care of the house, etc., and quite a sum left for the poor widow and the sick.

But one must have his tobacco, another must pay his dues to some secret society, generally three times as much as he will give to the church; another must take his famlly to the show and the county fair, or state fair, another must pay his insurance policy, and another must lay up treasure on earth, and by all these means, the Lord's treasury is empty. Do such persons suppose that in the day of judgement God will hold them guiltless? Jesus told the young man that if he would sell his possessions and distribute to the poor he should have treasure in heaven. But some want their lives insured. They apply to an agent of some monied corporation and insure their lives they say. I suppose that such forget that their lives are in the hands of God, and that he is the only firm that can really insure man's life. They will apply to man to be insured, when it is only God who can insure life here and hereafter. And besides this, it is He who insures not only life, but every blessing by which life, both here and hereafter, is sustained. God furnishes not only life, but the genial shower and the refreshing breeze, the bright sunshine and warmth that causes vegetation to spring forth, which supplies man with food and raiment. Yet how unwilling many are to pay their dues to this insurance firm. They even sometimes imagine they owe no dues. Is it possible, however, that a christian can thus imagine that he has no obligation? Can it be possible that the preacher of the gospel has failed to impress these obligations on the minds of his hearers? Brethren, shall we fail to lay up treasure in heaven? Shall we fail to pay our insurance? Shall we give our time and money to human organizations and human societies instead of giving them to the church, our only hope, our only insurance? Surely the true christian will give all the time, means and labor that he can spare to the cause of Christ—to the church—which is the ground and pillar of the truth.

I wish I could impress all with the importance of the above matters and wean them from human societies. God will not accept the work of any human society instead of the work of the church.

Will all the readers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION consent to be governed by the Scriptures? Will they uphold the preachers who confine their teaching and practice to the Scriptures, and no other? If so, we will soon have a forward movement.

Brethren, let us all be faithful.
I. O. STONE.

Bro. J. F. Grubbs has just spent two days and a night with us. We had never seen him before. Bro. Grubbs is about thirty-three years of age, and has been preaching about eight years. His home is near Temple, Texas. While we were together we canvassed a great many questions that pertain to the cause—those that "make for peace" as well as those that breed contention; and some that are now so rapidly tending to rend the Kingdom of Christ.

If we were disagreed upon anything we do not now remember it. From our conversations with Bro. Grubbs we judged him to happily combine the information, fire, vigor and resolution to a degree suitable for an efficient "soldier" in this day of active conflict against the potent and popular enemies of the "cross." We had always heard that Bro. Grubbs was a very successful evangelist, and we were led, from his fire-side talks on the theme of redemption, to consider it true.

Suffice it to say, that Bro. Grubbs is brim full of zeal for the success of THE FIRM FOUNDATION. His parting words were: "we will make it succeed." And, brethren, we will if we live, because it will not advocate that which is not authorized by the Lord nor oppose one thing that is authorized by Him. It will be operated upon the principle that the New Testament Scriptures ARE a sufficient rule of faith and practice. Hence, it will be bounded by Scriptural rules in all things. This will ultimately give success, for God's truth will beat back all opposition and come out of all struggles, with up-lifted banner, victorious.

We had to give our Baptist, who "seemed" to see that Peter taught baptism for the remission of sins, a rest this issue.

We have a letter from Bro. W. Lipscomb in which he says that we overlooked the point in his article that he desired special attention to. He asks us to give that point attention either by private letter or through the paper. We choose the latter, thinking that some one else may be benefited.

The point that Bro. L. calls attention to, he states thus: "If a man who is a member of the Baptist church hears me preach the gospel and the union of the lovers of God, and desires to unite in the work, being satisfied with his baptism, have I the right to say that he shall not do so unless he is willing to be immersed again?"

First, we will ask, what weight within itself does one being "satisfied with his baptism" have? If it has any, then it is entitled to the very same consideration with effusionists. Then, as to "rights" in the premises, we hold that no man has any. The apostles have, in their precepts and examples, fixed the boundary lines all along here. No man has the "right" to overstep these bounds, however well "satisfied" persons may be who are occupying grounds outside of apostolic circumscription.

To determine what is valid or invalid baptism, a standard for valid baptism—the "one baptism"—must first be fixed. After it is fixed it must be final, conclusive and decisive. We have the standard thoroughly furnished by divine rule, and all of our evangelists work by the rule till they come to some one who is "satisfied" with something differing just a little, when, for conscience sake, they measure him with an india rubber string that will stretch to suit the emergency.

Now, what we want to know is, whence these brethren derive the "right" to use this india rubber measure? Will you tell us, brethren? If you will show us that you have such "right" then we will never write one line more against the practice. Do, please, for the sake of peace, union and harmony, show us that "right."

A BRO., I. N. HODGEN, has puffed up quite a fog in the "Apostolic Guide" about our "greatly extreme" views on baptism. He strolls around in the orb of his own darkness, stumbling over the graves of Bro's. Campbell, Scott, Stone, Smith, Johnson, and many, many others—among which are his mother's and father's—crying in piteous wails: "Lost! Lost! All Lost!" He seems to think that the special mission of THE FIRM FOUNDATION is to sit in judgement over these dead. Poor fellow! we never would have known he had a father or mother if he had not told us in the A. G. We wonder if he never preached a doctrine that condemned any body's father and mother by the same rule that he makes us condemn his?

We wrote to the same paper and invited him to correct our "greatly extreme" views in the F. F.; but it is so much easier to kick up a big dust in the columns of some paper that will not permit a free investigation of the question than to show up these "greatly extreme" views in a paper that is not in the pad-lock business, that we fear he will not undertake the much-needed job.

We thank Bro. McPherson for giving his readers what we wrote him. Any man who teaches that Bros. Campbell and Fannin did not understand that baptism was for the remission of sins when they were baptized, does injustice to those dead. Though it would not effect the truth if they had not understood it.

ALL who will send us three or more new names during February may retain one-third of the amount as commission. We extend this offer for this month because the weather was so inclement last month that our friends did not have a good chance to show what they would do under such an offer. Or, to any one who will send us three new names and $8., and return us the October and November numbers for 1885, we will send the first fourteen issues of the pamphlet nicely bound in book form. We will give THE FIRM FOUNDATION and the "Christian Preacher" for $1.50.

BRO. MCPHERSON Says: "If a set of Texas men are not making a completely ridiculous farce of the solemn rite of baptism, I am at a loss to know the meaning of the word 'farce.'"

Tell us something new, brother. We have been saying that all the while, and have been laboring assiduously to correct it. If you have any doubts about the "meaning of the word farce," and have no dictionary at hand, think right seriously of the teaching you are disseminating through the "Apostolic Guide," and then bear in mind that you pretend to be an advocate for primitive practices, and you will have a splendid opportunity to learn the MEANING of the word "farce."

SINCE Bro. I. N. Hodgen, of Woodland, Cal., undertook to make our views appear so "greatly extreme" to the readers of the "Apostolic Guide," we have received twenty-eight subscribers from his own town. Come, again Bro. Hodgen and perhaps you will prove to be a good agent for our paper.

The "New Path Guide" is fixing things up in a hurry in these latter days. Its last move in the direction of Rome is its effort to constitute a little oligarchy to be enthroned at Lexington, the mitered heads of which are to be five of the "Bible College" professors. Of course the rank and file of our Kentucky brethren will toss up their caps with reverential hurrahs to this new scheme, and pledge unflinching allegiance to the powers that are to be.

Bro. Burnett, of the "Messenger," has given his readers some very timely and wholesome—but unpalatable to "progressives"—thoughts on this "new scheme" of the "New Path Guide."

We hope to have the space in our next issue to give the words of Bro. Burnett to our readers. Every lover of truth ought to see them.

—We will change the F. F. to a semi-monthly as soon as our new type arrives. In this contemplated change we will put the paper in the form that it will continue when changed to a weekly—which will be in the near future, if our subscription list continues to increase at its present rate. The price will remain as it is. Brethren, we will give you the cheapest and best paper that is published if you will exert yourselves to help us a little. Let each subscriber determine to send us one new name.

—In the last Advocate, Bro. Lipscomb gives the obituary of the "Texas Department" of that paper. He now thinks "Departments" are poor things. He is a little scared at Texas just now, because of certain "parties and personal difficulties" that he claims are "rife" here. As to the "parties," we would like to have them pointed out, for we don't know of them. If our brethren are going to divide into parties we want it understood that the F. F. is of the apostolic "party." There is a big "personal difficulty" in Texas, in pamphlet form, about a certain hymn book!

If there is a brother in Texas whose conscience once felt dissatisfied about the confession, because he did not make "the good confession" with his own mouth, while we do not take that view of it, we accord to him the right to set his conscience at ease about the matter without consulting "Bill Alex," C. McPherson, or any one else, and we think that these brethren are manifesting anything but the Spirit of Christ in criticizing him in the sportful way that they are. The other, about the sinning against the Holy Ghost, we believe, is made out of whole cloth.

Our old friend John T. Poe has written us of the death of Bro. T. S. S. Young, of Longview. He says of Bro. Young: "He was one of our best brethren. He died Lords day, the 17th inst., at the age of 66 years."

These old and true soldiers that are falling asleep at such a fearful rate will be sadly missed in the conflicts with the hosts of satan that are daily waxing hotter and hotter, especially while the ranks of our King contains so many drawbacks in the way of stalwart "progressives," who are hoisting the white flag.

CORRECTION.

—Sister Sarai's article came in for a share of the mistakes this time. She is always so careful and correct that we consider it due her to say that the mistakes were not hers, but the printers. On page 11, first column, and 22 lines from the top, she is made to say "besets," where she said beset; and in the 29th line in the same column it is "burdens," instead of burden, as she had it.

SILENCE BROKEN.

THE Firm Foundation, published by Bro. McGary, at Austin, Texas, is in its second volume. We have just received No 4, of Vol. 2. This is our first sight of this monthly magazine. Our seeing this is due to the fact that it contains something for our special benefit, or rather for our entanglement.

We have understood from all we have seen of the Firm Foundation, that it was established, and is perpetuated, for the purpose of trying to convince the world that baptism is of no value unless administered with the express understanding on the part of both candidate and administrator, that it is for the remission of sins, and is administered for that express purpose. Consequently the immersion of Baptists, Methodists and others, is ignored; and all such are reimmersed. The trouble is, this is not a theory that may be innocently held, as many other erroneous things are. On the contrary, it is practical, and its results are serious. Those holding the theory make a hobby of it, and preach it persistently. As a result many become converts to their theory. If they have been immersed by some one of the denominational preachers, they become dissatisfied and demand reimmersion. But this is not the worst. Many want to make it a condition of Christian fellowship. They regard those baptized by other than a Christian preacher as having no scriptural and valid baptism. Hence they are not in the kingdom. They are, therefore, not brethren in the Lord. Consequently alienation and strife result wherever the doctrine is received. Churches are divided and great mischief follows. Consequently all preachers of the theory are disturbers of the peace and harmony of the churches of Christ. They create division and strife. This is a great and ruinous sin, unless the truth of God demands it. Of course if the position is correct, and baptism is worthless unless administered for remission, the fact should be known and the evil corrected as far as possible, regardless of consequences. People should be told that their sprinkling is not baptism, no matter how much disturbance of people's consciences and church relations may follow. Just so in this case. But when a question of such a grave character, involving such momentous consequences, it should not be advocated without the most profound conviction of its truth; and this, after the most impartial, prayerful and painstaking investigation. Hence, this is a very serious matter, and should be treated in no flippant kind of a way.

With our understanding of this theory, now advocated in Texas to the cost of the peace and harmony of many churches, we regard it as the most mischievous apostasy from the Church of God, and from the fundamental principles of the restoration in which we are engaged, that has arisen in this century. In certain respects it substitutes a theory about baptism for Christ. One is not only to believe on Christ, but he is also to believe that baptism is for the remission of sins. In order to becoming a Christian one is just as necessary as the other. This theory is really made the center of their system of religion. It completely ignores the fundamental theory of the current Reformation, that faith in Christ and obedience to Him is the only essential condition of salvation; that theories about Christ and the conditions of salvation amount to nothing, unless they interfere with our obedience to Christ. We know of no departure from the faith in modern times so hurtful to the cause of New Testament Christianity, as this hobby which the Firm Foundation was established to advocate. But we must come to the question put directly to us by the editor. He evidently regards it as unanswerable. We see it in a very different light. His statements are so connected that in order to clearly understand him, we shall have to give the entire article. This is it in full:

In The Apostolic Guide, of December 11, under the caption of "Baptist Claims and Failures," the editor-in-chief, as we might expect, makes out a strong case against the Baptists. As Bro. Allen has been the target of so many envenomed shafts from the Goliaths of the grand army of "progress" in battling for a point reached across the "dark blue seas," where W. T. Moore "holds the fort," we feel somewhat reluctant to rush in upon him through some gaps he left down around his own premises, in his eagerness to build a strong fence against the Baptists. But as truth is at all times entitled to the pre-eminence, and, as our popular editors and teachers, who fight and pet the Baptists, consider themselves out of the range of such small shot as THE FIRM FOUNDATION; we shall herein call Bro. Allen's attention to some thoughts that were suggested to our mind while reading his article above referred to. In enumerating other flaws in Baptist doctrine, Bro. Allen says: "Did they, (meaning primitive Christians) baptize believers on a simple confession of their faith in Christ, without an experience involving a sense of pardon? So do the Disciples; but so do not the Baptists. Did they tell inquiring sinners who believed that Jesus was the Christ, to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins? So do the Disciples, but so do not the Baptists."

Now, Brother Allen, will you please tell us why you have this fault to find with your Baptist brethren? Do you not receive these same Baptists upon their baptism? And if you do, (which I know you do) do you not do so because you consider them in Christ? And if you consider them in Christ, by virtue of such baptism, would a baptism preceded by the practice of the early Disciples, and which you claim is strictly followed by the Disciples of this day, have done anything more than brought them where their Baptist baptism brought them? If not, is not the practice of the early Disciples and the Disciples of this day, simply on a par with Baptist usage? And, if this is true, in view of the fact that Baptist practice is the most popular, are you not acting wickedly in not adopting it when more people will accept it and come to Christ (?) through it, than through your teaching?

Will you, my brother, be so kind as to answer these questions? We will see, for we intend to see that you are furnished with them. And they are plain, leaving no room for misunderstanding.

Bro. McGary's idea is, that if baptism administered by a Baptist brings to one the remission of sins and induction into the kingdom of God, it is just as good as it can be when administered by one of the brethren engaged in the work of restoration. Hence we should not, to be consistent, oppose their theory of baptism; but as it is most popular, adopt it. We see no difficulty about this. Our objection to Baptist baptism is not that it is deficient when administered ordinarily, but the delay and contingency in administering the rite. Their theory of conversion often causes them to delay baptism to penitent believers, and not only so, but to let many go unbaptized till they go back to the love and practice of sin. If Baptists would baptize penitent believers promptly so soon as those seeking baptism are willing to confess their faith in Christ, we shall have no contention with them as to the design of the ordinance. It is only because the rite is withheld when it should be granted, that the design of the ordinance becomes of importance as to its understanding. So we accept baptism as valid at the hands of Baptists, and yet war against their theory of its design; not because of invalid baptism, but because of that which precedes it in their practice.

The commission of Christ makes belief of the gospel the prerequisite to baptism. The gospel, as proclaimed by the apostles, was the fact of Christ's death and resurrection according to the Scriptures. Hence they believed in Christ—that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God. John says that the miracles of Jesus were written to produce belief that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that in believing they might have life through His name." To those who thus believe and are baptized, Christ promises salvation. He does not even hint here or elsewhere that they must believe that baptism is for the remission of sins. He nowhere makes this a condition of remission or a prerequisite to baptism. When he has not done so, it is simply establishing a system of our own for us to do so. This is adding to the conditions of salvation, and creating a faction and a heresy in the Church of God. We have only feelings of kindness for all these brethren personally who have fallen into this grievous error; but for the theory and its mischievous results, we have no kind of sympathy. Its advocates are no more identified with the restoration than are any other sect. They seem to realize this; hence the Firm Foundation calls the Disciples Campbellites, and uses other offensive terms, as flippantly as does the Battle Flag, if we can trust quotations made by other papers. We trust the editor and his readers will see why we accept Baptist baptism and yet oppose their theory; and in so seeing, see the flimsy foundation on which they are building a theory and disturbing the peace of the churches of God. —F. G. Allen in Apostolic Guide.

In Bro. Allen's effort to fix upon THE FIRM FOUNDATION the marks of "A Modern Apostasy" we see nothing that demands an extended notice at our hands. But, as Bro. Allen has consumed two columns of the Guide, and sent us quite a roll of that paper for distribution, and, as we have distributed that roll among our readers as long as it lasted, we have thought it proper to let all of them see his success in the matter, hence we have given his entire article, together with our questions to him, that called his forth.

Bro. Allen either wrote this severe stricture against THE FIRM FOUNDATION out of a malicious consciousness that he was not able to satisfactorily answer the questions we propounded to him, or he wrote it under the misrepresentations and prejudices made upon his mind against THE FIRM FOUNDATION by some bitter enemy to the truth. That one of these influences actuated him in the perpetration of that effusion, which is fairly gushing with imprecations, is clearly evident from the heading of his article, if from nothing else. As we can see nothing in our questions calculated to work anyone up to such a pitch of high dudgeon who holds a mind free for the reception of larger resources of light—which we thought Bro. Allen did—we are forced to the conclusion that he has been wrought up to this degree of hostility against THE FIRM FOUNDATION through the misrepresentations of some of its bitter Texas enemies. The old ruse of crying "thief" at some one else when one is stealing himself has worked well for so many rascals that we suppose some Texas "wolf" is pointing to THE FIRM FOUNDATION as the cause of the scattered "flocks" of our State. But, Bro. Allen, we assure you that we know not one church in this broad State that has suffered from our advocacy of the truth as it is in Jesus—"the doctrine once delivered to the saints." Will you, my brother, be so kind as to point out to us a few of the "many churches in Texas" whose "peace and harmony" have been destroyed by THE FIRM FOUNDATION? Is the Waxahachie church one of them? We hear that the "peace and harmony" of that church is suffering severely. Is the negative position of THE FIRM FOUNDATION on the baptismal question chargeable with the rending of that church? No, my brother, but your associate editor is playing "grievous wolf" while that once peaceful "flock" is being sent pell mell with the din and clang of the ever disturbing and divisive instrument that seems to fill the souls of some with joy inexpressible while their brethren flee for peace.

Bro. Allen, we know that your heart is on the side of those who have been thus scattered, so a strong article on the sinfulness of dividing peaceful churches to gratify a few who want instrumental music in the house of the Lord is now in order, and we shall hope to hear from you on it. You need not head it, "A Modern Apostasy."

We will call Bro. Allen's attention to some errors that he fell into in defining our teaching to his readers. We presume that these were unintentional on his part, but were owing to the fact that he treated our case from hearsay instead of first learning the facts for himself—he said our January number was the first issue of our paper that he had seen.

Bro. A. says that we teach that baptism must be understood by both the candidate and the administrator to be for the remission of sins.

This is a mistake; we neither teach it nor believe it. The candidate is the one who must believe the gospel, for he must obey it from the heart.

2. Bro. Allen charges that THE FIRM FOUNDATION calls the "Disciples, Campbellites."

If he means by this that we attach that appellation to the Disciples indiscriminately—and this would be understood from his language—we deny the charge. We do, however, call those Campbellites who want to know what condition our teaching will leave Bro. Campbell in, and those who seem to seek no higher authority for a practice than Bro. Campbell. But we have about quit that, even, out of respect for Bro. Campbell's name.

3. Bro. A. says we make a theory of baptism for the remission of sins the center of our system of religion.

In this, again, he is in error. Christ is the center of our system of religion. The very reason that we deny his teaching and oppose his practice of receiving sect baptism as valid, is, because there is no Christ in it—it is all a "theory" of man.

Bro. Allen says we make a hobby of our theory of baptism and preach it persistently.

We say we have no theory of baptism; we only give to baptism the place that it is given by Christ and His inspired teachers. By Christ it was appointed for penitent believers—believers of the gospel preached by the apostles—not for those who believed no more of their gospel than the three facts of Christ's death, burial and resurrection! That is precisely the condition those were in at Jerusalem on the first Pentecost after Christ's resurrection, when they cried out: "men and brethren, what shall we do?" According to Bro. Allen, they believed the gospel—the whole gospel. But Peter replied to them: "repent and be baptized everyone of you in the name (authority) of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Then they that "gladly received Peter's words," we are told, "were baptized." But what words did they "gladly receive?" Surely it was not the three facts that we have referred to—they sorrowfully received the words of Peter about these three facts—it "pricked their hearts"—but they did "gladly receive" his words that followed. If they had not believed these words in which he taught them that baptism was for the remission of sins, they could never have gladly received them. Here, then, we have an example of an apostle baptizing those who "gladly received" the instruction that baptism was for the remission of sins.

Bro. A. says that the Scriptures are a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

We have not yet "apostatized" so far as to call this in question. But if God also requires or authorizes the baptism of such as have not heard, believed, or "gladly received" the teaching that baptism is for the remission of sins, and the Scriptures do not somewhere give us some example or other teaching on that matter, then it is not true that they are a sufficient rule. We have never found such example or teaching. Will Bro. Allen please point it out? As said, we have shown him the example for all we teach on this question. We simply deny what he teaches, and call for the proof. When he shows us the proof or rule out of that which is so "sufficient," and we refuse to be guided by it, then will be his proper time to tag us, "A Modern Apostasy." What have we apostatized from, Bro. Allen? You say:

"It completely ignores the fundamental theory of the current Reformation, that faith in Christ and obedience to Him is the only essential condition of salvation."

We would understand from this that we have apostatized from the "current Reformation." Now, we readily and freely admit that we have no sympathy for that "theory of the current Reformation" which says that Christ authorized the baptism of such as did not know what baptism was appointed for. In short, wherever the "theories of the current Reformation" are borne out by the Scriptures, we are ready, willing! anxious!! determined!!! to part with and oppose that feature of the "current Reformation" to the very bitterest dregs that may await us. But we fail to perceive any "Modern Apostasy" in this. My brother, I think you were scarce of terms when you headed that article. If some of our department editors had written it I should have looked upon it as clap-trap or buncombe; but I suppose you were led into real serious alarm by your Texas informant. But if you will now turn your attention in the direction of Waxahachie once and awhile you might prevent more contention and strife than THE FIRM FOUNDATION would occasion if every man and woman on the continent should become convinced that an unintelligent baptism is an unscriptural one. We would not have you, my brother, to understand that we are inviting your attention away from us—not a bit of it—since you have undertaken to set us right we hope you will continue till good is accomplished, only asking you to deal fairly with us. But we mean for you to cast an occasional glance in the direction of Waxahachie, where there is real trouble, we are told.

"Theories" are not such bad things after all with Bro. Allen it seems, since he admits that the "current Reformation" has them. It is something new for Bro. Allen to write about "essential" conditions. There is scriptural phraseology for scriptural ideas; but when one begins to tread the labyrinthian routes of sectarianism to approve it as the "straight and narrow way," the gibberish of Ashdod becomes handy to them, and we hear them speaking or writing of "essential" and non-essential "conditions of salvation."

Of course we could not expect Bro. Allen to write as long an article as he has about THE FIRM FOUNDATION without making frequent use of the word "hobby." He would have been in danger of being pronounced heterodox by the orthodox enemies of the F. F. if he had failed in that. But we would like for him to tell us what question among us is not made a "hobby" by some one, and where is the man who has no "hobby?" It seems that to advocate any truth strenuously and uncompromisingly is to make a "hobby" of it with these brethren. To brand this truth as a hobby because it is contended for with persistence, is to fix a rule by which every truth of God's word may be branded as a hobby so soon as it is held up before the public.

Bro. Allen would have his readers believe, it seems, that all we teach is, that baptism is for the remission of sins. It is true that we have a great deal to say on this question, because it is so frequently opposed. But we would rather write on christian duties than anything, if we had our choice.

Our paper contends for every item of the faith, and it is unjust to represent us otherwise. We are opposed to "Missionary Societies," instrumental music in the churches, and many other things that are now being hotly contested; but these questions are all ably represented, and we alone are left to contend for this truth, and they seek now to take our lives.

We don't know that we fully understand Bro. A. when he says that "this is not a theory that can be innocently held."

In a certain sense no theory can be innocently held that is not true. Bro. Allen says:

"Of course if the position is correct, and baptism is worthless unless administered for remission, the fact should be known, and the evil corrected as far as possible, regardless of consequences. People should be told that their sprinkling is not baptism, no matter how much disturbance of people's consciences and church relations may follow. Just so in this case. But when a question of such a grave character, involving such momentous consequences, it should not be advocated without the most profound conviction of its truth; and this after the most impartial, prayerful and painstaking investigation."

And so say we. But there is no further painstaking necessary than to once determine that there is no kind of divine authority for the practice, for we may not do in the Holy name of Christ what he has not authorized done. Bro. Allen is mistaken if he thinks we have not as fully weighed this question as we are capable of doing it. It would be impossible for our convictions in this matter to be stronger. How much longer would he have us wait? There would be no necessity for any one to advocate it after everybody believes it. Our brethren who oppose the agitation of this question fear that the "great body of the brotherhood will become unsettled." This is an insult to their intelligence. This is the same idea that gave rise to the Pope. If our brethren are correct, then our "laity" needs priests, prelates, bishops, arch-bishops and popes to overlook them, to decide what they shall hear and what they shall not hear. We presume that Bro. A. does not consider it necessary to be so painstaking before one begins telling the people that their sprinkling is no account. But many men who stand higher in the role of wisdom than Bro. A. think that the painstaking should be just as great in the one case as the other. Who is right? It must be determined by the word of God. There is where we are willing to test our teaching. We deny Bro. Allen's teaching on this question, and call on him, in brotherly love, for proof of it. We will patiently await his decision. If our work is as dangerous as he seems to think it is, he owes it as a duty to his brethren to prove to the world that he has authority for his practice. Prove it, and then name us "A Modern Apostasy!" "Prove it, then hold fast to it." Remember, the very point at issue, Bro. Allen: Does the immersion of one who does not know that it is for the remission of sins put him in the body of Christ? Remember, you say it does, and we deny it. Prove your teaching and you prove us to be wrong, and we will cease publishing THE FIRM FOUNDATION and refund every subscriber his money, or turn our list over to your paper. Here is a chance for you to gain a large club for The Apostolic Guide.

But my brother you are wasting precious time to your side of this question in trying to frown us down, or in issuing strong articles of excommunication against us, heading them "A Modern Apostasy." This, my brother, is not the way for a logician of your reputation to meet an issue. It reminds one of a boy when he starts upon an errand at night whistling loud and brllaoing to frighten away ghosts and hobgoblins. Give us proof, proof! proof!!

A. McG.

Now, Bro. Allen, we have given your article in full to our readers; will you give this to yours? We shall not expect less at your hands.

WOODLAND, CAL., Feb. 1, '88.

Well, Bro. McGary, as you invite me to your paper from the Apostolic Guide, to prove my position, I thank you, and will accept, to write a short article to set myself right before your readers, for you have misrepresented me in your reply in the A. Guide, as I think I can clearly show, more times than one.

You thank God that I am not to be "the judge of your sentiments." I thought that all editors wrote for that purpose; to have their teaching examined by all who read them, and judged whether right or wrong, good or evil. Now for your misrepresentations:

1. You represent me as saying that I was baptized "ignorant of the gospel." My words were these: "Thanks to the blessed Savior for these cheering words: 'Where little is given, little is required.'" To me, for one, but little was given, or known, when I, a poor 16 year old boy, was baptized, that I might be saved, and thank God I believe that He did save me, ignorant of the gospel as I was, for Christ's sake, and I have never doubted it since."

You represent me as ignorant of the gospel, and my language as only partly so. I was taught the old Jerusalem plan by old Bro John Smith and John Dr Steel, of Kentucky, then; and I was baptized by the latter after confessing my faith in the Savior before men, for the remission of all my past sins. I understood that much, yet I feel now that I was very ignorant of the gospel comparatively.

2. You say it is no "surprise to you that I pronounce these (your) sentiments extreme. Now, there is nothing comforting to him in them. There was but one of two ways for him to act when he read THE FIRM FOUNDATION, viz: To accept and recognize the truth as it teaches it, and go, as did certain disciples that Paul met at Ephesus, and obey the gospel from the heart; or, second, to reject it as he has, and wax hot against it."

Here I want you to understand that I have not waxed hot against the gospel, but if hot at all, against your extreme conclusions and opinions—that no one can be saved by the gospel unless they are baptized for the remission of sins knowingly.

And you would have me go and obey the gospel "with the heart." Who made you a judge of the state of my heart at the time of my baptism? And why should I now go and do as those at Ephesus did, when they were not baptized in the name of the Savior, nor into the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and I was. Don't you see now how much you are inclined to extremes, as this is certainly an extreme misrepresentation, with a determined zeal for your opinion that none are saved unless baptized for pardon knowingly?

You say "it is no part of our business to satisfy Bro. Hodgen's whims to single out individuals, dead or living, and make special application of our teaching to them."

No; but others will; all will that have friends who were not baptized specially for the remission of sins. I fear there is as much danger of some of our brethren making baptism for remission of sins the gospel, as some people do the Sabbath.

You say there is no pertinency in our inquiries whether you, when baptized, understood fully what believing with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, or did you know what repent was, and everything in connection with baptism, etc. Here we differ in our judgment again, for if, as you teach, unless a person comprehends or understands all the gospel when they attempt to obey it their baptism does them no good. I wanted to know if you comprehended the gospel in all its parts when you were baptized; if you did not, according to your logic, you had better go in again when you comprehend fully Paul's "mystery of Godliness; God manifest in the flesh," etc. But as you have it, this is one of my whims.

Again, you say, "There are just two ideas in the world in reference to the design of baptism, (I think there are several more than two) one is that it is for the remission of sins, and the other is that it is not. One is from the Father, and the other is from the father of lies; the latter from satan's ministers transformed as ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works.

—Now, this is clear, if they taught that baptism was for anything else than what God teaches, they are the devil's ministers, and of course go to him in the end. Immaterial how honest, humble, pious, and how well they have taught everything else, all is lost to them. They are of their father, the devil. The good book says, "Speak evil of no man." Is not this a sin against God, and as bad as to teach by mistake and in blindness that baptism is not for the remission of sins? You are in the light, they in darkness—which is the more excusable?

Third misrepresentation: You say that in all my long article in the Apostolic Guide I did not quote one passage of scripture to sustain my teaching.

Well, now, we will see. In one paragraph I say, thanks to the blessed Savior for the cheering words, "where little is given, little is required." Here is one passage, and I think directly in point. And second, I refer to the parable of the talents; that "people are accountable only according to their talents." Third: I asked you if you knew that God had a people in "mystery Babylon," and that God says, "come out of her My people, that you be not partaker of her sins, that her plagues come not upon you." I then asked you, after quoting this; if they had obeyed the whole gospel knowingly. Your reply to this is extremely evasive. You say, "Bro. Hodgen asks us if we did not know that God has a people in mystery; if we had not known it before, we would have found it out when we read his article."

Now, here are three scriptures referred to; and you say I did not give one. This is one of your "mysteries" in evading my argument, and I want to hold it up again so you can see it. If God has had a people in Babylon for near two thousand years, has He not had a people that did not understand the gospel—did not understand that baptism is for the remission of sins; in fact, were many or any of them baptized at all? What say you of this? I believe all Protestant denominations teach that the "old Romish church is the mystery Babylon, the great and the mother of harlots." If so, God has a people even in her, according to John.

"Charity suffereth long, and is kind."—Hope you will have a little more—yes, a good deal more charity.

Yours in the hope,
I. N. HODGEN.

We invited Bro. Hodgen to our columns to prove his position, that persons who are immersed without understanding the design of the act are, by virtue of such unintelligent act "baptized into Christ." But he prefers a different course. He thinks we have misrepresented him, and we are willing that our readers shall see what he has to say; but if he wants to avail himself of our offer in the future, he must direct his efforts at something of more interest to our readers than is the question of the status of his mind when he was immersed.

It seems that Bro. H. is hurt because we understood him to mean he was ignorant of the gospel when he was immersed. Well, we so understood him in his article in the Guide; but now, as he says he was only partly ignorant, we are glad to hear it, and are more than willing that our readers shall. By the by, it seems there was no ignorance at all on his part. He says:

"I was taught the old Jerusalem plan by old Bro. John Smith and John D. Steel, of Kentucky, then, and I was baptized by the latter after confessing my faith in the Savior before men, for the remission of all my past sins."

As extreme as Bro. H. considers our views, we consider his baptism perfectly good, from this statement. But if he will examine his article that we replied to, he will see that he has improved wonderfully. Yes, to hear the old Jerusalem gospel and believe it is all we hold as necessary to prepare for baptism. Bro. H.'s questions to us about the "mystery of Godliness" are pointless, as we have never contended for more than the hearing and believing of the "old Jerusalem gospel, and the act of immersion springing out of the instruction imparted in that old gospel."

We do not care to criticize or correct Bro. H. any further, except we protest against his making the Apostle John teach that there are christians in the great Romish harlot.

As to the scriptures that Bro. H. claims he quoted in his A. G.

article, he will please remember we did not say that he quoted no scripture: We did say though that he quoted none to sustain his position. We still say it. If he thinks he did, it is only a difference of opinion as to the appropriateness of his scripture. The trouble with him was, that in his A. G. article he was wanting to show how ignorant one could be of the gospel, and yet obey it acceptably, and he made an example of himself. But in this article he is trying to show how much of the gospel he understood when he obeyed it, and it is remarkable how completely he filled up the measure of all we teach is necessary—remember, he says, "I was baptized by the latter after confessing my faith in the Savior before men, for the remission of sins"—not so ignorant as we heard he was in the Guide.

Of course those "who have friends and relatives who were not baptized specially for the remission of sins," will consider our teaching a hard doctrine; and those who have relatives and friends who have never been immersed at all will think it a hard doctrine to say that all who are not immersed are lost. But what of that? This does not weaken the truth of God. If those who pervert the gospel of Christ are not Satan's ministers, then Paul must have been mistaken about satan having any ministers. We hope never to possess such charity (?) as that which will cause us to deny God, to speak well of ungodly men who are using their whole strength against the authority of God's Son.

CO-OPERATION.

To operate, is to work, and to co-operate, is to work together. Working together is predicated of parties who combine together in order to direct their efforts towards one end; hence, there must be unity of purpose as well as concert of action. But several parties, each having the same end in view, and actuated by the same motives, might work separately, and by different methods, each believing his plan or method of work the best, and hoping by or through it to succeed. This is not co-operation, and this is just what Christians are now doing in Texas.

We will admit, in order to avoid controversy, that Christians generally are willing to co-operate in the great work of preaching the gospel to the world. The great end to be accomplished is the salvation of man; they can be saved only by having the Gospel of Christ preached to them. To this end preachers must go, or be sent; if they go, or if they are sent, they must be supplied with means of support for themselves and families.

There is so far as I know, no difference of opinion among us as to the above statements. The difference comes in when the proposition is made for all to work together: the work must be done; we are sinning against God if we do it not; we all see the necessity of it; we realize our obligations to do it, and yet we split wide apart on the plan or method by which it (the work) is to be done. Why is it thus?

In the general discussions on this subject the main point of the desired co-operation has been hidden under such expressions as "sending the Gospel to the destitute," "support of the ministry," etc. Why not come out in plain words and say that the co-operation so much desired is; that all Christians give of their money, so that the preacher may be sustained while he preaches? This is the beginning, middle and end of all co-operation meetings. All plans proposed at State Meetings, all organizations of societies are for the purpose of raising money.

There is (say they) a great work to be done. What is it? Why, money is needed; money for the support of the preachers, and in order to get this money we must organize! Can money be raised without the organization of a society? Yes. Can the Gospel of Christ be sent to the destitute without an organized society? Yes. Can men co-operate or work together without being organized into a Missionary Society? Yes. But does not a co-operation of individuals, or of bodies, necessarily imply a system or plan or order of work? Most certainly it does, and this is the gist of the whole matter.

The system of redemption given us through Jesus is either perfect or imperfect. If perfect, (and who will dare say it is not?) being itself the effect of co-operation, it must provide everything necessary to the consummation of that work that Jesus began to do while on earth. There can be no life without co-operation; in fact, the law of life, animal, vegetable or spiritual, is CO-OPERATION. The church, the body of Christ, in order to the preservation and perpetuation of its life must work together in the use of those means furnished to it. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." Working together with God for our own salvation! What a grand thought. God our helper. Oh! how earnest, how diligent, how faithful we should be in following out the dictates of the will of God.

But as a church, or churches, or individual Christians, we must not confine our work to self. This is contrary to the spirit and genius of christianity. "No man liveth unto himself." We must live for others; work for their salvation; work together with each other, and with God for the "building in" of good material upon the one foundation. So Paul says, that in preaching Jesus Christ and building persons into the temple of God we are laborers together with God.—1 Cor. iii, 9.

Now, does the law of God provide for this work? Yes. God has ordained that the world is to be saved by the preaching of the Gospel—1 Cor. i, 21; but the Gospel cannot be preached without some one to preach it.—2 Tim. ii, 2; Phil. ii, 16; 1 Thes. i, 8, etc. Preachers or laborers in the word must have a means of support.—1 Cor. ix, 14; Gal. vi, 5; Rom. xv, 29.

Is there any plan, system or order by which this money or means of support is to be raised? There must be a willing mind, a cheerful giving.—2 Cor. viii, 12; 2 Cor. ix, 7; the amount he must give not to be assessed or measured by what others have or give. "As the Lord hath prospered him; as he purposeth in his heart." And finally, in order that no confusion exist, when you come together on every first day of the week cast into the treasury that which you purpose giving.—1 Cor. xvi, 1, 3, 4. If these things be done, then "send once and again" those things, or that means necessary to support your preacher or messenger who is laboring in the field.

If one congregation is not able to support a preacher all the time, cannot two, three, or all the congregations in a given district minister to his wants? No one can successfully deny that these things are taught in the will of God. Shall we work according to this plan, or not? We shall see. More anon.

• PROGRESSIONVILLE, Jan. 28, '86.

BROTHER MCGARY:

As you never get any news from this section, I have concluded to send you the following lines by way of advice, and I hope you will not become offended, for this is an advisory age, you know.

I don't know how you are in regard to co-operation, and building fine churches and educating fine preachers, etc., for I have not had the opportunity of reading but a few of your papers, and of course cannot make a fair estimate of your latitude and longitude, but I hope you have not got so Calvinistic in your observations that you won't allow a man to beg poverty and take in all the loose change of a community where he goes to preach and compel him to preach as long as the proceeds of last year's crop lasts, and then prepare for another.

I have heard so many reports of this kind that I thought I would call you to task about it. You are causing too much commotion among some of our friends who have lately arrived on half-fare tickets from Babylon; they are getting shaky, and have asked me to remonstrate with you about such conduct.

I have been told that there are several churches of your belief in Llano, Burnett and McCulloch counties, and the peculiarities of belief is simply astonishing, if true. Why, they (the elders) challenge every Christian preacher for his authority if he intimates that "he that preaches the gospel must live of the gospel"; and every time he preaches he must not fail to elucidate clearly and plainly the importance of and action and design of baptism preceded by faith and repentance, in order to the remission of sins!! and that they are fanatical on the subject of baptism. Why, this will never do! It will ruin our influence! People will all call us heterodox, and that would never do!

They won't let a man broach the subject of mission work; won't pay a preacher for services of any kind. They even go so far as to create a kind of commissary department to deposit their corn, wheat, potatoes, hay, millet, bacon, eggs, and numerous other things in. Out of this the preacher and other paupers must live. Now, ain't this dreadful? Think of reducing him from his elevated position—making a servant of him! And worse than all, they tell me that Austin McGary is the cause of this outrage being perpetrated.

Ah! offended dignity will squelch you, and forever scorn your very memory. "Repent ye therefore and be converted," and go to work on the other side of the question and elevate those whom you are trying to dethrone. Yes, cause them to rejoice and be exceedingly joyful, because the thorn has been removed from their flesh that so tormented them day and night.

Don't you see the thickening cloud rising in yonder horizon? That is the anathema of the grand conclave whose regular session is once a year. You will soon be enveloped in its destructive elements, and though the birds of the air have nests, and foxes, holes, you will not have where to lay your head.

Don't tamper with injured dignity! You know you can stand the scowls of our brethren of the better class. Besides, our "Missionary Societies" are founded on the experience of those who left Babylon and came over to help us extricate ourselves from the miserable fogynism of the apostles, who were ignorant fishermen, and never went to school a day in their lives, you know.

Why, our preachers were just getting us in nice trim; we were getting popular, and called orthodox, and were sailing along smoothly, with all sails set, when you had to put in your appearance like an evil omen and strike terror into those who had embarked with us on half-fare tickets. You have raised such a commotion among officers and crew that I fear we will have a mutiny on board. You appear to delight in harrassing those half-fare passengers! Why don't you quit? Depart from us and leave us in peace! We will let you have all claim on the apostles old foggy notions. You ought not to try to force them on us who have been reared under the brightness of science, art, law, literature, theology and psychology, in the glorious and advanced 19th century.

They, as they were wholly unlearned, did not know how to shape the gospel so as to fit all of all ages and every clime. Why, what are all of earth going to do if the apostles must be rigidly obeyed? Why, Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, Mormons, Presbyterians, Atheists, Infidels, and all will be eternally lost, world without end! Hadn't you thought of this? Come, fall in with us! Forsake that old Jerusalem ship! She is too old to be safe! Come aboard our vessel; she is new, partially made in Babylon, and we have all the modern appliances and appendages necessary to the comfort of all aboard. We will give you an official position. Our officers are called Elder, Evangelist, Parson, Pastor, etc; those of greater celebrity are beginning to sport the fantastic titles of Rev., D. D., D. D. L. L. D., and a great many other pretty handles, which make us feel proud and fashionable, you know; and they make all of us that only sport that necessary auxiliary, "Parson," to our names, get up and scoot to get to the top of the ladder where fame awaits to crown us! Ah! what a good thing it is to be considered superior to other members of a church—make them look up to you as a kind of a spiritual advisor: then, again, as we advance we will call the members "the laity," and the preachers the "ministry." So you see one step calls for another as we progress.

As long as you continue to batter—whang us with those old foggy notions you can't expect to rise in the social scale and be popular!

and you will be called by such titles as old foggy, Campbellite, crank, and such other obnoxious titles.

And, again, don't you hear the terror stricken cries of the half-fare passengers? I hear the voice of one from California. It is sinful in you to make them writhe and squirm so because it's in your power. Have mercy on them! Assure them of the safety of their grand-mothers and grand-fathers, and the whole apostate church (Roman Catholic) and they will love you better.

Come, draw out of the conflict! Let us have peace, or give us time to negotiate a treaty of peace with some of our Babylonish kindred, so we can have more strength, then we will say with one of olden times, "Lay on McDuff," for in union there is strength; and then we can defy you.

So, taking all things into consideration, suspend hostilities and consider our negotiations for a peaceable settlement of differences; and take into consideration also the many advantages we offer you.

Yours, etc,
BOATSWAINS MATE.

Bro. MCGARY:

Do not our brethren make a mistake in quoting Rev. xviii, 4, to try to establish the fact that God has a people in the Baptist church in order to justify Baptist baptism? They say that the Baptist church is Babylon, and inasmuch as God has a people in Babylon, and the Baptist church is Babylon, therefore, they must be in the Baptist church. I do not think that those brethren would admit that there was a Baptist church in the world at the time John made use of this language. If not, why not, and if the Baptist church is Babylon, and those people who are in it are the people of God, when did they become the people of God? They were not the people of God before they went into Babylon, for they were of the world, and had never been born of water and Spirit. This being so, then they become the people of God by submitting to and obeying the law of an institution that our brethren call Babylon, and John says, "her sins have reached unto heaven, and she has become the habitation of devils, and the hole of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

Is it possible that the people of the world are becoming the people of God by submitting to and obeying the laws of such an institution as the one described? We know that if they are the people of God, they become such by entering into Babylon, for they were of the world before. If that people that are in Babylon (the Baptist church) are the people of God, are they not heirs according to the promise, and if heirs, are not they sons? Has not God sent the Spirit of His Son into their hearts? Now, will those brethren say that those people are in the church of Christ? If so, is not God calling them out of the church of Christ? If they are not in the church of Christ, and God is not calling them out, then, where is God wanting them to come to? Our brethren say, "out of the church of Christ," for they receive them as such; then, how did they become members of the church of Christ? By going into Babylon, for they were of the world before. Now, when these brethren receive one of those Baptists, do not they receive them as being in the kingdom, in the church of Christ, in the body of Christ, in Christ? Then, if God's people are in Babylon, and they in the church of Christ by baptism, then the church of Christ is in Babylon, and the church being the body of Christ, then the body of Christ is in Babylon; and Christ being the head of the body, the church, then Christ is in Babylon; and as the Spirit is in the body and the body is in Babylon, then the Spirit is in Babylon. Can a man be a citizen of two governments at the same time? If not, which government did those people enter first, Babylon, or the church of Christ? Not the church of Christ; for they were of the world when they went into Babylon: then they complied with the laws of the government of Babylon, in order to enjoy the blessings of that government; and the law of that government requires them to repent of their sins first, then they must have faith, next they must tell an experience to the government that they believe that all their sins are pardoned, then the government holds an election whether the applicant be received or not, and if he gets a majority of votes he is baptized in to all the rights and benefits of the government. Now, if one of those persons wished to become a citizen of another government, and were to take a certificate from this government that he had complied with all the requirements of this government, would it entitle him to citizenship in another government, the laws of the two governments being different?

If one government baptizes its converts because they believe their sins are forgiven, in order that they may enjoy the blessings of that government, and another government baptizes its converts for the remission of sins, in order that they may enjoy the remission of sins and the blessings of that government, can the convert of the first claim citizenship in the second, by a shake of the hand? And if the officials of that government shake him in without complying with all the laws of induction into that government, would not the citizens of that government have a right to enter protest against such unlawful citizenship?

Now, you may ask all those Baptist citizens if they believed or considered that they were in the church of Christ while in the Baptist church, and four out of five will say they did not consider themselves in the church of Christ when they left the Baptist church, and will say that if they had so considered they would have stayed where they were. Then, if they do not believe that they were in the church of Christ, how could they say that they were satisfied with their Baptist baptism, it being the act by which they became of the church of Christ?

A word more about Babylon: If John, Rev. xviii, 4, had reference to the Baptist church as being Babylon, would not the Baptists have an unbroken chain back to the apostles? But one of these brethren who try to make their readers believe that the Baptist church is Babylon would deny it in a debate with a Baptist, and would affirm that there was not a Baptist church in the world at the time John made use of the language in Rev. xviii, 4; now, if it is so that the Baptist church is not the Babylon that John spoke of, what will our brethren do for some one to take into the church on this baptism? Inasmuch as they thought that the Baptist church was Babylon, where God's people were, and it has proven not to be Babylon, will they not have to make one more search, or will they continue to say that the Baptist church is Babylon, and then get into a debate with a Baptist and affirm that there was not a Baptist church for over one thousand years after John spoke this language?

M. C. BRANTLEY.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

DEAR SISTERS:

First, I will state that I had a good letter from a sister on "pure and undefiled religion," which I desired to give to the sisters this time, but it was mislaid as soon as read, and cannot be found. Will the sister please give us another?

Sister McCarty's letter on training children, was good. Her advice as to being positive is certainly wise. As it is only by the most implicit obedience to our Heavenly Father that we can obtain eternal fruition, how important it is then that we teach our children implicit obedience to their earthly parents, that they may be ready to yield such obedience to their Heavenly Parent when they have arrived at that age that it will be required of them.

The greatest and often fatal mistake that most parents make, is waiting too long before they begin to require obedience of their children. Few begin earlier than three years, some as late as six, and others never begin at all, the result being such an amount of self-will as to require a great deal of severe punishment to counteract it. I hope that all young mothers who read this will profit by it, as these conclusions are the result of bitter experience. Every mother knows that an infant is very interesting at six months old, and some people advise punishment even at this tender age, but this is utter foolishness and cruelty. No one can know the pain that an infant suffers, and often when it frets apparently for its mother, some pain or uncomfortable feeling is prompting it to fret, otherwise it could be amused.

I have heard a few mothers boast of making a three months old baby hush crying by spanking it, but I have invariably noticed that such mothers were ignorant, and needed governing themselves. A year old child soon learns that fire will burn it, and readily distinguishes between displeasure and approbation, but even then we should be careful about punishing them, as they are liable to so much suffering at this age from teething, which makes them irritable. But as soon as a child can talk it should be controlled, as few children talk earlier than eighteen months. How soon they learn to say "I won't," and call ugly names, and even strike their parents. This should never be allowed.

Solomon's wisdom was from God, and he advises the use of the rod. While a child is very young, the lightest punishment will generally suffice to bring it to terms, and it can thus be brought to obedience so young that in after years it will not remember when it learned obedience. By such early disciplining one can soon have children so trained as to be able to dispense with the rod as soon as reason is developed, for Solomon does not mean to teach that we must use the rod indiscriminately, as long as children are in our power, as some seem to think.

There is great comfort in Solomon's assertion, "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart therefrom." In youth he may be tempted astray, but when he is old and reasonable he will not depart from it.

Paul says, "Provoke not your children to wrath," but how often we forget this. How often are sensitive children ridiculed and teased until anger is aroused. The golden rule is valuable here, as it is in every situation in life.

We should study the disposition of each child, and be influenced thereby in our home government. Christian mothers have such an advantage over women of the world, inasmuch as they have a divine standard to work by, which tells them what and what not to do. Our instructions should be lovingly, tenderly given, forbearing threatening, and we should strive to be so gentle and just that our approbation or disapprobation will be our little one's greatest reward or punishment. Above all things we should make their childhood as happy and free from care as we can lawfully do, remembering that the future holds untold sorrow for all who arrive at manhood and womanhood. Early impressions we know are deepest, and how careful we should be to make the purest impressions on their little hearts, and fill them with the purest and most consistent religious instruction.

For the comfort of some who may have seen their children grow up and depart from that nurture and admonition they have so carefully given them, I subjoin the following:

TROUBLESOME CHILDREN.

There isn't a mother alive to the interests of her children and her own responsibilities, that can help exclaiming, "Who is sufficient for these things!" But when we have done our best, the wisest thing we can do is to leave events with God and not cripple our energies nor waste our time in the contemplation of our own inefficiency and the weight of responsibility resting on us. When we have done all we can to form right habits in our children and correct their faults, they leave us, and the world takes them in hand. The impatient man finds that he must control his temper and repress his hasty words, or he loses by it; the careless man finds that to succeed he must learn to be careful; the arrogant man is taught by snubs to temper his arrogance with civility; the dishonest man finds that "honesty is the best policy," though he may not reduce the maxim to practice in his own life. When we have planted an earnest desire in the hearts of our children to grow every day more and more noble and true; when we have kindled within them the fires of earnest and unquenchable aspiration toward whatever dignifies and exalts human character; when we have given an habitual tendency upward and forward, we have done well by them. The leaven once hidden in their measure of meal will work until the whole lump is leavened.—N. Y. Tribune.

BRO. A'S DILEMMA.

He is visited by a distinguished brother who endeavors to reconcile him. I suppose this is the brother A. who recently encountered a difficulty in that protracted meeting, is it? Yes sir, I am the man, and you—my name is M—, just from Kentucky. I learned of your difficulty, and have come to offer any assistance necessary; before I proceed, however, I wish to ask what profession, if any, had those four men you alluded to in your meeting?

Bro. A. They were ministers.

Bro. M. Ah! Well, I think the difficulty may be met still. Your trouble seems to be twofold:

1. You want to know if you have a right to interfere with another man's conscience; and

2. Whether the confession as taught by our brethren was a prerequisite to baptism?

A. That's it. I see you apprehend my trouble at once, and I must say that if there is any one man in the brotherhood who can solve this problem I think you are the man. Having enjoyed the most liberal education at "Bethany," and having so long been held as authority among our brethren, I feel like the case would be safe in your hands.

M. Just so.

A. But in your explanations I wish you to make everything very clear, because there are at this time several brethren in this State (Texas) who are almost as much perplexed over these questions as myself.

M. Very well. When I shall have done with the matter it will appear as clear as the noonday sun. I will proceed to notice the first difficulty. Every man's conscience is not alike; for instance, one may imagine he has got religion, right here in the blaze of gospel light.

The Hindoo mother feels as if she would be lost if she fails to sacrifice her child; she accordingly takes it to the river Ganges and casts it in and rejoices because she has a good conscience. So it was with the Apostle Paul: He had a good conscience while he persecuted the church. You see that although these persons had a good conscience, they did very differently. Following the dictates of their respective consciences had a very different effect upon the community.

A. So I see; but now I think I have the right—being enlightened—to interfere with their consciences and teach such the truth.

M. So you have, for these are not educated in the truth at all. These have a conscience, but no correct conception of the truth.

A. But what troubles me, is, that these persons do all this in order to honor God. Don't you think so?

M. Well, but suppose they do; they are ignorant of the truth, and consequently are not able to glorify Him.

A. Well, Bro. M., to apply your rule to the cases in our difficulty presented in the February issue of THE FIRM FOUNDATION with reference to the case of C., D. and E., would he to require them to make the "good confession" and be baptized, because they thought they had got religion, and continued to preach that doctrine until they heard our brethren.

M. That may be true, but do you not remember that C. and D. were immersed? and undoubtedly they did it "to obey God." As to the "good confession" you speak of, I don't think we should contend for any particular form. They all require a "statement" which, though not identical with the one required by us, yet I think sufficient.

A. Yes, but they thought they "got religion," and according to your own theory, had a very poor conception of truth, to say the least of it. And as to the "statement," they said they believed "God, for Christ's sake, had pardoned their sins." This they believed until they heard our brethren. Now, it seems that Jesus has said somewhere that "ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you freq." The question in my mind is, did C. and D. know the truth before they heard our brethren? If they did, our brethren do not teach it, for they converted O., D. and E. from what they had formerly thought was right.

M. Well, I must admit that this is a rather knotty question. Don't you think, however, that this is a bad time to spring this question? We are getting on so well with the sects that this question is liable to retard their conversion. Besides this, there was an effort made some years since to introduce this very question among our brethren, but was put down, and I look for the same result now.

A. As to whether this is a good or bad time has nothing to do with the positions assumed by our brethren. If C. and D. are in the kingdom on account of having made a "statement" which can be squeezed or stretched to mean something similar, or equal to the confession, and being immersed, then we ought to baptize all our children as soon as they can make the "statement," whether they understand the gospel or not; this puts them into the kingdom; and as to the previous fate of this question compared with the present prospect, I would repeat the proverb, "Truth crushed to earth will rise again." But it seems that in our investigation we have left E. out altogether.

M. Well, that is true. You say he was sprinkled, and was satisfied with his obedience?

A. Yes.

M. But he had not been immersed.

A. Well, but what he did was to "honor God."

M. That may all be true, but he failed to do the right thing "in the right way."

A. Bro. M., what is your chief objection to baptizing the sects who come and unite with us?

M. Why, it is this: I don't want to be guilty of repeating any of the commands of the gospel, such as believe, repent, confess, or be baptized. These I understand to be a fixed law not to be repeated.

A. Very well; now, what is your custom when anyone presents himself for membership who has been sprinkled?

M. Why, I take his confession and baptize him.

A. But why have him make the confession if the "statement" made by the immersed is sufficient? Why would not this sprinkled man's—or in other words, why would not E's statement do?

M. Well, Bro., I am very sorry you got into this thing. I would not speak of this. Besides confusing the minds of some, I am afraid it will "cripple your influence." I would rather have lost the best horse I have than to have had you get into this thing. I thought a great deal of you.

A. Thank you Bro. M. for your sympathy. But are you not going to help me out of this dilemma? I thought that was your business out here in Texas.

M. W-e-l-l, it did seem an easy task at first, but I see we can't agree. I never saw one who believed as you do who could be convinced. I shall have to return immediately. I am very busy just now. Good-bye Bro. A.

Farewell Bro. M; I wish you a safe return.

BRO. A. MCGARY:

I have been reading the last few numbers of THE FIRM FOUNDATION on a credit. Inclosed find postal note for one dollar, for which I trust you will continue to make THE FIRM FOUNDATION a regular visitor at my house.

I noticed a piece some two months back in THE FIRM FOUNDATION written by Bro. I. C. Stone, of Indiana, intimating that The American Christian Review was gradually being drawn into the whirlpool of innovations. The Review is a regular visitor at my house, and it and THE FIRM FOUNDATION are both good mental food to me, because they taste of the bible, and if The American Christian Review has ever been seen except with uplifted hands, and exerting its full strength in defence of the gospel plan of salvation, I, for one, have failed to see it.

Brother McGary, my desire is that those of us who love God more than we love the wealth, fashions and honors of the world will be careful to exercise christian charity, and will continually be filled with an earnest desire for each others welfare, and for a united strength in battling for the great plan of salvation as given by Christ and the Apostles.

J. C. HANCOCK.

NOTHING GAINED IN PREACHING JESUS COR- RECTLY.

In our last issue we claim that we showed, beyond all cavil, that Bro. J. W. McGarvey was occupying glaringly inconsistent grounds on the question of "the good confession." As we said then, so we say now, that we were not moved to write that article through any kind of desire to injure Bro. McGarvey. If proof should be demanded to this statement we think that our published letter which accompanied that exposition should suffice.

We have had our eye upon this attitude of Bro. McGarvey's for quite a while, but we wrote him in the hope that he would see it himself and take a stand for truth. We would gladly have spared him the unenviable attitude that thousands now see he occupies if he would have abandoned the "plea," for the truth. But when our big men begin to overshadow truth, and darken the "heaven-and-earth bound way" for the traditions of the nineteenth century fathers, they are not entitled to any more exemption from exposure than the veriest sectarian that ever perverted the gospel of Christ.

We are aware that it is unpopular to call attention to the inconsistencies of our popular authors, and that it is looked upon by that large class of our brethren who hold "men's persons in admiration because of advantage," as a great piece of presumption on our part to venture to do such things. But, brethren, while we are conscious of our own personal weaknesses, it nerves us sufficiently for the conflict when we remember that our weapon is "quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword," and we shall not fear to assault the most formidable citadels of strength that our "wisest" men can entrench themselves in, so long as they build upon "sand" instead of the rock Christ Jesus.

True soldiers of Christ will soon "learn not to think of men above that which is written"—"Let no man deceive himself. If any man seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, for it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. And again, the Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain."

To "teach" and then baptize the taught, is to act by the authority of God. But to baptize those who are untaught is to be guided by the wisdom of the world, which is foolishness with God. Or, to sanction such work after it has been done by another, is just as foolish in God's sight.

In our last issue we promised to show Bro. McGarvey's inconsistency from another standpoint, which we now proceed to do. On page 99, of McGarvey's Commentary, we find this: "And as they went along the road they came to a certain water. And the eunuch said, what hinders me to be immersed?" "The appearance of the water to which they had come suggested this question, but it could not have done so unless the eunuch had been taught something concerning immersion as a religious ordinance. But he had enjoyed no opportunity for instruction on this subject, except through the teaching of Philip. Had Philip, then, preached him a sermon on immersion? No. Luke says "Philip preached to him Jesus." How then had he, while hearing Jesus preached, obtained instruction in reference to immersion? There is only one answer to this question. It is, that to preach Jesus after the apostolic method involves full instruction upon the subject of immersion. The prejudices therefore which exist at the present day against frequent introduction of this subject in discourses addressed to sinners, is altogether unscriptural; and those only preach Jesus correctly who give to it the same prominence which belongs to it in apostolic discourses."

Now we would ask, if Baptists and Methodists give "full instruction upon the subject of immersion?" If not, according to Bro. McGarvey, they do not "preach Jesus after the apostolic method." Then, if their converts are immersed into Christ despite their failure to pursue the "apostolic method," the apostolic method has ceased to be "binding," and men may follow it or not, according to their tastes, and at the same time be pursuing "the straight and narrow way."

Again, we would ask if Baptists and Methodists give to immersion "the same prominence which belongs to it in apostolic discourses?" If they do not, according to Bro. McGarvey, they do not "preach Jesus correctly." Then, if they immerse their converts into Christ despite their failure to "preach Jesus correctly," nothing is gained by "preaching Jesus correctly." There is a correct way to preach Jesus, but it does not matter whether it is followed or not!!

Brethren, we ask those of you who are calling those who cannot mark time to this marching and counter-marching of our worldly wise, "A Modern Apostasy," if you are not "straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel?" More anon.

A. MCG.

—In our last issue we published a short letter from Bro. McGarvey, which displeased its author. Although the letter was private we saw no reason why we should not make it public, as we did. But the displeasure of Bro. McGarvey alone causes us to regret that we published it without his consent. We are also sorry that we said we did not believe the sentiments of that letter were conscientious; but we do believe his conscientious sentiments on that question were expressed in his "Commentary." To say this much even implies what we did say. We are truly sorry that our leading men have taken such a course in reference to the baptismal question as to justify those of us who are determined to stand by the truth, to show up their inconsistencies in order to force them to an issue. But THE FIRM FOUNDATION is determined to contend for the faith delivered to the saints, if every inconsistent line that it can find that has been written by the living or the dead has to be pointed out by it. Every brother who has written a book setting forth the gospel in all its parts, and who is now trying to defend sect baptism, may be shown to be inconsistent, because it is impossible to declare the whole counsel of God without condemning the doctrines of men. Baptism for any other purpose than for what God appointed it, is a doctrine of men, and vain. To go down into water and be immersed through any motive other than that held out in the gospel, is no more the "one baptism" or a birth of "water and the Spirit" than would be immersion in sand." The books of all our leading men are on our side. If our leaders hope to escape exposure they must quickly do as did the men of "curious arts," at Ephesus, when Paul met them with the same truth that THE FIRM FOUNDATION is advocating. But, brethren, if you burn them all, the loss will be more than "fifty thousand pieces of silver."

—THE article signed "Boatswains Mate," is from one of our preachers whom we have never met, tho' we have heard much of him. We judge from what we see of him in the columns of the "Guide" sometimes, that he has not yet been "spotted" as one of the "Modern Apostasy."

—SOME of our Texas contemporaries say that there ought not be but one paper in Texas. Well, then, that paper ought to be THE FIRM FOUNDATION, for it is the only one that will "contend for the faith delivered to the saints" without addition or subtraction.

CORRECTION: Where there is a mistake that does not destroy the sense we do not call attention to it. But in this issue we have occasion to make several corrections. On page 2, last column, 43 lines from top, we find the word perpetration where we said preparation. And in the 53d line, same column, we are made to say resources where we said measures. On page 8, last column, 47 lines from top, we find "are borne out by the Scriptures," which should read, are not borne out by the Scriptures. On page 4, last column, 50th line from top, is "hallsoing instead of halloing."

LA PORTE, IND; Feb. 16, 1886.

Dear Brother McGary: I wish to say to the readers of the FIRM FOUNDATION that I have been requested to write an article setting forth the proper or Scriptural plan of raising money to defray the necessary expenses of the Church. The request to which I respond is that I shall more particularly show how the money should be raised to pay or sustain those who go and preach the Gospel. I am aware, in the outset, that this at present is a vexed question; therefore, I cannot hope to satisfy all parties; but I will, in as brief and plain a manner as possible, give the ideas I have, and my reasons for those ideas. In the first place, then, I will state that Jesus declared, while in the world and with his disciples, that he would build his Church upon the great truth that he was the Christ, the Son of God. He said to Peter, who had just confessed this truth referring to himself, "On this rock I will build my Church." He further says, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven," etc. Now, from what he said immediately after, to Peter, that he should bind and loose on earth, we conclude that the kingdom to which he referred was on earth. Now I wish to remark that in all kingdoms on earth, either human or divine, it has always been necessary to use money or its equivalent for the maintenance and perpetuation of those kingdoms. Again, I wish to state that in all cases, so far as I now remember, it has been obligatory upon the citizens of every such kingdom to furnish the means for the sustenance of the kingdoms of which they were citizens. In Numbers, 18: 21, the Lord says, "And behold I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation. God, as their king at that time, required of his subjects the tenth of all their income for the support of the Levites who did all the tabernacle service. I might cite many passages to the same effect, but this is enough to prove the correctness of my statement above, that on the subjects of a kingdom devolves the obligation of furnishing the means to maintain the laws of the kingdom. The necessity of earthly means to sustain His servants while engaged in His worship and service. In harmony with this last idea, when Jesus was born in Bethlehem, Matthew tells us that when the wise men who came from the East had found Him, they opened their treasures and presented unto Him gifts: gold and frankincense and myrrh.

Again, we learn from Mat., 27: 55, and Mark, 15: 41, that certain women ministered to Jesus during his lifetime. We also learn from John, 13: 27, 28, 29, that Christ and His disciples had a purse, and that Judas was their treasurer, or held their funds. I cite these Scriptures only to show to all that the Lord has always recognized the fact that while His servants were in this world they must have the means necessary to subsistence. If a man preaches the Gospel, he must have food and raiment. If he has a family, they, too, need the same. If they are so fortunate as to have plenty of the good things of this world, all right; then, if they have the love of Christ and His cause at heart, they will preach the Gospel according to their ability. If they have not of their own a sufficiency, but love Christ and His cause and desire to proclaim it, and are competent, then the friends of the cause should sustain such an one in his labors. (I mean by the friends of the cause the members of the Church—the citizens of the kingdom.) But we must now address ourselves to the showing how the means are to be raised. This seems to be the difficulty. Now here I wish to call the attention of all to this fact, that under the law all were compelled to give; but under Christ each is to give as he may purpose in his heart. Paul says, "Therefore, I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your bounty, whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty and not of covetousness. But this I say, he who soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he who soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully; every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loves a cheerful giver." 2 Cor., 9: 5, 6, 7. The foregoing shows that their contributions were to be free, voluntary gifts. This contribution was for the ministering to the necessity of the Saints. It appears from this that they were to collect together all the means that they were willing to give for the necessities of the Saints. It was to be given by the members of the congregation at Corinth to be ready for the brethren from Philippi, whom Paul had sent, and to be delivered to them that they might carry it to its destination. It appears that they had had notice of the matter before, that the money was needed, and they were simply to give what they were willing to give. The Apostle tells those Corinthians that the Churches of Macedonia and Achaia had been ready for a year to give, even beyond their power, for the ministering to the Saints; and he tells them, as they abounded in everything—in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence—to see that they abound in this grace also. He says, "Now, therefore, perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so let there be a performance also out of that which ye have; for if there first be a willing mind it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." From the passage above quoted, 2 Cor., 8: 11, 12, we understand that they did not send out some one to take pledges, as they do now. In the foregoing passages the Apostle has been telling them to collect their money by free contributions out of the money they had, and not out of that they did not have; and that they should do this cheerfully, for that the Lord loves a cheerful giver, etc. Now, in 1 Cor., 16: 1, 2, he says, "Now, concerning the collection for the Saints, as I have given order to the Churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

But some may say, this was for the poor. If the preacher is among the poor, is it not for him too? Ought not he to have his share, if he be poor? But Paul says something more here: "And it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey wheresoever I go." By this did he not mean that they should furnish him the means of travel on his way? All certainly know he did. Then the Church at Corinth was, by this direction, to contribute means to enable Paul to go on his journey, and to give it directly to Paul. There was no missionary society, with a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and all these modern appliances. The congregations voluntarily furnished the money directly to the preacher, without any society or paid secretaries. Paul tells the Philippians that in the beginning of the Gospel, when he departed from Macedonia, no Church communi-good things. Is not this a direct command from the Apostle to those who receive the teaching to give directly to the one who does the teaching? It looks just that way to me.

It seems to me to be easy enough to follow the teaching of the Apostles if one desires to follow it. Their teaching and practice was simple. I do not mean that it is foolish, but that it is plain and easy. If I had any amount to give for the preaching of the Gospel, ought not I to know whom I desired to have it, and where I desired he should preach? If so, could I not give or send it to him and instruct him where to go and preach? If a dozen or one hundred persons have a sum of money which they wish to give to a preacher, can they not put their money together and give or send it to the preacher, and tell him where the preaching is to be done? Is there any need for a separate society, with a certain quota of officers to handle the money? Such as that I call foolishness, and I am afraid it is worse than foolishness. It is, to say the least of it, without precept or example from the Scriptures. And since Paul says that the Scriptures furnish us to all good work, it is no good work. There could be a volume written on this subject, but there has certainly been enough said to show that the simplest way is the Lord's way, and that is for all who have the means and wish to give, to give directly to the object; and if it be but a cup of cold water, give it in the name of a disciple of Christ, and not in the name of any human society; such societies are but an incubus on the Church. They have been built up by money-lovers and fame-seekers, men who are lovers of themselves. They are but leeches fastened on the congregations of the Lord to drain them of their means to support certain preachers who will preach society instead of preaching Jesus, until all the congregations are brought into the societies, where the pastor and presidents and secretaries can manipulate everything and lord it over God's heritage.

But my article is already too long.

Readers of the FIRM FOUNDATION, let us resist all such work with all our power.

May God bless and prosper the FIRM FOUNDATION and all its readers and contributors.

I. O. STONE

THE SEED IS THE WORD OF GOD

Our object in quoting this Scripture is to call the attention of the reader mostly to the beautiful parable that the Saviour uses of the sower and the seed.

but we also wish to call attention to some other matters taught in connection with that, and we request our readers to read the first twenty-one verses of the eighth chapter of Luke in order to get the connection.

Luke says that the twelve, (Apostles,) were with Him, (the Saviour,) and certain women who had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, names the women and says they ministered unto Him of their substance or property. The Saviour was poor. He says: "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the son of man hath not where to lay His head." Luke 9: 58. Oh how poor the Saviour became that we might be made rich. Not rich in houses and lands, and the goods of this world, but rich in faith, in good works, in Heavenly treasures, that will endure through eternity. These women did not know Him as the Son of God, the Saviour of sinners; but as a prophet, a good man, and they loved Him because of the temporal blessings He had bestowed upon them, and if they loved Him so much on that account, how much more ought we to love Him since we have learned that He is our Saviour, that He has loved us and died for us, and that it is only through Him that we can be saved.

"When much people were gathered together, and were come to Him out of every city, He spake unto them a parable." Luke 8: 4. What does the word parable mean? All language, or words, used by the Holy Spirit mean something; but if we blunder along over these words, (as is so often done), without understanding their meaning, we are not benefited by what we read. It is like hearing two Germans talking when we don't understand their language. Then what does the word parable mean? Webster, in defining it, says it is a moral fable. Paul, in writing to his son Timothy, says: "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts will they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they will turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned to fables." Now Paul makes a fable the opposite of truth, which is a lie. Then put Webster's definition of parable, (a moral fable), by the side of Paul's definition of fable, (a lie), and what have we got; why a moral lie. Was there ever such a thing as a moral lie? We hear people talk about white lies; but that is a mistake,—there is no such thing—they are all black and emanate from the prince of darkness, the Devil, and people, particularly Christians, ought not to pattern after him. Then let the bible be its own definer of its own language, and we learn from the use that was made of parables, the meaning of the word. A parable is something taken by a speaker or writer, with which the people to whom he is speaking or writing, are familiar, to illustrate, or explain something, with which they are not familiar.

After the Saviour had given the parable embracing the fifth and eighth verses, "He cried: he that hath ears to hear let him hear." All have ears; but the Saviour was talking about him that had a disposition, inclination, or desire to hear, don't throw any stumbling blocks in his way. "His disciples asked Him saying: what might this parable be?" Verse 9. What do you intend to illustrate by it? "And He said: unto you it is given to understand the mysteries of the kingdom of God; but to others in parables, that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand." Verse 10. Some people quote this verse to prove that God did, from eternity, predestinate a certain part of the human family to be saved and a certain part to be lost; but it does not convey that idea to my mind. The disciples did not understand it until it was explained to them. We learn from Mark 4: 34, that without a parable He did not speak to the people, and would explain them to His disciples when they were alone. Why did He do that? Because, if the people had known that He was the Christ, (which they would have known if He had taught them in literal language), they would not have crucified Him, and that was what He came to this world for, that He might die for their sins. Wicked as the Jews and Gentiles were, they were not wicked enough to have crucified their Saviour believing at the time they did it that He was the Son of God. Paul says that the princes of this world would not have crucified the Lord of glory if they had known Him; 1 Cor. 2: 8. When the time had come for Him to be put to death, He quit teaching in parables, and after His crucifixion and ascension His Apostles taught plainly, without a parable.

"Now the parable is this: the seed is the word of God," (not the word of men), verse 11, and the Saviour explains it to His disciples. He says the Devil takes the word, or seed, out of the hearts of the wayside hearers, (what for?) lest they should believe and be saved. He is smarter than most of the popular preachers in this age of the world; he knows how faith comes, that it comes by hearing the word of God, and that if he can steal the seed, the word, out of their hearts, that they will not believe and that if they do not believe, they will not be saved. In giving the parable the Saviour says of this class that the fowls of the air devoured it; but in explaining it to His disciples, He says the Devil took it out of their hearts. How is that? Does Jesus contradict Himself? He says the kingdom of Heaven is like a grain of mustard, that when it comes up it puts forth branches and the fowls of the air shall eat it. Matt. 13: 31. What do these fowls represent? Men and women who hear the gospel, believe it, and obey it, and come into the kingdom of Christ. The fowls in the parable represent wicked men and women who reject the gospel of Christ and steal the seed out of the hearts of those that are disposed to hear it, and being wicked, they are the servants of the Devil, his agents, and what one does by his agent he does himself; hence the Saviour says the fowls of the air devoured it, and the Devil takes it away, no contradiction.

The second class, they on the rock, represent those who hear, receive the word with joy, as far as they are taught, understand it; but not being sufficiently taught, and not understanding God's system of salvation, their stony hearts are not broken up, the little seed that is sown in them soon sprouts under the exciting influences of camp-meeting scenes; but as soon as the meeting is over, and the excitement dies, and the scorching rays of temptation and trials begin to beam upon them, the seed wilts or dies for want of moisture, and it lacks moisture because the stony heart has not been broken up by hearing and understanding God's word, the seed, hence the Prophet Jeremiah says: "Is not my word like as a fire? Saith the Lord, and like as a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Jer. 23: 29. The reception and understanding of God's word, the seed, breaks up the sinner's stony heart.

With the third class, which embraces the great majority of the human family, the good seed is choked by the cares and riches and pleasures of this life, so that it brings no fruit to perfection (verse 14), and imperfect fruit is not marketable. Oh, how men are loving and striving for money! And they want the money that they may gratify their appetites, passions and lusts, and not to glorify their Heavenly Father; for if they wanted to glorify Him they would be willing to raise and spend it in the way He directs; but instead of that they get up missionary and all sorts of other societies for the purpose of inducing the world, the children of the devil, to give of their means to build up the kingdom of Christ, and support such men as W. T. Moore, who, instead of building up the Church of Christ, is pulling it down, and bringing upon the cause of our blessed Redeemer disgrace and contempt. Oh, what a shame! And what a number of our leading, and heretofore thought to be good and sound men, are going into these institutions that are unanctioned, unauthorized by the word of the Lord! And I do believe He will demand of you, "Who hath required this at your hands?" Oh, brethren, be careful, not only for your own sakes, but for the sake of those whom you are leading off from the right way.

The fourth and last class receive the seed into "honest and good hearts, and keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience" (verse 15). This class reads and studies and meditates upon the word of the Lord, day and night; and they can say with the Psalmist David: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in Thy sight, O, Lord, my strength and my Redeemer." (Psalms, 119: 14.) This class brings forth fruit, the fruit of the Spirit.

But now a man may have ever so good a field, as to productiveness; his farming implements may be of the best kind; he may rise early and plow diligently; the sunshine and rain may be propitious to the growth of a crop; but if he does not put the seed into the ground he cannot raise a crop. He must sow seed, and the crop will always be like the seed that is sown—that is, if he sows wheat, he will raise wheat; if rye, he will raise rye, and so on. That being the case, how comes it that there is such a great variety of religious crops in the world, if the word of God is the seed, as the Saviour says it is? Is there any Scriptural explanation of this state of things?

In Leviticus (19: 19), the Heavenly Father, through Moses, gave a law to the Jews, prohibiting their sowing their fields with mingled (or mixed) seed, and wearing garments mingled with linen and woolen.

Now, why did the Heavenly Father give the Jews that law? Was it that he cared about their mixing their seed when they sowed it, or wore garments made of different kinds of material? No. Well, why? Paul says: "These things happened unto them (the Jews) for examples, and they are written for our admonition." (1 Cor., 10: 11.) And, brethren, we ought to be admonished not to unite human teaching with the word of God. And Peter says: "Desire the sincere (or unmingled) milk of the word, that we may grow thereby." (1 Peter, 2: 2.) It is the mixture that has caused so much trouble in the religious world.

A man has a boy, an only child, and, as is common, he thinks he is more than ordinarily smart, and he wants to make something more than common of him. He ponders in his mind for some time what it will be, and eventually he concludes that he would like him to be a great military chieftain, like Alexander the Great or Bonaparte. Now, what sort of seed will he begin to sow into the heart of that little boy? Not the word of God, for that would make him a soldier of the cross, and not one that would take the lives of his fellow beings; but he would get military books and the lives of military chieftains, and get him to read them, that he might cultivate in his heart a desire to become a military character. But suppose he wants him to become a Catholic priest, that he may receive money from his fellow beings for pretending to forgive their sins, what sort of seed would he sow in that case? Why, he would sow a little seed out of the Old Testament, and not much, and the Catholic world, by reading Catholic literature.

Suppose he wanted to make a Lutheran or a Calvinist of him, then he would get the writings of those men and induce him to read them, which are more or less mixed with the word of God. If he wanted him to be a Campbellite or a Mormon he would get the writings of Campbell, or the Book of Mormon and Mormon literature, and get him to read them. And so with all the different parties and isms that are to-day the curse of the religious world, and which parties and isms are the result of mixing different kinds of seed with God's word, and the crop is always, yes always, like the seed that is mixed; that is, if you want a Methodist crop mix Methodist seed and the crop will be Methodist, and so on, and so on; but if he wanted to make a Christian of him, simply a Christian, nothing more, nothing less, then what sort of seed? The word of God, the seed of the kingdom, unmixed, unadulterated.

The Savior speaks of another kind of seed that is sown abundantly, which he calls tares, and which he says the devil sows.—Matt., xiii, 24-30 and 39. But how does the devil sow that seed, in person? No. He commenced sowing it in the Garden of Eden, by entering into the most wily, cunning beast that God had made, and talking through the beast to the woman. But since that time he has not had so much trouble finding instruments through which to operate, and has been using false prophets and false teachers.—See 2 Pet., ii, 1-3. And Paul says that his ministers are transformed as the ministers of righteousness.—2 Cor., xi, 13-15.

Let us give an illustration or example of this sowing. A preacher commences a protracted meeting; he tells the people that they must first repent, then they must exercise saving faith, which is a direct gift of God, and as soon as they have that faith they are saved; then they must make "a statement" that they believe that God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven their sins, they must then be baptized after taking the vote of the church, because their sins are remitted, and to get into the Baptist church (an institution unknown in God's word).

Now, brethren, what kind of seed is that? Is it the word of God? Speak! speak! I think I hear a still, small voice saying no, but it is tares. Well, then, what sort of a crop does that sort of seed produce? Children of the kingdom? children of light? Speak! brethren, speak! Methinks I hear other still small voices saying—no, but of darkness. Well, then, when one or more of these children present themselves to you, that have been carried through that process, can you by a shake of the hand transform them into the children of God, the children of light? You ought to say no, whether you will or not, and say it loud.

One more example, and I will close this lengthy article. Three preachers, A, B, and C, commence a protracted meeting, and an individual comes forward and takes his seat. After the singing brother A asks him, "Do you believe that God for Christ's sake has forgiven your sins?" and proposes to carry him through the Baptist process. Oho, oho! say brothers B. and C., that will never do in the world. Our Heavenly Father has given us a perfect pattern to be governed by in these matters. He gave Moses a pattern by which he required him to work in building the tabernacle pertaining to the flesh; how much more important it is that we go by the pattern He has given us for the building of the spiritual tabernacle." Yet if he had come from the Baptists and been carried through this same process, it would have been all right! Now, brethren, by what line of argument or reasoning do you arrive at the conclusion that an individual carried through that process by a Baptist preacher, is more acceptable to the Heavenly Father, than if he had been carried through it by a preacher of Christ? We would like to know, for if your conclusion is reached by scripture and sound reasoning, then the preachers of Christ ought to stop, and let the Baptists do all the preaching. Oh, brethren! stop and think, and turn away from your inconsistencies, and love of popularity and money.

E. HANSBROUGH.

SECTARIANS.

The dogmatic spirit which seems to prevail among some of our scribes, in denouncing or stigmatizing all who differ from them as "sectarians," "schismatics," "heretics," "hobbyists" etc, is somewhat like that spirit manifested by James and John, in wishing to call down fire from Heaven to consume those villagers who would not receive Jesus. The rebuke then administered by the Master is applicable now:—"Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of; for the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Luke 9: 51-56. The same impetuous spirit prompted Peter to use the sword in defense of his Master. Luke 22: 60. The language of Jesus to this impulsive disciple, 22: 32, might be studied with profit by some disciples now. "When you are converted strengthen the brethren." Wholesale denunciation of brethren as, "troublers of Churches," coupled with hints, innuendoes, and insinuations of something dark, hidden or corrupt in their motives, or in their lives, exhibits more of the spirit of the politician or place-hunter, than of the spirit of Christ. Any cause that depends for support upon such methods will never succeed; and the men who use such methods, demonstrate thereby, a conscious inability to cope with their opponents in a fair, open and manly course of investigation and argument for the sake of truth and right. What is a sect? The Greek word from which we have this word, occurs nine times in the New Testament. It translated in our common version five times, "sect," and four times "heresy." According to McKnight, Adam Clarke, Lange, and others, the word, as used in the Testament, had a middle signification indicating simply a choice, and was applied indiscriminately to any party or body of men, without respect to their opinions or practice. Alexander Campbell says: "As the word sect or heresy, found only in the Acts of the Apostles, and Epistles, does always in the former simply mean a party without any regard to its tenets, the term has nothing in it either reproachful or honorable, nothing virtuous or vicious." In the Epistles and under the Christian Institution, it is used "in a bad sense and always connected with censure." Parties formed in the Church of Christ are direct ruptures of that bond of union, which constitutes one of the fundamental principles of the Christian religion. Every division or subdivision of the body into parts, contributes to the destruction of the body. Hence the sin of so many religious bodies, denominations, parties, or sects, all claiming to be in and of the Church of Christ. In applying to the bodies, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians etc., the term "sect," we use the word scripturally. While each of them claims to be of Christ, and all hold to a common bond of union called Orthodoxy, making thus a false show of unity, they work persistently against each other and each one strives earnestly and faithfully to build up its own party to the exclusion of the others.

These words in their Scriptural application, "never relate to doctrine, tenet, opinion or faith." "Heresies" are classed by the Apostle among the "works of the flesh." Gal. 5: 20; and Peter speaks of "false teachers, who will privily introduce destructive heresies, denying even the Lord who bought them, bringing on themselves swift destruction." 2 Peter, 2: 1, McKnight's Version. Preference for and attachment to men as leaders was the origin of "sects" or parties in the Church at Corinth. These contentions were condemned and the parties thereto declared to be "carnal," 1 Cor., 3: 1-4. The "false teachers" spoken of by Peter, who introduced destructive parties into the Church were "carnal," and walked "after the flesh and not after the spirit." It is generally taught that Peter has reference here to destructive doctrines, or doctrines that divide and destroy. These false teachers are the same as the heretic mentioned Titus, 3: 10, 11—"An heretical man, after a first and second admonition, reject. Knowing that such a person is perverted and sinneth, being self-condemned." On this passage McKnight observes:

"An heretic is one who, from worldly motives, teaches doctrines which he knows to be false; as the Judaizers did who made the rituals enjoined by the law more necessary to salvation than a holy life. . . . In the first age, when the doctrines of the Gospel were delivered by the Apostles in person, under the guidance of inspiration, and when the true meaning of these doctrines was not liable to any doubt, because it was ascertained by the Apostles themselves, if any teacher taught differently from them, and made a party in the Church in opposition to them, he must have done these things contrary to his conscience, either from love of money, or the lust of power, or from an immoderate propensity to sensual pleasure. Hence (Gal., 5: 20), heresy is reckoned "among the works of the flesh."

There are sects (parties) now. There may be false teachers, such as above described, who are working to build up and perpetuate the sect or party; but it is certainly wrong to call a brother a sectarian or a heretic because you differ from him in opinion or doctrine.

Truth is not a skulker, not a coward, nor does it ever put on the dress of the blatant demagogue. Modest and retiring, yet firm and patient, it appeals to reason, and enforces its claims in the spirit of love.

Some brethren, writing and speaking about the FIRM FOUNDATION and the writers for it, have been unsparing in their denunciations of what they term "apostasy." Many very hard things have been said of us, and that, too, by Christian editors and preachers.

Why all this dogmatism? "Sectarians"? If so, brethren, we are all in the same sect. Apostates? From what have we apostatized? Show us one single item of "the faith once delivered to the saints" that we have discarded. No, no, brethren; we are not trying to build up a party; nor do we hold men's persons in admiration; neither have we denied the faith. But we do most earnestly contend for "the faith." Fidelity to the word of God in all things. If the various bodies or denominations are sects in the Church of Christ, it must be that the sect or party is but the effect of some carnal principle or work of the flesh. If they (the members of each respective party) were Christians—nothing more, nothing less, nothing different—there would be no parties, all would be "one in Christ." That which constitutes them partisans is not of the Gospel, but of the flesh. The authority to which they yield themselves is of man, and renders them servants of a creed or party rather than of God. The truth as it is in Jesus—the Gospel of Christ—is perverted, and this, too, in order to build up a party. Is obedience to a perverted Gospel obedience to Christ? It is answered, sometimes, "these parties believe in Christ and desire to obey Him, and they conscientiously believe that they have obeyed Him." This we do not deny, but we find upon examination of the word of truth that "remission of sins" is not made to depend upon our desires, neither is it based upon piety, or morality, or conscientiousness. We must obey from the heart the command given by the authority of Jesus for the remission of sins. It is urged, however, if a person believes in Christ, and is immersed, that such an one receives the blessing, "remission of sins," in spite of his ignorance, or rather unbelief as to the design of baptism. I regard this as very unsafe and doubtful teaching. It is a virtual admission that the will of God may be bent to suit the consciences of men, and simply places ourselves in the ranks of the various denominations as another sect. To preach Christ and Him crucified is to preach Him in person, office and work. What He did for man, and what He proposes to do, is certainly "glad news" to many sin-burdened souls. Is it not also "glad news" when it is so plainly taught what we must do in order to obtain the proposed blessings? Most undoubtedly it is. Now, how much of this Gospel may be omitted, and yet it prove God's power unto salvation? I dare not make the trial. But this article is already, perhaps, too lengthy. Brethren, we want more love. In our investigations and search after truth, let us imitate the Master. He was condescending: "though rich in glory, He became poor that we, through His poverty, might become rich." We should not be too high-minded, "but condescend to men of low estate." Teach the ignorant, with compassionate tenderness, and remember His words: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"—Matt. 4: 4. J. W. J.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

Pure and undefiled religion, James says, is to visit the widows and orphans in their afflictions, and to keep one's self unspotted from the world. Now, brothers and sisters, how often do we visit the widows in each congregation and inquire into their afflictions; for I don't know of any greater affliction than to be destitute of food and raiment; though some think it only means to visit them when they are sick from disease. Sometimes they are made sick by doing without the proper food and clothing and fire in winter. I don't think James thought the poor widow would have to go to the brethren and make her wants known every time she was hungry, but that we, as Christians, would be glad of an opportunity to do religion; but how seldom is pure religion ever done, as much fuss as is made about it. The poor widow is hardly ever thought of unless her name is called, and then some good sister will be heard to say, "poor thing, I wonder how she is getting along? Very well, though, I reckon." And that is the last of it; she never goes to see.

Now don't understand me to think the widow's every want ought to be gratified, but I do think they should be helped more than they are, when they are trying to support themselves; for it isn't every widow can teach school or plow other. Some are dependent on another and some another, and I do think, if the sisters hire their sewing and washing done, they should give it to them to do in preference to anyone else. I know of some dependent on their needle for support, and other sisters (good Christians, too), who are just as greedy as they can be—take all and more than they can do, and attend to their other household duties, besides having other means of support, and husbands stout enough to make rails. It is sad, yet true, that most of our brethren and sisters are more greedy of filthy lucre than they are to do pure and undefiled religion before God, the Father. The most of them want the lucre to spot themselves with, by dressing fine and faring sumptuously every day, going around the corner occasionally and taking a social drink with a friend, a man of the world, and having this friend, Judas-like, go off and point the finger of scorn at him and say, "he's a nice Christian." Then he's spotted with the world; not "unspotted from the world." Some that have plenty of this world's goods, and have been good Christians, have become spotted, as much so as a leopard. They will drink and dance, and have dances at their own houses, and don't object to their children joining in the dance if they wish—and some of them young Christians, too. That's raising your children up in the nurture and admonition of the dance, not the Lord. And, if a jumping-judy show comes along, one will be heard to say, "Hello! are you going to the show?" "Well, yes; I thought I would go with the children. They want to go." And away goes the Lord's money into the grogshop-keeper's treasury, or the fiddler's, or the jumping-judy's. I can't see how they suffer themselves to be led astray so far; but it is because they do not make use of the means that God has given them to live by.

Now, my beloved brethren and sisters, who have gone astray, that may, perchance, read this, stop and think what you are doing and whom you are serving. I think you will change your conduct and try to reinstate yourselves. If you will but think of it rightly, how much good you could do for yourselves and others; while, in your present career, you are doing so much harm to yourselves and others. And you are promised nothing but misery and woe, while a Christian enjoys all the rich blessings God has promised them here and hereafter. No doubt you started to run the race with a firm resolution as any one, but when the tempter came you did not resist him as you should have done. But it is not too late—never too late to mend; so, let us all begin with the new year, and try to see how much better we can live and how much pure religion we can do; and let us have on the robe of righteousness when the bridegroom cometh, that we may not be found wanting in anything. Oh, what a glorious time that will be when we shall see Jesus descending the skies, coming to claim His church. All will be filled with joy, and we will be able to enjoy the bliss that is only reserved for those who love and obey Him. But those who do not obey Him will hear Him say, "Depart from Me, ye workers of iniquity." Surely, surely,

"it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

Then, let us do our best to do His will, and we will hear Him say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into thy rest."

There will be no sorrow there nor pain, but all will be joy and bliss.

I love to think of the heavenly land,
That promised land so fair;
Oh, how my raptured spirit longs
To be forever there!

I love to think of the heavenly land,
The Saints' eternal home;
Where palms and robes and crowns no'er fade,
And all our joys are one.

ADINA.

Sister Adina seems to write from experience and does, so she informs me by private letter, and how true of all of us are her words of reproof of her congregation. How easy it is to imagine there is no suffering in the world, when our appetites are fully sated with good things and we are comfortably housed with the temperature at summer heat, no real comfort lacking. I often think it is a pity that fasting is no longer practiced, since nothing can make us so keenly realize the suffering of the hungry, as a few moments experience of keen hunger; and who of us ever really suffered from cold, that we did not think of all our fellow creatures too poor to have warm clothes and fire, and our hearts even yearned toward the poor dumb creatures, exposed to the fury of the elements, so powerless to protect themselves. James asks the question, II 15: 16., "If a brother or sister be naked or destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" Verily nothing! Sympathy is a very good thing, but it will not fill an empty stomach or clothe a naked back. She is right about it being our duty to give work to the widows of the household of faith. We are told our first duty is to brethren and sisters in the Lord. But some sister may answer thus: "I would give a certain sister my washing or sewing, but she does not do it to suit me." Now this is a poor excuse; for I am sure that any sister who is poor enough to have to support herself this way, will or ought to, at least, receive correction willingly, so tell them kindly of it if they fail, and they will profit by it. It is certainly better for us to wear our clothes a little less snowy than we like than to burden our souls with the sin of letting the widow and orphan suffer, when it is within our power to relieve them, and God will hold us accountable for it if we are guilty. Remember this, dear sisters and brethren! But James includes all widows and orphans, and should we not be able to find needy widows in the Christian household, then we must help those outside, who come within our reach, and there is no better way of helping the poor, than by helping them to help themselves, by giving them our extra work. Now, let's all take these words of sister Adina's to heart and hunt out the needy and do all in our power to help them, both temporally and spiritually, and we will be blessed in our deeds.

Your sister

SARAI.

P. S. Remember! James does not say "when the widow and orphan come to you and make known their wants, relieve them; but visit them in their affliction." Yes visit them and find out their necessities, and then show your faith by your works. S.

"A MODERN APOSTASY."

TEMPLE, March 17, 1886.

The above has been very freely used of late to express (we suppose) the esteem in which some persons hold the teaching of the FIRM FOUNDATION. In a recent article by Brother F. G. Allen in A. G., it was called by him, I believe, for the first time; after this it seems others were encouraged to repeat it. Now aside from the question of a violation of Christian courtesy, I ask these brethren to answer a few questions, which will not only enlighten the editors of the FIRM FOUNDATION, but be very beneficial to the public. I will say for the benefit of these scribes that when shown that I am in error I will cease teaching such doctrine; but Scripture proof will be required and not mere assertions, as were Brother Allen's article in A. G., and Brother Bagby's in the Standard. Besides, I wish these brethren to understand that it is as unjust to associate with us any man or set of men because we may hold and teach some things in common, but differ in others, as it would be to call Christians Mormons, or vice versa; because they both teach baptism for the remission of sins. William McIntyre may believe all that is published in the FIRM FOUNDATION. He has a right to do this. He might have been the first man of the nineteenth century to proclaim publicly that an understanding heart must precede Scriptural baptism, or, in other words, that sect baptism was unscriptural. Would this make him a bad man? The following is a list of the questions:

1. Do the Scriptures teach that "obedience to the gospel," "continuing in the perfect law of liberty," "be converted," and "being born again," are identical?
2. If they are not identical, will they kindly show us where in they fail to agree?
3. If they are identical, can any man claim that his sins have been pardoned before he understands with his heart?
4. If one man can claim his sins forgiven before he understands with his heart, then may not all men claim the same?
5. If all men have a right to claim this, would it not be a good idea for us to baptize our children before they understand the gospel? And thus "bring up a child in the way he should go?"

6. If the above proposition be true, then what rendering, or version, of the Scriptures can reconcile this view with Jesus' own explanation of the parable of the sower? in Mark iv and Matt. xiii, where he quotes Isaiah, saying, "seeing they may see and not perceive, etc., lest they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears, should understand with their hearts and should be converted and their sins should be forgiven them." These Scriptures seem to oppose the view presented in 9, 4 and 5. Reconcile these please.

7. If sectarians are in the kingdom by virtue of their having told an "experience," made a "statement," and been immersed, why trouble them further?

8. If sectarians understand enough of the gospel when they join their own congregations, why not unite with them instead of asking them to unite with us?

9. If they understand enough when they claim to be converted, why do our brethren have such a hard time in convincing them of the plain, simple requirements of the gospel?

10. If they understand enough of the gospel when they claim to have "gotten religion," what virtue is there in a real understanding?

11. If the FIRM FOUNDATION teaches "apostasy," how modern is it? Give facts, please.

12. If the contrary is Scriptural, how ancient is it? Give facts, please. J. F. G.

REASONS WHY A TRAVELING METHODIST PREACHER SHOULD NOT SMOKE.

III. The narcotic habit is very closely allied to the alcoholic habit. We now approach an exceedingly serious aspect of the question. It is an aspect of the question which can no longer be held in abeyance. If there is anything in it, there is a great deal in it. Public attention is being called to the fact that there is very close connection between the habitual use of tobacco and the habitual use of intoxicating liquors. I do not mean by this to say that every one who habitually uses tobacco habitually gets drunk, for that would not be true. Many persons habitually use tobacco who strictly abstain from all intoxicating drinks. But I do mean to say that the ranks of drunkards are recruited almost entirely from the ranks of those who use tobacco. It is rarely the case that one forms the habit of getting drunk who had not previously formed the habit of using tobacco—most generally smoking. There may be exceptions to this as a general rule, but I am unable at present to call to mind a single exception. I suppose one-half of the people do not use tobacco. Now, if the use of tobacco leads to the use of alcoholic drinks, we would expect to find half the drunkards free from the use of tobacco. But we unhesitatingly assert that such is not the case. No; nor one-fourth, nor one-eighth. With wonderful uniformity the narcotic precedes the alcoholic habit. This being true, it must be apparent beyond contradiction, that Prince Tobacco is the strongest ally of King Alcohol. Not more rapidly are the ranks of King Alcohol being depleted by the thousands of his victims who are going down into drunkards' graves than are his ranks being recruited from the ranks of Prince Tobacco. If we would triumph over alcohol, we must also triumph over tobacco. They are close allies, and they must fall together. Let all Christian men, ministers and laymen, and all temperance men, look carefully into this matter. Brothers, pause. Can you think of a drunkard who does not use tobacco?

IV. A fourth reason why a Methodist preacher should not smoke, is that it is damaging to his influence. A Bishop of our Church once, in conversation with myself in reference to another Bishop of our Church, expressed the fear that he indulged in the habit of smoking to excess, and thought his friends would do well to advise him against so great indulgence. "I have," said he, "frequently thought I would speak to him myself about it; but the fact is, I smoke a little myself." Thus the good Bishop felt, in that case at least, that he had disarmed himself for a good work. They were both great and good men, and they are both now with God. Many of the very best Christian mothers now living, recognizing the very close alliance there is between the narcotic and the alcoholic habits, are praying to God in their closets, and doing all they can in every way to shield their boys from both these habits. To them it is a great trial to have their ministers, whom they entertain with such generous hospitality, in the presence of their children, fill their parlors with tobacco smoke. And those sons, who in their hearts honor their mothers, as they ought to do, must look on with disgust. A Presiding Elder of our Church, who years ago indulged freely in smoking, told me within the present year that it was this that influenced him to give up smoking. He said he knew many godly mothers were grieved at seeing their Presiding Elder smoke in the presence of their sons, and he felt ashamed of himself and quit it. I wish all our Presiding Elders and Preachers would do likewise.—W. M. Rush, in St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Query: If it be wrong for Preachers, Methodists or others, to be guilty of the filthy habit of smoking, chewing, and (sisters) dipping tobacco, why not discard and cast off the vile sin at once? P. H. ADAMS.

REWARDS.

All Christians will be rewarded according to their works. "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man according as his works shall be."—Rev., xxii, 12.

"He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward. And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward."—Matt., x, 41, 42.

Paul says: "God will render unto every man according to his deeds."—Rom., ii, 6. Paul again says: "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor."—1 Cor., iii, 8. "Every man's works shall be made manifest, for the days shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he, himself, shall be saved, yet so as by fire."—1 Cor., iii, 13-15.

We conclude from the reading of these passages of scripture that if a preacher brings in unworthy material into the Church through mistake, that his works will be burned. And he will suffer (lose his reward) loss. But he himself shall be saved as by fire. But if his works abide he will be more than saved—he will receive a teacher's reward.

The preacher who is faithful to his calling and is instrumental in bringing many sinners to Christ will wear a brighter crown than the one who does but little.

"They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."—Dan., xii, 3.

Paul says: "One star differeth from another in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—1 Cor., xv, 41-42.

At night we see an innumerable number of stars, which vary in size. Some are very large, while others are smaller, and do not give as much light as the larger ones; nevertheless they are all true stars; but differ in size and light, or in glory. We conclude, as the stars differ in glory, that Christians will differ in the enjoyment of heaven. Each one will enjoy a degree of happiness according to his capacity; each one will be just as happy as he can be; his cup will be full. The size of our capacity depends upon our improvement. We can by devotion enlarge our capacities for the enjoyment of heaven; therefore we should take courage and labor that we may enjoy heaven in the highest degree. While on the one hand we can enlarge our capacities for the happiness of heaven, we can on the other diminish our capacities for the glory world by a disobedient life. We can by disobedience diminish our capacities so much as to be eternally lost. Let us all labor to admonish. Peter says make your calling and election sure, etc., and if you do these things ye shall never fall. For an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.—2 Pet., i, 21-22. By this we understand that those who have works that will abide will have an abundant entrance into heaven—that is, will be saved and rewarded, while some will be just scarcely saved and not rewarded.

Brethren, work for Jesus, that you may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord, and wear the brightest crown.

MADISONVILLE, MARCH 17, 1886.

Dear Brother McGary: I saw in the APOSTOLIC GUIDE, not long ago, some very grave charges against you and the friends of the FIRM FOUNDATION. He (Brother Allen) says that the FIRM FOUNDATION, wherever the doctrine is received, brings about alienation and strife. Churches are divided and great mischief follows. Consequently all preachers, of the theory (that baptism is for the remission of sins, and that it is a part of the gospel), are disturbers of the peace and harmony of the Churches of Christ. They create division and strife. This is a great and ruinous sin. Again he says: "With our understanding of this theory, now agitated in Texas to the cost of the peace and harmony of many Churches, we regard it as the most mischievous apostacy from the Church of God, and from the fundamental principles of the restoration in which we are engaged, that has arisen in this century." I make this long quotation from Brother Allen in order that we may get before the mind of the readers some of these false accusations. As I am one of the friends of the paper that is causing so much trouble in Texas, and as I am one of the preachers referred to in the above, who are charged with disturbing the peace of the Churches, causing divisions, strife, and alienation among the Churches in Texas, I feel in duty bound to show as far as I can and as far as I know, that these charges are false. All Bible readers know what the Scriptures say on the subject of bearing false witness. They know that the Bible does condemn it in strong terms; I came to Madison county in the fall of 1884, and have been preaching in Madison and Leon counties ever since. In the town of Madisonville we have a large congregation of intelligent Christians. Brother John Durst and Brother Hamilton are the preachers who planted the Church here. The latter was very successful in proselyting Baptists. So when I came here I found quite a large number in on their Baptist baptism. The FIRM FOUNDATION was circulated here, and the doctrine, (that was once delivered to the Saints), was received, and the result was, they were properly and Scripturally baptized, and some of them were ready for it before I came here. In fact on my first trip to Madisonville I baptized five who were very anxious to get rid of their Baptist baptism. Since that time ignorance, or rather unbelief as to the design of baptism. I regard this as very unsafe and doubtful teaching. It is a virtual admission that the will of God may be bent to suit the consciences of men, and simply places ourselves in the ranks of the various denominations as another sect. To preach Christ and Him crucified is to preach Him in person, office and work. What He did for man, and what He proposes to do, is certainly "glad news" to many sin-burdened souls. Is it not also "glad news" when it is so plainly taught what we must do in order to obtain the proposed blessings? Most undoubtedly it is. Now, how much of this Gospel may be omitted, and yet it prove God's power unto salvation? I dare not make the trial. But this article is already, perhaps, too lengthy. Brethren, we want more love. In our investigations and search after truth, let us imitate the Master. He was condescending: "though rich in glory, He became poor that we, through His poverty, might become rich." We should not be too high-minded, "but condescend to men of low estate." Teach the ignorant, with compassionate tenderness, and remember His words: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"—Matt., 4: 4. J. W. J.

TALKS WITH THE SISTERS.

Pure and undefiled religion, James says, is to visit the widows and orphans in their afflictions, and to keep one's self unspotted from the world. Now, brothers and sisters, how often do we visit the widows in each congregation and inquire into their afflictions; for I don't know of any greater affliction than to be destitute of food and raiment; though some think it only means to visit them when they are sick from disease. Sometimes they are made sick by doing without the proper food and clothing and fire in winter. I don't think James thought the poor widow would have to go to the brethren and make her wants known every time she was hungry, but that we, as Christians, would be glad of an opportunity to do religion; but how seldom is pure religion ever done, as much fuss as is made about it. The poor widow is hardly ever thought of unless her name is called, and then some good sister will be heard to say, "poor thing, I wonder how she is getting along? Very well, though, I reckon." And that is the last of it; she never goes to see.

Now don't understand me to think the widow's every want ought to be gratified, but I do think they should be helped more than they are, when they are trying to support themselves; for it isn't every widow can teach school or plow either. Some are dependent on one thing and some another, and I do think, if the sisters hire their sewing and washing done, they should give it to them to do in preference to anyone else. I know of some dependent on their needle for support, and other sisters (good Christians, too), who are just as greedy as they can be—take all and more than they can do, and attend to their other household duties, besides having other means of support, and husbands stout enough to make rails. It is sad, yet true, that most of our brethren and sisters are more greedy of filthy lucre than they are to do pure and undefiled religion before God, the Father. The most of them want the lucre to spot themselves with, by dressing fine and faring sumptuously every day, going around the corner occasionally and taking a social drink with a friend, a man of the world, and having this friend, Judas-like, go off and point the finger of scorn at him and say, "he's a nice Christian." Then he's spotted with the world; not "unspotted from the world." Some that have plenty of this world's goods, and have been good Christians, have become spotted, as much so as a leopard. They will drink and dance, and have dances at their own houses, and don't object to their children joining in the dance if they wish—and some of them young Christians, too. That's raising your children up in the nurture and admonition of the dance, not the Lord. And, if a jumping-judy show comes along, one will be heard to say, "Hello! are you going to the show?" "Well, yes; I thought I would go with the children. They want to go." And away goes the Lord's money into the frogshop-keeper's treasury, or the fiddler's, or the jumping-judy's. I can't see how they suffer themselves to be led astray so far; but it is because they do not make use of the means that God has given them to live by.

Now, my beloved brethren and sisters, who have gone astray, that may, perchance, read this, stop and think what you are doing and whom you are serving. I think you will change your conduct and try to reinstate yourselves. If you will but think of it rightly, how much good you could do for yourselves and others; while, in your present career, you are doing so much harm to yourselves and others. And you are promised nothing but misery and woe, while a Christian enjoys all the rich blessings God has promised them here and hereafter. No doubt you started to run the race with a firm resolution as any one, but when the tempter came you did not resist him as you should have done. But it is not too late—never too late to mend; so, let us all begin with the new year, and try to see how much better we can live and how much pure religion we can do; and let us have on the robe of righteousness when the bridegroom cometh, that we may not be found wanting in anything. Oh, what a glorious time that will be when we shall see Jesus descending the skies, coming to claim His own! All will see Him, all will want to enjoy the bliss that is only reserved for those who love and obey Him. But those who do not obey Him will hear Him say, "Depart from Me, ye workers of iniquity." Surely, surely,

"It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

Then, let us do our best to do His will, and we will hear Him say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into thy rest."

There will be no sorrow there nor pain, but all will be joy and bliss.

I love to think of the heavenly land,
That promised land so fair;
Oh, how my raptured spirit longs
To be forever there!

I love to think of the heavenly land,
The Saints' eternal home;
Where palms and robes and crowns ne'er fade,
And all our joys are one.

ADINA.

Sister Adina seems to write from experience and does, so she informs me by private letter, and how true of all of us are her words of reproof of her congregation. How easy it is to imagine there is no suffering in the world, when our appetites are fully sated with good things and we are comfortably housed with the temperature at summer heat, no real comfort lacking. I often think it is a pity that fasting is no longer practiced, since nothing can make us so keenly realize the suffering of the hungry, as a few moments experience of keen hunger; and who of us ever really suffered from cold, that we did not think of all our fellow creatures too poor to have warm clothes and fire, and our hearts even yearned toward the poor dumb creatures, exposed to the fury of the elements, so powerless to protect themselves. James asks the question, II 15: 16., "If a brother or sister be naked or destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" Verily nothing! Sympathy is a very good thing, but it will not fill an empty stomach or clothe a naked back. She is right about it being our duty to give work to the widows of the household of faith. We are told our first duty is to brethren and sisters in the Lord. But some sister may answer thus: "I would give a certain sister my washing or sewing, but she does not do it to suit me." Now this is a poor excuse; for I am sure that any sister who is poor enough to have to support herself this way, will or ought to, at least, receive correction willingly, so tell them kindly of it if they fail, and they will profit by it. It is certainly better for us to wear our clothes a little less snowy than we like than to burden our souls with the sin of letting the widow and orphan suffer, when it is within our power to relieve them, and God will hold us accountable for it if we are guilty. Remember this, dear sisters and brethren! But James includes all widows and orphans, and should we not be able to find needy widows in the Christian household, then we must help those outside, who come within our reach, and there is no better way of helping the poor, than by helping them to help themselves, by giving them our extra work. Now, let's all take these words of sister Adina's to heart and hunt out the needy and do all in our power to help them, both temporally and spiritually, and we will be blessed in our deeds.

SARAI.

P. S. Remember! James does not say "when the widow and orphan come to you and make known their wants, relieve them; but visit them in their affliction." Yes visit them and find out their necessities, and then show your faith by your works. S.

"A MODERN APOSTASY."

TEMPLE, March 17, 1886.

The above has been very freely used of late to express (we suppose) the esteem in which some persons hold the teaching of the FIRM FOUNDATION. In a recent article by Brother F. G. Allen in A. G., it was called by him, I believe, for the first time; after this it seems others were encouraged to repeat it. Now aside from the question of a violation of Christian courtesy, I ask these brethren to answer a few questions, which will not only enlighten the editors of the FIRM FOUNDATION, but be very beneficial to the public. I will say for the benefit of these scribes that when shown that I am in error I will cease teaching such doctrine; but Scripture proof will be required and not mere assertions, as were Brother Allen's article in A. G., and Brother Bagby's in the Standard. Besides, I wish these brethren to understand that it is as unjust to associate with us any man or set of men because we may hold and teach some things in common, but differ in others, as it would be to call Christians Mormons, or vice versa; because they both teach baptism for the remission of sins. William McIntyre may believe all that is published in the FIRM FOUNDATION. He has a right to do this. He might have been the first man of the nineteenth century to proclaim publicly that an understanding heart must precede Scriptural baptism, or, in other words, that sect baptism was unscriptural. Would this make him a bad man? The following is a list of the questions:

1. Do the Scriptures teach that "obedience to the gospel," "continuing in the perfect law of liberty," "be converted," and "being born again," are identical?
 2. If they are not identical, will they kindly show us wherein they fail to agree?
 3. If they are identical, can any man claim that his sins have been pardoned before he understands with his heart?
 4. If one man can claim his sins forgiven before he understands with his heart, then may not all men claim the same?
- If all men have a right to claim this, would it not be a good idea for us to baptize our children before they understand the gospel? And thus "bring up a child in the way he should go?"

6. If the above proposition be true, then what rendering, or version, of the Scriptures can reconcile this view with Jesus' own explanation of the parable of the sower? in Mark iv and Matt. xiii, where he quotes Isaiah, saying, "seeing they may see and not perceive, etc., lest they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears, should understand with their hearts and should be converted and their sins should be forgiven them." These Scriptures seem to oppose the view presented in 9, 4 and 5. Reconcile these please.

7. If sectarians are in the kingdom by virtue of their having told an "experience," made a "statement," and been immersed; why trouble them further?

8. If sectarians understand enough of the gospel when they join their own congregations, why not unite with them instead of asking them to unite with us?

9. If they understand enough when they claim to be converted, why do our brethren have such a hard time in convincing them of the plain, simple requirements of the gospel?

10. If they understand enough of the gospel when they claim to have "gotten religion," what virtue is there in a real understanding?

11. If the FIRM FOUNDATION teaches "apostasy," how modern is it? Give facts, please.

12. If the contrary is Scriptural, how ancient is it? Give facts, please. J. F. G.

REASONS WHY A TRAVELING METHODIST PREACHER SHOULD NOT SMOKE.

III. The narcotic habit is very closely allied to the alcoholic habit. We now approach an exceedingly serious aspect of the question. It is an aspect of the question which can no longer be held in abeyance. If there is anything in it, there is a great deal in it. Public attention is being called to the fact that there is very close connection between the habitual use of tobacco and the habitual use of intoxicating liquors. I do not mean by this to say that every one who habitually uses tobacco habitually gets drunk, for that would not be true. Many persons habitually use tobacco who strictly abstain from all intoxicating drinks. But I do mean to say that the ranks of drunkards are recruited almost entirely from the ranks of those who use tobacco. It is rarely the case that one forms the habit of getting drunk who had not previously formed the habit of using tobacco—most generally smoking. There may be exceptions to this as a general rule, but I am unable at present to call to mind a single exception. I suppose one-half of the people do not use tobacco. Now, if the use of tobacco did not lead to the use of alcoholic drinks, we would expect to find half the drunkards free from the use of tobacco. But we unhesitatingly assert that such is not the case. No; nor one-fourth, nor one-eighth. With wonderful uniformity the narcotic precedes the alcoholic habit. This being true, it must be apparent beyond contradiction, that Prince Tobacco is the strongest ally of King Alcohol. Not more rapidly are the ranks of King Alcohol being depleted by the thousands of his victims who are going down into drunkards' graves than are his ranks being recruited from the ranks of Prince Tobacco. If we would triumph over alcohol, we must also triumph over tobacco. They are close allies, and they must fall together. Let all Christian men, ministers and laymen, and all temperance men, look carefully into this matter. Brothers, pause. Can you think of a drunkard who does not use tobacco?

IV. A fourth reason why a Methodist preacher should not smoke, is that it is damaging to his influence. A Bishop of our Church once, in conversation with myself in reference to another Bishop of our Church, expressed the fear that he indulged in the habit of smoking to excess, and thought his friends would do well to advise him against so great indulgence. "I have," said he, "frequently thought I would speak to him myself about it; but the fact is, I smoke a little myself." Thus the good Bishop felt, in that case at least, that he had disarmed himself for a good work. They were both great and good men, and they are both now with God. Many of the very best Christian mothers now living, recognizing the very close alliance there is between the narcotic and the alcoholic habits, are praying to God in their closets, and doing all they can in every way to shield their boys from both these habits. To them it is a great trial to have their ministers, whom they entertain with such generous hospitality, in the presence of their children, fill their parlors with tobacco smoke. And those sons, who in their hearts honor their mothers, as they ought to do, must look on with disgust. A Presiding Elder of our Church, who years ago indulged freely in smoking, told me within the present year that it was this that influenced him to give up smoking. He said he knew many godly mothers were grieved at seeing their Presiding Elder smoke in the presence of their sons, and he felt ashamed of himself and quit it. I wish all our Presiding Elders and Preachers would do likewise.—W. M. Rush, in St. Louis Christian Advocate.

REWARDS,

All Christians will be rewarded according to their works. Christ says: "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man according as his works shall be."—Rev., xxii, 12.

"He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall fifteen in all, that were in this congregation when I came here, have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine, and I say in all good conscience, yes truthfully say, that the peace and harmony of this congregation has not been disturbed. The members are not divided, and furthermore, these brethren and sisters love one another, and love the truth, and have all been faithful proclaimers of the faith once delivered to the Saints, and will help to encourage and sustain all such.

I have preached and circulated the FIRM FOUNDATION at Midway, in the same county, and no division there. Also in Leon county, at Leona, the Church has received the doctrine and no strife, no divisions, no alienation. In fact, I know of no Church that has been divided by this question. Hence, I think I can truthfully say, so far as I know, the charges made by Brother Allen and others are false. But even if preaching the whole truth does cause divisions, I am not responsible for it, so I shall continue to do so and leave the consequences with God. Respectfully

BELTON, March 2, 1886.

Dear Brother McGary:

I can't do anything in Belton. They are sailing with wind and tide down the stream of popular esteem. When the sun shines and all is calm how easy and happy is their voyage.

Go on, my brother! Be assured that in all your struggles in behalf of truth every just man on earth, every happy spirit in the invisible world, every angel in heaven, and more than all, your Redeemer and your Heavenly Father, are all upon your side.

Enclosed I send you five dollars. I will do all I can for the F. F. This leaves all well. Give my love to all. Yours in the one faith.

MOODY AND SANKEY VS. PETER AND PAUL.

(According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear.—Rom., xi, 8.)

"With the concluding amen, and the last peal of the organ, Mr. Moody advanced to the front of the platform, and exhorted all who desired to be specially prayed for to signify the same by rising to their feet and then resuming their seats.—Galveston News.

What a difference between the above and the Apostles' teaching, on all occasions mentioned in the New Testament! Bro. McGary, it appears that the soul stirring voice of the old fisherman on the day of Pentecost had more good effect than Moody and Sankey and the organ combined. Instead of coming up and confessing Christ and being baptized, they were lured up to the mourner's bench by the Siren song of Sankey. A friend told me that their teachings were morally, if not spiritually, good; but I am convinced that there is as much difference in Christianity and morality as there is in the climates of Iceland and Florida. Morality is that insidious slumber so often mentioned in the scriptures.

Perhaps the above mentioned evangelists(?) are so sleeping, but God be their judge, and the day approaches when their works will be tried.

Bro. McGary, there is a small band of faithful Christians at Providence, and the F. F. is a great comfort to me when I can't meet the brethren on the Lord's day, and it is good every time I pick it up. Sometimes the enemy comes in to spy out our liberties, but the fruit they carry off is very sour. Hoping the F. F. may find its way all over Texas, I will close.

COMMENTS ON ROM. VIII.

1-2. "There is now therefore no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." This clearly implies that one may be in Christ and walk somewhat after the flesh; but remember, that it clearly shows that those who do walk after the flesh are condemned. Then if condemned, will they still remain in Christ? No one who believes the whole Bible, will answer yes. Now brethren, had we not better leave reveling, dancing, play parties, Church festivals, missionary societies, and all other manmade Christianities, and come back to the Spirit for our information? He furnishes us thoroughly with all the information we need. What folly, in the sight of God, must all human creeds be. He cannot look upon sin with the least bit of allowance. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Now, we see that God virtually condemns everything that purports to be a law of invitation into Christ except, "the law of the Spirit." Not only so, He condemns any course in any religious exercise, except that marked out by the Spirit, in the New Testament.

3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. 3: "For what the law, (of Moses), could not do in that it was weak, through the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: 4, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. 5: For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. 6: For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. 7: Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Paul says, in the 7th Chap. 25th verse, that he serves the law of sin with the flesh. Now what shall we do? He says in the 3rd verse of this 8th Chap., God "condemned sin in the flesh," but, by reading a little further we get his idea. He says: "They that are after the flesh do mind the things" etc. He, (Paul), served the law of God with the mind, (7th Chap. 25th). So then we see to be "carnally minded," is to allow the "old man," to have the ascendancy; but to be "spiritually minded," is to let our mind be led by the plain teachings of the Holy Spirit. Any other course is stubborn enmity against God. Of course, enmity against God is not pleasing to Him.

The writer confesses his inability to give an exhaustive exposition of what he has under consideration here.

WHAT IS SCRIPTURAL BAPTISM?

I have been requested by a good brother, who is a subscriber for the FIRM FOUNDATION, to write something upon the question which stands at the head of this article, and, by permission of the editor, will now do so. I do not propose to discuss the action of baptism. Scholars agree that immersion is baptism, and in that belief I fully concur. Hence, a discussion of the action of baptism is not necessary. But is mere immersion baptism? I answer no. The Scriptures require certain qualifications of the subject in order to baptism, without which there can be no scriptural baptism. Paul says: "Without faith it is impossible to please Him (God)." Again, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." That is to say, faith lies at the bottom of all acceptable obedience to God. Baptism is an act to be performed in obedience to God; therefore it must be preceded by faith. Faith is one of the qualifications without which there can be no scriptural baptism. The baptism of unbelievers, or of persons incapable of the exercise of faith, is wholly without warrant in the divine Oracles. But in order to faith two things are necessary: 1. A proposition to be believed. 2. Testimony upon which to predicate faith in the proposition. The Scriptures require faith in Christ. The testimony upon which faith in Christ is predicated is "the record which God has given of His Son." To have faith in Christ is to believe on Christ. "To believe on Christ is to believe that He is the Christ, the Son of God." This is evident, First, From the fact that God declared: "This is My Son, the beloved, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him." Second, From the fact that Jesus said: "If ye believe not I am He (the Christ), ye shall die in your sins;" again: "he that believeth on me hath everlasting life." Third, From the fact that the Apostles believed this, and all agree that they had the right faith. "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Again: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of God."

John, 20: 30, 31: "Many other signs truly did Jesus, in the presence of His disciples, which are not written in this book. But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life in His name." "This is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth Jesus Christ is the Son of God?" Paul said to the trembling jailor: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved and thy house." Other Scriptures equally emphatic and unmistakable could be cited, but these are quite sufficient to show that faith in Christ is one of the qualifications necessary on the part of the subject in order to Scriptural baptism. Repentance is equally necessary. Faith in Christ and repentance are the qualifications necessary in order to Scriptural baptism. Just here I wish to set this idea of faith in Christ down against the idea of faith in doctrines. The requiring of faith in doctrines instead of faith in Christ is the prolific source from whence has come the divisions that distract the religious world. The doctrine may be true and good, but still it would be wrong to set down any number of such doctrines as articles of faith, and require men to confess faith in them. Just here our Baptist friends make a mistake. They require as a rule, faith in a doctrine of theirs, instead of faith in Christ. True, the confession which they require implies faith in Christ; but it contains a statement which a great many cannot accept as true, and is therefore divisive. A similar mistake I think some among us are likely to make by requiring faith in baptism for the remission of sins. Faith in Christ is certainly taught in the Scriptures, not as an article of faith to be believed in, but as an act of obedience to Christ. Repentance is also required, not as an article of faith, but as an act of obedience to Christ. The same is true of baptism; it is not an article of faith, but an act of obedience. Every one, therefore, who, believing in Christ with all his heart, truly repents of his sins, and is baptised in obedience to Christ, meets all demands of the Scriptures in order to become a Christian. But, notwithstanding this, to set any one or all of these down as articles of faith, and require men to confess faith in them, would be divisive and contrary to the word of God.

W. T. BREEDLOVE.

Brother Breedlove is right in saying that there is no necessity for a discussion on the action of baptism—that is, between him and me. The reason is obvious: we both accept what God has taught by precept and example on this point. We are further agreed, doubtless, that the design of baptism is as clearly taught as the action of the ordinance. Again, we are perfectly agreed that God has authorized the baptism of those who accept Jesus as the Christ, the rightful lawgiver of the New Covenant; and who hear, understand, believe and obey that law from the heart. This is what we affirm, and it is what we know that Brother B. will not deny. Then there is no room for discussion here. But Brother B. holds that God also authorizes the baptism of such as do not understand nor believe the law of the New Covenant—that is, that do not believe that baptism is for what God's lawgivers said it was for. This we deny, and here are grounds for discussion. Then, Brother B., let's discuss this question upon well-defined grounds, and we may hope that it will prove profitable. Every fair-minded reader can see that Brother B. and those who believe as he does are responsible for the proof of their teaching on this question. If we affirm that Austin is in Texas, and Brother B. agrees with us, there is no room for discussion. But if a question arises about Little Rock, and Brother B. holds that it is in Texas too, and we deny it, then, of course, it devolves upon him to stand in an affirmative position and bring up his proof. Just so upon this question. It is his teaching that is under discussion, and not ours. Why not, then, shoulder the responsibility, Brother B., and let us come to close quarters, where some telling work may be done? As long as our brethren who hold to this humanistic practice can succeed in keeping the real issue in the back-ground, and shirk the responsibility that devolves upon them, they stand some chance to hold a following by crying "hobby," "modern apostasy," etc. But whenever they are forced to grapple with truth at close quarters, their dogmatic pet will go down, to rise no more forever. We do not mean to intimate that Brother B. has made use of the worn-out appellatives, "hobby," etc., etc., nor that he has shirked his duty. We will see that he does it before we accuse him. But for fear that Brother B. will feel indisposed to come up to the arduous task we have laid out for him, and that we will not hear from him again on this vexed question, we will briefly note some points in his article upon which we think he is in error. He says: "To have faith in Christ is to believe on Christ, to believe on Christ is to believe that he is the Christ, the Son of God." Now, we accept this, but not in the sense that it is evident Brother B. offers it. We believe that we are saved by faith, too, but not in the sense that our Methodist friends present it—not by "faith alone." The same principle of interpretation, crops out in Brother B.'s stress of Scripture that permeates the Methodist discipline. To believe on Christ is to believe what Brother B. says one must believe, and more, too—that is, to believe on Him in a Scriptural, or saving sense. It is to believe just what He has said by His own mouth, or through the mouths or pens of His divine witnesses and agents. The Gospel of Christ is never fully presented until the word of the Lord that went forth from Jerusalem is proclaimed as it was by the Apostles. One is not ready to hear the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus until he has first heard of the Law-giver. But when the Law-giver is heard of, and believed to have the authority He claims, then comes the law. Hence John said of our Saviour: "He came unto His own, and they that were His own received Him not. But as many as received Him to them gave He the right to become the children of God, even to them that believe on His name which were born, not of blood, nor of the will (law) of the flesh, nor of the will (law) of man, but of God." We see that those on the day of Pentecost, after they had believed on Christ, in the sense that Brother B. has said was sufficient, were just then ready to hear the law, which they cried out to know. Peter answered them, as is found in Acts, 2: 38. He does not stop at telling them to be baptized, but says for the remission of sins. They that "gladly received His words were baptized." Did he say too much? Did he say more than was necessary to be said? It would seem so, if it is not necessary, as our brother claims, to know just what Peter told them. Again, the pen of inspiration tells us that when the Samaritans "believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom, and the name (authority) of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women." Now, what things concern the kingdom? The law of entrance or induction surely concerns it. The very thought that is expressed in the words here, in reference to the Samaritans, is expressed in Acts, 2: 38, in reference to the three thousand at Pentecost. When Peter told them to repent and be baptized in the name (authority) of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, he was telling them "things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." And when Luke informs us that "they that gladly received His words were baptized," under Peter's preaching, he conveys to our minds the same idea that he does when he says of Philip's preaching, "they were baptized both men and women." This record of the doings of men guided by the unerring Spirit does not comport with some of our practices—the very thing that Brother B. is trying to defend. But it is in perfect harmony with all divine transactions. The prophet Jeremiah, when prophesying of this very covenant under which Peter and Philip did this work that we have under consideration, said: "This shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it (the law) in their hearts (so they could obey it from their hearts), and will be their God and they shall be My people. And they shall teach not every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for they shall all know Me, from the least to the greatest, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity and I will remember their sins no more." Peter and Philip, on the occasions to which we have referred, were putting God's law into the hearts of these people, so that the least and the greatest of them might know the Lord. They were writing it in their inward parts, so that when they, "both men and women," had believed them, or "gladly received their words," and were baptized, it could afterwards be said to them: "God be thanked that though you were the servants of sin, you have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered you, being then made free from sin," and they could fully understand it. In the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, our Savior's most beautiful and instructive parable sets forth precisely the same unvarying principle of the Divine system. The seed, in this parable is the word of God, not the word of man. For our great Teacher has told us how vain are the doctrines and commandments of men. But the word of God, that liveth and abideth forever is the seed, and the only seed, that can bring forth the crop that is to be garnered in the everlasting realms of our heavenly Father's storehouse for redeemed souls. To become a part of this acceptable harvest, men and women must be converted. In order to conversion they must "understand" something. In order to understand, they must "hear" something. In order to hear, there must be preachers. But Paul says, "How shall they preach except they be sent?" It never was in the heart of man to preach a soul-saving Gospel to his fellows. Hence God had to "send" men, and accompany them with His Spirit, that they might tell dying men and women just exactly what He wanted them to know, and which, when they learned and obeyed, would save their souls. The Gospel of these "sent preachers" was recorded, and has been handed down the ages, to be preached by "faithful men" without a change, to "draw" those that are willing to "learn of the Father," that they may "come unto the Son." This doctrine, that Brother B. is trying to defend, is earth-born, a figment of speculative brains that have set out to supply the deficiencies of Almighty God!!! It vitiates and nullifies much that was preached by those who were told that whatever they bound on earth should be bound in heaven. It recognizes man's mixture of corruptible with the incorruptible seed, which is a virtual setting at naught what has been "forever settled in heaven"! Unless Brother B. can show some authority in God's word for this practice, which we deny that he can show, it is as great a sin as the selling of indulgences by the great Romish Harlot, and is a strain of her abominable blood and kinship that is coursing the veins of her progeny. Brother B. says that what is not of faith is sin. And it is true, not because he or I say it, but because inspiration teaches it. What ever is of faith is of the word of God, for faith comes by hearing the word of God. Then if he does not show that this practice of receiving into the Church, the body of Christ, those who were not taught the law of the Lord, and hence did not believe that law, and could not, in that frame of mind, obey it from the heart (see Matt., 13: 15) is authorized in the word of God, it is not of faith, and hence is sinful, and he and his brethren should cease to practice it. In our opinion, there never was a more palpable rebellion against Jesus Christ than this practice. Brother B.'s remarks about faith in Christ and faith in doctrine, we simply have this to say: The man who has faith in Christ has faith in His doctrine, too; and the man who has no faith in Christ's doctrine has no faith in Christ. We are aware that our brethren have almost unanimously declared against this position; but their declaration amounts to nothing unless supported by the word of truth. No man is authorized to separate Christ and His doctrine, and say that persons can believe in Him, in a saving sense, while they discard His doctrine. The law of the Lord is His doctrine, and it is perfect and converts the soul. But, as we have said in the outset, we want Brother B. to stand right where a fearless defender of truth is always willing to stand—right where the rules of logic would force him to stand—and right where our readers will expect him to stand—in an affirmative position, furnishing the Scriptures that authorize him to do that which we deny his right to do. Now, my brother, don't forget this, but come right along with your proof texts. You shall have all the space you want, kind and brotherly treatment, and our heartfelt thanks for all the light that you can throw on this question. Will you meet this issue? We shall see. We could note many other points of disagreement as set forth in your article, but we prefer to discuss decently and in order, if you will, by driving right at the real issue.

A. MCG.

WILL NOT MEET THE ISSUE.

It seems that Brother Allen has declined our offer to meet on the open field of fair discussion to test the truthfulness of his position and the rightfulness of his practice, by an appeal to the "sword of the Spirit." He seems to prefer the guerilla mode of warfare with carnal weapons. But there need not be any war at all upon this question, if he will just show us one word of divine authority for his side; but this is just what he will not attempt to do, because he knows that there is not one word in all the book of God for it. It had its origin in the nineteenth century, and all who will not be satisfied with the wisdom of fallible men, such as Brother Allen, and all other men who have ever attempted to lead without divine guidance are,—must submit to such opprobrious terms as "Hobbyists" and "Modern Apostasy." Well, we had rather suffer all of these unjust charges that cowardly dogmatists, in the bitterness of their wounded rage can fling at us, than acknowledge them as rightful lawgivers, till they exhibit their credentials. When the most popular leaders in the Church will act as Brother Allen has done in this case, we think it is time for those who really dread "Modern Apostasy" to call a halt. In the first place, we simply asked Brother A. some questions about his practice in receiving the sects without immersing them, and because it showed how inconsistent he was, he muddied the waters the best he could, and then swooped down upon us with death dealing intent, calling us a "Modern Apostasy." We are an apostasy because we will not acknowledge his right to add to the law of God; because we will not silently follow him in his rebellion against the authority of Jesus Christ! When our course can be rightly called an "Apostasy," it will be when such men as F. G. Allen have the right to change those things that were "bound in Heaven and Earth," eighteen hundred years ago. When they have the right to institute a new order of things out and out, to rob God of His glory and confer all praise and glory upon men, as they are now attempting to do. Yes, our position may become apostate when it ceases to be true, that "commandments and doctrines of men are vain,"—when the words of Christ cease to be true.

We are very sorry to see our leading brethren acting as Brother A. and many other brethren are acting in reference to this question; for such a course manifests that very same spirit of intolerance that has filled prisons, kindled fires, and instigated all manner of terrorism against religious liberty, since the "spirit of iniquity" first began its abominable work in the world.

Ask these men for the proof that baptism is for the remission of sins, and the proof texts are promptly given. Ask them for the practice of assembling on the first day of the week to attend to the ordinances of the Lord's house, or for anything practiced that is authorized, and they are prompt to give the authority. It has always been the boast that we speak where the Bible speaks, and are silent where it does not speak. A "thus saith the Lord," for what we do, has been our motto. But call upon our leaders for any kind of divine authority for baptizing persons who do not understand the design, or for receiving them after others have baptized them, and these same men, who claim to be ready with a "thus saith the Lord," will treat you to a volley of as bitter and vituperative words as the vocabulary contains. Why is this? It is time for sensible men and women to begin to want to see this question met in a fairer way than it has yet been done. We promised Brother Allen that if he would give us just one word out of that volume that "so thoroughly furnishes the man of God unto all good works," for his teaching, that we would cease to oppose it. But he did not like to be put into a position where proof had to be furnished. He seemed to "scent the battle from afar," to regard "prudence the better part of valor." So, as he "hoped to live to fight another day," this hero of so many theological conflicts, "ran away," after all of the bluster and gush about a "Modern Apostasy." But he leaves one "K,"—"K" might I suppose—to bring up the rear of his inglorious retreat. "K" seems to have studied some system of logic that demands all the proof from the negative side. This is a good system of logic for young "pastors" to be trained in. They are called on to prove too much, under the old rules of logic.

Paul says "prove all things, hold fast to that which is good." Our modern "pastors" are good at "holding fast," but they do not have the time to "prove all things," hence they are acting upon the new system of logic. K. says for us to show a text that says: "The sinner must know the fact in order to the validity of his baptism." Of course we can't find it set down in those very words. We had as soon undertake to find authority for the "modern pastorate" system, that K. is now reveling in, as to undertake to find the very words that he has emphasized. But we only have space to answer K.'s crushing questions. Question 1: "Was the faith of the editor of the FIRM FOUNDATION, at the time of his baptism, in the proposition that Jesus is the Christ and the Son of God, so complete that it exhausted all the meaning there was or is in that sublime proposition, so that there was nothing left about the proposition that he did not fully understand and believe? If he answers no, his inconsistency is evident; if yes, then we shall not hesitate in telling the brotherhood where to find the Daniel who can dissolve all theological doubts and difficulties." We do not see anything in this, one way or the other, that militates against the necessity of believing that baptism was for what Christ and His apostles said it was for. He need not think that we are afraid to be called a "Daniel." Well now, we don't intend to call him anything to the brotherhood; but we will first inform him, for his own pastoral reputation, that if he does not show some pertinence that this query has to the question at issue, his readers, in hunting through the Scriptures for a character to mate him with, will be compelled to fix upon that one that Balaam was mounted upon on a certain occasion. No doubt about this for his "Daniel to dissolve." 2. "Has he not learned more about the design of baptism than he knew at the time he was baptized? In short, was he not at that time a 'babe' in every department of Christian knowledge, and has he not since grown in knowledge, as the Bible says, 'new-born babes' should do? What has the FIRM FOUNDATION to say to these things?" Well, candidly, my brother it has to say that they are very silly. We will ask you some questions in the hope that you will see the silliness of yours: Were not the three thousand who were baptized in Jerusalem on Pentecost "babes" too? Did they not also "grow in knowledge?" And yet, did they understand that baptism was for the remission of sins? If you say they did not you will deny the Scriptures. If you had been there would you have "told the brotherhood that you had found three thousand Daniels that could dissolve all theological doubts and difficulties?" Perhaps you would, for your course now leads us to conclude that you would have been of that crowd that went away "mocking and saying that Peter and his brethren were full of new wine." If you have a reply for this, send it directly to us and it will receive prompt attention. We will not act as the GUIDE has.

A. MCG.

We will send the FIRM FOUNDATION from now till the end of the year for the low price of fifty cents. Brethren, go to work and send us some big clubs.

Don't become alarmed, Brethren, at our big editors who are exasperated because we will not yield to their words. This is to them an evident token of perdition, but to us, of salvation.

LA PORTE, Ind., Feb. 23, 1886.

Dear Brother McGary: I have again taken my pen to write an article for your most excellent paper, THE FIRM FOUNDATION. As I have remarked to you before now, there is a great responsibility resting on all the true friends of Jesus and the Bible. There are many persons now who claim to be Christians, and who claim to love and believe the Bible, who, when confronted with the plain, simple teaching, will misconstrue and pervert and wrest the scripture to justify their unscriptural teaching and practice. Others will say the times and customs of the people have changed since the time of the Apostles, and, therefore, some allowances are to be made on that account; and thus they try to justify the many departures from scripture teaching. If these puerile and silly ideas are to be regarded as valid, what becomes of the law of the Lord? Since the law went forth from Mount Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, what heavenly messenger has proclaimed another law? Who has had the authority to add to, or diminish from it? None; but on the contrary, we are told in Rev. xxii: 18-19, "If any man shall add to the words of the Book, God will add to him the plagues written in the Book; and if any man take away anything from the words of the Book; God shall take his part out of the Book of Life; and out of the holy city," etc. This, I presume is as true of one part of God's word as of another. Therefore, we conclude that no man has any right to change or modify, in any degree, any precept or example of an Apostle or of Jesus.

In the light, then, of what has already been said, where do men get the authority for any society of any name or description, to do the work of the church? I ask, in kindness, of all persons who belong to or favor missionary societies of any kind, to cite me to one instance in all the instructions of the Saviour or the Apostles, of authority to Christians; to establish any manner of institution for the worship or service of God, except the church, the one body of Christ. If all the commands and instruc-disciples for the establishment and edifying the church, where the authority for any human institution with a specific name and object? But then the friends of the societies say, "Jesus told the Apostles to go and preach the gospel; but did not tell them how to do the work, and, therefore, left them to do it in any manner which they might see fit."

Suppose all this to be true, and what have we found? When we look into the history of the Apostles we find they and others went out and preached the gospel to all who would hear. If they had means to go on, they went; and if they had not the means, then the friends of the cause gave them the means. The friends of the cause were the brethren and sisters. They furnished the necessary means to those who did the work. And they had no society except the church. No president, vice-president, secretary, nor auxiliary societies, nor anything of the kind. Now, if in that age, when the means of travel were so meager, and when the chances of communication with the heathen nations were so forbidding, the Disciples could, and did, go and preach the gospel by the aid simply of the church, without any auxiliaries, surely now, when the means of travel are abundant and easy, and the intercourse of the nations friendly, Christians may go where they choose, or send others by a simple contribution of their means the persons who do, or are to do, the preaching.

Since it is a fact that the Christians in the Apostolic age did, by the simple plan now pointed out, spread the Gospel over the Roman empire, it is evident that we now have no need for any of the modern societies to do a like work. If we believe that the scripture is to make the man of God perfect, and thoroughly furnish him to all good works, then our faith forbids us to use any means not written; for scripture means that which is written. But we must now leave this subject and turn our attention to another matter.

The use of instruments for music, in the worship. Many persons claiming to be Christians, desire to use musical instruments in connection with the singing. Now, singing is a part of the prescribed worship. Worship, says Worcester, is to adore, to honor, hence, when we adore, honor and praise God in song we worship him. In this praise and adoration, we use words. Paul tells the Ephesians to speak to themselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. He tells the Colossians to teach and admonish one another in psalms and Thus we see that in the worship of God we are to use words. But if we can worship him in song, with an instrument, so can we in prayer. Prayer is a part of the prescribed worship. To pray we use words as in singing. Who would be rash enough to invent a machine for praying? With just as much propriety and authority, may we pray with a machine as we may sing with a machine. Paul declared to the people at Athens, Acts, 17: 25, that God is not worshiped with men's hands. "He must be worshiped in spirit and in truth." Now, since the early Christians, and also many thousands of latter times, and even now, do worship God without instruments, would it not now be better for the sake of peace and harmony? In the name of reason, if not in the name of Christianity, why not accept that which is written, and reject that which is not written? I assure our brethren that we will accept anything that is written. And this, saith the Lord or an Apostle, is all we demand. Now, if we would all require that much, we would get rid of another thing that is making havoc of the church. That is the modern Sunday school. It is made an appendage of the church. Where is it written? I have already written something of this before. Here I wish only to say that in the Sunday school, as it is called, the foundation is laid for instrumental music, festivals, picnics, and other worldly amusements, which all are detrimental to true Christianity, which forbids to be conformed to the world, but to be formed in opposition to the world by the renewing of the mind. Let us, brethren, be very careful what, and how we teach the young. On the young depends the future of both Church and State. But I cannot enlarge on this topic, as there is yet a matter of perhaps deeper moment, of which I must now speak: I mean the common recognition of the sects. It seems to be the prevailing opinion, that the various sects embrace many Christians. I have already had some controversy with some of our brethren on this subject. In this paper I shall not have sufficient space to go over the whole ground, but I will state a few plain propositions.

If any sectarian preaches any other gospel than that preached by the Apostles all ought to admit that it is false. If all should preach the same gospel, then there would be no sects. Therefore, as there are, in fact, different sects, they must preach different doctrines. If they preach different doctrines, the doctrines must be false. And as the doctrines must be false, the practices produced by false doctrine must, of necessity, be false practice. If a person may have false doctrine, and consequently false practice, and yet be a Christian, then I ask what advantage has he who holds the truth and practices accordingly?

If false doctrine and false practice will make a Christian, can truth do more? But, then, we are told, that they preach Christ to the people, and induce them to believe on Christ and do what they think right, God will accept them. Where did they learn this beautiful doctrine? Does Jesus say "Go ye into all the world and preach to the people, that if they will believe on me and do what they think right, they shall be saved?"

This is the way the commission should read, if it be the truth: Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believes (the gospel) and is baptised shall be saved; and he who does not believe (the gospel) shall be condemned." Teach them, said he, to observe all things that I have commanded you. To observe includes obedience, and, therefore, Jesus said blessed are they that do his commandments. It gives them right to the tree of life, and an entrance into the holy city. Do any of the sects teach their devotees to do all that Jesus commanded? If they did, and to do no more, then they would all teach the same things; and again, there would be no sects. But if one sectarian is a Christian, why may not all the honest ones of the same sect be Christians too? If they are Christians do our brethren think that they can make them better by inviting them to join us? If they are Christians, and can be such in a sectarian establishment, they are all right.

Now, if this be the correct view—if it be the truth—it certainly looks to me that Jesus made a mistake when he prayed that they all might be one. And our good brethren make the same mistake now, when they pray and preach that all the sects may be one. Now, if each sect is making Christians, that is, introducing persons into Christ, then every one who has any common sense knows, that by the various efforts and ways now used, there are tenfold more persons being saved than any one class could save or induce to become Christians. Why here in this city, in the last four or five weeks, there have been perhaps more than a hundred induced to join the different organizations, while no one could induce half that number to join their own peculiar organization. So to be consistent, they who believe that all are Christians, should pray for all the sects to do say, that all might be suited. Perhaps, if there were a hundred or so more sects, they might save all.

But again, they say if they have been baptised they are Christians. Will baptism make one a Christian unless he obey the other commandments? Who of the sects preaches that faith comes by hearing the word of God? Do they not teach faith is the immediate gift of God, and when one joins them do they not require such one to state that God has forgiven their sins, or that they have had some mysterious change wrought on their heart by the Holy Spirit, or that they were sprinkled in infancy, and that they hold that as valid baptism, and have them to assent to some creed, or something of the kind?

Is any one of these things necessary to becoming a Christian? By no means. And yet many of our brethren will persist in greeting such as brethren, and speak and write of them as brethren. If they really hold such as in Christ, then it does not require the truth to make one free. And if they do not hold them as in Christ, then they act the hypocrite, and practice deception every time they call them brother.

This hypocritical or ignorant practice has done, and is doing a vast amount of evil. If the preachers and editors call them all good Christians, what will other people think? Of course they will think that one society is as good as another, and consequently, that the Bible points out no particular way, and thus division is promoted. They pray for unity, but promote division. How beautifully consistent such preachers and editors are! Pray lustily for union, but whisper you are all Christians. Even A. Campbell made this miserable blunder.

When may we expect sectarians to join the church, while they are told that they are already Christians? It is certainly the most glaring folly I ever thought of to admit, that the sects are Christians, and yet persuade them to come and join the church in a way different from others outside of the church. And to contend and debate with them that they are wrong, but yet they are Christians. But I must close.

I hope our brethren will consider this matter scripturally and logically, and let us earnestly contend for the faith. I would kindly say to all sects, you are wrong. You cannot be saved in the wrong. Turn away from it; go to your Bible and learn the truth and obey it, and you will be saved. Brethren! we must cut entirely loose from everything but the truth and defend that alone.

May God bless all his children.

L. C. STONE.

THE LITTLE PREACHER.

Dear Brother McGary: I am what you may call a novice, on the "high way of holiness," having been traveling it only a few days.

I am a "little preacher," but do delight in proclaiming the old Jerusalem gospel.

I am a reader of the FIRM FOUNDATION, and do not hesitate to say that I like it better than any of our papers that I have seen, because it "regardeth not the person of any man," neither will it give its valuable space to bogus advertisements for the love of money.

"The Lord willing," I will write for the F. F. from time to time, under the above heading if Bro. McGary sees fit to publish this.

I call your attention to John 15: 4-6. "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me."

He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing.

"If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them and cast them into the fire and they are burned."

I like plain, positive language, especially if it is authoritative. This is both plain and positive, and it is authoritative if Jesus Christ is authority; for by him it was spoken. Self-righteous people can find no comfort here, for Christ says, "Without me, ye can do nothing."

Some men seem to think that they can do just about as they please, in this life, just so they don't use "curse-words," steal nothing and pay their debts, and that when they die that they will be wafted on angel's wings to the realms of eternal bliss.

Say they, "I had no say-so about coming into the world, and do you reckon God will put a man in the world without his consent, and then damn him?" Jesus was crucified to save you from torment, and unless you avail yourself of the opportunity he offers, then you simply give your consent to be damned. And unless you do as he tells you to, you ought to be! must! and will be!!! sent to everlasting torment. "For without me, ye can do nothing." "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered."

We can't abide in a house without first entering it. Neither can we abide in Christ, without first entering Him. If we don't abide in Him, we will be cast forth as a branch, and will be gathered together and burned. If we don't abide in Him we can't bear fruit; if we don't bear fruit we are no account; for it is to Him that bears fruit, to whom all the grand and glorious promises of the New Testament are given.

Therefore it is of great importance that we learn what it is to be in Christ, and also how we may enter Him.

"For He is the head of the body, the CHURCH." Col. 1: 18. Also, verse 24: "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ, in my flesh, for his body's sake, which is the Church." Whatever it might have meant to be in Christ, when he used the language in John 15: 4; there need be no doubt whatever as to what it is to be in Christ now, since he ascended into heaven, and sent the Holy Spirit to guide the Apostles into all truth; for the scriptures quoted show conclusively that the Church is the body of Christ, and that, therefore, to be in Christ, is to be in the CHURCH OF CHRIST.

All of Christ's children bear fruit; when they cease to bear fruit, they are cast forth as a fruitless branch; they cease to abide in him; no one can bear fruit out of Christ (the Church of Christ); therefore Christ has no children except those who are members of his church.

This may conflict with some of our brethren's opinions, but I see no means of escape from these conclusions.

My dear unconverted reader, do you want the blood of Christ applied to you? If so, you must enter the Church of Christ, for in so doing you reach that point where his blood reaches you, and cleanses you from all sin.

Do you want to be an heir of God, and a joint heir of Jesus Christ? If so, you must enter the Church of Christ. (Gal. 4: 7.)

Do you wish for the blessings of God to rest upon you, when you are done with the trials and turmoils of this sinful world, and have a free-pass into the blest mansions of eternal felicity?

If so, you must enter and abide in the Church of the Living God, which is the Church of Christ, for "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, yea henceforth, saith the Spirit, they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

How do we get in Christ?

Christ says, "I am the vine, ye (my disciples) are the branches." Some vines have natural branches, while others have branches taken from other vines and grafted into them.

None but the disciples of Christ were the branches of Christ; in order, therefore, for others to become his branches, they must be grafted into him.

We all know that in order for a branch to be grafted into a tree, that the branch must first be prepared; and after it is prepared it is grafted in; but the preparation is one thing; and the grafting another.

So the sinner, in order to enter Christ, must first be prepared; but the preparation is one thing, and the entering a different thing. How, then, is the sinner prepared for entering Christ? [I use the word "Christ" in the sense of the church.] They say, "actions speak louder than words;" I will, therefore, first answer this question, by the practice of some of our brethren. How, then, is the sinner prepared for entering the church?

1. By repenting of his sins.
2. By receiving faith by the direct gift of God, in answer to prayer.

3. By telling an experience, in which he states that he believes that God for Christ sake has pardoned his sins.

4. By being immersed into some sect.

How does a person enter the church after he is prepared? By extending the right hand of fellowship.

Is this according to the Bible?

No! no! no!!! How, according to the Bible, is a sinner prepared for entering Christ?

1. By getting the heart right. The heart (mind, affections) is the place to begin. A man cannot love God without a pure heart, neither will he serve God unless he love him. How, then, is the heart purified?

By faith. Acts 15: 9. How do we obtain faith?

By hearing the word of God. Rom. 10: 17.

2. By getting the life, or conduct right.

How is this done? By turning away from sin—repenting.

3. By making known to the world that they believe Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

How is this done? By confession. Rom. 10: 9.

How do you know confession is preparatory to entering Christ? Because Paul says it is unto salvation. Rom. 10: 10.

How does a person thus prepared enter Christ? By being immersed.

"Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, for as many of you as have been immersed into Christ have put on Christ. Gal. 3: 27.

MAKE IT SURE AS YE CAN

No doubt many of my friends who, in times past, have known my opposition to the teaching of the FIRM FOUNDATION, will be surprised to see my name recorded upon its pages, and learn my position there.

I have no apology to make for my change, only I believe the Bible to be true, and, believing that I have no right to practice that for which I have neither precept nor example, I have taken this stand.

I am aware of the fact that there is a great inconsistency in the teaching and practice of many of our brethren, for when one teaches faith, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and then ridicules the mourning bench system of getting religion—tell people they must have faith that comes by hearing the word of God before they can repent, and that baptism is for the remission of sins; and that is the Lord's only plan by which they can be saved; and as soon as they get through preaching, a man comes in who repented before he had faith, whose faith came direct from God (?), who got religion at the mourner's bench, who was baptized because his sins were already forgiven; and they tell him yes, brother, you are all right, I will take you in, it shows plainly they do not believe what they have taught, or have not carefully considered the matter, or are willing for the sake of numbers to blend the truth with error. Dear brethren, let us prove all things, and hold fast to that that is good.

"Make it as sure as we can." Again, when I read the works of our leading brethren, I find them so full of Bible teaching; and when I see their work so far from their teaching, I am compelled to pause and ask myself by what or by whom must I be guided? I then turn back across the rolling tide of human woe for 1800 years, when sin, misery and crime brooded over man, and find thou, the God of heaven, pitied man, and came to his rescue, by sending us a Law-giver, who gave us a law and established a church by which and through which we can be saved. Then we have:

1. A church, known as the Church of Christ.
2. Established at a certain place—Jerusalem.
3. Established at a certain time—Day of Pentecost.
4. Established by certain persons—baptized with the Holy Spirit.
5. Persons who heard and believed came into that Church or Kingdom, by obeying a positive law for the remission of sins.
6. They were afterward known by a certain name—belonging to the Church of Christ.

Now, let us leave the Bible and go to Baptist claims, and hear their say:

1. We have a certain Church—known as the Baptist Church.
2. Established at a certain place—banks of the Jordan.
3. Established at a certain time—in the days of John the Baptist.
4. Established by certain persons (not baptized by the Holy Ghost, for it had not been given, John vii: 39).
5. Persons who believe and feel come in by obeying a positive law, because their sins have been forgiven.
6. They afterward wear a certain name—Baptist—belonging to the Baptist Church.

Now, here are two Kingdoms—established at different places, at different times, under different circumstances, by different persons, wearing different names, obeying same law, but for different purposes. Now, I ask my brethren, in the name of logic or revelation, whereupon the earth has there ever been two Kingdoms, so different as these, that the subjects of one was recognized subjects of the other, without obeying the law of instructions? Even Baptist themselves revolt at the idea—see our inconsistency—say we are not the same, and require a member, leaving the Church of Christ, to be baptized before they will receive them.

But some will ask, when a man comes from the sects: Can we require him to be baptized? No, my brother, you cannot require him to do anything; Christ and the Apostles attended to that matter more than 1800 years ago. But Paul says woe is unto you if you preach not the gospel. Christ said for you to preach the gospel. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. A man comes up, who has said, not so, Lord, he will believe and is saved may be baptized! That shows plainly he did not believe the gospel when he was baptized. Paul said, what was not of faith, was sin. And if you say yes, brother, you are all right; we'll receive you and bid you God-speed. That shows you do not believe the gospel; and Christ says he that believeth not shall be damned.

But some will ask: Can we make baptism a test of Church fellowship? No, my brother; Christ attended to that, and only commands you to preach His will. Do you preach it? You answer yea. Do you teach men it is God's will to believe you? Do you teach men it is God's will to be baptized? Yes. Do you teach them God has willed they should be baptized for the remission of sins. Yes. Then, if a man comes up to unite with the Church, and tells you he has been baptized, but not for remission of sins (which you say is God's will), I ask you, Has God willed it you should receive such into the Church, and bid him God-speed? If so, please give chapter and verse.
